

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

PREFACE

TO THE BOOK OF JOB.

THIS is the most singular book in the whole of the Sacred Code: though written by the same inspiration, and in reference to the same end, the salvation of men, it is so different from every other book of the Bible, that it seems to possess nothing in common with them; for even the language, in its construction, is dissimilar from that in the Laws, the Prophets, and the Historical Books. But on all hands it is accounted a work that contains "the purest morality, the sublimest philosophy, the simplest ritual, and the most majestic creed." Except the two first chapters, and the ten last verses, which are merely prose, all the rest of the book is poetic; and is every where reducible to the Æmistiôn form, in which all the other poetic books of the Bible are written: it is, therefore, properly called a POEM; but whether it belongs to the dramatic or epic species has not been decided by learned men. To try it by those rules which have been derived from Aristotle, and are still applied to ascertain composition in these departments of poetry, is, in my opinion, as absurd as it is ridiculous. Who ever made a poem on these rules? And is there a poem in the universe worth reading, that is strictly conformable to these rules? Not one! The rules, it is true, were deduced from compositions of this description: and although they may be very useful in assisting poets to methodise their compositions, and to keep the different parts distinct; yet they have often acted as a species of critical trammels, and have cramped genius. Genuine poetry is like a mountain flood: it pours down resistless; bursts all bounds; scoops out its own channel; carries woods and rocks before it; and spreads itself abroad, both deep and wide, over all the plain. Such, instead, is the poetry which the reader will meet with in this singular and astonishing book. As to Aristotle himself, although he was a keen-eyed plodder of nature, and a prodigy for his time; yet, if we may judge from his poetics, he had a soul as incapable of feeling the true genie créateur, as Racine terms the spirit of poetry, as he was by his physics, metaphysics, and analogies, from discovering the true system of the universe.

As to the Book of Job, it is most evidently a poem, and a poem of the highest order; dealing in subjects the most grand and sublime; using imagery the most chaste and appropriate; described by language the most happy and energetic; conveying instruction, both in divine and human things, the most ennobling and useful; abounding in precepts the most pure and exalted, which are enforced by arguments the most strong and conclusive, and illustrated by examples the most natural and striking.

All these points will appear in the strongest light to every attentive reader of the book; and to such its great end will be answered; they will learn from it, that God has way every where.—That the wicked, though bearing rule for a time, can never be ultimately prosperous and happy; and that the righteous, though oppressed with sufferings and calamities, can never be forgotten by him in whose hands are his saints, and with whom their lives are precious; that in this world neither are the wicked ultimately punished, nor the righteous ultimately rewarded: that God's judgments are a great deep, and his ways past finding out; but the issues of all are to the glory of his wisdom and grace, and to the eternal happiness of those who trust in him. This is the grand design of the book; and the design will be strikingly evident to the simplest and most unlettered reader, whose heart is right with God, and who is seeking instruction in order that he may glorify his Maker by receiving and by doing good.

Notwithstanding all this, there is not a book in Scripture on the subject of which more difficulties have been started. None, says Calmet, has furnished more subjects of doubt and embarrassment; and none has afforded less information for the solution of those doubts. On this subject the great questions which have been agitated refer principally,—1. To the person of Job. 2. To his existence. 3. To the time in which he lived. 4. To his country. 5. To his stock or kindred. 6. To his religion. 7. To the author of the book. 8. To its truth. 9. To its authenticity. And, 10. To the time and occasion on which it was written.

With respect to the first and second, several writers, of eminent note, have denied the personality of Job; according to them, no such person ever existed; he is merely fabulous, and is like the Il penseroso, or sorrowful man of Milton; sorrow, distress, affliction, and persecution, personified; as the name imports. According to them, he is a mere ideal being, created by the genius of the poet; clothed with attributes, and placed in such circumstances as gave the poet scope and materials for his work.

Thirdly, as to the time in which those place him who receive this as a true history, there is great variety. According to some, he flourished in the patriarchal age; some make him contemporary with Moses; that he was in the captivity in Egypt, and that he lived at the time of the Exodus. Some place him in the time of the Israelitish judges; others in the days of David; and others in those of Solomon; and others in the time of the Babylonish captivity, having been teacher of a school at Tiberias in Palestine; and, with the rest of his countrymen, carried away into Babylon; and that he lived under Ahasuerus and Esther. Fourthly, as to his country: some make him an Arab; others an Egyptian; others a Syrian; some an Israelite; and some an Idumean. Fifthly, as to his origin: some derive him from Nachor; and others from Beau, and make him the 5th in descent from Abraham. Sixthly, as to his religion: some suppose it to have been Sabaism; others that it was patriarchal; and others that he was bred up in the Jewish faith. Seventhly, as to the author of the work, learned men are greatly divided: some suppose the author to have been Elihu; others Job; others Job and his friends; others Moses; some Solomon; others Isaiah; and others Ezra, or some unknown Jew, posterior to the captivity. Eighthly, as to the book: some maintain that it is a history of fact, given by one best qualified to record it; and others, that it is an instructive fiction; facts, persons, dialogues and all, being supposititious: given, however, by the inspiration of God, in a sort of parabolic form, like those employed in the Gospel; and similar to that of the rich man and Lazarus. Ninthly, as to its authenticity: while some, and those not well qualified to judge, have asserted it to be a mere human production, of no divine authority; others have clearly shown that the book itself, whatever questions may arise concerning the person, author, time, place, &c. was ever received by the Jewish church and people as authentic, genuine, and divinely inspired; and incorporated, with the highest propriety, among the most instructive, sublime, and excellent portions of divine revelation. Tenthly, as to the occasion on which it was written, there are considerable differences of opinion. Some will have it to be written for the consolation of the Hebrews in their peregrinations through the wilderness; and others for the comfort and encouragement of the Israelites in the Babylonish captivity. These state that Job represents Nehemiah; and that his three professed friends, but real enemies, Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naathite, represent Sanballat the Horonite, Tobiah the Ammonite, and Geshem the Arabian; and that the whole book should be understood and interpreted on this ground: and that with a little allowance for poetic colouring, all its parts perfectly harmonize, thus understood; showing in a word, that into whatsoever troubles or persecutions God may permit his people to be brought, yet he will sustain them in the fire, bring them safely through it, and discomfit all their enemies;—and that whatsoever is true on this great scale, is true also on that which is more contracted; as he will equally support, defend, and finally render conqueror, every individual that trusts in him.

PREFACE TO THE BOOK OF JOB.

I shall not trouble my readers with the arguments which have been used by learned men pro and con, relative to the particulars already mentioned: were I to act otherwise, I must transcribe a vast mass of matter, which, though it might display great learning in the authors, would most certainly afford little edification to the great bulk of my readers. My own opinion on those points they may naturally wish to know; and to that opinion they have a right; it is such as I dare avow; and such as I feel no disposition to conceal. I believe Job to have been a real person; and his history to be a statement of facts.

As the preface to this book, I mean the first chapter, states him to have lived in the land of Uz, or Uts, I believe with Mr. Goode, and several other learned men, this place to have been "situated in Arabia Petrea, on the south-western coast of the lake Asphaltites, in a line between Egypt and Philistia, surrounded with Kedar, Teman, and Midian; all of which were districts of Arabia Petrea; situated in Idumea, the land of Edom, or Esau; and comprising so large a part of it, that Idumea and Ausitis, or the land of Uz, and the land of Edom, were convertible terms, and equally employed to import the same region: thus Lam. iv. 21. Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom, that dwellest in the land of Uz." See Mr. Goode's Introductory Dissertation; who proceeds to observe, "Nothing is clearer than that all the persons introduced into this poem were Idumeans, dwelling in Idumea; or, in other words, Edomite Arabs. These characters are Job himself, dwelling in the land of Uz; Eliphaz of Teman, a district of as much repute as Uz; and upon the joint testimony of Jeremiah xlix. 7. 2. Ezekiel xxv. 13. Amos i. 11, 12. and Obadiah ver. 8, 9. a part, and a principal part, of Idumea: Biddad of Shuah, always mentioned in conjunction with Sheba and Dedan, all of them being uniformly placed in the vicinity of Idumea: Zophar of Naamah, a city whose name imports pleasantness, which is also stated by Joshua, xv. 21, 41. to have been situated in Idumea, and to have lain in a southern direction toward its coast, or the shores of the Red sea: and Elihu of Buz, which, as the name of a place, occurs but once in Sacred Writ; but is there (Jerem. xxv. 22.) mentioned in conjunction with Teman and Dedan; and hence, necessarily like themselves, a border city upon Ausitis, Uz, or Idumea. It had a number of names; it was at first called Horitis from the Horis or Horites, who appear to have first settled there. Among the descendants of these, the most distinguished was Seir; and from him the land was known by the name of the Land of Seir. This chief had a numerous family; and among the most signalized of his grandsons was Uz, or Uts; and from him and not from Uz the son of Nahor, it seems to have been called Ausitis, or the Land of Uz. The family of Hor, Seir, or Uz, were at length dispossessed of the entire region by Esau or Edom; who strengthened himself by his marriage with one of the daughters of Ishmael; and the conquered territory was denominated Idumea, or the land of Edom." See Mr. Goode as above.

The man and his country being thus ascertained, the time in which he lived is the point next to be considered.

I feel all the difficulties of the various chronologies of learned men: all that has been offered on the subject is only opinion or probable conjecture; and, while I differ from the opinion of many respectable authors, I dare not say that I have more to strengthen my conjecture than they have for theirs.

I do not believe that he lived under the patriarchal dispensation; nor in any time previous to the giving of the law, or to the death of Moses. I have examined the opposite arguments, and they have brought no conviction to my mind. That he lived after the giving of the law, appears to me very probable from what I consider frequent references to the Mosaic institutions occurring in the book; and which I shall notice in their respective places. I know it has been asserted there are no such references; and I am astonished at the assertion. The reader will judge whether a plain case is made out where the supposed references occur. An obstinate adherence to a preconceived system is like prejudice—it has neither eyes nor ears.

With this question, that relative to the author of the book is nearly connected. Were we to suppose that Job himself, or Elihu, or Job and his friends, wrote the work, the question would at once be answered that regards the time; but all positive evidence on this point is wanting: and while other suppositions have certain arguments to support them, the above claimants, who are supported only by critical conjecture, must stand where they are for want of evidence. The opinions that appear the most probable, and have plausible arguments to support them, are the following:—1. Moses was the author of this book, as many portions of it harmonize with his acknowledged writings. 2. Solomon is the most likely author, as many of the sentiments contained in it are precisely the same with those in the Proverbs; and they are delivered often in nearly the same words. 3. The book was written by some Jew in, or soon after, the time of the Babylonish captivity.

1. That Moses was the author, has been the opinion of most learned men: and none has set the arguments in support of this opinion in so strong a light as Mr. Mason Goode, in his Introductory Dissertation to his translation and notes on this book. Mr. G. is a gentleman of great knowledge, great learning, and correct thinking; and whatever he says or writes is entitled to respect. If he have data, his deductions are most generally consecutive and solid. He contends "that the writer of this poem must, in his style, have been equally master of the simple and of the sublime; that he must have been minutely and elaborately acquainted with astronomy, natural history, and the general science of his age; that he must have been a Hebrew by birth and native language, and an Arabian by long residence and local study; and, finally, that he must have flourished and composed the work before the Exody." And he thinks that "every one of these features is consummated in Moses, and in Moses alone; and that the whole of them give us his complete lineaments and portraiture. Instructed in all the learning of Egypt, it appears little doubtful that he composed it during some part of his forty years' residence with the hospitable Jethro, in that district of Idumea which was named Midian." In addition to these external proofs of identity, Mr. Goode thinks, "a little attention will disclose to us an internal proof of peculiar force, in the close and striking similarity of diction and idiom which exists between the book of Job and those pieces of poetry which Moses is usually admitted to have composed." This point he proceeds to examine; and thinks, that the following examples may make some progress toward settling the question, by exhibiting a very singular proof of general parallelism:—

"The order of creation, as detailed in the first chapter of Genesis, is precisely similar to that described in Job, chap. xxxviii. ver. 1—20. the general arrangement that occupied the first day; the formation of the clouds, which employed the second; the separation of the sea, which took up a part of the third; and the establishment of the luminaries in the skies, which characterized the fourth.

"In this general description, as given in Genesis, the vapour in the clouds, and the fluid in the sea, are equally denominated waters: thus, chap. i. ver. 5, 6, 7. 'And God said, Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters. And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament.'

"Let us compare this passage with Job xxvi. 8, 10.

He driveth together the waters into his thick clouds;
And the cloud is not rent under them.—
He setteth a bow on the face of the waters,
Till the consumption of light and of darkness.

"These are, perhaps, the only instances in the Bible in which the cloudy vapours are denominated waters, before they become concentrated into rain; and they offer an identity of thought, which strongly suggests an identity of person. The following is another very striking peculiarity of the same kind, occurring in the same description; and is, perhaps, still more in point. The combined simplicity and sublimity of Gen. i. 3. 'And God said, Be light! and light was,' has been felt and praised by critics of every age, Pagan and Mohammedan, as well as Jewish and Christian; and has, by all of them, been regarded as a characteristic feature in the Mosaic style. In the poem before us we have the following proof of identity of manner, ch. xxxviii. 6.

Behold! he smiteth the snow, Be!
On earth then falleth it.
To the rain—and it falleth;—
The rains of his might.

"This can hardly be regarded as an allusion, but as an instance of identity of manner. In the Psalmist we have an allusion: and it occurs thus, xxxiii. 9. וַיִּשְׁפֹּק וַיִּבְרָא hu amar va-yehi, 'He spake, and it existed; and I copy it that the reader may see the difference. The eulogy of Longinus upon the passage in Genesis is a eulogy also upon that in Job : and the Koran, in verbally copying the Psalmist, has bestowed an equal panegyric upon all of them :

PREFACE TO THE BOOK OF JOB.

قال كى بركون

Dirk, 'Berkon' ; at full.—He said, Be thou ; and it was.

"With reference to the description of the creation, in the book of Genesis, I shall only farther observe, that the same simplicity of style, adapted to so lofty a subject, characteristically distinguishes the writer of the Book of Job, who commonly employs a diction peculiarly plain, whenever engaged upon a subject peculiarly magnificent, as though trusting to the subject to support itself, without the feeble aid of rhetorical ornaments. Of this, the description of the tribunal of the Almighty, given in the first and second chapters of the ensuing poem, is a striking example, as, indeed, I have already remarked; and that of the midnight apparition in the fourth chapter is no less so.

"The following instances are of a more general nature; and lead, upon a broader principle, to the same conclusion :

Ch. vi. 9. Wherefore accountest thou me thine enemy ?
 10. Wouldest thou burst down the parobed stubble ?
 iv. 9. By the blast of God they perish ?
 And by the breath of his souths they are consumed.
 xv. 24. Driest and roughish daisy him ;
 They overwhelm him as a king ready for battle.
 xx. 25. Terror shall be upon him—
 26. Every horror transfused up in reserve for him.
 A fire unblown shall consume him.

Ch. vi. 27. The heavens shall disclose his iniquity,
 And the earth shall rise up against him.
 xviii. 15. Brimstone shall be raised down against his dwelling.
 16. Below shall his root be burnt up,
 And above shall his branch be cut off.
 xii. 17. Considerers be heedeth of his wisdom,
 And judges be maketh distracted.
 24. He bewildereth the judgment of the leaders of the people of a land,
 And causeth them to wander in a pathless desert ;
 25. They grope and stumble without a glimpse Yea, he rebath them to red like a drunkard.
 vii. 17. His roots shall be entangled in a rock ;
 With a bed of stones shall he grapple ;
 18. Utterly shall he crush him up from his place ;
 Yea, he shall renounce him, and say, "I never knew thee."
 19. Behold the Eternal exulting in his course,
 Even over his dust shall rise up another.

Ch. vi. 7. Thon sentest forth thy wrath,
 Consuming them as stubble.
 8. And with the blast of thy nostrils
 The waters were gathered together.
 10. Thon didst blow with thy wind ;
 The sea covered them.
 16. Terror and dread shall fall upon them ;
 By the might of thine arm they shall be still as a stone.

Ch. vi. xxviii. 22. And Jehovah shall smite thee with a consumption ;
 And with a fever, and with an inflammation ;
 And thy heaven over thy head shall be brass ;
 And the earth under thee iron.
 23. And Jehovah shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust ;
 And thou shalt grope at noon day,
 Until thou be destroyed.
 24. Jehovah shall smite thee with destruction,
 And blindness, and astonishment of heart.
 And thou shalt grope at noon day,
 As the blind gropeth in darkness ;
 And thou shalt not prosper in thy ways ;
 And thou shalt only be oppressed,
 And consumed continually.
 And it shall come to pass,
 As Jehovah exulted over you
 To do you good, and to multiply you ;
 So will Jehovah exult over you
 To destroy you, and reduce you to naught.

"In this specimen of comparison it is peculiarly worthy of remark, that not only the same train of ideas is found to recur; but in many instances the same words, where others might have been employed; and, perhaps, have answered as well: the whole obviously resulting from that habit of thinking upon subjects in the same manner, and by means of the same terms, which is common to every one, and which distinguishes original identity from intentional imitation. I will advert to one instance: the use of the very powerful, but not very common verb wp stis, 'to exult,' exulto, glorior, yepiaw, which occurs in the last verse of both the above passages, and is in each instance equally appropriate:—wp stis yehova—wp stis hu messos Lino sivo

"The same term is again employed Job xxxix. 21. to express the spirited prancing of the high-mettled war-horse. "The above passage from chap. viii. 19. has not been generally understood, and has been given erroneously in the translations." Mr. Goode, in his notes, p. 101—103. enters at large into a defence of his version of this passage.

Ch. vi. 8. For example, I beseech thee, the past age ;
 10. Shall not they instruct thee, counsel thee,
 And will forth the sayings of their wisdom ?
 xx. 17. He shall not behold the franchises of the river, Brooks of honey and butter.—
 xxix. 6. When my path flowed with butter,
 And the rock poured out for me rivers of oil.
 xv. 27. Though his face be enveloped with fatness,
 And heaped up with fatness on his loins.
 vi. 4. The arrows of the Almighty are within me ;
 Their poisons drinketh up my spirit.
 The arrows of God set themselves in array against me ;
 xvi. 12. His arrows by around me ;
 He pierceth my reins without mercy.

Ch. vi. xxiii. 7. Reflect on the days of old ;
 Contemplate the times of ages beyond ages ;
 Inquire of thy father, and he will show thee ;
 "Thine sisters, and they will instruct thee."
 13. He gave him to suck honey out of the rock,
 And oil out of the flinty rock ;
 14. Butter of kine, and milk of sheep.
 12. But Jehurum waxed fat ; and he killed ;
 Thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick ;
 Thou art enveloped with fatness.
 28. I will keep mischiefs upon them ;
 I will spend my arrows upon them.
 62. I will make my arrows drunk with blood.

"The fine pathetic elegy of the ninetieth Psalm has been usually ascribed to Moses; and Dathé imagines it was written by him a little before his death.

"Kennicott and Geddes have some doubt upon this point, chiefly because the ultimate period assigned in it to the life of man is fourscore years: while Moses was, at his death, a hundred and twenty years old, yet 'his eye was not dim, nor his natural tone abated.' Deut. xxxiv. 7.

"The following comparison will, perhaps, have a tendency to confirm the general opinion, by rendering it probable that its author, and the author of the Book of Job, were the same person.

Ch. vi. xiv. 2. He springeth up as a flower, and is cut down ;
 Yea, he flourisheth as a shadow, and endureth not.
 3. And dost thou cast thine eyes upon such a one ?
 And wouldest thou bring me into judgment with myself ?
 4. Yea now art thou numbering my steps ;
 Thou overlookest nothing of my sin.—
 12. And for ever, as the crumpling mountain discolereth,
 And the rock mouleth away from his place,
 13. So consumest thou the hope of man,
 Thou hastenest him continually till he perish.
 vii. 2. Why wilt thou not turn away from my transgression,
 And let my calamity pass by ?
 xi. 14. If the iniquity of thy hand thou put away,
 And let not wickedness dwell in thy tabernacles,
 16. Let it then smite thee forget affliction ;
 As waters passed by shalt thou remember it :
 17. And brighter shall the time be than noonday ;
 Thou shalt shine forth, thou shalt grow vigorous, like the day spring.

Psa. ver. xc. 5. They are like the passing grass of the morning ;
 6. In the morning it springeth up and groweth,
 In the evening it is cut down and withereth.
 7. For we are consumed by thine anger,
 And by thy wrath are we troubled.
 8. Thou hast set our iniquities before thee ;
 Our secret sins in the light of thy countenance.
 9. Behold, all our days are passed away in thy wrath,
 We gaped our years as a tale that is told.
 10. Their strength is labour and sorrow ;
 It is soon cut off, and we flee away.
 12. So teach us to number our days,
 That we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.
 14. O satisfy us early with thy mercy,
 That we may rejoice and be glad all our days.
 15. Make us glad according to the days of our affliction,
 To the years we have seen evil :
 16. Let thy wonders be shown unto thy servants,
 And thy glory unto their children ;
 16. And let the beauty of Jehovah, our God, be upon us,
 And establish thou the work of our hands.

"The strictly and decidedly acknowledged productions of Moses are but few; and in the above examples I have taken a specimen from by far the greater number. It is, indeed, not a little astonishing that, being so few, they should offer a resemblance in so many points.

"There may at times be some difficulty in determining between the similarity of style and diction resulting from established habit, and that produced by intentional imitation; yet, in the former case, it will commonly, if I mistake not, be found looser, but more general: in the latter stricter, but more confined to particular words or idioms; the whole of the features not having been equally caught, while those which have been laid hold of are given more minutely than in the case of habit. The manner runs carelessly through every part; and is perpetually striking us unawares: the copy walks after it with measured but unequal pace, and is restless in courting our attention. The specimens of resemblance now produced are obviously of the former kind: both sides have an equal claim to originality, and seem very powerfully to establish a unity of authorship."

Thus far Mr. Goode; who has, on his own side of the question, most certainly exhausted the subject. The case he has made out is a strong one: we shall next examine whether a stronger cannot be made out in behalf of Solomon, as the second candidate for the authorship of this most excellent book.

2. That the Book of Job was the work of Solomon, was the opinion of some early Christian writers, among whom was Gregory Nazianzen; and of several moderns, among whom were Spanheim and Harduin. The latter has gone so far as to place the death of Job in the thirty-fifth year of the reign of David; and he supposes that Solomon wrote the work in question, about the second or third year of his reign! On this last opinion no stress whatever should be placed.

As the argument for Moses has been supported by supposed parallelisms between his acknowledged works and the Book of Job; so has that which attributes the latter to Solomon. That Solomon, from his vast learning and wisdom, was capable of such a work, none can deny. His knowledge in astronomy, natural history, politics, theology, languages, and the general science of his age, must have given him at least equal qualifications to those possessed by Moses. And if he was the author of the Book of Canticles, which most men believe, he had certainly a poetic mind, equal, if not superior, to all the writers who had existed previously to his time. The Book of Proverbs and that of Ecclesiastes, are almost universally attributed to him: now, in the Book of Job, there are a multitude of sentiments, sentences, terms, and modes of speech, which are almost peculiar to Solomon, as will appear from the whole books.

In both we find the most exalted eulogium of wisdom. See Job xxviii. 12. Prov. viii. 11, &c. Job says, "The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil, that is understanding," chap. xxviii. ver. 28. Solomon says, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of knowledge; but fools despise wisdom and instruction," Prov. i. 7.

Job speaks of the state of the dead, nearly in the same terms as Solomon: compare chap. xxi. 33. xxii. 22. xxxvi. 5. with Prov. ix. 18.

Job says, chap. xxvi. 6. Hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering. Solomon says, Prov. xv. 11. "Hell and destruction are before the Lord; how much more the hearts of the children of men." Job says, "Man drinketh iniquity like water," chap. xv. 16. And Elihu charges him with drinking up scorning like water, chap. xxxiv. 7. The same image occurs in Solomon, Prov. xxiv. 6. "He that sendeth a message by the hand of a fool drinketh damage."

In Job xv. 34. it is said, fire shall consume the tabernacle of bribery. The same turn of thought occurs, Prov. xv. 27. He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house; but he that hateth gifts shall live.

Both speak of weighing the spirits or winds. See Job xxviii. 25. Prov. xvi. 2. But to me the parallelism in these cases is not evident; as both the reason of the saying, and some of the terms in the original, are different. Job tells his friends, If they would hold their peace, it would be their wisdom, chap. xiii. 5. Solomon has the same sentiment in nearly the same words, Prov. xvii. 23. Even a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise, and he that shutteth his lips is esteemed a man of understanding.

Solomon represents the rephaim or giants as in hell, or the great deep, Prov. ii. 18. ix. 18. vii. 27. The like sentiment is in Job xxvi. 5. See the Hebrew.

In Job xxvii. 16, 17. it is said that, if the wicked heap up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay; the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver. The like sentiment is found, Prov. xxviii. 8. He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, he shall gather for him that will pity the poor. Solomon says, Prov. xvi. 18. Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall; and Before destruction the heart of man is haughty; and before honour is humility, xviii. 12. and A man's pride shall bring him low; but honour shall uphold the humble in spirit, xxi. 23. The same sentiment is found in Job chap. xxii. 29. When men are cast down, then thou shalt say, There is a lifting up; and he shall save the humble person.

Both speak nearly in the same way concerning the creation of the earth and the sea. Where wast thou when I LAID THE FOUNDATIONS OF THE EARTH? Who shut up the sea with doors, when it brake forth as if it had issued from the womb? Job xxxviii. 4-8. This seems a reference to the flood. In Prov. viii. 22-29. Wisdom says, "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way—when as yet he had not made the earth—when he gave to the sea his decree that the waters should not pass his commandment: when he appointed the foundations of the earth." These are precisely the same kind of conceptions, and nearly the same phraseology.

In Job xx. 7. it is said, "The wicked shall perish for ever like his own dung." And in Prov. x. 7. it is said, "The name of the wicked shall rot."

It would not be difficult to enlarge this list of correspondencies, by a collation of passages in Job and in Proverbs; but most of them will occur to the attentive reader. There is, however, another class of evidence that appears still more forcible, viz. There are several terms used frequently in the Book of Job, and in the Books of Solomon, which are almost peculiar to those books, and which argue an identity of authorship. The noun תְּשׁוּבָה teshubah, which may signify essence, substance, reality, completeness, occurs often in Job and Proverbs. See Job v. 12. vi. 13. xi. 6. xii. 16. xxvi. 3. and xxx. 22. Proverbs ii. 7. iii. 21. viii. 14. and xviii. 1. And it occurs only twice, as far as I recollect, in all the Bible besides, viz. Isa. xxviii. 29. and Mic. vi. 9. The word מִצְוָה mitzvah, used in the sense of misfortune, ruinous downfall, calamity, occurs Job vi. 2, 30. xxx. 13. and in Prov. x. 3. xi. 6. xvii. 4. and xix. 13. It occurs nowhere else, except once in Ezek. vii. 26. once in Micah vii. 3; and a few times in the Psalms, v. 9. li. 2, 7. lv. 12. xci. 3. and xciv. 20. xxxviii. 12. lxii. 3.

The word תְּכֵלֶת tachleth, wise counsels, occurs only in Job xxvii. 12. and in Prov. i. 5. xi. 14. xii. 5. xx. 18. and xxiv. 6; and nowhere else in the Bible, in this form. And תָּרֵב poteh, the silly one, simpleton, fool, is used precisely in the same sense in Job v. 2. Prov. xix. 7. and in various other parts of the same book. The word בְּרִית abadan, destruction, Job xxvi. 6. xxviii. 22. xxxi. 12. connected sometimes with אֵשׁ sheol, hell, or the grave; and מַטְמֵה mareh, death, occurs as above, and in Prov. xv. 11. and xxvii. 20.

Culmet, who refers to several of the above places, adds, It would be easy to collect a great number of similar parallel passages: but it must make a forcible impression in favour of this opinion, when we observe in Job and Proverbs the same principles, the same sentiments, the same terms, and some that are found only in Job and Solomon. We may add farther, the beauty of the style, the sublimity of the thoughts, the dignity of the matter, the form and order in which the materials of this writer are laid down, the vast erudition and astonishing fecundity of genius; all of which perfectly characterize Solomon.

Besides the above, we find many forms of expression in this book, which prove that its author had a knowledge of the law of God; and many which show that he was acquainted with the Psalms of David; and a few very like what we find in the writings of the prophets. I shall insert a few more:—

- Job xv. 27. Because he covereth his face with fatness.
- Job xxv. 11. If he set his heart upon man, he shall gather unto himself his spirit and his breath.
- Job xxi. 9. Their houses are safe from fear; neither is the rod of God upon them.
- Job xxi. 10. Their bull gendereth, and foaleth not; their cow calveth, and casteth not her calf.
- Job xxi. 18. They (the wicket) are as stubble before the wind; and as chaff that the storm carrieth away.
- Job xxii. 18. The righteous see it, and are glad; and the innocent laugh them to scorn.
- Job xxviii. 41. Who provideth for the raven his food? when his young ones cry unto God.
- Job xxi. 21. He poureth contempt upon princes, and weakeneth the strength of the mighty.
- Job iii. 3. Let the day perish in which I was born; and the night in which it was made, there is a man-child conceived. See also chap. x. ver. 18.
- Job xxi. 7. Wherefore do the wicket live, become old, and are mighty in power?
- Job xxviii. 12. But where shall wisdom be found, and where is the place of understanding?—12. Man knoweth not the price thereof; neither is it found in the land of the living.
- Job xvii. 10. They are enclosed in their own fat.—lxixii. 7. Their eyes stand out with fatness.
- Ps. civ. 28. Thou hast set their face, and they are troubled; thou takest away their breath; they die, and return to their dust.

- Ps. lviii. 10. The Righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance; he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked.
- Ps. cxlvii. 9. He giveth to the heast his food; and to the young ravens which cry.
- Ps. cvii. 40. He poureth contempt upon princes, and causeth them to wander in the wilderness.
- Jerem. xv. 10. Wo is me, my mother, that thou hast borne me, a man of strife—xx. 14, 15. Curved be the day wherein I was born; let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed.
- Jerem. xii. 1, 2. Wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper—they grow; yea, they bring forth fruit.
- Colate these verses with Baruch iii. 14, 15, 20, and see Prov. I. 30-32. II. 2-7. II. 13-15. iv. 5-9. viii. 10-35.

The remarkable sentiment that "God, as sovereign of the world, does treat the righteous and the wicked, independently of their respective merits, with a similar lot in this life; and that like events often happen to both," is maintained in the Book of Job, and the Ecclesiastes of Solomon. Job ix. 22-24. HE DESTROYETH THE PERFECT AND THE WICKED. If the scourge slay suddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the INNOCENT. THE EARTH IS GIVEN INTO THE HAND OF THE

PREFACE TO THE BOOK OF JOB.

WICKED; he covereth the faces of the judges thereof; if not, where and who is he?—x. 15. If I be WICKED, woe unto me; and if I be RIGHTEOUS, yet will I not lift up my head.—ix. 15. WHOM though I were RIGHTEOUS, yet would I not ANSWER; I would make supplication to my Judge.—xii. 6. The tabernacles of ROBBERS prosper, and they that PROVOKE GOD are secure; into whose hand God bringeth abundantly.—xxi. 7—9. Wherefore do the WICKED LIVE, BECOME OLD; yea, are MIGHTY IN POWER? Their SEED is ESTABLISHED IN THEIR EIGHT, and their OFFSPRING BEFORE THEIR EYES. Their HOUSES are SAFE FROM FEAR, neither is the ROD OF GOD UPON THEM.

Similar sentiments, with a great similarity of expression, are found in the following passages from Solomon:—Eccles. vi. 8. For what hath the WISE more than the FOOL?—viii. 14. There be JUST MEN to whom it happeneth ACCORDING TO THE WORK OF THE WICKED. Again, there be WICKED MEN to whom it happeneth ACCORDING TO THE WORK OF THE RIGHTEOUS.—ix. 2. ALL THINGS COME ALIKE TO ALL: there is ONE EVENT TO THE RIGHTEOUS and to the WICKED; to the GOOD, and to the CLEAN, and to the UNCLEAN; to him that SACRIFICETH, and to him that SACRIFICETH NOT. As is the GOOD, so is the SINNER; and he that SWEARETH, as he that FEARETH ON OATH.—vii. 15. There is a JUST MAN that FERLETH IN HIS RIGHTEOUSNESS; and there is a WICKED MAN that PROLONGETH his life IN HIS WICKEDNESS.

I may conclude this with the words of a learned translator of the Book of Job; and apply in reference to Solomon, whom he applies to Moses: "The specimens of resemblance now produced have an equal claim to originality, and seem very powerfully to establish a unity of authorship." I think the argument much stronger in favour of Solomon as its author than of Moses: and while even here I hesitate, I must enter my protest against the conclusions drawn by others; and especially those who profess to show where David, Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, &c. have copied and borrowed from Job! Some of them, in all probability, never saw the book: and those who did had an inspiration, dignity, manner, and power of their own, that rendered it quite unnecessary to borrow from him. Such plagiarism would appear, in common cases, neither requisite nor graceful. I have a high opinion of the Book of Job; but God forbid that I should ever bring it on a level with the compositions of the sweet singer of Israel, the inimitable threnodies of Jeremiah, or the ultra-sublime effusions of the evangelical prophet. Let each keep his place, and let God be acknowledged the inspirer of all.

Thus, by exactly the same process, we come to different conclusions; for the evidence is now as strong that Job lived posterior to the days of Moses, (that he was acquainted with the law and the prophets; that either he took much from the Psalms and Proverbs, or that David and Solomon borrowed much from him; or that Solomon, the son of David, wrote the history,) as it is that he lived in the days of Moses.

For my own part I think the later date by far the most probable; and, although I think the arguments that go to prove Solomon to be the author, are weightier than those so skillfully brought forth by learned men in behalf of Moses, yet I think it possible that it was the work of neither, but rather of some learned Idumean, well acquainted with the Jewish religion and writers; and I still hold the opinion which I formed more than thirty years ago, when I read over this book in the Septuagint, and afterward in the Hebrew; that it is most probable the work was originally composed in Arabic, and afterward translated into Hebrew; by a person who either had not the same command of the Hebrew as he had of the Arabic; or else purposely affected the Arabic idiom, retaining many Arabic words and Arabisms; either because he could not find appropriate expressions in the Hebrew, or because he wished to adorn and enrich the one language by borrowing copiously from the other. The Hebrew of the Book of Job, differs as much from the pure Hebrew of Moses, and the early prophets, as the Persian of Ferdowsy differs from that of Saady. Both these were Persian poets: the former wrote in the simplicity and purity of his elegant native tongue, adopting very few Arabic words; while the latter labours to introduce them at every turn, and has thus produced a language neither Persian nor Arabic. And so prevalent is this custom become with all Persian writers, both in prose and verse, that the pure Persian becomes daily more and more corrupted, inasmuch that there is reason to fear that in process of time it will be swallowed up in the language of the conquerors of that country, in which it was formerly esteemed the most polished language of Asia. Such influence has the language of a conqueror on the country he has subdued: witness our own, where a paltry French phraseology, the remnant of one of the evils brought upon us by our Norman conqueror and tyrant, has greatly weakened the strong current of our mother tongue: so that hitherto amalgamated, filed, and polished by eminent authors, we only speak a very tolerable jargon, enriched, as we foolishly term it, by the spoils of other tongues. The best specimen of our ancient language exists in the Lord's Prayer, which is pure English, or what is called Anglo-Saxon, with the exception of three Frenchified words, trespasses, temptation, and deliver.

But to return to the Book of Job. The collections of Mr. Goode, Dr. Magee, and others, if they do not prove that Moses was the author of the book, prove that the author was well acquainted with the Mosaic writings; and prove that he was also acquainted with the xth Psalm; and this last circumstance will go far to prove that he lived after the days of David, for we have no evidence whatever that the xth Psalm was published previously to the collection and publication of the Psalms now generally termed the Psalms of David, though many of them were written by other hands, and not a few even after the Babylonish captivity. And, as to the inscription to this Psalm תפלה אשר אמר משה עבד ה' אלהים תפלה משה עבד ה' אלהים, "a prayer of Moses, the man of God." 1. We know not that Moses the Jewish lawgiver is meant: it might be another person of the same name. 2. And even in that case, it does not positively state that this Moses was the author of it. 3. The inscriptions to the Psalms are of dubious, many of them of no authority; some of them evidently misplaced; and others either bearing no relation to the matter of the Psalms, to which they are prefixed; or evidently contradictory to that matter. Hence our translators have considered these inscriptions as of no authority; and have not admitted them, in any case, into the body of their respective Psalms. The parallelism, therefore, drawn from this Psalm, will not help much to prove that Moses was the author of the Book of Job; but it will go far to prove, as will be seen in other cases, that the author of this book was acquainted with the Book of Psalms, as several of the preceding collections testify; and that there is a probability that he had read the prophets that lived and wrote in the time, and after the time, of the Babylonish captivity, which appears to me the only thing which shakes the argument in favour of Solomon; unless we take the converse of the question, and say that Moses, David, Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Micah, all knew and borrowed from the Book of Job. But this supposition will, in its turn, be shaken by the consideration that there are several things in the Book of Job which evidently refers to the law as already given, and to some of the principal occurrences in the Israelitish history, if such references can be made out. These considerations have led me to think it probable that the book was written after the captivity, by some unknown, but highly eminent and inspired man. We may wonder, indeed, that the author of such an eminent work has not been handed down to posterity; and that the question should be left at the discretion of the whole limbus of conjecture: but we find not only several books in the Bible, but also other works of minor importance, and a later date, similarly circumstanced. We have no certain evidence of the author of the books of Judges, Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, Ruth, Ezra, Nehemiah, or Esther: we can, in reference to them, make probable conjectures, but this is all. Even in the New Testament the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews is still unknown: though a pretty general tradition, and strong internal evidence, give it to St. Paul; yet this point is not so proved, as to exclude all doubt.

The finest poems of heathen antiquity, the Iliad and Odyssey, cannot be certainly traced to their author. Of the person called Homer, to whom they have been attributed, no one knows any thing. He is still, for aught we know, a fabulous person; and the relations concerning him are entitled to little more credit than is due to the Life of Æsop by Pausanias. Seven different cities have claimed the honour of being his birth-place. They are expressed in the following distich:—

Ἑπτα πόλεις διερίζουσι περι ριζῶν Ὀμηροῦ, Ἐμύρα, Ρόδος, Κολοφών, Σαλαμίς, Χίος, Ἄργος, Ἀθήνα.
 Smyrna, Rhodes, Colophon, Salamis, Chios, Argos, Athens.
 Orbis et Patria certat, Homere, &c.

Nor have these claims been ever adjusted. Some have gone so far as to attribute the work to Solomon, king of Israel, composed after his defection from the true religion to idolatry! that the word Homer, Ὀμηρος, Homeros, is merely Hebrew, עֲמֵרֹם Omertim, with a Greek termination, signifying the sayings or discourses, from עֲמָר, amar, he spoke; the whole work being little more than the dialogues or conversations of the eminent characters of which it is composed. Even the baïlles of Homer are full of parleys: and the principal information conveyed by the poem is through the conversation of the respective chiefs.

The Makamaton, or assemblies, of the celebrated Arabic author Hariri, show us how conversations were anciently carried on among the Arabs; and even in the same country in which the plan of the poem of Job is laid: and were we closely to compare the sex concessus of that author, published by Schultens, we might find many analogies between them and the turn of conversation in the Book of Job. But the uncertainty relative to the author detracts nothing from the merit and excellency of the Poem. As it is the most singular, so it is the best, as a whole, in the Hebrew canon. It exhibits a full view of the opinions of the Eastern sages on the most important points: not only their religion and system of morals are frequently introduced, but also their philosophy, astronomy, natural history, mineralogy, and arts and sciences in general; as well those that were ornamental, as those which ministered to the comforts and necessities of life. And, on a careful examination, we shall probably find that several arts, which are supposed to be the discoveries of the moderns, were not unknown to those who lived in a very remote antiquity; and who, it is fashionable to consider, as unlettered and uncultivated barbarians.

As the person, family, time, and descendants, of Job are so very uncertain, I shall not trouble my readers with the many genealogical tables which have been constructed by chronologists and commentators: yet it might be considered a defect, were I not to notice what is inserted at the end of the Greek and Arabic versions relative to this point; to which I shall add Dr. Kennicott's tables, and the substance of a letter which contains some curious particulars.

"And he (Job) dwelt in the land of Ausitis, in the confines of Idumea and Arabia; and his former name was Jobab. And he took to wife Arabiessa, and begat a son whose name was Ennon. And his (Jobab's) father's name was Zarith, one of the sons of the children of Esau; and his mother's name was Boesora: and thus he was the 57th from Abraham."

"And these are the kings who reigned in Edom; which region he also governed: the first was Balak, the son of Beor, the name of whose city was Dennaaba. And after Balak reigned Jobab, who is also called Job. And after him Assom, the governor of the country of the Temanites. After him Adad, the son of Basad, who cut off Madian in the plain of Moab; and the name of his city was Gethaim."

"The friends who came to visit him were Ethphaz, son of Sophan, of the children of Esau, king of the Temanites. Baldad, the son of Amnon, of Chobar, tyrant of the Sauchites. Sophar, king of the Minaites. Thaïman, son of Eliphaz, governor of the Idumeans."

"This is translated from the Syriac copy. He dwelt in the land of Ausitis, on the borders of the Euphrates; and his former name was Jobab; and his father was Zareth, who came from the East." This is verbatim from the Codex Alexandrinus.

The Arabic is not so circumstantial, but is the same in substance. "And Job dwelt in the land of Aus, between the boundaries of Edom and Arabia: and he was at first called Jobab. And he married a strange woman, and to her was born a son called Anun. But Job was the son of Zara, a descendant of the children of Esau: his mother's name was Basra; and he was the sixth from Abraham. Of the kings who reigned in Edom: the first who reigned over that land was Balak, the son of Beor; and the name of his city was Danaba. And after him Jobab, the same who is called Job. And after Job, him (Assom) who was prince of the land of Teman. And after him (Adad) the son of Barak, he who slew and put to flight Madian, in the plains of Moab; and the name of his city was Jatham. And of the friends of Job who visited him, was Ethphaz, the son of Esau, king of the Temanites."

Dr. Kennicott says, When Job lived seems deducible from his being contemporary with Eliphaz, the Temanite, thus:

ABRAHAM.

2 Eliphaz.	Levi.	2
3 Teman.	Kobeth.	3

The late Miss Mary Freeman Shepherd, well known for her strong masculine genius, and knowledge of various languages, sent me the following genealogy and remarks, which she thought would clearly ascertain the time of Job, which I faithfully transcribe from her letter to me, a short time before her death.

"Shem was the father of Aram, who gave his name to the Aramites, i. e. the Syrians; and he was the father of Uz, who gave his name to the land of Uz, in which Job dwelt, not was born; for the text says, There was a man in the land of Uz called Job.

"In the xlvth chap. of Genesis, ver. 13. one of the sons of Issachar is named Job. In the genealogies of Numb. xxvi. 24. and in 1 Chron. vii. 1. he is called Jashub. It is remarkable that there is no mention in Chronicles of the sons of Jashub, or of any of the sons of Issachar, among the thousands of Israel, sons of Tola, where, might not Job be called Jashub? Mitzraim, i. e. Egypt, was a son of Ham; Uz and Aram, sons of Shem. Ishmael by Hagar, and Midian by Keturah, both sons to Abraham. How well does this account for the nearness of the languages of these people, being scions from the same mother tongue.

"Ishmael, the father of the tribes of Arabia; Arabic was, therefore, not their mother tongue. The roots of these languages germinated from the Hebrew roots: and so a new language sprung up; afterward formed according to grammatic rules, and enriched as arts and sciences, and cultivated genius, added new inventions. Things new, and unknown before, gave rise to new words or names. Nouns, and the action, operation, and effects of arts and sciences, produced verbs, or roots. Thus the Arabic became so copious and rich, and has roots not in the pure original Hebrew. All this considered, might not Moses have written the Book of Job, as parts of Esra, Nehemiah, and Daniel, were written after the captivity, in a mixed language, in order that it might be the better understood by those for whom it was written; those of the people who, being left in Jerusalem, had retained their native Hebrew; and those who had, by long residence in Babylon, corrupted and mingled it with the Chaldaic, which is a dialect of the Hebrew: like the modern language of Italy, when compared with that of ancient Rome; or our modern Latin, when compared with that of the Augustan age.

"By the influence of climate upon the organs of speech, the different avocations, usages, diet, turn of mind, and genius of men, the dialects which all streamed from one language, and pronounced in one and the same speech, confounded (not annihilated, troubled but not dried up,) no new language then created, yet so confounded in utterance

PREFACE TO THE BOOK OF JOB.

"Satan, overjoyed at the success of his plots, went to Job; told him that his wife had been caught in the act of adultery; and that her tresses had been cut off, and here was the proof of the fact. Job seeing this, and finding his wife without her tresses, not supposing that he was deceived by the devil, lost his patience; and bound himself by an oath, that if he should ever recover his health, he would inflict on her the most exemplary punishment. Satan, supposing he had now gained his end, transformed himself into an angel of light; and went throughout the country as a messenger of God, informing the people that Job, who was counted a prophet, had fallen from his piety, and brought the wrath of God upon him; that they should no more listen to his preaching, but banish him from among them, lest the curse of God should fall on the whole country.

"Job, coming to understand how the matter stood, had recourse to God by faith and prayer; and said these remarkable words, which are found in the KORAN: Distress closes me in on every side; but thou, O Lord, art more merciful than all those who can feel compassion. On this all his pains and sufferings immediately ceased; for Gabriel, the faithful servant of the Most High, descended from heaven; took Job by the hand; and, lifting him up from the place where he lay, stamped on the ground with his foot; and immediately a spring of water rose up from the earth, out of which Job having drunk, and washed his body, he was instantly cleansed of all his ulcers, and restored to perfect health.

"God, having thus restored him, greatly multiplied his goods, so that the rain and the snow which fell around his dwelling were precious; and his riches became so abundant, as if showers of gold had descended upon him."

This is the sum of the account given by the oriental historians; who, forsaking the truth of the Sacred History, have blended the story with their own fables. The great facts are, however, the same in the main; and we find that with them the personality, temptation, and deliverance of Job, are matters of serious credibility. Abul Faragius says that the trial of Job happened in the twenty-fifth year of Nahor, son of Serug; thus making him prior to Abraham. He calls him أيوب السديقي Ayoub assadeqi, Job the righteous. See Abul Faragius, Ebn Babric, D'Herbelot, &c.

Commentators have considered this book as being divided into distinct parts. Mr. Goode, who considers it a regular Hebrew epic, divides it into six parts, or books; which he considers to be its natural division, and unquestionably intended by the author. These six parts are, an opening or exordium, containing the introductory history or decree concerning Job;—three distinct series of arguments, in each of which the speakers are regularly allowed their respective turns;—the summing up of the controversy;—and the close of the catastrophe, consisting of the suffering hero's gradual and glorious acquittal, and restoration to prosperity and happiness.

PART I.—The TEMPTATION of Job decreed.

Which contains, 1. A brief narrative of Job. 2. The tribunal of the Almighty. 3. His remarks to Satan concerning Job's fidelity. 4. Satan's reply. 5. The Almighty consents to his temptation. 6. Return of the celestial tribunal. 7. The fidelity of Job proved and declared. 8. Satan insinuates that he would not have stood true, had the attack been made on his person. 9. The Almighty consents to a second trial. 10. The trial made. 11. Job's utter misery. 12. The visit of his three friends, to condole with him. Chap. i. and ii.

PART II.—FIRST Series of CONTROVERSY.

1. Exclamation of Job on his miserable condition. 2. Speech of Eliphaz, accusing him of want of firmness; and suspecting his integrity, on account of the affliction with which he is visited. 3. Job's reply; reproaching his friends with cruelty; bewailing the disappointment he had felt in them; calling for death as the termination of his miseries; then longing for life, expostulating with the Almighty, and supplicating his forgiveness. 4. Bildad resumes the argument of Eliphaz with great severity; openly accuses Job with hypocrisy; and exhorts him to repentance, in order that he may avoid utter ruin. 5. Job, in reply, longs to plead his cause before God; but is overwhelmed at the idea of his majesty. 6. He again desponds; and calls for death, as the only refuge from his sorrows. 7. Zophar continues the argument on the side of his companions; condemns Job acrimoniously, for still daring to assert his innocence; and once more exhorts him to repentance, as the only means of obtaining a restoration of the favour of the Almighty. 8. Job is stimulated to a still severer reply. 9. Accuses his companions of declaiming on the part of God, with the base hope of propitiating him. 10. Boldly demands his trial at the tribunal of the Almighty; and, realizing the tribunal before him, commences his pleading in an address, variegated by every side of opposite feelings: fear, triumph, humiliation, expostulation, despondency. Chap. iii—xiv.

PART III.—SECOND Series of CONTROVERSY.

1. Eliphaz commences the discussion in his regular turn; accuses Job of vehemence and vanity; asserts that no man is innocent; and that his own conduct sufficiently proves himself not to be so. 2. Job replies; and complains bitterly of the unjust reproaches heaped upon him; and accuses his companions of holding him up to public derision. 3. He pathetically bemoans his lot; and looks forward to the grave with glimmering through despair, of a resurrection from its ruins. 4. Bildad perseveres in his former argument of Job's certain wickedness, from his signal sufferings; and, in a string of lofty traditions, points out the constant attendants of misery upon wickedness. 5. Job rises superior to this attack; appeals to the pity and generosity of his friends; asserts the Almighty to have afflicted him for purposes altogether unknown; and then soars to a full and triumphant hope of a future resurrection, and vindication of his innocence. 6. Zophar repeats the former charge; and Job replies, by directly controverting his argument, and proving, from a variety of examples, that in the present world the wicked are chiefly prosperous, and the just for the most part subject to affliction. Chap. xv—xxi.

PART IV.—THIRD Series of CONTROVERSY.

1. Eliphaz, in direct opposition to Job's last remarks, contends that certain and utter ruin is the uniform lot of the wicked; and adduces the instances of the deluge, and of Sodom, and the other cities of the plain. 2. Job supports his position by fresh and still more forcible examples. Though he admits that, in the mystery of Providence, prosperity and adversity are often equally the lot of both the righteous and the wicked; yet he denies that this ought to be held as an argument in favour of the last, whose prosperity is in the utmost degree precarious, and who, in calamity, are wholly destitute of hope and consolation. 3. Bildad replies in a string of lofty but general apophthegms, tending to prove that Job cannot be without sin, since no man is so in the sight of God. 4. Job rejoins with indignation; takes a general survey of his life, in the different capacities of a magistrate, a husband, and a master; and challenges his companions to point out a single act of injustice he had committed. Chap. xxii—xxxii.

PART V.—The SUMMING UP of the CONTROVERSY.

1. Zophar, who ought to have concluded the last series, having declined to prosecute the debate any farther, the general argument is summed up by Elihu, who has not hitherto spoken, though present from the first. 2. He condemns the subject matter of the opponents of Job, as altogether irrelevant; accuses Job himself, not of suffering for any past impiety, but of speaking irreverently during the controversy. 3. He contests several of Job's positions; asserts that afflictions are often sent by the Almighty for the wisest and most merciful purposes; and that, in every instance, our duty is submission. 4. He closes with describing the Creator as supreme, and uncontrollable; and as creating, upholding, and regulating, all nature according to his own will and pleasure; incomprehensibly and mysteriously, yet ever wisely and benevolently. Chap. xxxii—xxxvii.

PART VI.—The ACQUITTAL and RESTORATION of Job.

1. The Almighty appears to pronounce judgment; speaks to Job in a sublime and magnificent address out of a whirlwind. 2. Job humbles himself before God, and is accepted. 3. His friends are severely reprov'd for their conduct during the controversy: a sacrifice is demanded of them, and Job is appointed their intercessor. 4. He prays for his friends, and his prayer is accepted. 5. He is restored to his former state of prosperity, and his substance in every instance doubled. Chap. xxxviii—xlii.

On this plan Mr. Goode has constructed his learned translation and excellent observations on this book.

Historical Narration concerning the restoration of Job to health and great worldly prosperity; with the account of his age and death, chap. xlii. ver. 7—17.

Some have contended that the whole of this book is written in verses: but I can see no rule or method by which the two first chapters, and the ten last verses of chap. xlii. can be reduced to poetry, or poetic arrangement. They are merely narrative; and are utterly destitute of that dignity and pathos every where evident in this poem, and in every part of the Hebrew hemistich poetry wherever it occurs. I could almost suppose these places the work of another hand; a preface and a conclusion written by some person who was well acquainted with the fact of Job's temptation, and found such additions necessary to cast light upon the poem. But they are most probably the work of the same hand. There are, in different parts of the body of the poem, sentences in prose, which are the headings to the different speeches. This is frequent among the Arabic and Persian poets. Such headings are generally, in rubric, and should here stand by themselves.

THE BOOK OF JOB.

As the time in which Job lived is so very uncertain, (see the preface, and the observations at the end of the notes on the first chapter,) the date found in our common English Bibles, (which is upon the supposition that Moses wrote the book whilst among the Midianites, about one thousand five hundred and twenty years before the commencement of the Christian era,) is inserted in the margin, not because it is the most probable, but because it is the most generally received.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. In the land of Uz] This country was situated in Idumea, or the land of Edom, in Arabia Petraea, of which it comprised a very large district. See the preface.

Whose name was Job] The original is אִיּוֹב Ayob; and this orthography is followed by the Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic. From the Vulgate we borrow Job, not very dissimilar from the Iob Job of the Septuagint. The name signifies sorrowful, or he that weeps. He is supposed to have been called Jobab. See more in the introduction.

Perfect and upright] יָשָׁר וְיָדָבָר tam ve yashar; COMPLETE as to his mind and heart; and STRAIGHT or CORRECT as to his moral deportment.

Fearing God] Had him in continual reverence as the fountain of justice, truth, and goodness.

Eschewed evil.] שָׂרַח עָוֹן sar merad, departing from, or avoiding evil. We have the word eschew, from the old French eschever, which signifies to avoid. All within was holy, all without was righteous: and his whole life was employed in departing from evil, and drawing nigh to God. Coverdale translates, an innocent and virtuous man, such one as feared God and eschewed evil. From his translation we retain the word eschew.

Verse 3. His substance also was seven thousand sheep] A thousand, says the Chaldee, for each of his sons. Three thousand camels: a thousand for each of his daughters. Five hundred yoke of oxen for himself. And five hundred she-asses for his wife. Thus the Targum divides the substance of this eminent man.

A very great household] עֲבָדָה רַבָּה מְאֹד abadah rabbah me'od, "a very great estate." The word עֲבָדָה abadah, refers chiefly to husbandry, including all manner of labour in the field, and with cattle, and every description of servants.

The greatest of all the men of the east] He was more eminent than any other person in that region in wisdom, wealth, and piety. He was the chief emir of that district.

Verse 4. Feasted in their houses, every one his day] It is likely that a birthday festival is here intended. When the birthday of one arrived, he invited his brothers and sisters to feast with him; and each observed the same custom.

Verse 5. When the days of their feasting were gone about] At the conclusion of the year, when the birthday of each had been celebrated, the pious father appears to have gathered them all together, that the whole family might hold a feast to the Lord, offering burnt-offerings in order to make an atonement for sins of all kinds; whether presumptuous, or committed through ignorance. This we may consider as a general custom among the godly, in those ancient times.

And cursed God in their hearts.] וּבִרְעוּ אֱלֹהִים U bircu Elohim. In this book, according to most interpreters, the verb בָּרַךְ barak, signifies both to bless and to curse: and the noun אֱלֹהִים Elohim, signifies the true God, false this man was the greatest of all the men of the East.

4 And his sons went and feasted in their houses, every one his day, and sent and called for their three sisters, to eat and to drink with them.

5 And it was so, when the days of their feasting were gone about, that Job sent and sanctified them, and rose up early in the morning, and offered burnt-offerings according to the number of them all: for Job said, It may be that my sons have sinned, and cursed God in their hearts. Thus did Job continually.

6 ¶ Now there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord, and Satan came also among them.

1 Heb. all the days.—2 Ch. 2. 1.—1 Kings 22. 19. Ch. 22. 7.—3 Heb. the adversary.—4 Gen. 21. 1. Rev. 12. 9, 10.—5 Heb. in the midst of them.

gods, and great or mighty. The reason why Job offered the burnt-offerings appears to have been this: In a country where idolatry flourished, he thought it possible that his children might, in their festivity, have given way to idolatrous thoughts, or done something prescribed by idolatrous rites: and, therefore, the words may be rendered thus; it may be that my children have blessed the gods in their hearts. Others think that the word בָּרַךְ barak, should be understood as implying farewell, bidding adieu, lest my children have bidden adieu to God; that is, renounced him, and cast off his fear. To me this is very unlikely. Mr. Mason Goode contends that the word should be understood in its regular and general sense, to bless; and that the conjunction וְ vau should be translated nor. "Peradventure my sons may have sinned, nor blessed God in their hearts." This version he supports with great learning. I think the sense given above is more plain, and less embarrassed. They might have been guilty of some species of idolatry. This is possible even among those called Christians, in their banquets: witness their songs to Bacchus, Venus, &c. which are countless in number, and often sung by persons who would think themselves injured not to be reputed Christians. Coverdale, in his translation, (1535) renders the passage thus: Peradventure my sonnes have done some offence and have been unthankful to God in their parties.

Thus did Job continually.] At the end of every year, when all the birthday festivals had gone round.

Verse 6. There was a day when the sons of God] All the versions, and indeed all the critics, are puzzled with the phrase sons of God; בני האלהים benei ha-Elohim, literally sons of the God; or, sons of the gods. The Vulgate has simply filius Dei, sons of God. The Septuagint οἱ ἀγγελοι του θεου, the angels of God. The Chaldee כְּלֵי מַלְאָכָה killei mala'acaya, "troops of angels." The Syriac retains the Hebrew words and letters, only leaving out the demonstrative הֵ he in the word הַבְּנֵי אֱלֹהִים ha-benei Elohim, thus, הַבְּנֵי אֱלֹהִים benei Elohim. The Arabic nearly copies the Hebrew also [بنو الله] banoa llohem; to which, if we give not the literal translation of the Hebrew, we may give what translation we please. Coverdale, 1535, translates it servauntes of God. The Targum supposes that this assembly took place on the day of the great atonement, which occurred once each year. And there was a day of judgment in the beginning of the year; and the troops of angels came that they might stand in judgment before the Lord. But what are we to make of this whole account? Expositions are endless. That of Mr. Peters appears to me to be at once the most simple and most judicious:—"The Scripture speaks of God after the manner of men; for there is a necessity of condescending to our capacities, and of suiting the revelation to our apprehension. As kings, therefore, transact their most important affairs in a solemn council or assembly: so God is pleased to represent himself as having his council likewise; and as passing the decrees

7 And the Lord said unto Satan, Whence comest thou? Then Satan answered the Lord, and said, From going to and from in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

8 And the Lord said unto Satan, Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and escheweth evil?

9 Then Satan answered the Lord, and said, Doth Job serve God for naught?

10 Hast thou not made a hedge about him, and about his house, and about all that he hath on every side? thou hast blest the work of his hands, and his substance is increased in the land.

11 But put forth thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curse thee to thy face.

12 And the Lord said unto Satan, Behold, all that he hath is in thy power, only upon himself put not forth thine hand. So Satan went forth from the presence of the Lord.

of his providence in an assembly of his holy angels. We have here, in the case of Job, the same grand assembly held; as was before in that of Ahab, 1 Kings xxi. the same host of heaven called here the sons of God, presenting themselves before Jehovah, as in the vision of Micaiah they are said to stand on his right hand, and on his left. A wicked spirit appearing among them, here called Satan, or the adversary; and there, a lying spirit; both bent on mischief, and ready to do all the hurt they were permitted to do; for both were under the control of his power. The imagery is just the same; and the only difference is in the manner of the relation. That mentioned above, Micaiah as a prophet, and in the actual exercise of his prophetic office, delivers, as he received it, in a vision. I saw the Lord sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him, on his right hand and on his left—and there come forth a LYING SPIRIT, and stood before the Lord, and said—1 Kings xxii. 19—22. The other as a historian interweaves it with his history; and tells us, in his plain narrative style, There was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the Lord; and SATAN came also among them. And this he delivers in the same manner as he does, There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job.

The things delivered to us by these two inspired writers are the same in substance, equally high, and above the reach of human sight and knowledge; but the manner of delivering them is different, each as suited best to his particular purpose. This, then, is the prophetic way of representing things as to the manner of doing them, which, whether done exactly in the same manner concerns us not to know; but which are really done; and God would have them described as done in this manner, to make the more lively and lasting impression on us. At the same time it must not be forgotten that representations of this kind are founded in a well known and established truth, viz. the doctrine of good and bad angels; a point revealed from the beginning, and without a previous knowledge of which the visions of the prophets could scarcely be intelligible. See Gen. xxviii.

And Satan came also] This word also is emphatic in the original סָטָן ha-Satan, the Satan, or, the adversary; translated by the Septuagint & diabolos. The original word is preserved by the Chaldees, Syriac, and Arabic: indeed, in each of them the word signifies an adversary. St. Peter, 1 Epist. chap. v. ver. 8. plainly refers to this place; and fully proves that סָטָן ha-Satan, which he literally translates & Ἀδύδιος, the ADVERSARY, is no other than & Διάβολος, the DEVIL, or chief of bad demons, which he adds to others by way of explanation. There are many δαιμόνες, demons, mentioned in Scripture: but the word Satan or devil is never found in the originals of the Old and New Testaments in the plural number. Hence we reasonably infer, that all evil spirits are under the government of one chief, the DEVIL, who is more powerful and more wicked than the rest. From the GREEK Διάβολος, comes the LATIN Diabolus, the SPANISH Diabolo, the FRENCH Diable, the ITALIAN Diavolo, the GERMAN Teuffel, the DUTCH Duivel, the ANGLO-SAXON deofol, and the ENGLISH Devil, which some would derive from the compound THE-DEVIL; & ὁ ὄντας, the evil one, or wicked one.

It is now fashionable to deny the existence of this evil spirit; and this is one of what St. John (Rev. ii. 24.) calls τὰ βάθη τοῦ οὐρανοῦ, the depths of Satan; as he well knows that they who deny his being will not be afraid of his power and influence; will not watch against his wiles and devices; will not pray to God for deliverance from the evil one; will not expect him to be trampled down under their feet, who has no existence; and, consequently, they will become an easy and unopposing prey to the enemy of their souls. By leading men to disbelieve and deny his existence, he throws them off their guard; and is then their complete master, and they are led captive by him at his will. It is well known that among all those who make any profession of religion, those who deny the existence of the devil are they who pray little or none at all; and are, apparently, as careless about the existence of God, as they are about the being of a devil. Piety to God is with them out of the question; for those who do not pray, especially in private, (and I never met with a devil-denier who did,) have no religion of any kind, whatsoever pretensions they may choose to make.

Verse 7. From going to and fro in the earth] The translation of the Septuagint is curious: Περιεβλῶν τὴν γῆν καὶ ἐμπεριπατῶν τὴν οἰκὸν οὐρανοῦ, περιεβλῶν, "Having gone round the earth, and walked over all that is under heaven, I am come hither." The Chaldees says, "I am come from going round the earth to examine the works of the children of men; and from walking through it." Coverdale, who generally hits the sense, translates thus: I have gone aboute the lande and walked throughe it. Mr. Goode, From roaming round the earth, and walking about it.

St. Peter, as has already been stated, ver. 6. refers to this. Be sober, be vigilant; for your adversary the devil goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. I rather think, with Coverdale, that ἄγρυπνος, here signifies rather that land, than the habitable globe. The words are exceedingly emphatic: and the latter verb ἠθροῦν hithraoth being in the hithpael conjugation, shows how earnest and determined the devil is in his work: he sets himself to walk; he is busily employed in it; he is seeking the destruction of men; and while they sleep, he wakes; while they are careless, he is alert. The spirit of this saying is often expressed by the simple inhabitants of the country: when they perceive a man plotting mischief, and frequent in transgression, they say, the devil is busy with him.

Verse 8. Hast thou considered my servant Job] Literally, Hast thou placed thy heart on my servant Job? Hast thou viewed his conduct with attention, whilst thou wert roaming about, seeking whom thou mightest devour? viz. the careless, prayerless, and profligate in general.

Verse 9. Doth Job serve God for naught?] Thou hast made it his interest to be exemplary in his conduct: for this assertion Satan gives his reasons in what immediately follows.

Verse 10. Hast thou not made a hedge about him] Thou hast fortified him with spikes and spears. Thou hast defended him as by an unapproachable hedge. He is an object of thy peculiar care: and is not exposed to the common trials of life.

Verse 11. And put forth thine hand] Shoot the dart of poverty and affliction against him.

And he will curse thee to thy face] אָמַר לִי עַל פְּנֵי יָצְרָךְ im lo al panycha Yebarchicha. "If he will not bless thee to thy appearance." He will bless thee only in proportion to the temporal good thou bestowest on him:—to the providential and gracious appearances or displays of thy power in his behalf. If thou wilt be gracious, he will be pious. The exact maxim of a great statesman, Sir Robert Walpole; "Every man has his price." But you have not bought such a one; "No, because I would not go up to his price. He valued himself at more than I thought him worth; and I could get others cheaper, who, in the general muster, would do as well." No doubt Sir R. met with many such; and the devil many more. But still God has multitudes that will neither sell their souls, their consciences, nor their country, for any price; who, though God should slay them, will, nevertheless, trust in him, and be honest men, however tempted by the devil and his vicegerents. So did Job; so have done thousands: so will all do in whose hearts Christ dwells by faith.

Verse 12. All that he hath is in thy power] Satan cannot deprive a man even of an ass, a sheep, or a pig, but by especial permission of God. His power and malice are ever bounded, and under control.

So Satan went forth] The Targum adds, with authority from the presence of the Lord.

13 ¶ And there was a day when his sons and his daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house :

14 And there came a messenger unto Job, and said, The oxen were ploughing, and the asses feeding beside them ;

15 And the Sabeans fell upon them, and took them away ; yea, they have slain the servants with the edge of the sword, and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

16 While he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, The fire of God is fallen from heaven, and hath burnt up the sheep, and the servants, and consumed them, and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

17 While he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, The Chaldeans made out three bands, and fell upon the camels, and have carried them away, yea, and slain the servants with the edge of the sword, and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

18 While he was yet speaking, there came also another, and said, Thy sons and thy daughters were eating and drinking wine in their eldest brother's house ;

19 And, behold, there came a great wind from the wilderness, and smote the four corners of the house, and it fell upon the young men, and they are dead, and I only am escaped alone to tell thee.

20 Then Job arose, and rent his mantle, and shaved his head, and fell down upon the ground, and worshipped, 21 And said, Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither : the Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away ; blessed be the name of the Lord.

22 ^b In all this Job sinned not, nor charged God foolishly.

Verse 13. There was a day] The first day of the week, says the Targum. It no doubt refers to one of those birthday festivals mentioned before.

Verse 14. The asses feeding beside them] מרמ אטונוח, the she-asses, which appear to have been more domesticated, as of more worth and use than the others, both for their milk and their work.

Verse 15. And the Sabeans fell] The Vulgate alone understands this of a people. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, understand it as implying a marauding party. The Chaldees say, "Lilith, queen of Zamagad, rushed suddenly upon them, and carried them away." The Sabeans mentioned here are supposed to have been the same with those who were the descendants of Abraham by Keturah, whose son Jokahan begat Sheba. The sons of Keturah were sent by Abraham into the East, Gen. xxv. 6. and inhabited Arabia Deserta, on the east of the land of Uz. Hordes of predatory banditti were frequent in those countries ; and continue so to the present day. They made sudden incursions, and carried off men, women, children, cattle, and goods of every description ; and immediately retired to the desert, whither it was in vain to pursue them.

Verse 16. The fire of God is fallen] Though the fire of God may mean a great, a tremendous fire ; yet it is most natural to suppose lightning is meant : for as thunder was considered to be the voice of God, so lightning was the fire of God. And as the prince of the power of the air was permitted now to arm himself with this dreadful artillery of heaven, he might easily direct the zig-zag lightning to every part of the fields where the sheep were feeding, and so destroy the whole in a moment.

Verse 17. The Chaldeans made out three bands] The Chaldeans inhabited each side of the Euphrates, near to Babylon, which was their capital. They were also mixed with the wandering Arabs ; and lived like them, on rapine. They were the descendants of Chesed, son of Nahor, and brother of Huz, from whom they had their name Chesedim, which we translate Chaldeans. They divided themselves into three bands, in order the more speedily and effectually to encompass, collect, and drive off the three thousand camels : probably they mounted the camels, and rode off.

Verse 19. A great wind from the wilderness] Here was another proof of the influence of the prince of the power of the air. What mischief might he not do with this tremendous agent, were he not constantly under the control of the Almighty ? He seems to have directed four different currents, which, blowing against the four corners or sides of the house, crushed it together, and involved all within in one common ruin.

Verse 20. Rent his mantle] Tearing the garments, shaving or pulling off the hair of the head, throwing dust or ashes on the head, and sitting on the ground, were acts by which immoderate grief was expressed. Job must have felt the bitterness of anguish when he was told that, in addition to the loss of all his property, he was deprived of his ten children by a violent death. Had he not felt this most poignantly, he would have been unworthy of the name of man.

Worshipped] Prostrated himself : lay all along upon the ground, with his face in the dust.

Verse 21. Naked came I out of my mother's womb] I had no earthly possessions when I came into the world ; I cannot have less going out of it. What I have the Lord gave : as it was his free gift, he has a right to resume it when he pleases ; and I owe him gratitude for the time he has permitted me to enjoy this gift.

Naked shall I return thither] Whither ? Not to his mother's womb surely ; nor does he call the earth his mother in this place. In the first clause of the verse he speaks without a metaphor ; and in the latter he speaks in reference to the ground on which he was about to fall. As I came out of my mother's womb, destitute of all earthly possessions ; so shall I return now shammah, there ; i. e. to the earth on which he was now fallen. That mother earth, was a common expression in different nations I allow ; but I believe no such metaphor was now in the mind of Job.

The Lord gave] The Chaldees has, "The Word of the Lord, וְיָרַד מִיְמֵינָא דַּיָּא, gave ; and the Word of the Lord, and the house of his judgment, have taken away." Word is used here personally, as in many other places of all the Targums.

Blessed be the name of the Lord] The following is a fine paraphrase on the sentiment in this verse :—

"Good, when he gives, supremely good ;
Not less when he denies ;
Afflictions from his sovereign hand
Are blessings in disguise.

Seeing I have lost all my temporal goods, and all my domestic comforts, may God alone be all my portion ! The Vulgate, Septuagint, and Coverdale, add, The Lord hath done as he pleased.

Verse 22. In all this Job sinned not] He did not give way to any action, passion, or expression, offensive to his Maker. He did not charge God with acting unkindly toward him : but felt as perfectly satisfied with the privation which the hand of God had occasioned, as he was with the affluence and health which that hand had bestowed. This is the transaction that gave the strong and vivid colouring to the character of Job : in this, and in this alone, he was a pattern of patience and resignation. In this Satan was utterly disappointed : he found a man who loved his God more than his earthly portion. This was a rare case, even in the experience of the devil. He had seen multitudes who bartered their God for money ; and their hopes of blessedness in the world to come, for secular possessions in the present. He had been so often successful in this kind of temptation, that he made no doubt he should succeed again. He saw many who, when riches increased, set their hearts on them, and forgot God : he saw many also who, when deprived of earthly comforts, blasphemed their Maker. He, therefore, inferred that Job, in similar circumstances, would act like the others : he was disappointed. Reader, by riches or poverty has he succeeded with thee ? Art thou pious when affluent, and patient and contented when in poverty ?

That Job lived after the giving of the law, seems to me clear from many references to the rites and ceremonies instituted by Moses. In chap. i. ver. 6. we are informed that he sanctified his children, and offered burnt-offerings daily in the morning for each of them. This was a general ordinance of the law, as we may see Lev. ix. 7. Moses said unto Aaron, Go unto the altar, and offer thy sin-offering and thy burnt-offering, and make an atonement for thyself and for the people. Ver. 22. And Aaron lifted up his hand toward the people, and blessed them, and came down from offering the burnt-offering.

This sort of offering, we are told above, Job offered continually :—and this also was according to the law, Exod. xxix. 42. This shall be a continual burnt-offering throughout your generations. See also Numb. xviii. 3, 6, 10, 15, 24, 31.

This custom was observed after the captivity, Ezra iii. 5. They offered the continual burnt-offering. And of every one that offered a free-will-offering, see also Neh. x. 33. Ezekiel, who prophesied during the captivity, enjoins this positively, chap. xlvi. 13—16. Thou shalt

CHAPTER II.

The sons of God came more proud themselves before him; and Satan comes also, accusing Job as a person whose sanctification would be soon shaken provided his body were to be subjected to sore afflictions, 1-5. He receives permission to afflict Job, and smites him with sore biles, 6-8. His wife reviles him, 9. His pious reproof, 10. His three friends come to visit and mourn with him.

AGAIN there was a day when the sons of God came to present themselves before the LORD, and Satan came also among them to present himself before the LORD.

2 And the LORD said unto Satan, From whence comest thou? And Satan answered the LORD, and said, From going to and fro in the earth, and from walking up and down in it.

3 And the LORD said unto Satan, Hast thou considered my servant Job, that there is none like him in the earth, a perfect and an upright man, one that feareth God, and eacheweth evil?

daily prepare a burnt-offering unto the Lord: thou shalt prepare it every morning.

Job appears to have thought that his children might have sinned through ignorance, or sinned privately: and it was consequently necessary to make the due sacrifices to God in order to prevent his wrath, and their punishment: he, therefore, offered the burnt-offering, which was prescribed by the law in cases of sins committed through ignorance. See the ordinances Lev. iv. 1—35. v. 15—19, and particularly, Numb. xv. 24—29. I think it may fairly be presumed that the offerings which Job made for his children were in reference to these laws.

The worship of the sun, moon, and stars, as being the most prevalent and most seductive idolatry, was very expressly forbidden by the law, Deut. iv. 19. Take heed lest thou lift up thine eyes to heaven; and when thou seest the sun, and the moon, and the stars, all the host of HEAVEN, shouldst be driven to worship them, and serve them. Job purges himself from this species of idolatry, chap. xxxi. ver. 26—28. If I beheld the sun when it shined, or the moon walking in brightness, and my heart hath been secretly enticed, or my mouth hath kissed my hand: this also were an iniquity to be punished by the judge; for I should have DENIED the God that is ABOVE.

He clears himself also from adultery in reference to the law enacted against that sin, Job xxxi. 9—12. If mine heart have been deceived by a woman, or if I have laid wait at my neighbour's door, then let my wife grind to another—for this is a heinous crime, yea it is an iniquity to be punished by the judges. See the law against this sin, Exod. xx. 14—17. Thou shalt not commit ADULTERY: thou shalt not COVERT thy NEIGHBOUR'S WIFE. Lev. xx. 10. The man that committeth ADULTERY with another man's wife shall surely be put to death. See Deut. xxii. 22. And for the judge's office in such cases, see Deut. xvii. 9—12. Thou shalt come unto the priests and Levites, and unto the JUDGE that shall be in those days, and they shall show thee the sentence of JUDGEMENT. 1 Sam. ii. 25. If one man sin against another, the JUDGE shall JUDGE him.

The following will, I think, be considered an evident allusion to the passage of the Red sea, and the destruction of the proud Egyptian king, Job xxvi. 11, 12. The pillars of heaven tremble, and are astonished at thy reproof. He DIVIDETH the SEA with his power; and by his understanding he SMITETH through the proud. These, with several others that might be adduced, are presumptive proofs that the writer of this book lived after the giving and establishment of the law, if not much later, let Job himself live when he might. See other proofs in the notes.

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. Again there was a day] How long this was after the former trial we know not: probably one whole year, when, as the Targum intimates, it was the time of the annual atonement; which, if so, must have been at least one whole year after the former; and during which period the patience and resignation of Job had sufficient scope to show themselves. This appearance of the sons of God and Satan is to be understood metaphorically—there could be nothing real in it—but it is intended to instruct us in the doctrine of the existence of good and evil spirits; that Satan pursues man with implacable enmity, and that he can do no man hurt either in his person or property but by the especial permission of God; and that God gives him permission only when he purposes to overrule it for the greater manifestation of his own glory, and the greater good of his tempted followers.

Verse 2. To destroy him without cause.] Thou wishest me to permit thee to destroy a man whose sins have not and still he holdeth fast his integrity, although thou movest me against him, to destroy him without cause.

4 And Satan answered the LORD, and said, Skin for skin, yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life.

5 But put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face.

6 And the LORD said unto Satan, Behold, he is in thine hand; but save his life.

7 So went Satan forth from the presence of the LORD, and smote Job with sore biles from the sole of his foot unto his crown.

8 And he took him a potsherd to scrape himself withal: and he sat down among the ashes.

9 Then said his wife unto him, Dost thou still retain thine integrity? curse God, and die called for so heavy a judgment. This seems to be the meaning of this saying. The original word יָכַל le balen, signifies to swallow down or devour; and this word St. Peter had no doubt in view in the place quoted on ver. 7. of the preceding chapter. Your adversary the devil goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour; ζητῶν τινα καταπιῖν, seeking whom he may swallow or gulp down. See my note on 1 Pet. v. 8.

Verse 4. Skin for skin.] That is, a man will part with all he has in the world to save his life; and he will part with all by piecemeal till he has left nothing on earth, and even be thankful, provided his life be spared. Thou hast only destroyed his property; thou hast left him his life and his health. Thou hast not touched his flesh nor his bone; therefore, he is patient and resigned. Man, through the love of life, will go much farther: he will give up one member to save the rest: yea, limb after limb, as long as there is hope that, by such sacrifices, life may be spared or prolonged. This is the meaning given to the passage by the Targum; and I believe, the true one: hence, ver. 7. the Lord says, Save his life.

Verse 5. He will curse thee to thy face.] Literally, If he will bless thee to thy face, or appearances. His piety to thee will be always regulated by thy bounty to him. See the note on chap. i. ver. 11.

Verse 6. But save his life.] His body thou shalt have permission to afflict, but against his life thou shalt have no power; therefore, take care of his life. The original נפש נפשו naphso shemor, may be translated, keep his soul: but the word also signifies life; yet in the hands of the destroyer the life of this holy man is placed! How astonishing is the economy of salvation! it is so managed by the unlimited power and skill of God that the grand adversary of souls becomes himself, by the order of God, the preserver of that which the evil of his nature incessantly prompts him to destroy!

Verse 7. Sore biles] שָׂרָפִים be shechin ra, "with an evil inflammation." What this diabolical disorder was interpreters are not agreed. Some think it was the leprosy; and this is the reason why he dwelt by himself, and had his habitation in an unclean place, without the city, Septuagint, εἰς τῆς τολεως, or in the open air: and the reason why his friends beheld him afar off, ver. 12. was because they knew that the disorder was infectious.

His scraping himself with a potsherd indicates a disease accompanied with intolerable itching, one of the characteristics of the small pox. Query, Was it not this disorder? And in order to save his life, for that he had in especial command, did not Satan himself direct him to the cool regimen, without which, humanly speaking, the disease must have proved fatal! In the elephantiasis and leprosy there is, properly speaking, no bile, or detached inflammation, or swelling; but one uniform disordered state of the whole surface, so that the whole body is covered with loathsome scales, and the skin appears like that of the elephant, thick and wrinkled, from which appearance the disorder has got its name. In the small-pox it is different: each pock or pustule is a separate inflammation, tending to suppuration; and, during this process, the fever is in general very high, and the anguish and distress of the patient intolerable. When the suppuration is pretty far advanced, the itching is extreme; and the hands are often obliged to be confined to prevent the patient from literally tearing his own flesh.

Verse 9. Then said his wife.] To this verse the Septuagint add the following words: "Much time having elapsed, his wife said unto him, How long dost thou stand steadfast, saying, 'Behold I wait yet a little longer looking 10 But he said unto her, Thou speakest as one of the foolish women speaketh. What? shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? In all this did not Job sin with his lips.

11 ¶ Now when Job's three friends heard of all this evil that was come upon him, they came every one from his own place; Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite: for they had made an appointment together to come to mourn with him, and to comfort him.

12 And when they lifted up their eyes afar off, for the hope of my salvation.' Behold thy memorial is already blotted out from the earth, together with thy sons and thy daughters, the fruits of my pains and labours, for whom, with anxiety, I have laboured in vain. Thyself also sittest in the rottenness of worms night and day, while I am a wanderer from place to place, and from house to house, waiting for the setting of the sun that I may rest from my labours, and from the griefs which oppress me. Speak, therefore, some word against God, and die." We translate Curse God and die, בָּרַח אֱלֹהִים בָּרַח אֱלֹהִים נָא. The verb בָּרַח barach is supposed to include in it the ideas of cursing and blessing; but it is not clear that it has the former meaning in any part of the Sacred Writings, though we sometimes translate it so.

Here it seems to be a strong irony. Job was exceedingly afflicted; and apparently dying, through sore disease: yet his soul was filled with gratitude to God. His wife, destitute of the salvation which her husband possessed, gave him this ironical reproof. Bless God and die—What! bless him for his goodness, while he is destroying all that thou hast! bless him for his support, while he is casting thee down and destroying thee! Bless on, and die.

The Targum says, that Job's wife's name was Dinah, and that the words which she spake to him on this occasion were וימית יי מימרא בריך berich meymra dayai umith. Bless the Word of the Lord, and die.

Ovid has such an irony as I suppose this to have been:

Quid vos sacra iurant? quid nunc Egypti prouunt
Sistra?—
Cum respiciat mala facta bonis, improba fasces
Sollitior nullis esse putat, et Fide pius; moriere pius. Cole sacra, colentem
Mors grauis a templis in casa busta trahet.
Amor, lib. iii. Eleg. ix. ver. 33.

"In vials to gods, (if gods there are,) we pray,
And needless victims prodigally pay;
Worship their sleeping deities; yet death
Scorns votaries, and stops the praying breath.
To hallowed shrines intruding fate will come
And drag you from the altar to the tomb." Stepmay.

Verse 10. Thou speakest as one of the foolish! Thou speakest like an infidel: like one who has no knowledge of God, of religion, or of a future state.

The Targum, who calls this woman Dinah, translates thus: "Thou speakest like one of those women who have wrought folly in the house of their father." This is in reference to an ancient rabbinical opinion, that Job lived in the days of the patriarch Jacob, whose daughter Dinah he had married.

Shall we receive good? This we have received in great abundance, for many years:

And shall we not receive evil? Shall we murmur when he afflicts us for a day, who has given us health for so many years? Shall we blaspheme his name for momentary privations, who has given us such a long succession of enjoyments? His blessings are his own; he never gave them to us; they were only lent. We have had the long, the free, the unmerited use of them; and shall we be offended at the owner, when he comes to reclaim his own property! This would be foolish, ungrateful, and wicked. So may every one reason who is suffering from adversity. But who, besides Job, reasons thus? Man is naturally discontented and ungrateful.

In all this did not Job sin with his lips! The Chaldee adds, But in his heart he thought words. He had surmising of heart, though he let nothing escape from his lips.

Verse 11. Job's three friends! The first was Eliphaz, the Temanite; or, as the Septuagint has it, Ἐλιφάζ ὁ Θαϊμανῶν βασιλεὺς, Eliphaz the king of the Thamanites. Eliphaz was one of the sons of Esau; and Teman, of Eliphaz, Gen. xxxvi. 10, 11. Teman was a city of Edom, Jer. xlix. 7—20. Ezek. xxv. 13. Amos i. 11, 12.

Bildad the Shuhite! Or, as the Septuagint, Βαλδὰδ, ὁ Σουχῶν τυραννός, Baldad, tyrant of the Suchites. Shuah was the son of Abraham, by Keturah; and his posterity is reckoned among the Easterns. It is supposed he should be placed with his brother Midian, and his brother's sons and knew him not, they lifted up their voice, and wept; and they rent every one his mantle, and sprinkled dust upon their heads toward heaven.

13 So they sat down with him upon the ground seven days and seven nights, and none spake a word unto him: for they saw that his grief was very great.

CHAPTER III.

Job curses the day of his birth, and regrets that he ever saw the light, 1—12. Describes the empire of death and its inhabitants, 13—19. Regrets that he is appointed to live in the midst of sorrow, for the calamities which he feared had overtaken him, 20—26.

AFTER this opened Job his mouth, and cursed his day.

Sheba and Dedan. See Gen. xxv. 2, 3. Dedan was a city of Edom, see Jer. xlii. 8. and seems to have been situated in its southern boundary as Teman was in its western, Ezek. xxv. 13.

Zophar the Naamathite! Or, according to the Septuagint, Ζωφάρ Μιναίων βασιλεὺς, Zophar king of the Minaites. He most probably came from that Naamah, which was bordering upon the Edomites to the south, and fell by lot to the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 21—41. These circumstances which have already been mentioned in the introduction, prove that Job must have dwelt in the land of Edom; and that all his friends dwelt in Arabia Petraea, or in the countries immediately adjacent. That some of those Eastern people were highly cultivated we have at least indirect proof in the case of the Temanites, Jer. xlix. 7. Concerning Edom thus saith the Lord of Hosts, Is wisdom no more in Teman? Is counsel perished from the prudent? Is their wisdom vanished? They are celebrated also in Baruch iii. 22, 23. Speaking of wisdom, he says, "It hath not been heard of in Chanaan; neither hath it been seen in Theman. The Agarrenes that seek wisdom upon earth, the merchants of Moran and of Theman, the expounders of fables, and searchers out of understanding, none of these have known the way of wisdom." It is evident enough from these quotations, that the inhabitants of those districts were celebrated for their knowledge; and the sayings of Job's three friends are proofs that their reputation for wisdom stood on very solid foundations.

Verse 12. They rent every one his mantle! I have already had frequent occasions to point out, and illustrate by quotations from the ancients, the actions that were used in order to express profound grief, such as wrapping themselves in sackcloth, covering the face, strewing dust or ashes upon the head, sitting upon the bare ground, &c. &c. significant actions which were in use among all nations.

Verse 13. They sat down with him upon the ground seven days! They were astonished at the unprecedented change which had taken place in the circumstances of this most eminent man: they could not reconcile his present situation with any thing they had met with in the history of divine providence. The seven days mentioned here were the period appointed for mourning. The Israelites mourned for Jacob seven days, Gen. l. 10. And the men of Jabesh mourned so long for the death of Saul, 1 Sam. xxxi. 13. 1 Chron. x. 12. And Ezekiel sat on the ground with the captives at Chebar, and mourned with and for them seven days, Ezek. iii. 15. The wise son of Sirach says, "Seven days do men mourn for him that is dead." Ecclus. xxii. So calamitous was the state of Job, that they considered him as a dead man; and went through the prescribed period of mourning for him.

They saw that his grief was very great. This is the reason why they did not speak to him: they believed him to be suffering for heavy crimes; and, seeing him suffer so much, they were not willing to add to his distresses by invectives or reproach. Job himself first broke silence.

NOTES ON CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. After this Job opened his mouth! After the seven days' mourning was over, there being no prospect of relief, Job is represented as thus cursing the day of his birth. Here the poetic part of the book begins; for most certainly there is nothing in the preceding chapters either in the form or spirit of Hebrew poetry. It is easy, indeed, to break the sentences into hemistichs; but this does not constitute them poetry: for, although Hebrew poetry is in general in hemistichs, yet it does not follow that the division of narrative into hemistichs must necessarily constitute it poetry.

In many cases the Asiatic poets introduce their compositions with prose narrative; and, having in this way prepared the reader for what he is to expect, begin their odes, cassidehs, gazels, &c. This appears to be the plan followed by the author of this book. Those who still think,

2 And Job ^b spake, and said,
 3 ^c Let the day perish wherein I was born, and the night ^d in which it was said, There is a man-child conceived.
 4 Let that day be darkness; let not God regard it from above; neither let the light shine upon it.
 5 Let darkness and ^e the shadow of death ^f stain it: let a cloud dwell upon it; ^g let the blackness of the day terrify it.

after examining the structure of those chapters, and comparing them with the undoubted poetic parts of the book, that they also, and the ten concluding verses, are poetry, have my consent, while I take the liberty to believe most decidedly the opposite.

Cursed his day] That is, the day of his birth: and thus he gave vent to the agonies of his soul; and the distractions of his mind, and his execrations have something in them awfully solemn, tremendously deep, and strikingly sublime. But let us not excuse all the things which he said in his haste, and in the bitterness of his soul, because of his former well-established character of patience. He bore all his privations with becoming resignation to the divine will and providence: but now, feeling himself the subject of continual sufferings, being in heaviness through manifold temptation, and probably the light of God withdrawn from his mind, as his consolations most undoubtedly were, he regrets that ever he was born; and, in a very high strain of impassioned poetry, curses his day. We find a similar execration to this in Jeremiah, chap. xx. 14—18. and in other places; which, by the way, are no proofs that the one borrowed from the other; but that this was the common mode of Asiatic thinking, speaking, and feeling, on such occasions.

Verse 3. There is a man-child conceived.] The word harah, signifies to conceive: yet here, it seems, it should be taken in the sense of being born, as it is perfectly unlikely that the night of conception should be either distinctly known or published.

Verse 4. Let that day be darkness.] The meaning is exactly the same with our expression, "Let it be blotted out of the calendar." However distinguished it may have been, as the birthday of a man once celebrated for his possessions, liberality, and piety, let it no longer be thus noted; as he who was thus celebrated is now the sport of adversity, the most impoverished, most afflicted, and the most wretched of human beings.

Let not God regard it from above.] אל יראשאו אל ידרשהו, "Let him not require it!"—let him not consider it essential to the completion of the days of the year: and, therefore, he adds, neither let the light shine upon it. If it must be a part of duration, let it not be distinguished by the light of the sun.

Verse 5. Let darkness and the shadow of death stain it.] יבלו יגאלוהו, "pollute or avenge it," from גאל gaal, to vindicate, avenge, &c. hence, יגאל, the nearest of kin, whose right it was to redeem an inheritance, and avenge the death of his relative by slaying the murderer. Let this day be pursued, overtaken, and destroyed. Let natural darkness, the total privation of the solar light, rendered still more intense by death's shadow projected over it, seize on and destroy this day, εκαβοι αυρη, Septuagint, alluding, perhaps, says Mr. Parkhurst, to the avenger of blood seizing the offender.

Let a cloud dwell upon it.] Let the dyumme cloude fall upon it. Coverdale. Let the thickest clouds have there their dwelling-place; let that be the period of time on which they shall constantly rest, and never be dispersed. This sense may be the import of the original תישכן עלי ענני תישכן tishchan elai ananah. Let it be the place in which clouds shall be continually gathered together, so as to be the storehouse of the densest vapours, still in the act of being increasingly condensed.

Let the blackness of the day terrify it.] And let it be happid su hitty sorrowe.—Coverdale. This is very expressive: lap signifies to fold up, or envelope any particular thing, with fold upon fold, so as to cover it every where, and secure it in all points. Leaving out the semicolon, we had better translate the whole clause thus: "Let the thickest cloud have its dwelling-place upon it, and let the bitterness of a day fill it with terror." A day similar to that, says the Targum, in which Jeremiah was distressed for the destruction of the house of the sanctuary; or like that in which Jonah was cast into the sea of Tarsis. Such a day as that on which some great or national misfortune has happened: probably in allusion to that in which the 6 As for that night, let darkness seize upon it; ^h let it not be joined unto the days of the year, let it not come into the number of the months.

7 Lo, let that night be solitary, let no joyful voice come therein.

8 Let them curse it that curse the day, ⁱ who are ready to raise up ^j their mourning.

9 Let the stars of the twilight thereof be dark; let it look for light, but have none; neither let it see the ^k dawning of the day:

^h Or, let them terrify it, as those who have a bitter day. Amos 8. 10.—g Or, let it not rejoice among the days.—h Jer. 9. 17, 18.—i Or, a Leviathan.—k Heb. the eyelids of the morning. Ch. 41. 18.

darkness that might be felt enveloped the whole land of Egypt; and the night in which the destroying angel slew all the first-born in the land.

Verse 6. As for that night, let darkness seize upon it.] I think the Targum has hit the sense of this whole verse: "Let darkness seize upon that night; let it not be reckoned among the annual festivals; in the number of the months of the calendar let it not be computed."

Some understand the word lo ophel, as signifying a dark storm: hence the Vulgate, tenebrosus turbo, "a dark whirlwind." And hence Coverdale, Let the dark storms overcome that night, let it not be reckoned among the days of the year, nor counted in the months. Every thing is here personified, day, night, darkness, shadow of death, cloud, &c. And the same idea of the total extinction of that portion of time, or its being rendered ominous and portentous, is pursued through all these verses, from the third to the ninth, inclusive. The imagery is diversified, the expressions varied, but the idea is the same.

Verse 7. Lo, let that night be solitary.] The word hinneh, behold, or lo! is wanting in one of De Rossi's MSS. nor is it expressed in the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, or Arabic.

The word lo galmud, which we translate solitary, is properly Arabic. From ghalama or jalama, signifying to cut off, make bare, amputate, comes jalmud, a rock, a great stone; and jalamedel, weight, a burden, trouble, from which we may gather Job's meaning—"Let that night be grievous, oppressive, as destitute of good as a bare rock is of verdure." The Targum gives the sense, In that night let there be tribulation.

Let no joyful voice come therein.] Let there be no choirs of singers; no pleasant music heard; no dancing or merriment. The word renannah, signifies any brisk movement, such as the vibration of the rays of light, or the brisk modulation of the voice in a cheerful ditty. The Targum has, Let not the crowing of the rural or wild cock resound in it. Let all work be intermitted; let there be no sportive exercises; and let all animals be totally silent.

Verse 8. Let them curse it that curse the day.] This translation is scarcely intelligible. I have waded through a multitude of interpretations, without being able to collect from them such a notion of the verse as could appear to me probable. Schultens, Rosenmüller, and after them Mr. Goode, have laboured much to make it plain. They think the custom of sorcerers, who had execrations for peoples, places, things, days, &c. is here referred to; such as Balaam, Elymas, and many others were: but I cannot think that a man who knew the Divine Being, and his sole government of the world, so well as Job did, would make such an allusion, who must have known that such persons and their pretensions were impostors and execrable vanities. I shall give as near a translation as I can of the words, and subjoin a short paraphrase, יקבו ארר יום ותחיים ערר יומ, yikkibehu orrey yom, ha atidim orer leviathan, "Let them curse it who detest the day; let them who are ready to raise up the Leviathan." That is, Let them curse my birthday who hate daylight, such as adulterers, murderers, thieves, and banditti, for whose practices the night is more convenient; and let them curse it who being, like me, weary of life, are desperate enough to provoke the Leviathan, the crocodile, to tear them to pieces. This version is nearly the same as that given by Coverdale, Let them that curse the day give it their curse also, even those that be ready to raise up Leviathan. By leviathan some understand the greatest and most imminent dangers; and others the devil, whom the enchanters are desperate enough to attempt to raise by their incantations.

Calmel understands the whole to be spoken of the Atlantes, a people of Ethiopia, a people who curse the sun, because it parches their fields and their bodies; and who fearlessly attack, kill, and eat, the crocodile. This seems a good sense.

Verse 9. Let the stars of the twilight thereof.] The stars of the twilight may here refer to the planets Venus, Ju-

10 Because it shut not up the doors of my mother's womb, nor hid sorrow from mine eyes.

11 Why died I not from the womb? why did I not give up the ghost when I came out of the belly?

13 For now should I have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept: then had I been at rest, pter, Mars, and Mercury, as well as to the brighter fixed stars.

Let it look for light] Here the prosopopoeia or personification is still carried on. The darkness is represented as waiting for the lustre of the evening star, but is disappointed: and then for the Aurora or dawn, but equally in vain. He had prayed that its light, the sun, should not shine upon it, ver. 4. and here he prays that its evening star may be totally obscured, and that it might never see the dawning of the day. Thus his execration comprehends every thing that might irradiate or enliven it.

Verse 10. Because it shut not up the doors] Here is the reason why he curses the day and night in which he was conceived and born; because, had he never been brought into existence, he would never have seen trouble. It seems, however, very harsh that he should have wished the destruction of his mother, in order that his birth might have been prevented: and I rather think Job's execration did not extend thus far. The Targum understands the passage as speaking of the umbilical cord, by which the fetus is nourished in its mother's womb: had this been shut up, there must have been a miscarriage, or he must have been dead born; and thus sorrow would have been hidden from his eyes. This seeming gloss is much nearer the letter and spirit of the Hebrew than is generally imagined. I shall quote the words, כִּי לֹא סָגַר מִי רֵחִי מִי, ki lo sagar daltey bitni, because it did not shut up the doors of my belly. This is much more consistent with the feelings of humanity, than to wish his mother's womb to have been his grave.

Verse 11. Why died I not from the womb?] As the other circumstance did not take place, why was I not still-born, without the possibility of revivescence? or, as this did not occur, why did I not die as soon as born? These three things appear to me to be clearly intended here:— 1. Dying in the womb; or never coming to maturity, as in the case of a miscarriage. 2. Being still-born, without ever being able to breathe. 3. Or, if born alive, dying within a short time after. And to these states, he seems to refer in the following verses.

Verse 12. Why did the knees prevent me?] Why was I dandled on the knees? Why was I nourished by the breasts? In either of the above cases I had neither been received into a mother's lap, nor hung upon a mother's breasts.

Verse 13. For now should I have lain still] In that case I had been insensible, quiet, without these overwhelming agitations; slept, unconscious of evil; been at rest, been out of the reach of calamity and sorrow.

Verse 14. With kings and counsellors of the earth] I believe this translation to be perfectly correct. The counsellors, מַיְסָדֵי, yoatsey, I suppose to mean the privy council, or advisers of kings; those without whose advice kings seldom undertake wars, expeditions, &c. These mighty agitators of the world are at rest in their graves, after the lives of commotion which they have led among men: most of whom, indeed, have been the troubleshooters of the peace of the globe.

Which build desolate places] Who erect mausoleums, funeral monuments, sepulchral pyramids, &c. to keep their names from perishing, while their bodies are turned to corruption. I cannot think, with some learned men, that Job is here referring to those patriotic princes who employed themselves in repairing the ruins and desolations which others had occasioned. His simple idea is that, had he died from the womb, he would have been equally at rest, neither troubling nor troubled, as those defunct kings and planners of wars and great designs are, who have nothing to keep even their names from perishing, but the monuments which they have raised to contain their corrupting flesh, mouldering bones, and dust.

Verse 15. Or with princes that had gold] Chief or mighty men, lords of the soil, or fortunate adventurers in merchandize, who got gold in abundance, filled their houses

16 Or as a hidden untimely birth I had not been; as infants which never saw light.

17 There the wicked cease from troubling; and there the weary be at rest.

18 There the prisoners rest together, they hear not the voice of the oppressor.

19 The small and great are there; and the servant is free from his master.

20 Wherefore is light given to him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul;

21 Which long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than for hid treasures; with silver, left all behind, and had nothing reserved for themselves but the empty places which they had made for their last dwelling; and where their dust now sleeps, devoid of care, painful journeys, and anxious expectations. He alludes here to the case of the covetous, whom nothing can satisfy, as an Asiatic writer has observed, but the dust that fills his mouth when laid in the grave. SAADY.

22 Which rejoice exceedingly, and are glad, when they can find the grave?

Verse 16. Or as a hidden untimely birth] An early miscarriage, which was scarcely perceptible by the parent herself: and in this case he had not been; he had never had the distinguishable form of a human being, whether male or female.

As infants] Little ones; those farther advanced in maturity, but miscarried long before the time of birth.

Verse 17. There the wicked cease] In the grave the oppressors of men cease from irritating, harassing, and distressing their fellow-creatures, and dependants.

And there the weary be at rest] Those who were worn out with the cruelties and tyrannies of the above. The troubleshooters and the troubled; the restless and the submissive; the toils of the great, and the labours of the slave, are here put in opposition.

Verse 18. The prisoners rest together] Those who were slaves, feeling all the troubles, and scarcely tasting any of the pleasures of life, are quiet in the grave together; and the voice of the oppressor, the hard unrelenting taskmaster, which was more terrible than death, is heard no more. They are free from his exactions, and his mouth is silent in the dust. This may be a reference to the Egyptian bondage. The children of Israel cried by reason of their oppressors or taskmasters.

Verse 19. The small and great are there] All sorts and conditions of men are equally blended in the grave, and ultimately reduced to one common dust: and of the bond and the free there is no difference. The grave is "The appointed place of rendezvous where all These are well met."

Equality is absolute among the sons of men in their entrance into and exit from the world: all the intermediate state is disparity. All men begin and end life alike; and there is no difference between the king and the cottager. A contemplation of this should equally humble the great and the small. The saying is trite, but it is true, Palida mors equo pulsat pede pauperum tabernaculum, Equosque terras. Hoc. Olear. lib. 1. Od. iv. ver. 13.

"With equal pace impetual Fate Knocks at the palace as the cottage gate."

Death is that state,

"Where they an equal honour share Who buried or unburied are. Where Asaraddon knows no more Than Irsu he content'd before. Where fair Achilles and Thersites lie, Equally naked, poor, and dry."

And why do not the living lay these things to heart? There is a fine saying in Seneca ad Marciam, cap. 20.

on this subject, which may serve as a comment on this place: Mors—servitutum invito domino remittit; hæc captivorum catenas levat; hæc è carcere eduxit, quos è ire imperium impotens veterat. Hæc est in quo nemo humilitatem suam sensit. Hæc qua nulli paruit; hæc qua nihil quicquam alieno fecit arbitrio. Hæc ubi res communes fortuna aliè dividit, è æquo jure genitos alium alii donavit, exæquat omnia.—"Death in spite of the master, manumits the slave. It looses the chains of the prisoners. It brings out of the dungeon those whom impotent authority had forbidden to go at large. This is the state in which none is sensible of his humiliation. Death obeys no man. It does nothing according to the will of another. It reduces by a just law, to a state of equality, all who, in their families and circumstances, had unequal lots in life."

Verse 20. Wherefore is light given] Why is life granted to him who is incapable of enjoying it; or of performing its functions?

23 Why is light given to a man whose way is hid, and whom God hath hedged in?

24 For my sighing cometh before I eat, and my roarings are poured out like the waters.

25 For the thing which I greatly feared is come upon me, and that which I was afraid of is come unto me.

26 I was not in safety, neither had I rest, neither was I quiet; yet trouble came.

v Chap. 12. 3. Lam. 3. 7.-x Ch. 1. 10.-y Heb. before my meat.-z Heb. I feared a fear, and it came upon me.-a Heb. a word.

Verse 21. Which long for death] They look to it as the end of all their miseries; and long more for a separation from life than those who love gold do for a rich mine.

Verse 22. Which rejoice exceedingly] Literally, They rejoice with joy, and exult when they find the grave.

There is a various reading here in one of Kennicott's MSS. which gives a different sense. Instead of who rejoice וְיִשְׂמְחוּ אִלַּי גִּיל, with joy, it has וְיִשְׂמְחוּ אִלַּי גֹּאֵל, who rejoice at the tomb; and exult when they find the grave.

Verse 23. To a man whose way is hid] Who knows not what is before him in either world; but is full of fears and trembling concerning both.

Whom God hath hedged in?] Leaving him no way to escape; and not permitting him to see one step before him.

There is an exact parallel to this passage in Lam. iii. 7, 9. He hath hedged me about that I cannot get out. He hath enclosed my ways with hewn stone. Mr. Goode translates the verse thus: To the man whose path is broken up, and whose futurity God hath overwhelmed. But I cannot see any necessity for departing from the common text, which gives both an easy and natural sense.

Verse 24. For my sighing cometh] Some think that this refers to the ulcerated state of Job's body, mouth, hands, &c. He longed for food: but was not able to lift it to his mouth with his hands, nor masticate it when brought thither. This is the sense in which Origen has taken the words. But perhaps it is most natural to suppose that he means his sighing took away all appetite, and served him in place of meat. There is the same thought in Psa. xlii. 3. My tears have been my meat day and night: which place is not an imitation of Job; but more likely Job an imitation of it; or rather both an imitation of nature.

My roarings are poured out] My lamentations are like the noise of the murmuring stream, or the dashings of the overswollen torrent.

Verse 25. For the thing which I greatly feared] Literally, the fear that I feared; or, I feared a fear, as in the margin. While I was in prosperity I thought adversity might come, and I had a dread of it. I feared the loss of my family and my property; and both have occurred. I was not lifted up: I knew what I possessed I had from the divine providence; and that he who gave might take away. I am not stripped of my all as a punishment of my self-confidence.

Verse 26. I was not in safety] If this verse be read interrogatively, it will give a good and easy sense: Was I not in safety? Had I not rest? Was I not in comfort? Yet trouble came. It is well known that, previously to this attack of Satan, Job was in great prosperity and peace. Mr. Goode translates, I had no peace; yea, I had no rest. Yea, I had no respite as the trouble came on: and refers the whole to the quick succession of the series of heavy evils by which he was tried. There is a similar thought in the psalmist, Deep crieth unto deep at the noise of thy water spouts; all thy waves and thy billows have gone over me, Psa. xlii. 7. One evil trends on the heels of another.

In this chapter Job's conflict begins. Now, and not before, Satan appears to have access to his mind. When he deprived him of his property, and what was still dearer, of his sons and his daughters, the hope of his family, he bore all with the most exemplary patience, and the deepest resignation to the divine will. When his adversary was permitted to touch his body, and afflict it in the most grievous and distressing manner, rendered still more intolerable by his being previously deprived of all the comforts and necessities of life; still he held fast his integrity: no complaint, no murmur, was heard. From the Lord's hand he received his temporal good; and from that hand he received his temporal evil, the privation of that good. Satan was, therefore, baffled in all his attempts; Job continued to be

2 If we assay to commune with thee wilt thou be grieved? but who can withhold himself from speaking?

3 Behold, thou hast instructed many, and thou hast strengthened the weak hands.

4 Thy words have upheld him that was falling, and thou hast strengthened the feeble knees.

5 But now it is come upon thee, and thou faintest; it toucheth thee, and thou art troubled.

6 Is not this thy fear, thy confidence, thy hope, and the uprightness of thy ways?

7 Remember, I pray thee, who ever perished, being innocent? or where were the righteous cut off?

b Heb. who can refrain from words?—c Isai. 85. 3.—d Isai. 95. 3.—e Heb. the bowing knees. Heb. 12. 12.—f Ch. 1. 1.—g Prov. 3. 26.—h Psa. 97. 95.

a perfect and upright man, fearing God and avoiding evil. This was Job's triumph, or rather the triumph of divine grace, and Satan's defeat and confusion.

It is very seldom that God ever permits Satan to waste the substance, or afflict the body, of any man; but at all times this malevolent spirit may have access to the mind of any man; and inject doubts, fears, diffidence, perplexities, and even unbelief. And here is the spiritual conflict. Now, their wrestling is not with flesh and blood, with men like themselves; nor about secular affairs; but they have to contend with angels, principalities, and powers, and the rulers of the darkness of this world, and spiritual wickednesses in heavenly places. In such cases Satan is often permitted to diffuse darkness into the understanding, and envelope the heavens with clouds. Hence are engendered false views of God and his providence; of men, of the spiritual world, and particularly of the person's own state and circumstances. Every thing is distorted, and all seen through a false medium. Indescribable distractions and uneasiness are hereby induced: the mind is like a troubled sea, tossed by a tempest that seems to confound both heaven and earth. Strong temptations to things which the soul contemplates with abhorrence are injected; and which are followed by immediate accusations, as if the injections were the offspring of the heart itself: and the trouble and dismay produced are represented as the sense of guilt, from a consciousness of having, in heart, committed these evils! Thus Satan tempts, accuses, and upbraids, in order to perplex the soul, induce scepticism, and destroy the empire of faith. Behold here the permission of God; and behold also his sovereign control: all this time the grand tempter is not permitted to touch the heart, the seat of the affections; nor offer even the slightest violence to the will. The soul is cast down, but not destroyed; perplexed, but not in despair. It is on all sides harassed: without are fightings; within are fears; but the will is inflexible on the side of God and truth; and the heart, with all its train of affections and passions, follows it. The man does not wickedly depart from his God: the outworks are violently assailed, but not taken: the city is still safe, and the citadel impregnable. Heaviness may endure for the night, but joy cometh in the morning. Jesus is soon seen walking upon the waters. He speaks peace to the winds and the sea; immediately there is a calm. Satan is bruised down under the feet of the sufferer; the clouds are dispersed; the heavens reappear; and the soul, to its surprise, finds that the storm, instead of hindering, has driven it nearer to the haven whither it would be.

The reader who closely examines the subject, will find that this was the case of Job. The following chapters show the conflict of the soul; the end of the book, God's victory and his exaltation. Satan sifted Job as wheat; but his faith failed not.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. Then Elihu the Temanite answered] For seven days this person and his two friends had observed a profound silence, being awed and confounded at the sight of Job's unprecedented affliction. Having now sufficiently contemplated his afflicted state, and heard his bitter complaint, forgetting that he came as a comforter, and not as a reprover, he loses the feeling of the friend in the haughtiness of the censor, endeavouring to strip him of his only consolation, the testimony of his conscience, (that, in simplicity and godly sincerity, not in fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, he had his conversation among men,) by insinuating that if his ways had been upright he would not have been abandoned to such distress and affliction: and if his heart possessed that righteousness of which he boasted, he could not have been so suddenly cast down by adversity.

Verse 2. If we assay to commune with thee] As if he had said, Should I and my friends endeavour to reason

8 Even as I have seen, they that plough iniquity, and sow wickedness, reap the same.

9 By the blast of God they perish, and by the breath of his nostrils are they consumed.

10 The roaring of the lion, and the voice of the fierce lion, and the teeth of the young lions are broken.

11 The old lion perisheth for lack of prey, and the stout lion's whelps are scattered abroad.

12 Now a thing was secretly brought to me, and mine ear received a little thereof.

13 In thoughts from the visions of the night, when deep sleep falleth on men, 14 Fear came upon me, and trembling, which made all my bones to shake.

15 Then a spirit passed before my face; the hair of my flesh stood up:

16 It stood still, but I could not discern the form thereof: an image was before mine eyes, there was silence, and I heard a voice, saying,

17 Shall mortal man be more just than God? shall a man be more pure than his Maker?

1 Psa. 7. 14. Prov. 20. 2. Hos. 10. 13. Gal. 6. 7, 8.—4 That is, by his anger; as Isai. 30. 33. See Exod. 15. 8. Ch. 1. 19. & 15. 30. Isai. 11. 4. 2 Thim. 2. 8.—1 Psa. 9. 6.

with thee ever so mildly, because we shall have many things to say by way of reprehension, thou wilt be grieved and faint: and thus we may reasonably infer from the manner in which thou bearest thy present afflictions. Yet, as thou hast uttered words which are injurious to thy Maker, who can forbear speaking? It is our duty to rise up on the part of God, though thereby we shall grieve him who is our friend. This was a plausible beginning, and certainly was far from being insincere.

Verse 3. Thou hast instructed many] Thou hast seen many in affliction and distress, and thou hast given them such advice as was suitable to their state, and effectual to their relief; and by this means thou hast strengthened the weak hands and the feeble knees; the desponding have been encouraged, and the irresolute confirmed and excited to prompt and proper actions, by thy counsel and example.

Verse 5. But now it is come upon thee] Now it is thy turn to suffer, and give an example of the efficacy of thy own principles; but, instead of this, behold thou faintest. Either, therefore, thou didst pretend to what thou hadst not; or, thou art not making a proper use of the principles which thou didst recommend to others.

Verse 6. Is not this thy fear?] I think Coverdale hits the true meaning: Where is now thy fear of God, thy stedfastness, thy patience, and the perfectness of the life. If these be genuine, surely there is no cause for all this complaint, vexation, and despair. That this is the meaning the next words show.

Verse 7. Remember, I pray thee] Recollect, if thou canst, a single instance where God abandoned an innocent man, or suffered him to perish. Didst thou ever hear of a case in which God abandoned a righteous man to destruction? Wert thou a righteous man, and innocent of all crimes, would God abandon thee thus to the malice of Satan? or let loose the plagues of affliction and adversity against thee?

Verse 8. They that plough iniquity] A proverbial form of speech drawn from nature. Whatever seed a man sows in the ground, he reaps the same kind; for every seed produces its like. Thus Solomon, Prov. xx. 8. "He that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity." And St. Paul, Gal. vi. 7, 8. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he who soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." And of the same nature is that other saying of the apostle, He that soweth sparingly shall reap sparingly, 2 Cor. ix. 6.

The same figure is employed by the prophet Hosea, viii. 7. They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind, and chap. x. ver. 12, 13: Sow to yourselves in righteousness; reap in mercy. Ye have ploughed wickedness; ye have reaped iniquity. The last sentence contains not only the same image, but almost the same words as those used by Eliphaz.

Our Lord expresses the same thing, in the following words—Matt. vii. 16—18. Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles? Every good tree bringeth forth good fruit; but a corrupt tree bringeth forth evil fruit. So the Greeks, Αρης αρουρα θανατου εκκαρπισεται.

Æsch. Æsch. εντι Θηβαις, ver. 607.

The field of iniquity produces the fruit of death.

Υβρις γαρ εξανθους' εκαρπωσε σαχνη

Αρης, υβρις παγκαλαυτου ελεμα θεου.

Id. Περσας, ver. 823.

"For oppression, when it springs, puts forth the blade of vengeance; and its fruit yields a ripe harvest of reprobation."
Poter.

The image is common every where, because it is a universal law of nature.

Verse 9. By the blast of God they perish] As the noxious and parching east wind blasts and destroys vegetation, so the wicked perish under the indignation of the Almighty.

Verse 10. The roaring of the lion] By the roaring lion, fierce lion, old lion, stout lion, and lion's whelps, tyrannous rulers of all kinds are intended. The design of Eliphaz, in using these figures, is to show that even those who are possessed of the greatest authority and power, the kings, rulers, and princes of the earth, when they become wicked and oppressive to their subjects, are cast down, broken to pieces, and destroyed, by the incensed justice of the Lord; and their whelps, their children and intended successors, scattered without possessions over the face of the earth.

Verse 11. The old lion perisheth] In this and the preceding verse the word lion occurs five times; and in the original the words are all different.

1. ארעה aretyeh, from ארע arah, to tear off. 2. שחל shachal; which, as it appears to signify black, or dark, may mean the black lion, which is said to be found in Ethiopia and India. 3. כפרית Kephir, a young lion, from כפר caphar, to cover, because he is said to hide himself in order to surprise his prey: which the old one does not. 4. ליש layish, from לש lash, to knead, trample upon; because of his method of seizing his prey. 5. לבית labia, from לבי laba, to suckle with the first milk: a lioness giving suck; at which time they are peculiarly fierce. All these words may point out some quality of the lion: and this was probably the cause why they were originally given; but it is likely that in process of time, they served only to designate the beast, without any particular reference to any of his properties. We have one and the same idea, when we say the lion—the king of beasts—the monarch of the forest—the most noble of quadrupeds, &c.

Verse 12. Now a thing was secretly brought to me] To give himself the more authority, he professes to have received a vision from God, by which he was taught the secret of the divine dispensations in providence; and a confirmation of the doctrine which he was now stating to Job; and which he applied in a different way to what was designed in the divine communication.

Mine ear received a little thereof.] Mr. Goode translates, "And mine ear received a whisper along with it." The apparition was the general subject; and the words related ver. 17, &c. were the whispers which he heard when the apparition stood still.

Verse 13. From the visions of the night] "It is in vain," says Mr. Goode, "to search through ancient or modern poetry for a description that has any pretensions to rival that upon which we are now entering. Midnight; solitude; the deep sleep of all around; the dreadful chill and horripilation or erection of the hair over the whole body; the shivering, not of the muscles only, but of the bones themselves; the gliding approach of the spectre; the abruptness of his pause; his undefined and indescribable form; are all powerful and original characters, which have never been given with equal effect by any other writer."

Mr. Hervey's illustration is also striking and natural. "Twas in the dead of night; all nature lay shrouded in darkness; every creature buried in sleep. The most profound silence reigned through the universe. In these solemn moments Eliphaz alone, all wakeful and solitary, was musing on sublime subjects. When lo! an awful being burst into his apartment. A spirit passed before his face. Astonishment seized the beholder. His bones shivered within him, his flesh trembled all over him, and the hair of his head stood erect with horror. Sudden and unexpected was its appearance, not such its departure. It stood still, to present itself more fully to his view. It made a solemn pause, to prepare his mind for some momentous message. After which a voice was heard. A voice, for the importance of its meaning, worthy to be had in everlasting remembrance. It spoke, and these were its words!"

Verse 17. Shall mortal man] אנוש anush, Greek βροτος, poor, weak, dying man

Be more just than God] Or, more just than God's creature shall poor, weak, sinful man be justified before God?

Shall a man] גבר gaber, shall even the strong and mighty man be pure before his Maker? Is any man,

CHAPTER V.

18 Behold he put no trust in his servants; and his angels he charged with folly:
 19 How much less in them that dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust, which are crushed before the moth?
 20 They are destroyed from morning to evening: they perish for ever without any regarding it.
 21 Doth not their excellency which is in them go away? they die, even without wisdom.

Eliphaz proceeds to show that the wicked are always punished by the justice of God, though they may appear to flourish for a time, 1-4. Extols the providence of God, by which the counsels of the wicked are brought to nought, and the poor feel and supported, 5-15. Shows the blessedness of being corrected by God in the excellent fruits that result from it; and exhorts Job to patience and submission, with the promise of all secular prosperity, and a happy death in a mature and comfortable old age, 17-27.

considered merely in and of himself, either holy in his conduct, or pure in his heart? No. He must be justified by the mercy of God, through an atoning sacrifice: he must be sanctified by the holy Spirit of God, and thus made a partaker of the divine nature. Then he is justified before God, and pure in the sight of his Maker: and this is a work which God himself alone can do; so the work is not man's work, but God's. It is false to infer from the words of this spectre (which, whether it came from heaven or hell, we know not, for its communication shows and rankles a wound, without providing a cure,) that no man can be justified before God, and no man can be purified; when God both justifies the ungodly, and sanctifies the unholy. The meaning can be no more than this: no man can make an atonement for his own sins, nor purify his own heart. Hence all boasting is for ever excluded. Of this Eliphaz believed Job to be guilty, as he appeared to talk of his righteousness and purity, as if they had been his own acquisition.

Verse 18. Behold, he put no trust in his servants] This verse is generally understood to refer to the fall of angels; for these were some of those heavenly beings who kept not their first estate: they did not persevere to the end of their probation; and, therefore, fell into condemnation, and are reserved in chains of darkness for the judgment of the great day. Job 6. It is said he put no trust in them. He knew that nothing could be absolutely immutable but himself; and that no intelligent beings could subsist in a state of purity, unless continually dependent on himself, and deriving constant supplies of grace, power, and light, from him who gave them their being.

And his angels he charged with folly] Not chargeth, as many quote the passage. He charged those with folly, who kept not their first estate. It does not appear that he is charging the others in the same way, who continue steadfast.

The several translations of this verse, both ancient and modern, are different from each other. Here are the chief:—

In angelis suis reperit pravitatem, In his angels he found perverseness, VULGATE. THE SEPTUAGINT is nearly the same. Il met la lumiere dans ses anges, He puts light into his angels, FRENCH BIBLE. Even those pure intelligences have continual need of being irradiated by the Almighty. וַיִּשְׁלַח אֱלֹהִים וַיְבַרְכֵם וַיְהַלְלֵם וַיְשַׁבְּחֵם וַיְשַׁמְּחֵם וַיְשַׁמְּחֵם וַיְשַׁמְּחֵם wa-bemalakui neshim lemchoh, SYRAC; and he hath put amazement in his angels. The Arabic is the same. In angelis suis ponit gloriationem, MONTANUS; In his angels he will put exultation. The Hebrew is וַיְרַח חֹהֶלֶחַ, irradiation, from וַיְרַח halah, to irradiate, glister, or shine. In this place we may consider angels (מַלְאָכִים malacim) as heavenly or earthly messengers or agents of the Lord: and the glory, influence, and honour of their office as being put in them by the Most High. They are as planets which shine with a borrowed light. They have nothing but what they have received. Coverdale translates the whole verse thus: Wepolde he hatz funde unfahtfulnesse amonge his ones servants and proude disobedience amonge his angels. The sense is among all these interpreters; and if the fallen angels are meant, the passage is plain enough.

Verse 19. How much less] Rather, with the Vulgate, How much more? If angels may be unstable, how can man arrogate stability to himself who dwells in an earthly tabernacle, and who must shortly return to dust?

Crushed before the moth] The slightest accident oftentimes destroys. "A fly, a grape-stone, or a hair, can kill." Great men have fallen by all these. This is the general idea in the text; and it is useless to sift for meanings.

Verse 20. They are destroyed from morning to evening] In almost every moment of time some human being comes into the world, and some one departs from it. Thus are they destroyed from morning to evening.

They perish for ever] וַיִּפְּרֹץ יוֹבֵדוּ yobedu, peribunt; they pass by; they go out of sight; they moulder with the dust, and are soon forgotten. Who regards the past generation now among the dead?

Isaiah has a similar thought, chap. lviii. 1. The righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come. Some think that Isaiah borrowed from Job: this will appear possible when it has been proved, which has never yet been done, that the writer of this book flourished before Isaiah. If, however, he borrowed the above thought, it must be allowed that it has been wondrously improved by coming through his hands.

Verse 21. Doth not their excellency—go away?] Personal beauty, corporeal strength, powerful eloquence, and various mental endowments, pass away, or are plucked up by the roots: they are no more seen or heard among men; and their memory soon perisheth.

They die, even without wisdom.] If wisdom means a pursuit of the best end, by the most legitimate and appropriate means, the great mass of mankind appear to perish without it. But, if we consider the subject more closely, we shall find that all men die in a state of comparative ignorance. With all our boasted science and arts, how little do we know! Do we know any thing to perfection that belongs either to the material or spiritual world! Do we understand even what matter is? What is its essence? Do we understand what spirit is? Then what is its essence? Almost all the phenomena of nature, its grandest operations, and the laws of the heavenly bodies, have been explained on the principle of gravitation or attraction: but in what does this consist? Who can answer? We can traverse every part of the huge and trackless ocean by means of the compass;—but who understands the nature of magnetism on which all this depends? We eat and drink in order to maintain life;—but what is nutrition; and how is it effected? This has never been explained. Life depends on respiration for its continuance;—but by what kind of action is it, that in a moment the lungs separate the oxygen, which is friendly to life, from the nitrogen, which would destroy it; suddenly absorbing the one, and expelling the other? Who, among the generation of hypothesis-framers, has guessed this out? Life is continued by the circulation of the blood;—but by what power and law does it circulate? Have the systole and diastole of the heart, on which this circulation depends, been ever satisfactorily explained? Most certainly not. Alas! we die without wisdom; and must die, to know these, and ten thousand other matters equally unknown, and equally important. To be safe, in reference to eternity, we must know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he has sent: whom to know is life eternal. This knowledge, obtained and retained, will entitle us to all the rest in the eternal world.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. CALL now, if there be any] This appears to be a strong irony. From whom among those whose foundations are in the dust, and who are crushed before the moth, canst thou expect succour?

To which of the saints wilt thou turn?] To whom among the holy ones, קַדוֹשִׁים kadoshim, (those who kept not their first estate, or those who are equally dependant on divine support with thyself, and can do no good but as influenced and directed by God,) canst thou turn for help? Neither angel nor saint can help any man unless sent especially from God: and all prayers to them must be foolish and absurd, not to say impious. Can the channel afford me water, if the fountain cease to emit it?

Verse 2. For wrath killeth the foolish man] Foolish, silly, and simple, are epithets given by Solomon, to sinners and transgressors of all kinds. Such parallels have afforded a presumptive argument that Solomon was the author of this book. See preface, pp. 6, 7. The words of Eliphaz may be considered as a sort of maxim, which the wisdom and experience of ages had served to establish: viz. The wrath of God is manifested only against the wicked and impious; and, if thou wert not such, God would not thus contend with thee.

3 'I have seen the foolish taking root: but suddenly I cursed his habitation.

4 'His children are far from safety, and they are crushed in the gate, neither is there any to deliver them.

5 Whose harvest the hungry eateth up, and taketh it even out of the thorns, and the robber swalloweth up their substance.

6 Although affliction cometh not forth of the dust, neither doth trouble spring out of the ground;

7 Yet man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward.

Verse 3. I have seen the foolish taking root] I have seen wicked men for a time in prosperity, and becoming established in the earth: but I well knew, from God's manner of dealing with men, that they must soon be blasted. I even ventured to pronounce their doom: for I knew that, in the order of God's providence, that was inevitable. I cursed his habitation.

Verse 4. His children are far from safety] His posterity shall not continue in prosperity. Ill gotten, ill spent: whatever is got by wrong, must have God's curse on it.

They are crushed in the gate] The Targum says, They shall be bruised in the gate of hell, in the day of the great judgment. There is reference here to a custom which I have often had occasion to notice; viz. that in the Eastern countries the court-house, or tribunal of justice, was at the GATE of the city: here the magistrates attended, and hither the plaintiff and defendant came for justice.

Verse 5. Whose harvest] Their possessions, because acquired by unjust means, shall not be under the protection of God's providence; He shall abandon them to be pillaged and destroyed by the wandering half-starved hordes of the desert banditti. They shall carry it suddenly off: even the thorns, grain, weeds, thistles, and all, shall they carry off in their rapacious hurry.

The robber swalloweth up] Or, more properly, the thirsty eats teammim, as is plain from their swallowing up, or gulping down: opposed to the hungry or half-starved, mentioned in the preceding clause. The hungry shall eat up their grain; and the thirsty shall drink down their wine and oil, here termed oym cheylam, their strength or power, for the most obvious reasons.

There seems to be two allusions in this verse: 1. To the hordes of wandering predatory banditti, or half-starved Arabs of the desert, who have their scanty maintenance by the plunder of others. These descendants of Ishmael have ever had their hands against all men; and live to this day in the same predatory manner in which they have lived for several thousands of years. M. Volney's account of them is striking. "These men are smaller, leaner, and blacker, than any of the Bedouens yet discovered. Their wasted legs had only tendons without calves. Their belly was shrunk to their back. They are in general small, lean, and swarthy; and more so in the bosom of the desert, than on the borders of the more cultivated country. They are ordinarily about five feet, or five feet two inches high: they seldom have more than about six ounces of food for the whole day. Six or seven dates, soaked in melted butter, a little milk or curd, serve a man for twenty-four hours: and he seems happy when he can add a small portion of coarse flour, or a little ball of rice. Their camels also, which are their chief support, are remarkably meagre, living on the meanest and most scanty provision. Nature," says Volney, "has given it a small head without ears, at the end of a long neck without flesh. She has taken from its legs and thighs every muscle not immediately requisite for motion; and in short has bestowed on its withered body only the vessels and tendons necessary to connect its frame together. She has furnished it with a strong jaw that it may grind the hardest aliments; and, lest it should consume too much, she has straightened its stomach, and obliged it to chew the cud." Such is the description given of the Bedouin and his camel, by M. Volney; who, while he denies the true God, finds out a deity which he calls Nature, whose works evince the highest providence, wisdom, and design! And where does this most wonderful and intelligent goddess dwell? Nowhere, but in the creed of the infidel; while the genuine believer knows that nature is only the agent created and employed by the great and wise God to accomplish, under his direction, the greatest and most stupendous beneficial effects.

The second allusion in the verse I suppose to be the loss

8 I would seek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cause:

9 Which doeth great things and unsearchable; marvellous things without number:

10 Who giveth rain upon the earth, and sendeth waters upon the fields:

11 To set up on high those that be low; that those which mourn may be exalted to safety.

13 He taketh the wise in their own craftiness: and the counsel of the froward is carried headlong.

Job had sustained of his cattle by the predatory Sabaeans; and all this, for the support of his grand argument, Eliphaz introduces to convict Job of hidden crimes, on which account his enemies were permitted to destroy his property; that property, because of this wickedness, being placed out of the protection of God's providence.

Verse 6. Affliction cometh not forth of the dust] If there were not an adequate cause, thou couldest not be so grievously afflicted.

Spring out of the ground] It is not from mere natural causes that affliction and trouble come; God's justice inflicts them upon offending man.

Verse 7. Yet man is born unto trouble] וכלי le-amal, to labour. He must toil, and be careful: and if, in the course of his labour, he meet with trials and difficulties, he should rise superior to them; and not sink as thou dost.

As the sparks fly upward] וכלי רשע יפוצו וכלי צדיק יתנער וכלי צדיק יתנער וכלי רשע יפוצו. — v-benev reasaph, yagbihu auph. "And the sons of the coal lift up their flight; or dart upward. And who are the sons of the coal? Are they not bold, intrepid, ardent, fearless men, who rise superior to all their trials; combat what are termed chance and occurrence; succumb under no difficulties; and rise superior to time, tide, fate, and fortune? I prefer this to all the various meanings of the place with which I have met. Coverdale translates, It is man that is borne unto misery, like as the hyrc for to fle. Most of the ancient versions give a similar sense.

Verse 8. I would seek unto God] Were I in your place, instead of wasting my time, and irritating my soul with useless complaints, I would apply to my Maker; and, if conscious of my innocence, would commit, confidently, my cause to him.

Verse 9. Which doeth great things] No work, however complicate, is too deep for his counsel to plan; none, however stupendous, is too great for his power to execute. He who is upright is always safe in referring his cause to God, and trusting in him.

Verse 10. Who giveth rain upon the earth] The Chaldee gives this verse a fine turn: "Who gives rain on the face of the land of Israel, and sends waters on the face of the provinces of the people." Similar to our Lord's saying, which is expressed in the half of the compass: — Your Father which is in heaven — SENDETH RAIN ON THE JUST AND ON THE UNJUST. — Matt. v. 45.

Sendeth waters upon the fields] The term chutsoth which we translate fields, and generally signifies streets, may here mean those plantations which are laid out in ridges, or plots, in an orderly, regular manner. God does not only send rain upon the earth in a general manner; but, by an especial providence, waters the cultivated ground, so that not one ridge is left destitute of its due proportion of fructifying moisture.

Verse 11. To set up on high those that be low] He so distributes his providential blessings, without partiality, that the land of the poor man is as well sunned and watered as that of the rich; so that he is thus set upon a level with the lords of the soil.

Verse 12. He disappointeth the devices of the crafty] All these sayings refer to God's particular providence, by which he is ever working for the good, and counterworking the plots of the wicked. And as various as are the contingent, capricious, and malevolent acts of men, so varied are his providential interferences; disappointing the devices, snares, and plots of the crafty, so that their plans being confounded, and their machinery broken in pieces, their hands cannot perform their enterprises.

Verse 13. He taketh the wise in their own craftiness] So counterworks them, as to cause their feet to be taken in their own snares; and their evil dealings to fall on their own pate. Such frequent proofs has God given of his especial interference in behalf of the innocent who have been the objects of the plots and evil designs of the wicked,

17 Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth; therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty:

by turning those evil devices against their framers, that, He who digs a pit for his neighbour shall fall into it himself, has become a universal adage; and has passed either in so many words, or in sense, into all the languages of all the people of the earth. Lucretius expresses it strongly:

Circummitti oculis vis alioque inferia quæque,
Aque, unde coarctat, ad eum circumque referat.
Lucret. lib. v. vers. 115

* For fire and wrong entangles the man that sees them; and for the most part, recoil on the head of the contriver."

Verse 14. They meet with darkness in the daytime] God confounds them and their measures; and with all their cunning and dexterity, they are outwitted; and often act on their own projects, planned with care and skill, as if they had been the crudest conceptions of the most disordered minds. They act in noonday as if the sun were extinct, and their eyes put out. Thus does God "abate their pride, assuage their malice, and confound their device."

Verse 15. He saveth the poor from the sword, from their mouth] This is rather a harsh construction. To avoid this, some have proposed to render מְעַרְבֵם mecherob, which we translate from the sword, the persecuted; but I am afraid on very slender authority. Instead of מְעַרְבֵם mecherob mephimem, "from the sword from their mouth," eleven of Kennicot's and De Rossi's MSS. read מְעַרְבֵם mecherob pikem, from the sword of their mouth; and with these MSS. the Chaldee, Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic agree. The verse, therefore, may be translated thus:—

He smeth from the sword of their mouth;
The poor from the hand of the mighty.

Or, thus:—

He smeth from the sword of their mouth;
And with a strong hand the impoverished.

Verse 16. So the poor] לֹד דל, he who is made thin, who is wasted, extenuated, hath hope. He sees what God is accustomed to do, and he expects a repetition of gracious dealings in his own behalf: and because God deals thus with those who trust in him; therefore, the mouth of impiety is stopped.

Religion is kept alive in the earth, because of God's signal interventions in behalf of the bodies and souls of his followers.

Verse 17. Behold, happy is the man] הֵנֵחַ hinneh, behold, is wanting in five of Kennicot's and De Rossi's MSS. and also in the Syriac, Vulgate, and Arabic.

We have had fathers of our flesh who corrected us for their pleasure, or according to their caprices; and we were subject to them: how much more should we be subject to the Father of spirits, and live; for he corrects us that we may be partakers of his holiness, in order that we may be rendered fit for his glory. See Hebr. xii. 5. James i. 12. and Prov. iii. 12.

Verse 18. For he maketh sore, and bindeth up] Thus nervously rendered by Coverdale, For though he make a wound, he giveth a medicine again; though he smyte, his hand maketh whole againe.

Verse 19. He shall deliver thee in six troubles] The numbers six and seven are put here for many. Though a number of troubles should come upon thee all at once, and there should be no hope, humanly speaking; yet God would rid thee out of them all: for he saves as well from many as from few. We may also understand the words, He who hath been thy deliverer in past troubles, will not deny his help in those which are to come.

Verse 20. In famine he shall redeem thee] The Chaldee, which understands this chapter as speaking of the troubles, and deliverances of the Israelites in Egypt and the wilderness, renders this verse as follows:—"In the famine of Egypt he redeemed thee from death; and in the war of Amalek from the slaying of the sword.

Verse 21. Thou shalt be hid from the scourge of the 20 In famine he shall redeem thee from death; and in war from the power of the sword.

21 Thou shalt be hid from the scourge of the tongue: neither shalt thou be afraid of destruction when it cometh.

22 At destruction and famine thou shalt laugh; neither shalt thou be afraid of the beasts of the earth.

23 For thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field: and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee.

24 And thou shalt know that thy tabernacle shall be in peace; and thou shalt visit thy habitation, and shalt not sin.

e Psal. 91. 10.—f Psal. 33. 19. & 37. 19.—g Heb. from the hands.—h Psal. 31. 20. i Or, when the tongue scourgeth.—k Lam. 11. 9. & 35. 9. & 55. 23. Ezech. 34. 35. l Psal. 91. 12. Hos. 2. 13.—m Or, that peace is thy tabernacle.—n Or, err.

tongue] The Targum refers this to the incantations of Balaam:—"From injury by the tongue of Balaam thou shalt be hidden in the clouds; and thou shalt not fear from the blasting of the Midianites when it shall come."

Perhaps no evil is more dreadful than the scourge of the tongue: evil-speaking, detraction, backbiting, calumny, slander, tale-bearing, whispering, and scandalizing, are some of the terms which we use when endeavouring to express the baleful influence and effects of that member, which is a world of fire, kindled from the nethermost hell. The Scripture abounds with invectives and execrations against it. See Psal. xxxi. 20. lii. 2—4. Prov. xii. 18. xiv. 3. James iii. 5—8.

Neither shalt thou be afraid] "Thou shouldst have such strong confidence in God that, even in the presence of destruction, thou shouldst not fear death:" the God of life and power being with thee.

Verse 22. At destruction and famine thou shalt laugh] This most forcibly expresses the strongest security, and confidence in that security. "In the desolation of Sihon, and in the famine of the desert, thou shalt laugh; and of the camps of Og, who is compared to a wild beast of the earth, thou shalt not be afraid." Targum.

Verse 23. Thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field] Instead of אבני abney, stones, Mr. Goode reads בני beney, sons, or produce: but this reading is not supported by any ancient version, nor, as far as I know, by any MS. yet collated. We must, therefore, take up the text as we find it; and make the best we can of the present reading.

The Chaldee gives a plausible sense: Thou needest not to fear, "because thy covenant is on tables of stone, which are publicly erected in the field: and the Canaanites, which are compared to the beasts of the field, have made peace with thee."

Perhaps the reference is to those rocks or strong-holds where banditti secured themselves and their prey, or where the emirs or neighbouring chiefs had their ordinary residence. Eliphaz may be understood as saying: Instead, then, of taking advantage of thee, as the Sabæans have done, the circumjacent chieftains will be confederate with thee; and the very beasts of the field will not be permitted to harm thy flocks.

Coverdale seems to have had an idea of this kind, as we find he translates the verse thus:—

But the castels fit the lande shal be confederate with the,

And the beastes of the feldes shal give the peace.

I believe the above to be the meaning of the place. See the next verse.

Verse 24. Thou shalt know] Thou shalt be so fully satisfied of the friendly disposition of all thy neighbours, that thou shalt rest secure in thy bed, and not be afraid of any danger, though sleeping in thy tent in the field; and, when thou returnest from thy country excursions, thou shalt find that thy habitation has been preserved in peace and prosperity; and that thou hast made no mistake in thy trust, in thy confidence, or in thy confederates.

The word אהולה aholah, "thy tabernacle," means simply a tent, a moveable dwelling, composed of poles, pins, and cloth, or skin, to be pitched any where, in a few moments; and struck again with the same ease.

The word נָוֶעָה naveca, which we properly translate habitation, signifies a solid permanent dwelling-place. See Josh. xxii. 4, 6, 7, 8. 2 Sam. xviii. 17. xix. 8. 1 Kings xii. 16. Psal. lvi. 7. & xci. 10. cxxxii. 3. Lam. ii. 4. Mal. ii. 12. and with them the place in the text.

As to מַרְנָה techela, which we translate thou shalt not sin, it comes from מָרַן chata, to err, to mistake, to miss the mark; hence to sin, transgress God's laws, seeking for happiness in forbidden and unlawful things, and therefore missing the mark, because in them happiness is not 25 Thou shalt know also that thy seed shall be great, and thine offspring as the grass of the earth.

26 Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a shock of corn cometh in his season.

27 Lo this, we have searched it, so it is; hear it, and know thou it for thy good.

CHAPTER VI.

Job answers, and vindicates himself; and shows that the great affliction which he suffered was the cause of his complaining, by which life was rendered burdensome to him, 1-13. Complains that whereas he expected consolation from his friends, he had received nothing but the bitterest reproaches, on the assumed ground that he must be a wicked man, else God would not so grievously afflict him, 14-20. Shows them that they knew nothing of his case, and that they had no compassion, 21-23. Entreats them, if they care to show him what he has offended, as he is ready to acknowledge and correct every trespass, 24-30.

to be found: and it is very likely, from the connexion above, that to mistake, or err, is its meaning in this place. I need not add, that the Arab chiefs, who had their castles or strong-holds, frequently in their country excursions lodged in tents in the open fields; and that on such occasions a hostile neighbour sometimes took advantage of their absence, attacked and pillaged their houses, and carried off their families and household. See at the end of this chapter.

Verses 25. Thine offspring as the grass] Thou shalt have a numerous and permanent issue.

Verses 26. Thou shalt come to thy grave] Thou shalt not die before thy time: thou shalt depart from life like a full-fed guest; happy in what thou hast known, and in what thou hast enjoyed.

Like as a shock of corn] Thou shalt completely run through the round of the spring, summer, autumn, and winter of life: and thou shalt be buried, like a wholesome seed, in the earth; from which thou shalt again rise up into an eternal spring!

Verses 27. Lo this, we have searched it] What I have told thee is the sum of our wisdom and experience on these important points. These are established maxims, which universal experience supports. Know, understand, and reduce them to practice for thy good. Thus ends Eliphaz, the Temanite, "full of wise saws and ancient instances;" but he miserably perverted them in his application of them to Job's case and character. They contain, however, many wholesome truths, of which the wise in heart may make a very advantageous practical use.

The predatory excursions referred to in verse 23. were not infrequent among our own barbarous ancestors. An affecting picture of this kind is drawn by Shakespeare from Holinshed's Chronicles, of the case of Macduff, whose castle was attacked in his absence by Macbeth, and his wife and all his children murdered. A similar incident was the ground of the old heroic ballad of Hardicanute. When the veteran heard that a host of Norwegians had landed to pillage the country, he armed, and posted to the field to meet the invading foe. He slew the chief in battle, and routed his pillaging banditti. While this was taking place, another party took the advantage of his absence, attacked his castle, and carried off or murdered his lovely wife and family; which, being perceived on his return by the war and age-worn chief, is thus affectingly described by the unknown poet:—

Loed and chill blew the westlin wind,
Sair beat the heavy shower,
Mirk grew the nichel air Hardicanute
Wan wir his staidly tower;
His tower that ev' with torcles besie,
To shine one far at night,
Saw'd rise as black as morning weid,
Nae marred air he sic'd;
"Thair's nae light in my lady's bowir;
Thair's nae light in my hall;
Nae blink ayeas round my fairy fair;
Nae word saunds on my wall.
What bods he, Thomas? Robert! say!"
Nae answer—speaks their drink;
"Stand back, my sons, I'll be your gyle!"
But tye they pass'd with speed,
"As fast I hail spee! o'er Scotland's foie!"
There ceid' his brag of weir,

The ending of this poem is lost: but we here see that the castle of Hardicanute was surprised, and his family destroyed, or carried off, while he and his sons had been employed in defeating the invading Norwegians. Thank God, civilization, the offspring of the spread of Christianity, has put an end to these barbarous practices among us; but in the East, where Christianity is not, they flourish still. Britons! send out your Bible and your missionaries to tame these Barbarians; for whom Heathenism has done nothing, and the Koran next to nothing. Civilization itself, without the Bible, will do as little; for the civilized Greeks and Romans were barbarians, fell and murderous; living in envy and malice, hateful, hating one another, and offering hundreds at a time of human victims to their ruthless deities. Nothing but Christianity ever did, or ever can, cure these evils.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VI.

Verses 2. Oh that my grief were thoroughly weighed] Job wished to be dealt with according to justice: as he was willing that his sins, if they could be proved, should be weighed against his sufferings: and, if this could not be done, he wished that his sufferings and his complaining might be weighed together; and it would then be seen that bitter as his complaint had been, it was little when compared with the distress which occasioned it.

Verses 3. Heavier than the sand of the sea] This includes two ideas: their number was too great to be counted; their weight was too great to be estimated.

Verses 4. The arrows of the Almighty] There is an evident reference here to wounds inflicted by poisoned arrows: and to the burning fever occasioned by such wounds, producing such an intense parching thirst as to dry up all the moisture in the system, stop all the salivary ducts, thicken and inflame the blood, induce putrescency, and terminate in raging mania, producing the most terrifying images, from which the patient is relieved only by death. This is strongly expressed in the fine figure, the POISON DRINKETH UP MY SPIRIT; the TERRORS OF GOD SET THEMSELVES IN ARRAY AGAINST ME. That calamities are represented among the Eastern writers as the arrows of the Almighty, we have abundant proofs. In reference to this, I shall adduce that fine saying attributed to Aaly, the son-in-law of Mohammed, in the Toozuki Teemor; which I have spoken of elsewhere. "It was once demanded of the fourth califf (Aaly,) If the canopy of heaven were a bow; and if the earth were the cord thereof; and if calamities were the arrows; if mankind were the mark for those arrows; and if Almighty God, the tremendous and glorious, were the unerring archer;—to whom could the sons of Adam flee for protection?" The califf answered, "The sons of Adam must flee unto the Lord." This fine image Job keeps in view in the 8th and 9th verses, wishing that the unerring marksmen may let fly these arrows, let loose his hand, to destroy and cut him off.

Verses 5. Doth the wild ass] פָּרֵי peré translated omager, by the Vulgate, from the ovos apyios of the Septuagint, which we, properly enough, translate wild ass. It is the same with the tame ass; only in a wild state, it grows to a larger size, is stronger, and more fleet. The meaning of Job appears to be this: you condemn me for complaining—Do I complain without a cause? The wild ass will not bray, and the ox will not low, unless in want. If they have plenty of provender they are silent. Were I at rest, at ease, and happy, I would not complain.

Verses 6. Can that which is unsavoury] Mr. Goods renders this verse as follows: "Doth insipid food without a mixture of salt, yea, doth the white of the egg give forth pungency? Which he thus illustrates: "Doth that which hath nothing of seasoning, nothing of a pungent or irritable power within it, produce pungency or irritation? I too should be quiet and complain not, if I had nothing provocative or acrimonious: but, alas! the food I am doomed to partake of is the very calamity which is most acute to my soul—that which I most loathe, and which is most grievous or trying to my palate.

There have been a great variety of interpretations given on this verse; I could add another, but that of Mr. Goode is as likely to be correct as that of any other critic.

Verse 8. Oh that I might have! As Job had no hope that he should ever be redeemed from his present helpless state, he earnestly begs God to shorten it by taking away his life.

Verse 9. Let loose his hand] A metaphor taken from an archer drawing his arrow to the head, and then loosing his hold, that the arrow may fly to the mark. See on ver. 4.

Verse 10. Then should I yet have comfort! Instead of τῷ οὐκ, τὸν, three of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. have ἢν ἴσθαι, THIS. And THIS should be my comfort. The expectation that he will speedily make an end of me would cause me to rejoice with great joy. This reading is supported by the Vulgate and the Chaldee.

I would harden myself in sorrow: let him not spare] To know that I should shortly have an end put to my miseries would cause me to endure the present with determinate resolution. Let him not spare—let him use whatever means he chooses, for I will not resist his decree: he is holy, and his decrees must be just.

Verse 11. What is my strength] I can never suppose that my strength will be restored; and, were that possible, have I any comfortable prospect of a happy termination of my life? Had I any prospect of future happiness, I might well bear my present ills; but the state of my body and the state of my circumstances preclude all hope.

Verse 12. Is my strength the strength of stones?] I am neither a rock, nor is my flesh brass, that I can endure all these calamities. This is a proverbial saying, and exists in all countries. Cicero says, Non enim est de saxo sculptus, aut de roboris dolatus homo; habet corpus, habet animam; movetur mente, movetur sensibus. "For man is not chiselled out of the rock, nor hewn out of the oak; he has a body, and he has a soul; the one is actuated by intellect, the other by the senses." Quæst. Acad. iv. 31. So Homer, where he represents Apollo urging the Trojans to attack the Greeks:

Νεμεσιος δ' Ἀπολλων,
Περγαρον εκαταιδων Τρωεσσι δε κελευε' ανασας
Ορνεος, ιταδομοι Τρωεσι, μηδ' εικετα χαρησιν
Αργεσιος: επει ου σφι λιθος χροσι, ουδεις σιδηρος,
Χαλευν ανασχευθαι ταυεπινοισι βαλλουμενοισι.

ILIAD, lib. iv. ver. 507.

But Phoebus now from Ilion's towering height
Shines forth revealed, and animates the fight.
Trojans, be bold, and force to force oppose;
Your bounding steeds urge headlong on the foe!
Nor are their bodies rock, nor ribb'd with steel,
Your weapons enter, and your strokes they feel.—Pope.

These are almost the same expressions as those in Job. Verse 13. Is not my help in me? My help is all in myself; and, alas, that is perfect weakness: and my subsistence is driven quite from me. My friends have forsaken me, and I am abandoned to myself: my property is all taken away, and I have no resources left. I believe Job neither said, nor intended to say, as some interpreters have it, reason is utterly driven from me. Surely there is no mark in this chapter of his being deranged, or at all impaired in his intellect.

Verse 14. To him that is afflicted pity should be showed from his friend; but he forsaketh the fear of the Almighty.] The Vulgate gives a better sense, "Qui tollit ab amico suo misericordiam, timorem Domini dereliquit. He who takes away mercy from his friend, hath cast off the fear of the Lord." The word דָּבָל lammas, which we render to him who is afflicted, from דָּבָל masah, to dissolve, or waste away, is in thirty-two of Dr. Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. דָּבָל lemasa, "to him that despiseth his friend." And hence the passage may be read, To him who despiseth his friend, it is a reproach; and he will forsake the fear of the Almighty; or, as Mr. Goode translates,

"Shame to the man who despiseth his friend!
He indeed hath departed from the fear of the Almighty."

Eliphaz had, in effect, despised Job: and on this ground, acted any thing but the part of a friend toward him; and he well deserved the severe stroke which he here receives. A heathen said, Amicus certus in re incertâ cernitur; the full sense of which we have in our common adage;—

A friend in need is a friend indeed.

Job's friends, so called, supported each other in their attempts to blacken the character of this worthy man; and their hand became the heavier, because they supposed the hand of God was upon him. To each of them, individually, might be applied the words of another heathen:

Absentem qui rodit amicum,
Qui non deficit alio culpante: solutus
Qui caput riuus hominum, famamque dicaris:
Fingere qui non vis potest; commisioni incare
Qui nequit; hic niger est; hunc tu Romane, creteto.
Hor. Satir. lib. i. s. iv. ver. 81.

He who maligns tears an absent friend;
Or, when attacked by others, don't defend;
Who trivial boasts of laughter strives to raise,
And courts, of prating pertulance, the praise
(Of things he never saw; who tells his tale
And friendship's secrets knows not to conceal;
This man is vile; here, Roman, fix your mark;
His soul's as black as his complexion's dark. Francis.

Verse 15. Have dealt deceitfully as a brook] There is probably an allusion here to those land torrents which make a sudden appearance, and as suddenly vanish; being produced by the rains that fall upon the mountains during the rainy season, and are soon absorbed by the thirsty sands over which they run. At first they seem to promise a permanent stream, and are noticed with delight by the people who fill their tanks or reservoirs from their waters: but sometimes are so large and rapid as to carry every thing before them; and then suddenly fail, so that there is no time to fill the tanks. The approach of Job's friends promised much of sympathy and compassion. His expectations were raised; but their conduct soon convinced him that they were physicians of no value; therefore he compares them to the deceitful torrents that soon pass away.

Verse 16. Blackish by reason of the ice] He represents the waters as being sometimes suddenly frozen, their foam being turned into the semblance of snow or hoar frost; when the heat comes they are speedily liquefied; and the evaporation so strong from the heat, and the absorption so powerful from the sand, that they soon disappear.

Verse 18. The paths of their way] They sometimes forsake their ancient channels, which is a frequent case with the river Ganges: and, growing smaller and smaller from being divided into numerous streams, they go to nothing, and perish: are at last utterly lost in the sands.

Verse 19. The troops of Tema looked] The caravans coming from Tema are represented as arriving at those places where it was well known torrents did descend from the mountains; and they were full of expectation that here they could not only slake their thirst, but fill their girbas or water-skins; but when they arrive they find the waters totally dissipated and lost. In vain did the caravans of Sheba wait for them; they did not reappear: and they were confounded because they had hoped to find here refreshment and rest.

22 Did I say, Bring unto me? or, Give a reward for me of your substance?

23 Or, Deliver me from the enemy's hand? or, Redeem me from the hand of the mighty?

24 Teach me, and I will hold my tongue: and cause me to understand wherein I have erred.

25 How forcible are right words! but what doth you arguing reprove?

26 Do ye imagine to reprove words, and the speeches of one that is desperate, which are as wind?

27 Yea, ye overwhelm the fatherless, and ye dig a pit for your friend.

28 Now therefore be content, look upon me; for it is evident unto you if I lie.

29 Return, I pray you, let it not be iniquity: yea, return again, my righteousness is in it.

30 Is there iniquity in my tongue? cannot my taste discern perverse things?

Verse 21. For now ye are nothing] Ye are just to me as those deceitful torrents to the caravans of Tema and Sheba: they were nothing to them; ye are nothing to me. Ye see my casting down] Ye see that I have been hurried from my eminence into want and misery, as the flood from the top of the mountains, which is divided, evaporated, and lost on the desert.

And are afraid] Ye are terrified at the calamity that has come upon me; and, instead of drawing near to comfort me, ye start back at my appearance.

Verse 22. Did I say, bring unto me?] Why do you stand aloof? Have I asked you to bring me any presents? or to supply my wants out of your stores?

Verse 23. Or, Deliver me] Did I send to you to come and avenge me of the destroyers of my property, or to rescue my substance out of the hands of my enemies?

Verse 24. Teach me] Show me where I am mistaken. Bring proper arguments to convince me of my errors; and you will soon find that I shall gladly receive your counsels, and abandon the errors of which I may be convicted.

Verse 25. How forcible are right words] A well constructed argument that has truth for its basis is irresistible.

But what doth your arguing reprove?] Your reasoning is defective, because your premises are false; and your conclusions prove nothing because of the falsity of the premises whence they are drawn. The last clause, literally rendered, is, What reproof in a reproof from you. As you have proved no fault; you have, consequently, reprov'd no vice. Instead of מה נמרצו mah nimretsu, "how forcible;" מה נמלטו mah nimletsu, "how savoury or pleasant," is the reading of two MSS, the Chaldee, and some of the rabbins. Both senses are good, but the common reading is to be preferred.

Verse 26. Do ye imagine to reprove words] Is it some expressions which, in my hurry, and under the pressure of unprecedented affliction which I have uttered, that ye catch at? You can find no flaw in my conduct:—would ye make me an offender for a word? Why endeavour to take such advantage of a man who complains, in the bitterness of his heart, through despair of life and happiness?

Verse 27. Ye overwhelm the fatherless] Ye see that I am as destitute as the most miserable orphan;—would ye overwhelm such a one; and would you dig a pit for your friend? do ye lay wait for me, and endeavour to entangle me in my talk? I believe this to be the spirit of Job's words.

Verse 28. Look upon me] View me, consider my circumstances, compare my words; and you must be convinced that I have spoken nothing but truth.

Verse 29. Return, I pray you] Reconsider the whole subject. Do not be offended. Yea, reconsider the subject; my righteousness is in it; my argumentation is a sufficient proof of my innocence.

Verse 30. Is there iniquity in my tongue?] Am I not an honest man; and if, in my haste, my tongue had uttered falsity, would not my conscience discern it; and do you think that such a man as your friend is, would defend what he knew to be wrong?

I HAVE done what I could to make this chapter plain, to preserve the connexion, and show the dependence of the several parts on each other; without which many of the sayings would have been very obscure. The whole chapter is an inimitable apology for what he had uttered, and a defence of his conduct. This might have ended the controversy, had not his friends been determined to bring him in guilty. They had prejudged his cause, and assumed a certain position, from which they were determined not to be driven.

CHAPTER VII.

Job continues to deplore his helplessness and afflicted state, 1-4. He expostulates with God concerning his afflictions, 7-12. Describes the disturbed state of his mind, by visions in the night season, and abhors life, 13-18. Shows that he is unwearily of the notice of God: begs pardon and respite, 17-21.

IS there not an appointed time to man upon earth? are not his days also like the days of a hireling?

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. Is there not an appointed time to man] The Hebrew, with its literal rendering, is as follows: הלא ימי אדם על הארץ מן ימי ימי הארץ Halo taaba leemosh daye areta, "Is there not a warfare to miserable man upon the earth?" And thus most of the versions have understood the words. The SEPTUAGINT, Ποροπον ουχι περιπαροπον εστι βιος ανθρωπου εν τη γη; "Is not the life of man a place of trial upon earth?" The VULGATE, Militia est vita hominis super terram, "The life of man is a warfare upon earth." The CHALDEE is the same. N'y a-t-il pas comme un train de guerre ordonné aux mortels sur la terre? FRENCH BIBLE. "Is there not a continual campaign ordained for mortals upon the earth?" The GERMAN and DUTCH the same. COVERDALE, Es not the life off man upon earth a very batayle. CARMARDEN, Rouen, 1566. N'ay man any certaine tyme upon earth. SYRIAC and ARABIC, "Now, man has time upon the earth." Non e egli il tempo determinato a l'huomo sopra la terra, "Is there not a determined time to man upon the earth." Bib. Ital. 1562. I believe the simple sentiment which the writer wished to convey is this:—human life is a state of probation, and every day and place is a time and place of exercise to train us up for eternal life. Here is the exercise, and here the warfare: we are enlisted in the bands of the church militant, and must accomplish our time of service, and be honourably dismissed from the warfare, having conquered through the blood of the Lamb; and then receive the reward of the heavenly inheritance.

Verse 2. Earnestly desireth the shadow] As a man who labours hard in the heat of the day, earnestly desires to get under a shade; or wishes for the long evening shadows, that he may rest from his labour, get his day's wages, retire to his food, and then go to rest. Night is probably what is meant by the shadow, as in VIRGIL, Æn. iv. ver. 7. Humentemque Aurora polo dimoverat UMBRAM. "The morning had removed the humid shadow," i. e. night, "from the world." Where SÆVIVS justly observes:— Nilil inter est, utram UMBRAM AN NOCTEM dicat: NOX enim UMBRA terræ est. "It makes no difference whether he says shadow or night; for night is the shadow of the earth."

Verse 3. So am I made to possess] But night is no relief to me; it is only a continuance of my anxiety and labour. I am like the hireling, I have my appointed labour for the day. I am like the soldier harassed by the enemy; I am obliged to be continually on the watch, always on the look out, with scarcely any rest.

Verse 4. When I lie down] I have so little rest, that when I lie down, I long for the return of the light, that I may rise. Nothing can better depict the state of a man under continual afflictions, which afford him no respite, his days and his nights being spent in constant anguish, utterly unable to be in any one posture, so that he is continually changing his position in his bed, finding ease nowhere: thus as himself expresses it, he is full of tossings.

Verse 5. My flesh is clothed with worms] This is perhaps no figure; but is literally true: the miserably ulcerated state of his body, exposed to the open air, and in a state of great destitution, was favourable to those insects who sought such places in which to deposit their ova, which might have produced the animals in question. But the figure is too horrid to be farther illustrated.

Clods of dust] I believe all the commentators have here missed the sense. I suppose Job to allude to those incrustations of indurated or dried pus, which are formed on the tops of pustules in a state of decay; such as the 9 As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away; so he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more.

10 He shall return no more to his house, neither shall his place know him any more.

scales which fall from the pustules of the smallpox, when the patient becomes convalescent. Or, if Job's disease was the elephantiasis, it may refer to the furfuraceous scales which are continually falling off the body in that disorder. It is well known that in this disease the skin becomes very rigid, so as to crack across, especially at the different joints, out of which fissures a loathsome ichor is continually exuding. To something like this the words may refer, My skin is broken, and become loathsome.

Verse 6. Swifter than a weaver's shuttle] The word אַרָג, signifies rather the weaver than his shuttle. And it has been doubted whether any such instrument were in use in the days of Job; as Dr. Russell, in his account of Aleppo, shows that though they wove many kinds of curious cloth, yet no shuttle was used, as they conducted every thread of the wool by their fingers. That some such instrument as the shuttle was in use from time immemorial, there can be no doubt: and it is certain that such an instrument must have been in the view of Job, without which the figure would lose its expression and force. In almost every nation the whole human existence has been compared to a web; and the principle of life, through the continual succession of moments, hours, days, weeks, months, and years, to a thread woven through that web. Hence arose the fable of the Parcae or Fates, called also the Destinies or Fatal Sisters. They were the daughters of Erebus and Nox; (darkness and night,) and were three in number, and named Clotho, Lachesis, and Atropos. Clotho held the distaff; Lachesis spun off the thread; and Atropos cut it off with her scissors, when it was determined that life should end. Job represents the thread of his life as being spun out with great rapidity and tenuity, and about to be cut off.

And are spent without hope] Expectation of future good was at an end: hope of the alleviation of his miseries no longer existed. The hope of future good is the balm of life; where that is not, there is despair; where despair is, there is hell. The fable above-mentioned is referred to by Virgil, Ecl. iv. ver. 46. but is there applied to time.

Thales Siculae adeo diuorum currite furia, Concordas stultis fatorem nomine Parcae. The fates, when they this happy thread have spun, shall bless the mortal close, and bid it smoothly run. Dryden.

Isaiah uses the same figure, chap. xxxviii. 12.

My life is cut off, as by the scower; It will sweep me from the loom. In the course of the day thou wilt finish my web. Louth.

Coverdale translates thus: My days passe ober more speedely then a weater can weave out his webbe, and are spent or I am awarce.

A fine example of this figure is found in the Teomour Nemeq, which I shall give in Mr. Goode's translation: "Praise be to God who hath woven the web of human affairs in the loom of his will, and of his wisdom; and hath made the waves of times and of seasons to flow from the fountain of his providence, into the ocean of his power." The simile is fine, and elegantly expressed.

Verse 7. My life is wind] Mr. Goode translates, "O remember that if my life pass away, mine eye shall turn no more to scenes of goodness." Which he paraphrases thus: "O remember that, if my life pass away, never more shall I witness those scenes of divine favour, never more adore thee for those proofs of unmerited mercy, which till now have been so perpetually bestowed upon me." I think the common translation gives a very good sense.

Verse 8. Shall see me no more] If I die in my present state, with all this load of undeavored odium, which is cast upon me by my friends, I shall never have an opportunity of vindicating my character, and regaining the good opinion of mankind.

Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not] Thou canst look me into nothing. Or, let thine eye be upon me as judged to death; and I shall immediately cease to live among men.

I will speak in the anguish of my spirit; I will complain in the bitterness of my soul.

12 Am I a sea, or a whale, that thou settest a watch over me?

13 When I say, My bed shall comfort me, my couch shall ease my complaint;

14 Then thou scarest me with dreams, and terrifiest me through visions:

15 So that my soul chooseth strangling, and death rather than my life.

16 I loathe it; I would not live alway: let me alone: for my days are vanity.

That is, I can live no longer.—v 2 Sam. 12. 23.—w Ch. 8. 18. & 30. 9. Psa. 103. 16.—x Psa. 39. 1, 8. & 40. 8.—y 1 Sam. 1. 10. Ch. 10. 1.—z Ch. 9. 27.—a Job. 10. 18. my bones.—b Ch. 10. 1.—c Ch. 10. 20. & 14. & Psa. 39. 13.—d Psa. 62. 9.

Verse 9. As the cloud is consumed] As the cloud is dissipated, so is the breath of those that go down to the grave. As that cloud shall never return, so shall it be with the dead: they return no more to sojourn with the living: See on the following verse.

Verse 10. He shall return no more to his house, neither shall his place know him any more] He does not mean that he shall be annihilated; but that he shall never more become an inhabitant of the earth.

The word אֵימָה which we, properly enough, translate grave, here signifies also the state of the dead, hades; and, sometimes, any deep pit, or even hell itself.

Verse 11. Therefore I will not refrain] All is hopeless; I will, therefore, indulge myself in complaining.

Verse 12. Am I a sea, or a whale? Am I condemned as the Egyptians were who were drowned in the Red sea? or am I as Pharaoh, who was drowned in it in his sins, that thou settest a keeper over me? Targum. Am I as dangerous as the sea, that I should be encompassed about with barriers, lest I should hurt mankind? Am I like an ungovernable wild beast, or dragon, that I must be put under locks and bars? I think our own version less exceptionable than any other hitherto given of this verse. On it, the meaning is sufficiently plain. Job was hedged about, and shut in with insuperable difficulties of various kinds—he was entangled as a wild beast in a net—the more he struggled, the more he lost his strength, and the less probability there was of his being extricated from his present situation. The sea is shut in with barriers, over which it cannot pass; for God has placed the sand for the bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it: and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it. Jer. v. 22. For thou hast set a bound that they may not pass over; that they turn not again to cover the earth. Psa. civ. 9. Or who shut up the sea with doors, when it brake forth, as if it had issued out of the womb? When I made the cloud the garment thereof; and thick darkness a swaddling band for it, and brake up for it my decreed place, and set bars and doors; and said, Hitherto shall thou come, but no farther: and here shall thy proud waves be stayed? Job xxxviii. 8.

Here then is Job's allusion:—the bounds, doors, garment, swaddling-bands, decreed place, and bars, are the watches or keepers which God has set to prevent the sea from overflowing the earth: so Job's afflictions and distresses were the bounds and bars which God had apparently set to prevent him from injuring his fellow-creatures. At least Job, in his complaint, so takes it. Am I like the sea (which thou hast imprisoned within bounds) ready to overwhelm and destroy the country? or am I like a dragon, which must be cooped up in the same way, that it may not have the power to kill and destroy? Surely, in my prosperity, I gave no evidence of such a disposition; therefore, should not be treated as a man dangerous to society. In this Job shows that he will not refrain his mouth.

Verse 14. Thou scarest me with dreams] There is no doubt that Satan was permitted to haunt his imagination with dreadful dreams and horrid appearances; so that, as soon as he fell asleep, he was suddenly roused and alarmed with those appalling images. He needed rest by sleep; but was afraid to close his eyes because of the horrid images which were presented to his imagination. Could there be a state more deplorable than this?

Verse 15. Chooseth strangling] It is very likely that he felt, in those interrupted and diurnal slumbers, an oppression and difficulty in breathing, something like the incubus or night-mare; and, distressing as this was, he would prefer death by this means, to any longer life in such miseries.

Verse 16. I loathe it; I would not live alway] Life, in such circumstances, is hateful to me: and, though I wish 17 What is man, that thou shouldest magnify him? and that thou shouldest set thine heart upon him?

18 And that thou shouldest visit him every morning, and try him every moment?

19 How long wilt thou not depart from me, nor let me alone till I swallow down my spittle?

20 I have sinned; what shall I do unto thee, O thou preserver of men? why hast thou set me as a mark against thee, so that I am a burden to myself?

21 And why dost thou not pardon my transgression, and take away mine iniquity? for now shall I sleep in the dust; and thou shalt seek me in the morning, but I shall not be.

CHAPTER VIII.

Bilad answers, and reproves Job for his justifying himself, 1, 2. Shows that God is just, and never punishes but for iniquity; and intimates that it was on account of their sins that his children were cut off, 3, 4. States that, if Job would humble himself to the Almighty, provided he were innocent, his captivity would soon be turned, and his latter end be abundantly prosperous, 5-7. Appeals to the ancients for the truth of what he says; and dr we examples from the vegetable world, to show how soon the wicked may be cut off, and the hope of the hypocrite perish, 8-19. Asserts that God never did cast off a perfect man, nor help the wicked; and if Job be innocent, his end shall be crowned with prosperity, 20-22.

1 THEN answered Bilad the Shuhite, and said,

1 Heb. in the hand of their transgression.— Chap. 5. 8. & 11. 18. & 22. 23. &c. m. Dent. 4. 32. & 32. 7. Ch. 15. 18.— Gen. 47. 9. 1 Chron. 29. 15. Ch. 7. 6. Psa. 20. 5. & 102. 11. & 144. 14.—o Heb. not.

for long life; yet, if length of days were offered to me, with the sufferings which I now undergo, I would despise the offer; and spurn the boon.

Mr. Goode is not satisfied with our common version; and has adopted the following, which, in his notes, he endeavours to illustrate and defend:—

Verse 15. So that my soul overleash affliction. And death, in comparison with my suffering. 16. No longer would I live! O, release me! How are my days vanity!

Verse 17. What is man that thou shouldest magnify him? and that thou shouldest set thine heart upon him? Two different ideas have been drawn from these words:—

1. Man is not worth thy notice: why, therefore, dost thou contend with him?

2. How astonishing is thy kindness, that thou shouldest fix thy heart, thy strongest affections, on such a poor, base, vile, impotent, creature as man (עוֹשֵׂה עֹשֶׂה); that thou shouldest so highly exalt him beyond all other creatures, and mark him with the most particular notice of thy providence and grace!

The paraphrase of Calmet is as follows: "Does man, such as he at present is, merit thy attention! What is man that God should make it his business to examine, try, prove, and afflict him! Is it not doing him too much honour, to think thus seriously about him? O Lord! I am not worthy that thou shouldest concern thyself about me!"

Verse 19. Till I swallow down my spittle] This is a proverbial expression, and exists among the Arabs to the present day; the very language being nearly the same. It signifies the same as, let me draw my breath; give me a moment's space; let me have even the twinkling of an eye. I am urged by my sufferings to continue my complaint; but my strength is exhausted, my mouth dry with speaking. Suspend my sufferings even so short a space as is necessary to swallow my spittle, that my parched tongue may be moistened, so that I may renew my complaint.

Verse 20. I have sinned; what shall I do] Dr. Kenicott contends that these words are spoken to Eliphaz, and not to God; and would paraphrase them thus: "You say I must have been a sinner. What then? I have not sinned against thee! O thou spy upon mankind! Why hast thou set up me as a butt or mark to shoot at? Why am I become a burden unto thee! Why not rather overlook my transgression, and pass by mine iniquity! I am now sinking to the dust! To-morrow, perhaps, I shall be sought in vain!" See his vindication of Job at the end of these notes on this book. Others consider the address as made to God. Taken in this light, the sense is plain enough.

Those who suppose that the address is made to God, translate the 20th verse thus: "Be it that I have sinned, what injury can I do unto thee, O thou Observer of man? Why hast thou set me up as a mark for thee, and why am I made a burden to thee?" The Septuagint is thus: Εἰ ἐγὼ ἥμαρτον, τί δυνήσεται πρᾶξαι, ὃ κτίσας ἐνός τον νόον των ἀνθρώπων; If I have sinned, what can I do, O thou, who knowest the mind of men? Thou knowest that it is impossible for me to make any restitution. I cannot blot out my offences; but whether I have sinned so as to bring all these calamities upon me, thou knowest, who searchest the hearts of men.

2 How long wilt thou speak these things? and how long shall the words of thy mouth be like a strong wind?

3 Doth God pervert judgment? or doth the Almighty pervert justice?

4 If thy children have sinned against him, and he have cast them away for their transgression;

5 If thou wouldest seek unto God betimes, and make thy supplication to the Almighty;

6 If thou wert pure and upright; surely now he would awake for thee, and make the habitation of thy righteousness prosperous.

7 Though thy beginning was small, yet thy latter end should greatly increase.

8 For enquire, I pray thee, of the former age, and prepare thyself to the search of their fathers:

9 (For we are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow);

10 Shall not they teach thee, and tell thee, and utter words out of their heart?

11 Can the rush grow up without mire? can the flag grow without water?

1 Heb. in the hand of their transgression.— Chap. 5. 8. & 11. 18. & 22. 23. &c. m. Dent. 4. 32. & 32. 7. Ch. 15. 18.— Gen. 47. 9. 1 Chron. 29. 15. Ch. 7. 6. Psa. 20. 5. & 102. 11. & 144. 14.—o Heb. not.

Verse 21. And why dost thou not pardon] These words are spoken after the manner of men. If thou have any design to save me; if I have sinned, why dost thou not pardon my transgression, as thou seest that I am a dying man; and to-morrow morning thou mayest seek me to do me good; but in all probability I shall then be no more, and all thy kind thoughts toward me shall be unavailing. If I have sinned, then why should not I have a part in that mercy that flows so freely to all mankind.

That Job does not criminate himself here, as our text intimates, is evident enough from his own repeated assertions of his own innocence. And it is most certain that Bilad, who immediately answers, did not consider him as criminating but as justifying himself; and this is the very ground on which he takes up the subject. Were we to admit the contrary, we should find strange inconsistencies, if not contradictions, in Job's speeches: on such a ground the controversy must have immediately ended, as he would then have acknowledged that of which his friends accused him.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VIII.

Verse 1. Bilad the Shuhite] Supposed to be a descendant of Shuah, one of the sons of Abraham, by Keturah, who dwelt in Arabia Deserta, called in Scripture the East country. See Gen. xxv. 1, 2, 6.

Verse 2. How long wilt thou speak these things? Wilt thou still go on to charge God foolishly? Thy heavy affliction proves that thou art under his wrath; and his wrath thus manifested proves that it is for thy sins that he punisheth thee.

Be like a strong wind? The Arabic, with which the Syriac agrees, is الرُحُوبُ ruchi-olazamat, the spirit of pride. Wilt thou continue to breathe forth a tempest of words? This is more literal.

Verse 3. Doth God pervert judgment? God afflicts thee; can he afflict thee for nought? As he is just, his judgment is just; and he could not inflict punishment unless there be a cause.

Verse 4. If thy children have sinned] I know thy children have been cut off by a terrible judgment;—but was it not because by transgression they had filled up the measure of their iniquity?

And he have cast them away] Has sent them off, says the Targum, to the place of their transgression; to that punishment due to their sins.

Verse 5. If thou wouldest seek unto God] Though God has so severely afflicted thee, and removed thy children by a terrible judgment; yet if thou wilt now humble thyself before him, and implore his mercy, thou shalt be saved. He cut them off in their sins, but he spares thee; and this is a proof that he waits to be gracious to thee.

Verse 6. If thou wert pure and upright] Concerning thy guilt there can be no doubt; for if thou hadst been a holy man, and these calamities had occurred through accident, or merely by the malice of thy enemies, would not God, long ere this, have manifested his power and justice in thy behalf; punished thy enemies; and restored thee to affluence?

The habitation of thy righteousness] Strongly ironical. If thy house had been as a temple of God, in which his worship had been performed, and his commandments obeyed, would it now be in a state of ruin and desolation?

12 * Whilst it is yet in his greenness, and not cut down, it withereth before any other herb.

13 So are the paths of all that forget God; and the hypocrite's hope shall perish:

14 Whose hope shall be cut off, and whose trust shall be as a spider's web.

15 * He shall lean upon his house, but it shall not stand; he shall hold it fast, but it shall not endure.

p. Ps. 120. 6. Jer. 17. 6.—Ch. 11. 20. & 12. 14. & 27. 5. Ps. 112. 10. Prov. 10. 28.

r. Hab. a spider's house. Isai. 37. 5, 6.—Ch. 27. 12.

Verse 7. Though thy beginning was small] Thy former state, compared to that into which God would have brought thee, would be small: for, to show his respect for thy piety, because thou hadst through thy faithful attachment to him suffered the loss of all things, he would have greatly multiplied thy former prosperity, so that thou shouldst now have vastly more than thou didst ever before possess.

Verse 8. Inquire—of the former age] לדר רישון lador rishon, of the first age of the patriarchs; the first generation of men that dwelt upon the earth; not of the age that was just past, as Mr. Peters and several others have imagined, in order to keep up the presumption of Job's high antiquity. Bildad most evidently refers to an antiquity exceedingly remote.

Verse 9. For we are but of yesterday, and know nothing] It is evident that Bildad refers to those times in which human life was protracted to a much longer date than that in which Job lived; when men, from the long period of eight or nine hundred years, had the opportunity of making many observations, and treasuring up a vast fund of knowledge and experience. In comparison with them, he considers that age as nothing; and that generation as being only of yesterday, not having had opportunity of laying up knowledge; nor could they expect it, as their days upon earth would be but a shadow, compared with that substantial time in which the fathers had lived. Perhaps there may be an allusion here to the shadow projected by the gnomon of a dial, during the time the sun is above the horizon. As is a single solar day, so is our life. The following beautiful motto I have seen on a sun dial: UMBRÆ SUMUS! "We are shadows!" referring to the different shadows by which the gnomon marked the hours, during the course of the day; and all intended to convey this moral lesson to the passengers: Your life is composed of time, marked out by such shadows as these. Such as time is, such are you; as fleeting, as transitory, as unsubstantial. These shadows lost, time is lost; time lost, soul lost! Reader, take heed!

The writer of this book probably had before his eyes these words of David, in his last prayer, 1 Chron. xxix. 15. "For we are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as all our fathers were; our days upon earth are as a shadow, and there is no expectation." There is no reason to hope that they shall be prolonged; for our lives are limited down to threescore years and ten, as the average of the life even of old men.

Verse 10. Shall not they teach thee] Wilt thou not treat their maxims with the utmost deference and respect? They utter words from their heart; what they say is the fruit of long and careful experience.

Verse 11. Can the rush grow] The word גומֶה gomé, which we translate rush, is, without doubt, the Egyptian flag papyrus, on which the ancients wrote, and from which our paper derives its name. The Septuagint, who made their Greek translation in Egypt, (if this book made a part of it,) and knew well the import of each word in both languages, render גומֶה by καρπὸς πapyrus, thus: Μὴ θάλλει καρπὸς ἀπὸ ἕδατος; Can the Papyrus flourish without water? Their translation leaves no doubt concerning the meaning of the original. They were probably writing on the very substance in question, while making their translation. The technical language of no science is so thoroughly barbarous as that of botany: the description of this plant, by Linnaeus, shall be a proof. The plant he calls "Cyperus Papyrus. CLASS Triandria. ORDER Monogynia. Culm three-sided, naked; umbel longer than the involucrea; involucrea, three-leaved, setaceous, longer; spikelets in threes.—Egypt, &c. Involucrea eight-leaved; general umbel copious, the rays sheathing at the base; partial on very short peduncles; spikelets alternate, sessile; culm leafy at the base; leaves hollow, ensiform."

Hear our plain countryman, John Gerarde, who describes the same plant:—"Papyrus Nilotica, Paper Reed, hath many large flaggie leaves, somewhat triangular and smooth, not much unlike those of Cate-tails; rising immediately from a tuft of roots, compact of many strings; amongst the which it shooteth up two or three naked stalkes, square, and rising some six or seven cubits high above the water: at the top whereof there stands a tuft or bundle of chaffe threads, set in comely order, resembling a tuft of flowers, but barren and void of seed."

GERARDE'S Herbal, page 40. Which of the two descriptions is easiest to be understood by common sense, either with or without a knowledge of the Latin language? This plant grows in the muddy banks of the Nile, as it requires an abundance of water for its nourishment.

Can the flag grow without water?] Parkhurst supposes that the word אחי achi, which we render flag, is the same with that species of reed which Mr. Hasselquist found growing near the river Nile. He describes it page 97, as "having scarcely any branches, but numerous leaves, which are narrow, smooth, channelled on the upper surface; and the plant about eleven feet high. The Egyptians make ropes of the leaves. They lay the plant in water, like hemp; and then make good and strong cables of them." As אחי achi signifies to join, connect, associate; hence אחי achi, a brother, אחי achu, may come from the same root, and have its name from its usefulness in making ropes, cables, &c. which are composed of associated threads; and serve to tie, bind together, &c.

Verse 12. Whilst it is yet in his greenness] We do not know enough of the natural history of this plant to be able to discern the strength of this allusion; but we learn from it that, although this plant be very succulent, and grows to a great size, yet it is short-lived, and speedily withers; and this we may suppose to be in the dry season, or on the retreat of the waters of the Nile. However, soon ripe, soon rotten, is a maxim in horticulture.

Verse 13. So are the paths] The papyrus and the rush flourish while they have a plentiful supply of ooze and water; but take these away, and their prosperity is speedily at an end; so it is with the wicked and profane; their prosperity is of short duration, however great it may appear to be in the beginning. Thou, also, O thou enemy of God, hast flourished for a time; but the blast of God is come upon thee, and now thou art dried up from the very roots. The hypocrite's hope shall perish] A hypocrite, or rather profigate, has no inward religion; for his heart is not right with God: he has only hope, and that perishes when he gives up the ghost.

This is the first place in which the word hypocrite occurs; or the noun חָנֵפֵת chaneph, which rather conveys the idea of pollution and dejection than of hypocrisy. A hypocrite is one who only carries the mask of godliness, to serve secular purposes; who wishes to be taken for a religionist, though he is conscious he has no religion. Such a person cannot have hope of any good, because he knows he is insincere; but the person in the text has hope: therefore hypocrite cannot be the meaning of the original word. But all the vile, the polluted, and the profigate, have hope; they hope to end their iniquities before they end life; and they hope to get at last to the kingdom of heaven. Hypocrite is a very improper translation of the Hebrew.

Verse 14. Whose hope shall be cut off] Such persons, subdued by the strong habits of sin, hope on fruitlessly, till the last thread of the web of life is cut off from the beam; and then they find no more strength in their hope than is in the threads of the spider's web.

Mr. Goode renders, Thus shall their support rot away. The foundation on which they trust is rotten; and by and by the whole superstructure of their confidence shall tumble into ruin.

Verse 15. He shall lean upon his house] This is an allusion to the spider. When he suspects his web, here called his house, to be frail or unsure, he leans upon it in different parts, propping himself on his hinder legs, and pulling with his fore claws, to see if all be safe. If he find any part of it injured, he immediately adds new cordage to that part, and attaches it strongly to the wall. When he finds all safe and strong, he retires into his hole at one corner, supposing himself to be in a state of complete security; when, in a moment, the brush or the besom sweeps away both himself, his house, and his confidence. This I have several times observed: and it is in this that the strength and point of the comparison consists. The wicked, whose hope is in his temporal possessions, strengths and keeps his house in repair; and thus leans on his earthly supports: in a moment, as in the case of the spider, his house is overwhelmed by the blast of God's judgments, and himself probably buried in its ruins. This is a very fine and expressive metaphor, which not one of the commentators which I have seen has ever discovered.

CHAPTER IX.

Job acknowledges God's justice, and man's sinfulness, 1-3. Celebrates his almighty power as manifested in the earth, and in the heavens, 4-10. Maintains that God afflicts the innocent, as well as the wicked, without any respect to their works, and hath delivered the earth into the hands of the wicked, 11-24. Complains of his loss, and maintains his innocence, 25-28.

16 He is green before the sun, and his branch shooteth forth in his garden.

17 His roots are wrapped about the heap, and seeth the place of stones.

18 If he destroy him from his place, then it shall deny him, saying, I have not seen thee.

19 Behold, this is the joy of his way, and out of the earth shall others grow.

20 Behold, God will not cast away a perfect man, neither will he help the evil doers:

21 Till he fill thy mouth with laughing, and thy lips with rejoicing.

22 They that hate thee shall be clothed with shame; and the dwelling-place of the wicked shall come to nought.

THEN Job answered and said, 2 I know it is so of a truth; but how should man be just with God?

3 If he will contend with him, he cannot answer him one of a thousand.

4 He is wise in heart, and mighty in strength; who hath hardened himself against him, and hath prospered?

5 Which removeth the mountains, and they know not; and overturneth them in his anger.

6 Which shaketh the earth out of her place, and the pillars thereof tremble.

Verse 16. He is green before the sun] This is another metaphor. The wicked is represented as a luxuriant plant, in a good soil; with all the advantages of a good situation; well exposed to the sun; the roots intervolving themselves with stones, so as to render the tree more stable: but suddenly a blast comes, and the tree begins to die. The sudden fading of its leaves, &c. shows that its root is become as rottenness, and its vegetable life destroyed. I have often observed sound and healthy trees, which were flourishing in all the pride of vegetative health, suddenly struck by some unknown and incomprehensible blast, begin to die away, and perish from the roots. I have seen also the prosperous wicked, in the inscrutable dispensations of the divine providence, blasted, stripped, made bare, and despoiled in the same way.

Verse 18. If he destroy him from his place] Is not this a plain reference to the alienation of his inheritance? God destroys him from it; it becomes the property of another: and, on his revisiting it, the place, by a striking prosopopoeia, says, "I know thee not; I have never seen thee." This also have I witnessed; I looked on it, felt regret, received instruction, and hastened away.

Verse 19. Behold, this is the joy of his way] A strong irony. Here is the issue of all his mirth, of his sports, games, and pastimes! See the unfeeling, domineering, polluting, and polluted scape-grace, levelled with those whom he had despised, a servant of servants, or unable to work through his debaucheries, cringing for a morsel of bread, or ingloriously ending his days in that bane of any well-ordered and civilized state, a parish work-house. This also I have most literally witnessed.

Out of the earth shall others grow] As in the preceding case, when one plant or tree is blasted or cut down, another may be planted in the same place; so, when a spendthrift has run through his property, another possesses his inheritance, and grows up from that soil in which he himself might have continued to flourish, had it not been for his extravagance and folly.

This verse Mr. Goode applies to God himself, with no advantage to the argument, nor elucidation of the sense, that I can see. I shall give his translation, and refer to his learned notes for his vindication of the version he has given:—

"Behold the Eternal (MY) eruding in his course; Even over his dust shall rise up another."

In this way none of the ancient versions have understood the passage. I believe it to be a strong irony, similar to that which some think flowed from the pen of the same writer. Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth; and walk in the ways of thine own heart, and in the sight of thine eyes. But know thou that for all these God will bring thee into judgment. Eccles. chap. xi. ver. 9. These two places illustrate each other.

Verse 20. Behold, God will not cast away a perfect man] This is another of the maxims of the ancients, which Bildad produces: "As sure as he will punish and root out the wicked, so surely will he defend and save the righteous."

Verse 21. Till he fill thy mouth with laughing] Perhaps it may be well to translate after Mr. Goode, "Even yet may he fill thy mouth with laughter!" The two verses may be read as a prayer: and probably they were thus expressed by Bildad, who speaks with less violence than his predecessor; though with equal positiveness in respect to the grand charge, viz. If thou wert not a sinner of no mean magnitude, God would not have inflicted such unprecedented calamities upon thee.

This most exceptionable, and contrary to matter of fact position, was founded upon maxims which they derived from the ancients. Surely observation must have, in numberless instances, corrected this mistake. They must have seen many worthless men in high prosperity; and many of the excellent of the earth in deep adversity and affliction. But the opposite was an article of their creed, and all appearances and facts must take its colouring.

Job's friends must have been acquainted, at least, with the history of the ancient patriarchs; and most certainly they contained facts of an opposite nature. Righteous Abel was persecuted and murdered by his wicked brother Cain. Abram was obliged to leave his own country, on account of worshipping the true God: so all tradition has said. Jacob was persecuted by his brother Esau; Joseph was sold into slavery by his brothers; Moses was obliged to flee from Egypt, and was variously tried and afflicted, even by his own brethren. Not to mention David, and almost all the prophets. All these were proofs that the best of men were frequently exposed to sore afflictions and heavy calamities: and it is not by the prosperity or adversity of men in this world, that we are to judge of the approbation or disapprobation of God toward them. In every case our Lord's rule is infallible: By their fruits ye shall know them.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IX.

Verse 2. I know it is so of a truth] I acknowledge the general truth of the maxims you have advanced. God will not ultimately punish a righteous person; nor shall the wicked finally triumph: and though righteous before man, and truly sincere in my piety, yet I know, when compared with the immaculate holiness of God, all my righteousness is nothing.

Verse 3. If he will contend with him] God is so holy, and his law so strict, that if he will enter into judgment with his creatures, the most upright of them cannot be justified in his sight.

One of a thousand.] Of a thousand offences which he may be accused, he cannot vindicate himself even in one. How little that any man does, even in the way of righteousness, truth, and mercy, can stand the penetrating eye of a just and holy God, when all motives, feelings, and objects, come to be scrutinized! In his sight, on this ground, no man living can be justified. O, how necessary to fallen, weak, miserable, imperfect, and sinful man is the doctrine of justification by faith, and sanctification through the Divine Spirit; by the sacrificial death and mediation of the Lord Jesus Christ!

Verse 4. He is wise in heart, and mighty in strength] By his infinite knowledge, he searches out and sees all things: and by his Almighty power he can punish all delinquencies. He that rebels against him must be destroyed.

Verse 5. Removeth the mountains, and they know not] This seems to refer to earthquakes. By those strong convulsions, mountains, valleys, hills, even whole islands, are removed in an instant: and to this latter circumstance the words they know not, most probably refer. The work is done in the twinkling of an eye; no warning is given; the mountain that seemed to be as firm as the earth on which it rested, was in the same moment both visible and invisible; so suddenly was it swallowed up.

Verse 6. The pillars thereof tremble.] This also refers to an earthquake; and to that tremulous motion which sometimes gives warning of the approaching catastrophe, and from which this violent convulsion of nature has got its name. Earthquakes also, in Scripture language, signify violent commotions and disturbances in states: mountains often signify rulers; sun, empires; stars, petty states. But it is most likely that the expressions here are to be understood literally.

7 Which commandeth the sun, and it riseth not; and sealeth up the stars.

8 Which alone spreadeth out the heavens, and treadeth upon the waves of the sea.

9 Which maketh Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south.

10 Which doeth great things past finding out; yea, and wonders without number.

11 Lo, he goeth by me, and I see him not: he passeth on also, but I perceive him not.

12 Behold, he taketh away, who can hinder him? who will say unto him, What doest thou?

13 If God will not withdraw his anger, the proud hearts do stoop under him.

14 How much less shall I answer him, and choose out my words to reason with him?

15 Whom, though I were righteous, yet would I not answer, but I would make supplication to my judge.

16 If I had called, and he had answered me; yet would I not believe that he had hearkened unto my voice.

17 For he breaketh me with a tempest, and multiplieth my wounds without cause.

18 He will not suffer me to take my breath, but filleth me with bitterness.

19 If I speak of strength, lo, he is strong: and if of judgment, who shall set me a time to plead?

Verse 7. Which commandeth the sun] Either obscures it with clouds, with thick darkness, or with an eclipse.

Sealeth up the stars] Like the contents of a letter, wrapped up and sealed, so that it cannot be read. Sometimes the heavens become as black as ebony; and no star, figure, or character, in this great book of God can be read.

Verse 8. And treadeth upon the waves] This is a very majestic image. God not only walks upon the waters; but when the sea runs mountains high, he steps from billow to billow in his almighty and essential majesty. There is a similar sentiment in David, Psa. xxix. 10. "The Lord sitteth upon the flood; yea, the Lord sitteth king for ever." But both are far outdone by the Psalmist, Psa. xviii. 9—15, and especially in these words, ver. 10. He did fly on the wings of the wind. Job is great; but in every respect David is greater.

Verse 9. Which maketh Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the chambers of the south] For this translation the original words are כָּסַל רִיחָם אֲרִיִּים עַשׂ דָּשֶׁה דָּשֶׁה, ke-sal, re-chimah, ve-hadrey teman, which are thus rendered by the SEPTUAGINT: "Ὁ ποιητὴς Ἰλιαδᾶς, καὶ Ἑσπερον, καὶ Ἀρκτουρον, καὶ Ταυρια βορον" Who makes the Pleiades, and Hesperus, and Arcturus, and Orion, and the chambers of the south."

The VULGATE, Qui facit Arcturum, et Oriona, et Hyadas, et interiora Austri. "Who maketh Arcturus and Orion, and the Hyades, and the innermost chambers of the south."

The TARGUM follows the Hebrew; only paraphrases the latter clause thus: And the chambers or houses of the planetary domination in the southern hemisphere.

The SYRIAC and ARABIC, Who maketh the Pleiades, and Arcturus, and the giant (Orion or Hercules,) and the boundaries of the south.

COVERDALE has, He maketh the banners of heaven, the Orion, the bill stars, and the secret places of the south. And on the vii starrs he has this marginal note: some call these seven starrs, the clock denne wylly hit clyck-stas. See below.

Edmund Becke, in his edition, 1549, follows Coverdale; but puts VAYTES of heaven for waynes, which Cardmarden, in his Bible, Rouen, 1515, mistaking, changes into WAVES of heaven.

Barker's Bible, 1615, reads, He maketh the starrs Arcturus, Orion, and Pleiades, and the climates of the south. On which he has this note, "These are the names of certain starrs, whereby he meaneth that all starrs, both known and unknown, are at his appointment."

Our early translators seem to agree much with the German and Dutch: Et machet den wagen am himmel, und Orion, und die Cluckten, und die Sterne gegen witting. He maketh the wagon of heaven, (Charles's wain) and Orion, and the clucking hen, (the Pleiades) and the stars of the mid-day region. See above, under Coverdale.

The Dutch version is not much unlike the German, from which it was taken: Die den wagen maecht, den Orion, ende het sevegensternte, ende de binnentameren ban't Zeyden.

The European versions, in general, copy one or other of the above; or make a compound translation from the whole: but all are derived ultimately from the Septuagint and Vulgate.

As to the Hebrew words, they might as well have been applied to any of the other constellations of heaven: indeed, it does not appear that constellations are at all meant. Parkhurst and Bate, have given, perhaps, the best interpretation of the words, which is as follows:

"Kimah כִּימָה from כָּסַל camah, to be hot, or warm, denotes scorching heat or warmth, as opposed to wy dsh, a parching, burning air, on the one side; and ke-sil כָּסַל the rigid contracting cold, on the other: and the chambers (thick clouds) of the south." See more in Parkhurst, under כָּסַל.

I need scarcely add that these words, by critics and commentators, have been variously translated. Dr. Hales translates kimah and ke-sil by Taurus and Scorpio; and, if this translation were indubitably correct, we might follow him to his conclusion, viz. that Job lived 2337 years before Christ! See at the end of this chapter.

Verse 10. Great things past finding out] Great things without end; wonders without number. Targum.

Verse 11. Lo, he goeth by me, and I see him not] He is incomprehensible in all his ways, and in all his works; and he must be so if he be God, and work as God: for his own nature and his operations are past finding out.

Verse 12. He taketh away] He never gives; but he is ever lending: and while the gift is useful, or is improved, he permits it to remain; but when it becomes useless, or is misused, he recalls it.

Who can hinder him?] Literally, Who can cause him to restore it?

What doest thou?] He is supreme, and will give account of none of his matters. He is infinitely wise, and cannot mistake. He is infinitely kind, and can do nothing cruel. He is infinitely good, and can do nothing wrong. No one, therefore, should question either his motives, or his operations.

Verse 13. If God will not withdraw his anger] It is of no use to contend with God: he cannot be successfully resisted; all his opposers must perish.

Verse 14. How much less shall I answer] I cannot contend with my Maker. He is the lawgiver and the judge:—how shall I stand in judgment before him?

Verse 15. Though I were righteous] Though clear of all the crimes, public and secret, of which you accuse me, yet I would not dare to stand before his immaculate holiness. Man's holiness may profit man; but, in the sight of the infinite purity of God, it is nothing. Thus sung an eminent poet:—

"I loathe myself when God I see,
And into nothing fall;
Content that thou exalted be,
And Christ be all in all."

I would make supplication to my judge.] Though not conscious of any sin, I should not think myself thereby justified; but would, from a conviction of the exceeding breadth of the commandment, and the limited nature of my own perfection, cry out, "Cleanse thou me from secret faults!"

Verse 16. If I had called and he had answered] I could scarcely suppose, such is his majesty, and such his holiness, that he could condescend to notice a being so mean, and in every respect so infinitely beneath his notice. These sentiments sufficiently confuted that slander of his friends, who said he was presumptuous; had not becoming notions of the majesty of God; and used blasphemous expressions against his sovereign authority.

Verse 17. He breaketh me with a tempest] The Targum, Syriac, and Arabic, have this sense: He powerfully smites even every hair of my head: and multiplies my wounds without cause. That is, there is no reason known to myself, or to any man, why I should be thus most oppressively afflicted. It is, therefore, cruel and inconsequent to assert, that I suffer for my crimes.

Verse 18. He will not suffer me to take my breath] I have no respite in my afflictions: I suffer continually in my body; and my mind is incessantly harassed.

Verse 19. If I speak of strength, lo, he is strong] Human wisdom, power, and influence, avail nothing before him.

Who shall set me a time] מי יצדיקני mi yoddeni, "Who would be a witness for me?" or, Who would dare to appear in my behalf? Almost all the terms in this part of the speech of Job, from ver. 11 to ver. 24. are forensic, or juridical, and are taken from legal processes and pleadings, in their gates, or courts of justice.

20 If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me: if I say I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse.

21 Though I were perfect, yet would I not know my soul: I would despise my life.

22 This is one thing, therefore I said it, ' He destroyeth the perfect and the wicked.

23 If the scourge slay suddenly, he will laugh at the trial of the innocent.

24 The earth is given into the hand of the wicked: ' he covereth the faces of the judges thereof; if not, where, and who is he?

25 Now ' my days are swifter than a post; they flee away, they see no good.

26 They are passed away as the ' swift

Verse 20. [If I justify myself] God must have some reason for his conduct toward me: I, therefore, do not pretend to justify myself; the attempt to do it would be an insult to his majesty and justice. Though I am conscious of none of the crimes of which you accuse me, and know not why he contends with me; yet he must have some reason, and that reason he does not choose to explain.

Verse 21. Though I were perfect] Had I the fullest conviction that in every thought, word, and deed, I were blameless before him, yet I would not plead this; nor would I think it any security for a life of ease and prosperity; or any proof that my days should be prolonged.

Verse 22. This is one thing] My own observation shows, that in the course of providence the righteous and the wicked have an equal lot, for, when any sudden calamity comes, the innocent and the guilty fall alike. There may be a few exceptions; but they are very extraordinary, and very rare.

Verse 24. The earth is given into the hand of the wicked] Is it not most evident that the worst men possess most of this world's goods; and that the righteous are scarcely ever in power or affluence! This was the case in Job's time; it is the case still. Therefore, prosperity and adversity in this life, are no marks either of God's approbation or disapprobation.

He covereth the faces of the judges thereof] Or, the faces of his decisions he shall cover. God is often stated in Scripture as doing a thing which he only permits to be done. So he permits the eyes of judgment to be blinded: and hence false decisions. Mr. Goode translates the verse thus:

"The earth is given over to the hand of injustice, He hoodwinketh the faces of his judges, Where every one liveth, is it not so?"

And vindicates the translation in his learned notes: but I doubt the Hebrew will not bear this rendering; especially that in the third line.

Where, and who is he?] If this be not the case, who is he that acts in this way; and where is he to be found? If God do not permit these things, who is it that orders them? Coverdale translates, As for the world, he getteth it over into the power of the wicked, such as the rulers be whereof all lands are full. As it not so? Where is there any, but he is such one? This sense is clear enough, if the original will bear it. The last clause is thus rendered by the Syriac and Arabic, Who can bear his indignation?

Verse 25. Swifter than a post] מיני רץ minni rats, "than a runner." The light-footed messenger or courier, who carries messages from place to place.

They flee away] The Chaldee says, My days are swifter than the shadow of a flying bird] So swiftly do they flee away that I cannot discern them; and, when past, they cannot be recalled. There is a sentiment like this in VIRGIL, Geor. lib. iii. ver. 281.

Sed fugit interea, fugit irreparabile tempus!

"But in the mean while time flies! irreparable time flies away!"

Verse 26. As the swift ships] אמה אמת omioth ebeth. Ships of desire; or ships of ebeth, says our margin; perhaps more correctly inflated ships, the sails belying out with a fair brisk wind, tide favourable, and the vessels themselves lightly freighted.

The Vulgate has, Like ships freighted with apples. Ships laden with the best fruits, TARGUM. Ships well adapted for sailing, ARABIC. Ships that be good under sail. COVERDALE. Probably this relates to the light fast-sailing ships on the Nile, which were made of reeds or papyrus.

Perhaps the idea to be seized is not so much the swiftness of the passage, as their leaving no trace or track behind them. But instead of אמה ebeth, איהב ebeth, hostile ships, or the ships of enemies, is the reading of forty-seven of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. and of the Syriac version. If this be the true reading, what is its sense? My days are gone off like the light vessels of the pirates, (having stripped me of my property, and carried all irrecoverably away) under the strongest press of sail, that they may effect their escape, and secure their booty.

The next words As the eagle that hasteth to the prey, seem at least to countenance, if not confirm the above reading: the idea of robbery and spoil, prompt attack, and sudden retreat, is preserved in both images.

Verse 27. I will forget my complaint] I will forsake, or forego my complaining. I will leave off my heaviness. VULGATE, I will change my countenance; force myself to smile, and endeavour to assume the appearance of comfort.

Verse 28. I am afraid of all my sorrows] Coverdale translates after the Vulgate, Then am I straped of all my workes. Even were I to cease from complaining, I fear lest not one of my works, however well intentioned, shall stand thy scrutiny, or meet with thy approbation.

Thou wilt not hold me innocent.] Coverdale, after the Vulgate, For I knowe thou labourst not an ebl doer; but this is not the sense of the original:—Thou wilt not acquit me so as to take away my afflictions from me.

Verse 29. If I be wicked] If I am the sinner you suppose me to be, in vain should I labour to counterfeit joy, and cease to complain of my sufferings.

Verse 30. If I wash myself with snow water] Supposed to have a more detergent quality than common water; and it was certainly preferred to common water by the ancients. Of this we find an example in an elegant but licentious author: Tandem ergo discubuvimus, pueris Alexandrinis aquam in manus nivatam infundentibus, alisque insequentibus ad pedes—PETR. Satir. cap. xxxi. "At length we sat down, and had snow water poured on our hands by lads of Alexandria," &c.

Mr. Goode supposes that there is an allusion here to the ancient rite of washing the hands in token of innocence. See Psal. xxvi. 6. I will wash my hands in innocence. And lxiii. 13. Verily I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocence. And by this ceremony Pilate declared himself innocent of the blood of Christ, Matt. xxvii. 24.

Verse 31. And mine own clothes shall abhor me] Such is thine infinite purity, when put in opposition to the purity of man, that it will bear no comparison. Searched and tried by the eye of God, I should be found as a leper, so that my own clothes would dread to touch me, for fear of being infected by my own corruption. This is a strong and bold figure; and is derived from the corrupted state of his body, which his clothes drealed to touch, because of the contagious nature of his disorder.

Verse 32. For he is not a man, as I am] I cannot contend with him as with one of my fellows in a court of justice.

Verse 33. Neither is there any day's-man] מיני בעיניו beyneyno mochiach, a reprover, arguer, or umpire between us. DAY'S-MAN, in our law, means an arbitrator or umpire between party and party; as it were bestowing a day, or certain time on a certain day, to decree, judge, or decide a matter. MINSKIEU. DAY is used in law, for the day of appearance in court, either originally or upon assignation, for hearing a matter for trial. Idem. But arbitrator is the proper meaning of the term here: one who is, by the consent of both parties, to judge between them, and settle their differences.

Instead of וי לא lo yesh, there is not, fifteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. with the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, read וי לו yesh, I wish there were; or, O that there were! עידי ב' מעותי עמוק, ואם

CHAPTER X.

Job is weary of life, and expostulates with God, l.-6. He appeals to God for his punishment, and pleads on the weakness of his frame, and the manner of his formation, 7.-13. Complaints of his sufferings, and prays for respite, 14.-20. Describes the state of the dead, 21, 22.

ἀγγεῶν καὶ δαίμονων ἀντιπροσώπων ὁ ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ μεσῖτις, ὁ ἀντιπροσώπων ὁ ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ὁ μεσῖτις. O that we had a mediator, an advocate, and judge between us both! Serr. Poor Job! he did not yet know the Mediator between God and man; the only means by which God and man can be brought together and reconciled. Had St. Paul this in his eye when he wrote 1 Tim. ii. 5, 6. For there is one God, and one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all. Without this Mediator, and the ransom price which he has laid down, God and man can never be united: and that this union might be made possible, Jesus took the human into conjunction with his divine nature; and thus God was manifest in the flesh.

Verse 34. Let him take his rod away. In the Masoretic Bibles the word [צַוָּ שִׁבְיָהוּ, his rod, is written with a large ש tet, as above; and as the letter in numerals stands for 9, the masora says the word was thus written to show the nine calamities under which Job had suffered, and which he wished God to remove!

As צַוָּ shebet, not only signifies rod, but also sceptre, or the ensign of royalty, Job might here refer to God sitting in his majesty upon the judgment-seat; and this sight so appalled him, that, filled with terror, he was unable to speak. When a sinful soul sees God in his majesty, terror seizes upon it, and prayer is impossible. We have a beautiful illustration of this, Isa. vi. 1-7. "I saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Then said I, Wo is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts."

Verse 35. But it is not so with me. I am not in such circumstances as to plead with my judge. I believe the sense of these words is nearly as Coverdale has expressed it:—For as long as I am in such fearfulnesse, I can make no answer. A natural picture of the state of a penitent soul, which needs no additional colouring.

On the names of the constellations mentioned ver. 9. and again, chap. xxxviii. ver. 31, &c. much has been written; and to little effect. I have already in the notes expressed my doubts whether any constellation be intended. Dr. Hales, however, finds in these names, as he thinks, astronomical data, by which he ascertains the time of Job. I shall give his words:

"The cardinal constellations of spring and autumn, in Job's time, were Chimab and Chesil, or Taurus and Scorpio; noticed xi. 9; and again, xxxviii. 31, 32, of which the principal stars are Aldebaran, the bull's eye, and Antares, the scorpion's heart. Knowing, therefore, the longitudes of these stars, at present, the interval of time from thence to the assumed date of Job's trial will give the difference of the longitudes; and ascertain their positions then, with respect to the vernal and autumnal points of intersection of the equinoctial and ecliptic; according to the usual rate of the precession of the equinoxes, one degree in 71½ years. See that article, vol. i. page 185.

The following calculations I owe to the kindness and skill of the respectable Dr. Brinkley, Andrew's Professor of Astronomy in the University of Dublin:

"In A. D. 1806, Aldebaran was in two signs, 7 degrees east longitude. But since the date of Job's trial, B. C. 2338, i. e. 4138 years, the precession of the equinoxes amounted to 1 sign, 27 degrees, 53 minutes; which, being subtracted from the former quantity, left Aldebaran in only 9 degrees, 7 minutes longitude, or distance from the vernal intersection: which, falling within the constellation Taurus, consequently rendered it the cardinal constellation of spring; as Pisces is at present:

"In A. D. 1800, Antares was in 8 signs, 6 degrees, 58 minutes, east longitude; or 2 signs, 6 degrees, 58 minutes, east of the autumnal intersection: from which subtracting, as before, the amount of the precession, Antares was left only 9 degrees, 5 minutes east. Since then the autumnal equinox was found within Scorpio: this was then myself; I will speak in the bitterness of my soul.

2 I will say unto God, Do not condemn me; show me wherefore thou contendest with me.

3 Is it good unto thee that thou shouldest oppress, that thou shouldest despise the work of thine hands, and shine upon the counsel of the wicked?

4 Hast thou eyes of flesh? or seest thou as man seeth?

5 Are thy days as the days of man? are thy years as man's days,

Or, cut off while I live.—n Ch. 7. 11.—Heb. the (hour of thine hands?) Ps. 138. 8. Lat. 61. 8.—p 1 Sam. 16. 7.

the cardinal constellation of autumn, as Virgo is at present.

"Such a combination and coincidence of various rays of evidence, derived from widely different sources, history, sacred and profane, chronology, and astronomy, and all converging to the same focus, tend strongly to establish the time of Job's trial, as rightly assigned in the year B. C. 2337; or 818 years after the deluge; 184 years before the birth of Abraham; 474 years before the settlement of Jacob's family in Egypt; and 689 years before their exodus or departure from thence." New Analysis of Chronology, vol. ii. p. 57.

Now all this is specious; and, were the foundation sound, we might rely on the permanence of the building, though the rains should descend, the floods come, and the winds blow and beat on that house. But all these deductions and conclusions are founded on the assumption that Chemah and Chesil mean Taurus and Scorpio: but this is the very point that is to be proved; for proof of this is not offered, nor indeed can be offered; and such assumptions are palpably nugatory. That wp Ash, has been generally understood to signify the Great Bear; כְּסִיל Kenil, Orion; and רֹבֹךְ Keimah, the Pleiades; may be seen every where: but that they do signify these constellations is perfectly uncertain. We have only conjectures concerning their meaning; and on such conjectures no system can be built. Genuine data, in Dr. Hales's hands, are sure to be conducted to legitimate conclusions: but neither he nor any one else can construct an astronomical fabric in the limbus of conjecture. When Job lived is perfectly uncertain: but that this book was written 818 years after the deluge; 184 years before the birth of Abram, and 689 before the Exodus; and that all this is demonstrable from Chemah and Chesil signifying Taurus and Scorpio, whence the positions of the equinoxes at the time of Job's trial can be ascertained; can never be proved, and can never be credited.

In what many learned men have written on this subject I find as much solidity and satisfaction as from what is piously and gravely stated in the Glossa Ordinaria.

Qui facit Arcturum. Diversæ sunt constellationes, varios status ecclesiam signantes. Per Arcturum, qui semper super orientem nostrum apparet, significatur status apostolorum qui in episcopis remanet. Per Orionem, qui est tempestatis signum, significatur, status martyrum. Per Hyadas, quæ significant pluvios, status doctorum doctrinæ pluvium effundentium. Per interiora auri, quæ sunt nobis occulta, status Anachoretarum, hominum aspectus declinantium. "These different constellations signify various states of the church. By Arcturus, which always appears above our horizon, is signified the apostolic state, which still remains in episcopacy. By Orion, which is a tempestuous sign, is signified the state of the martyrs. By the hyades, (kids) which indicate rain, the state of the doctors, pouring out the rain of doctrine, is signified. And by the inner chambers of the south, which are hidden from us, the state of the Anachorets (hermits) is signified, who always shun the sight of men."

Much more of the same allegorical matter may be found in the same place, the Glossa Ordinaria, of Strabus of Fulda, on the ixth chapter of Job. But how unreal and empty are all these things! What an uncertain sound do such trumpets give!

NOTES ON CHAPTER X.

Verse 1. My soul is weary of my life. Here is a proof that wp nephesh, does not signify the animal life, but the soul or immortal mind, as distinguished from wp chat, that animal life: and is a strong proof that Job believed in the distinctions between these two principles; was no materialist; but, on the contrary, credited the proper immortality of the soul!

I will leave my complaint. I will charge myself with the cause of my own calamities; and shall not charge my 6 That thou inquirest after mine iniquity, and searchest after my sin?

7 Thou knowest that I am not wicked; and there is none that can deliver out of thine hand.

8 Thine hands have made me, and fashioned me together round about; yet thou dost destroy me.

9 Remember, I beseech thee, that thou hast made me as the clay; and wilt thou bring me into dust again?

10 Hast thou not poured me out as milk, and curdled me like cheese?

11 Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews.

12 Thou hast granted me life and favour, and thy visitation hath preserved my spirit.

Maker foolishly: but I must deplore my wretched and forlorn state.

Verse 2. Do not condemn me] Let me not be afflicted in thy wrath.

Show me wherefore thou contendest] If I am afflicted because of my sin, show me what that sin is. God never afflicts but for past sin; or to try his followers; or, for the greater manifestation of his grace in their support and deliverance.

Verse 3. Is it good unto thee] Surely it can be no gratification to thee to distress the children of men, as if thou didst despise the work of thy own hands.

And shine upon the counsel] For by my afflictions the harsh judgments of the wicked will appear to be confirmed: viz. that God regards not his most fervent worshippers; and it is no benefit to lead a religious life.

Verse 4. Hast thou eyes of flesh?] Dost thou judge as man judges? Illustrated by the next clause, Seeest thou as man seeth?

Verse 5. Are thy days as the days of man?] ארסו Enosh, wretched miserable man, thy years as man's days. לך גבר, the strong man. Thou art not short-lived, like man in his present imperfect state; nor can the years of the long-lived patriarchs be compared with thine. The difference of the phraseology in the original justifies this view of the subject. Man in his low estate cannot be likened unto thee; nor can he, in his greatest excellence, though made in thy own image and likeness, be compared to thee.

Verse 6. That thou inquirest] Is it becoming thy infinite dignity to concern thyself so much with the affairs or transgressions of a despicable mortal? A word spoken in the heart of most sinners.

Verse 7. Thou knowest that I am not wicked] While thou hast this knowledge of me, and my conduct, why appear to be sifting me as if in order to find out sin: and, though none can be found, treating me as though I were a transgressor.

Verse 8. Thine hands have made me] Thou art well acquainted with human nature, for thou art its Author.

And fashioned me together round about] All my powers and faculties have been planned and executed by thyself. It is thou who hast refined the materials out which I have been formed, and modified them into that excellent symmetry and order in which they are now found: so that the union and harmony of the different parts (יחד) and their arrangement and completion (סבב) proclaim equally thy wisdom, skill, power, and goodness.

Yet thou dost destroy me.] ותרכלני va-tiballenti, "and thou wilt swallow me up." Men generally care for, and prize those works on which they have spent most time, skill, and pains: but although thou hast formed me with such incredible skill and labour, yet thou art about to destroy me! How dreadful an evil must sin be, when, on its account, God has pronounced the sentence of death on all mankind! And that body, so curiously and skillfully formed, must be decomposed, and reduced to dust!

Verse 9. Thou hast made me as the clay] Thou hast fashioned me according to thy own mind, out of a mass of clay:—after so much skill and pains expended, men might naturally suppose they were to have a permanent being; but thou hast decreed to turn them into dust!

Verse 10. Hast thou not poured me out as milk] After all that some learned men have said on this subject, in order to confine the images here to simple nutrition; I am satisfied that generation is the true notion. Respicit ad fetus in matris utero primam formationem, quum in embryonem ex utrisque parentis semine, coalescit.—Ex semine liquido, lac quodammodo referente, me formasti—In interpretanda, inquit Hieronymus, omnia his accedo qui de genitali semine accipiunt, quod ipsa tanquam natura emulget, ac dein concrecere in utero ac coalescere 13 And these things hast thou hid in thine heart: I know that this is with thee.

14 If I sin, then thou markest me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity.

15 If I be wicked, wo unto me: and if I be righteous, yet will I not lift up my head. I am full of confusion; therefore see thou mine affliction;

16 For it increaseth. Thou huntest me as a fierce lion: and again thou showest thyself marvellous upon me.

17 Thou renewest thy witnesses against me, and increasest thine indignation upon me; changes and war are against me.

18 Wherefore then hast thou brought me forth out of the womb? Oh that I had given up the ghost, and no eye had seen me!

judet. I make no apology for leaving this untranslated.

The different expressions in this and the following verses are very appropriate: the pouring out like milk, coagulating, clothing with skin and flesh, fencing with bones and sinews, are well imagined, and delicately, and, at the same time, forcibly expressed.

If I believed that Job referred to nutrition, which I do not, I might speak of the chyle, the chylopoietic organs, the lacteal vessels, and the generation of all the solids and fluids from this substance, which itself is derived from the food taken into the stomach. But this process, properly speaking, does not take place till the human being is brought into the world, it being previously nourished by the mother through means of the funis umbilicus, without that action of the stomach by which the chyle is prepared.

Verse 12. Thou hast granted me life and favour] Thou hast brought me from my mother's womb; given me an actual existence among men; by thy favour or mercy thou hast provided me with the means of life; and thy visitation, thy continual providential care, has preserved me in life, has given me the air I breathe, and furnished me with those powers which enable me to respire it as an agent and preserver of life. It is by God's continual visitation or influence, that any life of man is preserved. In him we live, move, and have our being.

Verse 13. And these things hast thou hid in thine heart] Thou hast had many gracious purposes concerning me which thou hast not made known: but thy visitations and mercy are sufficient proofs of kindness toward me; though for purposes unknown to me, thou hast sorely afflicted me, and continued to treat me as an enemy.

Verse 14. If I sin] From these nothing can be hidden; if I sin, thou takest account of the transgressions; and canst not hold me for innocent, when thou knowest I am guilty.

Verse 15. If I be wicked] I must meet with that punishment that is due to the workers of iniquity.

If I be righteous] I am only in the state which my duty to my Creator requires me to be in; and I cannot, therefore, suppose that on this account I can deserve any thing by way of favour from the justice of my Maker.

I am full of confusion] I am confounded at my state and circumstances. I know that thou art merciful and dost not afflict willingly the children of men: I know I have not wickedly departed from thee, and yet I am treated by thee as if I were an apostate from every good. I am, therefore, full of confusion: see thou to my affliction, and bring me out of it in such a way as shall at once prove my innocence, the righteousness of thy ways, and the mercy of thy nature.

Verse 16. For it increaseth.] Probably this refers to the affliction mentioned above, which increased in proportion to its duration. Every day made his escape from such a load of evils less and less probable.

Thou huntest me as a fierce lion] As the hunters attack the king of beasts in the forest, so my friends attack me. They assail me on every side.

Thou showest thyself marvellous] Thy designs, thy ways, thy works, are all incomprehensible to me: thou dost both confound and overpower me. Mr. Goode translates thus:

For expressing as a ravenous lion dost thou spring upon me; And again, thou showest over me thy vast power.

Verse 17. Thou renewest thy witnesses] In this speech of Job, he is ever referring to trials in courts of judicature; and almost all his terms are forensic. Thou bringest witnesses in continual succession, to confound and convict me.

Changes and war] I am as if attacked by successive troops; one company being wearied, another succeeds to the attack; so that I am harassed by continual warfare.

19 I should have been as though I had not been; I should have been carried from the womb to the grave.

20 "Are not my days few? 'cease then, and let me alone, that I may take comfort a little,

21 Before I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death:

22 A land of darkness, as darkness itself; and of the shadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkness.

CHAPTER XI.

Neither answers Job, and reproves him severely for his attempts to justify himself, charges him with want of integrity, and contends that God inflicts less punishment on him than his iniquities deserve, 1-18. Shows the knowledge and perfection of God to be unsearchable, and that none can resist his power, 7-11. Warns him against vanity of mind; and exhorts him to repentance on the ground that his acceptance with God is still a possible case, and that his latter days may yet become happy and prosperous, 12-18.

Verse 18. Wherefore then? Why didst thou give me a being when thou didst foresee I should be exposed to such incredible hardships? See on chap. iii. ver. 10, &c.

Verse 19. I should have been as though Had I given up the ghost as soon as born, as I could not then have been conscious of existence; it would have been, as it respects myself, as though I had never been; being immediately transported from my mother's womb to my grave.

Verse 20. Are not my days few? My life cannot be long, let me have a little respite before I die.

Verse 21. I shall not return I shall not return again from the dust, to have a dwelling among men.

To the land of darkness See the notes on chap. iii. ver. 5. There are here a crowd of obscure and dislocated terms, admirably expressive of the obscurity and uncertainty of the subject. What do we know of the state of separate spirits? What do we know of the spiritual world? How do souls exist separate from their respective bodies? Of what are they capable, and what is their employment? Who can answer these questions? Perhaps nothing can be said much better of the state, than is here said, a land of obscurity like darkness.

The shadow of death A place where death rules, over which he projects his shadow, intercepting every light of every kind of life.—without any order עליו ילווה סדרים velo sedarim, having no arrangements, no distinctions of inhabitants, the poor and the rich are there, the master and his slave, the king and the beggar, their bodies in equal corruption and disgrace, their souls distinguished only by their moral character. Stripped of their flesh, they stand in their naked simplicity before God, in that place.

Verse 22. Where the light is as darkness A palpable obscure! it is space and place, and has only such light or capability of distinction as renders "darkness visible." It is, as the Vulgate expresses it, Terra tenebrosa, et operata mortis caliginis: Terra miseria et tenebrarum, ubi umbra mortis, et nullus ordo, sed sempiternus horror inhabitat. "A murky land, covered with the thick darkness of death: a land of wretchedness and obscurities, where is the shadow of death; and no order but sempiternal horror dwells every where." Or, as Coverdale expresses this last clause, Obscuras in eis ordo, but terribil fear as in the darkness. A duration not characterized or measured by any of the attributes of time; where there is no order of darkness and light, night and day, heat and cold, summer and winter. It is the state of the dead! The place of separate spirits! It is out of time, out of probation, beyond change or mutability. It is on the confines of eternity! But what is this? And Where? Eternity! how can I form any conception of thee? In thee there is no order, no bounds, no substance, no progression, no change, no past, no present, no future! It is an indescribable something, to which there is no analogy in the compass of creation. It is infinity, and incomprehensibility to all finite beings. It is what living I know not, and what I must die to know; and even then I shall apprehend no more of it than merely to know that it is E-T-E-R-N-I-T-Y.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XI.

Verse 1. Zophar the Naamathite Of this man and his friends, see chap. ii. ver. 11. He is the most inveterate of Job's accusers, and generally speaks without feeling or pity. In our godliness he excelled all the rest. This chapter and the xxth, comprehends all that he said. He was too crooked to speak much in measured verse.

Verse 2. Should not the multitude of words be answered? Some translate, "to multiply words profiteth nothing."

2 Should not the multitude of words be answered? and should a man full of talk be justified?

3 Should thy lies make men hold their peace? and when thou mockest, shall no man make thee ashamed?

4 For as thou hast said, My doctrine is pure, and I am clean in thine eyes.

5 But Oh that God would speak, and open his lips against thee;

6 And that he would show thee the secrets of wisdom, that they are double to that which is! Know therefore that God exacteth of thee less than thine iniquity deserveth.

7 Canst thou by searching find out God? canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?

8 It is as high as heaven; what canst thou do? deeper than hell; what canst thou know?

9 The measure thereof is longer than the earth, and broader than the sea.

m Chap. 6. 10. & 10. 7.—n Ezra 9. 13.—o Eccles. 3. 11. Rom. 11. 33.—p Heb. the heights of heaven.

And should a man full of talk be justified? ענין ענין ענין shepatayim, "a man of lips," a proper appellation for a great talker: he is "a man of lips," i. e. his lips are the only active parts of his system.

Verse 3. Should thy lies make men hold their peace? This is a very severe reproof, and not justified by the occasion.

And when thou mockest As thou despisest others, shall no man put thee to scorn? Zophar could never think that the solemn and awful manner in which Job spoke could be called babbling, as some would translate the term יבאג. He might consider Job's speech as sarcastic and severe; but he could not consider it as nonsense.

Verse 4. My doctrine is pure ענין ענין keachi "my assumptions." What I assume or take as right, and just, and true, are so: the precepts which I have formed, and the practice which I have founded on them, are all correct and perfect. Job had not exactly said, My doctrine and way of life is pure, and I am clean in thine eyes; but he had vindicated himself against their charges of secret sins and hypocrisy, and appealed to God for his general uprightness and sincerity; but Zophar here begs the question, in order that he may have something to say, and room to give vent to his invective.

Verse 5. But O that God would speak How little feeling, humanity, and charity, is there in this prayer.

Verse 6. The secrets of wisdom All the depths of his own counsels; the heights, lengths, and breadths of holiness; that they are double to that which is. ענין ענין tushiah, which we translate that which is, is a word frequent in Job and in the Book of Proverbs; and is one of the evidences brought in favour of Solomon, as the author of this book. It signifies substance or essence; and is translated by a great variety of terms; caterprise, completeness, substance, the whole constitution, wisdom, law, sound wisdom, solid complete happiness, solidity of reason, and truth, the complete total sum, &c. &c. See Taylor's Heb. and Eng. Concord, under ענין. In this place the versions are various. Coverdale, following the Vulgate, translates: That he might sterve the (out of his secret wisdoms) how many-fold he is late is. The Septuagint, οτι διπλοος εστιν τον κατα ος, that it is double to what it is with thee. Mr. Good translates, "For they are intricacies to inquire." This is a meaning never before given to ענין ענין tushiah, and a meaning which even his own learned note will not make generally prevalent. Perhaps Zophar is here, in mind, comparing the wisdom which has been revealed with the wisdom not revealed. The perfection and excellence of the divine nature, and the purity of his law, are, in substance and essence, double or manifold to the revelation already made.

Less than thine iniquity deserveth Mr. Good translates, and the knowledge which God hath withdrawn from thee because of thy sins; and represents Zophar as praying that God would reveal to him the secrets of wisdom, and the knowledge which he had withdrawn from him because of his transgressions. That Zophar intends to insinuate that God afflicted Job because of his iniquities is evident: and that he thought that God had inflicted less chastisement upon him than his sins deserved is not less so; and that, therefore, Job's complaining of harsh treatment was not at all well founded.

Verse 7. Canst thou by searching find out God? What is God? A being self-existent; eternal; infinite; immense; without bounds; incomprehensible either by mind, or time, or space. Who then can find this being out? Who can fathom his depths, ascend to his heights, extend to his breaths, and comprehend the infinitude of his perceptions!

Verse 8. It is as high as heaven] High as the heavens, what canst thou work? Deep below shoot, (the invisible world,) what canst thou know? Long beyond the earth, and broad beyond the sea, is its measure. These are instances in the immensity of created things; and all out of the reach of human power and knowledge: and if these things are so, how incomprehensible must he be, who designed, created, preserves, and governs, the whole!

We find the same thought in Thomson:
"These are thy glorious works, parent of good!
Almighty! I draw this universal frame:
How wondrous fair! thyself! how wondrous then!"

Verse 10. If he cut off] As he is unlimited and almighty, he cannot be controlled. He will do whatsoever he pleases; and he is pleased with nothing but what is right. Who then will dare to find fault! Perhaps Zophar may refer to Job's former state, his losses, and afflictions. If he cut off, as he has done, thy children; if he shut up, as he has done, thyself by this sore disease; or gather together hostile bands to invade thy territories and carry away thy property; who can hinder him? He is sovereign, and has a right to dispose of his own property as he pleases.

Verse 11. He knoweth vain men] וַיֵּדַע שֶׁבַע מַעֲשֵׂי שָׂוִים men of falsehood.

He seeth wickedness] He sees as well what is in man as what man does: and of his actions and propensities he cannot be an indifferent spectator.

Verse 12. For vain man would be wise] The original is difficult and uncertain, וַיֵּדַע שֶׁבַע מַעֲשֵׂי שָׂוִים ve-ish nabub yillabeb, "And shall the hollow man assume courage," or "pride himself?" Or, as Mr. Goode rather paraphrases it, Will he then accept the hollow-hearted person? The Chaldee gives two renderings:—An eloquent man shall become wiser in his heart, and the colt of the wild ass is born as the son of man. Or, The wise man shall ponder it; and the refractory youth, who at last becomes prudent, shall make a great man. Coverdale: A bayne baby exalteth him self; and the son of man is like a topleve asse's foale. Houbigant translates thus:—A man who hath understanding will become prudent; but he who is as the wild ass hath no heart, i. e. sense. According to this critic, the meaning is this:—A man of sense, should he at any time transgress, will learn wisdom from it: but a man of a brutish mind, uncultivated, and unreflecting, will plunge yet deeper into iniquity.

Though man be born like a wild ass's colt] Is translated by Mr. Goode, Or shall the wild ass colt assume the man? This is making a sense, but such as I fear the original will never allow. There is no end to the translations of this verse, and conjectures relative to its meaning. I shall conclude with the Vulgate: Vir vanus in superbiam erigitur, et tanquam pullum onagri se liberum natum putat, "Vain man is puffed up with pride; and he supposes himself to be born free like the wild ass's colt." Man is full of self-conceit; and imagines himself born to act as he pleases, to roam at large, to be under no control, and to be accountable to none for his actions.

Verse 13. If thou prepare thine heart] Make use of the powers which God has given thee, and be determined to seek him with all thy soul.

And stretch out thine hands toward him] Making fervent prayer and supplication, putting away iniquity out of thy hand, and not permitting wickedness to dwell in thy tabernacle; then thou shalt lift up thy face without a blush, thou wilt become established, and have nothing to fear, ver. 14, 15.

There is a sentiment in Prov. xvi. 1. very similar to that in the 13th verse which we translate very improperly:

לִאֲדָמָה מְעַרְבִי לֵב
To man are the preparations of the heart.
לְשׁוֹן מִיִּתְרָה יִנְהַר
But from Jebarah is the answer to the tongue.

It is man's duty to pray; it is God's prerogative to answer. Zophar, like all the rest, is true to his principle. Job must be a wicked man, else he had not been afflicted. There must be some iniquity in his hand; and some wickedness tolerated in his family. So they all supposed.

Verse 16. Because thou shalt forget thy misery] Thou shalt have such long and complete rest, that thou shalt scarcely remember thy labour.

As waters that pass away] Like as the mountain floods which sweep every thing before them, houses, tents, cattle, and the produce of the field, and are speedily absorbed by the sandy plains over which they run—so shalt thou remember thy sufferings; they were wasting and ruinous for the time, but were soon over and gone.

Verse 17. Thine age shall be clearer than the noon] The rest of thy life shall be unclouded prosperity.

Thou shalt shine forth] Thou shalt be in this unclouded state, as the sun in the firmament of heaven, giving light and heat to all around thee.

Thou shalt be as the morning.] Thus the sun of thy prosperity shall arise, and shine more and more unto the perfect day. This is the image which the sacred writer employs; and it is correct and elegant.

Verse 13. And thou shalt be secure] Thou shalt not fear any farther evils to disturb thy prosperity, for thou shalt have a well-grounded hope and confidence that thou shalt no more be visited by adversity.

Yea, thou shalt dig] I believe this neither refers to digging his grave, nor to curiously investigating surrounding circumstances; but to the custom of digging for water in the places where they pitched their tents. It was a matter of high importance in Asiatic countries to find good wells of wholesome water; and they were frequently causes of contention among neighbouring chiefs, who sometimes stopped them up; and, at other times, seized them as their own. Through envy of Isaac's prosperity the Philistines stopped up all the wells which Abraham had digged, Gen. xxvi. 12—16. And we find the herdsmen of Gerar contending with Isaac's servants about the wells which the latter had digged: so that they were obliged to abandon two of the chief of them, and remove to a distance in order to dig and find quiet possession. See Gen. xxvi. 17—22. Zophar, in reference to all these sorts of contentions and petty wars about wells and springs, tells Job, that in the state of prosperity to which he shall be brought by the good providence of God, he shall dig, find wells of living water; none shall contend with him; and he shall rest in safety, all the neighbouring chieftains cultivating friendship with him; see on chap. v. 23, 24, and that this is the meaning of the passage the following verse shows:—Thou shalt lie down, and none shall make thee afraid; yea, many shall make suit unto thee. Thou shalt be in perfect security; no enemy shall molest thee, and many shall seek thy friendship.

Verse 20. The eyes of the wicked shall fail] They shall be continually looking out for help and deliverance; but their expectation shall be cut off.

And they shall not escape] They shall receive the punishment due to their deserts; for God has his eye continually upon them, וַיִּבְטֹחַ אֱלֹהִים אֶבְרָהָם U-manos abad minnehem, literally, And escape perishes from them. Flight from impending destruction is impossible.

And their hope shall be as the giving up of the ghost.] וַיִּתְּנוּ נַפְשָׁם ve-tiktathem mapach nepsah, "And their hope an exhalation of breath." They retain their hope to the last; and the last breath they breathe is the final and eternal termination of their hope. They give up their hope and their ghost together: for a vain hope cannot enter into that place where shadow and representation exist not; all being substance and reality. And thus endeth Zophar the Naamathite, whose promises were in general good; his conclusions legitimate: but his application of them, to

CHAPTER XII.

Job reproves the boasting of his friends, and shows their uncharitableness toward himself, 1-5. Asserts that even the tabernacles of robbers prosper; and that, notwithstanding, God is the governor of the world; a truth which is proclaimed by all parts of the creation, whether animals or human, and by the revolutions which take place in nature, 6-15.

1 AND Job answered and said, 2 No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you.

4 I am as one mocked of his neighbour, who calleth upon God, and he answereth him: the just upright man is laughed to scorn.

5 He that is ready to slip with his feet is as a lamp despised in the thought of him that is at ease.

Job's case, totally erroneous; because he still proceeded on the ground that Job was a wicked man, if not ostensibly, yet secretly; and that the sufferings he was undergoing were the means by which God was unmasking him to the view of men.

But, allowing that Job had been a bad man, the exhortations of Zophar were well calculated to enforce repentance, and excite confidence in the divine mercy. Zophar seems to have had a full conviction of the all-governing providence of God; and that those who served him with an honest and upright heart would be ever distinguished in the distribution of temporal good. He seems, however, to think, that rewards and punishments were distributed in this life; and does not refer, at least very evidently, to a future state. Probably his information on subjects of divinity did not extend much beyond the grave: and we have much cause to thank God for a clearer dispensation. Deus nobis hæc otia fecit. God grant that we may make a good use of it.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XII.

Verse 2. No doubt but ye are the people] Doubtless ye are the wisest men in the world; all wisdom is concentrated in you; and when ye die there will no more be found on the face of the earth! This is a strong irony.

Verse 3. I am not inferior to you] I do not fall short of any of you in understanding, wisdom, learning, and experience.

Who knoweth not such things as these?] All your boasted wisdom consists only in strings of proverbs, which are in every person's mouth; and are no proof of wisdom and experience in them that use them.

Verse 4. I am as one mocked of his neighbour] Though I am invoking God for help and salvation, yet my friends mock me in this most solemn and sacred work. But God answereth me.

The just upright man is laughed to scorn.] This is a very difficult verse, on which no two critics seem to be agreed. Mr. Goode translates the 4th and 5th verses thus:—

These brothers is become a laughing stock to his companions, While calling upon God that he would succour him. Thus just, the perfect man, is a laughing stock to the proud, A derision amidst the smiles of the prosperous, While ready to slip with his foot.

For a vindication of this version I must refer to his notes. Cotterdale gives at least a good sense. Thus he that calleth upon God, and whom God heareth, is mocked of his neighbour: the godly and innocent man is laughed to scorn. Godliness is at light despised in the berries of the rich; and is set for them to stumble upon. The 5th verse is thus rendered by Mr. Parkhurst;—"A torch of contempt, or contemptible link (see Isa. vii. 4. xl. 2, 3.) ready to be dashed, to the splendours of the prosperous, (is he who is) ready (to) slip with his foot." The general sense is tolerably plain: but to emendations and conjectures there is no end.

Verse 6. The tabernacles of robbers prosper] Those who live by the plunder of their neighbours are often found in great secular prosperity; and they that provoke God, by impiety and blasphemy, live in a state of security and abundance. These are administrations of providence which cannot be accounted for; yet the Judge of all the earth doth right. Therefore prosperity and adversity are no evidences of a man's spiritual state, nor of the place he holds in the approbation or disapprobation of God.

Verse 7. But ask now the beasts, and they shall teach thee] Mr. Goode's paraphrase here is very just: "Why tell ye me that the Almighty hath brought this calamity upon me? Every thing in nature; the beasts of the field, the fowls of heaven, every inhabitant of earth and sea, and every thing that befalls them, are the work of his hands; and every thing feels and acknowledges him to be the universal Creator and Controller. It is the common doctrine of all nature: but to apply it as ye would apply it to me, and to assert that I am suffering for being guilty of hypocrisy, is equally impertinent and impious. He ordains every thing in wisdom as well as in power: but why events happen as they happen, why good and evil are promiscuously scattered throughout nature or human life, ye are as ignorant of as myself."

Verse 10. In whose hand is the soul of every living thing] וּבַיַּד יְהוָה נְפֶשׁ כֹּל חַי, "the soul of all life." And the breath of all mankind] וּבְרוּחַ יְהוָה נְשָׁמַת כֹּל בֶּשָׂר, "and the spirit or breath of all flesh." Does not the first refer to the immortal soul, the principle of all intellectual life; and the latter to the breath, the grand means respiration, by which animal existence is continued?

Verse 11. Doth not the ear try words?] All these are common-place sayings. Ye have advanced nothing new; ye have cast no light upon the dispensations of providence.

Verse 12. With the ancient is wisdom] Men who have lived in those primitive times, when the great facts of nature were recent, such as the creation, fall, flood, confusion of tongues, migration of families, and consequent settlement of nations, had much knowledge from those facts; and their length of days, the many hundreds of years to which they lived, gave them such an opportunity of accumulating wisdom by experience, that they are deservedly considered as oracles.

Verse 13. With him is wisdom and strength] But all these things come from God: he is the fountain of wisdom, and the source of power. He alone can give us unerring counsel, and understanding to comprehend and act profitably by it. See on ver. 16.

Verse 14. He breaketh down] He alone can create; and he alone can destroy. Nothing can be annihilated but by the same power that created it. This is a most remarkable fact. No power, skill, or cunning of man, can annihilate the smallest particle of matter: man, by chemical agency, may change its form; but, to reduce it to nothing, belongs to God alone. In the course of his providence, God breaks down, so that it cannot be built up again. See proofs of this in the total political destruction of Nineveh, Babylon, Persepolis, Tyre, and other cities, which have been broken down never to be rebuilt; as well as the Assyrian, Babylonian, Grecian, and Roman empires, which have been dismembered, and almost annihilated, never more to be regenerated.

He shutteth up a man] He often frustrates the best laid purposes, so that they can never be brought to good effect.

Verse 15. He withholdeth the waters] This is, I think, an allusion to the third day's work of the creation, Gen. i. 9. And God said, Let the waters be gathered together unto one place, and let the dry land appear. Thus the earth was drained, and the waters collected into seas, and bound to their particular places.

Also he sendeth them out] Here is also an allusion to the flood; for, when he broke up the fountains of the great deep, then the earth was overturned.

16 With him is strength and wisdom: the deceived and the deceiver are his.

17 He leadeth counsellors away spoiled, and maketh the judges fools.

18 He looseth the bond of kings, and girdeth their loins with a girdle.

19 He leadeth princes away spoiled, and overthroweth the mighty.

20 He removeth away the speech of the trusty, and taketh away the understanding of the aged.

21 He poureth contempt upon princes, and weakeneth the strength of the mighty.

[Ver. 13.—g 2 Sam. 16. 21. & 17. 14. 23. Isai. 19. 12. & 20. 14. 1 Cor. 1. 18. h Ch. 28. 9. Isai. 3. 1, 2, 3.—1 Heb. the hip of the faithful.—2 Psa. 107. 26. Deut. 2. 21.—3 Or, looseneth the girdle of the strong.

Verse 16. With him is strength and wisdom.] חֲזָקָתוֹ וְחָכְמָתוֹ or ve-tushiah, strength and sufficiency. Strength or power, springing from an exhaustless and infinite source of potency. In the thirteenth verse it is said, With him is wisdom and strength; but the expressions are not the same, חֲזָקָתוֹ חֲכָמָתוֹ chocmah u-geburah, intelligence and fortitude, and strength in action; the wisdom ever guiding the exertions of power; but here is strength or power in essence; and an eternal potentiality. With him is every excellence, in potentia and in esse. He borrows nothing; he derives nothing. As he is self-existent, so is he self-sufficient. We have had the word רוּחַ תְּשׁוּבָה tushiah before. See the note on chap. xi. ver. 6.

The deceived and the deceiver are his] Some think this refers to the fall: even Satan, the deceiver or beguiler, and Adam and Eve, the deceived or beguiled, are his. Satan, as this book shows, cannot act without especial permission; and man, whom the seducer thought to make his own property for ever, is claimed as the peculium, or especial property of God, for the seed of the woman was then appointed to bruise the head of the serpent; and Jesus Christ has assumed the nature of man, and thus brought human nature into a state of fellowship with himself. Thus he who sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one, for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren. Hebr. ii. 11.

Verse 17. He leadeth counsellors away spoiled] The events of war are also in his hand. It is he who gives victory; through him even the counsellors, the great and chief men, are often led into captivity, and found among the spoils.

And maketh the judges fools] He infatuates the judges. Does this refer to the foolish conduct of some of the Israelitish judges, such as Samson?

Verse 18. He looseth the bond of kings] He takes away their splendid robes, and clothes them with sack-cloth; or he dissolves their authority; permits their subjects to rebel and overthrow the state, to bind them as captives, and despoil them of all power, authority, and liberty. Many proofs of this occur in the Israelitish history, and in the history of the principal nations of the earth; and not a few in the history of Britain.

Verse 19. He leadeth princes away spoiled, and overthroweth the mighty] What multitudes of proofs of this does the history of the world present! Even in the late disastrous war with the French Republic and Empire, which began in 1793, and did not terminate till 1814. How many princes, or rather priests כֹּהֲנִים cohanim, have been spoiled of their power, influence, and authority; and how many mighty men, captains, generals, admirals, &c. have been overthrown! But supposing that the writer of the Book of Job lived, as some think, after the captivity, how many priests were led away spoiled, both from Israel and Judah; and how many kings and mighty men were overthrown in the disastrous wars between the Assyrians, Babylonians, and Jews!

Verse 20. He removeth away the speech of the trusty] The faithful counsellor, and the eloquent orator, avail nothing: Quos Deus vult perdere, prius dementat, God infatuates those whom he is determined to destroy. The writer might have had his eyes on Isa. iii. 1—3. which the reader will do well to consult.

The understanding of the aged] זְקֻנָתוֹ zekonim, signifies the same here as our word elders, or eldermen; which include in themselves the two ideas of seniority, or considerably advanced age; and official authority. These can do no more to save a state which God designs to destroy, notwithstanding their great political wisdom and knowledge, than the child who can neither reason nor speak.

Verse 21. He poureth contempt upon princes] נִדְבִיבִים nedibim, those of royal extraction; widely different from the כֹּהֲנִים cohanim, mentioned ver. 19.

22 He discovereth deep things out of darkness, and bringeth out to light the shadow of death.

23 He increaseth the nations, and destroyeth them: he enlargeth the nations, and straiteneth them again.

24 He taketh away the heart of the chief of the people of the earth, and causeth them to wander in the wilderness where there is no way.

25 They grope in the dark without light, and he maketh them to stagger like a drunken man.

[In Dan. 2. 22. Matt. 10. 28. 1 Cor. 4. 5.—a Psa. 107. 26. Isai. 9. 3. & 26. 18. o Heb. leadeth in.—p Psa. 107. 4. q.—r Deut. 28. 28. Ch. 5. 14.—s Hab. wander. t Psa. 107. 27.

Weakeneth the strength of the mighty] חֲזָקָתוֹ aphikim, the compact; the well-strung together; the nervous and sinewy. Perhaps there is a reference here to the crocodile, as the same term is applied, chap. xl. ver. 13. to the compactness of his bones; and as חֲזָקָתוֹ נָרִי riphah me'ich, which we translate weakeneth the strength, signifies more properly looseth the girdle, as the margin has properly rendered it, the reference seems still more pointed; for it is known that the crocodile, from the shoulders to the extremity of the tail, is covered with large square scales, disposed like parallel girdles, fifty-two in number. In the middle of each girdle are four protuberances, which become higher as they approach the end of the tail, and compose four rows." See the quotation in Parkhurst, under the word פֶּמֶ אֶפְהָק. What is human strength against this? We may say as the Lord said, Job xi. 19. He that made him can make his sword to approach unto him. He alone can loose the girdles of this mighty one.

Verse 22. He discovereth deep things out of darkness] This may either refer to God's works in the great deep, or to the plots and stratagems of wicked men; conspiracies that were deeply laid, well digested, and about to be produced into existence, when death, whose shadow had hitherto concealed them, is to glut himself with carnage.

Verse 23. He increaseth the nations] Mr. Goode translates, He letteth the nations grow licentious. Pride, fulness of bread, with extensive trade and commerce, produce luxury; and this is ever accompanied with profigacy of manners. When, then, the cup of this iniquity is full, God destroys the nation, by bringing, or permitting to come, against it, a nation less pampered, more necessitous, and injured to toil.

He enlargeth the nations] Often permits a nation to acquire an accession of territory; and afterward shuts them up within their ancient boundaries, and often contracts even those. All these things seem to occur as natural events, and the consequences of state intrigues, and such like causes; but when divine inspiration comes to pronounce upon them, they are shown to be the consequence of God's acting in his judgment and mercy; for it is by him that kings reign: it is he who putteth down one, and raiseth up another.

Verse 24. He taketh away the heart of the chief] Suddenly deprives the leaders of great counsels, or mighty armies, of courage; so that, panic-struck, they flee when none pursueth; or are confounded when about to enter on the accomplishment of important designs.

And causeth them to wander in a wilderness] A plain allusion to the journeyings of the Israelites in the deserts of Arabia, on their way to the promised land. Their chief, Aaron, had his courage all taken away, by the clamours of the people; and so made them a malten calf to be the object of their worship; which defection from God was the cause of their wandering nearly forty years on the trackless wilderness. The reference is so marked, that it scarcely admits of a doubt; yet Houbigant and some others have called it in question, and suppose that those chiefs or heads of families which led out colonies into distant parts are principally intended. It answers too well to the case of the Israelites in the wilderness, to admit of any other interpretation.

Verse 25. They grope in the dark] The writer seems to have had his eye on those words of Moses, Deut. xxviii. 23, 29. The Lord shall smite thee with madness, and blindness, and astonishment of heart: and thou shalt grope at noonday, as the blind gropeth in darkness. And this also may refer to the unaccountable errors, transgressions, and judicial blindness, of the Israelites in their journeying to the promised land: but it will apply also to the state of wicked nations under judicial blindness. The writer is principally indebted for his imagery, and indeed for the chief expressions used here, to Psa. cvii. 27.—They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man. 39.

CHAPTER XIII.

Job defends himself against the accusations of his friends, and accuses them of endeavouring to pervert truth, 1-8. Threatens them with God's judgments, 9-13. Begs some respite, and expresses strong confidence in God, 14-16. His pleadings with God, and deplores his severe trials and sufferings, 17-22.

Verse 1. Lo, mine eye hath seen all this, mine ear hath heard and understood it.

2 'What ye know, the same do I know also: I am not inferior unto you.

3 'Surely I would speak to the Almighty, and I desire to reason with God.

4 But ye are forgers of lies, 'ye are all physicians of no value.

5 O that ye would altogether hold your peace; and 'it should be your wisdom.

6 Hear now my reasoning, and hearken to the pleadings of my lips.

7 'Will ye speak wickedly for God? and talk deceitfully for him?

40-Again, they are diminished and brought low through oppression, affliction, and sorrow. He poureth contempt upon princes, and causeth them to wander in the wilderness, where there is no way.

Mr. Goode has some judicious reflections on this chapter; particularly on ver. 13-22. "It should be observed," says he, "that the entire passage has a reference to the machinery of a regular and political government; and that its general drift is to imprint on the mind of the hearer the important doctrine that the whole of the constituent principles of such a government, its officers and institutions; its monarchs and princes; its privy counsellors, judges, and ministers of state; its chieftains, public orators, and assembly of elders; its nobles, or men of hereditary rank; and its stout robust peasantry, as we should express it in the present day; nay, the deep designing villains that plot in secret its destruction; that the nations themselves, and the heads or sovereigns of the nations; are all, and equally in the hands of the Almighty; that with him human pomp is poverty, human excellence turpitude, human judgment error, human wisdom folly, human dignities contempt, human strength weakness."

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIII.

Verse 1. Lo, mine eye hath seen all this] Ye have brought nothing new to me; I know those maxims as well as you: nor have you any knowledge of which I am not possessed.

Verse 3. Surely I would speak to the Almighty] אלהים אלהים, O that, I wish I could speak to the Almighty!

I desire to reason with God.] He speaks here in reference to the proceedings in a court of justice. Ye pretend to be advocates for God, but ye are forgers of lies: O that God himself would appear! Before him I could soon prove my innocence of the evils of which ye charge me.

Verse 4. Ye are forgers of lies] Ye frame deceitful arguments: ye reason sophistically, and pervert truth and justice, in order to support your cause.

Physicians of no value.] Ye are as feeble in your reasonings as ye are inefficient in your skill. Ye can neither heal the wound of my mind, nor the disease of my body. In ancient times every wise man professed skill in the healing art; and probably Job's friends had tried their skill on his body as well as on his mind. He therefore had, in his argument against their teaching, a double advantage:—Your skill in divinity and physic is equal: in the former ye are forgers of lies; in the latter, you are good-for-nothing physicians. I can see no reason to depart from the general meaning of the original to which the ancient versions adhere. The Chaldee says, "Ye are idle physicians; and, like the mortified flesh which is cut off with the knife, so are the whole of you." The imagery in the former clause is chirurgica, and refers to the sewing together, or connecting, the divided sides of wounds: for לפיהל lopheley, which we translate forgers, comes from לפיהל lophal, to fasten, tie, connect, sew together. And I question whether לפיהל lopheley, here may not as well express surgeons, as לפיהל lophely in the latter clause express PHYSICIANS. Ye are CHIRURGEONS of falsity, and worthless PHYSICIANS.

Verse 5. Hold your peace; and it should be your wisdom.] In Prov. xvii. 28. we have the following apophthegm, "Even a fool, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise: and he that shutteth his lips a man of understanding." There is no reason to say that Solomon quotes from Job: I have already expressed my opinion that the high antiquity attributed to this book is perfectly unfounded; and that there is much more evidence that 8 Will ye accept his person? will ye contend for God?

9 Is it good that he should search you out? or as one man mocketh another, do ye so mock him?

10 He will surely reprove you, if ye do secretly accept persons.

11 Shall not his excellency make you afraid? and his dread fall upon you?

12 Your remembrances are like unto ashes, your bodies to bodies of clay.

13 'Hold your peace, let me alone, that I may speak, and let come on me what will.

14 Wherefore 'do I take my flesh in my teeth, and 'put my life in mine hand?

15 'Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him: 'but I will 'maintain mine own ways before him.

a 1 Sam. 23. 21. Psa. 119. 109.-b Psa. 23. 4. Prov. 14. 32.-c Ch. 27. 5.-d Heb. press, or argue.

Solomon was its author, than there is, that it was the composition of Moses. But, whenever Job lived, whether before Abraham, or after Moses, the book was not written till the time of Solomon, if not later. But as to the saying in question, it is a general apophthegm, and may be found among the wise sayings of all nations.

I may observe here that a silent man is not likely to be a fool: for a fool will be always prating; or, according to another adage, a fool's bolt is soon shot. The Latins have the same proverb, Vir sapit qui pauca loquitur, A wise man speaks little.

Verse 5. Hear now my reasoning] The speeches in this book are conceived as if delivered in a court of justice, different counsellors pleading against each other. Hence most of the terms are forensic.

Verse 7. Will ye speak wickedly for God?] In order to support your own cause, in contradiction to the evidence which the whole of my life bears to the uprightness of my heart, will ye continue to assert that God could not thus afflict me, unless flagrant iniquity were found in my ways? for it is on this ground alone that ye pretend to vindicate the providence of God. Thus ye tell lies for God's sake; and thus ye wickedly contend for your Maker.

Verse 8. Will ye accept his person?] Do you think to act by him as you would by a mortal; and, by telling lies in his favour, attempt to conciliate his esteem!

Verse 9. Is it good that he should search you out?] Would it be to your credit if God should try your hearts, and uncover the motives of your conduct. Were you tried as I am, how would you appear?

Do ye so mock him?] Do ye think that you can deceive him; and by flattering speeches bring him to your terms, as you would bring an undiscerning empty mortal like yourselves!

Verse 10. He will surely reprove you] You may expect not only his disapprobation, but his hot displeasure.

Verse 11. His dread fall upon you?] The very apprehension of his wrath is sufficient to crush you to nothing.

Verse 12. Your remembrances are like unto ashes] Your memorable sayings are proverbs of dust. This is properly the meaning of the original זכרונות שוה עפר זכרונותם משלה עפר. This he speaks in reference to the ancient and reputedly wise sayings which they had so copiously quoted against him.

Your bodies to bodies of clay.] This clause is variously translated:—your swelling heaps are swelling heaps of mire. That is, your high flown speeches are dark, involved, and incoherent:—they are all sound, no sense; great swelling words, either of difficult or no meaning, or of no point as applicable to my case.

Verse 13. Hold your peace] You have perverted righteousness and truth, and your pleadings are totally irrelevant to the case; you have travelled out of the road; you have left law and justice behind you: it is high time that you should have done.

Let come on me what will.] I will now defend myself against you, and leave the cause to its issue.

Verse 14. Wherefore do I take my flesh in my teeth] A proverbial expression. I risk every thing on the justice of my cause. I put my life in my hand, I Sam. xxviii.

21. I run all hazards: I am fearless of the consequences.

Verse 15. Though he slay me] I have no dependence but God; I trust in him alone. Should he even destroy my life by this affliction, yet will I hope that when he has tried me, I shall come forth as gold. In the common printed Hebrew text we have לפיהל lo asyachel, I will 16 He also shall be my salvation : for a hypocrite shall not come before him.

17 Hear diligently my speech, and my declaration with your ears.

18 Behold now, I have ordered my cause ; I know that I shall be justified.

19 Who is he that will plead with me ? for now, if I hold my tongue, I shall give up the ghost.

20 Only do not two things unto me : then will I not hide myself from thee.

21 Withdraw thine hand far from me ; and let not thy dread make me afraid.

22 Then call thou, and I will answer : or let me speak, and answer thou me.

23 How many are mine iniquities and sins ? make me to know my transgression and my sin.

24 Wherefore hidest thou thy face, and holdest me for thine enemy ?

25 Wilt thou break a leaf driven to and fro ? and wilt thou pursue the dry stubble ?

nor hope : but the Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, and Chaldee, have read, to him, instead of to lo, nor ; with twenty-two of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS, and the Complutensian and Antwerp Polyglots. Our translators have followed the best reading. Coverdale renders the verse thus : He, there is neither comforte nec hope for me, for he will slay me.

But I will maintain mine own ways] I am so conscious of my innocence, that I fear not to defend myself from your aspersions, even in the presence of my Maker.

Verse 16. He also shall be my salvation] He will save me, because I trust in him.

A hypocrite] A wicked man shall never be able to stand before him. I am conscious of this ; and were I, as you suppose, a secret sinner, I should not dare to make this appeal.

Verse 18. Behold now, I have ordered] I am now ready to come into court ; and care not how many I have to contend with, provided they speak truth.

Verse 19. Who is he that will plead with me ?] Let my accuser, the plaintiff, come forward ; I will defend my cause against him.

I shall give up the ghost.] I shall cease to breathe. Defending myself will be as respiration to me ; or, while he is stating his case, I will be so silent as scarcely to appear to breathe.

Verse 20. Only do not two things unto me] These two things are the following :—1. Withdraw thine hand far from me. Remove the heavy affliction which thy hand has inflicted. 2. Let not thy dread make me afraid. Terrify me not with dreadful displays of thy majesty. The reasons of this request are sufficiently evident ;—1. How can a man stand in a court of justice and plead for his life, when under grievous bodily affliction ? Withdraw thy hand far from me. 2. Is it to be expected that a man can be sufficiently collected, and in self-possession to plead for his life, when he is overwhelmed with the awful appearance of the judge, the splendour of the court, and the various ensigns of justice ? Let not thy dread make me afraid.

Verse 22. Then call thou] Begin thou first to plead, and I will answer for myself : or, I will first state and defend my own case, and then answer thou me.

Verse 23. How many are mine iniquities] Job being permitted to begin first, enters immediately upon the subject ; and as it was a fact that he was grievously afflicted, and this his friends asserted was in consequence of grievous iniquities, he first desires to have them specified. What are the specific charges in this indictment ? To say I must be a sinner to be thus afflicted, is saying nothing ; tell me what are the sins, and show me the proofs.

Verse 24. Wherefore hidest thou thy face] Why is it that I no longer enjoy thy approbation.

Holdest me for thine enemy ?] Treat me as if I were the vilest of sinners.

Verse 25. Wilt thou break a leaf] Is it becoming thy dignity to concern thyself with a creature so contemptible ?

Verse 26. Thou writest bitter things against me] The indictment is filled with bitter or grievous charges ; which, if proved, would bring me to bitter punishment.

The iniquities of my youth.] The levities and indiscretions of my youth I acknowledge ;—but is this a ground to form charges against a man, the integrity of whose life is unimpeachable ?

26 For thou writest bitter things against me, and I make me to possess the iniquities of my youth.

27 Thou puttest my feet also in the stocks, and lookest narrowly unto all my paths ; thou settest a print upon the heels of my feet.

28 And he, as a rotten thing, consumeth, as a garment that is moth-eaten.

CHAPTER XIV.

The shortness, misery, and sinfulness of man's life, 1—4. The unavoidable security of death ; and the hope of a general resurrection, 5—15. Job depicts his own state and the general wretchedness of man, 16—22.

MAN that is born of a woman is of few days, and full of trouble.

Verse 27. Thou puttest my feet also in the stocks] ἰνὰ βάσσα, "in a clog," such as was tied to the feet of slaves, to prevent them from running away. This is still used in the West Indies, among slave-dealers ; and is there called the pudding, being a large collar of iron, locked round the ankle of the unfortunate man. Some have had them twenty pounds weight : and, having been condemned to carry them for several years, when released, could not walk without them ! A case of this kind I knew :—The slave had learnt to walk well with his pudding : but, when taken off, if he attempted to walk, he fell down ; and was obliged to resume it occasionally, till practice had taught him the proper centre of gravity, which had been so materially altered by wearing so large a weight ; the badge at once of his oppression, and of the cruelty of his task-masters !

And looked narrowly] Thou hast seen all my goings out and comings in ; and there is no step I have taken in life with which thou art unacquainted.

Thou settest a print upon the heels of my feet.] Some understand this as the mark left on the sole of the foot by the clog ; or the owner's mark, indented on this clog ; or, thou hast pursued me as a hound does his game, by the scent.

Verse 28. And he, as a rotten thing] I am like a vessel made of skin ; rotten, because of old age ; or like a garment corroded by the moth. So the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic understood it. The word he may refer to himself.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIV.

Verse 1. Man—born of a woman] There is a delicacy in the original not often observed : אדם ילד אשה Adam yelad isah, "Adam born of a woman, few of days, and full of tremour." Adam, who did not spring from woman, but was immediately formed by God, had many days, for he lived nine hundred and thirty years : during which time neither sin nor death had multiplied in the earth, as they were found in the days of Job. But the Adam who springs now from women, in the way of ordinary generation, has very few years. Seventy, on an average, being the highest term, may be well said to be few in days ; and all matter of fact shows that they are full of fears and apprehensions, ἰσχυροί, cares, anxieties, and tremours. He seems born not indeed to live, but to die ; and by living, he forfeits the title to life.

Verse 2. He cometh forth like a flower] This is a frequent image both in the Old and New Testament writers : I need not quote the places here, as the readers will find them all in the margin.

He fleeth also as a shadow] Himself, as he appears among men, is only the shadow of his real, substantial, and eternal being. He is here compared to a vegetable ; he springs up, bears his flower, is often nipped by disease, blasted by afflictions, and at last cut down by death. The bloom of youth, even in the most prosperous state, is only the forerunner of hoary hairs, enfeebled muscles, impaired senses, general debility, anility, and dissolution ! All these images are finely embodied, and happily expressed in the beautiful lines of a very nervous and correct poet, too little known, but whose compositions deserve the first place among what may be called the minor poets of Britain. See at the end of the chapter.

Verse 3. Dost thou open thine eyes upon such a one] The whole of this chapter is directed to God alone ; in no part of it does he take any notice of his friends.

5 Seeing his days are determined, the number of his months are with thee, thou hast appointed his bounds that he cannot pass;

6 Turn from him, that he may rest, till he shall accomplish, as a hireling, his day.

7 For there is hope of a tree, if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease.

8 Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground;

9 Yet through the scent of water it will bud, and bring forth boughs like a plant.

Verse 4. Who can bring a clean thing] This verse is thus rendered by the Chaldees:—"Who will produce a clean thing from man, who is polluted with sins, except God, who is one?" By Coverdale thus: "Who can make it clean, that commeth of an unclean thing? No body."

The text refers to man's original and corrupt nature. Every man that is born into the world comes into it in a corrupt or sinful state. This is called original sin; and is derived from fallen Adam, who is the stock, to the utmost ramifications of the human family. Not one human spirit is born into the world without this corruption of nature. All are impure and unholy, and from this principle of depravity all transgression is produced. And from this corruption of nature God alone can save.

The Sepтуагинта in the Codex Alexandrinus, reads the verse thus:—Τίς γὰρ ἕσται καθάρος ἀπὸ πονηρῶν; οὐδὲ τίς, εὖν αὐτὸς ἁπλῶς γεννητὸς ἐξ ἁβύσσου ἐκτὸς τῆς γῆς. "Who is pure from corruption? Not one, although he had lived but one day upon the earth."

Verse 5. Seeing his days are determined] The general term of human life is fixed by God himself: in vain are all attempts to prolong it beyond this term. Several attempts have been made in all nations to find an elixir that would expel all the seeds of disease, and keep men in continual health; but all these attempts have failed. Basil Valentine, Norton, Dastin, Ripley, Sandivogius, Artephius, Geber, Van Helmont, Paracelsus, Philadelphus, and several others, both in Europe and Asia, have written copiously on the subject, and have endeavoured to prove that a tincture might be produced by which all imperfect metals may be transmuted into perfect; and an elixir, by which the human body may be kept in a state of endless repair and health. And these profess to teach the method by which this tincture and this elixir may be made! Yet all these are dead: and dead, for aught we know, comparatively young! Artephius is, indeed, said to have lived ninety years, which is probable: but some of his foolish disciples, to give credit to their thrifless craft, added another cypher, and made his age nine hundred! Man may endeavour to pass the bound; and God may, here and there, produce a Thomas Parr, who died in 1635, aged one hundred and fifty-two; and a Henry Jenkins, who died in 1670, aged one hundred and sixty-nine: but these are rare instances, and do not affect the general term. Nor can death be avoided. Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return, is the law; and that will ever render nugatory all such pretended tinctures and elixirs.

But, although man cannot pass his appointed bounds, yet he may so live as never to reach them; for folly and wickedness abridge the term of human life; and, therefore, says the Psalmist, Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days, Psa. lv. 23. for, by indolence, intemperance, and disorderly passions, the life of man is shortened in cases innumerable. We are not to understand the bounds as applying to individuales, but to the race in general. Perhaps there is no case in which God has determined absolutely this man's age shall be so long, and shall neither be more nor less. The contrary supposition involves innumerable absurdities.

Verse 6. Turn from him that he may rest] Cease to try him by afflictions and distresses, that he may enjoy some of the comforts of life, before he be removed from it; and thus, like a hireling, who is permitted by his master to take a little repose in the heat of the day, from severe labour, I shall also have a breathing time from affliction, before I come to that bound over which I cannot pass. See chap. x. 20. where there is a similar request.

Verse 7. For there is hope of a tree] We must not, says Catmet, understand this of an old tree, the stem and roots of which are dried up and rotted: but there are some trees which grow from cuttings; and some which, though pulled out of the earth, and have had their roots dried and withered by long exposure to the sun and wind, will, on being replanted, resume their verdure, and take root. There are also certain trees, the fibres of which are so solid, that if after several years they be steeped in water, they resume their vigour, their tubes dilate, and the blossoms or flowers which were attached to them expand, as I have often witnessed in what is called the roses of Jericho. There are few trees which will not send forth new shoots, when the stock is cut down level with the earth.

10 But man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?

Verse 9. Through the scent of water it will bud] A fine metaphor; the water acts upon the decaying and perishing tree, as strong and powerful odours from musk, attar of roses, ammonia, &c., act on a fainting or swooning person.

Verse 10. But man dieth] No human being ever can spring from the dead body of man; that wasteth away, corrupts, and is dissolved; for the man dies: and when he breathes out his last breath, and his body is reduced to dust, then where is he? There is a beautiful verse in the Persian poet Khoosroo, that is not unlike the saying of Job:

"I passed by the burying place, and wept sorely
To think how many of my friends were in the mansions of the dead.
And in an agony of grief I cried out, Where are they?
And Echo gave answer, and said, Where are they?"

Verse 11. The waters fail from the sea] I believe this refers to evaporation, and nothing else. As the waters are evaporated from the sea, and the river in passing over the sandy desert is partly exsiccated, and partly absorbed; and yet the waters of the sea are not exhausted, as these vapours, being condensed, fall down in rain, and by means of rivers return again into the sea: so man is imperceptibly removed from his fellows by death and dissolution; yet the human race is still continued, the population of the earth being kept up by perpetual generations.

Verse 12. So man lieth down] He falls asleep in his bed of earth.

And riseth not] Men shall not, like cut down trees and plants, reproduce their like: nor shall they arise till the heavens are no more; till the earth and all its works are burnt up, and the general resurrection of human beings shall take place. Surely, it would be difficult to twist this passage to the denial of the resurrection of the body. Neither can these expressions be fairly understood as implying Job's belief in the materiality of the soul, and that the whole man sleeps from the day of his death to the morning of the resurrection. We have already seen that Job makes a distinction between the animal life, and rational soul in man; and it is most certain that the doctrine of the materiality of the soul, and its sleep till the resurrection, have no place in the Sacred Records. A more cold and comfortless philosophy was never invented. The next verse shows that Job did not entertain this view of the subject.

Verse 13. O that thou wouldest hide me in the grave] Dreadful as death is to others, I shall esteem it a high privilege; it will be to me a covert from the wind and from the tempest of this affliction and distress.

Keep me secret] Hide my soul with thyself, where my enemies cannot invade my repose; or, as the poet expresses it:—

"My spirit hide with saints above,
My body in the tomb."—

Job does not appear to have the same thing in view when he entreats God to hide him in the grave; and, to keep him secret, until his wrath be past. The former relates to the body, the latter to the spirit.

That thou wouldest appoint me a set time] As he had spoken of the death of his body before, and the secreting of his spirit in the invisible world, he must refer here to the resurrection; for what else can be said to be an object of desire to one whose body is mingled with the dust?

And remember me] When my body has paid that debt of death which it owes to thy divine justice, and the morning of the resurrection is come, when it may be said thy wrath, ἡσπ ἀφῆκα, "thy displeasure," against the body is past, it having suffered the sentence denounced by thyself, Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return; for, in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die; then remember me: raise my body, unite my spirit to it, and receive both into thy glory for ever!

days of my appointed time ' will I wait, ' till my change come.

15 ' Thou shalt call, and I will answer thee: thou wilt have a desire to the work of thine hands.

16 ' For now thou numberest my steps; dost thou not watch over my sin?

17 ' My transgression is sealed up in a bag, and thou sewest up mine iniquity.

18 And surely the mountain falling cometh to nought, and the rock is removed out of his place.

19 The waters wear the stones: thou ' wastest away the things which grow out of the dust of the earth; and thou destroyest the ' hope of man.

Verse 14. If a man die, shall he live again? The Chaldee translates, If a wicked man die, can he ever live again? or, he can never live again. The Syriac and Arabic thus:—"If a man die, shall he revive? Yea, all the days of his youth, he awaits till his old age come." The Septuagint:—"If a man die, shall he live, having accomplished the days of his life? I will endure till I live again. Here is no doubt, but a strong persuasion, of the certainty of the general resurrection.

All the days of my appointed time תבאי תבאי, of my warfare. See on chap. vii. 1. Will I await till תבאי תבאי chalipati, my renovation come. This word is used to denote the springing again of grass, Psa. xc. 5, 6. after it had once withered, which is in itself a very expressive emblem of the resurrection.

Verse 15. Thou shalt call] Thou shalt say, There shall be time no longer: Awake, ye dead! and come to judgment.

And I will answer thee] My dissolved frame shall be united at thy call; and body and soul shall be rejoined.

Thou wilt have a desire] תבאי תבאי ticesoph, "Thou wilt part with desire;" or, "Thou wilt yearn over the work of thy hands." God has subjected the creature to vanity, in hope; having determined the resurrection. Man is one of the noblest works of God. He has exhibited him as a master-piece of his creative skill, power, and goodness. Nothing less than the strongest call upon justice could have induced him thus to destroy the work of his hands. No wonder that he has an earnest desire toward it; and that although man dies, and is as water spill upon the ground that cannot be gathered up again; yet doth he devise means that his banished be not expelled from him. Even God is represented as earnestly longing for the ultimate revivification of the sleeping dust. He cannot, he will not, forget the work of his hands.

Verse 16. For now thou numberest my steps] תבאי תבאי ki titah, ALTHOUGH thou now numberest, &c. Though thou, by thy conduct toward me, seemest bent on my utter destruction, yet thou delightest in mercy, and I shall be saved.

Verse 17. My transgression is sealed up in a bag] An allusion to the custom of collecting evidence of state transgressions, sealing them up in a bag, and presenting them to judges and officers of state to be examined, in order to trial and judgment. Just at this time, July 1820, charges of state transgressions, sealed up in a GREEN BAG, and presented to the two houses of parliament, for the examination of a secret committee, are making a considerable noise in the land. Some suppose the allusion is to money, sealed up in bags; which is common in the East. This includes two ideas:—1. Job's transgressions were all numbered; not one was passed by. 2. They were sealed up; so that none of them could be lost. These bags were indifferently sewed or sealed, the two words in the text.

Verse 18. The mountain falling cometh to nought] Every thing in nature is exposed to mutability and decay; even mountains themselves may fall from their bases, and be dashed to pieces; or be suddenly swallowed up by an earthquake; and, by the same means, the strongest and most massive rocks may be removed.

Verse 19. The waters wear the stones] Even the common stones are affected in the same way. Were even earthquakes and violent concussions of nature wanting, the action of water, either running over them as a stream, or even falling upon them in drops, will wear these stones. Hence the proverb:—

Quia cuncta lapideum non est esse cadendo. Constant droppings will make a hole in a flint."

Thou wastest away the things] Alluding to sudden falls of rain occasioning floods, by which the fruits of the earth are swept away; and thus the hope of man (the grain for his household, and provender for his cattle,) is destroyed.

Verse 20. Thou prevaillest for ever against him] It is impossible for him to withstand thee: every stroke of these brings him down.

he passeth: thou changest his countenance, and sendest him away.

21 His sons come to honour, and ° he knoweth it not; and they are brought low, but he perceiveth it not of them.

22 But his flesh upon him shall have pain, and his soul within him shall mourn.

CHAPTER XV.

Eliphaz charges Job with impy in attempting to justify himself, 1.—13. Asserts the bitter corruption and abominable state of man, 14.—16. And from his own knowledge, and from the observations of the ancients, shows the desolations to which the wicked are exposed, and indirectly intimates that Job has such calamities to dread, 17.—22.

THEN answered Eliphaz the Temanite, and said,

Ante l. O. cir. 716. A. U. C. cir. 397. k. Deut. 28. 24. Hos. 12. 12.— Heb. fadeth.— Heb. overflowest.— Ch. 11. 20. & 27. 8.— Eccles. 9. 5. Job. 6. 13.

Thou changest his countenance] Probably an allusion to the custom of covering the face, when the person was condemned, and sending him away to execution. See the case of Haman, in the note on Esther, chap. vii. 8.

Verse 21. His sons come to honour] When dead, he is equally indifferent and unconscious whether his children have met with a splendid or oppressive lot in life: for, as to this world, when man dies, in that day all his thoughts perish.

Verse 22. But his flesh upon him shall have pain] The sum of the life of man is this: pain of body, and distress of soul; and he is seldom without the one or the other, and often oppressed by both. Thus ends Job's discourse on the miserable state and condition of man.

The latter verse of the preceding chapter has been differently translated and explained.

Mr. Goode's version is the following, which he vindicates in a learned note:—

For his flesh shall drop away from him; And his soul shall become a waste from him.

The Chaldee, thus: "Nevertheless his flesh, on account of the worms, shall grieve over him; and his soul, in the house of judgment, shall wail over him." In another copy of this version it is thus:—"Nevertheless his flesh, before the window is closed over him, shall grieve; and his soul, for seven days of mourning, shall bewail him in the house of his burial." I shall give the Hebrew.

אך נפשו אלאו יקח,
תפשו עליו תחמל:
Ve-naphso alais te-otai.

Which Mr. Stock translates thus, both to the spirit and letter:

But over him his flesh shall grieve:
And over him his breath shall mourn.

"In the daring spirit of oriental poetry," says he, "the flesh, or body, and the breath, are made conscious beings; the former lamenting its putrefaction in the grave, the latter mourning over the mouldering clay which it once enlivened."

This version is, in my opinion, the most natural yet offered." The Syriac and Arabic present nearly the same sense:—"But his body shall grieve over him; and his soul be astonished over him."

Coverdale follows the Vulgate:—Et quia hec caro, his flesh must have travail: and quia hec anima est in him, he must be in sorrow.

On ver. 2. I have referred to the following beautiful lines, which illustrate these finely figurative texts:

He cometh forth as a flower, and is cut down; he fleeth also as a shadow, and continueth not.

All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field.

The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand for ever.

The morning flowers display their evens,
And gay their silken leaves unfold
As careles of the morrow's fate,
And fearless of the evening cold.
Nipp'd by the wind's mankily blast,
Furled by the sun's directer ray,
The momentary glories waste,
The short-liv'd beauties die away.
He blooms the human face divine,
When youth is pride of beauty shows;
Fairer than spring the colours shine,
And sweeter than the virgin rose,
Or worn by slowly-rolling years,
Or broke by sickness in a day;
The fading glory disappears,
The short-liv'd beauties die away.
Yet those, new rising from the earth,
With lustre brighter far, shall show;
Revive with ever-during blood,
Safe from diseases and decline,
Let sickness blast, and death devour,
If heaven most, recompense our pains:
Perish the grass, and fade the flower,
If firm the word of God remain.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XV.

Verse 2. Should a wise man utter vain knowledge] Or, rather, Should a wise man utter the science of wind? A science without solidity or certainty.

And fill his belly with the east wind?] כסר beten, which we translate belly, is used to signify any part of the cavity of the body, whether the region of the thorax, or abdomen: here it evidently refers to the lungs, and may include the cheeks and fauces. The east wind, קדים kadim, is a very stormy wind in the Levant or eastern part of the Mediterranean sea; supposed to be the same with that called by the Greeks επικλυδων, euroclydon, the east storm, mentioned Acts xxvii. 14. Eliphaz, by these words, seems to intimate that Job's speech was a perfect storm, or tempest of words.

Verse 3. Should he reason with unprofitable talk?] Should a man talk disrespectfully of his Maker, or speak to him without reverence? and should he suppose that he has proved anything when he has uttered words of little meaning, and used sound instead of sense?

Verse 4. Thou castest off fear] Thou hast no reverence for God.

And restrainest prayer] Instead of humbling thyself, and making supplication to thy judge, thou spendest thy time in arraigning his providence, and justifying thyself.

When a man has any doubts whether he has grieved God's Spirit, and his mind feels troubled, it is much better for him to go immediately to God, and ask forgiveness, than spend any time in finding excuses for his conduct, or labouring to divest it of its seeming obliquity. Restraint or suppressing prayer, in order to find excuses or palliations for infirmities, indiscretions, or improprieties of any kind, which appear to trench on the sacred limits of morality and godliness, may be to a man the worst of evils; humiliation and prayer for mercy and pardon can never be out of their place to any soul of man, who, surrounded with evils, is ever liable to offend.

Verse 5. For thy mouth uttereth] In attempting to justify thyself, thou hast added iniquity to sin; and hast endeavoured to impute blame to thy Maker.

The tongue of the crafty] Thou hast varnished thy own conduct, and used sophistical arguments to defend thyself. Thou resemblest those cunning persons, קרימים arumim, who derive their skill and dexterity from the old serpent, "the nachash, who was קרימ arum, subtle or crafty, beyond all the beasts of the field." Gen. iii. 1. Thy wisdom is not from above, but from beneath.

Verse 7. Art thou the first man that was born?] Literally, "Wert thou born before Adam?" Art thou in the pristine state of purity and innocence? Or art thou like Adam, in his first state? It does not become the fallen descendant of a fallen parent to talk as thou dost.

Made before the hills?] Did God create thee the beginning of his ways? or, wert thou the first intelligent creature which his hands have formed?

Verse 8. Hast thou heard the secret of God?] "Hast thou hearkened in God's council?" Wert thou one of the celestial cabinet, when God said, Let us make man in our image, and in our likeness?

Dost thou restrain wisdom to thyself?] Dost thou wish us to understand that God's counsels were revealed to none but thyself? And dost thou desire that we should give implicit credence to whatsoever thou art pleased to speak? These are all strong sarcastic questions; and apparently uttered with great contempt.

Verse 9. What knowest thou?] Is it likely that thy intellect is greater than ours; and that thou hast cultivated it better than any of us?

What understandest thou?] Or, Dost thou understand any thing, and it is not with us? Show us any point of knowledge possessed by thyself, of which we are ignorant.

Verse 10. With us are both the gray-headed] One copy of the Chaldee Targum paraphrases the verse thus:—"Truly Eliphaz the hoary-headed, and Bildad the 8 Hast thou heard the secret of God? and dost thou restrain wisdom to thyself?

 9 What knowest thou, that we know not? what understandest thou, which is not in us?
 10 With us are both the gray-headed and very aged men, much elder than thy father.
 11 Are the consolations of God small with thee? is there any secret thing with thee?
 12 Why doth thine heart carry thee away? and what do thy eyes wink at, 13 That thou turnest thy spirit against God, and tellest such words go out of thy mouth?

1 Luke 12. 32.—a Psal. 90. 2. Prov. 8. 25.—v Rom. 11. 34. 1 Cor. 2. 11.—w Chap. 13. 2.—x Ch. 22. 6, 7.

long-lived, are among us; and Zophar, who in age surpasseth thy father." It is very likely that Eliphaz refers to himself and his friends in this verse, and not either to the old men of their tribes, or to the masters by whom they themselves were instructed. Eliphaz seems to have been the eldest of these sages; and, therefore, he takes the lead in each part of this dramatic poem.

Verse 11. Are the consolations of God small with thee?] Various are the renderings of this verse. Mr. Goods translates the verse thus: "Are, then, the mercies of God of no account with thee?" Or, "The addresses of kindness before thee?"

The VULGATE thus:—"Can it be a difficult thing for God to comfort thee? But thou hinderest this by thy intemperate speeches."

The SYRIAC and ARABIC thus:—"Remove from thee the threatenings (Arabic, reproaches) of God, and speak tranquilly with thy own spirit."

The SEPTUAGINT thus:—"Thou hast been scourged lightly for the sins which thou hast committed; and thou hast spoken greatly beyond measure; or with excessive insolence."

Houbigant thus:—"Dost thou not regard the threatenings of God: or, has there been any thing darkly revealed to thee?"

Coverdale:—"Dost thou no more regard the comfort of God? But thy wicked works will not suffice thee."

Scarcely any two translators or interpreters agree in the translations, or even meaning, of this verse. The sense, as expressed in the Vulgate, or in our own version, or that of Coverdale, is plain enough:—"Hast thou been so unfaithful to God, that he has withdrawn his consolations from thy heart? And is there any secret thing, any bosom sin, which thou wilt not give up, that has thus provoked thy Maker?" This is the sense of our version: and I believe it to be as near the original as any yet offered. I may just add the Chaldee:—"Are the consolations of God few to thee? And has a word in secret been spoken unto thee?" And I shall close all these with the Hebrew text, and the literal version of Arius Montanus:-

 ha-meal mameco tanchumoth el, ודבר לאט ימאק
 ve-dabar laat immak

Nonne parum de te consolaciones Dei? Et verbum latet tecum?

"Are not the consolations of God small to thee? And does a word (or thing) lie hidden with thee?"

Now, let the reader choose for himself.

Verse 12. Why doth thine heart carry thee away?] Why is it that thou dost conceive and entertain such high sentiments of thyself?

And what do thy eyes wink at?] With what splendid opinion of thyself is thine eye dazzled? Perhaps there is an allusion here to that sparkling in the eye, which is excited by sensations of joy, and pleasing objects of sight: or to that furious rolling of the eyes, observed in deranged persons. Rosenmuller translates thus:

Quo te natus animus rapit?
 Quid oculi tui vibrantur?

"Whither does thy soul hurry thee! What mean thy rolling eyes?"

Thou seemest transported beyond thyself; thou art actuated by a furious spirit. Thou art beside thyself: thy words and thy eyes show it. None but a madman could speak and act as thou dost: for thou turnest thy spirit against God, and tellest such words go out of thy mouth, ver. 13. This latter sense seems to agree best with the words of the text; and with the context.

Verse 13. That thou turnest thy spirit against God] The ideas here seem to be taken from an archer, who turns his eye and his spirit, his desire, against the object which he wishes to hit; and then lets loose his arrow, that it may attain the mark.

14 'What is man, that he should be clean? and he which is born of a woman, that he should be righteous?

15 'Behold, he putteth no trust in his saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in his sight.

16 'How much more abominable and filthy is man, which drinketh iniquity like water?

17 I will show thee, hear me; and that which I have seen I will declare;

18 Which wise men have told from their fathers, and have not hid it:

19 Unto whom alone the earth was given, and no stranger passed among them.

20 The wicked man travaileth with pain all his days, and the number of years is hidden to the oppressor.

21 'A dreadful sound is in his ears: in prosperity the destroyer shall come upon him.

22 He believeth not that he shall return out of darkness, and he is waited for of the sword.

23 He wandereth abroad for bread, saying, Where is it? he knoweth that the day of darkness is ready at his hand.

24 Trouble and anguish shall make him afraid; they shall prevail against him, as a king ready to the battle.

25 For he stretcheth out his hand against God, and strengtheneth himself against the Almighty.

26 He runneth upon him, even on his neck, upon the thick bosses of his bucklers:

27 'Because he covereth his face with his fatness, and maketh collops of fat on his flanks.

28 And he dwelleth in desolate cities, and in houses which no man inhabiteth, which are ready to become heaps.

Verse 14. What is man, that he should be clean? מה אנוש מה ענוש; what is weak, sickly, dying, miserable man, that he should be clean? This is the import of the original word enosh.

And—born of a woman, that he should be righteous? It appears from many passages in the Sacred Writings, that natural birth was supposed to be a defilement; and that every man born into the world was in a state of moral pollution. Perhaps the word צדק yitsedek, should be translated that he should justify himself, and not, that he should be righteous.

Verse 15. Behold, he putteth no trust in his saints; yea, the heavens are not clean in his sight.] The Vulgate has, "Behold, among his saints, none is immutable; and the heavens are not clean in his sight."

Coverdale, Beholue, he hath found unfaithfulness amonge his own sanctes, yea, the heuens are uncleane in his sight.

Eliphaz uses the same mode of speech, iv. 17, 18. where see the notes. Nothing is immutable but God: saints may fall; angels may fall; all their goodness is derived and dependent. The heavens themselves have no purity compared with his.

Verse 16. How much more abominable and filthy is man.] As in the preceding verse it is said, he putteth no trust in his saints, it has appeared both to translators and commentators that the original words כי אפי אף ki, should be rendered how much less, not how much more; how much less would be put confidence in man, who is filthy and abominable in his nature, and profligate in his practice, as he drinks down iniquity like water. A man who is under the power of sinful propensities commits sin as greedily as the thirsty man or camel drinks down water. He thinks he can never have enough. This is a finished character of a bad man; he hungers and thirsts after sin. On the contrary, the good man hungers and thirsts after righteousness.

Verse 17. I will show thee, hear me; and that which I have seen I will declare.] Eliphaz is now about to quote a whole collection of wise sayings from the ancients: all good enough in themselves, but sinfully misapplied to the case of Job.

Verse 19. Unto whom alone the earth was given.] He very likely refers to the Israelites, who got possession of the promised land from God himself; no stranger being permitted to dwell in it, as the old inhabitants were to be exterminated. Some think that Noah and his sons may be intended; as it is certain that the whole earth was given to them, when there were no strangers, no other family of mankind, in being. But, system apart, the words seem to apply more clearly to the Israelites.

Verse 20. The wicked man travaileth with pain.] This is a most forcible truth: a life of sin is a life of misery; and he that will sin must suffer. One of the Targums gives it a strange turn: "All the days of the ungodly Esau, he was expected to repent; but he did not repent: and the number of years was hidden from the sturdy Ishmael." The sense of the original מחולל מלחחולל mithchollel, is, he torments himself: he is a true heautontimorumenos, or self-tormentor; and he alone is author of his own sufferings, and of his own ruin.

Verse 21. A dreadful sound is in his ears.] If he be an oppressor or tyrant, he can have no rest: he is full of suspicions that the cruelties he has exercised on others, shall be one day exercised on himself; for even in his prosperity, he may expect the destroyer to rush upon him.

Verse 22. That he shall return out of darkness.] If he take but a few steps in the dark, he expects the dagger of the assassin. This appears to be the only meaning of the place. Some think the passage should be understood to signify, that he has no hope of a resurrection; that he can never escape from the tomb. This I doubt: in the days of the writer of this book, the doctrine of a future judgment was understood in every part of the East, where the knowledge of the true God was diffused.

Verse 23. He wandereth abroad for bread.] He is reduced to a state of the utmost indigence; he who was once in affluence requires a morsel of bread; and can scarcely by begging procure enough to sustain life.

Is ready at his hand.] יש בידו beyado, in his hand; in his possession. As he cannot get bread, he must soon meet death.

Verse 24. Trouble and anguish shall make him afraid.] He shall be in continual fear of death; being now brought down by adversity, and stripped of all the goods which he had got by oppression, his life is a mark for the meanest assassin.

As a king ready to the battle.] The acts of his wickedness and oppression are as numerous as the troops he commands; and when he comes to meet his enemy in the field, he is not only deserted, but slain, by his own troops. How true are the words of the poet:—

Ad verum Cereris esse cauda et vulnere panem, Descendunt regio, et sicca moris tyranni. Juv. Sat. vii. 112.
For few winners to the shades descend
By a dry death, or with a quiet end.

Verse 25. He stretcheth out his hand against God.] While in power, he thought himself supreme. He not only did not acknowledge God, by whom kings reign; but stretched out his hand, used his power not to protect, but to oppress those over whom he had supreme rule; and thus strengthened himself against the Almighty.

Verse 26. He runneth upon him.] Calmel has properly observed that this refers to God, who, like a mighty conquering hero, marches against the ungodly; rushes upon him; seizes him by the throat, which the mail, by which it is encompassed, cannot protect. Neither his shield nor spear can save him when the Lord of hosts comes against him.

Verse 27. Because he covereth his face.] He has lived in luxury and excess; and, like a man overloaded with flesh, he cannot defend himself against the strong gripe of his adversary.

The Arabic, for maketh collops of fat on his flanks, has وجعل الدنيا فوق العنق Wajal ad-dunya fuq al-enq: He lays the Pleiades upon the Hyades: or he places Surea upon diyuk: a proverbial expression for, his ambition is boundless; he aspires as high as heaven; his head touches the stars: or, like the giants of old, who were fabled to have attempted to scale heaven, by placing one high mountain upon another:

*Ter nunt conati imponere Pelio Ossam
Et flect, atque Ossa frondosum involvere Olympum.*
Ter fatis structos disiecit fulmine montes. Virg. Geor. l. vii. 381.

With mountains piled on mountains, thence they strove
To scale the steep battlements of Jove;
And thence his lightning and red thunder play'd,
And their demolished works in ruins laid.

To the lust of power, and the schemes of ambition, there are no bounds. But see the end of such persons:—the haughty spirit precedes a fall: their palaces become desolate, and their heaven is reduced to a chaos.

Verse 28. He dwelleth in desolate cities.] It is sometimes the fate of a tyrant to be obliged to take up his habitation in some of those cities which have been ruined by his wars, and in a house so ruinous as to be ready to fall into heaps. Ancient and modern history afford abundance of examples to illustrate this.

29 He shall not be rich, neither shall his substance continue, neither shall he prolong the perfection thereof upon the earth.

30 He shall not depart out of darkness; the flame shall dry up his branches, and by the breath of his mouth shall he go away.

31 Let not him that is deceived be trust in vanity; for vanity shall be his recompense.

32 It shall be accomplished before his time, and his branch shall not be green.

33 He shall shake off his unripe grape as the vine, and shall cast off his flower as the olive.

34 For the congregation of hypocrites shall be desolate, and fire shall consume the tabernacles of bribery.

35 They conceive mischief, and bring forth vanity, and their belly prepareth deceit.

CHAPTER XVI.

Job replies to Eliphaz, and through him to all his friends; who, instead of comforting, had rebuked to his misfortunes; and shows that, had they been in his circumstances, he would have treated them in a different manner, 1-5. Enters into an affecting detail of his sufferings, 6-16. Consolates himself with the consciousness of his own innocence, of which he takes God to witness, and patiently expects a termination of all his misfortunes by death, 17-21.

Verse 29. He shall not be rich] The whole of what follows, to the end of the chapter, seems to be directed against Job himself, whom Eliphaz indirectly accuses of having been a tyrant and oppressor. The threatened evils are—1. He shall not be rich: though he labours greatly to acquire riches. 2. His substance shall not continue: God will blast it, and deprive him of power to preserve it. 3. Neither shall he prolong the perfection thereof: all his works shall perish, for God will blot out his remembrance from under heaven.

Verse 30. He shall not depart out of darkness] 4. He shall be in continual afflictions and distress. 5. The flame shall dry up his branches: his children shall be cut off by sudden judgments. 6. He shall pass away by the breath of his mouth: for by the breath of his mouth doth God slay the wicked.

Verse 31. Let not him that is deceived] 7. He has many vain imaginations of obtaining wealth, power, pleasure, and happiness; but he is deceived, and he finds that he has trusted באשׁוּרֵי בַשָּׁהֶרֶץ, in a lie; and this lie is his recompense.

Verse 32. It shall be accomplished before his time] I believe the Vulgate gives the true sense: Antequam dies ejus impleantur, peribit; he shall perish before his time; before his days are completed. 8. He shall be removed by a violent death; and not live out half his days. 9. And his branch shall not be green: There shall be no scion from his roots; all his posterity shall fail.

Verse 33. He shall shake off his unripe grape] 10. Whatever children he may have they shall never survive him, nor come to mature age. They shall be like wind-fall grapes, and blasted olive blossoms. As the vine and olive are among the most useful trees, affording wine and oil, so necessary for the worship of God and the comfort of man, are mentioned here, they may be intended to refer to the hopeful progeny of the oppressor; but who fell, like the untimely grape or the blasted olive flower, without having the opportunity of realizing the public expectation.

Verse 34. The congregation of hypocrites] 11. Job is here classed with hypocrites, or rather the impious of all kinds. The congregation, or חַבְדֵי אֱדֹת society of such, shall be desolate; or a barren rock, גֵּלְעָמֹד. See this Arabic word explained in the note on chap. iii. ver. 7. Fire shall consume the tabernacles of bribery.] 12. Another insinuation against Job, that he had perverted justice and judgment, and had taken bribes.

Verse 35. They conceive mischief] The figure here is both elegant and impressive. The wicked conceive mischief from the seed which Satan sows in their hearts; in producing of which they travail with many pangs; for sin is a sore labour: and at last their womb produces fraud or deception. This is the accursed birth, from the iniquitous conception. St. James gives the figure at full length, most beautifully touched in all its parts:—When lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death, James i. 15. where see the note.

Poor Job! what a fight of affliction had he to contend with! His body wasted and tortured with sore disease; his mind harassed by Satan; and his heart wrung with the unkindness and false accusations of his friends. No wonder he was greatly agitated; often distracted; and sometimes even thrown off his guard. However, all his enemies were chained; and beyond that chain they could not go. God was his unseen protector, and did not suffer his faithful servant to be greatly moved.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVI.

Verse 2. I have heard many such things] These sayings of the ancients are not strange to me; but they do not apply to my case: ye see me in affliction; ye should endeavour to console me. This ye do not; and yet ye pretend to do it! Miserable comforters are ye all.

Verse 3. Vain words] Literally words of air. What emboldeneth thee] Thou art totally ignorant of the business;—what then can induce thee to take part in this discussion?

Verse 4. I also could speak] It is probably better to render some of these permissives or potential verbs, literally in the future tense, as in the Hebrew;—I also will speak. Mr. Goode has adopted this mode.

If your soul were in my soul's stead] "If you were in my place, I also could quote many wise sayings, that might tend to show that you were hypocrites and wicked men;—but would this be fair? Even when I might not choose to go farther in assertion, I might shake my head, by way of insinuation, that there was much more behind, of which I did not choose to speak:—but, would this be right? That such sayings are in memory, is no proof that they were either made for me, or apply to my case."

Verse 5. I would strengthen you with my mouth] Mr. Goode translates thus:—

"With my own mouth will I overpower you, Till the quivering of my lips shall fail."

for which rendering he contends in his learned notes. This translation is countenanced by the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic versions.

Verse 6. Though I speak] But it will be of no avail thus to speak; for reprehensions of your conduct will not serve to mitigate my sufferings.

Verse 7. But now he hath made me weary] The Vulgate translates thus:—Nunc autem oppressit me dolor meus; et in nihilum redacti sunt omnes artus mei. "But now my grief oppresses me, and all my joints are reduced to nothing." Perhaps Job alluded here to his own afflictions, and the desolation of his family. Thou hast made me weary with continual affliction; my strength is quite exhausted; and thou hast made desolate all my company, not leaving me a single child to continue my name, or to comfort me in sickness or old age. Mr. Goode translates:—

"Here, indeed, hath he distracted me;
Thou hast struck apart all my witnesses."

Verse 8. Thou hast filled me with wrinkles] If Job's disease were the elephantiasis, in which the whole skin is wrinkled, as the skin of the elephant, (from which this species of leprosy has taken its name,) these words would apply most forcibly to it. But the whole passage, through its obscurity, has been variously rendered. Calmet unites it with the preceding, and Houbigant is not very different. He translates thus:—"For my trouble hath now weakened all my frame, and brought wrinkles over me: he is present as a witness, and riseth against me, who telleth lies con-der: he hath also taken me by my neck, and shaken me to pieces, and set me up for his mark.

13 His archers compass me round about, he cleaveth my reins asunder, and doth not spare; he poureth out my gall upon the ground.

14 He breaketh me with breach upon breach, he runneth upon me like a giant.

15 I have sewed sackcloth upon my skin, and defiled my horn in the dust.

16 My face is foul with weeping, and on my eyelids is the shadow of death;

d Ch. 7. 30.—Ch. 20. 19. Ps. 7. 5.—Ch. 27. 9. Rom. 6. 18, 19.—g Rom. 1. 9. h Heb. in the high places.—i Heb. are my scorers.

cerning me; he openly contradicts me to my face." Mr. Goode translates nearly in the same way. Others still differently.

Verse 9. He teareth me in his wrath] Who the person is that is spoken of in this verse and onward to the end of the fourteenth, has been a question on which commentators have greatly differed. Some think God, others Eliphaz, is intended: I think, neither. Probably God permitted Satan to show himself to Job; and the horrible form which he and his demons assumed increased the misery under which Job had already suffered so much. All the expressions, from this to the end of the fourteenth verse, may be easily understood on this principle; e. g. He (Satan) gnasheth upon me with his teeth; mine enemy sharpeneth his eyes upon me. Ver. 10. They (demons) have gaped on me with their mouth; they have gathered themselves together against me. Ver. 11. God hath delivered me to the ungodly, יָרִי אֵיבִי, to the evil one; he hath turned me over to the hands of the wicked. He hath abandoned me to be tortured by the tempter and his host.

If we consider all these expressions as referring to Job's three friends, we must, in that case, acknowledge that the figures are all strained to an insufferable height, so as not to be justified by any figure of speech.

Verse 13. His archers compass me] רַבָּיִם rabbaim, his great ones. The Vulgate and Septuagint translate this, his spears: the Syrian, Arabic, and Chaldee, his arrows. On this and the following verse Mr. Heath observes:—"The metaphor is here taken from huntsmen: first, they surround the beast; then he is shot dead; his entrails are next taken out; and then his body is broken up limb from limb."

Verse 15. I have sewed sackcloth] פָּשׂוּסִים pasas, a word that has passed into almost all languages; as I have already had occasion to notice in other parts of this work.

Defiled my horn in the dust.] The horn was an emblem of power; and the metaphor was originally taken from beasts, such as the urus, wild ox, buffalo, or perhaps the rhinoceros, who were perceived to have so much power in their horns. Hence the horn was frequently worn on crowns and helmets; as is evident on ancient coins; and to this day it is an appendage to the diadem of the kings and chiefs of Abyssinia. In the second edition of Mr. Bruce's Travels in Abyssinia, vol. viii. plates ii. and iii. we have engravings of two chiefs, Kesta Yasous, and Woodage Ashahel, who are represented with this emblem of power on their forehead. Mr. Bruce thus describes it: "One thing remarkable in this cavalcade, which I observed, was the head-dress of the governors of princes. A large broad fillet was bound upon their forehead, and tied behind their head. In the middle of this was a horn, or a conical piece of silver, gilt, about four inches in length, much in the shape of our common candle extinguishers. This is called kirn, or horn; and is only worn in reviews, or parades after victory. This, I apprehend, like all other of their usages, is taken from the Hebrews; and the several allusions made in Scripture to it arise from this practice. I said unto fools, Deal not foolishly; and to the wicked, Lift not up the horn. Lift not up your horn on high, speak not with a stiff neck. For promotion cometh not, &c., but my horn shall thou exalt like the horn of a unicorn. And the horn of the righteous shall be exalted with honour. And so in many other places throughout the Psalms." In a note on the same page we have the following observation: "The crooked manner in which they hold their neck, when this ornament is on their forehead, for fear it should fall forward, perfectly shows the meaning of Speak not with a stiff neck when you hold the horn on high, or erect, like the horn of the unicorn."—Bruce's Travels, vol. iv. pag. 407.

Defiling, or rolling the horn in the dust, signifies the disgrace or destruction of power, authority, and eminence.

Mr. Goode translates, I have rolled my turban in the 17 Not for any injustice in my hands: also my prayer is pure.

18 O earth, cover not thou my blood, and let my cry have no place.

19 Also now, behold, my witness is in heaven, and my record is on high.

20 My friends scorn me: but mine eye poureth out tears unto God.

21 O that one might plead for a man with God, as a man pleadeih for his neighbour!

22 When a few years are come, then I shall see the way whence I shall not return.

dust, which he endeavours to justify in a long note. But in this, I think, this very learned man is mistaken. The Hebrew קִרְנֵי קַרְנֵי, is the same as the Ethiopic kirn: and both mean, exactly in such connexion, what Mr. Bruce has noticed above. The horn on the diadem is the emblem of power, authority, and eminence.

Verse 16. On my eyelide is the shadow of death] Death is new fast approaching me: already his shadow is projected over me.

Verse 17. Not for any injustice] I must assert, even with my last breath, that the charges of my friends against me are groundless. I am afflicted unto death, but not on account of my iniquities.

Also my prayer is pure.] I am no hypocrite, God knoweth.

Verse 18. O earth, cover not thou my blood] This is evidently an allusion to the murder of Abel: and the verse has been understood in two different ways:—1. Job here calls for justice against his destroyers. His blood is his life, which he considers as taken away by violence; and, therefore, calls for vengeance. Let my blood cry against my murderers, as the blood of Abel cried against Cain. My innocent life is taken away by violence, as his innocent life was: as, therefore, the earth was not permitted to cover his blood, so that his murderer should be concealed; let my death be avenged in the same way. 2. It has been supposed that the passage means that Job considered himself accused of the shedding of innocent blood; and, conscious of his own perfect innocence, he prays that the earth may not cover any blood shed by him. Thus Mr. Scott:

"O earth, the blood accusing me reveal;
Its piercing voice in no room conceal."

And this notion is followed by Mr. Goode. But, with all deference to these learned men, I do not see that this meaning can be supported by the Hebrew text; nor was the passage so understood by any of the ancient versions. I, therefore, prefer the first sense, which is sufficiently natural; and quite in the manner of Job, in his impassioned querulousness.

Verse 19. My witness is in heaven] I appeal to God for my innocence.

Verse 20. My friends scorn me] They deride and insult me; but my eye is toward God: I look to him to vindicate my cause.

Verse 21. O that one might plead] Let me only have the liberty to plead with God, as a man hath with his fellow.

Verse 22. When a few years are come] I prefer Mr. Goode's version:

"But the years numbered to me are come,
And I must go the way whence I shall not return."

Job could not, in his present circumstances, expect a few years of longer life: from his own conviction he was expecting death every hour. The next verse, the first of the following chapter, should come in here: My breath is corrupt, &c. He felt himself as in the arms of death; he saw the grave as already digged, which was to receive his dead body. This verse shows that our translation of the twenty-second verse is improper, and vindicates Mr. Goode's version.

I have said on verse 9. that a part of Job's sufferings probably arose from appalling representations made to his eye, or to his imagination, by Satan and his agents. I think this neither irrational, nor improbable. That he and his demons have power to make themselves manifest on special occasions has been credited in all ages of the world; not by the weak, credulous, and superstitious only, but also by the wisest, the most learned, and the best of men. I am persuaded that many passages in the book of Job refer to this; and admit of an easy interpretation on this ground.

CHAPTER XVII.

Job complains of the injustice of his friends, and compares his present state of want and woe with his former honour and affluence, &c. God's dealings with him will even astonish upright men; yet the righteous shall not be discouraged, but hold on his way, &c. Asserts that there is not a wise man among his friends, and that he has no expectations but of a speedy death, 10-16.

MY breath is corrupt, my days are extinct, & the graves are ready for me.

2 Are there not mockers with me? and doth not mine eye continue in their provocation?

3 Lay down now, put me in a surety with thee; who is he that will strike hands with me?

4 For thou hast hid their heart from understanding: therefore shalt thou not exalt them.

5 He that speaketh flattery to his friends, even the eyes of his children shall fail.

6 He hath made me also a by-word of the people; and aforetime I was as a tabret.

7 Mine eye also is dim by reason of sorrow, and all my members are as a shadow.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVII.

Verse 1. My breath is corrupt] Rather, My spirit is oppressed, רוחי רחוקי רוחי רחוקי—my days are extinct, and the sepulchral cells are ready for me. PARKHURST. There is probably a reference here to cemeteries, where were several niches, in each of which a corpse was deposited. See on ver. 16.

For חבלה chubelah, corrupted, or oppressed, some MSS. have חלחל chalah, is made weak; and one has נבלה is worn down, consumed: this is agreeable to the Vulgate, "Spiritus meus attenuabatur," My spirit is exhausted.

Verse 2. Are there not mockers with me?] This has been variously translated. The VULGATE:—"I have not sinned, and yet my eye dwells upon afflictions." SERTUAGINT:—"I conjure you, labouring under afflictions, what evil have I done? Yet strangers have robbed me of my substance." Mr. GOODS:—"But are not revilers before me? Alas, mine eye penetrated their rebukes." CALMET thinks the Hebrew might be translated thus:—"If I have not been united in friendship with the wicked, why are my eyes in bitterness?" COVERDALE translates both verses thus:—"My brethren faithfully, my days are sported, & am farde at deathes bore. I have disceabed no man, yet must mine eye continue in detynnesse." Mr. HEATH:—"Were it not so, I have sarcasms enow in store; and I could spend the whole night unmoved at their aggravations." The general meaning is plain enough: and the reader has got translations enough.

Verse 3. Lay down now] Deposite a pledge—stake your conduct against mine, and your life and soul on the issue; let the cause come before God; let him try it, and see whether any of you shall be justified by him, while I am condemned.

Verse 4. For thou hast hid their heart] This address is to God; and here he is represented as doing that which, in the course of his providence, he only permitted to be done.

Shalt thou not exalt them.] This was exactly fulfilled: not one of Job's friends was exalted; on the contrary, God condemned the whole; and they were not received into the divine favour, till Job sacrificed, and made intercession for them.

Verse 5. He that speaketh flattery] There are a great variety of meanings given to the terms in this verse. The general sense is, The man who expects much from his friends will be disappointed: while depending on them, his children's eyes may fail in looking for bread.

Verse 6. He hath made me also a by-word] My afflictions and calamities have become a subject of general conversation, so that my poverty and affliction are proverbial. As poor as Job, as afflicted as Job, are proverbs that have often reached our times, and are still in use.

Aforetime I was as a tabret.] This is not the translation of the Hebrew רמת לפניו יתרה וס-תopheth lepanim cheiyeh. Instead of לפניו lepanim, I would read לפניו lepaniyehem; and then the clause might be translated thus: I shall be as a furnace, or consuming fire (Tophet) before them. They shall have small reason to mock, when they see the end of the Lord's dealings with me: my example will be a consuming fire to them; and my false friends will be confounded. COVERDALE translates thus:—He hath made me as if were a byword of the common people. I am his gestinge stocke amonge them.

Verse 7. Mine eye also is dim] Continual weeping impairs the sight: and indeed any affliction that debilitates the frame generally weakens the sight in the same proportion.

8 Upright men shall be astonished at this, and the innocent shall stir up himself against the hypocrite.

9 The righteous also shall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger.

10 But as for you all, do ye return, and come now: for I cannot find one wise man among you.

11 My days are past, my purposes are broken off, even the thoughts of my heart.

12 They change the night into day; the light is short because of darkness.

13 If I wait, the grave is mine house: I have made my bed in the darkness.

14 I have said to corruption, Thou art my father: to the worm, Thou art my mother and my sister.

15 And where is now my hope? as for my hope, who shall see it?

w Or, my thoughts.—x Ps. 24. 4.—y Heb. shall add strength.—z Ch. 6. 28.—a Ch. 7. 6. & 9. 25.—b Heb. the possessions.—c Heb. near.—d Heb. cried, or, called.

All my members are as a shadow.] Nothing is left but skin and bone. I am but the shadow of my former self.

Verse 8. Upright men shall be astonished] In several of these verses Job is supposed to speak prophetically of his future restoration; and of the good which religious society should derive from the history of his original affluence, consequent poverty and affliction, and final restoration to health, peace, and prosperity. The upright will receive the account with astonishment, and wonder at the dispensations of the Almighty; while hypocrites, false professors, and the sourheaded godly, shall be unmasked; and innocent men, whether in affliction or affluence, shall be known to be favourites of the Almighty.

Verse 9. The righteous also shall hold on his way] There shall be no doubt concerning the dispensations of the divine providence. My case shall illustrate all seemingly intricate displays of God's government. None shall be stumbled at seeing a godly man under oppression, knowing that God never permits any thing of the kind but for the good of the subject, and the manifestation of his own mercy, wisdom, and love. Therefore, whatever occurs to the righteous man, he will take it for granted that all is well and justly managed, and that the end will be glorious.

Shall be stronger and stronger] He shall take encouragement from my case, stay himself on the Lord, and thus gain strength by every blast of adversity. This is one grand use of the Book of Job. It casts much light on seemingly partial displays of divine providence; and has ever been the great text book of godly men in a state of persecution and affliction. This is what Job seems prophetically to declare.

Verse 10. But as for you all] Ye are too proud, and too full of self-importance, to profit by what ye see. Return, enter into yourselves, consider your ways, go again to school, get back to your own houses, and endeavour to acquire humility and knowledge: for there is not one wise man among you.

Verse 11. My days are past] Job seems to relapse here into his former state of gloom. These transitions are very frequent in this poem: and they strongly mark the struggle of piety and resignation with continued affliction, violent temptation, and gloomy providences.

The thoughts of my heart] All my purposes are interrupted; and all my schemes and plans, in relation to myself and family, are torn asunder, destroyed, and dissipated.

Verse 12. They change the night into day] These purposes and thoughts are so very gloomy, that they change day into night.

The light is short because of darkness.] איך קרוב סמי רשך. Or karob mipney chosek, "The light is near from the face of darkness." I have scarcely any light; what is called light is so near akin to darkness, that it is scarcely severed from it. There is either no light, or such merely as is sufficient to render darkness visible. A fine picture of the state of his mind—he was generally in darkness; but had occasional gleams of hope.

Verse 13. The grave is mine house] Let me live long or short, the grave at last will be my home. I expect soon to lie down in darkness—There is my end; I cannot reasonably hope for any thing else.

Verse 14. I have said to corruption] I came from a corrupted stock, and I must go to corruption again. The Hebrew might be thus rendered:—To the ditch I have called, thou art my father. To the worm, Thou art my mother and my sister. I am in the nearest state of affinity to dissolution and corruption: I may well call them my nearest relations, as I shall soon be blended with them.

16 They shall go down to the bars of the pit, when our rest together is in the dust.

CHAPTER XVIII.

Bibled. In a speech of passionate invective, accuses Job of impatience and impiety. 1— Shows the fearful end of the wicked, and their posterity; and apparently applies the whole to Job, whom he threatens with the most ruinous end, 5—31.

Ans L. O. cir. 744. Ans U. C. cir. 767. THEN answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said, 7 The steps of his strength shall be straitened, and his own counsel shall cast him down.

Verse 15. And where is now my hope? In the circumstances in which I am found, of what use can hope be? Were I to form the expectation of future good, who could ever see it realized? Is it then any wonder that I should complain, and bemoan my wretched lot?

Verse 16. They shall go down to the bars of the pit! All that I have must descend into the depths of the grave. Thither are we all going; and there alone can I rest.

baddey, which we translate bars, signifies also branches, distended limbs, or claws, and may here refer either to a personification of the grave, a monster who seizes on human bodies, and keeps them fast in his deadly gripe; or to the different branching-off alleys in subterranean cemeteries, or catacombs, in which niches are made for the reception of different bodies.

When our rest together is in the dust! That is, according to some critics, my hope and myself shall descend together into the grave. It shall never be realized: for the time of my departure is at hand.

In those times what deep shades hung on the state of man after death; and on every thing pertaining to the eternal world! Perplexity and uncertainty were the consequences; and a corresponding gloom often dwelt on the minds of even the best of the Old Testament believers. Job's friends, though learned in all the wisdom of the Arabians, connected with the advantages derivable from the Mosaic writings, and perhaps those of the earlier prophets, had little clear or distinct in their minds relative to all subjects post mortem, or of the invisible world. Job himself, though sometimes strongly confident, is often harassed with doubts and fears upon the subject, inasmuch that his sayings and experience often appear contradictory. Perhaps it could not be otherwise; the true light was not then come: Jesus alone brought life and immortality to light by his Gospel.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVIII.

Verse 1. Then answered Bildad! The following analysis of this speech by Mr. Heath is judicious. "Bildad, irritated to the last degree that Job should treat their advice with so much contempt, is no longer able to keep his passions within the bounds of decency. He proceeds to downright abuse; and finding little attention given by Job to his arguments, he tries to terrify him into compliance. To that end he draws a yet more terrible picture of the final end of wicked men than any yet preceding, throwing in all the circumstances of Job's calamities, that he might plainly perceive the resemblance; and, at the same time, insinuating that he had much worse still to expect, unless he prevented it by a speedy change of behaviour. That it was the highest arrogance in him to suppose that he was of consequence enough to be the cause of altering the general rules of providence, ver. 4. And that it was much more expedient for the good of the whole, that he, by his example, should deter others from treading in the same path of wickedness and folly." Ver. 5—7.

Verse 2. How long will it be ere ye make an end! It is difficult to say to whom this address is made; being in the plural number, it can hardly be supposed to mean Job only: It probably means all present; as if he had said, It is vain to talk with this man, and follow him through all his quibbles; take notice of this, and then let us all deliver our sentiments fully to him, without paying any regard to his self vindications. It must be owned that this is the plan which Bildad followed; and he amply unburdens a mind that was labouring under the spirit of rancour and abuse. Instead of How long will it be ere you make an end of words, Mr. Goode translates:—"How long will ye plant thorns (irritating, lacerating, wounding invectives) among words?" translating the unusual term kintsey, thorns, instead of bounds or limits. The word kintsey, may be the Chaldee form for kintsey, the nun being inserted by the Chaldeans for the sake of euphony, as is frequently done; and it may be considered as the contracted plural from pp kals, a thorn, from pp kals, to lacerate, rather than pp kals, an end, from kalsah, to cut off.

Schultens and others have contended that kanals, is an Arabic word used also in Hebrew; that kanaea, signifies to hunt, to lay snares; and hence maknas, a snare; and that the words should be translated, "How long will you put captious snares in words?" But I prefer kintsey, as being the Chaldee form for kintsey, whether it be considered as expressing limits or thorns; as the whole sentence is formed after the Chaldee model, as is evident not only in the word in question, but also in temillin, to words, the Chaldee plural, instead of temillim, the Hebrew plural.

Verse 3. Counted as beasts! Thou treatest us as if we had neither reason nor understanding.

Verse 4. He teareth himself in his anger! Literally, Rending his own soul in his anger: as if he had said, Thou art a madman: thy fury has such a sway over thee that thou eatest thy own flesh. While thou treatest us as beasts, we see thee to be a furious maniac, destroying thy own life.

Shall the earth be forsaken for thee? To say the least, afflictions are the common lot of men. Must God work a miracle in providence, in order to exempt thee from the operation of natural causes? Dost thou wish to engross all the attention and care of providence to thyself alone? What pride and insolence!

Verse 5. The light of the wicked shall be put out! Some think it would be better to translate the original, "Let the light of the wicked be extinguished!" Thou art a bad man; and thou hast perverted the understanding which God hath given thee. Let that understanding, that abused gift, be taken away. From this verse to the end of the chapter is a continual invective against Job.

Verse 6. The light shall be dark in his tabernacle! His property shall be destroyed, his house pillaged, and himself and his family come to an untimely end.

His candle shall be put out! He shall have no posterity.

Verse 7. The steps of his strength! Even in his greatest prosperity he shall be in straits and difficulties.

His own counsel! He shall be the dupe and the victim of his own airy, ambitious, and impious schemes.

Verse 8. For he is cast into a net! His own conduct will infallibly bring him to ruin. He shall be like a wild beast taken in a net: the more he flounders in order to extricate himself, the more he shall be entangled.

He walketh upon a snare.] He is continually walking on the meshes of a net, by which he must soon be entangled and overthrown.

Verse 9. The gin shall take him! Houbigant reads the tenth before the ninth verse thus:—"The snare is laid for him in the ground, and a trap for him in the way. The gin shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him."

From the beginning of the seventh verse, to the end of the thirteenth, there is an allusion to the various arts and methods practised in hunting. 1. A number of persons extend themselves in a forest, and drive the game before them, still straitening the space from a broad base to a narrow point in form of a triangle, so that the farther they go the less room have they on the right and left, the hunters lining each side, while the drovers with their dogs are coming up behind. The steps of his strength shall be straitened, ver. 7. 2. Nets, gins, and pitfalls, are laid or formed in different places, so that many are taken before they come to the point where the two lines close. He is cast into a net, he walketh upon a snare—the trap is laid for him in the way—the snare in the ground, ver. 8, 9, 10. 3. The howling of the dogs, with the shouts of the huntmen, fill him with dismay, and cause him to run himself beyond his strength and out of breath. Terrors shall make him afraid on every side, and shall drive him to his feet, ver. 11. 4. While spent with hunger and fatigue, he is entangled in the spread nets; and the huntsman either pierces him with an arrow or spear, or cuts the sinews of his legs, so that he is easily captured and destroyed. The robber shall prevail against him, ver. 9. His strength is hunger-bitten, and destruction is ready at his side, ver. 12. This latter verse is thus paraphrased by the Chaldee:—Let his first-born son be furnished; and affliction be prepared for his wife.

Verse 13. It shall devour the strength of his skin] This may refer to the elephant, or to the rhinoceros, whose skin scarcely any dart can pierce: but in the case referred to above the animal is taken in a pitfall, and then the first-born of death, a sudden and overwhelming stroke, deprives him of life. See the account of hunting the elephant in the East, at the end of the chapter. The Chaldee has:—“The strength of his skin shall devour his flesh; and the angel of death shall consume his children.”

Verse 14. His confidence shall be rooted out] His dwelling-place, how well soever fortified, shall now be deemed utterly insecure.

And it shall bring him to the king of terrors.] Or, as Mr. Goode translates,—“And dissolution shall invade him as a monarch.” He shall be completely and finally overpowered.

The phrase king of terrors has been generally thought to mean death; but it is not used in any such way in the text. For מלך הטרור le meleek ballahoth, to the king of destructions, one of De Rossi's MSS. has מלך ke meleek, as a king; and one, instead of מלך ballahoth, with ו צא, holam, to indicate the plural, terrors or destructions, has מלך ballahuth, with ו צא, shurek, which is singular, and signifies terror, destruction. So the Vulgate seems to have read, as it translates, Et calceat super eum quadrupes, interitus. “And shall tread upon him as a king or destroyer.” Or as a king who is determined utterly to destroy him. On this verse the bishop of Killala, Dr. Stock, says, “I am sorry to part with a beautiful phrase in our common version, the king of terrors, as descriptive of death: but there is no authority for it in the Hebrew text.”

It may, however, be stated, that death has been denominated by similar epithets both among the Greeks and Romans.

So Virgil, Æn. vi. ver. 106.

Phœton.—quando hic inferni Janus Regis

“The gates of the king of hell are reported to be here.”

And Ovid, Metam. ver. 350, 359.

Inde trahit saltus: et rex parci ipse silentem
Hæcæ matænae cœdem, tyrannosæ necis tyrannosæ

Earth's inmost bowels gnaws, and nature groans;

His serpens reach the dismal king of hell.

Following this destruction, the tyrant left his gloomy court.

And in SOPHOCLES, Œdip. Colon. ver. 1623. Edit. Johnson.

Ερρηχθῆσιν Ἀναγ

Ἀΐδουσιν.

“O, Fate, King of shades.” That is, the invisible demon, who dwells in darkness impenetrable.

Old COVERDALE translates:—“Very fearfulnesse shall bring him to the kynge.”

Verse 15. It shall dwell in his tabernacle] Desolation is here personified; and it is said that it shall be the inhabitant, its former owner being destroyed. Brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation; so that, like Sodom and Gomorrah, it may be an everlasting monument of the divine displeasure.

In the Persian poet Saady we find a couplet which contains a similar sentiment:

بزدلا داري ميگند در قصر نصير عنكبوت
هوسي نويدت ميگند بر كنيد از اسباب

Pandah depre mediant, dar hovei Kesar nabtoot

Bosome Novite noozand, bar kumbad Afrassah.

The spider holds the veil in the palace of Caesar;

The owl stands sentinel on the watch-tower of Afrasiab.

15 It shall dwell in his tabernacle, because it is none of his: brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation.

16 His roots shall be dried up beneath, and above shall his branch be cut off.

17 His remembrance shall perish from the earth, and he shall have no name in the street.

18 He shall be driven from light into darkness, and chased out of the world.

19 He shall neither have son nor nephew among his people, nor any remaining in his dwellings.

Prov. 10. 28.—Ch. 20. 18. Isai. 5. 24. Amos 2. 8. Mal. 4. 1.—y I'm. 34. 16. & 100. 13. Prov. 2. 22. & 10. 7.—y Heb. They shall drive him.—Isai. 14. 32. Jer. 22. 30.

The palaces of those mighty kings are so desolate that the spider is the only chamberlain, and the owl the only sentinel. The web of the former is all that remains as a substitute for the costly veil furnished by the chamberlain in the palace of the Roman monarch; and the hooting of the latter is the only remaining substitute for the sound of drums and trumpets by which the guards were accustomed to be relieved at the watch-tower of the Persian king.

The word كسور keesur, the same as Kaisar or Cæsar is the term which the Asiatics always use when they designate the Roman emperor.

Afrasiab was an ancient king who invaded and conquered Persia about seven hundred years before the Christian era. After having reigned twelve years, he was defeated and slain by Zalzer and his son, the famous Rustem. The present reigning family of Constantinople claim descent from this ancient monarch.

Brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation] This may either refer to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, as has been already intimated; or to an ancient custom of fumigating houses with brimstone, in order to purify them from defilement. PLINY says, Hist. Nat. lib. xxv. c. 15. speaking of the uses of sulphur, “Habet et in religionibus locum ad expiandas sufflta domos,” which Dr. Holland paraphrases thus:—“Moreover, brimstone is employed ceremoniously in hallowing of houses; for many are of opinion that the perfume and burning thereof will keep out all enchantments; yea, and drive away foul fiends and evil apries that do haunt a place.”

Ovid refers to the same, De Arte Amat. lib. ii. ver. 329.

Et cœnit pœs hucet eruo lætinæque locum;

Præferat et trumula sulphur at ovis massæ.

This alludes to the ceremony of purifying the bed or place in which a sick person was confined; and an old woman, or nurse, was the operator, and eggs and sulphur were the instruments of purification.

On this and other methods of purgation, see an excellent note in Servius on these words of Virgil, Æn. vi. ver. 740.

—Alia penduntur inanes

Suspensa ad ventos: alio sub gurgite vasto

Infectum ablutit œculus, aut arcturum igni,

For this are various processes subjoin'd;

And some are tinct to bleach upon the wind;

Some plung'd in waters, others plac'd in fire.

Unde etiam (says Servius) in sacris Liberi omnibus tres sunt talæ purgationes: nam aut tædâ purgantur et sulphure, aut aquâ abluuntur, aut aère ventilanur.

“These three kinds of purgation are used in the rites of Bacchus:—they are purged by flame and sulphur, or washed in water, or ventilated by the winds.” But it is most likely that Bildad, in his usual uncharitable manner, alludes to the destruction of Job's property and family, by winds and fire: for the FIRE or God fell from heaven, and burnt up the sheep and the servants, and consumed them; and a great wind, probably the sulphureous suffocating simoom, smote the four corners of the house, where Job's children were feasting, and killed them, see chap. i. ver. 16, 19.

Verse 16. His roots shall be dried up—his branch be cut off.] He shall be as utterly destroyed both in himself, his posterity, and his property, as a tree is, whose branches are all lopped off, and whose every root is cut away.

Verse 17. His remembrance shall perish.] He shall have none to survive him to continue his name among men.

No name in the street.] He shall never be a man of reputation: after his demise, none shall talk of his fame.

Verse 18. He shall be driven from light] He shall be taken off by a violent death.

And chased out of the world.] The wicked is DRIVEN AWAY in his iniquity. This shows his reluctance to depart from life.

Verse 19. He shall neither have son nor nephew] Coverdale, following the Vulgate, translates thus:—“He shall neither have children nor kinsas folks among his people, no ner any posterite, in his countrie: ponge and olde shal be astongshed at his death.”

20 They that come after him shall be astonished at his day, as they that went before were affrighted.

21 Surely such are the dwellings of the wicked, and this is the place of him that knoweth not God.

CHAPTER XIX.

Job complains of the cruelty of his friends, 1-5. Pathetically laments his sufferings, 6-12. Complains of his being forsaken by all his domestic friends, relatives, and even his wife, 13-18. Details his sufferings in an affecting manner, calls upon his friends to pity him, and earnestly wishes that his speeches may be reconciled, 19-24. Expresses his hope in a future resurrection, 25-27. And warns his persecutors to desist, lest they fall under God's judgment, 28, 29.

1. O. 14. A. U.C. cir. 707. THEN Job answered and said, 2 How long will ye vex my soul, and break me in pieces with words?

Verse 20. They that come after him] The young shall be struck with astonishment when they hear the relation of the judgments of God upon this wicked man:—as they that went before. The aged, who were his contemporaries, and who saw the judgments that fell on him, were affrighted, ye wru achazu saar, seized with horror, were horrified; or, as Mr. Goode has well expressed it, were panic-struck.

Verse 21. Such are the dwellings] This is the common lot of the wicked; and it shall be particularly the case with him who knoweth not God; that is, Job; for it is evident he alludes to him. Poor Job! hard was thy lot, and severe thy sufferings!

On the elephant hunt, to which I have referred, ver. 13. I shall borrow the following account extracted from Mr. Cordiner's History of Ceylon by Mr. Goode:

We have a curious description of the elephant hunt, which is pursued in a manner not essentially different from the preceding, except that the snares are palisaded, instead of being netted, with the strongest possible stakes, still farther fortified by interlacings. They are numerous, but connected together; every snare or enclosure growing gradually narrower, and opening into each other by a gate or two, that will only admit the entrance of a single animal at a time.

The wood in which elephants are known to abound is first surrounded, excepting at the end where the foremost and widest enclosure is situated, with fires placed on moveable pedestals, which, in every direction, are drawn closer and closer; and aided by loud and perpetual shouts, drive the animals forward till they enter into the outer snare. After which the same process is continued; and they are driven by fear into a second, into a third, and into a fourth; till at length the elephants become so much subdivided that, by the aid of cordage carefully fastened round their limbs, and the management of decoy elephants, they are easily capable of being led away, one by one, and tamed. A single hunt, thus conducted, will sometimes occupy not less than two months of unremitting labour; and the entrance of the elephants into the snares is regarded as an amusement or sport of the highest character, and, as such, is attended by all the principal families of the country.—Account of Ceylon, p. 218—226.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIX.

Verse 2. How long will ye vex my soul] Every thing that was irritating, vexatious, and opprobrious, his friends had recourse to, in order to support their own system, and overwhelm him. Not one of them seems to have been touched with a feeling of tenderness toward him; nor does a kind expression drop at any time from their lips! They were called friends; but this term, in reference to them, must be taken in the sense of cold-blooded acquaintances. However, there are many in the world that go under the sacred name of friends, who, in times of difficulty, act a similar part. Job's friends have been, by the general consent of posterity, consigned to endless infamy. May all those who follow their steps be equally enrolled in the annals of bad fame!

Verse 3. These ten times] The exact arithmetical number is not to be regarded here: ten times being put for many times, as we have already seen. See particularly the note on Gen. xxxi. 7.

Ye make yourselves strange to me] When I was in affluence and prosperity, ye were my intimates, and appeared to rejoice in my happiness; but now ye scarcely know me; or ye profess to consider me a wicked man because I am in adversity. Of this you had no suspicion, when I was in prosperity! Circumstances change men's minds.

Verse 4. And be it indeed (or if indeed) that I have 4 And be it indeed that I have erred, mine error remaineth with myself.

5 If indeed ye will magnify yourselves against me, and plead against me my reproach;

6 Know now that God hath overthrown me, and hath compassed me with his net.

7 Behold, I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard: I cry aloud, but there is no judgment.

8 He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass, and he hath set darkness in my paths.

9 He hath stripped me of my glory, and taken the crown from my head.

10 He hath destroyed me on every side, and I am gone: and mine hope hath he removed like a tree.

11 He hath also kindled his wrath against me, and he counteth me unto him as one of his enemies.

f Or, harden yourselves against me.—g Ps. 38. 16.—h Or, violence.—i Ch. 2. 28. Psa. 38. 6.—k Psa. 38. 41.—l Ch. 12. 24. Lam. 2. 5.

erred] Suppose indeed that I have been mistaken in any thing, that in the simplicity of my heart I have gone astray, and that this matter remains with myself, for most certainly there is no public stain on my life; you must grant that this error, whatsoever it is, has hurt no person except myself. Why then do you treat me as a person whose life has been a general blot, and whose example must be a public curse?

Verse 6. Know now that God hath overthrown me] The matter is between him and me; and he has not commissioned you to add reproaches to his chastisements.

And hath compassed me with his net] There may be an allusion here to the different modes of hunting which have been already referred to in the preceding chapter. But if we take the whole verse together, and read the latter clause before the former, thus:—"Know, therefore, that God hath encompassed me with his net, and overthrown me;" the allusion may be to an ancient mode of combat practised among the ancient Persians, ancient Goths, and among the Romans. The custom among the Romans was this:—"One of the combatants was armed with a sword and shield, the other with a trident and net. The net he endeavoured to cast over the head of his adversary; in which, when he succeeded, the entangled person was soon pulled down by a noose that fastened round the neck, and then despatched. The person who carried the net and trident was called Retiarius; and the other, who carried the sword and shield, was termed Secutor, or the Pursuer, because when the Retiarius missed his throw, he was obliged to run about the ground till he got his net in order for a second throw; while the Secutor followed hard to prevent and despatch him." The Persians in old times used what is called ساق کماند, the noose. It was not a net, but a sort of running loop, which horsemen endeavoured to cast over the heads of their enemies that they might pull them off their horses.

That the Goths used a hoop net fastened to a pole, which they endeavoured to throw over the heads of their foes, is attested by Olaus Magnus, Hist. de Gentibus Septentrionalibus, Rom. 1555, lib. xi. cap. 13. De diversis Modis preliandi Finorum. His words are, "Quidam retibus instar retium ferinorum ductilibus sublimi jactatione utuntur: ubi enim cum hoste congressi sunt, injiciunt eos retes quasi luques in caput resistentes, ut equam aut hominem ad se trahant." Some use elastic ropes formed like hunting nets, which they throw aloft: and, when they come in contact with the enemy, they throw these ropes over the head of their opponent; and, by this means, they can drag either man or horse to themselves. At the head of the page he gives a wooden cut, representing the net, and the manner of throwing it over the head of the enemy. To such a device Job might allude, God hath encompassed me with his net, and overthrown me.

Verse 7. I cry out of wrong] I complain of violence and of injustice; but none comes to my help.

Verse 8. He hath fenced up my way] This may allude to the mode of hunting the elephant, described at the conclusion of the preceding chapter, or to the operations of an invading army. See under ver. 11.

Verse 9. He hath stripped me of my glory] I am reduced to such circumstances, that I have lost all my honour and respect.

Verse 10. Mine hope hath he removed like a tree] There is no more hope of my restoration to affluence, authority, and respect, than there is that a tree shall grow and flourish, whose roots are extracted from the earth. I am pulled up by the roots, withered, and gone.

12 His troops come together, and raise up their way against me, and encamp round about my tabernacle.

13 He hath put my brethren far from me, and mine acquaintance are verily estranged from me.

14 My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends have forgotten me.

15 They that dwell in mine house, and my maids, count me for a stranger: I am an alien in their sight.

16 I called my servant, and he gave me no answer; I entreated him with my mouth.

17 My breath is strange to my wife, though I entreated for the children's sake of mine own body.

Verse 11. And he counteth me unto him as one of his enemies] From the seventh to the thirteenth verse there seems to be an allusion to a hostile invasion, battles, sieges, &c. 1. A neighbouring chief, without provocation, invades his neighbour's territories, and none of his friends would come to his help. I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard, ver. 7. 2. The foe has seized on all the passes, and he is hemmed up. He hath fenced up my way, that I cannot pass, ver. 8. 3. He has surprised and carried by assault the regal city, seized and possessed the treasures. He hath stripped me of my glory, and taken the crown from my head, ver. 9. 4. All his armies are routed in the field, and his strong places carried. He hath destroyed me on every side, ver. 10. 5. The enemy proceeds to the greatest length of outrage, wasting every thing with fire and sword. He hath kindled his wrath against me, and treateth me like one of his adversaries, ver. 11. 6. He is cooped up in a small camp with the wrecks of his army; and in this he is closely besieged, by all the power of his foes, who encompass the place, and raise forts against it. His troops come together, and raise up their way against me, and encamp round about my tabernacle. 9. Not receiving any assistance from friends or neighbours, he abandons all hope of being able to keep the field, escapes with the utmost difficulty, and is despised and neglected by his friends and domestics because he has been unfortunate. I am escaped with the skin of my teeth, ver. 20. My kinsfolk have failed—all my intimate friends abhorred me, ver. 14—19.

Verse 14. My kinsfolk have failed] Literally, departed: they have all left a house when the hope of getting is all gone.

Verse 15. They that dwell in mine house] In this and the following verses the disregard and contempt usually shown to men who have fallen from affluence and authority, into poverty and dependence, are very forcibly described. Formerly revered by all: now esteemed by none. Pity to those who have fallen into adversity is rarely shown. The rich have many friends. And to him who appears to be gaining worldly substance, much court is paid; for, many worship the rising sun, who think little of that which is gone down. Some are even reproached with that eminence which they have lost, though not culpable of the loss. A bishop, perhaps Bale, of Ossory, being obliged to leave his country and fly for his life, in the days of bloody Queen Mary, and who never regained his bishopric, being met one morning by one like those whom Job describes, who, intending to be witty at the expense of the venerable prelate, accosted him thus:—"Good morrow, μακαρ quondam." To which the bishop smartly replied, "Adieu, κηλυε semper."

Verse 17. Though I entreated for the children's sake of mine own body. This may imply no more than adverting her by the tenderest ties, by their affectionate intercourse; and, consequently, by the children which had been the seals of their mutual affection; though those children were no more.

But the mention of his children in this place may intimate that he had still some remaining; that there might have been young ones, who, not being of a proper age to attend the festival of their elder brothers and sisters, escaped that sad catastrophe. The Septuagint have προσκαλεσεν δε κολακτων βιους παλλακιδων μου, "I affectionately entreated the children of my concubines." But there is no ground in the Hebrew text for such a strange exceptional rendering. Coverdale has, ¶ am fayne to speake faure to the children of mine own body.

Verse 19. My inward friends] Those who were my greatest intimates.

Verse 20. My bone cleaveth to my skin] My flesh is entirely wasted away; and nothing but skin and bone left. I am escaped with the skin of my teeth.] I have had 18 Yea, young children despised me; I arose, and they spake against me.

19 All my inward friends abhorred me: and they whom I loved are turned against me.

20 My bone cleaveth to my skin and to my flesh, and I am escaped with the skin of my teeth.

21 Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, O ye my friends; for the hand of God hath touched me.

22 Why do ye persecute me as God, and are not satisfied with my flesh?

23 Oh that my words were now written! Oh that they were printed in a book!

n Heb. the men of my secret.—l Ch. 30. 20. Ps. 102. 5. Lam. 4. 8.—o Or, as.—v Ch. 1. 11. Ps. 33. 2.—w Ps. 69. 35.—x Heb. Who will give, &c.

the most narrow escape. If I still live, it is a thing to be wondered at, my sufferings and privations have been so great. To escape with the skin of the teeth seems to have been a proverbial expression, signifying great difficulty. I had as narrow an escape from death, as the thickness of the enamel on the teeth. I was within a hair's breadth of destruction, see on ver. 11.

Verse 21. Have pity upon me] The iteration here strongly indicates the depth of his distress; and that his spirit was worn down with the length and severity of his suffering.

Verse 22. Why do ye persecute me as God] Are not the afflictions which God sends enough? Do you not see that I have as much as I can bear? When the Papiets were burning Dr. Taylor, at Oxford, while wrapped in the flames, one of the true sons of the church took a stick out of the fagots, and threw it at his head, and split open his face. To whom he calmly said, Man, why this wrong? Do not I suffer enough?

And are not satisfied with my flesh?] Will ye persecute my soul, while God is persecuting my body? Is it not enough that my body is destroyed,—why then labour to torment my mind?

Verse 23. Oh that my words were now written] Job introduces the important subject which follows, in a manner unusually solemn; and he certainly considers the words which he was about to utter of great moment; and, therefore, wishes them to be recorded in every possible way. All the modes of writing, then in use, he appears to refer to. As to printing, that should be out of the question, as no such art was then discovered, nor for nearly two thousand years after. Our translators have made a strange mistake by rendering the verb שמע yechaku, printed, when they should have used described, traced out. O that my words were fairly traced out in a book! It is necessary to make this remark, because superficial readers have imagined that the art of printing existed in Job's time, and that it was not a discovery of the fifteenth century of the Christian era: whereas there is no proof that it ever existed in the world before A. D. 1440, or thereabouts; for the first printed book with a date is a Pealter, printed by John Fust, in 1457, and the first Bible with a date is that by the same artist in 1460.

Three kinds of writing Job alludes to, as being practised in his time:—1. Writing in a book, formed either of the leaves of the papyrus, already described, see on chap. viii. ver. 11. or on a sort of linen cloth. A roll of this kind, with unknown characters, I have seen taken out of the envelopments of an Egyptian mummy. Danon, in his travels in Egypt, gives an account of a book of this kind, with an engraved fac simile, taken also out of an Egyptian mummy. 2. Cutting with an iron stile on plates of lead. 3. Engraving on large stones or rocks, many of which are still found in different parts of Arabia.

To the present day the leaves of the palm tree are used in the East instead of paper; and a stile of brass, silver, iron, &c. with a steel point, serves for a pen. By this instrument the letters are cut, or engraved, on the substance of the leaf; and afterward some black colouring matter is rubbed in, in order to make the letters apparent. This was probably the oldest mode of writing, and it continues among the Cingalese to the present day. It is worthy of remark that PLINY, Hist. Nat. lib. xiii. c. 11. mentions most of these methods of writing, and states that the leaves of the palm tree were used before other substances were invented. After showing that paper was not used before the conquest of Egypt by Alexander the Great, he proceeds:—In palmarum foliis primo scriptitatum; deinde quarundam arborum libris; postea publica monumenta plumbeis vulminibus, max et privata linteis confici capta, aut ceris. "At first men wrote on palm tree leaves; and afterward on the bark or rind of other trees."

24 That they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock for ever!

In process of time, public monuments were written on rolls of lead; and those of a private nature on linen books, or tables covered with wax."

Pausanias, lib. xlii. c. 31. giving an account of the Bœotians, who dwell near fount Helicon, states the following fact:—Και μοιρολιθῶν μοι εἰκονοῦσαν εὐθα ἡ κρηνη, τα πολλὰ τοῦ χρόνου λελομασμένα, γέγρασται γὰρ αὐτῶ τα ἔργα. "They showed me a leaden table near to the fountain, on which his works (Hesiod's) were written; but a great part had perished by the injuries of time."

Verse 24. Iron pen and lead] Some suppose that the meaning of this place is this; the iron pen is the chisel by which the letters were to be deeply cut in the stone or rock; and the lead was melted into those cavities in order to preserve the engraving distinct. But this is not so natural a supposition as what is stated above; that Job refers to the different kinds of writing or perpetuating public events used in his time: and the quotations from Pliny and Pausanias confirm the opinion already expressed.

Verse 25. For I know that my redeemer liveth] Any attempt to establish the true meaning of this passage is almost hopeless. By learned men and eminent critics, the words have been understood very differently: some vehemently contending that they refer to the resurrection of the body, and the redemption of the human race by Jesus Christ; while others, with equal vehemence and show of argument, have contended that they refer only to Job's restoration to health, family comforts, and general prosperity, after the present trial should be ended. In defence of these two opinions larger treatises have been written than the whole Book of Job would amount to, if written even in capitals. To discuss the arguments on either side, the nature of this work forbids; but my own view of the subject will be reasonably expected by the reader. I shall, therefore, lay down one principle, without which no mode of interpretation hitherto offered can have any weight. The principle is this—Job was now under the special inspiration of the Holy Spirit, and spoke prophetically.

Now, whether we allow that the passage refers to the general resurrection and the redemption by Christ, or to Job's restoration to health, happiness, and prosperity, this principle is equally necessary. 1. In those times no man could speak so clearly concerning the general resurrection and the redemption by Jesus Christ as Job, by one class of interpreters, is supposed here to do; unless especially inspired for this very purpose. 2. Job's restoration to health and happiness, which, though it did take place, was so totally unexpected to himself all the way through, so wholly unexpected, and, in every sense, impossible, except to the almighty power of God, that it could not be inferred from any thing that had already taken place, and must be foreshown by direct inspiration. Now, that it was equally easy to predict either of these events will be at once evident, because both were in futurity, and both were previously determined. Nothing contingent could exist in either: with them man had nothing to do: and they were equally within the knowledge of him to whose ubiquity there can be neither past nor future time; in whose presence absolute and contingent events subsist in their own distinctive characters, and are never resolved into each other.

But another question may arise, Which was most likely to be the subject of this oracular declaration, the general resurrection and redemption by Christ; or the restoration of Job to health and affluence?

If we look only to the general importance of these things, this question may be soon decided; for the doctrine of human redemption, and the general resurrection to an eternal life, are of infinitely greater importance than any thing that could affect the personal welfare of Job. We may therefore say, of two things which only the power of God can effect, and one of which only shall be done, it is natural to conclude, he will do that which is of most importance by which a greater measure of glory is secured to himself, and a greater sum of good produced to mankind.

As, therefore, a revelation by which the whole human race, in all its successive generations, to the end of time, may be most essentially benefited, is superior in its worth and importance to that by which one man only can be benefited, it is natural to conclude here, that the revelation relative to the general resurrection, &c. is that which most likely the text includes.

But to this it may be answered, God does not do always in the first instance, that which is most necessary and important in itself, as every thing is done in that order, and in that time, which seems best to his godly wisdom; and therefore, a thing of less importance may be done now, and a thing of greater importance left to a future time. So God made the earth before he made man, produced light before he formed the celestial luminaries, and instituted the Mosaic economy before the Christian dispensation: This is all true, for every thing is done in that season in which it may best fulfil the designs of providence and grace. But the question still recurs, Which of the predictions was most congruous to the circumstances of Job, and those of his companions; and which of them was most likely to do most good on that occasion, and to be most useful through the subsequent ages of the world? The subject is now considerably narrowed, and if this question could be satisfactorily answered, the true meaning of the passage would be at once found out. 1. For the sake of righteousness, justice, and truth, and to vindicate the ways of God with man, it was necessary that Job's innocence should be cleared; that the false judgments of his friends should be corrected; and that, as Job was now reduced to a state of the lowest distress, it was worthy the kindness of God to give him some direct intimation that his sufferings should have a happy termination. That such an event ought to take place there can be no question; and that it did take place is asserted in the book: and that Job's friends saw it, were reproved, corrected, and admitted into his favour of whom they did not speak that which was right, and who had, in consequence, God's wrath kindled against them, are also attested facts. But surely there was no need of so solemn a revelation to inform them of what was shortly to take place, when they lived to see it; nor can it be judged essentially necessary to the support of Job, when the ordinary consolations of God's Spirit, and the excitement of a good hope through grace, might have as completely answered the end.

25 For I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth:

On the other hand, to give men, who were the chiefs of their respective tribes, proper notice of a doctrine of which they appear to have had no adequate conception, and which was so necessary to the peace of society, the good government of men, and the control of unruly and wayward passions, which the doctrine of the general resurrection and consequent judgment is well calculated to produce, and to stay and support the suffering godly under the afflictions and calamities of life, were objects worthy the highest regards of infinite philanthropy and justice, and of the most pointed and solemn revelation which could be given on such an occasion. In short, they are the grounds on which all revelation is given to the sons of men: and the prophecy in question, viewed in this light, was, in that dark age and country, a light shining in a dark place; for the doctrine of the general resurrection, and of future rewards and punishments, existed among the Arabs from time immemorial: and was a part of the public creed of the different tribes when Mohammed endeavoured to establish his own views of that resurrection, and of future rewards and punishments, by the edge of the sword. I have thus endeavoured dispassionately to view this subject: and having instituted the proceeding mode of reasoning, without foreseeing where it would tend, being only desirous to find out truth; I arrive at the conclusion, that the prophecy in question was not designed to point out the future prosperity of Job; but rather, the future redemption of mankind by Jesus Christ, and the general resurrection of the human race.

After what has been stated above, a short paraphrase on the words of the text will be all that is necessary to be added.

I know ידעתי yadaati, I have a firm and full persuasion: that my redeemer, ידועי גואלי, my kinsman, he whose right it was among the ancient Hebrews to redeem the forfeited heritages belonging to the family, to vindicate its honour, and to avenge the death of any of his relatives by slaying the murderer, Lev. xxv. 25. Numb. xxxv. 12. Ruth iii. 13. but here it must refer to Christ, who has truly the right of redemption, being of the same kindred, who was born of woman, flesh of our flesh, and bone of our bone.

Liveth חי chai, is the living One, who has the keys of hell and death; the Creator and Lord of the spirits of all flesh, and the principle and support of all life.

And that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth. The latter day, אחרון acharon, the latter day, or time, when God comes to judgment, or, finally, or, at last.

He shall stand, יקום yakum, he shall arise, or stand up, i. e. to give sentence in judgment: or, he himself shall

^a Or, After I shall awake, though this body be destroyed, yet out of my flesh shall I see God.—a Ps. 17. 15. 1 Cor. 13. 12. 1 John 3. 2.—a Heb. a stranger.—b Or, arise from the dust, as the passage has been understood by some to refer to the resurrection of Christ from the dead.

Upon the earth, ^{ay} by al sphar, over the dead, or those who are reduced to dust. This is the meaning of ^{ay} sphar in Ps. xxx. 9. What profit is there in my blood when I go down to the pit? Shall the dust (i. e. the dead) praise thee? He shall arise over the dust, over them who sleep in the dust, whom he shall also raise up.

Verse 26. And though after my skin worms destroy this body My skin, which is now almost all that remains of my former self, except the bones, see ver. 20. They destroy this—not body. נִקְּפוּ נִקְּפוּ nikkphu zoth, they, diseases and affliction, destroy this wretched composition of misery and corruption.

Yet in my flesh shall I see God] Either, I shall arise from the dead, have a renewed body, and see him with eyes of flesh and blood, though what I have now shall shortly moulder into dust: or, I shall see him in the flesh; my kinsman, him who shall partake of my flesh and blood, in order that he may ransom the lost inheritance.

Verse 27. Whom I shall see for myself] Have a personal interest in the resurrection, as I shall have in the Redeemer.

And mine eyes shall behold] That very person who shall be the resurrection, as he is the life.

And not another] וְאֵינִי אֲחֵר ve-ay lo zar, and not a stranger, one who has no relation to human nature; but אֵינִי גֹאֵל aynani goali, my redeeming kinsman.

Though my reins be consumed within me.] Though I am now apparently on the brink of death, the thread of life being spun out to extreme tenuity.

This, on the mode of interpretation which I have assumed, appears to be the meaning of this passage. The words may have a somewhat different colouring put on them: but the basis of the interpretation will be the same.

I shall conclude with the version of Coverdale:—

For, I am sure that my redeemer liveth;
 And that I shall rise out of the earth in the latter day;
 That I shall be clothed againe with this skynne;
 And se God in my flesh.

For, I myself shall beholde him,
 Not with other, but with these same eyes.

My reins are consumed within me, when ye saye
 Why do not ye persecute him?

For he have founde an occasion against him.

Verse 28. But ye should say] Or, Then ye shall say. Why persecute see him] Or, as Mr. Goods, How did we persecute him! Alas, we are now convinced that we did wrong.

Seeing the root of the matter] A pure practice, and a sound hope, resting on the solid ground of sound faith, received from God himself. Instead of וְיָבִי, יָבִי, יָבִי, ya bi, ya bi, ya bi, is the reading of more than one hundred of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. and in several of the versions. Seeing the root of the matter is in him.

Verse 29. Be ye afraid of the sword] Of God's judgments. For wrath bringeth] Such anger as ye have displayed against me, God will certainly resent and punish.

That ye may know there is a judgment] That ye may know that God will judge the world—and that the unequal distribution of riches and poverty, afflictions and health, in the present life, is a proof that there must be a future judgment, where evil shall be punished, and virtue rewarded.

It would not be fair, after all the discussion of the preceding verses in reference to the two grand opinions and modes of interpretation instituted by learned men, not to inform the reader that a third method of solving all difficulties has been proposed, viz. That Job refers to a divine conviction which he had just then received, that God would appear in the most evident manner to vindicate his innocence, and give the fullest proofs to his friends, and to the world, that his afflictions had not been sent as a scourge for his iniquities. Dr. Kennicott was the proposer of this third mode of solving these difficulties, and I shall give his method in his own words.

"These five verses, though they contain but twelve lines, have occasioned controversies without number, as to the general meaning of Job in this place; whether he here expressed his firm belief of a resurrection to happiness after death; or of a restoration to prosperity during the remainder of his life.

29 But ye should say, ^d Why persecute we him, ^e seeing the root of the matter is found in me?
 29 Be ye afraid of the sword: for wrath bringeth the punishments of the sword, ^f that ye may know there is a judgment.

my reins within me are consumed with earnest desire [for that day].—a Heb. in my boom.—d Ver. 22.—e Or, and what root of matter is found in me.—f Ps. 53. 10, 11.

"Each of these positions has found powerful as well as numerous advocates; and the short issue of the whole seems to be, that each party has confuted the opposite opinion, yet without establishing its own. For, how could Job here express his conviction of a reverse of things in this world, and of a restoration to temporal prosperity, at the very time when he strongly asserts that his miseries would soon be terminated by death? See chap. vi. 11. vii. 21. xvii. 11—15. xix. 10. and particularly in chap. vii. ver. 7. O remember that my life is wind: mine eye shall no more see good.

"Still less could Job here express a hope full of immortality; which sense cannot be extorted from the words without very evident violence. And as the possession of such belief is not to be reconciled with Job's so bitterly cursing the day of his birth in chap. iii. so the declaration of such belief would have solved at once the whole difficulty in dispute.

"But, if neither of the preceding and opposite opinions can be admitted; if the words are not meant to express Job's belief either of a restoration, or of a resurrection;—what then are we to do? It does not appear to me that any other interpretation has yet been proposed by the learned: yet I will now venture to offer a third interpretation, different from both the former; and which, while it is free from the preceding difficulties, does not seem liable to equal objection.

"The conviction then, which I suppose Job to express here, is this: That though his dissolution was hastening on, amidst the unjust accusations of his pretended friends, and the cruel insults of his hostile relations; and though, while he was thus singularly oppressed with anguish of mind, he was also tortured with pains of body, torn by sores and ulcers from head to foot, and sitting upon dust and ashes; yet, that still out of that miserable body, in his flesh thus stripped of skin, and nearly dropping into the grave, he should see God: who would appear in his favour, and vindicate the integrity of his character. This opinion may, perhaps, be fairly and fully supported by the sense of the words themselves, by the context, and by the following remarks.

"We read in chap. ii. ver. 7. that Job was smitten with sore bites from the sole of his foot unto his crown: and ver. 8. he sat down among the ashes. In chap. vii. ver. 6. Job says, My flesh is clothed with worms and clods of dust; my skin is broken and become loathsome. In chap. xvi. 19. Also now, behold, my witness is in heaven, and my record is on high. Then come the words of Job, chap. xix. 25—29. And then in opposition to what Job had just said, that God would soon appear to vindicate him, and that even his accusing friends would acquit him, Zophar says, chap. xx. 27. that the heaven would reveal his iniquity, and the earth would rise up against him. Lastly, this opinion concerning Job's words (as to God's vindication of him) is confirmed strongly at the end of the book, which records the conclusion of Job's history. His firm hope is here supposed to be that, before his death, he should, with his bodily eyes, see God appearing and vindicating his character. And from the conclusion we learn, that God did thus appear: now, says Job, mine eye seeth thee. And then did God most effectually, and for ever, brighten the glory of Job's fame, by four times calling him his servant; and as his anger was kindled against Job's friends by speaking to them in the following words: Ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath. Go to my servant Job—and my servant Job shall pray for you,—in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant Job, chap. xl. 7, 8."

Dr. K. then gives the common version, and proposes the following as a new version:

- Ver. 26. For, I know that my vindicator liveth;
 And he at the last shall rise over this dust.
- 26 And after that mine adversaries have nagged me then,
 Even in my flesh shall I see God.
- 27 Whom I shall see on my side;
 And mine eyes shall behold, but not estranged from me:
 All this have I made up in mine own boom.
- 28 Forly ye shall say, Why have we persecuted him;
 Seeing the truth of the matter is found with him.
- 28 Tremble for yourselves at the face of the sword;
 For the sword waxeeth hot against iniquities:
 Therefore be assured that judgment will take place.

Kennicott's Remarks on select passages of Scripture, p. 165.

There is something very plausible in this plan of Dr. Kennicott; and in the conflicting opinions relative to the CHAPTER XX.

Zophar answers Job, and largely details the wretchedness of the wicked and the hypocrite; shows that the rejoicing of such is short and transitory, 1-6. That he is punished in his family and in his person, 10-14. That he shall be stripped of his ill-gotten wealth, and shall be in misery, though in the midst of affluence, 15-22. He shall at last die a violent death, and his family and property be finally destroyed, 23-28.

1. THEN answered Zophar the Naamathite, and said,

2 Therefore do my thoughts cause me to answer, and for this I make haste.

3 I have heard the check of my reproach, and the spirit of my understanding causeth me to answer.

4 Knowest thou not this of old, since man was placed upon earth,

8 He shall fly away as a dream, and shall not be found: yea, he shall be chased away as a vision of the night.

9 The eye also which saw him shall see him no more; neither shall his place any more behold him.

10 His children shall seek to please the poor, and his hands shall restore their goods.

11 His bones are full of the sin of his youth, which shall lie down with him in the dust.

12 Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth, though he hide it under his tongue;

13 Though he spare it, and forsake it not; but keep it still within his mouth:

14 Yet his meat in his bowels is turned, it is the gall of asps within him.

15 He hath swallowed down riches, and he shall vomit them up again: God shall cast them out of his belly.

meaning of this celebrated and much controverted passage, no doubt some will be found who will adopt it as a middle course. The theory, however, is better than some of the arguments by which it is supported. Yet had I not been led, by the evidence mentioned before, to the conclusion there drawn, I should probably have adopted Dr. K.'s opinion with some modification: but as to his new version, it is what I am persuaded the Hebrew text can never bear. It is even too loose a paraphrase of the original, as indeed are most of the new versions of this passage. Dr. Kennicott says that such a confidence as those cause Job to express, who make him speak concerning the future resurrection, ill comports with his cursing so bitterly the day of his birth, &c. But this objection has little, if any, strength, when we consider that it is not at all probable that Job had this confidence any time before the moment in which he uttered it: it was then a direct revelation, nothing of which he ever had before; else he had never dropped those words of impatience and irritation which we find in several of his speeches. And this may be safely inferred from the consideration, that after this time no such words escaped his lips. He bears the rest of his suffering with great patience and fortitude; and seems to look forward with steady hope to that day in which all tears shall be wiped away from off all faces; and it is fully proved that the Judge of all the earth has done right.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XX.

Verse 2. Therefore do my thoughts] It has already been observed that Zophar was the most inveterate of all Job's enemies, for we really must cease to call them friends. He sets no bounds to his invectives, and outrages every rule of charity. A man of such a bitter spirit must have been, in general, very unhappy. With him Job is, by insinuation, every thing that is base, vile, and hypocritical. Mr. Goode translates this verse thus: "Whither would my tumult transport me? And how far my agitation within me?" This is all the modesty that appears in Zophar's discourse. He acknowledges that he is pressed by the impetuosity of his spirit to reply to Job's self-vindication. The original is variously translated; but the sense is as above.

For this I make haste] וי תבקר חושי u-ba'bur chushi bi, there is sensibility in me, and my feelings provoke me to reply.

Verse 3. I have heard the check of my reproach] Some suppose that Zophar quotes the words of Job, and that some words should be supplied to indicate this meaning; e. g. "I have heard (sayest thou) the check or charge of my reproach?" Or, it may refer to what Job says of Zophar and his companions, chap. xix. 2, 3. How long will ye vex my soul—these ten times have ye reproached me. Zophar, therefore, assumes his old ground, and retracts nothing of what he had said. Like many of his own complexion in the present day, he was determined to believe that his judgment was infallible; and that he could not err.

Verse 4. Knowest thou not this of old] This is a maxim as ancient as the world; it began with the first man: a wicked man shall triumph but a short time; God will destroy the proud doer.

Since man was placed upon earth] Literally, since Adam was placed on the earth. That is, since the fall, wickedness and hypocrisy have existed; but they have never triumphed long. Thou hast lately been expressing confidence in reference to a general judgment: but such is thy character, that thou hast little reason to anticipate with any joy the decisions of that day.

Verse 6. Though his excellency mount up to the heavens] Probably referring to the original state of Adam, of whose fall he appears to have spoken, ver. 4. He was created in the image of God; but, by his sin against his Maker, he fell into wretchedness, misery, death, and destruction.

Verse 7. He shall perish for ever] He is dust, and shall return to the dust from which he was taken. Zophar here hints his disbelief in that doctrine, the resurrection of the body, which Job had so solemnly asserted in the preceding chapter. Or he might have been like some in the present day, who believe that the wicked shall be annihilated, and the bodies of the righteous only be raised from the dead: but I know of no Scripture by which such a doctrine is confirmed.

Like his own dung] His reputation shall be abominable, and his putrid carcass shall resemble his own excrement. A speech that partakes as much of the malevolence, as of the asperity of Zophar's spirit.

Verse 8. He shall fly away as a dream] Instead of rising again from corruption, as thou hast asserted (chap. xix. 26.) with a new body, his flesh shall rot in the earth, and his spirit be dissipated like a vapour; and, like a vision of the night, nothing shall remain but the bare impression, that such a creature had once existed; but shall appear no more for ever.

Verse 10. His children shall seek to please the poor] They shall be reduced to the lowest degree of poverty and want, so as to be obliged to become servants to the poor. Cursed be Ham, a servant of servants shall he be. There are cases where the poor actually serve the poor; and this is the lowest or most abject state of poverty.

His hands shall restore their goods.] He shall be obliged to restore the goods that he has taken by violence.

Mr. Goode translates: His branches shall be involved in his iniquity, i. e. his children shall suffer on his account. "His own hands shall render to himself the evil that he has done to others." Calmet. The clause is variously translated.

Verse 11. His bones are full of the sin of his youth] Our translators have followed the VULGATE, Ossa ejus implebuntur vitis adolescentiæ ejus; his bones shall be filled with the sins of his youth. The SYRIAC and ARABIC have, his bones are full of marrow; and the TARGUM is to the same sense. At first view it might appear that Zophar refers to those infirmities in old age, which are the consequences of youthful vices and irregularities. ויבי אדמאי, which we translate his youth, may be rendered his hidden things; as if he had said, His secret vices bring down his strength to the dust. For this rendering Rosenmuller contends, and several other German critics. Mr. Goode contends for the same.

Verse 12. Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth] This seems to refer to the secret sins mentioned above.

Hide it under his tongue] This and the four following verses contain an allegory; and the reference is to a man who, instead of taking wholesome food, takes what is poisonous, and is so delighted with it because it is sweet, that he rolls it under his tongue, and will scarcely let it down into his stomach, he is so delighted with the taste; he spares it, and forsakes it not, but keeps it still within his mouth, ver. 13. But when he swallows it, it is turned to the gall of asps within him, ver. 14. which shall corrode and torture his bowels. Digitized by Google

16 He shall suck the poison of asps; the viper's tongue shall slay him.

17 He shall not see the rivers, the floods, the brooks of honey and butter.

18 That which he laboured for shall he restore, and shall not swallow it down; according to his substance shall the restitution be, and he shall not rejoice therein.

19 Because he hath oppressed and hath forsaken the poor; because he hath violently taken away a house which he builded not;

Verse 15. He shall vomit them up again. This is also an allusion to an effect of most ordinary poisons; they occasion a nausea, and often excruciating vomiting; nature striving to eject what it knows, if retained, will be its bane.

Verse 16. He shall suck the poison of asps. That delicious morsel, that secret easily besetting sin, so palatable, and so pleasurable, shall act on the life of his soul as the poison of asps would do on the life of his body.

This poison is called the gall of asps, it being anciently supposed that the poison of serpents consists in their gall, which is thought to be copiously exuded when those animals are enraged; as it has been often seen that their bite is not poisonous when they are not angry. Pliny, in speaking of the various parts of animals, Hist. Nat. lib. xi. c. 37. states, from this circumstance, that in the gall the poison of serpents consists; ne quis miratur id (fel) venenum esse serpentum. And in lib. xviii. c. 9. he ranks the gall of horses among the poisons:—Dammatur (fel) equinum tantum inter venena. We see, therefore, that the gall was considered to be the source whence the poison of serpents was generated, not only in Arabia but also in Italy.

Verse 17. He shall not see the rivers. Mr. Goode has the following judicious note on this passage:—"Honey and butter are the common results of a rich well-watered pasturage, offering a perpetual banquet of grass to kine, and of nectar to bees; and thus loading the possessor with the most luscious luxuries of pastoral life, peculiarly so before the discovery of the means of obtaining sugar. The expression appears to have been proverbial: and is certainly made use of here to denote a very high degree of temporal prosperity." See also chap. xxix. 6. To the Hebrews such expressions were quite familiar. See Exod. iii. 8. xiii. 8. xxxiii. 3. 2 Kings xviii. 32. Deut. xxxi. 20. and elsewhere.

The Greek and Roman writers abound in such images. Milk and honey were such delicacies with the ancients that Pindar compares his song to them for its smoothness and sweetness:

Χαιρε φίλος. Εγω τοδε τοι Περσο περιγυρον μελι λευκο Σω γαλακτι: κρηναρνα δ' ερω αφηκει τον' αοιδον, Διολοι εν πρσιαιον αοδων.

PIND. Nem. iii. ver. 133.

Hail, friend! to thee I owe my song; For thee its mingled sweets I prepare; Mellifluous accents pour aloud; Verse, pure as milk, to thee I bow; On all thy notions falls the dew of praise; Plerian draughts thy thirst of fame assuage, And trembling thro' thy songs of triumph raise. J. B. B. C. Ode to Pindar, sweet, venial, quo in quosque gemdat; Melis fonsat illi, ferat et rabus orper, amonum. Virg. Ecl. iii. v. 86.

Who Pindar loves, and who his songs admires, Let Pindar's fortune crown his fall desires. Let myrrh, instead of thorns, his fences fill; And showers of honey from his oak distill! Dryden.

OVIN, describing the golden age, employs the same image:

Flumina jam lactis, jam flumina nectaris hiant; Flavaque de viridi stillabant ilice mella. Metam. lib. i. ver. 11. Floods were with milk, and floods with nectar fill'd; And honey from the verdant oak distill'd. Dryden.

HORACE employs a similar image in nearly the same words:

Mella cava veniant ex ilice, montibus alida; Lactis crepante lymphæ desillit pede. Apod. xvi. ver. 66. From hollow oaks where honeyed streams distil, And bounds with noisy foam the pibbled fill. Francis.

Job employs the same metaphor, chap. xxix. 6:

When I washed my steps with butter, And the rocks poured out to me rivers of oil.

Isaiah also, chap. vii. 22. uses the same when describing the produce of a heifer and two ewes:

From the pinnac of milk that they shall produce, He shall eat butter: butter and honey shall he eat, Whosoever is left in the midst of the land.

And Joel, iii. 18:

And it shall come to pass in that day The mountains shall drop down new wine, And the hills shall flow with milk; And all the rivers of Judah shall flow with water.

saken the poor; because he hath violently taken away a house which he builded not;

20 Surely he shall not feel quietness in his belly, he shall not save of that which he desired.

21 There shall none of his meat be left; therefore shall no man look for his goods.

22 In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits: every hand of the wicked shall come upon him.

y Heb. crushed.—Eccles. 5. 12, 14.—y Heb. hoon.—b Or, There shall be none left for his meat.—c Or, troublesome.

The expressions denote fertility and abundance: and are often employed to point out the excellence of the promised land, which is frequently denominated a land flowing with milk and honey; and even the superior excellent blessings of the Gospel are thus characterized, Isa. li. 1.

Verse 18. That which he laboured for shall he restore. I prefer here the reading of the Arabic, which is also supported by the Syriac, and is much nearer to the Hebrew text than the common version. He shall return to labour; but he shall not eat; he shall toil, and not be permitted to enjoy the fruit of his labour. The whole of this verse Mr. Goode thus translates:

To labour shall he return, but he shall not eat. A dearth his recompense: yes, nothing shall he taste.

It may be inquired how Mr. Goode arrives at this meaning. It is by considering the word עָבַד, which we translate he shall rejoice, as the Arabic عَابَدَ alasa, "he ate, drank, tasted;" and the word כָּבַד kehil, which we make a compound word, ke-chail, "according to substance," to be the pure Arabic word كَاهَل kahala, "it was fruitless," applied to a year of dearth: hence kahlan, "a barren year." Conceiving these two to be pure Arabic words, for which he seems to have sufficient authority, he renders עָבַד temurato, "his recompense, as in chap. xv. 31. and not restitution, as here.

The general meaning is, he shall labour and toil, but shall not reap, for God shall send on his land blasting and mildew. Houbigant translates the verse thus:—Reddes labore partum; neque id absumet; copiosa fuerunt mercatura ejus, sed illis non fructur. "He shall restore what he gained by labour, nor shall he consume it; his merchandise were abundant, but he shall not enjoy them." O! how doctors disagree! Old Coverdale gives a good sense, which is no unfrequent thing with this venerable translator:

But labourer shal be, and yet have nothing to eate: great trasple shal be make for riches, but he shal not enjoye them.

Verse 19. He hath oppressed and hath forsaken the poor. Literally, He hath broken in pieces the forsaken of the poor, רָצַץ עֵשֶׂר כִּי רָצַץ אִזּוֹב דַּלִּים. The poor have fled from famine, and left their children behind them; and this hard-hearted wretch, meaning Job all the while, has suffered them to perish, when he might have saved them alive.

He hath violently taken away a house which he builded not. Or, rather, He has thrown down a house, and hath not rebuilt it. By neglecting or destroying the forsaken orphans of the poor, mentioned above, he has destroyed a house (a family) while he might, by helping the wretched, have preserved the family from becoming extinct.

Verse 20. Surely he shall not feel quietness in his belly. I have already remarked that the word bilen, which we translate belly, means often, in the Sacred Writings, the whole of the human trunk: the regions of the thorax and abdomen with their contents; heart, lungs, liver, &c. and, consequently, all the thoughts, purposes, and inclinations of the mind, of which those viscera were supposed to be the functionaries. The meaning seems to be:—"He shall never be satisfied; he shall have an endless desire after secular good; and shall never be able to obtain what he covets."

Verse 21. There shall none of his meat be left. Coverdale translates thus:—"Be devourd so greedily, that he left nothing behynde, therefore his goodes shal not prosper." He shall be stripped of every thing.

Verse 22. In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits. This is a fine saying; and few of the members of Job's text have been able to improve the version. It is literally true of every great, rich, wicked man: he has no God; and anxieties and perplexities torment him, notwithstanding he has his portion in this life.

Every hand of the wicked shall come upon him. All kinds of misery shall be his portion. Coverdale translates:—"Though he had plenteousnesse of every thing, yet was he poore; and therefore, he is but a wretched on every syde."

23 When he is about to fill his belly, God shall cast the fury of his wrath upon him, and shall rain it upon him^d while he is eating.

24 He shall flee from the iron weapon, and the bow of steel shall strike him through.

25 It is drawn, and cometh out of the body; yea^e the glittering sword cometh out of his gall: terrours are upon him.

26 All darkness shall be hid in his secret

d Numb. 11. 33. Psa. 78. 20, 31.—e Isai. 94. 13. Jer. 48. 63. Amos 5. 13.—f Ch. 16. 13.

Verse 23. When he is about to fill his belly] Here seems a plain allusion to the lustrings of the children of Israel in the desert. God showered down quails upon them; and showered down his wrath while the flesh was in their mouth. The allusion is too plain to be mistaken; and this gives some countenance to the bishop of Killala's version of the 20th verse:—

^a Because he acknowledged not the quail in his stomach, In the midst of his delight he shall not escape.

That ῥῶ σελῶν, which we translate quietness, means a quail also, the history of the Hebrews' lustrings, Exod. xvi. 2—11. and Numb. xi. 31—35. sufficiently proves. Let the reader mark all the expressions here from ver. 20 to 23. and compare them with Numb. xi. 31—35. and he will probably be of opinion that Zophar has that history immediately in view, which speaks of the Hebrews' murmuring for bread and flesh, and the miraculous showers of manna and quails, and the judgments that fell upon them for their murmuring. Let us compare a few passages:

Verse 20. He shall not feel quietness] ῥῶ σελῶν, the quail. He shall not save of that which he desired. Verse 21. There shall none of his meat be left.—Let no man leave of it till the morning. Exod. xvi. 19.

Verse 22. In the fulness of his sufficiency he shall be in straits.—But some of them left of it until the morning, and it bred worms and stank. Exod. xvi. 20.

Verse 23. When he is about to fill his belly, God shall cast the fury of his wrath upon him, and shall rain it upon him while he is eating.—And while the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the wrath of the Lord was kindled against the people, and the Lord smote the people with a very great plague. Numb. xi. 33.—He rained flesh upon them as dust, and feathered fowls like as the sand of the sea: so they did eat and were filled—but, while the meat was in their mouth, the wrath of God came upon them, &c. Psa. lxxviii. 26—30. These show to what Job refers.

Verse 24. He shall flee from the iron weapon] Or, Though he should flee from the iron armour, the brazen bow shall strike him through. So that if he fle the iron weapons, he shall be spott with the steel bow. Coverdale. That is, he shall most certainly perish: all kinds of deaths await him.

Verse 25. It is drawn, and cometh out] This refers to archery: The arrow is drawn out of the sheaf or quiver, and discharged from the bow against its mark, and pierces the vitals, and passes through the body. So Coverdale:—The arrow shall be taken forth, and go out at his back.

Verse 26. A fire not blown shall consume him] As Zophar is here showing that the wicked cannot escape from the divine judgments, so he points out the different instruments which God employs for their destruction. The wrath of God; any secret or supernatural curse. The iron weapon, the spear, or such like. The bow, and its swift flying arrow. Darkness, deep horror and perplexity. A fire not blown; a supernatural fire; lightning, such as fell on Korah and his company, to whose destruction there is probably here an allusion; hence the words, It shall go ill with him who is left in his tabernacle. "And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron, Separate yourselves from among this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment. Get ye up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Depart from the tents of these wicked men. There came out a fire from the Lord, and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense." Numb. xvi. 20, 21, 24, 26, 35.

Verse 27. The heavens shall reveal his iniquity; and the earth shall rise up against him.] Another allusion, if I mistake not, to the destruction of Korah and his company. The heavens revealed their iniquity; God declared out of heaven his judgment of their rebellion. "And the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the congregation." Numbers xvi. 20, &c. And then the earth rose up against them. "The ground clave asunder that was under them, and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up; and they went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon them." Numb. xvi. 31—33.

Verse 28. The increase of his house shall depart, and places: a fire not blown shall consume him; it shall go ill with him that is left in his tabernacle.

27 The heaven shall reveal his iniquity; and the earth shall rise up against him.

28 The increase of his house shall depart, and his goods shall flow away in the day of his wrath.

29 This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed unto him by God.

g Ch. 18. 11.—h Psa. 51. 3.—i Ch. 17. 13. & 21. 2, 3.—k Heb. of his secret from God.

his goods shall flow away in the day of his wrath.] A farther allusion to the punishment of the rebellious company of Korah; who not only perished themselves, but their houses also, and their goods. "And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their houses, and all their goods." Numb. xvi. 32.

These examples were all in point, on the ground assumed by Zophar; and such well attested facts would not be passed over by him, had he known the record of them; and that he did know it, alludes to it, and quotes the very circumstance, is more than probable.

Verse 29. This is the portion] As God has dealt with the murmuring Israelites, and with the rebellious sons of Korah, so will he deal with those who murmur against the dispensations of his providence, and rebel against his authority. Instead of an earthly portion, and an ecclesiastical heritage, such as Korah, Dathan, and Abiram sought; they shall have fire from God to scorch them, and the earth to swallow them up.

Dr. Stock, bishop of Killala, who has noticed the allusion to the quails, and for which he has been most unmeritedly ridiculed, gives us the following note on the passage:

"Here, I apprehend, is a fresh example of the known usage of Hebrew poets in adorning their compositions by allusions to facts in the history of their own people. It has escaped all the interpreters; and it is the more important because it fixes the date of this poem, so far as to prove its having been composed subsequently to the transgression of Israel at Kibroth Hattaavah, recorded in Numb. xi. 33, 34. Because the wicked acknowledged not the quail, that is, the meat with which God had filled his stomach; but, like the ungrateful Israelites, cramped and blasphemed his feeder, (as Milton finely expresses it,) he shall experience the same punishment with them; and be cut off in the midst of his enjoyment, as Moses tells us the people were who lusted."

If I mistake not, I have added considerable strength to the prelates reasoning, by showing that there is a reference also to the history of the manna, and to that which details the rebellion of Korah and his company; and if so, (and they may dispute who please) it is a proof that the book of Job is not so old, much less older, than the Pentateuch, as some have endeavoured to prove; but with no evidence of success, at least to my mind. A point which never has been, and I am certain, never can be, proved: which has multitudes of presumptions against it, and not one clear incontrovertible fact for it. Mr. Goode has done more in this case than any of his predecessors; and yet Mr. Goode has failed: no wonder then that others, unmerciful critics of the bishop of Killala, have failed also, who had not a tenth part of Mr. Goode's learning, nor one hundredth part of his critical acumen.

It is, however, strange that men cannot suffer others to differ from them on a subject of confessed difficulty, and comparatively of little importance, without raising up the cry of heresy against them, and treating them with superciliousness and contempt! Such should know, if they are clergymen, whether dignified or otherwise, that such conduct ill becomes the sacerdotal character; and that ante barbam docet senes, cannot be always spoken to the teacher's advantage.

As a good story is not the worse for being twice told, the following lines from a clergyman, who, for his humility and piety was as much an honour to his vocation, as he was to human nature, may not be amiss, in point of advice, to all Warburtonian spirits:

"Be calm in arguing, for fierceness makes
Error a fault, and truth discountenanced.
Why should I feel another man's mistake
More than his sickness or his poverty?
In love I should: but anger is not love,
Nor wisdom neither; therefore, gently move.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'ring, and enjoy his fits;
As cunning fevers suffer heat to die,
Truth dwells not in the clouds; the bow that's there
Doth often aim at, never hit, the sphere.

Herbert.

Dr. Stock's work on the book of Job will stand honourably on the same shelf with the best on this difficult subject.

CHAPTER XXI.

Job expresses himself as puzzled by the dispensation of Divine Providence, because of the unequal distribution of temporal good: he shows that wicked men often live long, prosper in their families, and in all their substance, and yet live in the presence of God and several things, 1-16. At other times their prosperity is suddenly blasted, and they and their families come to ruin, 17-21. God however is too wise to err: and he deals out various lots to all according to his wisdom; some come sooner, others later to the grave; but the strong and the weak, the prince and the peasant, come to a similar end in this life; but the wicked are reserved for a day of wrath, 22-32. He charges his friends with falsehood in their protracted attempts to comfort him.

1887. BUT Job answered and said, 2 Hear diligently my speech, and let this be your consolations.

3 Suffer me that I may speak: and after that I have spoken, I mock on.

4 As for me, is my complaint to man? and if it were so, why should not my spirit be troubled?

5 Mark me, and be astonished, and lay your hand upon your mouth.

6 Even when I remember, I am afraid, and trembling taketh hold on my flesh.

7 Wherefore do the wicked live, become old, are mighty in power?

8 Their seed is established in their sight with them, and their offspring before their eyes.

9 Their houses are safe from fear, neither is the rod of God upon them.

10 Their bull gendereth, and faileth not; their cow calveth, and casteth not her calf.

11 They send forth their little ones like a flock, and their children dance.

12 They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ.

13 They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave.

14 Therefore they say unto God, Depart from us; for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways.

15 What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and what profit should we have if we pray unto him?

16 Lo, their good is not in their hand: the counsel of the wicked is far from me.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXI.

Verse 2. Let this be your consolations] מְנַחֵם מִן מַעֲשֵׂי יְהוָה is-lahi sot tanchusnoteycom, may be translated, "And let this be your retractions." Let what I am about to say induce you to retract what you have said, and to recall your false judgments.

וְאוֹ מַחֲמִים, signifies not only to comfort, but to change one's mind, to repent: hence the Vulgate translates, at the verse is to be understood ironically. I am now about agite penitentiam, "and repent," which Coverdale follows in his version, and arande poussettes. Some suppose to give you consolations for those you have given me. When I have done, then turn them into mockery if ye please.

Verse 4. As for me] אֲנִי אֲנֹכִי ha-anochi, "Alas for me!" Is it not with a man that I speak? And, if this be the case, why should not my spirit be troubled? I do not reply against my Maker; I suffer much from God and man; why then may I not have the privilege of complaining to creatures like myself?

Verse 5. Mark me, and be astonished] Consider and compare the state in which I was once, with that in which I am now, and be astonished at the judgments and dispensations of God. You will then be confounded; you will put your hands upon your mouths, and keep silence.

Putting the hand on the mouth, or the finger on the lips, was the token of silence. The Egyptian god Harpocrates, who was the god of silence, is represented with his finger compressing his upper lip.

Verse 6. I am afraid] I am about to speak of the mysterious workings of Providence: and I tremble at the thought of entering into a detail on such a subject: my very flesh trembles.

Verse 7. Wherefore do the wicked live] You have frequently asserted that the wicked are invariably punished in this life; and that the righteous are ever distinguished by the strongest marks of God's providential kindness:—how then does it come that many wicked men live long and prosperously; at last die in peace without any evidence whatever of God's displeasure? This is a fact that is occurring daily; none can deny it;—how then will you reconcile it with your maxims?

Verse 8. Their seed is established] They see their own children grow up, and become settled in the land; and behold their children's children also; so that their generations are not cut off. Even the posterity of the wicked continue.

Verse 9. Neither is the rod of God upon them.] They are not afflicted as other men.

Verse 10. Their bull gendereth] וְעֵבֶר דָּבָר, passes over, i. e. on the cow, referring to the action of the bull when coupling with the female. Their flocks multiply greatly; they bring forth in time; and none of them is barren.

Verse 11. They send forth their little ones] It is not very clear whether this refers to the young of the flocks, or to their children. The first clause may mean the former, the next clause the latter; while the young of their cattle are in flocks; their numerous children are healthy and vigorous, and dance for joy.

Verse 12. They take the timbrel and harp] וַיִּשְׂמְעוּ, they rise up, or lift themselves up, probably alluding to the rural exercise of dancing.

וְעַל טוֹפֵי, which we translate timbrel, means a sort of drum, such as the tomtom of the Asiatics. וְעַל קִנֹּר, may mean something of the harp kind.

Organ, מְנַחֵם עַבִּי, means nothing like the instrument now called the organ, though thus translated both by the Septuagint and Vulgate: it probably means the syrias, composed of several unequal pipes, close at the bottom, which, when blown into at the top, give a very shrill and lively sound. To these instruments the youth are represented as dancing joyfully. Mr. Goode translates: "They trip merrily to the sound of the pipe." And illustrates his translation with the following verse:

Now grasping, now retreating,
Now in circling troops they meet;
To break noise in cadence beating,
Glance their many twinkling feet.

The original is intended to convey the true notion of the gambols of the rustic nymphs and swains on festival occasions; and let it be observed, that this is spoken of the children of those who say unto God, "Depart from us; for we desire not the knowledge of thy ways. What is the Almighty, that we should serve him? and what profit should we have if we pray unto him?" Ver. 14, 15. Is it any wonder that the children of such parents should be living to the flesh, and serving the lusts of the flesh? for neither they nor their parents know God, nor pray unto him.

Verse 13. They spend their days in wealth] There is a various reading here of some importance. In the text we have יָבֵלּוּ, they grow old, or wear out as with old age, terent vetustate; and in the margin, יָבֵלּוּ, they consume: and the Masora states, that this is one of the eleven words which are written with beth, and must be read by capit. Several editions have the former word in the text, and the latter in the margin; the former being what is called the ketib, the latter keri. יָבֵלּוּ, they grow old, or wear out, is the reading of the Antwerp, Paris, and London, Polyglots: יָבֵלּוּ, they accomplish, or spend, is the reading of the Complutensian Polyglott, thirteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., the Septuagint, Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic. The Vulgate has ducunt, "they lead or spend," from which our translation is borrowed. I incline to the former, as Job's argument derives considerable strength from this circumstance: they not only spend their days in faring sumptuously every day; but they even wear out so as to grow old in it; they are not cut off by any sudden judgment of God. This is a fact; therefore, your doctrine, that the wicked are cut off suddenly, and have but a short time, is far from the truth.

In a moment, they go down to the grave.] They wear out their years in pleasure; grow old in their gay and giddy life; and die, as in a moment, without previous sickness: or, as Mr. Goode has it, They quietly descend into the grave.

Verse 14. They say unto God] This is the language of their conduct, though not directly of their lips.

Depart from us] Let us alone; we do not trouble thee. Thy ways are painful: we do not like cross-bearing. Thy ways are spiritual: we wish to live after the flesh. We have learnt to do our own will: we do not wish to study thine.

Verse 15. What is the Almighty] What allegiance do we owe to him. We feel no obligation to obey him: and what profit can we derive from prayer? We are as happy as flesh and blood can make us: our kingdom is of this world; we wish for no other portion than that which we have.

Those who have never prayed as they ought, know nothing of the benefits of prayer.

17 How oft is the candle of the wicked put out? and how oft cometh their destruction upon them? God distributeth sorrows in his anger.

18 They are as stubble before the wind, and as chaff that the storm carrieth away.

19 God layeth up his iniquity for his children: he rewardeth him, and he shall know it.

20 His eyes shall see his destruction, and he shall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.

21 For what pleasure hath he in his house after him, when the number of his months is cut off in the midst?

22 Shall any teach God knowledge? seeing he judgeth those that are high.

23 One dieth in his full strength, being wholly at ease and quiet.

24 His breasts are full of milk, and his bones are moistened with marrow.

25 And another dieth in the bitterness of his soul, and never eateth with pleasure.

26 They shall lie down alike in the dust, and the worms shall cover them.

27 Behold, I know your thoughts, and the devices which ye wrongfully imagine against me.

28 For ye say, Where is the house of the prince? and where are the dwelling-places of the wicked?

29 Have ye not asked them that go by the way? and do ye not know their tokens, 30 That the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction? They shall be brought forth to the day of wrath.

Verse 16. Their good is not in their hand] With all their boasting and self-dependence, God only lends them his bounty; and, though it appears to be their own, yet it is at his disposal. Some of the wicked he permits to live and die in affluence; provided it be acquired in the ordinary way of his providence, by trade, commerce, &c. Others he permits to possess it for a while only, and then strips them of their illegally procured property.

The counsel of the wicked is far from me.] Some understand the words thus:—"Far be it from me to advocate the cause of the wicked." I have nothing in common with them, and am not their apologist. I state a fact; they are often found in continual prosperity: I state another fact; they are often found in wretchedness and misery: for,

Verse 17. How oft is the candle of the wicked put out?] The candle or lamp is often used, both as the emblem of prosperity and of posterity. Oftentimes the rejoicing of the wicked is short; and, not unfrequently, his seed is cut off from the earth. The root is dried up, and the branch is withered.

God distributeth sorrows in his anger.] He must be incensed against those who refuse to know, serve, and pray unto him. In his anger he, therefore, portions out to each his due share of misery, vexation, and wo.

Verse 18. They are as stubble before the wind] "His fan is in his hand; he will thoroughly cleanse his floor, and the chaff he will barn with unquenchable fire. Therefore the wicked shall not stand in the judgment; but shall be like the chaff which the wind driveth away." Were not this a common thought, I should have supposed that the author of this book borrowed it from Ps. 1. 4. The original signifies that they shall be carried away by a furious storm; and borne off as booty is by the swift-riding robbers of the desert, who make a sudden irruption, and then set off full speed with their prey.

Verse 19. God layeth up his iniquity for his children] This is according to the declaration of God, Exod. xx. 5. "Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me." This always supposes that the children, who are thus visited, have copied their parents' example; or, that ill-gotten property is found in their hands which has descended to them from their wicked fathers; and of this God, in his judgments, strips them. It is, however, very natural to suppose that children brought up without the fear of God, will walk in the sight of their own eyes, and according to the imaginations of their own hearts.

He rewardeth him, and he shall know it.] He shall so visit his transgressions upon him, that he shall at last discern that it is God who hath done it. And thus they will find that there would have been profit in serving him, and safety in praying unto him. But this they have neglected; and now it is too late.

Verse 20. His eyes shall see his destruction.] He shall perceive its approach; and have the double punishment of fearing and feeling; feeling a THOUSAND deaths in fearing one.

He shall drink of the wrath] The cup of God's wrath, the cup of trembling, &c. is frequently expressed or referred to in the Sacred Writings, Deut. xxxii. 33. Isa. li. 17—22. Jer. xxv. 15. Rev. xiv. 8. It appears to be a metaphor taken from those cups of poison which certain criminals were obliged to drink. A cup of the juice of hemlock was the wrath or punishment assigned by the Athenian magistrates to the philosopher Socrates.

Verse 21. For what pleasure hath he in his house after him] What may happen to his posterity he neither knows nor cares, as he is now numbered with the dead; and numbered with them before he had lived out half his years. Some have translated the verse thus: "Behold how speedily God destroys the house of the wicked after him! How he shortens the number of his months!"

Verse 22. Shall any teach God knowledge?] Who, among the sons of men, can pretend to teach God how to govern the world, who himself teaches those that are high, the heavenly inhabitants, who excel us infinitely, both in knowledge and wisdom! Neither angels nor men can comprehend the reason of the divine providence. It is a depth known only to God.

Verse 23. One dieth in his full strength] In this and the three following verses Job shows that the inequality of fortune, goods, health, strength, &c. decides nothing either for or against persons in reference to the approbation or disapprobation of God, as these various lots are no indications of their wickedness or innocence. One has a sudden, another a lingering death; but by none of these can their eternal states be determined.

Verse 24. His breasts are full of milk] The word wray atinaiv, which occurs nowhere else in the Hebrew Bible, is most likely an Arabic term; but, probably, so provincial as to be now lost. atana, signifies to macerate hides so as to take off the hair: hence Mr. Goods thinks it means here, that sleekness of skin that is the effect of fatness both in man and beast. But as the radical idea signifies to stink, as leather does which is thus macerated, I cannot see how this meaning can apply here. Under the root wray atan, Mr. Parkhurst gives the following definitions: wray occurs, not as a verb, but as a noun masculine plural, in construction, wray (atney) the bowels, intestines; once Job xxi. 24. wray (atinaiv) his bowels or intestines, are full of, or abound with, chahal) fat. So the LXX. ra de sykara aron alhph oraeos. The VULGATE: Viscera ejus plena sunt adipis, "his intestines are full of fat." May not wray (atim) be a noun masculine plural from wray (atah) to involve, formed as wryy (galim, mirror) from ryy (gabab, to reveal)? And may not the intestines, including those fatty parts, the mesentery and omentum, be so called on account of "their wonderful involutions." I think this conjecture to be as likely as any that has yet been formed.

Verse 25. They shall lie down alike in the dust] Death levels all distinctions, and the grave makes all equal. There may be a difference in the grave itself; but the human corpse is the same in all. Splendid monuments enshrine corruption; but the sod must lie close and heavy upon the putrefying carcass, to prevent it from becoming the bane of the living.

Verse 27. I know your thoughts] Ye still think that because I am grievously afflicted, therefore I must be a felonious transgressor.

Verse 28. For ye say, Where is the house of the prince?] In order to prove your point, ye ask, where is the house of the tyrant and oppressor? Are they not overthrown and destroyed? and is not this a proof that God does not permit the wicked to enjoy prosperity?

Verse 29. Have ye not asked them that go by the way?] This appears to be Job's answer. Consult travellers who have gone through different countries; and they will tell you that they have seen both examples, the wicked in great prosperity in some instances, while suddenly destroyed in others. See at the end of the chapter.

Do ye not know their tokens] Mr. Goods translates the whole verse thus: "Surely thou canst never have inquired of men of travel; or thou couldst not have been ignorant of their tokens. Hadst thou made proper inquiries, thou wouldst have heard of their awful end in a thousand instances." And also of their prosperity.

31 Who shall declare his way to his face? and who shall repay him what he hath done?

32 Yet shall he be brought to the grave, and shall remain in the tomb.

33 The clods of the valley shall be sweet unto him, and every man shall draw after him, as there are innumerable before him.

34 How then comfort ye me in vain, seeing in your answers there remaineth falsehood?

CHAPTER XXII.

Eliphaz reproves Job for his attempts to clear his character, and establish his innocence. 1-4. Charge him with insensate transgressions; with oppression toward his brethren, cruelty to the poor, hard-heartedness to the needy, and with uncharitableness toward the widow and the orphan; and that it is on these accounts that enemies and denunciations are cast upon him, 5-11. Speaks of the majesty and justice of God; how he cast off the cedar-trees, and the inhabitation of cedars, and the oaks of the plain, 12-20. Exhorts him to repent and acknowledge his sin, and promises him great riches and prosperity, 21-28.

Ans. 1. G. etc. 74. A. U. C. etc. 72. THEN Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said, Verse 30. [That the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction] Though every one can tell that he has seen the wicked in prosperity, and even to spend a long life in it; yet this is no proof that God loves him, or that he shall enjoy a prosperous lot in the next world. There, he shall meet with the day of wrath. There, the wicked shall be punished, and the just rewarded.

Verse 31. [Who shall declare his way to his face?] But while the wicked is in power, who shall dare to tell him to his face what his true character is? Or who shall dare to repay him the evil he has done? As such a person cannot have his punishment in this life, he must have it in another; and for this the day of wrath, i. e. the day of judgment, is prepared.

Verse 32. [Yet shall he be brought to the grave] He shall die like other men; and the corruption of the grave shall prey upon him.

Verse 33. [The clods of the valley shall be sweet unto him] Perhaps there is an allusion here to the Asiatic mode of interment for princes, saints, and nobles: a well-watered valley was chosen for the tomb, where a perpetual spring might be secured. This was intended to be the emblem of a resurrection, or of a future life; and to conceal as much as possible the disgrace of the rotting carcass.

Every man shall draw after him] There seem to be two allusions intended here: 1. To death, the common lot of all. Millions have gone before him to the tomb; and אדם כל אדם, all men shall follow him; all past generations have died; all succeeding generations shall die also. 2. To pompous funeral processions: multitudes preceding, and multitudes following the corpse.

Verse 34. [How then comfort ye me in vain.] Mr. Goode translates: "How vainly then would ye make me retract." See the note on ver. 2. I cannot retract anything I have said, as I have proved, by fact and testimony, that your positions are false and unfounded. Your pretensions to comfort me are as hollow as the arguments you bring in support of your exceptionable doctrines.

This chapter may be called Job's triumph over the insinuated calumnies, and specious but false doctrines, of his opponents. The irritability of his temper no longer appears: from the time he got that glorious discovery of his Redeemer, and the joyous hope of an eternal inheritance, chap. xix. 25, &c. we find no more murmuring, nor unsoftened complainings. He is now full master of himself; and reasons conclusively, because he reasons coolly. Impassioned transports no longer carry him away: his mind is serene, his heart is fixed, his hope steady, and his faith strong. Zophar the Naamathite is now in his presence as an infant in the gripe of a mighty giant. Another of these pretended friends and real enemies comes forward to renew the attack with virulent invective, malevolent insinuation, and unsupported assertion. Him Job meets and vanquishes by pious resignation and fervent prayer. Though, at different times after this, Job had his buffetings from his grand adversary, and sometimes of comparative darkness, yet his faith is unshaken; and he stands as a beaten anvil to the stroke. He effectually exculpates himself, and vindicates the dispensations of his Maker.

There appears to be something in the 29th verse which requires to be farther examined. Have ye not asked them that go by the way? And do ye not know their tokens? It is probable that this verse may allude to the custom of burying the dead by the way side, and raising up spectral and descriptive monuments over them. Job argues that the lot of outward prosperity fell alike to the just and to the unjust: and the sepulchral monuments by the way side were proofs of his assertion; for his friends as well as 2 Can a man be profitable unto God, as he that is wise may be profitable unto himself?

3 Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous? or is it gain to him, that thou makest thy ways perfect?

4 Will he reprove thee for fear of thee? will he enter with thee into judgment?

5 Is not thy wickedness great? and thine iniquities infinite?

6 For thou hast taken a pledge from thy brother for nought, and stripped the naked of their clothing.

7 Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink, and thou hast withholden bread from the hungry.

himself and other persons, had noted them; and asked the history of such and such from the nearest inhabitants of the place. And the answers, in a great variety of cases, would be: "That monument points out the place where a wicked man lies, who was all his lifetime in prosperity and affluence, yet oppressed the poor, and shut up the bowels of his compassion against the destitute; and this belongs to a man who lived only to serve his God, and to do good to man according to his power, yet he had not a day of health, nor an hour of prosperity; God having given to the former his portion in this life, and reserved the recompense of the latter to a future state."

The Septuagint render the verse thus:—Ερωτησατε παραπορευομενους, και τα σημεια αυτων ουκ αλλοτριωσατε, "Inquire of those who pass by the way; and their signs (monuments) ye will not alienate." That is, when ye hear the history of these persons, ye will not then assert that the man who lived in prosperity was a genuine worshipper of the true God; and, therefore, was blessed with temporal good; and that he who lived in adversity was an enemy to God; and was, consequently, cursed with the want of secular blessings. Of the former ye will hear a different account from those who dare now speak the truth, because the prosperous oppressor is no more; and of the latter ye shall learn that, though afflicted, destitute and distressed, he was one of those who acknowledged God in all his ways, and never performed an act of religious service to him in hope of secular gain; sought his approbation only, and met death cheerfully in the hope of being eternally with the Lord."

Neither good nor evil can be known by the occurrences of this life. Every thing argues the certainty of a future state, and the necessity of a day of judgment. They who are in the habit of marking casualties (especially if those whom they love not, be the subjects of them) as tokens of divine displeasure, only show an ignorance of God's dispensations, and a malevolence of mind that would fain arm itself with the celestial thunders in order to transfuse those whom they deemed their enemies.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXII.

Verse 2. [Can a man be profitable unto God] God does not afflict thee because thou hast deprived him of any excellency. A man may be profitable to a man; but no man can profit his Maker. He has no interest in thy conduct; he does not punish thee because thou hast offended and deprived him of some good. Thy iniquities are against justice, and justice requires thy punishment.

Verse 3. [Is it any pleasure to the Almighty] Infinite in his perfections, he can neither gain nor loss by the wickedness or righteousness of men.

Verse 4. [For fear of thee?] Is it because he is afraid that thou wilt do him some injury, that he has stripped thee of thy power and wealth?

Verse 5. [Is not thy wickedness great?] Thy sins are not only many, but they are great; and of thy continuance in them there is no end, אין קץ אין קץ.

Verse 6. [Thou hast taken a pledge] Thou hast been vexatious in all thy doings, and hast exacted where nothing was due; so that through thee the poor have been unable to procure the necessary clothing.

Verse 7. [Thou hast not given water] It was esteemed a great virtue in the East to furnish thirsty travellers with water, especially in the deserts, where scarcely a stream was to be found, and where wells were very rare. Some of the Indian devotees are accustomed to stand with a girbat, or skin full of water, on the public roads, to give drink to weary travellers who are parched with thirst.

Verse 8. [But as for the mighty man, he had the earth] ארץ אש יש זרוע, the man of arm. Finger, hand, and arm, are all emblems of strength and power. The mar of arm is not only the strong man, but the man of power and influence, the man of rapine and plunder.

The honourable man] Literally, the man whose face is accepted, the respectable man, the man of wealth. Thou wert an enemy to the poor and needy; but thou didst favour and flatter the rich and great.

Verse 9. The arms of the fatherless] Whatever strength, or power, or property they had, of that thou hast deprived them. Thou hast been hard-hearted and cruel, and hast enriched thyself with the spoils of the poor and the defenceless.

Verse 10. Therefore snares] As thou hast dealt with others; so has God, in his retributive providence, dealt with thee. As thou hast spoiled, so art thou spoiled. Thou art taken in a net from which thou canst not escape. There is an allusion here to the hunting of the elephant: he is driven into an enclosure in the woods, passing from strait to strait, till brought into a narrow point, from which he cannot escape; and then his consternation is great, and his roaring terrible. God hath hunted thee down, as men hunt down those wild and dangerous beasts.

Verse 11. Or darkness, that thou canst not see] The sense of this passage, in the connexion that the particle or gives it with the preceding verse, is not easy to be ascertained. To me it seems very probable that a letter has been lost from the first word; and that wa ao, which we translate or, was originally aw aur, light. The copy used by the Septuagint had certainly this reading; and, therefore, they translate the verse thus:—Τὸ φῶς σου ἐστὶν σκοτος ἀντὶς, Thy light is changed into darkness: that is, thy prosperity is turned into adversity.

Houbigant corrects the text thus: instead of חֹשֶׁךְ אֲשֶׁר לֹא יִרְאֶה לְךָ חֹשֶׁךְ lo tereh, or darkness thou canst not see, he reads חֹשֶׁךְ לֹא יִרְאֶה לְךָ חֹשֶׁךְ, lo aur, tereh, darkness, not light, shalt thou behold: that is, thou shalt dwell in thick darkness. Mr. Goode translates:—"Or darkness which thou canst not penetrate; and a flood of waters shall cover thee." Thou shalt either be involved in deep darkness, or overwhelmed with a flood.

The versions all translate differently; and neither they nor the MSS. give any light, except what is afforded by the Septuagint. Coverdale is singular:—Shaldest thou then send darkness? Shaldest not the water floude runne ower the? Perhaps the meaning is:—"Thou art so encompassed with darkness, that thou canst not see thy way; and therefore fallest into the snares and traps that are laid for thee."

Verse 12. Is not God in the height of heaven?] It appears from this and the following verses, that Eliphaz was attributing infidel and blasphemous speeches or sentiments to Job. As if he had said, "Thou allowest that there is a God; but thou sayest that he is infinitely exalted above the heavens and the stars; and that there is so much dense ether and thick cloud between his throne and the earth, that he can neither see it nor its inhabitants." These were sentiments which Job never held, and never uttered: but if a man be dressed in a bear's skin, he may be hunted and worried by his own dogs. Job's friends attribute falsities to him; and then dilate upon them, and draw inferences from them injurious to his character. Polemic writers, both in theology and politics, often act in this way.

Verse 14. He walketh in the circuit of heaven.] He confines himself to those infinitely exalted regions, and cares nothing for the inhabitants of the earth.

Verse 15. Hast thou marked the old way] This is supposed to be another accusation: as if he had said, "Thou followest the same way that the wicked of old have walked in." Here is an evident allusion to the flood; as is particularly noted in the next verse.

Verse 16. Whose foundation was overflown with a flood] The unrighteous in the days of Noah, who appear to have had an abundance of all temporal good, ver. 18. and who surpassed the deeds of all the former wicked, said, in effect, to God, Depart from us. And when Noah preached unto them the terrors of the Lord, and the necessity of repentance, they rejected his preaching with, What can the Almighty do for us? Let him do his worst; we care not for him, ver. 17.

For לוֹ לָמוֹ, to THEM, the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, have evidently read לוֹ לָנוּ, to US. This reading quotes their own saying; the former reading narrates it in the third person. The meaning, however, is the same.

Verse 18. But the counsel of the wicked is far from me.] Sarcastically quoting Job's words, chap. xxi. 14, 16. Job having, in the preceding chapter, described the wicked who said unto the Almighty, Depart from us, &c. adds, But the counsel of the wicked is far from me. Eliphaz here, having described the impious, among whom he evidently ranks Job, makes use of the same expression, as if he had said, "Thank God, I have no connexion with you nor your companions; nor is my mind contaminated by your creed."

Verse 19. The righteous see it, and are glad] They see God's judgments on the incorrigibly wicked; and know that the Judge of all the earth does right: hence they rejoice in all the dispensations of his providence.

Verse 20. Whereas our substance is not cut down] We, who fear the Lord, still continue in health and peace; whereas they who have departed from him are destroyed even to their very remnant.

Mr. Goode thinks that קִימָנוּ kimanu, which we translate our substance, is the same as the Arabic قَوْمِ our people, or tribe; and hence he translates the clause thus:—"For our tribe is not cut off: while even the remnant of these a conflagration consumed." The reference here is supposed to be to the destruction of the men of Sodom and Gomorrah. A judgment by a flood took off the world of the ungodly in the days of Noah. Their remnant, those who lived in the same ungodly way, were taken off by a judgment of fire, in the days of Lot. Eliphaz introduces these two examples in order to terrify Job into a compliance with the exhortation which immediately follows.

Verse 21. Acquaint now thyself with him] Perhaps the verb חָשַׁן hasken, should be translated here treasure up, or lay up. Lay up, or procure an interest now with him, and be at peace. Get the divine favour, and then thou wilt be at peace with God, and have happiness in thy own soul.

Thereby good shall come unto thee] בָּהֶם bahem, "in them," shall good come unto thee. That is, in getting an interest in the divine favour; and in having thy soul brought into a state of peace with him; thereby, in them, that is, these two things, good will come unto thee. First, thou wilt have an interest in his favour, from which thou mayest expect all blessings; and secondly, from his peace in thy conscience, thou wilt feel unutterable happiness. Get these blessings now, for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth. Reader, hast thou these blessings?

Verse 22. Receive, I pray thee, the law from his mouth] Some who wish to place Job before the law given by Moses, say that this means the Noachic precepts; others say it is the law of nature, which is intended! Stuff and vanity! The allusion is plainly to the law given by God to the children of Israel, called here, by way of emphasis, תּוֹרַת הַלֵּוִי, the law, which contained מִצְוֹת אֱמֹרָאִים, his words, the words or sayings of God himself; consequently, is not the Noachic precepts, nor the law of nature, neither of which were ever written or registered as the words of God's mouth.

Verse 23. Thou shalt be built up] God will restore thee to thy wonted state of prosperity; and thou shalt be built up, thou shalt put away iniquity far from thy tabernacles.

24 Then shalt thou lay up gold as dust, and the gold of Ophir as the stones of the brooks.

25 Yea, the Almighty shall be thy defence, and thou shalt have plenty of silver.

26 For then shalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty, and shalt lift up thy face unto God.

27 Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him, and he shall hear thee, and thou shalt pay thy vows.

28 Thou shalt also decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee: and the light shall shine upon thy ways.

again have a household, not only of servants, but children also. So much may be implied in the words, Thou shalt be built up.

Verse 24. Then shalt thou lay up gold as dust] The original is not fairly rendered in this translation עפר על כסף כבש—sith al aphar batesr, which Montanus renders: Et pons super pulverem munitionem. And fix a tower upon the dust; and in the rock, the torrents of Ophir.

The Vulgate is widely different, Dabit pro terra silicem, et pro silice torrentes aureos, "He will give thee flint for earth; and torrents of gold for flint;" which Calmet thus paraphrases: "Instead of brick thou shalt build with solid stone; and for ornaments, instead of stone as formerly, thou shalt have massive gold!"

All the versions are different. Mr. Goode translates: "Then count thou treasure as dust; then shall he make fountains to gush forth amidst the rocks." Coverdale is different from all: We shal give the an herbest, which, in plenty and abundance, shal errede the bust of the earth, and the golde of Ophir like tyber stones.

Verse 25. Thou shalt have plenty of silver.] Here again the versions and critics vary. The critics may disagree; but the doctrine of Eliphaz is sufficiently plain: "To those whom God loves best he gives the most earthly good. The rich and the great are his high favourites; the poor and the distressed he holds for his enemies."

In the above verses there seems to be a reference to the mode of obtaining the precious metals;—1. Gold in dust; 2. Gold in streams from the hills and mountains: 3. Silver in mines. כסף תהפוך כסף תהפוך keepeth to deep as to make one giddy by looking into them. See Mr. Goode.

Verse 26. For then shalt thou have thy delight] Thou shalt know from thy temporal prosperity that God favours thee; and for his bounty thou shalt be grateful. How different is this doctrine from that of St. Paul and St. John! Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus. Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into your hearts, crying, Abba, Father. The Spirit himself beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God. We glory also in tribulation, knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope; and this hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given unto us. We love him because he first loved us. Tribulation itself was often a mark of God's favour.

Verse 27. Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him] תפיל תפיל, thou shalt open or unbosom thyself. And, when the heart prays, God hears: and the person being blessed, vows fidelity, prays on, is supported, and enabled to pay his vows.

Verse 28. Thou shalt also decree a thing] Whatever thou purposeth in his strength, thou shalt be enabled to accomplish.

Verse 29. When men are cast down] There is a great difficulty in this verse; the sense, however, is tolerably evident, and the following is nearly a literal version: When they shall humble themselves, thou shalt say, Be exalted, or there is exaltation: for the downcast of eye, he will save. The same sentiment as that of our Lord, He that exalteth himself shall be abased; but he that humbleth himself shall be exalted.

CHAPTER XXIII.

Job answers; apologizes for his complaining; wishes to plead his cause in the presence of his Maker, from whom he should receive justice; but regrets that he cannot find him, 1-9. He, however, gives himself and his cause up to God, with the conviction of his own innocence, and God's justice and goodness, 10-14. He is, nevertheless, afraid, when he considers the majesty of his Maker, 15-17.

THEN Job answered and said, 2 Even to-day is my complaint bitter: my stroke is heavier than my groaning.

Verse 30. He shall deliver the island of the innocent] The word w ai, which we translate island, is most probably the Arabic particle اى whatsoever, whatsoever, any, whatsoever he may be, as اى اى at rujiil, whatsoever man he may be. And it is most probable that both words are Arabic, اى اى or اى any innocent, chaste, pure, or holy person; for the word has the same meaning both in Hebrew and Arabic. The text may, therefore, be translated, He shall deliver every innocent person: He (the innocent person), shall be delivered by the pureness of thy hands; i. e. as thou lovest justice, so thou wilt do justice. Instead of اى caepica, thy hands, the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic, have read اى caepav, his (or their hands.) Mr. Goode thinks that w ai, signifies house, as اى and اى in Arabic, signify to reside, to have a home, &c. and, therefore, translates the passage thus: "The house of the innocent shall be delivered: and delivered by the pureness of thy hands." The reader may adopt which he pleases; but the word island must be given up, as it cannot make any consistent sense.

These ends Eliphaz, the Temanite, who began with a tissue of the bitterest charges, continued with the most cruel insinuations, and ended with common-place exhortations to repentance, and promises of secular blessings in consequence: and from his whole speech scarcely can one new or important maxim be derived. Blessed be God for Moses and the prophets; for Jesus, the evangelists, and the apostles! Their trumpet gives no uncertain sound: but by that of Job's friends, who can prepare himself for the battle?

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIII.

Verse 2. Even to-day is my complaint bitter] Job goes on to maintain his own innocence, and shows that he has derived neither conviction nor consolation from the discourses of his friends. He grants that his complaint is bitter; but states that, loud as it may be, the affliction which he endures is heavier than his complaints are loud.

Mr. Goode translates:—"And still is my complaint rebellion?" Do ye construe my lamentations over my unparalleled suffering as rebellion against God? This, in fact, they had done from the beginning: and the original will justify the version of Mr. Goode; for אמר meri, which we translate bitter, may be derived from מרר marah, "he rebelled."

Verse 3. Oh that I knew where I might find him!] This and the following verse may be read thus:—"Who will give me the knowledge of God, that I may find him out? I would come to his establishment (the place or way in which he has promised to communicate himself:) I would exhibit, in detail, my judgment (the cause I wish to be tried) before his face; and my mouth would I fill with convincing or decisive arguments." Arguments drawn from his common method of saving sinners, which I should prove applied fully to my case. Hence the confidence with which he speaks, ver. 6.

Verse 5. I would know the words which he would answer me.] He would speak nothing but what was true, decree nothing that was not righteous, nor utter any thing that I could not comprehend.

Verse 6. Will he plead against me] He would not exhibit his majesty and his sovereign authority to strike me dumb; or so overawe me, that I could not speak in my own vindication.

No; but he would put strength in me.] On the contrary, he would treat me with tenderness, he would rectify my mistakes, he would show me what was in my favour, and would temper the rigid demands of justice by the mild interpretations of equity; and where law could not clear me, mercy would conduct all to the most favourable issue.

Verse 7. There the righteous might dispute with him נִסְחָה נִסְחָה, might argue or plead. To dispute with God, sounds very harsh.

So should I be delivered for ever Mr. Goode translates: "And triumphantly should I escape from my condemnation." The Hebrew word נִסְחָה, lanetsach, may be as well translated to victory, as for ever: and in this sense the Vulgate understood the words Proponat equitalem contra me; et perennit ad victoriam iudicium meum. He would set up equity against me; and would lead on my cause to victory. Coverdale renders thus:—But let him give me like power to go to late, then am I sure to turn my matter. Nothing less than the full-est conviction of his own innocence could have led Job to express himself thus to the Judge of quick and dead!

Verse 8. Behold, I go forward These two verses paint in vivid colours the distress and anxiety of a soul in search of the favour of God. No means are left untried, no place unexplored in order to find the object of his research. This is a true description of the conduct of a genuine penitent.

Verse 9. On the left hand, where he doth work In these two verses Job mentions the four cardinal points of the heavens: The EAST, by the word קֶדֶם, which signifies before; the WEST, by אָחֹר, which signifies after, or the back part; the NORTH, אֲמֹן, semol, which signifies the left; and the SOUTH by יָמִין, which signifies the right. Such is the situation of the world to a man who faces the east; see Gen. xiii. 9, 11. and xxviii. 14. And from this it appears that the Hebrews, Idumeans, and Arabs, had the same ideas of these points of the heavens. It is worthy of remark that Job says, He hideth himself on the right hand, (the south) that I cannot see him: for, in fact, the southern point of heaven is not visible in Idumea where Job was. Hence it comes that when he spake before, chap. ix. 9. of the constellations of the antarctic pole, he terms them the hidden chambers of the south; i. e. those compartments of the celestial concave that never appeared above the horizon in that place. See Calmet.

Mr. Goode translates these verses as follows:
Behold! I go forward, and he is not there;
And backward, but I cannot perceive him.
On the left hand I feel for him, but trace him not;
He enshrouleth the right hand, and I cannot see him.

The simple rendering of Coverdale is nervous and correct:

For though I go before, I spyde him not:
If I come behynde, I can get no knowledge of him:
If I go on the left syde to pounce his trackes,
I cannot attayne unto them:
I spyne, if I go on the right syde, he hydyeth himself,
That I cannot see him.

Verse 10. But he knoweth the way that I take He approves of my conduct; my ways please him. He tries me: but, like gold, I shall lose nothing in the fire; I shall come forth more pure and luminous. If that which is reputed to be genuine is exposed to the action of a strong fire, if it be genuine, it will lose nothing of its quality, nor of its weight. If it went into the fire gold, it will come out gold; the strongest fire will neither alter nor destroy it. So Job: he went into this furnace of affliction an innocent, righteous man; he came out the same. His character lost nothing of its value, nothing of lustre.

Verse 11. My foot hath held his steps, his way have I kept I have carefully marked his providential dealings; and in his way, his pure and undefiled religion, have I walked. I have not only been generally, but particularly religious: I have attended carefully to the weightier matters of the law, and have not forgotten its slightest injunctions.

Coverdale is curious:—Nevertheless my feet kept his path, his steps strete have I holden, and not gone out of it. The steps strete is highway, the causeway, or raised road; formed, as they anciently were, by stones, in the manner of pavement. It has its name from the Latin strata, paved, via being understood; via lapidibus strata, "a way paved with stones;" hence street, a raised road or pavement, either in town or country. And hence the four grand Roman or British roads which intersected this kingdom: viz. Watling-street, Icknild or Ricknild-street, Ermin-street, and Fosse-street. Some say these streets or roads were made by Bellinus, a British king.

Fosse-street began in Cornwall, passed through Devonshire, Somersetshire, and along by Tibury upon Toteswold, beside Coventry, unto Leicester; and thence by the wide plains to Newark and Lincoln, where it ends.

Watling-street begins at Dover, passes through the middle of Kent, over the Thames by London, running near Westminster, and thence to St. Albans, Dunstable, Stratford, Towcester, Weden, Lilbourn, Atherston, Wreaken, by Severn, Worcester, Stratton, through Wales unto Cardigan, and on to the Irish sea.

Ermin, or Erminage-street, running from St. David's in Wales, to Southampton.

Ricknild, or Icknild-street, running by Worcester, Wycomb, Birmingham, Lichfield, Derby, Chesterfield, and by York, into Tynemouth. See Camden, Holinshead, and Minshieu.

Verse 12. The commandment of his lips The written law, that proceeded from his own mouth.

I have esteemed the words of his mouth Mr. Goode has given a better version of the original: In my bosom have I stored up the words of his mouth. The Asiatics carry every thing precious or valuable in their bosom, their handkerchiefs, jewels, purse, &c. Job, therefore, intimates, that the words of God's mouth were to him a most precious treasure.

Verse 13. But he is in one mind The original is וְהוּא כְּאֶחָד vahu ke-achad, and is literally, But he is in one: properly rendered by the Vulgate, Ipse enim solus est, But he is alone. And not badly rendered by Coverdale:—It is he himself alone. He has no partner; his designs are his own, they are formed in his infinite wisdom, and none can turn his determinations aside. It is vain, therefore, for man to contend with his Maker. He designs my happiness, and you cannot prevent its accomplishment.

Verse 14. For he performeth the thing that is appointed for me Coverdale translates: He returneth me into my bosom, and many other things me doth be, as he maye by his power. חֶכְמָה chukim, may as well be translated bosom here, as in the 12th verse; but probably it may mean a portion, lot, sufficiency. For he hath appointed me my lot: and like these there are multitudes with him. He diversifies human affairs: scarcely any two men have the same lot; nor has the same person the same portion at all times. He has multitudes of resources, expedients, means, &c. which he employs in governing human affairs.

Verse 15. Therefore am I troubled I do not as yet see an end to my afflictions: he has not exhausted his means of trial; therefore, when I consider this, I am afraid of him.

Verse 16. For God maketh my heart soft Prostrates my strength, deprives me of courage, so that I sink beneath my burden; and I am troubled at the thought of the Almighty, the self-sufficient and eternal Being.

Verse 17. Because I was not cut off "O why can I not draw darkness over my face; why may not thick darkness cover my face?" Mr. Goode. This verse should be read in connexion with the preceding; and then we a Ch. 22. 7.—e Psa. 10. 8.—p Prov. 7. 8.—q Psa. 10. 11.

Verse 9. They pluck the fatherless from the breast] They forcibly take young children in order that they may bring them up in a state of slavery. This verse is the commencement of a new paragraph: and points out the arbitrary dealings of oppressors, under despotic governors.

Take a pledge of the poor] Oppressive landlords who let out their grounds at an exorbitant rent, which the poor labourers, though using the utmost diligence, are unable at all times to pay; and then the unfeeling wretch sells them up, as the phrase here is, or takes their cows, their horses, their cart, or their bed, in pledge that the money shall be paid in such a time. This is one of the crying sins of some countries of Europe.

Verse 10. They cause him to go naked] These cruel, hard-hearted oppressors seize the cloth made for the family wear, or the wool and flax out of which such clothes should be made:

And they take away the sheaf] Seize the grain as soon as it is reaped, that they may pay themselves the exorbitant rent at which they have leased out their land: and thus the sheaf, the thraves, and ricks, by which they should have been supported, are taken away from the hungry:

Verse 11. Make oil within their walls] Thus stripped of all that on which they depended for clothing and food, they are obliged to become vassals to their lord, labour in the fields on scanty fare, or tread their wine-presses, from the produce of which they are not permitted to quench their thirst.

Verse 12. Men groan from out of the city] This is a new paragraph. After having shown the oppressions carried on in the country, he takes a view of those carried on in the town. Here the miseries are too numerous to be detailed. The poor in such places are often in the most wretched state; they are not only badly fed, and miserably clothed, but also most unwholesomely lodged. I was once appointed to visit a district in St. Giles', London, to know the real state of the poor. I took the district in House-Row; and found each dwelling full of people, dirt, and wretchedness. Neither old nor young had the appearance of health: some were sick, and others lying dead in the same place! Several beds, if they might be called such, on the floor in the same apartment; and, in one single house, sixty souls! These were groaning under various evils; and the soul of the wounded, wounded in spirit, and afflicted in body, cried out to God and man for help! It would have required no subtle investigation to have traced all these miseries to the doors, to the hands, the lips, and the hearts, of ruthless landlords; or to oppressive systems of public expenditure in the support of ruinous wars, and the stagnation of trade and destruction of commerce occasioned by them; to which must be added the enormous taxation to meet this expenditure.

Yet God layeth not folly to them] He does not impute their calamities to their own folly. Or, according to the Vulgate:—Et Deus inultum abire non patitur, "And God will not leave (these disorders) unpunished." But the Hebrew may be translated:—And God doth not attend to their prayers. Job's object was to show, in opposition to the mistaken doctrine of his friends, that God did not hastily punish every evil work, nor reward every good one. That vice often went long unpunished, and virtue unrewarded; and that we must not judge of a man's state either by his prosperity or adversity. Therefore, there might be cases in which the innocent oppressed poor were crying to God for redress of their grievances, and were not immediately heard; and in which their oppressors were faring sumptuously every day, without any apparent mark of the divine displeasure.

Verse 13. They—rebel against the light] Speaking of wicked men. They rebel against the light of God in their consciences, and his light in his word. They are tyrants in grain, and care neither for God nor the poor.

15 ^p The eye also of the adulterer waiteth for the twilight, ^q saying, No eye shall see me: and ^r disguiseth his face.

They know not the way thereof; they will not learn their duty to God or man. Nor abide in the paths thereof. If brought at any time to a better mind, they speedily relapse; and are steady only in cruelty and mischief. This is the character of the oppressors of suffering humanity, and of sinners audacious and hardened.

This whole verse Mr. Goode translates in the following manner:

They are indictment of the light;
They respect not its progress;
And will not return to its paths.

They hate good; they regard not its operation; go out of the way of righteousness, and refuse to return.

Verse 14. The murderer rising with the light] Perhaps the words should be read as Mr. Goode has done:

With the daylight ariseth the murderer:
Poor and needy, he shall bleed blood.

This description is suitable to a highwayman; one who robs in daylight, and who has been impelled by poverty and distress to use this most unlawful and perilous mode to get bread; and for fear of being discovered or taken, commits murder, and thus adds crime to crime.

In the night is as a thief] Having been a highwayman in the daytime, he turns footpad, or housebreaker, by night; and thus goes on from sin to sin.

There have been several instances like the case above, where poverty and distress have induced a man to go to the highway and rob, to repair the ruin of himself and family. I shall introduce an authentic story of this kind, which the reader may find at the end of this chapter.

Verse 15. The eye also of the adulterer] This is another sin particularly of the city. The adulterer has made his assignation; he has marked the house of her into whose good graces he has insinuated himself, called digging through the house; he waits impatiently for the dusk; and then goes forth, having muffled or disguised his face, and spends a criminal night with the faithless wife of another man. The morning dawns: but it is to him as the shadow of death, lest he should be detected before he can reach his own home. And if one know him—if he happen to be recognized in coming out of the forbidden house, the terrors of death seize upon him, being afraid that the thing shall be brought to light, or that he shall be called to account, a bloody account, by the injured husband.

This seems to be the general sense of the very natural picture which Job draws in the 15th, 16th, and 17th verses. Mr. Goode's version of this paragraph I shall lay before the reader.

Ver. 15. For the dark he watcheth the eye of the adulterer;

Enslaving, No eye shall behold me;

Then putteth he the muffle on his face;

Ver. 16. He wormeth into houses amidst the darkness.

In the daytime they seal themselves up,

They know not the light;

Ver. 17. For the dawn they reckon to themselves as the death shade;

The horrors of the death shade as it returneth.

Verse 18. He is swift as the waters] Literally, Light is he on the face of the waters: And cursed shall be their portion on the earth, which Mr. Goode translates:—

Miserable is this man on the waters;

Deeply miserable the lot of those on dry land.

He beholdeth not the way of the vineyards] These no longer flourish or bring forth fruit. The labour of the vintage fails.

Verse 19. Drought and heat consume the snow waters] The public cisterns or large tanks which had been filled with water by the melting of the snow on the mountains, and which water was stored for the irrigation of their lands, had been entirely exhausted by the intensity of the heat, and the long continuance of drought.

So doth the grave those which have sinned] For this whole paragraph we have only two words in the original: viz. uerr uerr shool chatau, the pit, they have sinned; which Mr. Goode translates:—"They fall to their lowest depth."

20 The womb shall forget him; the worm shall feed sweetly on him; * he shall be no more remembered; and wickedness shall be broken as a tree.

21 He evil entreateth the barren that beareth not: and doeth not good to the widow.

22 He draweth also the mighty with his power; he riseth up, * and no man is sure of life.

23 Though it be given him to be in safety, u Prov. 10. 7.—y Or, he trusted not his own life.—w Psal. 11. 4. Prov. 15. 8.

I believe the meaning to be—even the deepest tanks which held most water, and retained it longest, had become exhausted; so that expectation and succour were cut off from this as well as from every other quarter.

I have elsewhere shown that שׁוֹר שׁוֹל, signifies not only hell and the grave, but any deep pit; and, also, that שׁוֹר חַטָּא, signifies, to miss the mark. Mr. Goode, properly aware of these acceptations of the original words, has translated as above; and it is the only ground on which any consistent meaning can be given to the original.

Verse 20. The womb shall forget him] The mother that bare him shall have no affection for him, nor be afflicted at his death. But the word רַחֵם signifies compassion, mercy. Mercy shall be un mindful of him. How dreadful such a state! When mercy itself forgets the sinner, his perdition slumbereth not.

The worm shall feed sweetly on him] The Chaldee has, "The cruel, who have neglected to commiserate the poor, shall be sweet to the worms." He shall be brought into a state of the greatest degradation, and shall be no more remembered.

And wickedness shall be broken as a tree.] He shall be as a rotten or decayed tree, easily broken to pieces. If it were clear that רִיב אֵלֶּה, here rendered wickedness, has the same sense as רִיב אֵלֶּה, a leaf, sucker, or shoot, then we might translate according to the ingenious version of Mr. Goode; viz. but the shoot shall be broken off as a tree; which might, in this case, be supposed to refer to illicit commerce, the fruit of the womb becoming abortive.

Verse 21. He evil entreateth the barren] I believe the original word רַבָּה should be translated he feedeth; and so the Vulgate understood the word; Pavil enim sterilem. He has been kind to the barren woman; but he has done no good to the widow. He has shown no mercy to large families: he has been an enemy to the procreation of children. Though he may, for particular reasons, have provided for a barren woman; yet the widow he has not comforted, she being old or infirm, or such as might not suit his purpose.

Verse 22. He draweth also the mighty] Calmet gives the following version of the original:—"He draws with him guards for his defence; he raises himself up, and does not feel assured of his life." In the midst even of his guards, he is afraid; and dares not put confidence in any person. This is an admirable delineation of the inquietudes and terrors of a tyrant.

Verse 23. Though it be given him to be in safety] The Vulgate gives this verse a singular turn:—Dedit ei Deus locum penitentia, et ille abutitur eo in superbiam, God gave him space for repentance, but he has abused it through pride. This is by no means conformable to the original. I think the words should be translated thus:—"He gives them, i. e. (the guards) to him for security, and he leans upon them; yet his eyes are upon their ways." Though he have taken the guards, mentioned in the preceding verse, for his personal defence, and for this purpose he uses them; yet he is full of diffidence, and he is continually watching them lest they should be plotting his destruction. The true picture of an Eastern tyrant. Without are fightings; within are fears.

Verse 24. They are exalted for a little while] Such tyrants are exalted for a time, for God putteth down one and raiseth up another; but he turns his hand against them, and they are gone. They are removed by his justice as all of the same character have been, and shall be: time and judgment shall mow them down as the grass, and crop them off as the ears of ripe corn. They may flourish for a time, and continue their oppressions; but they shall at last come to an untimely end. Few tyrants ever visit the eternal world siccā martē, but by a violent death. All Eastern history is full of this great fact.

Verse 25. And if it be not so now] Job has proved by examples that the righteous are often oppressed; that the wicked often triumph over the just; that the impious are always wretched even in the midst of their greatest prosperity; and he defies his friends to show one flaw in his argument, or an error in his illustration of it; and that existing facts are farther proofs of what he has advanced.

In the preceding chapters we find Job's friends having whereon he resteth; yet * his eyes are upon their ways.

24 They are exalted for a little while, but * are gone and brought low; they are * taken out of the way as all other, and cut off as the tops of the ears of corn.

25 And if it be not so now, who will make me a liar and make my speech nothing worth?

x Heb. are not.—y Heb. closed up.

continual recourse to this assertion, which it is the grand object of all their discourses to prove, viz. The righteous are so distinguished in the approbation of God, that they live always in prosperity, and die in peace.

On the other hand, Job contends that the dispensations of providence are by no means thus equal in this life; that experience shows that the righteous are often in adversity, and the wicked in power and prosperity.

Job's friends had also endeavoured to prove that if a reported good man fell into adversity, it was a proof that his character had been mistaken, that he was an internal sinner and hypocrite; and that God, by these manifest proofs of his disapprobation, unmasked him. Hence they charged Job with hypocrisy and secret sins, because he was now suffering adversity; and that his sins must be of the most heinous nature, because his afflictions were uncommonly great. This Job repels by appeals to numerous facts where there was nothing equivocal in the character: where the bad was demonstrably bad, and yet in prosperity; and the good demonstrably good, and yet in adversity. It is strange that none of these could hit on a middle way; viz. The wicked may be in prosperity; but he is ever miserable in his soul: the righteous may be in adversity; but he is ever happy in his God. In these respects, God's ways are always equal.

On ver. 14. I have referred to the case of unfortunate men who, falling into adversity, madly have recourse to plunder to restore their ruined circumstances. The following anecdote is told of the justly celebrated Dr. Sharp, archbishop of York, the grandfather of that highly benevolent, useful, learned, and eminent man, Granville Sharp, Esq. lately deceased, with whom I had for several years the honour of a personal acquaintance.

"Never was any man, as well by the tenderness of his nature as by the impulse of religion, better disposed to succour the distressed, and relieve the necessities of the poor; to which merciful offices he had so strong an inclination, that no reasonable solicitations were ever in danger of meeting with a repulse. Nay, he was more prone to seek out proper objects of his bounty, than to reject them when recommended; and so far was his charity from any suspicion of being extorted by importunity, that it appeared rather a delight than uneasiness to him to extend his liberality upon all proper occasions."

For the same reason, a singular anecdote of the archbishop, related in the London Chronicle of August 13, 1785, and always credited by his family, may be thought worth preserving:

"It was his lordship's custom to have a saddle-horse attend his carriage, that, in case of fatigue from sitting, he might take the refreshment of a ride. As he was thus going to his episcopal residence, and was got a mile or two before his carriage, a decent well-looking young man came up with him; and, with a trembling hand and a faltering tongue, presented a pistol to his lordship's breast, and demanded his money. The archbishop, with great composure, turned about; and, looking steadfastly at him, desired he would remove that dangerous weapon, and tell him fairly his condition. 'Sir! Sir!' with great agitation, cried the youth; 'No words, 'tis not a time, your money instantly.' 'Hear me, young man, said the archbishop, 'you see I am an old man, and my life is of very little consequence; yours seem for otherwise. I am named Sharp, and am archbishop of York; my carriage and servants are behind. Tell me what money you want, and who you are, and I will not injure you, but prove a friend. Here, take this; and now ingenuously tell me, how much you want to make you independent of so destructive a business as you are now engaged in.' 'O Sir,' replied the man, 'I detest the business as much as you. I am—but—but—at home there are creditors who will not stay—fifty pounds, my lord, indeed would do what no tongue besides my own can tell.' 'Well, Sir, I take it on your word; and, upon my honour, if you will in a day or two, call on me at ———, what I have now given shall be made up that sum.' The highwayman looked at him, was silent, and went off; and, at the time appointed, actually waited on the archbishop, and assured his lordship his words had left impressions which nothing could ever destroy.

CHAPTER XXV.

Bildad, the Shuhite, in an irregular speech, shows that God's dominion is supreme, his armies innumerable, and his providence extended over all, 1-3. That man cannot be justified before God; that even the heavenly bodies cannot be reputed pure in his sight; much less man who is naturally weak and sinful, 4-6.

Then answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said, a James 1. 17.—b Ch. 4. 17, Ec. 4. 14, H.

2 Dominion and fear are with him, he maketh peace in his high places.

"Nothing more transpired for a year and a half or more; when one morning a person knocked at his Grace's gate, and with a peculiar earnestness desired to see him. The archbishop ordered the stranger to be brought in. He entered the room where his lordship was; but had scarce advanced a few steps before his countenance changed, his knees tottered, and he sank almost breathless on the floor. On recovering, he requested an audience in private. The apartment being cleared, 'My Lord,' said he, 'you cannot have forgotten the circumstances at such a time and place; gratitude will never suffer them to be obliterated from my mind. In me, my lord, you now behold that once most wretched of mankind; but now, by your inexpressible humanity, rendered equal, perhaps superior, in happiness to millions. Oh, my lord, tears for awhile preventing his utterance, 'tis you, 'tis you, that have saved me, body and soul; 'tis you that have saved a dear and much loved wife, and a little brood of children whom I tendered dearer than my life. Here are the fifty pounds; but never shall I find language to testify what I feel. Your God is your witness; your deed itself is your glory; and may heaven and all its blessings be your present and everlasting reward. I was the younger son of a wealthy man; your lordship knows him: his name was ——. My marriage alienated his affection; and my brother withdrew his love, and left me to sorrow and penury. A month since my brother died a bachelor and intestate. What was his, is become mine; and, by your astonishing goodness, I am now at once the most penitent, the most grateful, and happiest of my species.'"

See Prince Hoar's life of Granville Sharp, Esq. p. 13. I HAVE no doubt there have been several cases of a similar kind, when the first step in delinquency was urged by necessity; but few of such wretched adventurers have met with an Archbishop Sharp. An early and pious education is the only means, under God, to prevent such dangerous steps, which generally lead to the most fearful catastrophe. Teach a child that whom God loveth he chasteneth. Teach him that God suffers men to hunger and be in want, that he may try them if they will be faithful, and do them good in their latter end. Teach him, that he who patiently and meekly bears providential afflictions shall be relieved and exalted in due time. Teach him that it is no sin to die in the most abject poverty and affliction, brought on in the course of divine providence; but that any attempts to alter his condition by robbery, knavery, cozening, and fraud, will be distinguished with heavy curses from the Almighty, and necessarily end in perdition and ruin. A child thus educated is not likely to abandon himself to unlawful courses.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXV.

Verse 1. Bildad the Shuhite] This is the last attack on Job: the others felt themselves foiled, though they had not humility enough to acknowledge it; but would not again return to the attack. Bildad has little to say; and that little is very little to the point. He makes a few assertions, particularly in reference to what Job had said in the commencement of the preceding chapter, of his desire to appear before God, and have his case tried by him, as he had the utmost confidence that his innocence should be fully proved. For this Bildad reprehends Job with arguments which had been brought forth often in this controversy, and as repeatedly confuted, chap. iv. 13. and xv. 14, 15, 16.

Verse 2. Dominion and fear are with him] God is an absolute sovereign; his fear is on all the hosts of heaven; and, by his sovereignty, he establishes and preserves order in the heavens, and among all the inhabitants of the eternal world:—How canst thou, therefore, dare to appeal to him, or desire to appear before him?

Verse 3. Is there any number of his armies?] He has troops innumerable; he can serve himself of all his creatures; every thing may be a mean of help or destruction according to his divine will. When he purposes to save, none can destroy; and when he is determined to destroy, none can save. It is vain to trust in his creatures against himself.

Upon whom doth not his light arise?] That is, his or how can he be clean that is born of a woman?

providence rules over all; he is universal Lord; he causes his sun to arise on the evil and good, and sends his rain on the just and unjust.

Verse 4. How then can man be justified?] Or, how u-mah, With what shall a man be justified with God? Though this is no conclusion from Bildad's premises, yet the question is of the highest importance to man. Neither Bildad, nor any of his fellows, could answer it: the doctrine of redemption, through the blood of the cross, was then known only through types and shadows. We, who live in the Gospel dispensation, can readily answer the question. With what shall miserable man (won enosh) be justified with God?—Ans. By bringing forward by faith, to the throne of the divine justice, the sacrificial offering of the Lord Jesus Christ; and confiding absolutely in it, as being a full, sufficient, and complete atonement and sacrifice for his sins, and for the salvation of a lost world.

How, or, with what (won u-mah) shall he be clean that is born of a woman?—Ans. By receiving that grace, or heavenly influence, communicated by the power and energy of the eternal Spirit, applying to the heart the efficacy of that blood which cleanses from all unrighteousness. This, and this only, is the way in which a sinner, when truly penitent, can be justified before God; and in which a believer, convinced of indwelling sin, can be sanctified, and cleansed from all unrighteousness. This is the only means of justification and sanctification, without which there can be no glorification. And these two great works, which constitute the whole of salvation, have been procured for a lost world by the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, who was delivered for our offences, and rose again for our justification. To whom be glory and dominion now and for evermore, Amen!

Verse 5. Behold even to the moon, and it shineth not] It is continually changing its appearance. It never appears twice in its whole revolution with the same face: it is ever waning or waxing; and its face is variegated with opaque spots. Its changeableness can never be compared with the unchangeable nature of God.

Yea, the stars are not pure in his sight?] Whatever their excellence may be as stars, it is nothing in comparison with him from whom they have derived their being and splendour. See the notes on chap. iv. 18. and xv. 14—16. The Targum reads: "Behold, the moon is as yet spotted in her eastern part; the sun shines not; and the stars are not pure in his sight."

Some think that by stars are meant those angels who kept not their first estate: this may be so; but I cannot see it in the text. It may, however, mean the heavenly host, as it is supposed to do, chap. xxviii. 7. but I still must hesitate on the propriety of such applications.

'Tis probable this speech of Bildad was delivered in the night season, when clouds interrupted the bright shining of the moon. The third verse seems to refer immediately to the stars, which, to the naked eye, are innumerable. The sun is not mentioned because of his absence.

This speech of Bildad is both confused and inconclusive. His reasoning is absurd, and he draws false conclusions from his premises. In the third verse, he says, "Is there any number of his armies? and upon whom does not his light arise?" But how absurd is the conclusion which he draws from his questions: "How then can a man be justified with God, or he be clean who is born of a woman?"

This has no relation to the premises: but still to us the question is not difficult, and has already been answered in the notes. "A man can be justified with God," through the blood of Christ—"And he can be clean who is born of a woman," through the sanctification of the Spirit.

Verse 6. How much less man, that is a worm? Or, as the Targum:—"How much more man who in his life is a reptile; and the son of man who in his death is a worm." Almost all the versions read: "Truly man is corruption, and the son of man a worm." The original is degradingly expressive: "Even because won enosh, miserable man, is won rimmah, a crawling worm; and the son of Adam, who is won toledah, a worm, or rather maggot, from its eating into, and dividing, certain substances." Parkhurst. Thus endeth Bildad, the Shuhite, who endeavoured to

CHAPTER XXVI.

Job, perceiving that his friends could no longer support their arguments in the ground they had assumed, sharply reproves them for their want both of wisdom and feeling.

1-4 Shows that the power and wisdom of God are manifest in the words of creation and providence; gives several proofs; and then adds, that these are a small specimen of his infinite skill, and unshaken power. 5-14.

15-23 BUT Job answered and said, 2 How hast thou helped him that is without power? how savest thou the arm that hath no strength? 3 How hast thou counselled him that hath no wisdom? and how hast thou plentifully declared the thing as it is? 4 To whom hast thou uttered words? and whose spirit came from thee?

d Heb. A. 6.—1 Sam. 2. 9.—(Or, with the inhabitants.—) Ps. 138. 9, 11. Prov. 15. 11. Job. 4. 13.—Ch. 8. 3. Ps. 24. 2 & 204. 4, 6.—1 Prov. 24. 4 speak on a subject which he did not understand; and, having got on bad ground, he was soon confounded in his own mind, spoke incoherently, argued inconclusively, and came abruptly and suddenly to an end. Thus Job's three friends being confounded, he was left to pursue his own way: they trouble him no more, and he proceeds in triumph to the end of the thirty-first chapter.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVI.

Verse 2. How hast thou helped him? This seems a species of irony. How wonderfully has thou counselled the unskilful, and strengthened the weak! Alas for you! ye could not give what ye did not possess! In this way the Chaldees understood these verses:—"Why hast thou pretended to give succour, when thou art without strength? And save, while thy arm is weak? Why hast thou given counsel, when thou art without understanding? And suppose that thou hast shown the very essence of wisdom!"

Verse 4. Whose spirit came from thee? Mr. Goode renders the verse thus: From whom hast thou pillaged speeches? And whose spirit hath issued forth from thee? The retort is peculiarly severe; and refers immediately to the proverbial sayings, which, in several of the preceding answers, have been adduced against the irritated sufferer; for which see chap. viii. 11-19. xv. 20-35. some of which he has already complained of, as in chap. xii. 3. and following. I concur most fully, therefore, with Dr. Stock in regarding the remainder of this chapter as a sample, ironically exhibited by Job, of the harangues on the power and greatness of God; which he supposes his friends to have taken out of the mouths of other men, to deck their speeches with borrowed lustre. Only, in decanting on the same subject, he shows how much he himself can go beyond them in eloquence and sublimity.

Job intimates that, whatever spirit they had, it was not the Spirit of God; because in their answers falsehood was found.

Verse 5. Dead things are formed from under the waters.] This verse, as it stands in our version, seems to convey no meaning; and the Hebrew is obscure רפאים רפאים He-rephaim, "the Rephaim," certainly means not dead things; nor can there be any propriety in saying that dead things, or things without life, are formed under the waters; for such things are formed every where in the earth, and under the earth, as well as under the waters.

The Vulgate translates:—Eccæ gigantes gemunt sub aquis, et qui habitant cum eis. Behold the giants, and those who dwell with them, groan under the waters.

The Septuagint:—Μη γίγαντες γεννηθήσονται νεκράς αδαίς, καί τινος γίγαντες αδαίς. Are not the giants and their companions formed from under the waters?

The Chaldee:—אשר ירבוהו דמחומותו זרמין חסון סלרע. אשור ירבוהו לויס Eposar de-gibrayya de-mithmazmaxin githbarayan so-inanun millerit le-maiya u-mashreyatohon. "Can the trebling giants be regenerated, when they and their hosts are under the water?"

The Syriac and Arabic:—"Behold the giants are slain, and are drawn out of the water." None of these appear to give any sense by which the true meaning can be determined.

There is probably here an allusion to the destruction of the earth by the general deluge. Moses, speaking concerning the state of the earth before the flood, says, Gen. vi. 4. "There were giants nephalim in the earth in those days." Now it is likely that Job means the same by swar-rephaim, as Moses does by the nephalim; and both may refer to the antediluvians, who were all, for their exceeding great iniquities, overwhelmed by the waters of the deluge. Can those mighty men, and their neighbours, all the sinners who have been gathered to them since, be regenerated from under the waters, by which they were judicially overwhelmed?

Mr. Goode thinks, the shades of the heroes of former times, the gigantic spectres, the mighty or enormous dead, are meant.

5 Dead things are formed from under the waters, and the inhabitants thereof.

5 Hell is naked before him, and destruction hath no covering.

7 He stretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing.

8 He bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds; and the cloud is not rent under them.

9 He holdeth back the face of his throne, and spreadeth his cloud upon it.

10 He hath compassed the waters with bounds, until the day and night come to an end.

k Ch. 26. 9. Ps. 104. 7. & 104. 8. Prov. 8. 29. Jer. 6. 22.—1 Heb. until the end of light with darkness.

I greatly question whether sea-monsters be not intended, such as porpoises, sharks, narwals, grampus, and whales. We know, however, that an opinion anciently prevailed, that the Titans, a race of men of enormous stature, rebelled against the gods, and endeavoured to scale heaven by placing one mountain on the top of another; and that they and their structure were cast down by the thunder of the deities, and buried under the earth and sea; and that their struggles to arise produce the earthquakes which are in certain countries. Now, although this opinion is supported by the most respectable antiquity among the heathens, it is not to be supposed that in the word of God there can be any countenance given to an opinion at once as absurd as it is monstrous: but still the poet may use the language of the common people. I must, therefore, either refer the passage here to the antediluvians, or to the vast sea monsters mentioned above.

Verse 6. Hell is naked before him] Sheol, the place of the dead, or of separate spirits, is always in his view: And there is no covering to Abaddon, the place of the destroyer, where destruction reigns, and where those dwell who are eternally separated from God. The ancients thought that hell or Tartarus was a vast space in the centre, or at the very bottom of the earth. See VIRGIL, ÆN. vi. 5.

Tom Tartarus ipse
De patet in scopulis tectum, tenditque sub umbris, Quantus ad æthereum cœli suspensus Olympus.
Hic genus æthereum terra, Thætes, pulvis,
Fulmine dejicit, fundo volvuntur in limo.
Full twice as deep, the dungeon of the fiends,
The huge Tartarus gloomy gulf, descends
Before these regions, as these regions lie
From the bright regions of yon eth'ral sky.
Here roar the Thætes race, th' enormous birth;
The ancient offspring of the torments earth;
Flare'd by the burning bolts of old they fell;
And still roll following in the depths of hell.

Plat.

And some have supposed that there is an allusion to this opinion in the above passage, as well as in several others in the Old Testament: but it is not likely that the sacred writers would countenance an opinion that certainly has nothing in fact or philosophy to support it. Yet still a poet may avail himself of popular opinions.

Verse 7. He stretcheth out the north over the empty place] ארץ by li lohu, to the hollow waste. The same word as is used Gen. i. 2. The earth was without form, ארץ lohu. The north must here mean the north pole, or northern hemisphere; and, perhaps what is here stated may refer to the opinion that the earth was a vast extended plain, and the heavens poised upon it, resting on this plain all round the horizon. Of the south the inhabitants of Idumea knew nothing; nor could they have any notion of inhabitants in that hemisphere.

Hangeth the earth upon nothing] The Chaldee says: "He lays the earth upon the waters, nothing sustaining it."

Verse 8. He bindeth up the waters] Drives the aqueous particles together, which were raised by evaporation, so that, being condensed, they form clouds, which float in the atmosphere till meeting with strong currents of wind, or by the agency of the electric fluid, they are farther condensed; and then, becoming too heavy to be sustained in the air, fall down in the form of rain; then, in this poetic language, the cloud is rent under them.

Verse 9. He holdeth back the face of his throne] Though all these are most evident effects of an omniscient and almighty power, yet the great agent is not personally discoverable; he dwelleth in light unapproachable, and in mercy hides himself from the view of his creatures. The words, however, may refer to those obsecrations of the face of heaven, and the hiding of the body of the sun, when the atmosphere is laden with dense vapours, and the rain begins to be poured down on the earth.

Verse 10. He hath compassed the waters with bounds] Perhaps this refers merely to the circle of the horizon, the line that terminates light, and commences darkness, called here חשך ארץ ארץ ארץ Ad trichthi aor im chashkek, 11 The pillars of heaven tremble, and are astonished at his reproof.

12 He divideth the sea with his power, and by his understanding he smiteth through the proud.

m Exod. 14. 21. Psalms 74. 13. Isai. 51. 15. Jer. 31. 25.—a Neh. 8. 11.

"until the completion of light with darkness." Or, if we take תִּלְכִּיחַ takliith, here to be the same with תִּלְכִּיחַ takleth, Exod. xxv. 4. and elsewhere, which we translate blue, it may mean that sombre sky-blue appearance of the horizon at the time of twilight, i. e. between light and darkness; the line where the one is terminating, and the other commencing; or, he so circumscribes the waters, retaining them in their own place, that they shall not be able to overflow the earth until day and night, that is, time itself, come to an end.

Verse 11. The pillars of heaven tremble] This is probably a poetical description either of thunder, or of an earthquake:

"He shakes creation with his rod; Earth, sea, and heaven, confess him God."

But there may be an allusion to the high mountains, which were anciently esteemed by the common people as the pillars on which the heavens rested; and, when these were shaken with earthquakes, it might be said the pillars of heaven tremble. Mount Atlas was supposed to be one of those pillars; and this gave rise to the fable of Atlas being a man who bore the heavens on his shoulders. The Greek and Roman poets frequently use this image. Titus SILIUS ITALICUS, lib. 1. ver. 202:

Atlas subiecto tractatur vertice caelum; Nidara subiferum fulci caput, aethraeque Erigit aeternum compage ardua caeli: Cauda berbe gelu, fontibus immensibus umbræ Fines aëre premis; vadant caesa tempora mundi Nimbosque ruunt epumantia flamma rictu.

Atlas' broad shoulders prop th' incumbent skies: Aroun't his cloud-girt head the stars arise. His towering neck supports th' aethereal way; And o'er his brow black woods their gloom display. Hoar is his beard; winds round his temples rear: And from his jaw the cushing torrents pour.—J. B. C.

Verse 12. He divideth the sea with his power] Here is a manifest allusion to the passage of the Red sea by the Israelites, and the overthrow of Pharaoh and his host; according to the opinion of the most eminent critics.

He smiteth through the proud] רַחַב Rahab, the very name by which Egypt is called Isa. ii. 9. and elsewhere. Calmet remarks:—"This appears to refer only to the passage of the Red sea, and the destruction of Pharaoh. Were we not prepossessed with the opinion that Job died before Moses, every person at the first view of the subject must consider it in this light." I am not thus prepossessed. Let Job live when he might, I am satisfied the Book of Job was written long after the death of Moses, and not earlier than the days of Solomon, if not later. The farther I go in the work, the more this conviction is deepened; and the opposite sentiment appears to be perfectly gratuitous.

Verse 13. By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens] See the observations below.

Verse 14. Lo, these are parts of his ways] כִּסְפוֹ ketsoth, the ends, or extremities, the outlines, an indistinct sketch, of his eternal power and Godhead.

How little a portion is heard] יָזַב zhemets, a mere whisper; admirably opposed, as Mr. Goode has well observed, to רָעַם radm, the thunder, mentioned in the next clause. As the thunder is to a whisper; so are the tremendous and infinitely varied works of God to the faint outlines exhibited in the above discourse. Every reader will relish the dignity, propriety, and sense, of these expressions. They force themselves on the observation of even the most heedless.

By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens] Numerous are the opinions relative to the true meaning of this verse. Some think it refers to the clearing of the sky after a storm, such as appears to be described ver. 11, 12. and suppose his spirit means the wind, which he directs to sweep and cleanse the face of the sky, by which the splendor of the day or the lustre of the night is restored. And by the crooked flying or aerial serpent, (as it is variously rendered) the ecliptic is supposed to be meant, as the sun's apparent course in it appears to be serpentine in his approach to, and recession from, each of the tropics. This tortuous line may be seen on any terrestrial globe. Many will object to this notion as too refined for the time of Job; but this I could easily admit, as astronomy had a very early existence among the Arabians, if not its origin. But with me the chief objection lies against the obscurity of the allusion, if it be one; for it must require no small ingenuity, and almost the spirit of divination, to find out 13 By his spirit he hath garnished the heavens; his hand hath formed the crooked serpent.

14 Lo, these are parts of his ways: but how little a portion is heard of him? but the thunder of his power who can understand?

Ps. 74. 13. & 75. 13. Jer. 51. 26.—a Job. prole.—p Ps. 28. 6.—q Isai. 2. 1.

the sun's oblique path in the zodiac in the words, His hand hath formed the crooked serpent. Others have imagined that the allusion is to the lightning in that zig-zag form which it assumes, when discharged from one cloud into another, during a thunder storm. This is, at once, a natural and very apparent sense. To conduct and manage the lightning is most certainly a work which requires the skill and omnipotence of God, as much as garnishing the heavens by his spirit, dividing the sea by his power, or causing the pillars of heaven to tremble by his reproof. Others think that the act of the creation of the solar system is intended to be expressed; which is, in several parts of the Sacred Writings, attributed to the Spirit of God, Gen. i. 2. Ps. xxxiii. 6. And that the crooked serpent means either Satan, who deceived our first parents, or huge aquatic animals, for in Isa. xxvii. 1. we find the leviathan and dragon of the sea called נַחַשׁ בָּרִיחַ nachash bariach, the very terms that are used by Job in this place. In that day the Lord with his sore, and great, and strong sword, shall punish leviathan, the piercing serpent, (נַחַשׁ בָּרִיחַ nachash bariach) even leviathan that crooked serpent (נַחַשׁ קַלְלוֹת נַחַשׁ nachash kallalon), and he shall slay the dragon (נַחַשׁ תַּנְיִן ha-tannim) that is in the sea. And we know that in Gen. i. 21. הַגְּדֹלִים הַיָּם ha-gedolim, which we translate great whales, includes all sea-monsters, or vast aquatic animals. Calmet who, without hesitation, adopts this sentiment, says, "I see no necessity to have recourse to allegory here. After having exhibited the effects of the sovereign power of God in the heavens, in the clouds, in the vast collection of waters, in the sea, it was natural enough for Job to speak of the production of fishes." The intelligent Dr. Sherlock gives another interpretation. After strongly expressing his disapprobation of the opinion that Job should descend, after speaking of the creation of the heavens and their host, to the formation of snakes and adders, he supposes "that Job here intended to oppose that grand religious system of Sabæism which prevailed in his time, and to which, in other parts of this book, he alludes; a system which acknowledged two opposite independent principles by which the universe was governed; and paid divine adoration to the celestial luminaries. Suppose, therefore, Job to be acquainted with the fall of man, and the part ascribed to the serpent of the introduction of evil, see how aptly the parts cohere. In opposition to the idolatrous practice of the time, he asserts God to be the Maker of all the host of heaven. By his spirit he garnished the heavens. In opposition to the false notion of two independent principles, he asserts God to be the Maker of him who was the author of evil, His hand hath formed the crooked serpent; you see how properly the garnishing of the heavens, and the forming of the serpent, are joined together. That this is the ancient traditiary explication of this place we have undeniable evidence from the translation of the Septuagint, who render the latter part of this verse, which relates to the serpent, in this manner:—καταστραφει δε αβαρατος εραστραρν, By a decree he destroyed the apostate dragon. The Syriac and Arabic versions are to the same effect: They say, And his hand slew the flying serpent.

"These translators apply the place to the punishment inflicted on the serpent: and it comes to the same thing; for the punishing the serpent is as clear an evidence of God's power over the author of evil, as the creating him. We need not wonder to see so much concern in this book to maintain the supremacy of God, and to guard it against every false notion; for this was the theme, the business, of the author." Bp. Sherlock, on Prophecy, Diss. ii.

From the contradictory opinions on this passage, the reader will no doubt feel cautious what mode of interpretation he adopts, and the absolute necessity of admitting no texts of doubtful interpretation as vouchers for the essential doctrines of Christianity. Neither metaphors, allegories, similies, nor figurative expressions of any kind, should ever be adduced or appealed to as proofs of any article in the Christian faith. We have reason to be thankful that this is at present the general opinion of the most rational divines of all sects and parties; and that the allegory and metaphor-men are every where vanishing from the horizon of the church. Scriptural Christianity is prevailing with a strong hand, and going forward with a firm and steady step.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Job strongly asserts his innocence, determines to maintain it, and to avoid every evil way, 1-7. Shows his abhorrence of the hypocrite by describing his infamous character, accumulated miseries, and wretched end, 8-23.

1. MOREOVER Job continued his parable, and said,

2 As God liveth, who hath taken away my judgment; and the Almighty, who hath vexed my soul;

3 All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils;

4 My lips shall not speak wickedness, nor my tongue utter deceit.

5 God forbid that I should justify you: till I die I will not remove my integrity from me.

6 My righteousness I hold fast, and will not let it go: my heart shall not reproach me so long as I live.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVII.

Verse 1. Continued his parable] After having delivered the preceding discourse, Job appears to have paused to see if any of his friends chose to make any reply: but, finding them all silent, he resumed his discourse, which is here called his parable, his parable, his authoritative weighty discourse; from שׁוֹר מַשָּׁל, to exercise rule, authority, dominion, or power. Parkhurst. And it must be granted that, in this speech, he assumes great boldness, exhibits his own unshaken character, and treats his friends with little ceremony.

Verse 2. Who hath taken away my judgment] Who has turned aside my cause, and has not permitted it to come to a hearing, where I might have justice done to me; but has abandoned me to the harsh and uncharitable judgment of my enemies. There appears to be a great want of reverence in these words of Job: he speaks with a degree of irritation, if not bitterness, which cannot be justified. No man should speak thus of his Maker.

Verse 3. All the while my breath is in me] As Job appears to allude to the creation of Adam, whom God made out of the dust of the earth, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, so that he became a living soul, the whole of Job's assertion here may be no more than a periphrasis for, As long as I live and have my understanding. Indeed נְשָׁמַתִּי nishmati, may be rendered, my mind or understanding, and רוּחַ אֱלֹהִים ruach Eloah, the breath of God, the principle of animal life; that same that he breathed into Adam; for it is there said, Gen. ii. 7. He breathed into his nostrils, נִשְׁמַת חַיִּים nishmat chayim, the breath of lives, or that principle from which animal and spiritual life proceeds; in consequence of which he became רוּחַ לֵבֶנֶפֶשׁ חַיָּה le-nephesh chayyah, an intelligent or rational animal.

Verse 4. My lips shall not speak wickedness] As I have hitherto lived in all good conscience before God, as he knoweth; so will I continue to live.

Verse 5. God forbid] לֹא אֲרַיֶּה lo' arayah li, far be it from me that I should justify you; that I should now, by any kind of acknowledgment of wickedness or hypocrisy, justify your harsh judgments. You say that God afflicts me for my crimes: I say, and God knows its truth, that I have not sinned so as to draw down any such judgment upon me. Your judgment, therefore, is pronounced at your own risk.

Verse 6. My righteousness I hold fast] I stand firmly on this ground; I have endeavoured to live an upright life, and my afflictions are not the consequence of my sins.

My heart shall not reproach me] I shall take care so to live that I shall have a conscience void of offence before God and man. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God, 1 John iii. 21. This seems to be Job's meaning.

Verse 7. Let mine enemy be as the wicked] Let my accuser be proved a lying and perjured man, because he has laid to my charge things which he cannot prove, and which are utterly false.

Verse 8. What is the hope of the hypocrite] The word צַנְפֵּף chanaph, which we translate, most improperly, hypocrite, means a wicked fellow, a defiled polluted wretch, a rascal, a knave, a man who sticks at nothing in order to gain his ends. In this verse it means a dishonest man, a rogue, who by overreaching, cheating, &c. has amassed a fortune.

When God taketh away his soul] Could he have had any well-grounded hope of eternal blessedness, when he 9 Will God hear his cry when trouble cometh upon him?

10 Will he delight himself in the Almighty; will he always call upon God?

11 I will teach you by the hand of God: that which is with the Almighty will I not conceal.

12 Behold, all ye yourselves have seen it; why then are ye thus altogether vain?

13 This is the portion of a wicked man with God, and the heritage of oppressors, which they shall receive of the Almighty.

14 If his children be multiplied, it is for the sword: and his offspring shall not be satisfied with bread.

15 Those that remain of him shall be buried in death: and his widows shall not weep.

was acquiring earthly property by guilt and deceit? And of what avail will this property be when his soul is summoned before the judgment-seat. A righteous man yields up his soul to God; the wicked does not, because he is afraid of God, of death, and of eternity. God, therefore, takes the soul away, forces it out of the body. Mr. Blair gives us an affecting picture of the death of a wicked man. Though well known, I shall insert it as a striking comment on this passage:—

How shocking must thy summons be, O death,
To him that is at ease in his possessions;
Who, counting on long years of pleasure here,
Is quite unprepared for that world to come!
In that dread moment, how the frantic soul
Raves round the walls of her clay tenement;
Runs to each avenue, and shrieks for help,
Hot shrieks in vain! How wistfully she looks
On all she's leaving, now no longer here!
A little longer, yet a little longer,
Oh, might she stay to wash away her stains,
And fit her for her passage! Mourful sigh!
Her very eyes weep blood; and every groan
She heaves is mingled with horror. But the foe,
Like a staunch murderer, steady to his purpose,
Pursues her close, through every lane of life;
Nor mixes once the track, but presses on;
Till forc'd at last to the tremendous verge,
At once she sinks to everlasting night. The Grave.

The Chaldee has:— What can the detractor expect, who has gathered together מַמּוֹן מַמּוֹן mamon dishekar, the mammon of unrighteousness, when God plucks out his soul? The Septuagint:— τίς γὰρ ἐπεὶ ἐρίσθη αἰσθη, ὅτι σφραγίσθη; My revenues are known to thee as unrighteous: For what is the hope of the ungodly that he should wait for? shall he, by hoping in the Lord, be, therefore saved? Mr. Goods translates differently from all the versions:—

Yet what is the hope of the wicked that he should prosper,
That God should keep his soul in quiet?

I believe our version gives as true a sense as any; and the words appear to have been in the eye of our Lord, when he said, "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Matt. xvi. 26.

Verse 11. I will teach you by the hand of God] Relying on divine assistance, and not speaking out of my own head, or quoting what others have said, I will teach you what the mind of the Almighty is; and I will conceal nothing. Job felt that the good hand of his God was upon him; and that, therefore, he should make no mistake in his doctrines. In this way the Chaldee understood the words בְּיַד אֱלֹהִים b'nehuat Eloah, by the prophecy of God. Those who reject the literal meaning, which conveys a very good sense, may adopt the translation of Mr. Goods, which has much to recommend it:—"I will teach you concerning the dealings of God."

Verse 12. Ye yourselves have seen it] Your own experience and observation have shown you that the righteous are frequently in affliction, and the wicked in affluence.

Why then are ye thus altogether vain?] The original is very emphatical: הֲבֵל תִּבְהוּ hebel tebehalu, and well expressed by Mr. Goods:—"Why then should ye thus babble babblings?" If our language would allow it, we might say vanitize vanity.

Verse 13. This is the portion of a wicked man] Job now commences his promised teaching; and what follows is a description of the lot or portion of the wicked man and of tyrants. And this remuneration shall they have with God in general; though the hand of man be not laid upon them. Though he does not at all times show his displeasure against the wicked, by reducing them to a state of poverty and affliction: yet he often does it, so that men 19 The rich man shall lie down, but he shall not be gathered : he openeth his eyes, and he is not.

20 Terrors take hold on him as waters, a tempest stealeth him away in the night.

21 The east wind carrieth him away, and he departeth : and as a storm hurleth him out of his place.

23 Men shall clap their hands at him, and shall hiss him out of his place.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

Job, in showing the vanity of human pursuits, in reference to human wisdom, mentions mining for and refining gold and silver, 1. Iron and other minerals, 2. The culture of maning, 3, 4. Produce of grain for bread from the earth, and manure of the iron under it, 5. Spoken of precious stones and gold dust, 6. Of the husbandry of fowls and wild beasts in finishing their way, 7, 8. And of the industry and successful attempts of men in mining and other operations, 9-11. But shows that with all their industry, skill, and perseverance, they cannot find out true wisdom, 12. Of which he gives the most exalted character, 13-22. And shows that God alone, the fountain of wisdom, knows and can teach it, 23-27. And in what this true wisdom consists, 28.

SURELY there is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold where they fine it.

may see it : yet, at other times, he seems to pass them by, reserving their judgment for another world, that men may not forget that there is a day of judgment and perdition for ungodly men, and a future recompense for the righteous.

Verse 14. If his children be multiplied] As numerous families were supposed to be a proof of the benediction of the Almighty, Job shows that this is not always the case ; for the offspring of the wicked shall be partly cut off by violent deaths, and partly reduced to great poverty.

Verse 15. Those that remain of him] וְיָרֵד עִירָדָיו, his remains, whether meaning himself personally, or his family.

Shall be buried in death] Shall come to utter and remediless destruction. Death shall have his full conquest over them, and the grave its complete victory. These are no common dead. All the sting, all the wound, and all the poison, of sin, remains : and so evident are God's judgments in his and their removal, that even widows shall not weep for them : the public shall not bewail him ; for, when the wicked perish there is shouting.

Mr. Goode, following the Chaldee, translates : entombed in corruption, or in the pestilence. But I see no reason why we should desert the literal reading. Entombed in corruption gives no nervous sense, in my judgment ; for in corruption are the high and the low, the wicked and the good, entombed : but buried in death, is much more nervous and expressive. Death itself is the place where he shall lie ; he shall have no redemption, no resurrection to life. Death shall ever have dominion over him. The expression is very similar to that in Luke xvi. 22. as found in several versions and MSS. The rich man died and was buried in hell ; and lifting up his eyes, being in torment, he saw, &c. See my note there.

Verse 16. Though he heap up silver] Though he amass riches in the greatest abundance, he shall not enjoy them. Unsanctified wealth is a curse to its possessor. Money, of all earthly possessions, is the most dangerous, as it is the readiest agent to do good or evil. He that perverts it is doubly cursed, because it affords him the most immediate means of sinful gratification ; and he can sin more in an hour through this, than he can in a day or week by any other kind of property. On the other hand, they who use it aright, have it in their power to do the most prompt and immediate good. Almost every kind of want may be speedily relieved by it. Hence, he who uses it as he ought, is doubly blessed ; while he who abuses it is doubly cursed.

Verse 17. The just shall put it on] Money is God's property. "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord ;" and though it may be abused for a time by unrighteous hands, God, in the course of his providence, brings it back to its proper use ; and often the righteous possess the inheritance of the wicked.

Verse 18. He buildeth his house as a moth] With great skill, great pains, and great industry ; but the structure, however skilful, shall be dissolved ; and the materials, however costly, shall be brought to corruption. To its owner it shall be only a temporary habitation, like that which the moth makes in its larva or caterpillar state, during its change from a chrysalis to a winged insect.

As a booth that the keeper maketh] A shed which the watchman, or keeper of a vineyard, erects to cover him from the scorching sun, while watching the ripening grapes, that they may be preserved from depredation. Travellers in the East have observed, that such booths or sheds are made of the lightest and most worthless materials ; and, after the harvest or vintage is in, they are quite neglected, and by the winter rains, &c. are soon dissolved and destroyed.

Verse 19. The rich man shall lie down] In the grave. But he shall not be gathered] Neither have a respectable burial among men, nor be gathered with the righteous in the kingdom of God.

He openeth his eyes] In the morning of the resurrection.

And he is not] He is utterly lost and undone for ever. This seems to be the plain sense of the passage ; and so all the versions appear to have understood it ; but Reiske and some others, by making וְיָרֵד עִירָדָיו, an Arabic word, signifying, not the idea of gathering, but care, anxiety, &c. have quite altered this sense of the passage : and Mr. Goode, who copies them, translates thus : Let the rich man lie down, and care not. I see no manner of occasion to resort to this interpretation, which, in my judgment, gives a sense inferior to that given above, or to the following ; The rich man shall lie down, go to his rest fully persuaded that his property is in perfect safety. But he shall not be gathered, or, he shall not gather, make any farther addition to his stores ; he openeth his eyes in the morning, when he is not ; marauders in the night have stripped him of all his property, as in the case of Job himself ; a case quite probable, and not unfrequent in Arabia, when a hostile tribe makes a sudden incursion, and carries off an immense booty. But I prefer the first meaning, as it is obtained without crucifying the text. Coverdale translates : When the rich man sleepeth, he careth nothing with him : he is gone in the twinkling of an eye.

Verse 20. Terrors take hold on him as waters] They come upon him as an irresistible flood ; and he is overwhelmed as by a tempest in the night, when darkness partly hides his danger, and deprives him of discerning the way to escape.

Verse 21. The east wind carrieth him away] Such as is called by Mr. Goode, a levanter, the urocydon, the eastern storm of Acts xviii. 14.

Verse 22. God shall cast upon him] Or rather the storm mentioned above shall incessantly pelt him, and give him no respite ; nor can he by any means escape from its fury.

Verse 23. Men shall clap their hands at him] These two verses refer to the storm which is to sweep away the ungodly : therefore, the word God in ver. 22. and men in this verse, should be omitted. Ver. 22. "For it shall fall upon him, and not spare : flying from its power, he shall continue to fly." Ver. 23. It shall clap its hands against him, and hiss him וַיִּשְׂרֹק, va-yisrok, shriek, him out of his place." Here the storm is personified, and the wicked actor is hissed and driven by it from off the stage. It seems it was an ancient method to clap the hands against and hiss a man from any public office, who had acted improperly in it. The populace, in European countries, express their disapprobation of public characters who have not pleased them in the same manner, to the present day, by hisses, groans, and the like.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVIII.

Verse 1. Surely there is a vein for the silver] This chapter is the oldest and finest piece of natural history in the world ; and gives us very important information on several curious subjects : and could we ascertain the precise meaning of all the original words, we might, most probably, find out allusions to several useful arts which we are apt to think are of modern, or comparatively modern, invention.

The word מִנְיָ מֶטֶל, mina, which we here translate vein, signifies, literally, a going out, i. e. a mine, or place dug in the earth whence the silver ore is extracted. And this ore lies generally in veins, or loads, running in certain directions.

A place for gold where they fine it] This should rather be translated, A place for gold which they refine. Gold ore has also its peculiar mine, and requires to be refined from earthy impurities.

Verse 2. Iron is taken out of the earth] This most useful metal is hidden under the earth, and men have found out the method of separating it from its ore.

Brass is molten out of the stone.] As brass is a fictitious metal, copper must be the meaning of the Hebrew word נְחֹשֶׁת, nechusheth : literally, the stone is poured out for brass. If we retain the common translation, perhaps a Ver. 4.—p. 22. 4.—p. Or, gold ore.

3 He setteth an end to darkness, and searcheth out all perfection: the ^a stones of darkness, and the ^a shadow of death.

the process of making brass may be that to which Job refers; for this metal is formed from copper melted with the stone calamine: and thus the stone is poured out to make brass.

Verse 3. He setteth an end to darkness] As it is likely Job still refers to mining, the words above may be understood as pointing out the persevering industry of man in penetrating into the bowels of the earth in order to seek for metals and precious stones. Even the stones that lay hidden in the bowels of the earth he has digged for and brought to light: and has penetrated in directions in which the solar light could not be transmitted, so that he appears to have gone to the regions of the shadow of death. Mr. Good's translates:—Man delveth into the region of darkness; and examineth, to the uttermost limit, the stones of darkness and death-shade."

Verse 4. The flood breaketh out from the inhabitant] This passage is very difficult. Some think it refers to mining: others, to navigation. If it refer to the former, it may be intended to point out the waters that spring up when the miners have sunk down to a considerable depth, so that the mine is drowned, and they are obliged to give it up. Previously to the invention of the steam-engine this was generally the case: hence ancient mines may be reopened, and worked to great advantage; because we have the means now to take off the water, which the ancient workers had not. When, therefore, floods break out in those shafts, they are abandoned, and thus they are,

Forgotten of the foot] No man treads there any more. The waters increase ^{וַיִּדְלֻ} dallu, they are elevated, they rise up to a level with the spring, or till they meet with some fissure by which they can escape; and then ^{וַיִּסְוֶה} me-enosh nâu, they are moved or carried away from men, the stream is lost in the bowels of the earth.

Mr. Peters thinks that both this verse, and verse 26. of chap. ix. refer to navigation, then in a state of infancy; for the sea is not so much as mentioned; but ^{וַיִּשְׁחַח} nachal, a torrent or flood, some river or arm of the sea, perhaps, of a few leagues over, which, dividing the several nations, must interrupt their hospitality and commerce with each other, unless by the help of navigation. According to this opinion the verse may be translated and paraphrased thus:—*The flood, rivers and arms of the sea, separateth from the stranger, וַיִּבְדֵּל meim gar, divides different nations and peoples: they are forgotten of the foot, they cannot walk over these waters, they must embark in vessels; then, they dwindle away, ^{וַיִּדְלֻ} dallu, from the size of men, that is, in proportion to their departure from the land they lessen on the sight: ^{וַיִּסְוֶה} nâu, they are tossed up and down, namely, by the action of the waves. This receives some countenance from the Psalmist's fine description, Ps. cvii. 26, 27. of a ship in rough sea: *They mount up to heaven; they go down again to the depths: their soul is melted because of trouble. They reel to and fro, וַיִּשְׁחַח yamou (the same word as above) they stagger like a drunken man. Mr. Good's translation is singular:

He breaketh up the veins from the mines.
Which, though thought nothing of under the foot,
Are drawn forth, are branched among mankind.

This learned man thinks that it applies solely to mining, of which I cannot doubt; and, therefore, adopt the first interpretation: but as to agreement among translators it will be sought in vain. I shall just add Coverdale: Out of the river of water parteth a number the strange people, that knoweth no good neighbourage; such as are rude, unmannetly, and heperstous.

Verse 5. The earth, out of it cometh bread] Or the earth ^{וַיִּצְמַח} mimmennah, from itself, by its own vegetative power, it sends out bread, or the corn of which bread is made.

And under it is turned up as it were fire.] It seems as if this referred to some combustible fossil, similar to our stone coal, which was dug up out of the earth in some places of Arabia. The Chaldees gives a translation conformable to a very ancient opinion which supposed the centre of the earth to be a vast fire, and the place called hell. "The earth from which food proceeds, and under which is gehenna; whose cold snow is converted into the likeness of fire: and the garden of Eden which is the place whose stones are sapphires," &c. The Vulgate has: The land from which bread has been produced has been destroyed by fire. If this be the meaning of the original, there is probably an allusion to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah; and the seventh and eighth verses may be supposed to refer to that catastrophe, there being no place left tangible or visible where those cities once stood; neither fowl nor beast could discern a path there, the whole land being covered with the lake Asphaltites.

Verse 6. The stones—the place of sapphires] In the language of mineralogists, the gangue, matrix, or bed in which the sapphire is found. For a description of this stone, see on ver. 16.

Dust of gold] Or rather, gold dust.

Verse 7. There is a path which no fowl knoweth] The instinct of birds is most surprising. They traverse vast forests, &c. in search of food, at a great distance from the place which they have chosen for their general residence; and return in all weathers without ever missing their track; they also find their own nest without ever mistaking another of the same kind for it. Birds of passage also, after tarrying in a foreign clime for six or seven months, return to their original abode over kingdoms and oceans, without missing their way, or deviating in the least from the proper direction; without even a single object of sight to direct their peregrinations. In such cases even the keen scent of the vulture, and the quick-piercing sight of the eagle would be of no use. It is possible that Job may here refer to undiscovered mines and minerals: that notwithstanding man had already discovered much, yet much remained undiscovered, especially in the internal structure and contents of the earth. Since his time innumerable discoveries have been made—and yet how little do we know! Our various conflicting and contradictory theories of the earth are full proofs of our ignorance, and strong evidences of our folly. The present dogmatical systems of geology itself are almost the re plus ultra of brain-sick visionaries, and system-mad mortals. They talk as confidently of the structure of the globe, and the manner and time in which all was formed, as if they had examined every part from the centre to the circumference; though not a soul of man has ever penetrated two miles in perpendicular depth into the bowels of the earth.

And with this scanty, almost no knowledge, they pretend to build systems of the universe, and blaspheme the revelation of God! Poor souls! All these things are to them a path which no fowl knoweth, which the vulture's eye hath not seen, on which the lion's whelps have not trodden, and by which the fierce lion hath not passed. The wisdom necessary to such investigations is out of their reach; and they have not simplicity of heart to seek it where it may be found.

One of the Chaldee Targums gives a strange turn to this verse.—"The path of the tree of life Sammael, (Satan) though flying like a bird, hath not known; nor hath the eye of Eve beheld it. The children of men have not walked in it; nor hath the serpent turned toward it."

Verse 9. He putteth forth his hand upon the rock] Still there appears to be a reference to mining. Man puts his hand upon the rock; he breaks that to pieces, in order to extract the metals which it contains.

He overturneth the mountains] He excavates, undermines, or digs them away, when in search of the metals contained in them: this is not only poetically, but literally, the case in many instances.

Verse 10. He cutteth out rivers among the rocks] He cuts canals, adits, &c. in the rocks, and drives levels under ground, in order to discover loads or veins of ore. These are often continued a great way under ground; and may be poetically compared to rivers, channels, or canals.

His eye seeth every precious thing] He sinks these shafts, and drives those levels, in order to discover where the precious minerals lie, of which he is in pursuit.

Verse 11. He bindeth the floods] Prevents the risings of springs from drowning the mines; and conducts rivers and streams from their wonted course, in order to bring forth to light what was hidden under their beds. The binding or restraining the water, which, at different depths, annoys the miner, is both difficult and expensive; in some cases it may be drawn off by pipes or canals into neighbouring water courses; in others it is conducted to one receptacle or reservoir, and thence drawn off. In Europe it is generally done by means of steam engines. What method the ancients had in mining countries, we cannot tell: but they dug deep in order to find out the riches of the earth. PLINY says nervously, Imus in viscera terræ; et in sede manium opes quarimus. "We descend into the bowels of the earth; and seek for wealth even in the abodes of departed spirits." The manes or ghosts of the dead, or spirits presiding over the dead, were supposed to have their habitation in the centre of the earth: or in the deepest pits and caves. OVID, speaking of the degeneracy of men in the iron age, Met. lib. 1. ver. 137. says:

Nec tantum egetis alimentoque debita dices
Pascubatur hæmus; sed et in æt in viscera terræ;
Quæque reconclerat, Stygiæque adnoctata uubaris,
Efficiditur opes irrisumta salorum.

Dryden.

By binding the floods from overflowing, some have supposed that there is an allusion to the flux and reflux of the sea. In its flowing it is so bound, has its bounds assigned by the Most High, that it does not drown the adjacent country; and in its ebbing the parts which are ordinarily covered with the water are brought to view.

Verse 12. But where shall wisdom be found? It is most evident that the terms wisdom and understanding are used here in a widely different sense from all those arts and sciences which have their relation to man, in his animal and social state; and from all that reason and intellect by which man is distinguished from all other animals. Now as these terms חוכמה chokmah, wisdom, and בינה binah, understanding or discernment, are applied often in the Sacred Writings in their common acceptations, we must have recourse to what Job says of them, to know their meaning in this place. In ver. 28. he says, The fear of the Lord is wisdom, and to depart from evil is understanding. We know that the fear of the Lord is often taken for the whole of that religious reverence and holy obedience which God prescribes to man in his word, and which man owes to his Maker. Hence the Septuagint render חוכמה chokmah, wisdom, by σοφωδία, divine worship; and as to a departure from evil, that is necessarily implied in a religious life; but it is here properly distinguished, that no man might suppose that a right faith, and a proper performance of the rites of religious worship, is the whole of religion. No. They must not only worship God in the letter, but also in the spirit; they must not only have the form, but also the power of godliness; and this will lead them to worship God in spirit and truth, to walk in his testimonies, and abstain from every appearance of evil. Hence they will be truly happy; so that wisdom is another word for happiness. Now these are things which man by study and searching could never find out; they are not of an earthly origin. The spirit of man, human understanding, may know the things of a man, those which concern him in his animal and social state; but the Spirit of God alone knows the things of God; and, therefore, wisdom, all true religion, must come by divine revelation, which is the mode of its attainment. Wisdom finds out the thing, and understanding uses and applies the means: and then the great end is obtained.

Verse 13. Man knoweth not the price thereof. It is of infinite value; and is the only science which concerns both worlds. Without it, the wisest man is but a beast: with it, the simplest man is next to an angel.

Neither is it found in the land of the living. The world by wisdom, its wisdom, never knew God. True religion came by divine revelation: that alone gives the 16 It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx, or the sapphire.

17 The gold and the crystal cannot equal it:

1 Heb. Åne gold shall not be given for it.—Pr. 2. 13, 14, 15, & 10, 11, 12 & 16. 16.

true notion of God, his attributes, ways, designs, judgments, providences, &c., whence man came, what is his duty, his nature, and his end. Literature, science, arts, &c. &c. can only avail man for the present life; nor can they contribute to his true happiness, unless tempered and directed by genuine religion.

Verse 14. The depth saith, It is not in me. Men may dig into the bowels of the earth, and there find gold, silver, and precious stones: but these will not give them true happiness.

The sea saith, It is not with me. Men may explore foreign countries, and by navigation connect as it were the most distant parts of the earth, and multiply the comforts and luxuries of life: but every voyage and every enjoyment proclaim, true happiness is not here.

Verse 15. It cannot be gotten for gold. Genuine religion and true happiness are not to be acquired by earthly property. Solomon made gold and silver as plenty as the stones in Jerusalem, and had all the delights of the sons of men; and yet he was not happy: yes, he had wisdom, was the wisest of men; but he had not the wisdom of which Job speaks here; and, therefore to him all was vanity and vexation of spirit. If Solomon, as some suppose, were the author of this book, the sentiments expressed here are such as we might expect from this deeply experienced and wise man.

Verse 16. The gold of Ophir. Gold is five times mentioned in this and verses 17 and 19, and four of the times in different words. I shall consider them all at once.

1. סוּר Sûror, from סוּר sagar, to shut up. Gold in the mine, or shut up in the ore. Natives gold washed by the streams out of the mountains, &c. unwrought gold.

Verse 16. 2. כֶּתֶם Kethem, from כָּתַם catham, to sign or stamp; gold made current by being coined, or stamped with its weight and value; what we would call standard or sterling gold.

Verse 17. 3. זָהָב Zahab, from זָהַב zahab, to be clear, bright, or resplendent; the un tarnishing metal: the only metal that always keeps its lustre. But probably here it means gold chased, or that in which precious stones are set; burnished gold.

4. פַּז Paz, from פָּז paz, to consolidate, joined here with כֶּלֶי keley, vessels, ornaments, instruments, &c. hammered or wrought gold: gold in the finest forms, and most elegant utensils. This metal is, at once, the brightest, most solid, and most precious, of all the metals yet discovered; of which we have now no less than thirty in our catalogues.

In these verses there are also seven kinds of precious stones mentioned: onyx, sapphire, crystal, coral, pearls, rubies, and topaz. These I shall also consider in the order of their occurrence.

Verse 16. 1. סָפִיר saphir, the Onyx, from סָפִיר, a man's nail, hoof of a horse, because in colour it resembles both. This stone is a species of chalcedony; and consists of alternate layers of white and brown chalcedony, under which it generally ranges. In the Vulgate it is called sardonix, compounded of sard and onyx. Sard is also a variety of chalcedony, of a deep reddish brown colour; of which, and alternate layers of milk-white chalcedony, the sardonix consists. A most beautiful block of this mineral sardonix, from Iceland, now lies before me.

2. סַפִּיר saphir, the Sapphirine stone, from סַפִּיר saphir, to count, number; probably from the number of golden spots with which it is said the sapphire of the ancients abounded. PLINY says, Hist. Nat. lib. xxxvii. cap. 8, Sapphirus aureis punctis collocal: caruleæ et sapphiri, roratus cum purpurâ: optima apud Medos, nunquam tamen perturbata. "The sapphire glitters with golden spots. Sapphires are sometimes of an azure, never of a purple, colour. Those of Media are the best; but there are none transparent."

What we call the sapphire is a variety of the perfect corundum: it is in hardness inferior only to the diamond. It is of several colours, and from them it has obtained several names. 1. The transparent or translucent is called the white sapphire. 2. The blue is called the oriental sapphire. 3. The violet blue, the oriental amethyst. 4. The yellow, the oriental topaz. 5. The green, the oriental emerald. 6. That with pearly reflections, the opalescent sapphire. 7. When transparent with a pale, reddish, or bluish, reflection, it is called the girasol sapphire.

and the exchange of it shall not be for jewels of fine gold.

18 No mention shall be made of coral, or of pearls: for the price of wisdom is above rubies.

19 The topaz of Ethiopia shall not equal it, neither shall it be valued with pure gold.

20 Whence then cometh wisdom? and where is the place of understanding?

8. A variety which, when polished, shows a silvery star of six rays in a direction perpendicular to the axis, is called asteria. When the meaning of the Hebrew word is collated with the description given by Pliny, it must be evident that a spotted opaque stone is meant; and, consequently, not what is now known by the name sapphire. I conjecture, therefore, that lapis lazuli, which is of a blue colour, with golden like spots, formed by pyrites of iron, must be intended. The lapis lazuli is that from which the beautiful and unfading colour called ultramarine is obtained.

Verse 17. 3. צַהֲרֵיתָ zazahith, CRYSTAL, or glass, from צָהַר zazah, to be pure, clear, transparent. Crystal or quartz of quartz is a six-sided prism, terminated by six-sided pyramids. It belongs to the siliceous class of minerals: it is exceedingly clear and brilliant, inasmuch that this property of it is become proverbial, as "clear as crystal."

Verse 18. 4. רַמּוֹתַי ramoth, CORAL, from רָמַת raam, to be exalted or elevated; probably from this remarkable property of coral, "it always grows from the tops of marine rocky caverns with the head downwards." Red coral is found in the Mediterranean, about the isles of Majorca and Minorca, on the African coasts, and in the Æthiopic ocean.

5. שֶׁטֶף gabish, PEARLS, from שָׁבַף gabash, in Arabic, to be smooth, to shave off the hair; and hence שֶׁטֶף gabish, the pearl, the smooth round substance; and also hail or hailstones, because of their resemblance to pearls. The pearl is the production of a shell-fish of the oyster kind, found chiefly in the East Indies, and called berberis: but pearls are occasionally found in the common oyster, as I have myself observed, and in the muscle also. They are of a brilliant sparkling white, perfectly round in general, and formed of coats in the manner of an onion. Out of one oyster I once took six pearls. When large, fine, and without spots, they are valuable. I have seen one that formed the whole body of a Hindoo idol, Creeshna, more than an inch in length, and valued at 300 guineas.

Verse 19. 6. פִּנְיֵימִים peninim, RUBIES, from פָּנָה he turn-ed, looked, beheld. The oriental ruby is blood-red, rose-red, or with a tinge of violet. It has occasionally a mixture of blue, and is generally in the form of six-sided prisms. It is a species of the sapphire; and is sometimes chalybeant in its appearance, i. e. has a curious kind of reflection, similar to the cat's eye; and as this is particularly striking, and changes as you turn the stone, hence probably the name peninim, which is derived from פָּנָה panah, to turn, look, behold, &c.

But some learned men are of opinion that the magnet or loadstone is meant; and it is thus called, because of the remarkable property it has of turning north and south. And this notion is rendered the more likely, because it agrees with another word in this verse, expressive of a different property of the magnet, viz. its attractive influence: for the Hebrew words מְשִׁיחַ מִפְּנֵימִים meshech chochmah mi-penimim, which we render, the price of wisdom is above rubies, is literally, The attraction of wisdom is beyond the peninim, the loadstone: for all the gold, silver, and precious stones, have strong influence on the human heart, attracting all its passions strongly; yet the attraction of wisdom, that which ensures a man's happiness in both worlds, is more powerful and influential, when understood, than all of these, and even the loadstone, for that can only attract iron; but, through desire of the other, a man having separated himself from all those earthly entanglements, seeketh and intermeddeth with ALL WISDOM. The attractive property of the loadstone must have been observed from its first discovery; and there is every reason to believe that the magnet and its virtues were known in the East long before they were discovered in Europe.

7. פְּטִידָתַי pidath, the TOPAZ. This word occurs only in Ezek. xxviii. 17. xxxix. 10. Ezek. xxviii. 13. and in the present place: in all of which (except that of Ezekiel, where the Septuagint is all confusion,) the Septuagint and Vulgate render the word always topazius, rosaron, the Topaz. This stone is generally found in a prismatic form, sometimes limpid and nearly transparent: or of various shades of yellow, green, blue, lilac, and red.

I have thus given the best account I can of the stones here mentioned, allowing that they answer to the names by which we translate them. But, on this point, there is great uncertainty, as I have already had occasion to observe in other parts of this work. Beasts, birds, plants, metals, precious stones, unguents, different kinds of grain, &c. are certainly mentioned in the Sacred Writings; but whether we know what the different Hebrew terms signify is more than we can certainly affirm. Of some there is little room to doubt; of others conjecture must, in the present state of our knowledge, supply the place of certainty. See PHILLIPS' Elementary Introduction to MINERALOGY; an accurate work, which I feel pleasure in recommending to all students in the science.

Verse 19. The topaz of Ethiopia] The country called Cush, which we call Ethiopia, is supposed to be that which extends from the eastern coast of the Red sea, and stretches toward Lower Egypt. Diodorus Siculus says, that the topaz was found in great abundance, as his description intimates, in an island in the Red sea, called Ophiades, or the Isle of Serpents. Hist. lib. iii. p. 121. His account is curious, but I greatly doubt its correctness. It seems too much in the form of a legend: but the reader may consult the place.

Verse 20. Whence then cometh wisdom?] Nearly the same words as in ver. 12. where see the note.

Verse 22. Destruction and death say, We have heard the fame thereof] אַבְדוֹן וְמוֹת אָבִידוֹן Abaddon va-maveth, the destroyer, and his offspring death. This is the very name that is given to the devil in Greek letters, Αβδδων, Rev. ix. 11. and it is there rendered by the Greek word Απολλων, Apollyon, a word exactly of the same meaning. No wonder death and the devil are brought in here as saying, they had heard the fame of wisdom, seeing ver. 23. defines it to be, the fear of the Lord, and a departure from evil; things point blank contrary to the interests of Satan, and the extension of the empire of death.

Verse 23. God understandeth the way thereof] It can only be taught by a revelation from himself. Instead of הִבִּין hebin, understandeth, six MSS. have הִבִּין hebin, disposed or established. This reading is also supported by the Septuagint; 'Ο θεος εἰς εὐνοίας αὐτοῦ τὰς ῥαῖς ἔδωκεν, "God hath well established her way:" falsely rendered benè cognovit, hath well known, in the Latin version of the Septuagint in the London Polyglot; but benè constituit, well established, in the Complutensian, Antwerp, and Paris Polyglots.

Verse 24. For he looketh to the ends of the earth] His knowledge is unlimited, and his power infinite.

Verse 25. To make the weight for the winds] God has given an atmosphere to the earth, which, possessing a certain degree of gravity perfectly suited to the necessities of all animals, plants, vegetables, and fluids, should be the cause, in his hand, of preserving animal and vegetative life through the creation; for by it the blood circulates in the veins of animals, and the juices in the tubes of vegetables. Without this pressure of the atmosphere, there could be no respiration; and the elasticity of the particles of air included in animal and vegetable bodies, without this superincumbent pressure, would rupture the vessels in which they are contained, and destroy both kinds of life. So exactly is this weight of the winds, or atmospheric air, proportioned to the necessities of the globe, that we find it in the mean neither too light to prevent the undue expansion of animal and vegetable tubes, nor too heavy to compress them so as to prevent due circulation. See at the end of the chapter.

And he weighed the waters by measure.] He has exactly proportioned the aqueous surface of the earth to the terrene parts, so that there shall be an adequate surface to produce, by evaporation, moisture sufficient to be treasured up in the atmosphere for the irrigation of the earth, so that it may produce grass for cattle, and corn for the service of man. It has been found, by a pretty exact calculation, that the aqueous surface of the globe is to the terrene parts as 27 Then did he see it, and declare it; he prepared it, yea, and searched it out.

28 And unto man he said, Behold, the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding.

o Or, number it one to three; or, that three-fourths of the surface of the globe is water, and about one-fourth earth. And other experiments on evaporation, or the quantity of vapours which arise from a given space in a given time, show that it requires such a proportion of aqueous surface to afford moisture sufficient for the other proportion of dry land. Thus God has given the waters by measure, as he has given the due proportion of weight to the winds.

Verse 26. When he made a decree for the rain] When he determined how that should be generated; viz. By the heat of the sun, evaporation is produced: the particles of vapour, being lighter than the air on the surface, ascend into the atmosphere, till they come to a region where the air is of their own density; there they are formed into thin clouds, and become suspended. When, by the sudden passages of lightning, or by winds strongly agitating these clouds, the particles are driven together and condensed, so as to be weightier than the air in which they float, then they fall down in the form of rain; the drops being greater or less according to the force, or momentum, or suddenness, of the agitation by which they were driven together, as well as to the degree of rarity in the lower regions of the atmosphere through which they fall.

A way for the lightning of the thunder] וּדְרֹת קוֹלֹת וְדְרֹת רָעָדִים ve-derec le-chaziz koloth. קוֹל kol, signifies voice of any kind; and koloth is the plural, and is taken for the frequent claps or rattlings of thunder. מְחַזֵּז chaziz, signifies to notch, indentate, or serrate, as in the edges of the leaves of trees: מְחַזֵּז chaziz, must refer to the zig-zag form which lightning assumes in passing from one cloud into another. We are informed that "this is a frequent occurrence in hot countries." Undoubtedly it is; for it is frequent in cold countries also: I have seen this phenomenon in England, in the most distinct manner, for hours together, at a few seconds of interval between each flash. Nothing can better express this appearance than the original word.

Verse 27. Then did he see it, and declare it] When he had finished all his creative operations, and tried and proved his work, חִקְרָה chakarrah, investigated and found it to be very good; and he gave the needful revelation to man: for,

Verse 28. Unto man he said] וְאֶל-אָדָם le-Adam, unto man, he said:—This probably refers to the revelation of his will which God gave to Adam after his fall. He had before sought for wisdom in a forbidden way. When he and Eve saw that the tree was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, they took and did eat, Gen. iii. 6. Thus they lost all the wisdom that they had, by not setting the fear of the Lord before their eyes; and became foolish, wicked, and miserable. Hear then what God prescribes as a proper remedy for this dire disease:—The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom: it is thy only wisdom now to set God always before thy eyes, that thou may not again transgress.

Depart from evil is understanding.] Depart from the evil within thee, and the evil without thee: by thy own evil, and the evil that is now, through thee, brought into the world, will conspire together to sink thee into ruin and destruction. Therefore, let it be thy constant employment to shun and avoid that evil which is every where diffused through the whole moral world by thy offence; and labour to be reconciled to him by righteousness and true holiness, that thou may escape the bitter pains of an eternal death. See the note on ver. 12.

From what has been observed on ver. 25, 26, and from the doctrine of the atmosphere in general, I can safely draw the following conclusions:

1. From the gravity and elasticity of the air, we learn that it closely invests the earth, and all bodies upon it, and binds them down with a force equal to 2160 pounds on every square foot. Hence it may properly be termed the belt or girdle of the globe.

2. It prevents the arterial system of animals and plants from being too much distended by the impetus of the circulating juices, or by the elastic power of the air so plentifully contained in the blood, and in the different vessels both of plants and animals.

3. By its gravity it prevents the blood and juices from oozing through the pores of the vessels in which they are contained; which, were it not for this circumstance, would infallibly take place. Persons who ascend high mountains, through a want of a sufficiency of pressure in the atmosphere, become relaxed, and spit blood. Animals under an exhausted receiver swell, vomit, and discharge their feces.

4. It promotes the mixture of contiguous fluids; for, when the air is extracted from certain mixtures, a separation takes place, by which their properties, when in combination, are essentially changed.

5. To this principle we owe winds in general, so essential to navigation, and so necessary to the purification of the atmosphere. The air is put into motion by any alteration of its equilibrium.

6. Vegetation depends entirely on the gravity and elasticity of the air. Various experiments amply prove that plants in vacuo, never grow.

7. Without air there could be no evaporation from the sea and rivers; and, consequently, no rain: nor could the clouds be suspended, so necessary to accumulate and preserve, and afterward to distil, these vapours in the form of dew, rain, snow, and hail, upon the earth.

8. Without air all the charms of vocal and instrumental sounds would become extinct; and even language itself would cease.

9. Without it heat could not be evolved, nor could fire exist: hence a universal rigour would invest the whole compass of created nature.

10. Without air, animal life could never have had a being: hence God created the firmament, or atmosphere, before any animal was produced. And without its continual influence, animal life cannot be preserved; for it would require only a few moments of a total privation of the benefits of the atmosphere to destroy every living creature under the whole heaven.

11. It has been found, by repeated experiments, that a column or rod of quicksilver, about twenty-nine inches and a half high, and one inch in diameter, weighs about fifteen pounds; and such a column is suspended in an exhausted tube by the weight of the atmosphere: hence it necessarily follows, that a column of air, one square inch in diameter, and as high as the atmosphere, weighs about fifteen pounds at a medium. Thus it is evident that the atmosphere presses with the weight of fifteen pounds on every square inch; and, as a square foot contains one hundred and forty-four square inches, every such foot must sustain a weight of incumbent atmospheric air equal to two thousand one hundred and sixty pounds, as has been before stated. And from this it will follow, that a middle-sized man, whose surface is about fifteen square feet, constantly sustains a load of air equal to thirty-two thousand four hundred pounds! But this is so completely counterbalanced by the air pressing equally in all directions, and by the elasticity of the air included in the various cavities of the body, that no person in a pure and healthy state of the atmosphere feels any inconvenience from it; so accurately has God fitted the weight to the winds.

12. Though it may appear more curious than useful; yet from the simple fact which I have completely demonstrated myself, by experiment, that the atmosphere presses with the weight of fifteen pounds on every square inch, we can tell the quantum of pressure on the whole globe, and weigh the whole atmosphere to a pound!

The polar and equatorial circumference of the earth is well known. Without, therefore, entering too much into detail, I may state that the surface of the terraqueous globe is known to contain about five thousand, five hundred, and seventy-five BILLIONS of square FEET: hence, allowing, fifteen pounds to each square inch, two thousand, one hundred, and sixty pounds to each square foot, the whole surface must sustain a pressure from the atmosphere equal to twelve TRILLIONS, and forty-two thousand millions of POUNDS! or six thousand and twenty-one BILLIONS of TONS! And this weight is the weight of the whole atmosphere from its contact with every part of the earth's surface to its utmost highest extent!

Experiments also prove that the air presses equally in all directions, whether upwards, downwards, or laterally; hence the earth is not incommoded with this enormous weight, because its zenith and nadir, north and south, pressure, being perfectly equal, counterbalance each other! This is also the case with respect to the human body, and to all bodies on the earth's surface.

To make the above calculations more satisfactory, it may be necessary to add the following observations:

A bulk of atmospheric air, equal to one quart, when taken near the level of the sea, at a temperature of 50° Fahrenheit, weighs about 16 grains; and the same bulk of rain water, taken at the same temperature, weighs about 14621 grains: hence rain water is about 914 times specifically heavier than air.

MOREOVER Job continued his parable, and said,

2 Oh that I were ^{as} in months past, as in the days when God preserved me;

3 When his candle shined upon my head, and when by his light I walked through darkness;

4 As I was in the days of my youth, when the secret of God was upon my tabernacle;

g Heb. added to tabn sup.—h See Ch. 7, 3.—i Ch. 18, 6.—k Or, lamp. Psa. 13, 24. l Psa. 23, 14.—m Gen. 49, 11. Douc. 32, 13. & 33, 34. Ch. 20, 17.

I have already shown that the pressure of the atmosphere is equal to about 15 lbs. Troy, on every square inch; and that this pressure is the same in all directions; and thence shown that on this datum the whole weight of the atmosphere may be computed. I shall restate this from a computation of the earth's surface in square miles, which is recommended to me as peculiarly accurate. A square mile contains 27,878,400 square feet. The earth's surface, in round numbers, is 200,000,000, or two hundred millions of square miles. Now, as from the preceding data it appears that there is a pressure of 19440 pounds Troy on every square yard: therefore the pressure or weight of the whole atmosphere, circumscribed round the whole surface of the earth amounts to 12,043,468,900,000,000, or twelve TRILLIONS, forty-three thousand, four hundred and sixty-eight BILLIONS, eight hundred thousand MILLIONS of pounds.

It has been suggested that my computation of 15 square feet for the surface of a middle-sized man is too much; I will, therefore, take it at 14 square feet. From this computation, which is within the measure, it is evident that every such person sustains a weight of air equal, at a medium, to about 30,240 lbs. Troy, or 24,882 lbs. avoirdupois, which make 1777 stone, 4 lbs. equal to eleven tons, two hundred and eighteen pounds and a half.

Though we cannot tell to what height the atmosphere extends, the air growing more and more rare as we ascend in it; yet we can ascertain, and above, the quantum of weight in the whole of this atmosphere, which the terraqueous globe sustains equally diffused over its surface, as well as over the surfaces of all bodies existing on it. At first view, however, it is difficult for minds not exercised in matters of philosophy to conceive how such an immense pressure can be borne by animal beings. Though this has been already explained, let the reader farther consider that, as fishes are surrounded by water, and live and move in it (a much denser medium than our atmosphere); so all human beings, and all other animals, are surrounded by air, and live and move in it. A fish taken out of the water will die in a very short time; a human being, or any other animal, taken out of the air, or put in a place whence the air is extracted, will die in a much shorter time. Water gravitates toward the centre of the earth; and so does air. Hence, as a fish is pressed on every side by that fluid, so are all animals on the earth's surface by atmospheric air. And the pressure in both cases, on a given surface, is as has been stated above; the air contained in the vessels and cells of animal bodies, being a sufficient counterpoise to the air without.

Having said thus much on the pressure of the atmosphere, as intimated by Job, the reader will permit me to make the following general reflections, of which he may make that use he may judge best.

It is generally supposed that former times were full of Barbaric ignorance; and that the system of philosophy which is at present in repute, and is established by experiments, is quite a modern discovery. But nothing can be more false than this; as the Bible plainly discovers to an attentive reader that the doctrine of statics, the circulation of the blood, the rotundity of the earth, the motions of the celestial bodies, the process of generation, &c. were all known long before Pythagoras, Archimedes, Copernicus, or Newton were born.

It is very reasonable to suppose that God implanted the first principles of every science in the mind of his first creature; that Adam taught them to his posterity, and that tradition continued them for many generations with their proper improvements. But many of them were lost in consequence of wars, captivities, &c. Latter ages have rediscovered many of them, principally by the direct or indirect aid of the Holy Scriptures; and others of them continue hidden, notwithstanding the accurate and penetrating researches of the moderns.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIX.

Verse 2. O that I were as in months past! Job seems here to make an apology for his complaints, by taking a view of his former prosperity, which was very great, but was now entirely at an end. He shows that it was not removed because of any bad use he had made of it; and describes how he behaved himself before God and man; and how much, for justice, benevolence, and mercy, he was esteemed and honoured by the wise and good.

Preserved me] Kept, guarded, and watched over me. Verse 3. When his candle shined upon my head! Alluding most probably to the custom of illuminating festival or assembly rooms by lamps pendant from the ceiling. These shown literally on the heads of the guests.

By his light I walked through darkness] His light (prosperity and peace) continued to illuminate my way. If adversity came, I had always the light of God to direct me. Almost all the nations of the world have represented their great men as having a nimbus or divine glory about their heads, which signified not only the honour they had, but was also an emblem of the inspiration of the Almighty.

Verse 4. The days of my youth] The original word rather means in the days of my winter, חורף Charaphi from חרף charaf, to strip, or make bare. Mr. Harmer supposes the rainy season is intended, when the fields, &c. perched up by long drought, are revived by the plentiful showers. Mr. Goode thinks the word, as found in the Arabic, which means top or summit, and which he translates perfection, is that which should be preferred. Others think the autumnal state is meant, when he was loaded with prosperity, as the trees are with ripe fruit.

The secret of God was upon my tabernacle] סוד sood be-sod cloth, the secret assembly of God, meaning probably the same thing that is spoken of in the beginning of this book, the sons of God, the devout people, presenting themselves before God. It is not unlikely that such a secret assembly of God Job had in his own house; where he tells us, in the next verse, The Almighty was with him, and his children were about him.

Mr. Goode translates differently:—When God fortified my tent over me; supposing that the Hebrew סוד sood, is the Arabic word, سور barrier or fortification. Either will make a good sense.

Verse 6. Washed my steps with butter] See the note on chap. xx. 17.

Verse 7. When I went out to the gate] Courts of justice were held at the gates or entrances of the cities of the East; and Job, being an emir, was supreme magistrate; and here he speaks of his going to the gate to administer justice.

I prepared my seat in the street] I administered judgment openly, in the most public manner; and none could say that I, in any case, perverted justice. Mr. Goode translates:—As I went forth the city rejoiced at me, as I took my seat abroad.

Verse 8. The young men saw me, and hid themselves] From all classes of persons I had the most marked respect. The young, through modesty and bashfulness, shrunk back, and were afraid to meet the eye of their prince; and the aged rose from their seats when I entered the place of judgment. These were the elders of the people, who also sat with the judge, and assisted in all legal cases.

Verse 9. The princes refrained talking] They never ventured an opinion in opposition to mine; so fully were they persuaded of the justice and integrity of my decision.

Verse 10. The nobles held their peace] PRINCES שרים sarim, and NOBLES נדיבים negidim, must have been two different classes of the great men of Idumea. שר sar, PRINCE, director, or ruler, was probably the head of a township; or, what we would call a magistrate of a particular district. נדיב negid, a NOBLE, or one of those who had the privilege of standing before, or in the presence of, the chief ruler. The participle נעגד neged, is repeatedly used to sig-

11 When the ear heard me, then it blessed me; and when the eye saw me, it gave witness to me:

12 Because I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him.

13 The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me: and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy.

14 I put on righteousness, and it clothed me: my judgment was as a robe and a diadem.

15 I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame.

16 I was a father to the poor: and the cause which I knew not I searched out.

17 And I brake the jaws of the wicked, and plucked the spoil out of his teeth.

18 Then I said, I shall die in my nest, and I shall multiply my days as the sand.

19 My root was spread out by the waters, and the dew lay all night upon my branch.

20 My glory was fresh in me, and my bow was renewed in my hand.

21 Unto me men gave ear, and waited, and kept silence at my counsel.

22 After my words they spake not again: and my speech dropped upon them.

23 And they waited for me as for the rain; and they opened their mouth wide, as for the latter rain.

24 If I laughed on them, they believed it not; and the light of my countenance they cast not down.

25 I chose out their way, and sat chief, and dwelt as a king in the army, as one that comforteth the mourners.

CHAPTER XXX.

Job proceeds to lament the change of his former condition, and the contempt into which his adversary had brought him, 1-15. Pathetically describes the afflictions of his body and mind, 16-31.

BUT now they that are younger than I, have me in derision, whose fathers I would have disdained to have set with the dogs of my flock.

2 Yea, whereto might the strength of their hands profit me, in whom old age was perished?

nify before, in the presence of, publicly, openly. And, on this account, it is most likely that the noun means one of those nobles or counsellors, who were always admitted to the royal presence. Mr. Goode thinks that renowned speakers or eminent orators are meant: and others have embraced the same opinion. Job here intimates that his judgment was so sound, his decisions so accredited, and his reasoning powers so great, that every person paid him the utmost deference.

Verse 11. When the ear heard me] This and the six following verses present us with a fine exhibition of a man full of benevolence and charity, acting up to the highest dictates of those principles, and rendering the miserable of all descriptions happy, by the constant exercise of his unconfined philanthropy.

Verse 12. Because I delivered the poor that cried] This appears to be intended as a refutation of the charges produced by Eliphaz, chap. xxii. 5-10. to confute which Job appeals to facts, and to public testimony.

Verse 15. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame.] Alluding probably to the difficulty of travelling in the Arabian deserts. I was eyes to the blind; those who did not know the way, I furnished with guides. I was feet to the lame; those who were worn out, and incapable of walking, I set forward on my camels, &c.

Verse 16. The cause which I knew not I searched out.] When any thing difficult occurred I did not give it a slight consideration: I examined it to the bottom, (whatever pain, time, and trouble, it cost me) that I might not pronounce a hasty judgment.

Verse 17. I brake the jaws of the wicked] A metaphor taken from hunting. A beast of prey had entered into the fold, and carried off a sheep. The huntsman comes, assails the wicked beast, breaks his jaws, and delivers the spoil out of his teeth. See the same case 1 Sam. xvii. 34-37.

Verse 18. I shall die in my nest] As I endeavoured to live soberly and temperately, fearing God and departing from evil, endeavouring to promote the welfare of all around me, it was natural for me to conclude that I should live long, be very prosperous, and see my posterity multiply as the sand on the seashore.

Verse 19. My root was spread out by the waters] A metaphor taken from a healthy tree growing beside a rivulet where there is plenty of water; which, in consequence, flourishes in all seasons; its leaf does not wither, nor its fruit fade. See Psa. i. 3. Jer. xvii. 8.

Verse 20. My glory was fresh in me] My vegetative power was great; my glory; my splendid blossom, large and mellow fruit, were always in season; and in every season.

My bow was renewed] I was never without means to accomplish all my wishes. I had prosperity every where.

Verse 21. Unto me men gave ear] The same idea as in ver. 9-11.

Verse 22. My speech dropped upon them.] It descended as refreshing dew; they were encouraged, comforted, and strengthened, by it.

Verse 23. They waited for me as for the rain] The idea continued. They longed as much to hear me speak, to receive my counsel and my decisions, as the thirsty land does for refreshing showers.

They opened their mouth wide] A metaphor taken from ground chapped with long drought.

The latter rain.] The rain that falls a little before harvest, in order to fill and perfect the grain. The former rain is that which falls about seed-time, or in spring, in order to impregnate and swell the seed, and moisten the earth to produce its nourishment.

Verse 24. I laughed on them, they believed it not] Similar to that expression in the Gospel, Luke xxiv. 41. And while they believed not for joy, and wondered, he said.—Our version is sufficiently perspicuous, and gives the true sense of the original: only it should be read in the indicative and not in the subjunctive mood, I laughed on them—they believed it not. We have a similar phrase: The news was too good to be true.

The light of my countenance] This evidence of my benevolence and regard. A smile is, metaphorically, the light of the countenance.

They cast not down.] They gave me no occasion to change my sentiments or feelings toward them. I could still smile upon them; and they were then worthy of my approbation. Their change he refers to in the beginning of the next chapter.

Verse 25. I chose out their way, and sat chief—as a king in the army] I cannot see, with some learned men, that our version of the original is wrong. I have not seen it mended, and I am sure I cannot improve it. The whole verse seems to me to point out Job in his civil, military; and domestic life.

As supreme magistrate, he chose out their way, adjudged their differences, and sat chief, presiding in all their civil assemblies.

As captain general, he dwelt as a king in the midst of the troops, preserving order and discipline, and seeing that his follow-soldiers were provided with necessaries for their warfare, and the necessaries of life.

As a man, he did not think himself superior to the meanest offices in domestic life, to relieve or support his fellow-creatures: he went about comforting the mourners, visiting the sick and afflicted, and ministering to their wants. Noble Job! Look at him, ye nobles of the earth, ye lieutenants of counties, ye generals of armies, and ye lords of provinces. Look at JOB! Imitate his active benevolence, and be healthy and happy. Be as guardian angels in your particular districts, blessing all by your example and your bounty. Send your hunting horses to the plough, your game cocks to the dunghill; and, at last, live like men and Christians!

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXX.

Verse 1. But now they that are younger than I have me in derision] Compare this with chap. xxix. 8. where he speaks of the respect he had from the youth, while in the days of his prosperity. Now he is no longer affluent; and they are no longer respectful.

Dogs of my flock.] Persons who were not deemed sufficiently respectable to be trusted with the care of those dogs which were the guardians of my flocks. Not confidential enough to be made shepherds, ass-keepers, or camel-drivers, nor even to have the care of the dogs by which the flocks were guarded. This saying is what we call an expression of sovereign contempt.

Verse 2. The strength of their hands profit me] He is speaking here of the fathers of these young men. What was the strength of their hands to me? Their old age also has perished. The sense of which I believe to be this: I

3 For want and famine they were solitary; fleeing into the wilderness in former time desolate and waste;

4 Who cut up mallows by the bushes, and juniper roots for their meat.

5 They were driven forth from among men, (they cried after them as after a thief.)

6 To dwell in the cliffs of the valleys, in caves of the earth, and in the rocks.

7 Among the bushes they brayed: under the nettles they were gathered together.

8 They were children of fools, yea, children of base men: they were viler than the earth.

9 And now am I their song, yea, I am their by-word.

10 They abhor me, they flee far from me, and spare not to spit in my face.

11 Because he hath loosed my cord, and afflicted me, they have also let loose the bride before me.

12 Upon my right hand rise the youth; they push away my feet, and they raise up against me the ways of their destruction.

13 They mar my path, they set forward my calamity, they have no helper.

14 They came upon me as a wide breaking in have never esteemed their strength even in their most vigorous youth; nor their conduct nor their counsel even in old age. They were never good for any thing either in young or old. As their youth was without profit, so their old age was without honour. See Calmet.

Mr. Goode contends that the words are Arabic, and should be translated according to their meaning in that language, and the first clause of the third verse, joined to the latter clause of the second, without which no good meaning can be elicited, so as to keep properly close to the letter. I shall give the Hebrew text, Mr. Goode's Arabic, and its translation.

The Hebrew text is this:

עליהם אבד כלע
alaymah abad calach
בארץ ובכפר גלמוד
ba-arez u-to-ephrah galmod

The Arabic version this:—

عليهم ابد كلع
بصر ورجع جلود*

Which he translates thus:

With whom arabial looks are perpetual,
From hunger and stony famine.

This translation is very little distant from the import of the present Hebrew text; if it may be called Hebrew, when the principal words are pure Arabic, and the others constructively so.

Verse 3. Fleeing into the wilderness] Seeking something to sustain life even in the barren desert. This shows the extreme of want, when the desert is supposed to be the only place where any thing to sustain life can possibly be found.

Verse 4. Who cut up mallows by the bushes] כלע melach, which we translate mallows, comes from מלח melech, salt; some herb or shrub of a salt nature, sea-purslane, or the salsaria, salsola, or saltwort. Bochart says it is the αλαμος of the Greeks, and the halimus of the Romans. Some translate it nettles. The Syriac and Arabic omit the whole verse. The halimus, or atriplex halimus, grows near the sea in different countries; and is found in Spain, America, England, and Barbary. The salsaria, salsola, or saltwort, is an extensive genus of plants, several common to Asia, and not a few indigenous to a dry and sandy soil.

And juniper roots for their meat] רתמים rethamim. This is variously translated juniper, broom, furze, gorze, or wista. It is supposed to derive its name from the toughness of its twigs, as רתם ratham signifies to bind: and this answers well enough to the broom. Genista quoque vinculi usum praestat:—The broom serves for bands, says PLYST, Hist. Nat. lib. xxiv. c. 9. But how can it be said that the roots of this shrub were eaten? I do not find any evidence from Asiatic writers that the roots of the juniper-tree were an article of food; and some have supposed, because of this want of evidence, that the word רתם rethamim, for their bread, should be understood thus, to bake their bread, because it is well known that the wood of the juniper gives an intense heat, and the coals of it endure a long time; and therefore, we find coals of juniper, רתם gacheley rethamim, used Psa. cxx. 4. to express severe and enduring punishment. But that the roots of the juniper were used for food in the northern countries, among the Goths, we have a positive testimony from Olaus Magnus, himself a Goth and archbishop of Upsal, in lib. xii. c. 4. in his Hist. De Genibus Septentrionalibus. Speaking of the great number of different trees in their woods, he says, "There is a great plenty of beech-trees in all the northern parts, the virtue whereof is this: that being cut between the bark and the wood they send forth a juice that is good for drink. The fruit of them in famine serves for bread, and their bark for clothing. Likewise also the berries of the juniper; yea, even the roots of this tree are eaten for bread, as holy Job testifies, though it is difficult to come at them by reason of their prickles; in these prickles, or thorns, live coals will last a whole year. If the inhabitants do not quench them, when winds arise, they set the woods on fire, and destroy all the circumjacent fields." In this account both the properties of the juniper-tree, referred to by Job and David, are mentioned by the Gothic prelate. They use its berries and roots for food, and its wood for fire.

Verse 5. They were driven forth] They were persons whom nobody would employ; they were driven away from the city; and, if any of them appeared, the hue and cry was immediately raised up against them. The last clause Mr. Goode translates:—"They slunk away from them like a thief," instead of, They cried after them, &c.

Verse 6. To dwell in the cliffs of the valleys] They were obliged to take shelter in the most dangerous, out-of-the-way, and unfrequented places. This is the meaning.

Verse 7. Among the bushes they brayed] They cried out among the bushes, seeking for food as the wild ass when he is in want of provender. Two MSS. read ינאקו yinaku, they groaned, instead of ינחאקו yinchaku, they brayed.

Under the nettles] חרולי charul, the briars or brambles, under the brush-wood in the thickest parts of the under-wood; they huddled together like wild beasts.

Verse 8. Children of fools] Children of Nabal; children without a name; persons of no consideration, and descendants of such.

Viler than the earth] Rather, Driven out of the land; persons not fit for civil society.

Verse 9. Now am I their song] I am the subject of their mirth, and serve as a proverb or by-word. They use me with every species of indignity.

Verse 10. They abhor me] What a state must civil society be in when such indignities were permitted to be offered to the aged and afflicted!

Verse 11. Because he hath loosed my cord] Instead of יתרי yithri, my cord, which is the kerit or marginal reading, יתרו yithro, his cord, is the reading of the text in many copies; and this reading directs us to a metaphor taken from an archer, who, observing his butt, sets his arrow on the string, draws it to a proper degree of tension; and then, loosing his hold, the arrow flies at the mark. He hath let loose his arrow against me; it has hit me, and I am wounded. The Vulgate understood it in this way:—Pharetram enim suam aperuit. So, also, the Septuagint:—Ανοιξας γαρ φαρετραν αυτου; he hath opened his quiver.

They have also let loose the bride] When they perceived that God had afflicted me, they then threw off all restraints; like headstrong horses, swallowed the bit, got the reins on their own neck, and ran off at full speed.

Verse 12. Upon my right hand rise the youth] The word מרחיץ mirechach, which we translate youth, signifies properly buds, or the buttons of trees. Mr. Goode has younglings. Youngers would be better were it not too colloquial.

They push away my feet] They trip up my heels, or they in effect trample me under their feet. They rush upon and overwhelm me. They are violently incensed against me. They roll themselves upon me, ויללו הילי hith galgalu, velut unda impellit undam, as waves of the sea which wash the sand from under the feet, and then swamp the man to the bottom, see ver. 14.

Verse 13. They mar my path] They destroy the way-marks, so that there is no safety in travelling through the deserts, the guide-posts and way-marks being gone.

There may be an allusion here to a besieged city: the besiegers strive by every means and way to distress the besieged; stopping up the fountains, breaking up the road, raising up lovers to project arrows and stones into the city; called here raising up against it the ways of destruction, ver. 12. preventing all succour and support.

of waters: in the desolation they rolled themselves upon me.

15 Terrors are turned upon me: they pursue my soul as the wind; and my welfare passeth away as a cloud.

16 And now my soul is poured out upon me: the days of affliction have taken hold upon me.

17 My bones are pierced in me in the night season; and my sinews take no rest.

18 By the great force of my disease is my garment changed; it bindeth me about as the collar of my coat.

19 He hath cast me into the mire, and I am become like dust and ashes.

20 I cry unto thee, and thou dost not hear me: I stand up, and thou regardest me not.

21 Thou art become cruel to me: with thy strong hand thou opposeth thyself against me.

22 Thou liftest me up to the wind; thou causest me to ride upon it, and dissolvest my substance.

23 For I know that thou wilt bring me to death, and to the house appointed for all living.

24 Howbeit he will not stretch out his hand to the grave, though they cry in his destruction.

25 Did not I weep for him that was in trouble? was not my soul grieved for the poor?

26 When I looked for good, then evil came unto me; and when I waited for light, there came darkness.

27 My bowels boiled, and rested not: the days of affliction prevented me.

28 I went mourning without the sun: I stood up, and cried in the congregation.

29 I am a brother to dragons, and a companion to owls.

30 My skin is black upon me, and my bones are burned with heat.

31 My harp also is turned to mourning, and my organ into the voice of them that weep.

They have no helper] There is not an adviser among them. Mr. Goode. There is none to give them better instruction.

Verse 14. They came upon me as a wide breaking in] They storm me on every side.

In the desolation they rolled themselves] When they had made the breach, they rolled in upon me as an irresistible torrent. There still appears to be an allusion to a besieged city: the sap, the breach, the storm, the flight, the pursuit, and the slaughter. See the following verse.

Verse 15. Terrors are turned upon me] Defence is no longer useful; they have beat down my walls.

They pursue my soul as the wind] I seek safety in flight, my strong-holds being no longer tenable; but they pursue me so swiftly that it is impossible for me to escape. They follow me like a whirlwind; and as fast as that drives away the clouds before it, so is my prosperity destroyed. The word נִדְבַחְתָּ נִדְבַחְתָּ, which we translate my soul, signifies properly my nobility, my excellence: they endeavour to destroy both my reputation and my property.

Verse 18. Is my garment changed] There seems to be here plain allusions to the effect of his cruel disease: the whole body being enveloped with a kind of elephantine hide formed by innumerable incrustations from the ulcerated surface.

It bindeth me about] There is now a new kind of covering to my body, formed by the effects of this disease; and it is not a garment which I can cast off, it is as closely attached to me as the collar of my coat. Or my disease seized me as a strong armed man; it has throttled me, and cast me in the mud. This is probably an allusion to two persons struggling; the stronger seizes the other by the throat, brings him down, and treads him in the dirt.

Verse 20. I cry unto thee] I am persecuted by man, afflicted with sore disease, and apparently forsaken of God.

I stand up] Or, as some translate:—"Ipersecute, and thou lookest on upon me." Thou seest my desolate, afflicted state; but thine eye doth not affect thy heart. Thou leavest me unsupported to struggle with my adversities.

Verse 21. Thou art become cruel to me] Thou appearst to treat me with cruelty. I cry for mercy, trust in thy goodness, and am still permitted to remain under my afflictions.

Thou opposeth thyself] Instead of helping, thou opposest me; thou appearst as my enemy.

Verse 22. Thou liftest me up to the wind] Thou hast so completely stripped me of all my substance, that I am like chaff lifted up by the wind; or as a straw, the sport of every breeze: and at last carried totally away, being dissipated into particles by the continued agitation.

Verse 23. Thou wilt bring me to death] This must be the issue of my present affliction: to God alone it is possible that I should survive it.

To the house appointed for all living] Or to the house of mourning, the rendezvous, the place of general assembly of human beings: the great devourer in whose jaws all that have lived, now live, and shall live, must necessarily meet.

O great man-eater!
Whose every day is carnival: not afraid yet!
Unheard of epicure! without a fellow!
The voracious gluttons do not always cram!
Some intervals of abstinence are sought
To edge the appetite: thou seekest none.
Methinks the countess swarms thou hast devoured,
And thousands that each hour thou gobblest up,
This, less than this, might gorge thee to the full.

But, oh! rapacious still, thou gap'st for more;
Like one, whose days defrauded of his meals,
On whom lack hunger lays her skinny hand,
And whets to keener eagerness his cravings,
As if diseases, manures, and poisons,
Famine, and war, were not thy easterns.

The Grass.

Verse 24. He will not stretch out his hand to the grave] After all that has been said relative to the just translation and true meaning of this verse, is it not evident that it is in the mouth of Job a consolatory reflection? As if he had said, Though I suffer here, I shall not suffer hereafter. Though he add stroke to stroke, so as to destroy my life, yet his displeasure shall not proceed beyond the grave.

Though they cry in his destruction.] Mr. Goode translates:—Surely there, in its ruin, is freedom. In the sepulchre there is freedom from calamity, and rest for the weary.

Verse 25. Did not I weep for him that was in trouble?] Mr. Goode translates much nearer the sense of the original וַיִּשְׁכַּח לִּיכֶה יוֹם. "Should I not then weep for the ruthless day?" May I not lament that my sufferings are only to terminate with my life? Or, did I not mourn for those who suffered by times of calamity?

Was not my soul grieved for the poor] Did I not relieve the distressed according to my power; and did I not sympathize with the sufferer?

Verse 27. My bowels boiled] This alludes to the strong commotion in the bowels which every humane person feels at the sight of one in misery.

Verse 28. I went mourning without the sun] מָחַם chammah, which we here translate the sun, comes from a root of the same letters, which signifies to hide, protect, &c. and may be translated, I went mourning without a protector or guardian; or, the word may be derived from מָחַם to be hot, and here it may signify fury, rage, anger; and thus it was understood by the Vulgate:—Mærens incedeam, sine furore, I went mourning without anger; or, as Calmet translates, Je marchois tout triste, mais sans me laisser aller à l'emporement; "I walked in deep sadness, but did not give way to an angry spirit." The Syriac and Arabic understood it in the same way.

Verse 29. I am a brother to dragons] By my mournful and continual cry, I resemble תַּנִּין tannin, the jackals or hyenas.

And a companion to owls.] כִּנּוּר כִּנּוּר benoth yaanah, to the daughters of howling: generally understood to be the ostrich; for both the jackal and the female ostrich are remarkable for their mournful cry, and for their attachment to desolate places. Dodd.

Verse 30. My skin is black] By continual exposure to the open air, and parching influence of the sun.

My bones are burned with heat. A strong expression to point out the raging fever that was continually preying upon his vitals.

Verse 31. My harp also is turned to mourning] Instead of the harp, my only music is my own plaintive cries.

And my organ] What the עֶגְבָּה uggab was we know not; it was most probably some sort of pipe or wind-instrument. His harp כִּנּוּר kinnor, and his pipe עֶגְבָּה uggab, were equally mute, or only used for mournful ditties.

This chapter is full of the most painful and pathetic sorrow; but nevertheless tempered with a calmness and humiliation of spirit, which did not appear in Job's lamen-

CHAPTER XXXI.

Job makes a solemn protestation of his honesty and integrity, 1-12. Of his humanity, 13-16. Of his charity and mercy, 17-22. Of his abhorrence of covetousness and jealousy, 23-28. And of his readiness to acknowledge his errors, 29, 34. And wishes for a full investigation of his case, being confident that this would issue in the full manifestation of his innocence, 35-40.

I MADE a covenant with mine eyes; why then should I think upon a maid?

2 For what portion of God is there from above? and what inheritance of the Almighty from on high?

3 Is not destruction to the wicked? and a strange punishment to the workers of iniquity?

4 Doth not he see my ways, and count all my steps?

5 If I have walked with vanity, or if my foot hath hastened to deceit;

6 Let me be weighed in an even balance, that God may know mine integrity.

7 If my step hath turned out of the way, and mine heart walked after mine eyes, and if any blot hath cleaved to mine hands;

8 Then let me sow, and let another eat; yea, let my offspring be rooted out.

9 If mine heart have been deceived by a woman, or if I have laid wait at my neighbour's door;

10 Then let my wife grind unto another, and let others bow down upon her.

11 For this is a heinous crime; yea, it is an iniquity to be punished by the judges.

12 For it is a fire that consumeth to destruction, and would root out all mine increase.

13 If I did despise the cause of my man-servant, or of my maid-servant, when they contended with me;

14 What then shall I do when God riseth up? and when he visiteth what shall I answer him?

15 Did not he that made me in the womb make him? and did not one fashion us in the womb?

16 If I have withheld the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail;

17 Or have eaten my morsel myself alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof;

18 Let my wife grind unto another, let her work at the hand-mill, grinding corn; which was the severest work of the meanest slave. In this sense the passage is understood both by the Syriac and Arabic. See Exod. xi. 5. and Isa. xlvii. 2; and see at the end of the chapter.

And let others bow down upon her.] Let her be in such a state as to have no command of her own person; her owner disposing of her person as he pleases. In Asiatic countries, slaves were considered so absolutely the property of their owners that they not only served themselves of them in the way of scortation and concubinage, but they were accustomed to accommodate their guests with them! Job is so conscious of his own innocence that he is willing it should be put to the utmost proof; and, if found guilty, that he may be exposed to the most distressing and humiliating punishment: even to that of being deprived of his goods, bereaved of his children, his wife made a slave, and subjected to all indignities in that state.

For this is a heinous crime.] Mr. Gooda translates—

For this would be a premeditated crime, And a profligacy of the understanding.

That is, it would not only be a sin against the individuals more particularly concerned, but a sin of the first magnitude against society; and one of which the civil magistrates should take particular cognizance, and punish as justice requires.

Verse 12. For it is a fire] Nothing is so destructive of domestic peace. Where jealousy exists, unmixed misery dwells; and the adulterer and fornicator waste their substance on the unlawful objects of their impure affections.

Verse 13. The cause of my man-servant] In ancient times, slaves had no action at law against their owners; they might dispose of them as they did of their cattle, or any other property. The slave might complain; and the owner might hear him if he pleased, but he was not compelled to do so. Job states that he had admitted them to all civil rights; and, far from preventing their case from being heard, he was ready to permit them to complain even against himself, if they had a cause of complaint, and to give them all the benefit of the law.

Verse 15. Did not he that made me—make him?] I know that God is the Judge of all; that all shall appear before him in that state where the king and his subject, the master and his slave, shall be on an equal footing, all civil distinctions being abolished for ever. If then I had treated my slaves with injustice, how could I stand before the judgment-seat of God? I have treated others as I wish to be treated.

Verse 17. Or have eaten my morsel myself alone] Hospitality was a very prominent virtue among the ancients in almost all nations: friends and strangers were equally welcome to the board of the affluent. The supper was their grand meal: it was then that they saw their friends; the business and fatigues of the day being over, they could then enjoy themselves comfortably together. The supper was called cæna on this account: or, as Ptolemaeus says, Το μεν γαρ δεεινεν φαιει κοινα, δια την κοινωνιαν καλεισθαι καθ' αυτους γαρ ηρισων επικειναι οι παλαι Ρωμαιοι, συνδεειν ουκ εντες τοις φιλοις. The ancient Romans named supper cæna, (coena) which signifies communion.

Verse 1. I made a covenant with mine eyes] ברית עיני berith carati le-eynai: "I have cut" or "divided the covenant sacrifice with my eyes." My conscience and my eyes are the contracting parties; God is the judge, and I am, therefore, bound not to look upon any thing with a delighted or covetous eye, by which my conscience may be defiled, or my God dishonoured.

Why then should I think upon a maid?] מה אהיה עמו u-mah ethbonen al bethulah. And why should I set myself to contemplate (or think upon) Bethula? That Bethula may here signify an idol, is very likely. Sanchoniatho observes, that Ouranos first introduced Bethulia when he erected animated stones, or rather, as Bochart observes, ANOINTED stones, which became representatives of some deity. I suppose that Job purges himself here from this species of idolatry. Probably the Bethulia were at first emblems only of the tabernacle; בית עולא Beith Eloah, the house of God: or of that pillar set up by Jacob, Gen. xxviii. 18. which he called בית עולא Beith Elohim, or Bethahim; for idolatry always supposes a pure and holy worship, of which it is the ape. For more on the subject of the Bethulia, see the notes on Gen. xviii.

Verse 2. For what portion of God is there from above?] Though neither in this, nor in any other respect, I have wickedly departed from God, yet what reward have I received?

Verse 3. Is not destruction to the wicked?] If I had been guilty of such secret hypocritical proceedings, professing faith in the true God, while in eye and heart an idolater, would not such a worker of iniquity be distinguished by a strange and unheard of punishment?

Verse 4. Doth not he see my ways?] Can I suppose that I could screen myself from the eye of God, while guilty of such iniquities?

Verse 5. If I have walked with vanity] If I have been guilty of idolatry, or the worshipping of a false god; for thus we shava, which we here translate vanity, is used Jer. xviii. 15. compare with Psa. xxxi. 6. Hos. xii. 11. and Job ii. 8. And it seems evident that the whole of Job's discourse here is a vindication of himself from all idolatrous dispositions and practices.

Verse 6. Mine integrity.] תומם tummati, my perfection: the totality of my unblameable life.

Verse 7. If my step hath turned out of the way?] I am willing to be sifted to the uttermost—for every step of my foot, for every thought of my heart, for every look of mine eye, and for every act of my hands.

Verse 8. Let me sow, and let another eat] Let me be plagued both in my circumstances and in my family.

My offspring be rooted out.] It has already appeared probable that all Job's children were not destroyed in the fall of the house mentioned chap. i. 18, 19.

Verse 9. If mine heart have been deceived by a woman] The Septuagint add, αυτοσ ετροπον, another man's wife.

9 If mine heart have been deceived by a woman, or if I have laid wait at my neighbour's door;

10 Then let my wife grind unto another, and let others bow down upon her.

11 For this is a heinous crime; yea, it is an iniquity to be punished by the judges.

12 For it is a fire that consumeth to destruction, and would root out all mine increase.

13 If I did despise the cause of my man-servant, or of my maid-servant, when they contended with me;

14 What then shall I do when God riseth up? and when he visiteth what shall I answer him?

15 Did not he that made me in the womb make him? and did not one fashion us in the womb?

16 If I have withheld the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail;

17 Or have eaten my morsel myself alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof;

18 Let my wife grind unto another, let her work at the hand-mill, grinding corn; which was the severest work of the meanest slave. In this sense the passage is understood both by the Syriac and Arabic. See Exod. xi. 5. and Isa. xlvii. 2; and see at the end of the chapter.

And let others bow down upon her.] Let her be in such a state as to have no command of her own person; her owner disposing of her person as he pleases. In Asiatic countries, slaves were considered so absolutely the property of their owners that they not only served themselves of them in the way of scortation and concubinage, but they were accustomed to accommodate their guests with them! Job is so conscious of his own innocence that he is willing it should be put to the utmost proof; and, if found guilty, that he may be exposed to the most distressing and humiliating punishment: even to that of being deprived of his goods, bereaved of his children, his wife made a slave, and subjected to all indignities in that state.

For this is a heinous crime.] Mr. Gooda translates—

For this would be a premeditated crime, And a profligacy of the understanding.

That is, it would not only be a sin against the individuals more particularly concerned, but a sin of the first magnitude against society; and one of which the civil magistrates should take particular cognizance, and punish as justice requires.

Verse 12. For it is a fire] Nothing is so destructive of domestic peace. Where jealousy exists, unmixed misery dwells; and the adulterer and fornicator waste their substance on the unlawful objects of their impure affections.

Verse 13. The cause of my man-servant] In ancient times, slaves had no action at law against their owners; they might dispose of them as they did of their cattle, or any other property. The slave might complain; and the owner might hear him if he pleased, but he was not compelled to do so. Job states that he had admitted them to all civil rights; and, far from preventing their case from being heard, he was ready to permit them to complain even against himself, if they had a cause of complaint, and to give them all the benefit of the law.

Verse 15. And he is a poor despicable catfiff who would eat it alone, while there was another at hand full as hungry as himself.

Verse 18. This is a very difficult verse, and is variously translated. Take the following instances:—

For from his youth he (the male orphan) was brought up with me as a father. Yea, I have guided her (the female orphan) from her mother's womb.—Heath.

Nam a pueris educavit me commiseratio; jam inde ab utero matris meo illa me dederit.—Houbigant.

"For commiseration educated me from my childhood; And she brought me up even from my mother's womb."

This is agreeable to the Vulgate.

"Behold from my youth calamity hath quickened me; Even from my mother's womb have I distributed it."

This is Mr. Goode's version, and is widely different from the above.

But mercy grewe up with me fro my youth; And compassion fro my mother's wombe.

Coverdale.

Οτι εκ νεότητος μου εξετρεφον ως πατηρ, και εκ γαστρος μητρος μου ωδηγησα.—Septuagint. "For from my youth I nourished them as a father: and I was their guide from my mother's womb."

The Syriac—"For from my childhood he educated me in distresses, and from the womb of my mother in groans." The Arabic is nearly the same.

The general meaning may be gathered from the above; but who can reconcile such discordant translations?

Verse 20. If his loins have not blessed me] This is a very delicate touch: the part that was cold and shivering is now covered with warm woollen. It feels the comfort; and, by a fine prosopopœia, is represented as blessing him who furnished the clothing.

Verse 21. If I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless] I have at no time oppressed the orphan, nor given in behalf of the rich and powerful a decision against the poor, when I saw my help in the gate; when I was sitting chief on the throne of judgment, and could have done it without being called to account.

There are sentiments very like these in the poem of Lebeid, one of the authors of the Moallakat. I shall quote several verses from the elegant translation of Sir Wm. Jones, in which the character of a charitable and bountiful chief is well described.

Ver. 73.—Oft have I invited a numerous company to the death of a camel bought for slaughter, to be divided by lot with arrows of equal dimensions.

Ver. 74.—I invite them to draw lots for a camel without a foal, and for a camel with her young one, whose flesh I distribute to all the neighbours.

Ver. 75.—The guest and the stranger admitted to my board, seem to have alighted in the sweet vale of Tebaala, luxuriant with vernal blossoms.

Ver. 76.—The cords of my tent approach every needy matron, worn with fatigue, like a camel doomed to die at her master's tomb, whose vesture is both scanty and ragged.

Ver. 77.—There they crown with meat (while the wintry winds contend with fierce blasts) a dish flowing like a rivulet, into which the famished orphans eagerly plunge.

Ver. 79.—He distributes equal shares, he dispenses justice to the tribes, he is indignant when their right is diminished; and to establish their right, often relinquishes his own.

Ver. 80.—He acts with greatness of mind, and noble-

25 "If I rejoiced because my wealth was great, and because mine hand had gotten much;

26 "If I beheld the sun when it shined, or the moon walking in brightness;

28 This also were an iniquity to be punished by the judge: for I should have denied the God that is above.

29 "If I rejoiced at the destruction of him that hated me, or lifted up myself when evil found him;

30 ("Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin, by wishing a curse to his soul;)

ness of heart; he sheds the dew of his liberality on those who need his assistance; he scatters around his own gains and precious spoils, the prizes of his valour.

Verse 22. Let mine arm fall] Mr. Goode is at home in the translation of this verse:

"May my shoulder-bone be shivered at the blade, And mine arm be broken off at the socket."

Let judgment fall particularly on those parts which have either done wrong, or refused to do right when in their power.

Verse 23. Destruction from God was a terror] I have ever been preserved from outward sin through the fear of God's judgments; I knew his eye was constantly upon me, and I could—"Never in my Judge's eye, my Judge's anger dare."

Verse 24. Gold my hope] For the meaning of צר zahab, polished gold, and כתר kethem, stamped gold, see on chap. xviii. 15—17.

Verse 26. If I beheld the sun when it shined] In this verse Job clears himself of that idolatrous worship, which was the most ancient and most consistent with reason of any species of idolatry; viz. Sabœism, the worship of the heavenly bodies; particularly the Sun and Moon, Jupiter and Venus; the two latter being the morning and evening stars, and the most resplendent of all the heavenly bodies, the sun and moon excepted.

Job, says Calmet, points out three things here:

1. The worship of the sun and moon; much used in his time, and very anciently used in every part of the East; and in all probability that from which idolatry took its rise.
2. The custom of adoring the sun at its rising, and the moon at her change; a superstition which is mentioned in Ezek. viii. 16. and in every part of profane antiquity.
3. The custom of kissing the hand; the form of adoration and token of sovereign respect.

Adoration, or the religious act of kissing the hand, comes to us from the Latin; ad, to, and os, oris, the mouth. The hand lifted up to the mouth, and there saluted by the lips.

Verse 28. For I should have denied the God that is above.] Had I paid divine adoration to them, I should have thereby denied the God that made them.

Verse 29. If I rejoiced] I did not avenge myself on my enemy; and I neither bore malice nor hatred to him.

Verse 30. Neither have I suffered my mouth to sin] I have neither spoken evil of him, nor wished evil to him. How few of those called Christians can speak thus concerning their enemies; or those who have done them any mischief?

Verse 31. If the men of my tabernacle said] I believe the Targum gives the best sense here: "If the men of my tabernacle have not said, Who hath commanded that we should not be satisfied with his flesh?" My domestics have had all kindness shown them; they have lived like my own children, and have been served with the same viands as my family. They have never seen flesh come to my table, when they have been obliged to live on pulse. Mr. Goode's translation is nearly to the same sense:

"If the men of my tabernacle do not exclaim, Who hath longed for his meat without fulness?"

"Where is the man that has not been satisfied with his flesh?" &c. fed to the full with provisions from his table. See Prov. xxiii. 10. Isa. xxiii. 13. and Dan. x. 3.

Verse 32. The stranger did not lodge in the street] My kindness did not extend merely to my family, domestics, and friends. The stranger, he who was to me perfectly unknown, and the traveller who was on his journey,

33 If I covered my transgressions as ^{as} Adam, by hiding mine iniquity in my bosom :

34 [Did I fear a great multitude, or did the contempt of families terrify me, that I kept silence, and went not out of the door ?

36 Surely I would take it upon my shoulder, and bind it as a crown to me.

to some other district, found my doors ever open to receive them, and was refreshed with my bed and my board.

Verse 33. If I covered my transgressions as Adam] Here is a most evident allusion to the fall: Adam transgressed the commandment of his Maker, and he endeavoured to conceal it; first, by hiding himself among the trees of the garden; "I heard thy voice, and went and hid myself." Secondly, by laying the blame on his wife: "The woman gave me, and I did eat." And thirdly, by charging the whole directly on God himself: "The woman which thou gavest me, to be with me, she gave me of the tree, and I did eat." And it is very likely that Job refers immediately to the Mosaic account, in the book of Genesis. The spirit of this saying is this: When I have departed at any time from the path of rectitude, I have been ready to acknowledge my error; and have not sought excuses or palliatives for my sin.

Verse 34. Did I fear a great multitude] Was I ever prevented by the voice of the many from decreeing and executing what was right? When many families or tribes espoused a particular cause, which I found, on examination, to be wrong, did they put me in fear, so as to prevent me from doing justice to the weak and friendless? Or, in any of these cases, was I ever, through fear, self-seeking, or favour, prevented from declaring my mind, or constrained to keep my house, lest I should be obliged to give judgment against my conscience? Mr. Goode thinks it an imprecation upon himself, if he had done any of the evils which he mentions in the preceding verses. He translates thus:

"Thus let me be confounded before the assembled multitude, And let the reproach of his families overwhelm me!
Yes, let me be struck dumb! let me never appear abroad."

I am satisfied that the 38th, 39th, and 40th verses should come in either here, or immediately after the 25th; and that Job's words should end with the 37th, which, if the others were inserted in their proper places, would be the 40th. See the reasons at the end of the chapter.

Verse 35. Oh that one would hear me!] I wish to have a fair and full hearing: I am grievously accused; and have no proper opportunity of clearing myself, and establishing my own innocence.

Behold, my desire is] Or, וְהִנֵּה תַסִּי, "There is my pledge." I bind myself, on a great penalty, to come into court and abide the issue.

The Almighty would answer me] That he would call this case immediately before himself; and oblige my adversary to come into court, to put his accusations into a legal form, that I might have the opportunity of vindicating myself in the presence of a judge who would hear dispassionately my pleadings, and bring the cause to a righteous issue.

And that mine adversary had written a book] That he would not indulge himself in vague accusations, but would draw up a proper bill of indictment, that I might know to what I had to plead, and find the accusation in a tangible form.

Verse 36. Surely I would take it upon my shoulder] I would be contented to stand before the bar as a criminal, bearing upon my shoulder the board to which the accusation is affixed. In a book of Chinese punishments, now before me, containing drawings, representing various criminals brought to trial, in trial, and after trial, charged with different offences; in almost all of them a board appears on which the accusation or crime of which they are accused, or for which they suffer, is fairly written. Where the punishment is capital, this board appears fastened to the instrument, or stuck near the place of punishment. In one case, a large heavy plank, through which there is a hole to pass the head (or rather a hole fitting the neck, like that in the pillory,) with the crime written upon it, rests upon the criminal's shoulders; and this he is obliged to carry about for weeks or months during which the punishment lasts. It is probable that Job alludes to something of this kind; which he intimates he would bear about with him during the interim between accusation

37 I would declare unto him the number of my steps; as a prince would I go near unto him:—

38 If my land cry against me, or that the furrows likewise thereof complain;

39 If ^o I have eaten ^{the} fruits thereof without money, or ^o have ^{caused} the owners thereof to lose their life:

40 Let ^{thistles} grow instead of wheat, and ^{cockle} instead of barley. The words of Job are ended.

and the issue in judgment; and, far from considering this a disgrace, would clasp it as dearly as he would adjust a crown or diadem to his head; being fully assured from his innocence, and the evidence of it, which would infallibly appear on the trial, that he would have the most honourable acquittal.

Verse 37. I would declare unto him the number of my steps] I would show this adversary the different stations I had been in, and the offices which I had filled in life, that he might trace me through the whole of my civil, military, and domestic life, in order to get evidence against me.

As a prince would I go near] Though carrying my own accusation, I would go into the presence of my judge, as the nagid, נָגִיד, chief, or sovereign commander and judge of the people and country; and would not shrink from having my conduct investigated by even the meanest of my subjects.

In these three verses we may observe the following particulars:—

1. Job wishes to be brought to trial, that he might have the opportunity of vindicating himself. O that I might have a hearing!

2. That his adversary, Eliphaz and his companions, whom he considers as one party, and joined together in one, would reduce their vague charges to writing, that they might come before the court in a legal form. O that my adversary would write down the charge!

3. That the Almighty וְהוּא שַׁדְדַּי, the all-sufficient God, and not man, should be the judge, who would not permit his adversaries to attempt, by false evidence, to establish what was false; nor suffer himself to cloak with a hypocritical covering what was iniquitous in his conduct. O that the Almighty might answer for me; take notice of, or be judge in the cause!

4. To him he purposes cheerfully to confess all his ways, who could at once judge if he prevaricated, or concealed the truth.

5. This would give him the strongest encouragement: he would go boldly before him, with the highest persuasion of an honourable acquittal.

Verse 38. If my land cry] The most careless reader may see that the introduction of this and the two following verses here, disturbs the connexion; and that they are most evidently out of their place. Job seems here to refer to that law, Lev. xxxv. 1—7, by which the Israelites were obliged to give the land rest every seventh year, that the soil might not be too much exhausted by perpetual cultivation, especially in a country which afforded so few advantages to improve the arable ground by manure. He, conscious that he had acted according to this law, states that his land could not cry out against him, nor its furrows complain. He had not broken the law, nor exhausted the soil.

Verse 39. If I have eaten the fruits thereof without money] I have never been that narrow-minded man, who, through a principle of covetousness, exhausts his land, putting himself to no charges, by labour and manure, to strengthen it; or defrauding those of their wages who were employed under him. If I have eaten the fruits of it, I have cultivated it well to produce those fruits; and this has not been without money, for I have gone to expence on the soil, and remunerated the labourers.

Or have caused the owners thereof to lose their life] Coverdale translates, עַתְּ הֵן לֹא הָבֵה גִבְעוֹת עִמָּי of the plowmen. They have not panted in labour without due recompense.

Verse 40. Let thistles grow instead of wheat] What the word וְהָיָה חֹצֶחַ means, which we translate thistles, we cannot tell; but as וְהָיָה חֹצֶחַ, seems to mean hold, catch as a hook, to hitch, it must signify some kind of hooked thorn, like the brier; and this is possibly its meaning.

And cockle] וְהָיָה בַּחֶבֶת, some fetid plant, from וְהָיָה בַּחֶבֶת, to stink. In Isa. v. 2, 4, we translate it wild-grapes; and Bishop Lowth, poisonous berries; but Hasselquist, a pupil of the famous Linnæus, in his voyages, pag. 289, is inclined to believe that the solanum toxicum,

CHAPTER XXXII.

Elihu comes forward, and expresses his disapprobation both of Job and his three friends: with the one for justifying himself; and with the others for taking up the subject in a wrong point of view, and not answering satisfactorily; and makes a becoming apology for himself, 1-22.

SO these three men ceased to answer Job, because he was righteous in his own eyes.

a Heb. from answering.—b Ch. 33. 9.

or hoary nightshade, is meant, as this is common in Egypt, Palestine, and the East. Others are of opinion that it means the aconite, which is called beesh, in Arabic, denotes: this is a poisonous herb, and grows luxuriantly on the sunny hills among the vineyards; according to Celsius in Hieroboticon.

Beesh, is not only the name of an Indian poisonous herb, called the napellus mosia, but beesh moosh, or beesh, is the name of an animal, resembling a mouse, which lives among the roots of this very plant. "May I have a crop of this, instead of barley, if I have acted improperly either by my land or my labourers."

The words of Job are ended. That is, his defence of himself against the accusation of his friends, as they are called. He spoke afterward, but never to them: he only addresses God, who came to determine the whole controversy.

These words seem very much like an addition by a later hand. They are wanting in many MSS. of the Vulgate, two in my own possession; and in the Edissio Princeps of this version.

I suppose that at first they were inserted in rubric by some scribe, and afterward taken into the text. In a MS. of my own of the twelfth or thirteenth century, these words stand in rubric, actually detached from the text; while in another MS. of the fourteenth century they form a part of the text.

In the Hebrew text they are also detached: the hemistichs are complete without them; nor indeed can they be incorporated with them. They appear to me an addition of no authority. In the first edition of our Bible, that by Coverdale, 1535, there is a white line between these words and the conclusion of the chapter; and they stand, forming no part of the text, thus:

Here ends the words of Job.

Just as we say, in reading the Scriptures, Here ends such a chapter: or Here ends the first lesson, &c.

On the subject of the transposition, mentioned above, I have referred to the reasons at the end of the chapter.

Dr. Kennicott, on this subject, observes, chapters xxix. xxx. and xxxi. contain Job's animated self-defence, which was made necessary by the reiterated accusations of his friends. This defence now concludes with six lines (in the Hebrew Text) which declare, that if he had enjoyed his estates carelessly, or procured them unjustly, he wished them to prove barren and unprofitable. This part, therefore, seems naturally to follow ver. 25. where he speaks of his gold, and how much his hand had gotten. The remainder of the chapter will then consist of these four regular parts, viz.

1. His piety to God, in his freedom from idolatry, ver. 26-28.
2. His benevolence to men, in his charity both of temper and behaviour, 29-32.
3. His solemn assurance that he did not conceal his guilt, from fearing either the violence of the poor, or the contempt of the rich, ver. 33, 34.
4. (Which must have been the last article, because conclusive of the work) he infers that being thus secured by his integrity he may appeal safely to God himself. This appeal he, therefore, makes boldly: and in such words as, when rightly translated, form an image, which, perhaps has no parallel. For where is there an image so magnificent or so splendid as this? Job thus conscious of innocence, wishing even God himself to draw up his indictment, [rather his adversary Eliphaz and companions to draw up this indictment, the Almighty to be Judge,] that very indictment he would bind round his head; and with that indictment, as his crown of glory, he would, with the dignity of a prince, advance to his trial! Of this wonderful passage I add a version more just and more intelligible than the present:

Ver. 35. "O that one would grant me a hearing!
Behold my desire is that the Almighty would answer me;
And, as plaintiff against me, draw up the indictment.
With what earnestness would I take it on my shoulders!
I would bind it upon me as a diadem.
The number of my steps would I set forth unto him!
Even as a prince would I approach before him!"

I have already shown that Eliphaz and his companions, not Gon, are the adversary or plaintiff of whom Job speaks. This view makes the whole clear and consistent,

2 Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite, of the kindred of Ram: against Job was his wrath kindled, because he justified himself rather than God.

3 Also against his three friends was his wrath kindled, because they had found no answer, and yet had condemned Job.

c Gen. 22. 21.—d Heb. his soul.

and saves Job from the charge of presumptuous rashness. See also Kennicott's Remarks, p. 163.

It would not be right to say that no other interpretation has been given of the first clause of ver. 10. than that given above. The manner in which Coverdale has translated the 9th and 10th verses is the way in which they are generally understood:—Et in peccatis meis iustitiam meam non habeo: et in peccatis meis iustitiam meam non habeo: et in peccatis meis iustitiam meam non habeo.

In this sense the word grind is not unfrequently used by the ancients. Horace represents the Divine Cato commending the young men whom he saw frequenting the stews, because they left other men's wives undefiled!

*Virgata esto, impudicentia Dna Cato
Nam simul ac senes infasili terra libido
Huc juvenes equum ad descendere, non attemes
Pernolere uxoribus.* Sat. lib. 1. v. 2. ver. 22.

When a wifed Cato saw a noted part
From a night cellar standing in the dark:
Well done, my friend, if lost thy heart incline,
Indulge it here, and spare the married dame.

Francis.

Such was the morals of the holiest state of heathen Rome, and even of Cato, the purest and severest censor of the public manners! O tempora! mores!

I may add from a scholiast:—Molere vetus verbum est pro adulterare, subagitare, quo verbo in deponenti significatione utitur alibi, Ausonius in quaestione, Epigr. 7. ver. 6. de crispâ impudicâ et delectabili.

*Dei libet, felicit, molitur per utrumque casus.
Qui cœcis cœci, quæsi molitur at terro molitur.*

Hinc etiam molitores dicti sunt, subactores, ut apud cundem, Epigr. xc. ver. 3.

Cum dabit uxor molitoribus, et sibi adulter.

Thus the rabbins understand what is spoken of Samson grinding in the prison-house: quod ad ipsum Palestinæ certatim suas uxores adduxerunt, nascipienda ex eo protis, causa ad ipsius robur.

In this sense St. Jerom understands Lam. v. 13. They took the young men to grind. Adolescentibus ad impudicitiam sunt abusi, ad concubitum, scilicet, nefandum. Concerning grinding of corn, by portable mill-stones, or querns; and that this was the work of females alone, and they the meanest slaves; see the note on Exod. xi. 5. and on Judg. xvi. 21.

The Greeks use μύλλας to signify a harlot; and μύλλω to grind, and also κοο, ino, in the same sense in which Horace, as quoted above, alienas permolere uxores.

So Theocritus, Idyll. iv. ver. 58.

Εἰμ' ἀγὲ μοι Κορόδιον, το γερροντιον ἦρ' ἐτι μύλλας ε

Ταυὰν τὰν κνωσθῆν ἐποτῖδα, γὰς ποτ' ἐκνήθη;

Die agi mihi, Corydon, emero tibi sum dabit molit

Illud nigra superstitio scortillum quod oim dicitur?

Hence the Greek παρὰμασία, μύλλαδα μύλλας, scortium molere. I need make no apology for leaving the principal part of this note in a foreign tongue. To those for whom it is designed it will be sufficiently plain. If the above were Job's meaning, how dreadful is the wish, or imprecation in verse the tenth!

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXII.

Verse 1. These three men ceased to answer Job. They supposed that it was of no use to attempt to reason any longer with a man who justified himself before God. The truth is, they failed to convince Job of any point, because they argued from false principles: and, as we have seen, Job had the continual advantage of them. There were points on which he might have been successfully assailed; but they did not know them. Elihu, better acquainted both with human nature and the nature of the divine law, and of God's moral government of the world, steps in, and makes the proper discriminations: acquits Job on the ground of their accusations; but condemns him for his too great self-confidence, and his trusting too much in his external righteousness; and without duly considering his frailty and imperfections, his incautiously arraigning the providence of God of unkindness in its dealings with him. This was the point on which Job was particularly vulnerable; and which Elihu very properly clears up.

Because he was righteous in his own eyes. The Septuagint, Syriac, Arabic, and Chaldee all read, "Because he was righteous in their eyes;" intimating, that they were now convinced that he was a holy man, and that they had charged him foolishly. The reading of these against me: neither will I answer him with your speeches.

15 They were amazed; they answered no more; they left off speaking.

16 When I had waited, (for they spake not, but stood still, and answered no more.)

17 I said, I will answer also my part, I also will show mine opinion.

18 For I am full of matter, the spirit within me constraineth me.

19 Behold, my belly is as wine which hath no vent; it is ready to burst like new bottles.

20 I will speak, that I may be refreshed; I will open my lips, and answer.

21 Let me not, I pray you, accept any man's person, neither let me give flattering titles unto man.

22 For I know not to give flattering titles; in so doing my Maker would soon take me away.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

Elihu offers himself in God's stead to reason with Job in meanness and obscurity, 1-7. Charges Job with irreverent expressions, 8-12. Vindicating the providence of God, and shows the various methods which he uses to bring sinners to himself, by dreams and visions, 13-15. By secret inspirations, 16-18. By afflictions, 19-22. By messengers of righteousness, 23. And by the great statement, 24. How and from what God reverts men, and the blessings which he commensurates, 25-30. Job is exhorted to listen attentively to Elihu's teaching, 31-33.

WHEREFORE, Job, I pray thee, hear my speeches, and hearken to all my words.

2 Behold, now I have opened my mouth, my tongue hath spoken in my mouth.

3 My words shall be of the uprightness of my heart; and my lips shall utter knowledge clearly.

r Heb. they removed speeches from themselves.—s Heb. word.—t Heb. the spirit of my belly.—u Heb. is not opened.— Matt. 2. 17. Mark 2. 22. Luke 5. 37, 38.

Verse 15. They were amazed] Mr. Goods translates, "They (the speeches) are dissipated; they no longer produce effect: the words have flitted away from them." Your words being without proper reference and point, are scattered into thin air: there is nothing but sound in them; they are quite destitute of sense. But I prefer the words as spoken of Job's friends. They took their several parts in the controversy as long as they could hope to maintain their ground: for a considerable time they had been able to bring nothing new; at last, weary of their own repetitions, they gave up the contest.

Verse 16. When I had waited] I waited to hear if they had any thing to reply to Job; and, when I found them in effect speechless, then I ventured to come forward.

Verse 17. I will answer also my part] אנהו חלקי א-דנהו חלקי, "I will recite my portion." We have already seen that the Book of Job is a sort of drama, in which several persons have their different parts to recite. Probably the book was used in this way, in ancient times, for the sake of public instruction. Eliphaz, Zophar, and Bildad, had recited their parts; and Job had responded to each: nothing was brought to issue. Elihu, a by-stander, perceiving this, comes forward and takes a part, when all the rest had expended their materials: yet, Elihu, though he spoke well, was incapable of closing the controversy; and God himself appears, and decides the case.

Verse 18. I am full of matter] מילים, "I am full of words," or sayings; i.e. wise sentences, and ancient opinions.

The spirit within me constraineth me.] How similar to the words of St. Paul, The love of Christ constraineth us. Elihu considered himself under the influence of that Spirit of God, which gives understanding, and felt anxiously concerned for the welfare both of Job and his friends.

Verse 19. My belly is as wine which hath no vent] New wine in the state of effervescence.

Like new bottles] Bottles, or rather bags, made of goat-skins. The head and shanks being cut off, the animal is skinned out of the skin. The skin is then properly dressed; the anus and four shank holes properly tied up; and an aperture left at the neck, or in some other place, for the liquor to be poured in, and drawn out. One of these now lies before me, well tanned and beautifully ornamented, and capable of holding many gallons. They are used not only to carry wine and water, but for butter, and also for various dry goods. I have mentioned this in another place. When the wine is in a state of fermentation, and the skin has no vent, these bottles or bags are ready to burst; and if they be old, the new wine destroys them, breaks the old stitching, or rends the old skin. Our Lord makes use of the same figure, Matt. ix. 17. where see the note.

Verse 20. I will open my lips, and answer.] In the preceding verse Elihu compares himself to a skin-bottle, in which the wine was in a state of fermentation, and the bottle ready to burst for want of vent. He carries on the metaphor in this verse: the bottle must be opened to save it from bursting; I will open my mouth.

Verse 21. Let me not—accept any man's person] I will speak the truth without fear or favour.

Neither let me give flattering titles] I will not give epithets to any man, that are not descriptive of his true state. I will not beguile him by telling him that he is what he is not. עננהו, from ענהו, is generally supposed to signify to surname, to put a name to, or upon name, as the French word surnom implies. It means to give proud titles to persons who are worthless. It is well known that the Arabs make court to their superiors, by carefully avoiding to address them by their proper names; instead of which they salute them with some title or epithet expressive of respect. SCOTT. See below. Titles, expressive of office, ecclesiastical, civil, or military, are always proper, and never forbidden; because they served for distinction: but the Asiatic titles are in general bombastically and sinfully complimentary. The reader will find several specimens at the end of this chapter.

Verse 22. My Maker would soon take me away.] Were I to copy this conduct while under the influence which I now feel, God might justly consume me as in a moment. He is my Maker; he made me to know truth, to tell truth, and to live according to truth; for he is the God of truth. I shall, therefore, through his help, speak the truth; the whole truth; and nothing but the truth.

We find from the above that vain titles of ceremony expressive of the most eminent qualities, were given to worthless men, from time immemorial; and no wonder, for hypocrisy entered into man at the same time that sin entered into the world.

Of the flattering titles, used in the East, I shall give a few specimens from the كرامت شاه جهان Shah Jehan, or, "The Rules observed during the Reign of the Mogul Emperor Shah Jehan."

Speaking of the emperor, he is entitled,—

"The Sun which illuminates the firmament in the universe of royalty and dominion; the Moon which irradiates the sky of monarchy and felicity; the King who in pomp resembles Gem-shed. His hand is boundless as the ocean, in bestowing bounties, being the Key of the gates of kindness and liberality!"

Again:— "The Sun of the Heaven of Prosperity and Empire, the Shadow of God, the Asylum of the Universe, the splendour of whose instructive front causes light and gladness to the world and to mankind."

"The just and vigilant Monarch; The Asylum of Truth, the Refuge of the World; the Diffuser of Light, the Solver of all human Difficulties."

"The Lord of the Age, who is endowed with such perfect excellence, both in internal and external qualifications, that on all occasions he holds fast the thread of good counsel, prudence, and purity of morals."

"The faculty of apprehension is possessed by him in such a degree, that before the matter has scarcely obtained utterance, he comprehends the purport, and gives answers with the tongue of inspiration."

ADDRESSES TO PERSONS OF DISTINCTION. "Let them convey to the presence of glorious empire, the Sultan, in pomp like Solomon, the centre of the universe, powerful as heaven."

"Let them who kiss the carpet of the palace, in pomp like heaven, convey this letter to his majesty, whose sight is as creative as alchymy, king of kings, the asylum of the world."

"To the exalted presence, which gratifies the desires of all people, the most beneficent of the age, the vizier, protector of the universe, may the Almighty perpetuate his good fortune!"

"May this letter be dignified in the presence of Naweeh, Sahib, diffuser of benefits, of exalted pomp, the respectable, the discriminator of ranks; may his power increase!"

"Let them convey this to the perusal of his excellency; conversant in realities and mysteries; the support of excellencies; the cream of his contemporaries; and the cherisher of the poor!"

These are a specimen of the flattering titles given in the East to persons in eminent stations. Their kings they clothe in all the attributes of the Deity, when both in their private and public character they are corrupt and unholy, rascals in grain, and the ruthless oppressors of suffering humanity.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXIII.

Verse 3. My words shall be of the uprightness] As God has given me his spirit, from that spirit alone will I

4 The Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life.

5 If thou canst answer me, set thy words in order before me, stand up.

6 Behold, I am according to thy wish in God's stead: I also am formed out of the clay.

7 Behold, my terror shall not make thee afraid, neither shall my hand be heavy upon thee.

8 Surely thou hast spoken in mine hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words, saying,

9 I am clean without transgression, I am innocent; neither is there iniquity in me.

10 Behold, he findeth occasions against me, he counteth me for his enemy.

11 He putteth my feet in the stocks, he marketh all my paths.

12 Behold, in this thou art not just: I will answer thee, that God is greater than man.

13 Why dost thou strive against him? for he giveth not account of any of his matters.

14 For God speaketh once, yea twice, yet man perceiveth it not.

15 In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed;

16 Then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction,

17 That he may withdraw man from his purpose, and hide pride from man.

18 He keepeth back his soul from the pit, and his life from perishing by the sword.

19 He is chastened also with pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with strong pain:

speak; therefore, all my words shall be of uprightness, knowledge, and truth.

Knowledge clearly.] כִּדְבָרֵי דַאֲת בָּרִיר daat barur, pure science. I shall lay down no false positions, and I shall have no false consequences.

Verse 4. The Spirit of God hath made me] Another plain allusion to the account of the creation of man, Gen. i. 7. as the words נְשָׁמַת נְיָהֵמַת, the breath or breathing of God, and חַיַּיתַי הָיָה לִּי חַיָּה, haik given me life, prove: "He breathed into his nostrils the breath of lives, and he became a living soul."

Verse 6. I am according to thy wish in God's stead: I also am formed out of the clay.] Mr. Goode, and before him none other that I have seen, has, most probably, hit the true meaning:

Behold, I am thy fellow.
I too was formed by God out of the clay.

The word כִּפְעָה kepeca, which we translate according to thy wish; and which, if Hebrew, would mean, like to thy mouth; he considers as pure Arabic, (with a Hebrew postfix) כְּפָה kefo, signifying fellow, equal, like. Taken in this way, the passage is very plain; only לִּי לֵעֵל, by or through God, must be added to the last clause of the verse, instead of the first, as Mr. Goode has properly done.

Verse 7. My terror shall not make thee afraid] This is an allusion to what Job had said, chap. ix. 34. Let him take his rod away from me, and let not his fear terrify me. Being thy equal, no fear can impose upon thee so far as to overawe thee; so that thou shouldst not be able to conduct thy own defence. We are on equal terms; now prepare to defend thyself.

Verse 8. Surely thou hast spoken] What Elihu speaks here, and in the three following verses, contains, in general, simple quotations from Job's own words, or the obvious sense of them; as the reader may see by referring to the margin, and also to the notes on those passages.

Verse 11. He putteth my foot in the stocks] See the note on chap. xiii. 27.

Verse 12. In this thou art not just] Thou hast laid charges against God's dealings; but thou hast not been able to justify those charges. And were there nothing else against thee, these irreverent speeches are so many proofs that thou art not clear in the sight of God.

Verse 13. Why dost thou strive against him?] Is it not useless to contend with God? Can he do any thing that is not right? As to his giving thee any account of the reasons why he deals thus and thus with thee or any one else, thou needest not expect them: he is Sovereign, and is not to be called to the bar of his creatures. It is sufficient for thee to know that "he is too wise to err, and too good to be unkind."

Verse 14. For God speaketh once] Yet, though he will not be summoned to the bar of his creatures, nor condescend to detail the reasons of his conduct, which they could not comprehend; yet he acts so in the main; that the operation of his hand, and the designs of his counsel, may sufficiently appear, provided men had their eyes open upon his ways, and their hearts open to receive his influence.

Elihu having made the general statement that God would not come to the bar of his creatures to give account of his conduct, shows the general means which he uses to bring men to acquaintance with themselves, and with him; which he states in the six following particulars, which may be collected from verses 15 to 24.

Verse 15. I.—In a dream—when deep sleep falleth upon men] Many, by such means, have had the most salutary warnings; and to decry all such, because there are many vain dreams, would be nearly as much wisdom as to deny the Bible, because there are many foolish books, the authors of which supposed they were under a divine influence while composing them.

II.—In a vision of the night—in slumberings upon the bed] Visions, or images presented to the imagination, during slumber, when men are between sleeping and waking; or, when awake, and in bed, they are wrapt up in deep contemplation, the darkness of the night having shut out all objects from their sight, so that the mind is not diverted by images of earthly things impressed on the senses. Many warnings in this way have come from God: and the impression they made, and the good effect produced, were proofs of their divine origin. To deny this would be to call into doubt the testimony of the best, wisest, and holiest men in all ages of the church. Of one of these visions we have a remarkable account in chap. iv. of this book, verses 12—21. And this vision seems to have taken place in the night season, when Eliphaz awoke from a deep sleep. There is this difference between the accidents of the dream and the vision: the former takes place when deep sleep falleth upon men; the latter, in the night, in or after slumberings upon the bed.

Verse 16. Then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth, &c.] III.—By secret inspirations. A dream or a vision, simply considered, is likely to do no good; it is the opening of the understanding, and the pouring in of the light, that make men wise to salvation. Serious alarms, holy purposes, penitential pangs for past sins, apprehension of death and judgment, discoveries of God's justice, of Christ's love, of the world's vanity, of heaven's excellence, &c. &c. are often used by the divine Spirit to withdraw men from their evil purposes, and to hide pride from man, ver. 17. And of all these openings of the ear of the heart, and sealing instructions upon the conscience, we have numerous examples in the history of the church, in the experience of good men, and even in the civil and providential history of all nations.

Verse 18. He keepeth back his soul from the pit] By the above means, how many have been snatched from an untimely death. By taking the warning thus given, some have been prevented from perishing by the pit, some sudden accident; and others from the sword of the assassin, or nocturnal murderer. It would be easy to give examples, numerous examples, in all these kinds: but the knowledge of the reader may save this trouble to the commentator.

Verse 19. He is chastened also with pain upon his bed, &c.] IV.—AFFLICTIONS are a fourth means which God makes use of to awaken and convert sinners. In the hand of God these were the cause of the salvation of David, as himself testifies: Before I was afflicted I went astray, Ps. cxix. 67, 71, 75.

The multitude of his bones] By such diseases, especially those of a rheumatic kind, when to the patient's apprehension every bone is diseased, broken, or out of joint.

Some render the passage, When the multitude of his bones is yet strong; meaning those sudden afflictions which fall upon men when in a state of great firmness and vigour. The original וְרַבּוּת עֲצָמוֹתָי וְרַבּוּת אֲשֶׁר-בָּנָי וְרַבּוּת אֲשֶׁר-בָּנָי, may be translated, And the strong multitude of his bones. Even the strong multitude of his bones is chastened with pain upon his bed: the place of rest and ease affording him no peace, quiet, or comfort.

The bones may be well termed multitudinous, as there are no less than 10 in the cranium, or skull; upper jaw, 13; lower jaw, 1; teeth, 32; tongue, 1; vertebra, or back-bone, 24; ribs, 24; sternum, or breast-bone, 3; os innominatum, 1; scapula, or shoulder-blades, 2; arms, 6;

20 *So that his life abhorreth bread, and his soul v dainty meat.

21 His flesh is consumed away, that it cannot be seen; and his bones that were not seen stick out.

22 Yea, his soul draweth near unto the grave, and his life to the destroyers.

23 If there be a messenger with him, an interpreter, one among a thousand, to show unto man his uprightness:

24 Then he is gracious unto him, and saith, Deliver him from going down to the pit: I have found a ransom.

25 His flesh shall be fresher * than a child's: he shall return to the days of his youth:

26 He shall pray unto God, and he will be favourable unto him: and he shall see his face with joy: for he will render unto man his righteousness.

27 * He looketh upon men, and if any * say, I have sinned, and perverted that which was right, and it * profited me not;

28 * He will * deliver his soul from going into the pit, and his life shall see the light.

29 Lo, all these things worketh God * oftentimes with man,

30 * To bring back his soul from the pit, to be enlightened with the light of the living.

31 Mark well, O Job, hearken unto me: hold thy peace, and I will speak.

32 If thou hast any thing to say, answer me: speak, for I desire to justify thee.

hands, 54; thigh-bones, 2; knee-bones, 2; legs, 4; feet, 54: in all, not less than 231 bones, not reckoning the osae sethaimoides; because, though often numerous, they are not found but in hard labourers, or elderly persons.

Verse 20. His life abhorreth bread] These expressions strongly and naturally point out that general nausea or loathing which sick persons feel in almost every species of disorder.

Verse 21. His flesh is consumed away] As in atrophy, marasmus, and the Hebrews of complaints in general.

Verse 22. His soul draweth near unto the grave נפש נפש, soul, is here taken for the immortal spirit, as it is distinguished from רוח חיות, the animal life. The former draws near to the pit, רוח חיות, corruption; perhaps he meant dissipation, considering it merely as the breath. The latter draws near למקום la-memim, to the dead; i. e. to those who are already buried. Mr. Goode translates it the Destinies; and supposes the same is meant among the Hebrews by the Memim, as among the Greeks by their Μοιρα; the Latins, by their Parca; the Goths, by their Fatal Sisters; the Scandinavians, by their goddess Hela; and the Arabians, by Azrael, or the angel of death. I think, however, the signification given above is more natural.

Verse 23. If there be a messenger with him, an interpreter, &c. V.—The Messengers of righteousness: this is a fifth method, יש עמך שו"ת im yesh eim ma-leach melits, if there be over him an interpreting, or mediatorial angel or messenger. One among a thousand, אחד מאלף achad minni aleph, "One from the chief, head, or teacher."

To show unto man his uprightness] לראות le-haggid le-Adam yashro, "to manifest, or cause to be declared to man his righteousness;" to show unto Adam, men in general, the descendants of the first man, his purity and holiness: to convince him of sin, righteousness, and judgment, that he may be prepared for the discovery of what is next to be exhibited.

Verse 24. Then he is gracious unto him] He exercises mercy toward fallen man, and gives command for his respite and pardon.

Deliver him from going down to the pit] Let him who is thus instructed, penitent, and afflicted, and comes to me, find a pardon: For,

VI. I have found a ransom כופר copher, an atonement. Pay a ransom for him, פדוהו pedachu, that he may not go down to the pit, to corruption or destruction, for I have found out an atonement. It is this that gives efficacy to all the preceding means; without which they would be useless, and the salvation of a man impossible. I must think that the redemption of a lost world, by Jesus Christ, is not obscurely signified in verses 23, 24.

While the whole world lieth in the wicked one, and all hastening to the bottomless pit, God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life. Jesus Christ, the great sacrifice, and head of the church, commissions his messengers, apostles, and their successors, to show men the righteousness of God, and his displacement at sin; and at the same time his infinite love, which commands them to proclaim deliverance to the captives, and that they who believe on him shall not perish, shall not go down to the pit of destruction; for he has found out an atonement: and whoever comes to him, through his Christ, shall have everlasting life, in virtue of that atonement or ransom-price.

Should it be objected against my interpretation of אֶלֶף aleph, that it cannot be translated chief or head, because it is without the vau shurek, אֶלֶף aluph, which gives it this signification; I would answer, that this form of the word is not essential to the signification given above, as it occurs in several places without the vau shurek, where it most certainly signifies a chief, a leader, captain, &c. e. g. Zech. ix. 7. Jer. xiii. 21. and Gen. xxxvi. 30. in the first of which we translate it a governor, the second, captain, and the third, duke. And although we translate אֶלֶף aluph, an ox, or beave; and it most certainly has this meaning in several places; yet in this signification it is written without the vau shurek in Prov. xiv. 4. Ps. viii. 7. Isa. xxx. 24., and in Deut. vii. 13. xxviii. 4. 18, 51; which all show that this letter is not absolutely necessary to the above signification.

Verse 25. His flesh shall be fresher than a child's] He shall be born a new creature.

He shall return to the days of his youth] He shall be born again, and become a child of God, through faith in Christ Jesus.

Verse 26. He shall pray unto God] Being now adopted into the heavenly family, and become a new creature; he shall have the spirit of prayer, which is indeed the very breath and language of the new or spiritual life.

He will be favourable unto him] He shall manifest his good will to him; he shall live under the influences of divine grace.

He shall see his face with joy] He shall know that God is reconciled to him; and this shall fill him with joy, בִּטְרוּחַ be-teruah, with exultation: for, being justified by faith, he has peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom he has received the atonement; and rejoices in hope of the glory of God.

He will render unto man his righteousness.] So good and gracious is the Lord, that, by his grace, he will enable this convert to live to his glory; to bring forth all the fruits of the Spirit, and then reward him for the work, as if it were done by his own might.

Verse 27. He looketh upon men] עֲנוּשִׁים enoshim, wretched, fallen men. He shines into them, to convince them of sin: and if any under this convicting light of God, say, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and perverted the right, abused the powers, faculties, mercies, and advantages, which thou didst give me, by seeking rest and happiness in the creature, and it profited me not, it was all vanity and vexation of spirit: וְלֹא שָׁוָה לִי ve-lo shavah li, and it was not equal to me, did not come up to my expectations, nor supply my wants:

Verse 28. He will deliver his soul] He will do that to every individual penitent sinner, which he has promised in his word to do for a lost world: he will deliver his soul from going down to the pit of hell.

And his life shall see the light.] He shall walk in the light, as Christ is in the light; always enjoying a clear sense of his acceptance through the blood of the Lamb. See another mode of paraphrase of these verses at the end of the chapter.

Verse 29. Lo, all these things worketh God] God frequently uses one, or another, or all these means, to bring men, גִּבְרֵי gaber, stout-hearted men who are far from righteousness, to holiness and heaven.

Oftentimes] שָׁלֹשׁ shalosh, "three times over;" or, שָׁלֹשׁ pa-amayim, is by the points in the dual number, then it signifies twice three times; that is, again and again: very frequently. Blessed be God!

Verse 30. To bring back his soul from the pit] Nearly a repetition of the promise in ver. 28.

To be enlightened with the light of the living.] An echo of Ps. lvi. 13. Thou hast delivered my soul from death, that I may walk before God in the light of the living; and probably quoted from it.

Verse 31. Mark well, O Job] Pay the deepest attention to what I have said, and to what I shall say.

9 For ^a he hath said, It profiteth a man nothing that he should delight himself with God.

10 Therefore hearken unto me, ye ^p men of understanding: ^a Far be it from God, that he should do wickedness; and from the Almighty, that he should commit iniquity.

11 ^a For the work of a man shall he render unto him, and cause every man to find according to his ways.

12 Yea, surely God will not do wickedly, neither will the Almighty ^a pervert judgment.

13 Who hath given him a charge over the earth? or who hath disposed ^a the whole world?

14 If he set his heart ^a upon man, if he ^a gather unto himself his spirit and his breath;

15 ^a All flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust.

16 If now thou hast understanding, hear this: hearken to the voice of my words.

17 ^a Shall even he that hateth right ^a govern? and wilt thou condemn him that is most just?

18 ^a Is it fit to say to a king, Thou art wicked? and to princes, Ye are ungodly?

19 How much less to him, that ^a accepteth not the person of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor? for ^b they all are the work of his hands.

20 In a moment shall they die, and the people shall be troubled ^a at midnight, and pass away: and ^a the mighty shall be taken away without hand.

21 ^a For his eyes are upon the ways of man, and he seeth all his goings.

22 ^a There is no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves.

23 For he will not lay upon man more than right; that he should ^a enter into judgment with God.

24 ^a He shall break in pieces mighty men ^a without number, and set others in their stead.

25 Therefore he knoweth their works, and he overturneth them in the night, so that they are ^a destroyed.

26 He striketh them as wicked men ^a in the open sight of others;

27 Because they ^a turned back ^a from him, and ^a would not consider any of his ways:

28 So that they ^a cause the cry of the poor to come unto him, and he ^a heareth the cry of the afflicted.

was not true; and the words literally translated will bear a less evil meaning; "Job makes a track ^a לְעֵבֶר arch, to join fellowship ^a לְעֵבֶר lo-chaberah, with the workers of iniquity;" i. e. Job's present mode of reasoning, when he says, "I am righteous, yet God hath taken away my judgment," is according to the assertion of sinners, who say, "There is no profit in serving God; for, if a man be righteous, he is not benefited by it, for God does not vindicate a just man's cause against his oppressors." By adopting so much of their creed, he intimates that Job is taking the steps that lead to fellowship with them. See ver. 9.

Verse 10. Far be it from God] Rather, wickedness, far be that from God: and from iniquity the Almighty. The sense is sufficiently evident without the paraphrase in our version.

Verse 13. For the work of a man shall he render] God ever will do justice; the righteous shall never be forsaken, nor shall the wicked ultimately prosper.

Verse 13. Who hath given him a charge] Who is it that governs the world? Is it not God? Who disposes of all things in it? Is it not the Almighty, by his just and merciful providence? the government of the world shews the care, the justice, and the mercy of God.

Verse 14. If he set his heart upon man] I think this and the following verse should be read thus; "If he set his heart upon man, he will gather his soul and breath to himself; for, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust." He on whom God sets his heart, that is, his love, though his body shall perish and turn to dust like the rest of men, yet his soul will God gather to himself.

Verse 17. Shall—he that hateth right govern? Or, shall he who hateth judgment lie under obligation? It is preposterous to suppose that he who lives by no rule, should impose rules upon others. God, who is the fountain of all justice and righteousness, binds man by his laws;—and will thou, therefore, pretend to condemn him who is the sum of righteousness?

Verse 18. Is it fit to say to a king, Thou art wicked? The sentence is very short, and is thus translated by the VULGATE, Qui dicit regi, Apostata? Qui vocat duces impios? "Who says to a king, Apostate? Who calls leaders impious?" literally, Who calls a king Belial? Who calls princes wicked? Civil governors should be treated with respect; no man should speak evil of the ruler of the people. This should never be permitted. Even where the man cannot be respected, because his moral conduct is improper, even there the office is sacred, and should be revered. He who permits himself to talk against the man, would destroy the office and authority if he could.

Verse 19. That accepteth not] If it be utterly improper to speak against a king or civil governor, how much more so to speak disrespectfully of God, who is not influenced by human caprices or considerations, and who regards the rich and the poor alike, being equally his creatures, and equally dependent on his providence and mercy for their support and salvation.

Verse 20. In a moment shall they die] Both are equally dependent on the Almighty for their breath and being; the mighty as well as the poor. If the great men of the earth have abused their power, he sometimes cuts them off by the most sudden and unexpected death; and even at midnight when in security, and least capable of defence, they are cut off by the people whom they have oppressed, or by the invisible hand of the angel of death. This appears to be spoken in reference to Eastern tyrants, who seldom die a natural death.

Verse 22. There is no darkness] In this life; no shadow of death in the other world: no annihilation in which the workers of iniquity may hide themselves, or take refuge.

Verse 23. For he will not lay upon man] The meaning appears to be this. He will not call a man a second time into judgment; he does not try a cause twice; his decisions are just, and his sentence without appeal.

Mr. Goode translates.

"Behold, not to man hath he entrusted the time Of coming into judgment with God."

Man's time is not in his own hand: nor is his lot cast or ruled by his own wisdom and power. When God thinks best, he will judge for him; and, if oppressed or calumniated, he will bring forth his righteousness as the light, and do him justice on his adversaries.

Verse 24. He shall break in pieces] In multitudes of cases, God depresses the proud, and raises up the humble and meek. Neither their strength nor number can afford them security.

Verse 25. He knoweth their works] He knows what they have done: and what they are plotting to do.

He overturneth them in the night] In the revolution of a single night the plenitude of power on which the day closed is annihilated.

Verse 26. He striketh them as wicked men] At other times he executes his judgments more openly; and they are suddenly destroyed in the sight of the people.

Verse 27. Because they turned back] This is the reason why he has dealt with them in judgment. They had departed from him in their hearts, their moral conduct, and their civil government. He is speaking of corrupt and tyrannical rulers. And they did not, would not understand any of his ways.

Verse 28. So that they cause the cry of the poor] They were cruel and oppressive: the poor cried through their distresses, and against their oppressors; and God heard the cry of the poor. Nothing so dreadful appears in the court of heaven against an unfeeling, hard-hearted, and cruel man of power, as the prayers, tears, and groans of the poor:

In times of little liberality, when some men thought they did God service by persecuting those who did not exactly receive their creed, nor worship God in their way; a certain great man in Scotland grievously persecuted his tenants, because they had religious meetings in private houses out of the order of the establishment; though he never molested them when they spent their time and their money in the alehouse. A holy, simple woman, one of those people, went one morning to the house of the great persecutor, and desired to speak with him. The servant desired to know her message, and he would deliver it; for she could not be admitted. She told him she could deliver her message to none but his master; said it was a matter of great importance, and concerned himself intimately, and alone. The servant having delivered this message, and stated that the woman appeared to have something particular on her mind, his worship condescended to see her. "What is your business with me?" said he, in a haughty overbearing tone. To which she answered—"Sir, we are a hantle o' pur folk at —, wha are strivin to saurve God accordin to our ain conscience, and to get our saivrs sav'd; yee persecute us; and I am come to beg yee to let us alone; and in yee dinna, we'll pray yee deed." This rhetoric was irresistible: his lordship did not know what influence such people might have in heaven. He did not like to put such prayers to the proof, wisely took the old woman's advice, and set it them alone. He was safe, they were satisfied, and God had the glory. When the poor refer their cause to God, he is a terrible avenger. Let the potsherders strive with the potsherders of the earth; but wo to that man that contendeth with his Maker.

31 Surely it is meet to be said unto God, I have borne chastisement, I will not offend any more:

Verse 29. When he giveth quietness, who, then can make trouble? How beautiful is this sentiment, and how true! he ever acts as a sovereign; but his actions are all wise and just. If he give quietness, who dares to give trouble. And, if he give to every human being the right to worship himself according to their conscience, for the director of which he gives both his word and his Spirit, who shall dare to say to another, "Thou shalt worship God in my way, or not at all;" or, through a pretended liberality, say, "Thou shalt be tolerated, to worship him so and so;" and even that toleration be shackled and limited?

Reader, thou hast as much right to tolerate another's mode of worship as he has to tolerate thine; or, in other words, neither of you have any such right at all. The pretension is as absurd as it is wicked.

If, however, there be any thing in the religious practice of any particular people that is inimical, by fair construction, to the peace of the country, then the civil power may interfere, as they ought to do in all cases of insurrection: but let no such inference be drawn when not most obviously flowing from the practice of the people, and principles they profess; and when solemnly disclaimed by the persons in question. Whatever converts sinners from the error of their ways, must be good to society, and profitable to the state.

Whether it be done against a nation He defends and supports a nation or an individual, however weak, against their enemies, howsoever numerous and powerful. He destroys nations or individuals who have filled up the measure of their political or moral iniquity, though all other nations and individuals stand up in their support.

Verse 30. That the hypocrite reign not The Vulgate translates, Who causes a wicked man to reign because of the sins of the people. This was precisely the defence which Hægiage, the oppressive ruler of the Babylonian Irak, under the calif Abdul Malec, made, when he found the people in a state of insurrection. See at the end of the chapter.

Verse 31. Surely it is meet to be said unto God This is Elihu's exhortation to Job: Humble thyself before God, and say, "I have suffered—I will not offend."

Verse 32. That which I see not "What I do not know teach thou me; wherein I have done iniquity, I will do no more."

Verse 33. According to thy mind? he will recompense it Mr. Goode renders the whole passage thus:

This is the presence of thy tribes.
According to those art brewed shall he make it whole.
But is it there to choose, and not to suffer?
So, what thou determinest, say.

will recompense it, whether thou refuse, or whether thou choose; and not I: therefore speak what thou knowest.

34 Let men of understanding tell me, and let a wise man hearken unto me.

35 Job hath spoken without knowledge, and his words were without wisdom.

36 My desire is that Job may be tried unto the end, because of his answers for wicked men.

37 For he addeth rebellion unto his sin, he clappeth his hands among us, and multiplieth his words against God.

1 Heb. of heart.—v Ch. 35: 16.—w Or, My father, let Job be tried.—x Isa. 65: 18.

This may at least be considered a paraphrase on the very obscure original. If thou wilt not thus come unto him, he will act according to justice, whether that be for or against thee. Choose what part thou wilt take, to humble thyself under the mighty hand of God; or still to persist in thy supposed integrity. Speak, therefore; the matter concerns thee, not me: but let me know what thou art determined to do.

Verse 34. Let men of understanding tell me I wish to converse with wise men; and, by men of wisdom, I wish what I have said to be judged.

Verse 35. Job hath spoken without knowledge There is no good in arguing with a self-willed, self-conceited man. Job has spoken like a man destitute of wisdom and discretion.

Verse 36. My desire is, that Job may be tried unto the end אבי ייבבאחן אטייב, "My father, let Job be tried." So the VULGATE, Pater mi, probetur Job. But it may be as in the common translation, I wish Job to be tried; or, as Mr. Goode renders it, Verily, let Job be pursued to conquest for replying like wicked men.

This is a very harsh wish: but the whole chapter is in the same spirit: nearly destitute of mildness and compassion. Who could suppose that such arguings could come out of the mouth of the loving Saviour of mankind? The reader will recollect, that a very pious divine has supposed Elihu to be Jesus Christ!

Verse 37. He addeth rebellion unto his sin An ill-natured, cruel, and unfounded assertion; borne out by nothing which Job had ever said or intended; and, indeed, more severe than the most inveterate of his friends, (so called,) had ever spoken.

Mr. Goode makes this virulent conclusion still more virulent and uncharitable, by translating thus:

"For he would add to his transgressions apostasy;
He would clap his hands in the midst of us;
Yes, he would tempt his words up to God."

There was no need of adding a caustic here; the words in the tamest translation are tart enough. Though Elihu began well and tolerantly, he soon got into the spirit, and under the mistake, of those who had preceded him in this "tempest of words."

When Hægiage was informed that the people were in a state of mutiny because of his oppressive government, before they broke out into open acts of hostility he mounted on an eminence, and thus harangued them:

"God has given me dominion over you: if I exercise it with severity, think not that by putting me to death your condition will be mended. From the manner in which you live you must be always ill-treated, for God has many executors of his justice; and when I am dead he will send you another, who will probably execute his orders against you with more rigour. Do you wish your prince to be moderate and merciful? Then exercise righteousness, and be obedient to the laws. Consider that your own conduct is the cause of the good or evil treatment which you receive from him. A prince may be compared to a mirror; all that you see in him is the reflection of the objects which you present before him."

The people immediately dropped their weapons, and quietly returned to their respective vocations. This man was one of the most valiant, eloquent, and cruel rulers of his time: he lived toward the close of the 7th century of the Christian era. He is said to have put to death 120,000 people; and to have had 50,000 in his prisons at the time of his decease.

Yet this man was capable of generous actions. The following anecdote is given by the celebrated Persian poet Jami, in his Baharistan:

Hægiage, having been separated from his attendants one day in the chase, came to a place where he found an Arab feeding his camels. The camels starting at his sudden approach, the Arab lifted up his head, and in wrath said, Who is this who with his fine clothes comes into the desert to frighten my camels? The curse of God light upon

CHAPTER XXXV.

Elihu accuses Job of impious speeches, 1-4. No man can offend God by his integrity, nor profit him by his righteousness, 5-8. Many are afflicted and oppressed, but few cry to God for help, and for want of faith continue in affliction, 9-16.

1 Elihu spake moreover, and said, 2 Thinkest thou this to be right, that thou saidst, My righteousness is more than God's?

3 For thou saidst, What advantage will it be unto thee? and, What profit shall I have if I be cleansed from my sin?

4 I will answer thee, and thy companions with thee.

5 Look unto the heavens, and see; and behold the clouds which are higher than thou.

6 If thou sinnest, what doest thou against him? or if thy transgressions be multiplied what doest thou unto him?

7 If thou be righteous, what givest thou him? or what receiveth he of thine hand?

him! The governor approaching the Arab, saluted him very civilly, with the salam, Peace be unto thee! The Arab, far from returning the salutation, said, I wish thee neither peace, nor any other blessing of God. Hagiage, without seeming to heed what he had said, asked him very civilly "To give him a little water to drink." The Arab, in a surly tone, answered, If thou desirest to drink, take the pains to alight, and draw for thyself; for I am neither thy companion nor thy slave. The governor accordingly alighted; and, having drank, asked the Arab, "Who doest thou think the greatest and most excellent of men?" The prophet sent by God, said the Arab, and thou mayst burst with spleen. "And what thinkest thou of Aaly?" replied Hagiage. No tongue can declare his excellence, returned the Arab. "What," said Hagiage, "is thy opinion of the califf Abdul Malec?" I believe him to be a very bad prince, replied the Arab. "For what reason?" said Hagiage. Because, said the Arab, he hath sent for the governor the most execrable wretch under heaven. Hagiage finding himself thus characterized, was silent; but his attendants coming up, he rejoined them, and ordered them to bring the Arab with them.

The next day Hagiage ordered him to be set at table with himself, and bade him "eat freely." The Arab, ere he tasted, said his usual grace, "God grant that the end of this repast may be no worse than the beginning!" While at meat the governor asked him, "Dost thou recollect the discourse we had together yesterday?" The Arab replied, God prosper thee in all things;-but, as to the secret of yesterday, take heed that thou disclose it not to-day. "I will not," said Hagiage; "but thou must choose one of these two things: either acknowledge me for thy master, and I will retain thee about my person-or else I will send thee to Abdul Malec, and tell him what thou hast said of him." There is a third course, replied the Arab, preferable to those two. "Well, what is that?" said the governor. "Why, send me back to the desert, and pray God that we may never see each other's face again." Cruel and vindictive as Hagiage was, he could not help being pleased with the frankness and courage of the man; and not only forgave him the preceding insults, but ordered him 10,000 pieces of silver, and sent him back to the desert according to his wish.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXV.

Verse 2. My righteousness is more than God's? This would, indeed, be a blasphemous saying; but Job never said so, neither directly, nor constructively; and it would be much better to translate the words, כמו אתי תאדעכי me-Eh, I am righteous as thou art. And Job's meaning most certainly was, "Whatever I am in your sight, I know that in the sight of God I am a righteous man;" and he had a right to assume this character, because God himself had given it to him.

Verse 3. What advantage will it be unto thee? As if he had said to God, "My righteousness cannot profit thee, nor do I find that it is of any benefit to myself." Or perhaps Elihu makes here a general assertion which he afterward endeavours to exemplify. Thou hast been reasoning how it may profit thee; and thou hast said, "What profit shall I have in righteousness more than in sin."

Verse 4. I will answer thee. I will show thee the evil of a sinful way, and the benefit of righteousness; and supply what thy friends have omitted in their discourses with thee.

Verse 5. Look unto the heavens. These heavens and their host, God has created: the bare sight of them is 8 Thy wickedness may hurt a man as thou art; and thy righteousness may profit the son of man.

9 By reason of the multitude of oppressors they make the oppressed to cry: they cry out by reason of the arm of the mighty.

10 But none saith, Where is God my Maker, who giveth songs in the night;

11 Who teacheth us more than the beasts of the earth, and maketh us wiser than the fowls of heaven?

12 There they cry, but none giveth answer, because of the pride of evil men.

13 Surely God will not hear vanity, neither will the Almighty regard it.

14 Although thou sayest thou shalt not see him, yet judgment is before him; therefore trust thou in him.

sufficient to show thee that God is infinitely beyond thee in wisdom and excellence.

Behold the clouds. ענניו shechakim, the ethers. Vulgate, aethera; from פרו ששחאק, to contend, fight together, the agitated or conflicting air and light: the strong agitation of these producing both light and heat. Look upon these, consider them deeply, and see and acknowledge the perfections of the Maker.

Verse 6. If thou sinnest. God is not benefited by thy righteousness, nor injured by thy iniquity, howsoever multiplied it may be.

Verse 8. Thy wickedness may hurt. It is better to translate this literally:

"To a man like thyself is thy wickedness: And to the son of man, thy righteousness."

That is- Thou mayest injure thyself and offend by thy wickedness: And thou mayest benefit both by thy righteousness: But God thou canst neither hurt nor profit.

Verse 9. By reason of the multitude. Or rather, "From among the multitude," the oppressed clamour; פקדין saikis, they shout, פרו ששחאק, the wicked poor: these cry aloud because of their oppressors; but they have no relief, because they call not upon God.

Verse 10. Where is God my Maker. They have no just apprehension of his being; they do not consider themselves his creatures; or that he who created them still preserves them, and would make them happy if they would pray unto him.

Who giveth songs in the night. This is variously translated. "Before whom the high angels give praise in the night." CHALDEE.

"Who sets the night-watches." SEPTUAGINT.

"Gives meditations in the night." SYRIAC AND ARABIC.

"And that appertains upon us that we might praise him in the night." COVBERALE.

A holy soul has continual communion with God: night and day its happiness is great; and God, from whom it comes, is the continual subject of its songs of praise.

Verse 11. Who teacheth us more than the beasts. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel doth not know me; my people do not consider. Isai. Beasts, birds, fowls; and in many cases pond fishes, know and seem thankful to the hand that feeds them; while man, made much more noble than they, gifted with the greatest powers, privileged with the most important benefits, considers not the Lord, nor discerns the operation of his hand. Quadrupeds, reptiles, and fowls, have more gratitude to their masters than man has to his God.

Verse 12. There they cry. They bewail their calamities, but sorrow not for the cause of them; they cry against their oppressors, but they call not upon God.

Because of the pride of evil men. Or ופני מי-פני, from the face, presence, or influence, of the pride of wicked men. They cry for deliverance from the pride of wicked men; but they are not heard, because they cry not to God.

Verse 13. Surely God will not hear vanity. He will not attend to such vain cries: they cry from their oppressions; but they cry not to God.

Verse 14. Thou sayest thou shalt not see him. Several MSS. have Thou shalt not see me; and the Septuagint, and one other, Thou shalt not see us; but without points ופרו the original may be read see him, or see us; the third person singular, or the first person plural.

trust in him; be a monument of his mercy, rather than of his justice.

Verse 15. But—because it is not so] Rather, But now because he visiteth not in his anger. This is more literal than the versions generally proposed: and the sense of the place appears to be this—Because vengeance is not speedily executed on an evil work, therefore are the hearts of the children of men set in them to do iniquity. This is, in effect, the charge which Elihu brings against Job.

Verse 16. Therefore doth Job open his mouth in vain] God will execute vengeance when it may best serve the ends of his justice, providence and mercy. The delay of judgment is no proof that it shall not be executed; nor is the deferring of mercy any proof that God has forgotten to be gracious.

He multiplieth words without knowledge.] However this may apply to Job, it most certainly applies very strongly and generally to the words not only of Job's three friends, but to those also of Elihu himself. The context is frequently a strife of words.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVI.

Verse 1. Elihu also proceeded] Mr. Heath gives a good summary of this chapter. Elihu goes on to lay before Job the impropriety of his behaviour towards God, and desires him to consider how vain it will prove. That God Almighty will never yield the point; that he will administer impartial justice to all men, ver. 2-6. That the general course of his providence is to favour the righteous; and that, though he may sometimes correct them in love; yet, if they submit patiently to his fatherly corrections, they shall enjoy all manner of prosperity. But if they be stubborn, and will not submit, they will only draw down greater proofs of his displeasure, ver. 7-16. He tells him that had he followed the former course he had probably, before now, been restored to his former condition; whereas, by persisting in the latter course, he was in a fair way of becoming a signal example of divine justice, ver. 17, 18. He, therefore, warns him to use the present opportunity, lest God should cut him off while he was in a state of rebellion against him: for with God neither wealth, power, nor any other argument that he could use, would be of any avail, ver. 18-25. That God was infinitely powerful, there was no resisting him; and infinitely wise, as sufficiently appeared by his works; there was, therefore, no escaping out of his hands. That his purity was so great, that the sun, in his presence, was more dim than the smallest ray of light when compared to that grand luminary: that his holiness was manifest by his aversion from iniquity, and his goodness in supplying the wants of his creatures.

Verse 2. That I have yet to speak on God's behalf.] I have other proofs to allege in behalf of God's justice and providence.

Verse 3. I will fetch my knowledge from afar] לְמִרְחֹק le-merachok, from the distant place, meaning probably both remote antiquity and heaven; see below. I will show thee that all antiquity and experience are on my side. I can bring proofs from the remotest ages and from the most distant countries, to demonstrate that God is infinitely wise, and can do nothing foolish or erroneous; that he is infinitely powerful, and can bring all the purposes of his wisdom to effect; that he is infinitely good, and can will nothing and can do nothing that is not good in itself, and well calculated to do good to his creatures. And I shall show that his operations in the heavens and on the earth prove and demonstrate the whole.

And will ascribe righteousness to my Maker.] By proving the above points the righteous conduct of God, and his gracious government of the world, will be fully established.

5 Behold, God is mighty, and despiseth not any: he is mighty in strength and wisdom.

6 He preserveth not the life of the wicked: but giveth right to the poor.

7 He withdraweth not his eyes from the righteous: but with kings are they on the throne; yea, he doth establish them for ever, and they are exalted.

8 And if they be bound in fetters, and be holden in cords of affliction;

9 Then he showeth them their work, and their transgressions that they have exceeded.

10 He openeth also their ear to discipline, and commandeth that they return from iniquity,

11 If they obey and serve him, they shall spend their days in prosperity, and their years in pleasures.

d Or, afflicted.—Psa. 33. 12. & 34. 15.—f Psa. 112. 8.—g Psa. 107. 10.—h Ch. 33. 16. 23.—i Ch. 21. 12. Isai. 1. 19, 21.

That Elihu brings his knowledge from afar, from every part of the creation, as well as from the divine nature, is evident from the end of the chapter: 1. The omnipotence of God. God is great. 2. The eternity of God. We know him not, the number of his years cannot be found out, ver. 26. 3. From the economy of God in the atmosphere, in dews, rain, vapour, and the irrigation of the earth. He maketh small the drops, &c. ver. 27, 28. 4. In the thunder and lightning, by which he performs such wonders in the atmosphere, and executes such judgments in the world. Also who can understand the noise of his tabernacle. He spreadeth his light upon it. He judgeth the people, &c. ver. 29-33.

Verse 4. My words shall not be false] My words shall be truth without falsity.

He that is perfect in knowledge is with thee] "The perfection of knowledge is with thee." Thou art a sensible, well-informed man, and shall be able to judge of what I say.

Verse 5. God is mighty, and despiseth not any] He reproaches no man for his want of knowledge. If any man lack wisdom, he may come to God, who giveth liberally, and upbraideth not. I prefer this to the passive sense, will not be despised.

He is mighty] Literally, "he is mighty in strength of heart." He can never be terrified nor alarmed.

Verse 6. He preserveth not the life] He will not give life to the wicked; all such forfeit life by their transgressions. But giveth right] Justice will he give to the afflicted or humble, say him.

Verse 7. He withdraweth not his eyes] Exactly similar to those words of David, Psa. xxxiv. 15. "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous."

But with kings are they on the throne] I think the words should be read thus: "But with kings upon the throne shall he place them: and they shall be exalted for ever." The word וַיִּשְׁתַּבְּחֵם vayishibeyhem, he will establish or place them, should be added to the first clause, as I have done; and then the sense becomes much clearer. Instead of לְמִרְחֹק le-merachok, for ever, perhaps to victory would be a better sense: But with kings upon the throne will he place them; and they shall be exalted or triumph to victory. This is precisely the same idea, and conveyed in nearly the same words, as that of our Lord, To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. Rev. iii. 21. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God and his father, to him be glory, &c. Rev. i. 5, 6.

Verse 8. And if they be bound in fetters] These are means which God uses, not of punishment, but of correction.

Verse 9. He showeth them their work] He shows them the exceeding sinfulness of sin.

That they have exceeded.] וַיַּחְבְּרֵם vayichabaru, that they have strengthened themselves, and did not trust in the living God; and, therefore, they would not help themselves when trouble came.

Verse 10. He openeth also their ear] He gives them to understand the reason why they are thus corrected; and commands them to return from those iniquities which have induced him to treat them with afflictions and distresses.

Verse 11. If they obey and serve him] There may appear in the course of providence to be some exceptions to this general rule; but it is most true, that this is literally or spiritually fulfilled to all the genuine followers of God. Every man is happy, in whatsoever circumstances, whose heart is unreservedly dedicated to his Maker.

12 But if they obey not, they shall perish by the sword, and they shall die without knowledge.

13 But the hypocrites in heart heap up wrath: they cry not when he bindeth them.

14 They die in youth, and their life is among the unclean.

15 He delivereth the poor in his affliction, and openeth their ears in oppression.

16 Even so would he have removed thee out of the strait, into a broad place, where there is no straitness: and that which should be set on thy table should be full of fatness.

17 But thou hast fulfilled the judgment of the wicked: judgment and justice take hold on thee.

18 Because there is wrath, beware lest he take thee away with his stroke: then a great ransom cannot deliver thee.

19 Will he esteem thy riches? No, not gold, nor all the forces of strength.

20 Desire not the night, when the people are cut off in their place.

21 Take heed, regard not iniquity: for this hast thou chosen rather than affliction.

22 Behold, God exalteth by his power: who teacheth like him?

23 Who hath enjoined him his way? or who can say, Thou hast wrought iniquity?

24 Remember that thou magnify his work, which men behold.

25 Every man may see it; man may behold it afar off.

26 Behold God is great, and we know him not, neither can the number of his years be searched out.

27 For he maketh small the drops of water; they pour down rain according to the vapour thereof:

28 Which the clouds do drop and distil upon man abundantly.

Verse 12. But if they obey not] This also is a general rule, from which, in the course of providence, there are only few, and those only apparent deviations. Instead of they shall perish by the sword, the meaning of the Hebrew נָפְתוּ בְּחַרְבֵּי שָׁמַיִם is, "By a dart they shall pass by." They shall be in continual dangers, and often fall before they have lived out half their days. Mr. Goode translates: They pass by as an arrow. The Vulgate: Transibunt per gladium. "They shall pass away by the sword."

Verse 13. But the hypocrites in heart] חֵפְזֵי צְדָקָה, the profligate, the impious, those who have neither the form, nor the power, of godliness. The hypocrite is he who has the form, but not the power, though he wishes to be thought as inwardly righteous, as he is outwardly correct; and he takes up the profession of religion only to serve secular ends. This is not the meaning of the word in the Book of Job, where it frequently occurs.

They cry not] "Though he binds them, yet they cry not." They are too obstinate to humble themselves, even under the mighty hand of God.

Verse 14. They die in youth] Exactly what the Psalmist says: "Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days," Psa. lv. 2. 3. Literally, the words of Elihu are, "They shall die in the youth of their soul."

Their life is among the unclean.] כְּקִרְבָּיִם be-ke-doshim, among the whores, harlots, prostitutes, and sodomites. In this sense the word is used, though it signifies consecrated persons: but we know that, in idolatry, characters of this kind were consecrated to Baal and Ashtaroth, Venus, Priapus, &c. Mr. Goode translates, the rabble. The Septuagint: Their life shall be wounded by the angels.

Verse 15. And openeth their ears in oppression.] He will let them know for what end they are afflicted; and why he permits them to be oppressed. The word יָגִיד might be translated, he shall make them exult, or sing with joy, in oppression; like the three Hebrews in the burning fiery furnace.

Verse 16. Even so would he have removed thee] If thou hadst turned to, obeyed, and served him, thy present state would have been widely different from what it is.

Verse 17. But thou hast fulfilled the judgment of the wicked] As thou art acting as the wicked; so God deals with thee as he deals with them.

Elihu is not a whit behind Job's other friends. None of them seems to have known any thing of the permission given by God to Satan to afflict and torment an innocent man.

Verse 19. Because there is wrath] This is a time in which God is punishing the wicked; take heed lest thou be cut off in a moment, redeem the time: the days are evil.

Then a great ransom.] When he determines to destroy, who can save?

Verse 20. Desire not the night] Thou hast wished for death (here called night); desire it not: leave that with God. If he hear thee, and send death, thou mayest be out off in a way at which thy soul would shudder.

Verse 21. Regard not iniquity] It is sinful to entertain such wishes; it is an insult to the providence of God. He sends affliction: he knows this to be best for thee; but thou hast preferred death to affliction, thereby setting thy wisdom against the wisdom of God. Many, in affliction, long for death: and yet they are not prepared to appear before God! What madness is this! If he take them at their wish, they are ruined for ever. Affliction may be the means of their salvation: the wished-for death their eternal destruction.

Verse 22. God exalteth by his power] He has brought thee low, but he can raise thee up. Thou art not yet out of the reach of his mercy. Thy affliction is a proof that he acts toward thee as a merciful parent. He knows what is best to be done: He teaches thee how thou shouldst suffer and improve. Why sin against his kindness? Who can teach like him!

Verse 23. Who hath enjoined him his way?] Has God taken instructions from any man how he shall govern the world?

Thou hast wrought iniquity?] Who can prove, in the whole compass of the creation, that there is one thing imperfect, superabundant, or out of its place? Who can show that there is, in the course of the divine providence, one unrighteous, cruel, or unwise act? All the cunning and wickedness of man have never been able to find out the smallest flaw in the work of God.

Verse 24. Remember that thou magnify his work] Take this into consideration; instead of fretting against the dispensations of divine providence, and quarreling with thy Maker; attentively survey his works: consider the operation of his hands, and see the proofs of his wisdom in the plan of all; of his power, in the production and support of all; and of his goodness, in the end for which all have been made, and to which every operation in nature most obviously tends: and then magnify his work. Speak of him as thou shalt find: let the visible works of thy Maker prove to thee his eternal power and Godhead; and let nature lead thee to the Creator.

Verse 25. Every man may see it] He who says he can examine the earth with a philosophic eye, and the heavens with the eye of an astronomer, and yet says he cannot see in them a system of infinite skill and contrivance, must be ignorant of science, or lie against his conscience, and be utterly unworthy of confidence or respect.

Verse 26. God is great] He is the Omnipotent. We know him not] He is unsearchable.

Neither can the number of his years be searched out.] He is eternal.

These three propositions are an ample foundation for endless disquisition. As to paraphrase and comment they need none in this place; they are too profound, comprehensive, and sublime.

Verse 27. He maketh small the drops of water] This appears simply to refer to evaporation: and perhaps it would be better to translate נָפְתוּ יְגֵדוֹר, "he exhales:" detaches the smallest particles of the aqueous mass from the surface in order to form clouds, as reservoirs for the purpose of furnishing rain for the watering of the earth. God is seen in little things as well as great things; and the inconceivably little, as well as the stupendously great, are equally the work of Omnipotence.

They pour down rain] These exceedingly minute drops or vapour become collected in clouds: and then, when agitated by winds, &c. many particles being united, they become too heavy to be sustained by the air in which they before were suspended; and so fall down in rain, which is either a mist, a drizzle, a shower, a storm, or a water-spout; according to the influence of different winds, or the presence and quantum of the electric fluid. And all this is proportioned נִשְׂבָּא לְעָדָה, "to its vapour;" to the quantity of the fluid evaporated and condensed into clouds.

29 Also can any understand the spreadings of the clouds, or the noise of his tabernacle?

30 Behold, he spreadeth his light upon it, and covereth the bottom of the sea.

31 For by them judgeth he the people; he giveth meat in abundance.

1 Ch. 22. 3.—1 Heb. the roots.—Ch. 27. 13. & 28. 21.—n Psa. 135. 25. Acta 14. 17.

Verse 29. Which the clouds do drop] That in proportion to the evaporation, will be clouds, or masses of volatilized and suspended vapour; and in proportion to this, will be the quantum of rain, which, in different forms, will fall upon the earth.

There is a remarkable addition to this verse in the Septuagint. I shall insert the whole verse:—Προσεται εαλωματα, εκαστα δε νεφη επι αρθιτων βροχης ωραν εθερο σπασται, οιδασι δε κοιτης ταξιν επι τουτοις παχυ ου εστιται ου η δενοσα, ουκ διαλλασεται, ου η καρδια ου σαρματος. The rains descend, and the clouds cover with their shadows multitudes of men; he hath appointed to animals to know the order of their dwellings. At the contemplation of these things is not thy mind transported, and thy heart ready to part from thy body?

Verse 29. Can any understand the spreadings of the clouds] Though the vapour appear to be fortuitously raised, and subject, when suspended in the atmosphere, to innumerable accidents; to different winds and currents which might drive it all to the sandy deserts, or direct its course so that it should fall again in the great deep from which it has been exhaled, without watering and refreshing the earth; yet so does the good and wise providence of God manage this matter, that every part of the arable terrese surface receives an ample supply; and in every place where requisite, it may be truly said, that "the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and water the earth, and cause it to bring forth and bud, that it may minister seed to the sower, and bread to the eater."

In Egypt, where there is little or no rain, the earth is watered by the annual inundation of the Nile; there, because this system of evaporation is not necessary, it does not exist. Who can account for this economy! How are these clouds so judiciously and effectually spread through the atmosphere, so as to supply the wants of the earth, of men, and of cattle? I ask with Elihu, Who can understand the spreadings of these clouds? And I should like to see that volunteer in the solution of paradoxes, who would step forward, and say, I am the man.

The noise of his tabernacle?] By the tabernacle we may understand the whole Armament, or atmospheric expansion; the place where the Almighty seems more particularly to dwell; whence he sends forth the rain of his strength, and the thunder of his power.

The noise must refer to blowing of winds and tempests; or to the claps, peals, and rattling of thunder, by means of the electric fluid.

Verse 30. He spreadeth his light upon it] Or, as Mr. Goode translates,—He throweth forth from it his flash. These two verses may both have an allusion to the sudden suffocation of that part of the atmosphere whence the thunder proceeds, by the agency of the electric fluid; the rushing in of the air on each side to restore the equilibrium, which the passage of the fire had before destroyed. The noise produced by this sudden rushing in of the air, as well as that occasioned by the ignition of the hydrogen gas, which is one of the constituents of water, is the thunder of his tabernacle, viz. the atmosphere, where God appears, in such cases, to be manifesting his presence and his power.

Elihu says, that God spreadeth his light upon it. This is spoken in reference to the flashes and coruscations of lightning in the time of thunder-storms; when, even in a dark night, a sudden flash illuminates for a moment the surface of the earth under that place.

He covereth the bottom of the sea.] He doth whatsoever it pleaseth him, in the heavens above, in the earth beneath, and in all deep places. Yet the depths of the sea are as much under his control and influence as the atmosphere, and its whole collection of vapours, meteors, and galvanic and electric fluids.

Verse 31. By them judgeth he the people] He makes storms, tempests, winds, hurricanes, tornadoes, thunder and lightning, drought and inundation, the instruments of his justice, to punish rebellious nations.

He giveth meat in abundance] Though by these he punishes offenders, yet through the same, as instruments, he provides for the wants of men and animals in general. Storms, tempests, and hurricanes, agitate the lower regions of the atmosphere, disperse noxious vapours, and thus render it fit for respiration: and, without these, it would soon become a stagnant, putrid, and deadly mass, in which 32 With clouds he covereth the light: and commandeth it not to shine by the cloud that cometh betwixt.

33 The noise thereof showeth concerning it, the cattle also concerning the vapour.

o Psa. 147. 8.—p 1 Kings 18. 41, 45.—r Heb. that which goeth up.

neither animals could live nor vegetables thrive. And by dew, rains, snow, frosts, winds, cold, and heat, he fructifies the earth, and causes it to bring forth abundantly, so that every thing living is filled with plenteousness.

Some critics translate this latter clause thus:

He passeth sentence amain.—I cannot see this meaning in the original words. Not one of the versions has understood them; nor does this translation, supposing even that the Hebrew would bear it, give so fine and so elegant an idea as that of the common version. I feel always reluctant to give a sense in any case that is not supported in some of its parts by any of the ancient versions; and more especially when it is contrary to the whole of them; and still more particularly when opposed to the Arabic, which, in the Book of Job, containing so many Arabisms, I consider to be of very great importance.

Verse 32. With clouds he covereth the light] This is an extraordinary saying, אר כסו כסו by אל copayim kissah aur, which Mr. Goode translates, He brandisheth the blaze athwart the concave. The Vulgate, with which all the other versions less or more agree, has In manibus abscondit lucem, "In his hands he hideth the light;" or, more literally, "By the hollow of his hands, (כפאיו copayim,) he concealeth the light," (אר אור,) the fountain of light: viz. the sun.

And commandeth it not to shine by the cloud that cometh between] I am afraid this is no translation of the original. Old Coverdale is better: And at his commandment it cometht agayne; which is a near copy of the Vulgate. Here again Mr. Goode departs from all the versions, both ancient and modern, by translating thus, And launcheth his penetrating bolt. Dr. Stock, in my opinion, comes nearer the original and the versions in his translation:

And goeth charge as to what it shall meet.

The mending of the text by conjecture, to which we should only recur in desperate necessity, has furnished Mr. Goode and Reiske with the above translation. For my own part I must acknowledge an extreme difficulty both here and in the concluding verse; on which I am unwilling to lay a correcting hand. I think something of the doctrine of eclipses is here referred to: the defect of the solar light, by the interposition of the moon. So, in the time of an eclipse, God is represented as covering the body of the sun with the hollow of his hand, and thus obscuring the solar light; and then removing his hand, so as to permit it to reilluminate the earth.

Mr. Goode gets his translation by dividing the words in a different manner from the present text. I shall give both:

Hebrew ויני עולה במפתח
Va-yitsav aleyah bemaphgeyth.
Mr. Goode וני ליה מפתח
"Ve-yezvo liabhe mapegio."

Of which, he learnedly contends, And launcheth his penetrating bolt, is the literal sense. The change here made to produce the above meaning is not a violent one: and I must leave the reader to judge of its importance.

Verse 33. The noise thereof showeth concerning it, the cattle also concerning the vapour.] I think this translation very unhappy. I shall give each hemistich in the original:

ויני עולה רע
Yagid alai reo.
קנה אף על עולה
Mikneh aph al ovelah.

I think this may be translated without any violence to any word in the text, Ita loud noise, (or his thunder,) shall proclaim concerning him, A magnitude of wrath against iniquity.

This is literal; and gives, in my opinion, a proper meaning of the passage; and one in strict connexion with the context. And it is worthy of remark, that every wicked man trembles at the noise of thunder, and the flash of lightning; and considers this a treasury of divine wrath; emphatically called among us The artillery of the skies; and wherever the noise is heard it is considered the voice of God. Thus the thunder declares concerning him. The next chapter, which is a continuation of the subject here, confirms and illustrates this meaning. For וני yagid, Houbigant reads וני yagid, and for קנה mikneh, קנה mi-kenath; and translates thus: He agitates with himself, his thunder, from the indignation of his wrath against iniquity

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Elihu continues to set forth the wisdom and omnipotence of God, as manifested in the thunder and lightning, 1-4. In the snows and frosts, 5-8. In various meteors; and the end for which they are sent, 9-13. Job is exhorted to consider the wonderful works of God in the light, in the clouds, in the winds, in the heat and cold, in the formation of the heavens, and the changes in the atmosphere, 14-22. The perfections of God, and how he should be revered by his creatures, 23, 24.

At this also my heart trembleth, and is moved out of his place. Hear attentively the noise of his voice, and the sound that goeth out of his mouth.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVII.

Verse 1. My heart trembleth] This is what the Septuagint has anticipated: see under ver. 28. of the preceding chapter. A proper consideration of God's majesty in the thunder and lightning is enough to appal the stoutest heart, confound the wisest mind, and fill all with humility and devotion. This, to the middle of ver. 5. should be added to the preceding chapter, as it is a continuation of the account of the thunder and lightning given at the conclusion of that chapter. Our present division is as absurd as it is unfortunate.

Verse 2. Hear attentively] "Hear with hearing." The words seem to intimate that there was actually at that time a violent storm of thunder and lightning, and that the successive peals were now breaking over the house, and the lightning flashing before their eyes. The storm continued till Elihu had finished; and out of that storm the Almighty spoke.—See the beginning of the succeeding chapter.

The noise of his voice] The sudden clap.

And the sound that goeth out] The peal, or continued rattling, pounding, and thumping, to the end of the peal. The whole is represented as the voice of God himself; and the thunder as immediately issuing from his mouth.

Verse 3. He directeth it under the whole heaven] He directeth it, the lightning, under the whole heaven, in the twinkling of an eye, from east to west. And its light, the reflection of the flash, not the lightning, unto the ends of the earth; so that a whole hemisphere seems to see it at the same instant.

Verse 4. After it a voice roareth] After the flash has been seen the peal is heard; and this will be more or fewer seconds after the peal, in proportion to the distance of the thunder cloud from the ear. Lightning traverses any space without any perceivable succession of time; nothing seems to be any obstacle to its progress. A multitude of persons taking hands, the first and the last connected with the electric machine, all feel the shock in the same instant; and were there a chain as conductor to go round the globe, the last would feel the shock in the same moment as the first. But, as sound depends on the undulations of the air for its propagation, and is known to travel at the rate of only 1142 feet in a second; consequently if the flash were only 1142 feet from the spectator, it would be seen one second, or one swing of the pendulum, before the sound could reach the ear, though the clap and the flash take place in the same instant; and if twice this distance two seconds, and so on. It is of some consequence to know that lightning, at a considerable distance, suppose six or eight seconds of time, is never known to burn, kill, or do injury. When the flash and the clap immediately succeed each other, then there is strong ground for apprehension, as the thunder cloud is near. If the thunder cloud be a mile and a half distant, it is, I believe, never known to kill man or beast, or do any damage to buildings, either by throwing them down, or burning them. Now its distance may be easily known by means of a pendulum clock, or watch that has seconds. When the flash is seen, count the seconds till the clap is heard. Then compute:—If only one second is counted, then the thunder cloud is within 1142 feet, or about 380 yards; if two seconds, then its distance is 2284 feet, or 761 yards; if three seconds, then 3426 feet, or 1142 yards; if four seconds, then the cloud is distant 4568 feet, or 1522 yards; if five seconds, then the distance is 5710 feet, or 1903 yards; if six seconds, then the distance is 6852 feet, or 2284 yards, one mile and nearly one third; if seven seconds, then the distance of the cloud is 7994 feet, or 2665 yards, or one mile and a half, and 25 yards. Beyond this distance lightning has not been known to do any damage: the fluid being too much diffused, and partially absorbed, in its passage over electric bodies; i. e. those which are not fully impregnated by the electric matter, and which receive their full charge when they come within the electric attraction of the lightning. For more on the rain produced by thunder storms, see on chap. xxxviii. 25. This scale may be carried on at pleasure, by adding to the last sum, for every second, 1142 feet, and reducing to yards and miles as above, allowing 1760 yards to one mile.

He thundereth with the voice of his excellency] נאמר געון-ו, of his majesty: nor is there a sound in nature

3 He directeth it under the whole heaven, and his lightning unto the ends of the earth.

4 After it a voice roareth: he thundereth with the voice of his excellency; and he will not stay them when his voice is heard.

5 God thundereth marvellously with his voice; great things doeth he, which we cannot comprehend.

more descriptive of, or more becoming, the majesty of God, than that of THUNDER. We hear the breeze in its rustling, the rain in its pattering, the hail in its rattling, the wind in its hollow howling, the cataract in its dash, the bull in his bellowing, the lion in his roar; but we hear God, the Almighty, the Omnipresent, in the contiguous peal of THUNDER! This sound, and this sound only, becomes the majesty of Jehovah.

And he will not stay them] וְלֹא יַעֲקֹבֵמ, and he hath not limited or circumscribed them. His lightnings lighten the world; literally the whole world. The electric fluid is diffused through all nature, and every where art can exhibit it to view. To his thunder and lightning, therefore, he has assigned no limits. And when his voice soundeth, when the lightning goes forth,—who shall assign its limits, and who can stop its progress? It is, like God, IRRESISTIBLE.

Verse 5. God thundereth marvellously with his voice] This is the conclusion of Elihu's description of the lightning and thunder: and here only should chap. xxxvi. have ended. He began chap. xxxvi. 29. with the noise of God's tabernacle; and he ends here with the marvellous thundering of Jehovah. Probably the writer of the Book of Job had seen the description of a similar thunder-storm as given by the Psalmist, Psa. lxxviii. 16, 17, 18, 19.

Verse 16. The waters saw thee, O God! The waters saw thee, and were afraid. Yea, the deeps were affrighted!

Verse 17. The clouds poured out water; The heavens sent forth a sound; Yea, thine arrows went abroad.

Verse 18. The voice of thy thunder was through the expanse; The lightnings illumined the globe; The earth trembled and shook!

Verse 19. Thy way is in the sea. And thy paths on many waters. But thy footsteps are not known.

Great things doeth he] This is the beginning of a new paragraph; and relates particularly to the phenomena which are afterward mentioned. All of them wonderful things; and in many respects, to us incomprehensible.

Verse 6. For he saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth] Snow is generally defined, "A well known meteor, formed by the freezing of the vapours in the atmosphere." We may consider the formation of snow thus:—A cloud of vapours being condensed into drops, these drops becoming too heavy to be suspended in the atmosphere, descend; and, meeting with a cold region of the air, they are frozen, each drop shooting in several points. These still continuing their descent, and meeting with some intermitting gales of a warmer air, are a little thawed, blunted, and again, by falling into colder air, frozen into clusters, or so entangled with each other, as to fall down in what we call flakes.

Snow differs from hail and hoar-frost in being crystallized: this appears on examining a flake of snow with a magnifying glass; when the whole of it will appear to be composed of fine spicula or points diverging like rays from a centre. I have often observed the particles of snow to be of a regular figure, for the most part beautiful stars of six points, as clear and transparent as ice. On each of these points are other collateral points, set at the same angles as the main points themselves, though some are irregular, the points broken, and some are formed of the fragments of other regular stars. I have observed snow to fall sometimes entirely in the form of separate regular six pointed stars, without either clusters or flakes; and each so large as to be the eighth of an inch in diameter.

The lightness of snow is owing to the excess of its surface when compared with the matter contained under it.

Its whiteness is owing to the small particles into which it is divided: for take ice, opaque almost to blackness, and pound it fine, and it becomes as white as snow.

The immediate cause of the formation of snow is not well understood: it has been attributed to electricity; and hail is supposed to owe its more compact form to a more intense electricity, which unites the particles of hail more closely than the moderate electricity does those of snow. But rain, snow, hail, frost, ice, &c. have all one common origin; they are formed out of the vapours, which have been exalted by heat from the surface of the waters.

Snow, in northern countries, is an especial blessing of providence; for, by covering the earth, it prevents corn and other vegetables from being destroyed by the intense earth; likewise to the small rain, and to the great rain of his strength.

7 He sealeth up the hand of every man; that all men may know his work.

8 Then the beasts go into dens, and remain in their places.

9 Out of the south cometh the whirlwind: and cold out of the north.

10 By the breath of God frost is given: and the breadth of the waters is straitened.

cold of the air in the winter months; and especially preserves them from cold piercing winds. It is not a fact that it possesses in itself any fertilizing quality, such as nitrous salts, according to vulgar opinion: its whole use is covering the vegetables from intense cold, and thus preventing the natural heat of the earth from escaping, so that the intense cold cannot freeze the juices in the tender tubes of vegetables, which would rupture those tubes, and so destroy the plant.

Mr. Goode alters the punctuation of this verse, and translates thus:

Behold, he saith to the snow, Be! On earth then falleth it. To the rain,—and it falleth: The rains of his might.

By the small rain, we may understand drizzling showers: by the rain of his strength, sudden thunder-storms, when the rain descends in torrents; or violent rain from dissipating water-spouts.

Verse 7. He sealeth up the hand of every man] After all that has been said, and much of it, most learnedly, on this verse, I think that the act of freezing is probably intended: that when the earth is bound up by intense frost, the hand of yad, labour, of every man is sealed up; he can do no more labour in the field, till the south wind blow, by which a thaw takes place. While the earth is in this state of rigidity, the beasts go into their dens, and remain in their places, ver. 8. some of them sleeping out the winter in a state of torpor, and others of them feeding on the stores which they had collected in autumn. However, the passage may mean no more than by the severity of the rains beasts are drawn to their coverts; and man is obliged to intermit all his labours. The mighty rains are past. Who would have thought that on this verse, as its scriptural foundation, the doctrine of chiromancy is built! God has so marked the hand of every man by the lines cherous exhibited, that they tell all the good or bad fortunes they shall have during life: and he has done this that all men, by a judicious examination of their hands, may know his work! And on this John Taenier, a famous mathematician, lawyer, musician, and poet laureat of Cologne, has written a large folio volume, with more hands in it than fell to the lot of Briareus: printed at Cologne, 1683.

Verse 9. Out of the south cometh the whirlwind] See the note on chap. ix. 9. What is rendered south here, is there rendered chambers. Mr. Goode translates here the utmost zone. The Chaldee: "From the supreme chamber the commotion shall come; and from the cataracts of Arcturus the cold." What the whirlwind now suphah, is we know not. It might have been a wind peculiar to that district: and it is very possible that it was a scorching wind, something like the simoom.

Verse 10. By the breath of God frost is given] The freezing of water, though it is generally allowed to be the effect of cold, and has been carefully examined by the most eminent philosophers, is still involved in much mystery; and is a very proper subject to be produced among the great things which God doeth, and which we cannot comprehend, ver. 5. Water, when frozen, becomes solid, and increases considerably in bulk. The expansive power in freezing is so great that, if water be confined in a gun-barrel, it will split the solid metal throughout its whole length. Bomb-shells have been filled with water, and plugged tight, and exposed to cold air, when they have been rent, though the shell has been nearly two inches thick! Attempts have been made to account for this: but they have not, as yet, been generally successful. The breath of God freezes the waters; and that breath thaws them. It is the work of omnipotence: and there, for the present, we must leave it.

The breadth of the waters is straitened] This has been variously translated:—pno mutak, which we here render straitened, we translate ver. 18. melted. Mr. Goode thinks that the idea of a mirror is implied, or something molten; and, on this ground, it may be descriptive of the state of water formed into ice. He, therefore, translates:

By the breath of God the frost congeleth, And the expans of the waters into a mirror.

11 Also by watering he wearieth the thick cloud: he scattereth his bright cloud:

12 And it is turned round about by his counsels: that they may do whatsoever he commandeth them upon the face of the world in the earth.

13 He causeth it to come, whether for correction, or for his land, or for mercy.

14 Hearken unto this, O Job: stand still, and consider the wondrous works of God.

e Heb. the cloud of his light.—f Psa. 148. 8.—g Exod. 9. 18, 23. 1 Sam. 12. 18, 19. Ezra 10. 9. Ch. 35. 31.—h Heb. a rod.—i Ch. 28. 27, 27.—k 2 Sam. 21. 10. P Kings 18. 45.—l Psa. 111. 2.

I have only to observe that in the act of freezing, wind or air is necessary; for it has been observed that water, which lay low in ponds, did not freeze till some slight current of air fell on and ruffled the surface, when it instantly shot into ice.

Verse 11. By watering he wearieth the thick cloud] Perhaps it would be better to say the brightness (ברק beri) dissipates the cloud; or, if we follow our version, by watering the earth, he wearieth, weareth out, or emptieth the thick cloud; causes it to pour down all its contents upon the earth, that they may cause it to bring forth and bud. The Vulgate understood it differently: Frumentum desiderat nubes; et nubes spargunt lumen suum. "The grain desireth the clouds; and the clouds scatter abroad his light."

Verse 12. And it is turned round about by his counsels] The original is difficult:—והוא סובב סובב סובב סובב ויהוה מהסובב מיהפוך be-mehpochotav; which has been thus paraphrased: And he (the sun) makes revolutions, (causes the heavenly bodies to revolve round him,) turning round himself (turning round his own axis) by his attachments, the attractive and repulsive influences, by which the heavenly bodies revolve round him, and by which, as if strongly tied to their centre כחבל be-chabul, with a cable or rope, they are projected to their proper distances, and prevented from coming too near, or flying off too far.

That they may do whatsoever he commandeth them] That men may perform his will, availing themselves of the influences of the sun, moon, times, seasons, &c. to cultivate the earth for the sustenance of themselves and their cattle.

Upon the face of the world in the earth] ופני תבל ארעא, over the surface of the habitable world. Perhaps the above exposition may appear to be too far fetched; and possibly the passage refers only to the revolutions of the seasons, and the operations connected with them.

Verse 13. He causeth it to come] The Vulgate translates the text thus: Sive in una tribu, sive in terra sua, sive in quocunque loco misericordiae tuae eas jussertit invenire: "Whether in one tribe, or whether in his own land, or in whatsoever place of his mercy, he has commanded them to come." In the preceding verse it is said, that God conducts the clouds according to the orders of his counsels whithersoever he pleases: and here it is added that, when he designs to heap favours upon any land, he commands the clouds to go thither, and pour out on it their fertilizing showers. See Calmet.

The Vulgate certainly gives a good sense, and our common version is also clear and intelligible: but there are doubts whether the Hebrew will bear this meaning. Here it is stated that God sends the rain either for correction, ושבב le-shebet, which signifies rod, staff, tribe, and here taken as the symbol of correction; he sends rain sometimes as a judgment, inundating certain lands; and sweeping away their produce by irresistible floods; or for his land, ופניו le-aretso, his own land Palestine, the place of his favoured people; or for mercy, ורחם le-chesed; when a particular district has been devoured by locusts, or cursed with drought, God, in his mercy, sends fertilizing rains to such places to restore the ears which the caterpillars have eaten, and to make the desert bloom and blossom like the garden of the Lord. Some think that Job refers to the curse brought upon the old world by the waters of the deluge. Now, although God has promised that there shall no more be a flood of waters to destroy the whole earth; yet we know he can, very consistently with his promise, inundate any particular district; or, by a superabundance of rain, render the toil of the husbandman in any place vain. Therefore still his rain may come for judgment, for mercy, or for the especial help of his people or church.

Verse 14. Hearken unto this] Hear what I say on the part of God.

Stand still] Enter into deep contemplation on the subject. And consider] Weigh every thing; examine separately and collectively; and draw right conclusions from the whole.

15 Dost thou know when God disposed them, and caused the light of his cloud to shine?

16 Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds, the wondrous works of him which is perfect in knowledge?

17 How thy garments are warm, when he quieteth the earth by the south wind?

18 Hast thou with him spread out the sky, which is strong, and as a molten looking-glass?

19 Teach us what we shall say unto him; for we cannot order our speech by reason of darkness.

in Ch. 28. 29.—in Ch. 28. 4.—Gen. 1. 6. Isai. 41. 24.—p. Heb. Gold.

The wondrous works of God: Endless in their variety; stupendous in their structure; complicated in their parts; indescribable in their relations and connexions; and incomprehensible in the mode of their formation, in the cohesion of their parts, and the ends of their creation.

Verse 15. Dost thou know when God disposed them? Dost thou know the laws by which they are governed; and the causes which produce such and such phenomena?

And caused the light of his cloud to shine. Almost every critic of note understands this of the rainbow, which God gave as a sign that the earth should no more be destroyed by water. See Gen. ix. 13. and the note there.

Verse 16. Dost thou know the balancings of the clouds? How are the clouds suspended in the atmosphere? Art thou so well acquainted with the nature of evaporation, and the gravity of the air at different heights, to support different weights of aqueous vapour, so as to keep them floating for a certain portion of time, and then let them down to water the earth:—Dost thou know these things so as to determine the laws by which they are regulated?

Wondrous works of him which is perfect in knowledge? This is a paraphrase. Mr. Good's translation is much better:—

"Wonders, perfection of wisdom!"

Verse 17. How thy garments are warm? What are warmth and cold? How difficult this question! Is heat incontestably a substance, and is cold none! I am afraid we are in the dark on both these subjects. The existence of caloric, as a substance, is supposed to be demonstrated. Much, satisfactorily, has been said on this subject; but is it yet beyond doubt? I fear not. But, supposing this question to be set at rest—is it demonstrated that cold is only a quality; the mere absence of heat? If it be demonstrated that there is such a substance as caloric; is it equally certain that there is no such substance as frigoric? But how do our garments keep us warm? By preventing the two great dissipation of the natural heat. And why is it that certain substances, worked into clothing, keep us warmer than others? Because they are bad conductors of caloric. Some substances conduct off the caloric, or natural heat, from the body; others do not conduct it at all, or imperfectly: hence those keep us warmest, because they, being bad conductors of caloric, do not permit the natural heat to be thrown off. In these things we know a little, after endless cares, anxieties, and experiments!

But is the question yet satisfactorily answered, why the north wind brings cold, and the south wind heat? If it be so to my readers, it is not so to me. Yet I know the reasons which are alleged.

Verse 18. Hast thou with him spread out the sky? Wert thou with him when he made the expanse: fitted the weight to the winds; proportioned the aqueous to the terrene surface of the globe; the solar attraction to the quantum of vapours necessary to be stored up in the clouds, in order to be occasionally deposited in fertilizing showers upon the earth? and then, dost thou know how gravity and elasticity should be such essential properties of atmospheric air, that without them, and their due proportions, we should neither have animal nor vegetable life?

Strong—as a molten looking-glass? Like a molten mirror. The whole concave of heaven, in a clear day or brilliant night, being like a mass of polished metal, reflecting or transmitting innumerable images.

Verse 19. Teach us what we shall say unto him? Thou pretendest to be so very wise, and to know every thing about God, pray make us as wise as thyself, that we may be able to approach with thy boldness the sovereign of the world; and maintain our cause with thy confidence before him. As for our parts we are ignorant, and on all these subjects are enveloped with darkness. Mr. Good's translation,

"Teach us how we may address him
When arrayed in robes of darkness."

It is a strong and biting irony, howsoever we take it.

Verse 20. Shall it be told him that I speak? Shall I dare to whisper even before God? And suppose any one 20 Shall it be told him that I speak? If a man speak, surely he shall be swallowed up.

21 And now men see not the bright light which is in the clouds: but the wind passeth, and cleanseth them.

22 Fair weather cometh out of the north: with God is terrible majesty.

23 Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out: he is excellent in power, and in judgment, and in plenty of justice: he will not afflict.

24 Men do therefore fear him; he respecteth not any that are wise of heart.

q 1 Tim. 6. 16.—7 Ch. 28. 5.—Matt. 18. 28.—Matt. 11. 25. 1 Cor. 1. 28.

were to accuse me before him for what I have spoken of him, though that has been well intended, how should I be able to stand in his presence! I should be swallowed up in consternation, and consumed with the splendour of his majesty.

But in what state art thou? What hast thou been doing? Thou hast arraigned God for his government of the world; thou hast found fault with the dispensations of his providence; thou hast even charged him with cruelty! What will become of thee!

Verse 21. And now men see not the bright light! Mr. Good's gives the sense clearer:

"Even now we cannot look at the light
When it is resplendent in the heavens.
And a wind from the north hath passed along and obscured them."

Elihu seems to refer to the insufferable brightness of the sun. Can any man look at the sun shining in his strength, when a clear and strong wind has purged the sky from clouds and vapours? Much less can any man gaze on the majesty of God. Every creature must sink before him. What exorbitantly dangerous folly in any man to attempt to arraign his conduct!

Verse 22. Fair weather cometh out of the north. Is this any version of the original צפון צפון metaphor zahab ye-ethel; which is rendered by almost every version, ancient and modern, thus, or to this sense: "From the north cometh gold." Calmet justly remarks, that in the time of Moses, Job, and Solomon, and for a long time after, gold was obtained from Colchis, Armenia, Phasia, and the land of Ophir, which were all north of Judea and Idumea; and are in the Scriptures ordinarily termed the north country. "But what relation can there be between gold cometh out of the north, and with God is terrible majesty? Answer: Each thing has its properties, and proper characteristics, which distinguish it; and each country has its advantages. Gold, for instance, comes from the northern countries; so praises offered to the Supreme God should be accompanied with fear and trembling: and as this metal is from the north, and northern countries are the places whence it must be procured; so terrible majesty belongs to God, and in him alone such majesty is eternally resident."

As צפון zahab, which we translate gold, see chap. xxviii. 16. comes from a root that signifies to be clear, bright, resplendent, &c. Mr. Good's avails himself of the radical idea, and translates it splendour:—

"Splendour itself is with God; Insufferable majesty."

But he alters the text a little to get this meaning; particularly in the word צפון ye-ethel, which we translate cometh, and which he contends is the pronoun צפון itself; the ye as a performative here, being, as he thinks, an interpolation. This makes a very good sense: but none of the ancient versions understood the place thus; and none of the MSS. countenance this very learned critic's emendation.

Verse 23. Touching the Almighty, we cannot find him out! This is a very abrupt exclamation, and highly descriptive of the state of mind in which Elihu was at this time: full of solemnity, wonder, and astonishment, at his own contemplation of this "great First Cause, least understood." The ALMIGHTY! we cannot find him out.

Excellent in power and in judgment! We must not pretend to comprehend his being, the mode of his existence, the wisdom of his counsels, nor the mysteries of his conduct.

He will not afflict! רוח אלהים יצאנו; he will not answer. He will give account of none of his matters to us. We cannot comprehend his motives, nor the ends he has in view.

Verse 24. Men do therefore. Therefore, men should, צפון עשויים, wretched, miserable, ignorant, sinful men, should fear him.

He respecteth not any! No man is valuable in his sight on account of his wisdom: for what is his wisdom when compared with that of the Omnipotent! Whatever good is in man, God alone is the author of it. Let him, therefore, that glorieth, glory in the Lord.

Thus ends the speech of Elihu! A speech of a widely different description, on the whole, from that of the three friends of Job who had spoken so largely before him. In the speeches of Eliphaz, Zophar, and Bildad, there is little besides a tissue of borrowed wise sayings, and ancient proverbs and maxims, relative to the nature of God, and his moral government of the world. In the speech of Elihu every thing appears to be original: he speaks from a deep and comprehensive mind, that had profoundly studied the subjects on which he discoursed. His descriptions of the divine attributes, and of the wonderful works of God, are correct, splendid, impressive, and inimitable. Elihu, having now come nearly to a close, and knowing that the Almighty would appear and speak for himself, judiciously prepares for, and announces his coming by the thunder and lightning of which he has given so terrific and majestic a description in this and the preceding chapter. The evidences of the divine presence throng on his eyes and mind: the incomprehensible glory and excellency of God confound all his powers of reasoning and description! He cannot arrange his words by reason of darkness; and he concludes with stating, that to poor weak man God must for ever be incomprehensible; and to him a subject of deep religious fear and reverence. Just then, the terrible majesty of the Lord appears!—Elihu is silent! The rushing mighty wind, for which the description of the thunder and lightning had prepared poor, confounded, astonished Job, proclaims the presence of Jehovah; and out of this whirlwind God answers for, and proclaims himself! Reader, canst thou not conceive something of what these men felt? Art thou not astonished, perplexed, confounded, in reading over these descriptions of the thunder of God's power! Prepare then to hear the voice of God himself out of this whirlwind!

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Verse 1. The Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind] It is not in vno suphah, as in the preceding chapter, verse 9; but in vno searah, which signifies something turbulent, tumultuous, or violently agitated; and here may signify what we call a tempest, and was intended to fill Job's mind with solemnity, and an awful sense of the majesty of God. The Chaldee has a whirlwind of grief, making the whole rather allegorical than real: impressing the scene on Job's imagination.

Verse 2. Who is this that darkeneth counsel] As if he had said, Who art thou who pretendest to speak on the deep things of God, and the administration of his justice and providence, which thou canst not comprehend; and leavest my counsels and designs the darker for thy explanations.

Verse 3. Gird up now thy loins] I will not confound thee with my terrors; dismiss all fearful apprehensions from thy mind: now act like a man, ko-geber, like a hero: stand and vindicate thyself. For I will demand of thee,—I will ask thee a series of questions more easy of solution than those which thou hast affected to discuss already; and then thou shalt have the opportunity of answering for thyself.

The most impressive and convincing manner of arguing is allowed to be that by interrogation, which the Almighty here adopts. The best orations delivered by the ancients were formed after this manner. That celebrated oration of Cicero against Cataline, which is allowed to be his master-piece, begins with a multitude of short questions, closely pressed upon each other. See the end of the chapter.

Verse 4. Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth?] Thou hast a limited and derived being: thou art only of yesterday, what comest thou know? Didst thou see me create the world?

Verse 5. Who hath laid the measures thereof?] Who hath adjusted its polar and equatorial distances from the centre?

Who hath stretched the line] Who hath formed its zones and its great circles; and adjusted the whole of its magnitude and gravity to the orbit in which it was to move, as well as its distance from that great centre about which it was to revolve? These questions show the difficulty of the subject; and that there was an unfathomable depth of counsel and design in the formation of the earth.

Verse 6. Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened?] How does it continue to revolve in the immensity of space? What supports it? Has it foundations like a building, and finished with a key-stone to keep the mighty fabric in union?

Verse 7. When the morning stars sang together] This must refer to some intelligent beings who existed before the creation of the visible heavens and earth: and it is supposed that this and the following clause speak of the same beings;—that by the sons of God and the morning stars, the angelic host is meant; as they are supposed to be first, though perhaps not chief, in the order of creation.

For the latter clause the Chaldee has All the troops of angels. Perhaps their creation may be included in, the term heavens, Gen. i. 1. In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. These witnessed the progress of the creation; and, when God had finished his work, celebrated his wisdom and power in the highest strains.

Verse 8. Who shut up the sea with doors] Who gathered the waters together into one place, and fixed the sea its limits so that it cannot overpass them to inundate the earth?

When it brake forth as if it had issued out of the womb?] This is a very fine metaphor. The sea is represented as a newly born infant issuing from the womb of the void and formless chaos; and the delicate circumstance of the liquor amnii which bursts out previously to the birth of the fetus. The allusion to the birth of a child is carried on in the next verse.

Verse 9. When I made the cloud the garment] Alluding to the cloth in which the new-born infant is first received. The cloud was the same to the newly-raised vapour, as the above recipient to the new-born child.

And thick darkness a swaddling-band for it.] Here is also an allusion to the first dressings of the new-born child; it is swathed in order to support the body, too tender to bear even careful handling without some medium between the hand of the nurse and the flesh of the child. "The image," says Mr. Good, "is exquisitely maintained: the new-born ocean is represented as issuing from the womb of chaos; and its dress is that of the new-born infant."

There is here an allusion also to the creation, as described in Genesis i. Darkness is there said to be on the face of the deep. Here it is said, the thick darkness was a swaddling-band for the new-born sea.

Verse 10. And brake up for it my decreed place] This refers to the decree, Gen. i. 9. "Let the waters under the heavens be gathered together unto one place."

And set bars and doors] And let the dry land appear. This was the bars and doors of the sea: the land being every where a barrier against the encroachments and inundations of the sea, and great rivers, bays, creeks, &c. the doors by which it passes into the interior of continents, &c.

Verse 11. Hitherto shalt thou come] Thus far shall thy flux and reflux extend. The tides are marvelously limited and regulated, not only by the lunar and solar attraction, but by the quantum of time also which is required to remove any part of the earth's surface from under the immediate attractive influence of the sun and moon. And this regulation takes place by means of the rotation of the earth round its own axis, which causes one thousand and forty-two miles of its equator to pass from under any given point in the heavens in one hour; and about five hundred and eighty miles in the meridian of London: so that the attracted fluid parts are every moment passing from under the direct attractive influence; and thus the tides cannot be raised to any extraordinary height. The attraction of the sun and moon, and the gravitation of its own parts to its own centre, which prevent too great a flux on the one hand, and too great a reflux on the other; or, in other words, too high a tide, and too deep an ebb: are also some of those bars and doors by which its proud waves are stayed, and prevented from coming farther; all being regulated by these laws of attraction, by the sun and moon, gravitation of its own parts from the sun and moon, and the diurnal motion round its own axis, by which the fluid parts, easily yielding to the above attraction, are continually moving from under the direct attracting influence. Here a world of wisdom and management was necessary, in order to proportion all these things to each other, so as to procure the great benefits which result from the flux and reflux of the sea; and prevent the evils which must take place, at least occasionally, were not those bars and doors provided. It is well known that the spring tides happen at the change and full of the moon, at which time she is in conjunction with and opposition to the sun. As these retire from their conjunction, the tides neap till about three days after the first quadrature, when the tides begin again to be more and more elevated, and arrive at their maximum about the third day after the opposition. From this time the tides neap as before till the third day after the last quadrature; and afterward their daily elevations are continually increased till about the third day after the conjunction, when they re-commence their neaping; the principal phenomena of the tides always taking place at or near the same points of every lunar synodic revolution.

Verse 12. Hast thou commanded the morning? This refers to dawn or morning twilight, occasioned by the refraction of the solar rays by means of the atmosphere; so that we receive the light by degrees, which would otherwise burst at once upon our eyes, and injure, if not destroy, our sight; and by which even the body of the sun himself becomes evident several minutes before he arises above the horizon.

Caused the dayspring to know his place? This seems to refer to the different points in which daybreak appears during the course of the earth's revolution in its orbit: and which variety of points of appearing depends on this annual revolution. For as the earth goes round the sun every year in the ecliptic, one half of which is on the north side of the equinoctial, and the other half on its south side, the sun appears to change his place every day. These are matters which the wisdom of God alone could plan; and which his power alone could execute.

It may be just necessary to observe, that the dawn does not appear, nor the sun rise exactly in the same point of the horizon, two successive days in the whole year; as he declines forty-three degrees north, and forty-three degrees south of east; beginning on the 21st of March, and ending on the 22d of December; which variations not only produce the places of rising and setting, but also the length of day and night. And by this declination north and south, or approach to and recession from the tropics of Cancer and Capricorn, the solar light takes hold of the ends of the earth, ver. 13. enlightens the arctic and antarctic circles in such a way as it would not do were it always on the equinoctial line; these tropics taking the sun twenty-three and a half degrees north, and as many south of this line.

Verse 13. That the wicked might be shaken out of it? The meaning appears to be this: as soon as the light begins to dawn upon the earth, thieves, assassins, murderers, and adulterers, who all hate and shun the light, fly like ferocious beasts to their several dens and hiding places; for such do not dare to come to the light lest their works be manifest, which are not wrought in God. To this verse the fifteenth appears to belong, as it connects immediately with it, which connection the introduction of the fourteenth verse disturbs. And from the wicked, such as mentioned above, their light is withholden; they love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil; and as they prowl after their prey in the night-season, they are obliged to sleep in the day, and thus their light is withholden from them. And the high arm shall be broken; or, as Mr. Goode translates, The roving of wickedness is broken off. They can no longer pursue their predatory and injurious excursions.

Verse 14. It is turned as clay to the seal? The earth, like soft clay, is capable of modifying itself in endless ways, and assuming infinite forms. As a proof of this, see the astonishing variety of plants, flowers, and fruits, and the infinitely diversified hues, odours, tastes, consistency, and properties, of its vegetable productions.

There seems to be an allusion here to the sealing of clay; which I believe has been, and is now, frequent in the East. Six of those Eastern seals, for sealing clay, made of brass, the figures and characters all in relief, the interstices being entirely perforated and cut out, so that the upper side of the seal is the same as the lower, now lie before me. They seem to have been used for stamping pottery, as some of the fine clay still appears in the interstices.

And they stand as a garment? The earth receiving these impressions from the solar light and heat, plants and flowers spring up, and decorate its surface as the most beautiful stamped garment does the person of the most sumptuously dressed female.

Mr. Goode translates the whole verse thus:

"Canst thou cause them to bend round as clay to the mould, so that they are made to set like a garment?"

He supposes that reference is here made to the rays of light; but, take his own words:—"The image, as it appears to me, is taken directly from the art of pottery, an image of very frequent recurrence in Scripture; and in the present instance admirably forcible in painting the ductility with which the new light of the morning bends round like clay to the mould, and accompanies the earth in every part of its shape so as to fit it, as we are expressly told in the ensuing metaphor, like a garment, as the clay fits the mould itself." Mr. Goode supposes, that a mould in which the pottery is formed, not a seal by which it is impressed, is referred to here. In this sense I do not see the metaphor consistent, nor the allusion happy. It is well known that the rays of light never bend. They may be reflected at particular angles, but they never go out of a straight course. A gun might as well be expected to shoot round a corner, as a ray of light to go out of a straight line, or to follow the sinuous or angular windings of a tube, canal, or adit. But if we take in the sun as he advances in his diurnal voyage, or rather the earth, as it turns round its own axis from west to east, the metaphor of Mr. Goode will be correct enough; but we must leave out bending and ductility, as every part of the earth's surface will be at least successively intersected with the light.

Verse 16. Hast thou entered into the springs of the sea? Of these springs, inlets, or outlets of the sea, we know just as much as Job. There was prevalent among philosophers an opinion that through a porous bottom fresh matter was constantly oozing, by which the sea was supplied with new materials. But through such pores these materials might as well ooze out as ooze in.

Walked in the search of the depth? Hast thou walked from the shallow beach through the great ocean's bed, till thou hast arrived at its profoundest depths? In other words, Dost thou know the depths of the sea? Job, we may presume, did not. No man since him has found them out. In multitudes of places they are unfathomable by any means hitherto used by man.

Verse 17. Have the gates of death been opened unto thee? Dost thou know in what the article of death consists? This is as inexplicable as the question, What is animal life?

The doors of the shadow of death? רַב־מַוֶּת־מַוֶּת; the intermediate state; the openings into the place of separate spirits. Here two places are distinguished; רַב־מַוֶּת, death, and רַב־מַוֶּת־מַוֶּת, the shadow of death. It will not do to say, death is the privation of life:—for what then would be the shadow of that privation.

18 Hast thou perceived the breadth of the earth? declare, if thou knowest it all.

Or, et.—a Psa. 136. 7.

Verse 18. The breadth of the earth?] At that time the circumference of the globe was not known, because the earth itself was supposed to be a vast extended plain, bordered all round with the ocean and the sky.

Verse 19. Where light dwelleth?] What is the source of light? Yea, what is light itself? It is not in the sun, for light was before the sun;—but, What is light? It is, no doubt, a substance;—but of what kind? and of what are its particles? As to darkness, what is it? Is it philosophical to say, it is the mere privation of light? I shall think philosophy has made some advances to general accuracy and perfection when it proves to us what cold is, and what darkness is, leaving mere privations out of the question.

Verse 20. Shouldest take it to the bound thereof?] Or, as Mr. Goode translates, “That thou shouldest lay hold of it in its boundary.” That thou shouldest go to the very spot where light commences, and where darkness ends; and see the house where each dwells. Here darkness and light are personified; each as a real intelligent being, having a separate existence, and local dwelling. But poetry animates every thing. It is the region of fictitious existence.

I believe this verse should be translated thus:—“For thou canst take us to its boundary; for thou knowest the paths to its house.” This is a strong irony; and there are several others in this divine speech. Job had valued himself too much on his knowledge; and a chief object of this august speech is to humble his “knowing pride,” and to cause him to seek true wisdom and humility where they are to be found.

Verse 21. Knowest thou?] This is another strong and biting irony; and the literal translation proves it: “Thou knowest, because thou wast then born! and the number of thy days is great,” or multitudinous; רבין rabbim, multitudes.

Verse 22. The treasures of the snow?] The places where snow is formed; and the cause of that formation. See on chap. xxxvii. 6.

Treasures of the hail?] It is more easy to account for the formation of snow than of hail. Hail, however, is generally supposed to be drops of rain frozen in their passage through cold regions of the air; and the hail is always in proportion to the size of the rain drop from which it was formed. But this meteor does not appear to be formed from a single drop of water, as it is found to be composed of many small spherules frozen together, the centre sometimes soft like snow; and at other times formed of a hard nucleus, which in some cases has been of a brown colour, capable of ignition and explosion. In the description given of snow in chap. xxxvi. 6. it has been stated that both snow and hail owe their formation to electricity; the hail being formed in the higher regions of the air where the cold is intense, and the electric matter abundant. By this agency it is supposed that a great number of aqueous particles are brought together and frozen; and in their descent collect other particles, so that the density of the substance of the hail-stone grows less and less from the centre, this being formed first, in the higher regions; and the surface being collected in the lower. This theory is not in all cases supported by fact, as in some instances the centre has been found soft and snow-like, when the surface has been hard.

Hail is the only meteor of this kind, from which no apparent good is derived. Rain and dew invigorate, and give life to the whole vegetable world; frost by expanding the water contained in the earth, pulverizes and renders the soil fertile; snow covers and defends vegetables from being destroyed by too severe a frost; but hail does none of these. It not only does no good, but often much harm; always some. It has a chilling, blasting effect in spring and summer, and cuts the tender plants, so as to injure or totally destroy them. In short, the treasures of hail, are not well known: and its use, in the creation has not yet been ascertained. But frost is God's universal plough, by which he cultivates the whole earth.

le-ét tsar, to the season of strictness: i. e. the season when the earth is constricted or bound by the frost.

Against the day of battle and war?] Hailstones being often employed as instruments of God's displeasure against his enemies, and the enemies of his people. There is probably an allusion here to the plague of hail sent on the Egyptians. See Exod. ix. 23. and the notes there for more particulars concerning hailstones, remarkable showers of them, &c. There may be also a reference to Josh. x. 10 11. where a destructive shower of what are called hailstones fell upon the Canaanitish kings who fought against Israel. See the note there also.

Verse 24. By what way is the light parted?] Who can accurately describe the cause and operation of a thunder-cloud; the cause, nature, and mode of operation of the lightning itself? Is it a simple element, or compound substance? What is its velocity? and why not conductible by every kind of substance, as it is known to exist in all? In short to be diffused through every portion of nature. How is it parted? How does it take its zig-zag form? This is the curious, indecipherable, and unknown parting. Are all the causes of positive and negative electricity found out? What are its particles, and how do they cohere, and in what order are they propagated? Much has been said on all these points; and how little of that much satisfactorily!

Scattereth the east wind upon the earth? קיים hadim, the eastern storm, euroclydon, or levanter.

Verse 25. Divided a water course?] The original רבין tealah, from רבץ alah, to ascend, may signify rather a cloud, or clouds in general, where the waters are stored up. I cannot see how the overflowings or torrents of water can be said to ascend any other way than by evaporation: and it is by this divine contrivance that the earth is not only irrigated but even dried; and by this means too much moisture is not permitted to lie upon the ground; which would not only be injurious to vegetation, but even destroy it. But query, may not a water-spout be intended?

A way for the lightning of thunder?] “A path for the bolt of thunder.” God is represented as directing the course even of the lightning; he launches the bolt, and makes the path in which it is to run. To grasp, manage, and dart the thunderbolt or lightning, was a work which heathenism gave to Jupiter, its supreme god. None of the inferior deities was capable of this. But who can thunder with a voice like the Almighty! He is the THUNDERER.

Verse 26. To cause it to rain on the earth?] It is well known that rain falls copiously in thunder-storms. The flash is first seen, the clap is heard, and last the rain descends. The lightning travels all lengths in no perceivable succession of time. Sound is propagated at the rate of 1142 feet in a second. Rain travels still more slowly, and will be seen, sooner or later, according to the weight of the drops, and the distance of the cloud from the place of the spectator. Now the flash, the clap, and the rain take place all in the same moment; but are discernible by us in the succession already mentioned, and for the reasons given above; and more at large in the note on chap. xxxvi. 29, &c.

But how are these things formed? The lightning is represented as coming immediately from the hand of God. The clap is the effect of the lightning, which causes a vacuum in that part of the atmosphere through which it passes; the air rushing on to restore the equilibrium, may cause much of the noise that is heard in the clap. An easy experiment on the air-pump illustrates this:—Take a glass receiver open at both ends; over one end tie a piece of sheep's bladder wet, and let it stand till thoroughly dry. Then place the open end on the plate of the air-pump, and exhaust the air slowly from under it. The bladder soon becomes concave, owing to the pressure of the atmospheric air on it, the supporting air in the receiver being partly thrown out. Carry on the exhaustion, and the air presses at the rate of fifteen pounds on every square inch. See ou chap. xxviii. The fibres of the bladder being no longer capable of bearing the pressure of the atmospheric column upon the receiver, are torn to pieces with a noise equal to the report of a musket; which is occasioned by the air rushing in to restore the equilibrium. Imagine a rapid succession of such experiments, and you have the peal of thunder; the rupture of the first bladder being the clap. But the explosion of the gases, (oxygen and hydrogen) of which water is composed, will also account for the noise. See below.

But how does the thunder cause rain? By the most accurate and incontestable experiments it is proved that water is a composition of two elastic airs, or gases, as they are called, oxygen and hydrogen. In 100 parts of water there are 89½ of oxygen, and 11½ of hydrogen. Pass a succession of electric sparks through water by means of a proper apparatus, and the two gases are produced in the proportions mentioned above.

To decompose water by galvanism.—Take a narrow glass tube three or four inches long; fit each end with a cork penetrated by a piece of slender iron wire, and fill the tube with water. Let the ends of the two wires within the tube be distant from each other about three quarters of an inch, and let one be made to communicate with the top, the other with the bottom of a galvanic pile, in action. On making this communication, bubbles of air will be formed, and ascend to the top of the tube, the water decreasing as it is decomposed.

The oxygen and hydrogen formed by this experiment, may be re-composed into the same weight of water. Take any quantity of the oxygen and hydrogen gases in the proportions already mentioned; ignite them by the electric spark, and they produce a quantity of water equal in weight to the gases employed. Thus, then, we can convert water into air, and re-convert this air into water; and the proportions hold as above. I have repeatedly seen this done, and assisted in doing it; but cannot, in this place, describe every thing in detail.

Now, to the purpose of this note: the rain descending after the flash and the peal. The electric spark or matter of lightning passing through the atmosphere, ignites and decomposes the oxygen and hydrogen; which explode, and the water which was formed of these two, falls down in the form of rain. The explosion of the gases, as well as the rushing in of the circumambient air to restore the equilibrium, will account for the clap and peal; as the decomposition and ignition of them will account for the water or rain which is the attendant of a thunder-storm. Thus by the lightning of thunder God causes it to rain on the earth. How marvellous, and instructive are his ways!

Verse 27. To satisfy the desolate and waste] The thunder cloud not only explodes over inhabited countries, that the air may be purified, and the rain sent down to fertilize the earth; but is conducted over deserts where there is no human inhabitant; and this to cause the bud of the tender herb to spring forth; for there are beasts, fowls, and insects, that inhabit the desert and the wilderness, and must be nourished by the productions of the ground. Every tribe of animals was made by the hand of God, and even the lowest of them is supported by his kind providence.

Verse 28. Hath the rain a father? Or, Who is the father of the rain? We have seen above one part of the apparatus by which God produces it. Other causes have been mentioned on chap. xxxvi. 27, &c.

The drops of dew?—In egyle, the sphericles, the small round drops or globules. Dew is a dense moist vapour, found on the earth in spring and summer mornings, in form of a misting rain. Dr. Hutton defines it: "A thin, light, insensible mist or rain descending with a slow motion, and falling while the sun is below the horizon. It appears to differ from rain, as less from more. Its origin and matter are doubtless from the vapours and exhalations that rise from the earth and water." Various experiments have been instituted to ascertain whether dew arises from the earth, or descends from the atmosphere; and those pro and con have alternately preponderated. The question is not yet decided; and we cannot yet tell any more than Job which hath begotten the drops of dew, the atmosphere or the earth. Is it water deposited from the atmosphere, when the surface of the ground is colder than the air?

Verse 29. Out of whose womb came the ice? Ice is a solid, transparent, and brittle body, formed of water by means of cold. Some philosophers suppose, that ice is only the re-establishment of water in its natural state; that the mere absence of fire is sufficient to account for this re-establishment; and that the fluidity of water is a real fusion, like that of metals, exposed to the action of fire; and differing only in this, that a greater portion of fire is necessary to one than the other. Ice, therefore, is supposed to be the natural state of water; so that in its natural state water is solid; and becomes fluid only by the action of fire, as solid metallic bodies are brought into a state of fusion by the same means.

Ice is lighter than water, its specific gravity being to that of water as eight to nine. This rarefaction of ice is supposed to be owing to the air-bubbles produced in water by freezing; and which being considerably large, in proportion to the water frozen, render the body so much specifically lighter: hence ice always floats on water. The air-bubbles, during their production, acquire a great expansive power, so as to burst the containing vessels, be they ever so strong. See examples in the note on chap. xxxvii. 10.

The hoary frost of heaven, who hath generated it? Hoar-frost is the congelation of dew, in frosty mornings, on the grass. It consists of an assemblage of little crystals of ice, which are of various figures, according to the different disposition of the vapours, when met and condensed by the cold. Its production is owing to some laws with which we are not yet acquainted. Of this subject, after the lapse and experience of between two and three thousand years, we know about as much as Job did. And the question, What hath engendered the hoar-frost of heaven? is, to this hour, nearly as inexplicable to us as it was to him! Is it enough to say that hoar-frost is water deposited from the atmosphere at a low temperature, so as to produce congelation?

Verse 30. The waters are hid as with a stone] Here is a reference to freezing in the winter, as we may learn from some of the constellations mentioned below, which arise above our horizon, in the winter months.

The word יתחבאן yithchaban, is understood by the versions in general, as implying hardening or congelation; and we know in some intense frosts the ice becomes as hard as a stone; and even the face of the deep, the very seas themselves, not only in the polar circles, but even in northern countries, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, and parts of Germany, are really frozen, and locked up from all the purposes of navigation for several months in winter.

Verse 31. Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades] The Pleiades are a constellation in the sign Taurus. They consist of six stars visible to the naked eye: to a good eye, in a clear night, seven are discernible; but with a telescope ten times the number may be readily counted. They make their appearance in the spring. Orion may be seen in the morning, toward the end of October; and is visible through November, December, and January; and hence, says Mr. Goode, it becomes a correct and elegant synecdoche for the winter at large. The Pleiades are elegantly opposed to Orion, as the vernal renovation of nature is opposed to its wintry destruction: the mild and open benignity of spring, to the severe and icy inactivity of winter.

I have already expressed my mind on these supposed constellations, and must refer to my notes on chap. ix. 9. &c. and to the learned notes of Dr. Hales and Mr. Mason Goode, on these texts. They appear certain, where I am obliged to doubt; and from their view of the subject, make very useful and important deductions. I find reluctance in departing from the ancient versions. In this case, these learned men follow them: I cannot, because I do not see the evidence of the ground-work; and I dare not draw conclusions from premises which seem to me precarious, or which I do not understand. I wish, therefore, the reader to examine and judge for himself.

Coverdale renders the 31st and 32d verses thus:

Canst thou bring the seven stars together? Or, Art thou able to break the circle of heaven? Canst thou bring forth the morning stars, or the evening stars, at convenient time and converse them some against some?

33 Knowest thou the ordinances of heaven? canst thou set the dominion thereof in the earth?

34 Canst thou lift up thy voice to the clouds, that abundance of waters may cover thee?

35 Canst thou send lightnings, that they may go, and say unto thee, 'Here we are?'

36 Who hath put wisdom in the inward parts? or who hath given understanding to the heart?

g Jer. 1. 23.—h Heb. Behold us.—i Ch. 22. 3. Psa. 81. 6. Eccles. 2. 23.—k Heb. who can cause to lie down.

Verse 32. Mazzaroth in his season? This is generally understood to mean the signs of the zodiac. Mazzaroth, according to Parkhurst, comes from mazzer, to corrupt; and he supposes it to mean that pestilential wind in Arabia called Smam, the season of which is the summer heats.

Verse 33. Knowest thou the ordinances of heaven? Art thou a thorough astronomer? Art thou acquainted with all the laws of the planetary system? Canst thou account for the difference of their motions, and the influence by which they are retained and revolve in their orbits? And canst thou tell what influence, or dominion, they exercise on the earth? Sir Isaac Newton has given us much light on many of these things: but to his system, which is most probably the true one, gravity is essential; and yet what this gravity is, he could neither explain nor comprehend: and his followers are not one whit wiser than he. No man has yet fully found out the ordinances of heaven, and the dominion thereof on the earth.

Verse 34. Canst thou lift up thy voice to the clouds? Canst thou produce lightning and thunder, that water may be formed, and poured down upon the earth?

Thunder is called koloth, voices; for it is considered the voice of God—here than Job's voice, kol-cha, is opposed to the voice of Jehovah!

Verse 35. Canst thou send lightnings? We have already seen that the lightning is supposed to be immediately in the hand and under the management of God. The great god of the heathen, Jupiter Brontes, is represented with the forked lightnings and thunderbolt in his hand. He seems so to grasp the bickering flame that, though it struggles for liberty, it cannot escape from his hold. Lightnings—How much like the sound of thunder is the original word: ברק ברקעם! Here are both same and sound.

Here we are? Will the winged lightnings be thy messengers, as they are mine?

Verse 36. Who hath put wisdom in the inward parts? Who has given us the power, to the contemplative person, understanding? Even the most sedulous attention to a subject, and the deepest contemplation, are not sufficient to investigate truth, without the inspiration of the Almighty, which alone can give understanding. But who has given man the power to conceive and understand? A power which he knows he has, but which he cannot comprehend. Man knows nothing of his own mind, nor of the mode of its operations. This mind we possess, these operations we perform—and of both do we know any thing? If we know not our own spirit, how can we comprehend that Spirit which is infinite and eternal.

Mr. Goodé thinks, that this verse is a continuation of the subject above, relative to the lightnings; and therefore translates thus:

Who putteth an arrow into the volleys? And who groweth to the shaft's discernment?

All the versions except the Septuagint, which trifles are, understand the place as we do. Enoch makes a good sense. The Septuagint has, "Who hath given the knowledge of weaving to women; or the science of embroidery?" Instead of understanding to the heart, the Vulgate has understanding to the cock: that it might be able to distinguish and proclaim the watches of the night.

Verse 37. Who can number the clouds? Perhaps the word sapienter, which is commonly rendered to number, may here mean, as in Arabic, to irradiate, as Mr. Goodé contends; and may refer to those celestial and inimicable tinges which we sometimes behold in the sky.

Bottles of heaven. The clouds: it is an allusion to the girbabe, or bottles made of skin, in which they are accustomed to carry their water from wells and tanks.

Verse 38. When the dust groweth into hardness? i. e. Who knows how the dust, the elementary particles of matter, were concentered; and how the clods, the several parts of the earth, continue to cohere? What is the principle of cohesion among the different particles of matter, in all metals and minerals? Even water, in a solid form, constitutes a part of several gems, called thence water of crystallization. Who can solve this question? How is 37 Who can number the clouds in wisdom? or who can stay the bottles of heaven, 38 When the dust groweth into hardness, and the clods cleave fast together?

39 Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion? or fill the appetite of the young lions, 40 When they couch in their dens, and abide in the covert to lie in wait?

41 Who provideth for the raven his food?

it that 90 parts of alumine, 7 of silex, and 1/2 of oxide of iron, constitute the oriental ruby? and that 90 parts of silex, and 19 of water, form the precious opal? And how can 46 parts of silex, 14 of alumine, 23 of carbonate of lime, 6 1/2 of sulphate of lime, 3 of oxide of iron, and 2 of water, enter into the constitution, and form the substance, of the lapis lazuli? How do these solids and fluids of such differing natures grow into hardness, and form this curious mineral!

Take another example from that beautiful, precious stone, the emerald. Its analysis shows it to be composed of glucine 13, silex 64 1/2, alumine 16, lime 1 1/2, and oxide of chrome 3 1/2. Now, how can these dusts, utterly worthless in themselves, grow into hardness, combine, and form one of the most beautiful, and, next to the diamond, the most precious of all the gems? The Almighty and infinitely wise God has done this in a way only known to, and comprehensible by himself.

Verse 39. Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion? Rather the lioness, or strong lion. Hast thou his instinct? Dost thou know the habits and haunts of such animals as he seeks for his food? Thou hast neither his strength, his instinct, nor his cunning.

In the best Hebrew Bibles the thirty-ninth chapter begins with this verse; and begins properly, as a new subject now commences, relating to the natural history of the earth, or the animal kingdom: as the preceding chapter does to astronomy and meteorology.

Verse 40. When they couch in their dens? Before they are capable of trusting themselves abroad.

Abide in the covert? Before they are able to hunt down the prey by running. It is a fact that the young lions, before they have acquired strength and sufficient swiftness, lie under cover, in order to surprise those animals which they have not fleetness enough to overtake in the forest. And from this circumstance the ערבות kepirim, young lions, or lion's whelps, have their name: the root is כפר, capar, to cover or hide.—See the note on chap. iv. 11. where six different names are given to the lion, all expressing some distinct quality or state.

Verse 41. Who provideth for the raven? This bird is chosen, perhaps, for his voracious appetite, and general hunger for prey, beyond most other fowls. He makes a continual cry, and the cry is that of hunger. He dares not frequent the habitations of men, as he is considered a bird of ill omen, and hated by all.

This verse is finely paraphrased by Dr. Youke:—

"Fond men! the vision of a moment made! Dream of a dream, and shadow of a shade! What worlds hast thou produced, what creatures fram'd, What insects cherish'd, that thy God is nam'd? When pain'd with hunger, the wild raven's brood Calls upon God, importunate for food, Who hears their cry? Who grants their hoarse request And stills the clamours of the craving nest?"

On which he has this note: "The reason given why the raven is particularly mentioned as the care of providence is, because by her clamorous and importunate voice she particularly seems always calling upon it; thence רפפא, a raven, is to ask earnestly.—Elian. lib. ii. c. 48. And since there were ravens on the banks of the Nile, more clamorous than the rest of that species, those probably are meant in this place."

This commencement of Cicero's oration against Cataline, to which I have referred on ver. 3, is the following: Quosque tandem furor iste tuus nos eludet? Quem ad finem sese effrenata jactabit audacia? Nihilne te nocturnum praesidium palatii,—Nihil urbes vigilia,—Nihil timor populi,—Nihil concursus bonorum omnium,—Nihil hic munitionibus habendi senatus locus,—Nihil horum ora, vultusque moverunt?—Putere tua consilia non sentis?—Constrictum jam omnium horum conscientia teneri conjurationem tuam non vides? Several animals described: the wild goats and hinds, 1-4. The wild ass, 5-8. The unicorn, 9-12. The peacock and ostrich, 13-18. The war horse, 19-23. The hawk, 24. The eagle and her fowls, 25-28.

Knowest thou the time when the wild goats of the rock bring forth? or canst thou mark when the hinds do calve?

Art thou insensible that this senate, now thoroughly informed, comprehend the whole extent of thy guilt?—Show me the senator ignorant of thy practices during the last and preceding night?—Of the place where you met, the company you summoned, and the crime you concerted.—The senate is conscious,—the consul is witness to all this!—Yet, O, how mean and degenerate! The traitor lives! Lives!—He mixes with the senate;—he shares in our counsels;—with a steady eye he surveys us; he anticipates his guilt! he enjoys the murderous thought, and coolly marks us to bleed! Yet we, boldly passive in our country's cause, think we act like Romans, if we can escape his frantic rage!"

The reader will perceive how finely Cicero rushes into this invective, as if the danger had been too immediate to give him leisure for the formality of address and introduction. See Guthrie's Orations of Cicero.

Here is eloquence! here is nature! and, in this speaking her language, the true orator pierces with his lightnings the deepest recesses of the heart. The success of this species of oratory is infallible in the pulpit, when the preacher understands how to manage it.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXIX.

Verse 1. Knowest thou the time] To know the time, &c. only, was easy, and has nothing extraordinary in it: but the meaning of these questions is, to know the circumstances, which have something peculiarly expressive of God's providence, and make the questions proper in this place. Pliny observes, that the hind with young, is by instinct directed to a certain herb, named seselie, which facilitates the birth. Thunder also, which looks like the more immediate hand of providence, has the same effect. Psa. xxix. 9. The voice of the Lord maketh the hinds to calve. See Dr. Young. What is called the wild goat, by yaal, from ayal, to ascend, go, or mount up, is generally understood to be the ibex or mountain goat, called yaal, from the wonderful manner in which it mounts to the tops of the highest rocks. It is certain, says Johnston, there is no crag of the mountains so high, prominent, or steep, but this animal will mount it in a number of leaps, provided only it be rough, and have protuberances large enough to receive its hoofs in leaping. This animal is indigenous to Arabia, is of amazing strength and agility, and considerably larger than the common goat. Its horns are very long, and often bend back over the whole body of the animal; and it is said to throw itself from the tops of rocks or towers, and light upon its horns, without receiving any damage. It goes five months with young.

- When the hinds do calve?] The hind is the female of the stag, or cervus elaphus, and goes eight months with young. They live to thirty-five or forty years. Incredible longevity has been attributed to some stags. One was taken by Charles VI. in the forest of Senlis, about whose neck was a collar with this inscription, Cæsar hoc mihi donavit, which led some to believe that this animal had lived from the days of some one of the twelve Cæsars, emperors of Rome.

I have been the following form of this inscription:

Tempore quo Cæsar Roma dominus in alta, Aureolo jussit collum signare monti: Ne depræcitem, quævis me gramina, lincat. Cæsaris hæc causa! perituræ parere vitæ!

Which has been long public in the old English ballad strain thus:

"When Julius Cæsar resigned king, About my neck he put this ring; That whosoever should me take, Would save my life for Cæsar's sake."

Aristotle mentions the longevity of the stag, but thinks it fabulous.

Verse 3. They bow themselves] In order to bring forth their young ones.

They cast out their sorrows.] חבליתם obolephom; the placenta, after-birth, or umbilical cord. So this word has been understood.

Verse 4. In good liking] After the fawns have suckled for some time, the dam leads them to the pastures, where they feed on different kinds of herbage, but not on corn, for they are not born before harvest time in Arabia and Palestine; for the stag does not feed on corn, but on grass, moss, and the shoots of the fir, beech, and other trees; and, therefore, the word bar, here translated corn, should be translated the open field or country. See Parkhurst. Their nurslings bound away.—Mr. Goode. In a short time they become independent of the mother, leave her, and return no more. The spirit of the questions in these verses appears to be the following: Understandest thou the cause of breeding of the mountain-goats, &c.? Art thou acquainted with the course and progress of the parturition, and the manner in which the bones do grow, and acquire solidity in the womb? See Mr. Goode's observations.

Houbigant's version appears very correct: (Knowest thou) "how their young ones grow up, increase in the fields, and, once departing, return to them no more."

Verse 5. Who hath sent out the wild ass free?] ארו pheré which we translate wild ass, is the same as the onos ayyos of the Greeks, and the onager of the Latins; which must not, says Buffon, be confounded with the zebra: for this is an animal of a different species from the ass. The wild ass is not striped like the zebra, nor so elegantly shaped. There are many of those animals in the deserts of Libya and Numidia: they are of a gray colour; and run so swiftly that no horses but the Arab barbs can overtake them. Wild asses are found in considerable numbers in East and South Tartary, in Persia, Syria, the islands of the Archipelago, and throughout Mauritania. They differ from tame asses only in their independence and liberty, and in their being stronger and more nimble: but in their shape they are the same. See on chap. vi. 5.

The bands of the wild ass?] ארו arud, the drayer, the same animal, but called thus because of the frequent and peculiar noise he makes. But Mr. Goode supposes this to be a different animal from the wild ass, (the jichta or equus hemionas,) which is distinguished by having solid hoofs, a uniform colour, no cross on the back, and the tail hairy only at the tip. The ears and tail resemble those of the zebra; the hoofs and body those of the ass; and the limbs those of the horse. It inhabits Arabia, China, Siberia, and Tartary, in grassy saline plains or salt wastes, as mentioned in the following verse.

Verse 6. Whose house] Habitation, or place of resort. The barren land] מליח melechah, the salt land, or salt places, as in the margin. See above.

Verse 7. He scorneth the multitude] He is so swift that he cannot be run or hunted down. See the description in ver. 5.

Verse 8. The range of the mountains] The mountains and desert places are his peculiar places of pasture; and he lives on any thing that is green, on any kind of vegetable production.

Verse 9. Will the unicorn be willing to serve thee] The "fine, elegant animal like a horse, with one long, rich curled horn growing out of his forehead," commonly called the unicorn, must be given up as fabulous. The heralds must claim him as their own; place him in their armorial bearings as they please, to indicate the unreal actions, fictitious 10 Canst thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee?

11 Wilt thou trust him because his strength is great? or wilt thou leave thy labour to him?

12 Wilt thou believe him, that he will bring home thy seed, and gather it into thy barn?

virtues, and unfought martial exploits of mispraised men. It is not to the honour of the royal arms of Great Britain that this fabulous animal should be one of their supporters.

The animal in question, called reim, is undoubtedly the rhinoceros, who has the latter name from the horn, that grows on his nose. The rhinoceros is known by the name of reim in Arabia to the present day. He is allowed to be a savage animal, showing nothing of the intellect of the elephant. His horn enables him to combat the latter with great success; for, by putting his nose under the elephant's belly, he can rip him up. His skin is like armour; and so very hard as to resist sabres, javelins, lances, and even musket balls; the only penetrable parts being, the belly, the eyes, and about the ears.

Or abide by thy crib? These and several of the following expressions are intended to point out his savage, untemperable nature.

Verse 10. Canst thou bind the unicorn—in the furrow? He will not plough, nor draw in the yoke with another; nor canst thou use him singly to harrow the ground.

Verse 12. That he will bring home thy seed? Thou canst make no domestic nor agricultural use of him.

Verse 13. The goodly wings unto the peacocks? I believe peacocks are not intended here; and the Hebrew word reananim, should be translated ostriches; and the term reim chasidah, which we translate ostrich, should be, as it is elsewhere, translated stork. And perhaps the word reim notash, rendered here feathers, should be translated hawk, or pelican.

The Vulgate has Penna struthionis similis est pennis herodii, et accipitris; "the feather of the ostrich is like to that of the stork and the hawk." The Chaldee has, "The wing of the wild cock, who crows and claps his wings, is like to the wing of the stork and the hawk." The Septuagint, not knowing what to make of these different terms, has left them all untranslated, so as to make a sentence without sense. Mr. Goods has come nearest both to the original and to the meaning, by translating thus:

"The wing of the ostrich tribe is for flapping;
But of the stork and falcon for flight."

Though the wings of the ostrich, says he, cannot raise it from the ground; yet by the motion here alluded to, by a perpetual vibration, or flapping; by perpetually catching, or drinking-in the wind, (as the term reby) re-elash implies, which we render goodly,) they give it a rapidity of running beyond that possessed by any other animal in the world. Adanson informs us, that when he was at the factory in Padore, he was in possession of two tame ostriches: and to try their strength, says he, "I made a full grown negro mount the smallest, and two others the largest. This burden did not seem to me at all disproportioned to their strength. At first they went a pretty high trot; and when they were heated a little, they expanded their wings, as if it were to catch the wind, and they moved with such fleetness as to seem to be off the ground. And I am satisfied that those ostriches would have distanced the fleetest race-horses that were ever bred in England."

As to reim notash, here translated falcon, Mr. Goods observes, that the term Yū naz, is used generally by the Arabian writers to signify both falcon and hawk. And there can be little doubt that such is the real meaning of the Hebrew word; and that it imports various species of the falcon family, as jer-falcon, goss-hawk, and sparrow-hawk.

"The argument drawn from natural history advances from quadrupeds to birds; and of birds those only are selected for description which are most common to the country in which the scene lies, and at the same time are most singular in their properties. Thus the ostrich is admirably contrasted with the stork and the eagle, as affording us an instance of a winged animal totally incapable of flight, but endowed with an unrivalled rapidity of running, compared with birds whose flight is proverbially fleet, powerful, and persevering. Let man, in the pride of his wisdom, explain or arraign this difference of construction.

Again, the ostrich is peculiarly opposed to the stork and 15 And forgetteth that the foot may crush them, or that the wild beast may break them.

16 She is hardened against her young ones, as though they were not hers: her labour is in vain without fear; to some species of the eagle in another sense, and a sense adverted to in the verses immediately ensuing: for the ostrich is well known to take little or no care of its eggs, or of its young; while the stork ever has been, and ever deserves to be, held in proverbial repute for its parental tenderness. The Hebrew word reim chasidah, imports kindness, or affection: and our own term stork, if derived from the Greek eropyn storgē, as some pretend, has the same original meaning." Goods's Jos.

17 Because God hath deprived her of wisdom, neither hath he imparted to her understanding.

Verse 14. Which leaveth her eggs in the earth? This want of parental affection in the ostrich is almost universally acknowledged. Mr. Jackson, in his Account of Morocco, observes: The ostrich, having laid her eggs, goes away, forgetting or forsaking them; and if some other ostrich discover them, she hatches them as if they were her own; forgetting probably whether they are or are not; so deficient is the recollection of this bird. This illustrates verse 15. And forgetteth that the foot may crush them, or that the wild beast may break them. The poet seems well acquainted with every part of the subject on which he writes; and facts incontestable confirm all he says. For farther illustration see the account from Dr. Shaw at the end of the chapter.

Verse 16. She is hardened against her young? See before, and the extracts from Dr. Shaw at the end of the chapter. She neglects her little ones, which are often found half-starved, straggling, and moaning about like so many deserted orphans, for their mother.

Verse 17. God hath deprived her of wisdom? Of this foolishness we have an account from the ancients; and here follow two instances: "1st, It covers its head in the reeds, and thinks itself all out of sight because itself cannot see. So Claudian:

*Strut hincine clauso
Ridendum revoluta caput: credique latera
Qua non ipso videt.*

"2. They who hunt them draw the skin of an ostrich's neck on one hand, which proves a sufficient lure to take them with the other. They have so little brain that Heliogabalus had six hundred heads for his supper. Here we may observe, that our judicious as well as sublime author just touches the great points of distinction in each creature, and then hastens to another. A description is exact when you cannot add but what is common to another thing; nor withdraw, but something peculiarly belonging to the thing described. A likeness is lost in too much description, as a meaning often in too much illustration." Dr. Young.

Verse 18. She lifteth up herself? When she raiseth up herself to run away. Proofs of the fleetness of this bird have already been given. It neither flies nor runs distinctly, but has a motion composed of both; and, using its wings as sails, makes great speed. So Claudian:

*Vasta velut Libye venantium vocibus alio
Cum premittit, cæcilius cursum transmittit æranæ,
Inque modum veli sinuante flamme perennis
Fulserunt omnia.*

Xenophon says Cyrus had horses that could overtake the goat and the wild ass; but none that could reach this creature. A thousand golden ducats, or a hundred camels, was the stated price of a horse that could equal their speed. Dr. Young.

Verse 19. Hast thou given the horse strength? Before I proceed to any observations, I shall give Mr. Goods's version of this, perhaps, inimitable description:—

- Ver. 18. Hast thou bestowed on the horse mettles?
Hast thou clothed his neck with the thunder flash?
Ver. 20. Hast thou given him to launch forth as an arrow?
Terrible is the pomp of his nostrils.
Ver. 21. He paweth in the valley, and exulteth.
Boldly he advanceth against the clashing host:
Ver. 22. He mocketh at fear, and trampleth not:
Nor turneth he back from the sword.
Ver. 23. Against him rattleth the quiver,
The glittering spear, and the shield:
Ver. 24. What rage and fury he dovauncheth the ground;
And is impatient when the trumpet soundeth.
Ver. 25. He exclaimeth among the trumpets, Aha!
And smoteeth the battle afar off,
The thumacher of the chiblain, and the shouting.

In the year 1713, a letter was sent to the GUARDIAN, which makes No. 86 of that work, containing a critique on this 20 Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper? the glory of his nostrils is terrible.

description, compared with similar descriptions in Homer and Virgil. I shall give the substance of it here:

"The great Creator, who accommodated himself to those to whom he vouchsafed to speak, hath put into the mouths of his prophets such sublime sentiments and exalted language as must abash the pride and wisdom of man. In the Book of Job, the most ancient poem in the world, we have such paintings and descriptions as I have spoken of, in great variety. I shall at present make some remarks on the celebrated description of the horse in that holy book, and compare it with those drawn by Homer and Virgil.

"Homer hath the following similitude of a horse twice over in the Iliad, which Virgil hath copied from him; at least he hath deviated less from Homer, than Mr. Dryden hath from him.

Ὡς δ' ὅτε τις στατός ἴκτος, ἀκούστας ἐπὶ φάτῃ ἄσπερον ἀπορηξῆς θείει παύσει κροαίνων,
Εἰσὼς λουσαῖαι εὐρρεῖς ποταροῖο,
Κυδίουρ' ὕψον δὲ κερῆ εἴχει, ἀμφὶ δὲ χεῖρας
Ὡρεῖ αἰσούνας· ὃ δ' ἀγλαῖφι πεποθεῖς
Ῥῖψα ἰ γούνα φέρεται μετὰ ῥ' ἴδια καὶ ῥέρον ἴκτων.

HOM. II. vi. ver. 506. and II. xv. 263.

' Freed from his harness, thus with broken reins,
The wretcher crouches prone o'er the plains
Or in the pride of youth o'erleaps the mound,
And snuffs the female in forbidden ground:
Or seeks his watering in the well-known flood,
To quench his thirst, and cool his fiery blood;
He swims luxuriant in the liquid plain,
And o'er his shoulders flows his waving mane;
He neighs, he snorts, he hears his head on high;
Before his ample chest the frothy stream fly.

"Virgil's description is much fuller than the foregoing, which, as I said, is only a simile; whereas Virgil professes to ascribe the nature of the horse:

Tum, et qua sonum precul arma dolere,
Stare loco nasci: micat auribus, et tremul artus;
Collectaque prænans voluit sub naribus ignem:
Ducens iube, et dextro factus accumbit in armo.
Al duplex agitur per lumbos spina, cavatque
Telurem, et solido graviter sonat ungula cornu.

Virgil, Georg. III. ver. 53.

"Which is thus admirably translated:—

' The fiery courser, when he hears from far,
The sprightly trumpet, and the shouts of war,
Friche up his ears; and trembling with delight,
Bluffs pace, and paws, and hopes the promised fight.
On his right shoulder his thick mane recul'd,
Ruffles at speed, and dances in the wind.
His hoary mane is jetty black and round;
His chin is double; starting with a bound,
He turns the turf, and shakes the solid ground.
Fire from his eyes, clouds from his nostrils flow;
He bears his rider bounding on the foe.'

"Now follows that on the Book of Job, which, under all the disadvantages of having been written in a language little understood, of being expressed in phrases peculiar to a part of the world whose manner of thinking and speaking seems to us very uncouth; and, above all, of appearing in a prose translation, is nevertheless so transcendently above the heathen descriptions; that hereby we may perceive how faint and languid the images are which are formed by mortal authors when compared with those which are figured, as it were, just as they appear in the eye of the Creator. God, speaking to Job, asks him:

To do our translators as much justice as possible, and to help the critic, I shall throw it in the hemistich form, in which it appears in the Hebrew, and in which all Hebrew poetry is written.]

- Ver. 19. Hast thou given to the horse strength?
Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?
Ver. 20. Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper?
The glory of his nostrils is terrible!
Ver. 21. He paweth in the valley, and rejoiceth in his strength
He goeth on to meet the armed men.
Ver. 22. He moometh at fear, and is not affrighted:
Neither turneth he back from the sword.
Ver. 23. Against him rattleth the quiver,
The glittering spear, and the shield.
Ver. 24. He swalloweth the ground with rage and fierceness;
Nor doth he believe that it is the sound of the trumpet.
Ver. 25. He snath among the trumpets, Ho-cho!
And from afar he scenteth the battle,
The thunder of the captives, and the shouting.

"Here are all the great and sprightly images that thought can form of this generous beast, expressed in such force and vigour of style as would have given the great wit of antiquity new laws for the sublime, had they been acquainted with these writings.

"I cannot but particularly observe that whereas the classical poets chiefly endeavour to paint the outward figure, lineaments, and motions, the sacred poet makes all the beauties to flow from an inward principle in the creature he describes; and thereby gives great spirit and vivacity to his description. The following phrases and circumstances are singularly remarkable:

"Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder? Homer and Virgil mention nothing about the neck of the horse but his mane. The sacred author, by the bold figure of 21 He paweth in the valley, and rejoiceth in his strength: he goeth on to meet the armed men.

d Jer. S. S.—e Heb. the armour.

thunder, not only expresses the shaking of that remarkable beauty in the horse, and the flukes of hair, which naturally suggest the idea of lightning; but likewise the violent agitation and force of the neck, which in the oriental tongues had been flaily expressed by a metaphor less bold than this.

"Verse 20. Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper? There is a two-fold beauty in this expression, which not only marks the courage of this beast, by asking if he can be scared; but likewise raises a noble image of his swiftness, by insinuating, that if he could be frightened, he would bound away with the nimbleness of a grasshopper.

"The glory of his nostrils is terrible.] This is more strong and concise than that of Virgil, which yet is the noblest line that ever was written without inspiration.

Collectaque prænans voluit sub naribus ignem. Georg. III. ver. 53.

' And in his nostrils rolls collected fire.'

- Ver. 21. He rejoiceth in his strength
Ver. 22. He moometh at fear.
Ver. 23. Whether he wish that it is the sound of the trumpet;
Ver. 25. He snath among the trumpets, Ha! Ha!

are signs of courage, as I said before, flowing from an inward principle. There is a peculiar beauty in his not believing it is the sound of the trumpet: that is, he cannot believe it for joy; but when he was sure of it, and is among the trumpets, he saith Ha! Ha! He neighs, he rejoices.

"His docility is elegantly painted in his being unmoved at the rattling quiver, the glittering spear and the shield, ver. 23. and is well imitated by Oppian, (who undoubtedly read Job as Virgil did) in his Poem upon Hunting.

Πῶς μὲν γὰρ τὴ μαχαίρῃ ἀρηῆς ἐκείνῃ ἴκτος
Ἥχος εὐφραϊμοῦν δολιχὸν πολεμῆσι σάλων;
Ἡ πῶς ἀναδέρκεται ἀσπαράζοντων οὐραῖαι
Αἰθροῖαι λοχὸν περικαυσαμένον ὀπλιτῶσι;
Καὶ χάλκον σάλαγγοντα, καὶ ἀσπρακτοῖα εἰδύθρον;
Καὶ μάθεν εὐτε μῦεναι χρεῖαι, ποτὲ δ' αὐτὶς ὀρεοῖν.

Oppian Cynogel, lib. i. ver. 206.

' Now firm the manag'd war horse keeps his ground,
Nor breaks his order though the trumpet sound!
With fearless eye the glittering host surveys,
And glares directly at the helmet's blaze.
The master's word, the laws of war, he knows;
And when to stop, and when to charge the foe.'

"He swalloweth the ground, ver. 24. is an expression for prodigious swiftness, in use among the Arabians, Job's countrymen, to the present day. The Latins have something like it:

Labantque signa commensae campum. Metastasis.
' In flight the extended champaign to consume.'
Car pere grata fuga. Virg. Georg. III. ver. 162.
' In flight to quiver the steeds.'
Cum ruperit, postquam omnia curas.
' When in their flight, the champaign they have scatter'd,
No track is left behind.'

"It is indeed the boldest and noblest of images for swiftness; nor have I met with any thing that comes so near it, as Mr. Pope's in Windsor Forest:

'Th' impatient courser pants in every vein,
And pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;
Hills, vales, and woods, appear already cross;
And on he starts, a thousand steps at once.'

"He smelleth the battle afar off, and what follows about the shouting, is a circumstance expressed with great spirit by Lucan:

' So when the ring with joyful shouts resounds,
With rage and pride the impetuous courser bounds;
He frets, he foams, he rouseth his hills rein,
Springs o'er the fence, and bounding seeks the plain.'

This judicious and excellent critique has left me little to say on this sublime description of the horse: I shall add some cursory notes only. In verse the 19th, we have the singular image, clothed his neck with thunder. How thunder and the horse's neck can be well assimilated to each other, I confess I cannot see. The author of the preceding critique seems to think, that the principal part of the allusion belongs to the shaking of this remarkable beauty (the mane) in a horse; and the flukes of hair, which naturally suggest the idea of lightning. I am satisfied, that the floating mane is here meant. The original is ῥῶν ῥεσμάη, which Bochart, and other learned men, translate as above. How much the mane of a horse, shaking and waving in the wind, adds to his beauty and stateliness, every one is sensible; and the Greek and Latin Poets, in their description of a horse, take notice of it. Thus Homer,

Ἀμφὶ δὲ χεῖρας
Ὡρεῖ αἰσούνας. Iliad. vi. ver. 509.

And Virgil,
His mane diadem'd o'er his shoulders flies.
Ludantque per colla; per armoes. Ene. II. ver. 697.

belly, the thighs, and the breast, do not partake of this covering; being usually naked, and, when touched, are of the same warmth as the flesh of quadrupeds.

"Under the joint of the great pinion, and sometimes under the lesser, there is a strong pointed excrescence, like a cock's spur; with which it is said to prick and stimulate itself, and thereby acquire fresh strength and vigour whenever it is pursued. But nature seems rather to have intended that, in order to prevent the suffocating effects of too great a plethora, a loss of blood should be consequent thereupon, especially as the ostrich appears to be of a hot constitution, with lungs always confined, and consequently liable to be preternaturally inflamed upon these occasions.

"When these birds are surprised by coming suddenly upon them while they are feeding in some valley, or behind some rocky or sandy eminence in the deserts, they will not stay to be curiously viewed and examined. Neither are the Arabs ever dexterous enough to overtake them, even when they are mounted upon their jinns, or horses, as they are called, of family. They, when they raise themselves up for flight, (ver. 18.) laugh at the horse and his rider. They afford him an opportunity only of admiring as a distance the extraordinary agility and the stateliness of their motions, the richness of their plumage, and the great propriety there was of ascribing to them (ver. 13.) an expanded quivering wing. Nothing certainly can be more beautiful and entertaining than such a sight! The wings, by their repeated, though unwearying vibrations, equally serving them for sails and oars; while their feet, no less assisting in conveying them out of sight; are in no degree sensible of fatigue.

"By the repeated accounts which I have had from my conductors, as well as from Arabs of different places, I have been informed that the ostrich lays from thirty to fifty eggs. Ælian mentions more than eighty; but I never heard of so large a number. The first egg is deposited in the centre; the rest are placed as convenient as possible round about it. In this manner it is said to lay, deposit, or trust (ver. 14.) her eggs in the earth, and to warm them in the sand, and forgettleth, (as they are not placed like those of some other birds upon trees, or in the clefts of rocks, &c.) that the foot (of the traveller) may crush them, or that the wild beasts may break them.

"Yet, notwithstanding the ample provision which is hereby made for a numerous offspring, scarce one quarter of these eggs are ever supposed to be hatched; and of those that are, no small share of the young ones may perish with hunger, from being left too early by their dams to shift for themselves. For in these, the most barren and desolate recesses of the Sahara, where the ostrich chooses to make her nest, it would not be enough to lay eggs and hatch them, unless some proper food was near at hand, and already prepared for their nourishment. And, accordingly, we are not to consider this large collection of eggs as if they were all intended for a brood; they are, the greatest part of them, reserved for food: which the dam breaks and disposes of according to the number and the cravings of her young ones.

"But yet, for all this, a very little share of that stropyn, or natural affection, which so strongly exerts itself in most other creatures, is observable in the ostrich. For, upon the least distant noise, or trivial occasion, she forsakes her eggs, or her young ones, to which, perhaps, she never returns; or if she do, it may be too late either to restore life to the one, or to preserve the lives of the other. Agreeably to this account, the Arabs meet sometimes with whole nests of these eggs undisturbed; some of which are sweet and good, others are saddle and corrupted; others again have their young ones of different growths, according to the time it may be presumed they have been forsaken by the dam. They oftener meet a few of the little ones, no bigger than well-grown pullets, half-starved, straggling and moaning about, like so many distressed orphans, for their mother. And in this manner the ostrich may be said (ver. 16.) to be hardened against her young ones as though they were not hers; her labour (in hatching and attending them so far,) being in vain without fear or the least concern of what becomes of them afterward. This want of affection is also recorded Lam. iv. 3. The daughter of my people, says the prophet, is cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness.

"Neither is this the only reproach that may be due to the ostrich; she is likewise inconsiderate and foolish in her private capacity; particularly in the choice of food, which is frequently highly detrimental and pernicious to it; for she swallows every thing greedily and indiscriminately, whether it be pieces of rags, leather, wood, stone, or iron. When I was at Oran, I saw one of these birds swallow, without any seeming uneasiness or inconvenience, several leaden bullets, as they were thrown upon the floor, scorching hot from the mould; the inner coats of the œsophagus and stomach being probably better stocked with glands and juices, than in other animals with shorter necks. They are particularly fond of their own excrement, which they greedily eat up as soon as it is voided. No less fond are they of the dung of hens and other poultry. It seems as if their optic as well as olfactory nerves were less adequate and conducive to their safety and preservation than in other creatures. The divine providence in this, no less than in other respects, (ver. 17.) having deprived them of wisdom, neither hath it imparted to them understanding.

"Those parts of the Sahara which these birds chiefly frequent, are destitute of all manner of food and herbage, except it be some few tufts of coarse grass; or else a few other solitary plants, of the lanreola, apocynum, and some other kinds, each of which is equally destitute of nourishment: and in the Psalmist's phrase (CXXIX. 6.) even withereth afore it be plucked up. Yet these herbs, notwithstanding their dryness, and want of moisture of their temperature, will sometimes have both their leaves and their stalks studded all over with a great variety of land snails; which may afford them some little refreshment. It is very probable, likewise, that they may sometimes seize upon lizards, serpents, together with insects and reptiles of various kinds. Yet still, considering the great voracity and size of this camel-bird, it is wonderful, not only how the little ones, after they are weaned from the provisions I have mentioned, should be brought up and nourished, but even how those of fuller growth, and much better qualified to look out for themselves, are able to subsist.

"Their organs of digestion, and particularly the gizzards, (which, by their strong friction, will wear away iron itself,) show them indeed to be granivorous; but yet, they have scarce ever an opportunity to exercise them in this way, unless when they chance to stray (which is very seldom,) toward those parts of the country which are sown and cultivated. For these, as they are much frequented by the Arabs at the several seasons of grazing, ploughing, and gathering in the harvest; so they are little visited by, as indeed they would be an improper abode for, this shy, timorous bird: a lover (φιλοπυρος), of the deserts. This last circumstance in the behaviour of the ostrich is frequently alluded to in the Holy Scriptures, particularly Isa. xlii. 21. and xxxiv. 13. and xliii. 20. Jer. l. 39. where the word (ער jeanah) instead of being rendered the ostrich, as it is rightly put in the margin, is called the owl; a word used likewise instead of jeanah, or the ostrich, Lev. xi. 16. and Deut. xiv. 15.

"While I was abroad, I had several opportunities of amusing myself with the actions and behaviour of the ostrich. It was very diverting to observe with what dexterity and espouise of body it would play and frisk about on all occasions. In the heat of the day particularly, it would strut along the sunny side of the house with great majesty. It would be perpetually fanning and priding itself with its quivering expanded wings; and seem at every turn to admire and be in love with its shadow. Even at other times, whether walking about, or resting itself upon the ground, the wings would continue these fanning, vibrating motions, as if they were designed to mitigate and assuage that extraordinary heat wherewith their bodies seem to be naturally affected.

"Notwithstanding these birds appear tame and tractable to such persons of the family as were more known and familiar to them, yet they were often very rude and fierce to strangers, especially the poorer sort, whom they would not only endeavour to push down, by running furiously upon them; but would not cease to peck at them violently with their bills, and to strike them with their feet; whereby they were frequently very mischievous. For the inward claw, or hoof, rather, as we may call it, of this avis bisulca, being exceedingly strong-pointed and angular, I once saw an unfortunate person who had his belly ripped open by one of these strokes. While they are engaged in these combats and assaults, they sometimes make a fierce, angry, and hissing noise, with their throats inflated, and their mouths open; at other times, when less resistance is made, they have a chuckling or cackling voice, as in the poultry kind: and thereby seem to rejoice and laugh, as it were, at the timorousness of their adversary. But, during the lonesome part of the night, (as if their organs of voice had then attained a quite different tone,) they often made a very doleful and hideous noise; which would be sometimes like the roaring of a lion; at other times it would bear a nearer resemblance to the hoarser voices of other quadrupeds, particularly of the bull and the ox. I have often heard them groan, as if they were in the greatest agonies; an action beautifully alluded to by the prophet Micah, (i. 8.) where it is said, I will make a mourning like the jaanah, or ostrich. Jaanah, therefore, and ostrich, the names by which the ostrich is known in the Holy Scriptures, may very properly be deduced from roo osh and roo ronan, words which the lexicographi explain by exclamare, or clamare fortiter; for the noise made by the ostrich being loud and sonorous, exclamare, or clamare fortiter, may, with propriety enough, be attributed to it; especially as those words do not seem to denote any certain or determined mode of voice or sound peculiar to any one particular species of animals, but such as may be applicable to them all, to birds as well as to quadrupeds and other creatures." Shaw's Travels, page 451. edit. 4th. 1757.

The subjects in this chapter have been so various and important, that I have been obliged to extend the notes and observations to an unusual length; and yet much is left unnoticed which I wished to have inserted: but I have made the best selection I could; and must request those readers who wish for more information, to consult zoological writers.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XL.

Verse 1. Moreover the Lord answered] That is, the Lord continued his discourse with Job. Answered, does not refer to anything said by Job, or any question asked.

I think it very likely that this whole piece from the beginning of this first verse to the end of the fourteenth, was originally the ending of the poem. Mr. Heath has noticed this, and I shall lay his words before the reader: "The former part of this chapter is evidently the conclusion of the poem; the latter part whereof seems to be in great disorder, whether it has happened from the carelessness of the transcriber, or, (which appears most probable,) from the skins of parchment composing the roll having by some accident changed their places. It is plain, from the seventh verse of the forty-second chapter, that Jehovah is the last speaker in the poem. If, then, immediately after the end of the thirty-ninth chapter we subjoin the fifteen verses of the forty-second chapter, and place the fourteen first verses of the fortieth chapter immediately after the sixth verse of the forty-second chapter, and by that means make them the conclusion of the poem, all will be right; and this seventh verse of the forty-second chapter will be in its natural order. The action will be complete by the judgment of the Almighty; and the catastrophe of the poem will be grand and solemn." To these reasons of Mr. Heath, Dr. Kennicott has added others, which the reader may find at the end of the chapter. Without taking any farther notice of this transposition in this place, I will continue the notes in the present order of the verses.

Verse 2. He that reproveth God let him answer it] Let the man who has made so free with God and his government, answer to what he has now heard.

Verse 4. Behold, I am vile] I acknowledge my inward demerit. I cannot answer thee.

I will lay mine hand upon my mouth.] I cannot excuse myself, and I must be dumb before thee.

Verse 5. Once have I spoken] See ch. xlii. 3, &c.

I will proceed no farther.] I shall attempt to justify myself no longer: I have spoken repeatedly; and am confounded at my want of respect for my Maker, and at the high thoughts which I have entertained of my own righteousness. All is impurity in the presence of thy majesty.

Verse 7. Gird up thy loins] See chap. xxxviii. 1-3. Some think that this and the preceding verse have been repeated here from chap. xxxviii. 1-3. and that several of the words there, here, and chap. xlii. 3. have been repeated, in after times, to connect some false gatherings of wilt thou condemn me, that thou mayest be righteous?

9 Hast thou an arm like God? or canst thou thunder with a voice like him?

10 Deck thyself now with majesty and excellency; and array thyself with glory and beauty.

11 Cast abroad the rage of thy wrath: and behold every one that is proud, and abase him.

12 Look on every one that is proud, and bring him low: and tread down the wicked in their place.

13 Hide them in the dust together; and bind their faces in secret.

14 Then will I also confess unto thee that thine own right hand can save thee.

15 Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox.

(Ch. 37. 4. Ps. 22. 1, 4.—Ps. 53. 1, & 104. 1.—Ezek. 2. 12. Dan. 4. 37.—Or, the elephant, as some think.)

the sheets of parchment on which the end of this poem was originally written. See on ver. 1. and at the end of this chapter.

Verse 8. Wilt thou condemn me] Rather than submit to be thought in the wrong, wilt thou condemn my conduct in order to justify thyself? Some men will never acknowledge themselves in the wrong. God may err, but they cannot, seems to be their impious maxim. Unwillingness to acknowledge a fault frequently leads men, directly, or indirectly, to this sort of blasphemy. There are three words most difficult to be pronounced in all languages. I AM WRONG.

Verse 9. Hast thou an arm like God?] Every word from this to the end of verse 14 has a wonderful tendency to humble the soul: and it is no wonder that at the conclusion of these sayings Job fell in the dust confounded, and ascribed righteousness to his Maker.

Verse 10. Deck thyself now with majesty] Act like God, seeing thou hast been assuming to thyself perfections that belong to him alone.

Verse 13. Hide them in the dust together] Blend the high and the low, the rich and the poor, in one common ruin. Show them that thou art supreme, and canst do whatever thou pleasest.

Bind their faces in secret.] This seems to refer to the custom of preserving mummies: the whole body is wrapped round with strong swathings of linen or cotton cloth. Not only the limbs, but the very head, face, and all, are rolled round with strong filleting, so that not one feature can be seen, not even the protuberances of the nose. On the outside of these involutions, a human face is ordinarily painted; but as to the real face itself, it is emphatically bound in secret; for those rollers are never intended to be removed.

Verse 14. Thine own right hand can save thee.] It is the prerogative of God alone to save the human soul. Nothing less than unlimited power, exerted under the direction and impulse of unbounded mercy, can save a sinner. This is most clearly asserted in this speech of Jehovah. When thou canst extend an arm like God, i. e. an uncontrollable power;—when thou canst arm thyself with the lightning of heaven, and thunder with a voice like God;—when thou canst deck thyself with the ineffable glory, beauty, and splendour of the supreme majesty of Jehovah;—when thou canst dispense thy judgments over all the earth, to abase the proud, and tread down the wicked;—when thou canst, as having the keys of hell and death, blend the high and the low in the dust together; then I will acknowledge to thee that thy own right hand can save thee. In other words, salvation belongeth unto the Lord: no man can save his own soul by works of righteousness which he has done, is doing, or can possibly do, to all eternity! Without Jesus, every human spirit must have perished everlastingly. Glory be to God for his unspeakable gift!

Verse 15. Behold now behemoth] The word בְּהֵמוֹת behemoth, is the plural of בְּהֵמָה behemah, which signifies cattle in general, or graminivorous animals, as distinguished from חַיָּוֹת chayot, all wild or carnivorous animals, see Gen. i. 24. The former seems to intend kine, horses, asses, sheep, &c. and all employed in domestic or agricultural matters: the latter, all wild and savage beasts, such as lions, bears, tigers, &c. but the words are not always taken in these senses.

In this place it has been supposed to mean some animal of the beest kind. The Vulgate retains the Hebrew name; so do the Syriac and Arabic. The Chaldee is indefinite, translating creature, or animal. And the Septuagint is 16 Lo now, his strength is in his loins, and his force is in the navel of his belly.

17 * He moveth his tail like a cedar; the sinews of his stones are wrapped together.

18 His bones are as strong pieces of brass; his bones are like bars of iron.

19 He is the chief of the ways of God: he that made him can make his sword approach unto him.

not less explicit, translating by Onia, beast or wild beast; and old Coverdale, the cruellest beast, perhaps as near to the truth as any of them. From the name, therefore, or the understanding had of it by the ancient versions, we can derive no assistance relative to the individuality of the animal in question; and can only hope to find what it is by the characteristics it bears in the description here given of it.

These having been carefully considered, and deeply investigated, both critics and naturalists have been led to the conclusion, that either the elephant, or the hippopotamus or river-horse, is the animal in question; and, on comparing the characteristics between these two, the balance is considerably in favour of the hippopotamus. But even here there are still some difficulties, as there are some parts of the description which do not well suit even the hippopotamus; and, therefore, I have my doubts whether either of the animals above is that in question, or whether any animal now in existence be that described by the Almighty.

Mr. Goods supposes, and I am of the same opinion, that the animal here described is now extinct. The skeletons of three lost genera have actually been found out: these have been termed paleotherium, anoplotherium, and mastodontion or mammoth. From an actual examination of a part of the skeleton of what is termed the mammoth, I have described it in my note on Gen. i. 24.

As I do not believe that either the elephant or the river-horse is intended here, I shall not take up my reader's time with any detailed description. The elephant is well known; and, though not an inhabitant of these countries, has been so often imported in a tame state, and so frequently occurs in exhibitions of wild beasts, that multitudes, even of the common people, have seen this tremendous, docile, and sagacious animal. Of the hippopotamus, or river-horse, little is generally known but by description, as the habits of this animal will not permit him to be caught or tamed. His amphibious nature prevents his becoming a constant resident on dry land.

The hippopotamus inhabits the rivers of Africa and the lakes of Aethiopia; feeds generally by night; wanders only a few miles from water; feeds on vegetables and roots of trees, but never on fish; lays waste whole plantations of the sugar-cane, rice, and other grain. When angered or wounded, it will attack boats and men with much fury. It moves slowly, and heavily; swims dexterously; walks deliberately and leisurely over head into the water; and pursues his way, even on all fours, on the bottom; but cannot remain long under the water, without rising to take in air. It sleeps in reedy places; has a tremendous voice, between the lowing of an ox, and the roaring of the elephant. Its head is large, its mouth very wide, its skin is thick and almost devoid of hair, and its tail is naked and about a foot long. It is nearly as large as the elephant, and some have been found seventeen feet long. Mr. Goods observes: "Both the elephant and the hippopotamus, are naturally quiet animals; and never interfere with the grazing of others of different kinds, unless they be irritated. The behemoth, on the contrary, is represented as a quadruped of a ferocious nature; and formed for tyranny, if not rapacity; equally lord of the floods and of the mountains: rushing with rapidity of foot, instead of slowness or stateliness: and possessing a rigid and enormous tail, like a cedar-tree; instead of a short naked tail, of about a foot long, as the hippopotamus, or a weak, slender, hog-shaped tail, as the elephant."

The mammoth, for size, will answer the description in this place, especially verse 19. He is the chief of the ways of God. That to which the part of a skeleton belonged, which I examined, must have been, by computation, not less than twenty-five feet high, and sixty feet in length; the bones of one toe I measured, and found them three feet in length. One of the very smallest grinders of an animal of this extinct species, full of processes on the surface more than an inch in depth, which shows that the animal had lived on flesh, I have just now weighed, and found it, in its very dry state, four pounds eight ounces, awordupois: the same grinder of an elephant I have weighed also, and find it just two pounds. The mammoth, therefore, from this proportion, must have been as large as two elephants and a quarter. We may judge by this of its size; elephants are frequently ten and eleven feet high; this will make the mammoth at least twenty-five, or twenty-six feet high: and as it appears to have been a many-toed animal, the springs which such a creature could make must have been almost incredible: nothing by swiftness could have escaped its pursuit. God seems to have made it as the proof of his power; and had it been prolific, and not become extinct, it would have depopulated the earth. Creatures of this kind must have been living in the days of Job: the behemoth is referred to here, as if perfectly and commonly known.

He eateth grass as an ox] This seems to be referred to as if something remarkable in this animal; that, though from the form of his teeth, he must have been carnivorous, yet he ate grass as an ox. He lived both on animal and vegetable food.

Verse 16. His strength is in his loins] This refers to his great agility, notwithstanding his bulk; by the strength of his loins he was able to take vast springs, and make astonishing bounds.

Verse 17. He moveth his tail like a cedar] Therefore, it was neither the elephant, who has a tail like that of a hog, nor the hippopotamus, whose tail is only about a foot long.

The sinews of his stones] I translate with Mr. Goods, and for the same reasons, the sinews of his haunches, which is still more characteristic; as the animal must have excelled in leaping.

Verse 18. His bones are as strong pieces of brass;—bars of iron.] The tusk I have mentioned above is uncommonly hard, solid, and weighty for its size.

Verse 19. He is the chief of the ways of God] The largest, strongest, and swiftest quadruped that God has formed.

He that made him.] No power of man or beast can overcome him. God alone can overcome him, and God alone could make his sword (of extinction) approach to him.

Verse 20. The mountains bring him forth food] It cannot therefore be the hippopotamus, as he is seldom found far from the rivers where he has his chief residence.

Where all the beasts of the field play.] He frequents those places where he can have most prey. He makes a mock of all the beasts of the field. They can neither resist his power, nor escape from his agility. All this answers to what we know of the mammoth, but not at all to the hippopotamus.

Verse 21. He lieth under the shady trees] This and the following verses refer to certain habits of the behemoth, with which we are, and must be, unacquainted.

Verse 22. The willows of the brook compass him] This would agree well enough with the hippopotamus.

Verse 23. Behold, he drinketh up a river] A similar mode of expression, and of precisely the same meaning as that in chap. xxxiv. 24. He swalloweth the ground with fierceness. No river can stop his course: he wades through all; stems every tide and torrent; and hurries not as though he were in danger.

He trusteth that he can draw up Jordan] Even when the river overflows its banks, it is no stoppage to him: though the whole impetuosity of its stream rush against his mouth, he is not afraid. Mr. Goods has seized the true idea in his translation of this verse:

"If the stream rage, he revileth not; He is unmoved, though Jordan rush against his mouth."

From this mention of Jordan it is probable that the behemoth was once an inhabitant of the mountains, marshes, and woods, of the land of Palestine.

Verse 24. He taketh it with his eyes] He looks at the sweeping tide, and defies it.

His nose pierceth through snares.] If fences of strong stakes be made in order to restrain him, or prevent him from passing certain boundaries, he tears them in pieces with his teeth; or, by pressing his nose against them, breaks them off. If other parts of the description would answer, this might well apply to the elephant, the nose here meaning the proboscis, with which he can split trees, or even tear them up from the roots!

CHAPTER XLI.

Chiefest power in the Leviathan, of which creature he gives a very circumstantial description, 1-34.

See 1. O. or 7th. See U. C. ed. 761.

CANST thou draw out Leviathan with a hook? or his tongue with a cord which thou lettest down?

c That is, a whale, or, a hippopotamus.—1 Pa. 104. 28. Isai. 71. 1.

Thus ends the description of the behemoth; what I suppose to be the mastodonton, or mammoth, or some creature of this kind, that God made as the chief of his works, exhibited in various countries for a time, cut them off from the earth, but by his providence preserves many of their skeletons, that succeeding ages might behold the mighty power which produced this chief of the ways of God, and admire that providence which rendered the race extinct, that otherwise would, in all probability, have extinguished every other race of animals!

I am not unapprised of the strong arguments produced by learned men to prove, on the one hand, that behemoth is the elephant; and, on the other, that he is the hippopotamus, or river-horse: and I have carefully read all that Bochart, that chief of learned men, has said upon the subject. But I am convinced that an animal now extinct, probably of the kind already mentioned, is the creature pointed out and described by the inspiration of God in this chapter.

On ver. 30. of the preceding chapter we have seen, from Mr. Heath's remarks, that the fourteen first verses were probably transposed. In the following observations Dr. Kennicott appears to prove the point.

"It will be here objected, that the poem could not possibly end with this question from Job; and, among other reasons, for this in particular; because we read in the very next verse, That after the Lord had spoken these words unto Job, &c. If, therefore, the last speaker was not Job, but The Lord, Job could not originally have concluded this poem as he does at present.

"This objection I hold to be exceedingly important; and, indeed, to prove decisively that the poem must have ended at first with some speech from God.

"And this remark leads directly to a very interesting inquiry: What was at first the conclusion of this poem? This may, I presume, be pointed out and determined, not by the alteration of any one word, but only by allowing a dislocation of the fourteen verses which now begin the fortieth chapter. Chapters xxxviii. xxxix. xl. and xli. contain a magnificent display of the divine power and wisdom in the works of the Creator; specifying the lion, raven, wild-goat, wild-ass, unicorn, peacock, ostrich, horse, hawk, eagle, behemoth, and leviathan.

"Now, it must have surprised most readers to find that the description of these creatures is strangely interrupted at chap. xl. 1; and as strangely resumed afterward at chap. xl. 15. And, therefore, if these fourteen verses will connect with, and regularly follow, what now ends the poem, we cannot much doubt that these fourteen verses have again found their true station, and should be restored to it.

"The greatness of the supposed transposition is no objection: because so many verses as would fill one piece of vellum in an ancient roll, might be easily sewed in before or after its proper place. In the case before us, the twenty-five lines, in the first fourteen verses of chapter xl. seem to have been sewed in improperly after chap. xxxix. 30. instead of after chap. xlii. 5. That such large parts have been transposed in rolls, (to make which the parts are sewed together,) is absolutely certain: and that this has been the case here is still more probable for the following reason:

"The lines here supposed to be out of place are twenty-five, and contain ninety-two words; which might be written on one piece, or page, of vellum. But the MS. in which these twenty-five lines made one page must be supposed to have the same, or nearly the same, number of lines in each of the pages adjoining. And it would greatly strengthen this presumption if these twenty-five lines would fall in regularly at the end of any other set of lines, nearly of the same number:—if they would fall in after the next set of twenty-five, or the second set, or the third, or the fourth, &c. Now, this is actually the case here; for the lines after these twenty-five being one hundred or one hundred and one, make just four times twenty-five. And, therefore, if we consider these one hundred and twenty-five lines as written on five equal pieces of vellum; it follows, that the fifth piece might be carelessly sewed up before the other four.

"Let us also observe the present disorder of the speeches, which is this. In chapters xxxviii. and xxxix. God first speaks to Job. The end of chap. xxxix. is fol-

2 Canst thou put a hook into his nose? or bore his jaw through with a thorn?

3 Will he make many supplications unto thee? will he speak soft words unto thee?

4 Will he make a covenant with thee? wilt thou take him for a servant for ever?

e Heb. which thou drawest.—1 Isai. 37. 29.—Erod. 9. 1, &c.

lowed by, And the Lord answered Job and said, while yet Job had not replied. At chap. xl. 3-5. Job answers; but he says, he had then spoken twice, and he would add no more; whereas, this was his first reply, and he speaks afterward. From chap. xl. 15. to xli. 34. are now the descriptions of behemoth and leviathan; which would regularly follow the descriptions of the horse, hawk, and eagle. And from chap. xlii. 1. to xlii. 6. is now Job's speech; after which we read in ver. 7. After the Lord had spoken these words unto Job!

"Now, all these confusions are removed at once if we only allow that a piece of vellum containing the twenty-five lines, (chap. xl. 1-14.) originally followed chap. xlii. 6. For then, after God's first speech, ending with leviathan, Job replies. Then God—to whom Job replies the second time, when he added no more. And then God addresses him the third; when Job is silent, and the poem concludes: upon which the narrative opens regularly, with saying,—After the Lord had spoken these words unto Job, &c. chap. xlii. ver. 7." Kennicott's remarks, p. 161.

The reader will find much more satisfaction if he read the places as above directed. Having ended chap. xxxix. proceed immediately to ver. 15. of chap. xl.; go on regularly to the end of ver. 6. of chap. xlii. and immediately after that add the fourteen first verses of chap. xl. We shall find then that the poem has a consistent and proper ending, and that the concluding speech was spoken by JEHOVAH.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLI.

Verse 1. Canst thou draw out leviathan] We come now to a subject not less perplexing than that over which we have passed; and a subject on which learned men are less agreed than on the preceding. What is leviathan? The Hebrew word לִיְוִיָּתָן leviathan, is retained by the Vulgate and the Chaldee. The Septuagint has Ἀρεὶς ἢ Ἀρακωρῆ; Canst thou draw out the DRAGON? The Syriac and Arabic have the same. A species of whale has been supposed to be the creature in question; but the description suits no animal but the crocodile, or alligator; and it is not necessary to seek elsewhere. The crocodile is a natural inhabitant of the Nile, and other Asiatic and African rivers. It is a creature of enormous voracity and strength, as well as fleetness in swimming. He will attack the largest animals, and even men, with the most daring impetuosity. In proportion to his size he has the largest mouth of all monsters. The upper jaw is armed with forty sharp, strong teeth, and the under jaw with thirty-eight. He is clothed with such a coat of mail as cannot be pierced; and can in every direction resist a musket ball. The Hebrew לִיְוִיָּתָן ten, signifies the coupled dragon; but what this is we know not, unless the crocodile be meant.

With a hook] That crocodiles were caught with a baited hook, at least one species of crocodile, we have the testimony of Herodotus, lib. ii. c. 70. Ἐπειὰ τῶν τῶν οὐκ ἔδρασαν περι ἀγκίστρων, μετὰ ἐς μόνον τὸν ποταμὸν, κ. τ. λ. "They take the back or chine of a swine, and bait a hook with it, and throw it into the midst of the river; and the fisherman stands at some distance on the shore holding a young pig, which he irritates, in order to make it squeak. When the crocodile hears this, he immediately makes toward the sound; and, finding the baited hook in his way, swallows it, and it is then drawn to land, when they dash mud into his eyes, and blind him; after which he is soon despatched." In this way it seems leviathan was drawn out by a hook: but it was undoubtedly both a difficult and dangerous work, and but barely practicable in the way in which Herodotus relates the matter.

Or his tongue with a cord] It is probable that when the animal was taken, they had some method of casting a noose round his tongue, when opening his mouth; or piercing it with some barbed instrument. Theophrastus says that, in order to take the crocodile, they dig holes on the banks of the river, and cover them with sticks. The crocodiles fall into these, and cannot get out. They leave them there for several days without food, and then let down nooses which they pitch on their jaws, and thus draw them out. This is probably what is meant here.

Verse 2. Canst thou put a hook into his nose? Canst thou put a ring in his nose, and lead him about as thou doest thine ox? In the East they frequently lead the oxen and buffaloes with a ring in their noses.

5 What thou ¹ play with him as with a bird? or wilt thou bind him for thy maidens?

Bore his jaw through with a thorn?] Some have thought that this means, Canst thou deal with him as with one of those little fish which thou stringest on a rush by means of the thorn at its end? Or, perhaps, it may refer to those ornaments with which they sometimes adorned their horses, mules, camels, &c.

Verse 3. Will he make many supplications?] There are several allusions in these verses to matters of which we know nothing.

Verse 4. Will he make a covenant?] Canst thou hire him as thou wouldest a servant,—who is to be so attached to thy family as to have his ear bored, that he may abide in thy house for ever? Is not this an allusion to the law? Exod. xxii. 1—6.

Verse 5. Wilt thou play with him?] Is he such a creature as thou canst tame; and of which thou canst make a pet, and give as a plaything to thy little girls; פורקו; נטרותא; probably alluding to the custom of catching birds, tying a string to their legs, and giving them to children to play with; a custom execrable as ancient, and disgraceful as modern!

Verse 6. Shall thy companions make a banquet?] Canst thou and thy friends feast on him as ye were wont to do on a camel sacrificed for this purpose? Or, Canst thou dispose of his flesh to the merchants, to buyers, as thou wouldest do that of a camel, or an ox? It is certain, according to Herodotus, lib. ii. c. 70. that they killed and ate crocodiles at Apollonopolis and Elephantis, in Egypt.

Verse 7. Canst thou fill his skin with barbed irons?] This refers to some kind of harpoon work, similar to that employed in taking whales, and which they might use for some other kinds of animals; for the skin of the crocodile could not be pierced. Herrera says that he saw a crocodile defend itself against thirty men; and that they fired six balls at it without being able to wound it. It can only be wounded under the belly.

Verse 8. Lay thine hand upon him?] Mr. Heath translates, "Be sure thou strike home. Mind thy blow: rely not upon a second stroke." Mr. Goods translates:

² Dare the contest: be firm.

He is a dangerous animal; when thou attackest him, be sure of thy advantage; if thou miss, thou art ruined. Depend not on other advantages, if thou miss the first. Kill him at once, or he will kill thee.

Verse 9. Behold, the hope!] If thou miss the first advantage, there is no hope afterward: the very sight of this terrible monster would dissipate thy spirit, if thou hadst not a positive advantage against his life, or a place of sure retreat to save thine own.

Verse 10. None is so fierce that dare stir him up!] The most courageous of men dare not provoke the crocodile to fight; or attempt to rouse him when, sated with fish, he takes his repose among the reeds: and the strongest of men cannot match him.

Who then is able?] If thou canst not stand against the crocodile, one of the creatures of my hand; how canst thou resist me, who am his Maker? This is the use which God makes of the formidable description which he has thus far given of this terrible animal.

Verse 11. Who hath prevented me?] Who is it that hath laid me under obligation to him? Do I need my creatures? All under the heavens is my property.

Verse 12. I will not conceal his parts!] This is most certainly no just translation of the original. The Vulgate is to this effect: I will not spare him; nor will by his powerful words, framed for the purpose of entreaty. Mr. Goods applies it to leviathan:

¹ I cannot be confounded at his limbs and violence:
² The strength and structure of his frame."

The Creator cannot be intimidated at the most formidable of his own works: man may, and should tremble; God cannot.

Verse 13. Who can discover the face of his garment?] Who can rip up the hide of this terrible monster? Who can take away his covering, in order to pierce his vitals?

Verse 14. The doors of his face?] His jaws; which are most tremendous.

Verse 15. His scales are his pride!] They are impentrate, as we have already seen.

Verse 16. One is so near to another!] It has already been stated, that a musket ball, fired at him in any direction, cannot make a passage through his scales.

Verse 18. By his needings a light doth shine!] It is very likely that this may be taken literally. When he spurts up the water out of his nostrils, the drops form a sort of iris, or rainbow. We have seen this effect produced when, in certain situations and state of the atmosphere, water was thrown up forcibly, so as to be broken into small drops, which has occasioned an appearance like the rainbow.

The eyelids of the morning.] It is said that, under the water, the eyes of the crocodile are exceedingly dull; but, when he lifts his head above water, they sparkle with the greatest vivacity. Hence the Egyptians, in their hieroglyphics, made the eyes of the crocodile the emblem of the morning. Ανατολή λεγοντες δυε οφθαλμους κροκοδειλου ζωογραφουσι. HORAEF. Egypt. Hieroglyph. lib. i. c. 65. This is a most remarkable circumstance, casts light on ancient history, and shows the rigid correctness of the picture drawn above.

Verse 19. Out of his mouth go burning lamps! Dr. Young, in his paraphrase, has a sensible note on this passage: "This is nearer the truth than at first view may be imagined. The crocodile, according to naturalists, lying long under water, and being there forced to hold its breath, when it emerges, the breath long repressed is hot, and bursts out so violently, that it resembles fire and smoke. The horse does not repress his breath by any means so long, neither is he so fierce and animated; yet the most correct of poets ventures to use the same metaphor concerning him, volvit sub naribus ignem. By this I would caution against a false opinion of the boldness of Eastern metaphors, from passages ill understood."

Verse 22. In his neck remaineth strength! Literally, "strength has its dwelling in his neck." The neck is the seat of strength in most animals; but the head and shoulders must be here meant, as the crocodile has no neck, being shaped very nearly like a lizard.

And sorrow is turned into joy before him.] וצניו וצניו וצניו u-lo-panis tadus dabab; And destruction exulteth before him. This is as fine an image as can well be conceived. It is in the true spirit of poetry: the legitimate offspring of the genie createur. Our translation is simply insignificant.

Verse 23. The flakes of his flesh!] His muscles are strongly and firmly compacted.

Verse 24. Hard as a piece of the nether millstone.] Which is required to be harder than that which runs above.

25 When he raiseth up himself, the mighty are afraid; by reason of breakings they purify themselves.

26 The sword of him that layeth at him cannot hold: the spear, the dart, nor the habergeon.

27 He esteemeth iron as straw, and brass as rotten wood.

28 The arrow cannot make him flee: sling-stones are turned with him into stubble.

29 Darts are counted as stubble: he laugheth at the shaking of a spear.

30 Sharp stones are under him; he spreadeth sharp pointed things upon the mire.

31 He maketh the deep to boil like a pot: he maketh the sea like a pot of ointment.

32 He maketh a path to shine after him: one would think the deep to be hoary.

33 Upon earth there is not his like, who is made without fear.

34 He beholdeth all high things; he is a king over all the children of pride.

CHAPTER XLII.

Job boasts himself before God, 1-8. God accepts him; commutes his three friends; and commends Job to other sacrifices for them, that he might pardon and accept them, as they had not spoken what was right concerning their Maker, 7-9. The Lord turns Job's captivity; and his friends visit him, and bring him presents, 10, 11. Job's affliction becomes double to what it was before, 12. His family is also increased, 13-15. Having lived one hundred and forty years after his affliction, he dies, 16, 17.

THEN JOB answered the LORD, and said,

1 I know that thou canst do every thing, and that no thought can be withholden from thee.

2 Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge? therefore have I uttered that I understood not; things too wonderful for me, which I knew not.

3 Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak; I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.

Verse 25. By reason of breakings they purify themselves.] No version, either ancient or modern, appears to have understood this verse: nor is its true sense known. The Septuagint has, "When he turns himself he terrifies all the quadrupeds on the earth." The original is short and obscure:—מִשְׁחָרֵי מִשְׁחָרֵי מִשְׁחָרֵי מִשְׁחָרֵי מִשְׁחָרֵי. Mr. Goode takes the plural termination in sin, from the first word; of which he makes the noun in yam, the sea; and thus translates it, They are confounded at the tumult of the sea. In this I can find no more light than in our own. Mr. Heath has, For very terror they fall to the ground. The translations of it are as unsatisfactory as they are various. I shall give both the verses from Coverdale:

This part is as hard as a stone; and as fast as the scythe (saw) that the hammer man smyteth upon: when he goeth the mightiest of all are affayed, and the weakest stop. The dull swell in the waters proclaims his advance; and when this that the stout-hearted tremble.

Verse 26. Habergeon.] The hauberk; the Norman armour for the head, neck, and breast, formed of rings. See on Neh. iv. 16.

Verse 29. Darts are counted as stubble] All these verses state that he cannot be wounded by any kind of weapon, and that he cannot be resisted by any human strength.

A young crocodile seen by M. Maillet, twelve feet long, and which had not eaten a morsel for thirty-five days, its mouth having been tied all that time, was nevertheless so strong, that with a blow of its tail it overturned a bale of coffee, and five or six men with the utmost imaginable ease! What power then must lodge in one twenty feet long, well fed, and in health.

Verse 30. Sharp stones are under him] So hard and impenetrable are his scales that splinters of flint are the same to him as the softest reeds.

Verse 31. He maketh the deep to boil like a pot] This is occasioned by strongly agitating the waters at or near the bottom; and the froth which arises to the top, from this agitation, may have the appearance of ointment. But several travellers say that the crocodile has a very strong scent of musk, and that he even imparts this smell to the water through which he passes: and, therefore, the text may be taken literally. This property of the crocodile has been noticed by several writers.

Verse 32. He maketh a path to shine after him] In certain states of the weather, a rapid motion through the water disengages many sparks of phosphoric fire. I have seen this at sea; once particularly, in a fine clear night, with a good breeze, in a fast sailing vessel, I leaned over the stern and watched this phenomenon for hours. The wake of the vessel was like a stream of fire: millions of particles of fire were disengaged by the ship's swift motion through the water, nearly in the same way as by the electric cushion and cylinder: and all continued to be absorbed at a short distance from the vessel. Whether this phenomenon takes place in fresh water, or in the Nile, I have had no proper opportunity of observing.

The deep to be hoary.] By the froth and foam raised by the rapid passage of the animal through the water.

Verse 33. Upon earth there is not his like] There is no creature among terrestrial animals so thoroughly dangerous, so exceedingly strong, and so difficult to be wounded or slain.

Who is made without fear] Perhaps there is no creature who is at all acquainted with man, so totally destitute of fear as the crocodile.

Verse 34. He is a king over all the children of pride.]

There is no animal in the waters that does not fear and fly from him. Hence the Chaldæe renders it all the offspring of FISHES.

Calmel supposes that by the children of pride the Egyptians are meant; that the crocodile is called their king, because he was one of their principal divinities. That the kings of Egypt were called Pharaoh, which signifies a crocodile. That the Egyptians were proverbial for their pride, as may be seen in Ezek. xxxii. 12. And it is very natural to say that Job, wishing to point out a cruel animal, adored by the Egyptians, and considered by them as their chief divinity, should describe him under the name of king of all the children of pride.

Houbigant considers the leviathan לְוִיָּאֵת the coupled dragon, to be emblematical of Satan:—"He lifts his proud look to God, and aspires to the high heavens; and is king over all the sons of pride." He is, in effect, the governor of every proud, haughty, impious man. What a king! What laws! What subjects!

Others think that by the sons of pride is meant MEN; and that it is with the design to abate their pride, and confound them in the high notions they have of their own importance, that God produces and describes an animal of whom they are all afraid, and whom none of them can conquer.

After all, what is leviathan? I have strong doubts whether either whale or crocodile be meant. I think even the crocodile overrated by this description. He is too great, too powerful, too important in this description. No beast, terrestrial or aquatic, deserves the high character here given; though that character only considers him as unconquerably strong, ferociously cruel, and wonderfully made. Perhaps leviathan was some extinct mammoth of the waters, as behemoth was of the land. However, I have followed the general opinion by treating him as the crocodile throughout these notes: but could not finish without stating my doubts on this subject: though I have nothing better to offer in the place of the animal in behalf of which almost all learned men and critics argue, and concerning which they generally agree. As to its being an emblem either of Pharaoh, or the devil, I can say little more than, I doubt. The description is extremely dignified; and, were we sure of the animal, I have no doubt we should find it in every instance correct. But after all that has been said, we have yet to learn what leviathan is!

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLII.

Verse 2. I know that thou canst do every thing] Thy power is unlimited; thy wisdom infinite.

Verse 3. Who is he that hideth counsel] These are the words of Job; and they are a repetition of what Jehovah said, chap. xxxviii. 2. Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge? Job now having heard the Almighty's speech, and heard and received his reproof, echoes back his words, "Who is he that hideth counsel without knowledge?" Alas, I am the man: I have uttered what I understood not; things too wonderful for me, that I knew not.

God had said, chap. xxxviii. 3. "Gird up now thy loins like a man; I will demand of thee, and answer thou me." In allusion to this, Job exclaims to his Maker, ver.

4. Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak; I will ask of thee, and declare thou unto me. I acknowledge my ignorance; I confess my foolishness and presumption; I am ashamed of my conduct; I lament my imperfections; I implore thy mercy; and beg thee to show me thy will, that I may ever think, speak, and do, what is pleasing in thy sight.

5 I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee:

6 Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.

7 ¶ And it was so, that after the Lord had spoken these words unto Job, the Lord said to Eliphaz the Temanite, My wrath is kindled against thee, and against thy two friends; for ye have not spoken of me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath.

8 Therefore take unto you now seven bullocks and seven rams; and go to my servant Job, and offer up for yourselves a burnt-offering; and my servant Job shall pray for you: for him will I accept: lest I deal with you after your Things too wonderful! I have spoken of thy judgments, which I did not comprehend.

Verse 5. I have heard of thee I have now such a discovery of thee as I have never had before. I have only heard of thee by tradition, or from imperfect information; now, the eye of my mind clearly perceives thee: and, in seeing thee I see myself; for the light that discovers thy glory and excellence, discovers my meanness and vileness.

Verse 6. I abhor myself Compared with mine, my strength is weakness, my wisdom folly, and my righteousness impurity.

"I loathe myself when thou I see; And into nothing fall."

Repent I am deeply distressed on account of the imaginations of my heart, the words of my tongue, and the acts of my life. I roll myself in the dust, and sprinkle ashes upon my head. Job is now sufficiently humbled at the feet of Jehovah; and, having earnestly and piously prayed for instruction, the Lord, in a finishing speech, which appears to be contained in the fourteen first verses of chap. xl. perfects his teaching on the subject of the late controversy, which is concluded with, When thou canst act like the Almighty (which is, in effect, what the questions and commands amount to in the preceding verses of that chapter.) Then will I also confess unto thee, that thy own right hand can save thee. In the fifth verse of the fortieth chapter, Job says, ONCE HAVE I SPOKEN. This must refer to the declaration above, in the beginning of this chapter (xlii.) and he goes on to state, chap. xl. 5. Yea, twice; but I will proceed no farther. This second time is that in which he uses these words: after which he spoke no more; and the Lord concluded with the remaining part of these fourteen verses, viz. from ver. 7. to 14. inclusive. Then the thread of the story in the form of a narration is resumed in this chapter (xlii.) at ver. 7.

Verse 7. After the Lord had spoken these words Those recorded at chap. xl. 7—14. He said to Eliphaz, who was the eldest of the three friends, and chief speaker: Ye have not spoken of me—right. Mr. Peters observes, "It will be difficult to find any thing in the speeches of Eliphaz and his companions which should make the difference here supposed, if we set aside the doctrine of a future state; for, in this view, the others would speak more worthily of God than Job, by endeavouring to vindicate his providence in the exact distribution of good and evil in this life; whereas Job's assertion, chap. ix. 22, "This is one thing, therefore I said it, He destroyeth the perfect and the wicked," which is the argument on which he all along insists, would, upon this supposition, be directly charging God that he made no distinction between the good and the bad. But now, take the other life into the account, and the thing will appear in quite a contrary light; and we shall easily see the reason why God approves of the sentiments of Job, and condemns those of his friends. For supposing the friends of Job to argue that the righteous are never afflicted without remedy here, nor the wicked prosperous on the whole, in this life; (which is a wrong representation of God's providence,) and Job to argue on the other hand, that the righteous are sometimes afflicted here, and that without remedy, but shall be rewarded in a life to come; and that the wicked prosper here, but shall be punished hereafter, which is the true representation of the divine proceedings; and here is a very apparent difference in the drift of the one's discourse, and of the others'. For Job, in this view, speaks worthily of God; and the rest unworthily. The best moral argument that mankind have ever had to believe in a life to come, is that which Job insists on; that good and evil are, for the most part, dealt out here, promiscuously. On the contrary, the topic urged by his friends, and which they push a great deal too far, that God rewards and punishes folly, in that ye have not spoken of me the thing which is right, like my servant Job.

9 ¶ So Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite went, and did according as the Lord commanded them; the Lord also accepted Job.

10 ¶ And the Lord turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends: also the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before.

11 Then came there unto him all his brethren, and all his sisters, and all they that had been of his acquaintance before, and did eat bread with him in his house: and they bemoaned him, and comforted him over all the evil that the Lord had brought upon him: every man also in this world, tends, in its consequence, like that other opinion which was held by the Stoics in after times, that virtue is its own reward, to sap the very foundation of that proof we have from reason, of another life. No wonder, therefore, that the sentiments of the one are approved, and those of the other condemned."

Verse 8. Take seven bullocks and seven rams] From this it appears that Job was considered a priest, not only in his own family, but also to others. For his children, he offered burnt-offerings, chap. i. 5. and now he is to make the same kind of offering, accompanied with intercession, in behalf of his three friends. This is a full proof of the innocence and integrity of Job; a more decided one could not be given, that the accusations of his friends, and their bitter speeches, were as untrue as they were malicious. God thus clears his character, and confounds their devices.

Verse 10. The Lord turned the captivity of Job] The Vulgate has: Dominus quoque conversus est ad penitentiam Job; "And the Lord turned Job to repentance." The Chaldee: "The Word of the Lord (מֵימְרָא דַּיְוָא meymra dayai,) turned the captivity of Job." There is a remark which these words suggest, which has been rarely, if at all, noticed. It is said that the Lord turned the captivity of Job when he prayed for his friends. He had suffered much through the unkindness of these friends: they had criticised his conduct without feeling or mercy; and he had just cause to be irritated against them; and that he had such a feeling toward them, several parts of his discourses sufficiently prove. God was now about to show Job his mercy; but mercy can be shown only to the merciful. Job must forgive his unfeeling friends, if he would be forgiven by the Lord: he directs him, therefore, to pray for them, ver. 8. He who can pray for another, cannot entertain enmity against him. Job did so; and, when he prayed for his friends, God turned the captivity of Job. Forgive, and ye shall be forgiven.

Some suppose that Job, being miraculously restored, armed his servants and remaining friends, and fell upon those who had spoiled him; and not only recovered his own property, but also spoiled the spoilers; and thus his substance became double of what it was before. Of this I do not see any intimation in the Sacred Text.

Verse 11. Then came there unto him all his brethren] "Job being restored to his former health and fortunes, the author," says Mr. Heath, "presents us with a striking view of human friendship. His brethren who, in the time of his affliction, kept at a distance from him; his kinsfolk who ceased to know him; his familiar friends, who had forgotten him; and his acquaintance, who had made themselves perfect strangers to him; those to whom he had showed kindness, and who yet had ungratefully neglected him—on the return of his prosperity, now come and console with him, desirous of renewing former familiarity; and, according to the custom of the Eastern countries; where there is no approaching a great man without a present, each brings him a kesitah, each a jewel of gold." See ver. 12.

A piece of money] כֶּסֶתָה kesitah, signifies a lamb; and it is supposed that this piece of money had a lamb stamped on it, as that quantity of gold was generally the current value of a lamb. See my note on Gen. xxiv. 19. where the subject is largely considered. The Vulgate, Chaldee, Septuagint, Arabic, and Syriac, have one lamb, or sheep: so it appears that they did not understand the kesitah, as implying a piece of money of any kind; but a sheep or a lamb.

Ear-ring of gold.] Literally a nose jewel. The Septuagint translate, τετραδραχμῶν χρυσῶν, a tetradrachm of gold, or golden daric; but by adding καὶ ἀσημῶν, unstamp'd, they intimate that it was four drachms of uncoined gold.

gave him a piece of money, and every one an ear-ring of gold.

12 So the LORD blessed the latter end of Job more than his beginning: for he had fourteen thousand sheep, and six thousand camels, and a thousand yoke of oxen, and a thousand she-asses.

13 ¶ He had also seven sons and three daughters.

14 And he called the name of the first, Jemima;

b Ch. 6. 7. Jas. 5. 11.—1 Sam. Ch. 1. 12.—4 Ch. 1. 2

Verse 12. The LORD blessed the latter end of Job] Was it not in consequence of his friends' bringing him a lamb, sheep, or other kind of cattle, and the quantity of gold mentioned, that his stock of sheep was increased so speedily to 14,000, his camels to 6000, his oxen to 2000, and his she-asses to 1000?

Mr. Heath takes the story of the conduct of Job's friends by the worst handle, see ver. 11. Is it not likely that they themselves were the cause of his sudden accumulation of property? and that they did not visit him, nor seek his familiarity, because he was now prosperous; but because they saw that God had turned his captivity, and miraculously healed him? This gave them full proof of his innocence; and they no longer considered him an anathema, or devoted person, whom they should avoid and detest; but one who had been suffering under a strange dispensation of divine providence, and who was now no longer a suspicious character, but a favourite of heaven, to whom they should show every possible kindness. They, therefore, joined hands with God to make the poor man live; and their presents were the cause, under God, of his restoration to affluence. This takes the subject by the other handle: and I think, as far as the text is concerned, by the right one.

He had fourteen thousand sheep] The reader, by referring to chap. i. 3. will perceive that the whole of Job's property was exactly doubled.

Verse 13. Seven sons and three daughters.] This was the same number as before; and so the Vulgate, Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic read: but the Chaldee doubles the sons, and he had fourteen sons, and three daughters.

Verse 14. The name of the first, Jemima ימימה yemima, days upon days.

Kezia] קציא Ketsiah, cassia, a well known aromatic plant. And, Keren-happuch] קרן חן keren happuch, the inverted or flowing horn, cornucopia, the horn of plenty. The Chaldee will not permit these names to pass without a comment, to show the reasons of their impositions:—He called the first Jemima, because she was as fair as the day; the second Ketsiah, because she was as precious as cassia; the third Keren-happuch, because her face was as splendid as the emerald. Cardmarden's Bible, 1566, has the Hebrew names.

The Vulgate has, "He called the name of one Day, of the second Cassia, and of the third The Horn of Antimony."

The versions, in general, preserve these names, only the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, translate Jemimah, DAY; and the former for Keren-happich has Αμαλθαιας κερας, the horn of Amalthea. This refers to an ancient fable, Amalthea was the nurse of Jupiter, and fed him with goat's milk when he was young. The goat having by accident her horn struck off, Jupiter translated the animal to the heavens, and gave her a place among the constellations, which she still holds; and made the horn the emblem of plenty; hence it is always pictured or described as filled with fruits, flowers, and the necessaries and luxuries of life. It is very strange how this fable got into the Septuagint.

Coverdale is singular:—The first he called Bage, the seventh Peter, the eighth, All plenteousness.

Verse 15. Gave them inheritance among their brethren.] This seems to refer to the history of the daughters of Zelophehad, given Num. xxvii. 1—8. who appear to have been the first who were allowed an inheritance among their brethren.

Verse 16. After this lived Job a hundred and forty years] How long he had lived before his afflictions, we cannot tell. If we could rely on the Septuagint, all would be plain, who add here, τα δε ταυτα την εζησαν, διακοσια τεσσαρακοντα; And all the years that Job lived were two hundred and forty. This makes him one hundred years of age when his trial commenced. Coverdale has, After this lived Job forty years, omitting the hundred! So also in Beck's Bible, 1549. From the age, as marked down in the Hebrew text, we can infer nothing relative to the time when Job lived. See the subscription at the end of the Arabic.

and the name of the second, Kezia; and the name of the third, Keren-happuch.

15 And in all the land were no women found so fair as the daughters of Job: and their father gave them inheritance among their brethren.

16 ¶ After this lived Job a hundred and forty years, and saw his sons, and his sons' sons even four generations.

17 So Job died, being old and full of days.

1 Ch. 5. 23. Prov. 3. 16.—m Gen. 25. 8.

Verse 17. Job died, being old and full of days:] He had seen life in all its varieties: he had risen higher than all the men of the East, and sunk lower in affliction, poverty, and distress, than any other human being that had existed before, or has lived since. He died when he was satisfied with life: this the word yaw eebb implies. He knew the worst and the best of human life: and in himself the whole history of providence was exemplified and illustrated: and many of its mysteries unfolded.

We have now seen the end of the life of Job, and the end or design which God had in view by his afflictions and trials; in which he has shown us that he is very pitiful, and of tender mercy, James v. 11. and to discern this end of the Lord should be the object of every period who reads or studies it. Laus in excelsis Deo!

Both in the Arabic and Septuagint, there is a considerable and important addition at the end of the seventeenth verse, which extends to many lines: of this, with its variations, I have given a translation in page 8 of the preface.

At the end of the Syriac version we have the following subscription:

"The book of the righteous and renowned Job is finished, and contains 2553 verses."

At the end of the Arabic is the following:

"It is completed by the assistance of the Most High God. The author of this copy would record that this book has been translated into Arabic from the Syriac language."

"Glory be to God, the giver of understanding!"—"The Book of Job is completed: and his age was two hundred and forty years."—"Praise be to God for ever!"

So closely does the Arabic translator copy the Syriac, that in the Polyglott one Latin version serves for both, with the exception of a few marginal readings at the bottom of the column, to show where the Syriac varies.

Masoretic Notes.

Number of verses one thousand and seventy; Middle verse chap. xxii. 16; Sections eight.

At the close of a book I have usually endeavoured to give some account of the author, or of him who was its chief subject. But the book of Job is so unique in its subject and circumstances, that it is almost impossible to say any thing satisfactorily upon it, except in the way of notes on the text. There has been so much controversy on the person and era of Job, that he has almost been reduced to an ideal being; and the book itself considered rather as a splendid poem on an ethic subject, than a real history of the man whose name it bears.

The author, as we have already seen in the preface, is not known. It has been attributed to Job himself; to Elishu, one of his friends; to Moses; to some ancient Hebrew, whose name is unknown; to Solomon; to Isaiah, the prophet; and to Ezra, the scribe.

The time is involved in equal darkness: before Moses, in the time of the Exodus, or a little after; in the days of Solomon; during the Babylonish captivity; or even later; have all been mentioned as probable eras.

How it was originally written, and in what language, have also been questions on which great and learned men have divided. Some think it was originally written in prose, and afterward reduced to poetry; the substance of the different speeches being retained, but much added by way of embellishment. Theodore, bishop of Mopuestia, in Cilicia, a writer of the fourth century, distinguishes between Job and the author of the book that goes under his name; whom he accuses of a vain ostentation of profane sciences; of writing a fabulous and poetical history; of making Job speak things inconsistent with his religion and piety; and more proper to give offence than to edify. As Theodore had only seen the Book of Job in the Greek version, it must be owned that he had too much ground for his severe criticisms; as there are, in that version, several allusions to the mythology of the Greeks, some of which are cursorily mentioned in the notes. Among these may be reckoned the names of constellations, in chapters ix. and xxxviii. and the naming Keren-happuch, one of Job's daughters, the horn of Amalthea, chap. xlii. 14.

We need not confound the time of Job and the time of the author of the book that goes under his name. Job may have been the same as Jobab, 1 Chron. i. 35—44, and the fifth in descent from Abraham; while the author or poet, who reduced the memoirs into verse, may have lived as late as the Babylonish captivity.

As to the language, though nervous and elevated, it is rather a compound of dialects, than a regular language. Though Hebrew be the basis; yet many of the words, and frequently the idiom, are pure Arabic; and a Chaldee phraseology is, in many places, apparent.

Whoever was the author, and in whatever time it may have been written, the Jewish and Christian church have ever received it as a canonical book, recommended by the inspiration of the Almighty. It is, in many respects, an obscure book, because it refers to all the wisdom of the East. If we understood all its allusions, I have little doubt that the best judges would not hesitate to declare it the Idumean Encyclopædia. It most obviously makes continual references to sciences the most exalted and useful, and to arts the most difficult and ornamental. Of these the notes have produced frequent proofs.

The author was well acquainted with all the wisdom and learning of the ancient world, and of his own times; and as a poet, he stands next to David and Isaiah; and as his subjects have been more varied than theirs, he knew well how to avail himself of this circumstance; and has pressed into his service all the influence and beauties of his art, to make the four persons whom he brings upon the stage, keep up each his proper character, and maintain the opinions which they respectively undertook to defend. "The history," says Calmel, "as to the substance and circumstances, is exactly true. The sentiments, reasons, and arguments, of the several persons, are very faithfully expressed; but it is very probable that the terms and turn of expressions, are the poet's, or the writer's, whoever he may be."

The authority of this book has been as much acknowledged as its divine inspiration. The prophet Ezekiel is the first who quotes it, chap. xiv. 14—20, where he mentions Job with Noah and Daniel in such a way as makes his identity equal with theirs: and of their personal existence no one ever doubted.

The apostle James, chap. v. 11, mentions him also, and celebrates his patience; and refers so particularly to the termination and happy issue of his trials, as leaves us no room to doubt that he had seen his history, as here stated, in the book that bears his name. St. Paul seems also to quote him; compare Rom. ii. 11. For there is no respect of persons with God, with Job xxxiv. 19. God accepteth not the persons of princes, nor regardeth the rich more than the poor; for they are all the work of his hands.

1 Tim. vi. 7. For we brought nothing into the world; and it is certain we can carry nothing out. Job i. 21. Naked came I out of my mother's womb; and naked shall I return thither. Heb. xii. 5. My son, despise not thou the chastening of the Lord, nor faint when thou art rebuked of him. Job v. 17. Happy is the man whom God correcteth; therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty. A similar saying is found Prov. iii. 11, probably all coming from the same source. See the comparisons from the writings of Solomon, in the preface, p. viii.

Job is to be found in the ancient martyrologies, with the title of prophet, saint, and martyr: and the Greek church celebrates a festival in his honour, on the fifth of May; and the corrupt churches of Arabia, Egypt, Æthiopia, Russia, and Muscovy, follow it in their worship of Saint Job!

But no church has proceeded so far both to honour and disgrace this excellent man as the church of Rome. I shall quote the words of Dom Calmel, one of the most learned and judicious divines that church could ever boast. "The Latins keep his festival on the tenth of May. This, next to the Maccabees, brothers and martyrs, is the first saint to whom the western church has decreed public and religious honours: and we know not of any saint among the patriarchs and prophets, to whom churches have been consecrated, or chapels dedicated in greater number, than to this holy man. We see abundance of them, particularly in Spain and Italy. And he is invoked principally against the leprosy, itch, foul disease, and other distempers which relate to these." See Baillet's Lives of the Saints.

Calmel goes on to say, that "there are several reputable commentators who maintain that Job was afflicted with this scandalous disease; among whom are, Valabius, Cyprian Cistere, Bolducius, and Pineda, in their commentaries on Job; and Desanges in Epist. Medicin. Hist. De Læte Venered. The Latin church invokes Saint Job in diseases of this nature; and lazarettos and hospitals, wherein care is taken of persons who have this scandalous distemper upon them, are for the most part dedicated to him." See Calmel's Dissertation sur la maladie de Job, and his Dictionary under the article JOB.

The conduct of this church, relative to this holy man, forms one of the foulest calumnies ever inflicted on the character of either saint or sinner: and to make him the patron of every diseased prostitute and debauchee through the whole extent of the papal dominions and influence, is a conduct the most execrable; and little short of blasphemy against the holiness of God. As to their lazarettos, hospitals, and chapels, dedicated to this eminent man on these scandalous grounds; better raze them from their foundations, carry their materials to an unclean place, or transport them to the valley of the son of Hinnom, and consume them there; and then openly build others dedicated ad fornicantem Jovem, in conjunction with Baal Peor and Astartoth, the Priapus and Venus of their predecessors!

If those of that communion should think these reflections severe, let them know that the stroke is heavier than the glean; and let them put away from among them what is a dishonour to God, a disgrace to his saints, and their own ineffable reproach. Of the disease under which Job laboured enough has been said in the notes. On this head many writers have run into great extravagance. Bartholinus and Calmel state, that he was afflicted with two several diseases: the latter specifies them. Pineda enumerates thirty-one or thirty-two; and St. Chrysostom says he was afflicted with all the maladies of which the human body is capable; that he suffered them in their utmost extremities; and, in a word, that on his one body all the maladies of the world were accumulated! How true is the saying: "Over-doing is un-doing." It is enough to say, that this great man was afflicted in his property, family, body, and soul; and perhaps none before, or since his time to a greater degree in all these kinds.

On Job's character his own words are the best comment. Were we to believe his mistaken and uncharitable friends, he, by assertion and insinuation, was guilty of almost every species of crime: but every charge of this kind is rebutted by his own defence: and the character given to him by the God whom he worshipped, frees him from even the suspicion of guilt.

His patience, resignation, and submission to the divine will, are the most prominent parts of his character which are presented to our view. He bore the loss of every thing which a worldly man values, without one unsoftened feeling, or murmuring word. And it is in this respect that he is recommended to our notice, and to our imitation. His woailings relative to the mental agonies through which he passed, do not at all affect this part of his character. He bore the loss of his goods, the total ruin of his extensive and invaluable establishment, and the destruction of his hopes in the awful death of his children without uttering a reprehensible word, or indulging an irreligious feeling.

If, however, we carefully examine our translation of this poem, we shall find many things in Job's speeches that appear to be blemishes in his character. Even his own concessions appear to be heavy taxes on the high reputation he has had for patience, and humble submission to the divine will. In several cases these apparent blemishes are so contrasted with declarations of the highest integrity and innocence, that they amount nearly to contradictions. Dr. Kennicott has examined this subject closely, and has thought deeply upon it; and strongly asserts that this apparent inconsistency arises from a misapprehension of Job's words in some cases, and mistranslation of them in others.

I shall take a large quotation on this subject, from his "Remarks on Select Passages of Scripture."

"The integrity, or righteousness, of Job's character being resolutely maintained by Job himself: and the whole poem turning on the multiplied miseries of a man eminently good; the grand difficulty through the poem seems to be—how these positions can consist with the several passages where Job is now made to own himself a very grievous sinner. This matter, as being of great moment, should be carefully examined.

"In chap. vii. 20, 21, he says:—I have sinned; What shall I do unto thee, O thou Preserver of men? Why dost thou not pardon my transgression, and take away mine iniquity?

"In chap. ix. 20. If I justify myself, mine own mouth shall condemn me: If I say, I am perfect, it shall also prove me perverse. I know that thou wilt not hold me innocent. 30. If I wash myself with snow-water, 31. Yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch, and my own clothes shall abhor me. Lastly, in xlii. 6. I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes.

"Whereas he says in chap. x. 7. Thou knowest that I am not wicked. 13—15. I will maintain my own ways before him. 18. I know that I shall be justified. xxiii. 10. He knoweth the way that I take; when he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold. 11. My foot hath held his steps: his way have I kept, and not declined. And lastly, in chap. xxvii. 5. Till I die I will not remove my integrity from me. 6. My righteousness I hold fast; I will not let it go: my heart shall not reproach me so long as I live.

"And now, if any one ascribing these contraries to Job's inconsistency with himself, should pronounce him right in owning himself a great sinner, and wrong, in pleading his own integrity, he will soon see it necessary to infer the contrary. Had Job really been, and owned himself to be a great sinner; his great sufferings had been then accounted for, agreeably to the maxims of his friends; and all difficulty and dispute had then been at an end. But as the whole poem turns on Job's uncommon goodness, and yet uncommon misery: so this goodness or innocence, this righteousness or integrity, is not only insisted upon by Job, but expressly admitted by God himself, both in the beginning of this book, and at the end of it. See chap. i. 9, 21; ii. 3; and xlii. 7, 8.

"That Job did not here plead guilty, or contradict the asseveration of his innocence, appears farther from the subsequent speeches. So Bildad, who spoke next, understood him, chap. viii. 6. So Zophar understood him, chap. xi. 34. So Eliphaz, to whom he spoke the former words, understood him likewise, chap. xv. 13, 14. And, lastly, Elihu, after hearing all the replies of Job to his friends, tells him, (chap. xxxiii. 8, 9.) Surely thou hast spoken in mine hearing, and I have heard the voice of thy words, saying, I am clean, without transgression; I am innocent, neither is there iniquity in me.

"If, therefore, this inconsistency in Job's declaration concerning himself cannot have obtained in this book at first; it must arise from some misrepresentation of the true sense. And as it relates to Job's confession of guilt, expressed in the three chapters, viii. ix. and xlii. on these passages I shall make a few remarks, in hopes of removing one of the greatest general difficulties which now attend this poem.

"As to the first instance,—Job appears, at least from our English version of chap. vii. 20. to be confessing his sins to God, whereas he is really speaking there in reply to Eliphaz; and 'tis obvious that the same words, applied thus differently, must carry very different ideas. Who does not see the humility and sorrow with which Job would say, I have sinned against thee, O God? and yet see the resentment and force with which he would say to Eliphaz, I have sinned, you say—but granting this, What is it to you? is (or against) thee, O Eliphaz, what crime have I committed? That Job, in other places, repeats ironically, and confutes by quoting the saying of his friends, will appear hereafter.

"Eliphaz had been attempting to terrify him by the recital of a vision, and the long speech of a spirit, chap. iv. 12—21. Job in reply, (chap. vi. 15—27.) complains of the cruel treatment he had begun to experience from his nominal friends, and false brethren: and, (chap. vii. 14.) particularly complains that he (Eliphaz) had terrified him with dreams and visions. Job then goes on, (chap. vii. 17, &c.) What is a miserable man like myself that thou makest so much of him! (1 Sam. xxvi. 24.) That thou seest thy heart upon him; that with such officious affection thou visitest him every morning, and art trying him every moment! How long will it be till thou depart from me; and leave me at liberty to breathe, and even swallow down my spittle! You say I must have been a sinner;—what then? I have not sinned against THEE! O thou spy upon mankind! Why hast thou set up me as a butt, or mark to shoot at? Why am I become a burden unto thee? Why not rather overlook my transgression, and pass by mine iniquity? I am now sinking to the dust! to-morrow, perhaps, I shall be sought in vain!

"As the first part of this difficulty arose from Job's first reply to Eliphaz; the second part of the same difficulty arises from Job's first reply to Bildad, in chap. ix. when Job is now made to say as follows: (verse 2 and 4.) How shouldst thou be just with God? Who hath hardened himself against him, and prospered? Ver. 20. If I justify myself, my own mouth shall condemn me; with many other self-accusatory observations, which have been already quoted from verses 28, 30, and 31. Now this chapter, which in our present version of it is very unintelligible, will perhaps recover its original meaning, and prove beautifully consistent upon these two principles,—That from verses 2 to 22, Job is really exposing his friends, by ironically quoting some of their absurd maxims: and that in verses 28 and 31 he is speaking not to God, but in reply to Bildad.

"Thus, in ver. 2. I know it is so of a truth: i. e. Verily I perceive that with you the matter stands thus, As, how shall man be just with God; and again, God is omnipotent: which is granted, and enlarged upon.

"Verse 15 and 16 strongly confirm the idea of Job's irony on the maxims of his friends, thus:—Whom (God,) I am not to answer, you say, even though I were righteous; but I am to make supplication to my Judge. Nay; If I have called to God, and he hath really answered me, I am not to believe that he hath heard my voice; Because, &c. So again as to verses, 20, 21, 22; If I justify myself, then you say, My own mouth proves me wicked! If I say I am perfect; then it proves me perverse: And even supposing that I am perfect and upright; yet am I not to know it. In short, my soul loatheth my very life; i. e. I am almost tired to death with such nonsense.

"Whereas the one sole proper conclusion, is this, which therefore, I resolutely maintain: 'God destroyeth the perfect and the wicked.' And as to verses 28 and 31. the whole embarrassment attending them is removed, when we consider them as directed to Bildad; who, by the vehemence of his speech, hath shown that he would continue to insist upon Job's guilt. If I wash myself in snow-water, and make my hands ever so clean; yet wilt thou (Bildad) plunge me in the ditch, &c.

"Let us proceed, therefore, to the third and last part of this general difficulty, which arises at present from Job's confession in chap. xlii. 5. I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes. But repent of what? and why abhor himself? He was, at that instant, in the very situation he had been earnestly wishing, and often praying for: and was it possible for him not to seize that favourable moment? What he had so often wished was, that God would appear, and permit him to ask the reason for his uncommon sufferings. See chap. x. 2; xiii. 3. and 18 to 23: xix. 7; xxiii. 3—10; xxxi. 35—37, &c. And now, when God does appear, we see that Job, immediately attentive to this matter, resolves to put the question, and declares this resolution: Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak; I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me. I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee. What now becomes of Job's question? Does he put any? Far, at present, are the next words from any such meaning, at least in our present version; for there the verse expresses nothing but sorrow for sin, which sets the poem at variance with itself. It also loses all sight of the question, for which the poem had been preparing, and which Job himself declares he would now put. Add, that in the first of these two lines, the verb does not signify, I abhor myself; that the first hemistich is evidently too short; and that the second is not properly in dust, but by in, upon dust and ashes.

"It is therefore submitted to the learned, whether the restoration of two letters, which, at the same time that they lengthen the line, will remove the inconsistency, and give the very question here wanted, be not strongly and effectually recommended by the exigencies of the place. As in by di ken is properly therefore, and in by di mah (x. 2.) is wherefore, no mah was easily dropped before in ken; it not being recollected that in ken here is connected not with the preposition before it, but with the verb after it; and signifies hoc modo. The true reading, therefore, and the true sense, I humbly conceive to stand thus:

Hear, I beseech thee, and I will speak,
I will demand of thee, and declare thou unto me.
I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear;
But now mine eye seeth thee.
Wherefore (in by) am I thus become loathsome;
And scorched up, upon dust and ashes?

"See chap. vii. 5. 'My flesh is clothed with worms, and clods of dust; my skin is broken (own) and become loathsome.' See also chap. xxx. 30. 'My skin is black upon me, and my bones are burnt with heat;' and u. 8. x. 2. xvi. 15."

So far Dr. Kennicott in vindication of Job; and the reader will do justice to his learning and ingenuity. Allowing his general positions to be true, he has, in my opinion, pushed his consequences too far. Job certainly was not a grievous sinner; but a most upright man. This point is sufficiently proved: but that he accuses himself of nothing wrong, of no inward evil, is certainly not correct. He thought too highly of himself; he presumed too much on what was without: but, when God shone upon his heart, he saw that he was vile, and therefore might most properly loathe himself. There are multitudes who are decent and correct in their outward behaviour, whose hearts may be deceitful and desperately wicked. Even the Pharisees made clean the outside of the cup and platter. Job was a very righteous and upright man: but at the time in question he was not cleansed from all inward sin. This removes all contradiction from what he asserts, and from what he concedes. With this abatement, Dr. Kennicott's criticism may fairly stand. When a man sees himself in the sight of God, he sees what, by his own discernment, wisdom, and reason, he had never seen before. His mind might have been previously deeply imbued with the principles of justice, righteousness, and truth; his whole conduct regulated by them, and he be conscious to himself that he had not wickedly departed from the laws imposed on him by these principles. But when the light that maketh manifest, shines through the inmost recesses of the heart, and vibrates through the soul, then spiritual wickedness becomes evident, and the deceitfulness of the heart is discovered. That light refers every thing to the divine standard, the holiness of God; and the man's own righteousness in this comparison is found to be imperfection itself, and little short of impurity. Job appears to have been in this state; he thought himself rich, and increased in goods, and to have need of nothing; but when God shone in upon his heart, he found himself to be wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked: and he was now as ready to confess his great vileness, as he was before to assert and vindicate the unimpeachable righteousness of his conduct. Here was no contradiction. His friends attacked him on the ground of his being a bad and wicked man! This charge he repels with indignation; and dared them to the proof. They had nothing to allege but their system, and their suspicions: he who suffers, must have sinned. Job being conscious that this was false as applied to him; knowing his own innocence, boldly requires on their ground, to know Why God contended with him? God answers for himself; humbles the self-confident, yet upright man; shines into his heart, and then he sees that he is vile. When a beam of the solar light is admitted into an apartment, we see ten thousand atoms or motes dancing in that beam. These are no particles of light, nor did the light bring them there; they were there before, but there was not light sufficient to make them manifest. Just so, when the light of God visits the soul of a sincere man, who has been labouring in all his outward conduct to stand approved of God; he is astonished at his inward impurity, loathes himself, and is ready to think that many devils have suddenly entered into him. No: all the evils thou seest were there before, but thou hadst not light sufficient to make them manifest. Shall it be said after this, that the conduct of divine providence cannot be vindicated in suffering an upright man to become a butt for the malice of Satan for so long a time, and for no purpose? The greatest, the most important purposes were accomplished by this trial. Job became a much better man than he ever was before; the dispensations of God's providence were illustrated and justified; Satan's devices unmasked; patience crowned and rewarded; and the church of God greatly enriched, by having bequeathed to it the vast treasury of divine truth which is found in the BOOK OF JOB. Millbrook, Nov. 9, 1820.

END OF THE NOTES ON THE BOOK OF JOB.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

BOOK OF PSALMS.

SECTION I.—On the Names given to this Book.

THIS Book is termed in Hebrew סֵפֶר תְּהִלִּים Sepher Tehillim, which some learned men derive from תְּהִי הַל, or הָלַל halal, to move briskly, irradiate, shine; and translate, The Book of the Shinnings forth, Irradiations, Manifestations, or Displays,—namely, of Divine wisdom and love exhibited in God's dealing with His chosen people, or with particular persons, as figures, for the time being, of what should be accomplished either in the Person of Christ, or in His mystical body the church. But as halal signifies also to praise, and praise arises from a sense of gratitude, is the expression of inward joy, and was often exhibited by briek notes, sprightly music, &c., it may be well denominated The Book of Praises, as the major part of the Psalms have for their subject the praises of the Lord.

That the Psalms were sung in the Jewish service, and frequently accompanied by musical instruments, there is no doubt, for the fact is repeatedly mentioned; and hence in the most ancient translation we have of the Psalms, viz. the Septuagint, as it stands in what is called the Codex Alexandrinus, it is called Ψαλμῶν, the Psalter, which is a species of musical instrument resembling the harp, according to the account given of it by some of the ancients. From this term came the Psalterium of the Vulgate, and our word Psalter, all of which are deduced from the verb ψάλλω, to sing; as the voice no doubt always accompanied this instrument, and by it the key was preserved, and the voice sustained.

A Psalm is called in Hebrew מִזְמוֹר mizmor, from זָמַר zamar, to cut off, because in singing, each word was separated into its component syllables, each syllable answering to a note in the music.

SECTION II.—General Division of the Book.

The Hebrews divide the Psalms into five books; and this division is noticed by several of the primitive fathers. The origin of this division is not easily ascertained: but as it was considered a book of great excellence, and compared for its importance to the Pentateuch itself, it was probably divided into five books, as the law was contained in so many volumes. But where the divisions should take place the ancients are not agreed; and some of them divide into three fifties, rather than into five parts: and for all these divisions they assign certain allegorical reasons, which merit little attention.

The division of the Hebrews is as follows:—

- Book I.—From Psalm i, to Psalm xli, inclusive.
- Book II.—From Psalm xlii, to Psalm lxxii, inclusive.
- Book III.—From Psalm lxxiii, to Psalm lxxxix, inclusive.
- Book IV.—From Psalm xc, to Psalm cvi, inclusive.
- Book V.—From Psalm cvii, to Psalm cl, inclusive.

The First, Second, and Third Books end with Amen and Amen; the Fourth with Amen and Hallelujah; the Fifth with Hallelujah.

But the Psalms themselves are differently divided in all the Versions; and in many MSS. This is often very embarrassing to the reader, not only in consulting the Polyglots, but also in referring to theological works, whether of the Greek or Latin church, where the Psalms are quoted; the Greek ecclesiastical writers, following the Septuagint, and those of the Latin church, the Vulgate. I shall lay a proper Table of these variations before the reader, remarking, first, that though they differ so much in the division of the Psalms, they all agree in the number one hundred and fifty.

A Table of the differences in dividing the Psalms between the Hebrew text, and the ancient Versions; Syriac, Septuagint, Chaldee, Arabic, Ethiopic, and Vulgate.

In the above Versions, Psalms ix and x make only Psalm ix. Hence there is one Psalm lost in the reckoning as you proceed to Psalm civ and cxv, which make Psalm cxiii in all those Versions. Hence two Psalms are lost in the reckoning.

Psalm cxvi is divided at ver. 9; the Versions beginning Psalm cxv at ver. 10. Hence one Psalm is gained on the above reckoning.

Psalm cxix makes Psalm cxviii, in all the Versions.

Psalm cxlvii they divide at ver. 11, and begin Psalm cxlvii with verse 12. Here then the reckoning becomes equal, and all end alike with Psalm cl.

In the Syriac, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, there is what they call an extra-numeral Psalm, said to have been composed by David after his victory over Goliath. A translation of this will be found at the close of these Notes.

The Hebrew MSS. agree often with the Versions in uniting Psalms which the common Hebrew text has separated; and thus often support the ancient Versions. These things shall be considered in the course of the Notes.

SECTION III.—On the compilation of the Book, and the Authors to whom the Psalms have been attributed.

After having said so much on the name and ancient divisions of this important Book, it may be necessary to say something in answer to the question, "Who was the author of the Book of Psalms?" If we were to follow the popular opinion, we should rather be surprised at the question, and immediately answer, DAVID, king of Israel! That many of them were composed by him, there is no doubt; that several were written long after his time, there is internal evidence to prove; and that many of them were written even by his contemporaries, there is much reason to believe.

That the collection, as it now stands, was made long after David's death, is a general opinion among learned men; and that Ezra was the collector and compiler, is commonly believed. Indeed, all antiquity is nearly unanimous in giving Ezra the honour of collecting the different writings of Moses and the prophets; and reducing them into that form in which they are now found in the Holy Bible; and consequently the Psalms among the rest. See this subject treated at large in the Preface to Ezra, &c.

In making this collection, it does not appear that the compiler paid any attention to chronological arrangement. As he was an inspired man, he could judge of the pieces which came by Divine Inspiration, and were proper for the general edification of the church of God.

The writer of the SYROPSIS, attributed to St. Athanasius, says that the friends of King Hezekiah chose one hundred and fifty Psalms out of the number of three thousand which David had composed; and that they suppressed the rest; and says farther, that this is written in the Chronicles: but it is not found in the Chronicles which we now have, though it might have been in other Chronicles which that author had seen.

That some scriptural collections were made under the influence, and by the order of Hezekiah, we learn from Prov. xxv. l. "These are also Proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah, king of Judah, copied out." But whether these were employed on the writings of the father, as they were on those of the son, we cannot tell. The above authority is too slender to support any building of magnitude.

The only method we have of judging is, from the internal evidence afforded by several of the Psalms themselves; and from the inscriptions, which many of them bear. As far as time and facts are concerned, many of them can be traced to the days of David, and the transactions which then occurred, and in which he bore so eminent a part. But there are others in which we find no note of time, and no reference to the transactions of David's reign.

As to the inscriptions, they are of slender authority: several of them do not agree with the subject of the Psalm to which they are prefixed; and not a few of them appear to be out of their places.

In one of the prologues attributed to St. Jerom, but probably of Eusebius, at the end of Vol. II, of St. Jerom's Works by Martinay, we find a Table in which the whole Book of Psalms is dissected, showing those which have inscriptions; those which have none; and those to which the name of a particular person, as author, is prefixed. I shall give these in gross, and then in detail:—Psalms without any name prefixed, 17; Psalms with an inscription, 133;—in all 150.

These are afterwards divided into those which bear different kinds of titles, without names; and those which have names prefixed. I shall give these from the Quincuplex Psalterium, fol. Paris, 1513, as being more correct than in the edition of Jerom, by Martinay.

Psalms which have no inscription of any kind.—Psalm 1, 2, 32, 42, 70, 90, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 103, 115. 18

Psalms to which David's name is prefixed.—Psalm 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 67, 68, 69, 85, 100, 102, 107, 108, 109, 133, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144;—in all 70

Psalms attributed to Solomon.—Psalm 71, 126;—in all 2

Psalms attributed to the Sons of Corah.—Psalm 41, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 83, 84, 86;—in all 10

Psalms with the name of Asaph prefixed.—Psalm 49, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82;—in all 12

A Psalm to which the name of Heman is prefixed.—Psalm 87;— 1

A Psalm to which the name of Ethan is prefixed.—Psalm 88;— 1

A Psalm to which the name of Moses is prefixed.—Psalm 89;— 1

Psalms with titles without any name specified.—A Song or Psalm 65. A Song or Psalm 66. A Psalm or Song 91. A Prayer of the afflicted 101;—in all 4

Hallelujah Psalms.—Psalm 104, 105, 106, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 116, 117, 118, 134, 135, 145, 146, 148, 149, 150;—in all 18

Psalms or Songs of degrees.—Psalm 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132;—in all 13

Sum total of all kinds.—No inscription 18. David's 70. Solomon's 2. Sons of Corah 10. Asaph 12. Heman 1. Ethan 1. Moses 1. Psalms and Songs 3. Prayer 1. Hallelujah 18. Psalms of degrees 13. —

Grand total 150

Supposing that the persons already mentioned are the authors of those Psalms to which their names are prefixed, there are still fifty-three, which, as bearing no proper name, must be attributed to uncertain authors, though it is very probable that several of them were made by David.

The Reader will observe that as the preceding enumeration is taken from the Vulgate, consequently it is not exactly the same with ours: but the rules already given on page 117, will enable him to accommodate this division to that in our common Bibles, which is the same with that in the Hebrew text.

In order to make the preceding Table as correct as possible, I have carefully collated that in the Benedictine edition of St. Jerom's Works, with professedly the same Table in the Quincuplex Psalter, in both of which there are several errors. In the Works, though all the numbers are given at large as primus, decimus, centesimus, &c., yet the sums total, under each head, rarely agrees with the items above it. This was so notoriously the case in the Table in Jerom's Works, that I thought best to follow that in the Psalter above mentioned, which had been carefully corrected by Henry Stephens.

After all, this Table gives but small satisfaction, when we come to collate it with the Psalms in the Hebrew Text; or, as they stand in our common English Bibles. That nothing might be wanting, I have made an analysis of the whole from our present Text, collating this with the Hebrew where I was in doubt; and by this the Reader will see how greatly these Tables differ from each other; and that many psalms must now come under a different arrangement, because of their different titles, from which they had in St. Jerom's time. For instance, in St. Jerom's time there were seventy, or, as in some copies, seventy-two Psalms, that had the name of David in the inscriptions: at present there are seventy-three thus inscribed in the Hebrew Text.

SECTION IV.—Classification of the Psalms as they stand in our common Version.

Jerom gave two editions of the Latin Psalter, one from the Hebrew, and the other corrected from the Septuagint. Both of these may be found in his Works, and in the Quincuplex Psalter mentioned above. I shall now add a Table, on a similar plan with the above, taken from our present authorized Text.

A Classified Table of the Psalms taken from the Text in common use.

Psalms which have no inscription of any kind.—Psalm 1, 2, 10, 33, 43, 71, 91, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 99, 104, 105, 107, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 136, 137;—in all 24

Psalms to which David's name is prefixed.—Psalm 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 68, 70, 86, 101, 103, 108, 110, 122, 124, 131, 133, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145;—in all 73

Psalms attributed to Solomon.—Psalm 72, 127;—in all 2

Psalms attributed to the Sons of Corah.—Psalm 42, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 84, 85, 87;—in all 10

Grand total 150

After all that has been done to assign each Psalm to its author, there are few of which we can say, positively, these were made by David.

Most commentators, as well as historians, of the life and reign of David, have taken great pains to throw some light upon this subject, particularly Calmet, Delaney, Chandler, and Venema. The former has made seven divisions of them, to ascertain the order of time in which they were written. I shall adopt this plan, and accommodate it to the Psalms as they stand in our present authorized Version, after simply remarking that there are several Psalms which appear to be ill-divided, some making two or three, which, in all probability, made originally but one; and others, which formerly made two or more, now improperly connected. This has been already noticed in comparing the difference of the numeration between the Versions and the Hebrew Text. See p. 117; see also at the end of the following Table.

SECTION V.—Chronological Arrangement of the Book of Psalms.

I. PSALMS which contain no Note or Indication of the Time when written.

- Psalm i. Blessed is the man, &c. This is generally considered as a Preface to the whole Book; supposed by some to have been written by David: but others attribute it to Ezra, who collected the Book of Psalms.

For the reasons of the above chronological arrangement, the reader may refer to the Notes; and see also another table, p. 123. This arrangement is better than none; and I hope will in the main be found as correct as can reasonably be expected, and a great help to a proper understanding of the Psalms.

SECTION VI.—General observations on the great difference of character between the Hebrew poets, and those of Greece and Italy.

The Hebrew Poet is the most ancient Collection of Poems in the world; and was composed long before those in which ancient Greece and Rome have gloried. Among all the heathen nations, Greeks had the honour of producing, not only the first, but also the most sublime of poets: but the subjects, on which they employed their talents had, in general, but little tendency to meliorate the moral condition of men. Their subjects were either a fabulous theology, a false and ridiculous religion, chimerical war, absurd heroism; impure love, agriculture, national sports, or hymns to honour of gods more corrupt than the most profligate of men. Their writings served only to render vice amiable, to honour superstition, to favour the most dangerous and most degrading passions of man, such as impure love, ambition, pride, and impiety. What is said of the Greek poets, may be spoken with equal truth of their successors and imitators, the Latin poets; out of the whole of whose writings it would be difficult to extract even the common maxims of a decent morality. I am well aware that fine sentiments, strong and terse expressions, and luminous thoughts, may be found in different parts of their writings: but, compared with what is of a different kind, it may be well said of these,

"Apparet tant splendor in gurgite vasto."

The Hebrew poets, on the contrary, justly boast the highest antiquity: they were men inspired of God, holy in their lives, pure in their hearts, labouring for the good of mankind; proclaiming, by their incomparable compositions, the infinite perfections, attributes, and unity of the Divine nature; laying down and illustrating the purest rules of the most refined morality, and the most exalted piety. God, His attributes, His works; and the religion which He has given to men, were the grand subjects of their divinely inspired muse. By their wonderful art, they not only embellished the history of their own people, because connected intimately with the history of God's providence; but they also, by the light of the Spirit of God that was within them, foretold future events of the most unlikely occurrence, at the distance of many hundreds of years; with such exact circumstantiality, as has been the wonder and astonishment of considerate minds in all succeeding generations: a fact which, taken in its connexion with the holiness and sublimity of their doctrine; the grandeur, boldness, and truth of their imagery; demonstrate minds under the immediate inspiration of that God whose nature is ineffable, who exists in all points of time, and whose wisdom is infinite.

Some of the greatest, both of the Greek and Roman poets, were men obscure in their birth, desperate in their fortune, and of profligate manners; a fact at once proved both by their history, and by their works. But the Hebrew poets were among the greatest men of their nation; and among them were found kings of the highest character, judges of the greatest integrity, heroes the most renowned, and lawgivers whose fame has reached every nation of the earth. By means of these men, the lamp of true religion has been lighted in the earth; and wherever there is a ray of truth among the sons of men, it is an emanation immediately taken, or indirectly borrowed, from the prophets, poets, and statesmen of the sons of Jacob.

The chief of the Hebrew poets were Moses, David, Solomon, Job, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and most of the minor prophets. Solomon himself wrote one thousand and five hymns and poems: yet we know not that we have any of his poetical works, except the Canticles; though these may be some Psalms of his composition in the Book before us.

Several of the Fathers, both Greek and Latin, maintain that David is the author of the whole Book of Psalms. And although they allow that several of them speak of times most obviously posterior to the days of David, yet they assert that he is the author of these also, and that he spoke of those events by the Spirit of Prophecy! The Rabbins assert that the Book of Psalms was composed by ten different authors, viz. Adam, Melchisedek, Abraham, Moses, the Sons of Korah, David, Solomon, Asaph, Jeduthun, and Etham. But this opinion is slenderly supported.

SECTION VII.—Observations on the manner in which several of the Psalms appear to have been composed.

That there were several authors, and that the Psalms were composed at different times, is sufficiently evident from the compositions themselves. The occasions also on which they were written, are frequently pointed out by their contents; and these things have been kept constantly in view, in the construction of the preceding Table.

There is a difficulty which should not be overlooked, and with which almost every reader is puzzled, viz. How is it that in the same Psalm we find so many different states of mind and circumstances pointed out? These could not be the experience of one and the same person, at the same time. The answer that is commonly given is this. Such Psalms were composed after the full termination of the events which they celebrate. For instance, David had fallen into distress; his sorrows became multiplied; he was filled with torturing fears. He called earnestly on the Lord for help; he was heard after a long night and fight of afflictions; and he most feelingly, and sublimely, praises God for his deliverance. Now all these different circumstances he describes as if then existing, though considerably distant in point of time; beginning the Psalm with the language of the deepest penitential distress, almost bordering on despair; and ending it with the strongest confidence in God, and thanksgiving for his deliverance. The xxxth Psalm is a case in point; to the notes on which the reader is referred. Now, it is possible that the Psalmist, having obtained deliverance from sore and oppressive evils, might sit down to compose a hymn of thanksgiving to celebrate God's mercies; and, in order to do this the more effectually, might describe the different circumstances enumerated above, as if he were then passing through them.

But I own that this, to me, is not a satisfactory solution. I rather suppose that such Psalms, and perhaps most of those called acrostich, were composed from diaries or memoranda; and in forming a Psalm, materials out of different days, having little congruity with each other as to the time in which they happened, would necessarily enter into the composition. This supposition will, in my opinion, account for all anomalies of this kind, which we perceive in the Book of Psalms.

On this rule we can account for apparent contradictions in several Psalms; taken as metrical compositions formed from memoranda of religious experience for different days, they may well express different states; as the state of the author's mind was not likely to be precisely the same in all those times on which he made the memoranda. I can illustrate what I mean by the following extract from the Spiritual Diary of Doctor John Ruttly:—

Seventh month, 1768, 3d day.—Amidst our palpable desolations, matter of some comfort appeared. An inward voice of thanksgiving to God for the gift of His Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, to us Gentiles; the mystery hid from ages, adorable, incomprehensible, unutterable, and unmerited; and if the sweet singer of Israel had occasion to say, "Awake, sackbut, psaltery and harp, and praise the Lord;" so had I, so had we, so had every one whose eyes the god of this world had not blinded.

My native fierceness seemed, in the clear vision, to be the chief sin of my bosom, not yet wholly subdued: Good Lord, and God of love, subdue it!

7. Soul awake! the everlasting antitypal sabbath I trust is at hand, the end of all labours, sufferings, and sins: see and prepare for it, by letting the earth now enjoy its sabbaths, even in a gradual relaxation and holy carelessness in all the special concerns of flesh and blood.

8. Protracted my vesper beyond the usual time, by reason of a sweet inspired song of thanksgiving to a gracious and ever adorable Providence.

10. Thy work is not yet done: the war in the members is still felt. Patience hath not yet had its perfect work. O my poverty! Lord help me!

11. In the midst of various discouragements I was induced, even from observation, to believe that our late labour hath not been wholly in vain: yea, on the 15th and 20th, I was a witness to some effects thereof.

19. A silent meeting with a loaded atmosphere: great heaviness, and the holy fire almost but not quite out.

22. I am a wonder of God's mercy and bounty. He is, as it were, renewing my youth; and giving, in old age, to enjoy and sweetly apply the labours of my youth, whilst multitudes of my equals and associates are dropping into eternity, or else various ways distressed. Awake, soul, and work; for the eleventh hour is come!

23. In a religious view, suffering is my portion. Lord, sustain!

25. A sweet song of thanksgiving.

31. The tenour of the drawing or proper steerage this day was, to keep carefully the holy medium between a criminal remissness in temporals on the one hand, and an anxiety about them on the other. Spiritual Diary, vol. ii. p. 235.

One sentence excepted, which is not relevant, here are the whole memoranda of this eminent man's religious experience for one month, in which we find the following states distinctly marked:

1. Mourning over the small progress of religion in the place where he dwelt, yet receiving encouragement from other quarters, day 3d. 2. Exulting in God for redemption by Christ Jesus, ditto. 3. Humbled on a view of his natural fierceness of spirit, ditto. 4. Rejoicing at the prospect of being soon released from earth, day 7. 5. Thanksgiving for providential blessings, day 8. 6. Fighting against inward sin, day 10. 7. Encouraged in the performance of his duty, days 11, 15, 20. 8. Mourning over the heavenly flame, almost extinct, day 19. 9. Triumphant in a restoration of mental and bodily vigour, day 22. 10. Complaining of his suffering lot, day 23. 11. Happy in his soul, and giving praise to God, day 25. 12. Forming holy resolutions for the government of his future life, day 31.

Let us compare this with Psalm xxx, to which I have already referred in this Introduction.

The Psalm begins with I will extol thee, O Lord. And we find in it seven different states distinctly marked:—

1. He had been in great distress, and nearly overwhelmed by his enemies; implied in verse the first. 2. He extols God for having lifted him up, and preserved him from his adversaries, ver. 1, 3. 3. He is brought into great prosperity, trusts in what he had received, and forgets to depend wholly on the Lord, ver. 4—6. 4. The Lord hides His face from him, and he is brought into great distress, ver. 7. Thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled. 5. He makes earnest prayer and supplication, and pleads strongly with the Lord, ver. 8—10. 6. He is restored to the Divine favour, and filled with joy, ver. 11. 7. He purposes to glory in God alone, and trust in Him for ever, ver. 12.

Now it is impossible that David could have been in all these states when he penned this Psalm: suppose them to be the memoranda taken from one week's journal, and dressed in this poetic form; for it is possible that he might have passed through all these states in one week. Let us examine the month's experience, extracted from the Diary of Dr. Ruttly; and let an able hand clothe that in a poetic dress; and we shall find it as apparently contradictory as the xxxth Psalm. Suppose both formed from memoranda of a diary, and all is plain.

I have spent the more time on this subject, because it is of great importance to have some general rule by which we may account for the apparent inconsistencies often occurring in the same Psalm.

There is another class of Psalms to which this mode of interpretation is not applicable. I mean those composed in the dialogue form. There are several of this kind; and, as the several interlocutors are not distinguished, it requires considerable attention to find out the different parts which belong to the speakers. I shall give an example of this class.

The ninety-first Psalm contains, in general, a description of the happiness of those who trust in the Lord: but is evidently divided among three speakers; the Psalmist; another whom we may call his friend; and, thirdly, Jehovah. I shall endeavour to assign to each his part.

The Psalmist begins with asserting, in general terms, the happiness of the godly. He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty, ver. 1.

His friend states his own experience, and replies, I will say of the Lord he is my refuge, &c. ver. 2.

The Psalmist answers, Surely he shall deliver thee, &c. ver. 3. And goes on to enumerate the great privileges of the godly, to ver. 8.

The friend then resumes, and shows how blessed the Psalmist must be who has an interest in the same God, and enters into a detail of his privileges, ver. 9—13.

This speech concluded, Jehovah speaks, confirms what was said concerning the blessedness of the godly; and to such persons He promises the highest spiritual honours, long life, and endless salvation, ver. 14—16.

Other Psalms of this class, such as the xth and xxxth, &c., will be particularly pointed out in the course of the Notes on this subject, see also p. 124.

SECTION VIII.—On the use made of the Psalms in the New Testament.

Some have imagined that the Book of Psalms is to be understood mystically, in reference to the Christian system; and, indeed, on this plan they have been interpreted and applied by many fathers, both ancient and modern. To this opinion I cannot subscribe: and therefore cannot frame a commentary in this way. That several of them are quoted, both by our Lord and His apostles, we have the fullest proof; and where they have shown the way, we may safely follow. Bishop Horne, who contends for the spiritual sense of this Book, gives an interesting view of the principal passages that have been quoted in the New Testament; and from his Preface I shall select a few paragraphs on this part of the subject:—"No sooner," says he, "have we opened the Book, than the second Psalm presents itself, to all appearance, as an inauguration hymn composed by David, the anointed of Jehovah; when by Him crowned with victory, and placed triumphant on the sacred hill of Zion. But let us turn to Acts iv, 25, and there we find the apostles with one voice declaring the Psalm to be descriptive of the exaltation of Jesus Christ, and of the opposition raised against His gospel, both by Jew and Gentile.

"In the eighth Psalm we imagine the writer to be setting forth the pre-eminence of man in general above the rest of the creation: but by Heb. ii, 6, we are informed that the supremacy conferred on the second Adam, the Man Christ Jesus, over all things in heaven and earth, is the subject there treated of.

"St. Peter stands up, Acts ii, 25, and preaches the resurrection of Jesus from the latter part of the sixteenth Psalm; and, lo, three thousand souls are converted by the sermon.

"Of the eighteenth Psalm we are told in the course of the Sacred History, 2 Sam. xxii, that 'David spake unto the Lord the words of this song in the day that the Lord had delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul:' yet, in Rom. xv, 9, the ninth verse of that Psalm is adduced as a proof that the Gentiles should glorify God for his mercy in Christ Jesus: as it is written, "For this cause I will confess to thee among the Gentiles, and sing unto thy name."

"In the nineteenth Psalm David seems to be speaking of the material heavens and their operations only, when he says, 'Their sound is gone out into all the earth, and their words into the ends of the world.' But St. Paul, Rom. x, 18, quotes the passage to show that the Gospel had been universally published by the Apostles.

"The twenty-second Psalm Christ appropriated to Himself, by beginning it in the midst of His sufferings on the cross, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' Three other verses of it are in the New Testament applied to Him; and the words of the eighth verse were actually used by the chief priests when they reviled Him: 'He trusted in God,' &c. Matt. xxvii, 43.

"When David says, in the fortieth Psalm, 'Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire—Lo, I come—to do thy will' we might suppose him only to declare, in his own person, that obedience is better than sacrifice: but from Heb. x, 5, we learn that Messiah in that place speaks of His advent in the flesh to abolish the legal sacrifices, and to do away sin by the oblation of Himself, once for all.

"That tender and pathetic complaint in the forty-first Psalm, 'Mine own familiar friend, in whom I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me,' undoubtedly might be, and probably was, originally uttered by David upon the revolt of his old friend and counsellor, Ahithophel, to the party of his rebellious son Absalom. But we are certain from John xiii, 18, that this Scripture was fulfilled when Christ was betrayed by His apostate disciple:—'I speak not of you all; I know whom I have chosen: but that the Scripture may be fulfilled, He that eateth bread with me hath lifted up his heel against me.'

"The forty-fourth Psalm we must suppose to have been written on occasion of a persecution under which the church at that time laboured: but a verse of it is cited, Rom. viii, 36, as expressive of what Christians were to suffer on their blessed Master's account; 'As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter.'

"A quotation from the forty-fifth Psalm in Heb. i, 3, certifies us that the whole is addressed to the Son of God, and therefore celebrates His spiritual union with the church, and the happy fruits of it.

"The sixty-eighth Psalm, though apparently conversant about Israelitish victories, the translation of the ark to Zion, and the services of the tabernacle; yet does, under those figures, treat of Christ's resurrection; His going up on high, leading captivity captive, pouring out the gifts of the Spirit, erecting His church in the world, and enlarging it by the accession of the nations to the faith; as will be evident to any one who considers the force and consequence of the apostle's citation from it, Ephes. iv, 7, 8: 'Unto every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. Wherefore he saith, when he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men.'

"The sixty-ninth Psalm is five times referred to in the Gospels, as being uttered by the prophet in the Person of the Messiah. The imprecations, or rather predictions at the latter end of it, are applied, Rom. xi, 9, 10, to the Jews; and to Judas, Acts i, 20, where the hundred and ninth Psalm is also cited as prophetic of the sore judgments which should befall that arch-traitor, and the wretched nation of which he was an epitome.

"St. Matthew, informing us, ch. xiii, 35, that Jesus spake to the multitude in parables, gives it as one reason why He did so, 'That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet—(Psalm lxxviii, 2) I will utter things which have been kept secret since the foundation of the world.'

"The seventy-first Psalm was applied by the tempter to the Messiah; nor did our Lord object to the application, but only to the false inference which his adversary suggested from it. Matt. iv, 6, 7.

"The ninety-fifth Psalm is explained at large in Heb. iii, and iv, as relative to the state and trial of Christians in the world, and to their attainment of the heavenly rest.

"The hundred and tenth Psalm is cited by Christ Himself, Matt. xxii, 44, as treating of His exaltation, kingdom, and priesthood.

"The hundred and seventeenth Psalm, consisting only of two verses, is employed, Rom. xv, 11, to prove that the Gentiles were one day to praise God for the mercies of redemption.

"The twenty-second verse of the hundred and eighteenth Psalm, 'The stone which the builders refused,' &c., is quoted six different times as spoken of our Saviour. See Matt. xxi, 42. Mark xii, 10. Luke xx, 17. Acts iv, 11.

"And lastly, 'the fruit of David's body,' which God is said in the hundred and thirty-second Psalm to have promised that He would place upon His throne, is asserted Acts ii, 30, to be 'Jesus Christ.' Bp. Horne on the Psalms. Pref. p. xi.

That several of the above quotations are directly prophetic, and were intended to announce and describe the Redeemer of the world, and the Gospel state, there is not the slightest reason to doubt: that others of them are accommodated to the above subjects, their own historical meaning being different, may be innocently credited: but let it always be remembered, that these accommodations are made by the same Spirit by which the Psalms were originally given. That this Spirit has a right to extend His own meaning, and adapt His own words to subjects, transactions, and times, to which, from similarity of circumstances, they may be applicable. Many passages of the Old Testament seem to be thus quoted in the New; and often the words a little altered, and the meaning extended, to make them suitable to existing circumstances. Every writer is at perfect liberty thus to employ his own words, which he might have already used on very different occasions. I need not tell the learned Reader that the finest, as well as the oldest, of the heathen writers, Homer, is full of quotations from himself; and Virgil, his imitator, has not unfrequently followed his steps. But still there is a great and weighty difference as the subject respects the Holy Spirit: to his infinite wisdom and knowledge all times and circumstances, whether past or future, are always laid open; and, as it is one of the perfections of the work of God to produce the greatest and most numerous effects by the fewest and simplest means, so it is one of the perfections of the Holy Scriptures to represent things that are not, as though they were; and to make the facts which then existed the representatives of those which should afterwards take place. Thus, the Holy Scriptures contain an infinity of meaning: the Old Testament, as it were, included and referred to in the New; as the New refers back to the Old, by which it was adumbrated; and refers forward not only to all times and great occurrences during this mortal state, but also to the endless states of the just and the unjust in the eternal world.

SECTION IX.—On the subject matter of the Psalms, and the method of applying them.

The late learned Bishop Horsley has some excellent observations on this method of applying the Psalms. "It is true," says he, "that many of the Psalms are commemorative of the miraculous interpositions of God in behalf of the chosen people; for, indeed, the history of the Jews is a fundamental part of revealed religion. Many were probably composed upon the occasion of remarkable passages in David's life,—his dangers, his afflictions, his deliverances. (But of those which relate to the public history of the natural Israel there are few in which the fortunes of the mystical Israel, the Christian church, are not adumbrated; and of those which allude to the life of David, there are none in which the Son of David is not the principal and immediate subject.

"David's complaints against his enemies are Messiah's complaints, first, of the unbelieving Jews, then of the heathen persecutors and the apostate faction in the latter ages. David's afflictions are the Messiah's sufferings;—David's penitential supplications are the supplications of Messiah in agony;—David's songs of triumph and thanksgiving are Messiah's songs of triumph and thanksgiving for His victory over sin, and death, and hell. In a word, there is not a page of this Book of Psalms in which the pious Reader will not find his Saviour, if he read with a view of finding Him: and it was but a just encomium of it (the Book of Psalms) that came from the pen of one of the early Fathers, that 'it is a complete system of divinity for the use and edification of the common people of the Christian church.'"—Bp. Horsley's Preface to the Book of Psalms, p. x.

Of the compilation of this Book the above learned writer speaks thus:—"The Psalms appear to be compositions of various authors, in various ages; some much more ancient than the time of king David, some of a much later age. Of many, David himself was undoubtedly the author: and that those of his composition were prophetic, we have David's own authority: for thus king David at the close of his life describes himself and his sacred Songs:—David the son of Jesse said, and the man who was raised upon high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet Psalmist of Israel, said, The Spirit of Jehovah spake by me, and his word was in my tongue. It was the word, therefore, of Jehovah's Spirit which was uttered by David's tongue.

"The Psalms are all Poems of the LYRIC kind; that is, adapted to music, but with great variety in the style of composition. Some are simply ODES, an Ode is a dignified sort of song, narrative of the facts either of public lustury or private life, in a highly adorned and figurative style. Some are of the kind called Elegiac, which are pathetic compositions upon mournful subjects. Some are Æthic, delivering grave maxims of life or the precepts of religion in solemn, but for the most part, simple strains. Some are Ænigmatic, delivering the doctrines of religion in ænigmas contrived to strike the imagination forcibly, and yet easy to be understood. In all these the author delivers the whole matter in his own person. But a very great, I believe the far greater, part are a sort of DRAMATIC ODE, consisting of dialogues between persons sustaining certain characters. In these dialogue Psalms, the persons are frequently the Psalmist himself, or the chorus of priests and Levites, or the leader of the Levitical band, opening the ode with a poem, declarative of the subject, and very often closing the whole with a solemn admonition drawn from what the other persons say. The other persons are Jehovah, sometimes as one, sometimes as another of the Three Persons; CHRIST in His incarnate state, sometimes before, sometimes after, His resurrection; the human soul of Christ as distinguished from the Divine essence. Christ, in His incarnate state, is personated sometimes as a Priest, sometimes as a King, sometimes as a Conqueror. The resemblance is very remarkable between this Conqueror in the Book of Psalms, and the Warrior on the white horse in the Book of Revelation, who goes forth with a crown on His head, and a bow in His hand, conquering and to conquer. And the conquest in the Psalms is followed, like the conquest in the Revelation, by the marriage of the Conqueror. These are circumstances of similitude which, to any one versed in the prophetic style, prove beyond a doubt that the mystical Conqueror is the same Personage in both." Ibid. p. xiv. On this subject see before.

There is an opinion relative to the construction of this Book, which, though to myself it appears as fanciful as it is singular, yet deserves to be mentioned, especially as so great a man as Dr. Horsley supposes, that if it were kept in view, it would conduce much to a right understanding of the Book.

The whole collection of Psalms forms a sort of HEROIC TRAGEDY. The redemption of man, and the destruction of Satan, is the FLOR. The persons of the drama are the Persons of the GODHEAD:—Christ united to one of them: Satan, Judas, the apostate Jews, the heathen persecutors, the apostates of latter times. The ATTENDANTS,—believers, unbelievers, angels. The SCENES,—heaven, earth, hell. The TIME of the Action,—from the Fall to the final overthrow of the apostate faction, and the general judgment.

SECTION X.—On the particular subject and use of each Psalm.

I have already given different Tables relative to the division, chronological arrangement, (see p. 120, &c.) and supposed authors and occasions on which they were composed. There have been some others made, in which they have been classed according to their subjects, and their uses for the godly and the Christian church. The most circumstantial that I have seen is that in the Quintuplex Psalterium, printed in 1503, already noticed in the beginning of this Introduction. The following, from Bishop Horsley, may be probably of most general use:—

SECTION XI.—On the general use of the Psalms in the Christian Church.

That our blessed Lord used the Book of the Psalms, as He did other books of Scripture, and quoted from it, we have already seen; this stamps it with the highest authority; and that He and His disciples used it as a book of devotion, we learn from their singing the Hallel at His last supper, which we know was composed of Psalms cxiii, cxiv, cxv, cxvi, and cxvii, see Matt. xxvi, 30, and the Notes there; and that they were used by the Christian church from the earliest times in devotional exercises, especially in praising God, we have the most ample proof. At first what was termed singing was no more than a recitative or solemn mode of reading or repeating; which in the Jewish church was accompanied by instruments of music, of the nature of which we know nothing. The Christian religion which delights in simplicity, while it retained the Psalms as a Book divinely inspired, and a Book of devotion, omitted the instrumental music, which however, in after times, with other corruptions, crept into the church; and is continued in many places, with small benefit to the godly, and little edification to the multitude. What good there might have been derived from it has been lost in consequence of the improper persons who generally compose what is commonly called the choir of singers. Those whose peculiar office it is to direct and lead that part of the Divine worship which consists in singing the high praises of God, should have clean hands, and pure hearts. To see this part of public worship performed by unthinking, if not profligate youths of both sexes, fills the serious with pain, and the ungodly with contempt. He who sings not with the spirit as well as the understanding, offers a sacrifice to God as acceptable as the dog's head and swine's blood would have been under the Mosaic law.

I shall not enter into the question whether the Psalms of David, or hymns formed on New Testament subjects, be the most proper for Christian congregations; both I think may be profitably used. Nor will I take up the controversy relative to the adapting the Psalms to express an evangelical meaning in every place. I need only give my opinion, that I consider this a difficult, if not a dangerous work. Where the Psalms evidently relate to the gospel dispensation, the matter is plain; there it is proper and necessary to give them their full direction and meaning: but to turn those in this way, that evidently have no such reference, I consider a temerarious task, and wholly unwarrantable.

But the most difficult task is, throwing them into a modern poetic form, especially into metre; as, in such cases, many things are introduced for the sake of the poetry, and the final jingle, which were never spoken by the inspired penmen; and it is an awful thing to add to or detract from the word of God, either in poetry, or prose. And how frequently this is done in most metrical Versions of the Psalms, need not be pointed out here. Perhaps one of the most faultless in this respect is an almost obsolete one in our own language, viz. that by Sternhold and Hopkins.^{*} Because of its uncouth form, this version has been unjustly vilified; while others, by far its inferiors, have been as unreasonably extolled. The authors of this Version, for it is taken directly from the Hebrew Text, have sacrificed every thing to the literal sense and meaning. The others, and especially that of Tate and Brady, which is no version from the original, sacrifice often the literal and true sense to sound and smoothness of numbers; in which, however, they are not always successful.

I was glad to meet with the following correct statements on this point, in Bishop Horsley's Preface to the Psalms. Speaking of the edification which plain Christians may receive from this Divine Book, which it is calculated to convey, he observes "they may receive much assistance from a work, which the ignorance of modern refinement would take out of their hands. I speak of the old singing Psalms, the metrical version of Sternhold and Hopkins. This is not, what I believe it is now generally supposed to be, nothing better than an awkward versification of a former English translation: it is an original translation from the Hebrew Text, earlier by many years than the prose translation in the Bible; and of all that are in any degree paraphrastic, as all in verse in some degree must be, it is the best and most exact we have to put into the hands of the common people. The authors of this Version considered the verse merely as a contrivance to assist the memory. They were little studious of the harmony of their numbers, or the elegance of their diction: but they were solicitous to give the full and precise sense of the Sacred Text, according to the best of their judgment; and their judgment, with the exception of some few passages, was very good; and at the same time that they adhered scrupulously to the letter, they contrived to express it in such terms as, like the original, might point clearly to the spiritual meaning.

"It was a change much for the worse when the pedantry of pretenders to taste in literary composition thrust out this excellent translation from our churches, to make room for what still goes by the name of the New Version, that of Tate and Brady, which in many places where the Old Version is just, accurate and dignified by its simplicity, is careless and inadequate; and, in the poverty and littleness of its style, contemptible. The innovation, when it was first attempted, was opposed, though in the end unsuccessfully, by the soundest divines, the most accomplished scholars, and the men of the truest taste at that time in the seat of authority in the Church of England." Pr. p. xi.

I shall add only one word to what this very learned and sound divine has said. I can sing almost every Psalm in the Version of Sternhold and Hopkins, as the Psalms of David; I can sing those of the New Version, as the Psalms of Dr. Brady and Nahum Tate. Either let one equally literal, with a better versification be made; or restore to the people that form of sound words of which they have too long been deprived. But to serve the purposes of devotion, we want a better translation of the Psalms; a translation in which the hemistich, or Hebrew poetic form, shall be carefully preserved; and with a very few expletives (which should be distinguished by italics, or otherwise, in the printing, to bring the lines into those forms to which our versification, or musical measures may extend,) we might sing the whole, without singing any thing in sense or meaning which was not David's. Indeed a species of recitative singing would be the most proper for these sacred Odes; as it would answer much better the solemn purposes of devotion, than the great mass of those tunes which are commonly employed in church music; in which the style of singing is rarely adapted to the grand and melting compositions of the sweet singer of Israel. Let the plan be copied which is adopted from the Hebrew MSS. in Dr. Kennicott's edition; let them be translated line for line, as Dr. Lowth has done his Version of Isaiah; let a dignified recitative music be adapted to the words; attend to metre, and be regardless of rhyme; and then the Psalms will be a mighty help to devotion, and truly religious people will sing with the spirit, and the understanding also. Were a Version of this kind made and substituted for that most inaccurate Version in the Prayer Book, a stumbling block would be taken out of the way of some sincere minds, who are pained to find not only important differences, but even contradictions, between the Psalms which they read in their authorized Version, and those which are used in the public service of the church.

As many persons are greatly at a loss to account for the strange varieties between these two Versions, (that in the Bible, and that in the Prayer Book,) it may be necessary to give them some information on this head. Properly speaking, the Psalms in the Prayer Book, called the Reading Psalms, are rather a paraphrase than a version. It was never taken immediately from the Hebrew, with which it disagrees in places innumerable. In the main it follows the Septuagint and the Vulgate; but often differs from them, even where they differ from the Hebrew; and, yet, without following the latter. And there are many words, turns of thought, and varieties of mood, tense, and person in it, which do not appear in any of the above.

^{*} This version of the Psalms in metre, was made about A. D. 1530. The chief persons employed were, Thomas Sternhold, Esq. of Hampshire, of the Privy Chamber to King Edward VI., who translated thirty-seven select Psalms, to which his name was prefixed. John Hopkins, of whom I can learn nothing certain; who translated the greater part. Robert Wood, and some others, who were probably a sort of assistants to the above.

NOTES ON PSALM I.

Verse 1. Blessed is the man] This Psalm has no title; and has been generally considered, but without especial reason, as a preface or introduction to the whole Book.

The word ^{אשר} ashrey, which we translate blessed, is properly in the plural form, blessednesses; or may be considered as an exclamation produced by contemplating the state of the man who has taken God for his portion, O, the blessednesses of the man! And the word ^{הוא} ha-ish, is emphatic:—THAT man; that one among a thousand who lives for the accomplishment of the end for which God created him. 1. God made man for happiness. 2. Every man feels a desire to be happy. 3. All human beings abhor misery. 4. Happiness is the grand object of pursuit among all men. 5. But so perverted is the human heart, that it seeks happiness where it cannot be found; and in things which are naturally and morally unfit to communicate it. 6. The true way of obtaining it is here laid down.

That walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly] There is a double CLIMAX in this verse, which it will be proper to note:—

1. There are here three characters, each exceeding the other in sinfulness. 1. THE UNGODLY, ^{רשע} reshayim, from ^{רש} rashd, to be unjust: rendering to none his due; withholding from God, society, and himself, what belongs to each. Ungodly; he who has not God in him; who is without God in the world. 2. SINNERS, ^{חטאי} chatayim, from ^{חטא} chata, to miss the mark, to pass over the prohibited limits; to transgress. This man not only does no good; but he does evil. The former was without God, but not desperately wicked. The latter adds, outward transgression to the sinfulness of his heart. 3. SCORNFUL, ^{צחי} letsim, from ^{צח} latsah, to mock, deride. He who has no religion; lives in the open breach of God's laws; and turns revelation, the immortality of the soul, and the existence of an invisible world, into ridicule. He is at least a Deist; and endeavours to dissolve, as much as he can, the bonds of moral obligation in civil society. As the sinner exceeds the ungodly; so the scornful exceeds both.

The second climax is found in the words, 1. Walk. 2. Stand. 3. Sit. Which mark three different degrees of evil in the conduct of those persons.

Observe, 1. The ungodly man; one uninfluenced by God. 2. The sinner; who adds to ungodliness, transgression. 3. The scornful; the Deist, Atheist, &c. who make a mock of every thing sacred. The ungodly man walks; the sinner stands; and the scornful man sits down, in the way of iniquity.

Mark certain circumstances of their differing characters and conduct. 1. The ungodly man has his counsel. 2. The sinner has his way; and, 3. The scornful has his seat.

The ungodly man is unconcerned about religion; he is neither zealous for his own salvation, nor for that of others; and he counsels and advises those with whom he converses, to "adopt his plan, and not trouble themselves about praying, reading, repentance," &c. &c. There is no need for such things; live an honest life, make no fuss about religion, and you will fare well enough at last. Now, blessed is the man who walks not in this man's counsel; who does not come into his measures, nor act according to his plan.

in the way of sinners, ^d nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful.

2 But ^e his delight is in the law of the LORD; and in his law doth he meditate day and night.

f Josh. 1. 6. Psal. 118. 1, 97.—g Jer. 17. 8. Ezek. 47. 12.—h Heb. fedd.—i Gen. 28. 2, 21. Psal. 128. 2. Isai. 2. 10.

The sinner has his particular way of transgressing; one is a drunkard, another dishonest, another unclean. Few are given to every species of vice. There are many covetous men who abhor drunkenness; many drunkards who abhor covetousness; and so of others; for each has his easily besetting sin: therefore, says the prophet, let the wicked forsake HIS WAY. Now, blessed is he who stands not in such a man's way.

The scornful has brought, in reference to himself, all religion and moral feeling to an end. He has sat down, is utterly confirmed in impiety; and makes a mock at sin. His conscience is seared; and he is a believer in all unbelief. Now, blessed is the man who sits not down in his seat.

See the correspondent relations in this account. 1. He who walks according to the counsel of the ungodly will soon 2. Stand to look on the way of sinners; and thus, being off his guard, he will soon be a partaker in their evil deeds. 3. He who has abandoned himself to transgression will, in all probability, soon become hardened by the deceitfulness of sin; and sit down with the scornful, and endeavour to turn religion into ridicule.

The last correspondency we find is:—1. The seat answers to the sitting of the scornful. 2. The way answers to the standing of the sinner; and, 3. The counsel answers to the walking of the ungodly.

The great lesson to be learned from the whole is, sin is progressive: one evil propensity or act leads to another. He who acts by bad counsel, may soon do evil deeds; and he who abandons himself to evil doings, may end his life in total apostasy from God. When lust is conceived, it brings forth sin; and when sin is finished, it brings forth death. Solomon, the son of David, adds a profitable advice to those words of his father:—Enter not into the path of the wicked, and go not in the way of evil men; avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away. Prov. iv. 14, 15.

As the blessedness of the man is great who avoids the ways and the workers of iniquity; so his wretchedness is great who acts on the contrary: to him we must reverse the words of David, CURSED is the man who walketh in the counsel of the ungodly; who standeth in the way of sinners; and who sitteth in the seat of the scornful. Let him that readeth understand.

Verse 2. But his delight is in the law of the Lord] ^{אשר} shephetso, his will, desire, affection, every motive in his heart, and every moving principle in his soul, are on the side of God, and His truth. He takes up the law of the Lord as the rule of his life: he brings all his actions and affections to this holy standard. He looketh into the perfect law of liberty; and is not a forgetful hearer, but a doer of the work; and is therefore blessed in his deed. He not only reads to gain knowledge from the Divine oracles; but he meditates on what he has read, feeds on it; and thus, receiving the sincere milk of the word, he grows thereby unto eternal life. This is not an occasional study to him; it is his work day and night. As his heart is in it, the employment must be frequent, and the disposition to it perpetual.

Verse 3. Like a tree planted] Not like one growing wild, however strong or luxuriant it may appear; but one that has been carefully cultivated; and for the proper

4 The ungodly are not so: but are like the chaff which the wind driveth away.

5 Therefore the ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor sinners in the congregation of the righteous.

6 For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous: but the way of the ungodly shall perish.

PSALM II.

This Psalm treats of the oppression raised, both by Jew and Gentile, against the Kingdom of Christ, 1-3. Christ's victory, and the confusion of His enemies, 4. The promulgation of the gospel after His resurrection, 7-8. A call to all the potentates and judges of the earth to accept it, because of the destruction that shall fall on those who reject it, 10-12.

growth of which all the advantages of soil and situation have been chosen. If a child be brought up in the discipline and admonition of the Lord, we have both reason and revelation to encourage us to expect a godly and useful life. Where religious education is neglected,—alas, what fruits of righteousness can be expected! An uncultivated soul is like an uncultivated field, all overgrown with briars, thorns, and thistles.

By the rivers of water] בְּנְהַרְיַם palyey-mayim, the streams or divisions of the waters. Alluding to the custom of irrigation in the Eastern countries, where streams are conducted from a canal or river to different parts of the ground; and turned off or on, at pleasure; the person having no more to do than by his foot turn a sod from the side of one stream, to cause it to share its waters with the other parts to which he wishes to direct its course. This is called watering the land with the foot, Deut. xi. 10, where see the Note.

His fruit in his season] In such a case, expectation is never disappointed. Fruit is expected; fruit is borne; and it comes also in the time in which it should come. A godly education under the influences of the Divine Spirit, which can never be withheld, where they are earnestly sought, is sure to produce the fruits of righteousness; and he who reads, prays, and meditates, will ever see the work which God has given him to do; the power by which he is to perform it; and the times, places, and opportunities for doing those things, by which God can obtain most glory, his own soul most good, and his neighbour most edification.

His leaf also shall not wither] His profession of true religion shall always be regular and unsullied; and his faith be ever shown by his works. As the leaves and the fruit are the evidences of the vegetative perfection of the tree; so a zealous religious profession, accompanied with good works, are the evidences of the soundness of the faith in the Christian man. Rabbi Solomon Jarchi gives a curious turn to this expression. He considers the leaves as expressing those matters of the law that seem to be of no real use, to be quite unimportant, and that apparently neither add nor diminish. But even these things are parts of the Divine revelation, and all have their use: so even the apparently indifferent actions or sayings of a truly holy man have their use; and, from the manner and spirit in which they are done or said, have the tendency to bear the observer to something great and good.

Whatever he doeth shall prosper] It is always healthy: it is extending its roots, increasing its woody fibres, circulating its nutritive juices, putting forth fruit-buds, blossoms, leaves, or fruit; and all these operations go on, in a healthy tree, in their proper seasons. So the godly man: he is either taking deeper root, growing stronger in the grace he has already received, increasing in heavenly desires, and under the continual influence of the Divine Spirit, forming those purposes from which much fruit to the glory and praise of God shall be produced.

Verse 4. The ungodly are not so] The Vulgate and Septuagint, and the Versions made from them, such as the Ethiopic and Arabic, double the last negation, and add a clause to the end of the verse, "Not so the ungodly, not so: they shall be like the dust which the wind scatters away from the face of the earth." There is nothing solid in the men; there is nothing good in their ways. They are not trees of God's planting, they are not good grain, they are only chaff, and a chaff that shall be separated from the good grain when the fan or shovel of God's power throws them up to the wind of His judgments. The manner of winnowing in the Eastern countries is nearly the same with that practised in various parts of these kingdoms, before the invention of winnowing machines. They either throw it up in a place out of doors by a large wooden shovel against the wind; or, with their weights or winnowing fans, shake it down leisurely in the wind. The grain falls down nearly perpendicularly; and the chaff, through its lightness, is blown away to a distance from the grain.

An ungodly man is never steady; his purposes are abortive; his conversation light, trifling, and foolish; his professions, friendships, &c., frothy, hollow, and insincere; and both he and his works are carried away to destruction by the wind of God's judgments.

Verse 5. Therefore the ungodly shall not stand] This refers to the winnowing mentioned in the preceding verse. Some of the Versions have; the ungodly shall not arise in the judgment; they shall have no resurrection, except to shame and everlasting contempt. But probably the meaning is, when they come to be judged, they shall be condemned. They shall have nothing to plead in their behalf. That the impious were never to have any resurrection, but be annihilated, was the opinion of several among the Jews, and of some among Christians. The former believe that only the true Israelites shall be raised again; and that the souls of all others, the Christians not excepted, die with their bodies. Such unfounded opinions are unworthy of refutation.

Verse 6. The Lord knoweth] יְיָ יודע, approveth the way, sloweth the way, Coverdale, of the righteous, עֲשֵׂה לְצַדִּיקִים, from עָשָׂה tsadak, to give even weight; the men who give to all their due; opposed to עָשֶׂה rasha'ism, ver. 1, they who withhold right from all; see above. Such holy men are under the continual eye of God's providence; He knows the way that they take; approves of their motives, purpose, and works, because all are wrought through Himself. He provides for them in all exigencies, and defends them both in body and soul.

This way of the ungodly shall perish.] Their projects, designs, and operations, shall perish; God's curse shall be on all that they have, do, and are. And in the day of judgment, they shall be condemned to everlasting fire, in the perdition of ungodly men. The wicked shall perish at the presence of the Lord. Reader, take warning!

ANALYSIS of the FIRST PSALM.

The το κρινόμενον in this Psalm is, Who is the happy man? or, what may make a man happy?

This question the prophet resolves in the two first verses:—1. Negatively. It is he, 1. That walks not in the counsel of the ungodly. 2. That stands not in the way of sinners. 3. That sits not in the seat of the scornful. 2. Positively. It is he, 1. Whose delight is in the law of the Lord. 2. Who doth meditate in the law day and night.

2. This happiness of the good man is illustrated two ways, 1. By a similitude. 2. By comparing him with a wicked man.

1. The similitude he makes choice of is that of a tree; not every tree neither, but that which hath these eminences; 1. It is planted; it grows not of itself, neither is wild. 2. Planted by the rivers of waters; it wants no moisture to fructify. 3. It doth fructify, it brings forth fruit; it is no barren tree. 4. The fruit it brings is seasonable; it brings forth fruit in its season. 5. It is always green, winter and summer; the leaves wither not. Clearly without any trope, whatsoever this good man doth, or takes in hand, it shall prosper.

2. He shows this good man's happiness by comparing him with a wicked man, in whom you shall find all contrary.

First, In general. Not so. As for the ungodly it is not so with them; not so in the plantation; in the place; in the seasonable fruit; in the greenness; in the prosperity. So far from being like a tree, they are like, 1. Chaff, a light and empty thing. 2. Chaff which the wind whiffles up and down. 3. Chaff which the wind scatters, or driveth away. 4. And never leaves scattering, till it has driven it from the face of the earth. So Vulgate, Septuagint, and Arabic.

Secondly, And that no man may think that their punishment shall extend only to this life; in plain terms he threatens to them,—1. Damnation at the great day. They shall not stand in judgment; though some refer this clause to this life. When he is judged by men, causa cadet, he shall be condemned. 2. Exclusion from the company of the just. Sinners shall not stand in the congregation of the righteous.

3. In the close, he shows the cause why the godly is happy, and the wicked unhappy:—1. Because the way of 9 Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel.

10 Be wise now therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth.

11 Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with trembling.

12 Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way, when his wrath is kindled but a little. Blessed are all they that put their trust in him.

These are the generations, דורות toledoth, of the heavens and the earth; this is the order in which God produced and exhibited them. See Heb. and Eng. Concord. Venema, &c.

Verse 8. Ask of me, and I shall give thee] Here a second branch of Christ's office, as Saviour of the world, is referred to: viz. His mediatorial office. Having died as an atoning sacrifice, and risen again from the dead, He was now to make intercession for mankind; and in virtue, and on account, of what He had done and suffered He was, at His request, to have the nations for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. He was to become supreme Lord in the mediatorial kingdom; in consequence of which He sent His apostles throughout the habitable globe to preach the gospel to every man.

Verse 9. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron] This may refer to the Jewish nation, whose final rejection of the gospel was foreseen; and in whose place the Gentiles, or Heathen, were brought into the church of Christ. They were dispossessed of their land, their city was razed to its foundations, their temple was burnt with fire, and upwards of a million of themselves slaughtered by the Romans! So heavily did the iron rod of God's judgments fall upon them for their obstinate unbelief.

Verse 10. Be wise—O ye kings] An exhortation of the gospel to the rulers of all kingdoms, nations, and states, to whom it may be sent. All these should listen to its maxims, be governed by its precepts, and rule their subjects according to its dictates.

Be instructed, ye judges] Rather, be ye reformed. Cast away all your idolatrous maxims; and receive the gospel as the law, or the basis of the law, of the land.

Verse 11. Serve the Lord with fear] A general direction to all men. Fear God with that reverence which is due to His supreme Majesty. Serve Him as subjects should their sovereign, and as servants should their master.

Rejoice with trembling.] If ye serve God aright, ye cannot but be happy: but let a continual filial fear moderate all your joys. Ye must all stand at last before the judgment seat of God: watch, pray, believe, work, and keep humble.

Verse 12. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry] It is remarkable that the word Son, (בן bar, a Chaldee word,) is not found in any of the versions, except the Syriac; nor, indeed any thing equivalent to it.

The Chaldee, Vulgate, Septuagint, Arabic, and Ethiopic, have a term which signifies doctrine, or discipline. Embrace discipline, lest the Lord be angry with you, &c. This is a remarkable case; and especially that, in so pure a piece of Hebrew as this poem is, a Chaldee word should have been found, בן bar, instead of בן ben, which adds nothing to the strength of the expression, or the elegance of the poetry. I know it is supposed, that בן bar is also pure Hebrew, as well as Chaldee: but as it is taken in the former language in the sense of purifying, the Versions probably understood it so here. Embrace that which is pure; namely, the doctrine of God.

As all judgment is committed to the Son; the Jews and others are exhorted to submit to Him, to be reconciled to Him, that they might be received into His family, and be acknowledged as His adopted children. Kissing was the token of subjection and friendship.

Is kindled but a little] The slightest stroke of the iron rod of Christ's justice is sufficient to break in pieces a whole rebel world. Every sinner, not yet reconciled to God through Christ, should receive this as a most solemn warning.

Blessed are all they] He is only the inexorable Judge to them who harden their hearts in their iniquity, and will not come unto Him that they might have life. But all they who trust in Him, who repose all their trust and confidence in Him as their atonement, and as their Lord, shall be blessed with innumerable blessings. For as the word is the same here as in Psa. i. 1, דור asheray, it may be translated the same; O, the blessednesses of all them who trust in Him!

ANALYSIS OF THE SECOND PSALM.

The prime subject of this Psalm is CHRIST; the type DAVID. The persons we are chiefly to reflect on are three, and which make three parts of the Psalm.—I. The enemies of Christ. II. Christ the Lord. III. The princes and judges of the earth.

I. The enemies of Christ are great men who are described here, partly from their wickedness, and partly from their weakness.

First, Their wickedness is apparent. 1. They furiously rage. 2. They tumultuously assemble. 3. They set themselves, stand up and take counsel against the Lord and against his anointed. 4. They encourage themselves in mischief, saying, Come, and let us cast away their cords from us. All which is sharpened by the interrogatory Why?

Secondly, Their weakness; in that they shall never be able to bring their plots and conspiracies against Christ and His kingdom to pass; for, 1. What they imagine is but a vain thing. 2. He that sits in heaven shall laugh, and have them in derision. 3. He shall speak unto them in his wrath, and vex them in his sore displeasure. 4. For, maugre all their plots, God has set up his king upon his holy hill of Zion.

II. At ver. 6 begins the exaltation of Christ to His kingdom; which is the SECOND PART of the Psalm, in which the prophet, by a σπουδαίωσις, or personification, brings in God the Father speaking, and the Son answering.

First, The words of the Father are, I have set my king—where we have the inauguration of Christ, or His calling to the crown.

Secondly, The answer of the Son, I will preach the law, which sets forth His willing obedience to publish and proclaim the laws of the kingdom; of which the chief is, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee.

Thirdly, The reply of the Father, containing the reward that Christ was to have upon the publication of the gospel; which was, 1. An addition to His empire by the conversion and accession of the Gentiles. Ask of me, and I will give the Heathen for Thine inheritance, &c. 2. And the confusion of His enemies, Thou shalt break them who would not have Thee reign, that did rage and stand up against Thee; with a rod of iron, and break them in pieces as a potter's vessel.

III. In the third part the prophet descends to his exhortation and admonition; and that very aptly;—for, Is Christ a King? Is he a King anointed by God? Is he a great King, a powerful King? So great that the nations are His subjects? So powerful that He will break and batter to pieces His enemies? Besides, is He the only begotten Son of God? Be wise, therefore, O ye kings; in which we find,

1. The persons to whom this caveat is given; kings and judges.

2. What they are taught. First, To know their duty: Be wise; be learned. Secondly, To do their duty: Serve the Lord with fear; rejoice with trembling; kiss the Son.

3. The time when this is to be done: even now. The reason double:—1. Drawn from His wrath, and the consequent punishment. Lest he be angry, and ye perish from the right way. 2. From the happy condition of those who learn to know Him, and fear, and serve, and adore Him: For if his wrath be kindled, yea, but a little; blessed are all they that put their trust in him. There must be no delay; this is the time of wrath, and the day of salvation.

NOTES ON PSALM III.

This is said to be A Psalm of David, when he fled from Absalom, his son. See the account 2 Sam. xv. 1, &c. And David is supposed to have composed it when obliged to leave Jerusalem, passing by the Mount of Olives, weeping, with his clothes rent, and dust upon his head. The Psalm is suitable enough to these circumstances; and they mutually cast light on each other. If the inscription be correct, this Psalm is a proof that the Psalms are not placed in any chronological order.

The word Psalm, מִזְמוֹר mizmor, comes from מָצַח zacher, to cut, whether that means to cut into syllables, for the purpose of its being adapted to musical tones; or whether its being cut on wood, &c., for the direction of the singers; what we would call a Psalm in score. This last opinion, however, seems too technical.

Verse 1. Lord, how are they increased that trouble me! We are told that the hearts of all Israel went after Absalom, 2 Sam. xv. 13, and David is astonished to find such a sudden and general revolt. Not only the common people, but his counsellors also, and many of his chief captains. How publicly does God take vengeance for the sins which David committed so privately! In the horrible rebellion of Absalom we see the adultery with Bathsheba, and the murder of Uriah. Now the words of Nathan begin to be fulfilled:—The sword shall not depart from thy house.

Verse 2. No help for him in God! These were some of the reproaches of his enemies; Shimei and others. "He is now down, and he shall never be able to rise. God alone can save him from these his enemies; but God has visibly cast him off." These reproaches deeply affected his heart; and he mentions them with that note which so frequently occurs in the Psalms, and which occurs here for the first time, selah. Much has been said on the meaning of this word; and we have nothing but conjecture to guide us. The Septuagint always translate it by diapsalma diapsalma, a pause in the Psalm. The Chaldee sometimes translates it by lelamin, for ever. The rest of the Versions leave it unnoticed. It either comes from to sal, to raise or elevate, and may denote a particular elevation in the voices of the performers; which is very observable in the Jewish singing to the present day;—or it may come from to salah, to strew or spread out, intimating that the subject to which the word is attached should be spread out, meditated on, and attentively considered, by the reader. Fenwick, Parkhurst, and Dodd, contend for this meaning; and think "it confirmed by Ps. ix. 16, where the word higgaion, is put before selah at the end of the verse. Now higgaion certainly signifies meditation, or a fit subject for meditation: and so shows selah to be really a nota bene, attend to, or mind this!"

Verse 3. Thou, O Lord, art a shield! As a shield covers and defends the body from the strokes of an adversary; so wilt Thou cover and defend me from them that rise up against me.

The lifter up of mine head. Thou wilt restore me to the state from which my enemies have cast me down. This is the meaning of the phrase; and this he speaks prophetically. He was satisfied that the deliverance would take place, hence his confidence in prayer; so that we find him, with comparative unconcern, laying himself down in his bed, expecting the sure protection of the Almighty.

Verse 4. I cried unto the Lord with my voice! He was exposed to much danger; and, therefore, he had need of fervour.

He heard me! Notwithstanding my enemies said, and my friends feared, that there was no help for me in my God; yet he heard me out of his holy hill. Selah, mark this! and take encouragement from it. God never forsakes those who trust in Him! He never shuts out the prayer of the distressed.

Verse 5. I laid me down and slept! He who knows that he has God for his Protector may go quietly and confidently to his bed, not fearing the violence of the fire, the edge of the sword, the designs of wicked men, nor the influence of malevolent spirits.

I awaked! Though humanly speaking there was reason to fear I should have been murdered in my bed, as my most confidential servants had been corrupted by my rebellious son; yet God, my shield, protected me. I both slept, and awaked; and my life is still whole in me.

Verse 6. I will not be afraid of ten thousands! Strength and numbers are nothing against the Omnipotence of God. He who has made God his refuge, certainly has no cause for fear.

Verse 7. Arise, O Lord! Though he knew that God had undertaken his defence, yet he knew that his continual protection depended on his continual prayer and faith. God never ceases to help as long as we pray. When our hands hang down, and we restrain prayer before him, we may then justly fear that our enemies will prevail.

Thou hast smitten! That is, Thou wilt smite. He speaks in full confidence of God's interference; and knows that he shall as surely have the victory, as if he had it already. Breaking the jaws, and the teeth, are expressions which imply, confounding and destroying an adversary; treating him with extreme contempt; using him like a dog, &c.

Verse 8. Salvation belongeth unto the Lord! It is God alone who saves. He is the Fountain whence help and salvation come; and to Him alone the praise of all saved souls is due. His blessing is upon His people. Those who are saved from the power and the guilt of sin are His people. His mercy saved them; and it is by His blessing being continually upon them, that they continue to be saved. David adds his Selah here also: mark this! 1. Salvation comes from God. 2. Salvation is continued by God. These are great truths; mark them!

ANALYSIS OF THE THIRD PSALM.

The occasion of this Psalm was Absalom's rebellion. David being deserted by his subjects, railed on by Shimei, pursued for his crown and life by his ungracious son, and not finding to whom to make his moan, betakes himself to his God; and before Him he expostulates his wrong, confesseth his faith, and makes his prayer.

There are three strains of this accurate Psalm:—I. His complaint. II. The confession of his confidence. III. His petition.

I. He begins with a sad and bitter complaint, amplified, 1. By the number and multitude of his enemies. They were many, very many; they were multiplied and increased. All Israel was gathered together from Dan to Beersheba, as the sand of the sea for multitude. 2 Sam. xvii. 11.

2. From their malice they came together to do him mischief. They rose up not for him, but against him; not to honour but to trouble him; not to defend him as they ought, but to take away his crown and his life. 2 Sam. xvii. 2.

3. From their insulting, and sarcasm. It was not Shimei only, but many, that said it. Many—say there is no help for him in his God.

II. The second part of the Psalm sets forth David's confidence:—

1. To their multitude, he opposeth ONE God. But Thou, O LORD!

2. To their malicious insurrection, Jehovah; who, he believed, 1. Would be a buckler to receive all the arrows shot against him. 2. His glory, to honour, though they went about to dishonour him. 3. The lifter up of his head, which they wished to lay low enough.

3. To their vain boast of desertion, there is no help for him in his God, he opposeth his own experience, I cried unto the Lord, and he heard me.

4. By whose protection being sustained and secured, he deposeth all care and fear, all anxiety and distraction. 1. He sleeps with a quiet mind. I laid me down and slept; I awaked. 2. He sings a requiem; I will not be afraid of ten thousands of the people that have set themselves against me round about.

III. In the close, or third part, he petitions and prays notwithstanding his security. Arise, O Lord; save me, O my God! To move God to grant his request, he thankfully remembers Him of what He had done before.

1. Arise, and save me, for thou hast smitten all mine enemies!—Thou art the same God, do then the same work; be as good to Thy servant as ever thou hast been.

2. He inserts an excellent maxim, salvation belongeth unto the Lord. As if he had said, It is Thy property and peculiar to save. If Thou save not I expect it from none other.

3. Lastly, as a good king should, in his prayers he remembers his subjects. He prayed for those who were using him despitefully. Thy blessing be upon thy people!—To the same sense, Coverdale, in his translation.

PSALM IV.

David prays to be heard, 1. Expostulates with the ungodly, 2. Exhorts them to turn to God, and make their peace with Him, 3-5. Shows the vain pursuits of men in search of happiness, which he asserts exists only in the approbation of God, 6, 7. Commends himself to the Lord, and then quietly takes his repose, 8.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, A Psalm of David.

Hear me when I call, O God of my righteousness; thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress; have mercy upon me, and hear my prayer.

O ye sons of men, how long will ye turn my glory into shame? how long will ye love vanity, and seek after leasing? Selah.

NOTES ON PSALM IV.

This Psalm seems to have been composed on the same occasion with the preceding, viz. Absalom's rebellion. It appears to have been an evening hymn, sung by David and his company, previously to their going to rest. It is inscribed, to the chief musician upon Neginoth, נגינת נבלות לנגנתאשכח בנגינתו. Probably the first word comes from נגן, to be over, or preside; and may refer to the precentor in the choir. Some suppose that it refers to the Lord Jesus, who is the supreme Governor, or victorious Person; the Giver of victory. Neginoth seems to come from נגן, to strike; and probably may signify some such instruments as the cymbal, drum, &c., and stringed instruments in general. But there is no certainty in these things. What they mean, or what they were, is known to no man.

Verse 1. Hear me when I call] No man has a right to expect God to hear him if he do not call. Indeed, how shall he be heard if he speak not! There are multitudes who expect the blessings of God as confidently as if they had prayed for them most fervently; and yet such people pray not at all!

God of my righteousness] Whatever pardon, peace, holiness, or truth, I possess, has come entirely from Thyself. Thou art the God of my salvation, as Thou art the God of my life.

Thou hast enlarged me] I was in prison; and Thou hast brought me forth abroad. Have mercy on me; continue to act in the same way. I shall always need Thy help; I shall never deserve to have it; let me have it in the way of mere mercy, as Thou hast hitherto done.

Verse 2. O ye sons of men] אלהי בני בני אדם. Ye powerful men; ye who are now at the head of affairs, or who are leaders of the multitude.

Love vanity] The poor, empty, shallow-brained, prettified Absalom! Whose prospects are all vain, and whose promises are all empty.

Seek after leasing] This is a Saxon word, from learnge, falsehood, from lestan to lie. Cardmarden had adopted this word in his translation, Rouen, 1566. It is in none of the Bibles previously to that time, nor in any after as far as my own collection affords me evidence; and appears to have been borrowed by King James's translators from the above.

Selah] Mark this! See what the end will be!

Verse 3. The Lord hath set apart him that is godly] אלהי צדיק, the pious, benevolent man. He has marked such, and put them aside as his own property. "This merciful man, this feeling tender-hearted man, is my own property; touch not a hair of his head!"

Verse 4. Stand in awe, and sin not] The Septuagint, which is copied by St. Paul, Eph. iv. 26, translate this clause Οπισθοδρομει, και μη απαρωγεις, Be ye angry and sin not. The Vulgate, Syriac, Ethiopic, and Arabic, give the same reading; and thus the original word waganu, might be translated, If ye be angry, and if ye think ye have cause to be angry; do not let your disaffection carry you to acts of rebellion against both God and your king. Consider the subject deeply before you attempt to act. Do nothing rashly; do not justify one evil act by another;—sleep on the business;—converse with your own heart upon your bed; consult your pillow.

And be still] ואל תדבר—and be dumb. Hold your peace, fear lest ye be found fighting against God. Selah. Mark this!

Verse 5. Offer the sacrifices of righteousness] Do not attempt to offer a sacrifice to God for prosperity in your present rebellious conduct. Such a sacrifice would be a sin. Turn to God from whom you have revolted; and offer to Him a righteous sacrifice, such as the law prescribes, and such as He can receive. Let all hear and consider this saying. No sacrifice, no performance of him that is godly for himself; the LORD will hear when I call upon him.

4 * Stand in awe, and sin not: * commune with your own heart upon your bed, and be still. Selah.

5 Offer * the sacrifices of righteousness, and * put your trust in the LORD.

6 There be many that say, Who will show us any good? * LORD, lift thou up the light of thy countenance upon us.

7 Thou hast put * gladness in my heart more than in the time that their corn and their wine increased.

8 * I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep; * for thou, LORD, only makest me dwell in safety.

2 Sam. 15. 12.—a Ps. 37. 3. & 62. 8.—b Num. 6. 26. Ps. 50. 3, 7, 19. & 119. 135.—c Is. 9. 3.—d Job 11. 16, 19. Ps. 3. 5.—e Lev. 25. 19, 19. & 28. 5. Deut. 12. 10.

religious duty, will avail any man, if his heart is not right with God. And let all know that under the gospel dispensation no sacrifice of any kind will be received but through the all-atoning sacrifice made by Christ.

Because of sin, justice has stopped every man's mouth—so that none can have access to God, but through the Mediator. By Him only can the mouth of a sinner be opened to plead with God. Hear this, ye who trust in yourselves, and hope for heaven, without either faith or dependence on the vicarious sacrifice of Christ.

Verse 6. Who will show us any good?] This is not a fair translation. The word any is not in the text, nor any thing equivalent to it: and not a few have quoted it, and preached upon the Text, placing the principal emphasis upon this illegitimate word.

The place is sufficiently emphatic without this. There are multitudes who say, Who will show us good? Man wants good: he hates evil as evil; because he has pain, suffering, and death, through it; and he wishes to find that supreme good which will content his heart, and save him from evil. But men mistake this good. They look for a good that is to gratify their passions; they have no notion of any happiness that does not come to them through the medium of their senses. Therefore, they reject spiritual good; and they reject the supreme God, by whom alone all the powers of the soul of man can be gratified.

Lift thou up the light of thy countenance] This alone, the light of thy countenance, Thy peace and approbation, constitute the supreme good. This is what we want, wish, and pray for. The first is the wish of the worldling; the latter the wish of the godly.

Verse 7. Thou hast put gladness in my heart] Thou hast given my soul what it wanted, and wished for. I find now a happiness which earthly things could not produce. I have peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost; such inward happiness as they cannot boast who have got the highest increase of corn and wine; those two things in the abundance of which many suppose happiness to be found.

To corn and wine all the Versions, except the Chaldee, add oil; for corn, wine, and oil, were considered the highest blessings of a temporal kind which man could possess.

Verse 8. I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep] Most men lie down, and most sleep daily; for without rest and sleep life could not be preserved;—but, alas! how few lie down in peace! peace with their own consciences, and peace with God. David had then two great blessings:—rest by sleep; and peace in his soul. He had a happy soul; and, when he lay down on his bed, his body soon enjoyed its repose, as the conscience was in peace. And he had a third blessing, a confidence that he should sleep in safety. And it was so. No fearful dreams disturbed his repose; for he had a mind tranquillized by the peace of God. As to his body, that enjoyed its due rest, for he had not overloaded nature either with dainties or superfluities. Reader, are not many of thy sleepless hours to be attributed to thy disordered soul;—to a sense of guilt on thy conscience: or to a fear of death and hell?

Pray incessantly till thou get the light of God's countenance; till His Spirit bear witness with thine that thou art a child of GOD. Then thy repose will do thee good; and, even in thy sleep, thy happy soul will be getting forward to heaven.

ANALYSIS OF THE FOURTH PSALM.

- There are THREE parts in this Psalm:— I. An entrance or petition for audience, ver. 1. II. An apostrophe to his enemies, which is, 1. Reprehensive, ver. 2, 3. 2. Admonitory, ver. 4, 5. III. A petition for himself and God's people, ver. 6, 7, 8. I. He proppeth his request and suit for audience. Hear me when I call; and this he founds on four arguments:—1. God has promised to hear when we call. Call upon me in trouble, and I will hear thee. I call,

8 The foolish shall not stand ^a in thy sight: thou hatest all workers of iniquity.
 6 Thou shalt destroy them that speak leasing: ^a the Lord will abhor ^a the bloody and deceitful man.
 7 But as for me, I will come into thy house in the multitude of thy mercy: and in thy fear will I worship ^a toward ^a thy holy temple.
 8 Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness because of ^a mine enemies; make ^a thy way, straight before my face.
 9 For there is no ^a faithfulness ^a in their mouth their inward part is ^a very wickedness;

^a their throat is an open sepulchre; ^a they flatter with their tongue.
 10 Destroy thou them, O God: let them fall ^a by their own counsels; cast them out in the multitude of their transgressions; for they have rebelled against thee.
 11 But let all those that put their trust in thee ^b rejoice: let them ever shout for joy, because ^a thou defendest them: let them also that love thy name be joyful in thee.
 12 For thou, Lord, ^a wilt bless the righteous: with favour wilt thou ^a compass him as with a shield.

Verse 5. The foolish shall not stand] He is a fool and a madman who is running himself out of breath for no prize; who is fighting against the Almighty. This every wicked man does; therefore, is every wicked man a fool and a madman.

Thou hatest all workers of iniquity] Some sin now and then, others generally; some constantly, and some labour in it with all their might. These are the workers of iniquity. Such even the God of infinite love and mercy hates. Alas! what a portion have the workers of iniquity! the hatred of God Almighty!

Verse 6. That speak leasing] Falsity, from the Anglo Saxon leasunge, leasunge, a lie, falsity, deceit: from leas, leas, lie, which is from the verb learien, to lie. See on Psa. iv. 2.

The Lord will abhor the bloody and deceitful man] ^{אדם רשע דמים} ish damim, the man of bloods: for he who has the spirit of a murderer, will rarely end with one blood-shedding. So the Jews, who clamoured for the blood of our Lord, added to that, as far and as long as they could, the blood of His disciples.

Verse 7. In the multitude of thy mercy] David considered it an inexpressible privilege to be permitted to attend public worship; and he knew that it was only through the multitude of God's mercy that he, or any man else, could enjoy such a privilege. He knew farther that, from the multitude of this mercy, he might receive innumerable blessings in His house. In this spirit, and with this dependence, he went to the house of the Lord. He who takes David's views of this subject will never, willingly, be absent from the means of grace.

In thy fear] Duly considering the infinite holiness of Thy majesty, will I worship, ^{אשתחוה} ehshtachaveh, will I bow and prostrate myself, in the deepest self-abasement and humility.

Toward thy holy temple.] If David was the author of this Psalm, as is generally agreed, the temple was not builded at this time; only the tabernacle then existed: and in the preceding clause he speaks of coming into the house, by which he must mean the tabernacle. But temple here may signify the Holy of holies, before which David might prostrate himself while in the house, i. e. the court of the tabernacle. Even in the house of God, there is the temple of God; the place where the Divine shekinah dwells. God was in Christ reconciling the world to Himself. In him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. In all ages and dispensations, Jesus was ever the temple where the Supreme Deity was met with, and worshipped. The human nature of Jesus was the real temple of the Deity. No where else can God be found.

Verse 8. Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness] When entered into the house, and prostrated before the temple, he knew that, unless God continued to lead and direct, he was not likely to profit even by such great advantages. We need God not only to bring us to His house, but to keep our feet while we are there.

Because of mine enemies] His conduct was marked; his enemies looked upon and watched him with an evil eye. They would have been glad of his halting, that they might have brought a reproach on the good cause which he had espoused. O how cautiously should those walk who make profession of living to God; of knowing themselves to be in His favour; and of being delivered from all sin in this life!

Make thy way straight] Show me that I must go right on; and let Thy light always shine on my path that I may see how to proceed.

Verse 9. No faithfulness in their mouth] They make professions of friendship; but all is hollow and deceitful. They flatter with their tongue.

Very wickedness] Their heart is full of all kinds of depravity.

Their throat is an open sepulchre] It is continually gaping for the dead; and sends forth effluvia destructive to the living. I fear that this is too true a picture of the whole human race; totally corrupt within, and abominable without. The heart is the centre and spring of this corruption; and the words and actions of men, which proceed from this source, will send out incessant streams of various impurity: and thus they continue till the grace of God changes and purifies the heart.

Verse 10. Destroy thou them, O God] All these apparently imprecatory declarations should be translated in the future tense, to which they belong; and which shows them to be prophetic. Thou wilt destroy them; Thou wilt cast them out, &c.

Verse 11. Let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice] Such expressions as these should be translated in the same way, declaratively and prophetically. All those who put their trust in thee shall rejoice,—shall ever shout for joy.

Verse 12. For thou, Lord, will bless the righteous] A righteous soul is a peculiar object of God's affectionate regards; and, therefore, will be a subject of continual blessing.

With favour] Literally, like a shield, thy favour will crown him. God loves such; and this love is their defence. In all places, times, and circumstances, it will preserve them. Keep yourselves, says the apostle, in the love of God. He who abides in this love need not fear the face of any adversary. And thus ended the morning's devotion of this excellent man; a model by which every Christian may frame his own.

ANALYSIS OF THE FIFTH PSALM.

This Psalm consists of five parts:—

- I. An introduction, in which he petitions to be heard; professeth his earnestness about it, ver. 1, 2, 3. and his confidence of audience.
- II. He delivers his petition, ver. 8. and the reason of it, his enemies.
- III. These enemies he circumstantially describes, ver. 9.
- IV. He prophesies that God will destroy them, ver. 10.
- V. He prays for the church that God would preserve it, ver. 11, 12.

I. 1. In the entrance, he prays very earnestly for audience. He shows that he meant to be serious and fervent in it; and he chooses a variety of words to express the same thing, which rise by degrees in the description:—
 1. He rises from meditation, 2. To words; 3. From words to a voice; 4. From a voice to a cry. Then he desires God, 1. To consider. 2. To give ear. 3. To hearken. 1. He considers, that weighs the justice of the cause. 2. He gives ear, that would understand what the suppliant means. 3. He attends and hearkens, who intends to satisfy the petitioner.

2. The reasons he uses here to heget audience are very considerable. 1. The relation that was between him and his God; Thou art my King and my God.

2. That he would sue to none other. To thee will I pray;—which he illustrates, 1. From the time. It is a morning petition. 2. It was a well composed and ordered prayer. 3. He would lift up his eyes with it;—that is, have all his hope and expectation exercised in it. My voice shall thou hear in the morning; I will direct my prayer unto thee, and look up.

3. The third reason taken from the nature of God:—whom He will, and whom He will not hear. 1. Persevering sinners God will not regard. 2. To the upright he is ready to look. The sinners whom God will not hear he thus describes,—1. Men who delighted in wickedness, evil, foolish, workers of iniquity,—liars,—blood-thirsty and deceitful. Now it was not likely that God should hear such;—for thou art not a God who hast pleasure in wickedness, neither shall evil dwell with thee. These, it

PSALM VI.

This Psalm contains a description of eternal vengeance. 1. A petition to God for mercy. 2. This is answered from a consideration of the Psalmist's sufferings. 3. From that of the Divine mercy. 4. From that of the praise and glory which God would send to receive if man were destroyed. 5. From that of his faithfulness and clemency. 6. 1. Being successful in his applications, he exalts in God, 9, 9. And professes the downfall of all his enemies, 10.

I. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, upon 8 Sheminith, A Psalm of David.

David, Eighth Instrument, or common T. H. H.

O LORD, rebuke me not in thine anger, neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.

2 Have mercy upon me, O LORD, for I am weak: O LORD, heal me: for my bones are vexed.

3 My soul is also sore vexed: but thou, O LORD, how long?

[Or, upon the eighth: See 1 Chron. 15. 17.—g. Ps. 13, title.—h. Ps. 23. 1. Jer. 10. 23. & 48. 21.—i. Ps. 41. 4.—k. Hos. 6. 1.—l. Ps. 30. 13.—m. Ps. 30. 9. & 38. 11. & 115.

is said, He hated:—these He would destroy;—these He did abhor. 2. But, on the contrary, he who was faithful, who relied on God, who feared the Lord, who attended the ordinances of his house, who worshipped towards his temple, and who came, not trusting in himself, but in the multitude of God's mercies;—him He would hear.

II. David having petitioned for audience, and delivered the grounds of his confidence, brings forth his petition, that his life may be holy and innocent.

1. Lead me in thy righteousness.

2. Make thy way straight before me. For which he gives this reason: because of mine enemies.

III. These his enemies he circumstantially describes:—1. By their MOUTH. There is no faithfulness in their mouth.

2. By their HEART. Their inward parts are very wickedness.

3. By their THROAT. Their throat is an open sepulchre.

4. By their TONGUE. They faller with their tongues.

IV. Then he proceeds to prophesy,—1. Against enemies. 2. For God's people.

1. Against enemies. God will destroy them.

2. They shall fall by their own counsels.

3. They shall be cast out in the multitude of their transgressions. For which predictions he gives this reason: They are rebels. For they have rebelled against thee. Rebels not against David, but against God. They have not rejected me, but they have rejected thee.

V. The conclusion contains his prayer for God's people, whom he here describes,—1. They are righteous. 2. They put their trust in God. 3. They love his name.

And he prays for them, that, 1. They may be happy;—that they may shout for joy. 2. They may be joyful in God.

And he expects an answer; because,—1. God defends them. 2. He will continue to bless them. 3. He will with His favour compass them as with a shield.

NOTES ON PSALM VI.

This Psalm has the following inscriptions:—

To the chief musician on Neginoth, upon Sheminith, A Psalm of David: which the Chaldee translates, To be sung on Neginoth, a harp of eight strings. The various interpretations given to this inscription, both by ancient and moderns, show us that nothing is known concerning it. We have already seen that Neginoth probably signifies all instruments which emitted sounds by strokes;—or stringed instruments in general. This Psalm was to be accompanied with such instruments: but one of a particular kind is specified, viz. Sheminith, so called from its having eight strings. The chief musician is directed to accompany the recital of this Psalm with the above instrument.

Verse 1. O LORD, rebuke me not! This Psalm, which is one of the seven penitential Psalms, is supposed to have been written during some grievous disease with which David was afflicted, after his transgression with Bathsheba. It argues a deep consciousness of sin; and apprehension of the just displeasure of God. It is the very language of a true penitent, who is looking around for help; and who sees, as Bishop Horne well expresses it, "Above, an angry God, ready to take vengeance; beneath, the fiery gulf ready to receive him; without, a world in flames; within, the gnawing worm." Of all these none so dreadful as an angry God: His wrath he particularly deprecates. God rebukes and chastens him; and he submits: but he prays not to be rebuked in anger, nor chastened in hot displeasure; because he knows that these must bring him down to total and final destruction.

Verse 2. Have mercy! I have no merit. I deserve all I feel, and all that I fear.

4 Return, O LORD, deliver my soul: Oh save me for thy mercies' sake.

5 For in death there is no remembrance of thee: in the grave who shall give thee thanks?

6 I am weary with my groaning; all the night make I my bed to swim: I water my couch with my tears.

7 Mine eye is consumed because of grief; it waxeth old because of all mine enemies.

8 Depart from me all ye workers of iniquity; for the LORD hath heard the voice of my weeping.

9 The LORD hath heard my supplication; the LORD will receive my prayer.

10 Let all mine enemies be ashamed and sore vexed: let them return and be ashamed suddenly.

[Or, every night.—o Job 17. 7. Ps. 31. 6. & 38. 16. & 38. 9. Lam. 5. 17.—p. Ps. 119. 115. Matt. 7. 22. & 23. 41. Luke 13. 27.—q. Ps. 3. 4.]

O LORD, heal me.] No earthly physician can cure my malady. Body and soul are both diseased, and only God can help me.

I am weak.] שדמ umelal. I am exceedingly weak; I cannot take nourishment, and my strength is exhausted.

My bones are vexed.] The disease hath entered into my bones.

Verse 3. How long?] How long shall I continue under this malady? How long will it be before Thou speak peace to my troubled heart?

Verse 4. Return, O LORD.] Once I had the light of Thy countenance; by sin I have forfeited this. I have provoked Thee to depart: O LORD, return! It is an awful thing to be obliged to say, Return, O LORD; for this supposes backsliding: and yet what a mercy it is, that a backslider may return to God, with the expectation that God will return to him!

Verse 5. In death there is no remembrance of thee.] Man is to glorify Thee on earth. The end for which he was born cannot be accomplished in the grave: heal my body, and heal my soul, that I may be at last capable of loving and serving Thee here below. A dead body in the grave can do no good to men, nor bring any glory to Thy name!

Verse 7. Mine eye is consumed.] נרתי אשמה, is blasted, withered, sunk in my head.

Verse 8. Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity.] It seems that while he was suffering grievously through the disease, his enemies had insulted and mocked him;—upbraided him with his transgressions, not to increase his penitence, but to cast him into despair.

The LORD hath heard the voice of my weeping.] The Lord pitifully beheld the sorrows of his heart; and mercifully forgave his sins.

Verse 10. Ashamed and sore vexed.] May they as deeply deplore their transgressions as I have done mine. May they return;—may they be suddenly converted. The original will bear this meaning, and it is the most congenial to Christian principles.

ANALYSIS OF THE SIXTH PSALM.

The parts of this Psalm are two in general:—

I. A petition to God for himself, contained in the first seven verses.

II. The account of his restoration, contained in the three last.

The petition consists of two parts:—1. Deprecation of evil. 2. A petition of good.

1. He prays to God to avert His wrath. O LORD, rebuke me not, &c.

2. He entreats to be a partaker of God's favour. Have mercy upon me, &c. 1. To his body. Heal me, O LORD. 2. To his soul. Deliver my soul: oh save me!

He enforceth his petition by divers weighty reasons:—1. From the quantity and degree of his calamity; which he shows to be great, from the effects. 1. In general: he was in a languishing disease.—I am weak. 2. In particular, pains in his bones. My bones are vexed. 3. Trouble in his soul. My soul also is troubled.

2. From the continuance of it. It was a long disease—a lingering sickness; and no ease he found, no rest from his God. The pain I could the better bear, if I had comfort from heaven. But thou, O LORD, how long! Long hast Thou withdrawn the light of Thy countenance from Thy servant!

3. From the consequence that was like to follow; death, and the event upon it. It is my intention to celebrate and praise Thy name:—the living only can do this; therefore, let me live; for in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?

4. And that he was brought now to the gates of death, he shows by three apparent symptoms:—1. Sighs and groans, which had almost broken his heart; the companions of a perpetual grief. I am weary of my groaning. 2. The abundance of his tears had dried and wasted his body. He made his bed to swim, and watered his couch with his tears. 3. His eyes also melted away, and grew dim, so that he seemed old before his time. My eye is consumed because of grief: it waxeth old.

5. That which added to his sorrow was, he had many ill-willers who insulted over him. Mine eye is waxen old because of my enemies.

II. But at last receiving comfort and joy, he is enabled to look up; and then he turns upon his enemies, who were longing for his destruction. Depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity.

He magnifies God's mercy; and mentions its manifestation thrice distinctly. 1. The Lord hath heard the voice of my weeping. 2. The Lord hath heard my supplication. 3. The Lord will receive my prayer.

Then follows his prophetic declaration concerning them: -1. Shame and confusion, to see their hope frustrated. They shall be confounded. 2. Vexation, to see the object of their envy restored to health and prosperity. They shall be sore vexed. 3. They shall return to their companions with shame, because their wishes and plots have miscarried. 4. He intimates that this shame and confusion shall be speedy. They shall return, and be ashamed suddenly. Or, possibly, this may be a wish for their conversion, יָשׁוּבָהּ, let them be converted, יָרָגָהּ, suddenly - lest sudden destruction from the Lord should fall upon them. Thus the genuine follower of God prays, That it may please thee to have mercy upon our enemies, persecutors, and slanderers; and to turn their hearts. A Christian should take up every thing of this kind in a Christian sense.

NOTES ON PSALM VII.

This Psalm is intitled, Shiggaion of David, which he sung unto the Lord, concerning the words of Cush the Benjamite. The word שִׁיגְגָיוֹן shiggaion, comes from שָׁגָה, to wander, a wandering song; i. e. a Psalm composed by David in his wanderings, when he was obliged to hide himself from the fury of Saul.

Bishop Horsley thinks it may have its name, a wandering ode, from its being in different parts, taking up different subjects, in different styles of composition. Or, he has sometimes thought, that shiggaion might be an unpremeditated song; an improviso.

As to Cush the Benjamite, he is a person unknown in the Jewish history: the name is probably a name of disguise; and by it he may covertly mean Saul himself, the son of Kish, who was of the tribe of Benjamin. The subject of the Psalm will better answer to Saul's unjust persecution; and David's innocence, than to any other subject in the history of David.

Verse 1. O LORD my God, in thee do I put my trust, words expressive of the strongest confidence the soul can have in the Supreme Being. Thou self-existent, incomprehensible, almighty, and eternal Being, who neither needest, nor hatest, any thing that Thou hast made; Thou art my God - God in covenant with Thy creature man; and my God and portion particularly. Therefore, in thee do I put my trust. I repose all my confidence in Thee; and expect all my good from Thee.

Save me] Shield me from my persecutors; abate their pride, assuage their malice, and confound their devices!

Deliver me.] From the counsels which they have devised, and from the snares and gins they have laid in my path.

it; yea, let him tread down my life upon the earth, and lay mine honour in the dust. Selah.

6 Arise, O LORD, in thine anger, lift up thyself because of the rage of mine enemies: and awake for me to the judgment that thou hast commanded.

7 So shall the congregation of the people compass thee about: for their sakes therefore return thou on high.

8 The LORD shall judge the people: judge me, O LORD, according to my righteousness, and according to mine integrity that is in me.

9 Oh let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; but establish the just: for the righteous God trieth the hearts and reins.

10 My defence is of God, which saveth the upright in heart.

11 God judgeth the righteous, and God is angry with the wicked every day.

1 Ps. 44. 22 - d Ps. 18. 20, 21 & 26. 21 - 1 Sam. 18. 7. 1 Chron. 20. 9. Ps. 128. 1. Jer. 11. 20. & 17. 18. & 29. 12. Rev. 2. 22 - Hab. My buckler is upon God. 2 Ps. 125. 4 - h Or, God is a righteous Judge.

Verse 2. Lest he tear my soul like a lion] These words seem to answer well to Saul. As the lion is king in the forest; so was Saul king over the land. As the lion, in his fierceness, seizes at once, and tears his prey in pieces; so David expected to be seized, and suddenly destroyed by Saul. He had already, in his rage, thrown his javelin at him, intending to have pierced him to the wall with it. As from the power of the lion no beast in the forest could deliver any thing; so David knew that Saul's power was irresistible, and that none of his friends or well-wishers could save or deliver him out of such hands. Lest he tear my soul (my life) like a lion - rending in pieces - while there is none to deliver. All this answers to Saul, and to none else.

Verse 3. If I have done this] David was accused by Saul of affecting the kingdom; and of waiting for an opportunity to take away the life of his king, his patron, and his friend. In his application to God he refers to these charges; meets them with indignation; and clears himself of them by a strong appeal to his judge; and an imprecation that, if he had meditated or designed any such thing, he might meet with nothing but curse and calamity either from God or man.

Verse 4. Yea, I have delivered him] When, in the course of Thy providence, Thou didst put thy life in my hand, in the cave, I contented myself with cutting off his skirt, merely to show him the danger he had been in, and the spirit of the man whom he accused of designs against his life; - and yet, even for this, my heart smote me, because it appeared to be an indignity offered to him who was the Lord's anointed. This fact, and my venturing my life frequently for his good and the safety of the state, sufficiently show the falsity of such accusations, and the innocence of my life.

Verse 5. Let the enemy persecute my soul] If I have been guilty of the things laid to my charge, let the worst evils fall upon me.

Verse 6. Arise, O LORD, in thine anger] To Thee I commit my cause; arise, and sit on the throne of Thy judgment, in my behalf.

Verse 7. For their sakes therefore return thou on high.] Thy own people who compass Thy altar, the faithful of the land, are full of gloomy apprehensions. They hear the charges against me; and see how I am persecuted. Their minds are divided; they know not what to think. For their sakes, return thou on high: ascend the judgment seat; and let them see, by the dispensations of Thy providence, who is innocent, and who is guilty. David feared not to make this appeal to God; for the consciousness of his innocence showed him at once how the discrimination would be made.

Verse 8. The LORD shall judge the people] He will execute justice, and maintain truth, among them. They shall not be as sheep without a shepherd.

Judge me, O LORD] Let my innocence be brought to the light; and my just dealing made clear as the noonday.

Verse 9. The wickedness of the wicked] The iniquity of Saul's conduct.

But establish the just] Show the people my uprightness.

Verse 10. My defence is of God] I now leave my cause in the hands of my Judge. I have no uneasy or fearful apprehensions, because I know God will save the upright in heart.

Verse 11. God is angry with the wicked every day.] The Hebrew for this sentence is the following; אַף הוּא עִם כָּל רָעָה לְעֵת זְעֵם בְּהַעֲלֹתָּהּ; which, according to the points, is, And God is angry every day. Our translation

PSALM VIII.

The glory and excellence of God manifested by his Works, 1, 2. Particularly in the starry heavens, 3. And in man, 4. In his formation, 5. In the dominion which God has given him over the earth, the air, the sea, and their inhabitants, 6, 7, 8. In consequence of which, God's name is celebrated over all the earth, 9.

To the chief Musician upon Githith, A Psalm of David.

O LORD our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens.

q Ps. 81. & 94, title.—r Ps. 149. 12.—s Ps. 113. 4.—t See Matt. 11. 25. & 22. 16. 1 Cor.

tricheth the hearts and reins, he is fittest to be Judge, in whom is required knowledge and prudence.

4. The other two properties of a judge are to sare and to punish:—and the triumph of his faith is that he knows He will do both! 1. He will save the just and upright in heart; and, therefore, his defence is in God. 2. He will punish the wicked; for he is angry with them every day: and yet even to them, he shows much clemency and forbearance. He waits for their conversion. He whets, binds on, and sharpens, his instruments of death; but he shoots not till there is no remedy. But, if they not return, he will whet his sword, &c.

5. But the Lord's long-suffering had no good effect upon Saul: he grew worse and worse. He travailed with mischief;—conceived iniquity;—brought forth falsehood; and digged a pit for his innocent neighbour, into which he fell himself. Thus the righteous God executed judgment, and vindicated innocence.

III. The close of the Psalm is a doxology.—Thanks that a true and merciful God would judge for the righteous, save those who are true of heart,—establish the just, and take vengeance upon the wicked. For this, saith David, I will praise the Lord according to his righteousness; and I will sing praises to the name of the Lord the Most High.

The righteous may be oppressed; but they shall not be forsaken: nor can they lose even by their afflictions; for these shall be turned to their advantage. Every occurrence helps a good man, whether prosperous or adverse; but to the wicked every thing is a curse. By his wickedness, even his blessings are turned to a bane.

NOTES ON PSALM VIII.

The inscription to this Psalm is the following:—To the chief musician upon Githith, a Psalm of David. This has been metaphorized "To the conqueror, concerning the winepresses;" and has been supposed to be a Psalm intended for the time of vintage: and as that happened about the time of the year in which it is supposed the world was created, hence there is a general celebration of those works, and of the creation, and the high privileges of man. The Chaldee gives it a different turn:—"A Psalm of David, to be sung upon the harp, which he brought out of Gath." That the Psalm has respect to our Lord, and the time of the gospel, is evident from the reference made to verse 2, in Matt. xi. 25, the express quotation of it in Matt. xxi. 16, and another reference to it in 1 Cor. i. 27. The fourth and sixth verses are quoted Heb. ii. 6—9. See also 1 Cor. xv. 27, and Eph. i. 22. The first and second ADAM are both referred to; and the first and second creation also: and the glory which God has received, and is to receive, through both. It relates simply to Christ, and redemption.

Verse 1. O LORD our Lord יהוה אלהינו Yehovah Adoninu:—O Jehovah, our prop, our stay, or support. Adonay, אדוני is frequently used; sometimes, indeed often, for the word יהוה Yehovah itself. The root ידן, signifies to direct, rule, judge, support. So Adonay is the Director, Ruler, Judge, Supporter of men. It is well joined with Jehovah:—this showing what God is in himself; that, what God is to man; and may here very properly refer to our Lord Jesus.

How excellent is thy name in all the earth] How illustrious is the name of Jesus throughout the world. His incarnation, birth, humble and obscure life, preaching, miracles, passion, death, resurrection, and ascension, are celebrated through the whole world. His religion, the gifts and graces of His Spirit, His people, Christians, His gospel and the preachers of it, are every where spoken of. No name is so universal, no power and influence so generally felt, as those of the Saviour of mankind. Amen.

Thy glory above the heavens] The heavens are glorious; the most glorious of all the works of God, which the eye of man can reach: but the glory of God is infinitely above even these. The words also seem to intimate that no power, earthly or diabolic, can lessen or injure that glory. The glory and honour which God has by the gospel shall last through time, and through eternity: and of that glory none shall be able to rob Him, to whom majesty and dominion are eternally due. This has been applied by some to the resurrection of our Lord. He rose from the dead, and ascended above all heavens; and by these His glory was sealed, His mission accomplished, and the last proof given to His preceding miracles.

2 Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger.

Verse 2. Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings] We have seen how our Lord applied this passage to the Jewish children, who, seeing His miracles, cried out in the temple, Hosanna to the Son of David! Matt. xxi. 16. And we have seen how the enemy and the avenger, the chief priests and the scribes, were offended because of these things: and, as the Psalm wholly concerns Jesus Christ, it is most probable that in this act of the Jewish children the prophecy had its primary fulfilment; and was left to the Jews as a witness and a sign of the Messiah, which they should have acknowledged, when our Lord directed their attention to it.

There is also a very obvious sense in which the mouths of babes and sucklings show forth the praises of God; viz. the means by which they derive their first nourishment. In order to extract the milk from the breasts of their mothers, they are obliged to empty their own mouth entirely of air, that the external air, pressing on the breast, may force the milk through its proper canals into the mouth of the child, where there is no resistance, the child having extracted all air from its own mouth, which in this case resembles a perfectly exhausted receiver on the plate of an air-pump; and the action of sucking is performed on the same principles that the receiver is exhausted by the working of the air-pump. Of this curious pneumatic action the child is capable the moment it breathes; and, its strength considered, performs it as perfectly the first hour, as it does in any other period of its childhood or infancy. What does all this argue? Why, instinct. And pray what is instinct? You cannot tell. But here is an operation by which the pure Boylean vacuum is made; and this by an infant, without any previous teaching! Do you suppose that this is an easy operation; and that it requires little skill? You are mistaken. You have done this yourself while an infant, under the sole guidance of God. Can you do it now? You are startled! Shall I tell you what appears to you a secret? There is not one in ten thousand adults, who have had their first nourishment from the breasts of their mothers, who can perform the same operation again! And those who have had occasion to practise it have found great difficulty to learn that art, which, in the first moment of their birth, they performed to perfection! Here is the finger of God: and here, out of the mouths of babes and sucklings He has ordained such a strength of evidence and argument in favour of His being, His providence, and His goodness, which is sufficient to still, confound, every Infidel and Atheist in the universe; all the enemies of righteousness; and all the vindicators of desperate and hopeless causes and systems.

The words may also be applied to the apostles, and primitive preachers of the gospel; to the simple and comparatively unlearned followers of Christ who, through His teaching, were able to confound the wise among the Jews, and the mighty among the Heathens; and in this sense our Lord uses the term babes, Matt. xi. 25. I thank thee, O Father,—because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them to babes.

We may also witness, in the experience of multitudes of simple people who have been, by the preaching of the gospel converted from the error of their ways, such a strength of testimony in favour of the work of God in the heart, and His effectual teaching in the mind, that is calculated to still, or reduce to silence, every thing but bigotry and prejudice, neither of which has either eyes or ears. This teaching, and these changing or converting influences, come from God. They are not acquired by human learning: and those who put this in the place of the Divine teaching never grow wise to salvation. To enter into the kingdom of heaven, a MAN must become as a little child.

Verse 3. When I consider thy heavens] יהוה כבודי He crek; because I will see. He had often seen the heavens with astonishment; and he purposes to make them frequent subjects of contemplation: and he could not behold them without being affected with the skill, contrivance, and power, manifested in their formation.

The work of thy fingers] What a view does this give of the majesty of God. The earth is nearly eight thousand English miles in diameter: but, to form an adequate conception of its magnitude, we must consider it in its superficial and solid contents. Upon the supposition that the earth's polar diameter is seven thousand nine hundred and forty miles, and its equatorial, seven thousand nine hundred and seventy-seven, (estimates considered to be very near approximations to the truth,) the whole superficies of the terrequeous globe will amount to about one hundred and ninety-eight millions, nine hundred and eighty thousand, seven hundred square miles; and its solid contents, in cubic miles, will be expressed by the following figures:—264,544,967,944, i. e. two hundred and sixty-four thousand, five hundred and forty-four millions, eight hundred and fifty-seven thousand, nine hundred and forty-four. Great as we have shown the bulk of the earth to be from the most accurate estimate of its diameters; it is but small when compared with the bulks of some of the other bodies in the solar system. The planet Herschel, or Georgium Sidus, known on the continent of Europe by the name of Uranus, is eighty times and a half greater than the earth; Saturn, nine hundred and ninety-five times greater; Jupiter, one thousand two hundred and eighty-one times greater; and the Sun, the most prodigious body in the system, one million three hundred and eighty-four thousand, four hundred and sixty-two times greater. The circumference of the sun contains not fewer than two millions, seven hundred and seventy-seven thousand English miles; and a degree of latitude, which on the earth amounts only to sixty-nine miles and a half, will on the sun (the circle being supposed in both instances to be divided into three hundred and sixty degrees) contain not less than about seven thousand seven hundred and forty miles, a quantity almost equal to the terrestrial axis. But the immense volume (in cubic miles) which the solar surface includes amounts to the following almost inconceivable quantity: 366,252,303,118,866,128, i. e. three hundred and sixty-six thousand two hundred and fifty-two billions, three hundred and three thousand one hundred and eighteen millions, eight hundred and sixty-six thousand, one hundred and twenty-eight. Notwithstanding the amazing magnitude of the sun, we have abundant reason to believe that some of the fixed stars are much larger; and yet we are told they are the work of God's fingers! What a hand, to move, form, and launch these globes! This expression is much more sublime than even that of the prophet, "who hath measured the waters in the hollow of His hand, and meted out the heavens with a span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure; and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance!" Isa. xl. 12. This is grand; but the heavens being the work of God's fingers, is yet more sublime.

The moon and the stars] The sun is not mentioned, because the heavens, (the moon, planets, and stars,) could not have appeared, had he been present. Those he wished to introduce because of their immense variety, and astonishing splendour; and, therefore, he skillfully leaves out the sun, which would have afforded him but one object, and one idea. To have mentioned him with the others would have been as ridiculous in astronomy, as the exhibition of the top and bottom of a vessel would be in perspective. Various critics have endeavoured to restore the sun to this place: and even Bishop Horstley says, "It is certainly strange that the sun should be omitted, when the moon and the stars are so particularly mentioned." But with great deference to him, and to Dr. Kenwick, who both show how the text may be mended, I say, it would be most strange had the Psalmist introduced the sun, for the reasons already assigned. The Spirit of God is always right:—our heads sometimes, our hearts seldom so.

Which thou hast ordained] arvno emenatah, which Thou hast prepared, and established. Made their respective spheres, and fitted them for their places. Space to matter, and matter to space; all adjusted in number, weight, and measure.

Verse 4. What is man] amr ru mah enash, what is wretched, miserable man;—man in his fallen state, full of infirmity, ignorance, and sin.

That thou art mindful of him] That Thou settest

Thy heart upon him,—keepest him continually in Thy merciful view.

And the son of man] u-ben Adam, and the son of Adam, the first great rebel; the fallen child of a fallen parent. See the Note on Job vii. 17. Some think eminent men are here intended. What is man in common;—what the most eminent men;—that Thou shouldst be mindful of them, or deign to visit them.

That thou visitest him?] By sending Thy Holy Spirit to convince him of sin, righteoussness, and judgment. It is by these visits that man is preserved in a salvable state. Were God to withhold them, there would be nothing in the soul of man but sin, darkness, hardness, corruption, and death.

Verse 5. Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels] The original is certainly very emphatic:—va-tichaserhu meil melohim, Thou hast lessened him for a little time from God. Or, Thou hast made him less than God for a little time. See these passages explained at large in the Notes on Heb. ii. 6, &c., which I need not repeat here.

Verse 6. Thou madest him to have dominion] Jesus Christ, who, being in the form of God, and equal with God, for a time emptied Himself, and made himself of no reputation;—was afterwards highly exalted, and had a name above every name. See the Notes referred to above, and those on Phil. ii. 6—9.

Thou hast put all things under his feet] Though the whole of the brute creation was made subject to Adam in his state of innocence; yet it could never be literally said of him, that God had put all things under his feet,—or that he had dominion over the work of God's hands; but all this is most literally true of our Lord Jesus; and to Him the apostle, Heb. ii. 6, &c., applies all these passages.

Verse 7. All sheep and oxen] All domestic animals, and those to be employed in agriculture.

Beasts of the field] All wild beasts, and inhabitants of the forest.

Verse 8. The fowl of the air] All these were given to man in the beginning;—and he has still a general dominion over them; for thus saith the Lord, "The fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon every BEAST of the EARTH, and upon every FOWL of the AIR, and upon all that MOVETH upon the EARTH, and upon all the FISHES of the SEA: into your hand are they delivered." Gen. ix. 2. To this passage the Psalmist most obviously refers.

Verse 9. O Lord our Lord] The Psalmist concludes as he began. Jehovah our prop and support; His name is excellent in all the earth. The name Jesus is celebrated in almost every part of the habitable globe: for His gospel has been preached, or is in the progress of being preached, through the whole world. Bibles and missionaries are now carrying His name, and proclaiming His fame, to the utmost nations of the earth.

The whole of this Psalm, and the seventh and eighth verses in particular, have been the subject of much spiritualization in ancient and modern times. I shall give two examples: one from the pious Bishop Horne; the other from the ancient Latino-Scottico-English Psalter, mentioned before.

That of Bishop Horne, on the 7th and 8th verses is as follows:—"Adam, upon his creation, was invested with sovereign dominion over the creatures, in words of the same import with these, Gen. i. 28, which are, therefore, here used, and the creatures particularized, to inform us that what the first Adam lost by transgression, the second Adam gained by obedience. That glory which was set above the heavens could not but be over all things upon the earth, and, accordingly, we hear our Lord saying, after His resurrection, 'All power is given unto me in heaven and earth, Matt. xxviii. 18. Nor is it a speculation unpleasing nor unprofitable to consider, that He who rules over the material world is Lord also of the intellectual or spiritual creation represented thereby.

"The souls of the faithful, lowly, and harmless, are the sheep of His pasture: those who, like oxen, are strong to labour in the church, and who by expounding the word of life tread out the corn for the nourishment of the people, own Him for their kind and beneficent Master. Nay, tempers, fierce and untractable as the wild beasts of the desert, are yet subject to his will. Spirits of the angelic kind that, like the bird of the air, traverse freely the superior region, move at his command; and these evil ones, whose habitation is in the deep abyss, even to the great Leviathan himself, all, all put under the feet of the King Messiah; who, because He humbled Himself, and became obedient to death, was, therefore, highly exalted; and had a name given Him above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, whether of things in heaven, or things on earth, or things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus is Lord to the glory of God the Father." Phil. ii. 8, &c. Thus far the pious bishop.

I shall now give, as a singular curiosity, the whole Psalm, with its translation and paraphrase, from the ancient MS. already mentioned; inserting, first, the Latin Text; next, the translation; and, thirdly, the paraphrase. The Latin Text seems to be the old Itala, or Antichironymian; at least, it has readings which have been thought peculiar to that Version.

The Reader will no doubt be struck with the remarkable agreement between the pious bishop of Norwich, and this ancient translator and paraphrast; particularly on the 7th and 8th verses. The language also is in several respects singular. The participle of the present tense, which we terminate with ing, is here almost always terminated with and. So spekkand, sovkand, gyfand, sufferand, traveland, for speaking, sucking, giving, suffering, travelling, &c.

As the participle signifies the continuance of action; the termination and seems much more proper than ing, spekk-and, i. e. continuing to speak; gyf-and, continuing to give; suffer-and, suffer more; travel-and, travel on, &c. There are some words in this ancient MS. which I have met no where else.

ANALYSIS OF THE EIGHTH PSALM.

This Psalm begins and ends with a general proposition, figured by an exclamation, which contains an admiration; for he admires what he cannot perfectly comprehend. O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens. Such is the glory of Thy Divinity, power, and goodness, that it fills not only the earth, but transcends the very heavens, in which angels and blessed spirits, though they know much more than we on earth, yet cannot comprehend Thy Majesty which fills all, and exceeds all.

This general proposition being premised, the prophet descends to some particular instances, in which the excellence of God's name particularly appears; and he mentions three: I. Infants. II. The heavens with the moon and stars. III. Man himself.

I. The excellence of God's power, Divinity, and goodness, appears in infants. Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast ordained strength. 1. The sucking of babes, and speaking of young children, are evident demonstrations of God's excellent name;—for who taught the babe to suck, or the dumb infant to speak, but the Lord our Governor? 2. The children that cried hosanna in the temple, struck with the miracles of our Lord, while the priests, through envy, were dumb. 3. Or by babes may be meant such as the worldly wise repute no better than children and fools. By simple prophets, ignorant fishermen, humble confessors, and faithful martyrs, hath He stilled the enemy and the avenger; confounded the wisest philosophers, and stopped the mouths of devils.

II. The next instance in which the glory and excellence of God's name appears, is the heavens, the moon and the stars: these are the works of His fingers; and therefore called Thy heavens; whose amplitude is great, order and orbs wonderful, beauty admirable, matter durable, and motions various yet stable; together with the stars whose multitude is innumerable, magnitude vast and various, order admirable, and influences secret and wonderful. The varying, yet regular and constant course of the moon, her changes, phases, and influences on the earth and the waters, on men and other animals. All these have been ordained by the all-wise God; and the earth and its inhabitants are receiving continual benefits from them.

When I consider these things, then I say to myself:— III. What is man that thou art mindful of him? or the son of man that thou visitest him? This is the Psalm-

12 * When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them: he forgetteth not the cry of the * humble.

13 Have mercy upon me, O LORD; consider my trouble which I suffer of them that hate me, thou that liftest me up from the gates of death:

14 That I may show forth all thy praise in the gates of the daughter of Zion: I will * rejoice in thy salvation.

15 * The heathen are sunk down in the pit that they made: in the net which they hid is their own foot taken.

Verse 11. Declare among the people his doings] It is the duty of all those who have received the salvation of God, to recommend Him and His salvation to the whole circle of their acquaintances. Christians, so called, when they meet, seldom speak about God! Why is this? Because they have nothing to say.

Verse 12. When he maketh inquisition for blood] This not only applies to the Canaanites, Moabites, Ammonites, and Philistines, who shed the blood of God's people unjustly; but to all the nations of the earth, who, to enlarge their territory, increase their wealth, or extend their commerce, have made destructive wars. For the blood which such nations have shed, their blood shall be shed. If man should make no inquisition for this iniquitously spilt blood, God will do it, for He remembers them; and the cry of the humbled distressed people, driven to distraction and ruin by such wars, is not forgotten before him.

Verse 13. Have mercy upon me, O LORD] David having laid down the preceding maxims, now claims his part in their truth. I also am in trouble, through the unjust dealings of my enemies: I am brought to the gates of death; have mercy on me, and lift me up; that, being saved from the gates of death, I may show forth Thy praise in the gates of the daughter of Zion. The gates of death—an open grave,—leading to a yawning hell. The gates of the daughter of Zion,—all the ordinances of God, by which the soul is helped forward to heaven.

Verse 15. The heathen are sunk down in the pit] See on Psa. vii. 15.

Verse 16. The Lord is known by the judgment] It is not every casualty that can properly be called a judgment of God. Judgment is His strange work;—but when He executes it, His hand is plainly to be seen. There are no natural causes to which such calamities can be legally attributed.

The wicked is snared in the work of his own hands] There is nothing that a wicked man does that is not against his own interest. He is continually doing himself harm, and takes more pains to destroy his soul than the righteous man does to get his saved unto eternal life. This is a weighty truth; and the Psalmist adds, Higgaion, selah; "Meditate on this, mark it well." See on Psa. iii. 2. Some think that it is a direction to the musicians, something like our Presto, Largo, Vivace, Allegro,—"Play brisk and boldly! beat away! and let sense and sound accompany each other."

Verse 17. The wicked shall be turned into hell לשואל le-sheolah, headlong into hell, down into hell. The original is very emphatic.

All the nations that forget God] That will not live in His fear. There are both nations and individuals who, though they know God, forget Him; that is, are unmindful of Him; do not acknowledge Him in their designs, ways, and works. These all are to be thrust down into hell. Reader, art thou forgetful of thy Maker, and of Him who died for thee?

Verse 18. The needy shall not always be forgotten] The needy, and the poor, whose expectation is from the Lord, are never forgotten, though sometimes their deliverance is delayed for the greater confusion of their enemies, the greater manifestation of God's mercy, and the greater benefit to themselves.

Verse 19. Arise, O LORD] Let this be the time in which Thou wilt deliver Thy poor people under oppression and persecution.

Verse 20. Put them in fear שירת מורה להם shithah Yehovah moreh lahem, O LORD, place a teacher among them, that they may know they also are accountable creatures, grow wise unto salvation, and be prepared for a state of blessedness. Several MSS. read מורה moreh, fear; but, teacher, or legislator, is the reading of all the Versions except the Chaldee. Coverdale has hit the sense, translating thus:—O LORD, set a Schoolmaster over them; and the old Psalter,—Sett LORD a bringer of Law aboven them.

16 The Lord is * known by the judgment which he executeth: the wicked is snared in the work of his own hands. * Higgaion. * Selah.

17 The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations * that forget God.

18 * For the needy shall not always be forgotten: * the expectation of the poor shall not perish for ever.

19 Arise, O LORD; let not man prevail: let the heathen be judged in thy sight.

20 Put them in fear, O LORD: that the nations may know themselves to be but men. Selah.

That the nations may know themselves to be but men] אנוש enosh; Let the Gentiles be taught by the preaching of Thy Gospel that they are sinful and helpless, and stand in need of the salvation which Christ has provided for them. This may be the spirit of the petition. And this is marked by the extraordinary note, Selah; "Mark well, take notice." So the term may be understood.

This whole Psalm, says Dr. Horsley, seems naturally to divide into three parts. The first ten verses make the first part; the six following the second; and the remaining four the third.

The first part is prophetic of the utter extermination of the irreligious persecuting faction. The prophecy is delivered in the form of an Exultatio, or song of victory, occasioned by the promise given in the fifteenth verse of the tenth Psalm: and through the whole of this Song the Psalmist, in the height of a prophetic enthusiasm, speaks of the threatened vengeance as accomplished.

The second part opens with an exhortation to the people of God to praise him as the Avenger of their wrongs, and the watchful Guardian of the helpless: and, as if the flame of prophetic joy which the oracular voice had lighted in the Psalmist's mind, was beginning to die away, the strain is gradually lowered, and the notes of triumph are mixed with supplication and complaint, as if the mind of the Psalmist were fluttering between things present and to come, and made itself alternately present to his actual condition and his future hope.

In the third part the Psalmist seems quite returned from the prophetic enthusiasm to his natural state; and closes the whole Song with explicit, but cool, assertions of the future destruction of the wicked, and the deliverance of the persecuted saints; and prays for the event.

ANALYSIS OF THE NINTH PSALM.

This Psalm consists of five chief parts:—

I. David's thanksgiving, ver. 1, 2, amplified and continued till the tenth verse.

II. An exhortation to others to do the like, ver. 11, and the reason of it, ver. 12.

III. A petition for himself, ver. 13, and the reason of it, ver. 14.

IV. A remembrance of God's mercy in the overthrow of his enemies, for which he sings a song of triumph from ver. 15 to ver. 19.

V. A prayer in the conclusion against the prevalence of the heathen, ver. 19, 20.

I. His profession of praise is set down in the two first verses, in which we may perceive,—

1. The matter of it, with the extent: All the marvellous works of God.

2. That he varies the synonyms. I will praise thee;—I will shew forth;—I will be glad and rejoice in thee;—I will sing praise to thy name, O thou most High! in which there is a climax.

3. The principle whence this praise flowed: 1. Not from the lips, but from the heart. 2. From the whole heart,—I will praise thee with my whole heart.

This he amplifies from the cause, which is double:

1. That which outwardly moved him, and gave him a just occasion to do so; the overthrow of his enemies:—When my enemies are turned back;—who were not overcome by strength or valour, but by the presence and power of God.

2. They shall fall and perish at Thy presence. Thou wert the chief cause of this victory; and, therefore, deserveest the thanks. Of this the prophet makes a full narrative in the two next verses, setting God as it were upon the bench, and doing the office of Judge. 1. Thou maintainest my right, and my cause. 2. Thou sittest on the throne judging right. 3. Thou hast rebuked the heathen. 4. Thou hast destroyed the wicked; thou hast put out their name for ever. In a word, Thou art a just Judge, and defendest the innocent, and punishest their oppressors; and, therefore, I will praise thee.

3. And then, upon the confidence of God's justice and PSALM X.

The Psalmist complains to God of the oppressions which the poor suffer from the wicked men, whom he describes as the hater of the poor, 1, 2; proud, 3; one who will not seek God, 4; and is regardless of his judgments, 5; self-confident, 6; blasphemous and disobedient, 7; strives by subtlety and treachery to destroy the poor, 8-10; and supposes that God is regardless of his conduct, 11. The Psalmist calls earnestly on God to preserve the poor and humble, and cast down the oppressor, 12-15. He foresees that his prayer is heard; that judgment will be executed, and the poor delivered, 16-18.

power, he exults over his enemies.—O thou enemy, destructions are come to a perpetual end. Thy power of hurting and destroying is taken away;—the fortified cities in which thou dwellest are overthrown; and their memory and thine are perished.

4 Next, to make his assertion clearer; to the enemies' power he opposes that of God; his kingdom to their kingdom. But the Lord, in the administration of His kingdom, is, 1. Eternal. The Lord shall endure for ever. 2. His office to be Judge. He hath prepared his throne for judgment. 3. He is a universal Judge. He shall judge the whole world. 4. He is a just Judge. He shall judge in righteousness; he shall minister judgment to the people in uprightness. 5. He is a merciful Judge. For the Lord will be a refuge for the oppressed; a refuge in time of trouble.

6. The effect of this execution of justice. His people are encouraged:—who are here described, 1. By their knowing Him. They that know thy name. 2. By trusting in Him. Will put their trust in thee. 3. By their seeking Him. For thou, Lord, hast not forgotten them that seek thee.

II. An exhortation to others to praise God. Sing praises to the Lord. The reason of this,—1. He dwells in Zion. 2. He works graciously there. Sing praises to the Lord that dwells in Zion; declare among the people his doings. 3. That will destroy their oppressors, and avenge their blood. When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them; he forgetteth not the cry of the humble.

III. A petition for himself. Have mercy on me, O Lord; consider my trouble, &c., for which he gives these reasons:—

1. That I may show forth thy praise.
2. All thy praise.
3. In the gates of the daughter of Zion.
4. That I may do it with joyful lips.
5. Which I will do. I will rejoice in thy salvation.
IV. Then he sings forth his song of triumph over his enemies.

1. The heathen are sunk down in the pit they have made.
2. In the net which they hid are their own feet taken.
3. This is the Lord's work. Though wicked men did doubt before of His providence and justice; yet now the Lord was known by the judgment which he executed.

4. For the wicked was snared in the work of his own hands. Effugatio, Selah. Which is a thing exceedingly to be meditated upon, and not forgotten.

5. The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the people that forget God. 1. Their breath is in their nostrils, and die they must. 2. If they repent not, they shall suffer eternal punishment. 3. However this may be, God's goodness shall be manifested to the innocent. The expectation of the poor shall not perish for ever.

V. A prayer in the conclusion against the prevalence of the Heathen, in which he shows great earnestness and faith.

1. Arise, O Lord; let not man prevail.
2. Let the heathen be judged in thy sight.
3. Put them in fear, O Lord! Now they fear nothing, being in their height of prosperity. They are insolent and proud; manifest Thy divine presence to their terror.
4. For, then, they will know themselves to be but men, infirm and mortal creatures; and not insult over Thy people, and glory on their own strength and prosperity.

The original word has been translated teacher, lawgiver, governor. Then send them, 1. A teacher, who may make them wise unto salvation. 2. A lawgiver, who shall rule them in Thy fear. 3. A governor, that shall tame and reduce to order their fierce and savage nature. Let the nations be converted unto Thee. This will be the noblest triumph. Let their hearts be conquered by Thy mercy.

4 The wicked, through the pride of his countenance, will not seek after God: God is not in all his thoughts.

5 His ways are always grievous; thy judgments are far above out of his sight; as for all his enemies, he puffeth at them.

6 He hath said in his heart, I shall not be moved: I for I shall never be in adversity.

7 His mouth is full of cursing, and deceit, and fraud: under his tongue is mischief, and vanity.

8 He sitteth in the lurking-places of the villages: in the secret places doth he murder the innocent: his eyes are privily set against the poor.

And thus the Psalm will conclude, as it began. To the Conqueror, on whose vesture and thigh is the name written KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

NOTES ON PSALM X.

Verse 1. Why standest thou afar off, O Lord] This Psalm makes a part of the preceding in the Vulgate and Septuagint; and in four of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. It seems to belong to the time of the Captivity, or the return of the captives. It was probably made in reference to Sennacherib, and the other enemies of the Jews. There is a great similarity between this and the xiith, the xivth, and the xxvth, and the liiid. In these, as Calmet remarks, we find the same complaints, the same sentiments, and almost the same expressions.

God is represented here as standing at some distance, beholding the oppression of His people, and yet apparently disregarding it.

Verse 2. The wicked in his pride] On no principle of nature or reason can we account for a wicked man persecuting a humble follower of God, because of his religion. The devil hates godliness; and the wicked man hates it also, because the devil is in his heart.

Verse 3. Boasteth of his heart's desire] Boasts among his fellows how often he has gratified such and such passions, in such and such circumstances. This shows the excess of a depraved and embriuted spirit. He who can boast of his iniquity, is in the broad road to perdition. Should such a one repent, and turn to God, it will be equal to any miracle.

Blesseth the covetous, whom the Lord abhorreth] Or, he abhorreth God. Those who are like himself he commends, and with them he associates; and they abhor God; they have a mortal hatred against every thing that is holy; and they are under the full influence of that carnal mind, which is enmity to the Lord.

Verse 4. Will not seek after God] He is too proud to bend his knee before his Judge: he is too haughty to put on sackcloth, and lay himself in the dust; though, without deep repentance and humiliation, he must without doubt, perish everlastingly.

Verse 5. His ways are always grievous] Or, he is travelling in pain to bring forth iniquity at all times. He is full of lust, or irregular and unholy desires; he conceives, and brings forth sin; and sin being finished, time, place, and opportunity occurring, death is soon brought forth.

Thy judgments are far above out of his sight] He is so blinded with sin, that he cannot see the operations of God's hand.

He puffeth at them] He whistles at them; insults God, and despises men. He overthrows them with His breath; He has only to give orders, and they are destroyed. Bring me the head of Giasfer, said an Asiatic despot. The head was immediately brought! No trial, no judge, no jury; but the despot's will and caprice.

Verse 6. I shall not be moved] I have whatever I covet. I hold whatsoever I have gotten. I have money and goods to procure me every gratification I wish.

Verse 7. His mouth is full of cursing, and deceit, and fraud] What a finished character! A blasphemer, a deceitful man, and a knave!

Verse 8. He sitteth in the lurking-places] In this and the following verse there appears to be an allusion to espionage, or setting of spies on a man's conduct; or to the conduct of an assassin, or private murderer. He sitteth in lurking places;—in secret places:—his eyes (spies) are privily set. He lieth in wait secretly;—he doth catch the poor, when he draweth him into his net. He is like a hunter that lays his traps and gins; digs his pits; sets his nets; and when the prey falls into them, then he destroys its life.

9 * He lieth in wait ^a secretly as a lion in his den: he lieth in wait to catch the poor: he doth catch the poor, when he draweth him into his net.

10 ^b He croucheth, and humbleth himself, that the poor may fall ^c by his strong ones.

11 He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten: ^d he hideth his face; he will never see it.

12 Arise, O LORD; O God, ^e lift up thine hand; forget not the ^f humble.

13 Wherefore doth the wicked contemn God? he hath said in his heart, Thou wilt not require it.

14 Thou hast seen it; for thou beholdest mischief and spite, to requite it with thy hand: the poor ^g committeth ^h himself unto thee; ⁱ thou art the helper of the fatherless.

15 ^k Break thou the arm of the wicked and the evil man: seek out his wickedness till thou find none.

16 ^l The LORD is King for ever and ever: the heathen are perished out of his land.

17 LORD, thou hast heard the desire of the humble: thou wilt ^m prepare ⁿ their heart, thou wilt cause thine ear to hear:

18 To ^o judge the fatherless and the oppressed, that the man of the earth may no more ^p oppress.

Verse 10. He croucheth] Of the scoffing, mocking, insulting, and insidious conduct of Samballat, Tobiah, and Geshem, the ivth and vith chapters of Nehemiah give abundant proof; and possibly the allusion is to them. The lion squats down, and gathers himself together, that he may make the greater spring.

Verse 11. God hath forgotten] He has cast off this people, and He will never more re-establish them. So Samballat thought.

Verse 12. Arise, O LORD] Hear their reproaches; see their guile; and consider Thy oppressed people. Lift up thine hand—threaten them, that they may desist and repent. If they repent not, let them be punished.

Verse 13. Wherefore doth the wicked contemn God] How is it that the Lord permits such persons to triumph in their iniquity? The long-suffering of God leadeth them to repentance.

Verse 14. Thou hast seen it] Nothing can escape Thy notice. Thou hast not forgotten Thy justice, though judgment is not speedily executed on an evil work. But Thou wilt requite it with thy hand. By Thy power Thou wilt cast down and destroy the wicked.

The poor committeth himself unto thee] To Thee he has given up his body, his soul, and his cause; with the full conviction that Thou, who art the Helper of the fatherless, wilt not forget him.

Verse 15. Break thou the arm] Destroy his power, deprive him of his influence, that he may be no longer able to oppress.

Seek out his wickedness till thou find none] All his public haunts and private ways shall be investigated;—Thou wilt bring all his villainies to light, and continue to inflict punishment, where there is a crime to punish. Or, "Continue to judge and punish transgressors, till not one is to be found." This agrees with the following verse:—

Verse 16. The LORD is King for ever] He has, and ever will have, the supreme power.

The heathen are perished out of his land] They are all either cut off, or converted. This may refer to the Canaanites. What a mercy that we can say this of our own country:—once it was entirely heathen; now not one heathen family in the whole land.

Verse 17. LORD, thou hast heard] Thou hast not permitted Thy tempted and afflicted followers to pray in vain.

Thou wilt prepare their heart] See the economy of the grace of God:—1. God prepares the heart;—2. Suggests the prayer;—3. Hears what is prayed;—4. Answers the petition. He who has got a cry in his heart after God, may rest assured that that cry proceeded from a Divine preparation, and that an answer will soon arrive. No man ever had a cry in his heart after salvation, but from God. He who continues to cry, shall infallibly be heard.

Verse 18. That the man of the earth may no more oppress] I believe the Hebrew will be better translated thus:—"That he may not add any more to drive away the wretched man from the land." Destroy the influence of the tyrant; and let him not have it again in his power to add even one additional act of oppression to those which he has already committed.

How many, for the sake of their religion, and because they would serve God with a pure conscience, have, by wicked lords, proud and arrogant landowners, been driven off their farms, turned out of their houses, deprived of their employments, and exposed to wretchedness! While they served the devil, and were regardless of their souls, they had quiet and peaceable possession! but when they turned to the Lord, and became sober and industrious, attended the means of grace, read their bible, and were frequent in prayer, then the vile man of the earth drove them from their dwellings! In the sight of such Philistines piety towards God is the highest of crimes. What a dreadful account must these give to the Judge of the fatherless and the oppressed!

ANALYSIS OF THE TENTH PSALM.

This Psalm divides itself into three parts:

I. A complaint against the enemies of the godly.

II. A narration of the enemies' malice.

III. A petition to be delivered from them.

I. 1. He complains of God's absence, which is quickened by the question, 1. Why standest thou afar off? 2. Why hidest thou thyself in times of troubles? ver. 1.

II. He complains of the enemies. The wicked in his pride doth persecute the poor.

These he describes by eight characters:

1. Insolence, pride; and the effect, persecution of good men. Having acquired dignity, places of honour, and riches, they become persecutors, they conspire to oppress good men. Let them be taken in their own devices, ver. 2.

2. The wicked man glories in mischief, which is a sign of extreme malice. The wicked boasteth of his heart's desire, ver. 3.

3. He applauds and encourages others in their rapine and spoil, to which they are moved by their covetousness. He bleaseth the covetous, ver. 3.

4. He contemns God and man.—I. MAN.—He never thinks of being called to an account. God's judgments are out of his sight; and he puffs at his enemies. 2. GOD. Him he reverences not: he will not seek after God; neither is he in all his thoughts, 4, 5.

5. He lives in profane security. He saith in his heart, I shall never be moved; I shall never be in adversity; I am elevated beyond the reach of misfortune, ver. 6.

6. He is full of falsehood and deceit. His mouth is full of cursing, deceit, and fraud. He will not stick at an oath. He will curse himself; and take God to witness in his exactions, that he is doing nothing but what is right, ver. 7.

7. He is cruel. See the 9th and 10th verses where he is compared to a thief, an archer, an assassin, a lion, &c. He is bad in heart, ver. 6, in tongue, ver. 7, in work, ver. 8, 10, he is altogether bad.

8. He is a close Atheist. He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten; he hideth his face, and will never see it: which is the cause of his cruelty, falsehood, security, &c., ver. 11.

III. THE THIRD part is a petition to be freed from the wicked man. Arise, O LORD, lift up thy hand, forget not the humble, ver. 12. To induce God thus to act, he uses two arguments:—

1. That thereby God would assert His own glory:—For why should the wicked be suffered thus to blaspheme? Wherefore doth the wicked contemn God?—He hath said in his heart, Thou wilt not require it, ver. 13.

2. The second argument is taken from God's nature, and work. 1. In punishing wicked men. 2. In defending the helpless. Surely thou hast seen it; for thou beholdest mischief and spite to requite it, &c., ver. 14.

Then he returns to his prayer; and enforces his second argument taken from the justice and office of God:—

1. That He would deprive the wicked of his power and strength. Break thou the arm of the wicked;—seek out his wickedness till thou find none, ver. 15. Let none escape;—let them appear no more.

2. That He would hear and defend the righteous. Be to Thy people what thou hast been in times past. 1. The LORD is King for ever and ever. 2. He had expelled the Canaanites before them. The heathen are perished out of the land. 3. Thou hast heard the desire of the humble, ver. 16, 17.

Upon which he concludes with profession of strong confidence:—

1. Thou wilt prepare the heart of the humble.

2. Thou wilt cause thine ear to hear. 1. To the safety of the oppressed. To judge the fatherless and the poor, ver. 18. 2. To the ruin of the oppressor. That the man of the earth may no more oppress. That he may have neither power nor influence left by which he may be a plague to the upright, or a supporter of infidelity, ver. 18.

PSALM XI.

David's friends advise him to flee to the wilderness from Saul's fury, 1, 2, 3. He answers that having put his trust in God, knowing that the forsaken not those who forsake in flight, and that he will punish the ungodly, he is perfectly satisfied that he shall be in safety, 4-7.

IN the LORD put I my trust: how I say ye to my soul, Flee as a bird to your mountain?

For lo, the wicked bend their bow, they make ready their arrow upon the string, that they may privily shoot at the upright in heart.

NOTES ON PSALM XI.

The inscription is, To the chief musician, a Psalm of David. By the chief musician we may understand the master-singer; the leader of the band; the person who directed the choir: but we know that the word has been translated To the Conqueror; and some deep and mystical senses have been attributed to it, with which I believe the Text has nothing to do.

Verse 1. In the Lord put I my trust: how say ye! Some of David's friends seem to have given him this advice when they saw Saul bent on his destruction:—Flee as a bird to your mountain;—you have not a moment to lose; your ruin is determined; escape for your life; get off as swiftly as possible to the hill-country, to some of those inaccessible fortresses best known to yourself; and hide yourself there from the cruelty of Saul. To which advice he answers,—In the Lord put I my trust;—Shall I act as if I were conscious of evil, and that my wicked deeds were likely to be discovered? Or, shall I act as one who believes he is forsaken of the protection of the Almighty? No, I put my trust in Him; and I am sure I shall never be punished.

Verse 2. For, lo, the wicked bend their bow] Perhaps these are more of the words of his advisers. Every thing is ready for thy destruction;—the arrow that is to pierce thy heart is already set on the bow-string;—and the person who hopes to despatch thee is concealed in ambush.

Verse 3. If the foundations be destroyed] Saul, who is the vicegerent of God, has cast aside his fear, and now regards neither truth nor justice, a righteous man has no security for his life. This is at present the case; therefore, flee! They have utterly destroyed the foundations (of truth and equity,) what can righteousness now effect? Kimchi supposes this refers to the priests who were murdered by Doeg, at the command of Saul. The priests are destroyed, the preservers of knowledge and truth; the Divine worship is overthrown;—and what can the righteous man work? These I think to be also the words of David's advisers. To all of which he answers:

Verse 4. The Lord is in his holy temple] He is still to be sought and found in the place where He has registered His name. Though the priests be destroyed, the God in whose worship they were employed, still lives; and is to be found in His temple by His upright worshippers. And He tries the heart and the reins of both sinners and saints. Nothing can pass without His notice. I may expect His presence in the temple; He has not promised to meet me in the mountain.

Verse 5. The Lord trieth the righteous] He does not abandon them;—He tries them to show their faithfulness, and He afflicts them for their good.

His soul hateth] The wicked man must ever be abhorred of the Lord; and the violent man, the destroyer and murderer, his soul hateth. An expression of uncommon strength and energy: all the perfections of the Divine nature have such in abomination.

Verse 6. Upon the wicked he shall rain] This is a manifest allusion to the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah.

Shadows] Judgments shall fall upon them suddenly and unexpectedly.

Fire] Such as shall come immediately from God, and be unextinguishable.

Brimstone] Malted by the fire for their drink! This shall be the portion of their cup.

An horrible tempest] רוח רעה סערה, "The spirit of terror." Suffering much, and being threatened with more, they shall be filled with confusion and dismay. My old MS. has gust of stormis. See at the end. Or, the blast of destructions. This may refer to the horribly suffocating Arabian wind, called Sams Smum.

Mohammed, in describing his hell, said, "The wicked shall drink nothing there but hot stinking water; breathe

3 If the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?

4 The LORD is in his holy temple, the LORD's throne is in heaven: his eyes behold, his eyelids try, the children of men.

5 The LORD trieth the righteous: but the wicked, and him that loveth violence; his soul hateth.

6 Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest: this shall be the portion of their cup.

7 For the righteous LORD loveth righteousness; his countenance doth behold the upright.

The portion of their cup] Cup is sometimes put for plenty; for abundance;—but here it seems to be used to express the quantum of sorrow and misery which the wicked shall have on the earth. See Ps. lxxv. 8. Isa. li. 17, 21, 22, 23. Jer. xxv. 15, xlix. 12. Lara. iv. 21, 22. It is also used in reference to the afflictions of the righteous. Matt. xx. 22, xxvi. 39, 42. John xviii. 11.

We find a similar metaphor among the heathens. The following, from Homer, Il. xxiv. ver. 525, is in point:—

Ὅς γὰρ ἐπιλωσάντο θεοὶ δειλοῖσι βροτοῖσι, Ζεὺς ἄχρηστους· αὐτοὶ δ' ἴ' ἀπέθυσαν εἰσι, Δαοὶ γὰρ τε νῖβοι κατακταῖται ἐν ἴσσοι σὺνδὲ Δαῖρον, διὰ δόδωκα κέκων' ἴτερος δὲ σέων· Ἄ μιν κάρηϊες φῶν Ζεὺς περικταρῶνος, Ἄλλοτε μὲν το κέκωθ' ὄψε κούεται, ἄλλοτε δ' ἐσθλή:

Such is, alas! the god's severe decree, They, only they are blest, and only free. Two terms by Jove's high throne have ever stood, The sinner of evil one, and one of good. From thence the cup of mortal man he fills; Blessings to those; to those distribute ill. To make the better both; the wretch decreed To taste the bitter, is curst indeed. Pope.

Verse 7. The righteous LORD loveth righteousness.] He loves that which resembles Himself. His countenance, His face, is ever open and unclothed to the upright. They always enjoy His salvation, and know that He is pleased with them.

The preceding verse my old MS. translates and paraphrases thus:—

He sal rayne on synful, snarex, fyre, brimstane, and gost of stormis.

Paraph.—He sal rayne on synful in this world, snarex, that es wiked Lare: fyre is covatyve: brimstane; that es stynk of il werkes: and gost of stormis, that es a stormy though that es withoutyn rest in Ihesu Crist, and as traveld with the wynd of the devyl: Or the gost of stormis, es the last departyng of synful fra ryghtwis men, and there fyre, brimston, storm, er part of the chalyce of thaim: that es, thai ar thair part in pyne. He calx thair pyne a Cop, for ilk dampned man sal drynk of the sorow of Hel, eifir the mesage of hys Syn. Sythen the fyre of lybery, and covatyv wastes al the gyde that thai had done: eifirward for stynk of il werkes thai er castyn fra Crist, and al his Halows, and than er in sentence of dome; as in a grete storme dryven in, til a prite of Hel, to bryn in fyre withoutyn ende. This es the entent of this wers.

ANALYSIS OF THE ELEVENTH PSALM.

This Psalm is composed dialoguewise, betwixt David and those his counsellors that persuaded him to fly to some place of safety from Saul's fury; which, if he did not, he was in a desperate condition. The Psalm has two parts.

I. He relates his counsellors' words, ver. 1, 2, 3.

II. To which he returns his answer, ver. 1, and confirms it, ver. 4-7.

I. You, my counsellors, whether of good or bad will I know not, tempt me, that giving up all hope of the kingdom, I go into perpetual banishment. Such you say, is Saul's fury against me. Thus, then, ye advise, Flye as a bird to your mountain: and your arguments are,—

1. The greatness of the danger I am in,—For lo, the wicked bend their bow.

2. The want of aid; there is no hope of help,—For the foundations are cast down. Saul has broken all the leagues and covenants he has made with you. He has slain the priests with the sword; has taken thy fortresses; laws subverted. If thou stay, perish thou must: some righteous men, it is true, are left;—but what can the righteous do?

II. To these, their arguments and counsel, David returns his answer in a sharp reprehension. I tell you,

1. I trust in God: How say you then to my soul. And he gives his reasons for it from the sufficiency and efficiency of God.

1. You say the foundations are cast down; yet I despair not, for God is sufficient.

1. Present in his holy temple—He can defend.

2. He is a great King, and His throne is in heaven.

3. Nothing is hidden from Him;—His eyes behold, and his eyelids, &c.

4. He is a just God, and this is seen in His proceedings both to the just and the unjust. 1. He trieth the righteous, by a fatherly and gentle correction. 2. But the wicked, and him that loveth violence, his soul hateth.

These two last propositions he expounds severally, and begins with the wicked.

1. Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, &c. 1. He shall rain upon them when they least think of it, even in the midst of their jollity; as rain falls on a fair day. 2. Or, He shall rain down the vengeance when He sees good; for it rains not always. Though he defer it, yet it will rain. 3. The punishment shall come to their utter subversion, as the fire on Sodom, &c. 4. This is the portion of their cup; that which they must expect from Him.

2. But He does good to the just. For the righteous Lord loveth righteousness; his countenance doth behold the upright: He hears him good-will, and is careful to defend him.

On the whole, the Psalm shows, 1. That David had the strongest conviction of his own uprightness. 2. That he had the fullest persuasion that God would protect him from all his enemies, and give him a happy issue out of all his distresses.

NOTES ON PSALM XII.

The inscription to this Psalm is To the chief musician upon Sheminith, a Psalm of David. See on the title of Ps. vi. The Arabic has, "Concerning the end (of the world which shall happen) on the eighth day. A Prophecy relative to the Advent of the Messiah."

Some think that this Psalm was made when Doeg and the Ziphites betrayed David to Saul, See 1 Sam. xxii.

Verse 1. Help, Lord] Save me, O Lord; for merciful men fail, and faithful men have passed away from the sons of Adam. Make safe me, Lord; for holy falled, for leaved [s softastnes ita sons of men. Old MS.]

Verse 2. They speak vanity every one with his neighbour] They are false and hollow; they say one thing while they mean another; there is no trusting to what they say.

Flattering lips, and with a double heart do they speak] ¹ לב לב le b va le b, With a heart and a heart. They seem to have two hearts; one to speak fair words, and the other to invent mischief. The old MS. both translates and paraphrases curiously.

Trans.—Vayn spak (shan tll his neighbour: stoykll lips in bert, and thurg bert that spak.

*Paraph.—*Softastnes es lessed, and falsed waxes: and al so vayn spak ilkone to bygyle his neghbur; and many spendes thair tyme in vayne speche withoutyn profyte and gastely frute. And swykel, for that speke in kert and thurg kert; that es in dubil bert, qwen a fals man thynkes ane, and sais another, to desair hym that he spekes with.—This homely comment cannot be mended.

Verse 3. Proud things] ¹ גדולות גדולות gedoloth, great things; great swelling words both in their promises, and in their commendations.

Verse 4. Our lips are our own] Many think because they have the faculty of speaking, that therefore they may speak what they please.

Old MS.—The quik said, our toung we sal wyrcchip, our lippes er of us, qwas our Lorde? Tha Ypocrites worchepe thair toung; for thai hee tham self janglingly and settes in thaire pouste to do mykil thyng and grete; and thai rose tham that thair lippes that es thair facund and thair wyls er of tham self, nought of God, ne of haly menes lare; for thi thai say qwa es our Lord? that es, qwat es he to qwas rewle and conversacioun we sal be undir lout? and confourme us til? Als so to say, Thar es none.

Verse 5. For the oppression of the poor] This seems to refer best to the tribulations which the poor Israelites suffered while captives in Babylon. The Lord represents Himself as looking on and seeing their affliction; and, hearing their cry, He determines to come forward to their help.

Now will I arise] I alone delivered them into the hands of their enemies, because of their transgressions; I alone can and will deliver them from the hands of their enemies: and the manner of their deliverance shall show the power and influence of their God.

From him that puffeth at him] Here is much interpolation to make out a sense. Several of the Versions read, I will give him an open salvation. My work shall be manifest.

Verse 6. The words of the Lord are pure words] None of His promises shall fall to the ground: the salvation which He has promised shall be communicated.

Silver tried in a furnace of earth] A reference to the purification of silver by the cupel. This is a sort of instrument used in the purification of silver. It may be formed of a stout iron ring, or hoop, adjusted in width and depth to the quantum of silver to be purified, and rammed full of well-calcedined bone. The metal to be purified must be mingled with lead; and laid on the cupel, and exposed to a strong heat in an air-furnace. The impurities of the metal will be partly absorbed, and partly thrown off in fume. The metal will continue in a state of agitation till all the impurities are thrown off: it will then become perfectly still, no more motion appearing, which is the token that the process is completed; or, according to the words of the text, is seven times, that is, perfectly purified.

PSALM XIII.

This Psalm contains the sentiments of an afflicted soul that earnestly desires succour from the Lord. The Psalmist complains of delay, 1, 2. Prays for light and comfort because he finds himself on the brink of death, 3. Desires the revivings of his enemies, 4. Anticipates a favourable answer, and promises thanksgiving, 5, 6.

Verse 7. Thou shalt keep them—thou shalt preserve them] Instead of the pronoun them in these clauses several MSS., with the Septuagint, the Vulgate, and the Arabic, have us. The sense is equally good in both readings. God did bring forth the Israelites from Babylon, according to His word;—He separated them from that generation, and reinstated them in their own land, according to His word: and most certainly He has preserved them from generation to generation to the present day, in a most remarkable manner.

Verse 8. The wicked walk on every side] The land is full of them. When the vilest men are exalted; rather, As villany gains ground among the sons of Adam. See the Hebrew. The Vulgate has, In circuitu impij ambulat; oceanum altitudinem tuam multiplicabit filios hominum; which is thus translated and paraphrased in my old MS. : Trans.—In umgang taibst gas: estit tþ bectes tþu has multiplied the sons of man.

Paraph.—Us thu kepes; but wicked gas in umgang: that es, in covatyng of erdly gudes, that turnes with the whele of seven daies: in the qwilk covatyng, that ryn ay aboute; for thai sett nane endyng of thaire syn: and tharfor settes God na terme of thair pyne. bot sons of men that lyfs skilwisnes and in ryghtwaisnes, thu has multiplied, aftr thi beghnes in vertus; aftr the heghnes of thi counsail, thou has multiplied men bath il and gude; for na man may perfitey witt in erd, qwy God makes so many men, the qwilk he wote well sal be dampned: bot it es the privitye of his counsayle, so ryghtwis, that no thyng may be ryghtwisser.

In this we find a number of singular expressions, which, while they elucidate the Text, will not be uninteresting to the antiquary. Here, for instance, we see the true etymology of the words righteous, and righteousness, i. e. right wise and right wiseness. For we have it above as a noun, righteousness; as an adjective, righteous; and as an adjective, in the comparative degree, rightwisser: and we should have had it as an adverb rightwisly, had not the word skilwisly occurred to the author.

Righteousness is right wiseness, or that which is according to true wisdom. A righteous man is one who is right wise; properly instructed in Divine wisdom, and acts according to its dictates: and among them who act rightwisely, there are some who are rightwisser than others; and nothing can be rightwisser than ever to think and act according to the principles of that wisdom which comes from above.

Right, recht, rectus, straight, is opposed to wrong, from pfang, injury, and that from pnyngen, to twist. As rechtan, rektan signifies to direct; so pnyngen, wrangen, signifies to twist, or turn out of a straight or direct line. Right is straight, and wrong crooked. Hence the righteous man is one who goes straight forward, acts and walks by line and rule; and the unrighteous is he who walks in crooked paths, does what is wrong, and is never guided by true wisdom. Such a person is sometimes termed wicked, from the Anglo-Saxon wiccan, to act by witchcraft; (hence wicca, wicca, a witch,) that is, to renounce God and righteousness, and to give one's self up to the devil, which is the true character of a wicked man. Let him who readeth understand.

The wicked men are exalted] Were we to take this in its obvious sense, it would signify that at that time wickedness was the way to preferment, and good men the objects of persecution.

ANALYSIS OF THE TWELFTH PSALM.

- There are four parts in this Psalm:— I. A prayer, and the reason of it, ver. 1, 2. II. A prophecy of the fall of the wicked, ver. 3,—whose arrogance he describes, ver. 4. III. God's answer to the petition, with a promise full of comfort, ver. 5; ratified, ver. 6. IV. A petitory or affirmative conclusion:—Keep them; or a confident affirmation that God will keep them from the contagion of the wicked, ver. 7; of which there were too many, ver. 8.

I. The prayer,—which is very short; for he breaks in upon God with one word, Hoshiah! Help! Save, Lord! ver. 1. For which he gives two reasons:—

- 1. The scarcity of good men;—For the godly man ceaseth, &c. There is neither piety nor fidelity among men. 2. The great abundance of the wicked; the licentious times; the perfiduousness, hypocrisy, and dissimulation, of the men among whom he lived. They speak vanity every one with his neighbour, &c., ver. 2. They take no care to perform what they promise.

II. The prophecy. This shows the end of their dissembling;—The Lord shall cut off all flattering lips, ver. 3. These are described,

- 1. As proud boasters;—With our tongues will we prevail, &c. 2. As persons restrained by no authority;—Who is Lord over us? ver. 4. III. God's answer to the petition, Help, Lord! Is it so that the wicked are so numerous, so tyrannous, so proud, and so arrogant?

- 1. I will arise, saith the Lord. 2. I will not delay;—Now I will arise, ver. 5. 3. I will set him in safety, (my followers,) from him that puffeth, &c. 4. I am moved to this by his sighs and groans;—For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, &c., ver. 5. 5. And of this let no man doubt;—The words of the Lord are pure words. There is no more fallacy in the words of God than there is impurity in silver seven times refined, ver. 6.

IV. A petitory or affirmative conclusion;—Thou shalt keep them, O Lord;—or, O, keep them! The overflowings of wickedness are great.

- 1. Keep them: for, unless God keep them, they will be infected. 2. Keep them from this generation;—For they are a generation of vipers. 3. Keep them for ever;—For unless thou enable them to persevere, they will fall, ver. 7. 4. And keep them;—For the power, pride, and influence, of these impious men are very great. 1. The wicked walk on every side. As wolves they seek whom they may devour. 2. And wickedness is the way to preferment;—The vilest men are exalted, ver. 8.

Thy people call on Thee for help: they know Thou canst help; and, therefore, are they confident that Thou wilt help, because they know that Thou art good.

NOTES ON PSALM XIII.

There is nothing particular in the inscription. The Psalm is supposed to have been written during the Captivity; and to contain the prayers and supplications of the distressed Israelites, worn out with their long and oppressive bondage.

Verse 1. How long wilt thou forget me] The words w rot ad anah, to what length,—to what time; translated here How long! are four times repeated in the two first verses; and point out at once great dejection, and extreme earnestness of soul.

Hide thy face from me] How long shall I be destitute of a clear sense of Thy approbation.

Verse 2. Take counsel in my soul] I am continually framing ways and means of deliverance: but they all come to nought, because Thou comest not to my deliverance. When a soul feels the burthen and guilt of sin, it tries innumerable schemes of self-recovery; but they are all useless. None but God can speak peace to a guilty conscience.

Mine enemy be exalted] Satan appears to triumph while the soul lies under the curse of a broken law.

Verse 3. Consider and hear me] Rather, answer me. I have prayed;—I am seeking Thy face; I am lost without Thee;—I am in darkness;—my life draws nigh to destruction;—if I die unrepented, I die eternally. Lord, Lord, consider this; hear, and answer, for Thy name's sake.

Verse 4. Lest mine enemy say] Satan's ordinary method in temptation is to excite strongly to sin, to blind the understanding and inflame the passions: and, when he succeeds, he triumphs by insults and reproaches. None so ready then to tell the poor soul how deeply, disgracefully, and ungratefully, it has sinned! Reader, take heed!

When I am moved.] When moved from my steadfastness, and overcome by sin. O, what desolation is made by the fall of a righteous soul! Itself covered with darkness and desolation; infidels filled with scoffing; the church clad in mourning; the Spirit of God grieved; and Jesus crucified afresh, and put to an open shame! O God, save the pious Reader from such wreck and ruin!

Verse 5. But I have trusted in thy mercy.] Thou wilt not suffer me to fall:—or, if I have fallen,—wilt Thou not, for His sake who died for sinners, once more lift up the light of Thy countenance upon me?

My heart shall rejoice in thy salvation.] There is no true joy, but of the heart;—and the heart cannot rejoice, till all guilt is taken away from the conscience.

Verse 6. I will sing unto the Lord.] That heart is tuned to God's praise which has a clear sense of God's favour.

Because he hath dealt bountifully with me. ¹כי נתיב כי גמולו דתי, ²because he hath recompensed me. My sorrows were deep, long continued, and oppressive:—but in Thy favour is life. A moment of this spiritual joy is worth a year of sorrow! O, to what blessedness has this godly sorrow led! He has given me the oil of joy for the spirit of heaviness; and the garments of praise for mourning.

The old MS. Psalter, which I have so frequently mentioned and quoted, was written at least four hundred years ago; and written probably in Scotland, as it is in the Scottish dialect. That the writer was not merely a commentator, but a truly religious man, who was well acquainted with the travail of the soul, and that faith in the Lord Jesus Christ which brings peace to the troubled heart, is manifested from various portions of his comment. To prove this I shall, I think I may say, favour the Reader with another extract from this Psalm on the words How long wilt thou forget me, &c., ver. 1. I have only to observe, that with him a true penitent, one who is deeply in earnest for his salvation, is called a perfyte man,—i. e. one wholly given up to God.

How lang loch for gettes thu me in the endyng? How lang o way turnes thu thi face fro me? The voice of holy men that covaytes and yernes the comyng of Iehu Crist, that thai myght lyf with hym in ioy; and pleynaund thaim of delaying. And sais, Lord how lang for gettes thu me in the endyng? That I covayte to haf and hold. That es how lang delays thu me fra the syght of Iehu Crist, that es ryght endyng of myn entell. And how lang turnes thu thi face fra me? that es, quen wil thu gif me perfyte Knawing of the? This wordes may nane say souly, but a perfyte man or woman, that has gedryd to gydir al the desyres of thair Saule, and with the nayle of luf fested thaim in Iehu Crist. Sa thaim thynk one hour of the day war our lang to dwel fra hym; for thaim langes ay til hym; bot that that lufs nocht so, has no langyng that he come; for thair conscience sais thaim, that thei haf nocht lufed hym als thai suld have done.

The language of true Christian experience has been the same in all times and nations. But he that loveth not knoweth not God, for God is love: and to such this is strange language.

ANALYSIS OF THE THIRTIETH PSALM.

"This Psalm," says Bishop Nicholson, "is a fit prayer for a soul that is sensible of God's desertion."

It has three parts:—

I. A heavy and bitter complaint of God's absence, ver. 1, 2.
II. An earnest petition for God's return, ver. 3. The reason, ver. 4.

III. A profession of faith and confidence, with joy in God, accompanied with thanksgiving, ver. 5, 6.

I. He bitterly complains, and aggravates it.

1. That God had forgotten him. Wilt thou forget me?
2. That He hid His face from him. Wilt thou hide thy face?

3. That he was distracted with many cares what way to take, and what counsel to follow, to recover God's favour. I take counsel in my soul, having sorrow in my heart.

4. In the mean time, his enemy was exalted, triumphed, and insulted over him.

5. And, lastly, he complains of the delay, which is quickened by the erotica, (interrogation,) and anaphora, (beginning several sentences with the same words,) How long? How long? how long? What! for ever?

II. His petition, ver. 3. Of which there are three degrees opposed to the parts of his complaint, ver. 1, 2.

1. Look upon me;—or, consider me. Thou hast hitherto seemed to turn away Thy face: but once behold me, and give me a proof of Thy love.

2. Hear me. Thou hast seemed to have forgotten: but now, I pray Thee, remember me; and show that Thou dost not neglect my prayer.

3. Lighten my eyes. I have been vexed in my soul, and agitated various counsels to recover Thy favour: but do Thou instruct me, and illuminate me, what course I shall take.

That his petition might be the sooner heard, he urges many arguments:—

1. From that relation that was between him and God. O Lord my God, hear me!

2. From a bitter event that was likely to follow, if God heard him not. Let it sleep the sleep of death.

3. From another afflictive consequence:—the boasting and insult of his adversaries. Let my enemy say, I have prevailed against him; and those that trouble me rejoice when I am moved.

But although the answer was delayed, yet he does not despair;—for,

III. In the conclusion, he professes faith, joy, and thankfulness:—

1. His faith. I have trusted in thy mercy.

2. His joy. My heart shall joy in thy salvation.

3. His thankfulness. I will sing unto the Lord, because he hath dealt bountifully with me.

According to this scale, this Psalm can neither be read nor paraphrased without profit.

NOTES ON PSALM XIV.

There is nothing particular in the title; only it is probable that the word לוי le david, "Of David," is improperly prefixed; as it is sufficiently evident, from the construction of the Psalm, that it speaks of the Babylonish captivity. The author, whosoever he was, (some say Haggai, others Daniel, &c.) probably lived beyond the Euphrates. He describes here, in fervid colours, the iniquity of the Chaldeans. He predicts their terror, and destruction: he consoles himself with the prospect of a speedy return from his exile; and hopes soon to witness the reunion of the tribes of Israel and Judah. It may be applied to unbelievers in general.

Verse 1. The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God! ¹נבול nabal, which we render fool, signifies an empty fellow,—a contemptible person,—a villain. One who has a muddy head, and an unclear heart: and, in his darkness and folly, he says in his heart, There is no God. "And none," says one, "but a fool would say so." The word is not to be taken in the strict sense in which we use the term Atheist: that is, one who denies the being of a God, or confounds Him with matter. 1. There have been some, not many, who have denied the existence of God. 2. There are others who, without absolutely denying the Divine existence, deny his providence: that is, they acknowledge a Being of infinite power, &c., but give Him nothing to do, and no world to govern. 3. There are others, and they are very numerous, who, while they profess to acknowledge both, deny them in their heart, and live as if they were persuaded there was no God either to punish or reward.

They are corrupt.] They are in a state of putrescency,—and they have done abominable works: the corruption of their hearts extends itself through all the actions of their lives. They are a plague of the most deadly kind; propagate nothing but destruction; and, like their father the devil, spread far and wide the contagion of sin and death. Not one of them does good. He cannot, for he has no Divine influence; and he denies that such can be received.

Verse 2. The Lord looked down from heaven] Words spoken after the manner of men. From this glorious eminence God is represented as looking down upon the habitable globe, to see if there were any that did understand that there was a Supreme Being, the Governor and Judge of men; and, in consequence, seek God for his mercy, support, and defence.

Verse 3. They are all gone aside] They will not walk in the straight path. They seek crooked ways; and they have departed from truth, and the God of truth.

They are all together become filthy] וְכָל־עַמְּךָ־נֹעֲדָחִי—no-elachu. They are become sour and rancid;—a metaphor taken from milk that has fermented; and turned sour, rancid, and worthless.

There is none that doeth good, no, not one] This is not only the state of heathen Babylon; but the state of the whole inhabitants of the earth, till the grace of God changes their heart. By nature, and from nature, by practice, every man is sinful and corrupt. He feels no good:—He is disposed to no good;—he does no good. And even God Himself, who cannot be deceived, cannot find a single exception to this! Lord, what is man!

The Vulgate, the Roman copy of the Septuagint, the Æthiopic, and the Arabic, add those six verses here which are quoted by St. Paul, Rom. iii. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18. See the Notes on those passages; and see the Observations at the end of this Psalm.

Verse 4. Have all the workers of iniquity no knowledge] Is there not one of them who takes this dreadful subject into consideration! To their deeply fallen state they add cruelty;—they oppress and destroy the poor, without either interest or reason.

Who eat up my people as they eat bread] Ye make them an easy and unresisting prey. They have no power to oppose you; and, therefore, you destroy them. That this is the meaning of the expression is plain from the speech of Joshua and Caleb, relative to the Canaanites. Numb. xiv. 9. Neither fear ye the people of the land; for they are bread for us.

And call not upon the Lord] They have no defence; for they invoke not the Lord. They are all either Atheists, or idolaters.

Verse 5. There were they in great fear] This is a manifest allusion to the history of the Canaanitish nations: they were struck with terror at the sight of the Israelites; and by their allusion the Psalmist shows that a destruction, similar to that which fell upon them, should fall on the Babylonians. Several of the Versions add, from Psa. liii. 5, Where no fear was. They were struck with terror, where no real cause of terror existed. Their fears had magnified their danger.

For God is in the generation] They feared the Israelites, because they knew that the Almighty God was among them.

Verse 6. Ye have shamed the counsel of the poor] Instead of וְכָל־עַמְּךָ־נֹעֲדָחִי, "Ye have shamed," Bishop Horsley proposes to read וְכָל־עַמְּךָ־נֹעֲדָחִי and reads the clause thus:—"The counsel of the helpless man shall put them to shame." But this is not authorized by any MS. or Version. There is no need for any change: the Psalmist refers to the condemnation which the afflicted people professed to have in God for their deliverance; which confidence the Babylonians turned into ridicule. The poor people took counsel together to expect help from God, and to wait patiently for it; and this counsel ye derided, because ye did not know—did not consider—that God was in the congregation of the righteous.

Verse 7. Oh that the salvation] Or, more literally, Who will give from Zion salvation to Israel?—From Zion the deliverance must come; for God alone can deliver them:—but who will He make His instruments.

When the Lord bringeth back] For it is Jehovah alone who can do it. Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad. That is, according to Calmet, the remains of the kingdom of Israel, and those of Judah, shall be rejoined to their mutual satisfaction; and become one people, worshipping the same God: and this he has endeavoured to prove, in a dissertation on the subject, actually took place after the return from the Babylonian captivity.

Many of the fathers have understood this verse as referring to the salvation of mankind by Jesus Christ: and so it is understood by my old MS. Psalter, as the following out of Zion! when the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

o Ps. 93. 6.—p Job 42. 10. Psa. 138. 1.

paraphrase will show:—Qwa sal gyt of Syon here til Israel? qwen Lord has turned o way the captivte of his folk, glad sal Jacob, and sayne be Israel. Qwa bot Crist that ge despyse, qwen ge wil nout do his counsaile of Syon fra heven, sal gyt hels til Israel? that es, sal sal al trew cristen men; noght als ge er that lufs noght God. And qwen our Lord has turned o way the carytyte of his folk: that es, qwen he has dampned the devel, and al his Servaundes, the quilk tourmentes gude men, and makes tham carytys in pyne. Than glades al Jacob: that es, al that wiratils o gawns vices and acryflyt: and sayne sal be Israel: that es, al that with the clene eygh of their hert, sees God in contemplaty lyf. For Jacob es als mikil al say als, Wrestler, or supplanter of Syn. Israel es, man seard God.

Of the two chief opinions relative to the design of this Psalm.—1. That it refers to Abalom's rebellion. 2. That it is a complaint of the captives in Babylon; I incline to the latter, as by far the most probable.

I have referred in the Note on verse 3, to that remarkable addition, of no less than six verses, which is found here in the Vulgate, the Vatican copy of the Septuagint, the Æthiopic, and the Arabic, and also in St. Paul's epistle to the Romans, chap. iii. 13—18, which he is supposed to have quoted from this Psalm, as they then stood in the Hebrew Text; or in the Version of the Seventy, from which it has been generally supposed he has quoted them. That they are not interpolations in the New Testament is evident from this,—that they are not wanting in any MS. yet discovered; and they exist in all the ancient Versions, the Vulgate, Syriac, Æthiopic, and Arabic. Yet it has been contended, particularly by St. Jerom, that St. Paul did not quote them from this Psalm: but, being intent on showing the corruption and misery of man, he collected from different parts several passages that bore upon the subject; and united them here, with his quotation from Psa. xiv. 3, as if they had all belonged to that place: and that succeeding copyists, finding them in Romans, as quoted from that Psalm, inserted them into the Septuagint, from which it was presumed they had been lost. It does not appear that they made a part of this Psalm in Origen's Hexapla. In the portions that still exist of this Psalm there is not a word of these additional verses referred to in that collection, neither here, nor in the parallel Psalm, liii. The places from which Jerom and others say St. Paul borrowed them are the following:—

Rom. iii. ver. 13. Their mouth is an open sepulchre; with their tongues they have used deceit.—Borrowed from Psa. v. 10.

The poison of asps is under their lips.—From Psa. cxl. 3.

Ver. 14. Whose mouth is full of cursing and bitterness.—From Psa. x. 7.

Ver. 15. Their feet are swift to shed blood.—From Psa. i. 16, or Isa. lix. 7.

Ver. 16, 17, 18. Destruction and misery are in their ways, the way of peace they have not known, and there is no fear of God before their eyes.—From Isa. lix. 7, 8.

When the reader has collated all these passages in the original, he will probably feel little satisfaction relative to the probability of the hypothesis which they are summoned to support.

These verses are not found in the best copies of the Vulgate, though it appears they were in the old Itala or Antichionymian Version. They are not in the Codex Alexandrinus of the Septuagint: nor are they either in the Greek or Latin Text of the Complutensian Polyglott. They are wanting also in the Antwerp and Parisian Polyglotts. They are neither in the Chaldee nor Syriac Versions. They are not acknowledged as a part of this Psalm by Theodoret, Chrysostom, Euthymius, Arnobius, Apollinaris, the Greek Catena, Eusebius of Cesarea, nor Jerom. The latter, however, acknowledges that they were in his time read in the churches. I have seen no Latin MS. without them; and they are quoted by Justin Martyr and Augustin. They are also in the Editio princeps of the Vulgate, and in all the ancient Psalters known. They are in that Psalter which I have frequently quoted, both in the Latin and Scottico-English version and paraphrase.

Of this version the following is a faithful copy, beginning with the third verse of the fourteenth Psalm:—Al'tha bel'dudu tog'der; that er made unprofitable: That es none that dos gude; that es none ill one. A grave oppynard, es the throte of tham.

III. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

A Psalm of David.

LORD, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill?

a. Ps. 91. 2, &c.—b. Heb. sojourn.—c. Ps. 2. 6. & 3. 4.—d. Eze. 40. 15.—e. Zech. 2. 14.

With thair tongues treacherously that wrought
Venom of snakes undir the lipps of them.
Whas mouth es ful of beryng and bitterness:
Swyft thair tete to spyl blode.
Brekyn and tokethes in their wates:
And the toung of pees that knowt nocht:
The drede of God es nocht byfore the eyen of thaim.

There is a good deal of difference between this, and that Version attributed to Wicliff, as it stands in my large MS. Bible, quoted in different parts of the New Testament; particularly in 1 Cor. xiii. 1, &c. I shall give it here line for line with the above.

Alle hoeben swyfte to gyfde; thei ben maad unprofitable:

Ther is not that doth good thing, ther is not till to sen.

A Sepulchre opening is the throte of hem:

Swyth her tungs thei biden applingly; or trecherously:

The benyng of edocis, that is clepid scapla, under her lipps:

The mouth of whom is ful of cursing, or woryng and bitterness:

The feet of hem ben swiff for to schede out blood:
Contraictous or defouling to God, and infelicit or cursidnesse, the wayes of hem;

And thei knowen not the wayes of pees;
The drede of God is not byfore her ggen.

The words underlined in the above are added by the translator as explanatory of the preceding terms. It is worthy of remark that Coverdale inserts the whole of this addition in this Psalm; and Cardmarden has inserted it in his Bible, but in a letter different from the Text.

It is now time to state what has been deemed of considerable importance to the authenticity of these verses; viz. that they are found in a Hebrew MS., numbered by Kennicott in his catalogue 649. It is in the public library at Leyden; contains the Psalms with a Latin Version and scholia; and appears to have been written about the end of the fourteenth century, and probably by some Christian. I shall give the Text with a literal translation, as it stands in this MS., line for line with the preceding:—

קר פתח ריאתו
An open sepulchre is his throat;

לשונם חילוקין
With their tongues they flatter;

חמת עקבת רתח לשונם
The venom of the asp is under their tongue;

אשר פתחו אלה ויבטח מלא
Whose mouth of cursing and bitterness is full;

קיל ריגותם לשפוך דם
Swift are their feet to shed blood;

מול רע ומנוק רע בודיכיהם
An evil aspect, and an evil event, in their ways;

וירר שלום לא ידעו
And the way of peace they know not.

אין פחד אליהם לנגד עיניהם
No fear of God before their eyes.

It would be easy to criticise upon the Hebrew in this long quotation. I shall content myself with what Calmet, who had his information from others who had inspected the Leyden MS., says of this addition;—Les scavans, qui ont examiné ce manuscrit, y ont remarqué un Hebreu barbare en cet endroit; et des façons de parler, qui ne sentent point les siècles où la langue Hébraïque étoit en usage. "Learned men, who have examined this MS., have remarked a barbarous Hebrism in this place, and modes of speech which savour not of those ages in which the Hebrew language was in use."

If this be an interpolation in the Psalm it is very ancient; as we have the testimony of Jerom, who was prejudiced against it, that it was read in all the churches in his time; and how long before we cannot tell. And that these verses are a valuable portion of Divine revelation, as they stand in Rom. iii. 13—18, none can successfully deny. See Rosenmüller, Kennicott, and De Rossi.

ANALYSIS OF THE FOURTEENTH PSALM.

This Psalm is the practical atheist's character, and has two parts:

I. The description of the practical atheist, from ver. 1 to 7.

II. A petition for the church, ver. 7.

2 He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart.

3 He that backbiteth not with his tongue, nor doeth evil to his neighbour, nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour.

Eph. 4. 25.—f. Lev. 18. 16. Ps. 24. 12.—g. Eze. 28. 1.—h. Or, received, or understood.

I. 1. The atheist is here noted to us by different characters:—
1. From his name, ya nahal, a fool, or rather, a churl; no natural fool, but a sinful:—a fool in what he should be wise.

2. His hypocrisy, or cunning; he saith, but he will not have it known, 'tis to himself,—He saith in his heart. He is a close politic fool.

3. His saying, or his chief and prime principle;—There is no God.

4. From his practice: confessing God in his words for some political advantages; yet, in his works, he denies Him. For, 1. His heart is wicked and unregenerate;—They are corrupt. 2. He is a sinner in a high practical degree;—They have done abominable works. 3. He performs no duty;—There is none that doeth good. He commits sin; he omits duty.

2. The Psalmist demonstrates what he said three ways; and convinces them,—

1. By the testimony of God Himself; He is a witness against them. He is, 1. An eye-witness;—He looks on. 2. He is in heaven, and they are continually under His notice;—He looked down from heaven. 3. He sees the children of men,—their hearts and their works. 4. And the object of His looking is to inquire after their religion; To see if there were any that did understand and seek God.

2. And then He gives His testimony in these general terms;—they are all gone aside, they are altogether become filthy: there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

3. Next He accuses them of two sins of which they were especially guilty,—1. Injustice;—They eat up my people as bread. 2. Impiety;—They call not upon the Lord.

4. And that His testimony is true He convinces them,—
1. By the light of their own conscience;—Have all the workers of iniquity no knowledge? Does not their own conscience tell them that all this is true? Do they not know this? 2. By fear and terror, the effects of an evil conscience;—There were they in great fear. They said, there was no God; but their conscience told them that God was in the congregation of the righteous, and that they should grievously answer for their injustice and impiety. 3. By the hardness of their heart, and contempt of the good counsels of the godly. If he reproved, they mocked. If he said God was his refuge, they laughed him to scorn; Ye have shamed the counsel of the poor, because the Lord is his refuge.

II. The second part of the Psalm contains a petition for the church:—

1. He prays that God would send salvation to his people.

2. That it might be out of Zion; because Christ was anointed and set a King upon the holy hill of Zion. O that the salvation of Israel were out of Zion!

3. For then the consequence would be the great joy and happiness of all His people for their deliverance from captivity spiritual and temporal;—When the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

NOTES ON PSALM XV.

The title, mizmor le David, a Psalm of David, has nothing in it particularly worthy of notice. If it were a Psalm composed during the captivity, (relating to their return and settlement in their own land, with the restoration of their temple service and all the ordinances of God, and a description of the persons who should then be considered Israelites indeed,) the name of David is improperly prefixed. But the subject is of the most general utility, and demands the most solemn and serious attention of all men who profess to believe in the immortality of the soul.

Verse 1. LORD, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? The literal translation of this verse is, LORD, who shall sojourn in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in the mountain of thy holiness? For the proper understanding of this question we must note the following particulars:—

1. The tabernacle, which was a kind of moveable temple, was a type of the church militant, or the state of the people of God in this world.

2. Mount Zion, the holy mount, where the temple was built, was the type of the kingdom of heaven. There the ark became stationary and was no longer carried about

4. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned; but he honoureth them that fear the LORD. He that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not.

1 Esch. 3. 2.

1 Judg. 11. 25.

from place to place: and the whole was typical of the rest that remains for the people of God.

3. The TABERNACLE was a temporary and frequently removed building, carried about from place to place; and not long in any one place. Concerning this it is said, וְיָגוּר מִי יָגוּר, "Who shall lodge, or sojourn," there. It is not a resident or dwelling place; but a place to lodge in for a time.

4. The TEMPLE was a fixed and permanent building;—and here it is enquired יִשְׁכֵּן מִי יִשְׁכֵּן, "who shall dwell, abide," or have his permanent residence there.

5. The tabernacle being a migratory temple, carried about on the shoulders of the priests and Levites, there was no dwelling there for any: they could but lodge or sojourn.

6. The temple being fixed, the priests, Levites, &c. became permanent occupiers. There was no lodging or sojourning, but permanent residence for all connected with it.

7. The tabernacle is, therefore, a proper type of the church militant, wandering up and down, tossed by various storms and tempests;—the followers of God having here no continuing city: sojourning only on earth to get a preparation for eternal glory.

8. The temple is also a proper type or emblem of the church triumphant in heaven;—Here the wicked cease from troubling, and the weary are at rest. It is the dwelling place,—the eternal residence of all who are faithful unto death,—who are made pillars in that temple of God, to go no more out for ever.

The question therefore is,—

1. Who can be considered a fit member of the church of Christ here below? and,

2. Who shall be made partakers of an endless glory? In answer to these questions, the character of what we may term a true Israelite, or a good Christian, is given in the following particulars:—

Verse 2. He that walketh uprightly הוֹלֵךְ יְחַדְּשׁוּ holch tamim, 1. He who walks perfectly;—Who sets God before his eyes,—takes His word for the rule of his conduct,—considers himself a sojourner on earth, and is continually walking to the kingdom of God. He acts according to the perfections of God's law;—he has respect to all its parts, and feels the weight and importance of all its injunctions.

And worketh righteousness 2. He is not satisfied with a contemplative life; he has duties to perform. The law of righteousness has placed him in certain relations, and each of these relations has its particular duties. וְשָׁדֵד tsedek, the word here used, signifies to give just weight,—to render to all their dues. 1. As he is the creature of God, he has duties to perform to Him. He owes God his heart,—My son, give me thy heart;—and should love Him with all his heart, soul, mind, and strength. This is giving God His due. 2. As a member of civil society, he has various duties to perform to his fellows, as they have to him. He is to love them as himself, and do unto all men as he would they should do unto him. 3. There are duties which he owes to himself. That his body may be in health, vigour, and activity, he should avoid every thing by which it might be injured, particularly all excesses in eating, drinking, sleeping, &c. That his soul may be saved, he should avoid all sin; all irregular and disorderly passions. He owes it to his soul to apply to God for that grace which produces repentance, faith, and holiness; and, in order to get all these blessings, he should read, watch, pray, hear the word preached, and diligently use all the ordinances of God. He who acts not thus, defrauds both his body and soul: but the person in the Text works righteousness,—gives to all their due,—and thus keeps a conscience void of offence both towards God and man.

And speaketh the truth in his heart. 3. He is a true man;—in him there is no false way. He is no man of pretences; speaking one thing, and meaning another. He professes nothing but what he feels and intends;—with him there are no hollow friendships, vain compliments, nor empty professions of esteem, love, regard, or friendship. His mouth speaks nothing but what his heart dictates. His heart, his tongue, and his hand, are all in unison. Hypocrisy, guile, and deceit, have no place in his soul.

Verse 3. He that backbiteth not with his tongue לֹא יִשְׁמַע לְשׁוֹן לְרֵעֵהוּ lo ragal al leshono, "he foots not upon his tongue." 4. He is one who treats his neighbour with respect. He says nothing that might injure him in his character, person, or property;—he forges no calumny—he is author of no slander,—he insinuates nothing by which his neighbour may be injured. The tongue, because of its scandalous conversation, is represented in the nervous original, as kicking about the character of an absent person; a very common vice, and as destructive as it is common:—but the man who expects to see God abhors it, and backbites not with his tongue. The words backbite and backbiter come from the Anglo-Saxon bae, the back, and bisan, to bite. How it came to be used in the sense it has in our language, seems at first view unaccountable: but it was intended to convey the treble sense of knavishness, cowardice, and brutality. He is a knave, who would rob you of your good name;—he is a coward, that would speak of you in your absence what he dared not to do in your presence;—and only an ill-conditioned dog would fly at and bite your back when your face was turned. All these three ideas are included in the term; and they all meet in the detractor and calumniator. His tongue is the tongue of a knave, a coward, and a dog. Such a person, of course, has no right to the privileges of the church militant, and none of his disposition can ever see God.

Nor doeth evil to his neighbour 5. He not only avoids evil speaking, but he avoids also evil acting towards his neighbour. He speaks no evil of him;—he does no evil to him;—he does him no harm;—he occasions him no wrong. On the contrary, he gives him his due. See under the second particular.

Nor taketh up a reproach against his neighbour. 6.

The word cherophah, which we here translate a reproach, comes from charaph, to strip, or make bare, to deprive one of his garments: hence chareph, the winter, because it strips the fields of their clothing, and the trees of their foliage. By this, nature appears to be dishonoured and disgraced. The application is easy:—a man, for instance, of a good character, is reported to have done something wrong;—the tale is spread, and the slanderers and backbiters carry it about;—and thus the man is stripped of his fair character, of his clothing of righteousness, truth, and honesty. All may be false; or the man, in an hour of the power of darkness, may have been tempted and overcome;—may have been wounded in the cloudy and dark day, and deeply mourns his fall before God. Who that had not the heart of a devil would not strive rather to cover, than make bare, the fault? Those who feed, as the proverb says, like the flies, passing over all a man's whole parts to light upon his wounds, will take up the tale, and carry it about. Such, in the course of their diabolic work, carry the story of scandal to the righteous man;—to him who loves his God and his neighbour. But what reception has the tale-bearer? The good man taketh it not up; לֹא יִשְׁמַע לְרֵעֵהוּ lo masa, he will not bear it;—it shall not be propagated from him. He cannot prevent the detractor from laying it down; but it is in his power not to take it up; and thus the progress of the slander may be arrested. He taketh not up a reproach against his neighbour; and the tale-bearer is probably discouraged from carrying it to another door. Reader, drive the slanderer of your neighbour far away from you; ever remembering that, in the law of God, as well as in the law of the land, "the receiver is as bad as the thief."

Verse 4. In whose eyes a vile person is contemned 7.

This man judges of others by their conduct: he tries no man's heart. He knows men only by the fruits they bear; and thus he gains knowledge of the principle from which they proceed. A vile person, נִבְזֵה nibzeh, the reprobate, one abandoned to sin,—is despised, נִבְזֵה nibzeh, is loathsome, as if he were covered with the elephantiasis, or leprosy; for so the word implies. He may be rich; he may be learned; he may be a great man, and honourable with his master, in high offices in the state; but if he be a spiritual leper, an infidel, a profligate, the righteous man must despise him; and hold him, because he is an enemy to God and to man, in sovereign contempt. If he be in power, he will not treat him as if worthy of his dignity;—while he respects the office, he will defeat the man. And this is quite right; for the popular odium should ever be pointed against vice.

Aben Ezra gives a curious turn to this clause, which he translates thus:—he is mean and contemptible in his own eyes; and it is certain that the original נִבְזֵה nibzeh de-bimaso nimas, will bear this translation. His paraphrase on it is beautiful:—"A pious man, whatsoever good he may have done, and howsoever concordant to the Divine law he may have walked, considers all this of no worth, compared with what it was his duty to do for the glory of his Creator." A sentiment very like that of our Lord, Luke xvii. 10, so likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants; we have done that which was our duty to do.

Taken in this sense, the words intimate, that the man

5 | He that putteth not out his money to usury, nor taketh reward against the innocent. He that doeth these things shall never be moved.

who is truly pious, who is a proper member of the church militant, and is going straight to the church triumphant, is truly humble: he knows he has nothing but what he has received; he has no merit; he trusts not in himself, but in the living God. He renounces his own righteousness; and trusts in the eternal mercy of God, through the infinitely meritorious atonement made by Jesus Christ. The language of the heart is,—

"I beseech myself when God I see,
And into nothing fall;
Content that thou exalted be,
And Christ is all in all."

He honoureth them that fear the Lord] 8. This clause is a proof, however just the sentiment, that Aben Ezra has mistaken the meaning of the preceding clause. The truly pious man, while he has in contempt the honourable and right honourable profligate, yet honours them that fear the Lord; though found in the most abject poverty, though with Job on the dung-hill, or with Lazarus covered with sores at the rich man's table. Character is the object of his attention; person and circumstances are of minor importance.

The fear of the Lord is often taken for the whole of religion; and sometimes for that reverence which a man feels for the majesty and holiness of God, that induces him to hate and depart from evil. Here it may signify the lowest degree of religion; repentance whereby we forsake sin.

Sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not.] 9. If at any time he have bound himself by a solemn engagement to do so and so, and he find afterwards that to keep his oath will be greatly to his damage; yet, such reverence has he for God and for truth, that he will not change, be the consequences what they may. He is faithful also to his promises: his bare word will bind him equally to any oath. He that will not be honest without an oath, will not be honest with one.

The Hebrew might be thus translated:—He sweareth to afflict himself, and does not change: and thus the Chaldees has rendered this clause. He has promised to the Lord to keep his body under, and bring it into subjection;—to deny himself, that he may not pamper the flesh, and have the more to give to the poor.

Verse 5. Putteth not out his money to usury.] 10. As usury signifies unlawful interest, or that which is got by taking advantage of the necessities of a distressed neighbour, no man that fears God can be guilty of it. The word נשחך nashach, which we translate usury, comes from nashach, to bite as a serpent; and here must signify that biting or devouring usury, which ruins the man who has it to pay. "The increase of usury is called נשחך neschek, because it resembles the biting of a serpent. For as this is so small at first, as scarcely to be perceptible, but the venom soon spreads and diffuses itself till it reaches the vitals: so the increase of usury, which at first is not perceived, nor felt, at length grows so much, as by degrees to devour another's substance." Middock's edition of Leigh's Critica Sacra, sub voce נשחך.

The Jews ever were, and are still, remarkable for usury, and usurious contracts; and a Jew that is saved from it is in the fair way, charity would suppose, to the kingdom of heaven. The Roman laws condemned the usurer to the forfeiture of four times the sum. Cato de Re Rust. lib. i.

Nor taketh reward against the innocent] 11. He neither gives nor receives a bribe in order to pervert justice, or injure an innocent man in his cause. The lawyer, who sees a poor man opposed by a rich man; and, though he is convinced in his conscience that the poor man has justice and right on his side, yet takes the larger fee from the rich man to plead against the poor man; has, in fact, taken a bribe against the innocent; and, without the most signal interposition of the mercy of God, is as sure of hell as if he were already in it.

He that doeth these things] He in whose character all these excellencies meet, though still much more is necessary under the Christian dispensation, shall never be moved;—he shall stand fast for ever. He is an upright honest man, and God will ever be his Support.

Now we have the important question answered, Who shall go to heaven? The man who to faith in Christ Jesus adds those eleven moral excellencies which have been already enumerated. And only such a character is fit for a place in the church of Christ.

On this verse there is a singular reading in my old MS. Pealler, which I must notice. The clause, Qui pecuniam suam non dedit ad usuram; "who putteth not out his money to usury," he thus translates. He that gaf neut his catel til after. Now this intimates that the author had either read pecudem, CATTLE, for pecuniam, MONEY; or that catel was the only money current in his time and country. And, indeed, it has long been the case, that the Scottish peasantry paid their rents in kind; so many cows, or sheep, given to the laird for the usufruct of the ground. That this is no mistake in the translation is evident enough from the paraphrase, where he repeats the words, with his gloss upon them:—He that gaf neut his Catel til after bodyly als covaytus men dos gastly: that he seke naicht for his guids dede, na mode of this werld, bot anely of heven.

The word may be used here for chattel, substance of any kind, moveable or immoveable: but this word itself was originally derived from cattle, which were from the beginning the principal substance or riches of the inhabitants of the country. Indeed the word pecunia, money, was derived from pecus, cattle, which were no longer used as a medium of commerce, when silver and gold came into use. There is a passage in Chaucer, where cattel catching seems to be used for getting money. Speaking of the wicked priests of his time, he says,

Some on þer churches buell
Apparalled poorly proud of porte;
The seven Sacraments thei doen sell,
In Cattel catching is þer comert.
Of each matter thei wullen mell;
And doen þem wrong is þer dispart.
So affual the people thei been fell
And hold þem lower than doeth the florde.
Plowman's Tale, 3d Part.

ANALYSIS OF THE FIFTEENTH PSALM.

A Psalm of doctrine, consisting of two parts, in which we have the character of a sound Christian.

I. The first part is delivered in the form of a dialogue between God and the prophet, from verse 1 to verse 5.

II. The second is the epiphonema, or moral reflection, in the close of the last verse.

1. The question proposed by the Psalmist to God,—Lord, who shall sojourn in thy tabernacle?
2. Who shall rest upon thy holy hill? That is, because all are not Israel, which are of Israel; therefore, the Psalmist asks of God,—who shall sojourn as a true member in the church militant? And who shall rest in the church triumphant?
2. To which God returns the following answer, containing very remarkable notes of the true character of a member of the church:—
 1. In general, he is a man who is, I. Upright in thought,—he is an honest man. He that walketh uprightly.
 2. Just in his deed. He works righteousness.
 3. True in his word. He speaks the truth in his heart.
 2. In particular, he is a man who avoids evil.
 1. In himself;—he is no slanderer. He backbites not with his tongue.
 2. He is no wrong-doer. Nor doth evil to his neighbour.
 3. He is no reviler, tale-bearer, nor tale-hearer. He takes not up a reproach against his neighbour.
 4. He is no favourer of sin. In whose eyes an evil person is contemned.
 5. He is no oppressor, nor extortioner. He puts not his money to his poor brother to usury.
 6. No briber. He takes no reward against the innocent.
 2. Such a man is he that honours them that fear the Lord.
 3. He sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. He will surely keep his word; his character is composed of piety and charity.

II. The epiphonema, or moral reflection, has these two parts:—

1. The party to whom this privilege belongs. He that doeth these things; for the doers, not the hearers, of the law shall be justified.
2. The promise made to him. He shall never be moved. The life of grace is the way to the life of glory.—See the preceding Notes.

PSALM XVI.

The contents of this Psalm are usually given in the following manner:—David sojourning among idolaters, being obliged to leave his own country through Saul's persecution, cries to God for help; expresses his abhorrence of idolatry; and his desire to be again united to God's people, &c. Expresses his strong confidence in God, who had dealt bountifully with him, &c. Then follows a remarkable prophecy of the resurrection of Christ, &c.

Michtam of David.

PRESERVE me, O God: for in thee do I put my trust.

O my soul, thou hast said unto the LORD,

O Or, A golden Psalm of David.—p. 20. Ps. 36, & 57, & 58, & 60.—q. Ps. 28, 29.

NOTES ON PSALM XVI.

The title of this Psalm in the Hebrew is מִכְתָּם לְדָוִד michtam le-david; which the Chaldee translates "A straight sculpture of David." The Septuagint Ἐπισημογραφία τοῦ Δαυὶδ, The inscription on a pillar to David; as if the Psalm had been inscribed on a pillar, to keep it in remembrance. As ἐπισημογραφία signifies to engrave, or stamp, this has given rise to the above inscription. Michtam מִכְתָּם also means pure or stamped gold; and hence it has been supposed that this title was given to it on account of its excellence:—a golden Psalm, or a Psalm worthy to be written in letters of gold; as some of the verses of Pythagoras were called the golden verses, because of their excellence. Gold being the most excellent and precious of all metals, it has been used to express metaphorically excellence and perfection of every kind. So a golden tongue or mouth, the most excellent eloquence: so Chrysoeolom means, (this eminent man having had his name from his eloquence,) a golden book, one of the choicest and most valuable of its kind, &c. But I have already sufficiently expressed my doubts concerning the meanings given to those titles.

That David was the author there can be no doubt. It is most pointedly attributed to him by St. Peter, Acts ii. 25—31. That its principal parts might have some relation to his circumstances is also probable: but that Jesus Christ is its main scope not only appears from quotations made by the apostle as above, but from the circumstances that some parts of it never did, and never could, apply to David. From the most serious and attentive consideration of the whole Psalm, I am convinced that every verse of it belongs to Jesus Christ, and none other: and this on reference I find to be the view taken of it by my ancient Psalter. But as he is referred to here as the Redeemer of the world; consequently, as God manifested in the flesh, there are several portions of the Psalm, as well as in the New Testament, where the Divine and human natures are spoken of separately: and, if this distinction be properly regarded, we shall find not only no inconsistency, but a beautiful harmony through the whole.

Verse 1. Preserve me, O God: for in thee do I put my trust. On the mode of interpretation which I have hinted at above, I consider this a prayer of the Man Christ Jesus on His entering on his great atoning work, particularly His passion in the garden of Gethsemane. In that passion, Jesus Christ most evidently speaks as man; and with the strictest propriety, as it was the manhood, not the Godhead, that was engaged in the suffering.

וַיִּשְׁתַּחֲוֶה, keep me:—preserve, sustain, this feeble humanity, now about to bear the load of that punishment due to the whole of the human race. For in thee וְעַתָּה חָסַדְתָּ, have I hoped. No human fortitude, or animal courage, can avail in my circumstances. These are no common sufferings:—they are not of a natural kind; they are not proportioned to the strength of a human body, or the energy of a human spirit;—and my immaculate humanity, which is subjected to those sufferings, must be dissolved by them, if not upheld by Thee, the strong God. It is worthy of remark that our Lord here uses the term בָּרַעַל, which signifies the strong God, an expression remarkably suited to the frailty of that Assumed nature, which was now entering upon its vicarious sufferings. It will be seen with what admirable propriety the Messiah varies the appellations of the Divine Being in this address; a circumstance which no translation, without paraphrase, can express.

Verse 2. Thou hast said unto the LORD, Thou art my Lord! "Thou hast said יְהוָה לְיִשְׁרָאֵל, to Jehovah;" the supreme, self-existing, and eternal Being,—Thou art my Lord; וְיְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ אֱלֹהֵינוּ, Thou art my Prop, Stay, or Support. As the Messiah or Son of God, Jesus derived His being and support from Jehovah: and the man Christ was supported by the Eternal Divinity that dwelt within Him, without which he could not have sustained the sufferings which he passed through, nor have made an atonement for the sin of the world;—it is the suffering Messiah, or the Messiah in prospect of His sufferings, who here speaks.

Thou art my Lord: my goodness extendeth not to thee:

3 But to the saints that are in the earth, and to the excellent, in whom is all my delight.

4 Their sorrows shall be multiplied that hasten after another god: their drink-offerings of blood will I not offer, nor take up their names into my lips.

r Job 22, 2, 3, & 25, 7, 9. Ps. 50, 9. Rom. 11, 35.—s (w) give gifts to another. t Exod. 23, 13. Josh. 23, 7. Hos. 2, 16, 17.

My goodness extendeth not to thee] There are almost endless explanations of this clause; no man can read them without being confounded by them. The SEPTUAGINT reads ἡ τὴν ἀγαθὴν μου οὐ παρέλαβον ἐξέως, because thou dost not need my goods. The VULGATE follows the Septuagint. The CHALDEE, My good is given only by thyself. So the SYRIAC, My good is from thee. The ARABIC, Thou dost not need my good works. And in this sense, with shades of difference, it has been understood by most commentators and critics.

Bishop Horsley translates, Thou art my good:—not besides thee. Dr. Kennicott,—My goodness is not without thee.

I think the words should be understood of what the Messiah was doing for men. My goodness, טובתי tobathi, "my bounty," is not to thee. What I am doing can add nothing to Thy Divinity: Thou art not providing this astonishing Sacrifice because Thou canst derive any excellence from it:—but this bounty extends to the saints,—to all the spirits of just men made perfect, whose bodies are still in the earth; and to the excellent, אֲדִירֵי, adirey, "the noble or supereminent ones;" those who through faith and patience inherit the promises. The saints and illustrious ones not only taste of my goodness, but enjoy my salvation. Perhaps angels themselves may be intended: they are not uninterested in the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection, of our Lord. They desire to look into these things;—and the victories of the cross in the conversion of sinners cause joy among the angels of God.

The קְדוֹשִׁים kedoshim, saints, or consecrated persons, may refer to the first planters of Christianity; evangelists, apostles, &c., who were separated from all others, and consecrated to the great important work of preaching among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ. With these was all the desire יָרַח chaphets, the good-will and delight, of Christ. In all their ministrations He was both with them, and in them.

The passage, taken as referring to David, intimates that he abhorred the company of the profane and worthless, and delighted to associate with them that excelled in virtue.

On these two verses the translation and paraphrase of my old Psalter must not be forgotten:—

Ver. 1. Conserva me, Domine, &c. Trans. Keep me Lord, for I hoped in thee: I said to the LORD, my God thou art; for, of my guides thou has no need.

Paraph. The voice of Christ in his manhood; praying till the fader, and sayand: Lord, fader, keep me imang peopla, for I hoped in the, noight in me. I said til the, my God thu art in that, that I am man; for thu has no nede of my godes; but I haf of the, al that I haf; here is the wil pride of men confounded; that evenes that thai haf ought of tham self bot syn.

Ver. 2. Sanctis qui sunt in terra, &c. Trans. El paloves the gwilk er in his land, he selcouthed all my willes in tham.

Paraph. Noight til wiked, bot til hslowes clene in saule, and depertid fra erdly bysynes, the qwilk er in his land: that es, thai haf fested their hope in the land of heven; and rotyd in huf: the qwilk hope es als anker in stremys of this werld. He selcouthed al my willes, that of wonderful, he made my willes, of dying and rysing, sett and fulfilled in tham: that es, in their profete, qwate in thai feled qwat it profeted tham my mekenes that wild dye, and my myght to rise.

Verse 4. Their sorrows shall be multiplied that hasten after another god] The Chaldee has,—They multiply their idols, and afterwards hasten that they may offer their gifts. In the Hebrew Text there is no word for God; and, therefore, Messiah or Saviour might be as well substituted; and then the whole will refer to the unbelieving Jews. They would not have the true Christ;—they have sought, and are seeking, another Messiah; and how amply fulfilled has the prophetic declaration been in them! Their sorrows have been multiplied for nearly 1800 years!

The Vulgate and Septuagint, and after them the Ethiopic and Arabic, have given this clause a widely 5 * The LORD is the portion * of mine inheritance * and * of my cup; thou maintainest my lot.

6 The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage.

7 I will bless the LORD who hath given me counsel: * my reins also instruct me in the night seasons.

different turn;—"Their afflictions have been multiplied, and afterwards they have run swiftly;" referring to the suffering saints,—the more they were afflicted and persecuted, the more fervent and prosperous they became.

Their drink offerings of blood will I not offer] קִבְיָ נֶשֶׁקֶת is a libation, whether of wine or water, poured out on the sacrifice. A drink offering of blood is not a correct form of expression: it is rather the libation on the blood of the sacrifice already made. Coverdale translates the same; but Mathewes, who reformed his Text in a few places, has Their beete offerings of blande; without much mending the Text; though, by this, the exceptionable idea of a drink offering of blood is avoided. As applicable to our Lord, here is an intimation that their libations and sacrifices should cease. None of these should exist under the Christian dispensation; Jesus Christ's offering upon the cross being the accomplishment and termination of all such sacrifices.

Nor take up their names into my lips] None of these sacrifices shall be mentioned with any kind of respect after the end of their institution shall have been accomplished; for sacrifice, offering, burnt-offering, and sacrifice for sin, such as are offered according to the Law, God would no longer receive; therefore, Jesus said, Lo, I come to do thy will; a body hast thou prepared me. Since that time all these sacrifices have ceased. The old Psalter is curious:—

Ver. 4. Multiplicatas sunt infirmitates eorum; postea acceleraverunt.

Trans. Unappalded er thair sikenes: and sythen thair basted thair.

Paraph. That es as say; thair knew that thair war ful seke in body and saule, and sythen thair hated thaim til the Leche; for he that feles hym seke, he seeks remedy. If men wenes that thair er nocht seke for thi thair dye in thair syn.

Trans. I sal nocht gadre the cobentes of thair blodes; ne I sal be menand of thair names thurgh my lipps.

Paraph. That es as say, by the coventes of haly men, my servaundes sal nouit fleschely, bot gastly: for blode bytakyns syn and unclense that thair er in, that folous thair flesche, and the vanites of thair blode; that er comen of grete kyn. Ne I sal by menand of thair names: for thair er changed fra syn til ryghtwinesse on domesday, qwen I sal speke thurgh my lipps til thaim that halde the name of wykednes: as ye weryed til fyre with outen end.

Verse 5. The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance] The Messiah speaks.—Jehovah is the Portion of mine inheritance;—I seek no earthly good;—I desire to do the will of God, and that only. It is God who has given me this lot;—to redeem mankind;—to have them for mine inheritance. From Him I have received the cup of suffering, which I shall drink for their sake; through which I shall impart to them the cup of consolation. He, by the grace of God, has tasted death for every man: and he has instituted the cup of blessing to commemorate His passion and death.

Verse 6. The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places] Here is an allusion to the ancient division of the land by lot to the Israelites; the breadth and length being ascertained by lines which were used in measuring. I have got a rich inheritance of immortal spirits:—and I myself, as man, shall have a name above every name; and be raised to Thy throne on which I shall sit, and be admired in my saints to all eternity.

I have a goodly heritage] A church, an innumerable multitude of saints, partakers of the Divine nature, and filled with all the fulness of God. And these shall dwell with me in the heaven of heavens to all eternity. The old Psalter:—

Ver. 5. Dominus pars hereditatis mee et calicis mei, &c.

Trans. Lord es part of myn heritage and of my chalys: thow ert that sal restore myn heritage til me.

Paraph. Lord the fader es part, that es, he es porcioun and mede of myn heritage; that es of haly men, quam I welde in heritage. Other men cheseth than what thaim lyst: my part es God, and he es part of my chalys: that es, he es my copp of al my delyte and joy. Wereldys men drynkes the venemus lustes, and the drubly delytes of lychery and covays: I in my balows sal drynk God; for thow ert fadyr that sal restore til me, that es, til my men, myn heritage, that thair lost in adam: that es thow restores til thaim the knawing of my bryghthede.

Verse 7. Who hath given me counsel] Jesus, as man, received all his knowledge and wisdom from God. Luke ii. 40—52. And in him were hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

My reins also instruct me] כִּיבוֹי kileiotav, reins, or kidneys, which from their retired situation in the body, says Parhurst, and being hidden in fat, are often used in Scripture for the most secret workings and affections of the heart.

In the night seasons] That is, in the time of my passion, my secret purposes and determinations concerning the redemption of man support me. For the joy that was set before him he endured the cross, despising the shame. Heb. xii. 2.

The kidneys and their fat were always to be burnt in sacrifice, to indicate that the most secret purposes and affections of the soul are to be devoted to God.

Verse 8. I have set the Lord always before me] This verse, and all to the end of ver. 11. are applied by St. Peter to the death and resurrection of Christ. Acts ii. 25, &c.

In all that our Lord said, said, or suffered, He kept the glory of the Father and the accomplishment of His purpose constantly in view. He tells us that He did not come down from heaven to do His own will, but the will of the Father, who had sent Him. See John xvii. 4.

He is at my right hand] That is, I have His constant presence, approbation, and support. All this is spoken by Christ, as man.

I shall not be moved] Nothing can swerve me from my purpose;—nothing can prevent me from fulfilling the Divine counsel, in reference to the salvation of men.

Verse 9. Therefore my heart is glad] Unutterably happy in God;—always full of the Divine Presence;—because, whatsoever I do pleaseth Him. The man Christ Jesus must be constantly in communion with God, because He was without spot and blemish.

My glory rejoiceth] My tongue, so called by the Hebrews, (see Psal. lvii. 8, xxx. 12.) because it was bestowed on us to glorify God; and because it is our glory, being the instrument of expressing our thoughts by words. See Dodd. But soul bids as fair to be the meaning. See the Notes on Acts ii. 25, &c.

My flesh also shall rest in hope] There is no sense in which these and the following words can be spoken of David. Jesus, even on the cross, and breathing out His soul with His life, saw that His rest in the grave would be very short;—just a sufficiency of time to prove the reality of His death, but not long enough to produce corruption: and this is well argued by St. Peter, Acts ii. 31.

Verse 10. Thine Holy One] This is in the plural number, קִדְמוֹת chaidyeha, Thy Holy Ones;—but none of the Versions translate it in the plural;—and, as it is in the singular number, קִדְמוֹת chaidyeha, in several ancient editions, among which is the Complutensian Polyglott, and no less than two hundred and sixty-four of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and in the quotation by St. Peter, in Acts ii. 27, xiii. 35, we may take for granted that the present reading is a corruption.

As to leaving the soul in hell,—it can only mean, permitting the life of the Messiah to continue under the power of death: for בְּשׂוֹר שְׂחֹל signifies a pit, a ditch, the grave,

11 Thou wilt shew me the \dagger path of life; \dagger in thy presence is fulness of joy; \dagger at thy or state of the dead. See the Notes on the parallel places, Acts ii. 25, &c.

See corruption. All human beings see corruption, because born in sin, and liable to the curse. The human body of Jesus Christ, as being without sin, saw no corruption.

Verse 11. Thou wilt shew me the path of life] I first shall find the way out of the regions of death, to die no more. Thus Christ was the first-fruits of them that slept. Several before had risen from the dead; but they died again. Jesus rose from the dead, and is alive for evermore. Jesus Christ's resurrection from the dead was the first entrance out of the grave to eternal life, or lives, own dayim; for the word is in the plural; and with great propriety too, as this resurrection implies the life of the body, and the life of the rational soul also.

In thy presence] פָּנֵיךָ paneycha, Thy faces. Every holy soul has, throughout eternity, the beatific vision; i. e. "it sees God as He is"—because it is like Him, 1 John iii. 3. It drinks in beatification from the Presence of the Eternal Tabernacle.

Thy right hand] The place of honour and dignity:—repeatedly used in this sense in the Scriptures.

Pleasures for evermore] נֶעְשָׂה נֶעְשָׂה, onwardly;—perpetually, continually,—well expressed by our translation, ever and more,—an eternal progression. Think of duration in the most extended and unlimited manner, and there is still more;—more to be suffered in hell, and more to be enjoyed in heaven. Great God! grant that my Readers may have this beatific sight! this eternal progression in unadulterated, unchangeable, and unlimited happiness! Hear this prayer, for His sake who found out the path of life, and who by His blood purchased an entrance into the holiest! Amen, and Amen.

For the application of the whole Psalm to David, see the Analysis at the end, which is a little altered from David's harp string and tuned.

The remains of this Psalm in the old Psalter are worthy to be inserted:—

I have given the whole of the translation and comment of this Psalm, from this ancient Psalter, a curious specimen of the doctrine and language of our northern neighbours in the thirteenth or fourteenth century.

ANALYSIS OF THE SIXTEENTH PSALM.

Miclam David. David's precious jewel, or Psalm of gold; literally to be understood of David, but primarily and principally of Christ, Acts ii. whom he calls מְשִׁיחַ מֵלֶכְךָ, God's Holy One, ver. 10. And foretels His passion, resurrection, and ascension, ver. 9, 10, 11.

This Psalm has two parts:—I. Petition, ver. 1. II. Thanksgiving, ver. 7.

I. The petition begins the Psalm. It is for preservation: Preserve me, O God. Keep me to the kingdom both temporal and eternal that Thou hast promised. Guard me; guide me; keep me. To induce the Lord to do this he produces his reasons:—

1. His confidence. For in thee I trust. This is a powerful plea; for to trust God is the highest honour we can do Him: it acknowledges Him as Sovereign.

2. His relation. O my soul, thou hast said unto the Lord, Thou art my God.

3. For this I would shew myself thankful, and return the best of my best. But what can I give? Save ra ea ex rav ear, "Thy own things from thy own property." My goods or goodness, my beneficence or bounty, is nothing unto thee. Sacrifice thou needest not, Psa. 1. 8, nor art delighted in them: but mercy Thou requirest, Hosea vi.

4. Then I will seek out Thy receivers; Thy saints that are in the earth. The family of the saints were the object of David's bounty, and his delight. But my liberality and charity shall extend to the saints that are in the earth, and unto such as are excellent. In whom is all my delight.

5. But as for wicked men and idolaters, I have no delight in them.

These he points out by two characteristics:—

1. They hasten after another god, or endorse another god. They spare no cost, but are lavish in endowing their gods. Israel, part with thy jewels, &c.

2. They offer their children to Moloch. Their drink-offerings of blood will I not offer. On these accounts,—

1. Their sorrows shall be multiplied. They shall be grievously punished.

2. I will not participate with them. Their offerings I will not offer.

3. They are objects of my detestation. I will not take up their names into my lips.

6. He gives another reason why he should show himself so thankful to God, and bountiful to His saints; God's great bounty and liberality to him.

1. That God had given him a satisfactory portion. The Lord is the portion of my inheritance, and of my esp.

2. That God defended him in it. Thou maintainest my lot.

3. That it was a fair portion. The lines are fallen to me in pleasant places, &c.

II. The second part of this Psalm is David's THANKSGIVING. It begins with, I will bless the Lord, ver. 7, not only for the temporal blessings mentioned before, but for the following spiritual blessings:—

1. For the illumination of his mind; that I may understand the thing that is right. The Lord hath given me counsel.

2. For the sanctifying influence on his heart. My reins instruct me in the night season. When he was most retired, he seemed to hear a voice within him, saying, This is the way; walk in it.

3. For his confidence and watchfulness. I have set the Lord always before me. I do not forget my God; and He does not forget me.

4. For the consciousness he had of the Divine presence. The Lord is at my right hand; always ready to help and support me.

5. For his power to preserve. I shall not be moved,

PSALM XVII.

David implores the succour of God against his enemies; and professes his integrity and determination to live to God's glory. 1. He prays for support, and expresses strong confidence in God, 5-8. Describes the malice and cruelty of his enemies, and prays against them, 10-14. Receives a strong promise of support and final victory, 15.

A Prayer of David.

HEAR the right, O LORD, attend unto my cry, give ear unto my prayer, that goeth not out of feigned lips.

2 Let my sentence come forth from thy presence: let thine eyes behold the things that are equal.

3 Thou hast proved mine heart; thou hast visited me in the night; thou hast tried me, and shall find nothing; I am purposed that my mouth shall not transgress.

Satan may stand at my right hand to resist and trouble me; Zech. iii. 1, but God is on my right hand to assist and comfort me; therefore, I shall not be moved. While David prays and trusts, God supports; and while God supports, Satan cannot conquer.

6. For his inward happiness. Therefore, my heart is glad. Wicked men rejoice in appearance; but David rejoiced in heart. He was all happy. His heart, glory, flesh, spirit, soul, body;—all was overjoyed; and the reason was the prospect of his resurrection.

1. My flesh shall rest or dwell in hope. 1. In this world, as in an inn. 2. In the grave, as in a repository. 3. In heaven, as in an endless mansion.

2. Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell. Thou wilt not suffer death to have a final triumph; my flesh shall revive.

3. Neither wilt thou suffer Thy HOLY ONE to see corruption; meaning the Messiah, who should descend from His family. Christ's resurrection is the cause and pledge of ours.

7. He is thankful for the promise of a future life, which is here illustrated:—

- 1. From the quantity. Fulness of joy.
2. From the quality. Pleasures.
3. From the honour. At thy right hand.
4. From the perpetuity. For evermore.

5. From the cause: Thy presence. The sight of God, the beatific vision. Thou wilt show me the path of life: in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand pleasures for evermore.

NOTES ON PSALM XVII.

The title is, A Prayer of David; in which there is nothing that requires explanation. David was most probably the author of this Psalm; and it appears to have been written about the time in which Saul had carried his persecution against him, to the highest pitch. See 1 Sam. xxvii. The Arabic calls it "A prayer of a perfect man,—of Christ Himself, or of any one redeemed by Him." Dr. Delaney, in his Life of David, supposes that this poem was written just after parting with Jonathan, when David went into exile.

Verse 1. Hear the right] Attend to the justice of my cause, יהוה צדק Jehovah isedek, righteous Jehovah, O righteous Jehovah, attend unto my cry.

Goeth not out of feigned lips] My supplication is sincere; and the desire of my heart accompanies the words of my lips.

Verse 2. My sentence come forth from thy presence] Thou knowest my heart, and my ways; judge me as thou shalt find,—let me not fall under the judgment of man.

Let thine eyes behold the things that are equal] Thou knowest whether I render to all their due, and whether others act justly by me. Thou canst not be deceived: do justice between me and my adversaries.

Verse 3. Thou hast proved mine heart] Thou well knowest whether there be any evil way in me. Thou hast given me to see many and sore trials; and yet, through Thy mercy, I have preserved my integrity both to Thee and to my king. Thou hast seen me in my most secret retirements, and knowest whether I have plotted mischief against him who now wishes to take away my life.

Thou hast tried me] ונסתו תארחני; Thou hast put me to the test; as they do metals, in order to detect their alloy, and to purify them. Well expressed by the Vulgate, Igne me examinati, "Thou hast tried me by fire;" and well paraphrased in my old Psalter,—Thu examynd me the lykkenyng of the founnas, that purges metal and imange all this, wykednes, es not funden in me: that es, I am funden cleane of Syn, and so ryghtwis.—He of thy lips I have kept me from the paths of the destroyer.

5 * Hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps slip not.

6 * I have called upon thee, for thou wilt hear me, O God: incline thine ear unto me, and hear my speech.

7 * Show thy marvellous loving kindness, O thou which savest by thy right hand them which put their trust in thee from those that rise up against them.

8 * Keep me as the apple of the eye, hide me under the shadow of thy wings.

9 From the wicked that oppress me, from my deadly enemies, who compass me about.

who is saved from his sin is ryght wise; he has found the true wisdom.

My mouth shall not transgress] This clause is added to the following verse by the Vulgate and Septuagint:—"That my mouth may not speak according to the works of men, I have observed difficult ways because of the words of thy lips." That is, So far from doing any improper action, I have even refrained from all words that might be counted inflammatory or seditious by my adversaries: for I took Thy word for the regulation of my conduct; and prescribed to myself the most painful duties, in order that I might, in every respect, avoid what would give offence either to Thee or to man.

Verse 4. The paths of the destroyer] Some render hard or difficult paths; the sense of which is given above. But the passage is exceedingly obscure. My old Psalter translates and paraphrases as follows:—

Trans. That my mouthe speke nought the werkes of men, for the wordes of thy lippes I haue kepte pure & true.

Par. That es, that nothing passe of my mouthe bot at falles to the louyng of the; night til werkes of men, that doe o gaynes thy wil; als to say, I spak night bot gude: and for the wordes of thy lippes, that es, to ful fill the wordes that thi prophetes saide, I kepe hard voyces of verteus and of tribulacioun, the quilk men thynk hard; and for thi that leue the hard way til heven, and takes the soft way til hel; bot it es ful hard at the end.

Verse 5. Hold up my goings in thy paths] David walked in God's way: but, without Divine assistance, he could not walk steadily, even in them. The words of God's lips had shown him the steps he was to take; and he implores the strength of God's grace to enable him to walk in those steps. He had been kept from the paths of the destroyer: but this was not sufficient; he must walk in God's paths, must spend his life in obedience to the Divine will. Negative holiness can save no man. Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

Verse 6. Incline thine ear unto me] David prayed, from a conviction that God would hear: but he could not be satisfied unless he received an answer. In a believer's mind the petition and the answer should not be separated.

Verse 7. Show thy marvellous loving kindness] David was now exposed to imminent danger: common interpositions of Providence could not save him; if God did not work miracles for him, he must fall by the hand of Saul. Yet he lays no claim to such miraculous interpositions; he expects all from God's loving kindness.

The common reading here is ונסתו תארחני חפלה כבודך, distinguish thy holy ones: but חפלה hapela, "do wonders," is the reading of about seventy MSS., some ancient editions, with the Septuagint, Vulgate, Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic. The marginal reading of this verse is nearer the original than that of the text.

Verse 8. Keep me as the apple of the eye] Or, as the black of the daughter of the eye. Take as much care to preserve me now by Divine influence, as Thou hast to preserve my eye by Thy good providence. Thou hast entrenched it deeply in the skull; hast rampared it with the forehead and cheekbones; defended it by the eyebrow, eyelids, and eyelashes; and placed it in that situation where the hands can best protect it.

Hide me under the shadow of thy wings] This is a metaphor taken from the hen and her chickens. See it explained at large in the Note on Matt. xxiii. 37. The Lord says of His followers, Zech. ii. 8, He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye. How dear are our eyes to us! how dear must His followers be to God!

Verse 9. From my deadly enemies, who compass me about.] This is a metaphor taken from hunters who 10 * They are inclosed in their own fat: with their mouth they speak proudly.

11 They have now compassed us in our steps: they have set their eyes bowing down to the earth;

12 Like as a lion that is greedy of his prey, and as it were a young lion lurking in secret places.

13 Arise, O LORD, disappoint him, cast him down: deliver my soul from the wicked, which is thy sword:

spread themselves around a large tract of forest, driving in the deer from every part of the circumference, till they are forced into the nets or traps which they have set for them in some particular narrow passage. The metaphor is carried on in the following verses.

Verse 10. They are inclosed in their own fat] Dr. Kennicott, Bishop Horsley, Houbigant, and others, read the passage thus: אֲשֶׁר לִפְנֵי אֵי אֵלֶימָו אֲשֶׁרֶם אֲשֶׁרֶם אֲשֶׁרֶם, "They have closed their net upon me." This continues the metaphor which was introduced in the preceding verse, and which is continued in the two following: and requires only that אֵי, "upon me," should begin this verse instead of end the preceding; and that אֲשֶׁרֶם cheleb, which signifies fat, should be read אֲשֶׁרֶם cheleb, which signifies rope, cable, or net. This important reading requires only the interchange of two letters. The Syriac translates it, shut their mouth: but the above emendation is most likely to be true.

They speak proudly.] Having compassed the mountain, on which I had taken refuge; they now exult, being assured that they will soon be in possession of their prey.

Verse 11. They have now compassed us in our steps] Instead of אֲשֶׁרֶם ashurenu, "our steps," Dr. Kennicott and others recommend אֲשֶׁרֶם ashereynu, "O lucky we! at last we have compassed him."—He cannot now escape; he is sure to fall into our hands.

They have set their eyes bowing down to the earth] All the commentators and critics have missed the very expressive and elegant metaphor contained in this clause. Kennicott says, they drove the hart into the toils, and then shot him. Bishop Horsley says on the clause, they have set their eyes bowing down to the earth. "This is the attitude of hunters, taking aim at an animal upon the ground." No; it is the attitude of the huntsman looking for the slot, or track of the hart's, hind's, or antelope's, foot on the ground. See at the conclusion of the Psalm.

Verse 12. Like as a lion that is greedy of his prey] I believe the word lion is here used to express Saul in his strength, kingly power, and fierce rapacity. See the Observations at the end of the Psalm.

Verse 13. Arise, O Lord, disappoint him] When he arises to spring upon and tear me to pieces, arise Thou, O Lord; disappoint him of his prey; seize him, and cast him down.

Deliver my soul] Save my life. From the wicked, which is thy sword] Saul is still meant; and we may understand the words as either implying the sword, the civil power with which God had entrusted him, and which he was now grievously abusing; or, it may mean deliver me by thy sword;—cut him off who wishes to cut me off. On this ground the next verse should be read from men, by thy hand. The hand of God, not only meaning His power, but His providence.

Verse 14. From men of the world, which have] מֵעַמְּוֹת מִימֵינוּ mi-metum me-cheled, from mortal men of time,—temporizers,—men who shift with the times,—who have no fixed principle but one, that of securing their own secular interest: and this agrees with what follows;—which have their portion in this life,—who never seek any thing spiritual,—who have bartered heaven for earth, and have got the portion they desired; for Thou fillest their belly with thy hid treasure. Their belly, their sensual appetites, is their god; and, when their animal desires are satisfied, they take their rest without consideration, like the beasts that perish.

Their portion in this life] בְּחַיִּים be-chayim, in lives, probably meaning heritable lands and estates;—for they leave them to their children, they descend to posterity, and every one has his life-portion in them. They are lands of lives.

They are full of children] Have a numerous offspring whom they educate in the same principles, and to whom they leave a large earthly patrimony;—and who spend it as their fathers have done; and, perhaps, even more dissolutely. Often covetous fathers lay up riches, which prodigal sons scatter to all the winds of heaven.

14 * From men which are thy hand, O LORD, from men of the world, which have their portion in this life, and whose belly thou fillest with thy hid treasure: they are full of children, and leave the rest of their substance to their babes.

15 As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness.

Verse 15. As for me] I cannot be satisfied with such a portion.

I will behold thy face] Nothing but an evidence of Thy approbation can content my soul.

In righteousness] I cannot have Thy approbation unless I am conformed to Thy will. I must be righteous in order that my heart and life may please Thee.

I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness.] Nothing but God can satisfy the wishes of an immortal spirit. He made it with infinite capacities and desires; and He alone, The Infinite Good, can meet and gratify these desires, and fill this all-capacious mind. No soul was ever satisfied but by God; and He satisfies the soul only by restoring it to His image;—which, by the fall, it has lost.

I think there is an allusion here to the creation of Adam. When God breathed into him the breath of lives, and he became a living soul, he would appear as one suddenly awaked from sleep. The first object that met his eyes was his glorious Creator; and, being made in His image and in His likeness, he could converse with Him face to face;—was capable of the most intimate union with Him, because he was filled with holiness and moral perfection. Thus was he satisfied; the God of infinite perfection and purity filling all the powers and faculties of his soul. David sees this in the light of the Divine Spirit, and knows that his happiness depends on being restored to this image and likeness; and he longs for the time when he shall completely arise out of the sleep and death of sin, and be created anew after the image of God, in righteousness and true holiness. I do not think that he refers to the resurrection of the body, but to the resurrection of the soul in this life; to the regaining the image which Adam lost.

The paraphrase in my old Psalter understands the whole of this Psalm as referring to the persecution, passion, death, and resurrection of Christ; and so did several of the primitive fathers, particularly St. Jerom and St. Augustin. I shall give a specimen from ver. 11:—

Proficientes me, nunc circumdederunt me: oculos suos statuerunt declinare in terram.

Trans. Forth castant me now, that haf ungyfen me: thair eghen that sette to pevide in the erde.

Paraph. Forth kasten me out of the cite, als the stede had bene fyled of me: now thai haf ungyfen me in the cros hyngand, als folk that gedysr til a somer game: for thai set thair eghen, that es the intent of thaire hert to heeld in the erde; that es, in erdly thynges to covayte tham, and haf tham. And thai wende qwen thai slew Crist that he had suffrid all the ill, and thai nane.

Perhaps some of my readers may think that this needs translating, so far does our present differ from our ancient tongue.

Text. They have now cast me forth; they have surrounded me: their eyes they set down to the earth.

Paraph. They have cast me out of the city, as if the state were to be defiled by me: now they have surrounded me hanging on the cros, as people gathered together at summer games. For they set their eyes, that is, the intent of their heart, down to the earth; that is, earthly things, to covet them and to have them: and they thought, when they slew Christ, that he had suffered all the ill, and they none.

By the slot or track of the hart on the ground, referred to in ver. 11, experienced huntsmen can discern whether there have been a hart there,—whether he has been there lately,—whether the slot they see be the track of a hart or a hind,—and whether the animal be young or old. All these can be discerned by the slot. And if the Reader have that scarce book at hand,—Tuberville on Hunting, 4to. 1575 or 1611, he will find all this information in chap. xxii. p. 63, intitled The Judgment and Knowledge by the Slot of an Hart; and on the same page a wood-cut, representing a huntsman with his eyes set, bowing down to the earth, examining three slots which he had just found. The cut is a fine illustration of this clause. Saul and his men were hunting David; and curiously searching every

PSALM XVIII.

David's address of thanks to Jehovah, 1-3. A relation of sufferings undergone, and prayers made for assistance, 4-6. A magnificent description of divine interposition in behalf of the sufferer, 7-15; and of the deliverance wrought for him, 16-18. That this deliverance was in consideration of his righteousness, 20-24; and according to the tenor of God's equitable proceedings, 25-28. To Jehovah is ascribed the glory of the victory, 29-31; which is represented as complete by the destruction of all his oppositors, 32-42. On these crosses the heathens submit, 43-45. And for all these things God is glorified, 46-50.

III. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, the servant of the Lord, who spake unto the Lord the words of this song in the day that the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul: And he said, David, Regis Israelitarum, etc. an. xxviii. I WILL love thee, O Lord my strength.

place to find out any track, mark, or footstep, by which they might learn whether he had been in such a place; and whether he had been there lately? Nothing can more fully display the accuracy and intensity of this search than the metaphor contained in the above clause. He who has seen His late Majesty's huntmen looking for the slot in Windsor Forest will see the strength and propriety of the figure used by the Psalmist.

Verse 12. Like as a lion that is greedy of his prey—This is the picture of Saul. While his huntmen were heating every bush, prying into every cave and crevice, and examining every foot of ground to find out a track, Saul is ready, whenever the game is started, to spring upon, seize, and destroy it. The metaphors are well connected, well sustained, and strongly expressive of the whole process of this persecution.

In the ninth verse the huntmen beat the forest to raise and drive in the game. In the tenth they set their nets, and speak confidently of the expected success. In the eleventh they felicitate themselves on having found the slot, the certain indication of the prey being at hand. And in the twelfth the king of the sport is represented as just ready to spring upon the prey; or, as having his bow bent, and his arrow on the string, ready to let fly the moment the prey appears. It is worthy of remark, that kings and queens were frequently present, and were the chiefs of the sport; and it was they who, when he had been killed, broke up the deer;—1. Slitting down the briquet with their knife or sword: and, 2, cutting off the head. And, as Tuberville published the first edition of his book in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, he gives a large wood-cut, p. 133, representing this princess just alighted from her horse,—the stag stretched upon the ground,—the huntsman kneeling, holding the fore foot of the animal with his left hand, and with his right presenting a knife to the queen for the purpose of the breaking up. As the second edition was published in the reign of James the First, the image of the queen is taken out, and a whole length of James introduced in the place.

The same appears in Tuberville's Book of Falconrie, connected with the above. In p. 81, edition 1575, where the flight of the hawk at the horizon is represented, the queen is seated on her charger: but in the edition of 1611 King James is placed on the same charger, the queen being removed.

The lion is the monarch of the forest; and is used successfully here to represent Saul, king of Israel, endeavouring to hunt down David; hemming him in on every side; searching for his foot-steps; and ready to spring upon him, shoot him with his bow, or pierce him with his javelin, as soon as he should be obliged to flee from his last cover. The whole is finely imagined, and beautifully described.

ANALYSIS OF THE SEVENTEENTH PSALM.

David's appeal to God in justification of himself; and his petition for defence against his enemies.

There are THREE parts in this Psalm:—

I. A petition. 1. For audience, ver. 1 and 6. 2. For perseverance in good, ver. 5. 3. For special favour, ver. 7, 8. 4. For immediate deliverance, ver. 13, 14.

II. A narration; in which we meet with,—1. His appeal to God, and his own justification, verses 2, 3, 4. 2. The reasons of it: his enemies and their character, ver. 9—14.

III. A conclusion; which has two parts. 1. One belonging to this life; and 2. One belonging to the life to come, ver. 15.

I. 1. He begins with petition for audience. And he urges it for two reasons:—1. The justice of his cause;—Hear the right, O Lord. 2. The sincerity of his heart;—That goeth not out of feigned lips.

2. Again, there were other reasons why he desired to be heard:—1. He felt himself prone to slip, and fall from God;—Hold up my goings, &c. 2. He was in great danger, and nothing but a miracle could save him; Show thy marvellous loving kindness. 3. His enemies were insolent and mighty, and God's sword only could prevail against them;—Arise, O Lord, ver. 13, 14.

II. A narration.—His appeal to God. Since a verdict must pass upon him, he desired that God should pronounce it:—Let my sentence come forth from thy presence. I know that thou art a righteous Judge, and cannot not be swayed by prejudice;—Let thine eyes behold the thing that is equal, and then I know it must go well with me. Thou hast proved my heart. Thou hast tried me before on this business, and hast found nothing.

1. Nothing in my heart;—Thou hast proved my heart.

2. Nothing in my tongue;—For I am purposed that my mouth shall not offend.

3. Nothing in my hand;—For, concerning the works of men, which are mischievous; by the words of thy lips, I have had so great a regard to Thy commandments that I have kept myself from the paths of the wicked; of him who, to satisfy his own desires, breaks all laws.

4. He confesses that he was poor and weak; and liable to fall, unless sustained by the grace of God;—Hold up my goings in thy paths.

And this first petition he renews, and takes courage from the assurance that he shall be heard;—I will call upon thee, for Thou wilt hear me. And he puts in a special petition, which has two parts:—

1. Show thy marvellous loving kindness;—Let me have more than ordinary help. And this he urges from the consideration that God saves them who trust in him from those who rise up against them.

2. That He would save him with the greatest care and vigilance, as a man would preserve the apple of his eye; or, as a hen would guard her young;—Keep me as the apple of the eye, hide me, &c.

And, to prevail in this special petition, he brings his arguments from his present necessity. He was encompassed with enemies, whom he describes:

1. They were capital enemies; they hemmed him in on every side.

2. They were powerful, proud, and rich;—Men enclosed in their own fat, speaking proudly with their tongues, ver. 10.

3. Their counsels were fixed, and bent to ruin him;—They set their eyes, bowing down to the earth, ver. 11.

4. They were such enemies as prospered in their designs, ver. 14. 1. Men of the world. 2. They had their portion in this life, and sought for none other. 3. They fed themselves without fear;—Their bellies were full.

4. They had a numerous offspring, and therefore more to be dreaded because of their family connexions. 5. They left much substance behind them, so that their plans might be all continued and brought to effect.

III. The conclusion,—containing the expectation of David, opposed to his enemies' felicity.

1. In this life;—As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness.

2. In the life to come;—When I awake,—rise from the dead,—after thy likeness, I shall be satisfied with it.

On each of these divisions the Reader is referred to the Notes.

NOTES ON PSALM XVIII.

The title:—To the chief musician, A Psalm of David, the servant of the Lord, who spake unto the Lord the words of this song in the day that the Lord delivered him from the hand of all his enemies, and from the hand of Saul.

Except the first clause, this title is taken from 2 Sam. xxii. 1. The Reader is requested to turn to the Notes on 2 Sam. xxii. 1, for some curious information on this Psalm; particularly what is extracted from Dr. Kennicott.

a Acts 4. 8.

This learned writer supposes the whole to be a song of the Messiah, and divides it into five parts, which he thus introduces:—

"The Messiah's sublime thanksgiving, composed by David when his wars were at an end, towards the conclusion of his life. And in this sacred song the goodness of God is celebrated, 1. For Messiah's resurrection from the dead; with the wonders attending that awful event, and soon following it. 2. For the punishment inflicted on the Jews;—particularly by the destruction of Jerusalem. And, 3. For the obedience of the Gentile nations. See Rom. xv. 9, Heb. ii. 13, and Matt. xxviii. 2—4, with xxiv. 7, and 29."

And that the title now prefixed to this hymn here and in 2 Sam. xxii. 1, describes only the time of its composition seems evident;—for who can ascribe to David himself as the subject, verses 5, 6, 8—17, 21—26, 30, 42, 44, &c.

In Dr. Kennicott's Remarks there is a new translation of the whole Psalm, p. 178, &c.

The strong current of commentators and critics apply this Psalm unto Christ: and to oppose a whole host both of ancients and moderns would argue great self-confidence. In the main, I am of the same mind; and on this principle chiefly I shall proceed to its illustration: still, however, considering that there are many things in it which concern David, and him only. Drs. Chandler and Delaney have been very successful in their illustration of various passages in it; all the best critics have brought their strongest powers to bear on it; and most of the commentators have laboured it with great success; and Bishop Horne has applied the whole of it to Christ. My old Psalter speaks highly in its praise:—This Psalm contenes the Sacrament of all chosen men, the quilk doand the Law of God thurgh the seven fold grace of the haly Gaat fra al temptaciouns, and the pouste of dede and of the devel leid: this sang thai syng til God; and thanks hym and says, I sal laif the Lord, nocht a day or twa, bot ever mare: my strength, thurgh kwam I am stalworth in thocht.

Verse 1. I will love thee] Love always subsists on motive and reason. The verb amr racham, signifies to love with all the tender feelings of nature. "From my inmost bowels will I love Thee, O Lord!" Why should he love Jehovah? Not merely because He was infinitely great and good, possessed of all possible perfections; but because He was good to him: and he here enumerates some of the many blessings he received from Him.

My strength] I. Thou who hast given me power over my adversaries; and hast enabled me to avoid evil, and do good.

Verse 2. The Lord is my rock] 2. I stand on Him as my Foundation; and derive every good from Him who is the Source of good. The word ybo seld, signifies those craggy precipices which afforded shelter to men and wild animals: where the bees often made their nests, and whence honey was collected in great abundance. He made him to suck honey out of the rock, Deut. xxxii. 13. 3. He was his Fortress: a place of strength and safety, fortified by nature and art, where he could be safe from his enemies. He refers to those inaccessible heights in the rocky mountainous country of Judea, where he had often found refuge from the pursuit of Saul. What these have been to my body; such has the Lord been to my soul.

Deliverer] 4. מפלט mepalti, he who causes me to escape. This refers to his preservation in straits and difficulties. He was often almost surrounded and taken: but still the Lord made a way for his escape;—made a way out, as his enemies got in;—so that while they got in at one side of his strong hold, he got out of the other, and so escaped with his life. These escapes were so narrow, and so unlikely, that he plainly saw the hand of the Lord was in them. 5. My God, ימי עלי, my strong God; not only the Object of my adoration, but He who puts strength in my soul. 6. My strength, ימי צורי. This is a different word from that in the first verse. Rabbi Maymon has observed that ימי צור, when applied to God, signifies Fountain, Source, Origin, &c. God is not only the Source whence my being was derived; but He is the Fountain whence I derive all my good: in whom, says David, I will trust. And why? because he knew Him to be an eternal and inexhaustible Fountain of goodness. This fine idea is lost in our translation: for we render two Hebrew words of widely different meaning, by the same term in English, strength. 7. My Buckler, ימי מגיני, my Shield:—my Defender; He who covers my head, and my heart, so that I am neither slain nor wounded by the darts of my adversaries. 8. Horn of my salvation. Horn was the emblem of power; and power in exercise. This has been already explained: see on 1 Sam. ii. 1. The horn of salvation means a powerful, and efficient salvation. 9. My high tower. A place not only of defence; but one from which I can discern the country round about, and always be able to discover danger before it approaches me.

Verse 3. I will call upon the Lord] When he was conscious that the object of his worship was such as he has pointed out in the above nims particulars, it is no wonder that he resolves to call upon Him; and no wonder that he expects, in consequence, to be saved from his enemies:—for, who can destroy him whom such a God undertakes to save!

Verse 4. The sorrows of death compassed me] מיתו chibley maveth, the cables or cords of death. He was almost taken in those nets, or stratagems, by which, if he had been entangled, he would have lost his life. The stratagems to which he refers were those that were intended for his destruction;—hence called the cables or cords of death.

The floods of ungodly men] Troops of wicked men were rushing upon him like an irresistible torrent; or like the waves of the sea, one impelling another forward in successive ranks; so that, thinking he must be overwhelmed by them, he was for the moment affrighted: but God turned the torrent aside, and he escaped.

Verse 5. The sorrows of hell] מיתו chibley sheol, the cables or cords of the grave. Is not this a reference to the cords or ropes with which they lowered the corpse into the grave?—or the bandages by which the dead were swathed? He was as good as dead.

The snares of death prevented me] I was just on the point of dropping into the pit which they had digged for me. In short, I was all but a dead man; and nothing less than the immediate interference of God could have saved my life.

Verse 6. In my distress I called] His enemies had no hope of his destruction, unless God should abandon him. They hoped that this was the case; and that, therefore, they should prevail. But God heard his cry, and came down to his help: and this interference is most majestically described in the 7th and following verses. Dr. Dodd has collected some excellent observations on these verses from Chandler, Delaney, and others, which I shall transcribe, as I know not that any thing better can be offered on the subject.

Verse 7. Then the earth shook and trembled] "In this and the following verses David describes, by the sublimest expressions and grandest terms, the majesty of God, and the awful manner in which He came to his assistance. The representation of the storm in these verses must be allowed by all skillful and impartial judges to be truly sublime and noble, and in the genuine spirit of poetry. The majesty of God, and the manner in which He is represented as coming to the aid of His favourite king, surrounded with all the powers of nature as His attendants and ministers, and arming (as it were) heaven and earth to fight His battles, and execute His vengeance, is described in the loftiest and most striking terms. The shaking of the earth; the trembling of the mountains and pillars of heaven; the smoke that drove out of his nostrils; the flames of devouring fire that flashed from his mouth; the heavens bending down to convey him to the battle; his riding upon a cherub, and rapidly flying on the wings of a whirlwind; his concealing his majesty in the thick clouds of heaven; the bursting of the lightnings from the horrid darkness; the uttering of his voice in peals of thunder; the storm of fiery hail; the melting of the heavens, and their dissolving into floods of tempestuous rain; the clearing of the earth, and disclosing the bottom of the hills, and the subterraneous channels, or torrents of water, by the very breath of the nostrils of the Almighty;—are all of them circumstances which create admiration, excite a kind of horror, and exceed every thing of this nature that is to be found in any of the remains of heathen antiquity. See Longinus on the Sublime, sect. 9, and Hesiod's description of Jupiter fighting against the Titans, which is one of the grandest things in all Pagan antiquity; though, upon comparison, it will be found infinitely short of this description of the Psalmist's; throughout the whole of which, God is represented as a mighty Warrior going forth to fight the battles of David, and highly incensed at the opposition his enemies made to His power and authority.

“When He descended to the engagement, the very heavens bowed down to render His descent more awful:—His military tent was substantial darkness;—the voice of His thunder was the warlike alarm which sounded to the battle;—the chariot in which He rode were the thick clouds of heaven, conducted by cherubs, and carried on by the irresistible force, and rapid wings, of an impetuous tempest;—and the darts and weapons He employed were thunderbolts, lightnings, fiery hail, deluging rains, and stormy winds!

“No wonder that when God thus arose, all His enemies should be scattered, and those who hated Him should flee before Him.

“It does not appear from any part of David’s history that there was any such storm as is here described, which proved destructive to his enemies, and salutary to himself. There might, indeed, have been such a one, though there is no particular mention of it; unless it may be thought that something of this nature is intimated in the account given of David’s second battle with the Philistines, 2 Sam. v. 23, 24. It is undoubted, however, that the storm is represented as real; though David, in describing it, has heightened and embellished it with all the ornaments of poetry. See Chandler, Delaney, and Lowth’s ninth Prelection.

“Verse 8. There went up a smoke out of his nostrils—Or, there ascended into his nostrils a smoke, as the words, literally rendered, signify. The ancients placed the seat of anger in the nose, or nostril; because, when the passions are warm and violent, it discovers itself by the heated vehement breath which proceeds from them. Hence the physiognomists considered open wide nostrils as a sign of an angry fiery disposition.

“This description of a smoke arising into, and a fire breaking forth from, the nostrils of God, denotes, by a poetical figure, the greatness of his His anger and indignation.

“Fire out of his mouth devoured—means, that consuming fire issued out of His mouth. Coals were kindled by it, thus we render the next clause: but the words do not mean that fire proceeding from God kindled coals, but that burning coals issued from His mouth; and it should be rendered, living coals from His mouth burned, and consumed around. (Chandler.)

“Verse 9. He bowed the heavens also, and came down—He made the heavens bend under Him, when He descended to take vengeance on His enemies. The Psalmist seems here to express the appearance of the Divine majesty in a glorious cloud, descending from heaven, which underneath was substantially dark, but above bright and shining with exceeding lustre; and which, by its gradual approach to the earth, would appear as though the heavens themselves were bending down and approaching towards us.

“Verse 10. He rode upon a cherub and did fly—That is, as it is immediately explained, Yea he did fly upon the wings of the wind. God was in the storm; and by the ministry of angels guided the course of it, and drove it on with such an impetuous force as nothing could withstand. He ‘rides in the whirlwind, and directs the storm.’ Angels are in a peculiar sense the attendants and messengers of the Almighty, whom He employs as His ministers in effecting many of those great events which take place in the administration of His providence; and particularly such as manifest His immediate interposition in the extraordinary judgments which He inflicts for the punishment of sinful nations. See Psa. ciii. 20, civ. 4. The cherub is particularly mentioned as an emblem of the Divine presence; and especially as employed in supporting, and conveying, the chariot of the Almighty, when He is represented as riding in His majesty through the firmament of heaven:—

—Forth rushed with whirlwind sound,
The chariot of paternal Deity;
Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel undrawn,
Lust’r’d inward with spirit, but convey’d
By four cherubic shapes. Parod. Lowth, Book vi.”

“This seems to be the image intended to be conveyed in the place before us. He rode upon a cherub, and did fly; he flew on the wings of the wind; i. e. the cherub supported and led on the tempest, in which the Almighty rode as in His chariot. This is agreeable to the office elsewhere ascribed to the cherubim. Thus they supported the Mercy Seat, which was peculiarly the throne of God under the Jewish economy. God is expressly said to make the clouds his chariot, Psa. civ. 3, and to ride upon a swift cloud, Isa. xix. 4, so that riding upon a cherub, and riding a swift cloud, is riding in the cloud as his chariot, supported and guided by the ministry of the cherubim. The next clause, in the parallel place of Samuel, is, He was SEEN on the wings of the wind; כִּי יָרָא, He was seen, being used for כִּי יָדָא, He flew; דַּלֵּת ׀, being changed into ׀ רֶשֶׁת. Either of them may be the true reading; for the MSS. are greatly divided on these places; but, on the whole, כִּי יָרָא, appears to be the better reading,—And He was SEEN on the wings of the wind.

As the original has been supposed by adequate judges to exhibit a fine specimen of that poetry which, in the choice of its terms, conveys both sense and sound, I will again lay it before the reader, as I have done in the parallel place, 2 Sam. xxii. 2. The words in Italic to be read from right to left.

וַיִּרְכַּב עַל כְּרֻב וַיִּיָּרָא waiyahdph, kerub hhal waiyirka
And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly!
וַיִּרְכַּב עַל כְּנָפֵי רוּחַ ruach canphey hhal waiyada
Yea, he flew on the wings of the wind!

The word רוּחַ ruach, in the last line, should be pronounced not ruak, which is no Hebrew word; but as a Scottish man would pronounce, were it written ruagh. With this observation, how astonishingly is the rushing of the wind heard in the last word of each hemistich! Sternhold and Hopkins have succeeded in their version of this place, not only beyond all they ever did, but beyond every ancient and modern poet on a similar subject:—

“On cherub and on cherubim
Full royally he rode;
And on the wings of mighty winds
Came flying all abroad.”

Even the old Anglo-Scottish Psalter has not done amiss:—

And he stepth aboven cherubim and he flew;
He flew aboven the tecters of wyndes.

Verse 11. He made darkness his secret place] God is represented as dwelling in the thick darkness, Deut. iv. 11. Psa. xxvii. 2. This representation in the place before us is peculiarly proper; as thick heavy clouds deeply charged, and with lowering aspects, are always the forerunners and attendants of a tempest, and greatly heighten the horrors of the appearance:—and the representation of them, spread about the Almighty as a tent, is truly grand and poetic.

Dark waters] The vapours strongly condensed into clouds; which, by the stroke of the lightning, are about to be precipitated in torrents of rain. See the next verse.

Verse 12. At the brightness that was before him his thick clouds passed] The word רוּשַׁף minogah, signifies the lightning. This goes before him: the flash is seen before the thunder is heard, and before the rain descends; and then the thick cloud passes. Its contents are precipitated on the earth, and the cloud is entirely dissipated.

Hail stones and coals of fire.] This was the storm that followed the flash and the peal; for it is immediately added,—

Verse 13. The LORD also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave his voice] And then followed the hail and coals of fire. The former verse mentioned the lightning, with its effects: this gives us the report of the thunder, and the increasing storm of hail and fire that attended it. Some think the words hail stones and coals of fire are entered here by some careless transcribers from the preceding verse: and it is true that they are wanting in the Septuagint and the Arabic, in the parallel place in 2 Sam. and in Isa. of Kennicott’s and De Rossi’s MSS. I should rather, with Bishop Horsley, suppose them to be an interpolation in the preceding verse: or, in that to have been borrowed from this; for this most certainly is their true place.

and the foundations of the world were discovered at thy rebuke, O Lord, at the blast of the breath of thy nostrils.

16 * He sent from above, he took me, he drew me out of many waters.

17 He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them which hated me: for they were too strong for me.

18 They prevented me in the day of my calamity: but the Lord was my stay.

19 * He brought me forth also into a large place; he delivered me, because he delighted in me.

20 * The Lord rewarded me according to my righteousness; according to the cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

21 For I have kept the ways of the Lord, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

22 For all his judgments were before me, and I did not put away his statutes from me.

23 I was also upright before him, and I kept myself from mine iniquity.

24 * Therefore hath the Lord recompensed me according to my righteousness, according to the cleanness of my hands in his eyesight.

25 * With the merciful thou wilt shew thyself merciful; with an upright man thou wilt shew thyself upright;

26 With the pure thou wilt shew thyself pure; and with the froward thou wilt shew thyself froward.

27 For thou wilt save the afflicted people; but wilt bring down high looks.

28 * For thou wilt light my candle: the Lord my God will enlighten my darkness.

29 For by thee I have run through a troop; and by my God have I leaped over a wall.

30 As for God his way is perfect, the word of the Lord is tried; he is a buckler to all those that trust in him.

31 * For who is God save the Lord; or who is a rock save our God?

32 It is God that girdeth me with strength, and maketh my way perfect.

Verse 14. He sent out his arrows—he shot out lightnings] I believe the latter clause to be an illustration of the former. He sent out his arrows;—that is, he shot out lightnings; for lightnings are the arrows of the Lord:—and there is something very like the arrow-head apparent in the zig-zag lightning. Sense and sound are wonderfully combined in the Hebrew of this last clause; רָאָה וּשְׁמָעָה בְּרָאִים רַבִּים וַיִּחְמַמֵּם, “and thunders he multiplied and confounded them.” Who does not hear the bearing, bristling, and pounding of thunder in these words? See DeLaney.

Verse 15. The channels of waters were seen] This must refer to an earthquake: for, in such cases, the ground being rent, water frequently gushes out at the fissures, and often rises to a tremendous height. Whole rivers were poured out of the chasms made by the earthquake in Jamaica, A. D. 1694; and new lakes of water were formed, covering a thousand acres of land!

Verse 16. He drew me out of many waters] Here the allusion is still carried on. The waters, thus poured out, were sweeping the people away: but God, by a miraculous interference, sent and drew David out. Sometimes waters are used to denote multitudes of people; and here the word may have that reference: multitudes were gathered together against David, but God delivered him from them all. This seems to be countenanced by the following verse.

Verse 17. He delivered me from my strong enemy] Does not this refer to his conflict with Ishbi-benob? And Ishbi-benob, which was of the sons of the giant—thought to have slain David. But Abishai the son of Zeruiah succoured him, and smote the Philistine, and killed him. Then the men of David swore unto him, saying, Thou shalt go no more out with us to battle, that thou quench not the light of Israel. 2 Sam. xxi. 16, 17. It appears that at this time he was in the most imminent danger of his life, and that he must have fallen by the hands of the giant, if God had not sent Abishai to his assistance. They were too strong for me. He was nearly overpowered by the Philistines: and his escape was such, as evidently to show it to be supernatural.

Verse 18. They prevented me in the day of my calamity] They took advantage of the time in which I was least able to make head against them, and their attack was sudden and powerful. I should have been overthrown: but the Lord was my stay.

Verse 19. He brought me forth also into a large place] He enabled me to clear the country of my foes, who had before cooped me up in holes and corners. This appears to be the allusion.

Verse 20. The Lord rewarded me] David proceeds to give the reasons why God had so marvellously interposed in his behalf.

According to my righteousness] Instead of being an enemy to Saul, I was his friend. I dealt righteously with him, while he dealt unrighteously with me.

Verse 21. I have kept the ways of the Lord] I was neither an infidel nor a profane; I trusted in God, and carefully observed all the ordinances of His religion.

Verse 22. All his judgments were before me] I kept His law before my eyes, that I might see my duty, and know how to walk and please God.

Verse 23. I was also upright] The times in which David was most afflicted were the times of his greatest uprightness. Adversity was always to him a time of spiritual prosperity.

Mine iniquity.] Probably meaning, what is generally termed the early besetting sin; the sin of his constitution, or that to which the temperament of his body most powerfully disposed him. What this was, is a subject of useless conjecture.

Verse 25. With the merciful thou wilt show thyself merciful] Thou wilt deal with men as they deal with each other. This is the general tenour of God's providential conduct towards mankind; well expressed by Mr. Pope in his prayer,— “Teach me to feel another's woe;

To hide the fault I see;
The mercy I to others show,
That mercy show to me.”

It is in reference to this that our Lord teaches us (to pray,—) Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive them that trespass against us. If we act feelingly and mercifully towards our fellow creatures, God will act tenderly and compassionately towards us. The merciful, the upright, and the pure, will ever have the God of mercy, uprightness, and purity, to defend and support them.

Verse 26. With the froward] wry ikesh, the perverse man;—he that is crooked in his tempers and ways. Thou wilt shew thyself froward] שְׂמַרְתִּי טִיב־פָּתַל, thou wilt set thyself to twist, twine, and wrestle. If he contend, Thou wilt contend with him. Thou wilt follow him through all his windings; Thou wilt trace him through all his crooked ways; untwist him in all his cunning wiles; and defeat all his schemes of stubbornness, fraud, overreaching, and deceit.

My old Psalter has With the twisted thou shalt be twisted. Here the term wicked is taken in its true original sense, crooked or perverse. With the twisted, the perverse; Thou wilt shew thyself twisted, i. e. perverse; from pectan, to draw back, to slide. As he draws back from Thee, Thou wilt draw back from him. It may, as before intimated, come from pectan, to seek for enchantment; leaving God, and going to devils; to act like a witch; but hire it must mean as above. The plain meaning is, “If thou perversely oppose thy Maker; He will oppose thee: no work or project shall prosper that is not begun in His name, and conducted in His fear.”

Verse 27. For thou wilt save the afflicted] The afflicted are the humble; and those Thou hast ever befriended.

Verse 28. For thou wilt light my candle] Thou wilt restore me to prosperity, and give me a happy issue out of all my afflictions. By the lamp of David the Messiah may be meant;—Thou wilt not suffer my family to become extinct, nor the kingdom which Thou hast promised me utterly to fail.

Verse 29. I have run through a troop] This may relate to some remarkable victory; and the taking of some fortified place, possibly Zion; from the Jebusites. See the account, 2 Sam. v. 6-8.

Verse 30. God, his way is perfect] His conduct is like His nature, absolutely pure;

The word of the Lord is tried] Literally, tried in the fire. It has stood all tests; and has never failed those who placed it before its Author.

He is a buckler] A sure protection to every simple believing soul. We cannot believe His word too implicitly; nor trust too confidently in Him.

33 ^a He maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and setteth me upon my high places.

34 ^a He teacheth my hands to war, so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms.

35 Thou hast also given me the shield of thy salvation: and thy right hand hath holden me up, and thy gentleness hath made me great.

36 Thou hast enlarged my steps under me, that my feet did not slip.

37 I have pursued mine enemies, and overtaken them: neither did I turn again till they were consumed.

38 I have wounded them that they were not able to rise: they are fallen under my feet.

39 For thou hast girded me with strength unto the battle: thou hast subdued under me those that rose up against me.

40 Thou hast also given me the necks of mine enemies; that I might destroy them that hate me.

Verse 31. For who is God save the Lord? "For who is Eloah, except Jehovah?" None is worthy of adoration but the self-existent, eternal, infinitely perfect, and all-merciful Being.

Or who is a rock? A fountain emitting continual supplies of grace and goodness.

Verse 32. God—girdeth me with strength. The girdle was a necessary part of the Eastern dress: it strengthened and supported the loins; served to confine the garments close to the body; and in it they tucked them up when journeying. The strength of God was to his soul what the girdle was to the body. Ineed not add, that the girdle was also an ornamental part of the dress.

And maketh my way perfect. He directs me so that I do not go astray;—He blesses me in all my undertakings, and by Him the issue of my labours is crowned with prosperity.

Verse 33. My feet like hinds' feet. Swiftmess, or speed of foot, was a necessary qualification of an ancient hero. This was of great advantage in pursuing, combating, or escaping from a foe. Podas ovres Achilleus, the swift-footed Achilles, is frequently given by Homer as a most honourable qualification of his hero.

Upon my high places. In allusion to the hinds, antelopes, mountain goats, &c., which frequented such places; and in which they found both food and safety. God frequently preserved the life of David by means of these.

Verse 34. He teacheth my hands to war. The success which I have had in my military exercises I owe to the Divine help. How few of the conquerors of mankind can say so! And how few among those who call themselves Christian warriors dare to say so! War is as contrary to the spirit of Christianity as murder. Nothing can justify Christian nations in shedding each other's blood! All men should live in peace; and all men might live in peace:—and the nation that is first to break it, is under a heavy curse.

A bow of steel is broken by mine arms. All the Versions render this, Thou hast made my arm like a brazen bow. A bow of steel is out of the question. In the days of David it is not likely that the method of making steel was known. The method of making brass out of copper was known at a very early period of the world; and the ancients had the art of hardening it, so as to work it into the most efficient swords. From his own account David was swift, courageous, and strong.

Verse 35. The shield of thy salvation. In all battles and dangers God defended him. He was constantly safe, because he possessed the salvation of God. Every where God protected him. Thy gentleness— ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς, thy meekness, or humility. "Thou hast enabled me to bear and forbear; to behave with courage in adversity, and with humility in prosperity; and thus I am become great. By these means thou hast multiplied me." The Vulgate reads, Disciplina tua ipse me docuit.—"And thy discipline itself shall teach me." In this sense it was understood by most of the Versions. The old Realter paraphrases thus:—thi chastising suffers me noight to erre fra the end to com.

Verse 36. Enlarged my steps. See on ver. 19. From the hand of God he had continual prosperity; and, while he walked with God, no enemy was able to prevail against him. He details his successes in the following verses.

Verse 40. The necks of mine enemies. Thou hast made me a complete conqueror. Treading on the neck of an enemy was the triumph of the conqueror, and the utmost disgrace of the vanquished.

41 They cried, but there was none to save them: ^a even unto the Lord, but he answered them not.

42 Then did I beat them small as the dust before the wind: I did cast them out as the dirt in the streets.

43 Thou hast delivered me from the strivings of the people; and thou hast made me the head of the heathen: ^b a people whom I have not known shall serve me.

44 As soon as they hear of me, they shall obey me: ^c the strangers shall submit themselves unto me.

45 The strangers shall fade away, and be afraid out of their close places.

46 The Lord liveth, and blessed be my rock; and let the God of my salvation be exalted.

47 It is God that avengeth me, and subdueth the people unto me.

Verse 41. They cried. The Philistines called upon their gods, but there was none to save them.

Even unto the Lord. Such as Saul, Ishboseth, Absalom, &c., who professed to worship the true God, called on him while in their opposition to David: but God no more heard them, than their idols heard the Philistines.

Verse 42. Then did I beat them. God was with him; and they had only the arm of flesh. No wonder then that his enemies were destroyed.

Small as the dust before the wind. This well expresses the manner in which he treated the Moabites, Ammonites, and people of Rabba: he put them under saws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron; and made them pass through the brick-kiln, &c. See 2 Sam. xii. 31, and the Notes there.

Verse 43. The strivings of the people. Disaffections, and insurrections among my own subjects: as in the revolt of Absalom, the civil war of Abner in favour of Ishboseth, &c.

The head of the heathen. רֹאשׁ הַגּוֹיִם rosh goyim, "the chief," or "governor, of the nations;" all the circumjacent heathen people: all these were subdued by David, and brought under tribute.

A people whom I have not known. The people whom he knew were those of the twelve tribes;—those whom he did not know were the Syrians, Philistines, Idumeans, &c. All these served him, that is, paid him tribute.

Verse 44. As soon as they hear of me. His victories were so rapid and splendid over powerful enemies, that they struck a general terror among the people; and several submitted without a contest.

Strangers shall submit themselves unto me. Some translate this, "The children of the foreign woman have lied unto me." This has been understood two ways:—My own people, who had sworn fealty to me, have broken their obligation, and followed my rebellious son. Or, the Heathens, who have been brought under my yoke, have promised the most cordial obedience, and flattered me with their tongues, while their hearts felt enmity against me and my government. Nevertheless, even in this unwilling subjection, I was secure; my police being so efficient, and my kingdom so strong.

Verse 45. The strangers shall fade away. בְּנֵי נֶקֶד beney nekter, the same persons mentioned above. They shall not be able to effect any thing against me; כַּלְי יִיבֹדוּ, "they shall fall as the leaves fall off the trees in winter."

And be afraid out of their strong places. Those who have formed themselves into banditti, and have taken possession of rocks and fortified places, shall be so afraid, when they hear of my successes, that they shall surrender at discretion, without standing a siege. Perhaps all these verbs should be understood in the perfect tense; for David is here evidently speaking of a kingdom at rest, all enemies having been subdued: or, as the title is, when the Lord had delivered him from all his enemies.

Verse 46. The Lord liveth. By Him alone I have gained all my victories:—and He continueth, and will be my Rock, the Source whence I may at all times derive help and salvation. May His name be blessed!—May His kingdom be exalted!

Verse 47. God that avengeth me. The way that I took was after His own heart;—therefore He sustained me in it, and did me justice over my enemies.

Subdueth the people unto me. He keeps down the spirits of the disaffected, and weakens their hands. They are subdued, and they continue under me: and this is the Lord's doing.

48 He delivereth me from mine enemies: yea, thou liftest me up above those that rise up against me: thou hast delivered me from the violent man.

49 Therefore will I give thanks unto thee, m Ps. 58. 1.—Heb. man of violence.—Rom. 15. 8.—p. Or. confers.

Verse 43. He delivereth me] That is, He hath delivered me, and continues to deliver me, from all that rise up against me.

The violent man] Saul; this applies particularly to him.

Verse 49. Will I give thanks unto thee—among the heathen] Quoted by St. Paul, Rom. xv. 9, to prove that the calling of the Gentiles was predicted, and that what then took place was the fulfilment of that prediction.

But there is a sense in which it applies particularly to David, well observed by Theodore—“We see,” says he, “evidently the fulfilment of this prophecy; for, even to the present day, David praises the Lord among the Gentiles, by the mouth of true believers; seeing there is not a town, village, hamlet, country, not even a desert, where Christians dwell, in which God is not praised by their singing the Psalms of David.”

Verse 50. Great deliverance giveth he to his king] David was a king of God's appointment; and was peculiarly favoured by Him. Literally, He is magnifying the salvations of His king. He not only delivers, but follows up those deliverances with innumerable blessings.

Showeth mercy—to David] I have no claim upon His bounty. I deserve nothing from Him; but he continues to show mercy.

To his seed] His posterity. So the words וְעַד אֶרְבָּב, and וְעַד אֶרְבָּב, in the Old and New Testament, should be universally translated. The common translation is totally improper.

For evermore] עַד אֶדְוָם ad-olam, for ever;—through all duration of created worlds. And more,—the eternity that is beyond time. This shows that another David is meant; with another kind of posterity, and another sort of kingdom. From the family of David came the man Christ Jesus—His posterity are the genuine Christians,—His kingdom, in which they are subjects, is spiritual. This government shall last through all time, for Christianity will continue to prevail till the end of the world:—and it will be extended through eternity; for that is the kingdom of glory in which Jesus reigns on the throne of His Father, and in which His followers shall reign with Him for ever and ever.

It has already been remarked that this whole Psalm has been understood as relating to the passion and victories of Christ, and the success of the Gospel in the earth. In this way Bishop Horne has understood and paraphrased it: and in the same way it is considered by the ancient Poets, so often mentioned. Many of the primitive fathers, and modern interpreters, have taken the same view of it. Those passages which I judged to have this meaning I have pointed out: and have only to add, that as David was a type of Christ, many things spoken of him primarily, refer to our Lord ultimately: but much judgment and caution are required in their application. To apply the whole Psalm in this way appears to me very injudicious, and often derogatory from the majesty of Christ. Let this be my excuse for not following the same track in which many of my predecessors have gone.

ANALYSIS OF THE EIGHTEENTH PSALM.

David's Exultation, or song of triumph after his conquest of all his enemies.

This Psalm may be divided into four parts:—

I. David shows what God is to His servants, and the effect it wrought upon him, ver. 1, 2, 3.

II. The great danger in which he was from the power and multitude of his enemies, ver. 4—23.

III. His glorious victories, and their consequences, ver. 24—45.

IV. His thanksgiving for those victories, ver. 46—50.

I. What God is to His servants, and to him especially.

1. Strength. 2. Rock. 3. Fortress. 4. Deliverer. 5. Tower. 6. Buckler. 7. Horn of salvation. 8. Highest tower, ver. 1, 2. (See the Notes.)

The effect it wrought in him. It produced,—1. Love. I will love the Lord. 2. CONFIDENCE. In him will I trust. 3. The spirit of prayer. I will call on the Lord. The fruit of all which was his safety. So shall I be saved from mine enemies, ver. 3.

II. The great dangers in which he was, and of his escape.

1. His danger was great; for, 1. He was encompassed with the sorrows of death. 2. Was terrified with the floods of ungodly men. 3. Surrounded by the sorrows

O LORD, among the heathen, and sing praises unto thy name.

50 Great deliverance giveth he to his king; and sheweth mercy to his anointed, to David, and to his seed for evermore.

q Ps. 144. 10.—r 2 Sam. 7. 13.

of hell. And, 4. Prevented by the snares of death, ver. 4, 5.

2. He shows how he behaved in these dangers, and from whom he sought for help. 1. He called upon the Lord. 2. He cried unto his God.

3. He shows the goodness of God to him, and His readiness to help him. 1. He heard me out of his holy temple. 2. My cry came to his ears.

4. The cause of his escape was the immediate hand of God, who testified his presence by many supernatural signs. 1. EARTHQUAKES. The earth shook and trembled. 2. HILLS and mountains were moved from their places. The hills moved, &c., ver. 7. 3. SMOKE came out of His nostrils. 4. A consuming FIRE came out of His mouth; and became permanent, for coals were kindled by it, ver. 8. 5. A THICK DARKNESS announced His presence; and the atmosphere was greatly confused. He bowed the heavens;—darkness was under his feet, ver. 9. 6. There were mighty winds and tempests. He flew on the wings of the wind, ver. 10. 7. There were violent inundations, with blackness of the atmosphere, dark waters,—thick clouds of the sky, ver. 11. 8. GREAT THUNDERS. The Lord thundered;—the Highest gave his voice. 9. There was great RAIL, and FIREY METEORS. Hail stones and coals of fire, ver. 12, 13. 10. Tremendous LIGHTNINGS, and fearful CHASMS opened in the earth. He sent out, ver. 14, 15.

5. He reckons up his deliverances, with the manner and causes:—

1. He took, he drew me out of many waters, ver. 16.

2. He did this in a supernatural way. He sent from above, ib.

6. He describes his enemies from whom God delivered him. 1. They were very numerous, compared to many waters, ver. 16. He drew me out of many waters. 2. They were very strong. 3. Full of malice. 4. Too strong for him. 5. INSIDIOUS and CRUEL. They prevented me in the day of my calamity, ver. 17, 19.

7. But God was his STAY; and the causes which moved God to help him were, 1. His own good-will. Because he delighted in me. 2. David's innocence;—which he declares from ver. 20 to ver. 25.

8. And then, ab hypothesi, from his own particular case, he takes occasion to discourse in thesi, that this is not only true in David's person, but shall be verified in all that are upright as he was; which he proves from the nature and usual manner of God's proceedings with good and bad men, from ver. 25 to ver. 28.

III. David's glorious VICTORIES, and their consequences, from 29—46.

1. His victory he expresses and amplifies many ways:— 1. From the opposition which he conquered. Nor troops, nor walls, hindered, ver. 29.

2. From God's singular protection. He was his Buckler, his Rock.

3. From his armour.—He was made steel; and had military knowledge, strength and defence from God, ver. 33.

4. From his safety. He was not wounded in the battle.

5. From his success. He routed his enemies; they fled, and he pursued, ver. 37.

6. From the greatness of the victory. It was a complete conquest; for his enemies were taken, or consumed, or wounded, so as to be unable to rally. They fell under his feet;—their necks were brought down, ver. 38—42.

7. From the cause. All was of God;—he takes nothing to himself. Thou hast girded me.—Thou hast subdued.—Thou hast given me, &c.

2. The consequences of these victories were the propagation and enlargement of David's kingdom:

1. Before these victories, there were murmurings and insurrections among his people; but now, being conqueror, they are all quiet. Thou hast delivered me from the strivings of the people, ver. 43.

2. He was exalted to be head of the heathen: Moabites, Ammonites, &c., served him, ver. 44.

3. People whom he had not known became tributary to him. Aliens shall serve me, ver. 44.

4. This, it is true, they did out of fear, not affection. They dissembled in their fidelity; and several fell off; but still they were obliged to submit, ver. 45.

IV. David's THANKSGIVING. This is the main scope of the Psalm; to celebrate and extol the name and mercy of God for his victories. This has two parts:—1. His present thanksgiving. 2. His profession for the future.

PSALM XIX.

The heavens, and their host, proclaim the majesty of God, 1-2. The excellence and perfection of the Divine law, 3-12. In conclusion, 13. The Psalmist prays for pardon and preservation from sin, 13, 14. And that his words and thoughts may be holy, 14.

IV. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

THE heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament sheweth his handy-work. 2 Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge.

A Gen. 1. 6. Inal. 46. 22. Rom. 1. 19, 20.—b Or, without these their voices is heard. c Heb. without their voice heard.

1. He magnifies God. The Lord liveth; and blessed be my rock, and let the God of my salvation be exalted, ver. 46. And to this end, in the two next verses, he makes mention again of his victories, and attributes the whole success to God, ver. 47, 48.

2. He professes still to do it; he will not cease even among the heathen. Therefore, will I give thanks, ver. 49.

3. And he shews how much reason he had to do so: because, 1. He had great deliverances. 2. He was the man of God's choice; His king—his anointed. 3. This goodness was to survive him, and go to his posterity. To David, and to his seed. 4. It was to have no end: it was to be for evermore, ver. 50.

Here the true David and the spiritual seed are referred to; and for this the Reader is requested to examine the Notes, and the remark before this analysis.

NOTES ON PSALM XIX.

The title of this Psalm has nothing particular in it: but it is not very clear that it was written by David, to whom it is attributed; though some think that he composed it in the wilderness, while persecuted by Saul. For this opinion, however, there is no solid ground. There is no note in the Psalm itself to lead us to know, when, where, or by whom, it was written. It is a highly finished and beautiful ode.

Verse 1. The heavens declare the glory of God] Literally, The heavens number out the glory of the strong God. A first view of the starry heavens strikes every beholder with astonishment at the power by which they were made, and by which they are supported. To find out the wisdom and skill displayed in their contrivance requires a measure of science; but when the vast magnitude of the celestial bodies is considered, we feel increasing astonishment at these works of the strong God.

The firmament] The whole visible expanse;—not only containing the celestial bodies above referred to, but also the air, light, rains, dews, &c. &c. And when the composition of these principles is examined, and their great utility to the earth and its inhabitants properly understood, they afford matter of astonishment to the wisest mind, and of adoration and gratitude even to the most unfeeling heart.

Verse 2. Day unto day uttereth speech] Each day is represented as teaching another relative to some new excellence discovered in these manifold works of God. The nights also, by the same figure, are represented as giving information to each other of the increase of knowledge already gained.

"The labours of these our instructors know no intermission; but they continue incessantly to lecture us in the science of Divine wisdom. There is one glory of the sun, which shines forth by day; and there are other glories of the moon and of the stars, which become visible by night. And because day and night interchangeably divide the world between them, they are, therefore, represented as transmitting, in succession, each to other, the task enjoined them, like the two parts of a choir, chanting forth alternately the praises of God." Bishop Horne.

Verse 3. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard.] Leave out the epithets here, which pervert the sense; and what remains is a tolerable translation of the original;—

אין דבור ואלו דברים בלי שומע קולם

Ejn omer ve-ein debarim, bali nishmā kalam.

"No speech, and no words; their voice without hearing."

בכל הארץ נאמרו קולם ואלו דברים בלי שומע קולם

Bekol ha-arets na'amaru kalam: U-bi-kalam lehel malleghem.

"Into all the earth hath gone out their sound; and to the extremity of the habitable world their eloquence."

The word קולם, which we translate line, is rendered sonus by the Vulgate, and φωνή, sound, by the Septuagint; and St. Paul, Rom. x. 18, uses the same term. Perhaps the idea here is taken from a stretched cord, that emits a sound on being struck; and hence both ideas may be included in the same word; and קולם, may be either their line or cord, or their sound. But I rather think that the Hebrew word originally meant sound, or 3 There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard.

4 Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun,

5 Which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race.

noise; for, in Arabic, the verb كراها karaha, signifies he called out, cried, clamavit. The sense of the whole is this, as Bishop Horne has well expressed it,—

"Although the heavens are thus appointed to teach; yet it is not by articulate sounds that they do it. They are not endowed, like man, with the faculty of speech: but they address themselves to the mind of the intelligent beholder in another way; and that, when understood, a no less forcible way, the way of picture or representation. The instruction which the heavens spread abroad is as universal as their substance, which extends itself in lines, or rays. By this means their words, or rather their significant actions or operations are every where present; and thereby they preach to all the nations the power and wisdom, the mercy and loving kindness, of the Lord."

St. Paul applies this as a prophecy relative to the universal spread of the gospel of Christ, Rom. x. 18, for God designed that the light of the gospel should be diffused wheresoever the light of the celestial luminaries shone; and be as useful and beneficent, in a moral point of view, as that is in a natural. All the inhabitants of the earth shall benefit by the gospel of Christ as they all benefit by the solar, lunar, and stellar light. And, indeed, all have thus benefited, where even the words are not yet come. Jesus is the true light that lightens every man that cometh into the world. His light, and the voice of His Spirit, have already gone through the earth;—and His words, and the words of his apostles, are by means of the Bible and missionaries, going out to all the extremities of the habitable globe.

On these words I shall conclude with the translation in my old Psalter:—

Ver. 1. Hebans tells the joy of God: and the workes of his handes sheweth the firmament.

Ver. 2. Day till day uttereth word; and night till night sheweth conyng.

Ver. 3. Na speches er, ne na wordes, of the quilit the boundes of thaim be nought bet's.

Ver. 4. In all the land grede the moune of thaim; and in endes of the world thair wordes.

Ver. 5. In the South he sett his tabernacle; and he as a spouse comand forth of his chamber; he joyed als graunt at tyn the way.

Ver. 6. Fra heart piden the gangyng of hym: and his gaine case ill the heart of hym: nane es that hym may byde fra his bet'e.

All the Versions, except the Chaldee, render the last clause of the fourth verse thus;—in the sun he hath placed his tabernacle; as the old Psalter likewise does. They supposed that if the Supreme Being had a local dwelling, this must be it; as it was to all human appearance, the fittest place. But the Hebrew is, Among them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun. He is the centre of the universe: all the other heavenly bodies appear to serve him. He is like a general in his pavilion, surrounded by his troops; to whom he gives his orders, and by whom he is obeyed. So, the solar influence gives motion, activity, light, and heat, to all the planets. To none of the other heavenly bodies does the Psalmist assign a tabernacle;—none is said to have a fixed dwelling but the sun.

Verse 5. Which is as a bridegroom, &c.] This is a reference to the rising of the sun, as the following verse is to the setting. He makes his appearance above the horizon with splendour and majesty;—every creature seems to rejoice at his approach; and during the whole of his course, through his whole circuit, his apparent revolution from east to west, and from one tropic to the same again, no part of the earth is deprived of its proper proportion of light and heat. The sun is compared to a bridegroom in his ornaments, because of the glory and splendour of his rays; and to a giant, or strong man, running a race, because of the power of his light and heat. The apparent motion of the sun, in his diurnal and annual progress, are here both referred to. Yet both these have been demonstrated to be mere appearances. The sun's diurnal motion arises from the earth's rotation on its axis from west to east in twenty-three hours, fifty-six minutes, heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof;

PSALM XIX.

7 The law of the LORD is perfect, converting the soul; the testimony of the LORD is sure, making wise the simple.

8 The statutes of the LORD are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the LORD is pure, enlightening the eyes.

9 The fear of the LORD is clean, enduring for ever: the judgments of the LORD are true and righteous altogether.

10 More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold: sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb.

11 Moreover by them is thy servant warned: and in keeping of them there is great reward.

12 The statutes of the LORD are straight, as grace, and mercies are true, and righteous altogether.

and four seconds, the mean or equal time which elapses between two consecutive meridian-transits of the same fixed star. But on account of the sun's apparent ecliptic motion in the same direction, the earth must make about the three hundred and sixty-fifth part of a second revolution on its axis before any given point of the earth's surface can be again brought into the same direction with the sun as before: so that the length of a natural day is twenty-four hours at a mean rate. The apparent revolution of the sun through the twelve constellations of the zodiac is a sidereal year, is caused by the earth's making one complete revolution in its orbit in the same time. And as the earth's axis makes an angle with the axis of the ecliptic of about twenty-three degrees and twenty-eight minutes, and always maintains its parallelism, i. e. is always directed to the same point of the starry firmament; from these circumstances are produced the regular change of the seasons, and continually differing lengths of the days and nights in all parts of the terraqueous globe, except at the poles and on the equator. When we say that the earth's axis is always directed to the same point of the heavens, we mean to be understood only in a general sense;—for, owing to a very slow deviation of the terrestrial axis from its parallelism, (named the precession of the equinoctial points,) which becomes sensible in the lapse of some years, and which did not escape the observation of the ancient astronomers, who clearly perceived that it was occasioned by a slow revolution of the celestial poles around the poles of the ecliptic, the complete revolution of the earth in its orbit is longer than the natural year, or the earth's tropical revolution, by a little more than twenty minutes; so that in twenty-five thousand seven hundred and sixty-three entire terrestrial revolutions round the sun, the seasons will be renewed twenty-five thousand seven hundred and sixty-four times. And in half this period, or twelve thousand eight hundred and eighty-two natural years, the points which are now the north and south poles of the heavens, around which the whole starry firmament appears to revolve, will describe circles about the then north and south poles of the heavens, the semi-diameters of which will be nearly forty-seven degrees.

Coming out of his chamber mechuphato, from under his veil. It was a sort of canopy erected on four poles, which four Jews held over the bridegroom's head.

Verse 7. The law of the LORD is perfect. And here are two books of Divine Revelation,—1. The visible HEAVENS, and the works of creation in general: 2. The BIBLE, or divinely inspired writings contained in the Old and New Testaments. These may all be called the law of the Lord: torah, from yarah, to instruct, direct, put straight, guide. It is God's system of instruction, by which men are taught the knowledge of God and themselves, directed how to walk so as to please GOD, redeemed from crooked paths, and guided in the way everlasting. Some think that torah, means the preceptive part of Revelation. Some of the primitive Fathers have mentioned three LAWS given by God to man:—1. The law of nature, which teaches the knowledge of God, as to His eternal power and Deity, by the visible creation. 2. The law given to Moses and the prophets, which teaches more perfectly the knowledge of God. His nature, His will, and our duty. 3. The LAW of grace given by Christ Jesus, which shows the doctrine of the atonement, of purification, and of the resurrection of the body. The first is written in hieroglyphics, in the heavens and the earth. The second was written on tables of stone, and in many rites and ceremonies. The third is to be written on the heart by the power of the Holy Ghost.

Is perfect] temimah, it is perfection. It is perfect in itself as a law; and requires perfection in the hearts and lives of men. This is its character.

Converting the soul] Turning it back to God. Restoring it to right reason, or to a sound mind; teaching it its own interest in reference to both worlds. This is its use.

The testimony of the LORD] eduth, from yad, ad, beyond, forward. The various types and appointments of the law, which refer to something beyond themselves, and point forward to the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world. Some understand by these, the doctrinal part of the law.

Is sure] ne-emanah, are faithful; they point out the things beyond them fairly, truly, and fully, and make no vain or false report. They all bear testimony to the great atonement. This is THEIR character.

Making wise the simple.] The simple is he who has but one end in view; who is concerned about his soul, and earnestly enquiring, "What shall I do to be saved?" These testimonies point to the atonement, and thus the simple-hearted is made wise unto salvation. This is THEIR use.

Verse 8. The statutes of the LORD] pikudim, from pakad, he visited, cared, took notice of, appointed to a charge. The appointments, or charge delivered by God to man for his regard and observance.

Are right] yesharim, from yashar, to make straight, smooth, right, upright, opposed to crookedness in mind or conduct; shewing what the man should be, both within and without. This is THEIR character.

Rejoicing the heart] As they shew a man what he is to observe and keep in charge, and how he is to please God, and the Divine help he is to receive from the visitations of God, they contribute greatly to the happiness of the upright;—they rejoice the heart. This is THEIR use.

The commandment] misvath, from tsavah, to command, give orders, ordain. What God has ordered man to do, or not to do. What he has commanded, and what he has prohibited.

Is pure] From barah, to clear, cleanse, purify. All God's commandments lead to purity, enjoin purity, and point out that sacrificial offering by which cleansing and purification are acquired. This is ITS character.

Enlightening the eyes.] Showing men what they should do, and what they should avoid. It is by God's commandments that we see the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and the necessity of redemption, so that we may love the Lord with all our heart, and our neighbour as ourselves. For this is the end of the commandment; and thus to enlighten the eyes, is ITS use.

Verse 9. The fear of the LORD] yirath, from yara, to fear, to venerate;—often put for the whole of divine worship. The reverence we owe to the Supreme Being.

Is clean] tehorah, from tahar, to be pure, clean;—not differing much from barah, (see above,) to be clean, and bright as the heavens;—as purified silver. Its object is to purge away all defilement; to make a spotless character.

Enduring for ever] omedet la-ud, "standing up to perpetuity." The fear that prevents us from offending God, that causes us to revere Him, and is the beginning, as it is the safeguard of wisdom, must be carried all through life. No soul is safe for a moment without it. It prevents departure from God, and keeps that clean which God has purified. This is ITS use.

The judgments of the LORD] mishpelim, from shaphat, he judged, regulated, disposed. All God's regulations, all His decisions;—what He has pronounced to be right and proper.

Are true] emeth, truth, from am, to support, confirm, make stable, and certain. This is the character of God's judgments. They shall all stand. All dispensations in providence and grace confirm them:—they are certain, and have a fixed character.

And righteous altogether.] They are not only according to truth; but they are righteous, tsadeku, they give to all their due. They show what belongs to God, to man, and ourselves. And hence the word altogether, yachday, equally, is added:—or truth and righteousness united.

Verse 10. More to be desired are they than gold] This is strictly true;—but who believes it? By most men gold is preferred both to God and His judgments; and they will barter every heavenly portion for gold and silver!

Sweeter also than honey] To those whose mental taste is rectified; who have a spiritual discernment.

Honeycomb.] Honey is sweet;—but honey just out of the comb has a sweetness, richness, and flavour, far beyond what it has after it becomes exposed to the air. Only those who have eaten of honey from the comb can feel the force of the Psalmist's comparison:—it is better than gold, yea than fine gold in the greatest quantity; it is sweeter than honey, yea, than honey from the comb.

12 * Who can understand his errors ? * cleanse thou me from * secret faults.

13 * Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins ; * let them not have dominion over me ; then shall I be upright, and I shall

Ps. 118.—1. Lev. 4. 2. Gen.—1. Ps. 118. 2.—1. Gen. 22. 4. 1 Sam. 25. 22, 23, 24, 26. v. Ps. 118. 123. Rom. 6. 12, 14.

Verse 11. By them is thy servant warned] וְאֵין נִיזָהָר, מִן הַיְזָהָר, לֵב טָהוֹר, פֶּלְחִיד. By these laws, testimonies, &c., thy servant is fully instructed; he sees all clearly; and he discerns that in keeping of them there is great reward:—every man is safe, wise, holy, and happy, who observes them. All Christian experience confirms this truth. Reader, what says this?

Verse 12. Who can understand his errors] It is not possible, without much of the Divine light, to understand all our deviations from, not only the letter, but the spirituality, of the Divine law. Frequent self-examination, and walking in the light, are essentially necessary to the requisite degrees of spiritual perfection.

Cleanse thou me from secret faults.] From those which I have committed, and have forgotten;—from those for which I have not repented;—from those which have been committed in my heart, but have not been brought to act in my life;—from those which I have committed without knowing that they were sins,—sins of ignorance;—and from those which I have committed in private, for which I should blush and be confounded were they to be made public.

Verse 13. From presumptuous sins] Sins committed not through frailty or surprise, but those which are the offspring of thought, purpose, and deliberation. Sins against judgment, light, and conscience. The words might be translated,—Preserve thy servant also from the proud; from tyrannical governors, i. e. from evil spirits. Bishop Horsley. So most of the Versions understand the place.

Let them not have dominion over me] Let me never be brought into a habit of sinning. He who sins presumptuously will soon be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

Then shall I be upright] Let me be preserved from all the evil that the craft and malice of the devil or man work against me, then shall I continue to walk uprightly, and shall be innocent from the great transgression;—from habitual sinning,—from apostasy,—from my easily besetting sin. He who would be innocent from the great transgression must take care that he indulge not himself in any. See Bp. Horne. Most men have committed some particular sin, which they ought to deplore as long as they breathe, and on account of the enormity of which they should for ever be humbled.

Verse 14. Let the words of my mouth] He has prayed against practical sin,—the sins of the body; now, against the sins of the mouth and of the heart. Let my mouth speak nothing but what is true, kind, and profitable; and my heart meditate nothing but what is holy, pure, and chaste.

Acceptable in thy sight] Like a sacrifice without spot or blemish, offered up with a perfect heart to God.

O Lord, my strength] וְאֵין טוֹרֵי, "my Fountain, my Origin."

My redeemer.] וְאֵין גּוֹאֵל, my Kinsman, he whose right it is to redeem the forfeited inheritance: for so was the word used under the old law. This prayer is properly concluded; he was weak,—he felt the need of God's strength. He had sinned and lost all title to the heavenly inheritance, and therefore needed the interference of the Divine Kinsman;—of Him who, because the children were partakers of flesh and blood, also partook of the same. No prayer can be acceptable before God which is not offered up in His strength;—through Him who took our nature upon Him that He might redeem us unto God, and restore the long lost inheritance. לֹאֵלֵךְ מִי עֵזְרָא וְיִשְׁעֵי מִי בְּרַחֵם. Old Psalter. He who is my only Help, and He that bought me with His blood. This prayer is often, with great propriety, uttered by pious people when they enter a place of worship.

ANALYSIS OF THE NINETEENTH PSALM.

I. There are two parts in this Psalm. The first is doctrinal, the second penitential. The doctrinal part has two members:—

1. The first teaches us to know God by natural reason, from the book of creation, from ver. 1. to ver. 7.

2. But because this way is insufficient to save a soul, therefore in the second part we have a better way prescribed, which is the Book of the Scriptures; the excellencies of which are described from ver. 7 to ver. 11.

II. The penitential part begins at the twelfth verse; for since the reward to be expected proceeds from the keeping be innocent from * the great transgression.

14 * Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, * my strength, and my * redeemer.

w Or, much.—1. Ps. 118.—1. Heb. my rock. Ps. 118. 1.—1. Gen. 22. 4. & 24. 6. & 47. 4. 1 Thim. 1. 10.

of God's law, and David's heart told him he had not kept it, therefore, he begs pardon and grace, ver. 12 to 14.

1. The heavens declare, &c. By the glory of God we are to understand His goodness, wisdom, power; in a word, all His attributes, of which we have a double declaration:

1. A testimony from the creatures, but especially the heavens, whose magnitude, beauty, order, variety, perpetual motion, light, influences, &c., declare that there is an omnipotent, wise, good, and gracious God who is their Creator:—with this David begins. The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament sheweth forth, &c.

2. The vicissitude of day and night, proceeding from their motions, declares this also. Day unto day uttereth speech, &c. 1. The heavens are diligent preachers; for they preach all day and all night, without intermission. 2. They are learned preachers, for they preach in all tongues. There is no speech—where their voice is not heard. 3. They are universal preachers, for they preach to the whole world. Their sound is gone through all the earth, &c.

3. But among all these creatures the sun, for which God in heaven has set a throne, makes the fairest and clearest evidence, and that in the three following ways:—

1. By his splendour, light, and beauty; he riseth as gloriously as a bridegroom coming from under his canopy.

2. By his wonderful celerity, not only in revolving round his own axis, which revolution, although he is one million three hundred and eighty-four thousand four hundred and sixty-two times bigger than the earth, he performs in twenty-five days fourteen hours of our time, but also in the swiftness with which his light comes to the earth. It travels at the rate of one hundred and ninety-four thousand one hundred and eighty-eight miles in a second of time; and reaches our earth in eight minutes and about twelve seconds, a distance of ninety-five millions, five hundred and thirteen thousand, seven hundred and ninety-four English miles, at a mean rate.

3. His strange and miraculous heat, from which nothing is hidden, and by which every thing is benefited.

II. But as the declaration, even from the most glorious of creatures, is not sufficient to make men wise and happy, He has been pleased to declare Himself by His WRITTEN WORD, called here the LAW generally; and is commended to us by the following reasons:—

1. From the Author. It is the Law of Jehovah.

2. From its sufficiency. It is perfect.

3. From its utility. It converts the soul:—gives wisdom to the simple.

4. From its infallibility. The testimony of the Lord is sure.

5. From its perspicuity. The statutes of the Lord are right.

6. From the effects it works in the soul. They rejoice the heart. They quiet the troubled conscience;—Being justified by faith, we have peace with God.

7. From its purity. The commandment of the Lord is pure. It is opposed to all bad opinions and evil practices.

8. From its effects in the understanding. It enlightens the eyes. It dispels all darkness and ignorance, all doubts and fears, diffidence, carnal security, false worship, &c., and gives us to see our own deformities.

9. From its incorruptness. The fear of the Lord is clean. Other religions are polluted with human inventions, strange ceremonies, uncommanded sacrifices, false gods, &c.

10. From its perpetuity. It endureth for ever. It is an endless Law, and an everlasting Gospel.

11. From its truth and equity. It is altogether true and righteous.

Out of all which David concludes that it is both precious and delightful.

1. The price of it is beyond the best gold. More to be desired than gold; yea, than much fine gold.

2. It was delightful. Sweeter than honey and the honeycomb.

3. This he knew by his own experience. Moreover by them is thy servant illuminated.

4. It is profitable to observe them. For in keeping of them there is, 1. A reward. 2. A great reward.

III. But this last consideration sent David to the throne of mercy. What! a reward, a great reward! and only to those who keep God's law? My conscience tells me that the reward is not for me: I cannot plead this oberrance. David had public sins, secret faults and errors, to deplore. But he had at hand three means of help:—1. Confession of sin. 2. Petition for grace. 3. Faith in the Divine mercy, through the great Redeemer.

1. He knew he was an offender, but he knew not how guilty he had offended. He saw that he was guilty, and asked pardon. He felt that he was impure, and asked cleansing. Who can understand his errors! cleanse thou me from my secret faults.

2. He prays that he may be preserved from presumptuous sins; that he might not be hardened in transgression. Keep back also thy servant from presumptuous sins. For which he gives two reasons:—1. If he were not kept back from them, sin would get the dominion over him. Sin would become a king who would command, rule, and enslave him. 2. If thus kept back, he would be innocent from the great transgression; for he that gets under the strong habit of sin may at last deny God Himself, renounce the blood of the covenant, and become a castaway.

3. Lastly, That his prayer may be heard, he prays for his prayer. Let the words of my mouth and the meditations of my heart be acceptable in thy sight. This is pleading, or supplication.

That prayer and supplication may be successful, he acts faith in God, whom he

1. Claims as his strength; literally his rock, by whom alone he could resist and overcome.

2. His Redeemer, through whom alone he could get pardon for the past, and grace to help him in time of need. To this word he adds nothing, as it includes every thing necessary to saint and sinner. See the Notes.

NOTES ON PSALM XX.

It is most likely that this Psalm was penned on the occasion of David's going to war; and most probably with the Ammonites and Syrians, who came with great numbers of horses and chariots to fight with him. See 2 Sam. x. 6. 1 Chron. xix. 7. It is one of the dialogue Psalms, and appears to be thus divided. Previously to his undertaking the war, David comes to the tabernacle to offer sacrifice. This being done, the people, in the king's behalf, offer up their prayers; these are included in the three first verses. The fourth was probably spoken by the highpriest. The fifth by David and his attendants; the last clause by the highpriest. The sixth by the highpriest, after the victim was consumed. The seventh and eighth by David and his men. And the ninth as a chorus by all the congregation.

Verse 1. The LORD hear thee] David had already offered the sacrifice, and prayed. The people implore God to succour him in the day of trouble; of both personal and national danger.

The name of the God of Jacob] This refers to Jacob's wrestling with the Angel, Gen. xxxiii. 24, &c. And who was this Angel? Evidently none other than the Angel of the covenant, the Lord Jesus, in whom was the name,—the fulness of the Godhead bodily. He was the God of Jacob, who blessed Jacob, and gave him a new name and a new nature. See the Notes on the above place in Genesis.

Verse 2. Send thee help from the sanctuary] This was the place where God recorded His name; the place where He was to be sought, and the place where He manifested Himself. He dwelt between the cherubim, over the mercy-seat. He is now in Christ, reconciling the world to Himself. This is the true sanctuary where God must be sought.

Strengthen thee out of Zion.] The temple, or tabernacle where his prayers and sacrifices were to be offered.

Verse 3. Remember all thy offerings] The mincha, which is here mentioned, was a gratitude offering. It is rarely used to signify a bloody sacrifice.

Burnt sacrifice] The slatb here mentioned was a bloody sacrifice. The blood of the victim was spilt at the altar, and the flesh consumed. One of these offerings implied a consciousness of sin in the offerer; and this sacrifice he brought as an atonement; the other implied a sense of mercies already received, and was offered in the way of gratitude.

David presents himself before the Lord with offerings of both kinds.

This prayer of the people is concluded with Selah, which we have taken up in the general sense of so be it. Hear and answer. It will and must be so, &c.

Verse 4. Grant thee according to thine own heart] May God give thee whatsoever thou art setting thy heart upon, and accomplish all thy desires! This was probably the prayer of the highpriest.

Verse 5. We will rejoice in thy salvation] We expect help from Thee alone: it is in Thy cause we engage; and to Thee, as our war is a just one, we consecrate our banners, inscribed with Thy name. It is said that the Maccabees had their name from the inscription on their banners; which was taken from Exodus xv. 11, וְיָצַק מַיִם מִן הַיָּם מִיְהוָה מִיְהוָה מִיְהוָה. The word being formed from the initial letters, מַיִם מִן הַיָּם מִיְהוָה Ma Ca B I, whence Maccabeus, and Maccabees.

The words of this verse were spoken by David, and his officers; immediately after which I suppose the highpriest to have added, The LORD fulfil all thy petitions!

Verse 6. Now know I that the LORD saveth his anointed] These are probably the words of the priest after the victim had been consumed; and those signs had accompanied the offering, which were proofs of God's acceptance of the sacrifice; and consequently, that the campaign would have a successful issue. David is God's anointed;—therefore, he is under His especial care. He will hear him. David must continue to pray, and to depend on God; else he cannot expect continual salvation. David has vast multitudes of enemies against him;—he, therefore, requires supernatural help. Because of this, God will hear him with the saving strength of his right hand.

The HAND of God is His power; the right hand, His almighty power;—the STRENGTH of his right hand, his almighty power in action; the SAVING strength of his right hand, the miraculous effects wrought by His almighty power brought into action. This is what David was to expect; and it was the prospect of this that caused him and his officers to exult as they do in the following verse.

Verse 7. Some trust in chariots] The words of the original are short and emphatic: These in chariots; and these in horses; but we will record in the name of Jehovah our God. Or, as the Septuagint, ἡμῶν ἡμῶν, we shall be magnified. Or, as the Vulgate, invocabimus, we will invoke the name of the Lord. This and the following verse I suppose to be the words of David and his officers. And the mention of chariots and horses makes it likely that the war with the Ammonites and Syrians is that to which reference is made here; for they came against him with vast multitudes of horsemen and chariots, 2 Sam. x. 6—8. According to the law, David could neither have chariots nor horses; and those who came against him with cavalry must have a very great advantage: but he saw that Jehovah his God was more than a match for all his foes, and in Him he trusts with implicit confidence.

Verse 8. They are brought down and fallen] They were so confident of victory, that they looked upon it as already gained. They who trusted in their horses and chariots are bowed down, and prostrated on the earth:—they are all overthrown.

But we are risen] We who have trusted in the name of Jehovah are raised up from all despondency; and we stand upright;—we shall conquer, and go on to conquer.

PSALM XXI.

The Psalmist returns thanks to God for giving him the victory over his enemies; which victory he had earnestly requested, 1, 2. He enters into a detail of the blessings which, in consequence of the victory, he had obtained, 3-7. He predicts the destruction of all those who may persecute him up against him, 8-12. And concludes with praises to the power of Jehovah, 13.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

David, Regis Israelitarum, etc. canticum 22.

THE king shall joy in thy strength, O LORD; and in thy salvation how greatly shall he rejoice!

2 Thou hast given him his heart's desire, a Ps. 20. 5, 6.—b Ps. 20. 4, 5.—c 2 Sam. 12. 30. 1 Chron. 20. 2.—d Ps. 61. 5, 6.

Verse 9. Save, LORD] This verse was spoken by all the congregation, and was the chorus and conclusion of the piece.

The verse may be read, Lord, save the king! He will hear us in the day of our calling. The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon, read the verse thus: Lord, save the king! and hear us whenever we shall call upon thee. The Syriac reads differently. The Lord will save us; and our king will hear us in the day in which we shall call upon him. This refers all to God; while the others refer the latter clause to DAVID, Lord, save David; and David will save us. "If Thou preserve him, he will be Thy minister for good to us." This appears to be the easiest sense of the place, and harmonizes with all the rest.

ANALYSIS OF THE TWENTIETH PSALM.

This Psalm is a form of prayer delivered by David to the people, to be used by them for the king, when he went out to battle against his enemies.

In this Psalm there are the following parts:—

I. A benediction of the people for their king, ver. 1-4.

II. A congratulation or triumph of the people after the victory; supposed to be already obtained, ver. 5-8.

III. A petition, ver. 9.

I. The benediction directed to David's person. The particulars, that he may have,

1. Audience in his necessity. The Lord hear thee in the day of trouble.

2. Protection. The name of the God of Jacob defend thee, ver. 1.

3. Help and strength in battle. Send thee help—strengthen thee:—which is amplified,—1. By the place;—help from the sanctuary. 2. Strength out of Zion.

4. Acceptance of his person: testified by the acceptance of his offerings and sacrifices, ver. 3.

5. Answers to his petitions. Grant thee according to thy own heart, and fulfil all thy counsel, ver. 4. which is plainly set down in the next verse. The Lord fulfil all thy petitions, ver. 5.

This benediction being ended, they persuade themselves that the prayer of it shall be granted, because it will rebound to God's glory; and they will be thankful, and honour Him for the victory.

1. We will rejoice in thy salvation. Or, Do this, that we may rejoice.

2. In the name of our God will we set up our banners. We will enter the city joyfully, with displayed banners, which we will erect as trophies to the honour of God.

II. Now follow the congratulation and triumph of their faith; for they give thanks as for a victory already obtained; for to their faith it was certain. Before, they prayed for audience and protection: here, they testify they are certain and secure of both.

1. Of protection. Now know I that the Lord will save &c.

2. Of audience. He will hear from his holy heaven.

3. Of help. With the saving strength of his right hand, ver. 6.

The certainty they had of this victory proceeded solely from their confidence in God. And this they illustrate by an argument drawn à dissimili: they were not like others who trust more to their arms than to their prayers; more to their numbers, than to God.

1. Some trust in chariots, and some in horses; as the Ammonites, 2 Sam. x. 6.

2. But we do not so: we will remember the name of the Lord our God;—the Lord of hosts, mighty in battle. Arms may be used by good or bad men; but the difference lies in the object, the end, and the confidence. A bad cause cannot have God's concurrence: a good cause will have His countenance and support.

3. And, therefore, the success was according to the confidence. 1. They who trusted on their arms, &c., are brought down, and fallen. 2. We who trusted in the Lord our God are risen, and stand upright, ver. 8.

III. The third part contains a short ejaculation; and is the sum of the Psalm.

and hast not withholden the request of his lips. Selah.

3 For thou preventest him with the blessings of goodness; thou settest a crown of pure gold on his head.

4 He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever.

5 His glory is great in thy salvation: honour and majesty hast thou laid upon him.

6 For thou hast made him most blessed for ever e 2 Sam. 7. 19. Ps. 91. 16.—f Heb. set him to be blessings. Gen. 12. 2. Ps. 78. 17.

1. Save, Lord! None but Thou can save us; in Thee, and in none other, do we put our trust.

2. Let the king hear us. We purpose to continue in prayer and faith: therefore, when we call, let the king, the Messiah, which thou hast set on thy holy hill, Ps. ii. 6, hear us. Or, according to another arrangement of the words: 1. Lord, save our king. Make him wise and good; preserve his person, and prosper his government, that we may have peace in our time, and secular prosperity. 2. Hear Thou us when we call. Let us have also spiritual prosperity, that we may perfectly love Thee, and worthily magnify Thy name.—Cala bu bñit, zehaine bo cymge, "O Thou Lord, health give the king." Anglo-Saxon.

NOTES ON PSALM XXI.

In the title of this Psalm there is nothing particularly worthy of remark. The occasion of it is variously understood. Some think it was composed to celebrate the victory obtained over Sennacherib; others that it was made on the recovery of Hezekiah, and the grant of fifteen years of longer life, see ver. 4. Others, and they with most appearance of propriety, consider it a song of rejoicing composed by David for his victory over the Ammonites, which ended in the capture of the royal city of Rabba, the crown of whose king David put on his own head, see ver. 3, and to procure which victory David offered the prayers and sacrifices mentioned in the preceding Psalm. Lastly, many think that it is to be wholly referred to the victories of the Messiah: and it must be owned that there are several expressions in it which apply better to our Lord than to David, or any other person; and to Him the Targum applies it, as does likewise my old Anglo-Scottish Psalter in paraphrasing the Text

Verse 1. The king shall joy] מלכא יתב מלכא משיחא, "the King Messiah," Targ. What a difference between ancient and modern heroes! The former acknowledged all to be of God, because they took care to have their quarrel rightly founded: the latter sing a Te Deum, pro forma, because they well know that their battle is not of the Lord. Their own vicious conduct sufficiently proves that they looked no higher than the arm of human strength. God suffers such for a time: but in the end He confounds and brings them to naught.

Verse 2. Thou hast given him his heart's desire] This seems to refer to the prayers offered in the preceding Psalm; see especially verses 1-4.

Verse 3. Thou preventest him] To prevent, from praeventio, literally signifies, to go before. Hence that prayer in the communion service of our public Liturgy, "Prevent us, O Lord, in all our doings with Thy most gracious favour!" That is, "Go before us in Thy mercy; make our way plain, and enable us to perform what is right in Thy sight!" And this sense of prevent is a literal version of the original word נִקְדָּמֵנוּ tekadmenu. For thou shalt go before him with blessings of goodness.

Our ancestors used God before, in this sense. So in Henry fifth's speech, to the French herald, previously to the battle of Agincourt:—

"Go, therefore; tell thy master, here I am. My ransom is this frail and worthless trunk; My army but a weak and sickly guard; Yes, God before, tell him we will come on, Though France himself, and each man's neighbour, Stand in our way."

A crown of pure gold] Probably alluding to the crown of the king of Rabba, which, on the taking of the city, David took and put on his own head. See the history, 2 Sam. xii. 26-30.

Verse 4. He asked life of thee] This verse has caused some interpreters to understand the Psalm of Hezekiah's sickness, recovery, and the promised addition to his life of fifteen years: but it may be more literally understood of the Messiah of whom David was the type; and, in several respects, the representative.

Verse 5. His glory is great] But great as his glory was, it had its greatness from God's salvation. There is no true nobility but of the soul; and the soul has none but what it receives from the grace and salvation of God.

Verse 6. Thou hast made him most blessed for ever] ever; * thou hast ^b made him exceeding glad with thy countenance.

7 For the king trusteth in the LORD, and through the mercy of the most High he ^c shall not be moved.

8 Thine hand shall ^b find out all thine enemies: thy right hand shall find out those that hate thee.

9 ^d Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven in the time of thine anger: the LORD shall ^e swallow them up in his wrath, ^f and the fire shall devour them.

Ps. 11. & 45. 7. Acts 2. 22.—b Heb. glorified him with joy.—1 Ps. 18. 4. & 1 Sam. 21. 3.—1 Mal. 4. 1.—c Ps. 95. 1, 2.—d Ps. 18. 6. Eul. 95. 11.—e 1 Kings

Literally, "Thou hast set him for blessings for ever." Thou hast made the Messiah the Source whence all blessings for time and for eternity shall be derived. He is the Mediator between God and man.

Thou hast made him exceeding glad] Jesus, as Messiah, for the joy that was set before Him, of redeeming a lost world by His death, endured the cross, and despised the shame; and is for ever set down on the right hand of God.

Verse 7. The king trusteth in the LORD] It was not by my skill or valour that I have gained this victory; but by faith in the strong, protecting, and conquering arm of JEMOAH.

He shall not be moved] Perhaps this may be best understood of Him who was David's prototype. His throne, kingdom, and government, shall remain for ever.

Verse 8. Thine hand shall find out] Thy uncontrollable power shall find out all thine enemies, whosoever hidden, or howsoever secret. God knows the secret sinner; and where the workers of iniquity hide themselves.

Verse 9. Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven] By Thy wrath they shall be burnt up; and they shall be the means of consuming others. One class of sinners shall, in God's judgments, be the means of destroying another class; and at last, themselves shall be destroyed.

Verse 10. Their fruit shall thou destroy] Even their posterity shall be cut off, and thus their memorial shall perish.

Verse 11. For they intended evil] Sinners shall not be permitted to do all that is in their power against the godly: much less shall they be able to perform all that they wish.

Verse 12. Therefore shall thou make them turn their back] God can, in a moment, strike the most powerful and numerous army, even in the moment of victory, with panic; and then, even the lame, the army which they had nearly routed, shall take the prey, and divide the spoil.

Against the face of them] Thou shalt cause them to turn their backs, and fly, as if a volley of arrows had been discharged in their faces. This seems to be the sense of this difficult verse.

Verse 13. Be thou exalted] Exalt thyself, O Lord—Thy creatures cannot exalt Thee. Lift thyself up, and discomfit Thy foes, by Thy own strength! Thou canst give a victory to Thy people over the most formidable enemies, though they strike not one blow in their own defence. God's right hand has often given the victory to his followers, while they stood still to see the salvation of God. How little can the strength of man avail when the Lord raiseth up himself to the battle! His children, therefore, may safely trust in Him; for the name of the Lord is a strong tower; the righteous flee into it, and are safe.

Praise thy power] God is to receive praise in reference to that attribute which He has exhibited most in the defence, or salvation, of His followers. Sometimes He manifests His power;—sometimes His mercy;—sometimes His wisdom,—His long suffering,—His fatherly care,—His good providence,—His holiness,—His justice,—His truth, &c. Whatever attribute or perfection He exhibits most, that should be the chief subject of His children's praise. One wants teaching, prays for it, and is deeply instructed:—he will naturally celebrate the wisdom of God. Another feels himself beset with the most powerful adversaries, with the weakest of whom he is not able to cope:—he cries to the Almighty God for strength; he is heard, and strengthened with strength in his soul. He, therefore, will naturally magnify the all-conquering power of the Lord. Another feels himself lost,—condemned,—on the brink of hell:—he calls for mercy; is heard, and saved:—mercy, therefore, will be the chief subject of his praise, and the burden of his song.

The old Anglo-Scottish Psalter says, We sal make knowen thi wordes in gude wil and gude werk, for he synges well that wirkes well. For thi, sais he twice, we sal syng; and tyme for the luf of hert; another, for the schewing of ryghtwisnes, til ensampil.

10 * Their fruit shalt thou destroy from the earth, and their seed from among the children of men.

11 For they intended evil against thee: they ^a imagined a mischievous device, which they are not able to perform.

12 Therefore ^b shalt thou make them turn their ^c back, when thou shalt make ready thine arrows upon thy strings against the face of them.

13 Be thou exalted, LORD, in thine own strength: so will we sing and praise thy power.

ANALYSIS OF THE TWENTY-FIRST PSALM.

This is the people's cruciator, or triumphal song, after the victory which they prayed for in the former Psalm, when David went out to war. In this, they praise God for the conquest which God gave him over his enemies, and for the singular mercies bestowed on himself. It consists of three parts:—

- I. The general proposition, ver. 1.
- II. The narration, which is two-fold, from ver. 1 to ver. 4. 1. An enumeration of the blessings bestowed on David, from ver. 1 to ver. 6. 2. An account how God would deal with his enemies, from ver. 6 to ver. 13.
- III. A vow, or acclamation, ver. 14, which is the epilogue of the piece.

1. The sum of the Psalm is contained in the first verse. The king shall joy; the king shall be exceeding glad. Joy is the affection with which the king and people were transported; for all that follows shows but the rise and causes of it.

1. The rise and object of it. The strength of God; the salvation of God. 1. His strength; by which he subdued his enemies, and contemned dangers. 2. His salvation; by which he escaped dangers, and fell not in battle.

II. 1. The narration of the goodness of God to David's person, the particulars of which are the following:—

1. God granted to him what his heart desired. Thou hast given him his heart's desire: and what his lips requested,—And hast not withholden the request of his lips.

2. He granted him more than he asked. Thou preventedest him with the blessings of goodness.

3. He chose him to be king. Thou hast set a crown of pure gold upon his head; in which God prevented him, and chose him when he thought not of it.

4. When David went to war, he asked life, and thou gavest him even length of days, for ever and ever: which is most true of Christ, the Son of David. In Him his life and kingdom are immortal.

5. A great accession of glory, honour, and majesty. Though his glory was great, it was in God's salvation:—Honour and majesty did God lay upon him.

All which are summed up under the word blessing in the next verse;—for thou hast made him most blessed for ever: and God had added the crown of all, a heart to rejoice in it. Thou hast made him exceeding glad with thy countenance.

6. The continuance of those blessings, which is another favour, with the cause of it;—For the king trusted in the Lord, and through the mercy of the Most High he shall not be moved. Thus far the first part of the narrative, which concerned David's person particularly.

2. The effects of God's goodness to David in outward things, and to the whole kingdom, in the overthrow of his enemies, (for without God's protection what kingdom is safe!) form the second part.

1. God would make David his instrument in delivering Israel by the overthrow of his enemies.—Thine hand.

2. He would certainly do it, for he could find them out wheresoever they were.—Thine hand shall find out thine enemies.

3. This was easy to be done; as easy as for fire to consume stubble.—Thou shalt make them as a fiery oven.

4. This destruction should be universal; it should reach even to their posterity.—Their fruit shall thou destroy, and their seed.

5. Their judgment should be fearful and unavoidable. God would set them up as a mark to shoot at.—Thou shalt make them turn their back, when thou shalt make ready thine arrows.

At last the cause is added for those judgments; of the succour He will afford His afflicted, oppressed people; and the revenge He will take upon their enemies.—They intended evil against thee; they imagined a mischievous device.

III. The vow or acclamation. This is properly the epilogue, and has two parts:—1. A petition;—Save the king

PSALM XXII.

Under great affliction and distress, the Psalmist prays unto God, 1-3. Appeals to God's wrothed kindness in behalf of His people, 4, 5. Relates the insults that he received, 6-8. Mentions the goodness of God to him in his youth, as a reason why he should expect help now, 9-11. Details his sufferings and the indignities offered to him, 12-18. Prays with the confidence of being heard and delivered, 19-21. Praises God, and forsooth the conversion of the nations to the true religion, 22-31.

IV. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

To the chief Musician upon Aijeleth Shabar, A Psalm of David.

Psalm, Regis Jerusalemensis. cir. ann. XXXVII.

and the people. 2. A profession;—And we will give thanks to thee.

1. Be thou exalted, O Lord, in thy own strength. Show Thyself more powerful in defending Thy church than men and devils are in their attempts to destroy it.

2. We will be a thankful people; we will show that we have not received this grace of God in vain.—So we will sing, and praise thy power.

NOTES ON PSALM XXII.

The title of this Psalm, "To the chief Musician upon Aijeleth Shabar, a Psalm of David," has given rise to many conjectures. The words אֵיֵלֶיֶת שַׁבָּר aiyeleth ha-shabar, are translated in the margin, the hind of the morning—but what was this? Was it the name of a musical instrument? or of a tune, or of a band of music? Calmet argues for the last; and translates "A Psalm of David, addressed to the music-master who presides over the band called the Morning Hind." This is more likely than any of the other conjectures I have seen. But aiyeleth ha-shabar may be the name of the Psalm itself; for it was customary among the Asiatics to give names to their poetic compositions which often bore no relation to the subject itself. Mr. Harmer and others have collected a few instances from D'Herbelot's Bibliothèque Orientale. I could add many more from MSS. in my own collection.—Thus Saad calls a famous miscellaneous work of his, GULISTAN, The Country of Roses, or The Rose Garden; and yet there is nothing relative to such a country, nor concerning roses nor rose gardens, in the book. Another is called NEGARISTAN, The Gallery of Pictures—yet no picture gallery is mentioned. Another BEHARISTAN, The Spring Season—BOSTAN, The Garden;—ANVAR SOHELY, The Light of Canopus—BAHAR DANUSH, The Garden of knowledge;—TUHFT ALMUMENEEN, The Gift of the Faithful, a treatise on medicines;—KEMERA ISADOT, The Alchymy of Life;—MUKHSEEN UL ASSAR, The Magazine of Secrets;—SULSELET AL ZAHAR, The Golden Chain;—ZUHFT AL ABRAH, The Rosemary of the Pious;—MERAT UL ABRAH, The Mirror of Secrets;—DUR UL DURAR, The most precious Jewels;—DERU MAJLIS, The Jewel of the Assembly;—AL BORDAH, The variegated Garmant; a poem written by Al Basir, in praise of the Mohammedan religion, in gratitude for a cure which he believed he received from the prophet, who appeared to him in a dream. The poem is written in one hundred and sixty-two couplets, each of which ends with o mim, the first letter in the name of Mohammed.

Scarcely one of the above titles, and their number might be easily troubled, bears any relation to the subject of the work to which it is prefixed, no more than Aiyeleth Shabar bears to the matter contained in the twenty-second Psalm. Such titles are of very little importance in themselves; and of no further use to us than as they serve to distinguish the different books, poems, or psalms, to which they are prefixed. To me many seem to have spent their time uselessly in the investigation of such subjects. See my Note on 2 Sam. i. 18.

On the subject of the Psalm itself there is considerable diversity of opinion:—1. Some referring all to David; 2. others referring it all to Christ; and, 3. some, because of the application of several verses of it to our Lord in His sufferings, take a middle way, and apply it primarily to David; and, in a secondary or accommodated sense, to Christ. Of this opinion was Theodore of Mopuesta, who gave a very rational account of his own plan of interpretation; for which he was condemned by the second Council of Constantinople, or fifth oecumenic council. Grotius and others have nearly copied his plan; and I think, with a little correction, it is the only safe one. That several parts of it relate to David, primarily, there is very little reason to doubt;—that several passages may be applied in way of accommodation to our Lord, though originally belonging to and expressing the state of David, may be piously believed; and that it contains portions which are direct prophecies of our Lord's passion, death,

2 O my God, I cry in the day time, but thou hearest not; and in the night season, and am not silent.

3 But thou art holy, O thou that inhabitest the praises of Israel.

4 Our fathers trusted in thee: they trusted, and thou didst deliver them.

5 They cried unto thee, and were not confounded: they trusted in thee, and were not confounded.

6 But I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people.

7 All they that see me laugh me to scorn:

18. 5. Ps. 18. & Dan. 3. 28. Eph. 1. 12. 13.—a Ps. 25. 2. & 31. 1. & 71. 1. la. 49. 23. Rom. 8. 33.—a Job 25. 6. la. 41. 12.—b la. 53. 2.—c Matt. 27. 39. Mark 15. 39. Luke 23. 35.

and victory, appears too evident to be safely denied. On this plan I propose to treat it in the following paraphrase; keeping it as near to the Gospel standard as I can. Dr. Delaney supposes the Psalm to have been written by David when he was at Mahanaim, the very place where God appeared to Jacob in his distress. See Gen. xxxiii. And on this supposition the third, fourth, and fifth verses may be easily and strikingly illustrated. Our fathers trusted in thee,—why may not I? Thou didst deliver them,—why may not I expect deliverance also? They cried unto Thee, trusted in Thee, and were not confounded,—I cry unto Thee, trust in Thee; and why should I be confounded? For Thou art the same God, Thou changest not; and with Thee there is no respect of persons. Thus David encouraged himself in the Lord; and these considerations helped to sustain him in his painful exercises and heavy distresses.

Verse 1. My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?] Shew me the cause why Thou hast abandoned me to my enemies; and why thou seemest to disregard my prayers and cries. For a full illustration of this passage I beg the reader to refer to my note on Matt. xxvii. 46.

The words of my roaring] רוּעַ שְׂאָגָתִי. The Vulgate, Septuagint, Syriac, Ethiopic, and Arabic, with the Anglo-Saxon, make use of terms which may be thus translated:—"My sins, (or foolishness,) is the cause why deliverance is so far from me." It appears that these Versions have read רוּעַ שְׂאָגָתִי, "my sin of ignorance," instead of רוּעַ שְׂאָגָתִי, "my roaring;" but no MS. extant supports this reading.

Verse 2. I cry in the daytime, and in the night season] This seems to be David's own experience; and the words seem to refer to his own case alone. Though I am not heard, and thou appearest to forget or abandon me; yet I continue to cry both day and night after Thy salvation.

Verse 3. But thou art holy] Though I be not heard, even while I cry earnestly, yet I cannot impute any fault or unkindness to my Maker; for thou art holy, and canst do nothing but what is right. This is the language of profound resignation, in trials the most difficult to be borne.

Inhabitest the praises of Israel] Thou dwellest in the sanctuary where the praises, thanksgivings, and sacrifices, of Thy people are continually offered.

Verse 4. Our fathers trusted in thee] David is supposed to have been, at the time of composing this Psalm, at Mahanaim, where Jacob was once in such great distress; where he wrestled with the Angel, and was so signally blessed. David might well allude to this circumstance, in order to strengthen his faith in God. I am now in the place where God so signally blessed the head and father of our tribes. I wrestle with God, as he did;—may I not expect similar success?

Verse 5. They cried unto thee] So do I. They were delivered;—so may I. They trusted in Thee;—I also trust in Thee. And were not confounded;—and is it likely that I shall be put to confusion?

Verse 6. But I am a worm, and no man] I can see no sense in which our Lord could use these terms. David might well use them to express his vileness and worthlessness. The old Psalter gives this a remarkable turn:—¶ am a worm,—that is, I am borne of the maiden with outen manseede: and nout man anely, but god als so: and nevir the latter, ¶ am repute of men, In spitting, buffet-ying, and punging with the thornes. and outkastyg of folk: for that chesed Baraban the thefe, and nought me.

Verse 7. Laugh me to scorn] They utterly despised me; set me at nought; treated me with the utmost contempt. Laugh to scorn is so completely antiquated that it should be no longer used: derided, despised, treated with contempt, are much more expressive, and are still in common use.

They shoot out the lip, they shake the head] This is applied by St. Matthew, (chap. xxvii. 39,) to the conduct of the Jews towards our Lord, when he hung upon the cross; as is also the following verse. But both are primarily true they shoot out the lip, they shake the head, saying,

8 He trusted on the Lord that he would deliver him, let him deliver him, seeing he delighted in him.

9 But thou art he that took me out of the womb; thou didst make me hope when I was upon my mother's breasts.

10 I was cast upon thee from the womb: thou art my God from my mother's belly.

11 Be not far from me; for trouble is near; for there is none to help:

12 Many bulls have compassed me: strong bulls of Bashan have beset me round.

13 They gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion.

of the insults which David suffered from Shimei and others, during the rebellion of Absalom; and, as the cases were so similar, the Evangelist thought proper to express a similar conduct to Jesus Christ by the same expressions. These insults our Lord literally received; no doubt David received the same.

Verse 9. But thou art he that took me out of the womb] Thou hast made me; and hast guided and defended me from my earliest infancy.

Verse 11. Be not far from me; for trouble is near] A present God is a present blessing. We always need the Divine help; but more especially when troubles and trials are at hand.

Verse 12. Many bulls have compassed me] The bull is the emblem of brutal strength, that gores and tramples down all before it. Such was Absalom, Achitophel, and others, who rose up in rebellion against David; and such were the Jewish rulers who conspired against Christ.

Strong bulls of Bashan] Bashan was a district beyond Jordan, very fertile, where they were accustomed to fatten cattle, which became, in consequence of the excellent pasture, the largest, as well as the fattest, in the country. See Camel. All in whose hands were the chief power and influence became David's enemies; for Absalom had stolen away all the hearts of Israel. Against Christ the chiefs, both of Jews and Gentiles, were united.

Verse 13. They gaped upon me] They were fiercely and madly bent on my destruction.

Verse 14. I am poured out like water] That is, as the Old Pealier:—Shal tought na mare to sla me than to spill water.

The images in this verse are strongly descriptive of a person in the deepest distress; whose strength, courage, hope, and expectation of succour and relief had entirely failed.

Our Lord's sufferings were extreme; but I cannot think there is any sound theologic sense in which these things can be spoken of Christ, either in His agony in the garden, or His death upon the cross.

Verse 15. My strength is dried up] All these expressions mark a most distressed and hopeless case.

Into the dust of death.] This means only, that he was apparently brought nigh to the grave, and consequent corruption: in this latter, David saw; but Jesus Christ never saw corruption.

Verse 16. For dogs have compassed me] This may refer to the Gentiles, the Roman soldiers, and others, by whom our Lord was surrounded in His trial, and at His cross.

They pierced my hands and my feet.] The other sufferings David, as a type of our Lord, might pass through; but the piercing of the hands and feet was peculiar to our Lord; therefore, this verse may pass for a direct revelation. Our Lord's hands and feet were pierced when He was nailed to the cross; David's never were pierced.

But there is a various reading here which is of great importance. Instead of כָּאֲרִי caaru, "they pierced," which is what is called the kethib, or marginal reading, and which our translators have followed; the keri, or textual reading, is כָּאֲרִי keari, "as a lion." In support of both readings there are both MSS. and eminent critics. The Chaldee has, biting as a lion my hands and my feet: but the Syriac, Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic read, they pierced, or digged: and in the Anglo-Saxon the words are hi bulpon hande mine 7 fet mine. They dalve (digged) hands mine, and feet mine.

The Comptentian Polyglott has כָּאֲרִי caaru, "they digged, or pierced," in the text; for which it gives כָּרָה carah, to cut, dig, or penetrate, in the margin, as the root bones are out of joint: my heart is like wax; it is melted in the midst of my bowels.

15 My strength is dried up like a potsherd; and my tongue cleaveth to my jaws; and thou hast brought me into the dust of death.

16 For dogs have compassed me; the assembly of the wicked have inclosed me: they pierced my hands and my feet.

17 I may tell all my bones: they look and stare upon me.

18 They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture.

19 But be not thou far from me, O Lord; O my strength, haste thee to help me.

20 Deliver my soul from the sword; my darling from the power of the dog.

21 Save me from the lion's mouth: for whence כָּאֲרִי is derived. But the Polyglotts of Potken, Antwerp, Paris, and London, have כָּאֲרִי keari in the text: and כָּאֲרִי caaru is referred to in the margin: and this is the case with the most correct Hebrew bibles. The whole difference here lies between god and vau, which might easily be mistaken for each other: the former making like a lion; the latter, they pierced. The latter is to me most evidently the true reading.

Verse 17. I may tell all my bones] This may refer to the violent extension of His body when the whole of its weight hung upon the nails which attached His hands to the transverse beam of the cross. The body being thus extended, the principal bones would become prominent, and easily discernible.

Verse 18. They part my garments] This could be true, in no sense, of David. The fact took place at the crucifixion of our Lord. The soldiers divided His upper garment into four parts; each soldier taking a part: but His tunic or inward vestment, being without seam, woven in one entire piece, they agreed not to divide, but to cast lots whose the whole should be. Of this scripture the Roman soldiers knew nothing: but they fulfilled it to the letter. This was foreseen by the Spirit of God; and this is a direct revelation concerning Jesus Christ, which impresses the whole account with the broad seal of eternal truth.

Verse 19. Be not thou far from me] In the first verse He asks Why hast thou forsaken me? Or, as if astonished at their wickedness, Into what hands hast thou permitted me to fall! Now He prays, Be not far from me. St. Jerom observes here, that it is the humanity of our blessed Lord which speaks to His Divinity. Jesus was perfect man; and, as man, He suffered and died. But this perfect and sinless man could not sustain those sufferings so as to make them expiatory, had he not been supported by the Divine nature. All the expressions in this Psalm, that indicate any weakness, as far as it relates to Christ, (and indeed, it relates principally to Him,) are to be understood of the human nature; for, that in Him God and man were united, but not confounded, the whole New Testament to me bears evidence, the manhood being a perfect man; the Godhead dwelling bodily in that manhood. Jesus, as MAN, was conceived, born, grew up, increased in wisdom, stature, and favour with God and man; hungered, thirsted, suffered, and died. Jesus, as GOD, knew all things, was from the beginning with God, healed the diseased, cleansed the lepers, and raised the dead; calmed the raging of the sea, and laid the tempest, by a word;—quicken the human nature, raised it from the dead, took it up into heaven; where, as the Lamb newly slain, it ever appears in the presence of God for us. These are all Scripture facts. The man Christ Jesus could not work those miracles: the God in that man could not have suffered those sufferings. Yet, one Person appears to do and suffer all: here, then, is God manifested in the flesh.

O my strength] The Divinity being the power by which the humanity was sustained in this dreadful conflict.

Verse 20. Deliver my soul from the sword] Deliver כָּאֲרִי naphshi, my life; save me alive, or raise me again.

My darling] יְחִידָתִי Yechidati, "My only one." The only human being that was ever produced since the creation, even by the power of God itself, without the agency of man. ADAM the first was created out of the dust of the earth;—that was his mother: God was the Framer. ADAM the second was produced in the womb of the virgin: that was his mother. But that which was conceived in her was by the power of the Holy Ghost: hence the man Christ Jesus is the ONLY Son of God; God is His Father, and He is His ONLY ONE.

before had experience:—and, as He was the same God still, why should this Sufferer only be deserted? for they were heard and comforted.

1. Thou art holy, propitious and benevolent; thou dwellest in the praises of Israel; Thou art continually helping them, and they are continually praising Thee for this help.

To prove all this, He brings the example of the fathers:

2. Our fathers trusted in thee, and thou didst deliver them.

3. They cried unto thee,—and were not confounded.

But my case is worse than any other. I am a worm and no man.

He then details His sufferings:—

1. The scoffs and scorns cast upon Him. I am become the reproach of men,—and the despised among the people.

2. Their contempt is expressed both by words and gestures. All they that see me laugh me to scorn: they shoot out the lip,—and shake the head.

3. They laboured to deprive Him of His God. They uttered this insulting sarcasm:—He trusted in the Lord that he would deliver him; let him deliver him since he delighted in him.

II. He now breaks off the narration of His sufferings; has immediate recourse to God:—refutes their irony, shows His confidence in God, and prays for assistance. This He strengthens by three arguments drawn from God's goodness towards Him:—

1. His generation and birth. Thou—looked me out of my mother's womb.

2. His sustenance and support ever since. Thou didst make me hope when I was upon my mother's breasts;—thou art my God from my mother's belly. In a word, He was His Saviour, Protector, and Preserver.

3. Trouble is near, and there is none to help. Therefore, Be not far from me.

Now He returns to the narration of His passion; in which He sets forth the despite, cruelty, and rage, of the Jews towards Him, whom He compares to bulls, lions, dogs, &c., ver. 16.

1. They apprehended Him. Many bulls have compassed me, &c.

2. They longed to condemn and devour Him. They gaped on me with their mouths, as a ravening and roaring lion.

3. This was the cruelty of the lions and bulls, the chief rulers and chief priests; and now follows the ravin of the dogs, the multitude of the people;—they were the assembly of the wicked; and, being stirred up by the priests and rulers, they compassed him round about.

4. They crucify Him. And His passion is foretold, with what He should suffer in body and soul.

1. I am poured out like water. My blood is poured out freely; and no more account taken of it, than if it were water spilt on the ground.

2. All my bones (when hung on the cross) are out of joint.

3. My heart (at the sense of God's hatred to sin) is dissolved, and melted like wax.

4. My strength (my animal spirits and muscular energy) is dried up like a potsherd; or like a pot, whose fluid is evaporated by hanging long over a fierce fire.

5. My tongue (for thirst) cleaveth to my jaws.

6. Thou hast brought me to death,—to the dust of death,—to the grave.

7. They pierced my hands and my feet. I am crucified also, and die upon the cross.

8. By my long hanging upon the cross my bones are so disjointed that they may be easily told. I may tell all my bones.

9. They look and stare upon me. They feel no compassion,—but take pleasure in my agonies. This is an affliction which is characteristic only of a devil.

10. They part my garments among them. They delighted in His destruction for the sake of His spoils!

Having thus far described His suffering, and the malice of His enemies, He begins again to pray; which is, in effect, the same with that ejaculation with which Christ gave up the ghost:—Into thy hands, O Lord, I commend my spirit;—but, be thou not far from me, O Lord,—deliver my soul from the sword,—my darling from the power of the dog;—save me from the lion's mouth, &c.

III. This part, which is a profession of thanks for deliverance, contains a clear prophecy of the resurrection of Christ; that, having conquered death and Satan, He was to reign and gather a church out of all nations, which was to continue for ever. This is amplified,—

1. By a public profession of the benefit received from God. I will declare thy name in the midst of the congregation,—I will pay my vows:—in which we have,—

1. The propagation, proclamation, and preaching, of the gospel: which is amplified:

1. I will declare thy name: by the notation of the object to whom preached, honoured here by the name of, 1. Brethren. 2. Those that fear the Lord. 3. The seed of Jacob, the seed of Israel. 4. The meek or poor. 5. The fat, rich, great or eminent of the earth. 6. They that go down to the dust.

2. By the place; the midst of the congregation,—the great congregation, i. e. both among the Jews, and among the Gentiles.

3. By the worship they were to pay: 1. Praise. 2. Paying of vows. 3. Fear, or religious reverence.

2. An exhortation to his brethren, &c., to do this duty; and that they may be fit for it: for every one is not fit to take God's name in his mouth. It is, ye that fear the Lord, the seed of Jacob, the seed of Israel,—fear Him,—serve the Lord in fear,—rejoice before Him with reverence. Give Him both external and internal worship.

3. And, to engage them to this, He gives two reasons:—

Reason 1. Drawn from God's goodness, His acceptance of the worship, hearing our prayers, and affording help when we call. For the Lord hath not despised, nor abhorred, the affliction of the afflicted. When he cried to him, he heard him.

Reason 2. The great good that should happen to them who would believe and accept the gospel; whom He calls here the meek, that is, the humble, broken-hearted, the penitent, the heavy laden;—those who are oppressed with the burden of their sins, and astonished at a sense of God's wrath. To them are made three promises of comfort:—

1. They shall eat, and be satisfied. They shall be fed with the word and ordinances of God.

2. They shall praise the Lord for his mercy:—seeking His favour in His ordinances; which, under the gospel, are generally eucharistical.

3. Their heart shall live for ever:—their conscience being quieted, and pacified, and freed from a sense of God's wrath.

Now the prophet proceeds, and shows us the amplitude of these benefits, that they belong not only to the Jews, but to the Gentiles; by whose conversion the kingdom of Christ is to be enlarged.

1. All the ends of the world:—being warned by the preaching of the Gospel, and allured by these promises, shall remember,—consider the lamentable condition in which they are, and deplore their former estate, impiety, and idolatry. And the mercy of God being now manifested to them,—

2. They shall cast away their gods, turn from their evil ways, and seek that God from whom they have been alienated.

3. And being converted, they shall embrace a new form of religion under the Gospel.—All the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee.

4. Of which the reason is, because Christ is advanced to the throne: All power is given to Him,—For the kingdom is the Lord's, and He is Governor among the people.

5. He then shews the two kinds of people who should become subjects of the kingdom;—in effect, rich and poor.

1. The fat upon the earth. The wealthy, the mighty;—kings, princes, great men, are to be called into the kingdom, that they may be partakers of its grace. All they that be fat upon the earth, &c.

2. They also that go down to the dust. That is, the poor, the neglected,—who draw out their life in misery, and sit, as it were, in the dust; those who are perpetual mourners, and have, as it were, perpetual dust and ashes upon their heads. These shall bow before him.

Lastly,—He amplifies the greatness of this benefit, by the perpetuity of Christ's kingdom. It was not a feast of one hour; it was to continue.

1. A seed shall serve him. But this and the preceding clause may signify the Psalmist's resolution to live to God himself, and to show others the same way. See the Notes.

This seed, however, shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation. It shall be a peculiar people, a royal priesthood, a holy nation;—and called by Christ's own name,—CHRISTIANS.

2. When one generation is past, another shall come up to perform this duty, being instructed by their fathers. They shall come and declare His righteousness to a people that shall be born. Manebit semper ecclesia; the church is immortal.

3. He concludes with the cause of all. Why called, justified, sanctified, saved. He hath done it; the God, the Author of all; the Fountain of all grace; the Giver of Jesus Christ, and eternal life through Him. For by Him, and of Him, and through Him, are all things; and to Him be glory and dominion for ever and ever.

NOTES ON PSALM XXIII.

There is nothing particular in the title; it is simply attributed to David: but as it appears to be a thanksgiving of the Israelites for their redemption from the Babylonish captivity, it cannot with propriety be attributed to David. Some think it was written by David in his exile; which is not likely:—others, that he penned it when he was finally delivered from the persecution of Saul. I rather incline to the opinion that it was written after the Captivity. The Chaldee seems to suppose that it was written to celebrate the goodness of God to the Israelites in the desert. It is a truly beautiful Psalm. Supposing it to have been written after the captivity, we see, 1. The redeemed captives giving thanks to God for their liberty. 2. Acknowledging that God had brought back their lives from the grave. 3. They represent themselves in Judea as a flock in an excellent pasture. 4. They declare that from the dangers they have passed through, and from which God has delivered them, they can have no fear of any enemy. 5. They conclude from what God has done for them, that His goodness and mercy shall follow them all their days. And, 6. That they shall no more be deprived of God's worship, but shall all their days have access to His temple.

Verse 1. The Lord is my shepherd] There are two allegories in this Psalm which are admirably well adapted to the purpose for which they are produced, and supported both with art and elegance. The first is that of a shepherd; the second that of a great feast, set out by a host the most kind and the most liberal. As a flock, they have the most excellent pasture; as guests, they have the most nutritive and abundant fare. God condescends to call Himself the Shepherd of his people; and His followers are considered as a flock under his guidance and direction. 1. He leads them out and in, so that they find pasture and safety. 2. He knows where to feed them, and in the course of His grace and providence leads them in the way in which they should go. 3. He watches over them, and keeps them from being destroyed by ravenous beasts. 4. If any have strayed, He brings them back. 5. He brings them to the shade in times of scorching heat: in times of persecution and affliction He finds out an asylum for them. 6. He takes care that they shall lack no manner of thing that is good.

But, who are His flock? All real penitents,—all true believers;—all who obediently follow His example, abstaining from every appearance of evil, and in a holy life and conversation shew forth the virtues of Him who called them from darkness into His marvellous light. My sheep hear my voice, and follow me.

But who are not His flock? Neither the backslider in heart;—nor the vile Antinomian, who thinks the more he sins the more the grace of God shall be magnified in saving him;—nor those who fondly suppose they are covered with the righteousness of Christ while living in sin;—nor the crowd of the indifferent and the careless, nor the immense herd of Laodicean loiterers; nor the fiery bigots who would exclude all from heaven but themselves, and the party who believe as they do. These the Scripture resemble to swine, dogs, goats, wandering stars, foxes, lions, wells without water, &c. &c. Let not any of these come forward to eat of this pasture, or take of the children's bread. Jesus Christ is the good Shepherd; the Shepherd who, to save His flock, laid down His own life.

I shall not want] How can they? He who is their Shepherd has all power in heaven and earth; therefore, He can protect them. The silver and gold are His, and the cattle on a thousand hills; and, therefore, He can sustain them. He has all that they need; and His heart is full of love to mankind; and, therefore, He will withhold from them no manner of thing that is good. The old Psalter both translates and paraphrases this clause well;—Lord governs me, and nathing sal want to me. In stede of pastour thare be me sett. "The voice of a rightwis man: Lord Crist es my kyng, and for thi (therefore) nathing sal me want: that es, in hym I sal be siker, and sufficient, for I hope in hym gastly gude and endless. And he leves me in stede of pastour, that es, understanding of his worde, and delyte in his luf. Qwar pastures: he leadeth me beside the still waters.

3 He restoreth my soul: he leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

4 Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

f Heb. waters of goodness.—g Ps. 6. 9. & 21. 2. Prov. 2. 20.—h Job 3. 5. & 10. 22. 22. & 24. 17. Ps. 44. 13.—i Ps. 3. 6. & 27. 1. & 118. 6.—k Isai. 43. 2.

I am sicker to be fild, than in that stede (place) he sett me, to be nurysh't til perfectioun." Who can say more? Who need say less than this?

Verse 2. He maketh me lie down in green pastures] מרעה במדבר beneath deshee, not green pasture, but cottages of turf or sods; such as the shepherds had in open champion countries: places in which themselves could repose safely; and pens thus constructed, where the flock might be safe all the night. They were enclosures; and enclosures where they had grass, or provender, to eat.

Beside the still waters] Deep waters, that the strongest heat could not exhale; not by a rippling current, which argues a shallow stream. Or, perhaps, he may here refer to the waters of Siloam, or Shiloah, that go softly, Isa. viii. 6, compared with the strong current of the Euphrates. Thou hast brought us from the land of our captivity, from beyond this mighty and turbulent river, to our own country streams, wells, and fountains; where we enjoy peace, tranquillity, and rest.

The old Psalter gives this a beautiful turn:—On the water of rebtyng forth be me broght. On the water of grace er we broght forth, that maketh to recover our strengthe that we loest in syn. And rebtyes (strengthens) us to do gude werkes. My saule be turnyt, that es, of a synful wreche, he made it ryghtwis, and waxyng of luf in mekenes. First he turnes our saules, til hym; and than he ledes and fedes it. Ten graces he telles in this Psalme, the qwilk God gyfs til his lufers, (i. e. them that love Him.)

Verse 3. He restoreth my soul] Brings back my life from destruction;—and converts my soul from sin, that it may not eternally perish. Or, after it has backslidden from Him, heals its backslidings, and restores it to His favour. See the old paraphrase on this clause in the preceding note.

In the paths of righteousness] במעגלי צדק bemaageley tzedek, "in the circuits" of "orbits or righteousness." In many places of Scripture man appears to be represented under the notion of a secondary planet moving round its primary; or as a planet revolving round the sun, from whom it receives its power of revolving, with all its light and heat. Thus, man stands in reference to the Sun of righteousness,—by His power alone is he enabled to walk uprightly;—by his light, he is enlightened; and by his heat he is vivified, and enabled to bring forth good fruit. When he keeps in his proper orbit, having the light of the glory of God reflected from the face of Jesus Christ, he is enabled to enlighten and strengthen others. He that is enlightened may enlighten: he that is fed may feed.

For his name's sake] To display the glory of His grace; and not on account of any merit in me. God's motives of conduct towards the children of men are derived from the perfections and goodness of His own nature.

Verse 4. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death] The reference is still to the shepherd. Though I, as one of the flock, should walk through the most dismal valley, in the dead of the night, exposed to pitfalls, precipices, devouring beasts, &c., I should fear no evil under the guidance and protection of such a Shepherd. He knows all the passes, dangerous defiles, hidden pits, and abrupt precipices, in the way; and He will guide me around, about, and through them. See the phrase shadow of death explained, Matt. iv. 16. "Thof I war dwelland imang tha, that moutner has knowyng of God, ne luf, or in myddis of this lyf, that es schadow of ded; for it es blak for myrkenes of syn; and it ledes til dede, and il men, imang qwam gude men wones.—I sal not drede il, pryve nor apert; for thu ert with me in my hert, qwar I fele thu so, that estir the schadow of dede, I be with the in thi vera lyf." Old Psalter.

For thou art with me] He who has his God for a Companion needs fear no danger; for he can neither mistake his way, nor be injured.

Thy rod and thy staff] מטה ושבט thy sceptre, rod, ensign of a tribe, staff of office;—for so shew shebet, signifies in Scripture. And thy staff, מטה ושבטך u-mishadteca, thy prop or support. The former may signify the shepherd's crook;—the latter some sort of rest or support, similar to our camp stool, which the shepherds might carry with 5 'Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou 'anoointest 'my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

6 Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the LORD ' for ever.

them as an occasional seat, when the earth was too wet to be sat on with safety. With the rod or crook the shepherd could defend his sheep; and with it lay hold of their horns or legs, to pull them out of thickets, bogs, pits, or waters. We are not to suppose that by the rod correction is meant: there is no idea of this kind either in the Text, or in the original word; nor has it this meaning in any part of Scripture. Besides, correction and chastisement do not comfort;—they are not, at least for the present, joyous, but grievous;—nor can any person look forward to them with comfort. They abuse the Text who paraphrase rod correction, &c. The other term מַשְׂכָּה שְׂדֵה, signifies support;—something to rest on, as a staff, crutch, slave, or the like. The Chaldee translates thus:—"Even though I should walk in captivity, in the valley of the shadow of death, I will not fear evil. Seeing Thy Word (מִצְוַת מֵימְרָה, Thy personal Word,) is my Assistant or Support,—Thy right word, and Thy law console me." Here we find that the Word מֵימְרָה, is distinguished from any thing spoken, and even from the law itself. I cannot withhold the paraphrase of the old Psalter, though it considers the rod as signifying correction:—Sothly I sal drede na nyll; for tñ wand, that es th lyght disciplyne, that chasties me as th son: and tñ staf, that es th stalworth help, that I lene me til, and haldes me uppe; thai have comforted me; lerand, (learning, teaching,) me what I suld do; and haldand my thought in the, that es my comfort."

Verse 5. Thou preparest a table before me] Here the second allegory begins. A magnificent banquet is provided by a most liberal and benevolent Host; who has not only the bounty to feed me, but power to protect me: and, though surrounded by enemies, I sit down to this table with confidence, knowing that I shall feast in perfect security. This may refer to the favour God gave the poor captive Israelites in the sight of the Chaldeans who had grievously treated them for seventy years; and whose king Cyrus had not only permitted them now to return to their own land, but had also furnished them with every thing requisite for their passage, and for repairing the walls of Jerusalem, and rebuilding the temple of the Lord; where the sacrifices were offered as usual, and the people of God feasted on them.

Thou anoointest my head with oil] Perfumed oil was poured on the heads of distinguished guests, when at the feasts of great personages. The woman in the gospel, who poured the box of ointment of spikenard on the head of our Lord, (see Matthew xxiv. 6, 7, Mark xiv. 8, and Luke vii. 46.) only acted according to the custom of her own country; which the host, who invited our Lord, had shamefully neglected.

My cup runneth over] Thou hast not only given me abundance of food, but hast filled my cup with the best wine.

Verse 6. Goodness and mercy shall follow me] As I pass on through the vale of life, Thy goodness and mercy shall follow my every step: as I proceed, so shall they. There seems to be an allusion here to the waters of the rock smitten by the rod of Moses, which followed the Israelites all the way through the wilderness, till they came to the Promised Land. God never leaves his true followers:—providential mercies, gracious influences, and miraculous interferences, shall never be wanting when they are necessary. I will dwell in the house, וְשָׁכַנְתִּי בְּבֵיתְךָ, "and I shall return to the house of the Lord," for ever, וְלֹא יִסְרְפוּךָ יָמֶיךָ, "for length of days." During the rest of my life, I shall not be separated from God's house, nor from God's ordinances: and shall at last dwell with Him in glory. These two last verses seem to be the language of a priest returned from captivity, to live in the temple, and to serve God the rest of his life.

ANALYSIS OF THE TWENTY-THIRD PSALM.

The scope of this Psalm is to shew the happiness of that man who has God for his Protector; and is under His care and tuition.

To illustrate this protection, &c., David proposes two allegories: the one of a shepherd; the other of a free-hearted man given to hospitality, and entertaining his guests bountifully. It has two parts:—The first sets forth, 1. God's care in providing him with all necessaries, ver. 1-4. 2. His liberality in supplying him with all that he needed, ver. 5.

The second part shews his confidence in God's grace, and his thankfulness, ver. 6.

1. He begins the first with this position, God is my shepherd: and upon it infers, Therefore, I shall not want. He will do for me what a good shepherd will do for his sheep.

1. He will feed me in green pastures, ver. 2.
2. He will there provide for my safety;—He makes me to lie down.
3. He will provide waters of comfort for me.
4. These waters shall be gentle flowing streams, still waters,—not turbulent and violent.
5. He will take care to preserve me in health; if sick, He will restore me.
6. He goes before and leads me, that I may not mistake my way;—He leads me in paths of righteousness, which is His love; for it is for His name's sake.
7. He restores. If I err and go astray, and walk through the valley of the shadow of death, (for a sheep is a straggling creature) I will fear no evil; for his rod and staff comfort me, His Law and His Gospel both contribute to my correction and support.

Thus, as a good shepherd, He supplies me with necessaries, that I want nothing: but, over and above, as a bountiful Lord, He has furnished me copiously with varieties which may be both for ornament and honour.

1. He has prepared a table for me; and that in the presence of my enemies.
 2. He hath anoointed my head with oil,—to refresh my spirits, and cheer my countenance.
 3. And my cup runneth over; with the choicest wine He glads my heart.
- II. The last verse, 1. sets out David's confidence that it shall be no worse with him:—Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life.
2. Then he expresses his thankfulness;—I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever. In Thy house, among the faithful, I will praise Thy name as long as I live.

On each point in this Analysis the Reader is requested to consult the Notes.

NOTES ON PSALM XXIV.

It is probable that this Psalm was composed on occasion of bringing the ark from the house of Obed-Edom to Mount Zion; and the questions may respect the fitness of the persons who were to minister before this ark: the last verses may refer to the opening of the city gates in order to admit it. As many of the expressions here are nearly the same with those in Psalm xv. I must refer to that place for their particular illustration; though it is most likely that the two Psalms were composed on very different occasions. The first contains a general question relative to who shall be saved? This is more particular; and refers to the temple and tabernacle service, and who is fit to minister there.

Verse 1. The earth is the Lord's] He is the Creator and Governor of it; it is His own property. Men may claim districts and kingdoms of it as their property: but God is Lord of the soil.

The fulness thereof] "All its creatures." Targum. Every tree, plant, and shrub; the silver, and the gold, and the cattle on a thousand hills.

They that dwell therein.] All human beings.

Verse 2. He hath founded it upon the seas] He not only created the vast mass, but separated the land from the waters; so that the mountains, &c. being elevated above the waters, appear to be founded on them; and notwithstanding all the tossings and ragings of the ocean, these waters cannot prevail. It is established upon the floods, and cannot be shaken.

Verse 3. Who shall ascend] Who is sufficiently holy to wait at His temple? Who is fit to minister in the holy place?

Verse 4. He that hath clean hands] He whose conscience is irreproachable; whose heart is without deceit, and uninfluenced by unholy passions.

Who hath not lifted up his soul] Who has no idolatrous inclination; whose faith is pure, and who conscientiously fulfils his promises and engagements.

Verse 5. He shall receive the blessing] Perhaps alluding to Obed-Edom, at whose house the ark had been lodged, and on whom God had poured out especial blessings.

And righteousness] Mercy;—every kind of necessary good. It is the mercy of God that crowns the obedience and fidelity of good men. For what made them good and faithful? God's mercy. What crowns their fidelity? God's mercy.

Verse 6. This is the generation] This is the description of people who are such as God can approve of, and delight in.

That seek thy face, O Jacob.] It is most certain that עֲבָדֶיךָ אֱלֹהִים, "O God," has been lost out of the Hebrew text in most MSS.; but it is preserved in two of Kennicott's MSS., and also in the Syriac, Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. Who seek thy face, O God of Jacob.

Selah.] That is, it is confirmed; it is true. The persons who abstain from every appearance of evil, and seek the approbation of God, are those in whom God will delight.

Verse 7. Lift up your heads, O ye gates] The address of those who preceded the ark; the gates being addressed instead of the keepers of the gates. Allusion is here made to the triumphal entry of a victorious general into the imperial city.

Everlasting doors] There seems to be a reference here to something like our portcullis, which hangs by pulleys above the gate, and can be let down at any time so as to prevent the gate from being forced. In the case to which the Psalmist refers, the portcullis is let down; and the persons preceding the ark order it to be raised. When it is lifted up, and appears above the head or top of the gate, then the folding doors are addressed:—Be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors—let there be no obstruction, and the mighty Conqueror, the King of glory, whose presence is with the ark, and in which the symbol of His glory appears, He shall enter. Make due preparations to admit so august and glorious a Personage.

Verse 8. Who is this King of glory?] This is the answer of those who are within. Who is this glorious King, for whom ye demand entrance? To which they reply—

The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle.] It is Jehovah, who is come to set up His abode in His imperial city: He who has conquered His enemies, and brought salvation to Israel. To make the matter still more solemn, and give those without an opportunity of describing more particularly this glorious Personage, those within hesitate to obey the first summons; and then it is repeated, ver. 9.

Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in.] To which a more particular question is proposed:—Who is He, this King of glory? To which an answer is given that admitted of no reply. The Lord of hosts;—He who is coming with innumerable armies! He is this King of glory. On which, we may suppose, the portcullis was lifted up, the gates thrown open, and the whole cavalcade admitted. This verse seems to have been spoken before the ark appeared:—Who is this (וְיֵהוָה) King of glory? when its coming was merely announced. In the tenth verse the form is a little altered, because the ark, the symbol of the Divine presence, had then arrived. Who is he, (מִי הוּא) this King of glory? Here He is, to answer for Himself. The Lord is in His holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before Him.

Though this Psalm has all the appearance of being an unfinished piece, yet there is a vast deal of dignity and majesty in it; and the demands from without, the questions from those within, and the answers to those questions, partake of the true sublime; where nature, dignity, and simplicity, are very judiciously mingled together. The whole procedure is natural, the language dignified, and the questions and answers full of simplicity and elevated sentiments.

Several, both among the ancients and moderns, have thought this Psalm speaks of the resurrection of our Lord, and is thus to be understood. It is easy to apply it in this way:—Jesus has conquered sin, Satan, and death, by dying. He now rises from the dead; and, as a mighty conqueror, claims an entrance into the realms of glory, the kingdom which He has purchased by His blood; there to appear ever in the presence of God for us, to which He purposes to raise finally the innumerable hosts of His followers;—for in reference to these He is the Lord of hosts; and, in reference to His victory, He is the Lord mighty in battle.

ANALYSIS OF THE TWENTY-FOURTH PSALM.

The subject of this Psalm is Christ, called the King of glory, ver. 7, and it has two parts:—

I. The first concerns Christ's lordship, which is, in general, over the whole world, ver. 1, 2; but, in particular, over the church, ver. 3 to 7.

II. An exhortation to all men to receive Christ for their King.

I. The first part of this Psalm shews that God is King of all the world: but in this kingdom He has two kinds of subjects,—

1. Either all men in general,—For the earth is the Lord's, and all that therein is; the compass of the world, and they that dwell therein. And of it He gives a reason, from the creation of it. He ought to have the dominion of it, and all in it;—For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods.

2. But all are not His subjects in the same way. There are a people whom He has called to be His subjects in another manner. There is a mountain which He hath sanctified and chosen above all other hills to make the seat of His kingdom, viz. the Church; and over them that live in it He is in a more peculiar manner said to be a Lord, than of the whole earth; and these are more properly called His servants and subjects. And yet among these there is a difference too;—for some only profess to be His servants, and call Him Lord, as hypocrites; there are some others that are His servants really and truly. And that this difference may be taken notice of, the prophet asks, Quis? Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? And, Who shall stand in his holy place? As if he should say, Not quaquas; it is not every one; for infidels are not so much as in the church. Hypocrites, howsoever in the church, are not true members of the mystical church; and some who come to the hill of the Lord, yet stand not in His holy place;—For many believe only for a season, and few continue faithful unto death.

3. That it may then be truly known who they are, over whom He is truly Rex gloriae,—the King of glory; the prophet gives us their character, and sets down three distinctive notes by which they may be known:—

1. Cleanness of hands. He that hath clean hands; & cede furto, &c., is free from all external wicked actions. For the hand is οργάνον οργάνων, the organ of the organs.

2. Purity of heart] For external purity is not enough, except the heart, the fountain of our actions, be clean. Hypocritis est in cor conscientia.

3. Truth of the tongue;—Is not guilty of lies and perjuries. He that hath clean hands and a pure heart; who hath not lift up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. After the prophet has given the character by which you may know the man, he assigns his reward, and ends with an acclamation:—1. This is he that shall receive the blessing from the Lord of righteousness, (i. e. be justified,) from the God of his salvation. 2. This is the generation of them that seek thee; that is, these are the people of God: let others boast themselves, and please themselves as they list, yet these are the godly party, these, they that seek thy face, O God of Jacob.

II. The second part is considered by some as an exhortation to all men, especially princes, nobles, and magistrates, that they receive, acknowledge, and worship Christ, as King.

1. Lift up your heads, ye gates;—that is, as some

PSALM XXV.

The Psalmist, in great distress, calls upon God frequently, 1-5. Prays for pardon with the strong confidence of being heard, 6-11. Shews the blessedness of the righteous, 12-14. Again earnestly implores the Divine mercy, and prays for the restoration of Israel, 15-22.

4 Shew me thy ways, O LORD; teach me thy paths.

5 Lead me in thy truth, and teach me: for thou art the God of my salvation; on thee do I wait all the day.

understand it,—O ye princes, that sit in the gates, lift up your heads and hearts to Him, that the King of glory may come in.

2 To which good counsel the prophet brings in the princes asking this question:—Who is the King of glory? to which he answers,—The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle. One who is able to bruise you to atoms with His iron rod, and will do so if you reject Him. And that the exhortation may pierce the deeper, he doubles both it and the answer.

After all, the most natural meaning is that which is given in the Notes: from which we may infer,—

1. That the regal city is in no state of safety, if it have not the ark of the Lord.

2. That the ark, even the purest form of sound words in devotion, is nothing, unless that they who minister and worship have clean hands and pure hearts, endeavouring to worship God in spirit and in truth.

3. That where the right faith is professed, and the worshippers act according to it dictates, there is the presence and the continual indwelling of God. Lift up your heads, O ye gates—and the King of glory shall come in.

NOTES ON PSALM XXV.

This Psalm seems to refer to the case of the captives in Babylon, who complain of oppression from their enemies, and earnestly beg the help and mercy of God.

It is the first of those called acrostic Psalms, i. e. Psalms, each line of which begins with a several letter of the Hebrew alphabet, in their common order. Of acrostic Psalms there are seven, viz. xxv. xxxiv. xxxviii. cxi. cxii. cxix. and cxlv. It is fashionable to be violent in encomiums on the Jews for the very faithful manner in which they have preserved the Hebrew Scriptures: but these encomiums are, in general, ill placed. Even this Psalm is a proof with what carelessness they have watched over the sacred deposit committed to their trust. The letter vau is wanting in the fifth verse, and p koph in the eighteenth; the letter resh being twice inserted, once instead of p koph; and a whole line added at the end, entirely out of the alphabetical series.

Verse 1. Do I lift up my soul.] His soul was cast down, and by prayer and faith he endeavours to lift it up to God.

Verse 2. I trust in thee] I depend upon Thy infinite goodness and mercy for my support and salvation.

Let me not be ashamed] Hide my iniquity, and forgive my guilt.

Verse 3. Let none that wait on thee be ashamed] Though he had burthen enough of his own, he felt for others in similar circumstances, and became an intercessor in their behalf.

Transgress without cause.] Perhaps bagadim may here mean idolatrous persons. Let not them that wait upon, and worship Thee, be ashamed: but they shall be ashamed who vainly worship, or trust in false gods. See Mal. ii. 11—16. The Chaldeans have evil intreated us, and oppressed us: they trust in their idols, let them see the vanity of their idolatry.

Verse 4. Shew me thy ways] The Psalmist wishes to know God's way; to be taught His path and to be led into His truth. He cannot discern this way unless God show it; He cannot learn the path unless God teach it; and he cannot walk in God's truth unless God lead him; and even then, unless God continues to teach, he shall never fully learn the lesson of his salvation; therefore, he adds, lead me in the truth, and teach me, ver. 5.

That he may get this showing, teaching, and leading, he comes to God, as the God of his salvation; and that 6 Remember, O LORD, thy tender mercies, and thy loving-kindnesses; for they have been ever of old.

7 Remember not the sins of my youth, nor my transgressions: according to thy mercy remember thou me for thy goodness' sake, O LORD.

8 Good and upright is the LORD: therefore will he teach sinners in the way.

9 The meek will he guide in judgment: and the meek will he teach his way.

10 All the paths of the LORD are mercy and truth unto such as keep his covenant and his testimonies.

11 For thy name's sake, O LORD, pardon mine iniquity; for it is great.

12 What man is he that feareth the LORD? him shall he teach in the way that he shall choose.

he may not lose his labour, he waits on him all the day. Many lose the benefit of their earnest prayers, because they do not persevere in them. They pray for a time; get remiss, or discouraged; restrain prayer; and thus lose all that was already wrought for, and in them.

Verse 5. On thee do I wait] This is the line in which vau, the sixth letter in the order of the alphabet, is lost; for the line begins with aleph, אמת, on thee. But four of Kennicot's and De Rossi's MSS. have ואתה ואתה. "AND upon thee:"—this restores the last vau, which signifies "and." The Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, Arabic, Ethiopic, and Anglo-Saxon, preserve the "and."

Verse 6. Remember, O LORD, thy tender mercies, and thy loving-kindness] The first word רחמים rachamim, means the commiseration that a man feels in his bowels at the sight of distress. The second word חסדיו chasadim, signifies those kindnesses which are the offspring of a profusion of benevolence.

They have been of old.] Thou wert ever wont to display Thyself as a ceaseless Fountain of good to all Thy creatures.

Verse 7. Remember not the sins of my youth] Those which I have committed through inconsiderateness, and heat of passion.

According to thy mercy] As it is worthy of thy mercy to act according to the measure, the greatness, and general practice of Thy mercy; so give me an abundant pardon; a plentiful salvation.

For thy goodness' sake] Goodness is the nature of God; mercy flows from that goodness.

Verse 8. Good and upright is the LORD] He is good in His nature; and righteous in His conduct.

Therefore will he teach sinners] Because He is good, He will teach sinners, though they deserve nothing but destruction: and because He is right, he will teach them the true way.

Verse 9. The meek will he guide] וננו אנאמim, the poor, the distressed, he will lead in judgment; He will direct them in their cause, and bring it to a happy issue,—for He will shew them the way in which they should go.

Verse 10. All the paths of the LORD] ארכות archoth signifies the tracks or ruts made by the wheels of wagons by often passing over the same ground. Mercy and truth are the paths in which God constantly walks in reference to the children of men; and so frequently does He shew them mercy, and so frequently does He fulfil His truth, that His paths are easily discerned. How frequent, how deeply indented, and how multiplied, are those tracks to every family and individual! Wherever we go, we see that God's mercy and truth have been there by the deep tracks they have left behind them. But he is more abundantly merciful to those who keep His covenant and His testimonies: i. e. those who are conformed not only to the letter, but to the spirit, of His pure religion.

Verse 11. For thy name's sake, O LORD, pardon] I have sinned; I need mercy: there is no reason why Thou shouldst shew it, but what Thou drawest from the goodness of Thy own nature.

Verse 12. That feareth the LORD] Who has a proper apprehension of His holiness, justice, and truth;—and who, at the same time, sees himself a fallen spirit, and a transgressor of God's holy law, and consequently under the curse. That is the person that truly and reverently fears God.

Him shall he teach] Such a person has a teachable spirit.

The way that he shall choose.] That way which, in the 15 Mine eyes are ever toward the Lord; for he shall pluck my feet out of the net.

16 Turn thee unto me, and have mercy upon me; for I am desolate and afflicted.

17 The troubles of my heart are enlarged: O bring thou me out of my distresses.

18 Look upon mine affliction and my pain: and forgive all my sins.

19 Consider mine enemies; for they are many; and they hate me with cruel hatred.

course of providence, he has chosen, as the way in which he is to gain things honest in the sight of all men, God will bless him in it, and give him as much earthly prosperity as may be useful to his soul in his secular vocation.

Verse 13. His soul shall dwell at ease] נשׂוּתוֹ בְּטוֹב טָלִין, shall lodge in goodness: this is the marginal reading in our Version; and is preferable to that in the Text. His seed shall inherit] His posterity shall be blessed.

For them many prayers have been sent up to God by their pious father; and God has registered these prayers in their behalf.

Verse 14. The secret of the Lord is with them] סֵדֵי הַסֵּד, the secret assembly of the Lord is with them that fear Him, many of them have a church in their own house.

He will shew them his covenant.] He will let them see how great blessings He has provided for them that love Him; this, some refer to the covenant of redemption by Christ Jesus.

Verse 15. Mine eyes are ever toward the Lord] All my expectation is from Him alone. If I get at any time entangled, He will pluck my feet out of the net.

Verse 16. Turn thee unto me] Probably the prayer of the poor captives in Babylon, which is continued through this and the remaining verses.

Verse 17. The troubles of my heart are enlarged] The evils of our captive state, instead of lessening, seem to multiply, and each to be extended.

Verse 18. Look upon mine affliction] See my distressed condition, and Thy eye will affect Thy heart. Forgive all my sins.] My sins are the cause of all my sufferings: forgive these.

This is the verse which should begin with the letter p koph: but, instead of it, we have r resh both here, where it should not be, and in the next verse where it should be. Dr. Kennicott reads קוּמָה, "arise," and Houbigant, קוּמָה קָטוֹר, cut short. The word which began with p koph has been long lost out of the verse; as every version seems to have read that which now stands in the Hebrew Text.

Verse 19. Consider mine enemies] Look upon them; and Thou wilt see how impossible it is that I should be able to resist and overcome them. They are many,—they hate me; and their hatred drives them to acts of cruelty against me.

Verse 20. O keep my soul] Save me from sin, and keep me alive.

Let me not be ashamed] He ends as he began, see ver. 2. Let me not be confounded, for I put my trust in thee.

Verse 21. Let integrity and uprightness] I wish to have a perfect heart, and an upright life. This seems to be the meaning of these two words.

Verse 22. Redeem Israel, O God] The people are prayed for in the preceding verses as if one person; now he includes the whole, lest his own personal necessities should narrow his heart, and cause him to forget his fellow sufferers.

This verse stands out of the order of the Psalm; and does not appear to have formed a part of the alphabetical arrangement. It is a general prayer for the redemption of Israel from captivity; and may well be applied to those of the true Israel who are seeking for complete redemption from the power, the guilt, and the pollution, of sin; and from all the troubles that spring from it. And let it be ever known, that God alone can redeem Israel.

ANALYSIS OF THE TWENTY-FIFTH PSALM.

This Psalm is a continued earnest prayer of a man or a people, pressed with danger and enemies; and sensible of God's heavy displeasure against sin. It consists of five petitions.

I. His first petition is, that his enemies may not triumph over him, ver. 2, 3.

II. His second is for instruction, ver. 4, 5, which he urges, ver. 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14.

III. His third is for mercy and forgiveness, ver. 6, 7, 11.

IV. His fourth is a renewal of his first, ver. 15, 16, 17, &c., with many arguments.

V. His fifth is for Israel in general, ver. 22.

I. Petition. He begins with the profession of his faith and confidence in God,—without which there can be no prayer. Unto thee, O Lord, &c. He relies not on, nor seeks after, any human help; and upon this living hope he prays,—

1. For this life, that it shame him not, as it does where a man hopes, and is frustrated. Let me not be ashamed. Make it appear that I hope not in Thee in vain.

2. Let not my enemies triumph over me. Glorifying that I am deserted. This petition he urges by this argument: the example may prove dangerous, if Thou send me no help; but it will be to Thy glory, if I be relieved. If he were delivered, the faith and hope of others would be confirmed: if deserted, the good would faint and fail, the wicked triumph;—and, therefore, he prays, O let none that wait on thee be ashamed; but let them be ashamed who transgress, that is, they that do me wrong maliciously, without any cause being given by myself.

II. He petitions for instruction that he may be always guided and governed by the word of God, that he sink not under the cross, but rely on God's promises.

1. Shew me thy ways, and teach me thy paths. Shew me that Thou often dealest severely with thy best servants: bringest down, before Thou exaltest; mortifiest, before Thou quickenest; and settest the cross before the crown. Teach me, shew me, that this is Thy way.

2. Lead me in thy truth, and teach me. Cause me to remember that Thy promises are firm and true; yea and amen to those who trust in Thee. This makes me hope still, thou art the God of my salvation, &c.

III. His third petition is for mercy. He prays for mercy, and the removal of the sin that obstructs it.

1. Remember, O Lord, thy tender mercies, &c. which have been ever of old: i. e. deal mercifully with me as Thou hast ever done with those who flee to Thee in their extremity.

2. He prays for the remission of the sins of his youth. Remember not the sins of my youth. This petition he repeats, ver. 11. For thy name sake pardon mine iniquity: and upon this confession; for it is great.

The Psalmist here breaks off prayer; and, to confirm his confidence, speaks of the nature and Person of God. It is necessary sometimes, even in the midst of our prayers, to call to mind the nature of God, and His ways with His people, lest through a sense of our unworthiness, or great unfaithfulness, we should be discouraged. And this course David takes. He says,—

1. Good and upright is the Lord. 1. Good, for He receives sinners gratis. 2. Upright, constant and true in His promises; therefore, He will teach sinners in the way.

2. The meek will He guide in judgment.—He will not suffer them to be tempted above their strength;—will teach them what to answer;—and will not proceed with rigour, but will interpret all in the most favourable sense.

3. In a word, all the ways of the Lord are mercy and truth. 1. Mercy, in that He freely offers the remission of sins, the graces of His Spirit, support in distresses, and at last eternal life, to those who by faith and a good conscience walk before Him—keep his covenant and his testimonies; for the words of the covenant are, I will be thy God, and the God of thy seed; upon which follows, Walk before me, and be thou perfect.

4. Upon the confidence of which promises and covenant the Psalmist repeats his prayer:—O Lord, pardon mine iniquity; for it is great, ver. 11.

The Psalmist now admires the happiness of him who trusts in God.—What man is he that feareth the Lord! This happiness he sets forth by the fruits that follow his piety:—

1. The first fruit he shall gather is instruction and direction in his vocation, and private life. Him shall he teach in the way, &c.

2. The second is, that his happiness shall not be momentary, but firm and lasting. His soul shall dwell at ease.

3. The third is, that he shall be happy in his posterity. His seed shall inherit the land.

PSALM XXVI.

The Psalmist appeals to God for his integrity, and desires to be brought to the Divine seat in order to have his innocence proved, &c. Shows that he had avoided all fellowship with the wicked, and associated with the upright, &c. Prays that he may not have his final lot with the workers of iniquity, &c. Purpose to walk uprightly before God, &c.

4. The fourth is, that the redemption of mankind by Christ Jesus, with all the effects of it, pardon, holiness, &c. which is a secret unknown to the world, shall be revealed, and applied to him. The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him; and he will shew them his covenant.

IV. Being confirmed by these promises, and cheered with these fruits, he,

1. Testifies his faith in God for deliverance. My eyes are ever toward the Lord; he will pluck my feet out of the net.

He then renews his former prayer, being nearly the same as that with which he began. It is conceived in several clauses.—1. Turn thee unto me. 2. Have mercy upon me. 3. O bring me out of my distresses. 4. Look upon my affliction and trouble, and forgive me all my sins. 5. Consider mine enemies. 6. O keep my soul and deliver me! 7. Let me not be ashamed! 8. Let integrity and uprightness preserve me.

Petitioners, and men in misery, think they can never say enough. This makes him often repeat the same thing. The sum is, that God would hear and grant him defence and deliverance in his dangers; remission of sins which caused them; and protect, direct, and govern him in his troubles.

Now, that he might prevail in his suit, like an excellent orator, he uses many arguments to induce God to be propitious to him:—

1. His faith and trust in His promises. Mine eyes are ever towards the Lord.

2. The danger he was now in. His feet were in the net.

3. He was oppressed, alone, and had none to help him. I am desolate and afflicted.

4. His inward afflictions and pain were grievous. The troubles of my heart are enlarged.

5. His enemies were many, powerful, merciless, cruel. Mine enemies are many—and hate me with a cruel hatred.

6. And yet I am innocent, and desire to be so: and am Thy servant. Let integrity and uprightness preserve me; for I wait upon thee.

V. The Psalmist having thus, through the Psalm, prayed for himself, at last offers up a short but earnest petition for the whole church; which proceeds from that fellowship, or communion, which ought to be among all saints. Redeem Israel, O God, out of all his troubles!

Turn our captivity, and forgive the sins which have occasioned it.

NOTES ON PSALM XXVI.

This Psalm, with the two following, are supposed by Calmet to be all parts of one ode, and to relate to the time of the captivity, and to contain the prayers, supplications, complaints, and resolutions, of the Israelites in Babylon. This is probable: but we have not evidence enough to authorize us to be nice on such points. See on the following verse.

Verse 1. Judge me, O Lord] There are so many strong assertions in this Psalm concerning the innocence and uprightness of its author, that many suppose he wrote it to vindicate himself from some severe reflections on his conduct, or accusations relative to plots, conspiracies, &c. This seems to render the opinion probable that attributes it to David during his exile, when all manner of false accusations were brought against him at the court of Saul.

I have walked in mine integrity] I have never plotted against the life nor property of any man: I have neither coveted, nor endeavoured to possess myself of Saul's crown.

I have trusted] Had I acted otherwise, I could not have been prosperous; for Thou wouldst not have worked miracles for the preservation of a wicked man.

5 I have hated the congregation of evil doers; and will not sit with the wicked.

6 I will wash mine hands in innocence: so will I compass thine altar, O LORD:

7 That I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works.

8 LORD, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thine honour dwelleth.

9 Gather not my soul with sinners, nor my life with bloody men:

10 In whose hands is mischief, and their right hand is full of bribes.

11 But as for me, I will walk in mine integrity: redeem me, and be merciful unto me.

12 My foot standeth in an even place: in the congregations will I bless the LORD.

I shall not slide.] I shall be preserved from swerving from the paths of righteousness and truth.

Verse 2. Examine me, O Lord] To Thee I appeal; and feel no hesitation in wishing to have all the motives of my heart dissected and exposed to Thy view, and to that of the world.

Verse 3. For thy loving-kindness] A sense of thy favour and approbation was more to my heart than thrones and sceptres; and, in order to retain this blessing, I have walked in thy truth.

Verse 4. I have not sat with vain persons] שוה רוחו metey shavel, men of lies, dissemblers, backbiters, &c.

Neither will I go in with dissemblers] נדלמימ, nadlamim, the hidden ones, the dark designers, the secret plotters, and conspirators against the state.

Verse 5. I have hated the congregation of evil doers] I have never made one in the crowds of discontented persons: persons who, under pretence of rectifying what was wrong in the state, strove to subvert it, to breed general confusion, to overturn the laws, seize on private property, and enrich themselves by the spoils of the country.

Verse 6. I will wash mine hands in innocency] Washing the hands was frequent among the Jews; and was sometimes an action by which a man declared his innocence of any base or wicked transaction. This Pilate did, to protest his innocence of the maltreatment and death of Christ. I will maintain that innocence of life in which I have hitherto walked; and take care that nothing shall be found in my heart or life that would prevent me from using the most holy ordinance, or worshipping Thee in spirit and truth.

Verse 7. That I may publish] I have endeavoured to act so as always to keep a conscience void of offence towards Thee, and towards man. I have made a profession of faith in Thee, and salvation from Thee; and my practice gives no lie to my profession.

Verse 8. LORD, I have loved the habitation of thy house] I have carefully used Thine ordinances, that I might obtain more grace to help me to persevere. And I have not been attentive to these duties, merely because they were incumbent on me: but I have loved the place where thine honour dwelleth; and my delight in Thy ordinances has made my attendance as pleasant as it was profitable. This verse would be better translated, Jehovah, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place of the tabernacle of thy glory. The habitation must mean the Holy of holies, where the Divine presence was manifest: and the place of the tabernacle must refer to the mercy seat, or the place where the glory of the Lord appeared between the cherubim, upon the lid or cover of the ark of the covenant. From his dwelling there, מישכן, mishcan, the place and the appearance were called שכינה shekinah; the dwelling of Jehovah, or that glorious appearance which was the symbol of the Divine presence.

Verse 9. Gather not my soul with sinners] As I have never loved their company, nor followed their practice, let not my eternal lot be cast with them! I neither love them, nor their ways:—may I never be doomed to spend an eternity with them!

Verse 10. Their right hand is full of bribes.] He speaks of persons in office, who took bribes to pervert judgment and justice.

Verse 11. But as for me, I will walk in mine integrity] Whatever I may have to do with public affairs, shall be done with the strictest attention to truth, justice, and mercy.

Redeem me] From all snares and plots laid against my life and my soul.

PSALM XXVII.

The righteous man's confidence in God, 1-3. His ardent desire to have the spiritual privilege of worshipping God in His temple, because of the spiritual blessings which He expects to enjoy there, 4-5. His prayer to God for continual light and salvation, 7-9. His confidence that though even his own parents might forsake him, yet God would not, 10. Therefore he begs to be taught the right way to be delivered from all his enemies, and to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living, 11-13. He exhorts others to trust in God; to be of good courage; and to expect strength for their hearts, 14.

ANALYSIS OF THE TWENTY-SIXTH PSALM.

There are four general parts in this Psalm:—

I. An appeal of David to God to be his Judge, ver. 1, 2.
II. The causes that induced him to make the appeal. His conscious innocence, integrity, &c.
III. A petition, ver. 9, 11.
IV. His gratitude, ver. 12.

I. He begins with his appeal to God, whom he knew to be a just Judge; and, therefore, desires to be dealt with according to law. Judge me; examine me; prove me; try me; even my reins and my heart.

II. Then he assigns two causes of it—his integrity, and his faith.

1. His faith and confidence in God were such, that he knew that the Judge of all the world would do him right. I have trusted in the Lord; therefore, I shall not slide. I will not change my religion, though powerfully tempted to do so.

2. His integrity. I have walked in my integrity. For which he assigns the cause, Thy loving-kindness is before my eyes: I have walked in thy truth. I follow Thy word, and the principle it lays down.

Next he sets down his integrity by an injunction of parts, which were two:—1. How he carried himself to men. 2. How he conducted himself towards God.

1. He abstained from all society, confederacy, counsels, and intimacy with wicked men: he did hate and abominate their ways. I have not sat in council with vain persons, neither will I go in with dissemblers: I have hated the congregation of evil doers, and will not sit with the wicked.

2. The other degree of his integrity was, his piety. I will wash my hands in innocence, i. e. I will worship Thee: and for this end, he would keep his hands from blood, oppression, &c. in order that he might publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all the wondrous works of the Lord.

3. He mentions a second act of his piety, his love to God's house, and the service done in it. O Lord, I have loved the habitation of thy house, and the place where thine honour dwelleth.

III. Upon which consciousness of his integrity he falls to prayer, that God would not suffer him to be polluted with the conversation of wicked men, nor involved in their punishment. Gather not my soul with sinners.

Observe the many titles he gives to wicked men:—

1. They are vain persons; void of the fear of God; irreligious, ver. 4.

2. Deep, dark men; saying one thing with the mouth, and another with their heart, ver. 4.

3. Malignant; doing all for their own ends, ver. 5.

4. Impious; regardless of God and religion, ver. 5.

5. Sinners; traders in wickedness, ver. 9.

6. Blood-thirsty men; cruel and revengeful, ver. 9.

7. Mischivous; ready to execute with their hands what they had plotted in their heart, ver. 10.

8. Lovers of bribes; perverting judgment for the sake of money, ver. 10.

With such David will have nothing to do. But as for me, I will walk in my integrity. Redeem me from such people, and be merciful to me.

IV. Lastly. He shows his gratitude. My foot stands my foes, ^d came upon me to ^e eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell.

3 ^f Though an host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear: though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident.

4 ^g One thing have I desired of the LORD, that will I seek after; that I may ^h dwell in the house of the LORD all the days of my life, to behold ⁱ the ^j beauty of the LORD, and to enquire in his temple.

5 For ^k in the time of trouble he shall hide me in an even place: hitherto I am sure I am in the good way. I will, therefore, praise the Lord in the congregation; not only privately, but publicly.

My foot hath hitherto been kept right by Thy grace and mercy: therefore, when Thou shalt bring me back again to Thy temple, I will not be ungrateful, but will sing praises to Thy name in and with the great congregation. Amen.

NOTES ON PSALM XXVII.

In the Hebrew and Chaldee this Psalm has no other title than simply David; To or For David. In the Syriac, "For David; on account of an infirmity which fell upon him." In the Vulgate, Septuagint, Arabic, and Ethiopic, it has this title, "A Psalm of David, before he was anointed." The Anglo-Saxon omits all the titles. For this title there is small authority, in fact. However, it may be just necessary to state, that David appears to have received the royal unction three times:—1. In Bethlehem, from the hand of Samuel, in the house of his father Jesse, 1 Sam. xvi. 13. 2. At Hebron, after the death of Saul, by the men of Judah, 2 Sam. ii. 4. 3. By the elders of Israel, at Hebron, after the death of Ishbosheth, when he was acknowledged king over all the tribes, 2 Sam. v. 3. At which of these anointings the Psalm was written, or whether before any of them, we know not; nor is the question to be decided. Some commentators say, that it is a Psalm belonging to the captivity; and, upon that system, it may be well interpreted. And, lastly, it has been contended that it was written by David after he had been in danger of losing his life by the hand of a gigantic Philistine; and must have perished, had he not been rescued by Abishai. See the account, 2 Sam. xxi. 17. And was counselled by his subjects not to go out to battle any more, lest he should extinguish the light of Israel. To these advisers he is supposed to make the following reply:—

Verse 1. The Lord is my light and my salvation] This light can never be extinguished by man: the Lord is my Salvation, my Safeguard, my Shield, and my Defence;—of whom then should I be afraid?

Verse 2. When the wicked—came upon me] Near as I appeared to you to be in danger of losing my life, I was safe enough in the hands of the Lord; and those who thought to have eaten me up, stumbled, failed of their purpose, and fell;—the Philistine lost his own life.

Verse 3. Though an host should encamp against me] I am so confident of the Almighty's protection, that were I alone, and encompassed by a host, I would not fear. I am in the hand of God; and while in that hand, I am safe.

Verse 4. One thing have I desired] If I am grown too old, and, from that circumstance, unable to serve my country, I shall then prefer a retirement to the tabernacle, there to serve God the rest of my days. There I shall behold His glory; and there I may inquire, and get important answers respecting Israel.

But though these words may be thus interpreted on the above supposition, that David penned the Psalm on the occasion of his escape from the Philistine, and the desire expressed by his subjects that he should go no more out to war; yet it appears that they more naturally belong to the captivity; and that this verse especially shews the earnest longing of the captives to return to their own land, that they might enjoy the benefit of Divine worship.

Verse 5. He shall hide me in his pavilion] כסו besucob, in his tabernacles. I would make His temple my residence: I would dwell with God, and be in continual safety. Pavilion, comes from papilio, and papilio, a butterfly. It signifies a tent made of cloth, stretched out on poles; which in form resembles, in some measure, the insect above named.

In the secret of his tabernacle] Were there no other place, He would put me in the holy of holies, so that an enemy would not dare to approach me.

He shall set me upon a rock] He shall so strengthen and establish me, that my enemies shall not be able to prevail against me. He shall hide me where they cannot find in his pavilion: in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me upon a rock.

6 And now shall mine head be lifted up above mine enemies round about me; therefore will I offer in his tabernacle sacrifices of joy; I will sing, yea, I will sing praises unto the LORD.

7 Hear, O LORD, when I cry with my voice: have mercy also upon me, and answer me.

8 When thou saidst, Seek ye my face; my heart said unto thee, Thy face, LORD, will I seek.

9 Hide not thy face far from me; put not thy servant away in anger: thou hast been my help; leave me not, neither forsake me, O God of my salvation.

me; or put me out of the reach of the fiery darts of the wicked. He who lives nearest to God, suffers least from temptation. "Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to thee; resist the devil, and he will flee from thee."

Verse 6. Now shall mine head be lifted up [We shall most assuredly be redeemed from this captivity, and restored to our own land, and to the worship of our God in His own temple. There shall we offer sacrifices of joy; we will sing praises unto the Lord; and acknowledge that it is by His might and mercy alone, that we have been delivered.

Verse 7. Hear, O LORD, when I cry [This is the utmost that any man of common sense can expect: to be heard when he cries. But there are multitudes who suppose that God will bless them whether they cry or not: and there are others, and not a few, that although they listlessly pray, and cry not, yet imagine God must, and will hear them! God will answer them that pray and cry: those who do not, are most likely to be without the blessings which they so much need.

Verse 8. When thou saidst, Seek ye my face [How much labour and skill have been employed to make sense of this verse as it stands in our Translation! The original words are the following, from which our Version has been forcibly extracted:—

leca amar libbi, bakkeshu panay; eth paneyca yehovah, abakkeah; of which, I believe, the true rendering to be as follows: Unto thee, my heart, he hath said, Seek ye my face. Thy face, O Jehovah, I will seek. O my heart, God hath commanded thee to seek his face. Then, his face I will seek. Which may be paraphrased thus: Unto thee, His church, God hath said, Seek ye, all who compose it, my face. To which I, his church, have answered, Thy face, O Jehovah, I will seek. On referring to Archbishop Secker, I find that he, and indeed Bishop Horsley, are of the same mind.

I had formerly proposed another method of reading this difficult verse. Suspecting that some error had got into the Text, for bakkeshu panay, "seek ye my face," I had substituted abakkeah paneyca, "I will seek thy face;" or, with the Vulgate and Septuagint, bakkeshti paneyca, "I have sought thy face;" acquirit te, facies mea, Εξζητησα το προσωπον σου. And this small alteration seemed to make a good sense. My heart said unto thee, I have sought thy face, (or, I will seek thy face,) and thy face, O Lord, I will seek. I have not only done what it was my duty and interest to do; but I will continue to do it. Some have proposed to mend the Text thus: leca amar libbi, leca, amar libbi, "Go to, and my heart," nebakkush panay yehovah, "Let us seek the face of Jehovah." This is rather a violent emendation; and is supported by neither MSS. nor Versions. The whole verse is wanting in one of Dr. Kennicot's MSS. On the whole, I prefer what is first proposed, and which requires no alteration in the Text; next, that of the Vulgate and Septuagint.

The old Psalter paraphrases thus:—Till the waste my heart, the my face sought: thf face Lord, & sal seek. "The germyng of my hert that spekes til god, and he anely hears: aside til the my face, that es my presence sought the and no other thynge. And fra now I sal seke thy face lastandy, til my dede; and that I fynd my sekyng." i. e. To thee, said my heart; thee my face sought: thy face, O Lord, I shall seek. "The germyng of my hert, that spekes til god, and he anely hears, til the my face; that es, my presence sought the and no other thynge: and fra now I sal seke thf face lastandy, til my dede, and that I fynd my sekyng." i. e. The yearning strong desire of my heart, which speaks to God, and He alone hears; my face is to Thee; that is, myself sought Thee, and none other 10 When my father and my mother forsake me, then the LORD will take me up.

11 Teach me thy way, O LORD, and lead me in a plain path, because of mine enemies.

12 Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies: for false witnesses are risen up against me, and such as breathe out cruelty.

13 I had fainted, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the LORD in the land of the living.

Verse 9. Hide not thy face—from me [As my face is towards Thee, wheresoever I am; so let Thy face be turned towards me. In a Persian MS. poem entitled شاه و پادشاه Shah ve Guddah, "The King and the Beggar," I have found a remarkable couplet, most strangely and artificially involved, which expresses exactly the same sentiment:—

روي ما سوي تست از همه رو
سوي ما روي تست از همه سو

One meaning of which is,—

Our face is towards thee in all our ways;
Thy face is towards us in all our intentions.

Something similar, though not the same sentiment, is in Haftz, lib. i. gaz. v. cap. 2:—

با مردمان رو بسوي كعبه چون اريم چون
رو بسوي خاله خمار دارن پير ما

How can we with the disciples, turn our face towards the Kaaba?
When our spiritual instructor turns his face towards the wine-cellar?

I shall subjoin a higher authority than either:—

1 Pet. ch. iii. ver. 12.

For the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous;
And His ears to their supplication:
And the face of the Lord is upon the workers of evil.

Verse 10. When my father and my mother forsake me [Or, more literally, "For my father and my mother have forsaken me: but the Lord hath gathered me up." My parents were my protectors for a time: but the Lord has been my Protector always. There is no time in which I do not fall under His merciful regards.

Verse 11. Teach me thy way [Let me know the gracious designs of Thy providence towards me, that my heart may submit to thy will.

And lead me in a plain path [In the path of righteousness, because of mine enemies, who watch for my halting.

Verse 12. Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies [To their soul, εναντι beneplesh; their whole soul thirsts for my destruction. Let them not be gratified. They have suborned witnesses against me; but they are false witnesses; unmask their wickedness, and confound their counsels.

Verse 13. I had fainted, unless I had believed [The words in italics are supplied by our translators: but, far from being necessary; they injure the sense. Throw out the words I had fainted, and leave a break after the verse, and the elegant figure of the Psalmist will be preserved.—Unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living—What! what, alas! should have become of me!

Dr. Hammond has observed that there is a remarkable elegance in the original which, by the use of the beautiful figure apostrophe, makes an abrupt breaking off in the midst of a speech. He compares it to the speech of Neptune to the winds that had raised the tempest to drown the fleet of Aeneas.—Æneid. lib. i. ver. 131.

Berum ad se cephrineque vocat: dante talis fateri;
Tantane vos gemitus tenent fiducia vestri?
Jam colui terrarumq, meo sine numine, venti,
Hæcere, et tentata audetis tollere moles?
Quo ego—sed motus prociat composuere fluctus.

To Enear and the western blast be cried,
Does your high birth inspire this boundless pride?
Audacious winds! without a power from me,
To raise at will such mountains on the sea?
Thus to confound heaven, earth, the air, and main;
When I—be, firm, I'll calm the waves again.

Verse 14. Wait on the LORD [All ye who are in distress, wait on the Lord; take me for an example. I waited

ANALYSIS OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH PSALM.

There are four general parts in this Psalm. David shews,

I. How free he is from fear, in any danger; and he shews also the cause of his confidence, ver. 1, 2, 3.

II. He expresses his love to God's house, and His religion, ver. 4, 5, 6.

III. He prays for succour and support, ver. 7, &c.

IV. He exhorts others to dependance on the Lord, ver. 14.

I. It is possible (independently of the reason given in the Notes,) that some person, friend or foe, might ask David how he felt during the persecutions raised against him by Saul? To whom he may be supposed to return this answer: "I was never disheartened, never in despair; and the reason was, God was my Light to guide me, my Rock to save me, and my Strength to sustain and support me. The Lord is my light, &c." And this he amplifies in the next two verses,—I. By experience; he had already found this true. When the wicked, even mine enemies, came upon me to eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell. 2. He puts a case, Say that though a host should encamp against me, my heart shall not fear; though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident.

The arguments of his confidence were—1. God's goodness, ver. 1. 2. His own experience, ver. 2. To which he adds, 3. What God would do for him.

1. He would hide him in His tabernacle, ver. 5.

2. That though his father and mother should forsake him, God would take him up, ver. 10.

3. That he should see the goodness of God in the land of the living, ver. 13.

II. He expresses his great love and affection to the house of God:—One thing I have desired; and in this he was constant. THAT (emphatically) I will seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life. For three ends:—

1. To behold the beauty of the Lord. To taste how good and gracious He is.

2. To enquire in his temple. There to search the mind of God.

3. To offer in his temple sacrifices of joy, and to sing praises to the Lord.

And this was another argument of his security:—For in the time of trouble he will hide me in his pavilion—he shall set me upon a rock, and my head shall be lifted up. And—

III. He prays for succour and support.

1. For audience, and an answer. Hear, O Lord, when I cry,—have mercy upon me, and answer me.

2. The ground of his prayer;—his having willingly received the commandment of God. He hath said, Seek ye my face. Thy face, O Lord, will I seek.

3. The matter of his prayer, in general. Hide not thy face from me; put not thy servant away in anger. In which he had good hope of success from former experience. Thou hast been my help;—be to me now as Thou hast been. Leave me not, nor forsake me, O God of my salvation, &c.

4. The matter of his prayer, in particular. Teach me thy way, O God; lead me in a plain path. That is, teach me what to do that I may please thee; and lead me in a plain path, that I may escape the snares of my enemies. Deliver me not over to their will, for they seek my ruin.—1. They are perjured men;—False witnesses have 4 Give them according to their deeds, and according to the wickedness of their endeavours: give them after the work of their hands; render to them their desert.

5 Because they regard not the works of the LORD, nor the operation of his hands, he shall destroy them, and not build them up.

6 Blessed be the LORD, because he hath heard the voice of my supplications.

7 The LORD is my strength and my shield; my heart trusted in him, and I am helped: therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth; and with my song will I praise him.

8 The LORD is their strength, and he is the saving strength of his anointed.

risen up against me. 2. They are mischievously bent;—They breathe out cruelty.

5. And their cruelty and falsehood are so great that, unless I had believed to see the goodness of the Lord in the land of the living—what would have become of me!

IV. He concludes with an exhortation, that all others would consider his example, and in their greatest extremities be courageous, and put their trust in God as he did. Wait on the Lord, be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thy heart; wait, I say, on the Lord. Be an expectant; for He that has promised to come will come, and will not tarry. But wait actively,—be not idle. Use the means of grace;—read,—hear,—pray,—believe,—work. Acknowledges Him in all thy ways, and He will direct thy steps. They that wait upon the Lord shall never be confounded.

NOTES ON PSALM XXVIII.

This Psalm is of the same complexion with the two preceding; and belongs most probably to the times of the captivity, though some have referred it to David in his persecutions. In the five first verses the author prays for support against his enemies, who appear to have acted treacherously against him. In the sixth and seventh he is supposed to have gained the victory, and returns with songs of triumph. The eighth is a chorus of the people sung to their conquering king. The ninth is the prayer of the king for his people.

Verse 1. O Lord my rock] לטורי tsuri not only means my rock, but my fountain, and the origin of all the good I possess.

If thou be silent] If Thou do not answer in such a way as to leave no doubt that Thou hast heard me, I shall be as a dead man. It is a modern refinement in theology which teaches that no man can know when God hears and answers his prayers, but by an induction of particulars, and by an inference from His promises. And, on this ground, how can any man fairly presume that he is heard or answered at all? May not his inductions be no other than the common occurrences of providence? and may not providence be no more than the necessary occurrence of events? And is it not possible, on this sceptic ground, that there is no God to hear or answer? True religion knows nothing of these abominations; it teaches its votaries to pray to God, to expect an answer from Him, and to look for the Holy Spirit to bear witness with their spirits that they are the sons and daughters of God.

Verse 2. Toward thy holy oracle] דביר קודשך debir kodshaka: debir properly means that place in the Holy of holies from which God gave oracular answers to the high-priest. This is a presumptive proof that there was a temple now standing; and the custom of stretching out the hands in prayer towards the temple, when the Jews were at a distance from it, is here referred to.

Verse 3. Draw me not away] Let me not be involved in the punishment of the wicked.

Verse 4. Give them] Is the same as thou wilt give them;—a prophetic declaration of what their lot will be.

Verse 5. They regard not the works of the Lord] They have no knowledge of the true God, either as to His nature, or as to His works.

He shall destroy them, and not build them up.] This is a remarkable prophecy, and was literally fulfilled:—the Babylonian empire was destroyed by Cyrus, and never built up again; for he founded the Persian empire on its ruins. Even the place where Babylon stood, is now no longer known.

Verse 7. The Lord is my strength] I have the fullest persuasion that He hears, will answer, and will save me.

Verse 8. The Lord is their strength] Instead of אל לאמו, to them, eight MSS. of Kennicott and De Rossi have אלטי le-amo, to his people;—and this reading is con-

9 Save thy people, and bless thine inheritance: feed them also, and lift them up for ever.

PSALM XXIX.

The Psalmist calls upon the great and the mighty to give thanks unto God, and to worship Him in the beauty of holiness, on account of a tempest that had taken place, 1, 2. He shows the wonders produced by a thunder storm, which he calls the voice of God, 3-6. Speaks of the majesty of God, 10. And points out the great He will do to his people, 11.

A Psalm of David.

formed by the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. This makes the passage more precise and intelligible; and of the truth of the reading there can be no reasonable doubt. The Lord is the strength of his people, and the saving strength of his anointed. Both king and people are protected, upheld, and saved, by Him.

Verses 9. Save thy people] Continue to preserve them from all their enemies; from idolatry, and from sin of every kind.

Bless thine inheritance] They have taken Thee for their God: Thou hast taken them for Thy people.

Feed them] or reem signifies both to feed and to govern. Feed them, as a shepherd does his flock;—rule them as a father does his children.

Lift them up for ever.] Maintain Thy true church; let no enemy prevail against it. Preserve and magnify them for ever. Lift them up: as hell is the bottomless pit in which damned spirits sink down for ever; or, as Chaucer says, downe all downe: so heaven is an endless height of glory, in which there is an eternal rising or exaltation. Down, all down; up, all up; for ever and ever.

ANALYSIS OF THE TWENTY-EIGHTH PSALM.

There are three parts in this Psalm:

I. A prayer, ver. 1-6.

II. A thanksgiving, ver. 6-9.

III. A prayer for the church, ver. 9.

1. The first part is a prayer to God; in which he first requests audience,—ver. 2. Hear me. And his prayer is so described, that it sets forth most of the conditions requisite in one that prays:—

1. The object,—God; Unto thee, O Lord, do I cry.

2. His faith;—To thee I cry, who art my rock.

3. His fervour;—It was an ardent and vehement prayer,—I cry.

4. Humility;—It was a supplication,—Hear the voice of my supplication.

5. His gesture;—I lift up my hands.

6. According to God's order;—Towards thy holy temple.

1. The argument he uses to procure an audience;—the danger he was in. Lest if thou be silent, I become like them that go down to the pit.

2. Then he expresses what he prays for, which is, that either

1. He might not be corrupted by the fair persuasions of hypocrites:

2. Or that he might not be partaker of their punishments.—Draw me not away with the wicked. Upon whom he sets this mark,—Who speak peace—but mischief is in their hearts.

3. Against whom he uses this imprecation, which is the second part of his prayer;—Give them according to their own deeds, &c.

4. For which he gives this reason;—they were enemies to God and to His religion; far from repentance, and any hope of amendment. They regard not the works of the Lord, nor the operation of his hands; therefore he shall destroy them, and not build them up.

II. Then follows an excellent form of thanksgiving, which he begins with Blessed be the Lord; and assigns the reasons, which express the chief parts of thanksgiving.

1. That God heard him. He hath heard the voice of my supplication.

2. That He would be his Protector. The Lord is my strength and my shield.

3. For His grace of confidence. My heart trusted in him.

4. That from Him he had relief. I am helped.

his name; worship the LORD in the beauty of holiness.

3 The voice of the LORD is upon the waters: the God of glory thundereth: the LORD is upon many waters.

4 The voice of the LORD is powerful; the voice of the LORD is full of majesty.

5 The voice of the LORD breaketh the cedars; yea, the LORD breaketh the cedars of Lebanon.

6 He maketh them also to skip like a calf; Lebanon and Sirion like a young unicorn.

7 The voice of the LORD divideth the flames of fire.

5. And that God might have all the honour, he repeats what he said before;—The Lord is their strength, &c. that is, of all them that were with Him.

III. He concludes with a prayer, in which he commends the whole church to God's care and tuition.

1. Save thy people;—In the midst of these tumults and distractions.

2. Bless thine inheritance;—That they increase in knowledge, piety, and secular prosperity.

3. Feed them;—Give them a godly king.

4. Lift them up for ever. Make their name famous among the Gentiles; let them increase and multiply till Thy church embraces all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues. This hath the Lord promised.

NOTES ON PSALM XXIX.

In the Hebrew this is called A Psalm for David. The Vulgate says, A Psalm of David, when the tabernacle was completed. The Septuagint says,—A Psalm of David, at the going out, or exodus, of the tabernacle. The Arabic states it to be,—A prophecy concerning the incarnation; and concerning the ark and the tent. Numb. v. 12. The Syriac, A Psalm of David, concerning oblation. The Psalm was probably written to commemorate the abundant rain which fell in the days of David, after the heavens had been shut up for three years. 2 Sam. xxi. 1-10.

Verses 1 O ye mighty] בני אלים beney elim, "sons of the strong ones," or "sons of rams." The Chaldee has,—ye hosts of angels, sons of God. The Vulgate has,—Offer to the Lord, ye sons of God; offer to the Lord the sons of rams;—in this rendering agree the Septuagint, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. The old Psalter has,—Stinges tll Lord ye goddess sonnes; bynges tll Lord sonnes of wether: which it paraphrases thus:—that es, yourself, sonnes of apostles, that war leders of goddes folk; quam ye study to follow.

Glory and strength] Ascribe all excellence and might to Him.

The whole is employed in describing the effects produced by a thunder-storm which had lately taken place.

Verses 2. The glory due unto his name] Rather, the glory of his name. His name is Mercy; His nature is love. Ascribe mercy, love, power, and wisdom, to Him. All these are implied in the name Jehovah.

In the beauty of holiness] כבודו behaderath kedosh, "the beautiful garments of holiness." Let the priests and Levites put on their best and cleanest apparel; and let the whole service be conducted in such a way as to be no dishonour to the Divine Majesty. The Vulgate and others read, in the palace of His holiness. Let all go to the temple, and return thanks to God for their preservation during this dreadful storm. See on ver. 9.

Verses 3. The voice of the Lord] THUNDER, so called, Exod. ix. 23, 28, 29. Job xxxvii. 4. Psa. xviii. 13. Isa. xxx. 30. On this subject see the Note on Job xxxvii. 4, where there is a particular description of the nature and generation of thunder; and of the lightning, clap, rain, and other phenomena, which accompany it.

Upon many waters] The clouds, which Moses calls the waters which are above the firmament.

Verses 4. Is powerful] There is no agent in universal nature so powerful as the electric fluid. It destroys life, tears castles and towers to pieces, rends the strongest oaks, and cleaves the most solid rocks: universal animate nature is awed and terrified by it. To several of these effects the Psalmist here refers; and for the illustration of the whole I must refer to the above Notes on Job.

Full of majesty] No sound in nature is so tremendous and majestic as that of thunder; it is the most fit to represent the voice of God.

Verses 5. Breaketh the cedars] Very tall trees attract the lightning from the clouds, by which they are often torn to pieces. Woods and forests give dreadful proof of this after a thunder-storm.

8 The voice of the LORD shaketh the wilderness; the LORD shaketh the wilderness of Kadesh.

9 The voice of the LORD maketh the hinds to calve, and discovereth the forests; and in his temple doth every one speak of his glory.

10 The LORD sitteth upon the flood; yea, the LORD sitteth King for ever.

11 The LORD will give strength unto his people; the LORD will bless his people with peace.

o Numb. 13. 28.—p Job 39. 1, 2, 3—Cr, to be in pain.—Cr, every whit of it uttereth, &c.—s Gen. 6. 17. Job 26. 9, 25.—Psa. 18. 15.—Psa. 28. 8.

Verse 7. Divideth the flames of fire] The forked zig-zag lightning is the cause of thunder; and in a thunder-storm these lightnings are variously dispersed, smiting houses, towers, trees, men, and cattle, in different places.

Verse 8. The wilderness of Kadesh] This was on the frontiers of Idumea and Paran. There may be a reference to some terrible thunder-storm and earthquake which had occurred in that place.

Verse 9. Maketh the hinds to calve] Strikes terror through all the tribes of animals; which sometimes occasions those which are pregnant to cast their young. This, I believe to be the whole that is meant by the Text. I meddle not with the fables which have been published on this subject both by ancients and moderns.

Discovereth the forests] Makes them sometimes evident in the darkest night, by the sudden flash; and often by setting them on fire.

And in his temple] Does this refer to the effect which a dreadful thunder-storm often produces? Multitudes run to places of worship as asylums in order to find safety, and to pray to God. See on ver. 2.

Verse 10. The LORD sitteth upon the flood] יושב יהוה על המבול יהוה יושב על המבול, "Jehovah sat upon the deluge." It was Jehovah that commanded those waters to be upon the earth. He directed the storm; and is here represented, after all the confusion and tempest, as sitting on the floods, appeasing the fury of the jarring elements; and reducing all things, by His governing influence, to regularity and order.

Sitteth King for ever] He governs universal nature: whatsoever he wills He does in the heavens above, in the earth beneath, and in all deep places. Every phenomenon is under His government and control. There is something very like this in Virgil's description of Neptune appeasing the storm raised by Juno for the destruction of the fleet of Æneas. Æn. lib. i. 124. See at the end of this Psalm.

Verse 11. The LORD will give strength] Prosperity in our secular affairs; success in our enterprises; and his blessing upon our fields and cattle.

The LORD will bless his people with peace] Give them victory over their enemies, and cause the nations to be at peace with them; so that they shall enjoy uninterrupted prosperity.

The plentiful rain which God has now sent is a foretaste of His future blessings and abundant mercies.

In the note on verse 10, I have referred to the following description taken from Virgil. Did he borrow some of the chief ideas in it from the 29th Psalm? The reader will observe several coincidences.

*Interea magno malarum murmuris pontum,
Æneamque hyemem senit Neptuneus, et imis
Stagna refluxa vadis: graviter commotus, et alto
Prospectans, summa periculis caput extulit unda.
Dijectam Æneæ tota videt æquore classem,
Fluctibus oppressa Troas, cœlique rotas.
Æneam ad se saphyræque vocat: debent tællæ fatum.
Sic ait: in dicto citius tumida æquora placat,
Collectæque fugat nubes, solæque reducti.
Cymothoe stimat, et Triton adnixus acuto
Detradunt naves scopulo; lævi ipse tridentis,
Et vastas aperit æquor, et temporal æquor.
Alyx rotis summas lætibus perlabitur undas.
Sic cunctos petiæi cecidit fragor, æquora postquam
Prospectans genitor, cœlique impetus aperit
Flucti equos, curruque volans dat iora secundo.*

Meanwhile, imperial Neptune heard the sound
Of raging billows breaking on the ground:
Dismas'd, and fearing for his watery reign,
He rears his awful head above the main:
Senses in majesty, then roll'd his eyes
Around the space of earth, of seas, and skies:
He saw the Trojan fleet dispers'd, durtur'd,
By stormy winds and wintry heaven oppress'd.
He summon'd Eurus and the Western Blast,
And first an angry glance on both he cast;
Then thus rebuk'd.
He spoke; and, while he spoke, he scotch'd the sea,
Dispell'd the darkness, and restored the day.
Cymothoe, Triton, and the sea-green train
Of beauteous nymphs, and daughters of the main,
Clear from the rocks the vessels with their hands;
The god himself with ready triident stands;
And opens the deep, and spreads the moving sands;
Then haves them off the shoals: where'er he guides
His levy comes, and in triumph rides:
The waves urulise, and the sea subsides.
So when the father of the flood appears,
And o'er the seas his sovereign trident rears,
Their fury fall: he strikes the liquid plains
High on his chariot; and, with ocean's reins,
Majestic moves along, and awful peace maintains.—Dryden.

Our God, Jehovah, sitteth upon the flood; yea, Jehovah sitteth King for ever.

The heathen god is drawn by his sea-horse, and assisted in his work by subaltern deities: Jehovah sits on the flood an everlasting Governor, rulling all things by his will, maintaining order, and dispensing strength and peace to His people. The description of the Roman poet is fine; that of the Hebrew poet majestic and sublime.

ANALYSIS OF THE TWENTY-NINTH PSALM.

There are two parts in this Psalm:—

I. The exhortation itself, ver. 1, 2.

II. The reasons on which it is founded. These are drawn,

1. From His power, ver. 3 to ver. 11.

2. From the protection He affords to His people, ver. 11.

I. The exhortation, which is singular. It proceeds from a king, and not from a common man; a prince, a great prince: and reminds princes and great men that there is One greater than they; and that, therefore, they should yield unto Him His due honour and worship.

1. That they freely yield and give it up: for which he is very earnest, as appears from the urged repetition, give, give, give.

2. That in giving this, they must understand they are giving Him no more than His due. Give him the honour due to his name.

3. What they are to give: glory and strength. 1. They must make His name to be glorious. 2. They must attribute their strength to Him.

4. That they bow before, and adore him.

5. That they exhibit this honour in the proper place. In his temple; and in the beauty of holiness.

II. And that they may be more easily persuaded to give the Lord the honour due to His name, He proposes two reasons to be considered:—

1. His power; for, although they be mighty ones, His power is infinitely beyond theirs; which is seen in His works of nature; but, omitting many others, He makes choice of the thunder, and the effects it produces.

1. From its nature: for, howsoever philosophers may assign it to natural causes, yet religious men will look higher; and, when they hear those fearful noises in the air, will confess with the Psalmist, that it is the voice of the Lord, which he repeats here seven times; and this voice has afflicted the stoutest hearted sinners, and the mightiest of tyrants.

2. From the place where this voice is given. The voice of the Lord is upon the waters;—upon many waters.

3. From the force and power. They are not vain and empty noises, but strike a terror. The voice of the Lord is powerful; the voice of the Lord is full of majesty.

4. From the effects; which he explains by an induction. 1. Upon the strong trees, the cedars of Lebanon. The voice of the Lord breaks the cedars, &c.

2. Upon the firmest mountains, even Lebanon and Sirion; for sometimes the thunder is accompanied with an earthquake, and the mountains skip like a calf.

3. Upon the air; which is, to common minds, no small wonder; for, as nothing is more contrary to fire than water, it is next to miraculous how, out of a watery cloud, such flames of fire should be darted. The voice of the Lord divideth the flames of fire.

4. In the brute creation; for it makes them fear and leave their caves, dens, and woods; yea, makes some of them cast their young. The voice of the Lord shaketh the wilderness, &c. it maketh the hinds to calve.

5. In the mighty rains which follow upon it; when the cataracts of heaven are opened, and such floods of water follow that a man might fear that the earth was about to be overwhelmed by a second inundation. Out of all which he draws this conclusion:—The Lord sitteth upon the flood; the Lord sitteth a king for ever; therefore, the earth is not destroyed.

2. His second reason is drawn from the works of grace. 1. When he moves men to acknowledge His voice, and to give Him glory in His temple. In his temple doth every man speak of his honour. 2. By the security He gives to His people, even in the time when He utters his voice, and speaks in thunder; whereas the wicked then tremble and quake. The Lord will give strength unto his people; the Lord will bless his people with peace, i. e. bodily security, and peace of conscience.

PSALM XXX.

The Psalmist returns thanks to God for deliverance from great danger, 1-3. He calls upon the saints to give thanks to God at the remembrance of His holiness, because of His readiness to save, 4, 5. He relates how his mind stood affected before this great trial, and how even an unexpected change took place, 6, 7. Mergions how, and in what terms, he prayed for mercy, 8-10. Shows how God heard and delivered him, and the effect it had upon his mind, 11, 12.

VI. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

A Psalm and Song at the dedication of the house of David.

I WILL extol thee, O LORD; in that thou hast lifted me up, and hast not made my foes to rejoice over me.

2 O LORD my God, I cried unto thee, and thou hast healed me.

3 O LORD, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave: thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit.

NOTES ON PSALM XXX.

This Psalm or Song is said to have been made or used at the dedication of the house of David; or, rather, the dedication of a house or temple; for the word David refers not to דָּוִד ha-beith, the house; but to the term דָּוִד מִצִּיּוֹר, a Psalm. But what temple or house could this be? Some say, the temple built by Solomon; others refer it to the dedication of the second temple under Zerubabel; and some think it intended for the dedication of a third temple, which is to be built in the days of the Messiah. There are others who confine it to the dedication of the house which David built for himself on Mount Zion, after he had taken Jerusalem from the Jebusites; or to the purgation and re-dedication of his own house, that had been defiled by the wicked conduct of his own son Absalom. Calmel supposes it to have been made by David on the dedication of the place which he built on the threshing floor of Araunah, after the grievous plague which had so nearly desolated the kingdom, 2 Sam. xxiv. 25, &c. 1 Chron. xxi. 26. All the parts of the Psalm agree to this; and they agree to this so well, and to no other hypothesis, that I feel myself justified in modelling the comment on this principle alone.

Verse 1. I will extol thee—for thou hast lifted me up] I will lift Thee up, for Thou hast lifted me up. Thou hast made be blessed, and I will make Thee glorious. Thou hast magnified me in Thy mercy; and I will shew forth Thy praise, and speak good of Thy name.

I have made some remarks on this Psalm in the Introduction.

In the Psalm we find seven different states of mind distinctly marked:—

1. It is implied, in the first verse, that David had been in great distress, and nearly overwhelmed by his enemies.

2. He extols God for having lifted him up, and having preserved him from the cruelty of his adversaries, ver. 1-3.

3. He is brought into great prosperity, trusts in what he had received, and forgets to depend wholly on the Lord, ver. 4-6.

4. The Lord hides His face from him, and he is brought into great distress, ver. 7.

5. He feels his loss, and makes earnest prayer and supplication, ver. 8-10.

6. He is restored to the Divine favour, and filled with joy, ver. 11.

7. He purposes to glory in God alone; and to trust in Him for ever, ver. 12.

As it is impossible for any man to have passed through all these states at the same time; it is supposed that the Psalm, like many others of the same complexion, has been formed out of the memoranda of a diary. See this point illustrated in the Introduction, pages 121, and 122.

Thou hast lifted me up] Out of the pit into which I had fallen: the vain curiosity, and want of trust in God, that induced me to number the people. Bishop Horsley translates, because thou hast depressed me. I thank God for my humiliation and afflictions, because they have been the means of teaching me lessons of great profit and importance.

Verse 2. Thou hast healed me.] Thou hast removed the plague from my people by which they were perishing in thousands before my eyes.

Verse 3. Thou hast brought up my soul from the grave] I and my people were both about to be cut off; but Thou hast spared us in mercy, and given us a most glorious respite.

5 For his anger endureth but a moment: in his favour is life; weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.

6 And in my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.

7 LORD, by thy favour thou hast made my mountain to stand strong: thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled.

8 I cried to thee, O LORD; and unto the LORD I made supplication.

9 What profit is there in my blood, when I go down to the pit? Shall the dust praise thee? shall it declare thy truth?

10 Hear, O LORD, and have mercy upon me: LORD, be thou my helper.

11 Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing: thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness;

1 Heb. there is but a moment in his anger.—m. Ps. 63. 3.—n. Heb. in the evening. o. Ps. 126. 5.—p. Heb. singing.—q. Job 29. 18.—r. Heb. settled strength for my mountain.—s. Ps. 104. 23.—t. Verse 4. Sing unto the LORD, O ye saints of his] Ye priests who wait upon Him in His sanctuary, and whose business it is to offer prayers and sacrifices for the people, magnify Him for the mercy He has now shewed in staying this most destructive plague.

Give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness. Be ye holy, saith the Lord; for I am holy. He who can give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness is one who loves holiness;—who hates sin; who longs to be saved from it; and takes encouragement at the recollection of God's holiness, as he sees in this the holy nature which he is to share, and the perfection which he is here to attain. But most who call themselves Christians hate the doctrine of holiness; never hear it inculcated without pain; and the principal part of their studies, and those of their pastors, is to find out with how little holiness they can rationally expect to enter into the kingdom of God. O fatal and soul-destroying delusion! How long will a holy God suffer such abominable doctrines to pollute His church, and destroy the souls of men!

Verse 5. For his anger endureth but a moment] There is an elegant abruptness in these words, in the Hebrew Text. This is the literal translation:—For a moment, in his anger. Lives in his favour. In the evening weeping may lodge: but in the morning exultation. So good is God, that he cannot delight in either the depression or ruin of His creatures. When He afflicts, it is for our advantage, that we may be partakers of His holiness, and be not condemned with the world. If He be angry with us, it is but for a moment;—but when we have recourse to Him, and seek His face, His favour is soon obtained; and there are lives in that favour—the life that now is, and the life that is to come. When weeping comes, it is only to lodge for the evening; but singing will surely come in the morning. The description of God's slowness to anger, and readiness to save, is given by a man long and deeply acquainted with God as his Judge, and as his Father.

Verse 6. In my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.] Peace and prosperity had seduced the heart of David; and led him to suppose that his mountain, his dominion, stood so strong, that adversity could never affect him. He wished to know the physical and political strength of his kingdom; and, forgetting to depend upon God, he desired Joab to make a census of the people, which God punished in the manner related in 2 Sam. xxiv. and which he in this place appears to acknowledge.

Verse 7. Thou didst hide thy face] Thou didst shew Thyself displeased with me for my pride and forgetfulness of Thee; and then I found how vainly I had trusted in the arm of flesh.

Verse 8. I cried to thee, O LORD] I found no help but in Him against whom I had sinned. See his confession and prayer, 2 Sam. xxiv. 17.

Made supplication] Continued to urge my suit, was instant in prayer.

Verse 9. What profit is there in my blood] My being cut off will not magnify Thy mercy. Let not the sword, therefore, come against me. If spared and pardoned, I will declare Thy truth;—I will tell to all men what a merciful and gracious Lord I have found. Hear, therefore, O Lord, ver. 10.

Verse 11. Thou hast turned—my mourning into dancing.] Rather, into piping. I have not prayed in vain. Though I deserved to be cut off from the land of the living, yet Thou hast spared me, and the remnant of my people. Thou hast taken away my sackcloth, the emblem of my 12 To the end that my glory may sing praise to thee, and not be silent. O Lord my God, I will give thanks unto thee for ever.

PSALM XXXI.

The Psalmist, with strong confidence in God, in a time of distress, prays earnestly for deliverance, 1-5. He expresses his abhorrence of evil, 6. Gratefully mentions former interpositions of God, 7, 8. And continues to detail the miseries of his case, 9-13. Points out the privileges of them that fear God, 14, 15. Shows that God had heard his prayers, notwithstanding he had given himself over for lost, 21, 22. Calls on the saints to love God, and to have confidence in Him, because He preserves the faithful, and plentifully rewards the proud doer, 23, 24.

4 Pull me out of the net that they have laid privily for me: for thou art my strength.

distress and misery; and girded me with gladness, when Thou didst say to the destroying angel, when he stood over Jerusalem ready to destroy it, It is enough, stay now thy hand, 2 Sam. xxiv. 16.

Verse 12. To the end that my glory may sing] The word כבוד, which we here translate glory, is sometimes taken to signify the liver. Here it is supposed to mean the tongue;—why not the heart?—But does not David mean by his glory the state of exaltation and honour to which God had raised him, and in which he had before too much trusted; forgetting that he held it in a state of dependence on God? Now he was disciplined into a better sentiment. My glory before had sung praise to myself;—as it I had rested;—on it I had presumed; and, intoxicated with my success, I sent Joab to number the people. Now my glory shall be employed for another purpose: it shall give thanks to God, and never be silent. I shall confess to all the world that all the good, the greatness, the honour, the wealth, prosperity, and excellence, I possess, came from God alone; and, that I hold them on His mere good pleasure. It is so; therefore, O Lord my God, I will give thanks unto thee for ever.

The old Psalter translates and paraphrases the last verse thus:—That my joy sung til the, and if he night stanged: Lord my God withouten ende I sal scheyf til the. The dede and the sorrow of our syn God turns in til joy of remission; and schere away our sekk—[drives away our distress] and umgyfs [surrounds] when we dye, with gladnes. That sutt joy sung til hym, that has gyfen us that joy: for we be no more stanged [stung] with conscience of syn: na drede of dede or of dome; bot withouten ende we sal loue [praise] him. Na tunge may telle na herte may mynk the mykelnes of joy that es in louing [praising] of hym in gast, and in sothfastnes. i. e. spirit and truth.

ANALYSIS OF THE THIRTIETH PSALM.

There are two parts in this Psalm:—

I. The giving of thanks for delivery from a great danger, 1, 2, 3.

II. An exhortation to others to follow his example, and thus acknowledge God's merciful dealings with them, ver. 4-12.

I. He begins with thanksgiving. I will extol thee, O Lord; and adds the causes.

1. Thou hast lifted me up;—as one out of a deep dark pit.

2. Thou hast not made my foes to triumph over me;—but rather turned their mirth into sadness.

3. Thou hast healed me;—both in body and mind.

4. Thou hast brought up my soul from the grave;—restored me to life, when apparently condemned to death.

5. He earnestly sought these blessings. O Lord my God, I cried unto thee, and thou didst for me all that I have mentioned.

II. After having given thanks, he calls on the saints to acknowledge and celebrate the goodness of God to him and to others. Sing unto the Lord, &c. And, to induce them to do this, he gives the instance in himself; that God was angry with him, but soon appeased.

1. He was angry, but His anger endured but a moment: but life, and a continuance of it, are from His favour.

2. And justly angry he was for his sin and carnal confidence. In my prosperity I said, I shall never be moved.

3. The effect of his anger was,—He hid his face, and I was troubled.

This is the example that he sets before the saints, that they be not secure when the world goes well with them; but they have experience of God's displeasure, as he had.

Next, he shews the means he used to avert God's wrath; and this he proposeth as a pattern for all to follow in like cases.

1. He betook himself to prayer. 2. He sets down the form he used.

1. He that is ill sends for the physician:—so did I.

This was the fruit of my chastisement;—I cried unto Thee, O Lord, and unto the Lord I made supplication.

2. And the form he used was this:—I earnestly pleaded with God, thus:—1. What profit is there in my blood when I go down to the pit? 2. Shall the dust praise thee, shall it declare thy truth? 3. Can a dead man please Thee, or canst thou make good thy promises to the dead? 4. And he concluded with, Hear, O Lord, and have mercy upon me; O Lord, be thou my helper.

3. He shews the effect of his prayer. Thou hast turned my mourning into dancing; Thou hast put off my sackcloth, and girded me with gladness.

4. For what end God did this;—That my glory may sing praises to thee, and not be silent. O Lord my God, I will give thanks to thee for ever.

Now, O ye saints, 1. Ye see my case;—2. Ye see what course I took;—3. You see the effect;—4. You see the end why God was so good to me,—that I should praise Him. To you who are in my state, I propose my example. Be-take yourselves to God in your necessities, and, having obtained deliverance by earnest faith and prayer, remember to return praise to God for his ineffable goodness.

NOTES ON PSALM XXXI.

This Psalm contains no notes of time or place to help us to ascertain when, where, or on what account, it was written. Nor have we any certain evidence relative to the author: it might have been written by David, during his persecution by Saul. Some think Jeremiah to have been the author:—the thirteenth verse begins exactly with the same words as Jeremiah xx. 10. There are several other apparent references to passages in the Book of Jeremiah, which shall be produced in the Notes.

Verse 1. In thee, O Lord, do I put my trust] I confide in Thee for every good I need: let me not be confounded by not receiving the end of my faith, the supply of my wants, and the salvation of my soul.

Verse 2. Bow down thine ear] Listen to my complaint. Put Thy ear to my lips, that Thou mayest hear all that my feebleness is capable of uttering. We generally put our ear near to the lips of the sick and dying, that we hear what they say. To this the Text alludes.

Strong rock] Rocks, rocky places, or caves in the rocks, were often strong places in the land of Judea. To such natural fortifications allusions are repeatedly made by the Hebrew poetic writers.

Verse 4. Pull me out of the net] They have hemmed me in on every side; and I cannot escape but by miracle.

Verse 5. Into thine hand I commit my spirit] These words, as they stand in the Vulgate, were in the highest credit among our ancestors; by whom they were used in all dangers, difficulties, and in the article of death. In manus tuas, Domine, commendo spiritum meum was used by the sick when about to expire, if they were sensible; and if not, the priest said it in their behalf. In forms of prayer for sick and dying persons these words were frequently inserted in Latin, though all the rest of the prayer was English; for it was supposed there was something sovereign in the language itself. But let not the abuse of such words hinder their usefulness. For an ejaculation nothing can be better; and when the pious, or tempted, with confidence use them, nothing can exceed their effect. Into thy hands I commend my spirit, for thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth. I give my soul to Thee, for it is thine: Thou hast redeemed it by Thy blood; it is safe nowhere but in Thy hand. Thou hast promised to save them that trust in thee; Thou art the God of truth, and canst not deny Thyself. But these words are particularly sanctified, or set apart for this purpose, by the use made of them by our blessed Lord just before He expired on the cross. And when Jesus had cried with a loud voice, he said, Πατερ, εις χειρας σου παρατιθημι το πνευμα μου, Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit, Luke xxiii. 46. The rest of the verse was not suitable to the Saviour of the world, and therefore He

7 I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy: for thou hast considered my trouble; thou hast known my soul in adversities;

8 And hast not shut me up into the hand of the enemy: thou hast set my foot in a large room.

9 Have mercy upon me, O LORD, for I am in trouble: mine eye is consumed with grief, yea, my soul and my belly.

10 For my life is spent with grief, and my years with sighing: my strength faileth because of mine iniquity, and my bones are consumed.

11 I was a reproach among all mine enemies, but especially among my neighbours, and a fear to mine acquaintance: they that did see me without fled from me.

12 I am forgotten as a dead man out of mind: I am like a broken vessel.

13 For I have heard the slander of many: fear was on every side: while they took counsel together against me, they devised to take away my life.

14 But I trusted in thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my God.

15 My times are in thy hand: deliver me from the hand of mine enemies, and from them that persecute me.

16 Make thy face to shine upon thy servant: save me for thy mercies' sake.

17 Let me not be ashamed, O LORD: for I have called upon thee: let the wicked be ashamed, and let them be silent in the grave.

18 Let the lying lips be put to silence; which speak grievous things proudly and contemptuously against the righteous.

19 Oh how great is thy goodness, which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee; which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men!

20 Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man: thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues.

21 Blessed be the LORD: for he hath shewed me his marvellous kindness in a strong city.

omits it: but it is suitable to us, who have been redeemed by that sacrificial death. St. Stephen uses nearly the same words, and they were the last that he uttered. Acts vii. 58.

Verse 6. I have hated them] That is, I have abominated their ways. Kolaters are the persons of whom David speaks.

I trust in the Lord.] While they trust in vanities, vain things; for an idol is nothing in the world; and in lying vanities, for as such is promised and nothing given; I trust in Jehovah, who is God All-sufficient, and is my Shepherd, and therefore I shall lack no good thing.

Verse 7. Thou hast known my soul in adversities] When all foresook me,—when none could help me;—when I could not save my own life;—when my enemies were sure that I could not escape; then I found Thee to be my Friend and Supporter. When friend, so called, finds it convenient not to know his friend when in affliction and poverty; then Thou didst acknowledge me as thine own, all worthless as I was. Human friendships may fail: but the Friend of sinners never fails. Cicero defines a real friend:—Amicus certus, in re incertis certior: "A friend in need is a friend indeed." Reader, such a Friend is the Lord.

Verse 8. Thou hast set my foot in a large room] Many hair-breadth escapes David had for his life; at that time especially, when, playing before Saul, the furious king took a spear, and endeavoured to pierce him through the body: but he escaped and got to the deserts. Here, God, who had saved his life, set his feet in a large room. The seventh and eighth verses speak of what God had done previously for him.

Verse 9. Mine eye is consumed] He now returns, and speaks of his present situation. Grief had brought many tears from his eyes; many agonies into his soul; and many distressful feelings into his whole frame.

My soul and my belly] The belly is often taken for the whole body. But the term belly, or bowels, in such a case as this, may be the most proper; for in distress and misery, the bowels, being the most tender part, and, in fact, the very seat of compassion, they are often most affected. In Greek, the word ενσπλχνος signifies a bowel; and ενσπλχνιζμαι signifies to be moved with compassion,—to feel misery in the bowels at the sight of a person in pain and distress.

Verse 10. My life is spent with grief] My life is a life of suffering and distress; and by grief my days are shortened. Grief disturbs the functions of life, prevents the due concoction of the food, injures the digestive organs, destroys appetite, impairs the nervous system, relaxes the muscles, induces morbid action in the animal economy, and hastens death. These effects are well expressed in the verse itself.

My years with sighing] נחח anachah. This is a mere natural expression of grief; the very sounds which proceed from a distressed mind;—an-ach-ah! common, with little variation, to all nations, and nearly the same in all languages. The och-och-on of the Irish is precisely the same sound, and the same sense. Thousands of beauties of this kind are to be found in the sacred language.

Verse 11. I was a reproach] When proscibed at the court of Saul, my enemies triumphed, and loaded me with execrations; my neighbours considered me as a dangerous man, now deservedly driven from society; my acquaintance, who knew me best, were afraid to hold any communication with me; and they who saw me in my exile, avoided me, as if affected with a contagious disorder.

Verse 12. I am forgotten as a dead man] I am considered as a person adjudged to death. I am like a broken vessel; like a thing totally useless.

Verse 13. I have heard the slander of many] To this and the two foregoing verses the Reader may find several parallels, Jer. xviii. 13, to the end of chap. xix. and ten first verses of chap. xx. This has caused several to suppose that Jeremiah was the author of this Psalm.

Verse 14. But I trusted in thee] Hitherto Thou hast been my Helper, and Thou art my God; I have taken Thee for my eternal Portion.

Verse 15. My times are in thy hand] The events of my life are under Thy control. No danger can happen to me without Thy foresight: Thou seest what is prepared for, or meditated against me; Thou canst, therefore, deliver me from mine enemies.

Verse 16. Make thy face to shine upon thy servant] Only let me know that Thou art reconciled to, and pleased with me; and then, come what will, all must be well.

Save me for thy mercies' sake] Literally, save me in thy mercy.

Verse 17. Let the wicked be ashamed] Those who traduce my character, and lay snares for my life;—let them be confounded.

Verse 18. Let the lying lips be put to silence] As to my enemies, persecutors, and slanderers,—abate their pride, assuage their malice, and confound their devices. See Jer. xviii. 18.

Verse 19. Oh, how great is thy goodness] God's goodness is infinite;—there is enough for all,—enough for each, enough for evermore. It is laid up where neither devils nor men can reach it; and it is laid up for them that fear the Lord; therefore, every one who trembles at His word, may expect all he needs from this Fountain that can never be dried up.

Which thou hast wrought] Thou hast already prepared it; it is the work of Thy own hands; Thou hast provided it and proportioned it to the necessities of men; and all who trust in Thee shall have it. And for them especially it is prepared, who trust in thee before men; who boldly confess Thee amidst a crooked and perverse generation.

Verse 20. Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence] נסתר בסתר de-secter paneyea, "With the covering of Thy countenance." Their life shall be so hidden with Christ in God, that their enemies shall not be able to find them out. To such a hiding place Satan himself dare not approach. There, the pride of man cannot come.

Thou shalt hide them secretly in a pavilion] Thou shalt put them in the innermost part of Thy tent. This implies that they shall have much communion and union with God; that they shall be transformed into His likeness, and have His highest approbation.

Verse 21. In a strong city.] If the Psalm was written by David, this must refer to his taking refuge with Achish, the king of Gath, who gave him Ziklag, a fortified city, to secure himself and followers in. See 1 Sam. xxviii. 6. This is more likely than that it was Keilah, where he only had intimation of the traitorous design of the inhabitants to deliver him up to Saul; so that the place was no refuge to him, howsoever fortified. Perhaps the passage may 22 For I said in my haste, "I am cut off from before thine eyes: nevertheless thou hearest the voice of my supplications when I cried unto thee.

23 O love the LORD, all ye his saints: for the mean that, under the protection of God, he was as safe as if he had been in a fortified city.

Verse 22. I said in my haste] Not duly adverting to the promise of God, I was led to conclude that my enemies were so strong, so numerous, and had so many advantages against me, that I must necessarily fall into, and by their hands: however, I continued to pray, and Thou didst hear the voice of my supplication.

Verse 23. O love the LORD, all ye his saints] It is only the saints that can love God; as they only are made partakers of the Divine nature. Holy spirits can love God, who is the fountain of their holiness; and the saints should love him.

Preserveth the faithful] Those who, being filled with the love of God, bring forth the fruits of that love;—universal obedience to the will of God: for to such persons, His commands are not grievous,—their duty is their delight; while a man is faithful to the grace he has received, that is, uses and improves the talents with which God has entrusted him, God's service is perfect freedom.

The proud doer.] The man of the proud heart, haughty and supercilious carriage, and insulting and outrageous conduct. A proud man is peculiarly odious in the sight of God;—and, in the sight of reason, how absurd! A sinner, a fallen spirit,—an heir of wretchedness and corruption!—proud!—proud!—proud! Of an indwelling devil! Well;—such persons shall be plentifully rewarded. They shall get their due, their whole due, and nothing but their due.

Verse 24. Be of good courage and he shall strengthen your heart] In I Cor. xvi. 13, St. Paul says, Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong; Γρηγοριου, στανετε εν τη πιστει, αυθιςισοθε, κραινοσθε. The latter words he seems to have borrowed from the Septuagint, who translate Be of good courage, and he shall strengthen your heart, by αυθιςισοθε και κραινοσθε η καρδια υμων,—act like men, and your hearts shall be strengthened.

They that hope in God, and are endeavouring to walk carefully before Him, may take courage at all times, and expect the fullness of the blessing of the Gospel of peace.

ANALYSIS OF THE THIRTY-FIRST PSALM.

This Psalm is composed and mixed of divers affections: for David sometimes prays, sometimes gives thanks;—now he complains, now he hopes;—at one time fears, at another exults. This vicissitude of affections is six-fold, and it may very well divide the Psalm.

I. With great confidence he prays to God, ver. 1—6.

II. He exults for mercy and help received, ver. 7, 8.

III. He grievously complains of the misery he was in, ver. 9—14.

IV. He prays again, upon the strength of God's goodness, ver. 15—18.

V. He admires, exults in, and proclaims, God's goodness, ver. 19—22.

VI. He exhorts others to love God, and be courageous, ver. 23, 24.

I. In the six first verses he prays to God, and shows his reasons:—

1. That he be never shamed in his hope. Let me never be ashamed.

2. That he be delivered, speedily delivered.

3. That God would be his rock, and a house of defence, to save him.

4. That God would lead and guide him. Lead me, and guide me.

5. That God would pull his feet out of the net which they had laid for him.

The reasons on which he founds his prayer and expectations:—

1. His faith and confidence. In thee, O Lord, I put my trust.

2. The reason of his faith. Thou art my rock and fortress.

3. His deliverance would be to the honour of God. For thy name's sake.

4. Thou art my strength; exert it in my behalf.

5. I rely upon Thee. Into thy hands I commit my spirit.

6. I expect Thee to do for me as Thou hast ever done. Thou hast redeemed me.

7. I rely on Thee alone; I seek no vain helps. I have hated them that regard lying vanities: but I trust in the Lord.

LORD preserveth the faithful, and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer.

24 Be of good courage, and he shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the LORD.

1 Sam. 24. 9.—Psa. 27. 14.

His petition, and his reasons are, in effect, the same, his confidence in God to be his Deliverer, Fortress, Rock Redeemer, &c.

II. He exults for mercy and help already received; and, by the experience of that, doubts the less in this. I will be glad and rejoice in thy mercy: and his reason follows from his experience. 1. For thou hast considered my trouble. 2. Thou hast known my soul in adversity. 3. Thou hast not shut me up in the hand of the enemy. 4. But hast set my feet in a large room.

III. He prays; and grievously complains of what he suffered within and without.

1. He prays. Have mercy upon me, O Lord!
2. Then he complains; and his complaint shows the reason of his prayer.

1. Within, at home, he was in a distressed case. I am in trouble; my eye is consumed with grief; my years with sighing; my strength faileth; my bones are consumed.

2. Without. I have no comfort either from friends or enemies.

1. I was a reproach among all my enemies.

2. My friends stand afar off. I was a reproach; especially, among my neighbours;—a fear to my acquaintance. They that did see me without, fled from me.

3. He shows the greatness of his grief, and the scorn he endured. I am forgotten as a dead man;—I am as a broken vessel, vile and useless.

4. I am mocked by the people. I have heard the slander of many.

5. And the consequence was mischievous. 1. Fear is on every side. 2. While they conspired, or took counsel against me. 3. And their counsel was, to take away my life. What could my enemies do more, or my friends permit?

IV. After his complaint he comforts himself with his chief reason, the goodness of God. I have trusted in Thee, O Lord, and said, Thou art my God. Let them conspire, take counsel, and devise what they can; yet I know, except Thou permit them, they are not able to do it. My times are in thy hand; not in theirs.

He then begins to pray again; and his prayer consists of three parts:—1. Deprecation. 2. Supplication. 3. Imprecation.

1. A Deprecation. Deliver me from the hand of my enemies, &c.

2. A supplication. Make thy face to shine upon thy servant; save me;—let me not be ashamed, for I have called upon thee.

3. An imprecation. 1. Let the wicked be ashamed, and be silent in the grave. 2. Let the lying lips be put to silence, which speak grievous things, &c.

In this imprecation four arguments are used to enforce it:—

1. The quality of their persons. They are wicked impious men.

2. There is no truth in them. They have lying lips.

1. Their words are false. 2. Their actions are worse. They speak grievous things, and that against the righteous. 3. But their intention is worst of all; for they do it proudly, contemptuously, disdainfully, despitefully: all proceeding from a bad heart.

V. In the fifth part, he sets out the abundant goodness of the Lord to His people; and exclaims, in holy rapture, O how great is thy goodness which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee,—which thou hast wrought for them that trust in thee before the sons of men!

This goodness of God is always treasured up, and to be had at all times. But, observe,—1. It is laid up for none nor wrought for any one, but them that fear the Lord. 2. And for those who put their trust in him; and acknowledge Him, His cause, His people, and His cross, before the sons of men. And the acts of His goodness are here specified:—

1. Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy presence from the pride of man.

2. Thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues. Upon which consideration he breaks out into praise. 1. Blessed be the Lord, for he hath showed me his marvellous kindness. 2. He corrects his error, and former mistake: I said in my haste, rashly, imprudently, I am cut off from before thine eyes; nevertheless thou hearest the voice of my supplication.

VI. The last part is an exhortation to the saints,—

A Psalm of David, Maschil.

BLESSED is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.

2. That they be of good courage;—for then he shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord. They were not to despair, but keep their hearts firmly fixed in the profession of the truth; which would be a seal of their hope.

NOTES ON PSALM XXXII.

The title of this Psalm is significant, לדוד מסכיל le david maschil, A Psalm of David giving instruction, an instructive Psalm; so called, by way of eminence, because it is calculated to give the highest instruction relative to the guilt of sin, and the blessedness of pardon and holiness, or justification and sanctification. It is supposed to have been made after David's transgression with Bathsheba, previously to his having obtained pardon. The Syriac entitles it, "A Psalm of David, concerning the sin of Adam, who dared and transgressed; and a prophecy concerning Christ, because through Him we are to be delivered from hell." The Arabic says, "David spoke this Psalm prophetically concerning the redemption." The Vulgate, Septuagint, and Ethiopic, are the same in meaning as the Hebrew.

Verse 1. Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven] In this and the following verse four evils are mentioned:—

1. Transgression, שׁוּא פֶשַׁע. 2. Sin, רֵשָׁעוֹת חַטָּאתָא. 3. Iniquity, מַעֲוֹן אֲוֹן. 4. Guile, רֵמִיָּה remiyah. The first signifies the passing over a boundary; doing what is prohibited. The second signifies the missing of a mark, not doing what was commanded: but is often taken to express sinfulness; or sin in the nature, producing transgression in the life. The third signifies, what is turned out of its proper course or situation;—any thing morally distorted or perverted. Iniquity, what is contrary to equity or justice. The fourth signifies, fraud, deceit, guile, &c. To remove these evils, three acts are mentioned:—forgiving,—covering,—and not imputing.

1. TRANSGRESSION שׁוּא פֶשַׁע, must be forgiven, נָשַׁוּ נֵשִׁי, borne away, i. e. by a vicarious sacrifice; for bearing sin, or bearing away sin, always implies this. 2. SIN, רֵשָׁעוֹת חַטָּאתָא must be covered, נָכַס kesus hidden from the sight. It is odious and abominable, and must be put out of sight. 3. INQUIRY, מַעֲוֹן אֲוֹן, what is perverse or distorted, must not be imputed, לֹא יִרְשָׁעוּ lo yacheshob, must not be reckoned to his account. 4. GUILE, רֵמִיָּה remiyah, must be annihilated from the soul. In whose spirit there is no guile. The man whose transgression is forgiven;—whose sin is hidden, God having cast it as a millstone into the depths of the sea; whose iniquity and perversion is not reckoned to his account;—and whose guile, the deceitful and desperately wicked heart, is annihilated, being emptied of sin, and filled with righteousness; is necessarily a happy man.

The old Psalter translates these two verses thus:—Blissful quous like me er for given, and quous spines es lypta (covered). Blissful man fil quam Lord reties (reckoned) might Son: ne na treson es in Ms gast. (spirit.) In vain does any man look for or expect happiness while the power of sin remains, the guile is unpardoned, and the impurity not purged away. To the person, who has got 6 For this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee in a time when thou mayest be found: surely in the floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him.

7 Thou art my hiding place; thou shalt preserve me from trouble; thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance. Selah.

8 I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye.

9 Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding: whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto thee.

10 Many sorrows shall be to the wicked: but he that trusteth in the Lord, mercy shall compass him about.

11 Be glad in the Lord, and rejoice ye righteous: and shout for joy, all ye that are upright in heart.

such blessings, we may say as the Psalmist said, וְשׁוּ אֲשֶׁרֶי, O the blessedness of that man! whose transgression is forgiven, &c.

St. Paul quotes this passage Rom. iv. 6, 7., to illustrate the doctrine of justification by faith; where, see the Notes.

Verse 3. When I kept silence] Before I humbled myself, and confessed my sin, my soul was under the deepest horror. I roared all the day long; and felt the hand of God heavy upon my soul.

Verse 5. I acknowledge my sin] When this confession was made thoroughly and sincerely, and I ceased to cover and extenuate my offence, then Thou didst forgive the iniquity of my sin. I felt the hardness of heart,—I felt the deep distress of soul. I felt power to confess and abhor my sin;—I felt confidence in the mercy of the Lord; and I felt the forgiveness of the iniquity of my sin.

Selah] This is all true; I know it; I felt it. I feel it.

Verse 6. For this shall every one that is godly] Because Thou art merciful;—because Thou hast shewn mercy to all who have truly turned to Thee, and believed in Thee;—every one who fears Thee, and hears of this, shall pray unto thee in an acceptable time, when thou mayest be found; in a time of finding. When the heart is softened, and the conscience alarmed, that is a time of finding. God is ever ready; men are not so. Who can pray with a hard heart, and a dark mind? While you feel relenting, pray.

Surely in the floods] In violent trials, afflictions, and temptations, when the rains descend, the wind blows, and the floods beat against that godly man, who prays to, and trusts in God; they shall not come nigh him, so as to weaken his confidence, or destroy his soul. His house is founded on a rock.

Verse 7. Thou art my hiding place] An allusion, probably, to the city of refuge. Thou shalt preserve me from trouble. The avenger of blood shall not be able to overtake me. And, being encompassed with an impregnable wall, I shall feel myself encompassed with songs of deliverance; I shall know that I am safe.

Verse 8. I will instruct thee] These are probably the Lord's words to David. Seeing thou art now sensible of the mercy thou hast received from me, and art purposing to live to my glory, I will give thee all the assistance requisite. I will become thy instructor; and will teach thee, in all occurrences, the way thou shouldst go. I will keep mine eye upon thee, and thou shalt keep thine eye upon me: as I go, Thou must follow me; and I will continually watch for thy good.

Verse 9. Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule] They will only act by force and constraint;—be not like them,—give a willing service to your Maker. They have no understanding;—you have a rational soul, made to be guided and influenced by reason. The service of your God is a reasonable service; act, therefore, as a rational being. The horse and the mule are turned with difficulty; they must be constrained with bit and bridle. Do not be like them; do not oblige your Maker to have continual recourse to afflictions, trials, and severe dispensations of Providence, to keep you in the way, or recover you after you have gone out of it.

Verse 10. Many sorrows shall be to the wicked] Every wicked man is a miserable man. God has wadded sin and misery as strongly as He has holiness and happiness. God hath joined them together: none can put them asunder.

PSALMS.

PSALM XXXIII.

The Lord is praised for His works of creation, 1-3. And for the stability of His own dominion, 10, 11. The blessedness of the people who have the knowledge of the true God, His grace, and providence, 12-15. The reality of all earthly dependance, 16-17. The happiness of them that fear God, and trust in His mercy, 18-25.

REJOICE in the LORD, O ye righteous: for His praise is comely for the upright.

2 Praise the LORD with harp: sing unto him with the psaltery and an instrument of ten strings.

3 Sing unto him a new song; play skillfully with a loud noise.

But he that trusteth in the LORD] Such a person is both safe and happy.

Verse 1. Be glad—and rejoice] Let every righteous soul rejoice,—and glory;—but let it be in the LORD. Man was made for happiness; but his happiness must be founded on holiness; and holiness, as it comes from God, must be retained by continual union with him. Probably this verse belongs to the next Psalm; and was originally its first verse.

ANALYSIS OF THE THIRTY-SECOND PSALM.

This Psalm is doctrinal; and shews the happiness of the man whose sin is pardoned, and he restored to the favour and image of God. It is called maschil, or instruction; and the reason of this is shewn at the eighth verse. I will instruct thee, and teach thee. In it we have instruction, especially on these three points, which divide the Psalm:—

I. The happy state of a justified person, ver. 1, 2.

II. The unhappy condition of that man who is not assured that he is justified and reconciled to God, ver. 3, 4. And the way is prescribed how to gain this assurance, ver. 5.

III. A lesson given for obedience after a man is brought into that state, 8, 9.

I. The prophet first instructs us in what justification consists:—

1. It is a free remission, a covering of sin; a non-imputation of iniquities. 2. In what state a person must be in order to obtain it. He must be honest, sincere, and upright in heart,—deeply penitent, feeling the guilt of sin, and acknowledging its enormity. He must avoid guile or deceit; and not excuse, palliate, or extenuate his sin, but confess it.

II. This he proves by his own experience: he hid his sin; he confessed it not; and was, in consequence, miserable.

1. I held my peace, I confessed not. I did not ask pardon. When I kept silence, &c.

2. I was wounded with the sting of a guilty conscience: fears, horrors, troubles of soul, came upon me. My bones ceased old through my roaring.

3. And then he shews the way he took to regain happiness; it was a contrary course to that above: he concealed his sin no longer. 1. I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity I have not hidden. 2. I said I will confess my transgressions to the Lord.

Of which the effects were various:

1. Upon himself. He recovered his happiness in being justified. Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin.

2. On the whole church. For this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee.

3. Comfort in extremities, and safety in the greatest danger. Surely in the floods of great waters, in an inundation of calamities, they (the troubles) shall not come nigh him who depends upon God's goodness and mercy, and is reconciled to Him. And he shews the reason from his own experience. God was his Protector. 1. Thou art my hiding place: thou shalt preserve me from trouble. 2. Thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance.

III. And now David sets down the duty of a justified person; that he is, after his pardon, obedient to God; and that not out of compulsion, but freely and willingly. In order to this, God condescends to be his Instructor.

1. I will instruct;—give thee general council.

2. I will guide thee with mine eye. A good servant needs no stripes; he will observe nutum, the nod, or nictum heri, the master's wink. As my eye is always over you, carefully to instruct; so be you as ready to observe it.

3. Be not like beasts:—the horse, headlong;—the mule, headstrong; whose mouths must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they fling, kick, hurt, or kill thee. Constrained obedience is for a beast; free and voluntary obedience for a man.

4. Besides, to quicken your obedience, I will teach you two reasons. 1. From inconvenience and loss. Many errors shall be to the wicked: their griefs, troubles, and punishments, are many and grievous. Be not, therefore, disobedient like the wicked. 2. From the gain. Your obedience shall be rewarded, and that amply. He that

4 For the word of the LORD is right; and all his works are done in truth.

5 He loveth righteousness and judgment: the earth is full of the goodness of the LORD.

6 By the word of the LORD were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of His mouth.

7 He gathereth the waters of the sea together as an heap: he layeth up the depth in storehouses.

v. Ps. 11. 7. & 45. 7.—J. Ps. 118. 64.—Cr. mercy.—Gen. 1. 6, 7. Job. 11. 2. 2 Pet. 3. 5.—1 Gen. 2. 1.—2 Job 22. 12.—Gen. 1. 8. Job 22. 16. & 32. 6.

trusteth in the LORD, mercy shall compass him round about. It shall be like the girdle with which he is girdled. God will be present with him in his troubles. He shall perceive that he is in favour with God, that his sins are pardoned, and that he is an heir of eternal life.

Upon which he concludes with this exhortation:—Be glad in the LORD, and rejoice, ye righteous; and shout for joy, all ye that are upright in heart. For this rejoicing there is great cause; for this doctrine of free remission of sin can alone quiet a guilty conscience. And this pardon can only be obtained by faith in Christ Jesus.

NOTES ON PSALM XXXIII.

This Psalm has no title in the Hebrew: and it is probable was written on no particular occasion: but was intended as a hymn of praise in order to celebrate the power, wisdom, and mercy, of God. Creation and providence are its principal subjects; and these lead the Psalmist to glance at different parts of the ancient Jewish history. In eight of Kennicott's MSS. this Psalm is written as a part of the preceding.

Verse 1. Rejoice in the LORD] It is very likely that the last verse of the preceding Psalm was formerly the first verse of this. As this Psalm has no title, the verse was the more easily separated. In the preceding Psalm we have an account of the happiness of the justified man: in this, such are taught how to glorify God, and to praise Him for the great things He had done for them.

Praise is comely for the upright] It is right they should give thanks to Him, who is the Fountain whence they have received all the good they possess; and thankfulness becomes the lips of the upright.

Verse 2. Praise the LORD with harp] כנן kinnor; probably something like our harp: but Calmet thinks it the ancient testudo, or lyre with three strings.

The psaltery] נבל nebel. Our translation seems to make a third instrument in this place, by rendering אשור אשור, an instrument of ten strings; whereas they should both be joined together, for אשור נבל be-nebel-ashor signifies the nebel, or nabla, with ten strings, or holes. Calmet supposes this to have resembled our harp. In one of Kennicott's MSS. this Psalm begins with the second verse.

Verse 3. Sing unto him a new song] Do not wear out the old forms: fresh mercies call for new songs of praise and gratitude.

Play skillfully with a loud noise.] Let sense and sound accompany each other: let the style of the music be suited to the words. This skill is possessed by few singers. They can make a loud noise, but they cannot adapt sound to sense.

Verse 4. The word of the LORD is right] He is infinitely wise, and can make no mistakes; and all His works are done in truth. All the words, laws, promises, and threatenings of God, are perfectly true and just. The dispensations of His providence and mercy are equally so. When He rewards or punishes, it is according to truth and justice.

Verse 5. He loveth righteousness] What He delights in Himself He loves to see in His followers.

The earth is full of the goodness of the LORD.] To hear its worthless inhabitants complain, one would think that God dispensed evil, and not good. To examine the operation of His hand, every thing is marked with mercy; and there is no place where His goodness does not appear. The overflowing kindness of God fills the earth. Even the iniquities of men are rarely a bar to His goodness: He causes His sun to rise on the evil and the good: and sends His rain upon the just and the unjust.

Verse 6. By the word of the LORD were the heavens made] This is illustrated in the 9th verse,—He spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast. This evidently refers to the account of the creation, as it stands in the first chapter of Genesis.

Verse 7. He gathereth the waters of the sea together] He separated the water from the earth; and, while the latter was collected into continents, islands, mountains, hills, and valleys,—the former was collected into one place, and called seas; and by His all-controlling power

PSALM XXXIII.

8 Let all the earth fear the LORD: let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him.

9 For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast.

10 The LORD bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought: he maketh the devices of the people of none effect.

11 The counsel of the LORD standeth for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations.

12 Blessed is the nation whose God is the LORD: and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance.

13 The LORD looketh from heaven; he be- holdeth all the sons of men.

14 From the place of his habitation he looketh upon all the inhabitants of the earth.

15 He fashioneth their hearts alike, he con- sidereth all their works.

16 There is no king saved by the multitude of an host: a mighty man is not delivered by much strength.

17 A horse is a vain thing for safety: neither shall he deliver any by his great strength.

18 Behold the eye of the LORD is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy;

19 To deliver their soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine.

20 Our soul waiteth for the LORD: he is our help and our shield.

21 For our heart shall rejoice in him, be- cause we have trusted in his holy name.

22 Let thy mercy, O LORD, be upon us, ac- cording as we hope in thee.

and providence the waters have been retained in their place, so that they have not returned to drown the earth: and He has so adapted the solar and lunar influence exerted on the waters, that the tides are only raised to certain heights, so that they cannot overflow the shores, nor become dissipated in the atmospheric regions. In this one economy there is a whole circle of science. The quantity of matter in the sun, in the moon, and in the earth, are all adjusted to each other in this astonishing provision: the course of the moon, and the diurnal and annual revolutions of the earth, are all concerned here; and so concerned, that it requires some of the nicest of the Newtonian calculations to ascertain the laws by which the whole is effected.

Verse 8. Let all the earth fear the LORD] He who has thus bound, can unloose; He who has created, can destroy. He has promised life and prosperity only to the godly; let the ungodly stand in awe of Him.

Verse 10. The counsel of the heathen to nought] This appears to be similar to what is mentioned in the second Psalm;—the useless attempts of the Gentiles to prevent the extension of the kingdom of Christ in the earth: and it may refer to similar attempts of ungodly nations or men to prevent the promulgation of the Gospel, and the universal dissemination of truth in the world.

Verse 11. The counsel of the LORD] What He has determined shall be done. He determined to make a world, and He made it;—to create man, and He created him. He determined that at a certain period God should be manifested in the flesh, and it was so;—that He should taste death for every man, and He did so;—that His Gospel should be preached in all the world; and, behold, it has already nearly overrun the whole earth. All His other counsels and thoughts, which refer to the future, shall be accomplished in their times.

Verse 12. Blessed is the nation] O how happy is that nation which has יהוה Jehovah for its אלהים Elohim:—the self-existent and eternal Lord for its covenant God;—One who should unite Himself to it by connexions and ties the most powerful and endearing. The word אלהים Elohim, which we translate God, refers to that economy in which God is manifested in the flesh.

The people whom he hath chosen] The Jews, who were elected to be His heritage; whom He preserved as such for two thousand years; and whom He has reprobated because of their unbelief and rebellion, and elected the Gentiles in their place.

Verse 13. The Lord looketh from heaven] This and the following verse seem to refer to God's providence. He sees all that is done in the earth; and His eye is on all the children of men.

Verse 15. He fashioneth their hearts alike] He forms their hearts in unity. He has formed them alike: they are all the works of His hands; and He has formed them with the same powers, faculties, passions, &c.—body and spirit having the same essential properties in every human being.

Verse 16. There is no king saved by the multitude of an host] Even in the midst of the most powerful and numerous army no king is in safety, unless he have God's protection. A king is but a man, and may as easily lose his life as one of his common soldiers.

A mighty man is not delivered by much strength.] There are times in which his might can be of no avail to him: and unless the mighty, the wise, the honourable, &c. have the protection of God, there is no time in which their might may not be turned into weakness, their wisdom into folly, and their dignity into disgrace.

Verse 17. A horse is a vain thing for safety] Even the horse, with all his fleetness, is no sure means of escape from danger: the lion or the tiger can overtake him; or he may stumble, fall, and destroy his rider.

Verse 18. Behold, the eye of the Lord] Though all the above are unavailing, yet here is one thing that can never fail: the eye of the Lord, the watchful providence of the Most High, is upon them that fear him; upon them that hope in his mercy.

Verse 19. To deliver their soul (their life,) from death] To watch over and protect them in all sudden dangers and emergencies, so that they shall not lose their lives by any accident.

And to keep them alive in famine.] Not only prevent sudden death by an instantaneous interposition of my power; but keep them from a lingering death, by extraordinary supplies granted them in an extraordinary manner: because I am all in all, and all every where.

Verse 20. Our soul waiteth] Our whole life is employed in this blessed work;—we trust in nothing but Him;—neither in multitudes of armed men;—nor in natural strength;—nor in the fleetest animals;—nor in any thing human. We trust in Him alone who is our help and our shield.

Verse 21. For our heart shall rejoice in him] Here is the fruit of our confidence: our souls are always happy, because we have taken God for our Portion.

Verse 22. Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us] We cannot abide in this state unless upheld by Thee: and, as we disclaim all merit, we seek for the continuance of Thy mercy; and this we cannot expect but in a continual dependence on Thee. Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us, according as we hope in thee.

ANALYSIS OF THE THIRTY-THIRD PSALM.

This Psalm is eucharistic: the contents are,—

- I. An exhortation to praise God, ver. 1, 2, 3.
- II. The arguments he uses to enforce the duty, 4—19.
- III. The confidence of God's people in His name. Their happiness, and petition, 20—22.

I. In the three first verses he exhorts men to praise God;—but who?

1. The upright;—those who are not upright cannot praise God.

2. That it be done with zeal and affection; with singing, with voice, and the instruments then in use;—with some new song composed on the occasion, for some new mercy: and that the whole be skilfully expressed.

II. This he urges on several good grounds:—

1. The first argument, in general drawn from the truth, the faithfulness, the justice, and goodness, of God;—1. For the word of the Lord is right. 2. All his works are done in truth. 3. He loveth righteousness and judgment. 4. The earth is full of his goodness.

2. His second argument is drawn from God's power in the creation of all things, and that by his word alone, ver. 6, 7, 9; and upon it introduces,—Let all the earth fear the Lord; let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him.

3. His third argument is drawn from God's providence in governing the world, which may easily be discerned by those who will diligently consider His ways and proceedings both to other people and to His church.

1. He makes void all enterprises undertaken against His will; not only of single men, but of whole nations. The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought; he maketh the devices of the people of none effect.

2. Whereas, on the contrary, what He hath decreed shall be done. The counsel of the Lord stands for ever;

PSALM XXXIV.

David praises God, and exhorts others to do the same, 1-5. Shows how he sought the Lord, and how He was found of him, 4-6. All are exhorted to taste and see the goodness of God; with the assurance of support and comfort, 7-10. Shows the way to attain happiness and long life, 11-14. The privileges of the righteous, and of all who sincerely seek God, 17-32.

A Psalm of David, when he changed his behaviour before Abimelech; who drove him away, and he departed.

I WILL bless the LORD at all times: his praise shall continually be in my mouth.

My soul shall make her boast in the LORD: the humble shall hear thereof, and be glad.

the thoughts of his heart to all generations. On the consideration of which he breaks out into this epiphonema, or joyous reflection:—Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord! and the people whom he hath chosen for his inheritance!

After which he returns to his discourse on God's providence, and by a hypotyposis, or splendid imagery, amplifies his former argument. For he sets God before us as some great king in his throne, providing for all the parts of his empire, examining all causes, and doing justice to every one.

1. The Lord looks from heaven, and beholds all the sons of men.

2. From the place of his habitation he looks upon all the inhabitants of the earth.

3. And He is not an idle Spectator;—He sees and considers their hearts and their works.

And He sees in what they put their confidence—in their armies, their strength, their horse, but not in Him. But all in vain;—for there is no king saved by the multitude of a host. A mighty man is not delivered by much strength. A horse is a vain thing for safety. Multitude, strength, &c. without God, are useless.

Hitherto he had given a proof of God's providence towards all men; but now he descends to a particular proof of it, by His care over His church, which he wonderfully guides, defends, and protects, in all dangers and assaults: and, that notice may be taken of it, he begins with Behold!

1. Behold, the eye of the Lord (His tenderest care) is over them that fear him, upon them that hope in His mercy.

2. To deliver their soul from death, and keep them alive in famine.

III. The three last verses contain the acclamation of God's people, who place all their hope and trust in Him; for, being stimulated by the former arguments, they do three things:—

1. They profess and express their faith and dependance on God. Our soul waiteth on God, he is our help and our shield.

2. They declare the hope by which they are upheld; and how comforted. For our heart shall rejoice in him, because we have trusted in his holy name.

3. Upon this hope they commend themselves by prayer to God. Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us, according as we hope in thee.

NOTES ON PSALM XXXIV.

The title states that this is "A Psalm of David, when he changed his behaviour before Abimelech; who drove him away, and he departed." The history of this transaction may be found in 1 Sam. xxi. on which Chapter see the Notes. But Abimelech is not the person there mentioned; it was Achish, king of Gath, called here Abimelech, because that was a common name of the Philistine kings. Neither MS. nor Version reads Achish in this place: and all the Versions agree in the title as it stands in our Version, except the Syriac, which states it to be "A Psalm of David, when he went to the house of the Lord, that he might give the first-fruits to the priests."

Of the occasion of this Psalm, as stated here, I have given my opinion in the Notes on 1 Sam. xxi. to which I have nothing to add. On the whole, I prefer the view taken of it by the Septuagint, which intimates that "David fell into an epileptic fit; that he frothed at the mouth, fell against the door-posts, and gave such unequivocal evidences of being subject to epileptic fits, and that during the time his intellect became so much impaired, that Achish Abimelech dismissed him from his court." This saves the character of David; and, if it cannot be vindicated in this way, then let it fall under reproach as to this thing; for hypocrisy, deceit, and falsehood, can never be right in the sight of God, whatever men may ingeniously say to excuse them.

This is the second of the acrostic, or alphabetical Psalms; each verse beginning with a consecutive letter

3 O magnify the LORD with me, and let us exalt his name together.

4 I sought the LORD, and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears.

5 They looked unto him, and were lightened: and their faces were not ashamed.

6 This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles.

7 The angel of the LORD encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.

8 O taste and see that the LORD is good: blessed is the man that trusteth in him.

1 Or. They looked unto him.—2 Psa. 3. 4.—1 Ver. 17, 19. 2 Sam. 22. 1.—3 Dan. 6. 22. Job. 1. 16.—4 See Gen. 22. 1, 2. 3 Kings 6. 17. 2 Cor. 3. 3.—5 1 Pet. 2. 2. & Psa. 2. 12.

of the Hebrew alphabet. But in this Psalm some derangement has taken place. The verse which begins with וָשׂוּ, and which should come in between the fifth and sixth, is totally wanting: and the twenty-second verse is entirely out of the series; it is, however, my opinion that this verse, (the twenty-second) which now begins with שׂוּ, וְפָדָה, or with וְפָדָה, as more than a hundred of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. read it, thus making וְפָדָה, AND WILL REDEEM; and this reads admirably in the above connexion. I shall here place the verses at one view, and the Reader shall judge for himself:—

Ver. 5. They looked unto him, and were enlightened: and their faces were not ashamed.

Ver. 22. And the Lord will redeem the soul of his servants: and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate.

Ver. 6. This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles.

Ver. 7. The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.

Thus we find the connexion complete, with the above emendation.

Verse 1. I will bless the LORD at all times] He has laid me under endless obligations to Him, and I will praise Him while I have a being.

Verse 2. My soul shall make her boast] Shall set itself to praise the LORD; shall consider this its chief work.

The humble] וְעַבְדֵי אֲנָוִים, the afflicted, such as David had been.

Verse 3. Magnify the LORD with me] וְשִׁבְחֵנוּ לִישׁוּבֵנוּ gadetes laishobah; make greatness to Jehovah; shew His greatness; and let us exalt his name, let us shew how high and glorious it is.

Verse 4. I sought the LORD] This is the reason and cause of his gratitude. I sought the Lord, and He heard me, and delivered me out of all my fears. This answers to the history; for, when David heard what the servants of Achish said concerning him, he laid up the words in his heart, and was greatly afraid, 1 Sam. xxi. 13. To save him, God caused the epileptic fit to seize him; and, in consequence, he was dismissed by Achish, as one whose defection from his master, and union with the Philistines, could be of no use; and thus David's life and honour were preserved. The Reader will see that I proceed on the ground laid down by the Septuagint. See before, verse 1.

Verse 5. They looked unto him] Instead of וְשִׁבְחוּ הִבִּיטוּ, they looked, several of Dr. Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. have וְשִׁבְחוּ הִבִּיטוּ, with the point patha, "Look ye."

And their faces were not ashamed.] Some MSS., and the Complutensian Polyglott, make this clause the beginning of a new verse: and as it begins with a וּ, וְעֵינֵיהֶם upeneyhem, AND their faces, they make it supply the place of the verse which appears to be lost: but see what is said in the Introduction before the first verse.

Verse 6. This poor man cried] וְעַבְדֵי אֲנָוִים, "This afflicted man," David.

Verse 7. The angel of the Lord encampeth round] I should rather consider this angel in the light of a watchman going round his circuit, and having for the objects of his especial care, such as fear the Lord.

Verse 8. O taste and see that the Lord is good] Apply to Him by faith and prayer; plead His promises, He will fulfil them; and you shall know, in consequence, that the Lord is good. God has put it in the power of every man to know whether the religion of the Bible be true or false. The promises relative to enjoyments in this life are the grand tests of Divine revelation. These must be fulfilled to all them who, with deep repentance and true faith, turn unto the Lord; if the revelation which contains them be of God. Let any man, in this spirit, approach his Maker, and plead the promises that are suited to his case; and he will soon know whether the doctrine be of God. He shall taste, and then see, that the Lord is good, and that the man is blessed who trusts in him. This is what is called experimental religion; the living operative knowledge that a true believer has that he is passed from death unto life; that his sins are forgiven him for Christ's sake, the Spirit Himself bearing witness with his spirit that he is a child of God. And, as long as he is faithful, he carries about with him the testimony of the Holy Ghost; and he knows that he is of God, by the Spirit which He has given him.

Verse 3. There is no want to them that fear him.] He who truly fears God loves Him; and he who loves God obeys Him; and to him who fears, loves, and obeys God, there can be no want of things essential to his happiness, whether spiritual or temporal, for this life, or for that which is to come. This verse is wanting in the Syriac.

Verse 10. The young lions do lack] Instead of כְּבִישֵׁי הַבְּרִיָּה kabirim, the young lions, one of Kennicott's MSS. has כְּבִישֵׁי הַבְּרִיָּה kabirim, powerful men. The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, Syriac, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon, have the same reading. Houbigant approves of this; and, indeed, the sense and connexion seem to require it. My old Psalter reads,—The hye had nete; and that hunger: but sctans' lack, sal noight be lesed of alle gode. That is, says the paraphrase, with outen lesing that sal have God; that is alle gode; for in God, is al gode.

Verse 11. Come, ye children] All ye that are of a humble teachable spirit.

I will teach you the fear of the LORD.] I shall introduce the translation and paraphrase from my old Psalter; and the rather, because I believe there is a reference to that very improper and unholty method, of teaching youth the system of heathen mythology before they are taught one sound lesson of true divinity; till, at last, their minds are imbued with heathenism; and the vicious conduct of gods, goddesses, and heroes, here very properly called tyrants, becomes the model of their own; and they are as heathenish without, as they are heathenish within.

These Cumms sones hers me: bred of Lorde & sal you lere.

Par. Cumms, with trauch and luf: sons, qwam I gette in haly lere: hers me. With erf of bert. & sal lere you, noight the fabyls of poetes; na the storys of tyrants: bot the dred of our Lorde, that wyl bryng you til the felagheschippe of aungels; and thar in is lyte.—I need not paraphrase this paraphrase, as it is plain enough.

Verse 12. What man is he that desireth life] He who wishes to live long, and to live happily, let him act according to the following directions. For a comment upon this, and the four ensuing verses, see the Notes on 1 Peter iii. 10—12.

Verse 17. The righteous cry] There is no word in the present Hebrew Text for righteous: but all the Versions preserve it. I suppose it was lost through its similitude to the word קָוָה teaku, they cry; קָוָה קָוָה teaku teakakim, the righteous cry.

Verse 18. A broken heart] לֵב נִשְׁבָּר nishiv rey leb, the heart broken to shivers.

A contrite spirit.] דַּקְּקֵי רֹאשׁ dakkey ruach, the beaten-out spirit. In both words the hammer is necessarily implied: in breaking to pieces the ore first, and then plating out the metal, when it has been separated from the ore. This will call to the reader's remembrance Jer. xxiii. 29. Is not my word like as a fire, saith the Lord? And like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces? The breaking to shivers, and beating out, are metaphorical expressions: so are the hammer and the rock. What the large hammer, struck on a rock by a powerful hand, would do; so does the word of the Lord, when struck on the sinner's heart by the power of the Holy Spirit. The broken heart, and the contrite spirit, are two essential characteristics of true repentance.

Verse 19. Many are the afflictions of the righteous] No commander would do justice to a brave and skilful soldier, by refusing him opportunities to put his skill and bravery to proof by combating with the adversary;—or by preventing him from taking the post of danger, when necessity required it. The righteous are God's soldiers. He suffers them to be tried, and sometimes to enter into the hottest of the battle; and, in their victory, the power and influence of the grace of God are shewn, as well as their faithfulness.

Delivereth him out of them all.] He may well combat heartily, who knows that if he fight in the Lord, he shall necessarily be the conqueror.

Verse 20. He keepeth all his bones] He takes care of his life; and, if he have scars, they are honourable ones.

Verse 21. Evil shall slay the wicked] The very thing in which they delight shall become their bane and their ruin. They that hate the righteous] All persecutors of God's people shall be followed by the chilling blast of God's displeasure in this world; and, if they repent not, shall perish everlastingly.

Verse 22. The LORD redeemeth] Both the life and soul of God's followers are ever in danger, but God is continually redeeming both.

Shall be desolate.] Literally, shall be guilty. They shall be preserved from sin, and neither forfeit life nor soul. This verse probably should come in after the 5th. See the Introduction to this Psalm.

ANALYSIS OF THE THIRTY-FOURTH PSALM:

This Psalm is composed with great art, and this must be attended to by those who would analyse it. The scope of it is to praise God, and to instruct in His fear. Its parts are, in general, the following:—

I. He praises God himself, and calls upon others to follow his example, 1—8.

II. He assumes the office of a teacher, and instructs both young and old in the fear of the Lord, 9—22:

- 1. He praises God, and expresses himself thus:—1. I will bless the Lord. 2. His praise shall be in my mouth.
- 3. It shall be in my mouth continually. 4. It shall be expressed by a tongue, affected by the heart. My soul shall make her boast in the Lord. 5. And so long would he continue it till others should be moved to do the like. The humble shall hear thereof, and be glad.

2. Upon which he calls upon others to join with him: O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together. And, to encourage them, he proposes his own example. I sought the Lord, &c. Should it be said, this was a singular mercy shewn to David which others are not to expect; he in effect replies, No: a mercy it is; but it belongs to all that seek God. They looked unto him, &c. But this did not satisfy, and therefore they rejoin, This poor man (David) cried, and the Lord heard him; but David was in the Divine favour, and the Lord saved him out of all his troubles. To which he may be supposed to reply by this general maxim: The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him; and he they who they may, if they fear God, this is their privilege. It is not mine exclusively.

II. Now he assumes the chair of the teacher; and the lessons are two:—

- 1. That they make a trial of God's goodness. O taste and see that the Lord is good.
 - 2. That they become his servants. O fear ye the Lord,—for there is no want, &c.
- And this he illustrates by a comparison,—The young

PSALM XXXV.

The Psalmist, in great straits, prays for his personal safety, 1-3. And for the confusion of his enemies, 4-5. Expresses his confidence in God, 9, 10. Mentions his kindness to those who had rewarded him evil for his good, 11-13. Appeals to God against them, 17-23. Prays for those who befriended him, and praises God for his goodness, 27, 28.

VII DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

A Psalm of David.

PLEAD my cause, O LORD, with them that strive with me: fight against them that fight against me.

2 Take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for mine help.

3 Draw out also the spear, and stop the way against them that persecute me: say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.

4 Let them be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul; let them be turned back and brought to confusion that devise my hurt.

Hone (or, the rich and the powerful,) may lack and suffer hunger: but they that seek the Lord shall not.

These promises and blessings belong only to them that fear the Lord; and least some should imagine they had this fear, and were entitled to the promise, who had not this fear, he shews them what this fear is.

He calls an assembly, and thus addresses them:—Come, ye children, and hearken unto me; and I will teach you the fear of the Lord. That fear of the Lord which, if a man be desirous of life, and to see many days, shall satisfy him: and, if he be ambitious to see good, the peace of a quiet soul, and a good conscience, shall lodge with him.

1. Let him be sure to take care of his tongue. Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips that they speak no guile.

2. Let him act according to justice. Depart from evil.

3. Let him be charitable,—ready to do good works. Do good.

4. Let him be peaceable. Seek peace, and ensue it.

These are the characters of those that fear the Lord, and seek him: and these shall want no manner of thing that is good.

It might be objected, the righteous are exposed to afflictions, &c. and ungodly men have power and prosperity. To which it may be answered, afflictions do not make the godly miserable; nor does prosperity make the wicked happy. As to the righteous, they are always objects of God's merciful regards:—1. For the eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous; and his ears open to their prayers. 2. But the face of the Lord is against those who do evil, &c.

These points he illustrates,—

1. The righteous cry, and the Lord heareth him, and delivereth them out of all their troubles: either, 1. By taking them from him; or, 2. By taking him from them.

2. The Lord is nigh to them that are of a broken heart, &c. Thus He comforts, confirms, and strengthens.

3. Although the afflictions of the righteous are many, yet the Lord delivers him out of them all,—makes him patient, constant, able, cheerful in all,—superior to all.

4. He keeps all his bones. He permits him to suffer no essential hurt.

But as to the ungodly, it is not so with them: the very root of their perdition is their malice; which they shew, 1. To God. 2. To good men.

1. Evil shall slay the wicked.

2. And they that hate the righteous shall be desolate.

And then David concludes the Psalm with this excellent sentiment. Though God may suffer His servants to come into trouble, yet He delivers them from it. For it belongs to redemption to free one from misery; for redeemed one cannot be who is under no hardship. This shall be done; says David. The Lord redeemeth the souls of his servants, and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate. The Lord redeems from trouble and afflictions, as well as from sin. He knows how to deliver the godly from temptation: and he knows how to preserve them in it.

NOTES ON PSALM XXXV.

There is nothing in the title worthy of remark. The Psalm is simply attributed to David, and was most probably of his composing; and refers to the time of his persecution by Saul and his courtiers. The Syriac says it was composed when the Idumeans attacked David. The Arabic says it is a prophecy concerning the incarnation; and concerning the things practised against Jeremiah by the people. Some think that our Lord's sufferings are particularly pointed out here; and Bishop Horsley thinks that verses 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, apply more literally and exactly to Christ than to any other whomsoever.

5 Let them be as chaff before the wind; and let the angel of the Lord chase them.

6 Let their way be dark and slippery: and let the angel of the Lord persecute them.

7 For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul.

8 Let destruction come upon him at unawares; and let his net that he hath hid catch himself: into that very destruction let him fall.

9 And my soul shall be joyful in the Lord: it shall rejoice in his salvation.

10 All my bones shall say, LORD, who is like unto thee, which deliverest the poor from him that is too strong for him, yea, the poor and the needy from him that spoileth him?

11 False witnesses did rise up; they laid to my charge things that I knew not.

Verse 1. Plead my cause, O LORD] Literally, Contend, Lord, with them that contend with me. The word is often used in a forensic or law sense.

Verse 2. Take hold of shield and buckler] Let them be discomfited in battle who are striving to destroy my life. It is by the shield and buckler of others, not any of his own, that God overthrows the enemies of His people. This is spoken merely after the manner of men.

Verse 3. Say unto my soul, I am thy salvation] Give me an assurance that Thou wilt defend both body and soul against my adversaries.

Verse 4. Let them be confounded] Let none of their projects or devices against me succeed. Blast all their designs.

The imprecations in these verses against enemies are all legitimate. They are not against the souls, or eternal welfare, of those sinners; but against their schemes and plans for destroying the life of an innocent man; and the holiest Christian may offer up such prayers against his adversaries. If a man aim a blow at another with the design to take away his life; and the blow would infallibly be mortal, if it took place; and the person about to be slain see that by breaking the arm of his adversary, he may prevent his own death, and thus save his enemy from actual murder; it is his duty to prevent this double evil by breaking the arm of the bloodthirsty man. It is on this principle that David prays against his adversaries in the eight first verses of this Psalm.

Verse 5. Let the angel of the Lord chase them] By angel we may either understand one of those spirits, whether good or bad, commonly thus denominated; or any thing used by God Himself as the instrument of their confusion.

Verse 6. Let their way be dark] Let them lose their way, be entangled in morasses and thickets, and be confounded in all their attempts to injure me. All these phrases are military; and relate to ambushes, hidden snares, forced marches in order to surprise, and stratagems of different kinds.

Verse 7. For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit] The word new shachath, a pit, belongs to the second member of this verse; and the whole should be read thus:—For without a cause they have hidden for me their net, without a cause they have digged a pit for my life. They have used every degree and species of cunning and deceit to ruin me.

Verse 8. Let his net that he hath hid] See the Notes on Psalm vii. 15 and 16.

Verse 9. My soul] My life, thus saved,—Shall be joyful in the Lord] I am so circumstanced at present as to be in the utmost danger of being destroyed by my foes; if I escape, it must be by the strong arm of the Lord; and to him shall the glory be given.

Verse 10. All my bones shall say] My life being preserved, all the members of my body shall magnify Thy saving mercy.

Deliverest the poor] This is a general maxim; God is peculiarly mindful of the poor. Where secular advantages are withheld, there is the more need for spiritual help. God considers this, and His kind providence works accordingly.

Verse 11. False witnesses did rise up] There is no doubt that several of this kind were found to depose against the life of David; and we know that the wicked Jews employed such against the life of Christ. See Matt. xxvi. 59, 60.

They laid to my charge things that I knew not] They produced the most unfounded charges;—things of which I had never before heard.

12 They rewarded me evil for good to the spoiling of my soul.

13 But as for me, when they were sick, my clothing was sackcloth: I humbled my soul with fasting; and my prayer returned into mine own bosom.

14 I behaved myself as though he had been my friend or brother; I bowed down heavily, as one that mourneth for his mother.

15 But in mine adversity they rejoiced, and gathered themselves together: yea the abjects gathered themselves together against me, and I knew it not; they did tear me, and ceased not:

16 With hypocritical mockers in feasts, they gashed upon me with their teeth.

17 Lord how long wilt thou look on? rescue my soul from their destructions, my darling from the lions.

18 I will give thee thanks in the great congregation: I will praise thee among much people.

19 Let not them that are mine enemies wrongfully rejoice over me; neither let them wink with the eye that hate me without a cause.

20 For they speak not peace: but they devise deceitful matters against them that are quiet in the land.

21 Yea, they opened their mouth wide against me, and said, Aha, aha, our eye hath seen it.

22 This thou hast seen, O LORD: keep not silence: O LORD be not far from me.

23 Stir up thyself and awake to my judgment, even unto my cause, my God and my Lord.

24 Judge me, O LORD, my God, according to thy righteousness; and let them not rejoice over me.

25 Let them not say in their hearts, Aha, so would we have it: let them not say, We have swallowed him up.

26 Let them be ashamed and brought to confusion together that rejoice at mine hurt, let them be clothed with shame and dishonour that magnify themselves against me.

27 Let them shout for joy, and be glad, that favour my righteous cause: yea, let them say continually, Let the LORD be magnified, which hath pleasure in the prosperity of his servant.

28 And my tongue shall speak of thy righteousness, and of thy praise all the day long.

John 10, 22.— Heb. depriving.— Ps. 34, 28, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, 263, 264, 265, 266, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 278, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291, 292, 293, 294, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 309, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314, 315, 316, 317, 318, 319, 320, 321, 322, 323, 324, 325, 326, 327, 328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335, 336, 337, 338, 339, 340, 341, 342, 343, 344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 352, 353, 354, 355, 356, 357, 358, 359, 360, 361, 362, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 368, 369, 370, 371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 378, 379, 380, 381, 382, 383, 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 394, 395, 396, 397, 398, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 404, 405, 406, 407, 408, 409, 410, 411, 412, 413, 414, 415, 416, 417, 418, 419, 420, 421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 448, 449, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 455, 456, 457, 458, 459, 460, 461, 462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 478, 479, 480, 481, 482, 483, 484, 485, 486, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 493, 494, 495, 496, 497, 498, 499, 500, 501, 502, 503, 504, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510, 511, 512, 513, 514, 515, 516, 517, 518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528, 529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536, 537, 538, 539, 540, 541, 542, 543, 544, 545, 546, 547, 548, 549, 550, 551, 552, 553, 554, 555, 556, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 562, 563, 564, 565, 566, 567, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575, 576, 577, 578, 579, 580, 581, 582, 583, 584, 585, 586, 587, 588, 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 600, 601, 602, 603, 604, 605, 606, 607, 608, 609, 610, 611, 612, 613, 614, 615, 616, 617, 618, 619, 620, 621, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 627, 628, 629, 630, 631, 632, 633, 634, 635, 636, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 642, 643, 644, 645, 646, 647, 648, 649, 650, 651, 652, 653, 654, 655, 656, 657, 658, 659, 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, 665, 666, 667, 668, 669, 670, 671, 672, 673, 674, 675, 676, 677, 678, 679, 680, 681, 682, 683, 684, 685, 686, 687, 688, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 699, 700, 701, 702, 703, 704, 705, 706, 707, 708, 709, 710, 711, 712, 713, 714, 715, 716, 717, 718, 719, 720, 721, 722, 723, 724, 725, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 734, 735, 736, 737, 738, 739, 740, 741, 742, 743, 744, 745, 746, 747, 748, 749, 750, 751, 752, 753, 754, 755, 756, 757, 758, 759, 760, 761, 762, 763, 764, 765, 766, 767, 768, 769, 770, 771, 772, 773, 774, 775, 776, 777, 778, 779, 780, 781, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 792, 793, 794, 795, 796, 797, 798, 799, 800, 801, 802, 803, 804, 805, 806, 807, 808, 809, 810, 811, 812, 813, 814, 815, 816, 817, 818, 819, 820, 821, 822, 823, 824, 825, 826, 827, 828, 829, 830, 831, 832, 833, 834, 835, 836, 837, 838, 839, 840, 841, 842, 843, 844, 845, 846, 847, 848, 849, 850, 851, 852, 853, 854, 855, 856, 857, 858, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 887, 888, 889, 890, 891, 892, 893, 894, 895, 896, 897, 898, 899, 900, 901, 902, 903, 904, 905, 906, 907, 908, 909, 910, 911, 912, 913, 914, 915, 916, 917, 918, 919, 920, 921, 922, 923, 924, 925, 926, 927, 928, 929, 930, 931, 932, 933, 934, 935, 936, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941, 942, 943, 944, 945, 946, 947, 948, 949, 950, 951, 952, 953, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960, 961, 962, 963, 964, 965, 966, 967, 968, 969, 970, 971, 972, 973, 974, 975, 976, 977, 978, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 988, 989, 990, 991, 992, 993, 994, 995, 996, 997, 998, 999, 1000.]

Verse 12. To the spoiling of my soul.] To destroy my life: so was nephech, should be translated in a multitude of places, where our translators have used the word soul.

Verse 13. When they were sick.] This might refer to the case of Absalom, who was much beloved of his father; and for whose life and prosperity he no doubt often prayed, wept, and fasted.

My prayer returned into mine own bosom.] Though, from the wayward and profligate life they led, they did not profit by my prayers; yet God did not permit me to pray in vain. They were like alms given to the miserable for God's sake, who takes care to return to the merciful man tenfold into his bosom. The bosom is not only the place where the Asiatics carry their purses, but also where they carry any thing that is given to them.

Verse 14. Mourneest for his mother.] אב אבל ab-el em, as a mourning mother. How expressive is this word!

Verse 15. But in mine adversity they rejoiced.] How David was mocked and insulted in the case of Absalom's rebellion, by Shimei and others, is well known.

The abjects נקמim nekim, the smiters; probably hired assassins. They were every where lying in wait, to take away my life.

Verse 16. With hypocritical mockers in feasts.] These verses seem to be prophetic of the treatment of Christ. They did tear me, and I knew it not. They blindfolded and buffeted him;—they placed him in such circumstances as not to be able to discern who insulted him, except by a supernatural knowledge. With hypocritical mockers in feasts may also relate prophetically to our Lord's sufferings. Herod clothed him in a purple robe, put a reed in his hand for a sceptre, bowed the knee before him, and set him at nought. Here their hypocritical conduct, (pretending one thing while they meant another,) was manifest; and, possibly, this fell out at one of Herod's feasts.

Verse 17. My darling] יחידי yehidati,—my only one, Ps. xxii. 26. My unfled one:—or, He that is alone. Perhaps this may relate to Christ. See the note Ps. xxii. 20.

Verse 18. I will give thee thanks in the great congregation.] I hope to be able to attend at the tabernacle with Thy followers, and there publicly express my gratitude for the deliverance Thou hast given me.

Verse 19. That are mine enemies] Saul and his courtiers.

Verse 21. They opened their mouth wide] Gaped upon me to express their contempt.

And said, Aha, aha, our eye hath seen it.] They said אה אה, aha, the last syllable in each word being a protracted strongly guttural sound; marking insult and triumph at the same time. It is the same word which we translate Ah, ver. 25.

Verse 22. This thou hast seen.] I have no need to adduce evidences of these wrongs; Thou, to whom I appeal, hast seen them. Therefore,— Verse 23. Stir up thyself, and awake to my judgment] I have delivered my cause into Thy hand, and appeal to Thee as my Judge; and by Thy decision I am most willing to abide.

Verse 24. Judge me, O LORD my God] The manner of his appeal shews the strong confidence he had in his own innocence.

Verse 25. Swallowed him up] בלענוהו billenuhu, we have gulped him down.

Verse 26. Let them be ashamed] This may be a prophetic declaration against Saul and his courtiers. They were ashamed, confounded, clothed with shame, and dishonoured. All these took place in Saul's last battle with the Philistines, where he lost his crown and his life, and came to a most

PSALM XXXVI.

The miserable state of the wicked, 1-4. The excellence of God's mercy in itself, and to His followers, 5-8. He prays for the upright, 10. And for himself, that he may be saved from pride and violence, 11. Shows the end of the workers of iniquity, 12. To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, the servant of the Lord.

THE transgression of the wicked saith within my heart, that there is no fear of God before his eyes.

2 For he flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found to be hateful.

a Rom. 2. 13.—b Deut. 20. 19. Ps. 10. 2 & 69. 13.—4 Heb. 10. And his integrity to him.—d Ps. 12. 2.—e Jer. 4. 22.—f Prov. 4. 16. Mic. 2. 1.—g Or, vanity.—h Isa. 66. 2.

2. Ingratitude. They rewarded me evil for good. Good he did to them; for when they were afflicted, he fasted and prayed for them.

3. They were cruel to him. In my adversity they rejoiced.

4. They mocked him, and made him their cruel sport. The subjects gathered themselves together against me, &c.

5. And a conspiracy in all, ver. 20, 21.

Then he returns again to his petition; and expostulates with God, wondering that He should be so patient with them. Lord, how long wilt thou look on? Rescue my soul from destruction, &c.

And, to move God the sooner to do it, he repeats his former reason, ver. 9, engaging himself to be thankful. I will give thee thanks in the great congregation; I will praise thee among much people.

He continues his suit to the end of the Psalm; sometimes praying, at others imprecating.

1. He deprecates. Let not my enemies wrongfully rejoice over me; neither let them wink with the eye, &c. And that God may be the readier to hear him, and stay their joy and triumph, he subjoins these reasons. 1. For they speak not peace. 2. They devise deceitful matters against them that are quiet in the land. 3. They are impudent lying people. Yea, they opened their mouth wide against me, &c. This is a truth; this is not hidden from Thee. This thou hast seen, and from them to Thee I turn my eyes; and thus renew my prayer.

1. Keep not silence. Do not appear to neglect my cause; nor to let them pass on with impunity.

2. Stir up thyself, and awake to my judgment, &c. Defend me, and confound them.

3. Judge me according to thy righteousness, which suffers not the just to be always oppressed.

4. Let them not rejoice over me,—and in me, over the truth, and over a just cause.

5. Let them not say in their hearts, So would we have it, &c. 6. But rather let that befall them which I have prayed for. Let them be ashamed,—brought to confusion,—and clothed with shame and dishonour that magnify themselves against me.

III. In the conclusion he expresses his trust and confidence in God;—and intimates that if he be heard, then he and the whole church, and all good men, will rejoice with him.

1. To them he first directs his speech. Let them shout for joy that favour my righteous cause; yea, let them say continually, let the Lord be magnified which hath pleasure in the prosperity of his servant.

2. He then declares what effect this will have upon him in particular. My tongue shall speak of thy righteousness, and of thy praise all the day long.

NOTES ON PSALM XXXVI.

The title in the Hebrew is,—To the conqueror, to the servant of Jehovah, to David. The Syriac and Arabic suppose it to have been composed on occasion of Saul's persecution of David. Calmet supposes, on good grounds, that it was written during the Babylonish captivity. It is one of the finest Psalms in the whole collection.

Verse 1. The transgression of the wicked saith within my heart] It is difficult to make any sense of this line as it now stands. How can the transgression of the wicked speak within my heart? But instead of libbi, My heart, four of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS, have libbo, His heart. "The speech of transgression to the wicked is in the midst of his heart." "There is no fear of God before his eyes." It is not by example that such a person sins; the fountain that sends forth the impure streams is in his own heart. There, the spirit of transgression lives and reigns; and, as he has no knowledge of God, so he has no fear of God; therefore, there is no check to his wicked propensities: all come to full effect. Lust is conceived, and sin is brought forth vigorously, and transgression is multiplied. The reading above proposed, and which should be adopted, is supported by the Vulgate, Septuagint, Syriac, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. This latter reads the sentence thus:—Iryeb pe unright-pira bet he aglyce on hum rlyrum: nlyr eye zober

3 The words of his mouth are iniquity and deceit; he hath left off to be wise and to do good.

4 He deviseth mischief upon his bed; he setteth himself in a way that is not good; he abhorreth not evil.

5 Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens; and thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds.

6 Thy righteousness is like the great mountains; thy judgments are a great deep: O Lord, thou preservest man and beast.

1 Ps. 57. 10 & 109. 4.—2 Heb. the mountains of God.—3 Job 11. 8. Ps. 77. 19. Rom. 11. 33.—4 Job 7. 20. Ps. 145. 9. 1 Tim. 4. 10.

seponan egan hly; which I shall give as nearly as possible in the order of the original. Quoth the unrighteous, that he do guilt in him self: is not fear God's at fony eyes his. That is, The unrighteous man saith in himself that he will sin: God's fear is not before his eyes. The old Psalter, in language, as well as meaning, comes very near to the Anglo-Saxon.—The unrighteous saide that he tregpas in hym self: the drede of God es nocht before his ern. And thus it paraphrases the passage:—The unrighteous, that es the kynde, [the whole generation] of wyked men; saide [in him self], qwar man sees nocht; that he tregpas, that es, he synne at his wil, als [as if] God roght nocht [did not care] qwat he did; and so it es ense, that the drede of God es nocht by fore his ern; for if he dred God, he durst not so say."

I believe these versions give the true sense of the passage. The Psalmist here paints the true state of the Babylonians; they were idolaters of the grossest kind, and worked iniquity with greediness. The account we have in the book of Daniel of this people, exhibits them in the worst light; and profane history confirms the account. Bishop Horsley thinks that the word psahd, which we render transgression, signifies the apostate, or devil. The devil says to the wicked within his heart, there is no fear: i. e. no cause of fear:—God is not before his eyes. Placing the colon after fear, takes away all ambiguity in connexion with the reading, His heart, already contended for. The principle of transgression, sin in the heart, says, or suggests to every sinner, there is no cause for fear:—go on, do not fear, for there is no danger. He obeys this suggestion, goes on, and acts wickedly, as God is not before his eyes.

Verse 2. For he flattereth himself] He is ruled by the suggestion already mentioned; endeavours to persuade himself that he may safely follow the propensities of his own heart, until his iniquity be found to be hateful. He sins so boldly, that at last he becomes detestable. Some think the words should be thus understood:—"He smootheth over in his own eyes, with respect to the finding out of his iniquity, to hate it. That is, he sets such a false gloss in his own eyes upon his worst actions, that he never finds out the blackness of his iniquity; which, were it perceived by him, would be hateful even to himself." Bishop Horsley.

Verse 3. The words of his mouth are iniquity] In the principle;—and deceit, calculated to pervert others, and lead them astray.

He hath left off to be wise, and to do good.] His heart is become foolish, and his actions wicked. He has cut off the connexion between himself and all righteousness.

Verse 4. He deviseth mischief upon his bed] He seeks the silent and undisturbed watches of the night, in order to fix his plans of wickedness.

He setteth himself] Having laid his plans, he fixes his purpose to do what is bad; and he does it without any checks of conscience, or abhorrence of evil. He is bent only on mischief, and lost to all sense of God and goodness. A finished character of a perfect sinner.

Verse 5. Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens] That is, Thou art abundant, infinite in Thy mercy; else such transgressors must be immediately cut off: but Thy long-suffering is intended to lead them to repentance.

Thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds] shechakim, to the eternal regions; above all visible space. God's faithfulness binds Him to fulfil the promises and covenants made by His mercy. Blessings from the heavens,—from the clouds,—from the earth, are promised by God to His followers: and His faithfulness is in all those places, to distribute to His followers the mercies He has promised.

Verse 6. Thy righteousness is like the great mountains] ke-harrerey el, like the mountains of God; exceeding high mountains:—what, in the present language of geology, would be called primitive mountains,—those that were formed at the beginning; and are not the effects of earthquakes or inundations, as secondary and alluvial mountains are supposed to be.

Thy judgments are a great deep] tehom rabah, the great abyss; as incomprehensible as the great chaos, or first matter of all things which God created in the beginning, and which is mentioned Gen. i. 2, and darkness was on the face, וַיְהִי תְהוֹמִים, of the deep, the vast profound, or what is below all conjecturable profundity. How astonishing are the thoughts in these two verses! what an idea do they give us of the mercy, truth, righteousness, and judgments, of God!

The old Psalter, in paraphrasing mountains of God, says צִיּוֹן רַחֲמָנִים, that is, righteousmen, or earnest hills of God; for that is hee in contemplation, and soer reasayes the lyght of Crist. Here is a metaphor taken from the tops of mountains and high hills first catching the rays of the rising sun. "Righteous men are spiritual hills of God; for they are high in contemplation, and soer receive the light of Christ." It is really a very fine thought; and much beyond the rudeness of the times in which this psalter was written.

Thou preservest man and beast. Doth God take care of cattle? Yes, He appoints the lions their food, and hears the cry of the young ravens;—and will He not provide for the poor; and especially for the poor of His people? He will. So infinitely and intensely good is the nature of God, that it is His delight to make all His creatures happy. He preserves the man, and He preserves the beast: and it is His providence which supplies the man, when his propensities and actions level him with the beasts that perish.

Verse 7. How excellent is thy loving-kindness. He asks the question in the way of admiration; but expects no answer from angels or men. It is indescribably excellent, abundant, and free; and, therefore, the children of Adam put their trust under the shadow of thy wings. They trust in Thy good providence for the supply of their bodies; they trust in Thy mercy for the salvation of their souls. These, speaking after the figure, are the two wings of the Divine goodness, under which the children of men take refuge. The allusion may be to the wings of the cherubim, above the mercy-seat.

Verse 8. They shall be abundantly satisfied. יִשְׂבְּעוּ יָבֵרִים, they shall be saturated, as a thirsty field is by showers from heaven. Inebriabuntur, they shall be inebriated. Vulgate. Etiam sibi beati sunt de plenitudine domus. Old Psalter. This refers to the joyous expectation they had of being restored to their own land, and to the ordinances of the temple.

Of the river of thy pleasures. נַחַל חַיִּים nachal chajim, or נַחַל עֵדֵנָה, as in four MSS., the river of thy Eden. (They shall be restored to their paradisaical estate; for here is a reference to the river that ran through the garden of Eden, and watered it, Gen. ii. 10. Or, the temple, and under it the Christian church, may be compared to this Eden; and the gracious influences of God, to be had in His ordinances, to the streams by which that garden was watered, and its fertility promoted.)

Verse 9. For with thee is the fountain of life. This, in Scripture phrase, may signify a spring of water; for such was called among the Jews living water, to distinguish it from ponds, tanks, and reservoirs, that were supplied by water either received from the clouds, or conducted into them by pipes and streams from other quarters. But there seems to be a higher allusion in the Sacred Text. כִּי לִמְעֵקֶיךָ מֵעַקְרֵי חַיִּים כִּי לִמְעֵקֶיךָ מֵעַקְרֵי חַיִּים, For with thee is the vein of lives. Does not this allude to the great aorta, which, receiving the blood from the heart, distributes it by the arteries to every part of the human body, whence it is conducted back to the heart by means of the veins. As the heart, by means of the great aorta, distributes the blood to the remotest parts of the body; so God, by Christ Jesus, conveys the life-giving streams of His providential Goodness to all the worlds and beings He has created, and the influences of His grace and mercy to every soul that has sinned. All spiritual and temporal good comes from Him, the FATHER; through Him, the SON; to every part of the creation of God.

In thy light shall we see light. No man can illuminate his own soul: all understanding must come from above. Here the metaphor is changed; and God is compared to the sun in the firmament of heaven, that gives light to all the planets and their inhabitants. God said, Let there be light; and there was light;—by that light the eye of man was enabled to behold the various works of God, and the beauties of creation: so when God speaks light into the dark heart of man, he not only beholds his own deformity and need of the salvation of God, but he beholds the light of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ;—God, in Christ, reconciling the world to himself. In thy light shall we see light. This is literally true, both in a spiritual and philosophical sense.

10 O continue thy loving-kindness unto them that know thee; and thy righteousness to the upright in heart.

Verse 10. O continue thy loving-kindness. Literally, Draw out thy mercy. The allusion to the spring is still kept up.

Unto them that know thee. To them who acknowledge Thee in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation. And thy righteousness. That grace which justifies the ungodly, and sanctifies the unholy.

To the upright in heart. לְיֹשֵׁרֵי לֵב le-yasherey leb, to the straight of heart: to those who have but one end in view; and one aim to that end. This is true of every genuine penitent, and of every true believer.

Verse 11. Let not the foot of pride. Let me not be trampled under foot by proud and haughty men.

Let not the hand of the wicked remove me. תִּנְדֵּנִי תִנְדֵּנִי, shakes me, or causes me to wander. Both these verses may have immediate respect to the captives in Babylon. The Jews were, when compared with the Babylonians, the people that knew God; for in Jewry was God known, Psa. lxxvi. 1.; and the Psalmist prays against the treatment which the Jews had received from the proud and insolent Babylonians during the seventy years of their captivity. "Restore us to our own land: and let not the proud foot or the violent hand ever remove us from our country and its blessings; the temple, and its ordinances."

Verse 12. There are the workers of iniquity fallen. THERE, in Babylon, are the workers of iniquity fallen; and so cast down that they shall not be able to rise. A prophecy of the destruction of the Babylonish empire by Cyrus. That it was destroyed is an historical fact;—that they were never able to recover their liberty, is also a fact; and that Babylon itself is now blotted out of the map of the universe, so that the site of it is no longer known, is confirmed by every traveller who has passed over those regions.

The word עָוָר sham, THERE, has been applied by many of the Fathers to the pride spoken of in the preceding verse. There, in or by pride, says Augustin, do all sinners perish. There, in heaven, have the evil angels fallen, through pride; says St. Jerom. There, in paradise, have our first parents fallen, through pride and disobedience. There, in hell, have the proud and disobedient angels been precipitated. Eusebius, &c. THERE, by pride, have the persecutors brought God's judgments upon themselves. See Calmet. But the first interpretation is the best.

ANALYSIS OF THE THIRTY-SIXTH PSALM.

The object of this Psalm is to implore God, out of His goodness, that He would deliver the upright from the pride and malice of the wicked.

I. The Psalmist sets down the character of a wicked man, and his fearful state, 1—5.

II. He makes a narrative in commendation of God's mercy, 6—10.

III. He prays for a continuance of God's goodness to his people; petitions against his proud enemy, and exults at his fall, 10, 11, 12.

I. The character of a wicked man; and
1. There is no fear of God before his eyes;—and from this, as an evil root, all the other evils spring: and thus he enters on an induction of particulars.

2. He flattereth himself in his own eyes. A great sin, in his eyes, is no sin: vice is virtue;—falsehood, truth.

3. In this he continues, until his iniquity be found to be hateful; till God, by some heavy judgment, has passed His sentence against it.

4. He is full of hypocrisy and deceit;—the words of his mouth are iniquity and deceit. He gives goodly words; but evil is in his heart.

5. He has renounced all wisdom and goodness. He hath left off to be wise, and to do good.

PSALM XXXVII.

Godly directions for those who are in adversity, not to envy the prosperity of the wicked, because it is superficial, and of short duration, 1-22. To put their confidence in God, and live in the glory, as this is the sure way to be happy in this life, and in that which is to come, 23-40.

VII. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

A Psalm of David.

FRET not thyself because of evil doers, neither be thou envious against the workers of iniquity.

2 For they shall soon be cut down like the grass, and wither as the green herb.

3 Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt

6. He enters deliberately and coolly into evil plans and designs. 1. He deviseth mischief upon his bed. 2. He sets himself, of firm purpose, in the way that is not good. 3. He abhors not evil. He invents wickedness; he labours to perfect it: yea, though it be of the deepest stain, he abhors it not.

II. How comes it that such wicked men are permitted to live? How is it that God can bear patiently with such workers of iniquity? The Psalmist answers this question by pointing out God's mercy, from which this long-suffering proceeds; which he considers in a two-fold point of view:—1. Absolute and general, extending to all. 2. Particular, which is exhibited to the faithful only.

1. General. God is good to all; which is seen in His bountifulness, fidelity, justice; and in His preservation of all things. 1. Thy mercy, O Lord, is in the heavens. Thou preservest them. 2. Thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds. They water the earth, as Thou hast promised. 3. Thy righteousness is like the great mountains. Immoveable. 4. Thy judgments are a great deep. Unsearchable, and past finding out. 5. Thou, Lord, preservest man and beast. In Thee we live, move, and have our being.

2. In particular. He is especially careful of His followers. The providence by which He sustains them, is—1. A precious thing; O how excellent, (quàm preciosa) how precious is thy loving-kindness, O Lord! The operation of which, in behalf of the faithful, is hope, confidence, and comfort in distress. Therefore, the children of men shall put their trust under the shadow, &c. 2. The effects of this, the plenty of all good things prepared for them.—1. They shall be abundantly satisfied with the goodness of thy house. 2. Thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures. To which he adds the cause:—For in thee is the fountain of life; in thy light we shall see light.

III. He concludes with a prayer,—1. For all God's people. 2. For himself.

1. He prays that this excellent and precious mercy may light on all those who serve God sincerely. O continue thy loving-kindness to them that know thee.

2. He prays for himself; that he may be defended from the prides and violence of wicked men. Let not the foot of pride come against me; and let not the hand of the wicked remove me.

3. Lastly, he closes all with this exultation:—There are the workers of iniquity fallen! There, when they promised themselves peace and security, and said, Tush! no harm shall happen to us; there, and then, are they fallen. They are cast down, and shall not be able to rise.

NOTES ON PSALM XXXVII.

In the title this Psalm is attributed to David by the Hebrew, and most of the Versions: but it is more likely it was intended as an instructive and consoling ode for the captives in Babylon, who might feel themselves severely tempted when they saw those idolaters in prosperity; and themselves, who worshipped the true God, in affliction and slavery. They are comforted with the prospect of speedy deliverance; and their return to their own land is predicted in not less than ten different places in this Psalm.

This Psalm is one of the acrostic, or alphabetical kind: but it differs from those we have already seen, in having two verses under each letter; the first only exhibiting the alphabetical letter consecutively. There are a few anomalies in the Psalm. The hemistich, which should begin with the letter y ain, has now a lamed prefixed to the word byy b'lam, with which it begins; and the hemistich which should begin with nau, (ver. 39.) has now a vau prefixed, nyvny v'ishuath. It appears also that the letters v daleth, c caph, and p koph, have each lost a hemistich; and y ain hálf a one. The manner in which this Psalm is printed in Dr. Kennicot's Hebrew Bible gives a full view of all these particulars. To the English reader some slighter differences may appear; but it should be observed, thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.

4 Delight thyself also in the Lord; and he shall give thee the desires of thine heart.

5 Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass.

6 And he shall bring forth thy righteousness as the light, and thy judgment as the noonday.

7 Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him: fret not thyself because of him who prospereth in his way, because of the man who bringeth wicked devices to pass.

g Job 11. 17. Mic. 7. 2.—h Ps. 62. 1.—i Heb. be silent to the LORD.—k Ps. 62. 6. Isai. 58. 15. Jer. 14. 22. Lam. 3. 25, 26. 1 Thess. 1. 10.—l Ver. 1, 2. Jer. 15. 1.

that the verses in our English bibles are not always divided as those in the Hebrew. In all the Psalms that have a title, the title forms the first verse in the Hebrew: but our translation does not acknowledge any of those titles as a part of the Psalm, and very properly leaves them out of the enumeration of the verses.

Verse 1. Fret not thyself because of evil doers] It is as foolish, as it is wicked, to repine or be envious at the prosperity of others. Whether they are godly or ungodly, it is God who is the Dispenser of the bounty they enjoy; and, most assuredly, He has a right to do what He will with His own. To be envious in such a case, is to arraign the providence of God. And it is no small condescension in the Almighty to reason with such persons as He does in this Psalm.

Verse 2. For they shall soon be cut down] They have their portion in this life; and their enjoyment of it cannot be long, for their breath is but a vapour that speedily vanishes away. They fall before death, as the green-sward does before the scythe of the mower.

Verse 3. Dwell in the land] Do not flee to foreign climes to escape from that providence which, for thy own good, denies thee affluence in thy own country.

And verily thou shalt be fed.] God will provide for thee the necessities of life: its conveniences might damp thy intellect in its inventions, and lead thee into idleness; and its superfluities would induce thee to pamper thy passions till the concerns of thy soul would be absorbed in those of the flesh; and, after having lived an animal life, thou mightest die without God, and perish everlastingly.

The original, מְרִיחַ אֶרֶץ וְרִיחַ אֶמְנָה, might be translated, "and feed by faith." The Septuagint has καὶ συμπιπῆσαι ἐκ τῆς ἀγαθῆς ἀρετῆς, and thou shalt feed upon its riches. The Vulgate, Æthiopic, and Arabic, are the same. The Syriac, —seek faith. The Chaldee, —be strong in the faith. The Anglo-Saxon, 7 u buyr fedeb on pelum hly, and feeded thou shalt be in its welfare. Old Psalter, and tpu sal be fed in rlyches of ft. But it is probable that מְרִיחַ אֶמְנָה here signifies security. And thou shalt be fed in security.

Dr. Delaney supposed that the Psalm might have been written by David in the behalf of Mephibosheth, who, being falsely accused by his servant Ziba, had formed the resolution to leave a land where he had met with such bad treatment. David, being convinced of his innocence, entreats him to dwell in the land, with the assurance of plenty and protection. It is more likely that it is addressed to the captives in Babylon; and contains the promise that they shall return to their own land, and again enjoy peace and plenty.

Verse 4. Delight thyself also in the Lord] Expect all thy happiness from Him, and seek it in Him.

The desires of thine heart] מִשְׁאֲלוֹת מִשְׁחָלוֹת, the petitions. The godly man never indulges a desire which he cannot form into a prayer to God.

Verse 5. Commit thy way unto the Lord] הַלֵּךְ בְּלִי גֹל אֶל יְהוָה, —Roll thy way upon the Lord: probably, a metaphor taken from the camel, who lies down till his load be rolled upon him.

He shall bring it to pass.] נֹרָא יַעֲשֶׂה, "He will work." Trust God, and He will work for thee.

Verse 6. Thy righteousness as the light] As God said in the beginning,—Let there be light, and there was light; so He shall say, Let thy innocence appear, and it will appear as suddenly and as evident as the light was at the beginning.

Verse 7. Rest in the Lord] מְנוּחָה דֹמָה, "be silent, be dumb." Do not find fault with thy Maker: He does all things well for others; He will do all things well for thee. And wait patiently for him] וַיִּשְׁמְרֵנוּ עִשְׂרִית צְהַלֹּלוֹ, and set thyself to expect Him; and be determined to expect, or wait for Him. Such is the import of a verb in the hithpael conjugation.

PSALM XXXVII.

8 Cease from anger, and forsake wrath; = fret not thyself in any wise to do evil.

9 For evil doers shall be cut off; but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth.

10 For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be.

11 But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace.

12 The wicked plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him with his teeth.

13 The Lord shall laugh at him: for he seeth that his day is coming.

14 The wicked have drawn out the sword, and have bent their bow, to cast down the poor and needy, and to slay such as be of upright conversation.

15 Their sword shall enter into their own heart, and their bows shall be broken.

16 A little that a righteous man hath is better than the riches of many wicked.

17 For the arms of the wicked shall be broken: but the Lord upholdeth the righteous.

18 The Lord knoweth the days of the upright: and their inheritance shall be for ever.

19 They shall not be ashamed in the evil time: and in the days of famine they shall be satisfied.

20 But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away.

21 The wicked borroweth, and payeth not again: but the righteous sheweth mercy, and giveth.

22 For such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off.

23 The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord: and he delighteth in his way.

24 Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down: for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand.

25 I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread.

26 He is ever merciful, and lendeth; and his seed is blessed.

A heathen gives good advice on a similar subject:

Ni ergo opus est homines? Si consilium vis. Permissio tibi respondeo Numquam, quid Consensum nobile, roburque sit tibi nocentis, Non pro fueris obsequia quosque dabunt Di. Certe et illis homo, quos est.

“What then remains? Are we deprived of will? Must we not wish, for fear of wishing ill? Receive my counsel, and securely move; Instruct thy pasture to the powers above; Leave them to manage for thee, and to grant What their soaring wisdom sees thee want. In goodness, as in greatness, they excel: Ah, that we loved ourselves but half so well!” Dryden.

Verse 9. They shall inherit the earth.] The word ארץ arets, through this Psalm, should be translated land, not earth; for it is most probable that it refers to the land of Judea; and in this verse there is a promise of their return thither.

Verse 10. For yet a little while and the wicked shall not be.] A prediction of the destruction of Babylon. This empire was now in its splendour: and the captives lived to see it totally overturned by Cyrus: so that even the shadow of its power did not remain.

Thou shalt diligently consider his place.] וצוהו בעיניו, and he is not. The ruler is killed, the city taken, and the whole empire overthrown in one night! And now, even the place where Babylon stood, cannot be ascertained.

Verse 11. But the meek.] עניו אנאמ, the afflicted; the poor Jewish captives.

Shall inherit the earth.] ארץ ארעט, the land of Judea given by God Himself as an inheritance to their fathers, and to their posterity for ever.—See ver. 9.

Verse 13. He seeth that his day is coming.] The utter desolation of your oppressors is at hand. All this may be said of every wicked man.

Verse 14. The wicked have drawn out the sword.] There is an irreconcilable enmity in the souls of sinners against the godly; and there is much evidence that the idolatrous Babylonians whetted their tongue like a sword, and shot out their arrows, even bitter words, to malign the poor captives, and to insult them in every possible way.

Verse 15. Their sword shall enter into their own heart.] All their execrations and maledictions shall fall upon themselves; and their power to do mischief shall be broken.

Verse 16. A little that a righteous man hath.] This is a solid maxim. Whatever a good man has, has God's blessing in it;—even the blessings of the wicked are cursed.

Verse 17. The arms of the wicked.] Their power to do evil. Of this they are often deprived. Talents lent, and abused, shall be resumed; and the misuser called to a severe account by the Lord of the talents.

Verse 19. The Lord knoweth the days of the upright.] He is acquainted with all his circumstances, sufferings, and ability to bear them; and He will either shorten his trials, or increase his power. The Lord also approves of the man and his concerns; and his inheritance shall be for ever. He shall have God for his portion here and hereafter. This is probably another indirect promise to the captives that they shall be restored to their own land.—See ver. 11.

Verse 19. They shall not be ashamed.] They have expressed strong confidence in the Lord; and He shall so work in their behalf, that their enemies shall never be able to say, “Ye have trusted in your God, and yet your enemies have prevailed over you.” No: for, even in the days of famine, they shall be satisfied.

Verse 20. The enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs.] This verse has given the critics some trouble. Several of the versions read thus:—“But the enemies of the Lord, as soon as they are exalted to honour, shall vanish; like smoke they vanish.” If we follow the Hebrew it intimates that they shall consume as the fat of lambs. That is, as the fat is wholly consumed in sacrifices, by the fire on the altar; so shall they consume away in the fire of God's wrath.

Verse 21. The wicked borroweth.] Is often reduced to penury, and is obliged to become debtor to those whom he before despised.

And payeth not again.] May refuse to do it, because he is a wicked man; or be unable to do it, because he is reduced to beggary.

But the righteous sheweth mercy.] Because he has received mercy from God; therefore he shows mercy to men. And even to his enemies he sheweth mercy, and giveth; his heart being disposed to it by the influence of Divine grace, and his hand being enabled to do it by the blessing of God's providence.

Verse 22. Shall inherit the earth.] ארץ ארעט, the land, as before.—See ver. 11.

Shall be cut off.] A wicked Jew shall meet with the same fate as a wicked Babylonian: and a wicked Christian shall fare no better.

Verse 23. The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord.] There is nothing for good in the text. כנר geber, is the original word, and it properly signifies a strong man, a conqueror or hero: and it appears to be used here to shew, that even the most powerful must be supported by the Lord, otherwise their strength and courage will be of little avail.

And he delighteth in his way.] When his steps are ordered by the Lord; he delighteth in his way, because it is that into which His own good Spirit has directed him. Or, the man delights in God's way, in the law and testimonies of his Maker.

Verse 24. Though he fall, he shall not be utterly cast down.] The original is short and emphatic: ושר לא יפול כי יצטרך, to quail, which the Chaldee translates, Though he should fall into sickness, he shall not die: for which the reason is given, because the Lord sustains by his hand. Though he may for a time fall under the power of his adversaries, as the Jews have done under the Babylonian captivity, he shall not be forsaken. The right hand of God shall sustain him in his afflictions and distresses; and at last God will give him a happy issue out of them all. Neither the Text, nor any of the Versions, intimate that a falling into sin is meant; but a falling into trouble, difficulty, &c.

Verse 25. I have been young, and now am old.] I believe this to be literally true in all cases. I am now gray-headed myself, I have travelled in different countries, and 27 ^a Depart from evil, and do good; and dwell for evermore.

28 For the LORD loveth judgment, and forsaketh not his saints; they are preserved for ever: but the seed of the wicked shall be cut off.

29 The righteous shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever.

30 The mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom, and his tongue talketh of judgment.

31 The law of his God is in his heart; none of his steps shall slide.

32 The wicked watcheth the righteous and seeketh to slay him.

33 The LORD will not leave him in his hand, nor will condemn him when he is judged.

34 Wait on the LORD, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land: when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it.

35 I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree.

36 Yet he passed away, and, lo, he was not: yea, I sought him, but he could not be found.

37 Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace.

38 But the transgressors shall be destroyed together: the end of the wicked shall be cut off.

39 But the salvation of the righteous is of the LORD: he is their strength in the time of trouble.

40 And the LORD shall help them, and deliver them; he shall deliver them from the wicked, and save them, because they trust in him.

have had many opportunities of seeing and conversing with religious people in all situations in life; and I have not, to my knowledge, seen one instance to the contrary. I have seen no righteous man forsaken, nor any children of the righteous begging their bread. God puts this honour upon all that fear Him; and thus careful is He of them, and of their posterity.

Verse 26. He is ever merciful, and lendeth] כל חיים חסד kol hayim chonen, all the day he is compassionate. He is confirmed in the habit of godliness; he feels for the distresses of men, and is ready to divide and distribute to all that are in necessity.

And his seed is blessed.] The preceding words were not spoken casually: his seed, his posterity, is blessed; therefore, they are not abandoned to beg their bread.

Verse 27. Depart from evil, and do good] Seeing the above is so, depart from evil, avoid all sin; and let not this be sufficient, do good. The grace of God ever gives this two-fold power to all who receive it; strength to overcome evil, and strength to do that which is right.

Dwell for evermore.] Be for ever an inhabitant of God's house. This may be also a promise of return to their own land, and of permanent residence there. See ver. 9, 11, &c.

Verse 28. Forsaketh not his saints] חסידי רחמי לא ישיב chasidai, his merciful or compassionate ones; those who through love to Him, and all mankind, are ever ready to give of their substance to the poor.

But the seed of the wicked shall be cut off.] The children who follow the wicked steps of wicked parents shall, like their parents, be cut off. God's judgments descend to posterity, as well as His mercies.

Verse 29. The righteous shall inherit the land] If this be not another promise of return to their own land, from that of their captivity, it must be spiritually understood, and refer to their eternal dwelling with God in glory.

Verse 30. The mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom] Foolish and corrupt conversation cannot come out of their mouth. They are taught of God, and they speak according to the wisdom that is from above.

Verse 31. The law of his God is in his heart] The Lord promised that a time should come in which He would make a new covenant with the house of Israel;—He would put His laws in their minds, and in their hearts He would write them. This is fulfilled in the case above.

None of his steps shall slide.] His holy heart always dictates to his eyes, his mouth, his hands, and his feet. The precepts which direct his conduct are not only written in his Bible, but also in his heart.

Verse 32. The wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him.] Similar to what is said, ver. 8, The wicked plotteth against the righteous. But it is added, ver. 33, The Lord will not leave him in his hands; He will confound his devices, and save His own servants.

Verse 34. Wait on the LORD, and keep his way] This is the true mode of waiting on God, which the Scripture recommends—keeping God's way—using all His ordinances, and living in the spirit of obedience. He who waits thus, is sure to have the further blessings of which he is in pursuit. נפ קוּוּה, to wait, implies the extension of a right line from one point to another. The first point is the human heart; the line is its intense desire; and the last point is God, to whom this heart extends this straight line of earnest desire to be filled with the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of peace.

And he shall exalt thee to inherit the land] If ye keep His way, be faithful to Him in your exile; He will exalt you, lift you up from your present abject state, to inherit the land of your fathers. See before, ver. 9, 11, &c.

When the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it.] They did see the destruction of the Babylonish king, Belshazzar, and his empire; and it was in consequence of that destruction that they were enlarged.

Verse 35. I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree.] Does not this refer to Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, and to the vision he had of the great tree which was in the midst of the earth, the head of which reached up to heaven?—See Dan. iv. 10, &c.

Verse 36. Yet he passed away] Both Nebuchadnezzar, and his wicked successor, Belshazzar; and in the destruction of the latter, when God had weighed him in the balance, and found him wanting; numbered his days, and consigned him to death; his kingdom was delivered to the Medes and Persians, and thus the Babylonian empire was destroyed.

Verse 37. Mark the perfect man] Him who is described above. Take notice of him: he is perfect in his soul, God having saved him from all sin, and filled him with His own love and image. And he is upright in his conduct;—and his end, die when he will, or where he may, is peace, quietness, and assurance for ever.

Almost all the Versions translate the Hebrew after this manner: preserve innocence, and keep equity in view; for the man of peace shall leave a numerous posterity.

Bishop Horsley thus translates,—“Keep (thy) loyalty, and look well to (thy) integrity; for a posterity is (appointed) for the perfect man.” He comes nearer to the original, in his note on this verse:—Keep in innocency, and regard uprightness; for the perfect man hath a posterity: “but the rebellious shall be destroyed together; the posterity of the wicked shall be cut off,” ver. 38.

Dr. Kennicott's note is, אחריתו אכאריח, (which we render later end,) is posterity, Pa. cix. 13. The wicked, and all his race, to be destroyed; the pious man to have a numerous progeny. See his sons' sons to the third and fourth generation. See Job viii. 19, xviii. 13—20.

I think the original cannot possibly bear our translation. I thall produce it here, with the literal version of Montanus:

שׂוֹרֵר רָבָּר וְרֵאָה יִשְׂרָאֵל כִּי אֲחֵרִית לְאִישׁ שְׁלֵמִים
פָּקֵד נִוְסִימִוּמִם וְקִבְּרָה וִיטֵה עֲטִידִים

The nearest translation to this is that of the Septuagint and Vulgate:—φύλασσε ἀκακίας, καὶ ἰδέ εὐδοκίας, οὗτις ἐστὶν ἐγκρατείας ἀνθρώπων ἐπιτυχίας. Custodi innocentiam, et vide æqualem; quoniam sunt reliquæ homini pacifico. “Preserve innocence, and behold equity, seeing there is a posterity to the pacific man.” The Syriac says, “Observe simplicity, and choose rectitude, seeing there is a good end to the man of peace.” The reader may choose. Our common Version, in my opinion, cannot be sustained. The 38th verse seems to confirm the translation of the Septuagint and the Vulgate, which are precisely the same in meaning; therefore, I have given one translation for both.

The old Psalter deserves a place also:—קִבְּרֵה וְנִוְסִימִוּמִם, אֲדָבָה, אֲדָבָה, אֲדָבָה; לְפָרָה רֵאָה עַל תְּלֵה פִּסְתֵּל מִיָּאֵן.

Verse 39. The salvation of the righteous is of the LORD] It is the Lord who made them righteous, by blotting out their sins, and infusing His holy Spirit into their hearts; and it is by His grace they are continually sustained, and finally brought to the kingdom of glory. He is their strength in time of trouble.

Verse 40. The LORD—shall deliver them] For they are always exposed to trials, and liable to fall.

Because they trust in Him.] They keep faith, prayer, love, and obedience, in continual exercise. They continue to believe in, love, and obey, God; and He continues to save them.

PSALM XXXVIII.

David prays God to have mercy upon him, and gives a most affecting account of his miserable state, 1-16. Complaints of his being forsaken by his friends, and cruelly persecuted by his enemies, 11-16. Confesses his sin, and earnestly implores help, 17-24.

O LORD, rebuke me not in thy wrath: neither chasten me in thy hot displeasure.

a Ps. 70, title.—b Ps. 6, 1.—c Job 6, 4.—d Ps. 4.—e Ps. 6, 2.

ANALYSIS OF THE THIRTY-SEVENTH PSALM.

What is here delivered may be reduced to these two general heads:—

I. He sets down the duty of a good man, which is to be patient, and put his confidence in God when he sees the wicked prosper and flourish.

II. He gives many reasons to prove the propriety of such conduct.

I. He begins with an interdict; and then descends to give some directions.

1. His interdict is, Fret not thyself, &c. Be not angry, nor envious: to which he adds this reason, that their prosperity is but short. For they shall be cut down, &c.

2. Then he sets down some directions and rules to prevent fretting and anger.

1. The first is a perpetual rule for our whole life. Trust in the Lord. Rely not on human helps, friends, riches, &c.

2. Do good. Increase not thy state by evil arts or means.

3. Dwell in the land. Desert not thy station.

4. And verily thou shalt be fed. Enjoy quietly what thou hast at present.

5. Delight thyself in the Lord. Be pleased with His way.

6. Commit thy way unto the Lord. Labour in an honest vocation, and leave the rest to Him; for he will work for thee.

7. Rest in the Lord. Acquiesce in His will, and the dispensations of His providence; wait patiently for Him. His time is the best:—and then He repeats His interdict, Fret not thyself.

II. Then he resumes his former reason, mentioned verse 2; and amplifies it by an antithesis, viz. That it shall be well with the good; ill with the wicked, ver. 9, 10, 11; and so it falls out for the most part, but not always, which is enough for temporal blessings.

1. Evil does shall be cut off: but those who wait on the Lord shall inherit the land.

2. Yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be, &c.

To this he adds a second reason, taken from the providence of God:—

1. In protecting the righteous, and confounding their enemies.

2. In blessing the little they have; in which he seems to remove a double objection:—the first, about the tyranny of the wicked over the righteous; the second, that they were commonly in want and poverty.

The first temptation by which many pious souls are troubled is the power, the cruelty, and the implacable hatred, of wicked men. The wicked plotteth against the just, and gnasheth upon him. To which the Psalmist answers, The Lord shall laugh at him; for he seeth that his day of punishment is coming. Yea, but the wicked have drawn out their sword, and bent their bow, which is beyond plotting and derision, to cast down the poor, and slay such as are of an upright conversation. To which he answers, Be it so: Their sword shall enter into their own heart, and their bow shall be broken.

The other temptation is beggary and poverty, than which nothing is more afflictive. The ungodly swim in wealth: but the godly are commonly poor; and, therefore, exposed to contempt; for poverty reckons up no reputable genealogy. To this he answers:—A little that the righteous hath is better than the riches of many wicked. Better, because used better; better, because possessed with contentment; better, because it has God's blessing upon it. And this he proves by many reasons:—

1. For the arms of the wicked, their riches, shall be broken; but the Lord upholdeth the righteous.

2. The Lord knoweth the days, good or bad, of the upright. He loves them, and they are His care; and their inheritance shall be for ever,—firm and stable.

3. They shall not be ashamed in the evil time,—nor destitute, nor forsaken of necessities; for in the days of famine they shall be satisfied.

But with rich wicked men it is not so. Though they abound in wealth, yet they shall insensibly consume and perish as the fat of lambs, burnt upon the altar, vanisheth into smoke, and passeth away.

4. And yet there is another blessing on the good man's

2 For ^c thine arrows stick fast in me, and ^d thy hand presseth me sore.

3 There is no soundness in my flesh because of thine anger; ^e neither is there any ^f rest in my bones because of my sin.

4 For ^g mine iniquities are gone over mine head: as a heavy burden they are too ^h heavy for me.

f Heb. peace, or, health.—g Ezra 9, 6. Ps. 40, 12.—h Matt. 11, 23.

little: he has often over and above, and something to spare to give; whereas the wicked is a borrower, with this bad quality, that he payeth not again. But the righteous showeth mercy, and giveth.

Of which he gives this reason: for such as God blesseth shall possess the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off. They may have, but not enjoy, the goods of this life.

And thus much the Psalmist proved by his own experience:—I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging their bread. His liberality was the cause of it:—He is ever merciful, and lendeth; and his seed is blessed.

A third reason of God's protection is, that God upholds him. The steps of a good man are ordered of the Lord; and should he, by infirmity, fall into error, or get into trouble or affliction, he shall not be utterly cast down, for the Lord upholdeth him with his hand. He shall have his judgment corrected by God's teaching; and no disease shall be able to remove him till God's work be done in him, and by him.

In the rest of the Psalm he makes a repetition of all that went before: he repeats his chief rule, his promises, his comforts, and his threatenings.

He begins with his rule, ver. 3, Depart from evil, and do good, and dwell for evermore. In which he exhorts to obedience; and in both parts brings instances of repentance, mortification, and vivification, which he fortifies with a double reason, as before.

1. A promise to the godly. For the Lord loveth righteousness; he forsaketh not his saints; they are preserved for ever.

2. A threatening to the wicked. But the seed of the wicked shall be cut off. These two reasons he resumes, amplifies, and illustrates.

First, that of the righteous. The righteous shall inherit the land, &c.; and that you may know who he means by the righteous, he sets down his character.

1. He is one whose mouth speaks wisdom. He speaks reverently of God's justice and providence.

2. One whose mouth talks of judgment,—i. e. of that only which is just and right.

3. The law of God is in his heart;—not in his tongue alone, or in his brain.

4. None of his steps shall slide. He keeps on his right way, and will not be seduced. Yet this righteous man has his enemies, ver. 13, 14, 15. For the wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him.

But, although he have his enemies, yet has he also his Protector. The Lord will not leave him in his hand, &c. therefore, wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee. When the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it.

Secondly, For they shall be cut off; as was said before, ver. 28, and this he knew from his own experience. I have seen the wicked in great power, and flourishing like a green bay tree; yet I passed by, and, lo, he was gone; I sought him, but he could not be found.

And what he observed, others, if attentive and diligent, may observe also, both in respect of the righteous and the wicked: 1. For, mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace. 2. But the transgressors shall be destroyed together; the end of the wicked shall be cut off.

Should the cause be enquired why God does these things, it is added, and this sums up all the doctrine of the Psalm.

1. The salvation of the righteous is of the Lord; he will save them because they trust in him.

2. On the contrary, the wicked shall be cut off and perish, because they trust not in him.

NOTES ON PSALM XXXVIII.

contents. There is no mention of the sabbath in it; there is no thanksgiving in it, for it is deeply penitential; and I do not see that it contains any prophecy. The SYRIAC, — A Psalm of David when they said to the Philistine king Achish, This is David, who killed Goliath; we will not have him to go with us against Saul. Besides, it is a form of confession for us. It does not appear that, out of all the titles, we can gather the true intent of the Psalm.

Several conjectures have been made relative to the occasion on which this Psalm was composed; and the most likely is, that it was in reference to some severe affliction which David had after his illicit commerce with Bathsheba; but of what nature we are left to conjecture from the third, fifth, and seventh verses. Whatever it was, he deeply repents for it, asks pardon, and earnestly entreats support from God.

Verse 1. O LORD, rebuke me [no] He was sensible that he was suffering under the displeasure of God; and he prays that the chastisement may be in mercy, and not in judgment.

Verse 2. Thine arrows stick fast in me] This, no doubt, refers to the acute pains which he endured; each appearing to his feeling, as if an arrow were shot into his body.

Verse 3. No soundness in my flesh] This seems to refer to some disorder which so affected the muscles as to produce sores and ulcers; and so affected his bones as to leave him no peace nor rest. In short, he was completely and thoroughly diseased; and all this he attributes to his sin, either as being its natural consequence, or as being inflicted by the Lord as a punishment on its account.

Verse 4. Mine iniquities are gone over mine head] He represents himself as one sinking in deep waters, or as one oppressed by a burden to which his strength was unequal.

Verse 5. My wounds stink and are corrupt] Taking this in connexion with the rest of this Psalm, I do not see that we can understand the word in any figurative or metaphorical way. I believe they refer to some disease with which he was at this time afflicted: but whether the leprosy, the smallpox, or some other disorder that had attacked the whole system, and shed its virulence on different parts of the outer surface, cannot be absolutely determined.

Because of my foolishness.] This may either signify sin, as the cause of his present affliction; or it may import an affliction which was the consequence of that foolish levity which prefers the momentary gratification of an irregular passion, to health of body and peace of mind.

Verse 6. I am troubled]—In mind. I am bowed down—in body. I am altogether afflicted and full of distress.

Verse 7. For my loins are filled with a loathsome disease] Or, rather, a burning; נקלה nikelah, from קלה kalah, to fry, scorch, &c, hence, נקלה nikelah, a burning, or strongly feverish disease.

There is no soundness in my flesh] All without, and all within, bears evidence that the whole of my solids and fluids are corrupt.

Verse 8. I am feeble and sore broken] I am so exhausted with my disease that I feel as if on the brink of the grave, and unfit to appear before God; therefore have I roared for the disquietness of my heart.

That David describes a natural disease here cannot reasonably be doubted:—but what that disease was, who shall attempt to say? However this is evident that, whatever it was, he most deeply deplored the cause of it; and as he worthily lamented it, so he found mercy at the hand of God. It would be easy to shew a disease of which what he here enumerates are the very general symptoms: but I forbear, because in this I might attribute to one what, perhaps, in Judea would be more especially descriptive of another.

Verse 9. LORD, all my desire is before thee] I long for nothing so much as Thy favour; and for this my heart is continually going out after Thee. Instead of אדוני adonai, LORD, several of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. have ייחיי yehovah.

Verse 10. My heart panteth] שחרחר secharchar, flutters, palpitates, through fear and alarm.

My strength faileth] Not being able to take nourishment.

The light of mine eyes—is gone.] I can scarcely discern any thing through the general decay of my health and vigour, particularly affecting my sight.

Verse 11. My lovers] Those who professed much affection for me; my friends רעי reai, my companions, who never before left my company, stand aloof.

My kinsmen] קרובי kerobai, my neighbours, stand afar off. I am deserted by all; and they stand off because of נקתי neqti, my plague. They considered me as suffering under a Divine judgment; and, thinking me an accursed being, they avoided me lest they should be infected by my disease.

Verse 12. They also that seek after my life] They act towards me as huntsmen after their prey: they lay snares to take away my life. Perhaps this means only, that they wished for his death, and would have been glad to have had it in their power to end his days. Others spoke all manner of evil of him, and told falshities against him all the day long.

Verse 13. But I, as a deaf man] I was conscious of my guilt, I could not vindicate myself; and I was obliged in silence to bear their insults.

Verse 14. No reproofs] תוכחות tocochot, arguments, or vindications;—a forensic term. I was as a man accused in open court; and I could make no defence.

Verse 15. In thee, O LORD, do I hope] I have no Help-er but Thee.

Thou wilt hear, O LORD my God.] Thou art eternal in Thy compassions, and wilt bear the prayer of a penitent soul. In the printed copies of the Hebrew text we have אדוני adonai, one hundred and two of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. read ייחיי yehovah. As this word is never pronounced by the Jews, and they consider it dreadfully sacred, in reading, wherever it occurs they pronounce אדוני adonai; and we may well suppose, that Jewish scribes, in writing out copies of the Sacred Scriptures, would as naturally write adonai for yehovah, as they would in reading supply the former for the latter.

Verse 16. When my foot slippeth] They watched for my halting; and, when my foot slipped, they rejoiced that I had fallen into sin!

Verse 17. For I am ready to halt] Literally, I am prepared to halt. So completely infirm is my soul, that it is impossible for me to take one right step in the way of righteousness unless strengthened by Thee.

Verse 18. I will declare mine iniquity] I will confess it with the deepest humiliation and self-abasement.

Verse 19. But mine enemies are lively] Instead of חיים chayim, lively, I would read חיים chinam, without cause; a change made by the half of one letter, a nun for a yod. See the parallel places, Psalm xxxv. 19, and lxxix. 5. See also the Preliminary Dissertation to Dr. Lowth's

Verse 20. Because I follow the thing that good is] The translation is as bad as the sentence is awkward. יָרֵי יָרֵי תַחַת רַדּוּפִי יוֹ, because I follow goodness. There is a remarkable addition to this verse in the Arabic. They have rejected me, the beloved one, as an abominable dead carcass; they have pierced my body with nails. I suppose the Arabic translator meant to refer this to Christ.

None of the other Versions have any thing like this addition; only the Æthiopic adds, They rejected their brethren as an unclean dead carcass. St. Ambrose says this reading was found in some Greek and Latin copies in his time; and Theodoret has nearly the same reading with the Arabic,—Καὶ ἐκρίψαν με τὸν ἀγαθόν, οὗ νεκρὸν σβλήσασκεν, And they cast me, the beloved, out as an abominable dead carcass. Whence this reading came, I cannot conjecture.

Be not far from me] Though my friends keep aloof, be Thou near to help me

Verse 22. Make haste to help me] I am dying;—save, Lord, or I perish. Whoever carefully reads over this Psalm, will see, what a grievous and bitter thing it is to sin against the Lord; and, especially, to sin after having known His mercy, and after having escaped from the corruption that is in the world. Reader, be on thy guard: a life of righteousness may be lost by giving way to a moment's temptation; and a fair character sullied for ever! Let him that most assuredly standeth take heed lest he fall.

That a grain of sweet that one can sow, To reap a harvest of wide-wasting woe.

ANALYSIS OF THE THIRTY-EIGHTH PSALM.

This Psalm may be divided into two parts:—

I. A deprecation;—begun ver. 1, and continued in ver. 21, 22.

II. A grievous complaint of sin, disease, misery, God's anger, the ingratitude of his friends, coldness of his acquaintances, and cruelty of his enemies;—all which he uses as arguments to induce God to help him, continued from ver. 2 to ver. 20.

I. In the first part he deprecates God's anger, and intreats a mitigation of it:—though rebuked, let it not be in wrath; if corrected, let it not be in rigour. O Lord, rebuke me not in thy wrath, &c.

II. His complaint, on which he falls instantly, and amplifies in a variety of ways.

1. From the prime cause,—God. Thine arrows stick fast in me, &c.

2. From the impulsive cause:—His sin, his iniquities, ver. 4. His foolishness, ver. 5.

3. From the weight of his afflictions, which were, in general, the arrows of God which stuck in him; the hand of God, by which he was pressed; which were so grievous that there was no soundness in his flesh,—no rest in his bones.

4. By an induction of particulars, where he declares many effects of the disease,—

1. Putrefaction of his flesh. My wounds stink, and are corrupt.

2. The uncomfortable posture of his body. I am troubled, I am bowed down greatly.

3. Torment in his bowels, &c. My loins are filled with a loathsome disease.

4. Disease through the whole system. There is no soundness in my flesh.

5. Debility and grievous plague. I am feeble and sore smitten.

6. Anguish that forced him to cry out. I have roared, &c.

7. His heart was disquieted. The disquietness of my heart. But that it might appear that he had not lost his hold of his hope and his confidence in God, he directs his speech to Him, and says,—Lord, all my desires is before thee, and my groaning is not hidden from thee.

tongue: I will keep my mouth with a bridle, while the wicked is before me.

2 I was dumb with silence, I held my peace, even from good, and my sorrow was stirred.

3 My heart was hot within me, while I was musing the fire burned: then spake I with my tongue.

4 LORD, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days, what it is; that I may know how frail I am.

5 Behold, thou hast made my days as a hand-or, muzzle for my mouth.—d Ps. 141. 2. James 2. 2.—e Col. 4. 5.—f Ps. 23. 12 of Heb. troubled.—h Jer. 20. 9.—i Ps. 90. 12. & 118. 94.—k Or, what time I have here.

8. He had a palpitation or trembling of heart. My heart pants.

9. His strength decayed. My strength fails.

10. A defect of sight. The sight of my eyes is gone from me.

All these calamities David suffered from within. He was tormented in body and mind;—but, had he any comfort from without? Not any.

1. None from his friends. My lovers and my friends stand aloof. 2. As for his enemies, they even then added to his affliction. They also that seek after my life lay snares for me. In purpose, word, and deed, they sought to undo him.

He next shows his behaviour in these sufferings;—he murmured not, but was silent and patient. I was as a deaf man;—I was as a dumb man. He made no defence.

This he uses as an argument to induce the Lord to mitigate his sufferings: and of his patience he gives the following reasons,—

1. His reliance on God for audience and redress. For in thee, O Lord, do I hope; thou wilt hear me.

2. For this he petitions; for to God he was not silent, though deaf and dumb to man. For I said, Hear me! and being assured that he should be heard, made him patient;—for, if not heard, his enemies would triumph. Hear me, lest otherwise they should rejoice over me.

3. He was thus patient when his grief was extreme. For I am ready to halt, and my sorrow is continually before me. I am under a bitter cross; and I know that if I be Thy servant, I must bear my cross; therefore, I take it up, and suffer patiently.

4. This cross I have deserved to bear;—it comes on account of mine iniquity, and I will not conceal it. I will declare mine iniquity; I will be sorry for my sin. I suffer justly, and therefore have reason to be patient.

He complains again of his enemies. Though he suffered justly, yet this was no excuse for their cruelty;—he complains of their strength, their number, and their hatred. My enemies are living, while I am at death's door;—they are multiplied, while I am diminished; they render me evil, for the good I have done them.

Then he concludes with a petition to God, in which he begs three things,—

1. God's presence. Forsake me not, O Lord; my God be not far from me.

2. He begs for help. Help me, O Lord.

3. And prays that this help may come speedily. Make haste to help me.

And these three petitions are directed to the Most High, as the God of his salvation. O Lord, my salvation; my Deliverer from sin, guilt, pain, death, and hell.

In this Psalm, deeply descriptive of the anguish of a penitential soul, most persons, who feel distress on account of sin, may meet with something suitable to their case.

NOTES ON PSALM XXXIX.

The title says, To the chief musician, Jeduthun himself, a Psalm of David. It is supposed that this Jeduthun is the same with Ethan, 1 Chron. vi. 44, compared with 1 Chron. xvi. 41, and is there numbered among the sons of Merari. And he is supposed to have been one of the four masters of music, or leaders of bands, belonging to the temple. And it is thought that David, having composed this Psalm, gave it to Jeduthun and his company to sing it. But several have supposed that Jeduthun himself was the author. It is very likely that this Psalm was written on the same occasion with the preceding. It relates to a grievous malady by which David was afflicted after his transgression with Bathsheba. See what has been said on the foregoing Psalm.

Verse 1. I said, I will take heed to my ways] I must be cautious because of my enemies; I must be patient because of my afflictions; I must be watchful over my tongue, lest I offend my God, or give my adversaries any cause to speak evil of me.

Verse 2. I held my peace, even from good] I ceased from the words of the law, says the Chaldee. I spoke nothing, either good or bad. I did not even defend myself.

My sorrow was stirred] My afflictions increased; and I had an exacerbation of pain. It is a hard thing to be denied the benefit of complaint in sufferings; as it has a tendency to relieve the mind, and indeed, in some sort, to call off the attention from the place of actual suffering: and yet undue and extravagant complaining enervates the mind, so that it becomes a double prey to its sufferings. On both sides there are extremes: David seems to have steered clear of them on the right hand and on the left.

Verse 3. My heart was hot within me] A natural feeling of repressed grief.

While I was musing] What was at first a simple sensation of heat, produced a flame; the fire broke out, that had been long smothered. It is a metaphor taken from vegetables, which, being heaped together, begin to heat and ferment, if not scattered and exposed to the air; and will soon produce a flame, and consume themselves, and every thing within their reach.

Verse 4. LORD, make me to know mine end] I am weary of life: I wish to know the measure of my days, that I may see how long I have to suffer, and how frail I am. I wish to know what is wanting to make up the number of the days I have to live.

Verse 5. My days as a handbreadth] My life is but a span; επισημα τον βιον

And mine age is as nothing כמו ke-in, as if it were not before thee. All time is swallowed up in Thy eternity.

Verily every man at his best state] כול אדם כל kol adam nitsoab, "every man that exists is vanity." All his projects, plans, schemes, &c. soon come to nothing. His body also moulders with the dust; and shortly passes, both from the sight and remembrance of men.

Verse 6. Walketh in a vain shew] בצלם betselem, in a shadow. He is but the semblance of being: he appears for a while, and then vanisheth away. Some of the fathers read, Although every man walketh in the image of God, yet they are disquieted in vain.

He heareth up riches, and knoweth not who shall gather] He raketh together. This is a metaphor taken from agriculture; the husbandman raketh the corn, &c. together in the field; and yet, so uncertain is life, that he knows not who shall gather them into the granary!

Verse 7. And now, LORD, what wait I for?] Have I any object of pursuit in life, but to regain Thy favour and Thine image.

Verse 8. Deliver me from all my transgressions] I seek the pardon of my sins: I expect it from Thy mercy. Grant it, that I be not the reproach of the foolish, (the godless and the profane, who deride my expectation, and say, no such blessings can be had. Let them know, by Thy saving me, that there is a God who heareth prayer, and giveth His holy Spirit to all them that ask Him.

Verse 10. Remove thy stroke away from me] This seems to be a figure taken from gladiators, or persons contending in single combat. One is wounded so as to be able to maintain the fight no longer: he, therefore, gives in, and prays his adversary to spare his life. I am conquered; I can hold the contest no longer: thou art too powerful for me. He cries what our ancestors used to term craven; the word spoken by him who was conquered in the battle ortdeal, or trial by combat.

Verse 11. When thou wilt rebuke dost correct man] תרחוק toachoth, signifies a vindication of proceedings in a court of law, a legal defence. When God comes to maintain the credit and authority of His law against sinners, He causes his beauty to consume away:—a metaphor taken from the case of a culprit who, by the arguments of counsel, and the unimpeachable evidence of witnesses, has the facts all proved against him; grows pale; looks terrified; his fortitude forsakes him; and he faints in court.

10 Remove thy stroke away from me; I am consumed by the blow of thine hand.

11 When thou with rebukes dost correct man for iniquity, thou makest his beauty to consume away like a moth: Surely every man is vanity. Selah.

12 Hear my prayer, O LORD, and give ear unto my cry; hold not thy peace at my tears: for I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were.

13 O spare me, that I may recover strength, before I go hence, and be no more.

Surely every man is vanity.] He is incapable of resistance; he falls before his Maker: and none can deliver him but his Sovereign and Judge, against whom he has offended.

Selah.—This is a true saying—an everlasting truth.

Verse 12. Hear my prayer] Therefore, O Lord, shew that mercy upon me which I so much need; and without which I must perish everlastingly.

I am a stranger with thee] I have not made this earth my home; I have not trusted in any arm but Thine. Though I have sinned, I have never denied Thee, and never cast Thy words behind my back. I knew that here I had no continuing city. Like my fathers, I looked for a city that has permanent foundations, in a better state of being.

Verse 13. O spare me] Take me not from this state of probation, till I have a thorough preparation for a state of blessedness! This he terms recovering his strength: being restored to the favour and image of God, from which he had fallen. This should be the daily cry of every human spirit: Restore me to Thine image, guide me by Thy counsel, and then receive me to Thy glory!

ANALYSIS OF THE THIRTY-NINTH PSALM.

This Psalm was apparently written on the same occasion as the preceding. The Psalmist is still suffering as before, yet is silent and patient: but the suffering at last becoming very sharp, he could hold his peace no longer; then he spoke. And we have reason to be thankful that he broke silence; as, whoever considers the weighty truths which he spoke, must allow.

There are three parts in this Psalm:—

I. His own account of his resolution to keep silence, ver. 1, and the consequences of it, ver. 2, 3.

II. His expostulation with God on the shortness, uncertainty, and frailty of life, ver. 4, 5, 6.

III. His petition to have his sin pardoned, ver. 8, to be saved from punishment, ver. 10, and for farther grace and respite, ver. 12, 13.

I. David acquaints us with his resolution: I said, I fully purposed to keep silence.

1. I said I will take heed to my ways that I sin not with my tongue.

2. This resolution he kept for a while. I was dumb;—I held my peace even from good, even from making a just defence.

3. But in this I found great difficulty; nay, impossibility.

1. For all the time my sorrow was stirred. My pain was increased by silence.

2. My heart was hot. I was strongly incited to utter my mind.

3. And, while thus musing, the fire burned; what was within I saw should not be longer concealed. Then spake I with my tongue.

II. He expostulates with God: and, being greatly oppressed both in body and mind, prays to know how long he is to live; or, rather, how soon he may get rid of his maladies, false friends, and deceitful enemies. Many considerations render his life uncomfortable.

1. It is very brittle and frail. Make me to know how frail I am.

2. It is very short. Behold, thou hast made my days as a handbreadth.

3. Yea, when carefully considered, it was even less, of no consideration. Mine age is as nothing before thee.

4. It was full of vanity. Verily, every man at his best estate, in his strength, riches, power, is altogether vanity. His labours promise much; perform little.

5. It is unstable, and uncertain,—as a shadow. Surely, every man walketh in a vain shadow.

6. It is full of trouble and inquietude. Surely, they are disquieted in vain.

7. Man labours for he knows not whom. He heareth up riches, and knoweth not who shall gather them,

CHAPTER XL.

The benefit of confidence in God, 1-3. The blessedness of those who trust in God, 4, 5. The expiation of the Jewish sacrifices in that of Christ, 6-8. The Psalmist's resolution to publish God's goodness, 9, 10. Prayers to be delivered from evils, 11-13. Prayers against his enemies, 14, 15. And in behalf those who were destitute, 16, 17.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

DAVID, King of Jerusalem. I WAITED patiently for the LORD; and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry.

2 He brought me up also out of a horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings.

3 And he hath put a new song in my mouth, a Heb. In waiting I waited.—b Ps. 27. 14 & 37. 7.—c Heb. a pit of noise.—d Ps. 68. 2, 14.—e Ps. 27. 3.—f Ps. 27. 32.—g Ps. 33. 3.—h Ps. 52. 6.—i Ps. 34. 8. Jer. 17. 7. Ps. 104. 3, 7.—j Ps. 173. 5.

Notwithstanding all this, he finds that even here, God is a sufficient Portion for them that trust in Him. Let others toil for riches; admire dignities, empires, pleasures; let them be proud of these, and complain that their life is too short to enjoy them;—I have a stronger hold; I am persuaded that the Lord will have mercy upon me, and be my Support in all the troubles and uncertainties of life. And now, Lord, what wait I for? My hope is in thee.

III. On this confidence he again begins to pray,—

1. For remission of sin. Deliver me from all my transgressions.

2. For defence against malicious tongues. Make me not a reproach to the foolish.

3. For submission under Divine chastisement. I was dumb, because thou didst it.

4. For a removal of his punishment. Take away thy plague from me.

1. And he adds the cause;—either remove Thy hand, or I must needs perish. I am even consumed by the blow of thy hand.

2. This he amplifies by the similitude of a moth;—and adds a second reason—When thou with rebukes dost correct, thou makest his beauty to consume away like the moth, which frets and destroys a garment. And, for confirmation, delivers his former opinion, which is to be considered as an incontrovertible maxim. Surely, every man is vanity. Selah, mark that!

3. To which he adds a third; the consideration of our present condition in this life. We, and all our fathers, are but pilgrims in this life. I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were. Therefore, spare me!

Faith has always to struggle with difficulties. Though he was confident, ver. 7, that God was his hope; yet his calamities, his sickness, his enemies, the brevity, fugacity, and troubles, of life, come ever into his memory; and, therefore, he prays again for them. And this arises by a climax or gradation;—

1. He prays for audience. Hear my prayer, O Lord!

2. That his cry, for such it was, be heard. Give ear unto my cry.

3. For admission of his tears. Hold not thy peace at my tears. The reason, as a stranger. Thy grace, Thy favour.

4. For some relaxation and ease. O spare me, that I may recover my strength; which he urges with this motive,—Before I go hence, and be no more seen. Restore me to Thy favour in this life. Hereafter, it will be too late to expect it. Let me not die unavenged!

NOTES ON PSALM XL.

The title, to the chief musician, we have already seen; and it contains nothing worthy of particular remark. Concerning the occasion and author of this Psalm there has been a strange and numerous diversity of opinions. I shall not trouble the reader with sentiments which I believe to be ill founded; as I am satisfied the Psalm was composed by David; and about the same time, and on the same occasion, as the two preceding; with this difference, that here he magnifies God for having received the mercy which he sought there. It is, therefore, a thanksgiving for his recovery from the sore disease by which he was afflicted in his body; and for his restoration to the Divine favour. The sixth, seventh, and eighth verses contain a remarkable prophecy of the incarnation and sacrificial offering of Jesus Christ. From the eleventh to the end contains a new subject, and appears to have belonged to another Psalm. It is the same as the seventieth Psalm; only it wants the two first verses.

Verse 1. I waited patiently for the LORD] The two preceding Psalms are proofs of the patience and resignation with which David waited for the mercy of God. The reader is requested to consult the Notes on them.

And heard my cry.] The two preceding Psalms shew how he prayed, and waited; this shews how he succeeded.

Verse 2. An horrible pit] Literally, the sounding pit; where nothing was heard except the howlings of wild even praise unto our God: many shall see it, and fear, and shall trust in the LORD.

4 Blessed is that man that maketh the LORD his trust, and respecteth not the proud, nor such as turn aside to lies.

5 Many, O LORD God, are thy wonderful works which thou hast done, and thy thoughts which are to usward: they cannot be reckoned up in order unto thee: if I would declare and speak of them, they are more than can be numbered.

6 Sacrifice and offering thou didst not desire:

beasts, or the hollow sounds of winds reverberated and broken from the craggy sides and roof.

The miry clay] Where, the longer I staid, the deeper I sunk; and was utterly unable to save myself. The Syriac and Arabic translate the pit of perdition, and the mud of corruption. These are figurative expressions to point out the dreary, dismal, ruinous state of sin and guilt; and the utter inability of a condemned sinner to save himself either from the guilt of his conscience, or the corruption of his heart.

Set my feet upon a rock] Thou hast changed my state, from guilt to pardon; from corruption to holiness; in consequence of which my goings are established. I have now power over all sin; and can walk steadily in the way that leads to God's kingdom.

Verse 3. A new song] Cheerfulness and joy had long been strangers to him. He seemed to live to utter the most doleful complaints, and be a prey to suffering and wretchedness. Praise for a sense of God's favour was a new song to him.

Many shall see it] I will publish it abroad;—and fear—to sin against the Lord, knowing by my example what a grievous and bitter thing it is.

And shall trust in the LORD.] Even the worst of sinners shall not despair of mercy, being penitent, when they see that I have found favour in His sight.

Verse 4. Blessed is that man] The man must be blessed and happy who casts his soul, with all its burden of sin and wretchedness, at the footstool of God's mercy: for He will save all who come to Him through the Son of His love.

Verse 5. Many—are thy wonderful works] The Psalmist seems here astonished and confounded at the counsels, loving-kindnesses, and marvellous works, of the Lord, not in nature, but in grace: for it was the mercy of God towards himself that he had now particularly in view.

Verse 6. Sacrifice and offering] The apostle, Heb. x. 5, &c. quoting this and the two following verses, says, When he (the Messiah) cometh into the world—was about to be incarnated, He saith to God the Father, Sacrifice and offering thou wouldst not; it was never Thy will and design that the sacrifices under Thy own law should be considered as making atonement for sin; they were only designed to point out My incarnation and consequent sacrificial death; and therefore a body hast thou prepared me, by a miraculous conception in the womb of a virgin; according to Thy word, the seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent.

A body hast thou prepared me—The quotation of this and the two following verses by the apostle, Heb. x. 5, &c., is taken from the Septuagint, with scarcely any variety of reading: but, although the general meaning is the same, they are widely different in verbal expression in the Hebrew. David's words are, וְאָזְנוֹתַי אֲזַנַּיִם אֲזַנַּיִם אֲזַנַּיִם aznayim carila li, which we translate, my ears hast thou opened; but they might be more properly rendered, my ears hast thou bored; that is, Thou hast made Me thy servant for ever, to dwell in Thine own house: for the allusion is evidently to the custom mentioned Exod. xxi. 2, &c. "If thou buy a Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve, and in the seventh he shall go out free: but if the servant shall positively say, I love my master, &c. I will not go out free; then his master shall bring him to the door-post, and shall bore his ear through with an awl, and he shall serve him for ever.

But how is it possible that the Septuagint and the apostle should take a meaning so totally different from the sense of the Hebrew? Dr. Kennicott has a very ingenious conjecture here: he supposes that the Septuagint and apostle express the meaning of the words as they stood in the copy from which the Greek translation was made; and that the present Hebrew text is corrupted in the word אֲזַנַּיִם aznayim, ears, which has been written through carelessness for אֲזַנַּיִם az geyah, THEN, a BODY. The first syllable az, THEN, is the same in both; and the latter ayim, mine ears hast thou opened: burnt-offering and sin-offering hast thou not required.

7 Then said I, Lo, I come: in the volume of the book it is written of me,

8 I delight to do thy will, O my God: yea, thy law is within my heart.

9 I have preached righteousness in the great congregation: lo, I have not refrained my lips, O LORD, thou knowest.

10 I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart: I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation; I have not concealed thy loving-kindness and thy truth from the great congregation.

11 Withhold not thou thy tender mercies from me, O LORD: let thy loving-kindness and thy truth continually preserve me.

which, joined to in az, makes aznayim, might have been easily mistaken for mevav, body; nun, being very like gimel; yod, like vau; and he, like final mem; especially if the line on which the letters were written in the MS. happened to be blacker than ordinary, which has often been a cause of mistake, it might have been easily taken for the under stroke of the mem, and thus give rise to a corrupt reading: add to this, the root carah, signifies as well to prepare, as to open, bore, &c. On this supposition the ancient copy translated by the Septuagint, and followed by the apostle, must have read the text thus, in az gevah carita li, σωμα δε καρπιας ποτ, then a body thou hast prepared me: thus the Hebrew text, the Version of the Septuagint, and the apostle, will agree in what is known to be an indisputable fact in Christianity; namely, that Christ was incarnated for the sin of the world.

The Ethiopic has nearly the same reading: the Arabic has both. A body hast thou prepared me, and mine ears hast opened. But the Syriac, the Chaldee, and the Vulgate, agree with the present Hebrew text; and none of the MSS. collated by Kennicott and De Rossi have any various reading on the disputed words.

It is remarkable, that all the offerings and sacrifices which were considered to be of an atoning or cleansing nature, offered under the law, are here enumerated by the Psalmist and the apostle, to shew that none of them, nor all of them, could take away sin; and that the grand sacrifice of Christ was that alone which could do it.

Four kinds are here specified, both by the Psalmist and the apostle:—viz. SACRIFICIA, zebach, θεσια; OFFERINGS, minchah, προσφορα; BURNT-OFFERINGS, olah, ελοκρωματα; SIN-OFFERINGS, chalaah, επι αναγιας.—Of all these we may say, with the apostle, it was impossible that the blood of bulls and goats, &c. should take away sin.

Thou hast had no pleasure] Thou couldst never be pleased with the victims under the law; Thou couldst never consider them as atonements for sin, as they could never satisfy Thy justice, nor make Thy law honourable.

Verse 7. In the volume of the book] במגלת ספר beni-gallath sepher, "in the roll of the book." Anciently, books were written on skins, and rolled up. Among the Romans, these were called volumina, from volvo, I roll; and the Pentateuch, in the Jewish synagogues, is still written in this way. There are two wooden rollers; on one they roll on, on the other they roll off, as they proceed in reading. The book mentioned here must be the Pentateuch, or five books of Moses; for, in David's time, no other part of Divine revelation had been committed to writing. This whole book speaks about Christ, and His accomplishing the will of God; not only in The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent, and In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, but in all the sacrifices and sacrificial rites mentioned in the law.

Verse 8. To do thy will.] God willed not the sacrifices under the law; but He willed that a human victim of infinite merit should be offered for the redemption of mankind. That there might be such a victim, a body was prepared for the eternal Logos; and in that body He came to do the will of God; that is, to suffer and die for the sins of the world.

1. Hence we see that the sovereign WILL of God is that Jesus should be incarnated; that he should suffer and die; or, in the apostle's words, taste death for every man: that all should believe on Him, and be saved from their sins; for this is the WILL of God, our sanctification.

2. And as the apostle grounds this on the words of the about: mine iniquities have taken hold upon me, so that I am not able to look up: they are more than the hairs of mine head: therefore my heart faileth me.

13 Be pleased, O LORD, to deliver me: O LORD, make haste to help me.

14 Let them be ashamed and confounded together that seek after my soul to destroy it; let them be driven backward and put to shame that wish me evil.

15 Let them be desolate for a reward of, their shame that say unto me, Aha, aha.

16 Let all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: let such as love thy salvation say continually, The LORD be magnified.

17 But I am poor and needy; yet the LORD thinketh upon me: thou art my help and my deliverer; make no tarrying, O my God.

Psalm, we see that it is the WILL of God, that that system shall end; for, as the essence of it is contained in its sacrifices, and God says He will not have these, and has prepared the Messiah to do His will, i. e. to die for men; hence it necessarily follows, from the Psalmist himself, that the introduction of the Messiah into the world, is the abolition of the law; and that His sacrifice is that which shall last for ever.

Verse 9. I have preached righteousness] I think it best to refer these words to Christ and His apostles. In consequence of His having become a sacrifice for sin, the Jewish sacrificial system being ended, the middle wall of partition was broken down; and the door of faith, the doctrine of justification by faith, opened to the Gentiles. Hence the gospel was preached in all the world, and the mercy of God made known to the Gentiles; and thus righteousness, justification by faith, was preached in the great congregation, to Jews and Gentiles, throughout the Roman empire.

The great congregation] Both in this and the following verse, I think, means the Gentiles, contradistinguished from the Jews.

The word righteousness means the plan or method of salvation by Jesus Christ,—God's method of justifying sinners by faith without the deeds of the law. See Rom. iii. 25, 26, and the Notes there.

Verse 10. Thy faithfulness] This means the exact fulfilment of the promises made by the prophets relative to the incarnation of Christ, and the opening of the door of faith to the Gentiles.

Loving-kindness] Shews the gift itself, of Jesus Christ; the highest proof that God could give to a lost world of His mercy, kindness, and loving-kindness.

Verse 11. Thy tender mercies] רחמים rachameyca, such propensities and feelings as a mother bears for her child; or animals, in general, to their young.

Let thy loving-kindness] חסדך chasdeca, Thy overflowing or superabundant mercy.

And thy truth] What is revealed in Thy word: continually preserve me. Mercy to help me; truth to direct me:—and, by the operation of both, I shall be continually preserved from sin and evil.

Verse 12. Innumerable evils have compassed me about] This part does not comport with the preceding; and either argues a former experience, or must be considered a part of another Psalm written at a different time, and on another occasion: and, were we to prefix the two first verses of the seventieth Psalm to it, we should find it to be a Psalm as complete in itself as that is.

They are more than the hairs of mine head] This could not be said by any person who was exulting in the pardoning mercy of God, as David was at the time that he penned the commencement of this Psalm.

Verse 15. That say unto me, Aha, aha.] הא הא הא ha-ach, ha-ach! See on Psa. xxxv. 21.

Verse 16. Let all those that seek thee—be glad] In making prayer and supplication to Thee, let them ever find Thee, that they may magnify Thee for the blessings they receive.

Love thy salvation] Who earnestly desire to be saved from sin:—saved in Thy own way, and on Thy own terms. The LORD be magnified.] Let God be praised continually for the continual blessings He pours down.

Verse 17. But I am poor] אני ani, afflicted, greatly depressed.

And needy] עביון ebejon, a beggar. One utterly destitute, and seeking help.

PSALM XLI.

The blessedness of the man who is merciful to the poor, 1-3. The Psalmist commends his enemies, and prays for support, 4-10. And blesses God for having heard his prayer, and preserved him from his adversaries, 11, 12. A fine doxology closes the Psalm, 13.

VIII. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David.

David, Right Instruments,
etc. etc. etc.

BLESSED ^a is he that considereth the poor: the LORD will deliver him ^c in time of trouble.

^a Prov. 14. 21.—^b Or, the weak, or, sick.—^c Heb. in the day of evil.—^d Ps. 77. 12.

The Lord thinketh upon me] The words are very emphatic: vvw adonai, my prop, my support, thinketh, (vvw yachoshah,) meditateth upon me. On which he concludes,—Thou art my help and deliverer. Seeing that my miserable state occupies Thy heart, it will soon employ Thy hand. Thou who meditatest upon me, wilt deliver me.

Makes no tarrying] Seeing Thou art disposed to help, and I am in such great necessity, delay not, but come speedily to my assistance. The Old Psalmist speaks to this effect:—"Let us not be so long under distress and misery that we lose our patience, or our love to Thee."

ANALYSIS OF THE FORTIETH PSALM.

There are two main parts in this Psalm:—

I. A thanksgiving, ver. 1-11.

II. A prayer, from ver. 12 to the end.

Thankfulness consists in the exercise of two virtues,—truth, and justice.

1. Truth calls upon us to acknowledge the benefit, and Him from whom we receive it.

2. Justice obliges us to be grateful, and to perform some duties as evidences of our thankful minds;—and both these we meet with in the first part.

I. David begins with a profession of thankfulness; shews his confidence,—I waited patiently for the Lord; then shews the success, or what God did for him.1. *He inclined his ear, and heard my cry.*2. *He brought me out of the horrible pit, and out of the miry clay.*3. He set my feet upon a rock. Being redeemed from danger, He set me in a safe place.4. He established my goings. He confirmed my steps, so that I slipped and slid no more.5. And He hath moved me to be thankful. He hath put a new song in my mouth. The deliverance was not common; and, therefore, the praise should not be common,—but expressed by a new and exquisite song.

And in this he supposed his example would be a common document. Many shall see my deliverance, and my thanksgiving; and shall fear God, and acknowledge His grace, His providence, and protection; and be led thereby to put their trust in Him. And then he produces his form of thanksgiving:—

First, He pronounces the man blessed who relies on God. 1. Blessed is the man that maketh the Lord his trust. 2. And blessed is he who respects not the proud. Men proud of their wealth and power; or such as turn aside to lies.Secondly, Then by exclamation admires God's mercies, and goodness to His people. 1. For their grandeur and multitude. Many, O Lord my God, are thy works. 2. For their supernatural appearance. Thy wonderful works.3. For the incomparable wisdom by which they are ordered. Many, O Lord, are thy wondrous works; and thy thoughts to us-ward, they cannot be reckoned up, &c.

And, having acknowledged his thankfulness, he speaks of the other part,—his gratitude; to which, in equity, he thought himself bound, viz. to be obedient to God's voice, which is, indeed, the best sacrifice, and far beyond all those that are offered by the law; as is apparent in Christ, to whom these words and the obedience contained in them is principally attributed; and by way of accommodation belongs to every one of his members who means to be thankful for his redemption.

1. And first, he tells us that outward worship is of little worth, if sincerity and true piety be wanting. Sacrifice and offering thou didst not require. Not these absolutely, but as subservient to true piety, and significative of the obedience of Christ unto death.2. To this end mine ears thou hast opened;—bored, made docile, and took me for Thy servant.3. And I will be Thy voluntary and obedient servant. Then said I, Lo, I come! I am ready to hear Thy commands.

4. He describes his ready obedience:—

1. That he performed it cheerfully. I delight to do thy will.2. That he did it heartily. Thy law is in my heart.

2 The LORD will preserve him, and keep him alive: and he shall be blessed upon the earth; and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies.

3 The LORD will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing; thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness.

4 I said, LORD, be merciful unto me: heal my soul; for I have sinned against thee.

^e Or, do not thou deliver.—^f Heb. burn.—^g 2 Chron. 20. 20. Ps. 6. 2. & 147. 3.

The obedience of eyes, hands, and feet, may be hypocritical;—that which is of the heart cannot. The heart Thou requirest, and the heart Thou shalt have;—and to that purpose I have put thy law in my heart.

3. He did this for the benefit of others:—He published the Gospel. 1. I have preached righteousness in the great congregation. 2. I have not refrained my lips; that thou knowest. 3. I have not hid thy righteousness within my heart. 4. I have declared thy faithfulness and thy salvation. 5. I have not concealed thy loving-kindness and truth from the great congregation.

In this verse we have the commendation of the Gospel;—that it is righteousness. Jesus, who is the Sum and Substance of it, purifies and sanctifies. It is God's truth and faithfulness; for in it His promises are performed. It is our salvation, freeing us from sin, death, the curse of the law, and hell-fire. It must, as such, be preached in the great congregation. And to it obedience must be yielded; and to this four things are necessary:—

1. The help of God's Spirit. Thou hast opened mine ears.2. A ready and willing mind. Then said I, Lo, I come.3. A ready performance in the work. I delight to do thy will.4. That respect be had to God's law. Thy law is within my heart.

But all that is here spoken must be considered as resting on the sacrificial offering which Christ made: for we must be justified by His blood; and through Him alone can we have remission of sins, the help of God's Spirit, or any power to do any kind of good.

II. This second part of the Psalm appears rather to be a part of another, or a Psalm of itself, as it relates to a different subject.

In the first part of the following prayer we have the sorrowful sighing of a distressed heart, vented in the most earnest petitions on account of the greatness of its sins, and the evils by which it was surrounded. A fear of being cut off causes the penitent to pray, Withhold not thy mercy from me, O Lord. 1. For innumerable evils have compassed me, &c. 2. My iniquities have taken fast hold upon me, &c. 3. Therefore, my heart faileth me. My agony is great, my vital spirit fails;—and, therefore, he prays again, 4. Be pleased, O Lord, to deliver me! make haste to help me!

The second part of his prayer is for the confusion of his wicked enemies. Let them be ashamed and confounded together,—that say, Aha! aha!

The third part of the prayer is for all good men. Let all those who seek Thee be joyful and glad in Thee; let them say—The Lord be magnified.

In the close he prays for himself;—and to move Divine mercy the sooner,—

1. He puts himself in the number of the poor and afflicted. He boasts not that he is a king, a prophet, a great man;—but, I am poor and needy.2. He shews his hope and confidence. Yet the Lord thinketh upon me.3. He casts himself wholly upon God. Thou art my help and my deliverer.4. Therefore, delay not. Make no long tarrying, O my God!

NOTES ON PSALM XLI.

The title, as before. The Syriac says it was—"A Psalm of David, when he appointed overseers to take care of the poor." The Arabic says,—"It is a prophecy concerning the incarnation: and also of the salutation of Judas." It appears to me to have been written on the same occasion as the three former; and to relate to David's malady and cure, and the evil treatment he had from his enemies during his affliction. Our Lord, by accommodation, applies the ninth verse to the treachery of Judas, John xiii. 18: but other direct reference to Christ or His history I believe the Psalm has none.

Verse 1. Blessed is he that considereth] God is merciful; He will have man to resemble Him: as far as he is merciful, feels a compassionate heart, and uses a benevolent hand, he resembles his Maker; and the mercy he 5 Mine enemies speak evil of me, When shall he die, and his name perish?

6 And if he come to see me, he speaketh vanity: his heart gathereth iniquity to itself; when he goeth abroad, he telleth it.

7 All that hate me whisper together against me; against me do they devise my hurt.

8 An evil disease, say they, cleaveth fast unto him: and now that he lieth he shall rise up no more.

9 Yea, mine own familiar friend, in whom shews to others God will shew to Him. But it is not a sudden impression at the sight of a person in distress, which obliges a man to give something for the relief of the sufferer, that constitutes the merciful character. It is he who considers the poor; who endeavours to find them out; who looks into their circumstances; who is in the habit of doing so; and actually, according to his power and means, goes about to do good; that is the merciful man of whom God speaks with such high approbation, and to whom He promises a rich reward.

Verse 2. The Lord will preserve him, and keep him alive. It is worthy of remark, that benevolent persons who consider the poor, and especially the sick poor; who search cellars, garrets, back lanes, and such abodes of misery, to find them out, (even in the places where contagion keeps its seat,) very seldom fall a prey to their own benevolence. The Lord in an especial manner keeps them alive, and preserves them; when many, who endeavour to keep far from the contagion, are assailed by it, and fall victims to it. God loves the merciful man.

Verse 3. The Lord will strengthen him. Good, benevolent, and merciful as he is, he must also die: but he shall not die as other men,—he shall have peculiar consolations, refreshment, and support, while passing through the valley of the shadow of death.

Thou wilt make all his bed. הטהב הטהב, thou hast turned up, tossed, and shaken it; and thou wilt do so to all his bed;—Thou wilt not leave one uneasy place in it; not one lump, or any unevenness, to prevent him from sleeping. Thou wilt do every thing consistently with the accomplishment of the great decree, Undo dust thou shalt return, to give him ease, refreshment, and rest. We may sum up the privileges of the merciful man.—1. He is generally blessed, ver. 1. 2. He will be delivered in the time of trouble, ver. 1. 3. He will be preserved by a particular Providence, ver. 2. 4. He shall be kept alive amidst infection and danger, ver. 2. 5. He shall be blessed on the earth in his temporal concerns, ver. 2. 6. His enemies shall not be able to spoil, or destroy him, ver. 2. 7. He shall be strengthened on a bed of languishing, to enable him to bear his afflictions, ver. 3. 8. He shall have ease, comfort, and support, in his last hours, ver. 3.

Verse 4. I said, Lord, be merciful unto me. I need Thy mercy especially, because I have sinned against Thee: and my sin is a deadly wound to my soul; therefore, heal my soul, for it has sinned against thee.

Verse 5. Mine enemies speak evil. It is often a good man's lot to be evil spoken of; to have his motives, and even his most benevolent acts, misconstrued.

Verse 6. And if he come to see me. This may relate to Ahithophel; but it is more likely that it was to some other person who was his secret enemy; who pretended to come and inquire after his health, but with the secret design to see whether death was despatching his work.

When he goeth abroad he telleth it. He makes several observations on my dying state; intimates that I am suffering deep remorse for secret crimes;—that God is shewing his displeasure against me, and that I am full of sorrow at the approach of death.

Verse 7. All that hate me whisper together against me. This is in consequence of the information given by the hypocritical friend, who came to him with the lying tongue, and whose heart gathered iniquity to itself, which, when he went abroad, he told to others as ill-minded as himself; and they also drew their wicked inferences.

Verse 8. An evil disease, say they, cleaveth fast unto him. His disease is of no common sort; it is a diabolical malady. He shall rise up no more. His disease is incurable without a miracle; and he is too much hated of God to have one wrought for him. Some apply this to the death and resurrection of Christ: He lieth,—he is dead and buried; he shall never rise again from the dead.

Verse 9. Mine own familiar friend. This is either a direct prophecy of the treachery of Judas; or it is a fact in

I trusted, which did eat of my bread, hath lifted up his heel against me.

10 But thou, O Lord, be merciful unto me, and raise me up that I may requite them.

11 By this I know that thou favour'st me, because mine enemy doth not triumph over me.

12 And as for me, thou upholdest me in mine integrity, and pretestest me before thy face for ever.

13 Blessed be the Lord God of Israel from everlasting, and to everlasting. Amen, and Amen.

m Heb. the man of my peace.—n Obad. 7. John 13. 18.—o Heb. magnified.—p Job 36. 7. Psa. 34. 16.—q Psa. 108. 48.

David's distresses which our Lord found so similar to the falsity of His treacherous disciple, that he applies it to him, John xiii. 18. What we translate mine own familiar friend, שׁוֹמֵר שְׁלוֹמִי ish shalom, is the man of my peace. The man who, with the שְׁלוֹמִי ish shalom lets, "peace be to thee," kissed me; and thus gave the agreed-on signal to my murderers, that I was the person whom they should seize, hold fast, and carry away.

Did eat of my bread. Was an inmate in my house. Applied by our Lord to Judas, when eating with Him out of the same dish. See John xiii. 18, 26. Possibly it may refer to Ahithophel, his counsellor,—the man of his peace,—his prime minister; who, we know, was the strength of Absalom's conspiracy.

Verse 10. Raise me up. Restore me from this sickness, that I may requite them. This has also been applied to our Lord; who, knowing that He must die, prays that He may rise again, and thus disappoint the malice of His enemies.

Verse 11. By this I know that thou favour'st me. If thou hadst not been on my side, I had perished by this disease: and then my enemies would have had cause to triumph.

This also has been applied to our Lord; and Calmet says it is the greatest proof we have of the Divinity of Christ, that he did not permit the malice of the Jews, nor the rage of the devil, to prevail against Him. They might persecute, blaspheme, mock, insult, crucify, and slay him; but His resurrection confounded them; and by it He gained the victory over sin, death, and hell.

Verse 12. Thou upholdest me. I am still enabled to shew that my heart was upright before God.

Settest me before thy face for ever. Thou shewest that Thou dost approve of me; that I stand in thy presence, under the smiles of thy approbation.

This also has been applied to our Lord, and considered as pointing out His mediatorial office at the right hand of God.

Verse 13. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel. By all these circumstances and events, glory shall redound to the name of God for ever; for the record of these things shall never perish, but be published from one generation to another; and it has been so.

From everlasting, and to everlasting. מִתְּחִלָּתָא עַד עַד מֵהַחַיִּים לְעַד הַחַיִּים. From the hidden time to the hidden time; from that which had no beginning to that which has no end.

Thus ends what the Hebrews call the first book of Psalms; for the reader will recollect that this book is divided by the Jews into five books, the first of which ends with this Psalm.

This Doxology, Dr. Kennicott supposes, may have been added by the collector of this book; and he thinks that the division into books is not arbitrary; and that the Psalms were collected at different times by different persons. See the Introduction, p. 117. There is certainly a considerable variety in the style of the several books; in the examination of which the Hebrew critic will not lose his labour.

ANALYSIS OF THE FORTY-FIRST PSALM.

In this Psalm David shews how men should, and how commonly they do, carry themselves towards men in affliction and trouble.

PSALM XLII.

The Psalmist earnestly longs for the ordinances of the Lord's house, 1-4. Describes his deep distress, 5-7. Endeavours to take comfort from the consideration that the Lord would appear in his behalf, 8, 9. Speaks of the insults of his enemies, 10. And again takes encouragement, 11.

To the chief Musician, ^a Maschil, for the sons of Korah.

As the hart ^b panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God.

2 My soul thirsteth for God, for ^c the living God: when shall I come and appear before God?

a Or, ^a Psalm giving instruction of the sons, &c. See 1 Chron. 6. 33. 37. & 25. 5. ^b Hart. ^c Strength.—^c Ps. 63. 1. & 84. 2. John 7. 37.—^d 1 Thess. 1. 8.

I. They should behave compassionately and kindly, which would tend to their own happiness, and cause them to find mercy from God, 1-4.

II. But they commonly behave unkindly and afflict the afflicted, ver. 4-10.

III. On which unkindness he flies to God, and prays for mercy, ver. 11. Shews his hope and confidence in God, ver. 11, 12.

I. He begins with an excellent grave sentence:—Blessed is he who considereth the poor; that is, any man in trouble and want, &c. This is a happy man. His particular comforts and privileges are six:—

1. The Lord will deliver him in the time of trouble.
2. The Lord will preserve him,—that he faint not in his troubles.
3. The Lord will keep him alive. Prolong his life and days.

4. He shall be blessed upon earth. God shall enrich him, and bless his substance.

5. He shall not be delivered unto the will of his enemies,—never to their full desire, though often into their hands.

6. The Lord will strengthen him upon a bed of languishing, and make all his bed in his sickness. He shall have comfort and assurance of God's favour.

II. He begins the second part with an ejaculation:—

1. I said, The Lord be merciful unto me! Pardon my sin.

2. Heal my soul. Extract the sting of sin, and all inward corruption.

3. He prays thus, because he is sensible that he has sinned against the Lord.

The complaint against himself being ended, he begins to complain of others.

1. Of their hatred and malice. Mine enemies speak evil of me.

2. Of their cruelty;—they longed for his death. When shall he die, and his name perish? They would have even his memorial cut off.

3. Their perfidious dealing and dissimulation. They came to visit him: but it was fraudulently to search out his counsels, and to entrap him in his words; and then to detail them abroad. If he comes to see me, &c.

4. Of their plots and conspiracies. All they that hate me, whisper, &c.

5. Their exultation at his misery. An evil disease, say they, cleaveth unto him, &c.

6. Of the perfidiousness of some particular friend, perhaps Ahithophel. Yea, mine own familiar friend hath lifted up his heel against me.

III. And then, against all these evils, and in his own defence, he prays,—But thou, O Lord, be merciful unto me, and raise me up. For which he gives these reasons:

1. That thereby, as a king, he should have power to do justice on traitors. That I may requite them.

2. By this he should have experience of God's favour. By this I know thou favour'st me, &c.

3. It will be a testimony unto me that Thou favour'st not only my person, but my cause. As for me, Thou upholdest me in mine integrity, and settest me before thy face for ever.

The Psalm, and with it the first book of the Psalms, according to the Jewish division, is closed with a doxology to God. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, from everlasting to everlasting. Amen, and Amen.

NOTES ON PSALM XLII.

The title,—“To the chief musician, giving instruction to the sons of Korah.” This is the first of the Psalms that have this title prefixed; and it is probable that such Psalms were composed by the descendants of Korah during the Babylonish captivity, or by some eminent person among those descendants; and that they were used by the Israelites during their long captivity, as means of consolation: and, indeed, most of the Psalms which bear this inscription are of the consoling kind; and the sentiments appear to belong to that period of the Jewish history, and to none other. The word maskil, from מָסַל sakal, signifies to make wise, to direct wisely, to give instruction; and here is so understood by our translators, who have left this signification in the margin: and so the Versions in general.

The Syriac says, It is a Psalm which David sung when he was an exile, and desired to return to Jerusalem.

The Arabic says,—A Psalm for the backsliding Jews.

Verse 1. As the hart panteth after the water brooks] The hart is not only fond of feeding near some water for the benefit of drinking; “but, when he is hard hunted, and nearly spent, he will take into some river or brook, in which, says Tuberville, he will keep as long as his breath will suffer him. Understand that when a hart is spent and sore run, his last refuge is to the water; and he will commonly descend down the streams and swimme in the very midst thereof; for he will take as good heed as he can to touch no boughs or twygges that grow upon the sides of the river, for fears lest the hounds should there take scent of him. And sometimes the hart will lie under the water, all but his very nose; and I have seen divers lie so until the bounds have been upon them, before they would rise: for they are constrained to take the water as their last refuge.” Tuberville's Art of Venerie, chap. xl. Lond. 4to. 1611.

2. Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and

^a Ps. 90. 5. & 102. 9.—^b Ver. 10. Ps. 79. 10. & 115. 2.—^c Job 30. 16. Ps. 62. 8.—^d Isa. 33. 23.—^e Ver. 11. & Ps. 43. 5.—^f Heb. bowed down.

The above extracts will give a fine illustration of this passage. The hart feels himself almost entirely spent,—he is nearly hunted down,—the dogs are in full pursuit,—he is parched with thirst,—and in a burning heat pants after the water;—and, when he comes to the river, plunges in as his last refuge. Thus pursued, spent, and nearly ready to give up the ghost, the Psalmist pants for God, for the living God! for Him who can give life, and save from death.

Verse 2. When shall I come? When, when shall I have the privilege of appearing in His courts; before God! In the mouth of a Christian these words would import;—When shall I see my heavenly country! When shall I come to God, the Judge of all; and to Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant! He who is a stranger and a pilgrim here below, and feels a heart full of piety to God, may use these words in this sense: but he who feels himself here at home, whose soul is not spiritual, wishes the earth to be eternal, and himself eternal on it; no panting in him after the living God.

Verse 3. My tears have been my meat day and night] My longing has been so intense after spiritual blessings, that I have forgotten to take necessary food; and my sorrow has been so great, that I have had no appetite for any. And I feel more for the honour of my God and His truth, than for myself; when the idolaters, who have thy people in captivity, insultingly cry, Where is thy God?

Verse 4. When I remember these things] Or, these things I shall remember. They often occur to me, and sharpen my distressful feelings. My soul is dissolved, becomes weak as water, when I reflect on what I have had, and what I have lost. Or, I pour out my soul to myself in deep regrets and complaints, when reflecting on these things. I once enjoyed all the ordinances of God, and now I have none. I once had the joyous communion of saints in God's ordinances: but that communion no longer exists, for there are no ordinances to support it. There was a multitude to worship God in public; with these I often went; but, alas, this is no more: now, there are found only a few solitary individuals who sigh for the desolations of Zion. There, we had our holy days, our appointed feasts, to commemorate the wonderful works of the Lord: now, there are no processions, no festivals, no joyous assemblies; all is desolation in Zion, and all is mourning in our captivity. I have endeavoured to give a general sense to this verse: but there are several difficulties in it; and different commentators and critics have given it a great variety of translations, and as many different meanings. My plan will not permit me to follow them. Much may be seen in Dr. Horsley's work on this verse.

Verse 5. Why art thou cast down, O my soul! Bad as the times are,—desolate as Jerusalem is,—insulting as are our enemies,—hopeless as in the sight of man our condition may be;—yet there is no room for despair. All things are possible to God. We have a promise of restoration:

why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance.

6 O my God, my soul is cast down within me: therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan, and of the Hermonites, from the hill Mizar.

7 Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy waterspouts: all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me.

He is as good as He is powerful;—hope, therefore, in Him.

I shall yet praise him] For restoration from this captivity. He is the health of my soul. I shall have the light and help of his countenance, His approbation, and a glorious deliverance wrought by His right hand.

Verse 6. O my God, my soul is cast down] It is impossible for me to lighten this load: I am full of discouragements, notwithstanding I labour to hope in Thee.

Therefore will I remember thee from the land of Jordan] That is, from Judea, this being the chief river of that country. And of the Hermonites] הַרְמוֹנִים the Hermonim, used in the plural, because Hermon has a double ridge joining in an angle, and rising in many summits. The river Jordan, and the mountains of Hermon, were the most striking features of the Holy Land.

From the hill Mizar.] מִצַּר מֵיָם mehar mitsar, from the little hill, as in the margin. The little hill probably means Zion, which was little in comparison of the Hermons.—Bishop Horsley.

Verse 7. Deep calleth unto deep] One wave of sorrow rolls on me, impelled by another. There is something dismal in the sound of the original, מֵי מַרְמָר עַל מַרְמָר tehm el tehm koré; something like, "And hollow howlings hung in air." Thompson's Ellenore. Or, like Homer's well known verse,—

Ἐν δ' ἄκρων παρα θίνα πολυφθοῦσθαι θάλασσης.

"He went silently along the shore of the vastly sounding sea." II. i. v. 34.

The rolling up of the waves into a swell, and the break of the top of the swell, and its dash upon the shore, are surprisingly represented in the sound of the two last words.

The Psalmist seems to represent himself as cast away at sea; and by wave impelling wave, is carried to a rock, around which the surges dash in all directions, forming hollow sounds in the creeks and caverns. At last, several waves, breaking over him, tear him away from that rock to which he clung, and where he had a little before found a resting place; and, apparently, an escape from danger. All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me; he is then whelmed in the deep, and God alone can save him.

Waterspouts] A large tube formed of clouds by means of the electric fluid, the base being uppermost, and the point of the tube let down perpendicularly from the clouds. This tube has a particular kind of circular motion at the point; and, being hollow within, attracts vast quantities of water, which it pours down in torrents upon the earth. These spouts are frequent on the coast of Syria; and Dr. Shaw has often seen them at Mount Carmel. No doubt the Psalmist had often seen them also, and the ravages made by them. I have seen vast gullies cut out of the sides of mountains by the fall of waterspouts.

Verse 8. The Lord will command] Every day the Lord will give an especial commission to His loving-kindness to visit me. During the night I shall sing of His mercy and goodness; and alternately mingle my singing with prayer for a continuance of His mercy and for power to make the best use of these visitations.

Verse 9. I will say unto God my rock] God, my Fortress and Support.

Why hast thou forgotten me?] This and the following verse is badly pointed in our Bibles. Why go I mourning as with a sword in my bones, because of the oppression of the enemy? Mine enemies reproach me daily, while they say unto me, Where is thy God? See on ver. 3. Their reproaches are to my soul as cutting and severe as a sword thrust into my body, and separating between my bones; because these reproaches are intended to fall on Thee, my God, as if Thou hadst not power to save us from the hands of our oppressors.

Verse 11. Why art thou cast down] There is no reason why thou shouldst be distressed. God will appear, and release thee and thy brother captives; and soon thy sighing and sorrowing shall flee away.

song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life.

9 I will say unto God my rock, Why hast thou forgotten me? why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

10 As with a sword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me: while they say daily unto me, Where is thy God?

11 Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance and my God.

Who is the health of my countenance] As a healthy state of the constitution shews itself in the appearance of the face; God will so rejoice thy heart, heal all thy spiritual maladies, that thy face shall testify the happiness that is within thee.

There is a curious gloss on the first verse of this Psalm in my old Psalter, which I cannot withhold from the Reader. The author translates and paraphrases the verse thus:—

Trans. Als the Hert yernes til the wellles of waters; so my saule yernes til the God.

Par. This Psalm is of al perite men, that er brinnand in the flamme of Goddes luf, and passes in til the contemplaty lyf: and tharfore it es sungen in the office of the dede men: for than haf thai, that thai yerned; that es, the syght of God. For thi, sais he, als the Hert that has elen the nedder, gredly yernes to come til the wellles of waters for to drynk and wax yong ogayne: so destroyed in me vices and unclennes, my saule desyres with brinnand yernyng, to come til the God.

Ælian, Appian, Aristotle, Nicander, and Pliny, all inform us that one cause why the hart thirsts for the waters is, that they eat serpents, and that the poison of them diffused through their entrails produces a burning heat and fever; to ease and cure themselves of which they have recourse to the water. Many of the fathers tell the same tale; and from them the paraphrast in the old Psalter has borrowed what is inserted above,—Like as the hart, which has eaten the adder, greatly longs to come to the fountains of water to drink that he may grow young again. The hart is undoubtedly a cunning animal: but it would be as difficult to believe that he eats serpents, as it would be to believe that he seeks for and eats the fresh water crab, or cray fish, in order to cure and make him grow young again, as Eusebius, Didymus, Theodoret, Jerom, Epiphanius, Gregory Nyssen, and others of the primitive fathers, gravely inform us.

ANALYSIS OF THE FORTY-SECOND PSALM.

The Psalmist, driven from the assemblies of God's people, complains: and as men, overwhelmed with troubles, are also oppressed with grief, so is he; and as they abruptly express their thoughts, so does he; and for sometimes he expostulates, sometimes he complains, sometimes he corrects and checks himself for his weakness. One while he opens his doubts, and presently again sets forth his confidence in God. It is difficult, on this account, to analyze this Psalm: but it may be reduced to these four heads,—

I. The zeal of the Psalmist to serve God in God's own house, ver. 1, 2, 4, 6.

II. His complaint and expressions of grief for his absence, for his affliction; and his enemies' insults on that ground, ver. 3, 4, 7, 10.

III. His expostulation with his soul for its diffidence, ver. 5, 6, and again with God for his desertion, ver. 9.

IV. His faith and confidence in God's promises, ver. 5, 8, 11.

I. 1. He begins with an expression of his grief for his exile from the ordinances of God, and the assemblies of His people. And he sets forth his zeal and longing desire under the expressive similitude of a hard-hunted and thirsty stag. As the hart panteth, &c. ver. 1, 2.

2. He shews the state he was in. 1. My tears have been my meat day and night, ver. 3. 2. And the cause was the bitter sarcasm of his enemies. Where is now thy God? Where is thy Protector? Him in whom thou trustest?

II. That which added to his grief was that which gave occasion to this sarcasm, his banishment from the sanctuary.

1. When I remember these things,—my absence,—their insults, I pour out my heart to myself—tear follows tear, and one complaint succeeds to another.

2. And much reason I have to grieve, when I compare my present with my former condition. Formerly, I went with the multitude to the house of God,—with the voice of joy and praise, &c. I had gone; now I cannot, and must not go.

PSALM XLIII.

The psalmist begs God to take his part against his enemies, 1, 2. To send his light and truth to guide him to the tabernacle, 3. Promises, if brought thither, to be faithful in the Divine service, 4. Chides himself for despondency, and takes courage, 5.

JUDGE me, O God, and plead my cause against an ungodly nation: O deliver me from the deceitful and unjust man.

For thou art the God of my strength: why doest thou cast me off? why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

1. Ps. 26. 1. & 25. 24.—b. Ps. 26. 1.—c. Or, unmerciful.—d. Heb. from a man of deceit and iniquity.—e. Ps. 25. 7.

III. Hitherto he had expressed his zeal, his sorrow, and complaints, with their causes. These put his soul in a sad condition;—and thus he expostulates with himself:—

1. Blaming himself for his weakness and diffidence. Why art thou cast down, O my soul, &c.

2. Then presently fortifies himself in God's promises. Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him, &c.

In all which is describ'd the combat that a good man has, when he is in heaviness through manifold temptation, and finds great difficulty to struggle between hope and despair; but at last conquers by faith, and inherits the promises.

3. But his conflict is not yet over; he exclaims again, and still more affectingly, O my God my soul is cast down. Of which he assigns two causes:—

1. That though he was ready to remember and serve God, yet he was forced to do it in an improper place. He remembered the pleasant land of Palestine, the stately mountains of Hermon, and the little hill of Zion: but there he could not worship; he was in an enemy's country, and in captivity in that country.

2. The greatness and continual succession of his troubles. Deep calleth unto deep. Calamity on calamity, one trial on the heels of another; so that he might well say, All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me.

3. And yet he despairs not, he encourages himself in the Lord. Yet the Lord will command his loving-kindness, &c. 1. His song shall be with me. 2. And my prayer unto the God of my life.

IV. On which he grows more confident and courageous; and again expostulates, not now with his soul as before, but with his God. I will say unto God my rock.

1. Why hast thou forgotten me?

2. Why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy.

3. Why am I wounded with grief—as with a sword in my bones;—while they use the sarcasm, Where is now thy God?

But in the conclusion, after all his complaints and expostulations, he gains a full assurance of God's favour and protection.

1. Chiding himself for his discontent and diffidence. Why art thou cast down.

2. Then he encourages his heart in God's goodness and faithfulness. Hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

The forty-third is most probably a part of this Psalm: they should be read and expounded together; as the subject is not complete in either, taken as separate Psalms. See, therefore, on the following.

NOTES ON PSALM XLIII.

There is no title to this Psalm in the Hebrew, nor in the Chaldee. The Syriac says it was composed "by David when Jonathan told him that Saul intended to slay him." The Arabic says of this as of the preceding, that it is a prayer for the backsliding Jews. It is most evidently on the same subject with the forty-second Psalm; had the same author or authors; and contains the remaining part of the complaint of the Jews, captives in Babylon. It is written as a part of the forty-second Psalm, by forty-six of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.

Verse 1. Judge me, O God, and plead my cause יִשְׁפֹּט יְיָ אֱלֹהֵי רִיבִי riḇah riḇi, a forensic term, properly enough translated, plead my cause, be my counsellor and advocate.

Ungodly nation] The Babylonians; the impious, perfidious, wicked, and deceitful Babylonians.

The deceitful and unjust man] Nebuchadnezzar.

Verse 2. For thou art the God of my strength] The Psalmist speaks here as in other places, in the person of the whole Israelitish people then captive in Babylon. We still acknowledge Thee for our God. Why are we cast off? Now that we are humbled and penitent, why are we not enlarged? Why are we not saved from this oppression of the Babylonians?

Verse 3. O send out thy light and thy truth] We are in darkness and distress, O send light and prosperity: we look for the fulfilment of Thy promises; O send forth Thy truth. Let Thy light guide me to Thy holy hill, to 3 O send out thy light and thy truth: let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles.

4 Then will I go unto the altar of God, unto God my exceeding joy: yea, upon the harp will I praise thee, O God my God.

5 Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

1. Ps. 42. 9.—g. Ps. 40. 11. & 57. 3.—h. Ps. 3. 4.—i. Heb. the gladness of my joy. k. Ps. 42. 5, 11.

the country of my fathers; let Thy truth lead me to Thy tabernacles, there to worship Thee in spirit and in truth.

Verse 4. Then will I go unto the altar] When Thy light, a favourable turn in our affairs, leads us to the land of our fathers; and Thy truth, the fulfilment of thy gracious promises, has placed us again at the door of Thy tabernacles; then will we go to Thy altar, and joyfully offer those sacrifices and offerings which Thy law requires, and rejoice in Thee with exceeding great joy.

Verse 5. Why art thou cast down] Though our deliverance be delayed, God has not forgotten to be gracious. The vision, the prophetic declaration relative to our captivity, was for an appointed time. Though it appear to tarry, we must wait for it. In the end it will come, and will not tarry;—why then should we be discouraged? Let us still continue to trust in God, for we shall yet praise him for the fullest proofs of His approbation in a great outpouring of His benedictions.

ANALYSIS OF THE FORTY-THIRD PSALM.

This Psalm, which is of the same nature with the former, and properly a part or continuation of it, contains two chief things:—

I. A petition, which is double. 1. One in the first verse. 2. The other in the fourth verse.

II. A comfortable apostrophe to his own soul, ver. 5. First, He petitions God,—

1. That, being righteous, He would be his Judge. Judge me, O Lord.

2. That, being merciful, He would plead his cause. Plead my cause.

3. That, being almighty, He would deliver him. Deliver me, ver. 1.

For this petition, he assigns two reasons:—

1. The unmerciful dispositions of his enemies. 1. They were a factious bloody inhuman people. Plead my cause against an ungodly nation, who will go to chase, a people without mercy.

2. They were men of deceit and iniquity. Deliver me from the deceitful and unjust man, ver. 1.

2. The other reason he draws from the nature of God, and his relation to Him. For thou art the God of my strength. Thou hast promised to defend me. On this he expostulates. 1. Why hast thou cast me off? For so, to the eye of sense, it at present appears. 2. Why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy? ver. 2. Secondly, The second part of his petition is, that he may be restored to God's favour, and brought back to his own country, ver. 3.

1. O send forth thy light and thy truth, the light of Thy favour and countenance;—and make Thy promises true to me. Let them lead me, ver. 3.

2. Let them guide me—whither? To dignity and honour? No, I ask not these: I ask to be guided to Thy holy hill and tabernacles, where I may enjoy the exercises of piety in Thy pure worship, ver. 3.

Thirdly, That he might the better move God to hear his petition, he does as good as vow that he would be thankful, and make it known how good God had been to him.

1. Then will I go unto the altar of God, my exceeding joy. The joy and content he would take in this should not be of an ordinary kind.

2. Yea, upon the harp will I praise thee, O God. His joy should be expressed outwardly by a Psalm, doubtless composed for the occasion; the singing of which should be accompanied by the harp, or such instruments of music as were then commonly used in the Divine worship.

The petitions being ended, and now confident of audience and favour, he thus addresses his heavy and mournful heart, as in the former Psalm. 1. Chiding himself. 2. Encouraging himself.

1. Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Chiding.

2. Hope in God: for I shall yet praise him who is the health of my countenance, and my God. Encouraging. See notes and Analysis of the preceding Psalm.

PSALM XLIV.

The Psalmist recounts the mercies of God, shews to his people how God in ancient times gave them the victory over all their enemies, 1-8. Points out their present miserable state, 9-16. Asserts that they have not apostasied, and appeals to God for the truth of his assertion, 17-22. And calls upon the Lord for deliverance from their enemies, 23-25.

NOTES ON PSALM XLIV.

The title here is the same as that in Ps. xliii. which see. The Syriac says it was "A Psalm of the sons of Korah, which the people and Moses sung at Horob." Such titles are fancies to which no credit should be attached. Like the preceding, it appears to belong to the time of the Captivity.

Verse 1. We have heard with our ears] The Psalmist begins with recounting the marvellous interpositions of God in behalf of the Jewish people, that he might the better strengthen his confidence, and form a ground on which to build his expectation of additional help.

Verse 2. Thou didst drive out the heathen] The Canaanites were as a bad tree planted in a good soil, and bringing forth bad fruit with great luxuriance. God plucked up this bad tree from the roots; and in its place planted the Hebrews as a good tree, a good vine, and caused them to take root and fill the land.

Verse 3. For they got not the land] Neither by their valour, nor cunning, nor for their merit; yet, they were obliged to fight. But how did they conquer? By the right hand of the Lord, and by His arm; by His strength alone, and the light of his countenance, His favour most manifestly shewed unto them.

Verse 4. Thou art my king] What Thou wert to them, be to us. We believe in Thee as they did; we have sinned and are in captivity, but we repent and turn unto Thee;—command, therefore, deliverances to Jacob, for we are the descendants of him in whose behalf Thou hast wrought such wonders.

Verse 5. Through thee will we push down] Through thy word, כַּסְפָּא כַּסְפָּא be-meymra, Thy substantial Word. Chaldee. If Thou be with us, who can be successfully against us? Literally, We will toss them in the air with our horn;—a metaphor taken from an ox or bull tossing the dogs into the air which attack him.

Through thy name] Jehovah,—the infinite, the omnipotent, the eternal Being; whose power none is able to resist.

Verse 6. I will not trust in my bow] As he is speaking of what God had already done for his forefathers, these words should be read in the past tense:—We have not trusted, &c.

Verse 8. In God we boast] We have told the heathen how great and powerful our God is. If Thou do not deliver us by Thy mighty power, they will not believe our report, but consider that we are held in bondage by the superior strength of their gods.

Verse 9. But thou hast cast off] Our enemies have dominion over us.

And goest not forth with our armies] Were we to attempt to muster our several tribes and form a host, like 10 Thou makest us to turn back from the enemy: and they which hate us spoil for themselves.

11 *Thou hast given us *like sheep appointed for meat; and hast^a scattered us among the heathen.

12 *Thou sellest thy people^b for nought, and dost not increase thy wealth by their price.

13 *Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us.

14 *Thou makest us a byword among the heathen, *a shaking of the head among the people.

15 My confusion is continually before me, and the shame of my face hath covered me, 16 For the voice of him that reproacheth and blasphemeth; *by reason of the enemy and avenger.

17 *All this is come upon us; yet have we not forgotten thee, neither have we dealt falsely in thy covenant.

18 Our heart is not turned back, *neither have our^c steps declined from thy way;

19 Though thou hast sore broken us in^d the place of dragons, and covered us^e with the shadow of death.

20 If we have forgotten the name of our God, or^f stretched out our hands to a strange god;

21 *Shall not God search this out? for he knoweth the secrets of the heart.

our fathers when they came out of Egypt, Thou wouldst not accompany us as Thou didst them: the horses and chariots of the Babylonians would soon overtake and destroy us.

Verse 10. Thou makest us to turn back] This Thou didst;—and our enemies profiting by the occasion, finding our strength was departed from us, made us an easy prey; captivated our persons, and spoiled us of our property.

Verse 11. And hast scattered us among the heathen.] This most evidently alludes to the Captivity. From the successful wars of the kings of Assyria and Chaldea against the kings of Israel and Judah, and the dispersion of the tribes under Tiglath-pileser, Shalmanezar, and Nebuchadnezzar, Jews have been found in every province of the East; there they settled, and there their successors may be found to the present day.

Verse 12. Thou sellest thy people for nought] An allusion to the mode of disposing of slaves by their proprietors, or sovereigns. Instead of seeking profit, Thou hast made us a present to our enemies.

Verse 14. Thou makest us a byword] We are evidently abandoned by Thee; and are become so very miserable in consequence, that we are a proverb among the people. "See the Hebrews! see their misery and wretchedness! see how low the wrath of God has brought down an offending people!" And the worst curse that can be imprecated against a wicked nation is,—Mayest thou become as wretched as the Jews; or, as the old Psalter,—"Thou hast sct us reproach til our neighbours; scornung and bethung til tha that et in our ungang. That es, gref, tourment that es of our neighbours, and that hethung as noht some gave or passand, that we suffer of the, that er al aboute us. When men saie, so byfal ye, als byfel him."

Verse 17. Yet have we not forgotten thee] These are bold words; but they must be understood in a qualified sense. We have not apostasied from Thee;—we have not fallen into idolatry. And this was strictly true: the charge of idolatry could never be brought against the Jewish nation from the time of the Captivity.

Verse 19. Thou hast sore broken us in the place of dragons] Thou hast delivered us into the hands of a fierce, cruel, and murderous people. We, as a people, are in a similar state to one who has fallen into a wilderness, where there are no human inhabitants; who hears nothing round about him but the hissing of serpents, the howlings of beasts of prey, and the terrible roaring of the lion; and who expects every moment to be devoured.

Verse 20. If we have forgotten the name of our God] That name יהוה Jehovah, by which the true God was particularly distinguished; and which implied the exclusion of all other objects of adoration.

Or stretched out our hands] Made supplication;—

22 *Yea, for thy sake, are we killed all the day long; we are counted as sheep for the slaughter.

23 *Awake, why sleepest thou, O Lord? arise, *cast us not off for ever.

24 *Wherefore hidest thou thy face, and forgettest our affliction and our oppression?

25 For *our soul is bowed down to the dust; our belly cleaveth unto the earth.

26 Arise * for our help, and redeem us for thy mercies' sake.

offered prayer or adoration to any strange god; a god that we had not known, nor had been acknowledged by our fathers. It has already been remarked, that from the time of the Babylonish captivity the Jews never relapsed into idolatry.

Verse 21. Shall not God search this out?] We confidently appeal to the true God, the Searcher of hearts, for the truth of this statement.

Verse 22. For thy sake are we killed all the day long] Because of our attachment to Thee and to Thy religion, we are exposed to continual death; and some of us fall a daily sacrifice to the persecuting spirit of our enemies; and we still carry our lives continually in our hands. In the same state were the primitive Christians; and St. Paul applies these words to their case, Rom. viii. 36.

Verse 23. Awake, why sleepest thou, O Lord? That is, Why dost thou appear as one asleep; who is regardless of the safety of his friends. This is a freedom of speech which can be allowed only to inspired men; and in whose mouths it is to be always figuratively understood.

Verse 24. Wherefore hidest thou thy face] Shew us the cause why Thou withdrawest from us the testimony of Thy approbation.

Verse 25. Our soul is bowed down] Our life is drawing near to the grave. If Thou delay to help us, we shall become extinct.

Verse 26. Arise for our help] Shew forth Thy power in delivering us from the hands of our enemies.

Redeem us] Ransom us from our thralldom. For thy mercies' sake. לְמַעַן לְמַעַן חַסְדֶּךָ, On account of thy mercy. That we may have that proper view of Thy mercy which we should have, and that we may magnify it as we ought to do, redeem us. The Vulgate has, Redime nos, propter nomen tuum. "Redeem us on account of Thy name;" which the old Psalter thus paraphrases:—"Help us in righteousness, and by us, (bury) that us, deliver us that we be withouten drede; and all this for thine name Jehou; nocht for oure merite."

ANALYSIS OF THE FORTY-FOURTH PSALM.

In this Psalm is lively expressed the sufferings, the complaints, the assurances, the petitions, which are offered to God by good men, who suffer, together with others, in the common afflictions that God brings on His people.

The parts are two:—

I. A petition, from ver. 24 to the end.

II. The arguments by which the petition is quickened, from ver. 1 to 24.

First, He begins with the arguments, of which the first is drawn from God's goodness, of which he gives, in particular, His benefits and miracles done for their fathers, as if he had said, This thou didst for them; why art thou so estranged from us?

I. We have heard with our ears, O God, and our fathers have told us what works thou didst in their days, and in the times of old. The particulars of which are:—

1. How thou didst drive out the heathen, namely, the Canaanites.

2. How thou plantedst them.

3. How thou didst afflict the people, and cast them out, ver. 2.

II. This we acknowledge to be thy work; expressed thus,—

1. How thou didst drive out the heathen:—negatively, by removal of what some might imagine; They got not the land in possession by their own sword, neither was it their own arm that helped them, ver. 3. Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name be the praise.

2. How thou plantedst them; positively,—For it was thy right hand and thy arm, and the light of thy countenance. A mere gratuitous,—because thou hadst a favour unto them; no other reason can be assigned but that, ver. 3.

3. Upon this consideration, by an apostrophe, he turns his speech to God, and sings a song of triumph, of which the strains are,—

1. An open confession. Thou art my king, O God.

2. A petition. Send help unto Jacob, ver. 4.

3. A confident persuasion of future victory; but still with God's help and assistance, ver. 5, 6, 7. 1. Through thee will we push down our enemies. 2. Through thee will we tread them under that rise up against us. All through Thee—in thy name,—by thy power.

4. An abrenunciation of his own power, or arm. For I will not trust in my bow, neither shall my sword save me.

5. A reiteration, or a second ascription of the whole victory to God. But thou hast saved us from our enemies; thou hast put them to shame that hated us, ver. 7.

6. A grateful return of thanks; which is, indeed, the tribute God expects, and which we are to pay upon our deliverance. In God we boast all the day long, and praise thy name for ever.

Secondly, The second argument by which he wings his petition is drawn from the condition in which, for the present, God's people were in before He had done wonders for their deliverance; but now he had delivered them to the will of their enemies. This would move a man to think that His good-will was changed toward them. But thou hast cast us off, and put us to shame, and goest not forth with our armies.

Of which the consequences are many and grievous, although we acknowledge that all is from Thee, and comes from Thy hand and permission.

1. The first is, Thou makest us to turn back from the enemy, ver. 10.

2. The second, We become a prey. They which hate us spoil for themselves, ver. 10.

3. The third, We are devoured. Thou hast given us as sheep appointed for meat; killed cruelly, and when they please, ver. 11.

4. The fourth, We are driven from our country, and made to dwell where they will plant us. Thou hast scattered us among the heathen, (inter gentes); and that is a great discomfort, to live among people without God in the world.

5. The fifth, We are become slaves, sold and bought as beasts; and that for any price, upon any exchange. Thou sellest thy people for nought, and dost not increase thy wealth by their price, ver. 12, putteth them off as worthless things.

6. The sixth, We are made a scorn, a mock;—and to whom? To our enemies, but that might be borne; but even to our friends and neighbours. Thou makest us a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and derision to them that are round about us.

And this he amplifies,—

1. From the circumstance that they are a proverb of reproach. Thou makest us a byword among the heathen.

2. That in scorn any one that would, used a scornful gesture toward them. We are become a shaking of the head among the people.

3. That this insulting is continual. My confusion is daily before me.

4. It is superlative; shame so great that he had not what to say to it. The shame of my face hath covered me.

5. It is public; their words and gestures are not concealed, they speak out what they please. Ashamed I am for the voice of him that reproacheth and blasphemeth; for the enemy and avenger.

Thirdly, And yet he useth a third argument, that the petition may be the more grateful, and more easily granted; drawn from the constancy and perseverance of God's people in the profession of the truth, notwithstanding this heavy loss, persecution, and affliction. All this is come upon us; thus we are oppressed, devoured, banished, sold, derided; yet we continue to be thy servants still;—we retain our faith, hope, service.

1. We have not forgotten thee, not forgotten Thou art our God.

2. We have not dealt falsely in thy covenant. We have not juggled in Thy service; dealing with any side for our advantage, renouncing our integrity.

3. Our heart is not turned back. Our heart is upright, not turned back to the idols our fathers worshipped.

4. Our steps are not gone out of thy way. Slip we may, but not revolt; no, not though great calamities are come upon us. 1. Broken. 2. Broken in the place of dragons, i. e. enemies fierce as dragons. 3. Though covered with the shadow of death. Now, that all this is true, we call this our God to witness, who knoweth the very secrets of the heart, and is able to revenge it. We have not forgotten the name of our God, or stretched out our hands, &c. Shall not God search it out? for he knows the very secret of the heart.

PSALM XLV.

The contents of this Psalm are generally summed up thus:—The majesty and grace of Christ's kingdom; or, an epithalamium of Jesus Christ, and the Christian church;—the duty of this church, and its privileges. The Psalm contains a magnificent description of the beauty, ornaments, valour, justice, and truth, of the Divine Bridegroom;—the beauty, magnificence, and riches of the bride, who was to become mother of a numerous and powerful posterity. The preamble is found in the side, end verse 1. The description and obituary of the Bridegroom, 2-3. The address to the bride by her companions, 10-15. A prediction of her successful and glorious descendants, 16, 17.

Fourthly. But the last argument is more pressing than the other three. It is not for any thing we have done to those that oppress us, that we are thus persecuted by them; it is for Thee, it is because we profess Thy name, and rise up in defence of Thy truth. Yea, for thy sake are we killed all the day long; for thy sake are we counted as sheep for the slaughter. The sum then is,—since Thou hast been a good God to our fathers; since we suffered great things under bitter tyrants; since, notwithstanding all our sufferings, we are constant to Thy truth; since these our sufferings are for Thee, for Thy sake, Thy truth; therefore, awake, arise, help us: for upon these grounds he commences his petition.

II. This is the second part of the Psalm, which begins at ver. 23, and continues to the end, in which petition there are these degrees,—

1. That God, who to flesh and blood, in the calamities of His church, seems to sleep, would awake, and put an end to their trouble. Awake, why sleepest thou, O Lord, ver. 23.

2. That He would arise and judge their cause, and not seem to neglect them as subjects. Arise, cast us not off for ever, ver. 23.

3. That He would shew them some favour, and not seem to forget their miseries. Wherefore hidest thou thy face, and forgettest our affliction and oppression?

4. Lastly, That He would be their Helper, and actually deliver them. Arise for our help, and redeem us for thy mercies' sake.

Which petition, that it might be the sooner and more readily granted, he briefly repeats the second argument,—For our soul is bowed down to the dust, our belly cleaveth to the earth, ver. 25. Brought we are as low as low may be, even to the dust, to death, to the grave.

NOTES ON PSALM XLV.

The title is nearly the same with that of Psa. lix. and lxxx. To the chief musician, or master of the band of those who played on the six-stringed instruments, giving instruction, for the sons of Korah; a song of loves, or amatory ode; or, a song of the beloved maids. The Vulgate and Septuagint have, For those who shall be changed, or brought into another state, which some have interpreted as relating to the resurrection of the just: but, if I could persuade myself that the title came by Divine inspiration, I would say more properly belonged to the calling and conversation of the Gentiles, and bringing them over from idolatry to the worship of the true God. By some the word שושנים shoshannim, is translated lilies; and a world of labour has been spent to prove that these lilies mean the saints, Jesus Christ Himself, and the Divine light which is a banner to them that fear Him. I cannot believe that any such meaning is intended; and consequently, I cannot attempt to interpret the Psalm after this model. I believe it to be an epithalamium, or nuptial song, which primarily respected Solomon's marriage with the daughter of Pharaoh; and that it probably has a prophetic reference to the conversion of the Gentiles, and the final aggrandizement of the Christian church.

Verse 1. My heart is inditing a good matter] ורר רצחתי, boileth or bubbleth up, as in the margin. It is a metaphor taken from a fountain that sends up its waters from the earth in this way. The Vulgate has eructavit, which is most literally translated by the old Psalter: פתח הרת תיפת גודו מורב. Bealecetes heortce min. My heart belcath.—Anglo-Saxon.

I speak of the things which I have made touching the king] וספר אנוני ספתי ללך literally, "I dedicate my work unto the king." Or, as the old Psalter, I say my works till the king. This was the general custom of the Asiatic poets. They repeated their works before princes and honourable men: and, especially, those parts in which there was either a direct or constructive compliment to the great man. Virgil is reported to have read a part of his Æneis before Augustus, who was so pleased with it that he ordered ten sestertia to be given him for every line. And the famous Persian poet Ferdusi read a part of his Shah

Name before Sultan Mahmoud, who promised him thirty thousand denars for the poem.

My tongue is the pen of a ready writer.] I shall compose and speak as fluently the Divine matter which is now in my heart, as the most expert scribe can write from my recitation. My tung of master stuffly trytand. "That es, my tung is pen of the Holy Gast; and nout bot als his instrument, whom he ledis als he wil. For I speke nocht bot that he settis on my tung; als the pen dos nocht without the writer. Stuffly trytand—for the vertu of goddes inspiracioun is nocht, for to thynk with mons stady, that he schewis til other of the purete of heven: that es sone for to com that he wrytes. Old Psalter.

Verse 2. Thou art fairer than the children of men] By whom are these words spoken? As this is a regular epithalamium, we are to consider that the bride and bridegroom have compliments paid them by those called the friends of the bridegroom, and the companions or maids of the bride. But it seems that the whole Psalm, except the first verse, was spoken by those who are called in the title יודיות yedidoth, the beloved maids, or female companions, who begin with his perfections, and then describe hers. And afterwards there is a prophetic declaration concerning his issue. We may, therefore, consider that what is spoken here is spoken by companions of the bride, or what are called yedidoth in the title. It would be unauthenticated to say, Solomon was the most beautiful man in the universe: but to the perfections of the Lord Jesus they may be safely applied.

Grace is poured into thy lips] This probably refers to his speech, or the gracious words which he spoke. Solomon was renowned for wisdom, and especially the wisdom of his conversation. The queen of Sheba came from the uttermost parts of the land to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and, so far did she find him exceeding all his fame, that she said, one half had not been told her: but, behold,—a greater than Solomon is here. No man ever spoke like this man; his enemies themselves being judges.

God hath blessed thee for ever.] This, I am afraid, could in no sense be ever spoken of Solomon: but of the man Christ Jesus it is strictly true.

Verse 3. Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, O most mighty] This clause should be translated, O hero, gird thy sword upon thy thigh! This, I think, cannot be spoken of Solomon. He was not a warlike prince; he never did any feats of arms. It has been said he would have been a warrior if he had had enemies. It might have been so: but the words more properly apply to Christ, who is King of kings, and Lord of lords; whose sword with two edges, proceeding from his mouth, cuts all His adversaries to pieces.

With thy glory and thy majesty.] Be as warlike as thou art glorious and majestic. Solomon's court was splendid; and his person was majestic. These words may be well said of him. But the majesty and glory of Christ are above all: He is higher than all the kings of the earth; and has a name above every name; and at it every knee shall bend, and every tongue confess.

Verse 4. In thy majesty ride prosperously] These words cannot be spoken of Solomon: they are true only of Christ. His riding is the prosperous progress of His gospel over the earth. He uses no sword, but the sword of the Spirit;—and what religion, system of truth pretended or real, ever made such progress as the religion of Christ has done, without one sword being ever drawn to propagate it from the first introduction of Christianity to the present time? His gospel is TRUTH, proclaiming HUMILITY, מור אנהוב, and RIGHTEOUSNESS. This, indeed, is the sum of the gospel; and an epitome of its operations in the hearts of men. 1. The gospel is a revelation of eternal TRUTH; in opposition to all false systems of religion, and to all figurative and ceremonial representations of the true religion. It is truth concerning GOD, His NATURE, and His WORKS. It is truth concerning MAN, his ORIGIN, his INTENTS, his DUTIES, and his END. It is truth in what it says concerning the natural, the moral, king's enemies; whereby the people fall under thee.

k. Psa. 93. 2 and the invisible world. 2. It teaches the doctrine of meekness, or HUMILITY; opposes pride and vain glory; strips man of his assumed merits; proclaims and enforces the necessity of humiliation, or repentance, because of sin.—Humiliation under the providential hand of God, and humility in imitation of the character of the Lord Jesus Christ throughout life. 3. The Gospel teaches righteousness; shews the nature of sin, wrong, injustice, transgression, &c.; works righteousness in the heart; and directs and influences to the practice of it in all the actions of life. The Gospel leads him who is under its influences to give to all their due: to God,—to his neighbour,—to himself. And it is by the propagation of truth, humility, and righteousness, that the earth has become so far blessed, and the kingdom of Christ become extended among men.

And thy right hand shall teach thee terrible things.] The Chaldee is different: And the Lord will teach thee to perform terrible things by thy right hand. The Arabic.—And with admiration shall thy right hand direct thee. The Septuagint.—And thy right hand shall lead thee wonderfully. To the same purpose are the Vulgate, Anglo-Saxon, and the old Psalter. The meaning is, nothing shall be able to resist Thee; and the judgments which Thou shalt inflict on thine enemies shall be terrible.

Verse 6. Thine arrows are sharp] The arrows here may mean the convictions produced in the hearts of men by the preaching of the gospel. The King is God Himself; His enemies are sinners of all sorts. The people the Jews—thousands of whom were pricked in their hearts under the preaching of Peter and others. All fall before Christ: those who received the word rose again by repentance and faith; those who did not, fell down—all down!

Verse 6. Thy throne, O God, is for ever] כִּסֵּא אֱלֹהִים לְעוֹלָם וָעֶד תְּהִי כִּסֵּא אֱלֹהִים לְעוֹלָם וָעֶד. "O God, Thy throne is for ever, and eternal!" The word elohim here is the very first term, or name, by which the Supreme God has made Himself known to the children of men. See Gen. i. 1, and this very verse the apostle, Heb. i. 8, has applied to Jesus Christ. On this I shall make a very short remark, but it shall be conclusive.—If the apostle did not believe Jesus Christ to be the true and eternal God, he has utterly misapprehended this Scripture.

The translation in the old Psalter, and the paraphrase, will, on this controverted text, be considered of some importance. Thi settil God in werld of worlde: bewte of ryghting hande of thi kyngdome. Here he loues [celebrates] God Crist of dome. Thi settil of demyng and of kynges pouste. God es werld of weuld for al that he demes es nocht chaunged and that byfalles the. for the wande that es ceptre and the governing of thi kyngdome es wande of ryghtyng, that ryghtes croked men this es the wand of godden evenes that ay es ryght and never croked that reules ryghtwis men and amyes wiked men. The Reader will observe a blank space between the word Crist, and of dome: it is the same in the original. A word has been so carefully erased with the scalpel, in the above place, that not a vestige of a letter is left. From the following words I should suspect it to have been kyng or werld. Here he praises God, Christ, king of judgment. However this may be, it is evident that this ancient commentator understood the word God to be applied to Christ. I have given the sentence as it is pointed in the original.

I have mentioned above that the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, chap. i. 8, 9, quotes verses 6, 7, of this Psalm. I shall subjoin the substance of what I have written on these verses, in that place:—

“Ver. 8. Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever—If this be said of the Son of God, i. e. Jesus Christ; then Jesus Christ must be God: and indeed the design of the apostle is to prove this. The words here quoted are taken from Psa. xlv. 6, 7, which the ancient Chaldee paraphrast, and the most intelligent rabbins, refer to the Messiah. On the third verse of this Psalm, Thou art fairer than the children of men, the Targum says, ‘Thy beauty, מְרֹאָה מְלֹכָא מִשְׁחִיחָא, O King Messiah, is greater than the children of men.’ Aben Ezra says, This Psalm speaks of David, or rather of his Son the Messiah, for this is His name, Ezek. xxxiv. 24. And David my servant shall be a Prince over them for ever. Other rabbins confirm this opinion.

“This verse is very properly considered a proof, and indeed a strong one, of the Divinity of Christ: but some late versions of the New Testament have endeavoured to avoid the evidence of this proof, by translating the words thus, God is thy throne for ever and ever; and if this version be correct, it is certain the text can be no proof of the doctrine. Mr. Wakefield vindicates this translation at large in his History of Opinions: and θεος being the nominative case, is supposed to be a sufficient justification of this version. In answer to this it may be stated that the nominative case is often used for the vocative, particularly by the Attics; and the whole scope of the place requires it should be so used here: and, with due deference to all of a contrary opinion, the original Hebrew cannot be consistently translated any other way: כִּסֵּא אֱלֹהִים לְעוֹלָם וָעֶד תְּהִי כִּסֵּא אֱלֹהִים לְעוֹלָם וָעֶד, Thy throne, O God, is for ever, and to eternity. It is in both worlds; and extends over all time; and will exist through all endless duration. To this our Lord seems to refer, Matt. xxviii. 18. All power is given unto me, both in HEAVEN and EARTH. My throne, i. e. my dominion, extends from the creation to the consummation of all things. These I have made, and these I uphold: and from the end of the world, throughout eternity, I shall have the same glory, sovereign unlimited power and authority, which I had with the Father before the world began, John xvii. 5. I may add that none of the ancient versions has understood it in the way contended for by those who deny the Godhead of Christ, either in the Psalm from which it is taken, or in this place where it is quoted. Aquila translates אֱלֹהִים Elohim, by Θεο, O God, in the vocative case: and the Arabic adds the sign of the vocative يا ya, reading the place thus: يا الله ابي ابن آدم يا الله يا الله korsee yallah ila-abadilabada, the same as in our Version. And, even allowing that θεος here is to be used as the nominative case, it will not make the sense contended for, without adding εσ: to it, a reading which is not countenanced by any Version, nor by any MS. yet discovered. Wickliff, Coverdale, and others, understood it as the nominative, and translated it so; and yet it is evident that this nominative has the power of the vocative; forsothe to the sone God thi troone into the worlde of worlde: a gerde of equite the gerde of thi reume. I give this, pointing and all, as it stands in my old MS. Bible. Wickliff is nearly the same, but is evidently of a more modern cast: but to the sone he settil, God thy trone is into the worlde of worlde, a gerde of equite is the gerde of thi reume. Coverdale translates it thus, But unto the sonne he sayeth; God, thy seate endureth for ever and ever: the ceptre of thi kyngdome is a right ceptre. Tindal and others follow in the same way, all reading it in the nominative case, with the force of the vocative; for none of them has inserted the word εσ, is, because not authorized by the original: a word which the opposers of the Divinity of our Lord are obliged to beg, in order to support their interpretation.

Heb. i. 8.

“A sceptre of righteousness—The sceptre, which was a sort of staff, or instrument of various forms, was the ensign of government, and is here used for government itself. This the ancient Jewish writers understand also of the Messiah.

“Ver. 9. Thou hast loved righteousness—This is the characteristic of a just governor: He abhors and suppresses iniquity; He countenances and supports righteousness and truth.

“Therefore God, even thy God—The original θις θεος εσ, θεος, θεος ου, may be thus translated, Therefore, O God, thy God hath anointed thee. The form of speech is nearly the same with that in the preceding verse: but the sense is sufficiently clear, if we read, Therefore God, thy God hath anointed thee, &c.

“With the oil of gladness—We have often had occasion to remark that, anciently, kings, priests, and prophets, were consecrated to their several offices by anointing; and that this signified the gifts and influences of the Divine Spirit. Christ, θε Χριστος, signifies The anointed One; the same as the Hebrew Messias; and He is here said to be anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows. None was ever constituted prophet, priest, and king, but Himself; some were kings only, prophets only, and priests only; others were kings and priests; or priests and prophets; or kings and prophets; but none had ever the three offices in his own person, but Jesus Christ: and none but Himself can be a King over the universe, a Prophet to all intelligent beings, and a Priest to the whole human race. Thus He is infinitely exalted beyond his fellows; all that had ever borne the regal, prophetic, or sacerdotal offices.

“Some think that the word μετρητος, fellows, refers to believers, who are made partakers of the same Spirit, but cannot have its infinite plenitude. The first sense seems the best. Gladness is used to express the festivities which took place on the inauguration of kings, &c.”

7 'Thou lovest righteousness, and hatest wickedness: therefore " God, " thy God, " hath anointed thee with the oil " of gladness above thy fellows.

8 'All thy garments smell of myrrh, and aloe, and cassia, out of the ivory palaces, whereby they have made thee glad.

9 'Kings' daughters were among thy honourable women: ' upon thy right hand did stand the queen in gold of Ophir.

10 Harken, O daughter, and consider, and incline thine ear; ' forget also thine own people, and thy father's house;

11 So shall the king greatly desire thy beauty: " for he is thy Lord; and worship thou him.

Verse 8. All thy garments smell of myrrh] The Asiatics are very partial to perfumes: every thing with them is perfumed, and especially their garments. And the ivory palaces mentioned are the wardrobes inlaid with ivory, in which their numerous changes of raiment were deposited. Myrrh and aloe are well known: cassia is probably the bark or wood of the cinnamon tree. These with frankincense, galbanum, and other odoriferous drugs, were, and are, frequently used in the perfumes of the Asiatic nations.

Whereby they have made thee glad.] Referring to the effect of strong perfumes, refreshing and exhilarating the spirits.

Verse 9. Kings' daughters were among] Applied to Solomon, these words have no difficulty. We know he had three hundred wives, princesses:—and the mention of those here may be intended only to shew how highly respected he was among the neighbouring sovereigns, when they cheerfully gave him their daughters to constitute his harem. If we apply it to Solomon's marriage with the daughter of the king of Egypt, it may signify no more than the princesses and ladies of honour, who accompanied her to the Israelitish court. Applied to Christ, it may signify that the gospel, though preached particularly to the poor, became also the means of salvation to many of the kings, queens, and nobles of the earth. The Chaldee interprets the queen standing at his right hand, of the law; and the honourable women, as the different regions and countries coming to receive that law from his right hand. Perhaps, by kings' daughters may be meant different regions and countries, which are represented as constituting the families of potentates. Whole nations shall be converted to the Christian faith: and the queen, the Christian church, shall be most elegantly adorned with all the graces and good works which at once constitute and adorn the Christian character.

Verse 10. Harken, O daughter, and consider] This is the beginning of the address by the companions of the bride to their mistress: after having, in the preceding verses, addressed the bridegroom; or, rather, given a description of his person, qualities, and magnificence. Suppose the daughter of Pharaoh to be intended, the words import,—Thou art now become the spouse of the most magnificent monarch in the universe. To thee he must be all in all:—forget, therefore, thy own people the Egyptians, and take the Israelites in their place. Forget also thy father's house; thou art now united to a new family. So shall the king, Solomon, greatly desire thy beauty:—thou wilt be, in all respects, pleasing to him. And it is right thou shouldst act so; for he is now become thy lord, thy supreme governor. And worship thou him;—submit thyself reverently and affectionately to all his commands.

Taken in reference to Christ, and the gospel, this is an address to the Gentiles to forsake their idolatrous customs and connexions; to embrace Christ and His gospel in the spirit of reverence and obedience; with the promise that, if beautified with the graces of His Spirit, Christ will delight in them, and take them for His peculiar people:—which has been done.

Verse 12. The daughter of Tyre shall be there with a gift] The Tyrians shall pay tribute to thy spouse, and assist him in all his grand and magnificent operations.

As, at this time, Tyre was the greatest maritime and commercial city in the world, it may be here taken as representing those places which lay on the coasts of the sea, and carried on much traffic; such as parts of Syria, Egypt, Asia Minor, Greece, Italy, France, the British isles, &c. which first received the gospel of Christ, and were the instruments of sending it to all the other nations of the earth.

lent empires, kingdoms, and states, shall embrace Christianity, and entreat the favour of its Author.

Verse 13. The king's daughter is all glorious within] This, in some sense, may be spoken of Solomon's bride, the daughter of the king of Egypt; and then the expression may refer either to the cultivation of her mind, or the ornaments and splendour of her palace. The Asiatic queens, sultanas, and begums, scarcely ever appear in public. They abide in the harem in the greatest luxury and splendour: and to this, as its literal meaning, the text may possibly refer.

Her clothing is of wrought gold] Of the most costly embroidery; her palace, and her person, are decorated in the very highest state of elegance and magnificence.

Spiritually, the king's daughter may mean the Christian church filled with the spirit that was in Christ, and adorned with the graces of the Holy Spirit; while the whole of its outward conduct is pure and holy, ornamented with the works of faith and love, and always bringing forth the fruits of the Spirit.

Verse 14. She shall be brought unto the king] When an Asiatic princess is brought to her spouse, she is enclosed in a palatke, and no part of her person is visible. She is attended with her principal friends and companions, who follow the palatke; and the ceremony is accompanied with great rejoicing; and thus they enter into the palace of the king.

This part of this parabolical Psalm may refer to the glories of a future state. The Christian church shall be brought to the King eternal in the great day, adorned with the graces of the Divine Spirit; and thus shall all the redeemed of the Lord enter into the king's palace,—into the everlasting joy of their Lord.

Verse 16. Instead of thy fathers shall be thy children] This is the third part, or prophetic declaration relative to the numerous and powerful issue of this marriage. Instead of the kindred, which thou hast left behind in Egypt, thou shalt have numerous children. This cannot refer either to Solomon, or to the daughter of Pharaoh: for there is no evidence that he ever had a child by Pharaoh's daughter; and it is very certain that Rehoboam, Solomon's successor, was not son to the daughter of Pharaoh; nor did any princes of that line ever occupy a foreign throne; nor by successive generations ever continue the remembrance of Solomon and his Egyptian queen. The children mentioned here are generally supposed to mean the apostles and their successors in the Christian ministry; founding churches all over the world, by whom the Christian name becomes a memorial all over the earth.

Verse 17. Therefore shall the people praise thee] They shall magnify the heavenly Bridegroom, and sing the wonderful displays of His love to the Church His spouse. And the constant use of this Psalm in the Christian church is a literal fulfilment of the prophecy.

ANALYSIS OF THE FORTY-FIFTH PSALM.

The type of the Messiah is Solomon: of the church, especially of the Gentiles to be espoused, Pharaoh's daughter.

There are three parts in this Psalm:—

- I. A preface, ver. 1, 2.
- II. The body of the Psalm, containing two commendations,—
 1. Of the bridegroom, from ver. 3 to 9.
 2. Of the bride, from ver. 10 to 15.
- III. The conclusion promissory, and laudatory, ver. 16 to 17.

I. In the preface the prophet commends the subject he is to treat of,—

1. Signifying that it is a good thing; good, as speaking of the Son of God, who is the chief good.
2. And good for us; for, on our union with the church, and Christ's union with that, depends our eternal good.

5 God is ⁱⁿ the midst of her: she shall not be moved: God shall help her, ^{and that} right early.

6 ^{The} heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved: he uttered his voice, ^{the} earth melted.

7 ^{The} Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is ^{our} refuge. Selah.

8 ^{Come,} behold the works of the Lord, what desolations he hath made in the earth.

1. Deut. 28. 14. Isai. 12. 6. Ezek. 43. 7. 9. Hos. 11. 9. Joel 2. 27. Zeph. 3. 15. Zech. 2. 5. 10. 11. & 8. 2.—1. Hab. when the morning appeared: See Ezek. 14. 24. 27. 3 Chron. 20. 30. Ps. 102. 6. & 142. 8.

and, instead of ruining and destroying the poor Jews, preserved them alive, and gave them their liberty: and thus the city of God, and the tabernacle of the Most High, were gladdened.

Verse 5. God is in the midst of her] God will not abandon them that trust in Him; He will maintain His own cause; and, if His church should at any time be attacked, He will help her, and that right early;—with the utmost speed. As soon as the onset is made, God is there to resist. As, by the day-break, the shadows and darkness are dissipated; so, by the bright rising of Jehovah, the darkness of adversity shall be scattered.

Verse 6. The heathen raged] There had been terrible wars on all hands, and mighty states were crushed; when the poor Jews were, by the especial favour of God, kept in peace and safety. Kingdoms were moved, while they were preserved.

He uttered his voice] These words seem to refer to thunder, lightning, and earthquake. The expressions, however, may be figurative, and refer to the wars and desolations already mentioned. God gave the command; and one empire was cast down, and another was raised up.

Verse 7. The Lord of hosts is with us] We, feeble Jews, were but a handful of men: but the Lord of hosts, the God of armies, was on our side. Him none could attack with hope of success; and His legions could not be overthrown.

The God of Jacob] The God who appeared to Jacob in his distress, and saved him out of all his troubles, appeared also for us, his descendants, and has amply proved to us that He has not forgotten His covenant.

Verse 8. Come, behold the works of the Lord] See empires destroyed and regenerated; and in such a way as to shew that a supernatural agency has been at work. By the hand of God alone could these great changes be effected.

Verse 9. He maketh wars to cease] By the death of Cambyses, and setting Darius son of Hystaspes upon the Persian throne, He has tranquilized the whole empire. That same God, who for our unfaithfulness has delivered us into the hands of our enemies, and subjected us to a long and grievous captivity and affliction, has now turned our captivity, raised us up the most powerful friends and protectors in the very place in which we have been enduring so great a fight of afflictions.

He breaketh the bow] He has rendered useless all the implements of war;—and so profound and secure is the general tranquillity, that the bow may be safely broken, the spear snapped asunder, and the chariot burnt in the fire.

Verse 10. Be still, and know that I am God] הרפו haphu, Cease from your provocations of the Divine justice;—cease from murmuring against the dispensations of His providences;—cease from your labour for a season, that ye may deeply reflect on the severity and goodness of God: severity to those who are brought down and destroyed,—goodness to you who are raised up and exalted. Cease from sin and rebellion against your God; let that disgrace you no more, that ye may no more be brought into distress and desolation.

Know that I am God;—understand that I am the Fountain of power, wisdom, justice, goodness, and truth.

I will be exalted among the heathen] By the dispensation of punishments, the heathen shall know me to be the God of justice: by the publication of my Gospel among them, they shall know me to be the God of goodness.

I will be exalted in the earth] I will have my salvation proclaimed in every nation, among every people, and in every tongue.

Verse 11. The Lord of hosts is with us] Having heard these declarations of God, the people cry out with joy and exultation.—The Lord of hosts, the God of armies, is with us; we will not fear what man can do unto us.

The God of Jacob is our refuge] He who saved our fathers will save us, and will never abandon His people in distress.

Selah.] This is a firm, lasting, unshaken, well-tryed truth.

9 ^{He} maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth: ^{he} breaketh the bow, and cutteth the spear in sunder; ^{he} burneth the chariot in the fire.

10 Be still, and know that I am God: ^I will be exalted among the heathen, I will be exalted in the earth.

11 ^{The} Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is ^{our} refuge. Selah.

ANALYSIS OF THE FORTY-SIXTH PSALM.

Two things especially are to be considered in this Psalm:—

I. The confidence the church has in God, ver. 1 to 8.
II. The exhortation to consider Him as the Lord of hosts, the Punisher of the refractory and disobedient nations, often by means of war; and the only Giver of peace and tranquillity, ver. 8—10.

I. He begins with a maxim which is the ground of all the confidence which the people of God can have. God is our Asylum, or Place of refuge to fly to; our Strength, Stay, Munition, on which to rely. A very present help to deliver us in time of trouble.

From which maxim this conclusion is drawn:—therefore will we not fear; not even in the greatest calamities, nor in the midst of the most numerous adversaries. This he expresses, first, metaphorically; next, in plain terms:—

1. Though the earth on which the church is seated be moved, or removed.

2. Though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea;—that is, the greatest and strongest empires and kingdoms should be ruined, and overwhelmed.

3. Though the waters roar, and be troubled. Though multitudes of people threaten, and join their forces to ruin, the church.

4. Though the mountains (i. e. kingdoms) shake with the swelling thereof. Waters mean people. Rev. xvii.

More plainly, for we have the interpretation of these metaphors, ver. 6, Though the heathen raged, and the kingdoms were moved; yet we were not afraid, nor will we fear. We have a fine illustration of this bold feeling, (from a consciousness of rectitude, and consequently Divine protection,) from the pen of a heathen poet:—

*Justum et tenacem propositi virum,
Non clementer arbor preta submittunt,
Non velut insaniis tyranni
Mente possit collida: Neque duster.
Dux inquit turbidus Adria,
Nec fulminantis magna Jovis manus,
Si fractus illibor orbis,
Impendium ferient ruitis.*—Hor. Car. lib. iii. Od. 8.

“The man in conscious virtue bold,
Who dares his secret purpose hold,
Unshaken bears the crowd’s tumultuous cries,
And the impetuous tyrant’s angry brow defies.
Let the wild winds that rattle the seas
Tempestuous, all their horrors raise:
Let Jove’s dread arm with thunders rend the spheres;
Beneath the crash of worlds, unshaken he appears.”—Francis.

2. Of this undaunted state of mind he next descends to shew the reasons:—

1. There is a river, &c. The city of God was Jerusalem, the type of the church; and the holy place of the tabernacles was the temple. The little Shiloh, that ran softly, watered Jerusalem; and the promises of the gospel, that shall always flow in the church, shall make glad the hearts of God’s people.

2. God is in the midst of her, to keep, to defend her; therefore, she shall not be moved, i. e. utterly removed, but shall remain for ever.

3. God shall help her, and deliver her—right early—in the proper season.

4. He uttered his voice, and the earth melted. The hearts of the men of the earth, that exalted themselves against His church, at the least word uttered from His mouth, melted; were struck with fear and terror.

5. The Lord of hosts is with us. And even the armies of our enemies are at His command, and will fight for us whenever He pleases. He is the Lord of all hosts.

6. The God of Jacob is our refuge. He is our Asylum, and He will save us, ver. 7, 11.

II. The second part contains two exhortations:—

I. He calls on all to behold the works of the Lord; and he produces two instances worthy of observation:—

1. JUDGEMENT is His work; and he afflicts refractory and sinful nations by WAR. See what desolations he hath made in the earth! 2. PEACE is His work. He maketh wars to cease to the end of the earth.

2. Then, in the person of God, he exhorts the enemies of the church to be quiet; for their endeavours are vain, and their rage to no purpose. Be still, and know that I am God.

PSALM XLVII.

The Gentiles are invited to celebrate the praises of God as the Sovereign of the world, 1, 2. The Jews exult in his kindness to them, 3, 4. All then join to celebrate His majesty as reigning over the heathen, and gathering the dispersed Jews and Gentiles together into one church, 5-8.

3. And he concludes with a gracious promise, of being celebrated among the heathen, and through the whole earth. NOTES ON PSALM XLVII.

The title, "A Psalm for the sons of Korah," has nothing remarkable in it. The Psalm was probably written about the same time with the preceding; and relates to the happy state of the Jews, when returned to their own land. They renewed their praises and promises of obedience, and celebrate Him for the deliverance they had received. See the Introduction to the preceding Psalm. In a spiritual sense, it appears to relate to the calling of the Gentiles to be made partakers of the blessings of the gospel with the converted Jews.

Verse 1. O clap your hands, all ye people] Let both Jews and Gentiles magnify the Lord: the Jews for being delivered from the Babylonish captivity;—the Gentiles for being called to enter into the glorious liberty of the children of God.

Verse 2. For the Lord most high is terrible] He has insufferable majesty; and is a great king,—the mightiest of all emperors, for He is Sovereign over the whole earth.

Verse 3. He shall subdue the people under us] He shall do again for us what He had done for our forefathers; give us dominion over our enemies, and establish us in our own land. I would rather read this in the past tense, relative to what God did for their fathers in destroying the Canaanites, and giving them the Promised Land for their possession, and taking the people for His own inheritance. This is also applied to the conversion of the Gentiles who, on the rejection of the Jews, have become His inheritance; and whom He has chosen to inherit all those spiritual blessings typified by the sacrifices and other significant rites and ceremonies of the Jewish church.

Verse 5. God is gone up with a shout] Primarily, this may refer to the rejoicing and sounding of trumpets, when the ark was lifted up to be carried on the shoulders of the Levites. But it is generally understood as a prophetic declaration of the ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ; and the shout may refer to the exultation of the Evangelists and apostles in preaching Christ crucified, buried, risen from the dead, and ascended to heaven, ever to appear in the presence of God for us. This was the triumph of the apostles: and the conversion of multitudes of souls by this preaching was the triumph of the cross of Christ.

Verse 6. Sing praises] שירי זמרו: this word is four times repeated in this short verse; and shews at once the earnestness and happiness of the people. They are the words of exultation and triumph. Feel your obligation to God:—express it in thanksgiving;—be thankful;—be eternally thankful to God your King.

Verse 7. For God is the King of all the earth] He is not your King only, but the King of the universe. He has no limited power, no confined dominion.

Sing ye praises with understanding.] שירי זמרו זמרו זמרו זמרו maskil, sing an instructive song. Let sense and sound go together. Let your hearts and heads go with your voices. Understand what you sing; and feel what you understand: and let the song be what will give instruction in righteousness to them that hear it. פתח פיך, Sing wisely, Anglo-Saxon. Multitudes sing foolishly.

Verse 8. God reigneth over the heathen] Though this is literally true in God's universal dominion, yet more is here meant. God reigns over the heathen when, by the preaching of the gospel, they are brought into the church of Christ.

God sitteth upon the throne of his holiness.] He is a holy God;—He proclaims holiness. His laws are holy; He requires holiness; and his genuine people are all holy. The throne of his holiness is the heaven of heavens; also the temple at Jerusalem; and, lastly, the hearts of the faithful.

Verse 9. The princes of the people are gathered together] שירי זמרו נסיבי אמימ. The voluntary people;—

4 He shall choose our inheritance for us, the excellency of Jacob whom he loved. Selah.

5 * God is gone up with a shout, the Lord with the sound of a trumpet.

6 Sing praises to God, sing praises: sing praises unto our King, sing praises.

7 * For God is the King of all the earth: sing ye praises * with understanding.

8 * God reigneth over the heathen: God sitteth upon the throne of his holiness.

9 * The princes of the people are gathered together, * even the people of the God of Abraham: * for the shields of the earth belong unto God: he is * greatly exalted.

97. 1. & 98. 1. Rev. 19. 6.—m Or, The voluntary of the people are gathered unto the people of the God of Abraham.—n Rom. 4. 11, 12.—o Psa. 99. 12.—p Psa. 119. 9. Isai. 2. 11, 17. & 53. 10. Phil. 2. 9.

the princely, noble, or free-willed people;—those who gladly receive the word of life;—those who, like the Bereans, were of a noble or liberal disposition; and, when they heard the gospel, searched the Scriptures to see whether these things were so. It is a similar word which is used Psa. cx. 3, and I believe both texts speak of the same people; the Gentiles who gladly come unto his light, and present themselves a freewill-offering to the Lord.

The people of the God of Abraham] Who were Abraham's people? Not the Jews: the covenant was made with him while yet in uncircumcision. Properly speaking, Gentiles are those whom he represented: for the covenant was made with him while yet a Gentile; and in his seed all the nations, the Gentiles, of the earth, were to be blessed. The people of the God of Abraham are the Gentiles, who, receiving the gospel, are made partakers of the faith of Abraham, and are his spiritual children. The God of Abraham, has Abraham's spiritual posterity, the believing Gentiles, for His own people.

The shields of the earth belong unto God] The Septuagint translate this εἰς παρασις, the strong ones of the earth. The Vulgate reads quoniam dii fortes terra vehementer elevati sunt, "Because the strong gods of the earth are exceedingly exalted." These are supposed to mean kings, and rulers of provinces, which were present at the dedication of the temple; (for some suppose the Psalm to have been composed for this solemnity,) and that they are said here to be greatly exalted, because they exercised a very high degree of power over their respective districts. The words refer to something by which the inhabitants of the earth are defended; God's providence, guardian angels, &c. &c.

He is greatly exalted.] Great as secular rulers are, God is greater, and is above all; King of kings, and Lord of lords: and the hearts of kings and governors are in His hand; and He turns them whithersoever He pleases.

ANALYSIS OF THE FORTY-SEVENTH PSALM.

This Psalm, under the figure of the ark being brought into the temple, foretells the ascension of Christ to heaven; who was the true ark of the covenant, and the propitiatory or mercy seat. It contains a prophecy of Christ's kingdom, and has two especial parts:—

First, An invitation to sing praises to Christ. Secondly, The reasons why we should do it.

1. The ascension of Christ is typified under the ark's ascension, ver. 1. God is gone up with a shout; the Lord with the sound of a trumpet.

2. On which he invites the people to do now, what was then done; that we clap our hands, and sing praises. This should be done,—1. Cheerfully. Clap your hands;—for this is a sign of inward joy, Nah. iii. 19. 2. Universally. O clap hands, all ye people. 3. Vocally. Shout unto God with the voice of triumph. 4. Frequently. Sing praises,—sing praises,—sing praises,—sing praises, ver. 6. and again sing praises, ver. 7. It cannot be done too frequently. 5. Knowingly, and discreetly. Sing ye praises with understanding: know the reason why ye are to praise Him.

3. Now these reasons are drawn from His greatness, and from His goodness.

1. He is GREAT. 1. He is the Lord the Most High. 2. He is terrible. 3. He is a great King over all the earth. All power, at His ascension, was given unto Him in heaven and earth.

2. He is GOOD. 1. In collecting His church by subduing the nations, not by the sword, but by His Word and Spirit; by which he would subdue their iniquities; the iniquity of the Jew first, and then of the Gentile: for the law was to come out of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. To the discipline of that religion both were to submit; and, therefore, both might well be said to be subdued to us, and brought under our feet.

PSALM XLVIII.

The ornaments and privileges of the church, 1-8. The duty of God's people, 9-11.

A Song and Psalm for the sons of Korah.

1 GREAT is the Lord, and greatly to be praised in the city of our God, in the mountain of his holiness.

2 Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great King.

3 God is known in her palaces for a refuge.

4 For, lo, the kings were assembled, they passed by together.

5 They saw it, and so they marvelled: they were troubled, and hasted away.

6 Fear took hold upon them there, and pain as of a woman in travail.

7 Thou breakest the ships of Tarshish with an east wind.

8 As we have heard, so have we seen in the city of the Lord of hosts, in the city of our God: God will establish it for ever, Selah.

9 We have thought of thy loving-kindness, O God, in the midst of thy temple.

10 According to thy name, O God, so is thy praise unto the ends of the earth: thy right hand is full of righteousness.

11 Let mount Zion rejoice, let the daughters of Judah be glad because of thy judgments.

12 Walk about Zion, and go round about her: tell the towers thereof.

13 Mark ye well her bulwarks, consider her palaces; that ye may tell it to the generation following.

14 For this God is our God for ever and ever: he will be our guide even unto death.

2. In honouring and rewarding His church. He shall choose out our inheritance for us, the excellency of Jacob whom he loved.

1. His church was His choice. It is a chosen generation, a particular people.

2. His heritage; for He will dwell among them, and provide an inheritance for them, blessings on earth, and glory in heaven.

3. This is the excellency of Jacob;—of Jacob after the Spirit; the kingdom, priesthood, and all the promises made unto Jacob and the fathers, being theirs.

4. The cause. His love only—He chose—the excellency of Jacob whom he loved.

3. In the increase and amplification of His church. God is now the king of all the earth: not of the Jews only; for He reigns over the heathen also. He sits upon a throne of holiness;—rules by His holy word and Spirit.

1. Making them holy, who were unholy. 2. They are a willing people also. For the princes, the volunteers among the people, are gathered together; even the people of the God of Abraham, the Gentiles converted and reconciled to God.

4. In protecting His church, whether by Himself or by the princes He raises up; His providence, or His angels, or all together. For the shields of the earth belong unto God. Secular rulers, and ecclesiastical governors, are shields of the church. But God is the Head of it, and the Chief. He is greatly exalted.

NOTES ON PSALM XLVIII.

The title, A song, a Psalm for the sons of Korah. To which the Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, add, for the second day of the week; for which I believe it would be difficult to find a meaning. It is evidently of the same complexion with the two preceding, and refers to the Jews returned from captivity; and perhaps was sung at the dedication of the second temple, in order to return thanks to the Lord for the restoration of their political state, and restoration of their worship.

Verse 1. Great is the Lord] This verse should be joined to the last verse of the preceding Psalm, as it is a continuation of the same subject: and, indeed, in some of Kennicott's MSS. it is written as a part of the foregoing. That concluded with He is greatly exalted;—this begins with Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised; i. e. He should be praised according to His greatness,—no uncommon praise is suited to the nature and dignity of the Supreme God.

In the city of our God] That is, in the temple; or in Jerusalem, where the temple was situated.

The mountain of his holiness] Mount Moriah, on which the temple was built. The ancient city of Jerusalem, which David took from the Jebusites, was on the south of Mount Zion on which the temple was built; though it might be said to be more properly on Mount Moriah, which is one of the hills of which mount Zion is composed. The temple, therefore, was to the north of the city as the Psalmist here states, ver. 2. Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the great king. But some think that it is the city that is said to be on the north; and Reland contends that the temple was on the south of the city.

Verse 2. The joy of the whole earth] Commentators have been greatly puzzled to shew in what sense Zion, or the temple, could be said to be the joy of the whole earth. If we take the earth here for the habitable globe, there is no sense in which it ever was the joy of the whole earth: but, if we take עֲרֵבָה as col ha-arets, as signifying the whole of this land, and it has no other meaning, then the assertion is plain and easy to be understood; for the temple was considered the ornament and glory of the whole land of Judæa.

Verse 3. God is known in her palaces for a refuge] All those who worship there in spirit and truth, find God for their refuge. But the words may be understood: God is known for the defence of her palaces; and to this view of the subject agree the three following verses.

Verse 4. For, lo, the kings were assembled] Many of the neighbouring potentates, at different times, envied the prosperity of the Jewish nation; and coveted the riches of the temple: but they had no power against it till the cup of Jewish transgression was full. In vain did they assemble, confederate, invade the land. Saw it, reconnoitred the place, marvelled at its excellence and strength; for they were troubled, struck with fear,—hasted away for fear of destruction: for fear took hold of them as pains seize on a woman in travail. Those who came to destroy were glad to make their own escape.

Verse 7. Thou breakest the ships of Tarshish] Calmet thinks this may refer to the discomfiture of Cambyses, who came to destroy the land of Judæa. "This is apparently," says he, "the same tempest which struck dimay into the land-forces of Cambyses, and wrecked his fleet which was on the coasts of the Mediterranean sea, opposite to his army near the port of Acco, or the Ptolemais: for Cambyses had his quarters at Ecbatane, at the foot of mount Carmel; and his army was encamped in the valley of Jezreel." Ships of Tarshish, he conjectures, to have been large stout vessels, capable of making the voyage of Tarsus, in Cilicia.

Verse 8. As we have heard, so have we seen] Our fathers have declared what mighty works Thou didst in their time: and we have seen the same. God has often interposed, and afforded us a most miraculous defence. So was it when they were invaded by the Assyrians, Syrians, Egyptians, Babylonians, Persians, and Greeks under Alexander.

The city of the Lord of hosts] His hosts defended the city, and it was known to be the city of the great King.

God will establish it for ever] This must refer to the true temple, the Christian church, of which the Jewish temple was a type. The type perished; but the antitype remains, and will remain till time shall be no more.

Selah] So he it;—and so it will be for evermore.

Verse 9. We have thought of thy loving-kindness] We went to Thy temple to worship Thee; we meditated on Thy goodness; we waited for a display of it:—and the panic that in the first instance struck us, was transferred to our enemies; and fear took hold upon them—they marvelled, were troubled, and hasted away.

Verse 10. According to thy name] As far as Thou art known, so far art Thou praised: and where Thou art known Thou wilt have praise to the end of the earth. And why? Thy right hand is full of righteousness. Thou art continually dispensing Thy blessings to the children of men.

Verse 11. Let Mount Zion rejoice] The temple is restored in majesty, which was threatened with total destruction;—it is again repaired.

Let the daughters of Judah be glad] That Thou hast turned her captivity, and poured out Thy judgments upon her oppressors.

Verse 12. Walk about Zion] Consider the beauty and magnificence of the temple; count the towers by which it is fortified.

Verse 13. Mark ye well her bulwarks] See the redoubts by which she is defended.

Consider her palaces] See her courts, chambers, altars,

PSALM XLIX.

All men are invited to attend to lessons of wisdom, relative to the insufficiency of earthly good to save or prolong life; to secure the resurrection from the dead, 1-3. Death is inevitable, 10. The vain expectations of rich men, 11-13. Death reaches all alike, 14. The Psalmist encourages and fortifies himself against envying the apparently prosperous state of the wicked, who are brutish, and die like beasts, 15-18.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm *for the sons of Korah.

HEAR this, all ye people; give ear, all ye inhabitants of the world:

2 Both ^b low and high, rich and poor, together.

a Or, of.—b Ps. 62. 2.—c Ps. 78. 2. Matt. 13. 35.—d Ps. 33. 4.

&c. &c.; make an exact register of the whole, that ye may have to tell to your children how Jerusalem was built in troublesome times;—how God restored you;—and how He put it into the hearts of the heathen to assist to build, beautify, and adorn, the temple of our God.

Verse 14. For this God] Who did all these wonderful things,—

Is our God] He is our Portion, and He has taken us for His people.

He will be our guide] Through all the snares and difficulties of life,—

Even unto death] He will never leave us; and we, by His grace, will never abandon Him. He is just such a God as we need; infinite in mercy, goodness, and truth. He is our Father, and we are the sons and daughters of God Almighty. Even unto, and in, death, He will be our Portion.

ANALYSIS OF THE FORTY-EIGHTH PSALM.

Under the type of Jerusalem is set down the happiness of the church, which is always protected by the Divine favour. There are three parts in this Psalm:—

I. The excellencies and privileges of the city of God, ver. 1-3.

II. A narration of a miraculous deliverance she obtained, and the terror that fell upon her enemies, ver. 4-8.

III. An exhortation to consider it, and to praise God, ver. 9-14.

I. The Psalmist begins with a maxim,—Great is the Lord, and greatly to be praised. Great in Himself; and greatly to be praised for all things, in all places; but especially in the city of our God, in the mountain of holiness.

Then he descends to set forth the excellencies and ornaments of the church.

1. It is the city of God, built and governed by Him; and in it He resides.

2. It is a holy mountain. The religion in it holy; the people, a holy people.

3. It is Beautiful for situation. God has put His beauty upon it.

4. The joy of the whole earth is mount Zion. The joy and ornament of all the Land of Judea then; and afterward of the whole world, because the law was to come out of Zion.

5. It is the city of the great King, i. e. God. He founded, and rules in it.

6. God is known in her palaces. In her is the knowledge of God; yea, and by an experimental knowledge, is found to be an asylum, a sure refuge.

II. And it is well that it is so; for Jerusalem, i. e. the church, has many and great enemies, which (ver. 5.) the prophet begins to describe; and desires that notice may be taken of them, for he points them out with Lo! or Behold!

1. They are many and powerful. They were kings,—a plurality of them.

2. Confederate kings. The kings were assembled. United power is the more effectual.

. But all the endeavours of those kings,—those confederate kings, came to nothing.

1. They passed by together. Together they came, together they vanished.

2. They saw—they marvelled. They saw the strength of this city, and wondered how it could be so strangely delivered out of their hands.

3. On this they were troubled, they trembled, and hasted away. Fear took hold upon them:—which the prophet illustrates by a double similitude,—1. By a travelling woman. Fear took hold upon them, and pain as of a woman in travail. 2. By the fear of mariners at sea, when Euroclydon threatens to destroy their ship;—their amazement was such as when thou breakest the ships of Tarshish with an east wind.

III. In this third part of the Psalm there are two especial points,—

A grateful acknowledgment of God's protection of His church. As we have heard, so have we seen in the city of 3 My mouth shall speak of wisdom; and the meditation of my heart shall be of understanding.

4 I will incline mine ear to a parable: I will open my dark saying upon the harp.

5 Wherefore should I fear in the days of evil: when ^d the iniquity of my heels shall compass me about?

6 They that ^e trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches:—

e Job 31. 24, 25. Ps. 52. 7. & 82. 10. Mark 10. 24. 1 Tim. 6. 17.

our God. We have heard that He will protect this city, and we see that He hath done it; and persuaded we are, that He will always do it. God will establish it for ever.

2. And this shall never be forgotten by us. We have thought of thy loving-kindness in the midst of thy temple.

3. And so thought of it as to praise Thee for it. According to thy name, so is thy praise; thy right hand is full of righteousness. All the earth shall know that Thou dost help with Thy powerful hand thy afflicted and oppressed people. Thou wilt punish their adversaries, for thy right hand is full of righteousness—and justice.

The second point of this third part is an exhortation to God's people.

1. That they exult and rejoice for what God does for them. Let mount Zion rejoice, let the daughters of Judah be glad, because of thy judgments in defending Thy church, and punishing their enemies.

2. That they take especial notice of His miraculous deliverance of Jerusalem; that, notwithstanding the army was great that lay against it, yet no harm was done. Walk about Zion, tell the towers thereof,—mark well her bulwarks,—and her palaces. See whether they be not all standing and entire.

3. And do it for this end:—That you may tell it to the generation following. Leave it on record how miraculously God hath delivered you.

4. For this there are two strong reasons:—1. For this God, who protects and defends us, is our God for ever. 2. He will be our guide unto death. He will not leave us when all the world leaves us. In the time in which we need Him most, we shall find Him most powerfully present to help us. Therefore, exult, rejoice, mark it; and make it known to the generations to come.

NOTES ON PSALM XLIX.

The title, "To the chief Musician, a Psalm for the sons of Korah," has nothing particular in it; and the Versions say little about it. One of the descendants of the children of Korah might have been the author of it: but when, or on what occasion it was made, cannot now be discovered. The author aimed to be obscure, and has succeeded; for it is very difficult to make out his meaning. It is so much in the style of the book of Job, that one might believe they had the same author; and that this Psalm might have made originally a part of that book. "It seems," says Dr. Dodd, "to be a meditation on the vanity of riches, and the usual haughtiness of those who possess them. As a remedy for this he sets before them the near prospect of death, from which no riches can save, in which no riches can avail. The author considers the subject he is treating as a kind of wisdom concealed from the world; a mystery, an occult science with respect to the generality of mankind." Dr. Kennicott has given an excellent translation of this Psalm, which is very literal, simple, and elegant; and by it the reader will be convinced that a good translation of a difficult passage is often better than a comment.

Verse 1. Hear this, all ye people] The four first verses contain the author's exordium, or introduction, delivered in a very pompous style, and promising the deepest lessons of wisdom and instruction. But what was rare then, is common place now.

Verse 4. I will incline mine ear to a parable] This was the general method of conveying instruction among the Asiatics. They used much figure and metaphor to induce the reader to study deeply, in order to find out the meaning. This had its use, it obliged men to think, and reflect deeply; and thus, in some measure, taught them the use, government, and management, of their minds.

My dark saying upon the harp] Music was sometimes used to soothe the animal spirits, and thus prepare the mind for the prophetic influx.

Verse 5. The iniquity of my heels] Perhaps אָבִיב akabey, which we here translate my heels, should be considered the contracted plural of אָבִיב akabim, supplanters. The verse would then read thus: Wherefore should I fear in the days of evil, though the iniquity of my supplant-

PSALM L.

And shews them the worship He requires, 14, 15. And then enters into a particular detail of their hypocrisy, injustice, and union with censurable transgressors, all of whom He threatens with heavy judgment, 16-22. X. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

A Psalm of Asaph.

THE mighty God, even the LORD, hath spoken, and called the earth from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof.

a Cr. for Asaph. See 1 Chr. 15. 17. & 23. 2. 2 Chr. 29. 30.—b Neh. 9. 22. Isa. 9. 6. Jer. 22. 12.—c Ps. 42. 2.—d Dent. 32. 2. Ps. 101. 1.

of wisdom, &c. I will speak of what I know, and speak so that others may understand. 2. I will incline my ear. I will teach you nothing but what I teach myself. 3. It is a parable which I am about to deliver, and will require all your attention. 4. That it may be brought to your ear with more delight, I shall accompany it with the harp. I will open my dark saying upon the harp.

II. Having now assembled his congregation; endeavoured to make them attentive, docile, and well disposed, lest any should suppose that he was envious at the prosperity of the wicked, or had so little trust in God that he lived in terror of his adversaries; he says,—Wherefore should I fear in the days of evil, though the iniquity of my supplanters surrounds me? He had no reason thus to fear: but the wealthy and ambitious had. And this he demonstrates two ways: for he takes away happiness from the one, ver. 8-15, and places happiness in the other, ver. 16.

1. They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches, are not happy, ver. 6. For wealth will not deliver in the evil day.

1. It will save no man's life, None of them, (the rich men) can redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him. God will not be bribed to save any man's life.

2. It will save no man's soul. The ransom required for that is more valuable than any thing the earth can produce.

3. Suppose he was wise, and a long-lived man, yet he must die at last. For he seeth that wise men die; like-wise the fool and the brutish.

4. Which sufficiently shews the vanity of their riches:—1. They leave them. 2. They leave these great riches. 3. They leave them to others;—sometimes to children, but often to strangers, such as they thought never would have entered into their labours.

5. Their thoughts are vain. For, 1. Their inward thoughts are that their houses shall continue, &c. 2. To this end, They call their lands after their own names:—They not only study to be rich, but they are vain-glorious also. But their study is,—1. Vanity. 2. Folly.

1. Vanity. Nevertheless, man being in honour, abideth not; a change there will be, and the most glorious man will be like the beasts that perish.

2. Folly. This their way is their foolishness. A great foolery to place their chief good in riches; yet their posterity act in the same way, tread in their steps, and pant after riches and honours.

To correct this propensity, he lays before them certain considerations relative to their future condition.

1. Like sheep they are laid in the grave. That is their common condition; like sheep they are fated for slaughter.

2. Death shall feed on them. The second death; for, like Dives, they shall be burned in hell; and the fire that cannot be extinguished shall feed upon their souls and bodies.

3. In the morning of the resurrection, the upright shall have power over them. The righteous shall shine like the sun, when they shall be Christ's footstool. The godly shall be placed on the right hand, and seated on thrones to judge them; when they shall be seated on the left, and be condemned.

4. Their beauty shall consume in the grave. Their riches, power, and glory, shall wax old as doth a garment:—For the figure of this world passeth away. Therefore, the rich of this world, and the possessors of great glory, are not happy. He, therefore, sets down the happy man: the man who trusts in God, and lives to Him, he is happy in life, notwithstanding his afflictions; and he shall be happy for ever. Therefore he says, God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave, &c.

1. He shall redeem me. All good men's souls.

2. Not from the grave, for die we must; but from the hand, that is, the dominion and power of death. Death shall not reign over them.

3. The reason is,—For he shall receive me; adopt me into His family, and make me a partaker of the Divine nature.

III. On these considerations, relative to good and bad men, and their different conditions, he admonishes the good that they be not troubled at the prosperity of the wicked. Be thou not afraid, &c.

2 Out of Zion, 'the perfection of beauty,' God hath shined.

3 Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him.

4 He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth that he may judge his people.

5 Gather 'my saints together unto me; b those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.

a Lev. 16. 2. Num. 16. 25. Ps. 97. 3. Dan. 7. 10.—f Dent. 4. 26. & 31. 28. & 32. 1. Isa. 1. 2. Mic. 6. 1, 2.—g Dent. 33. 3. Isa. 12. 3.—h Exod. 24. 1.

1. Not at the great wealth of the rich. Be not afraid when one is made rich.

2. Not at the glory and honour of the mighty. Nor when the glory of his house is increased.

And he repeats the former reason. For when he dieth, he shall carry nothing away; his glory shall not descend after him. Their happiness, such as it was, was only momentary.

This he amplifies:—Be it granted, that they flattered themselves, and were flattered by others,—

1. Though while he lived he blessed his own soul. Soul, take thy ease, &c.

2. Though men will praise thee, and sound in thy ears, Well done! so long as thou dost well to thyself; heapest up riches, and gapest after honour.

1. A mortal thou art, short-lived as all that went before thee. He shall go to the generation of his fathers. And,—

2. If wicked, be cast into utter darkness. They shall never see the light.

3. Surely, any man, however rich, however great, who understands not thus much, must be a beast,—and with this sentiment concludes the Psalm; and it is doubled that it may be remembered. Man, who is in honour, and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish. Even while he lives, without this understanding his life is little more than the life of the beast.

NOTES ON PSALM L.

In the title this is said to be A Psalm of Asaph. There are twelve that go under his name: and most probably he was author of each, for he was of high repute in the days of David; and is mentioned second to him as a composer of Psalms. Moreover Hezekiah the king, and the princes, commanded the Levites to sing praise unto the Lord, with the words of DAVID, and of ASAPH the SEER. His band, sons, or companions, were eminent in the days of David, as we learn from 1 Chron. xxv. 1, &c. Asaph himself was one of the musicians who sounded with cymbals of brass, 1 Chron. xv. 19. And he is mentioned with great respect, Nehem. xii. 46. And in the days of DAVID and ASAPH of old there were CHIEF of the SINGERS, and SONGS of PRAISE and THANKGIVING unto God. He was certainly a prophetic man:—he is called a seer, one on whom the Spirit of God rested; and seems from this, his education, and natural talent, to be well qualified to compose hymns or psalms in the honour of God. Persons capable of judging, on a comparison of those Psalms attributed to Asaph with those known to be of David, have found a remarkable difference in the style. The style of David is more polished, flowing, correct, and majestic, than that of Asaph; which is more stiff and obscure. He has been compared to Pervius and to Horace; he is keen, full of reprehensions, and his subjects are generally of the doleful kind; which was probably caused by his living in times in which there was great corruption of manners, and much of the displeasure of God either threatened or manifested. It is not known on what particular occasion this Psalm was written: but at most times it was suitable to the state of the Jewish church.

Verse 1. The mighty God, even the LORD, hath spoken.] Here the essential names of God are used: אלהים אלהים EL, ELOHIM, YEOVAH, hath spoken. The six first verses of this Psalm seem to contain a description of the great judgment: to any minor consideration or fact it seems impossible, with any propriety, to restrain it. In this light I shall consider it, and shew—

First, The preparatives to the coming of the great Judge. El Elohim Jehovah hath spoken, and called the earth, all the children of men, from the rising of the sun unto the going down thereof. Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, (ציון מְעוֹלָה מְעוֹלָה מְעוֹלָה) God hath shined, ver. 1, 2. 1. He has sent His Spirit to convince men of sin, righteousness, and judgment. 2. He has sent His Word; has made a revelation of Himself, and has declared both His Law and His Gospel to mankind. Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, hath God shined, ver. 2. For out of Zion the Law was to go forth, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. Isa. ii. 3.

6 And the heavens shall declare his righteousness: for God is judge himself. Selah.

7 Hear, O my people, and I will speak; O Israel, and I will testify against thee: I am God, even thy God.

8 I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices or thy burnt-offerings, to have been continually before me.

9 I will take no bullock out of thy house, nor he-goats out of thy folds.

10 For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills.

11 I know all the fowls of the mountains: and the wild beasts of the field are mine.

12 If I were hungry, I would not tell thee; for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof.

13 Will I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats?

14 Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the Most High:

15 And call upon me in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me.

Secondly, The accompaniments. 1. His approach is proclaimed, ver. 3. Our God shall come. 2. The trumpet proclaims His approach, He shall not keep silence. 3. Universal nature shall be shaken, and the earth and its works be burnt up. A fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him, ver. 3.

Thirdly, The witnesses are summoned and collected, from all quarters; some from heaven, and some from earth. 1. Guardian angels. 2. Human associates. He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people, ver. 4.

Fourthly, The procedure. As far as it respects the righteous, orders are issued. Gather my saints, those who are saved from their sins and made holy, together unto me. And, that the word saints might not be misunderstood, it is explained by Those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice; those who have entered into union with God, through the sacrificial offering of the Lord Jesus Christ. All the rest are passed over in silence: we are told who they are that shall enter into the joy of their Lord; viz. only the saints, those who have made a covenant with God by sacrifice. All, therefore, who do not answer this description, are excluded from glory.

Fifthly, The final issue; all the angelic host, and all the redeemed of the Lord, join in applauding acclamation at the decision of the Supreme Judge. The heavens (for the earth is no more, it is burnt up,) shall declare His righteousness, the exact justice of the whole procedure, where justice alone has been done without partiality, and without severity; nor could it be otherwise, for God is Judge himself. Thus the assembly is dissolved; the righteous are received into everlasting glory; and the wicked turned into hell, with all those who forget God. Some think that the sentence against the wicked is that which is contained from ver. 16 to ver. 22. See the analysis at the end.

Verse 7. Hear, O my people] As they were now amply informed concerning the nature and certainty of the general judgment, and were still in a state of probation, Asaph proceeds to shew them the danger to which they were exposed, and the necessity of repentance and amendment, that, when that great day should arrive, they might be found among those who had made a covenant with God by sacrifice. And he shews them that the sacrifice with which God would be well pleased was quite different from the bullocks, he-goats, &c. which they were in the habit of offering. In short, he shews here that God has intended to abrogate those sacrifices, as being no longer of any service: for when the people began to trust in them, without looking to the thing signified, it was time to put them away. When the people began to pay Divine honours to the brazen serpent, though it was originally an ordinance of God's appointment for the healing of the Israelites, it was ordered to be taken away, called Nehushtan, a bit of brass, and broken to pieces. The sacrifices under the Jewish law were of God's appointment: but now that the people began to put their trust in them, God despised them.

Verse 8. I will not reprove thee] I do not mean to find fault with you for not offering sacrifices;—you have offered them, they have been continually before me:—but you have not offered them in the proper way.

Verse 10. Every beast of the forest is mine] Can ye 19 Thou givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit.

20 Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother; thou slanderest thine own mother's son.

21 These things hast thou done, and I kept silence; thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself: but I will reprove thee, and set them in order before thine eyes.

22 Now consider this, ye that forget God, lest I tear you in pieces, and there be none to deliver.

23 Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me: and to him that ordereth his conversation aright will I shew the salvation of God.

suppose that ye are laying me under obligation to you, when ye present me with a part of my own property?

Verse 12. The world is mine, and the fulness thereof.] Ye cannot, therefore, give me any thing that is not my own.

Verse 13. Will I eat the flesh of bulls] Can ye be so simple as to suppose that I appointed such sacrifices for my own gratification? All these were significative of a spiritual worship, and of the sacrifice of that Lamb of God which, in the fulness of time, was to take away, in an atoning manner, the sin of the world.

Verse 14. Offer unto God thanksgiving; and pay thy vows unto the Most High.] זבח זבחה, "sacrifice unto God, אלוהים elohim, the תודה todah, thank-offering," which was the same as the sin-offering, viz. a bullock, or a ram, without blemish; only there was in addition, unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil; and cakes of fine flour mingled with oil and fried, Lev. vii. 12.

And pay thy vows—נדארה נדארה, thy vow-offerings, to the Most High. The nedar or vow-offering, was a male without blemish, taken from among the beees, the sheep, or the goats. Compare Lev. xxii. 19, with ver. 22. Now these were offerings, in their spiritual and proper meaning, which God required of the people: and as the sacrificial system was established for an especial end, to shew the sinfulness of sin, and the purity of Jehovah; and to shew how sin could be atoned for, forgiven, and removed; this system was now to end in the thing that it signified, the grand sacrifice of Christ, which was to make atonement, feed, nourish, and save, the souls of believers unto eternal life;—to excite their praise and thanksgiving; bind them to God Almighty, by the most solemn vows, to live to Him in the spirit of gratitude and obedience all the days of their life. And, in order that they might be able to hold fast faith and a good conscience, they were to make continual prayer to God, who promised to hear and deliver them, that they might glorify him, ver. 15.

From the 16th to the 22d verse, Asaph appears to refer to the final rejection of the Jews from having any part in the true covenant sacrifice.

Verse 16. But unto the wicked] The blood-thirsty priests, proud Pharisees, and ignorant scribes of the Jewish people.

Verse 17. Seeing thou hatest instruction] All these rejected the counsel of God against themselves; and refused to receive the instructions of Christ.

Verse 18. When thou sawest a thief] Rapine, adulteries, and adulterous divines, were common among the Jews in our Lord's time. The gospels give full proof of this.

Verse 21. These things hast thou done] My eye has been continually upon you, though my judgments have not been poured out:—and, because I was silent, thou didst suppose I was such as thyself: but I will reprove thee, &c. I will visit for these things.

Verse 22. Now consider this] Ye have forgotten your God, and sinned against Him. He has marked down all your iniquities, and has them in order to exhibit against you. Beware, therefore, lest he tear you in pieces, when there is none to deliver; for none can deliver you, but the Christ you reject. And how can ye escape, if ye neglect so great a salvation?

PSALM LI.

The Psalmist, with a deeply professed heart, prays for remission of sins, 1-4. Which he confesses, and deeply deplores, 5-14. States his willingness to offer sacrifices, but is convinced that God prefers a broken heart to all kinds of offerings, 15-17. Prays for the restoration of the walls of Jerusalem; and promises, that then the Lord's mercies shall be properly performed, 18, 19.

Jesus is the great eucharistic Sacrifice:—offer Him up to God in your faith and prayers. By this Sacrifice is God glorified, for in Him is God well pleased; and it was by the grace, or good pleasure, of God, that He tasted death for every man.

ANALYSIS OF THE FIFTIETH PSALM.

The prophet, by a prolepsis, brings in God prescribing rules for His own worship. The point in debate is how God will be honoured in his own church; and, as none can teach this but God, he brings Him in speaking to His people.

The Psalm has two general parts:—

I. The majesty and authority of the Person who is to judge this debate, ver. 1-6.

II. The sentences which he pronounces, ver. 7-23.

The prophet begins with calling an assize. He summons a court; presents us with a Judge; produces witnesses;—cites those who are to answer; and, having seated the Judge on His throne, gives forth His charge.

1. He, First, presents the Judge in authority and majesty. The mighty God, even the Lord, hath spoken, ver. 1.

2. The place to which He comes to hold His court. The church. Out of Zion, the perfection of beauty, hath God skinned. To Zion the law was given; and out of Zion the law was to come, by which He would judge; and, therefore, it was rightly said, Out of Zion the Lord hath shined.

3. His appearance is terrible. It was so, when He gave His law on mount Sinai; and it will be so when He comes to require it. Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him. See 2 Pet. iii. 10. Luke xxi. 25, 26.

Secondly, Those who are cited to appear before Him. His saints,—those who had undertaken to worship Him as He had appointed. Gather my saints together—those who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice.

Thirdly, Against these He produces His witnesses, whom he collects,—1. From heaven. 2. From earth. He shall call the heavens from above, and the earth, that he may judge his people. 3. All the inhabitants of the whole earth,—from the rising of the sun until the going down thereof. 4. The award shall be universally approved. The heavens shall declare his righteousness, His just method of procedure. For God himself is Judge.

II. Next follows the charge given by God Himself the Judge: and, to engage attention, He proclaims, Hear, O my people, and I will speak, &c.

1. I am God;—therefore worship and obedience are due to me from all creatures.

2. I am thy God; and thou my people;—therefore, due from thee especially.

3. I will speak. I will judge and determine this controversy about my worship.

4. I will testify against thee,—and convict thee of what thou hast done amiss.

There is a twofold worship:—1. Ceremonial and external. 2. Spiritual and moral. And I will speak and testify of both.

It was the duty of the people to bring the sacrifices, and perform the ceremonies appointed by the law;—but God is not pleased with the outward act merely;—nothing pleases Him where the heart and affections are wanting.

1. I will not reprove thee for thy sacrifices. These according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions.

2 Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin.

3 For I acknowledge my transgressions: and my sin is ever before me.

4 Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight: that thou might-thou bringest, and these I accept. But in this I reprove thee, because thou thinkest that I must be pleased with the external service, howsoever performed; and that thou hast a right to expect pardon, and all blessings.

2. Unless the heart be penitent, and the offerings be made in faith, I will not accept them. I will take no bullock out of thy house, nor he-goat, &c. And this for two reasons:—

1. I do not need them:—every beast of the forest is mine,—the cattle on a thousand hills,—the fowls of the mountain,—the wild beasts of the field,—the world and its fulness.

2. My perfection is such, that I could not use them.—Thinkest thou that I will eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats?

The heathen priests taught the people that the gods fed on the odour of the sacrifices; and they represented them as complaining of being starved, when they were withheld.

For these reasons the sacrifices, as you have performed them, do not please me: but I shall acquaint you with those that do please me, thanksgiving, and prayer, or invocation.

1. Thankfulness.—Offer unto God thanksgiving, and pay thy vows, &c.

2. Invocation.—Call upon me in the day of trouble.

Which being done, He makes an indenture with us:—

1. On His part, that He will save us. I will deliver thee.

2. On our part,—that we have given Him the glory of our salvation. Thou shalt glorify me.

3. And yet He makes an exception to some men's prayers, and praises, hypocrites, and impious men.—Praise is not comely in the mouth of a sinner; and petitions offered by the profane shall not be heard.

1. To the wicked God saith, What hast thou to do to declare my statutes, &c.

2. The reason is, thou professest to love me, but in works thou deniest me: for thou hatest instruction,—and hast cast my words behind thee:—how then can I be pleased with thee? I shall now prove this against thee.

1. Thou hast broken the eighth commandment. Thou sawest the thief, and consented to him,—joined with him to carry off the spoil: or, when he stole, thou didst receive.

2. Thou hast broken the seventh commandment. Thou hast been a partaker with the adulterers.

3. And the ninth. Thou givest thy mouth to evil, and thy tongue frameth deceit;—thou sittest and speakest against thy brother, and slanderest thy own mother's son. Thou didst do all this deliberately. Thou didst sit and speak.

4. Thou hast broken the first commandment. Because I did not execute judgment upon thy evil works. Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself; or, in a word, that there was no God, or none worthy of fear and reverence.

This wickedness I will not suffer to go unpunished;—for the day will come when I will reprove thee,—set thy sins in order before thee, and punish the wickedness which thou hast attempted to hide. Yet in judgment God remembers mercy;—He gives warning to the wicked, and threatens that He may spare, and that they may repent and perish not.

1. Now, while you have respite,—consider this, that God is not pleased with outward rites and formalities; and that they who trust in merely having performed them are far from being in a safe state. They do the outward work, and forget God. Take heed, lest as a lion He rush out upon you, and tear you to pieces.

2. To the pure and spiritual worshippers He makes a gracious promise of defence, help, and salvation. He who sacrifices the thank-offering, with a humble believing heart, glorifies me; and to Him who places his feet in that path, and thereas determinately abides, going the right way which God's words direct, I will show the salvation of God. He shall be saved; and shall know that he worships not God in vain. See the preceding Notes on this Psalm.

NOTES ON PSALM LI.

The title is long:—"To the chief musician, a Psalm of David, when Nathan the prophet came unto him, after he had gone in to Bathsheba." The propriety of this title est be justified when thou speakest, and be clear when thou judgest.

has been greatly suspected, says Bishop Horsley. "That this Psalm was not written on the occasion to which the title refers is evident from the 4th and 18th verses. The 4th verse ill suits the case of David, who laid a successful plot against Uriah's life, after he had defiled his bed: and the 18th verse refers the Psalm to the time of the captivity, when Jerusalem lay in ruins." Dr. Kennicott is of the same mind. He says, "The title is misplaced: that it was written during the captivity, and the cessation of the temple worship: the author under great depression of mind, arising from the guilt of some crime, probably some compliance with heathen idolatry: not murder, nor adultery, plain from the 4th verse, Against thee only have I sinned."

The crime mentioned in the title was not only against God, but against the whole order of civil society,—against the life of the noble and valiant captain whose wife Bathsheba was, and against every thing sacred in friendship and hospitality. It was a congeries of sins against God and society. Were it not for the 4th, 18th, and 19th verses, the rest of the Psalm would accord well enough with the title: and the deep penitence it expresses would be suitable enough to David's state. But see on verses 4, 13, 19.

Verse 1. Have mercy upon me, O God! Without mercy I am totally, finally, ruined and undone.

According to thy loving-kindness] Mark the gradation in the sense of these three words, have mercy on me, רחמי חנני,—Thy loving-kindness, רחמי חסידים; Thy tender mercies, רחמי רחמים, here used to express the Divine compassion. The propriety of the order in which they are placed deserves particular observation.

The first, rendered have mercy, or pity, denotes that kind of affection which is expressed by moaning over an object we love and pity; that natural affection and tenderness which even the brute creation shew to their young by the several noises which they respectively make over them.

The second, rendered loving-kindness, denotes a strong proneness, a ready, large, and liberal disposition to goodness and compassion, powerfully prompting to all instances of kindness and bounty; flowing as freely as waters from a perpetual fountain. This denotes a higher degree of goodness than the former.

The third, rendered tender mercies, denotes what the Greeks called σπλαγχνισθος, that most tender pity which we signify by the moving of the heart and bowels, which argues the highest degree of compassion of which nature is susceptible. See Chandler.

Blot out my transgressions.] מח mechah, wipe out. There is a reference here to an indictment: the Psalmist knows what it contains: he pleads guilty; but begs that the writing may be defaced; that a proper fluid may be applied to the parchment, to discharge the ink, that no record of it may ever appear against him; and this only the mercy, loving-kindness, and tender compassions, of the Lord can do.

Verse 2. Wash me thoroughly] כבסי herbeh cadsemi; "Wash me again and again,"—"cause my washings to be multiplied." My stain is deep; ordinary purification will not be sufficient.

Verse 3. For I acknowledge my transgressions] I know, I feel, I confess, that I have sinned.

My sin is ever before me] A true, deep, and unsophisticated mark of a genuine penitent. Wherever he turns his face, he sees his sin, and through it the eye of an angry God.

Verse 4. Against thee, thee only, have I sinned] This verse is supposed to shew the impropriety of affixing the above title to this Psalm. It could not have been composed on account of the matter with Bathsheba, and the murder of Uriah:—for, surely, these sins could not be said to have been committed against God only, if we take the words of this verse in their common acceptation. That was a public sin, grievous, and against society at large, as well as against the peace, honour, comfort, and life, of an innocent, brave, and patriotic man. This is readily granted: but see below.

That thou might be justified when thou speakest] Perhaps, to save the propriety of the title, we might understand the verse thus:—David, being king, was not liable to be called to account by any of his subjects; nor was there any authority in the land by which he could be judged and punished. In this respect, God alone was greater than the king; and to him alone, as king, he was responsible. Nam quando rex deliquit, soli Deo reus est; quia hominem non habet qui ejus facta disjunctet, says Casiodorus. "For when a king transgresses, he is accountable to God only: for there is no person who has authority to take cognizance of his conduct." On this very maxim, which is a maxim in all countries, David might say, Against thee only have I sinned. "I cannot be called to the bar of my subjects: but I arraign myself before Thy bar. They can neither judge, nor condemn me; but Thou canst: and such are the crimes, that Thou wilt be justified in the eyes of all men, and cleared of all severity, shouldst Thou inflict upon me the heaviest punishment." This view of the subject will reconcile the Psalm to the title. As to the eighteenth and nineteenth verses, we shall consider them in their own place; and probably find that the objection taken from them has not much weight.

Verse 5. Behold, I was shapen in iniquity] A genuine penitent will hide nothing of his state; he sees and bewails not only the acts of sin which he has committed, but the disposition that led to those acts. He deploras not only the transgression, but the carnal mind, which is enmity against God. The light that shines into his soul, shews him the very source whence transgression proceeds: he sees his fallen nature, as well as his sinful life; he asks pardon for his transgressions,—and he asks washing and cleansing for his inward defilement. Notwithstanding all that Grotius and others have said to the contrary, I believe David to speak here of what is commonly called original sin; the propensity to evil which every man brings into the world with him; and which is the fruitful source whence all transgression proceeds. The word חולית choleth, which we translate shapen, means more properly, I was brought forth from the womb: and יחמתי yechematni, rather signifies, made me warm, alluding to the whole process of the formation of the fœtus in utero; the formative heat which is necessary to develop the parts of all embryo animals; to incubate the ova in the female, after having been impregnated by the male; and to bring the whole into such a state of maturity and perfection as to render it capable of subsisting and growing up by aliment received from without. "As my parts were developed in the womb, the sinful principle diffused itself through the whole, so that body and mind grew up in a state of corruption and moral imperfections."

Verse 6. Behold, thou desirest truth] I am the very reverse of what I should be. Thou desirest truth in the heart: but in me there is nothing but sin and falsity.

Thou shalt make me to know wisdom] Thou wilt teach me to restrain every inordinate propensity, and to act according to the dictates of sound wisdom the rest of my life.

Verse 7. Purge me with hyssop] טחאתי techateni, "thou shalt make a sin-offering for me;" probably alluding to the cleansing of the leper, Levit. xiv. 1, &c. The priest took two clean birds, cedar-wood, scarlet, and hyssop, one of the birds was killed; and the living bird, with the scarlet, cedar, and hyssop, dipped in the blood of the bird that had been killed, and then sprinkled over the person who had been infected. But it is worthy of remark, that this ceremony was not performed till the plague of the leprosy had been healed in the leper; (Lev. xiv. 3.) and the ceremony above mentioned was for the purpose of declaring to the people that the man was healed, that he might be restored to his place in society, God having healed him of a disease that the finger of God alone could remove. This David seems to have full view: hence he requests the Lord to make the sin-offering for him, and to shew to the people that He had accepted him, and cleansed him from his sin.

Verse 8. Makes me to hear joy] Let me have a full testimony of my reconciliation to Thee; that the soul, which is so deeply distressed by a sense of Thy displeasure, may be healed by a sense of Thy pardoning mercy.

Verse 9. Hide thy face from my sins] The sentiment here is nearly the same as that in ver. 3. His sin was ever before his own face; and he knew that the eye of God

10 Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me.

11 Cast me not away from thy presence; and take not thy Holy Spirit from me.

12 Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation; and uphold me with thy free spirit.

13 Then will I teach transgressors thy ways; and sinners shall be converted unto thee.

14 Deliver me from blood-guiltiness, O God, thou God of my salvation; and my tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness.

15 O LORD, open thou my lips; and my mouth shall shew forth thy praise.

16 For thou desirest not sacrifice; else would I give it: thou delightest not in burnt-offering.

17 The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.

18 Do good in thy good pleasure unto Zion: build thou the walls of Jerusalem.

19 Then shalt thou be pleased with the sacrifices of righteousness, with burnt-offering and whole burnt-offering: then shall they offer bullocks upon thine altar.

was constantly upon him, and that his purity and justice must be highly incensed on the account. He, therefore, with a just horror of his transgressions, begs God to turn away his face from them, and to blot them out, so that they might never more be seen. See the Note on ver. 1.

Verse 10. Create in me a clean heart] Mending will not avail; my heart is altogether corrupted; it must be new made,—made as it was in the beginning. This is exactly the sentiment of St. Paul: neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation. And the salvation given under the gospel dispensation is called a being created anew in Christ Jesus.

A right spirit within me] רוח נקי ruach nacon, a constant, steady, determined spirit; called ver. 12. רוח נדבחה ruach nedibah, a noble spirit, a free, generous, princely, spirit; cheerfully giving up itself to Thee; no longer bound and degraded by the sinfulness of sin.

Verse 11. Cast me not away from thy presence] Banish me not from Thy house and ordinances;—and Take not Thy Holy Spirit from me.] I know I have sufficiently grieved it to justify its departure for ever; in consequence of which I should be consigned to the blackness of darkness, either to utter despair, or to a hard heart and seared conscience; and so work iniquity with greediness, till I fell into the pit of perdition. While the Spirit stays, painfully convincing of sin, righteousness, and judgment, there is hope of salvation: when it departs, then the hope of redemption is gone. But, while there is any godly sorrow, any feeling of regret for having sinned against God, any desire to seek mercy, then the case is not hopeless; for these things prove, that the light of the Spirit is not withdrawn.

Verse 12. Restore unto me the joy of thy salvation] This is an awful prayer. And why? Because it shews he once had the joy of God's salvation; and had lost it by sin!

Uphold me with thy free spirit.] Prop me up: support me with a princely spirit, one that will not stoop to a mean or base act. See on ver. 10.

Verse 13. Then will I teach transgressors] I will shew myself to be grateful; I will testify of Thy loving-kindness; I will call on transgressors to consider the error of their ways; and shall set before them so forcibly, Thy justice and mercy, that sinners shall be converted unto Thee. With a little change I can adopt the language of Dr. Delaney on this place:—"Who can confide in his own strength, when he sees David fall? Who can despair of Divine mercy, when he sees him forgiven? Sad triumph of sin over all that is great or excellent in man! Glorious triumph of grace over all that is shameful and dreadful in sin!"

Verse 14. Deliver me from blood-guiltiness] This is one of the expressions that gives most colour to the propriety of the title affixed to this Psalm. Here he may have in view the death of Uriah, and consider that his blood cries for vengeance against him; and nothing but the mere mercy of God can wipe this blood from his conscience. The prayer here is earnest and energetic:—O God! thou God of my salvation! deliver me! The Chaldee reads, "Deliver me, מידין כתיב midin ketob,) from the judgment of slaughter."

My tongue shall sing aloud] My tongue shall praise Thy righteousness. I shall testify to all that Thou hast the highest displeasure against sin, and wilt excuse it in no person; and that, so merciful art Thou, that if a sinner turn to Thee with a deeply penitent and broken heart, Thou wilt forgive his iniquities. None, from my case, can ever presume; none, from my case, need ever despair.

Verse 15. O LORD, open thou my lips] My heart is believing unto righteousness; give me Thy peace, that my tongue may make confession unto salvation. He could not praise God for pardon till he felt that God had pardoned him;—then, his lips would be opened, and his tongue would shew forth the praise of his Redeemer.

Verse 16. For thou desirest not sacrifice] This is the same sentiment which he delivers in Psa. xl. 6, &c. where, see the Notes. There may be here, however, a farther meaning:—Crimes, like mine, are not to be expiated by any sacrifices that the Law requires; nor hast Thou appointed in the Law any sacrifices to atone for deliberate murder and adultery: if Thou hadst, I would cheerfully have given them to Thee. The matter is before Thee, as Judge.

Verse 17. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit] As my crimes are such as admit of no legal atonement, so Thou hast reserved them to be punished by exemplary acts of justice, or to be pardoned by a sovereign act of mercy: but, in order to find this mercy, Thou requirest that the heart and soul should deeply feel the transgression, and turn to Thee with the fullest compunction and remorse. This, thou hast enabled me to do. I have the broken spirit, שבר רוח ruach nishberah, and the broken and contrite heart, שבר ונכה לב nishber ve-nidakeh. These words are very expressive. שבר shavar, or shabar, signifies exactly the same as our word shiver, to break into pieces, to reduce into splinters; and נכה naka, signifies to beat out thin,—to beat out masses of metal, &c. into laminae, or thin plates. The spirit broken all to pieces, and the heart broken all to pieces, stamped and beaten out, are the sacrifices which, in such cases, Thou requirest; and these Thou wilt not despise. We may now suppose that God had shone upon his soul, healed his broken spirit, and renewed and removed his broken and distracted heart; and that he had now received the answer to the preceding prayers. And here the Psalm properly ends; as, in the two following verses, there is nothing similar to what we find in the rest of this very nervous and most important composition.

Verse 18. Do good in thy good pleasure unto Zion] This and the following verse most evidently refer to the time of the captivity, when the walls of Jerusalem were broken down, and the temple service entirely discontinued; consequently, long posterior to the times of David. Hence it has been concluded that the Psalm was not composed by David, nor in his time; and that the title must be that of some other Psalm inadvertently affixed to this. The 4th verse has also been considered as decisive against this title: but the note on that verse has considerably weakened, if not destroyed, that objection. I have been long of opinion that, whether the title be properly or improperly affixed to this Psalm, these two verses make no part of it: the subject is totally dissimilar; and there is no rule of analogy by which it can be interpreted as belonging to the Psalm, to the subject, or to the person. I think they originally made a Psalm of themselves; a kind of ejaculatory prayer for the redemption of the captives from Babylon, the rebuilding of Jerusalem, and the restoration of the temple worship. And, taken in this light, they are very proper, and very expressive.

The cxviiith Psalm contains only two verses; and is an ejaculation of praise from the captives who had just then returned from Babylon. And it is a fact that this Psalm is written as a part of the cxviiith in no less than thirty-two of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.; and in some early editions. Again, because of its smallness, it has been absorbed by the cxviiiith, of which it makes the commencement, in twenty-eight of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. In a similar way I suppose the two last verses of this Psalm li. to have been absorbed by the preceding, which originally made a complete Psalm of themselves; and this absorption was the more easy, because, like the cxviiith, it has no title. I cannot allege a similar evidence relative to these two verses, as ever having made a distinct Psalm: but of the fact I can have no doubt, for the reasons assigned above. And I still think that Psalm is too dignified, too energetic, and too elegant, to have been the composition of any but David. It was not Asaph; it was not any of the sons of Korah; it was not Heman or Jeduthun: the hand and mind of a greater master are here.

ANALYSIS OF THE FIFTY-FIRST PSALM.

In general the Psalm contains David's prayer,

I. For himself, ver. 1—12.

II. Three vows or promises, ver. 13—18.

III. For the church, ver. 19.

David, being in deep distress on account of his sins, prays to God for mercy; and, while he feels that he is unworthy of the name of king, of God's anointed, of His son, or of His servant, he uses no plea of his own merit, but,—1. Of the loving-kindness of God. According to thy loving-kindness. 2. Of the compassion of God. According to the multitude of thy tender mercies.

The general petition for mercy being offered, next he offers three particular petitions:—

1. His first was for forgiveness of sins. The fact was past, but the guilt remained; therefore, he earnestly petitions, Put away mine iniquities—my sin is a deep stain. Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquities and cleanse me from my sin—multiply washing; my sin is a deep defilement.

To this petition he joins confession of sin; from which we may learn the conditions requisite in a genuine confession:—

He considers the nature of his sin;—he feels the weight of it,—the burden,—and the anguish of it; and abhors it.

1. I know my iniquity. It is no longer hidden from me.

2. It is ever before me; and the sight breaks my heart.

3. He uses different epithets for it, in order to aggravate the guilt, and deepen the repentance. 1. It is transgression, vs's peash; rebellion. 2. It is iniquity, ny avon, crooked dealing. 3. It is sin, mon chala, error and wandering.

Then he begins his earnest confession,—I have sinned. And this he aggravates by two circumstances:—

1. Of the person. It is against Thee; a good and gracious God, who of a shepherd made me a king over Thy own people. Against thee, the great and terrible God. The people are my subjects, and they cannot judge me; it is against Thee I have sinned, and to Thee I must give account, and by Thee be judged and punished.

2. Of the manner. It was an impudent sin;—not committed by surprise, but done openly in thy sight. Therefore, the threatenings by Thy prophet are all right. Whatever punishment Thou mayest inflict upon me, both Thy justice and mercy will stand clear. That thou mightest be justified, &c.

3. He shews from what root his sin sprang;—from his original corruption. Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me. I am all corruption within, and defilement without. The evil fountain hath sent forth bitter waters.

4. Another aggravation of his sin was, that he was in principle devoid of that which God loves. Thou desirest truth in the inward parts.

5. The greatest aggravation of all was his having sinned against light and knowledge. God had endued him with wisdom in the hidden part, by the motions of His own Spirit: but he had permitted his passion to obscure that light, and had quenched the Spirit.

Having made this general confession, he names the particular sin that lay heaviest on his conscience. Deliver me from blood-guiltiness. And then renews his petition for pardon under a type then in use, and a metaphor. The type, hyssop;—the metaphor, wash me.

1. Purge me with hyssop. With a bunch of hyssop, dipped in the blood of the paschal lamb, the Israelites sprinkled their doors. It was also used in the sprinkling of the leper, and in the sacrifice for sin: and the blood and sprinkling were a type of Christ's blood, and the pardon and holiness that came through it. Sprinkled with this, David knew he must be clean: for the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin; and it is the blood of Christ that justifies.

2. Sanctified also he wishes to be; and there, he says, Wash me. And this is done by the influence of God's Spirit: I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean. Ezek. xxxvi. 25.

David, having ended his petitions for pardon, proceeds,—

1. To pray that the evil effects which had been produced by his sin might be removed. Make me to hear joy and gladness, &c.

2. That his body, which was in a pining condition, might be restored. That the bones which thou hast broken may rejoice.

3. A third evil effect of his sin was, that God's favour, that is, His favour, was turned away from him: he, therefore, begs,—

1. Hides thy face from my sins. Remember them not against me.

2. And blot out mine iniquities. I know there is a long and black catalogue in Thy book against me; blot it out! blot out the hand writing of ordinances that is against me. Now follows David's third petition—in which he again craves more particularly the grace of sanctification. He first prayed for remission; next for reconciliation; and now for renovation, which he asks of God in the three following verses:—1. Create in me a clean heart. 2. Renew a right spirit within me. 3. Cast me not away from thy presence. 4. Take not thy Holy Spirit from me. 5. Restore me the joy of thy salvation. 6. Uphold me with thy free Spirit. In which petitions we are to consider,—

1. The subject on which the work is to be done. The heart,—the spirit. For as the heart is that part that first lives in nature; so it is the first that lives in grace. The work must begin within, else outward renovation will be to little purpose.

2. The work itself, which is,—

1. A creation. Sin had reduced David's heart to nothing in respect to heavenly affections and things; and to bring it into a state in which it would answer the end of its creation, was to bring something out of nothing; which, in all cases, is the work of Almighty God. Create in me, O God, &c.

2. It is a renovation. All in David was the old man, nothing left of the new man. He prays, therefore, to be renewed in the spirit of his mind. Renew a right spirit within me.

3. Reconciliation and restitution. Cast me not away—as a dead man; nor take away thy Spirit from me, by which I live. Cast me not away;—take not thy Holy Spirit from me.

4. A confirmation in what was good. Uphold—confirm me.

3. Who was to do this work? Not himself;—God alone. Therefore, he prays, O God create;—O Lord, renew—uphold by thy Spirit.

4. The quality of this. A cleansing—implied in these remarkable words:—a right spirit,—a holy spirit,—a free spirit; in which some have thought they saw the mystery of the Holy Trinity.

1. A right spirit. He felt that he might easily go wrong;—a crooked and perverse spirit had prevailed within him, which had led him out of the right way to salvation. Renew in me a right spirit.

2. A holy spirit;—one opposed to the carnal spirit that was enmity against God; the motions and desires of which were from the flesh, and tended only to its gratification. Take not thy Holy Spirit from me. It is God's Holy Spirit that makes the spirit of man holy. Holiness of heart depends on the indwelling of the Holy Ghost.

3. A free spirit. A noble, a princely spirit. Ever since his fall, he felt he did nothing good; but by constraint; he was in bondage to corruption. There was no dignity in his mind; sin had debased it. "Ennobled by a birth from above;" and by Thy noble Spirit uphold me!

II. He had now presented his three petitions; and now he makes his vows:—First, To teach others. Secondly, To praise God. And, thirdly, to offer him such a sacrifice as He could accept.

1. His first vow. Then, after pardon obtained, I shall teach;—for a man under guilt, is not able to declare pardon to others.

2. I will teach thy way to sinners,—viz. that to the stubborn Thou wilt shew Thyself froward: but to the penitent Thou wilt shew mercy.

3. And the effect will be, sinners shall be converted unto thee. They who hear of Thy justice and mercy, as manifested in my case, will fear, turn from sin, have faith, and turn to THEE.

2. His second vow and promise is to praise God. My tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness. But to this he was, 1. Unapt; and must be so, till received into favour. And, 2. Unable, till he received the healthful Spirit: of the grace of God. Therefore, he prays for a capacity to do both:—1. Deliver me from blood-guiltiness, O God; then my tongue shall sing. 2. O Lord, open my lips;—and my mouth shall shew forth thy praise.

3. His third vow is, about a sacrifice. Not of any animal, but of a broken spirit; a broken and contrite heart, which he knew God would not despise. 1. Thou desiredst no sacrifice, else I would give it thee. No outward sacrifice can be of any avail, if the heart be not offered. 2. Nor will the heart be accepted, if it be not sacrificed. The broken spirit and contrite heart,—this sacrifice he vowed to bring.

III. Having finished his prayers and vows for himself, he forgets not Jerusalem. He petitions for God's church: and the reason might be, he might be afraid that Jerusalem should suffer because of his sins: for peccant reges, placentifer Achivi; the king sins, the people suffer. This was the case when he sinned against God by numbering the people.

His method and his charity in this are both instructive.

1. His method. First, To be reconciled to God himself; and then to pray for others. The prayers of the righteous avail much.

2. His charity: for we are always bound to remember the afflictions of Joseph, and pray for the peace of Jerusalem. He prays,—

1. That God, who out of His good pleasure did choose a church, would out of His mere good will do it good, and preserve it. Do good in thy good pleasure, to Zion.

2. That he would have a special favour, even to the building. Build thou the walls of Jerusalem: for these fall not alone; religion and the service of God fall, when the people permit their churches and chapels to be dilapidated, or get out of repair. Of this there are multitudes of proofs.

3. For the consequence of Jerusalem's prosperity would be this: that religion would flourish with it; then there would be sacrifices, burnt-offerings, and holocausts. Then they shall offer bullocks upon thine altar.

4. And what is yet more, and better: we shall offer, and Thou wilt accept. Then shall thou be pleased with the sacrifices of righteousness. Being reconciled to Thee, justified, and sanctified; and righteous in all our conduct; all our sacrifices, springing from Thy own grace and love in us, shall find a gracious acceptance.

NOTES ON PSALM LII.

The title is,—“To the chief musician, an instructive Psalm of David, when Doeg the Edomite came and informed Saul, and said to him,—David came to the house of Ahimelech.” The history to which this alludes is the following:—David having learned that Saul was determined to destroy him, went to take refuge with Achish, king of Gath: in his journey he passed by Nob, where the tabernacle then was, and took thence the sword of Goliath; and, being spent with hunger, took some of the shew-bread. Doeg, an Edomite, one of the domestics of Saul, being there, went to Saul, and informed him of these transactions. Saul immediately ordered Ahimelech into his presence, upbraided him for being a partisan of David, and ordered Doeg to slay him and all the priests. Doeg did so; and there fell by his hand eighty-five persons. And Saul sent and destroyed Nob and all its inhabitants, old and young, with all their property; none escaping but Abiathar, the son of Ahimelech, who immediately joined himself to David. The account may be found 1 Sam. xxi. 1—7, xxii. 9—23. All the Versions agree in this title except the Syriac, which speaks of it as a Psalm directed against vice in general, with a prediction of the destruction of evil.

Though the Psalm be evidently an invective against some great, wicked, and tyrannical man; yet I think it too mild in its composition for a transaction the most barbarous on record, and the most flagrant vice in the whole character of Saul.

Verse 1. Why boastest thou thyself? It is thought that Doeg boasted of his loyalty to Saul in making the above discovery: but the information was aggravated by circumstances of falsehood that tended greatly to inflame and irritate the mind of Saul. Exaggeration and lying are common to all informers.

O mighty man? This character scarcely comports with Doeg, who was only chief of the herdsmen of Saul, 1 Sam. xxi. 7, but I grant this is not decisive evidence that the Psalm may not have Doeg in view, for the chief herdsmen may have been a man of credit and authority.

Verse 2. Deviseth mischiefs? Lies and slanders pro-

6 The righteous also shall see, and fear, and shall laugh at him:

7 Lo this is the man that made not God his strength; but trusted in the abundance of his riches, and strengthened himself in his wickedness.

ceeding from the tongue argue the desperate wickedness of the heart.

Like a sharp razor, working deceitfully.] Which, instead of taking off the beard, cuts and wounds the flesh; or, as the operator, who, when pretending to trim the beard, cuts the throat.

Verse 3. Thou lovest evil? This was a finished character. Let us note the particulars:—1. He boasted in the power to do evil. 2. His tongue devised, studied, planned, and spoke mischiefs. 3. He was a deceitful worker. 4. He loved evil, and not good. 5. He loved lying; his delight was in falsity. 6. Every word that tended to the destruction of others he loved. 7. His tongue was deceitful; he pretended friendship while his heart was full of enmity, ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. Now behold the punishment!—

Verse 5. God shall likewise destroy thee? 1. God shall set Himself to destroy thee; ירד יצטטעא, “He will pull down Thy building;” He shall unroof it, dilapidate, and dig up thy foundation. 2. He shall bruise, or break, thee to pieces for ever: thou shalt have neither strength, consistency, nor support. 3. He will mow thee down, and sweep thee away like dust or chaff, so that thou shalt be scattered to all the winds of heaven. Thou shalt have no residence, no tabernacle; that shall be entirely destroyed. 4. Thou shalt be rooted out for ever from the land of the living. The bad fruit which it has borne shall bring God's curse upon the tree; it shall not merely wither, or die, but it shall be plucked up from the roots; intimating that such a sinner shall die a violent death. Selah, So it shall, and so it ought to be.

Verse 6. The righteous also, shall see, and fear? The thing shall be done in the sight of the saints: they shall see God's judgments on the workers of iniquity; and they shall fear a God so holy and just, and feel the necessity of being doubly on their guard lest they fall into the same condemnation. But instead of ויראו ve-yirau, and they shall fear, three of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. with the Syriac, have ויראו ve-yimachu, and they shall rejoice; and from the following words, “and shall laugh at him,” this appears to be the true reading: for laughing may be either the consequence, or accompaniment, of rejoicing.

Verse 7. Made not God his strength? Did not make God his portion.

In the abundance of his riches? Literally, in the multiplication of his riches. He had got much, he hoped to get more, and expected that his happiness would multiply as his riches multiplied. And this is the case with most rich men.

Strengthened himself in his wickedness.] Loved money instead of God; and thus, his depravity being increased, was strengthened.

Crescit amor mundi, quantum ipse pecunia crescit. In proportion to the increase of wealth, so is the love of it.

Where is the religious man, in whose hands money has multiplied, who has not lost the spirit of piety in the same ratio? To prevent this, and the perdition to which it leads, there is no way but opening both hands to the poor.

Verse 8. But I am like a green olive tree in the house of God? I shall be in the house of God, full of spiritual vigour, bringing forth evergreen leaves and annual fruit, as the olive does when planted in a proper soil and good situation. It does not mean that there were olive trees planted in God's house; but he was in God's house, as the olive was in its proper place and soil.

I trust in the mercy of God? The wicked man trusts in his riches; I trust in my God. He, like a bad tree, bringing forth poisonous fruit, shall be caressed, and pulled up from the roots: I, like a healthy olive in a good soil, shall, under the influence of God's mercy, bring forth fruit to His glory. As the olive is evergreen, so shall I flourish in the mercy of God for ever and ever.

9 I will praise thee for ever, because thou hast done it: and I will wait on thy name; ^a for it is good before thy saints.

ANALYSIS OF THE FIFTY-SECOND PSALM.

There are three parts in this Psalm:—

I. An invective against Doeg, and a prediction of his fall, ver. 1—5.

II. The comfort which God's people should take in this, ver. 6, 7.

III. The security and flourishing state of those who trust in God, and the Psalmist's thanks for it, ver. 8, 9.

I. David begins with an abrupt apostrophe to Doeg:—Why boastest thou thyself in mischief, thou mighty man?

And answers that this boasting was but vain; because the goodness of God endureth continually. This was sufficient to quiet all those who might be afraid of his boasting.

Having giving a general character of this man, as having a delight in mischief, he enters into particulars; and especially he considers the bad use he made of his tongue.

1. Thy tongue deviseth mischief, like a razor, working deceitfully. Perhaps there may be here a reference to a case where a man, employed to take off or trim the beard, took that opportunity to cut the throat of his employer. In this manner had Doeg often acted: while pretending by his tongue to favour, he used it in a deceitful way to ruin the character of another.

2. Thou lovest evil more than good. His wickedness was habitual; he loved it.

3. Thou lovest lying more than righteousness. He was an enemy to the truth, and by lies and flatteries a destroyer of good men.

4. This is expressed more fully in the next verse: Thou lovest all deceitful words, O thou false tongue! He was all tongue; a man of words: and these the most deceitful and injurious.

This is his character; and now David foretells his fall and destruction, which he amplifies by a congeries of words.

1. God shall likewise destroy thee for ever. 2. He shall take thee away. 3. He shall pluck thee out of thy dwelling place. 4. He shall root thee out of the land of the living. See the Notes.

II. Then follows how God's people should be affected by Doeg's fall.

1. The righteous shall see it, and fear. They shall reverence God more than formerly, as taking vengeance on this singularly wicked man.

2. They shall laugh at him, using this bitter sarcasm, Lo, this is the man that made not God his strength, &c. He trusted in his gold more than in his God.

III. But such a fearful end shall not fall on any good man: while the wicked is plucked up from the roots, the righteous shall flourish like a healthy olive tree.

1. As for me, I am like the green olive tree; ever fruitful and flourishing.

2. I am planted in the house of the Lord; and derive all my nourishment from him, through His ordinances.

3. The olive is perhaps one of the most useful trees in the world. Its fruit and its oil are of great use to the inhabitants of those countries where the olive is cultivated; and are transported to most parts of the world, where the culture of the olive is unknown.

children of men, to see if there were any that did understand, that did ^a seek God.

3 Every one of them is gone back: they are altogether become filthy; there is none that doeth good, no, not one.

4 Have the workers of iniquity ^a no knowledge? who eat up my people as they eat bread: they have not called upon God.

5 ^a There ^a were they in great fear, where no fear was: for God hath ^b scattered the bones of him that encampeth against thee: thou hast put them to shame, because God hath despised them.

6 ^a Oh ^a that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! When God bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall be glad.

^a Heb. They feared a fear. Psa. 14. 5.—^b Ezek. 6. 5.—^c Psa. 14. 7.—^d Heb. who will give salvation, &c.

4. The reason why he shall be like the olive:—His faith in God. I trust in the mercy of God for ever.

Hence, the Psalmist's conclusion is full of confidence:—

1. I will praise thee for ever, because thou hast done it.

2. I will wait on thy name. I will continue to use those means by which Thou communicatest Thy grace to the soul.

3. I shall do this because it is my duty, and because it is right in the sight of Thy people. For it is good before thy saints.

NOTES ON PSALM LIII.

The title, "To the chief Musician upon Mahalath, an instructive Psalm of David." The word מַחֲלָלָת machalath, some translate the president; others, the master, or leader of the dance; others, hollow instruments; others, the chorus. A flute, pipe, or wind instrument with holes, appears to be what is intended. "To the chief player on the flute;" or, To the master of the band of pipers.

Verse 1. The fool hath said in his heart] The whole of this Psalm, except a few inconsiderable differences, is the same as the fourteenth; and, therefore, the same Notes and Analysis may be applied to it: or, by referring to the fourteenth, the Reader will find the subject of it amply explained. I shall add a few short notes.

Have done abominable iniquity] Instead of לַי אֵיבֹ, evil, or iniquity, eight of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. have מַעֲשֵׂי אֱלִילָה, work, which is nearly the same as in Psa. xiv.

Verse 4. Have the workers of iniquity] For לַיִם פְּעָלַי, workers, seventy-two of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., with several ancient editions, the Chaldee, (though not noticed in the Latin translation in the London Polyglott,) the Syriac, Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and the Arabic, with the Anglo-Saxon, add the word לַיִם, ALL,—all the workers of iniquity; which is the reading in the parallel place in Psa. xiv. It may be necessary to observe, that the Chaldee, in the Antwerp and Paris Polyglotts, and in that of Justiniani, have not the word לַיִם, ALL.

Have not called upon God.] אֱלֹהִים elohim: but many MSS. have יְהוָה, LORD.

Verse 5. For God hath scattered the bones of him that encampeth against thee: thou hast put them to shame, because God hath despised them] The Reader will see, on comparing this with the fifth and sixth verses of Psa. xiv. that the words above are mostly added here to what is said there; and appear to be levelled against the Babylonians, who sacked and ruined Jerusalem, and who were now sacked and ruined in their turn. The sixth verse of Psa. xiv. Ye have shamed the counsel of the poor, because the Lord is his refuge, is added here by more than twenty of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.

Verse 6. O that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion!] I have already shewn that the proper translation is,—Who shall give from Zion salvation to Israel? The word salvation is in the plural here,—deliverances: but many MSS., with the Septuagint, Vulgate, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon, have it in the singular.

When God bringeth back] When Jehovah bringeth back is the reading of more than twenty of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. with the Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee, and Justiniani's Polyglott Psalter.

For larger Notes and an Analysis the Reader is requested to refer to Psa. xiv. And for a comparison of the two Psalms he may consult Dr. Kennicott's Hebrew Bible, where, under Psalm xiv. in the lower margin, the variations are exhibited at one view.

NOTES ON PSALM LIV.

The title is,—“To the chief Musician upon Neginoth, an instructive Psalm of David, when the Ziphites came to Saul and said, Doth not David conceal himself among us?”

Ziph^a was a village in the southern part of Palestine. David having taken refuge in the mountains of that country, the Ziphites went to Saul, and informed him of the fact. Saul, with his army, immediately went thither; and was on one side of a mountain while David was on the other. Just when he was about to fall into the hands of his merciless pursuer, an express came to Saul that the Philistines had invaded Israel, on which he gave up the pursuit, and returned to save his country, and David escaped to En-gedi. See the account in 1 Sam. xxiii. 19—29. It is supposed to have been after this deliverance that he composed this Psalm. Neginoth, from נגן nagan, to strike, or play, on some kind of instrument, probably signifies stringed instruments, such as were played on with a plectrum.

Verse 1. Save me, O God, by thy name] Save me by Thyself alone; so name here may be understood. The name of God is often God himself. David was now in such imminent danger of being taken and destroyed, that no human means were left for his escape; if God, therefore, had not interfered, he must have been destroyed. See the Introduction above.

Verse 2. Hear my prayer] In his straits he had recourse to God; for from Him alone, for the reasons alleged above, his deliverance must proceed.

Verse 3. Strangers are risen up against me] The Ziphites.

And oppressors] Saul, his courtiers, and his army. They have not set God before them.] It is on no religious account, nor is it to accomplish any end, on which they can ask the blessing of God.

Selah.] This is true.

Verse 4. Behold, God is mine helper] This would naturally occur to him when he saw that Saul was obliged to leave the pursuit, and go to defend his territories, when he was on the very point of seizing him. God, whose providence is ever watchful, had foreseen this danger; had stirred up the Philistines to make this inroad just at the time in which Saul and his army were about to lay hands on David. Well might he then say,—Behold God is mine helper.

Is with them that uphold my soul.] נָשָׂא naphshi, my life. This may even refer to the Philistines, who had at this time made an inroad on Israel. God was even with his own enemies, by making them instruments to save the life of His servant.

Verse 5. He shall reward evil] Saul and his courtiers, instead of having God's approbation, shall have His curse.

Cut them off in thy truth.] Thou hast promised to save me;—these have purposed to destroy me. Thy truth is engaged in my defence: they will destroy me if permitted to live:—to save Thy truth and to accomplish its promises, Thou must cut them off.

Verse 6. I will freely sacrifice unto thee] Or, I will sacrifice nobly unto thee. Not only with a willing mind, but with a liberal hand, will I bring sacrifice unto Thee.

For it is good.] Thy name is good; it is descriptive of Thy nature; full of goodness and mercy to man. And it is good to be employed in such a work:—whoever worships Thee in sincerity is sure to be a gainer. To him who orders his conversation aright, thou dost shew Thy salvation.

Verse 7. For he hath delivered me] Saul had now decamped, and was returned to save his territories; and David in the meanwhile escaped to En-gedi. God was most evidently the Author of this deliverance.

Mine eye hath seen his desire upon mine enemies.] It is not likely that this Psalm was written after the death of Saul; and, therefore, David could not say that he had seen his desire. But, there is nothing in the Text for his desire; and the words might be translated,—my eye hath seen my enemies: they have been so near, that I could plainly discover them. Thus almost all the Versions have understood the Text. I have seen them, and yet they were not permitted to approach me. God has been my Deliverer.

ANALYSIS OF THE FIFTY-FOURTH PSALM.

There are three parts in this Psalm:—

I. David's prayer for help and salvation, ver. 1—3.

II. His confidence that he should have help, ver. 4, 5.

III. His gratitude and obedience, ver. 6, 7.

I. 1. David's petition: Save me. 2. Plead my cause.

3. Hear my prayer. 4. Give ear to my words. He is much in earnest; and yet does not desire his prayer to be heard, unless his cause be just. If just, then let God plead it.

2. He produces two grounds upon which he petitions,—

1. God's name. 2. God's strength. 1. He that calls on the name of the Lord shall be saved. I call, save me in thy name! 2. Thou art a powerful God, able to do it. Save me in thy strength.

The greatness of his danger causes him to urge his prayers.

1. His enemies were strangers; from whom no favour could be expected.

2. They were violent oppressors;—formidable cruel tyrants, from whom he could expect no mercy.

3. They were such as could be satisfied with nothing less than his blood. They rise to seek after my life.

4. They had no fear of God. They have not set God before them.

II. Notwithstanding they are all that I have already stated; and, humanly speaking, I have nothing but destruction to expect:—yet I will not fear: because—1. For God is with me. 2. He is against them.

1. God is my Helper. As He has promised, so He has done, and will do to me.

2. God is with them also that uphold my soul. Selah. Behold this!

But He opposes them, who oppose me; is an enemy to them who are mine enemies.

1. He shall reward evil to such. Of this being assured, he proceeds to imprecate,—

2. Destroy Thou them. Cut them off in thy truth. Thou hast promised that it shall be well with the righteous; and that snares, fire, and brimstone, shall be rained on the wicked. Let God be true. Fiat justitia; ruat cælum, percat mundus. They must be cut off.

III. For such a mercy David promises not to be unthankful.

1. For this he would offer a princely sacrifice. I will freely sacrifice.

2. He would praise the name of the Lord. I will praise thy name.

For this he gives two reasons:—

1. That which internally moved him. For it is good.

2. That which was outwardly impulsive. His deliverance. 1. His deliverance was great and effectual. Thou hast delivered me out of all my trouble. 2. His danger was so imminent that, humanly speaking, there was no escape. The enemy was within sight who was bent on his destruction; yet he was delivered; and they were confounded. On these accounts it was right that he should sing praise, and offer sacrifice. To the grateful God is bountiful.

PSALM LV.

David, in great danger and distress, from the treacherable malice of his enemies, calls on God for mercy, 1-4. Whom he had the wings of a dove that he might fly away, and be at rest, 6, 7. Prays against his enemies, and describes their wickedness, 8-11. Speaks of a false friend who had been the principal cause of all his distresses, 12-14. Prays against his enemies, 15. Expresses his confidence in God, 16-18. Gives a farther description of the chief musician, 19, 20. Encourages himself in the Lord, and foretells the destruction of his enemies, 20, 22.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, Maschil, A Psalm of David.

DAVID. GIVE ear to my prayer, O God; and hide not thyself from my supplication.

2 Attend unto me and hear me: I ^a mourn in my complaint and make a noise;

3 Because of the voice of the enemy, because of the oppression of the wicked: ^b for they cast iniquity upon me, and in wrath they hate me.

4 ^c My heart is sore pained within me: and the terrors of death are fallen upon me.

5 Fearfulness and trembling are come upon me, and horror hath ^d overwhelmed me.

6 And I said, Oh that I had wings like a dove! for ^e then would I fly away, and be at rest.

7 Lo, then would I wander far off, and remain in the wilderness. Selah.

NOTES ON PSALM LV.

The title "To the chief musician on Neginoth, a Psalm of David, giving instruction." This is the same as the preceding, which see.

Verse 1. Give ear to my prayer] The frequency of such petitions shews the great earnestness of David's soul. If God did not hear and help, he knew he could not succeed elsewhere: therefore he continues to knock at the gate of God's mercy.

Verse 2. I mourn in my complaint] וַיִּבַּח בִּדְחִי, in my sighing:—a strong guttural sound, expressive of the natural accents of sorrow.

And make a noise] I am in a tumult. I am strongly agitated.

Verse 3. They cast iniquity upon me] To give a colourable pretence to their rebellion, they charge me with horrible crimes,—as if they had said, Down with such a wretch, he is not fit to reign. Clamour against the person of the sovereign, is always the watchword of insurrection, in reference to rebellion.

Verse 4. The terrors of death are fallen upon me.] I am in hourly expectation of being massacred.

Verse 5. Fearfulness] How natural is this description! He is in distress; he mourns;—makes a noise; sobs and sighs. His heart is wounded;—he expects nothing but death: this produces fear,—which produces tremor,—which terminates in that deep apprehension of approaching and inevitable ruin that overwhelms him with horror. No man ever described a wounded heart like David.

Verse 6. Oh that I had wings like a dove.] He was so surrounded, so hemmed in, on every side by his adversaries, that he could see no way for his escape unless he had wings, and could take flight. The dove is a bird of very rapid wing; and some of them passing before his eyes at the time, might have suggested the idea expressed here.

And be at rest.] Get a habitation. Verse 7. Would I wander far off] He did escape; and yet his enemies were so near, as to throw stones at him: but he escaped beyond Jordan. 2 Sam. xxi. 22, 23.

A passage in the Octavia of SENECA has been referred to as being parallel to this of David. It is in the answer of Octavia to the Chorus. Act. v. ver. 914—923.

Quis mea digne deflere potest
Mela? Quis lacrimis nostris quiescere
Raddet Aedon? cuius pennas
Utriusq; mitemi mihi, fatis daretur!
Fugarem luctus oblata meae
Penna volucris, prociat at ostus
Hominum tristes sedantque feram.
Sola in vacuo nemore, et laevi
Ramo pendens, querulo possum
Guttur meum fundere murrur.

My woes who enough can bewail?
O what notes can my sorrow express?
Sweet Philomel's self even would fall
To respond with her plaintive distress.
O had I her wings! I would fly
To where swallows I ne'er should feel sore
Explore on her plumes through the sky,
Regions, far from mankind, would explore,
In a grove where sad silence should reign,
On a spray would I seat me alone;
In shrill lamentations complain,
And in wailings would pour forth my moan.

8 I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest.

9 Destroy, O Lord, and divide their tongues: for I have seen ^a violence and strife in the city.

10 Day and night they go about it upon the walls thereof: mischief also and sorrow are in the midst of it.

11 Wickedness is in the midst thereof: deceit and guile depart not from her streets.

12 ^b For it was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have borne it: neither was it he that hated me that did ^c magnify himself against me; then I would have hid myself from him.

13 But it was thou, ^d a man mine equal, ^e my guide, and mine acquaintance.

14 ^f We took sweet counsel together, and ^g walked unto the house of God in company.

15 Let death seize upon them, and let them ^h go down quick into ⁱ hell: for wickedness is in their dwellings, and among them.

16 As for me, I will call upon God; and the LORD shall save me.

17 ^j Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice.

Verse 8. The windy storm] From the sweeping wind and tempest; Absalom and his party, and the mutinous people in general.

Verse 9. Destroy, O Lord] Swallow them up,—confound them.

Divide their tongues] Let his counsellors give opposite advice. Let them never agree; and let their devices be confounded. And the prayer was heard. Hushai and Ahithophel gave opposite counsel. Absalom followed that of Hushai; and Ahithophel, knowing that the steps advised by Hushai would bring Absalom's affairs to ruin, went and hanged himself. See 2 Sam. xv. xvi. and xvii.

Violence and strife in the city.] They have been concerting violent measures; and thus are full of contention.

Verse 10. Day and night they go about] This and the following verse shew the state of Jerusalem at this time. Indeed, they exhibit a fair view of the state of any city in the beginning of an insurrection. The leaders are plotting continually; going about to strengthen their party, and to sow new dissensions, by misrepresentation, hypocrisy, calumny, and lies.

Verse 12. It was not an enemy] It is likely that in all these three verses Ahithophel is meant, and who it appears had been at the bottom of the conspiracy from the beginning; and probably was the first mover of the vain mind of Absalom to do what he did.

Verse 14. Walked unto the house of God in company.] Or with haste; for the rabbins teach that we should walk hastily to the temple, but slowly from it.

Verse 15. Let death seize upon them] This is a prediction of the sudden destruction which should fall on the ringleaders in this rebellion. And it was so. Ahithophel, seeing his counsel rejected, hanged himself. Absalom was defeated; and, fleeing away, he was suspended by the hair in a tree, under which his mule had passed; and, being found thus by Joab, he was despatched with three darts: and the people, who espoused his interests, were almost all cut off. They fell by the sword, or perished in the woods. 2 Sam. xviii. 8.

Let them go down quick into hell] Let them go down alive into the pit. Let the earth swallow them up! And something of this kind actually took place. Absalom and his army were defeated; twenty thousand of the rebels were slain on the field; and the wood devoured more people that day than the sword devoured, 2 Sam. xviii. 7, 8. The words might be rendered, Death shall exact upon them; they shall descend alive into sheol. And death did exact his debt upon them, as we have seen above.

Verse 16. I will call upon God] He foresaw his deliverance, and the defeat of his enemies; and, therefore, speaks confidently, The Lord shall save me; or, as the Targum, The Word of the Lord shall redeem me.

Verse 17. Evening and morning, and at noon, will I pray] This was the custom of the pious Hebrews. See Dan. vi. 10. The Hebrews began their day in the evening, and hence David mentions the evening first. The rabbins say, men should pray three times each day, because the day changes three times. This was observed in the primitive church: but the times, in different places, were va-

PSALM LVI.

David prays for support against his enemies, whose wickedness he describes, 1-6. And foretells their destruction, 7. Expresses his confidence in God's mercy, exposes delinquency, and promises thanksgiving and obedience, 8-13.

XI. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

To the chief Musician upon Jonath-elem-rechokim, * Mich-tam of David, when the Philistines took him in Gath.

BE merciful unto me, O God; for man would swallow me up; he fighting daily oppresseth me.

a Or, a golden Psalm of David. So Ps. 16.—b 1 Sam. 31. 11.—c Ps. 57. 1. d Heb. mine observers. Ps. 54. 6.

2. That he would do it with speed. I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest. Such turbulent and impetuous creatures his enemies were, that threw down all before them, as a wind, storm, and tempest.

III. To his prayer he adds an imprecation:—

1. Destroy them, O Lord; destroy them in their own counsels.

2. Or, else, divide their tongue. Let them not agree in their counsels.

Of this he gives the reason in the following words: viz. that they were a band of violent, contentious, ungodly, troublesome, crafty and fraudulent people.

1. Violent they were, and litigious. I have seen violence and strife in the city.

2. Ungodly, and workers of iniquity they were; and incessant in it. Day and night they go about it upon the walls thereof: mischief also and sorrow are in the midst of it.

3. Crafty and fraudulent also. Deceit and guile depart not from her streets. It was then a city, a corporation, a society, of evil doers.

And of this he produces an instance, which, whether it were some bosom friend of David who stole out of the city of Gath, and betrayed his counsels to Saul; or else Ahithophel, who, being formerly his great favourite and counsellor, fell to Absalom, it is uncertain. Whoever it was, such a treacherous person there was, and of him he complains: and well he might; for εδεν μεϊσον ελεος η φιλος δεικων, "there is not a greater sore than a treacherous friend." This treachery he exaggerates most eloquently by an incrementum and apostrophe, drawing his aggravation from the laws of friendship, which he had broken. Had it been an enemy, he could have borne it: but that it was a friend was intolerable, and also inexcusable. Thus the climax stands:—

1. For it was not an enemy that reproached me; then I could have borne it.

2. Neither was it he that hated me that did magnify himself; that is, arise and insult me; then I would have hid myself from him, never admitted him to my bosom.

But, mark this emphatic adverbative; for now he turns his speech to the man:—

1. It was thou, emphatically thou, principally and beyond all others. None but thou.

2. A man, according to my own rank; mine equal, my guide or counsellor; my acquaintance, or own familiar friend.

3. We took sweet counsel together. One to whom I communicated my secrets.

4. And walked unto the house of God in company. Professors we were of the same religion.

Now all these circumstances much heighten and aggravate the treachery that thou, my equal, my director, my familiar friend, one whom I made the master of all my secrets, one who was a great professor of the same religion with me, that thou shouldst betray me, even break my heart. Σε, τρεπες! Judas,—betrayest thou?

Being thus much wronged and moved, as he had just reason; he begins again with an imprecation, not only on him, but on all who believed him, even upon the whole faction. Let death seize upon them; and let them go down quick into hell, have Corah, Dathan, and Abiram's wages. And he adds the reason. They are signally and incorrigibly wicked. For wickedness is in their dwellings, and among them.

IV. Hitherto hath David prayed, complained, imprecated: but now he shews how he recovered courage again, being certain of God's help, and a revenge to be taken on his enemies.

1. As for me, I will call upon God fervently; and the Lord shall save me.

2. Evening, and morning, and at noon-day, incessantly, will I pray and cry aloud; and he shall hear me.

3. And I pray in faith: experience I have of His deliverance; He hath done it, and He will do it again. He hath redeemed my soul in peace from the battle which was against me. Even in the midst of the battle I was as safe as in a time of peace; miraculously delivered, as if there had been no danger.

2^d Mine enemies would daily swallow me up: for they be many that fight against me, O thou Most High.

3 What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee. 4 In God I will praise his word, in God I have put my trust; I will not fear what flesh can do unto me.

5 Every day they wrest my words: all their thoughts are against me for evil.

e Ps. 57. 3.—f Ver. 10, 11.—g 1 Chron. 5. 26. Ps. 5. 11. & 7. 1. & 9. 10.—h Ps. 112. 4. Isai. 24. 3. Heb. 12. 6.

4. For there were many with me. Many enemies, say some: others, many angels. Those, refer it to the danger, these, to the protection. Many enemies round about me, and then it is a wonder I should be delivered. Many angels press to help me, and then it was no wonder that my life was saved. But as for the ungodly, it was not so with them; for this verse is opposed to the former.

1. God shall hear, viz. me and my prayers, and the wrongs they do me.

2. And shall afflict them, i. e. my enemies.

3. Even he that abideth of old. Selah. Mark that, for He is immutable. His power and strength is the same, and His care and love to His people; therefore, He will afflict them.

And, besides, there are those who will provoke him to it,—

1. Because they have no changes. Obstinate they are, impertinent, and change not their ways. Or else they prosper, they have perpetual success, and meet with no alterations; this makes them secure and proud.

2. They fear not God. They ask, Who is the Lord, that we should let Israel go?

3. They are truce-breakers, violators of oaths, leagues, covenants, articles of war. He, that is, some chief commander among them, hath put forth his hands, made war, imbrued his hands in blood, against such as are at peace with him. He hath broken and profaned his covenant, his oath.

4. He is a gross hypocrite; his deeds answer not his words. The words of his mouth were smoother than butter, but war was in his heart; his words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords.

V. In the epilogue of the Psalm he exhorts good men to rely upon God. Cast thy burden, (the cares, troubles, &c. with which thou art loaded,) on the Lord; and he fits it to his present purpose, both as it concerns the godly and the ungodly.

1. To the godly he gives this comfort.—1. He, that is, God, shall sustain thee. He will uphold thee, and give thee strength under the heaviest burdens. Come unto me, all ye that are heavy laden. 2. He shall never suffer the righteous to be moved. With the temptation He will also give the issue: pressed they may be, but not oppressed so as finally to be overthrown.

2. To the ungodly.—1. Overthrown they shall be, and utterly destroyed. Thou, O God, shalt bring them down into the pit of destruction. The grave;—hell. 2. Bloody and deceitful men shall not live out half their days. They come commonly to some untimely death; as Absalom, and Ahithophel, concerning whom the Psalm was composed.

He concludes with the use he would make of it; as if he had said,—Let these bloody and deceitful men reprove their confidence in their armies, in their violence, in their crafty and subtle ways: I will take another course. But I will trust in thee.

NOTES ON PSALM LVI.

The title of this Psalm is very long.—"To the conqueror, concerning the dumb dove in foreign places: a golden Psalm of David." The Vulgate translates the original thus:—"To the end. For the people who were afar off from holy things." This inscription David placed here for a title when the Philistines took him in Gath; so the Septuagint and Ethiopic. The Chaldees is profuse:—"To praise, for the congregation of Israel, which are compared to the silence of a dove, when they were afar off from their cities; but being returned, they praise the Lord of the world, like David, contrite and upright, when the Philistines kept him in Gath." The Syriac,—"A thanksgiving of the righteous man, because he was delivered from his enemy, and from the hand of Saul. Also concerning the Jews, and Christ." Bochart translates, "To the tune of the dove, in the remote woods."

If the title be at all authentic, David may mean himself and his companions by it, when he escaped from the hands of the Philistines; particularly from the hands of Achish, king of Gath. שמ אלמ signifies to compress, or bind together; also, a small band, or body of men; and רנן יונת, from רנן yesnah, to oppress, or afflict, is properly

7 Shall they escape by iniquity? in their anger cast down the people, O God.

8 Thou tellest my wanderings: put thou my tears into thy bottle: are they not in thy book?

9 When I cry unto thee, then shall mine enemies turn back: this I know; for ¹⁰ God is for me.

10¹⁰ In God will I praise his word: in the Lord will I praise his word.

11 In God have I put my trust: I will not be afraid what man can do unto me.

12 Thy vows are upon me, O God: I will render praises unto thee.

13 For ¹⁴ thou hast delivered my soul from death: wilt not thou deliver my feet from falling, that I may walk before God in ¹⁵ the light of the living?

applied to the doves, because of its being so defenceless, and often becoming the prey of ravenous birds. It is possible, therefore, that the title may imply no more than — "A prayer to God in behalf of himself, and the oppressed band that followed him, and shared his misfortunes in distant places."

Others will have it to mean a simple direction To the master of the band, to be sung to the tune of a well-known ode, called, "The dumb dove, in distant places." There is no end to conjectures; and all the titles in the whole book are not worth one hour's labour. Perhaps there is not one of them authentic. They may have been notices that such a Psalm was to be sung to such and such a tune; giving the catch-words of some well known song or ode: a custom that prevails much among us in songs and hymns, and is to be found even among the Asiatics.

Verse 1. Be merciful unto me] I am assailed both at home and abroad. I can go no whither without meeting with enemies: unless Thou, who art the Fountain of mercy and the Most High, stand up in my behalf, my enemies will most undoubtedly prevail against me. They fight against me continually, and I am in the utmost danger of being swallowed up by them.

Verse 2. O thou Most High] מְרוֹם מַרְוֹם. I do not think that this word expresses any attribute of God, or indeed is at all addressed to Him. It signifies, literally, from on high; or, from a high, or elevated place. "For the multitudes fight against me from the high or elevated place;" the place of authority; the court and cabinet of Saul.

Most of the Versions begin the next verse with this word: From the light of the day, though I fear, yet will I trust in thee. From the time that persecution was hot against me, though I often am seized with fear; yet I am enabled to maintain my trust in Thee. Dr. Kennicott thinks there is a corruption here; and proposes to read, — I look upwards all the day long.

Verse 4. In God I will praise his word] בְּיְהוָה בְּעֵלֹהִים may mean here, through God, or by the help of God, I will praise his word. And, that he should have cause to do it, he says, In God I have put my trust; and therefore he says, I will not fear what flesh can do to me. Man is but flesh, weak, and perishing; God is an infinite Spirit, almighty, and eternal. He repeats this sentiment in the tenth and eleventh verses.

Verse 5. Every day they wrest my words] They have been spies on my conduct continually: they collected all my sayings, and wrested my words out of their proper sense and meaning, to make them by insinuations speak treason against Saul. They are full of evil purposes against me.

Verse 6. They gather themselves together] They form cabals; have secret meetings and consultations how they may most effectually destroy me, under the pretence of justice, and safety to the state.

They hide themselves] They do all secretly.

They mark my steps] They are constantly at my heels.

They wait for my soul] They lie in wait for my life. Our translators have missed the meaning of וּבְנֵי נֶפֶשׁ, and פְּשָׁעִים, (which generally signify the animal life, not the immortal spirit,) more than any other words in the Old or New Testaments.

Verse 7. Shall they escape by iniquity?] Shall such conduct go unpunished? Shall their address, their dexterity in working iniquity, be the means of their escape? No. In anger, O God, wilt thou cast down the people.

Verse 8. Thou tellest my wanderings] Thou seest how often I am obliged to shift the place of my retreat. I am hunted every where: but Thou numberest all my hiding-places, and seest how often I am in danger of losing my life.

Put thou my tears into thy bottle] Here is an allusion to a very ancient custom, which we know long obtained among the Greeks and Romans, of putting the tears which were shed for the death of any person into small phials, called lachrymatories, or urnæ lachrymales, and offering them on the tomb of the deceased. Some of these were of glass, some of pottery, and some of agate, sardonyx, &c. A small one in my own collection is of hard baked clay.

Are they not in thy book?] Thou hast taken an exact account of all the tears I have shed in relation to this business; and Thou wilt call my enemies to account for every tear.

Verse 9. When I cry unto thee, then shall mine enemies turn back] As soon as they know that I call upon Thee, then, knowing that Thou wilt hear and save, my enemies will immediately take flight. The cry of faith and prayer to God is more dreadful to our spiritual foes, than the warwhoop of the Indian is to his surprised brother savages.

This I know] I have often had experience of the Divine interposition; and I know it will be so now, for God is with me. He who has God with him need not fear the face of any adversary.

Verse 10, 11. See on verse 4, where the same words occur.

Verse 12. Thy vows are upon me] I have promised in the most solemn manner to be Thy servant; to give my whole life to Thee; and to offer for my preservation sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving.

Reader, what hast thou vowed to God? To renounce the devil and all his works, the pomps and vanities of this wicked world, and all the sinful desires of the flesh; to keep God's holy word and commandment, and to walk before him all the days of thy life. These things hast thou vowed: and these vows are upon thee. Wilt thou pay them?

Verse 13. Thou hast delivered my soul from death] My life from the grave, and my soul from endless perdition.

My feet from falling] Thou hast preserved me from taking any false way, and keepest me steady in my godly course; and so supportest me that I may continue to walk before thee in the light of the living, ever avoiding that which is evil, and moving towards that which is good: letting my light shine before men, that they may see my good works, and glorify my Father which is in heaven. To walk before God, is to please Him: the light of the living signifies the whole course of human life, with all its comforts and advantages.

ANALYSIS OF THE FIFTY-SIXTH PSALM.

David, in banishment among the Philistines, and being then in great danger of his life, complains, and professes his confidence in God.

The contents of this Psalm are the following:—

I. David's prayer, ver. 1, 7, 8.

II. The cause; the fear of his enemies, whom he describes, ver. 1, 2, 5, 6.

III. His confidence in God's word, ver. 3, 4, 9, 10, 11.

IV. His thankfulness, ver. 4, 10, 12, 13.

I. He begins with a prayer for mercy. Little was he likely to find from man: from his God he expected it; and, therefore, he prays,—Be merciful unto me, O God.

II. And then presently he subjoins the cause; the danger he was in by his bloody and cruel enemies, whom he begins to describe,—

1. From their insatiable rapacity. Like a wolf they would swallow me up. Enemies at home and abroad would swallow me up.

2. From the time. Daily they would do it; without intermission.

3. From their number. Many there be that fight against me.

Of these he gives us a farther description in the fifth and sixth verses:—

1. From their incessant malice. Every day they wrest my words. All their thoughts are against me for evil.

2. From their secret treachery, craft, and vigilance. They gather themselves together, they hide themselves; their counsels lying, as it were, in ambush for me. They mark my steps. Go where I will, they are at my heels.

3. From their implacable hatred; nothing could satisfy them but his blood. They lay wait for my soul.

PSALM LVII.

David cries to God for mercy, with the strongest confidence of being heard, 1-2. He describes his enemies as lions, &c. Thanks God for his deliverance, 3. And petitions to publish the praises of the Lord among his people, 4-11.

To the chief Musician, * Al-taschith, Michtam of David, when he fled from Saul in the cave.

BE merciful unto me, O God, be merciful unto me; for my soul trusteth in thee: yea, in the shadow of thy wings will I make my refuge, until these calamities be overpast.

2 I will cry unto God most high: unto God that performeth all things for me.

3 He shall send from heaven and save me a Or, Destroy not, A golden Psalm.—b 1 Sam. 22. 1. & 24. 2. Psa. 142, title. c Psa. 142. 1.—d Psa. 117. 2. & 133. 7.—e 1 Sam. 22. 20.—f Psa. 133. 2.—g Psa. 144. 5, 7. h Or, he reproacheth him that would swallow me up.

In the very midst of this complaint he inserts his courage and confidence.

1. What time I am afraid I will trust in thee.
2. I will not fear. He rises higher: even when he fears, he will not fear. His word, His promise, is passed to me for protection; and I will trust in it. In God will I praise his word: in God have I put my trust, I will not fear what flesh, (for the proudest, the mightiest enemy I have, is but flesh, and all flesh is grass,) I will not then fear what flesh can do unto me.

This reason he repeats again, ver. 10, 11.

1. In God I will praise his word; in the Lord I will praise his word.
2. In God have I put my trust, I will not fear what man can do to me.

III. And this, his confidence, he quickens and animates,—

1. From his assurance that God would punish and bring down his enemies. Shall they escape for their iniquity? No, no; in thine anger thou wilt cast them down.

2. From his assurance of God's tutelage, and paternal eye over him in all his dangers, griefs, complaints, petitions, and banishment.

Men think God does not meddle with little things: he knew otherwise.

1. Thou tellest, and hast upon account, my wanderings: my fights, exile.

2. Thou puttest my tears into thy bottle;—preservest them as rich wine.

3. Thou keepest a record for them. Are they not in thy book?

4. Thou puttest my enemies to flight. When I cry unto thee, then I know mine enemies shall be turned back; for God is with me.

IV. And therefore, at last, he concludes with thanks, to which he holds himself bound by vow.

1. Thy vows are upon me. I owe Thee thanks by vow, and I will pay them. I will render praises unto thee.

2. The reason is,—For thou hast delivered my soul from death.

3. Thou wilt deliver me. Will not thou deliver my feet from falling?

4. The end is,—That I may walk before God in the light of the living. That I may live awhile, and walk as before Thy eye; as in Thy sight, uprightly, sincerely, and prosperously. That in me, men may behold how powerfully Thou hast saved both my body and soul.

NOTES ON PSALM LVII.

The title is, "To the chief Musician, Al-taschith, (destroy not,) a golden Psalm of David, (or one to be engraven) when he fled from Saul in the cave." It is very likely that this Psalm was made to commemorate his escape from Saul in the cave of En-gedi, where Saul had entered without knowing that David was there, and David cut off the skirt of his garment. And it is not improbable, that when he found that Saul was providentially delivered into his hand, he might have formed the hasty resolution to take away his life, as his companions counselled him to do; and at that moment the Divine monition came, וּמִן אֵל תִּשְׁמָעֵת! Destroy not! lift not up thy hand against the Lord's anointed! Instead, therefore, of taking away his life, he contented himself with taking away his skirt, to show him that he had been in his power. When, afterwards, he composed the Psalm, he gave it for title the words which he received as a Divine warning. See the history, 1 Sam. xxiv. See also my Note upon the fourth verse of that chapter.

Verse 1. Be merciful unto me] To show David's deep earnestness, he repeats this twice: he was in great danger, surrounded by implacable enemies, and he knew that God alone could deliver him.

My soul trusteth in thee] I put my life into Thy hand; from the reproach of him that would swallow me up. Selah. God shall send forth his mercy and his truth.

4 My soul is among lions: and I lie even among them that are set on fire, even the sons of men, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword.

5 Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens; let thy glory be above all the earth.

6 They have prepared a net for my steps; my soul is bowed down: they have digged a pit before me, into the midst whereof they are fallen themselves. Selah.

and my immortal spirit knows no other portion than Thyself.

In the shadow of thy wings] A metaphor taken from the brood of a hen taking shelter under her wings when they see a bird of prey; and there they continue to hide themselves till their enemy disappears. In a storm, or tempest of rain, the mother covers them with her wings to afford them shelter and defence. This the Psalmist has particularly in view, as the following words show: Until these calamities be overpast.

Verse 2. I will cry unto God most high] He is the Most High; and, therefore, far above all my enemies, though the prince of the power of the air be at their head.

Unto God—אֱלֹהֵי לֵעֵל, unto the strong God, one against whom no human or diabolic might can prevail. David felt his own weakness, and he knew the strength of his adversaries; and, therefore, he views God under those attributes and characters which were suited to His state. This is a great secret in the Christian life: few pray to God wisely; though they may do it fervently.

That performeth all things for me.] Who works for me; גֹּמֵר, He who completes for me, and will bring all to a happy issue.

Verse 3. He shall send from heaven, and save me] Were there no human agents or earthly means that he could employ, He would send His angels from heaven to rescue me from my enemies. Or, He will give His command from heaven that this may be done on earth.

Selah] I think this word should be at the end of the verse.

God shall send forth his mercy and his truth.] Here mercy and truth are personified. They are the messengers that God will send from heaven to save me. His mercy ever inclines Him to help and save the distressed. This He has promised to do;—and His truth binds Him to fulfil the promises or engagements His mercy has made, both to saints and sinners.

Verse 4. My soul is among lions] לִבְנֵי לֵאָוִם below lebaim. I agree with Dr. Kennicott that this should be translated, "My soul dwells in parched places," from אֵל laab, he thirsted. And thus the Chaldee seems to have understood the place, though it be not explicit.

I lie even among them that are set on fire] I seem to be among coals. It is no ordinary rage and malice by which I am pursued: each of my enemies seems determined to have my life.

Verse 5. Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens] Let the glory of Thy mercy and truth be seen in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath. Several of the fathers apply what is said above to the passion of our Lord, and what is said here to His resurrection.

Verse 6. They have prepared a net for my steps] A gin or spring, such as huntsmen put in the places where they know the prey they seek frequents: such, also, as they place in passages in hedges, &c. through which the game creeps.

They have digged a pit] Another method of catching game and wild beasts. They dig a pit, cover it over with weak sticks and turf. The beasts not suspecting danger, where none appears, in attempting to walk over it, fall through, and are taken. Saul digged a pit, laid snares for the life of David; and fell into one of them himself, particularly at the cave of En-gedi; for he entered into the very pit, or cave, where David and his men lay hidden; and his life lay at the generosity of the very man whose life he was seeking! The rabbins tell a curious and instructive tale concerning this:—"God sent a spider to weave her web at the mouth of the cave in which David and his men lay hid. When Saul saw the spider's web over the cave's mouth, he very naturally conjectured that it could never be the haunt of men nor wild beasts; and, therefore, went in with confidence to repose." The spider here, a vile and contemptible animal, became the instru-
