ment, in the hand of God, of saving David's life, and of confounding Saul in his policy and malice. This may be a fable: but it shews by what apparently insignificant means God, the universal Ruler, can accomplish the greatest and most beneficent ends. Saul continued to dig pits to entrap David; and at last fell a prey to his own obstinacy. We have a proverb to the same effect:—Harm watch, harm catch. The Greeks have one also:—Η τὸ κακὸν βουλή τῷ βουλεύοντι κατίζει, "an evil advice often becomes most ruinous to the adviser." The Romans have one to the same effect:—

*Neque enim lex justior ulla est
Quam necis artificem arte perire sua.*

"There is no law more just than that which condemns a man to suffer death by the instrument which he has invented to take away the life of others."

Verse 7. My heart is fixed] My heart is prepared to do and suffer Thy will. It is fixed: it has made the firmest purpose through His strength by which I can do all things.

Verse 8. Awake up, my glory] Instead of קבוֹדִי kebodi, "my glory," one MS., and the Syriac, have קבוֹרִי kinori, "my harp." Dr. Kennicott reads קבוֹרִי kebori, which he supposes to be some instrument of music; and adds that the instrument used in church-music by the Ethiopians is now called קבוֹרִי kaberi. I think the Syriac likely to be the true reading:—Awake up, my harp; awake, psaltery and harp: I will awake early. Such repetitions are frequent in the Hebrew poets. If we read my glory, it may refer either to his tongue; or, to what is more likely, his skill in composition, and in playing on different instruments. The last five verses of this Psalm are nearly the same with the five first verses of Ps. cviii. The reason of this may be, the notes or memoranda from the Psalmist's diary were probably, through mistake, twice copied. The insertion at the beginning of the cviii Psalm seems to bear no relation to the rest of that ode.

Rabbi Solomon Jarchi tells us that David had a harp at his bed's head, which played of itself when the north wind blew on it; and then David arose to give praise to God. This account has been treated as a ridiculous fable by grave Christian writers. I would, however, hesitate; and ask one question:—Does not the account itself point out an instrument then well known, similar to the comparatively lately discovered Eolian harp? Was not this the instrument hung at David's bed's head, which, when the night breeze (which probably blew at a certain time) began to act upon the cords, sent forth those dulcet, those heavenly sounds, for which the Eolian harp is remarkable? "Awake, my harp, at the due time: I will not wait for thee now, I have the strongest cause for gratitude; I will awake earlier than usual to sing the praises of my God."

Verse 9. Among the people] The Israelites.

Among the nations.] The Gentiles at large. A prophecy either relating to the gospel time, Christ being considered as the Speaker: or a prediction that these Divine compositions should be sung, both in synagogues and in Christian churches, in all the nations of the earth. And it is so: wherever the name of Christ is known, there is David's known also.

Verse 10. Thy mercy is great unto the heavens] It is as far above all human description and comprehension as the heavens are above the earth. See the Notes on Psalm xxxvi. 5, 6, where nearly the same words occur.

Verse 11. Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens] The same sentiments and words which occur in verse 5. See the Note there.

David was not only in a happy state of mind when he wrote this Psalm, but in what is called a state of triumph. His confidence in God was unbounded; though encompassed by the most ferocious enemies, and having all things against him except God and his innocence. David will seldom be found in a more blessed state than he here describes. Similar faith in God will bring the same blessings to every true Christian in similar circumstances.

ANALYSIS OF THE FIFTY-SEVENTH PSALM.

The contents of this Psalm are,—

I. David's petition, ver. 1.

II. The reasons which induced him to offer it, ver. 2—6.

III. His resolution to give God due praise, ver. 5, 7—11.

ple: I will sing unto thee among the nations.

10 For thy mercy is great unto the heavens, and thy truth unto the clouds.

11 Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens: let thy glory be above all the earth.

p Ps. 103. 3.—r Ps. 26. 5. & 71. 19. & 103. 11. & 108. 4.—u Ver. 5.

I. His petition is ardent. The repetition shews this: it is for grace and protection. Be merciful unto me, be merciful unto me, O God!

II. He adduces his reasons to persuade the Lord to be merciful.

First reason. The faith and confidence he had in God. My soul trusteth in thee; and under the shadow of thy wings, as the chickens do under those of the hen, shall be my refuge until these calamities be overpast.

Second reason. The sufficiency and efficiency of God. I will call upon God.

1. He is the Most High;—then He is sufficient and able to deliver me.

2. He will perform all things for me: therefore, He will effect this.

In the following verse he insists on this argument.

He shall send from heaven. He will do it in a miraculous way, if there be no other way. He will send from heaven, and save me. He will send forth his mercy and his truth.—He will perform His word, and graciously save me.

The third reason of his petition is the extreme danger he was then in by a cruel and merciless enemy.

1. My soul is among the lions, a ravenous, strong, and bloody creature.

2. I lie even among those who are set on fire. Their anger and hatred to me are implacable.

3. Even among those whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword. They wound by calumniating me. A spear wounds near; an arrow afar off; a sword at hand:—near or far off, they spare not to disgrace me.

He now brings another argument, stronger than all the rest, viz. God's glory. It will be to His glory to be merciful, to save, and to deliver; and, therefore, he prays,—Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens, and let thy glory, &c. That is, display Thy power, and assert thy glory, let not the wicked triumph; which, if Thou do, Thy glory will be conspicuous above in the heavens, and below over all the earth.

He then begins his complaint, describing the practices of his enemies:—

1. They have prepared a net for my feet. They lay snares as fowlers do.

2. Through which my soul is bowed down. My life is in extreme danger.

3. They have digged a pit before me: intending to take me like some wild beast: but, praised be God, I foresee the event. They are fallen into the pit themselves.

III. In confidence of this David gives thanks; which may be considered a fourth argument: for there is no such way to procure a new favour as to be thankful. Our thanksgiving should consist of two especial points:—1. Commemoration. 2. Declaration.

1. He that will be thankful should treasure up in his heart and memory the kindness that is done to him. This David had done. My heart is fixed, my heart is fixed.

2. After he remembers it, he should be affected by it, and resolve on it. So does David. My heart is ready, prepared, fixed. I will be thankful. I am determined.

3. It is not enough that a man have a thankful heart; he must declare it, and make publicly known what God has done for him. I will sing and give praise.

4. He should use all means in his power to make it known; tongue, psaltery, harp, are all little enough. To these he addresses himself,—Awake, tongue, lute, harp, &c.

5. He must not do it carelessly. Awake! Awake! Myself will awake.

6. He must take the first opportunity, and not delay it. I will awake early.

7. He should do it in such a way as most tends to God's glory. I will praise thee among the people;—I will sing of thee among the nations.

That all this may be done David gives a sufficient reason: God's mercy and truth. His infinite mercy in promising; His truth in performing. Thy mercy is great unto the heavens; thy truth unto the clouds.

And then he concludes with a repetition of the fifth verse. Be thou exalted above the heavens, and thy truth unto the clouds. Let all give Thee the glory due to Thy name.

PSALM LVIII.

David reproves wicked counsellors and judges, who pervert justice, and stir up the strong against the weak and innocent, 1-8. Foretells their destruction, and describes the nature of it, 9-8. The righteous seeing this, will magnify God's justice and providence, 10, 11.

NOTES ON PSALM LVIII.

The title seems to have no reference to the subject of the Psalm. See the introduction to the preceding. Saul having attempted the life of David, the latter was obliged to flee from the court, and take refuge in the deserts of Judea. Saul, missing him, is supposed, by Bishop Patrick, to have called a council, when they, to ingratiate themselves with the monarch, adjudged David to be guilty of treason in aspiring to the throne of Israel. This being made known to David, was the cause of this Psalm. It is a good lesson to all kings, judges, and civil magistrates; and from it they may obtain maxims to regulate their conduct, and influence their decisions; and, at the same time, they may discern the awful account they must give to God, and the dreadful punishment they shall incur who prostitute justice to serve sinister ends.

Verse 1. Do ye indeed speak righteousness] Or, O cabinet, seeing ye profess to act according to the principles of justice, why do ye not give righteous counsels, and just decisions, ye sons of men! Or, it may be an irony, What excellent judges you are! well do ye judge according to law and justice, when ye give decisions not founded on any law, nor supported by any adequate evidence! To please your master, ye pervert judgment; and take part against the innocent, in order to retain your places and your emoluments. Saul's counsellors appear to have done so; though, in their consciences, they must have been satisfied of David's innocence.

Verse 2. Yea, in heart ye work wickedness] With their tongues they had spoken maliciously, and given evil counsel. In their hearts they meditated nothing but wickedness. And though in their hands they held the scales of justice, yet in their use of them they were balances of injustice and violence. This is the fact to which the Psalmist alludes; and the figure which he uses is that of justice with her scales or balances, which was the emblem of the court, but did not prevail in the practice of these magistrates and counsellors.

Verse 3. The wicked are estranged from the womb] "This," says Dr. Kennicott, "and the next two verses, I take to be the answer of Jehovah to the question in the two first verses, as the 6th, 7th, and 8th, are the answer of the Psalmist; and the remainder contains the decree of Jehovah." He calls these wicked men;—men who had been always wicked; originally and naturally bad; and brought up in falsehood, flattery, and lying. The part they acted now was quite in character.

Verse 4. Their poison is like the poison of a serpent] When they bite, they convey poison into the wound as the serpent does. They not only injure you by outward acts; but, by their malevolence, they poison your reputation. They do you as much evil as they can; and propagate the worst reports, that others may have you in abhorrence, treat you as a bad and dangerous man; and thus, as the poison from the bite of the serpent is conveyed into the whole mass of blood, and circulates with it through all the system, carrying death every where; so their injurious speeches and vile insinuations circulate through society, and poison and blast your reputation in every place. Such is the slanderer, and such his influence in society. From such no reputation is safe; with such no character is sacred; and against such there is no defence. God alone can shield the innocent from the envenomed tongue and lying lips of such inward monsters in the shape of men.

Like the deaf adder that stoppeth her ear] It is a fact, that cannot be disputed with any shew of reason, that in ancient times there were persons that charmed, lulled to inactivity, or professed to charm, serpents, so as to prevent them from biting. See Eccles. x. 11. Jer. viii. 17. The prince of Roman poets states the fact, VIRG. Æcl. viii. ver. 71.

Frigidus in pratis CANTANDO, rumpitur anguis.
"In the meadows the cold snake is burst by incantation."

The same author, Æn. vii. ver. 750, gives us the following account of the skill of Umbro, a priest of the Marrubians:—

*Quin et Marrubia venit de gente sacerdos,
Fronde super galeam, et aliri comptus olivæ,
Arohippi regis mænu, fortissimus Umbro:
Viperæ generi, et graviter spirantibus hybris,
Spargere qui scævæ cunctaque mæserque solabat,
Mullebatque iras, et movens arte lavabat.*

"Umbro, the brave Marrubian priest, was there,
Sent by the Marrian monarch to the war.
The snailing olive with her verdant boughs
Shades his bright helmet, and adorns his brows.
His charms in peace the furious serpents keep,
And lull th' envenom'd viper's rage to sleep;
His healing hand allay'd th' raging pain;
And at his touch the poisonous fell again." Pht.

See at the end of this Psalm.

Verse 5. Which will not hearken to the voice of charmers] The old Psalter translates and paraphrases these two verses curiously:—

Vulg. Furor illis secundum similitudinem serpentis: sicut apidis surde et obturantis aures suas: Quæ non exaudiet vocem incantantium et venefici incantantis sapienter.

Trans. Woudnes (madness) til thaim affit the likking of the nebbit, as of the snake dumb and stoppans her eers.

Paraph. Right calles he thaim mad for thai hafe na witte to se whider thai ga: for thai louke thair eghen, and rennyis till the are thaire wodness til clumasted that wil nocht be turned as of the snake that festis (fastens) the ta ere till the erth, and the tother ere stoppis with hir taile: Sua do thai that thai here nocht Godis word: thai stoipe thaire eris with luf of ertill thing that thai delite thaim in; and with thair taile, that es with all synnes, that thai wil nocht amend.

Trans. The whilk salle nocht here the boyce of charmant, and of the venim fit assure of charmant wisil.

Paraph. This snake stopis hir eers that she be nocht broth to light; for if she herd it, as come forth some, he charmes awa wysil in his craft. Swa the wilkidd men wil nocht here the voyce of Crist and his lufers that are wys charmes; for thir wild (would) bring thaim till light of heven. Wyt ye well (know) that he (i. e. Christ) lufes nocht charmers and venim makers but be (by) vices of bestes, he takes likening of vices of men.

It seems as if there were a species of snake or adder that is nearly deaf: and, as their instinct informs them that if they listen to the sounds which charmers use they shall become a prey; therefore, they stop their ears to prevent the little hearing they have from being the means of their destruction. To this the Old Psalter refers. We have also an account of a species of snake, which, if it casts its eye on the charmer, it feels itself obliged to come out of its hole: it therefore keeps close, and takes care neither to see nor be seen. To this also the Old Psalter alludes; and of this fact, if it be one, he makes a good use.

Verse 6. Break their teeth] He still compares Saul, his captains, and his courtiers, to lions; and as a lion's power of doing mischief is greatly lessened if all his teeth be broken, so he prays that God may take away their power and means of pursuing their bloody purpose. But he may probably have the serpents in view, of which he speaks in the preceding verse:—break their teeth, destroy the fangs of these serpents, in which their poison is contained. This will amount to the same meaning as above. Save me from the adders, the sly and poisonous slanderers:—save me also from the lions, the tyrannical and blood-thirsty men.

Verse 7. Let them melt away as waters] Let them be minished away like the waters which sometimes run in the desert; but are soon evaporated by the sun, or absorbed by the sand.

When he bendeth his bow] When my adversaries aim their envenomed shafts against me, let their arrows not only fall short of the mark, but be broken to pieces in their flight. Some apply this to Gon. When He bends His bow against them, they shall all be exterminated.

8 As a snail which melteth, let every one of them pass away: ^a like the untimely birth of a woman, that they may not see the sun.

9 Before your pots can feel the thorns, he shall take them away, ^a as with a whirlwind, ^b both living, and in his wrath.

^a Job 2. 14. Eccles. 6. 3.—^b Prov. 10. 25.—^c Heb. as living as wrath.—^d Psa. 62. 6. & 110. 6. & 107. 42.

Verse 8. As a snail which melteth] The Chaldee reads the verse thus:—"They shall melt away in their sins as water flows off;—as the creeping snail that smears its track;—as the untimely birth, and the blind mole, which do not see the sun."

The original word שֶׁבֶלֶל shabelul a snail, is either from שֶׁבֶל shebel, a path, because it leaves a shining path after it by emitting a portion of slime, and thus glaring the ground; and, therefore, might be emphatically called the path-maker; or, from שָׁבַשַׁב shashab, to be in, שֶׁבֶל לֵל, a winding, or spiral shell, which is well known to be its house, and which it always inhabits; for, when it is not coiled up within this shell, it carries it with it where-soever it goes. See Bochart. These figures need no further explaining.

Verse 9. Before your pots can feel the thorns] Ye shall be destroyed with a sudden destruction. From the time that the fire of God's wrath is kindled about you it will be but as a moment before ye are entirely consumed by it: so very short will be the time, that it may be likened to the heat of the first blaze of dry thorns under a pot, that has not as yet been able to penetrate the metal, and warm what is contained in it.

A whirlwind] Or, the suffocating smother that destroys life in an instant, without previous warning: so, without pinning sickness, while ye are living, lively and active, the whirlwind of God's wrath shall sweep you away.

Verse 10. The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance] He shall have a strong proof of the Divine providence, of God's hatred against sinners, and His continual care of His followers.

He shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked.] This can only mean that the slaughter would be so great, and at the same time so very nigh to the dwelling of the righteous, that he could not go out without dipping his feet in the blood of the wicked. The Syriac, Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo Saxon, read hands instead of feet. Every thing that is vindictive in the Psalms must be considered as totally alien from the spirit of the Gospel; and not at all, under our dispensation, to be imitated. If the passage above be really vindictive, and it certainly will admit of the interpretation given above, it is to be considered as not belonging to that state in which the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save.

Verse 11. So that a man shall say] That is, people, seeing these just judgments of God, shall say—There is a reward (רְשׁוּת פְּרִי, fruit) to the righteous man. He has not sown his seed in vain; he has not planted and watered in vain: he has the fruit of his labours, he eats the fruit of his doings. But woe to the wicked, it is ill with him; for the reward of his hands has been given him.

He is a God that judgeth in the earth.] There is a God who does not entirely defer judgment till the judgment-day; but executes judgment now, even in this earth; and thus continues to give such proof of His hatred to sin and love to His followers that every considerate mind is convinced of it. And hence arises the indisputable maxims:—"There is, even here, a reward for the righteous;"—"there is a God who, even now, judgeth in the earth."

I have seen Indian priests who professed to charm not only serpents, but the most ferocious wild beasts; even the enraged elephant, and the royal tiger! Two priests of Budhoo, educated under my own care, repeated the Sanscrit incantations to me, and solemnly asserted that they had seen the power of them repeatedly and successfully put to the test. I have mislaid these incantations, else I should insert them as a curiosity; for to charms of the same nature the Psalmist most undoubtedly alludes.

The term חֹבֵר chober, which we translate charmer, comes from חָבַר to join, or put together, i. e. certain unintelligible words or sentences, which formed the spell.

I once met with a man who professed to remove diseases by pronouncing an unintelligible jingling jargon, of oddly tacked together words. I met with him one morning proceeding to the cure of a horse affected with the farcin. With a very grave countenance he stood before the diseased animal; and, taking off his hat, devoutly muttered the following words, which, as a matter of peculiar favour, he afterwards taught me, well knowing that I could never use them successfully, because not taught me by a woman: for, said he,—"To use them with success, a man must be taught them by a woman; and a woman by a man." What the genuine orthography may be I cannot pretend to say, as I am entirely ignorant of the language, if the words belong to any language; but the following words exactly express his sounds,—

10 The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance: he shall wash his feet in the blood of the wicked.

11 So that a man shall say, Verily there is a reward for the righteous: verily he is a God that judgeth in the earth.

Murry fin a hiff ore
Murry fin a hiff ore
And fin deriv dibo
Murry fin firey fu
Murry fin elph yew.

When he had repeated these words nine times, he put on his hat and walked off: but he was to return the next morning, and so on for nine mornings successively, always before he had broken his fast. The mother of the above person, a very old woman, and by many reputed a witch, professed to do miracles by pronouncing, or rather muttering, certain words, or sounds; and by measuring with a cord the diseased parts of the sick person. I saw her practise twice:—1st, on a person afflicted with a violent headach, or rather the effects of a coup de soleil: and, 2dly, on one who had got a dangerous mote or splinter in his eye. In the first case she began to measure the head, round the temples, marking the length: then from the vertex, under the chin, and so up to the vertex again, marking that length. Then, by observing the dimensions, passed judgment on the want of proportion in the two admeasurements, and said the brain was compressed by the sinking down of the skull. She then began her incantations, muttering under her breath a supplication to certain divine and angelic beings to come and lift up the bones, that they might no longer compress the brain. She then repeated her admeasurements; and shewed how much was gained towards a restoration of the proportions, from the spell already muttered. The spell was again muttered; the measurements repeated; and at each time a comparison of the first measurement was made with the succeeding, till at last she said she had the due proportions; the disease, or rather the cause of it, was removed: and that the operations were no longer necessary.

In the case of the diseased eye, her manner was different. She took a cup of clean pure water, and washed her mouth well. Having done so, she filled her mouth with the same water, and walked to and fro in the apartment, (the patient sitting in the midst of the floor,) muttering her spell, and of which nothing could be heard but a grumbling noise. She then emptied her mouth into a clean white basin; and shewed the moats which had been conveyed out of the patient's eye into the water in her mouth, while engaged in muttering the incantation! She offered to teach me her wonder-working words: but the sounds were so very uncouth, if not barbarous, that I know no combination of letters by which I could convey the pronunciation.

Ridiculous as all this may appear, it shews that this incantation-work is conducted in the present day, both in Asia and Europe where it is professed, in precisely the same manner in which it was conducted formerly, by pronouncing, or rather muttering, certain words or sounds, to which they attach supernatural power and efficiency. And from this came the term, spell—Anglo-Saxon rpell, a word, a charm, composed of such supposed powerful words; and pyncan rpell (wyrkan spell) signified among our ancestors to use enchantments.

ANALYSIS OF THE FIFTY-EIGHTH PSALM.

David deprecates the danger that hung over his head from Saul and his council.

The Psalm is divided into three parts:—

I. A sharp invective, or reprehension, of his enemies, ver. 1.

II. An imprecation, or denunciation of God's judgment on them, ver. 6—9.

III. The benefits that from thence redound to the righteous, ver. 10, 11.

I. 1. David begins with an apostrophe; and figures it with an erotesis, which makes his reproof the sharper. 1. O congregation; O ye council of Saul. 2. Do ye indeed speak righteously? 3. Do ye judge uprightly, O ye sons of men? By which he intimates that, indeed, they do neither.

2. Which in the next verse he affirms in plain terms, and brings home to their charge. Yea, in heart you work wickedness; you weigh the violence of your hands in the earth; heart and hand are bent to do evil, which the words, well considered, do exaggerate. 1. They were iniquities; a plurality of them. 2. It was their work. 3. Their hearty work. 4. Their handy work. 5. Weighed out by their scale of justice. 6. Which indeed, under the colour of justice, was but violence. 7. And it was in this earth, in Israel, where no such thing was to be done.

PSALM LIX.

The Psalmist prays for deliverance from his enemies, whose desperate wickedness he describes, 1-7. Professes strong confidence in God, 8-10. Speaks of the destruction of his enemies, 11-15. Praises God for benefits already received, and determines to trust in Him, 16, 17.

3. This, their wickedness, he amplifies, both from their origin and progress:—

I. The root of it was very old; brought into the world with them. 1. The wicked are estranged from the womb: from God, and all goodness. 2. They go astray: from their cradle they take the wrong way. 3. As soon as they be born, speaking lies: from their birth inclined to falsehood.

2. And in this their falsehood they are malicious and obstinate. 1. Malicious. The poison of their tongue is like the poison of a serpent, innate, deadly. 2. Obstinate. For they will not be reclaimed by any counsel or admonition. They are like the deaf adder that stoppeth her ear, which refuseth to hear the voice of the charmer, charm he never so wisely.

II. Their wickedness, malice, and obstinacy, being so great, he now prays against and devotes them to God's judgments. He prays, in general, for their ruin, esteeming them no better than lions. Saul, the old lion; and his council, lions' whelps.

1. To God he turns his speech; and prays against their means to hurt, whether near or afar off.

2. And thence, against their persons. O God, break their teeth in their mouth; break out the great teeth of the lions. O Lord, remove their strength; their nearest instruments to hurt, to destroy. O God, when they purpose to harm us, let it be in vain; when he bends his bow to shoot his arrows, let them be as cut in pieces.

Thus let it fall to their arms: but, as for their persons,—

1. Let them melt away as waters. Great brooks, that run with great force from the mountains, and overrun for a little while the valleys; but run quickly into the channels, and thence to the sea, and are swallowed up.

2. Let them be as a snail that melts in her passage, and leaves a slimy track behind, which yet quickly passeth away. So let them be like a snail, whose shell being taken off, grows cold, and dies.

3. Let them be like the untimely fruit of a woman, that they may not see the sun.

4. Before your pots can feel the thorns. Ere they do mischief, he shall take them away as with a whirlwind, both living, and in his wrath.

III. The benefits which, from his judgment upon the wicked, shall flow to the righteous.

1. Joyfulness. The righteous shall rejoice when he seeth the vengeance.

2. Amendment. Being warned thus,—He shall wash his footsteps in his blood. Their slaughter shall be great; and he shall be near it, yet unhurt.

3. Confirmation of their faith, and giving glory to God. So that a man shall say, Verily, there is a reward for the righteous; doubtless, there is a God that judgeth in the earth.

NOTES ON PSALM LIX.

The title, "To the chief Musician, Al-taschith, Michtam of David," has already occurred: and perhaps means no more than that the present Psalm is to be sung as Psalm vii. the first which bears this title. But there is here added the supposed occasion on which David made this Psalm: it was, "when Saul sent, and they watched the house to kill him."—When the Reader considers the whole of this Psalm carefully, he will be convinced that the title does not correspond to the contents.—There is scarcely any thing in it that can apply to the circumstance of Saul's sending his guards by night to keep the avenues to the house of David that when the morning came they might seize and slay him; and his being saved through the information given him by his wife Michal, in consequence of which he was let down through a window, and so escaped. See 1 Sam. xix. 10, 11. There is not in the whole Psalm any positive allusion to this history; and there are many things in it which shew it to be utterly inconsistent with the facts of that history. The Psalm most evidently agrees to the time of Nehemiah, when he was endeavouring to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem,—when the enterprise was first mocked; then opposed by Sanballat the Horonite, Tobiah the Ammonite, and Geasem the Arabian, who watched day and night that they might cause the work to cease; and laid ambuscades for the life of Nehemiah himself. Every part of the Psalm agrees to this: and I am, therefore, of Calmet's opinion, that the Psalm was composed in that time, and probably by Nehemiah, or by Esdras.

Verse 1. Deliver me from mine enemies, O my God! A very proper prayer in the mouth of Nehemiah, when resisted in his attempts to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem by Sanballat, Tobiah, and Geasem, who opposed the work, and endeavoured to take away the life of the person whom God had raised up to restore and rebuild Jerusalem. I conceive the Psalm to have been made on this occasion; and on this hypothesis alone, I think it capable of consistent explanation.

Verse 2. The workers of iniquity! Principally Sanballat the Horonite, Tobiah the Ammonite, and Geasem the Arabian; who were the chief enemies of the poor returned captives.

Bloody men.] The above, who sought the destruction of the Israelites; and, particularly, that of Nehemiah, whom four several times they endeavoured to bring into an ambush, that they might take away his life. See Neh. vi. 1-4.

Verse 3. For lo, they lie in wait for my soul! For my life. See the passages referred to above.

Verse 4. They run and prepare themselves! They leave no stone unturned that they may effect my destruction, and prevent the building.

Verse 5. O Lord God of hosts! This was a proper view to take of God, when Israel, a handful of poor distressed captives, were surrounded and opposed by the heathen chiefs above mentioned, and their several tribes. But Jehovah, God of hosts, was the God of Israel; and hence Israel had little to fear.

Be not merciful to any wicked transgressors.] Do not favour the cause of these wicked men. They are ^{וְאֵין בִּגְדָאֵי אֵינֶן} bogadley aen, "changers of iniquity!" they go through the whole round of evil; find out and exercise themselves in all the varieties of transgression. How exactly does this apply to Nehemiah's foes! They sought by open attack, wiles, flattery, foul speeches, fair speeches, threats, and ambuscades, to take away his life. Do not shew them favour, that they may not succeed in their wicked designs. The prayer here is exactly the same in sentiment, with that of Nehemiah, chap. iv. 4, 5. Hear, our God, for we are despised; turn their reproach upon their own heads;—cover not their iniquity, and let not their sin be blotted out.

Verse 6. They return at evening! When the beasts of prey leave their dens, and go prowling about the cities and villages to get offal, and entrap domestic animals, these come about the city to see if they may get an entrance, destroy the work, and those engaged in it.

Verse 7. They belch out with their mouth! They use the lowest insult, the basest abuse. They deal in sarcasm, ridicule, slander and lies.

Verse 8. Thou, O Lord, shalt laugh at them! They have mocked us: God will turn them, and their schemes, into ridicule and contempt. Thou shalt have all these heathenish nations in derision.

Verse 9. Because of his strength will I wait upon thee. With this reading, I can make no sense of the passage.

10 The God of my mercy shall prevent me: God shall let me see my desire upon mine enemies.

11 Slay them not, lest my people forget; scatter them by thy power; and bring them down, O Lord our shield.

12 For the sin of their mouth and the words of their lips let them even be taken in their pride: and for cursing and lying, which they speak.

13 Consume them in wrath, consume them that they may not be: and let them know that God roaleth in Jacob unto the ends of the earth. Selah.

14 And at evening let them return; and let them make a noise like a dog, and go round about the city.

15 Let them wander up and down for meat, and grudge if they be not satisfied.

16 But I will sing of thy power; yea, I will sing aloud of thy mercy in the morning; for thou hast been my defence and refuge in the day of my trouble.

17 Unto thee, O my strength, will I sing: for God is my defence, and the God of my mercy.

But instead of my sin, his strength, וְיָ אֱזִי, my strength, in the reading of fourteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., of the Vulgate, Septuagint, Chaldee, and in effect of the Æthiopic, Syriac, and Arabic; and also of the Anglo-Saxon. To thee I commit all my strength; all I have I derive from Thee; and all the good I possess I attribute to Thee. The old Psalter translates, for strength I will keep till the, for myn uptaker thou art. See on ver. 17.

Verse 10. The God of my mercy shall prevent me] The mercy of God shall go before me, and thus help me in all my doings.

God shall let me see my desire.] The sentence is short. God will let me see concerning my enemies, i. e. how He will treat them.

Verse 11. Slay them not, lest my people forget] I believe the Chaldee gives the true sense of this verse:—"Do not slay them suddenly, lest my people should forget. Drive them from their habitations by Thy power, and reduce them to poverty by the loss of their property." Preserve them long in a state of chastisement, that Israel may see Thou hast undertaken for them; that Thy hand is on the wicked for evil, and on them for good. The Canaanites were not suddenly destroyed; they were left to be pricks in the eyes, and thorns in the sides, of the Israelites. It is in a sense somewhat similar the words are used here.

Verse 12. For the sin of their mouth] This verse has puzzled all the commentators. If we take חַטָּאת chattath, for sin-offering, instead of sin, we might get a better sense. Some of Nehemiah's enemies made a profession of the Jewish religion. Tobiah and his son were allied by marriage to the Jews; for Eliashib the priest had married his grandson to the daughter of Sanballat; and this produced a connexion with Tobiah, the fast friend of Sanballat. Besides, this very priest had given Tobiah one of the great chambers in the house of the Lord, where formerly the meat-offerings, the frankincense, the vessels, and the tythe of the corn, and wine, and oil, were kept, Neh. xiii. 4, 5, 7, 8, 9. And there were children of Tobiah (probably the same family) who professed to be of the Levites, Nathaniah, or children of Solomon's servants: but as they could not shew their fathers' houses and their seed, whether they were of Israel; these, and others which were children of the priests, were put out of the priesthood, and out of the sacred service, as polluted; as having sprung from intermarriages with Heathens. See Ezra ii. 59, 60, 61, 62. Tobiah was expelled from the house of the Lord by Nehemiah, and all his household stuff thrown out of doors. Neh. xiii. 7, 8. And this was doubtless one ground of the enmity of Tobiah to Nehemiah; and in this verse of the Psalm he may allude particularly to his occupancy of the chamber of offerings, which offerings, instead of being given to the Levites, were consumed by Tobiah and his household. This may be fairly gathered from Neh. xiii. 5, 10, 11. Here, then, we have the sin of their mouth; their eating the offerings that belonged to the Levites; so that the temple service was deserted, the Levites being obliged to go and till the ground in order to obtain the means of life. And, if we take חַטָּאת chattath, for sin-offering, it may refer to promises of sacrifice and offering which Tobiah and his family made, but never performed. They ate instead of offering them; and here was the sin of their mouth, in connexion with the words of their lips, and their cursing and lying which they spoke, for which the Psalmist calls upon the Lord to consume them that they may not be, ver. 17.

Verse 14. At evening let them return] He had mentioned before, ver. 6, that these persons came like beasts of prey round the city striving to get in, that they might take possession. Now being fully assured of God's protection, and that they shall soon be made a public example, he says, Let them return and make a noise like a dog, &c.; like dogs, jackals, and other famished creatures, who come howling about the city-walls for something to eat, and wander up and down for meat, grumbling because they are not satisfied, ver. 15. Nehemiah had made up all the breaches; and had the city guarded so well day and night, by watches who continually relieved each other, that there was no longer any fear of being taken by surprise: and now they must feel like the hungry beasts who were disappointed of their prey.

Verse 16. I will sing of thy power] For it was because Thy hand was upon me for good, that I have thus succeeded in my enterprises.

Yes, I will sing aloud of mercy] I shall publish abroad what thou hast done; and done not for my worthiness, nor for the worthiness of the people; but for Thy own mercy's sake.

In the day of my trouble.] When I came with small means, and feeble help; and had the force and fraud of many enemies to contend with, besides the corruption and unfaithfulness of my own people;—Thou wert then my defence; and in all attacks, whether open or covered, my sure refuge. I will, therefore, sing of thy mercy in the morning; I will hasten to acquit myself of a duty I owe to Thee for such singular interpositions of mercy and power.

Verse 17. Unto thee, O my strength] A similar sentiment to that expressed, ver. 9. But the words are very emphatic: God is my strength;—God is my elevation. My God is my mercy. I have nothing good but what I have from God. And all springs from his dwelling in me. God, therefore, shall have all the glory, both now and for ever.

As many persons may still think that the inscription to this Psalm is correct, the following analysis may be applied in that way; or considered as containing a general resolution of the Psalm, without referring it to any particular occasion.

ANALYSIS OF THE FIFTY-NINTH PSALM.

- The contents of this Psalm are:—
- I. The Psalmist's prayer for deliverance, ver. 1, 2, and against his foes, ver. 5.
- II. He complains of and expresses his enemies' cruelty and improbity, ver. 3—6.
- III. He comforts himself being confident of his own preservation, ver. 8—10.
 - 1. And of their punishment, for which he prays, ver. 14.
 - 2. And of their vain endeavours, for which he insults over them, ver. 14, 15.
- IV. He concludes with thanks, ver. 16, 17.
 - 1. He begins with a petition for deliverance, defence, salvation; and urges it from the qualities of his enemies.
 - 1. Deliver me, defend me from mine enemies:—1. Them that rise up against me. 2. From the workers of iniquity. 3. From bloody men. These considerations make him pray. O my God, deliver, &c.
 - 2. And yet, more particularly, he expresses their cruelty and treachery; to aggravate which he pleads his innocence towards them.
 - II. 1. Their cruelty. Lo, they lie in wait for my soul.
 - 2. Their treachery. The mighty are gathered against me. They run and prepare themselves.
 - 3. 1. They are diligent about it. They return at evening. 2. Mad, and set to do it. They make a noise like a dog, and threaten boldly. 3. Unwearied and odourate in their purpose. They go round about the city. 4. Impudent, and brag what they will do to me. Behold, they belch out with their mouth. 5. And their words are bloody. Swords are in their lips.
 - 4. And the cause of this is, that they are proud and atheistical. Who, say they, doth hear? They think themselves secure, supposing they may contemn God and man; neither regarding what is done or become of poor David.
 - 5. In the midst of which aggravations he asserts his own innocence. They gather themselves together, not for my transgression, nor for my sin, O Lord.
 - Then he renews his petition:—
 - 1. Awake to help me, and behold. 1. Thou, therefore, the Lord God of hosts, the God of Israel. The Lord God of hosts; therefore, powerful. 2. The God of Israel, therefore, merciful.

PSALM LX.

The Psalmist complains of the desolations which had fallen on the land, and prays for deliverance, 1-5. Promises himself victory over Bechem, Secoth, Gilead, Ephraim, Moab, Idumea, and the Philistines, by the peculiar help and assistance of God, 6-12.

To the chief Musician ^a upon Shuahan-eduth, ^b Michtam of David, to teach; ^c when he strove with Aram-nabairam and with Aram-zobah, when Joab returned, and smote of Edom in the valley of Salt twelve thousand.

O GOD, ^d thou hast cast us off, thou hast ^e scattered us, thou hast been displeased; O turn thyself to us again.

^a Ps. 80, title.—^b Or, A golden Psalm.—^c 2 Sam. 8. 2, 12. 1 Chron. 18. 3, 12. d Ps. 44. 9.

2. Asaaks, to visit all the heathen, & c. punish the heathen; and the Israelites, in this no better.

3. And be not merciful to any wicked transgressors, i. e. nations obstinate.

III. To this rage and implacable hatred of his enemies he now begins to oppose the comfort he had in God's promises. This I know:—

1. Thou, O Lord, shall laugh at them. As it were in sport, destroy them, be their power never so great. Thou wilt laugh them to scorn.

2. Them and all that are like them. Thou shalt have all the heathen in derision.

3. I confess that Saul's strength is great: but my Protector greater. Because of his strength will I wait upon thee, for God is my defence.

4. This I am assured also, that the God of my mercy, that hath hitherto shewed me mercy, shall prevent me, come in season to my help. And God shall let me see my desire upon mine enemies.

And to the 16th verse he expresses what his desires were:—

1. Negatively; he would not have them slain and eradicated; and he gives his reason for it: Slay them not, lest my people forget; for a dead man is quickly out of mind, and his punishment also, and few the better for it.

2. Positively; the first degree of which is dispersion, vagrancy, banishment. Scatter them, which, however severe a judgment, let the Jews witness it.

3. Humiliation. Bring them down, O Lord, our shield, Bring them from their power, command, honour, to a low degree, which is no small heart-breaking to a great spirit. Fictus Troas, is never remembered without a groan.

And now he assigns the cause why he would have them scattered, and brought low; that their blasphemies and lies may never be forgotten, but stand as a terror to all liars and blasphemers.

1. For the sin of their mouth, and the words of their lips, let them be even taken in their pride: the Jews cried Beelzebub, notumus hunc; and they were taken.

2. And for cursing and lying which they speak. They cursed themselves. His blood be upon us; and upon them, and indeed it was.

3. He goes on in his desires. Consums them, O Lord, emphatically, consume them in wrath, that they may not be; which, at first sight, appears contrary to the first desire, Slay them not: but he speaks not of their life as if he would have it consumed; but he desires only a consumption of their power, royalty, command. And so these words are a further explication of his second desire,—Bring them down. He would have them brought down in their strength, dignity, command, wealth, riches, which made them proud; that they might never be able to oppose God any more, hurt His people, trample upon religion and his church: but he would have them live.

4. And shews the end why he would have them live, and still remain,—that they might know by their calamities and miseries, that it is God that ruleth in Jacob, and unto the ends of the earth; that He doth wonderfully govern and preserve His church that is scattered over all the earth.

5. And now, by a bitter epitrope, or syncharesis rather, he insults over them. In the sixth verse he shewed their double diligence to do mischief.

1. They return at evening. Well esto, be it so. At evening let them return.

2. They make a noise like a dog. Well, let them make a noise like a dog.

3. They go round about the city. Well, let them go round about the city.

They know that they shall be in a miserable poor mean condition:—

1. Let them wander up and down for meat. Let them find no settled habitation, but seek necessary food in a strange nation.

2. And grudge if they be not satisfied. Let them be always grudging, if they have not content. If they be not

2 Thou hast made the earth to tremble; thou hast broken it: heal the breaches thereof; for it shaketh.

3 Thou hast shewed thy people hard things: thou hast made us to drink the wine of astonishment.

4 Thou hast given a banner to them that feared thee, that it may be displayed because of the truth. Selah.

5 That thy beloved may be delivered; save with thy right hand, and hear me.

^e Heb. broken.—^f 2 Chron. 7. 14.—^g Ps. 71. 20.—^h Jer. 51. 17, 22. Jer. 51. 61. 1 Ps. 20. 6.—ⁱ Ps. 103. 6, &c.

satisfied, they will stay all night; be importunate and unmannerly beggars.

IV. The conclusion is a doxology; and contains David's thanks that God is his defence, his refuge, his strength. Of Him, therefore, he makes his song.

1. I will sing of thy power.

2. I will sing of thy mercy. 1. Aloud. 2. In the morning.

3. The reason he gives. For thou hast been my refuge and defence in the day of my trouble.

Both he repeats again:—

1. Unto thee, O my strength, will I sing.

2. The reason. For God is my defence, and the God of my mercy.

And he joins these two attributes strength and mercy. Take away strength from him, and he cannot; remove mercy, and he will not protect. Both must go together; power that he can, mercy that he will: otherwise it is in vain that we hope for help from Him. David found God to be both, and for both he extols Him.

NOTES ON PSALM LX.

The title, "To the chief musician upon the hezachord, or lily of the testimony, a golden Psalm of David, for instruction; when he strove with Aram Nabaraim, Syria of the two rivers, (Mesopotamia) and Aram-Zobah, Syria of the watchmen, (Celosyria): when Joab returned, and smote twelve thousand Edomites in the Valley of Salt."

I have only to remark here, that there is nothing in the contents of this Psalm that bears any relation to this title. According to the title it should be a Song of victory and triumph; instead of which the first part of it is a tissue of complaints of disaster and defeat, caused by the Divine desertion. Besides, it was not Joab that slew twelve thousand men in the Valley of Salt; it was Abishai, the brother of Joab; and the number twelve thousand here is not correct; for there were eighteen thousand slain in that battle, as we learn from 1 Chron. xviii. 12. The valley of salt, or salt pits, is in Idumea. To reconcile the difference between the numbers, various expedients have been hit on: but still the insuperable objection remains—the contents of this Psalm and this title are in opposition to each other. That the Psalm deploras a defeat is evident from the three first, and two last verses. And the Targumist seems to have viewed it in this light, perhaps the proper one, by expressing the title thus:—"To give praise for the ancient testimony (מִשְׁמַרְתֵּנוּ sahadutha) of the sons of Jacob and Laban, (see Gen. xxxi. 47.) an exemplar by the hand of David, to give instruction; when he gathered together the people, and passed by the heap of testimony, מִשְׁמַרְתֵּנוּ אַיִן ayegor sahadutha) and set the battle in array against Aram, which is by the Euphrates; and against Aram which is by Izobah. And after this Joab returned and smote the Idumeans in the Valley of Salt; and of the armies of David and Joab there fell twelve thousand men." The Psalm, therefore, seems to deploras this disastrous event; for, although they had the victory at last, twelve thousand of the troops of Israel were justly considered too great a sacrifice for such a conquest, and a proof that God had not afforded them that succour which they had long been in the habit of receiving. The latter part of the Psalm seems to be intended to put God in remembrance of His ancient promise, of putting Israel in possession of the whole land by driving out the ancient iniquitous inhabitants. Others consider the Psalm as descriptive of the distracted state of the land after the fatal battle of Gilboa, till David was anointed king of the whole at Hebron.

This is the last of the six Psalms to which michtam is prefixed; the others are Psa. xvi. lvi. lviii. and lix. I have said something relative to this word in the introduction to Psa. xvi.: but some observations of Mr. Harmer lead me to consider the subject more at large. It is well known that there were seven most eminent Arabic poets, who flourished before, and at the commencement of the career of Mohammed: their names were Amriolkais, Amru, Hareth, Tharafah, Zohair, Lebeid, and Antarah.

6 God hath spoken in his holiness; I will rejoice, I will divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth.
 7 Gilead is mine, and Manasseh is mine;

8 Ephraim also is the strength of mine head; Judah is my lawgiver:
 9 Moab is my washpot; over Edom will I cast out my shoe: Philistia, triumph thou because of me.

1 Ps. 22. 25.—2 Josh. 1. 6.—3 Gen. 12. 6.—4 Josh. 13. 27.—5 See Deut. 32. 17. 6 Gen. 49. 10.—7 2 Sam. 2. 2.

1 Ps. 103. 2. 2 Sam. 2. 14.—3 2 Sam. 2. 1.—4 Or, triumph thou over me: (by an irony): See Ps. 103. 10.

These poets produced each a poem, which, because of its excellence, was deemed worthy to be suspended on the walls of the temple of Mecca; and hence the collection of the seven poems was termed Al Modllakat, The Suspended; and Al Modhahebat, The Gilded, or Golden, because they were written in letters of gold upon the Egyptian papyrus. The six miktams of David might have this title for the same reason: they might have been written in letters of gold, or on gilded vellum, or the Egyptian papyrus; for the word מִכְתָּם miktam is generally supposed to signify golden; and מְרֻכְתָּם is used to signify gold, probably stamped or engraven with figures or letters. That the Modllakat were written in this way, there can be no question; and that the works of men of great eminence in Asiatic countries are still thus written, my own library affords ample evidence. Copies of the following works are written on paper all powdered with gold, with gold borders, and highly illuminated anvans or titles:—THE MISNAVI of Jelaluddeen Raumi; THE DREVAN of Zuheer Faryabi; THE HADIKATUBANI, or Garden of Praise; THE SHEHET AL ASBAR; THE DREVAN of Hafis; GULISTAN of Saady; DREVAN of Shaky; with many more, all works of eminent authors, written in the finest manner, ruled with gold borders, &c.

Copies of the Koran are often done in the same manner. One in 12mo. so thickly powdered over with gold that the ground on which the text is written appears to be almost totally gilded; another large octavo, all powdered with gold, and golden flowers down every margin; another small octavo, that might be almost called the Codex Aureus, with rich golden borders on every page. And, lastly, one in large folio, which, besides superbly illuminated anvans, has three gold lines in every page; one at the top, one in the middle, and one at the bottom. To the above may be added a small folio, that opens out about eleven feet, every page of which is like a plate of solid gold, with the characters engraven on it. It is a collection of elegant extracts. Another of the same kind, large folio, opens out sixty-two feet, on which every page is finished in the same manner; with a vast variety of borders, sprigs, and flowers. And, to close the whole, a copy of the Borda, supposed to be the most elegant MS. in Europe, all covered over with gold flowers and lines, the writing the most perfect I ever saw; that of this MS. it might be truly said, splendid as it is, materiam superabit opus.

As Mr. Harmer has alluded to accounts which he has collected from other writers in order to illustrate the miktams of David, I have above produced a number of evidences to bear witness to the fact that such is and such was the custom in the East, to write the works of the most eminent authors in letters of gold, or on a page highly ornamented with the utmost profusion of golden lines, figures, flowers, &c. In this way these Psalms might have been written, and from this circumstance they may have derived their name. I may just add, that I think these titles were made long after the Psalms were composed.

Verse 1. O God, thou hast cast us off! Instead of being our General in the battle, Thou hast left us to ourselves; and then there was only the arm of flesh against the arm of flesh; numbers and physical power were left to decide the contest. We have been scattered, our ranks have been broken before the enemy, and Thou hast caused the whole land to tremble at our bad success;—the people are become divided and seditious. Thou hast made the land to tremble: heal the breaches of it, for it shaketh; it is all in commotion, ver. 2.

Verse 3. Thou hast made us to drink the wine of astonishment! We reel as drunken men; we are giddy, like those who have drunk too much wine: but our giddiness has been occasioned by the astonishment and dismay that have taken place in consequence of the prevalence of our enemies, and the unsettled state of the land. It has been remarked that the three first verses of this Psalm do not agree with the rest, and it also appears that the three first verses of Psa. lxxxv. do not agree with the rest of that Psalm. But let them change places, and the three first verses of this be set instead of the three first verses of Psa. lxxxv. and let them be placed here instead of these; and then the whole of each Psalm will be consistent. This was first suggested by Bishop Hare, and the supposition seems to be well founded. Some imagine that the whole of the Psalm refers to the distracted state of the land after the death of Saul till the time that David was anointed king over all Israel, at Hebron; others, to the disastrous war with the Syrians. See before.

Verse 4. Thou hast given a banner] וַיִּשָׂא lethithnosos, that it may be unfurled.

Because of the truth] וַיִּשָׂא lethithnosos, that it may be unfurled. Because of the truth] וַיִּשָׂא lethithnosos, that it may be unfurled. Because of the truth] וַיִּשָׂא lethithnosos, that it may be unfurled. Because of the truth] וַיִּשָׂא lethithnosos, that it may be unfurled.

Mr. Mudge, thus:—"Thou givest to them that fear thee a signal to be displayed before the truth. That thy favoured ones may be delivered, clothe Thy right arm with victory and answer us. God speaketh in His sanctuary, I will exult: I shall portion out Shechem, and measure the valley of Succoth." The fourth verse seems to mean that God had appointed for the consolation of His people a certain signal of favour, with which, therefore, he prays him to answer them. This, accordingly, He does. God speaketh in his sanctuary, called וַיִּשָׂא debir, or oracle, for that very reason. What he desires then, as he stands imploring the mercy of God before the oracle, is, that he may see the usual signal of favour proceed from it: a voice, perhaps joined with some luminous emanation, whence the phrase of the light of God's countenance. The expression in the sixth verse seems to be proverbial; and means,—"I shall divide the spoils of my enemies with as much ease as the sons of Jacob portioned out Shechem, and measured out for their tents the valley of Succoth."

Mr. Harmer gives a very ingenious illustration of the giving the banner. Albertus Aqueensis informs us that when Jerusalem was taken in 1099 by the crusaders, about three hundred Saracens got on the roof of a very high building, and earnestly begged for quarter: but could not be induced by any promises of safety to come down, till they had received the banner of Tancred, one of the crusade generals, as a pledge of life. The event shewed the faithlessness of these zealots; they put the whole to the sword. But the Saracens surrendering themselves upon the delivery of a standard to them, proves in how strong a light they looked upon the giving a banner, since it induced them to trust it, when they would not trust any promises. Perhaps the delivery of a banner was anciently esteemed in like manner an obligation to protect; and that the Psalmist might here consider it in this light when he says, Thou hast shewn thy people hard things;—but thou hast given a banner to them that fear thee. Though Thou didst for a time give up Thy Israel into the hands of their enemies, Thou hast now given them an assurance of Thy having received them under Thy protection. Thus God gave them a banner, or standard, that it might be displayed, or lifted up; or rather, that they may lift up a banner to themselves, or encourage themselves with the confident persuasion that they are under the protection of God;—because of the truth, the word of promise, which is an assurance of protection: like the giving me and my people a banner, the surest of pledges. Harmer's Observations. See at the end of the Chapter.

Verse 6. God hath spoken] Judah shall not only be re-established in Jerusalem; but shall possess Samaria, where Shechem is, and the country beyond Jordan, in which is situated the valley of Succoth. Dividing and meeting out signify possession.

Verse 7. Gilead is mine] This country was also beyond Jordan, and Manasseh and Ephraim are put for the tribes that formed the kingdom of Israel. All these, after the return from the captivity, formed but one people; the Jews and Israelites being united.

The strength of mine head] It shall be the principal support of the new-formed kingdom, when all distinctions shall be buried.

Judah is my lawgiver] This tribe was chief of all those who returned from the Captivity; and Zorobabel, who was their leader, was chief of that tribe, and of the family of David. As this part of the Psalm appears to relate to the return of the captives from Babylon, and their re-possession of their own land, the Psalmist may refer not only to the promises of their restoration, but also to the principal person under whose superintendance they returned.

9 Who will bring me into the strong city? who will lead me into Edom?
 10 Wilt not thou, O God, which hadst cast us off? and thou, O God, which didst not go out with our armies?

11 Give us help from trouble: for 'vain is the help of man.
 12 Through God we shall do valiantly: for he it is that shall tread down our enemies.

Verse 8. Moab is my washpot] The Moabites shall be reduced to the meanest slavery.

Over Edom will I cast out my shoe] I will make a complete conquest of Idumea; and subject the Edomites to the meanest offices, as well as the Moabites.

Philistia, triumph thou because of me.] John Hyrcanus subdued the Idumeans; and caused them to receive circumcision, and profess the Jewish religion. The words here seem to predict their entire subjugation.

In an essay for a new translation of the Bible, there is what appears to me a correct paraphrase of the seventh and eighth verses:—"Gilead and Manasseh have submitted unto me: Ephraim furnishes me with valiant men; and Judah with men of prudence and wisdom. I will reduce the Moabites to servitude; I will triumph over the Edomites, and make them my slaves; and the Philistines shall add to my triumph."

Verse 9. Who will bring me into the strong city] If this part of the Psalm, from the sixth to the twelfth verse, refer to the return of the captives from Babylon, as I think probable; then the strong city may mean either Petra, the capital of Idumea; Bosra, in Arabia, near the mountains of Gilead; Rabba, the capital of the Ammonites; or, Tyre, according to the Chaldæes, the capital of Phœnicia; or Jerusalem itself, which, although dismantled, had long been one of the strongest cities of the East. Or, it may imply, Who shall give me the dominion over the countries already mentioned? who will lead me into Edom? who will give me the dominion over that people?

Verse 10. Wilt not thou, O God] It is God alone from whom we can expect our enlargement. He who has cast us off, and has abandoned us in battle; it is that very God alone from whom we expect complete enlargement, the repossession of our own land, and the subduetion of the surrounding nations; and we expect this, because He has graciously promised these mercies.

Verse 11. Give us help from trouble: for vain is the help of man.] We have done all we can do, and have trusted too much in ourselves; now, Lord, undertake for us.

Verse 12. Through God we shall do valiantly] Through Thee alone shall we do valiantly; Thou alone canst tread down our enemies; and to Thee alone we look for conquest.

The author to whom Harmer refers, in the Note on the fourth verse, is one of the writers in a work intitled Gesta Dei per Francos, fol. Hanovien, 1611, 2 vols. And the place quoted by Harmer may be found in vol. i. p. 282; and as the passage is singular, and a good use has been made of it for the illustration of a difficult passage, I shall lay the words of the original before the Reader. "Proxima ab hinc die sabbati clarescente, quidam Sarracenenorum epe vita in summitatem tecti domus præcelesæ Solomonis ab armis elapsi, circiter trecenti, confugerant. Qui multâ præce pro vitâ flagitantes, in mortis articulo positi, nullius fiducia aut promissione audebant decedere, quousque vexillum Tankradi in signum protectionis viveandi susceperunt. Sed minime miscellus profuit. Nam plurimis super hoc indignantibus, et Christianis furore commotis, ne unus quidem illorum evasit."

It is very properly added by Albertus, that the noble spirit of Tancred was filled with indignation at this most horrible breach of faith: and he was about to take a summary revenge on the instigators and perpetrators of this unprincipled butchery, when the chiefs interposed; and not only maintained the expediency of the massacre that had already been committed, but the necessity of putting all the inhabitants to the sword. On this the savage fiends, called Christians, flew to arms, and made a universal slaughter of all that remained of the inhabitants. They drew out the prisoners, and chopped off their heads; stabbed all they met with in the streets, and— but I can translate no further;—it is too horrible. I shall give my author's words, who was an ecclesiastic, and wrote down the account from eye-witnesses. "Concilio hoc accepto, (the determination of the chiefs to put all to the sword) tertio die post victoriam egressa est sententia a majoribus: et ecce universæ arma rapiunt, et miserabili cæde in omnes vulgus Gentilium, quod adhuc erat residuum, arsurunt, alios producentes è vinculis et decollantes: alios per vias et plateas civitatis insentes trucidantes, quibus antea causâ pecuniâ aut humanâ pietate pepercerunt. Puellas verò, mulieres, matronas nobiles, et fœtas cum puellis tenellis detrucebant, aut lapidibus obruebant, in nullis aliquam considerantes ætatem. E contra, puella, mulieres, matrona, metu momentanea mortis angustiatæ et horrore gravissimæ necis concussa Christianos in jugulum utriusque sexus dabachantes ac sævientes, medias pro liberandâ vitâ amplexbantur, quædam pedibus eorum adolvebantur, de vitâ, et salute eius illos nimium miserando fletu et ejulatu sollicitantes. Pueri vero quinquennes aut triennes matrum patrumque crudelium casum insipientes, unâ miserum clamorem et fletum multiplicabant. Sed frustra hæc pietatis et misericordiæ signa fiebant: nam Christiani sic neci totum laxaverunt animum, ut non lugens masculus aut femina, nedum infans unius anni vivens, manum percussoris evaderet. Undè plateæ lotius civitatis Jerusalem, corporibus extinctis virorum et mulierum, lacerisque membris infantium aded strata et operæ fuisse referuntur, ut non solum in vicis, solitiis et palatiis, sed etiam in locis desertæ solitudinis copia occisorum reperiretur innumerabit."

GESTA DEI, vol. i. p. 283.
 This is one specimen of the spirit of the crusaders;—and is it any wonder that God did not shine on such villainous measures! No wonder that the Mohammedans have so long hated the name of Christian, when they had no other specimen of Christianity than what the conduct of these ferocious brutes exhibited.

There are many difficulties in this Psalm: whether they are in general removed by the preceding Notes, the Reader must judge. The following Analysis is constructed on the supposition that the Psalm speaks of the distracted state of the kingdom from the fatal battle of Gilboa, in which Saul fell, to the death of Ishboosheth, when the whole kingdom was united under David.

ANALYSIS OF THE SIXTIETH PSALM.
 Before David's time, and in the beginning of his reign, Israel was in a distressed condition: he composed and quieted the whole. Edom only was not vanquished. In this Psalm he gives thanks for his victories, and prays for assistance for the conquest of Edom.

There are three general parts in this Psalm:
 I. A commemoration of the former lamentably distracted condition of the Israelites, ver. 1, 2, 3.

II. The condition of it under his reign much better, ver. 4—9.

III. His thankfulness in ascribing all his victories to God, ver. 9—12.

I. In the first he shows that God was angry with Israel. 1. Of which he laments the effects of his anger. 2. And then prays for the aversion:—1. O Lord, thou hast, or hadst, cast us off. 2. Thou hast scattered us abroad; thou hast been displeas'd. 3. Thou hast made the earth to tremble. 4. Thou hast broken it. 5. Thou hast shewed thy people hard things. 6. Thou hast given us to drink the wine of astonishment. Every syllable of which congeries will appear to be most true when we examine the history of the Israelites before Saul's reign, under his government, and upon his death; and the first entrance of David upon his reign; his wars with the house of Saul, until Ishboosheth was taken out of the way.

All which wars, civil and external,—with the calamities that flowed from them, he imputes to God's anger. Thou hast been displeas'd, ver. 1.

2. And upon it he prays:—1. O turn thee to us again. Let us again enjoy Thy countenance. 2. Heal the breaches of the land. Close the wounds made by these contentions: they were not closed; for he adds, It shaketh.

II. And now the condition of it was much better; all being brought under one king, and he victorious over his foreign enemies.

1. Thou hast now given a banner to them that fear thee. All Israel, all those that are Thy servants, are brought to acknowledge Thee, and fight under one standard; in effect, have received me as their sole king, their factions and parties being quieted.

2. That it may be display'd. Set up, that Israel may know under whom to fight, and whose part to take.
 3. Because of thy truth. Who by this hast made it appear that it was no fiction nor ambition of mine to set up this standard: but a truth that I was by Samuel, by Thy special appointment, anointed to be king. And I am

The Psalmist's prayer for those who were banished from their own land, and from the ordinances of God, 1, 2. He praises God for His past mercies, 3. Purpose to devote himself entirely to His service, 4, 5. He prays for the king, 6, 7. And promises to perform his vow to the Lord daily, 8.

now invested with the crown for the performance of Thy truth and promise.

4. And the end is especially, that I should bring deliverance to Thy servants: it was that thy beloved may be delivered. That the godly and good men, and those that fear Thee, living hitherto oppressed, and in these distractions kept low, might be delivered.

5. Which, that it may be done, he inserts a short ejaculation for himself and them. Saves with thy right hand, and hear thou me. And now he begins to commemorate the particulars that God had done for him, and the several victories he had obtained; also, in what manner he ruled this people. All which he prefaces with this oracle:—

God hath spoken in his holiness. He certainly and truly hath promised to save us. I will be glad and rejoice in it. With much joy and gladness I will enter upon the kingdom, being confirmed by His promise, which I will administer in a different manner:—my government shall be paternal to the Israelites, which are His people;—but more severe to the Moabites, Ammonites, and Syrians, because they are aliens to the commonwealth of Israel.

1. I will divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth. I will bring under my power those places of Israel; and, as a true lord of them, I will divide and measure out what portions I shall think fit to the inhabitants.

2. Gilead also is mine, and Manasseh is mine. The Israelites that followed the house of Saul are come into my power, and I will divide and apportion them also. Yet, as being mine, I will deal mildly with them.

3. Of Ephraim I shall make reckoning. Ephraim shall be the strength of my head. As this tribe had more men than any other, so they were great soldiers; and these he esteemed as his life-guard.

4. Judah is my lawgiver. His chief counsel were of this tribe, in whom, with himself, was the legislative power, according to the prophecy of Jacob,—The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between his feet, till Shiloh come. And thus, having shewed his kingdom, and the administration over the Israelites, he passes to the strangers whom he had conquered, over whom he would carry a severe hand, putting them into a slavish subjection, and to base offices.

1. Moab is my washpot. A servant to hold the basin, and to wash my feet.

2. Over Edom I will cast my shoe. Trample on their necks.

3. Philistia, triumph thou because of me: which is either spoken ironically, as if he would say, "O Philistines, whom I have subdued, go, go triumph because I have conquered thee." Or else, triumph thou in the triumph I shall celebrate for my conquest; bear among the rest, thy part, though unwillingly. Follow the train with acclamations, and proclaim me thy king.

III. After the enumerations of his victories, and form of government, that no man should take this for a vain boast of his own strength, he thankfully ascribes all the glory to God, both of what he had done, and what he was yet to do. One people he had yet to conquer; and that could not be done, except that God, who had hitherto gone out with his armies, would again vouchsafe to lead them; and, therefore, he asks,—

1. Who will bring me into the strong city? who will lead me into Edom? No question had Joab, Abisai, &c., or any of his worthies been by, they would have striven who should have performed this service. Every one would have said, I will be the man.

2. But he prevents them all; and returns this answer to himself, that none but God should do it, and that he was persuaded that He would do it; even that God who was formerly displeased with them, had cast them off, but was now reconciled. Will not thou, O God, lead us into the strong city, which hadst cast us off? and thou, O God, bring us into Edom, which didst go forth with our armies.

3. And to that purpose he prays, Give us help from trouble. And he adds his reason, that nothing can be well

3 For thou hast been a shelter for me, and a strong tower from the enemy.

4 I will abide in thy tabernacle, for ever; I will trust in the covert of thy wings. Selah.

5 For thou, O God, hast heard my vows: thou hast given me the heritage of those that fear thy name.

6 Thou wilt prolong the king's life; and his years as many generations.

7 He shall abide before God for ever; O prepare mercy and truth, which may preserve him.

g Heb. Thou shalt add days to the days of the king.—h Heb. as generation and generation.—i Psa. 40. 11. Prov. 80. 25.

done without God's assistance; and for the strength, power, prudence, and skill of man, without God, are to little purpose. Vain is the help of man.

And he concludes all with this eptiphonema. In God we shall do great or valiant acts; for he it is that shall tread down our enemies. In war these two must be joined; and, indeed, in all actions. He, we; God and man.

1. We shall do valiantly, for God helps not remiss, or cowardly, or negligent men.

2. And yet that being done, the work is His: He shall tread down; the blow, and overthrow are not to be attributed to us, but to Him.

NOTES ON PSALM LXI.

The title "To the chief musician upon Neginah," מנצח. The verb nagan, signifies to strike or play on a musical instrument, especially one of the stringed kind: but the neginoth, as it is written in about thirty MSS. may signify either the players on the instruments, or the instruments themselves. The Psalm appears to have been written about the close of the captivity; and the most judicious interpreters refer it to that period. On this supposition the Notes are formed.

Verse 1. Hear my cry, O God] In the midst of a long and painful captivity, oppressed with suffering, encompassed with cruel enemies and insolent masters, I addressed my humble prayer to THEE, O my God.

Verse 2. From the end of the earth] רמ ארצי, should be here translated land, not earth; and so it should be in numerous places besides. But here it seems to mean the country beyond the Euphrates; as it is thought to do, Psa. lxxv. 5, 8, called there also the ends of the earth, or land. It may be remarked that the Jews were always more pious and devoted to God in their afflictions and captivities, than when in their own land, in ease and affluence. But who can bear prosperity! How many hearts filled with heavenly ardour in affliction and persecution, have grown cold under the beams of the sun of prosperity!

Lead me to the rock that is higher than I] Direct me to a place of refuge and safety. It is a metaphorical expression; and Calmet interprets it of the liberty granted to the Jews by Cyrus to return to their own land. This was a privilege far higher than any thing they could expect. The Fathers think Jesus Christ is meant by this high rock.

Verse 3. Thou hast been a shelter for me] During the whole duration of the captivity God marvellously dealt with the poor Jews; so that, although they were cast down, they were not utterly forsaken.

Verse 4. I will abide in thy tabernacle] The greater portion of those Psalms which were composed during, and after the captivity, says Calmet, had Levites and priests for their authors. Hence we find the ardent desire so frequently expressed of seeing the temple; of praising God there; of spending their lives in that place, performing the functions of their sacred office. There, I shall sojourn;—there, I shall dwell,—be at rest,—be in safety,—be covered with thy wings as a bird in its nest covered with the wings of its mother. These simple comparisons drawn from rural affairs, and ordinary occurrences, are more pleasing and consolatory in the circumstances in question, than allegories derived from subjects the most noble and sublime.

Verse 5. Hast heard my voice] Often have I purposed to be wholly Thine,—to serve Thee alone,—to give up my whole life to Thy service: and Thou hast heard me, and taken me at my word; and given me that heritage, the privilege of enjoying Thee in Thy ordinances, which is the lot of them that fear Thy name. The Psalm seems to have been composed either after the captivity, or at the time that Cyrus published his decree in their favour, as has been remarked before.

Verse 6. Thou wilt prolong the king's life] The words are very emphatic, and can refer to no ordinary person. Literally, days upon days thou wilt add to the king; and his years shall be like the generations of this world, and the generations of the world to come. This is precisely the paraphrase I had given to this text before I had look'd

PSALM LXIII.

David's soul thirsts after God, while absent from the sanctuary, and longs to be restored to the Divine ordinances, 1, 2. Expresses his strong confidence in the Most High, and praiseth him for His goodness, 3-5. Shows the misery of those who do not seek God, 9, 10. And his own safety as king of the people, 11.

A Psalm of David, "when he was in the wilderness of Judah.

GOD, thou art my God; early will I seek thee; my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and thirsty land, where no water is; To see thy power and thy glory, so as I have seen thee in the sanctuary. Because thy loving-kindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee.

higher than vanity. Make trial of them, as of things in a scale; and you shall find them so vain and light that they carry no proportion to what is weighty; they ascend as an empty scale.

2. Nor wealth, nor riches; especially, if unjustly heaped together. Trust not in oppression, and become not vain in robbery; if riches increase, set not your heart upon them.

V. In the close, he sets down the grounds of his confidence, taken upon God's word. God hath spoken; twice have I heard the same; or, I have heard these two things:—

1. That power belongs to God; and, therefore, He is to be trusted.

2. That mercy belongs to God; and, therefore, also you may have the utmost confidence in Him.

The consequence of both is, Thou renderest to every one according to his works; bonis vera, malis male: rely upon Him. Bad work cannot have good wages: good work cannot have bad wages. "What a man soweth that shall he reap. The righteous shall inherit glory: but shame shall be the promotion of fools." A man may deserve hell by a wicked life: but he cannot merit heaven by a good life; because he cannot do good but through the grace of God; and the merit of the work belongs to the grace by which it was wrought. Reader, hear God's sentence on this subject: The wages of sin is death. This is desert. But the gift of God is eternal life. Here is no desert, for it is by Jesus Christ our Lord. To Him be glory for ever, Amen.

NOTES ON PSALM LXIII.

The title of this Psalm is, A Psalm of David when he was in the wilderness of Judæa: but, instead of Judæa, the Vulgate, Septuagint, Æthiopic, Arabic, several of the ancient Latin Psalters, and several of the Latin Fathers, read Idumæa, or Edom; but there is no evidence that David had ever taken refuge in the deserts of Idumæa. The Hebrew text is that which should be preferred; and all the MSS. are in its favour. The Syriac has, "Of David; when he said to the king of Moab, My father and mother fled to thee from the face of Saul; and I also take refuge with thee." It is most probable that the Psalm was written when David took refuge in the forest of Hareth, in the wilderness of Ziph, when he fled from the court of Achish. But Calmet understands it as a prayer by the captives in Babylon.

Verse 1. O God, thou art my God] He who can say so, and feels what he says, need not fear the face of any adversary. He has God, and all sufficiency in Him.

Early will I seek thee] From the dawn of day. De luce, from the light, Vulgate; as soon as day breaks:—and often before this, for his eyes prevented the night-watches; and he longed and watched for God more than they who watched for the morning. The old Psalter says, God my God, till the first light I wake: and paraphrases thus, "God of all, though myght; thou is my God, thurgh lufe and devocion; specially till the I wak. The light, that is, fra the tym that the light of thy grace be in me, that excites fra night of sine.—And makes me wak till the in delite of luf, and swetes in saul. That wak till God, that sees all thar thought on God, and for gets the world. That step till God, that settis thair hert on ani creatur.—I wak till the, and that gars me thirist in saule and body."

What first lays hold of the heart in the morning is likely to occupy the place all the day. First impressions are the most durable, because there is not a multitude of ideas to drive them out, or prevent them from being deeply fixed in the moral feeling.

In a dry and thirsty land] כָּאֵרֶבּ de erets, in a land: but several MSS. have כָּאֵרֶבּ ke-erets—as a dry and thirsty land, &c.

4 Thus will I bless thee while I live: I will lift up my hands in thy name.

5 My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness; and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips:

6 When I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night watches.

7 Because thou hast been my help, therefore in the shadow of thy wings will I rejoice.

8 My soul followeth hard after thee: thy right hand upholdeth me.

9 But those that seek my soul to destroy it, shall go into the lower parts of the earth.

10 They shall fall by the sword: they shall be a portion for foxes.

h Ps. 26. 8.—i Heb. fatness.—k Ps. 42. 5. & 119. 55. & 149. 5.—l Ps. 17. 8. & 26. 7. & 57. 1. & 64. 1. & 91. 4.—m Heb. They shall make him run out like water by the hands of the sword.—n Eccl. 35. 5.

Verse 2. To see thy power and thy glory—in the sanctuary.] In His public ordinances God had often showed His power in the judgments He executed, in the terror He impressed, and in awakening the sinful; and His glory in delivering the tempted, succouring the distressed, and diffusing peace and pardon through the hearts of His followers. God shews his power and glory in his ordinances: therefore, public worship should never be neglected. We must see God, says the old Psalter, that He may see us. In His temple He dispenses His choicest blessings.

Verse 3. Thy loving-kindness is better than life] This is the language of every regenerate soul. But O, how few prefer the approbation of God to the blessings of life! or, even to life itself, in any circumstances. But the Psalmist says, Thy loving-kindness חַסְדִּים chasdeca, Thy effusive mercy, is better, חַסְדִּים me-chayim, than חַיִּים—it is better, or good beyond countless ages of human existence. My lips shall praise thee.] Men praise, or speak well, of power, glory, honour, riches, worldly prospects and pleasures: but the truly religious speak well of God, in whom they find infinitely more satisfaction and happiness than worldly men can find in the possession of all earthly good.

Verse 4. I will lift up my hands in thy name.] I will take God for my portion. I will dedicate myself to Him, and will take Him to witness that I am upright in what I profess and do. Pious Jews, in every place of their dispersion, in all their prayers, praises, contracts, &c. stretched out their hands toward Jerusalem, where the true God had His temple, and where he manifested his presence.

Verse 5. My soul shall be satisfied] I shall have, in the true worshipping of Thee, as complete a sensation of spiritual sufficiency and happiness, so that no desire shall be left unsatisfied, as any man can have who enjoys health of body, and a fulness of all the necessaries, conveniences, and comforts, of life.

Verse 6. When I remember thee upon my bed] I will lie down in Thy fear and love; that I may sleep soundly under Thy protection, and awake with a sense of Thy presence and approbation; and when I awake in the night watches, or be awakened by them, I will spend the waking moments in meditation upon Thee.

Verse 7. Therefore, in the shadow of thy wings] I will get into the very secret of Thy presence,—into the Holy of holies, to the mercy-seat over which the cherubs extend their wings. If the Psalmist do not allude to the overshadowing of the mercy-seat, by the extended wings of the cherubim, he may have in view, as a metaphor, the young of fowls seeking shelter, protection, and warmth, under the wings of their mothers. See the same metaphor, Psa. lxi. 4. When a bird of prey appears, the chickens will, by natural instinct, run under the wings of their mothers for protection.

The old Psalter translates, And in billing of thy wings I shall joy. The paraphrase is curious. "Thou art my helper, in perels; and I can joy in gode dedes in thil hiling (covering) for I am thil bride (bird) and if thou hil (cover) me noight, the glede (hawk) will rawis me (carry me away)."

Verse 8. My soul followeth hard after thee] דָּבַעַבּ דָּבֵעָבָא dabecan naphshi acharayca, "My soul cleaves (or) is glued after thee." This paraphrase not only shews the diligence of the pursuit, and the nearness of the attainment, but also the fast hold he had got of the mercy of his God.

Verse 9. Lower parts of the earth.] They are appointed, in the just judgment of God, to destruction; they shall be slain and buried in the earth, and shall be seen no more. Some understand the passage as referring to the punishment of hell; which many supposed to be in the centre of the earth. So the old Psalter,—Thou shalt enter ed; from the insurrection of the workers of iniquity:

11 But the king shall rejoice in God; * every one that sweareth by him shall glory: but the mouth of them that speak lies shall be stopped.

3 * Who whet their tongue like a sword, * and bend their bows to shoot their arrows, even bitter words:

4 That they may shoot in secret at the perfect: suddenly do they shoot at him, and fear not.

5 * They encourage themselves in an evil matter: they commune * of laying snares privily; * they say, Who shall see them?

6 They search out iniquities; * they accomplish in till lagher pine of hell. Lagher, or laigher, lower, undermost.

Verse 10. They shall fall by the sword] They shall be poured out by the hand of the sword, Heb. That is, their life's blood shall be shed either in war, or by the hand of justice.

They shall be a portion for foxes.] They shall be left unburied, and the jackalls shall feed upon their dead bodies. Or, being all cut off by utter destruction, their inheritance shall be left for the wild beasts. That which was their portion shall shortly be the portion of the wild beasts of the forest. If he here refers to the destruction of the Babylonians, the prediction has been literally fulfilled. Where ancient Babylon stood, as far as it can be ascertained, it is now the hold of dangerous reptiles, and ferocious beasts.

Verse 11. But the king shall rejoice] David shall come to the kingdom according to the promise of God. Or, if it refer to the captivity,—the blood royal shall be preserved in and by Zerubbabel till the Messiah come, who shall be David's spiritual Successor in the kingdom for ever.

That sweareth by him] It was customary to swear by the life of the king. The Egyptians swore by the life of Pharaoh; and Joseph conforms to this custom, as may be seen in the Book of Genesis, chap. xlii. 15, 16. See also 1 Sam. i. 26, and xvii. 35, and Judith xi. 7. But here it may refer to God. He is TAN KING,—and swearing by His name signifies binding themselves by His authority, acknowledging His supremacy, and devoting themselves to His glory and service alone.

The Chaldee has "And the King shall rejoice, ושמח כמור מאלוה, In the word of God;" or, in the Word God; meimar, Word, being taken here substantially, as in many other places, by the Targumist.

The mouth of them that speak lies] The mouth of those who acknowledge lying vanities,—that worship false gods, they shall be stopped. All false religions shall be destroyed by the prevalence of the truth. For He, Caesar, shall reign till all His enemies shall be put under His feet. "Thy kingdom come, and hell's o'erpower;—and to Thy sceptre, all subdue." Amen and Amen.

ANALYSIS OF THE SIXTY-THIRD PSALM.

The contents are.— I David's ardent desire to be in the assembly of the saints, ver. 1. And the reasons on which this desire was founded, ver. 2, 3, 4, 5.

II. That though absent from God's ordinances, yet he forgot not his Maker, ver. 6, 7, 8.

III. A double prophecy. 1. What should befall his enemies, ver. 9, 10. And, 2. What should come to himself, ver. 11.

I. 1. In the first part he states his confidence in God, as the foundation of his desires, contemplations, meditations, invocations, and consolations. O God, thou art my God, ver. 1.

2. Then he expresses his ardent desire and fervent affection. 1. Early will I seek thee. There, not other things. 2. My soul thirsteth for thee, &c. There is no doubt that he wanted many things in this barren thirsty land: but of this he does not complain, but of his want of God in the sanctuary.

And so he expresses himself in the following verse:— He was about to see the power and glory of God in the sanctuary, as he had formerly done. He gives the reason of this. Because thy loving-kindness is better than life, ver. 2. To see Thy goodness in the use of Thy ordinances I count far beyond all the blessings of life; and could I again be admitted there, then those effects would follow:

1. Praise. My lips shall praise, &c. ver. 4.

2. Invocation and prayer. I will lift up my hands, &c. ver. 4.

3. The satisfaction he should receive from these. My mouth shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness, &c. ver. 5.

Heb. to hide snares.—[Psa. 10. 11. & 69. 7.—g Or, we are consumed by that which they have thoroughly searched.

II. Though David is now in the wilderness, he does not forget his duty.

1. Even there he remembered God upon his bed; and meditated, &c. ver. 6.

2. Because thou hast been my help; therefore, &c. ver. 7.

3. My soul followeth hard after thee, &c. ver. 8. It is evident, therefore, that even here David was not without comfort; for, 1. He meditates, and remembers what God had done for him. 2. He remembers that He had been his help; and, therefore, he rejoices. 3. He still adheres to Him, and follows hard after Him for help still.

III. And now, being secure of God's protection, he foretells, 1. What would befall his enemies; and, 2. What would come to himself.

1. To his enemies, ruin. Those who seek after my soul, they shall go (some) into the lower parts of the earth,—the grave, or hell.

2. Others should fall by the sword, lie unburied, and be devoured by wild beasts—

—Ελωπητα ροϋς ροϋστωϋ,

Ολοστωϋ τε νει.

Il. i. v. 4.

Whose limbs outburst on the naked shore,

Denouncing dogs and hungry vultures torn.

Pope

2. To himself, honour, and a crown. But the king (David) shall rejoice in God. The reason is,—

1. Every one that swears by Him—that is, who worships and fears God, an oath being put by synecdoche for the whole worship of God. See the Notes.

2. The mouth of them that speak lies,—utter blasphemies, curses, and perjuries: or pray and confess to strange gods, shall be stopped; they shall be ashamed and confounded, and an end be put to their iniquity by a sudden and violent death. The mouth of God's people shall glory;—but the mouth of the wicked be stopped, and be silent in the dust.

NOTES ON PSALM LXIV.

The title.—To the chief musician, or conqueror, A Psalm of David. The Syriac says, "composed by David when warned by God the prophet, who said, Stay not in Masrob, because Saul seeks thy life." Some think it was composed by David when he was persecuted by Saul; or during the rebellion of Abimelech. But Calmet thinks it is a complaint of the captives in Babylon.

Verse 1. Hear my voice] The Psalmist feared for his life, and the lives of his fellow captives; and he sought help of God. He prayed,—and he lifted up his voice; and thus shewed his earnestness.

Verse 2. Hide me from the secret counsel] They plotted his destruction, and then formed insurrections in order to accomplish it.

Workers of iniquity] Those who made sin their labour, their daily employment. It was their occupation and trade. It is supposed that by this title the Babylonians are intended. See Psa. vi. 3, xiv. 4, xxxvi. 12, liii. 4, lix. 2.

Verse 3. Who whet their tongue like a sword] They devise the evil they shall speak, and meditate on the most provoking, injurious, and defamatory words; as the soldier whets his sword that he may thereby the better cut down his enemies.

Their arrows—bitter words] Their defamatory sayings are here represented as deadly as poisoned arrows; for to such is the allusion here made.

Verse 4. That they may shoot in secret] They lurk, that they may take their aim the more surely, and not miss their mark.

Suddenly] When there is no fear apprehended, because none is seen.

Verse 5. They commune of laying snares] They lay snares to entrap those whom they cannot slay by open attack, or private ambush.

Verse 6. They search out iniquities; they accomplish a diligent search] The word שׁוּרֵי חַפְזֵי, which is used three times, as a noun and a verb, in this sentence, signifies to strip off the clothes. "They investigate iniquities; they perfectly investigate an investigation." Most energetically a diligent search: both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart, is deep.

7 ¹ But God shall shoot at them with an arrow; suddenly ^b shall they be wounded.

8 So they shall make ¹ their own tongue to fall upon themselves: ² all that see them shall flee away.

9 ^a And all men shall fear, and shall ^c declare the work of God; for they shall wisely consider of his doing.

10 ^p The righteous shall be glad in the Lord, and shall trust in him; and all the upright in heart shall glory.

^h Heb. a search searched.—1 P. 12, 12.—ⁱ Heb. their wound shall be.—1 Prov. 12, 12. & 12. 7.—^j Ps. 21, 1. & 22. 4.—^k Ps. 42, 3.—^l Jer. 52, 23. & 51, 10.—^m P. 22, 11. & 22, 10. & 22, 3.

translated by the old Psalter.—That ransacked wickednesses; that fallen ransacked in ransacking. To ransack signifies to search every corner, to examine things part by part;—to turn over every leaf, to leave no hole nor cranny unexplored. But the word investigate fully expresses the meaning of the term; as it comes either from in, taken privatively, and vestire, to clothe, stripping the man bare, that he may be exposed to all shame, and be the more easily wounded: or from the word investige, which may be derived from in, intensive, and vestigium, the footstep or track of man or beast. A metaphor from hunting the stag; as the slot, or mark of his foot, is diligently sought out, in order to find whither he is gone;—whether he is old or young,—for huntsmen can determine the age by the slot; and Tuberville, in his Treatise of Hunting, gives rules to form this judgment. To this the next verse seems to refer.

Verse 7. But God shall shoot at them with an arrow] They endeavour to trace me out, that they may shoot me: but God will shoot them. This, if the Psalm refer to the times of David, seems to be prophetic of Saul's death. The archers pressed upon him, and sorely wounded him with their arrows. 1 Sam. xxxi. 3.

Verse 8. Their own tongue to fall upon themselves] All the plottings, counsels, and curses, they have formed against me, shall come upon themselves.

Verse 9. And all men shall fear] They endeavoured to hide their mischief: but God shall so punish them, that all shall see it; and shall acknowledge in their chastisement the just judgment of God. The wicked, in consequence, shall fear, and,—

Verse 10. The righteous shall be glad] They shall see that God does not abandon His followers to the malice of bad men. The rod of the wicked may come into the heritage of the just; but there it shall not rest. Calmet thinks that this is a prediction of the destruction of the Chaldeans, in consequence of which the Jewish people became highly respected by all the surrounding nations. But it may be applied more generally to the enmity of the wicked against the righteous; and how God counterworks their devices, and vindicates and supports His own followers.

ANALYSIS OF THE SIXTY-FOURTH PSALM.

I. The Psalmist, in danger, commends his cause to God, ver. 1, 2.

II. Complains of his enemies, who are described by their inward devices, and outward conduct, ver. 3—6.

III. He foretells their ruin, and the consequences, ver. 7—10.

I. 1. He prays in general. Hear my voice.
2. Then in special, that his life may be safe. Hide me from the secret counsel, &c. ver. 2.

He describes his enemies generally:—
1. They were wicked men.
2. They were workers of iniquity.
3. They work secret counsel against him.
4. They acted according to their counsels.

II. After this general character, he particularly describes their villany.

1. They were calumniators;—no sword sharper than their tongue,—no arrow swifter than their accusations. They were diligent and active to wound his credit; and the evil of their conduct was aggravated by two circumstances:—1. It was in secret. 2. It was against the innocent and upright. They whet their sword; and bend their bow, to shoot their arrows, &c.

2. They were obstinate, and confirmed in mischief. 1. They encourage themselves in an evil thing. 2. They commune, lay their heads together, how to lay snares, &c.

3. They are impudent and atheistical. They say, Who shall see them?

4. They are indefatigable,—they are carried on with an earnest desire to do mischief:—they invent all crafty ways to circumvent the righteous.

PSALM LXV.

God is praised for the fulfilment of His promise, and for His mercy in forgiving sin, 1—3. He is praised for the wonders which He works in nature, which all mankind must acknowledge, 4—8. For the fertilizing showers which He sends upon the earth, and the abundance thereby produced, both for men and cattle, 9—13.

XII. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm and Song of David.

PRAISE ^a waiteth for thee, O God, ^b in Sion: and unto thee shall the ^c vow be performed.

2 O thou that hearest prayer, ^b unto thee shall all flesh come.

3 ^a Iniquities ^d prevail against me: as for our transgressions, thou shalt ^e purge them away.

^a Heb. is silent, Ps. 62, 1.—^b Isai. 65, 28.—^c Ps. 24, 4. & 42, 12.—^d Heb. Words, or, Matters of iniquity.—^e Ps. 51, 2. & 78, 9. Isai. 6, 7. Heb. 1. 7, 8.

5. All this they do subtly, craftily,—both the inward thought and heart of them is deep: it is not easy to find out their snares.

III. Now he foretells, 1. Their punishment; and, 2. The event.

1. Their punishment was to be—hasty,—sharp,—deadly,—and very just. 1. God shall shoot at them with an arrow; suddenly shall they be wounded. 2. Most just. For they shall make their own tongues fall upon themselves. By their tongues did they mischief; by their tongues shall they fall.

2. The event shall be double;—1. In general, to all. 2. In particular, to the righteous.

1. Universally—all that see them shall flee away,—fear, desert, forsake them.

2. All men shall see and declare the work of the Lord, and consider it as his doing.

The effect it shall have on the righteous. They shall acknowledge God's justice; and farther,

1. They shall be glad in the Lord;—in the judgments He has shewn.

2. They shall trust in him,—that He will always protect and deliver them.

3. They shall glory; make their boast in God, and tell to all the wonders which in His justice and His mercy He has wrought for them.

NOTES ON PSALM LXV.

The title, "To the chief musician,—or conqueror; a Psalm and Song of David." So the Hebrew; and in effect the Chaldee, Ethiopic, and best copies of the Sep-tuagint. The Arabic has, "A Psalm of David concerning the transmigration of the people."

The Vulgate is singular,—"A Psalm of David. A hymn of Jeremiah and Ezekiel for the people of the transmigration, when they began to go out," from Babylon, understood. This title is of no authority;—it neither accords with the subject of the Psalm, nor with the truth of history. Calmet has very properly remarked that Jeremiah and Ezekiel were never found together, to compose this Psalm, neither before, at, nor after, the Captivity. It should, therefore, be utterly rejected. In the Com-plutensian edition Haggai is added to Jeremiah and Ezekiel; all with equal propriety.

It is supposed to have been written after a great drought, when God had sent a plentiful rain on the land. I rather think that there was no direct drought or rain in the prophet's view; but a celebration of the praises of God for His giving rain and fruitful seasons, and filling men's mouths with food, and their hearts with gladness. There is a particular Providence manifested in the quantity of rain that falls upon the earth, which can neither be too much admired nor praised.

Verse 1. Praise waiteth for thee] Praise is silent, or dumb, for Thee. Thou, alone, art worthy of praise: all other perfections are lost in Thine; and he who considers Thee aright can have no other subject of adoration.

Unto thee shall the vow be performed.] All offerings and sacrifices should be made to Thee. All human spirits are under obligation to live to and serve Thee. All Jews and Christians by circumcision and baptism belong to Thee; and they are all bound to pay the vow of their respective covenants to Thee alone; and the spirit of this vow is, to love Thee with all their powers; and to serve Thee with a perfect heart and willing mind all the days of their life.

Verse 2. Unto thee shall all flesh come] All human beings should pray to God; and from Him alone the sufficient portion of human spirits is to be derived. It is supposed to be a prediction of the calling of the Gentiles to the faith of the Gospel of Christ. A minister, immensely corrupt, began his address to God in the pulpit with these words, "O Thou that hearest prayer, unto Thee shall all flesh come!"—and most unluckily laid a strong emphasis on ALL FLESH. The coincidence was ominous;—and I need

4 'Blessed is the man whom thou choosest, and causest to approach unto thee, that he may dwell in thy courts: we shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, even of thy holy temple.

5 By terrible things in righteousness wilt thou answer us, O God of our salvation; who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth, and of them that are afar off upon the sea:

7 Which stilleth the noise of the seas, the noise of their waves, and the tumult of the people.

not say, the people were not edified, for the effect was ludicrous. I mention this fact, which fell under my own notice, to warn those who minister in righteousness to avoid expressions which may be capable, from a similar circumstance, of a ludicrous application. I have known many good men who, to their no small grief, have been encumbered with a preternatural load of muscles: an evil to be deprecated and deplored.

Verse 3. Iniquities prevail against me] This is no just rendering of the original יָרִיב עִמָּי בְּרִי עֲוֹנוֹתַי idibrey avonoth gabru emi. Iniquitous words have prevailed against me,—or, The words of iniquity are strong against me. All kinds of calumnies, lies, and slanders, have been propagated to shake my confidence, and ruin my credit.

Our transgressions, thou shalt purge them away] Whatsoever offences we have committed against Thee, Thou wilt pardon; תְּכַפֵּר אֲשֶׁר־עָשִׂיתִי tecapherem, Thou wilt make atonement for them; when, with hearty repentance and true faith, we turn unto Thee. This verse has been abused to favour Antinomian licentiousness. The true and correct translation of the former clause will prevent this.

The old Scottish version of this verse, in their singing Psalms, is most execrable:—

"Iniquities, I must confess,
Prevail against me do:
And as for our transgressions
Thou purge away with Thou."

O David, if thou art capable of hearing such abominable doggerel, substituted for the nervous words thou didst compose by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, what must thou feel, if chagrin can affect the inhabitants of heaven!

Verse 4. Blessed is the man whom thou choosest] This is spoken in reference to the priests who were chosen of God to minister at the tabernacle; and who were permitted to approach, draw nigh, to the Divine Majesty by the various offerings and sacrifices which they presented.

We shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house] Though we are not priests, and have not the great felicity to minister before Thee in holy things; yet we can worship at Thy temple, feel the outpouring of thy Spirit, and be made happy with the blessings which Thou dispensest there to Thy true worshippers.

Verse 5. By terrible things in righteousness] The Vulgate joins this clause to the preceding verse. Thy holy temple is wonderful in righteousness: thou wilt hear us, O God of our salvation. But the Psalmist may refer to those wonderful displays of God's providence in the change of seasons, and fertilization of the earth; and, consequently, in the sustenance of all animal beings.

The confidence of all the ends of the earth] Thou art the Hope of Thy people scattered through different parts of the world, and through the isles of the sea. This passage is also understood of the vocation of the Gentiles.

Verse 6. Setteth fast the mountains] It is by Thy strength they have been raised; and by Thy power they are girded about, or preserved. He represents the mountains as being formed and pitched into their proper places by the mighty hand of God; and shews that they are preserved from splitting, falling down, or mouldering away, as it were, by a girdle by which they are surrounded. The image is very fine. They are hooped about by the Divine power.

Verse 7. Stilleth the noise of the seas] Thou art Sovereign over all the operations of sea and land. Earthquakes are under Thy control:—so are the flux and reflux of the sea;—and all storms and tempests by which the great deep is agitated. Even the headstrong multitude is under thy control:—for Thou stillest the madness of the people.

Verse 8. Are afraid at thy tokens] Thunder and lightning, storms and tempests, eclipses and meteors, tornadoes and earthquakes, are proofs to all who dwell even in the remotest parts of the earth, that there is a Supreme Being are afraid at thy tokens: thou makest the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice.

9 Thou visitest the earth, and waterest it: thou greatly enrichest it with the river of God, which is full of water: thou preparest them corn, when thou hast so provided for it.

10 Thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly: thou settlest the furrows thereof: thou makest it soft with showers: thou blessest the springing thereof.

11 Thou crownest the year with thy goodness; and thy paths drop fatness.

12 They drop upon the pastures of the wilderness: and the little hills rejoice on every side.

who is wonderful and terrible in His acts. By these things an eternal power and Godhead become manifest even to the most barbarous. From this verse to the end of the Psalm there is a series of the finest poetic imagery in the world.

The outgoings of the morning, &c.] The rising and setting sun, the morning and evening twilight, the invariable succession of day and night, are all ordained by Thee, and contribute to the happiness and continuance of man and beast. Or, all that fear Thee praise Thee in the morning, when they go to their work, and in the evening, when they return home, for thy great goodness, manifested in the continuance of their strength, and the success of their labour.

Verse 9. Thou visitest the earth] God is represented as going through the whole globe, and examining the wants of every part; and directing the clouds how, and where, to deposit their fertilizing showers; and the rivers where to direct their beneficial courses.

The river of God] Some think the Jordan is meant; and the visiting and watering refer to rain after a long drought. But the clouds may be thus denominated, which properly are the origin of rivers.

Thou preparest them corn] Or, Thou wilt prepare them corn, because Thou hast provided for it. Thou hast made all necessary provision for the fertilization of the earth. Thou hast endued the ground with a vegetative power. Rains, dews, and the genial heat of the sun, enable it to put forth that power in providing grass for cattle, and corn for the service of man.

Verse 10. Thou waterest the ridges] In seed-time Thou sendest that measure of rain that is necessary, in order to prepare the earth for the plough: and then, when the ridges are thrown into furrows, Thou makest them soft with showers, so as to prepare them for the expansion of the seed, and the vegetation and development of the embryo plant.

Thou blessest the springing thereof.] Literally, Thou wilt bless the germinations, its springing buds: Thou watchest over the young sprouts; and it is by Thy tender, wise, and provident care that the ear is formed; and by Thy bountiful goodness that mature grains fill the ear; and that one produces thirty, sixty, or one hundred, or one thousand fold.

Verse 11. Thou crownest the year] A full and plentiful harvest is the crown of the year; and this springs from the unmerited goodness of God. This is the diadem of the earth. תְּכַרְתֵּם אֲתָרָא "Thou encirclest," as with a diadem. A most elegant expression to shew the progress of the sun through the twelve signs of the Zodiac, producing the seasons; and giving a sufficiency of light and heat alternately to all places on the surface of the globe, by its north and south declination (amounting to 23° 28' at the solstices) on each side of the equator. A more beautiful image could not have been chosen; and the very appearance of the space termed the zodiac on a celestial globe, shews with what propriety the idea of a circle, or diadem, was conceived by this inimitable poet.

Thy paths drop fatness.] תִּשְׁרֹטוּ מַלְגָּלֵיכָא "thy orbits." The various planets, which all have their revolutions within the zodiacal space, are represented as contributing their part to the general fructification of the year. Or, perhaps, the solar revolution through the twelve signs, dividing the year into twelve parts or months, may be here intended; the rains of November and February, the frosts and snows of December and January, being as necessary for the fructification of the soil, as the gentle showers of spring, the warmth of summer, and the heat and drought of autumn. The earth's diurnal rotation on its axis, its annual revolution in its orbit, and the moon's course is accompanying the earth,—are all wheels, or orbits of God, which drop fatness, or produce fertility in the earth.

13 The pastures are clothed with flocks; and the valleys also are covered over with corn; they shout for joy, they also sing.

PSALM LXVI.

The Psalmist exhorts all to praise God for the wonders He has wrought, 1-4. Calls on Israel to consider His mighty acts in behalf of their fathers, 5-7. His goodness in their own behalf, 8-12. His resolves to pay his vows to God, and offer his promised sacrifices, 13-15. Calls on all to hear what God had done for his soul, 16-19.

places which are not cultivated have their sufficiency of moisture, so as to render them proper places of pasturage for cattle. The terms wilderness and desert, in the Sacred Writings, mean, in general, places not inhabited and uncultivated, though abounding with timber, bushes, and herbage.

The little hills rejoice] Literally, the hills gird themselves with exultation. The metaphor appears to be taken from the frisking of lambs, bounding of kids, and dancing of shepherds and shepherdesses, in the joy-inspiring summer season.

Verse 13. The pastures are clothed with flocks] Cattle are seen in every plain, avenue, and vista, feeding abundantly: and the valleys are clothed, and wave with the richest harvests; and transports of joy are heard every where in the cheerful songs of the peasantry, the singing of the birds, the neighing of the horse, lowing of the ox, and bleating of the sheep.

Shout for joy, they also sing] They are not loud and unmeaning sounds,—they are both music and harmony in their different notes: all together form one great concert, and the bounty of God is the subject which they all celebrate. What an inimitable description. And yet the nervous Hebrew is not half expressed, even by the amended translation and paraphrase above.

ANALYSIS OF THE SIXTY-FIFTH PSALM.

This is wholly a poem of thanksgiving; and teaches us how, and for what, we are to praise God. 1. For spiritual; 2. For temporal blessings; and, 3. This publicly; in Zion—in His church.

It has two general parts:—

I. Praise to God for His blessings to His followers, ver. 1-5.

II. His common benefits to all mankind, ver. 6-13.

I. He sets forth God's grace to His followers, of which he reckons several particulars:—

1. He has established a public ministry among them, and an atoning sacrifice.

2. He directs and hears their prayers; and to Him by sacrifice, prayer, and praise, may all human beings come.

3. Though evil tongues may prevail against them for a time, yet He will deliver them.

4. The transgressions committed against Him He will accept an atonement for, and pardon, ver. 1-4. See the Notes.

5. All that truly worship Him in His ordinances shall be made partakers of spiritual blessedness. We shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, ver. 4.

6. He works powerfully, and terribly; but righteously in behalf of His followers, against their enemies. By terrible things in righteousness, ver. 5. 1. He answers them when they call. 2. By terrible things,—as in Egypt, the wilderness, &c. 3. And the motive to it is, His justice or righteousness, by which He punishes His enemies, and gives retribution to His people.

All this He concludes with a double eulogy of God:—

1. Shewing what He is peculiarly to His people. O God of our salvation.

2. What He is to all;—the confidence of all the ends of the earth, for He sustains all, be they where they may.

II. He descends from His peculiar providence,—the care He takes of, and the benefits He bestows on His church,—to His general providence, His ordering and sustaining the whole world; of which he gives several instances:—

1. By his strength he setteth fast the mountains, &c. which is true literally; but, tropologically, it may mean kingdoms and states.

2. He stilleth the noise of the sea,—and of the waves,—for to them He sets bounds. And the tumult of the people. He stills devils, tyrants, armies, seditions, &c.

power shall thine enemies submit themselves unto thee.

4 All the earth shall worship thee, and shall sing unto thee; they shall sing to thy name. Selah.

5 Come and see the works of God: He is terrible in his doing toward the children of men.

6 He turned the sea into dry land: they went through the flood on foot: there did we rejoice in him.

7 He ruleth by his power for ever: his eyes behold the nations: let not the rebellious exalt themselves. Selah.

8 O bless our God, ye people, and make the voice of his praise to be heard:

f. Heb. 46.—g. Ps. 22. 27. & 67. 2. & 117. 1.—h. Ps. 95. 1, 2.—i. Ps. 46. 4.—k. Exod. 14. 21.—l. Josh. 2. 16, 18.—m. Ps. 11. 4.

3. He does this so, so that even those who are in the uttermost parts of the sea are afraid of His tokens. They see from the phenomena of nature how powerful and fearful God is.

4. The sun, moon, planets, and stars, are under His guidance. Day and night are ordered by Him. Those maketh the outgoings of the morning and evening to rejoice.

5. The earth and its inhabitants are His peculiar care. Thou visitest the earth, &c. ver. 9-11. In all of which the prophet shews, 1. God's mercy in the rain. 2. In the rivers. 3. In the growing of the corn. 4. In providing grass for cattle. 5. In providing store in the summer and autumn. 6. His clouds drop fatness upon the earth,—and all nature rejoices. The meaning of all is,—Man may plough, sow, dig, manure, prune, watch, fence, &c.: but it is God that gives the increase.

For an account of the imagery here employed, see the Notes. The Psalm is grand beyond description, and can never be sufficiently admired.

NOTES ON PSALM LXVI.

There is nothing particular in the title of the Psalm. It is not attributed to David either by the Hebrews, Chaldee, Syriac, Septuagint, Vulgate, or Ethiopic. The Arabic alone prefixes the name of David. The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, call it a Psalm of the resurrection: but for this there is no authority. By many of the ancients it is supposed to be a celebration of the restoration from the Babylonish captivity. Others think it commemorates the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, their introduction into the Promised Land, and the establishment of the worship of God in Jerusalem.

Verse 1. Make a joyful noise] Sing aloud to God, all ye lands; all ye people who, from different parts of the Babylonish empire, are now on return to your own land.

Verse 2. The honour of his name] Let His glorious and merciful acts be the subject of your songs.

Verse 3. How terrible art thou] Consider the plagues with which He afflicted Egypt before He brought your fathers from their captivity, which obliged all His enemies to submit.

Thine enemies submit themselves] Literally, lie unto thee. This was remarkably the case with Pharaoh and the Egyptians. They promised again and again to let the people go, when the hand of the Lord was upon them: and they as frequently falsified their word.

Verse 4. All the earth] The whole land shall worship Thee. There shall no more an idol be found among the tribes of Israel. This was literally true. After the Babylonish captivity the Israelites never relapsed into idolatry.

Selah] Remark it: this is a well attested truth.

Verse 5. Come and see the works of God] Let every man lay God's wonderful dealings with us to heart; and compare our deliverance from Babylon to that of our fathers from Egypt.

Verse 6. He turned the sea into dry land] This was a plain miracle: no human art or contrivance could do this. Even in the bed of the waters they did rejoice in him. We have not less cause to praise, and be thankful.

Verse 7. He ruleth by his power] His omnipotence is employed to support His followers, and cast down His enemies.

His eyes behold the nations] He sees what they purpose, what they intend to do; and what they will do, if He restrain them not.

Let not the rebellious exalt themselves.] They shall not succeed in their designs: they have their own aggrandisement in view, but Thou wilt disappoint and cast them down.

Selah] Mark this. It is true. Verse 8. O bless our God] Who have so much cause

9 Which holdeth our soul in life, and safereth our foot to be moved.

10 For thou, O God, hast proved us: thou hast tried us, as silver is tried.

11 Thou broughtest us into the net: thou laidest affliction upon our loins.

12 Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads; we went through fire and through water: but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place.

13 I will go into thy house with burnt-offerings: I will pay thee my vows, 14 Which my lips have uttered, and my mouth hath spoken, when I was in trouble.

15 I will offer unto thee burnt-sacrifices of fatnings, with the incense of rams; I will offer bullocks with goats. Selah.

16 Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul.

17 I cried unto him with my mouth, and he was exalted with my tongue.

18 If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me;

19 But verily God hath heard me: he hath attended to the voice of my prayer.

20 Blessed be God, which hath not turned away my prayer, nor hath his mercy from me.

as you to sing praises to the Lord? Hear what he has done for you:—

Verse 9. Which holdeth our soul in life] Literally, "he who placeth our soul, חַיִּים be-chayim, in lives." We are preserved alive; have health of body, and the life of God in our hearts.

And suffereth not our feet to be moved.] Keeps us steadfast in His testimonies. We have our life, our liberty, and our religion. O, what hath the Lord wrought for us! make, therefore, the voice of his praises to be heard. Let God and man know you are thankful.

Verse 10. For thou, O God, hast proved us] This is a metaphor taken from melting and refining metals: afflictions and trials of various kinds are represented as a furnace where ore is melted, and a crucible where it is refined. And this metaphor is used especially to represent cases where there is doubt concerning the purity of the metal, the quantity of alloy, or even the nature or kind of metal subjected to the trial. So God is said to try the Israelites that He might know what was in them; and whether they would keep his testimonies: and then, according to the issue, His conduct towards them would appear to be founded on reason and justice.

Verse 11. Thou broughtest us into the net] This refers well to the case of the Israelites, when in their departure from Egypt, pursued by the Egyptians, having the Red sea before them, and no method of escape, Pharaoh said, The wilderness hath shut them in,—they are entangled: comparing their state to that of a wild beast, in a net.

Affliction upon our loins.] Perhaps this alludes to that sharp pain in the back and loins which is generally felt on the apprehension of sudden and destructive danger.

Verse 12. Thou hast caused men to ride over our heads] Thou hast permitted us to fall under the dominion of our enemies; who have treated us as broken infantry are when the cavalry dashes among their disordered ranks, treading all under the horses' feet.

We went through fire and through water] Through afflictions of the most torturing and overwhelming nature. To represent such, the metaphors of fire and water are often used in Scripture. The old Psalter considers these trials as a proof of the uprightness of those who were tried—" Et cetera passus thurib' fire and water: that is, thurgh we and wele, as a man that leveis nocht his waye for hete na for kold, for dry na for wette; and thou poust leve us fra tribulacion intill boiling (cooling) that is, in till endles rite, that we hope to hafe after this travell."

Wealthy place.] Well watered place, to wit, the land of Judea.

Verse 13. I will go into thy house with burnt-offerings] Now that Thou hast restored us to our own land, and established us in it, we will establish Thy worship, and offer all the various kinds of sacrifices required by Thy law.

I will pay thee my vows] We often vowed, if Thou wouldst deliver us from our bondage, to worship and serve Thee alone: now Thou hast heard our prayers, and hast delivered us; therefore, will we fulfil our engagements to Thee. The old Psalter gives this a pious turn:—" I shall praise till the my bowels, that is, the vowes of louyng (praising) the; whilk vowes my lipes dividid sayand, that I am nocht, and thou arte all: and I hafe nede of the; nocht thou of me. This is a right distincion."—It is certainly a good distincion, and it is strictly true. The all sufficient God needs not His creatures.

Verse 14. When I was in trouble.] This is generally the time when good resolutions are formed, and vows made:—but how often are these forgotten when affliction and calamity are removed!

Verse 15. I will offer, &c.] Thou shalt have the best of the herd and of the fold: the lame and the blind shall never be given to Thee for sacrifice.

The incense of rams.] The fine effluvia arising from the burning of the pure fat.

Verse 16. Come and hear, all ye that fear God] While in captivity, the Psalmist had sought the Lord with frequent prayer for his own personal salvation, and for the deliverance of the people; and God blessed him, heard his prayer, and turned the captivity. Now that he is returned in safety, he is determined to perform his vows to the Lord; and calls on all them that fear their Maker, who have any religious reverence for Him, to attend to his account of the Lord's gracious dealings with him. He proposes to tell them his spiritual experience;—what he needed,—what he earnestly prayed for,—and what God has done for him. Thus he intended to teach them by example, more powerful always than precept, however weighty in itself, and impressively delivered.

Verse 17. I cried unto him with my mouth] My prayer was fervent.—He heard and answered,—and my tongue celebrated His mercies; and He as graciously received my thanksgiving, as He compassionately heard my prayer.

Verse 18. If I regard iniquity in my heart] If I have seen (רָאִיתִי rati) iniquity in my heart,—if I have known it was there, and encouraged it: if I pretended to be what I was not; if I loved iniquity, while I professed to pray and be sorry for my sin:—the Lord, אֲדֹנָי adonai, my Prop, Stay, and Supporter, would not have heard; and I should have been left without help or support.

Verse 19. Verily God hath heard me] A sure proof that my prayer was upright, and my heart honest before Him.

Verse 20. Blessed be God] I, therefore, praise God who has not turned aside my prayer; and who has not withheld His mercy from me. Thus he told them what God had done for his soul.

ANALYSIS OF THE SIXTY-SIXTH PSALM.

There are five parts in this Psalm:—

I. An invitation:—

1. To praise God, ver. 1—4.

2. To consider His works, ver. 5—7.

II. A repetition of the invitation, ver. 8, for the benefit and deliverance lately received, ver. 9—12.

III. A protestation and vow for himself, that he would serve the Lord, ver. 13—15.

IV. A declaration of God's goodness to him, which he invites all to come and hear, ver. 16—19.

V. A doxology, with which he concludes, ver. 20.

1. The invitation to praise God affectionately and heartily.

1. Make a joyful song. 2. Sing the honour of his name. 3. Make his praise glorious. 4. Say unto God, &c. Where he prescribes the form in which God shall be praised.

He calls all men to consider His works, and the double effect,—1. On God's enemies.—2. On His people.

1. On His enemies, a feigned obedience, ver. 3. See the Note.

2. On His people, a willing service, ver. 4.

He calls on them again, ver. 5, to consider God's means specially, in delivering His people,—1. At the Red sea. 2. In passing Jordan on foot, ver. 6.

He calls them to behold God's power and providence. 1. His power in ruling:—2. His providence in beholding; and 3. His justice in punishing, the rebellious, ver. 7.

II. He again invites them to praise God for some special mercy, without which they would have been destroyed, ver. 8. 1. He kept them alive. 2. Suffered not their feet to slip, ver. 9. 3. He tried that He might purify them.

He illustrates this trial by five similes taken,—1. From silver. 2. From a net. 3. From a burthen laid on the loins. 4. From bondage and slavery—men rode over us. 5. From fire and water; useful servants but cruel masters, ver. 10—12.

But the issue of all these trials was good:—they were brought through all, and profited by each.

III. For this he gives thanks, and purposes to pay his vows.

PSALM LXVII.

The Psalmist prays for the enlargement of God's kingdom, 1, 2. Calls upon all nations to serve Him, because He judges and governs righteously, 3-5. Promises prosperity to the faithful and obedient, 6, 7.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, A Psalm or Song. David I. Regis Pesarum, or. non. octonarium.

GOD be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us. Selah.
 2 That thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations.
 3 Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.
 4 O let the nations be glad and sing for joy: for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Selah.
 5 Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee.

a Numb. 6. 25. Psa. 4. 6. & 51. 14. & 80. 3, 7, 18. & 118. 135.—b Heb. with us.—c Acts 18. 25.—d Luke 2. 30, 31. Tit. 2. 11.—e Psa. 68. 4.—f Psa. 96. 10, 12. & 98. 8.

1. He would attend God's worship. I will go into thy house, ver. 13.
2. He would there present his offerings, ver. 14.
3. These should be of the best kind, ver. 15.
- IV. He declares God's goodness, and invites all that fear God to hear what he has got to say. Not of what he was to offer to God,—but of what God had done for him.
 1. He cried to God, and he heard him.
 2. He took care to avoid iniquity, that his prayers might not be cast out. For God heareth not sinners.
- V. He closes the Psalm with a doxology, blessing God that not through his merit, but His own mercy, he had heard and answered him. He attributes nothing to himself; but all mercy to his God, ver. 20.

NOTES ON PSALM LXVII.

The title here is the same with that of Psalm iv. where see the Notes. It is supposed to have been written at the return from the Babylonish captivity, and to foretell the conversion of the Gentiles to the Christian religion. The prayer for their salvation is very energetic.

Verse 1. God be merciful unto us] Shew the Jewish people Thy mercy, bless them in their bodies and souls, and give a full evidence of Thy approbation. This is nearly the same form of blessing as that used Numb. x. 35, where see the Notes.

Verse 2. That thy way may be known] That Thy will, gracious designs towards the children of men,—Thy way of reconciling them to Thyself,—of justifying the ungodly, and sanctifying the unholy, may be known to all the nations upon earth! God's way, is God's religion;—what He walks in before men; and in which men must walk before Him. A man's religion is his way of worshipping God, and going to heaven. The whole Gospel is called thy way, Acts xix. 9.

Thy saving health] תְּשׁוּבָתְךָ yeshu'atēka, "Thy salvation." The great work which is performed in God's way, in destroying the power, pardoning the guilt, cleansing from the infection, of all sin; and filling the soul with holiness, with the mind that was in Christ. Let all nations, the whole Gentile world, know that way, and this salvation!

Verse 3. Let the people praise thee] When this is done, the people, (the Gentiles,) will praise Thee; all will give thanks to God for His unspeakable gift.

Verse 4. Glad and sing for joy] They shall be made happy in Thy salvation. Even their political state shall be greatly meliorated; for God will be acknowledged the Supreme Judge; their laws shall be founded on His Word; and the nations of the earth shall be governed according to judgment, justice, and equity.

Selah.] This is true. There are innumerable facts to confirm it. All the nations who have received the Gospel of Christ have been benefited politically, as well as spiritually, by it.

Verse 5. Let the people praise thee] Seeing the abundance of the blessings which the Gentiles were to receive, he calls again and again upon them to magnify God for such mercies.

Verse 6. The earth yield her increase] As the ground was cursed for the sin of man, and the curse was to be removed by Jesus Christ, the fertility of the ground should be influenced by the preaching of the Gospel; for as the people's minds would become enlightened by the truth, they would, in consequence, become capable of making the most beneficial discoveries in arts and sciences; and there should be an especial blessing on the toil of the pious husbandman. Whenever true religion prevails, every thing partakes of its beneficent influence.

Verse 7. God shall bless us] He shall ever be speaking good to us, and ever showering down good things upon us.

6 Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us.
 7 God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him.

PSALM LXVIII.

The Psalmist calls upon God to arise, bless His people, and scatter His enemies, 1-3. Exhorts them to praise Him, for His greatness, tenderness, compassion, and judgment, 4-6. Describes the grandeur of His march when He went forth in the redemption of His people, 7, 8. How He dispersed His blessings, 9, 10. What He will still continue to do in their behalf, 11-13. The effects produced by the manifestations of God's mercy, 14-18. He is praised for His goodness, 19, 20. For His judgments, 21-23. He tells in what manner the Divine worship was conducted, 24-27. How He is to be honoured, 28-31. All are invited to sing His praises, and extol His greatness, 32-35.

XIII. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm or Song of David.

LET God arise, let his enemies be scattered: let them also that hate him flee before him.

M. cr. 2962. B. C. cir. 1042. Davids, Regis Ierusalitanum, cir. ann. xiv.

g Heb. lead.—h Lev. 26. 4. Psa. 95. 12. Ezek. 34. 21.—i Psa. 22. 27.—a Numb. 16. 25. Isai. 38. 3.—b Heb. from his face.

The last clause of the sixth verse should be joined to the seventh, as it is in several of the Versions, and should be in all. Many of the fathers, and several commentators, have thought that there is a reference to the Holy Trinity in the triple repetition of the word God. "God, our God, shall bless us; God shall bless us;" thus paraphrased in the old Psalter: "Bless us God the Father: and our God the son: and bless us and multipli us God the Hali Gast; that awa drede him God, all the ends of erth; for he will comme to deme rightwysly that unrightwysly was demed. He that kan drede him, he cesses noight to lufe him."

When, or by whom, this Psalm was written cannot be ascertained. It seems to be simply a prophecy concerning the calling of the Gentiles, the preaching of the apostles, and the diffusion and influence of Christianity in the world. It is a fine piece of devotion; and it would be nearly impossible to read or repeat it with a cold and unaffected heart.

ANALYSIS OF THE SIXTY-SEVENTH PSALM.

This Psalm may be divided into three parts:—

- I. A general prayer, ver. 1. And the reason of it, ver. 2.
- II. A double vow, ver. 3, 4. With the reason. The vow repeated, ver. 6.
- III. The effects that were to follow, ver. 6, 7.

I. The first part, a prayer for mercy! God be merciful to us! for God's mercy is the fountain of all our blessings.

2. Then bless us, through that mercy, with temporal and spiritual good.

3. Cause his face to shine. Give us a sense of Thy approbation.

4. Let these blessings be extended to all men. For this reason:—1. That thy way,—Thy will, word, worship, &c. may be known upon earth. 2. Thy saving health,—the redemption by Christ, to all nations.

II. Then shall God be honoured; one will readily flow from the other; for mercy brings knowledge of God and His goodness; and this knowledge brings praises. This verse is emphatic:—

1. In respect of the object; Thee, not strange gods.

2. All shall praise—not mutter or meditate praise,—but make it illustrious.

3. This should be done frequently,—an example of which we have in this Psalm.

4. It should be done cheerfully,—with a glad heart;—not words merely, but affections of praise.

For this also he gives a reason which is twofold:—

1. His equity in judging. Thou shalt judge the people righteously.

2. His wisdom in governing. Thou shalt lead them, וְנָתַתָּם תְּנָחֶם, Thy government shall be full of wise teachings. Wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of his times.

III. The effects of His blessing and our praise.

1. The earth shall yield her increase. The people shall be multiplied. The harvests shall be ample, and the church shall overflow with converts.

2. God shall bless this increase; for, without this, temporal blessings may become a curse. He doubles this, that it may not be forgotten.

3. The last and finest effect is, that God shall be worshipped over all the earth. All the ends of the earth shall fear him. Amen. The fear of God is frequently used to express the whole of His worship.

NOTES ON PSALM LXVIII.

In the title of this Psalm there is nothing particular to be remarked. It is probable that this Psalm was composed by David to be sung in the ceremony of transporting the ark from Kiriat-Jearim, to Jerusalem; or from the house of Obed-Edom to the tabernacle erected at Zion.

2 * As smoke is driven away, so drive them away: as wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish in the presence of God.

3 But * let the righteous be glad; let them rejoice before God: yea, let them exceedingly rejoice.

4 * Sing unto God, sing praises to his name: extol him that rideth upon the heavens by his name JAH, and rejoice before him.

5 * A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation.

6 * God setteth the solitary in families: he bringeth out those which are bound with chains: but * the rebellious dwell in a dry land.

7 O God, * when thou wentest forth before thy people, when thou didst march through the wilderness; Selah:

8 * The earth shook, the heavens also dropped at the presence of God: even Sinai itself was moved at the presence of God, the God of Israel.

9 * Thou, O God, didst * send a plentiful rain, whereby thou didst * confirm thine inheritance when it was weary.

10 Thy congregation hath dwelt therein: * thou, O God, hast prepared of thy goodness for the poor.

11 The LORD gave the word: great was the company of those that published it.

12 * Kings of armies * did flee apace: and she that tarried at home divided the spoil.

13 * Though ye have lien among the pots, * yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold.

14 * When the Almighty scattered kings * in it, it was white as snow in Salomon.

15 The hill of God is as the hill of Bashan; an high hill as the hill of Bashan.

16 * Why leap ye, ye high hills? * this is the hill which God desireth to dwell in: yea, the LORD will dwell in it for ever.

I know not how to undertake a comment on this Psalm: it is the most difficult in the whole Psalter. And I cannot help adopting the opinion of Simon de Muis,—In hoc Psalmo tot ferme scopuli, tot labyrinthi, quot versus, quot verba. Non immeritò crux ingeniorum, et interpretum opprobrium dici potest. "In this Psalm there are as many precipices and labyrinthi, as there are verses or words. It may not be improperly termed, the torture of critics, and the reproach of commentators." To attempt any thing new on it would be dangerous; and to say what has been so often said would be unsatisfactory. I am truly afraid to fall over one of those precipices, or be endlessly entangled and lost in one of those labyrinthi. There are customs here referred to, which I do not fully understand:—there are words whose meaning I cannot, to my own satisfaction, ascertain; and allusions, which are to me inexplicable. Yet of the composition itself I have the highest opinion:—it is sublime beyond all comparison;—it is constructed with an art truly admirable;—it possesses all the dignity of the Sacred language;—none but David could have composed it; and, at this lapse of time, it would require no small influence of the Spirit that was upon him, to give it its true interpretation. I shall subjoin a few Notes, chiefly philological; and beg leave to refer the Reader to those who have written profusely and laboriously on this sublime Psalm, particularly Venema, Calmet, Dr. Chandler, and the writers in the Critici Sacri.

Verse 1. Let God arise] This was sung when the Levites took up the ark upon their shoulders. See Numb. x. 35, 36, and the Notes there.

Verse 4. Extol him that rideth upon the heavens by his name JAH] "Extol Him who sitteth on the throns of glory, in the ninth heaven; YAH is His name; and rejoice before Him." Targum.

בְּרָאשֵׁי בָּאֵרֶב ba'araboth, which we render in the high heavens, is here of doubtful signification. As it comes from the root אָרַב arab, to mingle, (hence ereb the evening or twilight, because it appears to be formed of an equal mixture of light and darkness; the Septuagint translate it οὐρανός, the west, or setting of the sun; so does the Vulgate and others); probably it may mean the gloomy desert, through which God, in the chariot of His glory, led the Israelites. If this interpretation do not please, then let it be referred to the darkness in which God is said to dwell, through which the rays of His power and love, in the various dispensations of His power and mercy, shine forth for the comfort and instruction of mankind.

By his name Jah] יָהּ yah, probably a contraction of the word יְהוָה Yehovah; at least, so the ancient Versions understood it. It is used but in a few places in the Sacred Writings. It might be translated the Self-existent.

Verse 6. The solitary in families] רַמִּים yechidim, the single persons. Is not the meaning, God is the Author of marriage; and children, the legal fruit of it, are an inheritance from Him.

Verse 7. O God, when thou wentest forth] This and the following verse most manifestly refer to the passage of the Israelites through the wilderness.

Verse 9. Didst send a plentiful rain] גֶּשֶׁם נֹדֶדֶת geshem nodedeth, a shower of liberality. I believe this to refer to the manna by which God refreshed and preserved alive the weary and hungry Israelites.

Verse 10. Thy congregation hath dwell therein] חַיִּית chayyalea, Thy living creature; רַא רַא, Septuagint; animalia, Vulgate: so all the Versions. Does not this refer to the quails that were brought to the camp of the Israelites; and dwell, as it were, round about it? And was not this (with the manna, and the refreshing rock,) that goodness which God had provided for the poor needy Israelites?

Verse 11. Great was the company of those that published it.] חַמְּבַסָּרוֹת חַמְּבַסָּרוֹת ham-mebasaroth (taba rab. Of the female preachers there was a great host. Such is the literal translation of this passage; the reader may make of it what he pleases. Some think it refers to the women who with music, songs, and dances, celebrated the victories of the Israelites over their enemies.

Verse 12. Kings of armies did see] Jabin and the kings of the Canaanites, who united their forces to overwhelm the Israelites.

And she] Deborah the prophetess, a woman accustomed to tarry at home, and take care of the family; she divided the spoils, and vanquished their kings.

Verse 13. Though ye have lien among the pots] The prophet is supposed here to address the tribes of Reuben and Gad, who remained in their inheritances, occupied with agricultural, maritime, and domestic affairs, when the other tribes were obliged to go against Jabin, and the other Canaanitish kings. Ye have been thus occupied, while your brethren sustained a desperate campaign:—but while you are inglorious, they obtained the most splendid victory, and now dwell under those rich tents which they have taken from the enemy; coverings of the most beautiful colours, adorned with gold and silver. The words בִּרְאֵי בִּרְאֵי birakrak charuts, native gold, so exceedingly and splendidly yellow as to approach to greenness,—from בִּרְאֵי yarak, to be green; and the doubling of the last syllable denotes an excess in the denomination,—excessively green—glistening green. The Targum gives us a curious paraphrase of this and the following verse:—"If ye, O ye kings, slept among your halls, the congregation of Israel, which is like a dove covered with the clouds of glory, divided the prey of the Egyptians, purified silver, and coifers full of the finest gold. And when it stretched out its hands in prayer over the sea, the Almighty cast down kingdoms; and for its sake cooled hell like snow, and snatched it from the shadow of death." Perhaps the Romanists got some idea of purgatory here. For the sake of the righteous, the flames of hell are extinguished!

Verse 15. The hill of God is as the hill of Bashan] This, and the following verse, should be read thus:—"Is mount Bashan the craggy mount, mount Bashan, the mount of God? Why envy ye, ye craggy mounts? This is the mount of God in which He has desired to dwell." The Targum countenances this translation:—"Mount Meriah, the place where our fathers of old worshipped God, is chosen to build on it the house of the sanctuary; and mount Sinai for the giving of the law. Mount Bashan, mount Tabor, and Carmel, are rejected; they are made as mount Bashan."

Verse 16. Why leap ye, ye high hills?] "God said, Why leap ye, ye high hills? It is not pleasing to me to give my law upon high and towering hills. Behold, mount Sinai is low; and the WORD of the Lord has desired to place on it the Divine majesty. Moreover, the Lord dwells for ever in the heaven of heavens." Targum.

The Psalmist is speaking particularly of the mountains of Judea, and those of Gilead: the former were occupied 17 * The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels: the Lord is among them, as in Sinai, in the holy place.

18 * Thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive: thou hast received gifts for men; yea, for the rebellious also, that the Lord God might dwell among them.

19 Blessed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with benefits, even the God of our salvation. Selah.

20 He that is our God is the God of salvation; and unto God the Lord belong the issues from death.

21 But God shall wound the head of his enemies, and the hairy scalp of such an one as goeth on still in his trespasses.

22 The Lord said, I will bring again from Bashan, I will bring my people again from the depths of the sea:

23 * That thy foot may be dipped in the blood of thine enemies, and the tongue of thy dogs in the same.

24 They have seen thy goings, O God; even the goings of my God, my King, in the sanctuary.

by the Canaanites; and the others by Og, king of Bashan, and Sihon, king of the Amorites, whom Moses defeated.

Verse 17. The chariots of God are twenty thousand] רבבות אלפי עשרות rebobotim alpey eshenan, "two myriads of thousands doubled." Does not this mean simply forty thousand? A myriad is 10,000; two myriads 20,000: these doubled, 40,000. Or, thus: 10,000+10,000+20,000=40,000. The Targum says, "The chariots of God are two myriads; two thousand angels draw them; the majesty of God rests upon them in holiness on mount Sinai." But what does this mean? We must die to know.

Verse 18. Thou hast ascended on high] When the ark had reached the top of Zion, and was deposited in the place assigned for it, the singers joined in the following chorus. This seems to be in allusion to a military triumph. The conqueror was placed on a very elevated chariot.

Led captivity captive] The conquered kings and generals were usually tied behind the chariot of the conqueror;—bound to it, bound together, and walking after it; to grace the triumph of the victor.

Thou hast received (given) gifts for men] At such times the conqueror threw money among the crowd. Thou hast received gifts for men—באדם ba-adam, IN MAN, in human nature; and God manifest in the flesh dwells among mortals! Thanks be to God for this unspeakable gift! By establishing His abode among the rebellious, the prophet may refer to the conquest of the land of Canaan, and the country beyond Jordan.

Yea, for the rebellious also] Even to the rebellious. Those who were his enemies, who traduced his character and operations, and those who fought against him, now submit to him, and share his munificence: for it is the property of a hero to be generous.

That the Lord God might dwell among them] ואלוהים יראה elohim, the self-existing God, see on ver. 4. The conqueror now coming to fix his abode among the conquered people, to organize them under his laws, to govern and dispense justice among them. The whole of this is very properly applied by St. Paul, Eph. iv. 5. to the resurrection and glory of Christ; where the Reader is requested to consult the Note.

Verse 19. Blessed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us] With benefits is not in the Text. Perhaps, it would be better to translate the clause thus: "Blessed be Adonai, our Prop day by day, who supports us." Or, "Blessed be the Lord who supports us day by day." Or, as the Vulgate, Septuagint, and Arabic, Blessed be the Lord daily, our God who makes our journey prosperous; even the God of our salvation. The Syriac, Blessed be the Lord daily who hath chosen our inheritance. The word עמא, which we translate to load, signifies to lift, bear up, support—or, to bear a burthen for another. Hence it would not be going far from the ideal meaning to translate, Blessed be the Lord day by day, who bears our burthens for us. But, Loadeth us with his benefits, is neither a translation, nor a meaning.

Verse 31. Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God.] This verse had its literal fulfilment under Solomon, when Egypt formed an alliance with that king by his marriage with Pharaoh's daughter—and when the queen of Sheba came to Jerusalem to hear the wisdom of Solomon. But as this may be a prophetic declaration of the spread of Christianity, it was literally fulfilled after the resurrection of our Lord. There were Egyptians at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, who, St. Hilary tells us, on their return to their own country, proclaimed what they had seen, and became in that country the ambassadors of Christ. The Ethiopian eunuch was one of the first among the Gentiles, who received the Gospel. Thus princes, or chief men, came out of Egypt; and Ethiopia stretched out her hand to God. The words themselves refer to the sending ambassadors, and making alliances. The Hebrew is very emphatic:—והיא תושטף ויהי עושף terite yadaic lo-Elohim; Cush will cause her hands to run out to God. She will, with great alacrity and delight, surrender her power and influence unto God. The Chaldee paraphrases well.—"The sons of Cush will run, that they may spread out their hands in prayer before God."

Verse 32. Sing unto God] All the inhabitants of the earth are invited to sing unto God, to acknowledge Him as their God, and give Him the praise due to His name.

Verse 33. Rideth upon the heavens] He who manageth the heavens, directing their course and influence, He formed every orb, ascertained its motion, proportioned its solid contents to the orbit in which it was to revolve, and the other bodies which belong to the same system. As an able and skilful rider manages his horse; so does God the sun, moon, planets, and all the hosts of heaven.

He doth send out his voice.] At His word of command they run, shed, or reflect their light; and, without the smallest deviations obey His will.

Mighty voice.] He thunders in the heavens, and men tremble before Him.

Verse 34. His strength is in the clouds.] This refers to the bursting, rattling, and sending of thunder and lightning: for all nations have observed that this is an irresistible agent; and even the most enlightened have looked on it as an especial manifestation of the power and sovereignty of God.

Verse 35. O God, thou art terrible out of thy holy places] The sanctuary and heaven. Out of the former, He had often shone forth with consuming splendour. See the case of Korah and his company: out of the latter He had often appeared in terrible majesty in storms, thunder, lightning, &c.

He that giveth strength and power unto his people] Therefore, that people must be invincible who have this strong and irresistible God for their support.

Blessed be God.] He alone is worthy to be worshipped. Without Him, nothing is wise, nothing holy, nothing strong; and from Him, as the inexhaustible Fountain, all good must be derived. His mercy over His creatures is equal to His majesty in the universe; and, as he has all good in His possession, so is He willing to deal it out; to supply the utmost necessities of His creatures. Blessed be God! The Arabic adds, Alleluiah!

The best analysis I find of this Psalm is that by Bishop Nicolson. I shall give it at large, begging the Reader to refer particularly to those passages on which the preceding Notes are written, as in some of them the analysis gives a different view of the subject. The old Psalter gives the whole Psalm a spiritual and mystical interpretation. And this is commonly the case in the commentaries of the Fathers.

ANALYSIS OF THE SIXTY-EIGHTH PSALM.

There are many conjectures as to the occasion of the composing of this Psalm: but the most probable is, that it was composed by David when he brought up the ark of God, which was the type of the church, and symbol of God's presence to Jerusalem. After the ark was sent home by the Philistines, it rested first in the obscure lodge of Aminadab; it then for a time staid with Obed-edom, nearly sixty years in both places. It was David's care to provide a fit room for it in the head of the tribes, even in his own city: and to express his joy, and honour the solemnity, David led the way, dancing with all his might in a linen ephod; and all the house of Israel followed with shouts and instruments of music, in a triumphant manner. Now that the quire might not want to know how to express their joyful affections, the sweet singer of Israel made this anthem, beginning the verse himself, as was commanded at the removal of the ark, Numb. x. 3, 5. The Psalm has six parts:—

I. The entrance, or exordium, ver. 1—4.

II. The invitation to praise God, ver. 4.

III. The confirmation of it by many arguments, ver. 4—24.

IV. A lively description of triumph, or pomp of the ark's deportation, ver. 24—28.

V. A petition, which has three parts, ver. 28—31.

VI. An exhortation to all nations to praise God, ver. 31, to the end.

I. Let God arise is either a prayer, or acclamation: a prayer that He would, or an acclamation that He does, shew his power and presence. Of which the consequences would be double:—

1. Towards his enemies destruction; for he prays, Let his enemies be scattered; let those that hate him fly before him.

He illustrates it by a twofold comparison:—

1. As smoke, when it is at the highest, is driven away, so drive them away.

2. As wax melteth before the fire, so let the wicked perish in the presence of God.

2. Towards good men His servants, which is quite contrary to the other. Let the righteous be glad, let them rejoice before God; yea, let them exceedingly rejoice. Thus it happened; for when the ark was taken by the Philistines, the glory was departed from Israel, and there was nothing but sadness and sorrow: but with the return of the ark; the glory returned; and all was joy and gladness.

p Ps. 45. 4. & 65. 5. & 68. 3. & 78. 12.

II. And, so by an apostrophe, he turns his speech to all good men, and exhorts them to praise God.

1. Sing unto God. Let it be, done with your voice, publicly.

2. Psalte. Sing praises to his name, with instruments of music.

3. Exult him. Shew His way, as in a triumph. Thus, when our Saviour rode into Jerusalem, they cut down branches, and strewed their garments in the way.

III. And so David enters upon his confirmation, producing his reasons why they should praise God.

1. Drawn from His majesty. He rideth upon the heavens; that is, He rules in the heavens.

2. From His essence. By his name Jah, the contraction of Jehovah, I am. He gives essence to all things; therefore, rejoice before him.

3. From his general providence and goodness towards His church.

1. He is the father of the fatherless. Loves, cares, and provides an inheritance, for them.

2. A Judge of the widows. He cares for his people when deserted, and for whom no man cares, and when exposed to injury. Such is God in His holy habitation; whose presence is represented by this ark.

3. God seeketh the solitary in families. He makes the barren woman to keep house, and to be the joyful mother of children. As also the barren woman, the children, the Gentile church, that had no husband, to bring forth children to God.

4. He brings forth those which are bound with chains; as Joseph, Jeremiah, Daniel, Peter, Paul.

5. On the contrary. But the rebellious dwell in a dry land; perish for want and hunger.

IV. From His special providence toward His people Israel, which he introduces by an elegant apostrophe. O God, when thou wentest forth before thy people; thus amplified:—

1. God's going before them, and marching along with them in Egypt, in the wilderness. These signs manifested His presence. The earth shook, the heavens also dropped at the presence of God: even Sinai itself was moved at the presence of God, the God of Israel.

2. God's provision for them after He gave them the possession of the good land. He fed, sustained them there; counted them His inheritance, and gave them rain and fruitful seasons. Thou, O God, didst send a plentiful rain, whereby thou didst confirm thine inheritance, when it was weary. The congregation hath dwelt therein: thou, O God, hast prepared of thy goodness for the poor.

3. The victories He gave them over their enemies, ver. 12, which he prefaces by imitation of the song of the victory, sung usually by the women and damsels of those times, ver. 11. The Lord gave the word, that is, either the word of war, or else the song; and then great was the company of those that published it. As Miriam, Deborah, &c. And in these songs they sung, Kings of armies did flee apace; and she that tarried at home divided the spoil. So great was the prey.

4. The deliverance He sends from troubles, and the joy He gives after them. Though ye have lien among the pots, that is, cast aside as some useless or broken pot, the offscouring of all things; yet shall ye be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold; i. e. shining and glorious. The allusion seems to be taken from some standard, whose portraiture and device was a dove so overlaid. The Babylonian ensign was a dove. But see the Note on this passage.

And this he farther declares by another similitude:—When the Almighty scattered kings in it: or, for her, i. e. His church, it was white; glittering, glorious, to be seen afar off; it was white as snow in Salmon, with which it is generally covered.

5. From God's especial presence among them; which, that He might make it the more evident, David enters upon the commendation of the hill of Zion to which the ark was at this time to be brought, comparing it with other hills, especially with Bashan. That is a hill of God; a high, plentiful, and fertile hill. As if He had said, So much I grant. But, why leap ye, ye high hills? Why are ye so proud? Why do ye boast your vines, your fruits, your pastures, your cattle? Zion has the pre-eminence of you all in two respects:—

PSALM LXIX.

The Psalmist describes his afflicted state, and the wickedness of his adversaries, 1-21. He declares the mercies that should come upon his enemies, 22-38. Enlarges on his afflicted state, and expresses his confidence in God, 39-44. Prophecies the restoration of the Jews to their own land and temple, 45, 46.

XIII. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

To the chief Musician upon Shoshannim, A Psalm of David.

SAVE me, O God; for the waters are come in unto my soul.

a. Ps. 45, title.—b. Ver. 2, 14, 15. Josh. 2. 8.—c. Ps. 40. 2.—d. Heb. the mire of depth.

1. For God's continual habitation and common presence is there. This is the hill which God desireth to dwell in; yea, the Lord will dwell in it for ever.

2. For His defence of it. The chariots of God are twenty thousand, even thousands of angels; and these are for the defence of Zion His church; for God is among them as in Sinai, in the holy place; in glory and majesty, in Sinai, and in Zion.

And yet he goes on to persuade us to praise God.—1. For His strange and wonderful works. 2. For the performance of His promises. Among His great works there was none so glorious as the ascension of our Saviour, of which the ark's ascension to Jerusalem at this time was a type.

1. Before the ark David and the people used this acclamation,—Thou hast ascended on high. Thou, O God, whose presence is shadowed out by the ark, hast ascended from an obscure house to a kingly palace, Zion.

2. Thou hast led captivity captive; those that led us captives being captives themselves, and now led in triumph.

3. Thou hast received gifts for men; spoils and gifts from the conquered kings; or who may become homagers unto Him, and redeem their peace.

4. Yea, for the rebellious also. Formerly so, but now tributaries.

5. That the Lord God might dwell among them; might have a certain place to dwell in; and the ark not carried, as before, from place to place.

This is the literal sense; but the mystical refers to our Saviour's ascension. St. Paul says, Eph. iv. 5.

1. Thou hast ascended on high; when the cloud carried Him from earth to heaven.

2. Thou hast led captivity, those who captured us, captive; death, the devil, sin, the power of hell, the curse of the law.

3. He received, and gave gifts to men. The apostles, evangelists, prophets, doctors, and teachers, were these gifts, graces, gifts of the Spirit.

4. Yea, for the rebellious also. Paul, a persecutor; Austin, a Manichæan.

5. That the Lord God might dwell among them; for to that end St. Paul says these gifts were given, to the work of the ministry, to the edification of the church, to the building up of the body of Christ, Eph. 4.

The two effects of His ascension then were,—one towards His enemies, the other for His friends. When thou ascendedst up on high,—

1. Thou ledst captivity captive. This was the consequence to His enemies.

2. Thou receivedst, and gavest gifts. This for His friends. For which he sings Blessed be God; for he comes over both again.

1. The gifts to his friends. Blessed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with benefits, even the God of our salvation. He that is our God is the God of salvation; and unto God the Lord belong the issues from death. He knows many ways to deliver in death itself, when there is no hope.

2. The conquest of His enemies; for such he counts obdurate impenitent sinners; those He will destroy. God shall wound the head of his enemies, and the hairy scalp of such an one as goeth on still in his trespasses.

3. His last argument is, God's performance of His promise to save them. When you were in the wilderness; when you fought with Og, king of Bashan; when at the Red sea I delivered you. The Lord saith still to His people:—

1. I will bring again from Bashan; from equally great dangers.

2. I will bring my people again from the depths of the sea; when there is no hope.

3. And for Thy enemies they shall be destroyed by a great effusion of blood. That thy foot may be dipped in the blood of thine enemies, and the tongue of thy dogs in the same; Thou shalt waste, and make a great slaughter.

4. And now He descends to set before our eyes the pomp and show which were used in the ascent and bringing back of the ark, and the proceeding of it.

1. The people were present to witness it. They have seen thy goings, O God; even the goings of my God, my King, in the sanctuary.

2. I sink in deep mire, where there is no standing; I am come into deep waters, where the floods overflow me.

3. I am weary of my crying; my throat is dried; mine eyes fail while I wait for my God.

4. They that hate me without a cause are more than the hairs of mine head; they that would destroy me, being mine enemies were

c. Heb. depth of waters.—f. Ps. 6. 5.—g. Ps. 119. 94, 123. Isa. 38. 14.—h. Ps. 95. 19. John 15. 25.

2. The manner of the pomp. The singers went before, the players on instruments followed after; among them were the damsels playing with timbrels.

3. In the pomp they were not silent; and that they be not, he exhorts them, Bless ye God in the congregations, even the Lord, from the fountain of Israel, Jacob's posterity.

4. And he gives in the catalogue of the tribes that were present, but these especially,—

1. There is little Benjamin, Jacob's youngest son, or now the least, wasted with war, with their ruler, the chief prince of their tribe.

2. The princes of Judah, and their council.

3. The princes of Zebulun, and the princes of Naphtali; the farthest tribes; therefore, the nearest.

V. And in the midst of the pomp he makes a prayer which has three vows, before which he prefixes the acknowledgment that all the power and strength of Israel was from God. Thy God hath commanded thy strength. He then prays,—

1. For the confirmation, establishment, and continuance, of this strength. Strengthen, O God, that which thou hast wrought for us; and let this be evinced by the kings and tributaries that shall bring gifts. Because of thy temple at Jerusalem shall kings bring presents unto thee.

2. For the conquest and subduing of the enemy, until they become tributaries, and do homage. Rebuke the company of spearmen, the multitude of the bulls, with the calves of the people; kings, princes, and their potent subjects; till every one submit himself with pieces of silver: scatter thou the people that delight in war. See the Note.

3. For the increase of Christ's kingdom, of which David's was but a type, by the access of the Gentiles. Princes shall come out of Egypt; Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands unto God. These, by a synecdoche, put for all nations.

VI. This excellent Psalm draws now towards a conclusion; and it is a resumption of that he principally intended, that is, that God be blessed, honoured, praised. He first exhorts, then shows the reasons for it.

1. He exhorts all nations to perform this duty: at first, the Jews, but now all universally. Sing unto God, ye kingdoms of the earth; O sing praises unto the Lord.

2. His reasons to induce them to do it. The majesty of God testified.

1. By His works. To him that rideth upon the heaven of heavens, which were of old.

2. His power, in His thunder, in His word. He doth send out his voice, and that a mighty voice.

3. His wise protection, and providence to His people. Ascribe ye strength unto God: his excellency is over Israel, and his strength is in the clouds.

4. His communication of Himself, to His church in particular.—1. O God, thou art terrible out of thy holy places. 2. The God of Israel is he that giveth strength and power unto his people. 3. Blessed be God. With that epiphonema, he concludes.

NOTES ON PSALM LXIX.

The title is, To the chief musician upon Shoshannim, a Psalm of David. See this title explained on Psalm xlv.

The Psalm is supposed to have been written during the captivity; and to have been the work of some Levite, divinely inspired. It is a very fine composition; equal to most in the Psalter. Several portions of it seem to have a reference to our Lord; to His advent, passion, resurrection, the vocation of the Gentiles, the establishment of the Christian church, and the reprobation of the Jews. The ninth verse is quoted by St. John, chap. ii. 17. The twenty-first verse is quoted by St. Matthew, chap. xxvii. 34, 48; by St. Mark, chap. xv. 23; by St. John, chap. xix. 29; and applied to the sufferings of our Lord, in the treatment he received from the Jews. St. Paul quotes the twenty-second as a prophecy of the wickedness of the Jews, and the punishment they were to receive. He quotes the twenty-third verse in the same way. See the marginal references. Those portions which the writers of the New Testament apply to our Lord we may apply also: of others we should be careful.

PSALM LXIX.

fully, are mighty: then I restored that which I took not away.

5 O God, thou knowest my foolishness; and my sins are not hid from thee.

6 Let not them that wait on thee, O Lord God of hosts, be ashamed for my sake: let not those that seek thee be confounded for my sake, O God of Israel.

7 Because for thy sake I have borne reproach; shame hath covered my face.

8 I am become a stranger unto my brethren, and an alien unto my mother's children.

9 For the zeal of thine house hath eaten me up: and the reproaches of them that reproached thee are fallen upon me.

10 When I wept, and chastened my soul with fasting, that was to my reproach.

11 I made sackcloth also my garment; and I became a proverb to them.

12 They that sit in the gate speak against me; and I was the song of the drunkards.

13 But as for me, my prayer is unto thee, O Lord, in an acceptable time: O God, in the multitude of thy mercy hear me, in the truth of thy salvation.

14 Deliver me out of the mire, and let me not sink: let me be delivered from them that hate me, and out of the deep waters.

15 Let not the waterflood overflow me, neither let the deep swallow me up, and let not the pit shut her mouth upon me.

16 Hear me, O Lord; for thy loving-kindness is good: turn unto me according to the multitude of thy tender mercies.

17 And hide not thy face from thy servant; for I am in trouble: hear me speedily.

18 Draw nigh unto my soul, and redeem it: deliver me because of mine enemies.

19 Thou hast known my reproach, and my shame, and my dishonour: mine adversaries are all before thee.

20 Reproach hath broken my heart; and I am full of heaviness: and I looked for some to take pity, but there was none; and for comforters, but I found none.

21 They gave me also gall for my meat; and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink.

22 Let their table become a snare before them: and that which should have been for their welfare, let it become a trap.

Verse 1. The waters are come in unto my soul.] I am in the deepest distress. The waters have broken their dikes, and are just ready to sweep me away! Save me, Lord! In such circumstances I can have no other help.

In the first, second, third, fourteenth and fifteenth verses the Psalmist, speaking in the person of the captives in Babylon, compares their captivity to an abyss of waters, breaking all bounds, and ready to swallow them up; to a deep mire in which there was no solid bottom, and no standing; and to a pit, in which they were about to be inclosed for ever. This is strongly figurative, and expressive.

Verse 3. I am weary with my crying.] A pathetic description of the state of the poor captives for about seventy years.

Verse 4. Then I restored that which I took not away.] I think, with Calmet, that this is a sort of proverbial expression; like such as these,—“Those who suffered the wrong, pay the cost.”—Delirant reges, plectuntur Achivi. “Kings sin, and the people are punished.”—“The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge.”—Our fathers have grievously sinned against the Lord; and we their posterity suffer for it. See on ver. 12. Some have applied it to our Lord. I restored, by my suffering and death, that image of God and the Divine favour, which I took not away. That is, in my human nature, I expiated the crime that human beings had committed against God. But such applications are very gratuitous.

Verse 5. Thou knowest my foolishness.] Though we have been brought into captivity in consequence of the crimes of our fathers, yet we have guilt enough of our own to merit a continuation of our miseries. How can such words as are in this verse be attributed to our blessed Lord, however twisted or turned!

Verse 6. Be ashamed for my sake.] The sins of the Jews were a great stumbling block in the way of the conversion of the Gentiles. They had been the peculiar people of the Lord. “How,” says the Gentiles, “can a pure and holy Being love such people?” They were now punished for their crimes. “How,” say the Gentiles, “can God deal so hardly with those whom He professes to love?” The pious among the captives felt keenly, because this reproach seemed to fall upon their gracious and merciful God.

Verse 7. For thy sake I have borne reproach.] The Gentiles have said, “Why such an obstinate attachment to the worship of a Being who treats us so rigorously, and who interests not Himself in your comfort and deliverance?”—And in these cutting reproaches some of the ungodly Jews took a part: I am an alien to my mother's children.

Verse 9. The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up.] The strong desire to promote Thy glory has absorbed all others. All the desires of my body and soul are wrapped up in this. This verse is very properly applied to our Lord, John ii. 17, who went about doing good; and gave up his life not only for the redemption of man; but to magnify the law, and make it honourable.

Verse 12. They that sit in the gate.] At the gates were the courts for public justice: there were complaints lodged, and causes heard. No doubt many vexatious complaints were made against the poor captives; and false accusations through which they grievously suffered; so that, literally, they were often obliged to restore that which they had not taken away. See ver. 4.

The song of the drunkards.] These poor miserable people were exposed to all sorts of indignities. Though the conduct is base, the exultation over a fallen enemy is frequent. How miserable was this lot! Forsaken by friends; scorned by enemies, insulted by inferiors; the scoff of libertines, and the song of drunkards; besides hard travail of body, miserably lodged and fed; with the burning crown of all, a deep load of guilt upon the conscience. To such a life any death was preferable.

Verse 13. My prayer is unto thee, O Lord, in an acceptable time.] This seems to refer to the end of the captivity, which Jeremiah had said should last seventy years, Jer. xxv. 11, 12. The whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years. And it shall come to pass, when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, &c. The conclusion of this period, was the accepted time of which the Psalmist speaks. Now, they incessantly pray for the fulfilment of the promise made by Jeremiah;—and to hear them would be the truth of God's salvation; it would show the promise to be true, because the salvation, the deliverance, was granted.

Verse 16. Thy loving-kindness is good.] The word chesed, signifies exuberance of kindness; and the word rachamim, which we translate tender mercies, signifies such affection as mothers bear to their young; and in God, there is רחם, a multitude of such tender mercies towards the children of men!

Verse 18. Deliver me because of mine enemies.] Probably they now began to think that the redemption of these captives was not an impossible thing; that it was not far off: and, therefore, they had great rage, because they found their time was but short.

Verse 19. Thou hast known my reproach.] This is one of the most forcible appeals to mercy and compassion that was ever made. The language of these two verses is imitable; and the sentiment cannot be mended. I can devise no comment that would not lessen their effect.

Verse 21. They gave me also gall for my meat.] Even the food, necessary to preserve us in their slavery, was frequently mingled with what rendered it unpleasant and disgusting, though not absolutely unwholesome. And vinegar, sour small wines, was given us for our beverage. This is applied to our Lord, Matt. xvii. 34, where the reader is requested to consult the Notes.

Verse 22. Let their table become a snare.] The execrations here and in the following verses should be read in the future tense, because they are predictive; and not in the imperative mood, as if they were the offspring of the Psalmist's resentment.—Their table shall become a snare;—their eyes shall be darkened;—thou wilt pour out thine indignation upon them;—thy wrathful anger

23 ' Let their eyes be darkened, that they see not; and make their loins continually to shake.
 24 ' Pour out thine indignation upon them, and let thy wrathful anger take hold of them.
 25 ' Let ' their habitation be desolate; and ' let none dwell in their tents.
 26 For ' they persecute ' him whom thou hast smitten; and they talk to the grief of ' those whom thou hast wounded.
 27 ' Add ' iniquity unto their iniquity: ' and let them not come into thy righteousness.
 28 Let them ' be blotted out of the book of the living, ' and not be written with the righteous.
 29 But I am poor and sorrowful: let thy salvation, O God, set me up on high.

30 ' I will praise the name of God with a song and will magnify him with thanksgiving.
 13 ' This also shall please the Lord better than an ox or bullock that hath horns and hoofs.
 32 ' The ' humble shall see this, and be glad: and ' your heart shall live that seek God.
 33 For the Lord heareth the poor, and despiseth not ' his prisoners.
 34 ' Let the heaven and earth praise him, the seas, ' and every thing that ' moveth therein.
 35 ' For God will save Zion, and will build the cities of Judah: that they may dwell there, and have it in possession.
 36 ' The seed also of his servants shall inherit it; and they that love his name shall dwell therein.

SHALL take hold of them;—their habitation shall be desolate,—and none shall dwell in their tents.

The Psalmist prophesies that the evils which they had inflicted on the Israelites should be visited on themselves; that as they had made them eat, drink, labour, and suffer, so God should in His judgment treat them.

Verse 27. Add iniquity unto their iniquity [by ny ny ny tenah avon al avonam; give iniquity, that is, the reward of it, upon or for their iniquity. Or, as the original signifies perverseness, treat their perverseness with perverseness:—act, in Thy judgments, as crookedly towards them, as they dealt crookedly towards Thee. They shall get, in the way of punishment, what they have dealt out in the way of oppression.]

Verse 28. Let them be blotted out [They shall be blotted out of the land of the living. They shall be cut off from life, which they have forfeited by their cruelty and oppression. The Psalmist is speaking of retributive justice; and in this sense all these passages are to be understood.]

And not be written with the righteous. [They shall have no title to that long life which God has promised to His followers.]

Verse 29. I am poor and sorrowful [Literally, I am laid low, and full of pain or grief. Hence the prayer, Let thy salvation, O God, set me on high! My oppression has laid me low; Thy salvation shall make me high.]

Verse 31. An ox or bullock that hath horns and hoofs. [Oxen offered in sacrifice had their horns and hoofs gilded; and the Psalmist might mention these parts of the victim more particularly, because they were more conspicuous. Others think that full-grown animals are intended, those that had perfect horns, in opposition to calves or steers. I think the first the preferable sense.]

Verse 32. The humble shall see this, and be glad [Those who are low, pressed down by misfortune or cruelty, shall see this, and take courage; expecting that Thou wilt lift them up also: and thus the heart of those who seek the Lord shall be revived.]

Verse 33. For the Lord heareth the poor [עביונים ebiyomim, of the beggars. He perhaps refers here to the case of the captives, many of whom were reduced to the most abject state, so as to be obliged to beg bread from their heathen oppressors.]

His prisoners [The captives, shut up by His judgments in Chaldea, without any civil liberty; like culprits in a prison.]

Verse 34. Let the heaven and earth praise him [The Psalmist has the fullest confidence that God will turn their captivity; and, therefore, calls upon all creatures to magnify Him for His mercy.]

Verse 35. God will save Zion [This fixes the Psalm to the time of the captivity. There was no Zion belonging to the Jews in the time of Saul, when those suppose the Psalm to be written, who make David the author; for David, after he came to the throne, won the strong hold of Zion from the Jebusites. 2 Sam. v. 2: 1 Chron. xi. 5.]

Will build the cities of Judah [This refers to the return from the Captivity, when all the destroyed cities should be rebuilt, and the Jews repossess their forfeited heritages. Some apply this to the redemption of the human race;—and suppose that Zion is the type of the Christian church into which the Gentiles were to be called. What evangelists and apostles apply to our Lord we safely may. What others see so clearly in this Psalm relative to Gospel matters, I cannot discern.]

ANALYSIS OF THE SIXTY-NINTH PSALM. There are three parts in this Psalm:—

- I. The Psalmist's prayer, and the reasons for it, ver. 1—21.
- II. Declaration of God's judgments against His enemies, ver. 22—23.

III. His profession of thanks, ver. 29—36.

I. His prayer. Save me, O God! And then his reasons.

1. His present condition. The waters are come in unto my soul.
2. I sink in deep mire.
3. I am come into deep waters.
4. I am weary of my crying.
5. My throat is dried with calling on Thee.
6. Mine eyes fail while I wait for my God.

When he considered his enemies, he found reason to cry. They were,—

1. Malicious;—they hate me without a cause.
 2. Many;—more than the hairs of my head.
 3. Mighty. My enemies are mighty, &c. ver. 1—4.
1. He declares his innocence with respect to their accusations, and the oppression he suffered. I restored that which I took not away.
2. Begs to be heard, lest he should be confounded before his enemies.
 3. Shows that he suffers for God's cause.
 4. He was zealous for the Divine worship.
 5. He was a deep penitent.
- On which account he was a subject of reproach,—
1. To the high—those who sat in the gate.
 2. To the low and base. I was the song of the drunkards.
- He renews his petition, and presses on God to hear him:—
1. Because of his being ready to sink, ver. 13—15.
 2. Because of God's goodness, mercy, and truth. In the multitude of thy mercies, &c.
 3. Because he was God's servant, and would not desert his Master.
 4. Because of his enemies, who would have a sinful triumph if he was not delivered.

And he pleads their ill usage as a reason why God should help him.

1. They were scorners, and God knew it. They are all before thee, ver. 19.
2. Reproach had almost broken his heart.
3. His friends had abandoned him, ver. 20.
4. His enemies were inhuman. They gave me gall, &c. ver. 22.

II. Prophetic declaration of God's judgments against them:—

1. Their table should be a snare to them, v. 22.
2. They should be given up to judicial blindness, ver. 23.
3. They should be enfeebled in their bodies. Make their loins shake, ver. 23.
4. God's wrath should be poured out upon them, ver. 24.
5. Their country should be wasted, ver. 25.
6. They should have the punishment due to their iniquity, ver. 27.
7. They should come to an untimely death. Let them be blotted out, &c. ver. 23.

III. His profession of thanks. Having spoken of his own condition that he was poor and sorrowful, he now breaks out into praise:—

1. I will praise the name of God, ver. 30.
 2. This will be the most acceptable sacrifice, ver. 31.
- The effect of his deliverance would be double:
1. It would gladden the poor, ver. 32, 33.
 2. All creatures would take an interest in it, ver. 34.
- All shall praise God.

And for this he gives the following reasons:—

1. God's goodness to his church.—He will save Zion.
2. He will confirm his kingdom among them. He will build, &c.
3. They shall have peace and security. That they may dwell there, and have it in possession, ver. 35.

PSALM LXX.

The Psalmist prays for speedy deliverance, 1. Prays against those who sought his life, 2, 3. And for the forgiveness of those who sought God, 4. Urges his speedy deliverance, 5.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm of David, to bring to remembrance.

MAKE haste, O God, to deliver me; make haste to help me, O LORD.

2 Let them be ashamed and confounded that seek after my soul: let them be turned backward and put to confusion, that desire my hurt.

3 Let them be turned back for a reward of their shame that say, Aha, aha.

4 Let all those that seek thee rejoice and be glad in thee: and let such as love thy salvation say continually, Let God be magnified.

5 But I am poor and needy: make haste unto me, O God; thou art my help and deliverer; O LORD, make no tarrying.

PSALM LXXI.

The prophet, in confidence, prays for God's favour, 1-5. Reminds God's kindness to him from youth to old age, 6-8. Shows what his adversaries plot against him, and prays for their confusion, 10-13. Promises fidelity, and determines to be a diligent preacher of righteousness, even in old age, 14-19. Takes encouragement in God's mercy, and foresees the confusion of all his adversaries, 20-24.

XIV. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

In thee, O LORD, do I put my trust: I let me never be put to confusion.

2 Deliver me in thy righteousness, and cause me to escape: incline thine ear unto me, and save me.

3 Be thou my strong habitation, whereunto

I may continually resort: thou hast given commandment to save me; for thou art my rock and my fortress.

4 Deliver me, O my God, out of the hand of the wicked, out of the hand of the unrighteous and cruel man.

5 For thou art my hope, O Lord God: thou art my trust from my youth.

6 By thee have I been hidden up from the womb; thou art he that took me out of my mother's bowels: my praise shall be continually of thee.

7 I am as a wonder unto many; but thou art my strong refuge.

8 Let my mouth be filled with thy praise and with thy honour all the day.

9 Cast me not off in the time of old age; forsake me not when my strength faileth.

10 For mine enemies speak against me; and they that lay wait for my soul take counsel together,

11 Saying, God hath forsaken him: persecute and take him; for there is none to deliver him.

12 O God, be not far from me: O my God, make haste for my help.

13 Let them be confounded and consumed that are adversaries to my soul; let them be covered with reproach and dishonour that seek my hurt.

14 But I will hope continually, and will yet praise thee more and more.

Verse 3. Be thou my strong habitation] Instead of נוצו מאון, habitation, many of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. read נוצו מאוז, munition or defence. "Be thou my rock of defence."

Thou hast given commandment to save me] Thou hast determined my escape; and hast ordered Thy angels to guard me. See Psa. xci. 11, 12.

Verse 4. Out of the hand of the wicked] Probably, his unnatural son Absalom, called here רשד rashd, the wicked, because he had violated all laws, human and divine.

The unrighteous and cruel man] Probably, Aithophel, who was the iniquitous counsellor of a wicked and rebellious son.

Verse 5. My trust from my youth] When I was born into the world, Thou didst receive me, and Thou tookedst me under Thy especial care. My praise shall be continually of thee. Rather, I have always made thee my boast.

Verse 7. I am as a wonder unto many] I am כסופ kemopheth, "as a portent," or "type;" I am a typical person; and many of the things that happen to me are to be considered in reference to Him of whom I am a type. But he may mean, I am a continual prodigy. My low estate,—my slaying the lion and the bear,—conquering the Philistine,—escaping the fury of Saul, and being raised to the throne of Israel, are all so many wonders of Thy providence, and effects of Thy power and grace.

Verse 9. Cast me not off in the time of old age] The original might be translated and paraphrased thus:—"Thou wilt not cast me off till the time of old age; and, according to the failure of my flesh, Thou wilt not forsake me." My expectation of rest and happiness will not be deferred till the time that I shall be an aged man. Thou wilt not withdraw Thy presence from me as my flesh decays, and as my natural strength abates: but, on the contrary, as my outward man decays, my inward man shall be renewed day by day. It was in David's old age, that the rebellion of Absalom took place.

Verse 10. Lay wait for my soul] They seek to destroy my life.

Verse 11. God hath forsaken him] "God, who has been his special help all through life, and who has guarded him so, that no hand could be raised successfully against him, has now cast him off; therefore, we shall easily prevail against him. His present adversity shews that God is no longer his Friend." Thus men judge. "Secular prosperity is a proof of God's favour; adversity is a proof of His displeasure."—But this is not God's way, except in especial judgments, &c. He never manifests His pleasure or displeasure by secular good or ill.

Verse 13. Let them be confounded] They shall be confounded: these are prophetic denunciations.

NOTES ON PSALM LXX.

The title, in the Hebrew, is, To the chief musician, a Psalm of David, to bring to remembrance. There seems little sense in this title. It seems to intimate that the Psalm was written as a memorial that David had been in sore affliction; and that God had delivered him. So the Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic. It is almost word for word the same with the five last verses of Psalm xl. to the Notes on which the Reader is referred.

Verse 1. Make haste to help me] I am in extreme distress, and the most imminent danger. Haste to help me, or I am lost.

Verse 2. Let them be turned backward] They are coming in a body against me. Lord, stop their progress!

Verse 3. That say, Aha, aha.] הא הא heach! heach! a note of extreme contempt. See on Psalm xl. 15.

Verse 4. Let God be magnified.] Let His glory, mercy, and kindness, continually appear in the increase of His own work in the souls of His followers!

Verse 5. But I am poor and needy] אני רעבון ani rebbion, I am a poor man, and a beggar,—an afflicted beggar—a sense of my poverty causes me to beg.

Thou art my help] I know Thou hast enough, and to spare; and, therefore, I come to Thee.

Make no tarrying.] My wants are many, my danger great, my time short. O God, delay not!

ANALYSIS OF THE SEVENTIETH PSALM.

The contents of this Psalm are the following:

- I. The prayer of David for himself that he may be freed from his enemies, ver. 1, repeated, ver. 5.
- II. For the speedy overthrow of the wicked, ver. 2, 3.
- III. For the prosperity of the godly, ver. 4.
- IV. The arguments be uses to induce God to answer his prayer.
 1. His miserable condition. I am poor and needy.
 2. God's office. Thou art my Helper and Redeemer.
 For a farther analysis, see at the end of the fortieth Psalm.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXI.

There is no title to this Psalm either in the Hebrew or Chaldee; and the reason is, it was written as a part of the preceding Psalm, as appears by about twenty-seven of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, have, A Psalm of David for the sons of Jonadab, and the first of those who were led captives. For the first, second and third verses see the Notes on their parallels, Psa. xxxi. 1-3.

15 * My mouth shall shew forth thy righteousness, and thy salvation all the day; for I know not the numbers thereof.

16 I will go in the strength of the Lord God: I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only.

17 O God, thou hast taught me from my youth: and hitherto have I declared thy wondrous works.

18 * Now also * when I am old and gray-headed, O God, forsake me not; until I have shewed * thy strength unto this generation, and thy power to every one that is to come.

19 * Thy righteousness also, O God, is very high, who hast done great things: * O God, who is like unto thee!

21 Thou shalt increase my greatness, and comfort me on every side.

22 I will also praise thee * with c the psaltery, even thy truth, O my God: unto thee will I sing with the harp, O thou * Holy One of Israel.

23 My lips shall greatly rejoice when I sing unto thee; and * my soul, which thou hast redeemed.

24 * My tongue also shall talk of thy righteousness all the day long: for * they are confounded, for they are brought unto shame, that seek my hurt.

Verse 14. I will hope continually] I shall expect deliverance after deliverance, and blessing after blessing;—and, in consequence, I will praise Thee more and more. As Thy blessings abound, so shall my praises.

Verse 15. I know not the numbers] I must be continually in the spirit of gratitude, praise, and obedience; for Thy blessings to me are innumerable.

Verse 16. I will go אבנא אבו, I will enter, i. e. into the tabernacle, in the strength or mightinesses of Adonai Jehovah: the Supreme God, who is my Prop, Stay, and Support.

I will make mention of thy righteousness] I will continually record and celebrate the acts of Thy mercy and goodness. They are without number, (verse 15) and of these alone will I speak.

Verse 17. Thou hast taught me from my youth] I have had Thee for my continual Instructor: and Thou didst begin to teach me Thy fear and love from my tenderest infancy. Those are well taught, whom God instructs; and when He teaches, there is no delay in learning.

Verse 18. Old and gray-headed] In the ninth verse he mentioned the circumstance of old age: here he repeats it with the addition of hoary-headedness, which, humanly speaking, was calculated to make a deeper impression in his favour. Though all these things are well known to God, and He needs not our information, yet he is pleased to say, Come now, and let us reason together. And when His children plead and reason with Him, they are acting precisely as He has commanded.

Verse 19. Thy righteousness—is very high אד מרומ—is up to the exalted place,—reaches up to heaven. The mercy of God fills all space and place. It crowns in the heavens, what it governs upon earth.

Who hast done great things גדולות גדולות, Thou hast worked miracles, and displayed the greatest acts of power.

Who is like unto thee! מי כמוך mi camoca. God is alone,—who can resemble him? He is eternal. He can have none before, and there can be none after—for in the infinite unity of His Trinity He is that eternal, unlimited, impartible, incomprehensible and uncompounded ineffable being, whose essence is hidden from all created intelligences, and whose counsels cannot be fathomed by any creature that even His own hand can form. WHO IS LIKE UNTO THEE! will excite the wonder, amazement, praise, and adoration, of angels and men to all eternity.

Verse 20. Thou, which hast showed me great and sore troubles] Multiplied straits and difficulties. And Thou hast only shewed them. Hadst thou permitted them to have fallen upon me with all their own energy and natural consequences, they would have destroyed me. As it was, I was nearly buried under them.

Shalt quicken me again] Shalt revive me—put new life in me. This has been applied to the passion of our Lord, and His resurrection: for it is added, Thou Shalt bring me up again from the depths of the earth.] Death shall not prey upon my body; Thy Holy One can see no corruption. As applicable to David, it might mean his being almost overwhelmed with afflictions; and his deliverance was like a life from the dead.

Verse 21. Thou shalt increase my greatness] Thou wilt restore me to my throne and kingdom; and it shall be done in such a way that all shall see it was the hand of God; and I shall have the more honour on the account.

Comfort me on every side.] I shall have friends in all quarters: and the tribes on all sides will support me.

Verse 22. I will also praise thee with the psaltery בכלי נבל bi-celi nebel, with the instrument nebel. Unto Thee will I sing with the harp; כנור be-kinnor, with the kinnor. Both were stringed instruments, and the principal used in the Jewish worship; and with which or any thing like them, in Divine worship, we, as Christians, have nothing to do.

Verse 23. My lips shall greatly rejoice—and my soul] My lips shall use words expressive of my soul's happiness and gratitude. Thou hast redeemed me, and thou shalt have the eternal praise.

Verse 24. Talk of thy righteousness] The righteousness of God is frequently used in this Psalm, and in other places, to signify His justice, judgments, faithfulness, truth, mercy, &c. There are few words of more general import in the Bible.

They are confounded] The counsel of Abithophel is confounded, and turned to foolishness; and he was so ashamed that he went and hanged himself. As to the vain and wicked Absalom, he met with the fate that he had meditated against his father. Though not yet done, David sees all these things as actually accomplished; for he had got a Divine assurance that God would bring them to pass.

ANALYSIS OF THE SEVENTY-FIRST PSALM.

The parts of this Psalm, generally, are these two:—

I. A prayer that God would help and deliver him, which he urges by many arguments, ver. 1—21.

II. His vow of thanksgiving, ver. 22, to the end.

1. I. His petition in general. Let me never be put to confusion.

2. He intimates the cause. I put my trust in thee, &c. ver. 2.

To induce the Lord to hear, he uses many arguments drawn

1. From His justice and equity. Deliver me in thy righteousness.

2. From His word and promise. Thou hast given commandment, &c.

3. From His power. Thou art my rock, &c.

4. From His relation to him. My God, my hope.

5. From the qualities of his adversaries. They were wicked, unrighteous, and cruel.

6. From His confidences. Thou art my hope.

7. From His gracious providence. By thee have I been holden up, &c.

8. From His thankful heart. My praise shall be continually, &c.

9. He had none to trust to but God. Thou art my refuge.

3. He resumes his prayer. Cast me not off in the time of old age, &c.

He describes his enemies:—

1. They were continual calumniators. Mine enemies speak against me.

2. They laboured to take away his life.

3. They studied mischief against him. They take counsel together.

4. Their words were cruel. God hath forsaken him: persecute, &c.

5. He resumes his prayer, and predicts his enemies' downfall. O my God, be not far from me; make haste for my help.

He prays against his enemies,—

1. Let them be confounded, &c. They shall be confounded.

2. He expresses his hope. I will hope continually.

3. And his purpose of gratitude. I will praise thee more and more.

4. He pleads from his past experience of God's mercy to him.

1. God had taught him from his youth both by His word and Spirit.

2. Hitherto he had declared God's wondrous works.

3. Therefore, forsake me not now that I am old and gray-headed.

PSALM LXXII.

David prays to God for Solomon, 1. Prescribes Solomon's work, 2. The effects of his education, 3-7. The extent of his dominion, 8-11. His mercy and kindness to the poor, and the perpetuity of his praise, 12-17. God is blessed for His power and goodness; and the Psalmist prays that the whole earth may be filled with His glory, 18-20.

A Psalm * for b Solomon.

Give the king thy judgments, O God, and thy righteousness unto the king's son.

From all these considerations, he feels gratitude, and praises God.

2. God is wonderful. There is none like HIM. Of all this he had full and satisfactory proof.

II. The second part contains David's thanksgiving.

1. He will praise the truth of the Holy One of Israel. Not only with nabal and kinnor—instruments of music then used,—

2. But with his lips and soul, heart and mouth going together.

3. With his tongue speaking of God's goodness to others.

4. And for this reason, they are confounded, for they are brought to shame that seek my hurt.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXII.

The title notes's to-shalemah, we translate "A Psalm for Solomon." The Chaldee says, "By the hand of Solomon, spoken prophetically." The Syriac, "A Psalm of David, when he had constituted Solomon king." All the other Versions attribute it to Solomon himself. But in the conclusion of the Psalm it appears to be attributed to David. "The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended." It is most probably a Psalm of David, composed in his last days, when he had set his beloved son on the throne of the kingdom. "Then," says Calmet, "transported with joy and gratitude, he addressed this Psalm to God, in which he prays Him to pour out His blessings on the young king, and upon the people. He then, wrapped up in a Divine enthusiasm, ascends to a higher subject; and sings the glory of the Messiah, and the magnificence of His reign. Hence it is that we may see in this Psalm a great number of expressions which cannot relate to Solomon, unless in a hyperbolical and figurative sense: but, applied to Christ, they are literally and rigorously exact."

Verse 1. Give the king thy judgments.] Let Solomon receive Thy law, as the civil and ecclesiastical code by which he is to govern the kingdom.

And thy righteousness unto the king's son.] Righteousness may signify equity. Let him not only rule according to the strict letter of Thy law, that being the base on which all his decisions shall be founded; but let him rule also according to equity, that rigorous justice may never become oppressive. Solomon is called here the king, because now set upon the Jewish throne; and he is called the king's son, to signify his right to that throne on which he now sat.

Verse 2. He shall judge thy people with righteousness.] With justice and mercy mixed, or according to equity.

And thy poor with judgment.] Every one according to the law which Thou had appointed; but with especial tenderness to the poor and afflicted.

Verse 3. The mountains shall bring peace.] Perhaps mountains and hills are here taken in their figurative sense, to signify princes and petty governors: and is a prediction that all governors of provinces, and magistrates, should administer equal justice in their several departments and jurisdictions; so that universal peace should be preserved, and the people be every where prosperous; for shalom, signifies both peace and prosperity, for without the former the latter never existed.

But what is the meaning of the little hills by righteousness? Why, it has no meaning: and it has none, because it is a false derivation of the verse. The word בְּרִיָּה be-riyah, "in righteousness," at the end of verse 3, should begin verse 4, and then the sense will be plain. Ver. 3.

The mountains and the hills shall bring prosperity to the people. Ver. 4. In righteousness he shall judge the poor of the people: he shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor.

The effects mentioned in the fourth verse shew—that king Solomon should act according to the law of his God; and that all officers, magistrates, and governors, should minister equal justice through every part of the land. The Septuagint has the true division. Αρραδοντες τα ορη εισηγησεν τη λαω σου, και οι βουνοι. Εν δικαιοσυνη ερισει τους πτωχεις του λαου κ. τ. λ. "The mountains shall bring peace to thy people, and the hills: in righteousness shall He judge the poor of Thy people," &c.

Verse 5. They shall fear thee.] There is no sense in which this can be spoken of Solomon; nor, indeed, of any other man: it belongs to Jesus Christ, and to Him alone. He is the Prince of peace who shall be feared and revered through all generations, and as long as the sun and moon endure.

Verse 6. He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass.] The word is gaz, which we translate mown grass, more properly means pastured grass, or pastured land; for the dew of the night is intended to restore the grass which has been eaten in the course of the day. This very idea the Chaldee has seized, and renders the place thus:—"He shall descend gently, like rain upon the grass which has been eaten by the locust." But there seems to be a reference to the thick night dew which in summer fall on the pasturages, and become the means of restoring the grass consumed in the daytime by the cattle. This is finely expressed by the most accomplished of all poets and agriculturalists:—

Et quantum longis carpent armenta stibus
Erigua tantum gaudius rose nocte reposit.

Virg. Geor. l. v. 201.

"For what the day devours, the nightly dew Shall to the morn by poorly drops renew." Dryden.

Or to leave poetry, which always says too much, or too little, the plain prose is:

"As much as the frosts crop in the long days,
So much shall the cold dew restore in one short night."

As showers that water the earth.] The influence of the doctrine and Spirit of Christ on the soul of man shall be as grateful, as refreshing, and as fructifying, as the nightly dews on the cropped fields, and the eternal showers on the cultivated lands. Without His influence all tillage is vain; without Him there can neither be seed nor fruit.

Verse 7. In his days shall the righteous flourish.] There was nothing but peace and prosperity all the days of Solomon: for, in his days Judah and Israel dwell safely; every man under his vine and under his fig-tree, from Dan even to Beersheba. 1 Kings iv. 25.

So long as the moon endureth.] עד זמון עד זמון ad belu ya-reach. "Till there be no more moon."

Verse 8. He shall have dominion also from sea to sea.] The best comment on this, as it refers to Solomon, may be found in 1 Kings iv. 21—24. "And Solomon reigned over all kingdoms from the river unto the land of the Philistines; and unto the border of Egypt—for he had dominion over all on this side the river, from Tiphshah even to Azzah, over all the kings on this side the river; and he had peace on all sides round about him."

Solomon, it appears, reigned over all the provinces from the river Euphrates to the land of the Philistines, even to the frontiers of Egypt. The Euphrates was on the east of Solomon's dominions; the Philistines were westward on the Mediterranean sea; and Egypt was on the south. Solomon had therefore, as tributaries, the kingdoms of Syria, Damascus, Moab, and Ammon, which lay between the Euphrates and the Mediterranean. Thus he appears to have possessed all the land which God covenanted with Abraham to give to his posterity.

Unto the ends of the earth.] Or, land, must mean the tract of country along the Mediterranean sea, which was the boundary of the land on that side:—but, as the words may refer to Christ, every thing may be taken in its utmost latitude and extent.

Verse 9. They that dwell in the wilderness] The T&lmim were termed *Ethiopian*s by the Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic. The Syriac terms them the islands. But it is likely that those who dwell by the sea-coasts, and support themselves by navigation and fishing, are here intended.

His enemies shall lick the dust.] Shall be so completely subdued, that they shall be reduced to the most abject state of vassalage; till they shall become proselytes to the Jewish faith.

Verse 10. The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall bring presents] Though Solomon did not reign over Cilicia, of which Tarusus was the capital, yet he might receive gifts, not in the sense of tribute: for מנחה minchah, the word here used, signifies a gratitude or friendly offering.

The kings of Sheba and Seba] Both countries of Arabia. From the former came the queen of Sheba, to hear the wisdom of Solomon. And she brought exceeding great presents or gifts, but not in the way of tribute; for Solomon had no jurisdiction in her country. And certainly many sovereigns, to obtain his friendship, sent him various presents of the choicest produce of their respective countries: and no doubt he did with them as with the queen of Sheba; gave them gifts in return. Hence the word שכח sehkkar, is used, which signifies, "a compensative present, made on account of benefits received."

Verse 11. All kings shall fall down before] They shall reverence him on account of his great wisdom, riches, &c.

All nations shall serve him.] All the surrounding nations. This and the preceding verses are fully explained by 1 Kings v. 23—25. King Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches, and for wisdom. And all the earth sought unto Solomon to hear his wisdom. And they brought every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and garments, and armour, and spices, horses and mules, a rate year by year. If we take these expressions to mean literally all the habitable globe, then they cannot be applied to Solomon: but if we take them as they are most evidently used by the sacred writer, then they are literally true. When all the earth receives the Gospel of Christ, then they may be applied to him.

Verse 12. He shall deliver the needy when he crieth] The poor and the rich shall, in the administration of justice, be equally respected: and the strong shall not be permitted to oppress the weak.

Verse 14. From deceit and violence] Because they are poor and uneducated, they are liable to be deceived; and because they are helpless, they are liable to oppression: but his equal justice shall duly consider these cases; and no man shall suffer because he is deceived, though the letter of the law may be against him.

And precious shall their blood be] If the blood or life of such a person shall have been spilt by the hand of violence, he shall seek it out, and visit it on the murderer, though he were the chief in the land. He shall not be screened, though he were of the blood royal, if he have wilfully spilt the life of a man.

Verse 15. To him shall be given of the gold of Sheba] The Arabians shall pay him tribute.

Prayer also shall be made for him continually] In all conquered countries two things marked the subjection of the people:—1. Their money was stamped with the name of the conqueror. 2. They were obliged to pray for him in their acts of public worship.

conquered, like conquerors in general: he shall treat them with benignity; and shall give them the same laws and privileges as his natural subjects; and therefore, he shall be daily praised. All shall speak well of him.

Verse 16. There shall be a handful of corn] The earth shall be exceedingly fruitful. Even a handful of corn sown on the top of a mountain shall grow up strong and vigorous: and it shall be, in reference to crops in other times, as the cedars of Lebanon are to common trees or shrubs:—and as the earth will bring forth in handfuls; so the people shall be multiplied who are to consume this great produce.

And they of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth.] There have been many puzzling criticisms concerning this verse. What I have given I believe to be the sense.

Verse 17. His name shall endure for ever] Hitherto this has been literally fulfilled. Solomon is celebrated in the east and in the west, in the north and in the south: his writings still remain, and are received, both by Jews and by Gentiles, as a revelation from God; and it is not likely that the name of the author shall ever perish out of the records of the world.

All nations shall call him blessed.] Because of the extraordinary manner in which he was favoured by the Most High. I well know that all these things are thought to belong properly to Jesus Christ;—and, in reference to Him, they are all true, and ten thousand times more than these. But I believe they are all properly applicable to Solomon: and it is the business of the commentator to find out the literal sense, and historical fact; and not seek for allegories and mysteries, where there is no certain evidence of their presence. Where the Sacred Writers of the New Testament quote passages from the Old, and apply them to our Lord, we not only may, but should follow them. And I am ready to grant there may be many other passages equally applicable to Him with those they have quoted, which are not thus applied. Indeed, HE is the sum and substance of the whole Scripture. HE spoke by his Spirit in the prophets; and Himself was the Subject of their declarations. See our Lord's saying, Luke xxiv. 44.

Verse 18. Blessed be the Lord God] David foresaw all Solomon's grandeur; his justice, equity, and the happiness of the subjects under his government: and his soul has, in consequence, sensations of pleasure, and gratitude to God, which even his own wondrous pen cannot describe. But it is worthy of remark, that God did not reveal to him the apostasy of this beloved son. He did not foresee that this once holy, happy, wise and prosperous man would be the means of debasing the Divine worship, and establishing the grossest idolatry in Israel. God hid this from his eyes, that his heart might not be grieved, and that he might die in peace. Besides, there was still much contingency in the business. God would not predict a thing as absolutely certain, which was still poised between a possibility of being and not being; and which He had left, as he does all contingencies, to the free-will of His creatures to turn the scale.

Who only doeth wondrous things.] God alone works miracles: wherever there is a miracle, there is God. No creature can invert or suspend the course and laws of nature; this is properly the work of God. Jesus Christ, most incontrovertibly, wrought such miracles:—therefore, most demonstrably, Jesus Christ was God.

Verse 19. Let the whole earth be filled with his glory] Let the gospel, the light, the Spirit, and power of Christ, fill the world!

Amen! So let it be.

And Amen.] So it shall be! Hallelujah!

ever: and let the whole earth be filled with his glory: Amen, and Amen.

b Numb. 14. 21.

Verse 20. The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended. This was most probably the last Psalm he ever wrote. There may be several in the after part of this Book which were written by him: but they were probably composed in a former period of his life; for this was the end of the poetic prayers of David, the son of Jesse.

ANALYSIS OF THE SEVENTY-SECOND PSALM.

David, being near his death, makes his prayer for his son Solomon, that he may be a just, peaceable, and great king, and his subjects happy under his government. But this is but the shell of the Psalm: the kernel is Christ and His kingdom, under whom righteousness, peace, and felicity, shall flourish; and unto whom all nations shall do homage for ever and ever.

The parts of this Psalm are the following, viz.

- I. The petition, ver. 1.
- II. The general declaration of the qualities of this kingdom, ver. 2, 3, 4.
- III. The particular unfolding of these in their effects, ver. 4—18.
- IV. The doxology, ver. 18—20.

I. David being taught, by experience, how hard a matter it is to govern a kingdom well, prays God to assist his son Solomon, to whom, being near death, he was to leave his crown and sceptre.

1. Give the king thy judgments, O God; the true knowledge of Thy law.

2. And thy righteousness unto the king's son; that he may not decline to the right or left hand, but administer by justice, judge for God.

II. For then this will follow,—

1. Justice will flourish in his kingdom. He shall judge thy people with righteousness, and thy poor with judgment.

2. And peace also, and prosperity. The mountains, that is, the chief magistrates; and the little hills,—the lesser officers, shall bring peace to the people: but by righteousness; for justice upholds the world.

III. And now he proceeds to unfold himself upon the two former generals: first, justice;—then, peace.

Of justice he assigns two effects:—

1. The defence of good men. He shall judge the poor of the people: he shall save the children of the needy.

2. The punishment of the wicked. He shall break in pieces the oppressor.

The consequences of peace are:—

1. Fear, and reverence, and the service of God. They shall fear thee as long as the sun and moon endure, throughout all generations.

2. Plenty and abundance. He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass: as showers that water the earth.

3. Prosperity of good men. In his days shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth.

Now he shews the greatness and amplitude of this kingdom, which will not be so true of Solomon, as of Christ and His kingdom.

1. His kingdom will be very large. He shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth.

2. His subjects shall be many. Some willingly, others, against their will, shall obey Him. They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him. His enemies shall lick the dust; crouch at His feet.

3. Homage shall be done to him by Asiatic, European, and Arabian princes. 1. The kings of Tarshish, and of the isles, shall bring presents; the kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. 2. Yea, all kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him.

He sets down many excellent qualities of this king.

1. He should be ready to do good; a gracious lord to the meanest subject. For he shall deliver the needy when he crieth; the poor also, and him that hath no helper.

2. He should be far from loading his subjects with exactions. He shall spare the poor, and shall save the souls of the needy.

3. Far from all tyranny. He shall redeem their soul from deceit and violence.

4. Far from shedding innocent blood. And precious shall their blood be in his sight.

And he shall be kind and loving to his subjects; so shall his subjects shew great love and affection to him.

1. They shall pray for his life. He shall live.

2. And they shall offer him presents. And to him shall be given of the gold of Arabia.

3. They shall pray for him. Prayer also shall be made for him continually.

VOL. II.—34

20 The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended.

Zech. 14. 9.

4. They shall speak well of him. Daily shall he be praised.

And that which would induce them to it might be, that besides the equity, and justice, love and kindness, he shewed to all, they find that under him they enjoy great plenty and abundance of all things.

1. For the earth brought forth corn, and the mountains afforded them an ample harvest. There shall be a handful of corn in the earth upon the top, the highest part of the mountains; the fruit thereof shall shake, (stand so thick that the ears shall brush one against another) as the trees in Lebanon.

2. The kingdom shall abound in people. They of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth; which is thick and green. In a word, the king shall be dear to his people; and they shall love his name when living, and honour him when dead, and continue it to all posterities.

1. His name shall endure for ever: his name shall be continued as long as the sun.

2. Men shall be blessed in him. God shall bless thee, as He did Solomon.

3. All nations shall call him blessed. Acknowledge his happiness, and wish a blessing to themselves after Solomon's example.

IV. In the close of the Psalm, as usual, he gives thanks for taking into consideration the happiness that was to accrue to his people under such a king, even when he was laid in the grave. He brexds forth,—

1. Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things: for, indeed, such a king is a wonder; and it is the grace of God must make him such.

2. And again, Blessed be his glorious name for ever.

3. And that not in Judea alone, but in all the world. And let the whole world be filled with his glory. Amen, Amen.

The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended. Of which, some, indeed most, judge this was the last prayer David made.—See the Notes at the end of the Psalm.

With the seventy-second Psalm the SECOND BOOK of the Psalter ends, according to the division of the Jewish Masorites. The THIRD BOOK commences with a series, chiefly composed by other inspired writers.

The following poetical version of some of the principal passages of the foregoing Psalm, was made and kindly given me by my much respected friend, James Montgomery, Esq., of Sheffield. I need not tell the intelligent Reader that he has seized the spirit, and exhibited some of the principal beauties of the Hebrew bard; though, (to use his own words in his letter to me,) his "hand trembled to touch the harp of Zion." I take the liberty here to register a wish, which I have strongly expressed to himself, that he would favour the church of God with a metrical version of the whole Book.

Hail to the Lord's Anointed, Great David's greater Son!
Hail, in the time appointed,
His reign on earth begun!

He comes to break oppression,
To let the captive free,
To take away transgression,
And reign in equity.

He comes with succour speedy
To those who suffer wrong;
To help the poor and needy,
And bid the weak be strong:

To give them songs for singing,
Their darkness turn to light,
Whose souls in misery dying
Were precious in His sight.

By such shall He be feared,
While men and moors endure,
Beloved, adored, revered,
For He shall judge the poor.

Through changing generations,
With justice, mercy, truth,
While stars maintain their stations,
And moons renew their youth.

He shall come down like showers
Upon the fruitful earth,
And joy and hope like fountains,
Spring in his path to birth:

Before Him, on the mountains,
Shall Fens, the herak, go,
And righteousness, in fountain,
From hill to valley flow.

Arabia's desert rangers
To Him shall bow the knee;
The Ethiopian stranger
His glory come to see:

With offerings of devotion,
Ships from the Isles shall meet,
To pour the wealth of ocean
In tribute at His feet.

Kings shall fall down before Him,
And gold and incense bring
All nations shall adore Him,
His praise all people sing:

For He shall have dominion
Over river, sea, and shore,
Far as the eagle's pinion,
Or dove's light wave, can soar.

Verse 12. These are the ungodly] The people still speak. It is the ungodly that prosper; the irreligious and profane.

Verse 13. I have cleansed my heart in vain] It is no advantage to us to worship the true God, to walk according to the law of righteousness, and keep the ordinances of the Most High.

Verse 14. For all the day long have I been plagued] Far from enjoying worldly prosperity, we are not only poor, but we are afflicted also; and every succeeding day brings with it some new trouble.

Verse 15. If I say, I will speak thus] I have at last discovered that I have reasoned incorrectly; and that I have the uniform testimony of all Thy children against me. From generation to generation, they have testified that the Judge of all the earth does right; they have trusted in Thee, and were never confounded. They also met with afflictions and sore trials, but Thou didst bring them safely through all:—didst sustain them in the worst, and sanctifiedst the whole to their eternal good.

Verse 16. When I thought to know this] When I reviewed the history of our fathers, I saw that, though Thou hadst from time to time hidden Thy face because of their sins, yet Thou hadst never utterly abandoned them to their adversaries: and it was not reasonable to conclude that Thou wouldst do now what Thou hadst never done before; and yet the continuance of our captivity, the oppressive hardships which we suffer, and the small prospect there is of release, puzzle me again. These things have been very painful to me.

Verse 17. Until I went into the sanctuary] Until, in the use of Thy ordinances, I entered into a deep consideration of Thy secret counsels; and considered the future state of the righteous and the wicked: that the unequal distribution of temporal good and evil argued a future judgment; that the present is a state of trial; and that God exercises His followers according to His godly wisdom and tender mercy. Then, light sprang up in my mind; and I was assured that all these exercises were for our benefit, and that the prosperity of the wicked here was a prelude to their destruction. And this I saw to be their end.

That this Psalm was written during the Captivity, there is little room to doubt. How then can the Psalmist speak of the sanctuary?—there was none at Babylon; and at Jerusalem, it had been long since destroyed. There is no way to solve this difficulty but by considering that מקדש, mikdash, may be taken in the sense of holy places,—places set apart for prayer and meditation. And that the captives had such places in their captivity, there can be no doubt: and the place that is set apart to meet God in, for prayer, supplication, confession of sin, and meditation, is holy unto the Lord; and is there, His sanctuary, whether a house or the open field. Calmel thinks holy meditations, a view of the Divine secrets, to which he refers, ver. 24, is here meant.

Verse 18. Thou didst set them in slippery places] Affluence is a slippery path: few have ever walked in it without falling. It is possible to be faithful in the wrighteous mammon: but it is very difficult. No man should desire riches; for they bring with them so many cares and temptations as to be almost unmanageable. Rich men, even when pious, are seldom happy: they do not enjoy the consolations of religion. A good man, possessed of very extensive estates, unblameable in his whole deportment, once said to me: "There must be some strange malignity in riches thus to keep me in continual bondage, and deprive me of the consolations of the gospel." Perhaps to a person, to whom his estates are a snare, the words of our Lord may be literally applicable: Sell what thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven; and come, take up thy cross, and follow me. But he went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions! May we not then say with the Psalmist, Surely, thou didst set them in slippery places, &c.

Verse 19. Are they brought into desolation] This is often a literal fact. I have known several cases where persons, very rich, have by sudden losses been brought into desolation as in a moment: in consequence of which they were utterly consumed with terrors.

Verse 20. As a dream when one awaketh] So their goods fled away. Their possession was a dream;—their privation real.

Thou shalt despise their image.] While destitute of true religion, whatever appearance they had of greatness, nobility, honour, and happiness; yet, in the sight of God, they had no more than the ghost or shade of excellence, which God is said here to despise. Who would be rich at such a risk and dishonour?

Verse 21. Thus my heart was grieved] The different views which I got of this subject quite confounded me: I was equally astonished at their sudden overthrow, and my own ignorance. I felt as if I were a beast in stupidity. I permitted my mind to be wholly occupied with sensible things, like the beasts that perish, and did not look into a future state; nor did I consider, nor submit to, the wise designs of an unerring Providence.

Verse 23. I am continually with thee] I now see that myself and my people are under Thy guardian care,—that we are continually upheld by Thee; and, while in Thy right hand, we shall not be utterly cast down.

Verse 24. Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel] After we have suffered awhile, receiving directions and consolations from Thy good Spirit by means of Thy prophets, who are in the same captivity with ourselves; Thou wilt grant us deliverance, restore us to our own land, and crown us with honour and happiness. Any sincere follower of God may use these words in reference to this and the coming world. Thy counsel, Thy word and Spirit, shall guide me through life; and, when I have done and suffered Thy righteous will, Thou wilt receive me into Thy eternal glory.

Verse 25. Whom have I in heaven but thee?] The original is more emphatic. מי לי בשמים ומי לי בארץ? Mi li ba-shamayim; ve-immeca lo chaphatesti ba-arets. "Who is there to me in the heavens? And with Thee I have desired nothing in the earth." No man can say this who has not taken God for his Portion in reference to both worlds.

Verse 26. My flesh—faileth] We shall soon die;—and my heart, even our natural courage, will fail;—and no support, but what is supernatural, will then be available. Therefore, he adds,—

God is the strength of my heart] Literally, the rock of my heart.

And my portion] Allusion is here made to the division of the Promised Land. I ask no inheritance below; I look for one above. I do not look for this in the possession of any place; it is God alone that can content the desires and wishes of an immortal spirit. And even this would not satisfy, had I not the prospect of its being for ever, עולם, le-olam, "to eternity!"

Verse 27. They that are far from thee shall perish] 267

23 But it is good for me to draw near to God: I have put my trust in the Lord God, that I may declare all thy works.

PSALM LXXIV.

The Psalmist complains of the desolations of the sanctuary, and pleads with God, 1-3. Shews the impotence and wickedness of their enemies, 4-5. Prays to God to act for them as He had done for their fathers, written, by His miraculous power, He had saved, 6-17. Began God to arise and vindicate His own honour against His enemies, and the enemies of His people, 18-23.

Asaph.

O GOD, why hast thou cast us off for ever? why doth thine anger smoke against the sheep of thy pasture?

1 Heb. 10. 22.—2 Ps. 107. 22 & 118. 17.—3 Or, A Psalm for Asaph to give instruction.—4 Ps. 44. 9, 23 & 28. 1, 10 & 77. 7. Jer. 31. 37. & 33. 26.—5 Deut. 29. 26.

The term perish is generally used to signify a coming to nothing,—being annihilated; and by some it is thus applied to the finally impenitent, they shall all be annihilated. But where is this to be found in the Scriptures? In no part, properly understood. In the new heavens and the new earth none of the wicked shall be found; for therein dwells righteousness, nothing but God and righteous spirits: but at the same time the wicked shall be in their own place. And to suppose that they shall be annihilated, is as great a heresy, though scarcely so absurd, as to believe that the pains of damnation are emendatory, and that hell-fire shall burn out. There is presumptive evidence from Scripture to lead us to the conclusion, that if there be not eternal punishment, glory will not be eternal; as the same terms are used to express the duration of both. No human spirit, that is not united to God, can be saved. Those who are far from thee shall perish—they shall be lost, undone, ruined, and that without remedy. Being separated from God by sin, they shall never be rejoined; the great gulf must be between them and their Maker eternally.

All them that go a whoring from thee.] That is, all that worship false gods; all idolaters. This is the only meaning of the word in such a connexion. I have explained this elsewhere.

Verse 23. It is good for me to draw near.] We have already seen that those who are far off shall perish: therefore, it is ill for them. Those who draw near, who come in the true spirit of sacrifice, and with the only available sacrifice, the Lord Jesus, shall be finally saved: therefore, it is good for them.

I have put my trust in the Lord God.] I confide in Jehovah, my Prop and Stay. I have taken Him for my Portion.

That I may declare all thy works.] That I may testify to all how good it is to draw nigh to God; and what a sufficient Portion He is to the soul of man.

The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, add, in the gates of the daughter of Sion. These words appear to make a better finish: but they are not acknowledged by any Hebrew MS.

ANALYSIS OF THE SEVENTY-THIRD PSALM.

The prophet shews the grief that many good men feel at the prosperity of the wicked, and the distresses of the godly: but at last, consulting the will of God, he finds that the felicity of the wicked ends in wretchedness, and the crosses of the godly are the way to happiness; and, with this consideration, he gains quiet to his troubled mind. Let the question be, Who is the happy man? The godly, or ungodly? And then the parts of the Psalm will be as follows:—

I. The arguments produced for the happiness of the wicked, ver. 1-9.

II. The impression these arguments make in carnal minds, ver. 2, 3, 10-14.

III. The rejection of these doubts and impressions, ver. 15-17.

IV. The refutation of the former arguments, ver. 18-20.

V. The Psalmist's censure of himself for his precipitate judgment, ver. 21, 22.

VI. His full resolution of the doubt, after the full examination of the reasons on both sides. That true happiness consists in union with God; and, therefore, the wicked who are far from Him, however they flourish, are unhappy, ver 23-28.

But more particularly the Psalm is divisible into the following parts:—

I. There is, first, an assertion, Certainly God is good to Israel, to such as are of a clean heart, ver. 1. But can this comport with their present afflicted state? With this he was greatly harassed, ver. 2. He saw the wicked in prosperity, which he states in several particulars.

II. What carnal minds think of them.

1. They have no conflicts in their death, ver. 4.

2. They are not troubled like other men, ver. 5.

2 Remember thy congregation, which thou hast purchased of old; the rod of thine inheritance, which thou hast redeemed; this mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt.

3 Lift up thy feet unto the perpetual desolations; even all that the enemy hath done wickedly in the sanctuary.

4 Thine enemies roar in the midst of thy congregations; they set up their ensigns for signs.

5 A man was famous according as he had lifted up axes upon the thick trees.

1 Ps. 96. 7. & 103. 3.—2 Exod. 15. 16. Deut. 9. 26.—3 Or, arise.—4 Gen. 22. 9. Jer. 10. 16.—5 Lam. 2. 7.—4 Dan. 6. 27.

3. They are proud and haughty, ver. 6, and yet are not punished.

4. They are oppressive tyrants. Violence covereth them.

5. They feed luxuriously, ver. 7.

6. They speak evil against the poor, ver. 8.

7. They even speak against God, and all the dispensations of His providence. Their tongue walketh through the earth, ver. 9.

8. They assert that He takes no cognizance of their ways, ver. 10, 11.

III. The evil conclusion formed from these premises refuted.

1. It is the ungodly that prosper in the earth, ver. 12.

2. If so, then of what avail are my religious observances and sufferings, &c. ver. 13, 14.

He resolves the question,—

1. From the testimony of all the godly, v. 15.

2. He tried to solve it by reason, but did not succeed, v. 16.

3. He consults with God, and the whole is made plain, ver. 17.

From Him he learns,—

1. That the happiness of the wicked is unstable, ver. 18.

2. They stand on a precipice, and are cast down, ver. 19.

3. Their desolation comes suddenly and unexpectedly, ver. 19.

4. Their ruin is fearful. They are consumed with terrors.

5. Thus it is demonstrated that their happiness was vain, empty, as unsubstantial as a dream, ver. 20.

IV. He now acknowledges that he had formed an erroneous judgment.—1. That he gave way to animosity. 2. That he acted rather like a beast than a man, in looking only to the present life, ver. 21, 22. He now receives instruction and encouragement.

1. The godly are not neglected. They are continually with God, ver. 23.

2. They are tenderly led as by the hand of a loving father, ver. 23.

3. They are directed by the word and Spirit of God, ver. 24.

4. They are often crowned with signal marks of God's esteem, even in this life, ver. 24.

V. His resolution to live to God, as he sees that such alone are happy.

1. He expects nothing in heaven but God. Whom have I in heaven, &c.

2. He will seek no other Portion on earth. There is none on earth, ver. 25.

3. I will cleave to Him in life and death. When my flesh and my heart fail.

4. My confidence in Him shall be unshaken, ver. 26.

VI. He draws two conclusions from what he had learned:—

1. They that are far from God perish.

2. They that draw nigh to Him are saved, ver. 27.

Therefore, I will so trust in God, that I shall be able to declare his works, ver. 28.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXIV.

The title is Maschil of Asaph,—or "A Psalm of Asaph to give instruction." That this Psalm was written at a time when the temple was ruined, Jerusalem burnt, and the prophets scattered or destroyed, is evident. But it is not so clear whether the desolations here refer to the days of Nebuchadnezzar, or to the desolation that took place under the Romans about the seventieth year of the Christian era. Calmet inclines to the former opinion; and supposes the Psalm to be a lamentation over the temple destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar.

Verse 1. O God, why hast thou cast us off for ever? Hast thou determined that we shall never more be Thy people? Are we never to see an end to our calamities?

Verse 2. Remember thy congregation, which thou hast purchased of old.] We are the descendants of that people whom Thou didst take unto Thyself; the children of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Wilt thou never more be reconciled to us?

6 But now they break down * the carved work thereof at once with axes and hammers.

7 They * have cast fire into thy sanctuary, they have defiled * by casting down the dwelling-place of thy name to the ground.

8 They said in their hearts, Let us * destroy them together: they have burned up all the synagogues of God in the land.

9 We see not our signs: * there is no more any prophet: neither is there among us any that knoweth how long.

10 O God, how long shall the adversary reproach? shall the enemy blaspheme thy name for ever?

11 Why withdrawest thou thy hand, even thy right hand? pluck it out of thy bosom.

12 For * God is my King of old, working salvation in the midst of the earth.

13 Thou didst * divide the sea by thy strength: * thou brakest the heads of the * dragons in the waters.

14 Thou brakest the heads of leviathan in pieces, and gavest him * to be meat * to the people inhabiting the wilderness.

15 * Thou didst cleave the fountain and the flood: * thou driedst up * mighty rivers.

16 The day is thine, the night also is thine: * thou hast prepared the light and the sun.

Verse 3. Lift up thy feet] Arise, and return to us;—our desolations still continue. Thy sanctuary is profaned by Thine and our enemies.

Verse 4. Thine enemies roar] Thy people, who were formerly a distinct and separate people, and who would not even touch a Gentile, are now obliged to mingle with the most profane. Their boisterous mirth, their cruel mockings, their insulting commands, are heard every where in all our assemblies.

They set up their ensigns for signs.] מִצַּחֲמֵי אֱלֹהִים סָמָוּ אֱלֹהֵיהֶם סָמָוּ, they set up their standards in the place of ours. All the ensigns and trophies were those of our enemies; our own were no longer to be seen.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh verses give a correct historical account of the ravages committed by the Babylonians, as we may see from 2 Kings xxv. 4, 7, 8, 9, and Jer. lii. 7, 13, 19, "And the city was broken up, and all the men fled by night by the way of the gate. They took Zedekiah, and slew his sons before his eyes; and put out his eyes, and bound him with fetters of brass, and carried him to Babylon. And on the second day of the fifth month of the nineteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuzaradan, the captain of the guard, came unto Jerusalem; and he burnt the house of the Lord, and the king's house, and every great man's house; and all the houses of Jerusalem burnt he with fire. And they broke down the walls of Jerusalem round about. And the pillars of brass,—and the bases, and the brasen sea, they broke in pieces, and carried the brass to Babylon. And the pots, shovels, saucers and spoons,—and the fire pans and bowls, and such things as were of gold and silver,—they took away." Thus they broke down, and carried away, and destroyed, this beautiful house;—and, in the true barbarian spirit, neither sanctity, beauty, symmetry, nor elegance of workmanship, was any thing in their eyes. What hammers and axes could ruin was ruined;—Jerusalem was totally destroyed, and its walls laid level with the ground! Well might the Psalmist sigh over such a desolation.

Verse 8. Let us destroy them] Their object was totally to annihilate the political existence of the Jewish people.

They have burned up all the synagogues of God in the land.] It is supposed that there were no synagogues in the land till after the Babylonian captivity. How then could the Chaldeans burn up any in Judea? The word מִדְּבָרֵינוּ middey, which we translate synagogues, may be taken in a more general sense, and mean any places where religious assemblies were held: and that such places and assemblies did exist long before the Babylonian captivity, is pretty evident from different parts of Scripture. It appears that Elisha kept such at his house on the sabbath and new moons. See 2 Kings iv. 23. And perhaps to such St. James may refer, Acts xv. 23, a species of synagogues where the law was read of old, in every city of the land. And it appears that such religious meetings were held at the house of the prophet Ezekiel, chap. xxxiii. 31. And perhaps every prophet's house was such. This is the only place in the Old Testament where we have the word synagogus. Indeed, wherever there was a place in which God met with patriarch or prophet, or any memorial of it was preserved, there was a synagogus, or place of religious meeting;—and all such places the Chaldeans would destroy, pursuant to their design to extinguish the Jewish religion, and blot out all its memorials from the earth. And this was certainly the most likely means to effect their purpose. How soon would Christianity be destroyed in England, if all the churches, chapels, and places of worship, were destroyed; and only the poor of the people left in the land; who, from their circumstances, could not build a place for the worship of God! After such desolation what a miracle was the restoration of the Jews!

Verse 9. We see not our signs] "They have taken away all our trophies; and have left us no memorial that God has been among us. Even Thou Thyself hast left us destitute of all those supernatural evidences that have so often convinced us that Thou wert among us of a truth." But we may say that they were not totally destitute even of these. The preservation of Daniel in the lion's den,—and of the three Hebrews in the fiery furnace;—the metamorphosis of Nebuchadnezzar;—the hand-writing that appeared to Belshazzar; were all so many prodigies and evidences that God had not left them without proofs of His being, and His regard.

There is no more any prophet] That there was not one among them in that place, that could tell them how long that Captivity was yet to endure. But there were prophets in the Captivity. Daniel was one: but his prophecies were confined to one place. Ezekiel was another: but he was among those captives who were by the river Chebar. They had not, as usual, prophets who went to and fro through the land, preaching repentance and remission of sins.

Verse 11. Why withdrawest thou thy hand] It has been remarked, that as the outward habit of the easterns had no sleeves, the hands and arms were frequently covered with the folds of the robe; and, in order to do any thing, the hand must be disentangled and drawn out. The literal version of the Hebrew is: to what time will Thou draw back Thy hand; yea, Thy right hand, from within Thy bosom? Consume: that is, manifest Thy power, and destroy Thy adversaries. I have, in the Introduction to the Book of Psalms, spoken of the old metrical version by Sternhold and Hopkins; and have stated that it was formed from the original Text. A proof of this may be seen by the learned Reader in this and the preceding verse; where, though their version is harsh, and some of their expressions quaint almost to ridicule, yet they have hit the true meaning which our prose translators have missed.

Ver. 10. When wilt Thou once, Lord, end this shame, And cease Thine enemies strife? Shall they always blaspheme Thy name, And rail on Thee so long?

Ver. 11. Why dost Thou draw Thy hand back, And hide it in Thy lap? O, pluck it out, and be not slack, To give Thy foes a rap!

Verse 12. For God is my King of old] We have always acknowledged Thee as our Sovereign; and Thou hast reigned as a King in the midst of our land, dispensing salvation and deliverance from the centre to every part of the circumference.

Verse 13. Thou didst divide the sea] When our fathers came from Egypt.

Thou brakest the heads of the dragons in the waters.] Pharaoh, his captains and all his host, were drowned in the Red sea, when attempting to pursue them.

Verse 14. The heads of leviathan] Leviathan might be intended here as a personification of the Egyptian government; and its heads, Pharaoh and his chief captains. To the people inhabiting the wilderness.] Probably meaning the birds and beasts of prey. These were the people of the wilderness, which fed on the dead bodies of the Egyptians, which the tides had cast ashore. The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, read, Thou hast given him for meat to the Ethiopians, or Abyssinians.

Verse 15. Thou didst cleave the fountain] Thou didst cleave the rock in the wilderness, of which all the congregation drank.

Thou driedst up mighty rivers.] Does not this refer to the cutting off the waters of the Jordan, so that the people passed over dry-shod?

Verse 16. The day is thine, the night also is thine] Thou art the Author of light; and of the sun, which is the means of dispensing it.

17 Thou hast ^d set all the borders of the earth: ^e thou hast ^f made summer and winter.

18 ^g Remember this, that the enemy hath reproached, O Lord, and that ^h the foolish people have blasphemed thy name.

19 O deliver not the soul ⁱ of thy turtle-dove unto the multitude of the wicked: ^k forget not the congregation of thy poor for ever.

20 ^l Have respect unto the covenant: for the dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty.

21 O let not the oppressed return ashamed: let the poor and needy praise thy name.

22 Arise, O God, plead thine own cause: ^m remember how the foolish man reproacheth thee daily.

23 Forget not the voice of thine enemies: the tumult of those that rise up against thee ⁿ increaseth continually.

PSALM LXXV.

The Psalmist praises God for present mercies, 1. The Lord answers, and promises to judge the people righteously, 2, 3. Rebukes the proud and haughty, 4, 5. Shows that all authority comes from Himself, 4-7. First He will punish the wicked, 8. The Psalmist resolves to praise God, 9. And the Most High promises to cast down the wicked, and raise up the righteous, 9, 10.

Verse 17. Thou hast set all the borders of the earth] Thou alone art the Author of all its grand geographical divisions.

Thou hast made summer and winter.] Thou hast appointed that peculiarity in the poise and rotation of the earth, by which the seasons are produced.

Verse 18. Remember this] The Heathen not only deny these things; but give the honour of them to their false gods, and thus blaspheme Thy name.

Verse 19. Deliver not the soul of thy turtle-dove] Thy people Israel are helpless, defenceless, miserable, and afflicted—O, deliver them no longer into the power of their brutal adversaries.

Verse 20. Have respect unto the covenant] חַבְדֵּת לַאֲבֵרֶת. Pay attention to the covenant sacrifice; to that offered by Abraham, Gen. xv. 9, &c. when the contracting parties, God and Abram, passed through between the separated parts of the covenant sacrifice. An indisputable type of Jesus Christ; and of God and man meeting in His sacrificed humanity.

The dark places of the earth] The caves, dens, woods, &c. of the land are full of robbers, cut-throats, and murderers, who are continually destroying Thy people; so that the holy seed seems as if it would be entirely cut off, and the covenant promise thus be rendered void.

The words may either apply to Chaldea, or Judea. Judea was at this time little else than a den of robbers, its own natural inhabitants being removed. Chaldea was infested with hordes of banditti also.

Verse 21. Let not the oppressed return ashamed] Do not permit us to be so diminished, that when, according to Thy promise, we are restored to our own land, we may appear a people, and not a handful of men.

Verse 22. Plead thine own cause] Thy honour is concerned, as well as our safety and salvation. The fool, the idolater, reproacheth thee daily. He boasts of the superiority of his idols, by whose power, he asserts, we are brought under their domination.

Verse 23. Forget not the voice] While we pray to Thee for our own salvation, we call upon Thee to vindicate Thy injured honour: and let all the nations see that Thou lovest Thy followers, and hatest those who are Thy enemies. Let not man prevail against Thee, nor Thine.

ANALYSIS OF THE SEVENTY-FOURTH PSALM.

This Psalm divides itself into two parts:—

I. The Psalmist's complaint, ver. 1-10.

II. His prayer, ver. 10-23.

Both the complaint and petition are summarily comprised in the three first verses; and afterwards amplified throughout the Psalm.

1. He expostulates with God about their calamity.

1. From the Author of it—Thou, O God.

2. From the extremity of it—Cast us not off.

3. From the duration of it—for ever.

4. From the cause—Thy anger smokes against us.

5. From the object of it—the sheep of thy pasture.

To his complaint he subjoins his petition; in which every word has the strength of an argument.

1. Remember thy congregation.—Thy chosen people.

2. Whom thou hast purchased.—by a mighty hand from Pharaoh.

3. Of old.—Thy people ever since Thy covenant with Abraham.

4. The rod of thine inheritance; dwelling in that land which Thou didst measure out to them.

5. Whom thou hast redeemed.—from the Canaanites, &c.

6. This mount Zion, wherein thou hast dwelt.—Where we gave Thee the worship which belonged to the true God; and Thou wert pleased with our sacrifices and services. Remember this people, and all these engagements; and cast us not off for ever.

7. Lift up thy feet.—consider Thy own dishonour;—they are Thy enemies, as well as ours. See what they have done against Thee, Thy temple, Thy ordinances. Look at their blasphemies—and avenge the quarrel of Thy covenant, ver. 3-11.

Consider what Thou hast done for our forefathers.

1. Thou hast been long our King, and Deliverer. See the proofs, ver. 12-15.

2. Thy general providence respects all men. Thou hast given them light;—the sun and moon, the vicissitude of seasons, &c. ver. 16, 17.

II. The Psalmist's prayer:—

1. That God would remember the reproaches of His enemies, ver. 18.

2. That He would deliver the souls of His children, ver. 19.

3. That He would not forget the congregation of the poor, ver. 19.

4. That He would remember his covenant with Abram,—to make them an innumerable people, and a blessing to all mankind, ver. 20.

5. That, when they did return, they might not be a diminished people;—for their enemies were determined to destroy them, ver. 21.

6. That they might be led from all considerations to praise his name, ver. 21.

At the conclusion he urges his petition:—

1. Arise.—plead thine own cause.

2. Remember the foolish.

3. Forget not thine enemies.

4. They make a tumult, and their partisans daily increase, ver. 22, 23.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXV.

The title is, "To the chief musician or conqueror, Al-taschith, destroy not, a Psalm or song of Asaph." See this title Al-taschith explained Psa. lvi. The Chaldee supposes that this Psalm was composed at the time of the pestilence, when David prayed the Lord not to destroy the people. Some of the Jews suppose that Al-taschith is the beginning of a Psalm, to the air of which this Psalm was to be set and sung. The Psalm seems to have been composed during the Captivity; and appears to be a continuation of the subject in the preceding.

Verse 1. Unto thee, O God, do we give thanks] Thou canst not forget Thy people. The numerous manifestations of Thy providence and mercy shew that Thou art not far off, but near:—this Thy wondrous works declare.] These words would make a proper conclusion to the preceding Psalm, which seems to end very abruptly. The second verse is the commencement of the Divine answer to the prayer of Asaph.

Verse 2. When I shall receive the congregation] When the proper time is come that the congregation, my people of Israel, should be brought out of captivity, and received back into favour, I shall not only enlarge them, but punish their enemies. They shall be cut off, and cast out, and become a more miserable people than those whom they now insult. I will destroy them as a nation, so that they shall never more be numbered among the empires of the earth.

Verse 3. The earth and all the inhabitants thereof are dissolved] They all depend on me; and whenever I withdraw the power by which they exist and live, they are immediately dissolved.

I bear up the pillars of it.] By the word of my power all things are upheld;—and without me nothing can subsist. Those who consider this Psalm to have been written by 6 For promotion cometh neither from the east, nor from the west, nor from the south.

7 But God is the Judge; he putteth down one, and setteth up another.

8 For in the hand of the Lord there is a cup, and the wine is red; it is full of mixture: and he poureth out of the same: but the dregs thereof, all the wicked of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them.

9 But I will declare for ever; I will sing praises to the God of Jacob.

10 All the horns of the wicked also will I cut off; but the horns of the righteous shall be exalted.

PSALM LXXXVI.

The true God known in Judah, Israel, Schem, and Zion, 1, 2. A description of His defeat of the enemies of His people, 3-6. How God is to be worshipped, 7-9. He should be considered as the chief Ruler: all the potentates of the earth are subject to Him, 10-12.

To the chief Musician on Neginoth, A Psalm or Song of Asaph.

IN Judah is God known: his name is great in Israel.

o Mech. 1. 21.—[Heb. desert.—p. Ps. 50. 6. & 53. 11.—h. 1 Sam. 2. 7. Dan. 2. 21.—] Job 21. 20. Ps. 67. 3. Jer. 33. 15. Rev. 14. 10. & 16. 13.

h Prov. 23. 30.—1 Sam. 73. 10.—2 Sam. 101. 3. Jer. 48. 25.—n. Ps. 59. 17. & 143. 14. o Or, for Asaph.—p. Ps. 48. 1, &c.

David before he was anointed king over all Israel, understand the words thus:—"All is at present in a state of confusion; violence and injustice reign: but when I shall receive the whole congregation, when all the tribes shall acknowledge me as king, I will re-organize the whole constitution. It is true that the land, and all its inhabitants, are dissolved: unsettled and unconnected by the bands of civil interest. The whole system is disorganized. I bear up the pillars of it;—the expectation of the chief people is placed upon me; and it is the hope they have of my coming speedily to the throne of all Israel that prevents them from breaking out into actual rebellion."

Verse 4. I said unto the fools] I have given the idolatrous Chaldeans sufficient warning to abandon their idols, and worship the true God: but they would not. I have also charged the wicked, to whom for a season I have delivered you because of your transgressions, not to lift up their horn, not to use their power to oppress and destroy. They have, notwithstanding, abused their power in the persecutions with which they have afflicted you. For all these things they shall shortly be brought to an awful account. On the term horn see the Note on Luke i. 69.

Verse 5. Speak not with a stiff neck.] Mr. Bruce has observed that the Abyssinian kings have a horn on their diadem; and that the keeping it erect, or in a projecting form, makes them appear as if they had a stiff neck; and refers to this passage for the antiquity of the usage, and the appearance also.

Verse 6. For promotion cometh neither from the east, &c.] As if the Lord had said, speaking to the Babylonians, None of all the surrounding powers shall be able to help you: none shall pluck you out of my hand. I am the Judge: I will pull you down, and set my afflicted people up, ver. 7.

Catmel has observed that the Babylonians had Medea, Armenia, and Mesopotamia, on the east; and thence came Darius the Mede: that it had Arabia, Phœnicia, and Egypt, on the west; thence came Cyrus, who overthrew the empire of the Chaldeans. And by the mountains of the desert, מִדְבַּר חָרִים midbar harim, which we translate soeris, Persia may be meant; which government was established on the ruins of the Babylonian empire. No help came from any of those powers to the sinful Babylonians: they were obliged to drink the cup of the red wine of God's judgment, even to the very dregs. They were to receive no other punishment: this one was to annihilate them as a people for ever.

Verse 8. It is full of mixture] Alluding to that mingled potion of stupefying drugs given to criminals to drink previous to their execution. See a parallel passage to this, Jer. xxv. 15—26.

Verse 9. I will sing praises to the God of Jacob.] These are the words of the Psalmist, who magnifies the Lord for the promise of deliverance from their enemies.

Verse 10. All the horns of the wicked] All their power and influence, will I cut off: and will exalt and extend the power of the righteous. The Psalmist is said to do these things, because he is as the mouth of God to denounce them. All was punctually fulfilled: the wicked, the Babylonians, were all cut off; the righteous, the Jews, called so from the holy covenant, which required righteousness, were delivered and exalted.

ANALYSIS OF THE SEVENTY-FIFTH PSALM.

Bishop Nicholson supposes that David was the author of this Psalm; and that he composed it on his inauguration, or entrance upon the kingdom: and by it he gives us an example of a good king.

There are three chief parts in this Psalm:—

- I. A doxology, ver. 1, repeated, ver. 9.
- II. His profession how to perform the regal office, ver. 2, 3, 10.
- III. His rebuke of mistakes in foolish men, occasioned,—
 - 1. Partly for their pride when they rise to great places, ver. 4, 5.

2. That they do not consider whence their preferment comes, ver. 6, 7.

3. That they judge not rightly of afflictions, ver. 8.

I. The doxology or thanksgiving.

1. He doubles it to shew that it should be frequently done. Unto thee do we give thanks; unto thee, &c.

2. His reason for it. For that thy name is near.—Thy help is always at hand. The Lord is nigh to all that call upon him.

3. Of which he had experience in his exaltation to the kingdom, which he calls God's wondrous works.

II. How the office of a good king is to be discharged.

1. I will judge uprightly.

2. To rectify disorders. They had need of a just and upright king. 1. The land and its inhabitants were disorganized. 2. He was the only stay and support of the state. I bear up the pillars.

III. His rebuke of bad men.

1. They were fools, and dealt unjustly.

2. Wicked, and vaunted their wealth and power.

3. They used their power to oppress.

4. They were obstinate in their oppression of the poor.

—He refers to their false judgments.

1. They supposed that their authority and influence came by their own merit; and for them they were accountable to none.

2. They did not consider that God was the Author of power, &c.

3. Their third mistake was, they imputed afflictions to a wrong cause, and did not consider that they came from God.

To shew this, the Psalmist uses an elegant comparison, comparing God to the master of a feast, who invites and entertains all kinds of men at his table; who has a cup of mixed wine in his hand, by which he represents the miseries of this life. To all God reaches this cup; and every one drinks of it, some more, some less.

1. In the hand of the Lord there is a cup. He apporitions the afflictions of men.

2. The wine is red. The high-coloured feulent wine, i. e. afflictions.

3. It is full of mixture; not all sour, nor sweet, nor bitter. The strength of it is tempered by God to the circumstances of His creatures.

4. He poureth out of the same. He gives to all; some even to his own children. ALL must drink of this cup.

5. But the lees or dregs of it all the wicked of the earth shall wring out. Those who are incorrigible have afflictions without benefit;—they wring the dregs out. On them God's judgments fall without mitigation.

He concludes the Psalm with—

1. A repetition of his thanks. I will declare for ever; I will sing praises to the God of Jacob.

2. A protestation of his duty. 1. I will cut off the horns of the wicked. 2. I will exalt the horns of the righteous. Those who exalt themselves shall be abased: those who humble themselves shall be exalted.

Tu regere imperio populos, Romana, memento, (Haec tibi erunt artes) parcas imponere mores Parcere subiectis, et debellare superbis. Virg. Æn. lib. vi. vers. 851.

"But, Rome, 'tis thine alone, with awful sway, To rule mankind, and make the world obey; } Disposing peace and war thy own majestic way: } To tame the proud, the fetter'd slave to free: } These are imperial arts, and worthy thee." Dryden.

These lines of the Roman poet, contain precisely the same sentiment that is expressed in the tenth verse of the Psalm. And thus God acts in the government of the world, dealing with nations as they have dealt with others; so the conquerors are conquered: the oppressed raised to honour and dominion.

thanksgiving for the defeat of the Assyrians. The Syriac says it is a thanksgiving for the taking of Rabbah, belonging to the children of Ammon. It is considered by some of the best commentators to have been composed after the defeat of Sennacherib. That it was composed after the death of David, and after the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah were separated, is evident from the first verse. If Asaph was its author, it could not be the Asaph that flourished in the days of David; but some other gifted and divinely inspired man of the same name, by whom several others of the Psalms appear to have been composed during the Captivity.

Verse 1. In Judah is God known] The true God revealed Himself to the Jews. The Israelites, after the separation of the tribes, had the same knowledge: but they greatly corrupted the Divine worship, though still God was great, even in Israel.

Verse 2. In Salem also is his tabernacle] Salem was the ancient name of Jebus, afterwards called Jerusalem. Here was the tabernacle set up: but afterwards, when the temple was built on mount Zion, there was his habitation. The Psalm was evidently composed after the building of Solomon's temple.

Verse 3. There brake he the arrows of the bow] וַיִּשְׁפֹּךְ וַיִּשְׁפֹּךְ the fiery arrows. Arrows, round the heads of which inflammable matter was rolled, and then ignited, were used by the ancients, and shot into towns to set them on fire; and were discharged among the towers and wooden works of besiegers. The Romans called them phalarica; and we find them mentioned by Virgil, Æn. lib. ix. ver. 705.

Sed magnum stridens contorta phalarica venis, Palmiris adde moas.

On this passage Servius describes the phalarica as a dart or spear with a spherical leaden head to which fire was attached. Thrown by a strong hand, it killed those whom it hit; and set fire to buildings, &c. It was called phalarica from the towers called phalac, from which it was generally projected. In allusion to these St. Paul speaks of the fiery darts of the devil, Eph. vi. 16, on which the Reader is requested to refer to the Note.

The shield, and the sword] If this refers to the destruction of Sennacherib's army, it may be truly said that God rendered useless all their warlike instruments, His angel having destroyed 185,000 of them in one night.

Verse 4. Than the mountains of prey.] This is an address to mount Zion. Thou art more illustrious and excellent than all the mountains of prey, i. e. where wild beasts wander, and prey on those that are more helpless than themselves. Zion was the place where God dwelt, — the other mountains were the abode of wild beasts.

Verse 5. The stout-hearted are spoiled] The boasting blasphemers, such as Sennacherib, Rab-shakeh, and their master, the king of Assyria.

They have slept their sleep] They were all asleep in their tent, when the destroying angel, the suffocating wind, destroyed the whole: — they, over whom it passed, never more awoke.

None of the men of might] Is not this a strong irony? Where are your mighty men? their boasted armour? &c.

Verse 6. At thy rebuke] It was not by any human means that this immense army was overthrown: it was by the power of God alone. Not only infantry was destroyed, but the cavalry also.

The chariot and horse] That is, the chariot horses, as well as the men, were Cast into a dead sleep.] Were all suffocated in the same night. On the destruction of this mighty host the reader is requested to refer to the notes on 2 Kings, xix.

Verse 7. Thou, even thou, art to be feared] The Hebrew is simple, but very emphatic. אֲתָּה אֲתָּה אֲתָּה נֹרָא אֲתָּה נֹרָא אֲתָּה, "Thou art terrible: Thou art." The repetition of the pronoun deepens the sense.

When once thou art angry?] Literally, From the time

Thou art angry. In the moment Thy wrath is kindled, in that moment judgment is executed. How awful is this consideration! If one hundred and eighty-five thousand men were, in one moment, destroyed by the wrath of God, canst thou, thou poor, miserable, feeble sinner, resist His will, and turn aside His thunder!

Verse 8. Thou didst cause judgment to be heard] When God declared by His prophet that the enemy should not prevail, but, on the contrary, be destroyed, — the earth, the land, and by metonymy, the inhabitants of the land, were struck with astonishment and terror, so as not to be able to move. The great boaster Sennacherib, who carried terror, dismay, and desolation every where, was now struck dumb with amazement; and the angel of the Almighty, in a moment, stopped the breath of those hosts in which he confided.

Verse 9. The meek of the earth] The humbled or oppressed people of the land. The poor Jews, now utterly helpless, and calling upon the Lord for succour.

Verse 10. Surely the wrath of man shall praise thee] The rage of Sennacherib shall only serve to manifest Thy glory. The stronger he is, and the more he threatens, and the weaker Thy people; the more shall Thy majesty and mercy appear in his destruction, and their support.

The remainder of wrath shall thou restrain] The Hebrew gives rather a different sense. Thou shalt gird thyself with the remainder of wrath. Even, after Thou hast sent this signal destruction upon Sennacherib and his army. Thou wilt continue to pursue the remnant of the persecutors of Thy people: their wrath shall be the cause of the excitement of Thy justice to destroy them. As a man girds himself with his girdle, that he may the better perform his work; so Thou wilt gird Thyself with wrath, that Thou mayest destroy Thy enemies. A good maxim has been taken from this verse: — "God often so counterworks the evil designs of men against His cause and followers, that it turns out to their advantage, and His glory: nor does He permit them to go to the extent of what they have purposed, and of what they are able to perform. He suffers them to do some mischief; but not all they would or can do." But how different is the reading of the Vulgate! Quoniam cogitatio hominis confitebitur tibi: et reliqua cogitationis diem festum agent tibi. "The thought of man shall praise Thee; and the remains of thought shall celebrate a feast day to Thee." The Septuagint and the Æthiopic have understood the Text in the same way. Some translate thus, "Certainly, the ferocity of the man (Sennacherib) shall praise Thee; and Thou shalt gird Thyself with the spoils of the furious." The spoils of this great army shall be a booty for Thy people. Probably, this is the true notion of the place. The old Psalter renders it thus: — For thought of man shall schreife (confess) to thee, and leuyngs (remains) of thought a feast day (fill) the sal work. The paraphrase is curious, of which this is the substance: — "When man forsakes perfitly his syane, and sithen (afterwards) rightwisnesse werks; it is a feste day; whenne the conscience is clered, and makes feste with the swetes of goddes lufe, restand fra beaynes of any creatur in erth: Than is God at hame with his spouse dwelland."

Verse 11. Vow, and pay unto the Lord] Bind yourselves to Him; and forget not your obligations.

Let all that be round about him] All the neighbouring nations, who shall see God's judgments against His enemies, should Bring presents unto Him] Give him that homage which is due unto God.

He ought to be feared.] לֹא מֹרָא la-mora, "to the terrible One" — lest they be consumed as the Assyrians have been only Ruler of princes;" to Him they must account. And a terrible account most of them will have to give to the great God; especially those who, instigated by the lust of dominion, have in the lust of conquest which it generates, laid countries waste by fire and sword; making widows and orphans without number, and extending the empire of desolation and death.

Verse 12. He shall cut off the spirit of princes] Even in the midst of their conquests He can fill them with terror and dismay; or cut them off in their career of victory.

Thus all are under his dominion; and are accountable to Him. Even those whom man cannot bring to justice, God will: and to judge them is one grand use of a final judgment day.

ANALYSIS OF THE SEVENTY-SIXTH PSALM.

In this Psalm there are three parts:—

- I. The prerogative of Judah and Israel, ver. 1, 2.
- II. A narration of God's majesty in the church, ver. 3—11.
- III. An exhortation to worship and serve God.

I. The prerogatives of the Jews above all other nations. 1. God was known among them. In Judah is God known.

2. His name was great in Israel. Illustrious for his manifold deliverances.

3. At Salem was His tabernacle,—His seat of worship, His peculiar presence.

4. His dwelling in Zion. His constant habitation.

II. A narration of God's power and majesty.

He was glorious,—among good men;—more glorious than the mountains of prey; kingdoms acquired by violence, murder, and robbery.

And this glory was manifest in the following particulars:—

- 1. They who came to spoil were spoiled, ver. 5.
- 2. They were slain. They have slept their sleep, ver. 5.
- 3. They could make no head against their destroyer, though they were both numerous and strong. None of the men of might have found their hands, ver. 5.

The cause of their conternation:—

- 1. The rebuke of God, ver. 6.
- 2. He was terrible. None could stand in His sight, ver. 7.

3. He was determinate.—Judgment was heard from heaven, ver. 8. Sennacherib and his host were destroyed.

The effects produced by this were,—

- 1. Praise from the wicked. They shall acknowledge this as the hand of God, ver. 10.
- 2. Victory;—though they rally, and return again to the battle, they shall be routed. The remainder of wrath shall thou restrain, ver. 10. See the Notes.

III. He exhorts all to praise Him. 1. Voice, and pay.

2. Fear and submit to him, ver. 11.

This exhortation he founds on the following reasons:—

- 1. He shall cut off the spirit of princes;—take away from tyrants their prudence and courage.
- 2. He is terrible to the kings of the earth. They also shall know that He is God.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXVII.

The title "To the chief musician (or conqueror) to Jeduthan, A Psalm of Asaph." On this title we may observe that both Asaph and Jeduthan were celebrated singers in the time of David; who, no doubt, were masters or leaders of bands which, long after their times, were called by their names. Hence Psalms composed during and after the captivity have these names prefixed to them. But there is reason to believe also, that there was a person of the name of Asaph in the Captivity at Babylon; for the best judges allow that this Psalm was written during that Captivity. The author must be considered as speaking in the persons of the captive Israelites. It may, however, be adapted to the case of any individual in spiritual distress through strong temptation; or from a sense of the Divine displeasure in consequence of backsliding.

Verse 1. I cried unto God] The repetition here marks the earnestness of the Psalmist's soul: and the word voiced shows that the Psalm was not the issue of private meditation, but of deep mental trouble, which forced him to speak his grief aloud.

Verse 2. My sore ran in the night, and ceased not] This is a most unaccountable translation: the literal meaning of יד יד יד yadi nigerah, which we translate my sore ran, is my hand was stretched out, i. e. in prayer. He continued during the whole night with his voice and hands lifted up to God; and ceased not, even in the midst of great discouragements.

Verse 3. My spirit was overwhelmed.] As the verb is in the Hithpael conjugation, the word must mean my spirit was overpowered in itself. It purposed to involve itself in this calamity. I felt exquisitely for my poor suffering countrymen.

"The generous mind is not confined at home: It spreads itself abroad through all the world, And feels for every member of the land."

Verse 4. Thou holdest mine eyes waking] Literally, Thou keepst the watches of mine eyes: my grief is so great that I cannot sleep.

I am so troubled that I cannot speak.] This shows an increase of sorrow and anguish. At first, he felt his misery, and called aloud. He receives more light, sees and feels his deep wretchedness, and then his words are swallowed up by excessive distress. His woes are too big for utterance. "Small troubles are loquacious: the great are dumb." Cura leves loquuntur; ingentes stupent.

Verse 5. I have considered the days of old] חשבתו chashabti, I have counted up; I have reckoned up the various dispensations of Thy mercy on the behalf of the distressed, marked down in the history of our fathers.

Verse 6. I call to remembrance my song in the night] I do not think that שיר נגינתי, means my song. We know that שיר נגינתי, signifies some stringed musical instrument that was struck with a plectrum: but here it possibly might be applied to the Psalm that was played on it. But it appears to me rather, that the Psalmist here speaks of the circumstances of composing the short ode contained in the seventh, eighth, and ninth verses; which, it is probable, he sung as a kind of dirge to his harp; if, indeed, he had one in that distressful captivity.

My spirit made diligent search] The verb שחפא, signifies such an investigation as a man makes who is obliged to strip himself in order to do it. Or, to lift up coverings,—to search fold by fold;—or, in our phrase, to leave no stone unturned. The Vulgate translates it scopebam spiritum meum. As scopebam is no pure Latin word, it may probably be taken from the Greek σκαπτα, scopeo, "to look about, to consider attentively." It is, however, used by no author but St. Jerom; and by him only here, and in Isa. xiv. 22. And I will sweep it with the besom of destruction; scopeo eam in scopis terens. Hence we see that he has formed a verb from the noun scopea; a sweeping brush or besom; and this sense my old Psalter follows in this place, translating the passage thus:—אניף א' שופעתי מג' גאט—which is thus paraphrased,—and awa I swept my gate, (I swept my soul) that is, I purged it of all filth.

Verse 7. Will the Lord cast off for ever?] Will there be no end to this Captivity? Has He not said, Turn, ye backsliders; for I am married unto you: I will heal your backsliding, and love you freely. Will he then be favourable no more? Thus he pleads and reasons with his Maker.

Verse 8. For evermore] לדור לדור le-dor va-dor, "to generation and generation." From race to race; shall no mercy be shewn even to the remotest generation of the children of the offenders?

Verse 9. Hath God—in anger shut up his tender mercies?] The tender mercies of God are the source whence all his kindness to the children of men flows. The metaphor here is taken from a spring; the mouth of which is closed, so that its waters can no longer run in the same channel; but, being confined, break out, and take some other course. Wilt Thou take Thy mercy from the Israelites, and give it to some other people? This He most certainly did. He took it from the Jews, and gave it to the Gentiles.

Verse 10. And I said, This is my infirmity] The Hebrew is very obscure, and has been differently translated. עָוֹן עֲוֹן עֲוֹן עֲוֹן עֲוֹן עֲוֹן aa-omar challoti hi shenoth yemin elion. "And I said, Is this my weakness? Years the right hand of the Most High." If עֲוֹן challoti comes from עָוֹן chalah, and signifies to pray, as De Dieu has thought, then his translation may be proper: Precari, hoc meum est: mutare dextram Altissimi, "To pray, this is my business: to change the right hand of the Most High." I can do nothing else than pray; God is the Ruler of events. Mr. N. M. Berlin translates, "Dolere meum hoc est; mutare est dextra Altissimi." "To grieve is my portion: to change (my condition) belongs to the right hand of the Most High. Here עֲוֹן shenoth, which we translate years, is derived from עָוֹן sanah, to change. This latter appears to me the better translation: the sum of the meaning is, "I am in deep distress; the Most High alone can change my condition." The old Psalter, following the Vulgate, Et dixi: nunc cessi: hoc mutatio dextera Excelsi, translates, אָנֹכִי חָסַד, נֹמֵר חָסַד began this chaunchyng of myght hand of blyghst (highest) Alewra say, God sal nogt kast al man kynde fra his sigt with outen ende: for nowe I began to understand the syker; (the truth) that man sal be brogt to endles; and thar fore, now I said, that this chaunchyng fra wreth to mercy, is thrugh Ihu Criste that chaunges me fra ill to gude, fra noy to gladnes.

Once more, Coverdale (who is followed by Mathews and Becke) takes the passage by storm: At last I came to this paynte, that I thought: O why art thou so foolish? The right hande of the Most Hyest can chaunge all.

Verse 11. I will remember the works of the Lord] I endeavour to recollect what Thou hast done in behalf of our fathers in past times: in no case hast Thou cast them off, when, with humbled hearts, they sought Thy mercy.

Verse 13. Thy way—is in the sanctuary] See Psa. lxxiii. 17. I must go to the sanctuary now to get comfort, as I went before to get instruction. What a mercy to have the privilege of drawing near to God in His ordinances! How many doubts have been solved, fears dissipated, hearts comforted, darknesses dispelled, and snares broken, while waiting on God in the means of grace!

Some understand the words, Thy way is in holiness. All Thy dispensations, words, and works, are holy, just, and true. And as is Thy majesty, so is Thy mercy!—O, who is so great a God as our God!

Verse 14. Thou—doest wonders] Every act of God, whether in nature or grace, in creation or providence, is wondrous: surpasses all power but His own; and can be comprehended only by His own wisdom. To the general observer His strength is most apparent; to the investigator of nature His wisdom; and to the genuine Christian His mercy and love.

Verse 15. The sons of Jacob and Joseph.] "The sons which Jacob begat, and Joseph nourished," says the Chaldee. The Israelites are properly called the sons of Joseph as well as of Jacob, seeing Joseph and Manasse, his sons, were taken into the number of the tribes. All the latter part of this Psalm refers to the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt: and the Psalmist uses this as an argument to excite the expectation of the captives. As God delivered our fathers from Egypt, so we may expect Him to deliver us from Chaldea. It required His arm to do the former; and that arm is not shortened that it cannot save.

Verse 16. The waters saw thee] What a fine image! He represents God approaching the Red sea; and the waters, seeing Him, took fright, and ran off before Him; and divided to the right and left to let Him pass. I have not found any thing more majestic than this.

The depths also were troubled.] Every thing appears here to have life and perception. The waters saw the Almighty; did not wait for His coming, but in terror fled away! the deeps, uncovered, are astonished at the circumstance; and, as they cannot fly, they are filled with trouble and dismay. Under the hand of such a poet, inanimate nature springs into life: all thinks, speaks, acts; all is in motion, and the dismay is general.

Verse 17. The clouds poured out water] It appears from this that there was a violent tempest at the time of the passage of the Red sea. There was a violent storm of thunder, lightning, and rain. These three things are distinctly marked here. 1. The skies sent out a sound: the THUNDER. 2. Thine arrows went abroad: the LIGHTNING. 3. The clouds poured out water: the RAIN. In the next verse we have, 4. AN EARTHQUAKE: the earth trembled and shook, ver. 18.

Verse 19. Thy way is in the sea] Thou didst walk through the sea,—Thy path was through a multitude of waters.

Thy footsteps are not known.] It was evident from the effects that God was there: but His track could not be discovered. Still he is the Infinite Spirit, without parts, limits, or passions. No object of sense.

Verse 20. Thou leddest thy people like a flock] This may refer to the pillar of cloud and fire. It went before them, and they followed it. So, in the eastern countries, the shepherd does not drive, but leads, his flock. He goes before them to find them pasture, and they regularly follow him.

By the hand of Moses and Aaron.] They were God's agents; and acted, in civil and sacred things, just as directed by the Most High.

ANALYSIS OF THE SEVENTY-SEVENTH PSALM. In this PSALM the prophet shews the bitter agony which a troubled spirit undergoes from a sense of God's displeasure; and the comfort which it afterwards receives through faith in His promises.

There are two parts in this Psalm:— I. The Psalmist sets forth the strife between the flesh and the spirit: and how the flesh tempts to despair, and calls in question the goodness of God, ver. 1—10.

II. Next, he shews the victory of the spirit over the flesh; being raised, encouraged, and confirmed, by the nature, promises, and works, of God, ver. 11—20.

This is an excellent Psalm, and of great use in spiritual desertions.

I. The strife. The prophet betakes himself to God. 1. He prays. 2. Prays often. 3. Prays earnestly. 4. And with a troubled soul. The Psalm is, therefore, not the expression of a despairing soul, but of one that has a great conflict with temptation.

Though he complains, yet he despairs not. 1. His complaint is bitter, and he sets down how he was exercised.

1. He found no intermission;—day and night he was in distress. His voice was continually lifted up, and his hands constantly stretched out to God in prayer. When no man saw him, he prayed. His complaint was in secret, and far from hypocrisy, which always loves to have witnesses.

2. He refused to be comforted, ver. 2. 3. Even the remembrance of God troubled him, ver. 3. 4. His soul was overwhelmed, ver. 3. 5. He became at last speechless through grief, ver. 4. 6. All sleep departed from him, ver. 4.

x. He shews that his grief was aggravated by a consideration of the happiness he once enjoyed, and had lost.

1. I have considered the days of old, ver. 5. 2. He could rejoice in and praise God, ver. 6. 3. But now, on diligent search, all good is gone, ver. 6. 4. His debate between hope and despair, which leads him to break out in the following interrogations. 1. Will the Lord cast off for ever? 2. Will he be favourable no

PSALM LXXVIII.

An commemoration of the principal effects of the goodness of God to His people, 1-16. Of their rebellions and punishment, 17-33. Their feigned repentance, 34-37. God's compassion towards them, 38, 39. Their backsliding, and forgetfulness of His mercy, 40-42. The plagues which he brought upon the Egyptians, 43-51. The deliverance of His own people, and their repeated ingratitude and disobedience 52-55. Their punishment, 56-61. God's wrath against their adversaries, 62, 65. His rejection of the tribes of Israel, and His choice of the tribe of Judah, and of David to be king over His people 62-72.

XV. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

• Maschil of Asaph.

GIVE ear, O my people, to my law: incline your ears to the words of my mouth.

2 I will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark sayings of old:

3 Which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us.

4 We will not hide them from their children, shewing to the generation to come the praises of the LORD, and his strength, and his wonderful works that he hath done.

5 For he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, that they should make them known to their children:

6 That the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their children:

7 That they might set their hope in God, and more? 3. Is His mercy clean gone? 4. Doth His promise fail? 5. Hath God forgotten to be gracious? 6. Hath He in anger shut up His tender mercies? ver. 7, 8, 9.

II. How he is restored. 1. He begins with a correction of himself. I said, This is my infirmity, ver. 10. 2. Takes encouragement from a remembrance,— 1. Of God's ways. I will remember—the right hand of the Most High, ver. 10. 2. Of His works.—I will remember thy wonders of old, ver. 11. 3. On these he will meditate and discourse, ver. 12. 1. He then addresses his speech to God; whom he understands to be sought in His sanctuary, ver. 13. 2. And who is infinitely great and good, ver. 13. 3. Who has declared His strength among the people, ver. 14. 4. And particularly to the descendants of Jacob, ver. 15. III. He amplifies the story of their deliverance from Egypt by several instances of God's power. 1. In the RED SEA. The waters saw thee, ver. 16. 2. In the HEAVENS. The clouds poured out water, ver. 17. 3. In the EARTH. The earth trembled and shook, ver. 18. IV. The final cause of all was that He might lead His people out of their bondage, and destroy their enemies, ver. 19, 20.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXVIII.

The title, Maschil of Asaph; or, according to the margin, A Psalm for Asaph to give instruction; contains nothing particular. The Arabic has, A sermon from Asaph to the people. The Psalm was probably not written by David, but after the separation of the ten tribes of Israel, and after the days of Rehoboam; and before the Babylonish captivity, for the temple was still standing, ver. 69. Calmet supposes that it was written in the days of Aza, who had gained, by the aid of the Syrians, a great victory over the Israelites; and brought back to the pure worship of God many out of the tribes of Ephraim, Manasseh, and Simeon. See 2 Chron. xv. and xvi.

Verse 1. Give ear, O my people] This is the exordium of this very pathetic and instructive discourse.

Verse 2. In a parable] Or, I will give you instructions by numerous examples; see Psa. xlii. 1-4, which bears a great similarity to this; and see the Notes there. The term parable, in its various acceptations, has already been sufficiently explained: but yet machal may here mean example, as opposed to nora torah, law, or precept, ver. 1.

Verse 3. Which we have heard and known] We have heard the law, and known the facts.

Verse 4. We will not hide them] In those ancient times there was very little reading, because books were exceedingly scarce; tradition was, therefore, the only, or nearly the only, means of preserving the memory of past events. They were handed down from father to son by parables, or pithy sayings, and by chronological poems. This very Psalm is of this kind; and must have been very useful to not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments:

8 And I might not be as their fathers, a stubborn and rebellious generation; a generation that set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not steadfast with God.

9 The children of Ephraim, being armed, and carrying bows, turned back in the day of battle.

10 They kept not the covenant of God, and refused to walk in his law;

11 And forgot his works, and his wonders that he had shewed them.

12 Marvellous things did he in the sight of their fathers, in the land of Egypt, in the field of Zoan.

13 He divided the sea, and caused them to pass through: and he made the waters to stand as an heap.

14 In the daytime also he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire.

15 He clave the rocks in the wilderness, and gave them drink as out of the great depths.

16 He brought streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.

17 And they sinned yet more against him by provoking the Most High in the wilderness.

18 And they tempted God in their heart, by asking meat for their lust.

the Israelites, as giving instruction in their ancient history, and recounting the wonderful deeds of the Almighty in their behalf.

Verse 5. A testimony in Jacob] This may signify the various ordinances, rites, and ceremonies, prescribed by the Law; and the word law may mean the moral law, or system of religious instruction, teaching them their duty to God, to their neighbour, and to themselves. These were commanded to the fathers, the patriarchs, and primitive Hebrews, that they should make them known to their children,—who should make them known to the generation that was to come,—whose children should also be instructed that they might declare them to their children, to the end that their hope might be in God, that they might not forget His works, and might keep His commandments: that they might not be as their fathers, but have their heart right and their spirit steadfast with God, ver. 6-8. Five generations appear to be mentioned above,—1. Fathers; 2. Their children; 3. The generation to come; 4. And their children; 5. And their children. They were never to lose sight of their history through all their generations. Some think the testimony here may mean the tabernacle.

Verse 9. The children of Ephraim—turned back] This refers to some defeat of the Ephraimites; and some think to that by the men of Gath, mentioned 1 Chron. vii. 21. R. D. Kimchi says this defeat of the Ephraimites was in the desert; and although the story be not mentioned in the Law, yet it is written in the Books of the Chronicles, where we read, on the occasion of Zabab the Ephraimite, and Shuthela, &c. whom the men of Gath, who were born in the land, slew; and Ephraim their father mourned many days, and his brethren came to comfort him, 1 Chron. vii. 20-22: but to what defeat of the Ephraimites this refers is not certainly known; probably the Israelites, after the division of the two kingdoms, are intended.

Verse 10. They kept not the covenant of God] They abandoned His worship, both moral and ritual. They acted like the Ephraimites in the above case, who threw down their bows and arrows, and ran away.

Verse 12. The field of Zoan.] "In campo Tanee,"—Vulgate. Tanis was the capital of Pharaoh, where Moses wrought so many miracles. It was situated in the Delta, on one of the most easterly branches of the Nile. It was afterwards called Thanis; and from it the district was called the Thanitic Canton. See Calmet. Dr. Shaw thinks Zoan was intended to signify Egypt in general.

Verse 13. He divided the sea, and caused them to pass through] The Reader is requested to consult the Notes on the parallel passages marked in the margin on this verse and verses 14, 15, 16, 17, &c. where all these miracles are largely explained.

Verse 18. By asking meat for their lust.] swab lo-naphsham, "for their souls," i. e. for their lives;—for they said in their hearts that the light bread, the manna, was not sufficient to sustain their natural force, and pre-

19 ^b Yea, they spake against God; they said, Can God ^c furnish a table in the wilderness?

20 ^d Behold, he smote the rock, that the waters gushed out, and the streams overflowed; can he give bread also? can he provide flesh for his people?

21 Therefore the Lord heard this, and ^e was wroth: so a fire was kindled against Jacob, and anger also came up against Israel;

22 Because they ^f believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation:

23 Though he had commanded the clouds from above, ^g and opened the doors of heaven,

24 ^h And had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven.

25 ⁱ Man did eat angels' food: he sent them meat to the full.

26 ^j He caused an east wind ^k to blow in the heaven: and by his power he brought in the south wind.

27 He rained flesh also upon them as dust, and ^l feathered fowls like as the sand of the sea:

28 And let it fall in the midst of their camp, round about their habitations.

29 ^m So they did eat, and were well filled: for he gave them their own desire;

30 They were not estranged from their last. But ⁿ while their meat was yet in their mouths,

31 The wrath of God came upon them, and slew the fattest of them, and ^o smote down the ^p chosen men of Israel.

32 For all this ^q they sinned still, and ^r believed not for his wondrous works.

33 ^s Therefore their days did he consume in vanity, and their years in trouble.

34 ^t When he slew them, then they sought him: and they returned and inquired early after God.

35 And they remembered that ^u God was their rock, and the high God ^v their Redeemer.

36 Nevertheless they did ^w flatter him with their mouth, and they lied unto him with their tongues.

37 For ^x their heart was not right with him, neither were they steadfast in his covenant.

38 ^y But he, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not: yea, many a time ^z turned he his anger away, ^{aa} and did not stir up all his wrath.

39 For ^{ab} he remembered ^{ac} that they were but flesh; ^{ad} a wind that passeth away, and cometh not again.

serve their lives. It seems, however, from the expression, that they were wholly carnal; that they had no spirituality of mind; they were earthly, animal, and desitish.

Verse 22. They believed not in God] After all the miracles they had seen, they were not convinced that there was a Supreme Being! and consequently, they did not trust in his salvation; did not expect the glorious rest which he had promised them. Their descendants in the present day are precisely in this state. Multitudes of them disbelieve the Divine origin of their Law, and have given up all hopes of a Messiah.

Verse 24. The corn of heaven.] The manna. It fell about their camp in the form of seeds; and, as it appeared to come down from the clouds, it was not improperly termed heavenly corn, or heavenly grain, מן דגן degan shamayim. The word shamayim is frequently taken to express the atmosphere.

Verse 25. Man did eat angels' food] לֶחֶם אֱבִירִים אֶלֶּי אִישׁ lechem abirim acal aish, "Man did eat the bread of the mighty ones"; or, each person ate, &c. They ate such bread as could only be expected at the tables of the rich and great;—the best, the most delicate food. How little did this gross people know of the sublime excellence of that which they called light bread, and which they said their soul loathed. Numb. xxi. 5. It was a type of Jesus Christ, for so says St. Paul. They all ate the same spiritual meat, and drank the same spiritual drink, &c. I Cor. x. 3, 4. And our Lord calls himself the Bread that came down from heaven, that giveth life unto the world, John x. 31—35; but a Jew sees nothing but with the eyes of flesh. It is true their doctors, or rabbins, are full of allegories, mysteries, and conceits; but they are, in general, such as would disgrace the Cabinet des Fees, and would not be tolerated in the nursery. O how thick a veil hangs over their gross and hardened hearts!

Verse 26. He caused an east wind to blow] See the Note on Numb. xi. 31.

Verse 32. For all this they sinned still] How astonishing is this! They were neither drawn by mercies, nor cured by judgments! But we shall cease to wonder at this, if we have a thorough acquaintance with our own hearts.

Verse 33. Their days did he consume in vanity] By causing them to wander forty years in the Wilderness, vainly expecting an end to their labour, and the enjoyment of the promised rest, which, by their rebellions, they had forfeited.

Verse 34. When he slew them] While His judgments were upon them, then they began to humble themselves, and deprecate His wrath. When they saw some fall, the rest began to tremble.

Verse 35. That God was their rock] They recollected in their affliction that Jehovah was their Creator, and their Father;—the Rock, the Source, not only of their being, but of all their blessings; or, that He was their sole Protector. And the high God their Redeemer] מֶלֶךְ עֵלְיוֹן אֱלֹהֵי עֹלָם elohim gasham. "And the strong God, the Most High, their Kingman." That One who possessed the right of redemption; the nearest a-kin to him who had forfeited his inheritance:—so the word originally means, and hence it is often used for a redeemer. The Hebrew word ba' goel answers to the Greek sworn, a saviour; and is given to the Lord Jesus Christ, the strong God, the Most High, the Redeemer of a lost world. After this verse there is the following Masoretic note: מֵסָר חֵטְאֵי חַשְׁפֵּהר, "The middle of the book." And thus the Reader has arrived at the middle of the Psalter, a book for excellence unparalleled.

Verse 36. Nevertheless they did flatter him with their mouth.] What idea could such people have of God, whom they supposed they could thus deceive? They promised well,—they called Him their God, and their fathers' God; and told Him how good, and kind, and merciful, He had been to them. Thus, their mouth flattered Him. And they said, Whatever the Lord their God commanded them to do, that they would perform.

And they lied unto Him.] I think the Vulgate gives the true sense of the Hebrew:—Dixerunt eum in ore suo; et lingua sub mentis eunt ei.—"They loved Him with their mouth; and they lied unto Him with their tongue." "That is," says the old Psalter, "thai sayde thai lufed God, bot thai lighed, als thair dedes schewes: for thai do nocht als thai hight; for when God ceses to make man rad; than cesse thai to do wele."

Verse 37. Their heart was not right] When the heart is wrong, the life is wrong: and because their heart was not right with God; therefore, they were not faithful in His covenant.

Verse 38. But he, being full of compassion] Feeling for them, as a father for his children,— Forgave their iniquity] יָעָפֵר yeapher, made an atonement for their iniquity.

And did not stir up all his wrath] Though they often grieved His Spirit, and rebelled against Him, yet he seldom punished them; and, when He did chastise them, it was as a tender and merciful father. He did not stir up all his wrath,—the punishment was much less than the iniquity deserved.

Verse 39. He remembered that they were but flesh] Weak mortals. He took their feeble perishing state always into consideration, and knew how much they needed the whole of their state of probation; and, therefore, He bore with them to the uttermost. How merciful is God!

A wind that passeth away, and cometh not again.] I believe this to be a bad translation, and may be productive of error; as if, when a man dies, his being were ended, and death were an eternal sleep. The original is רֵיחַ מַיִם רוּחַ חֹלֶק, ruach holes, ve-lo yashub; and the translation should be,—the spirit goeth away, and it doth not return. The present life is the state of probation: when, therefore, the flesh, the body, fails, the spirit goeth away into the eternal world, and returneth not hither again.—Now, God being full of compassion, spared them, that their salvation might be accomplished before they went into that state where there is no change; where the pure are pure still,

60 * So that he forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which he placed among men;
 61 * And delivered his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemy's hand.
 62 * He gave his people over also unto the sword; and was wroth with his inheritance.
 63 The fire consumed their young men; and their maidens were not given to marriage.

the instrument in question. On the refovo θησις of Homer I have written a dissertation elsewhere. The image is very correct; these Israelites, when brought out of their natural bent, soon recoiled, and relapsed into their former state.

Verse 60. He forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh] The Lord, offended with the people, and principally with the priests, who had profaned His holy worship, gave up his ark into the hands of the Philistines. And so true it is that He forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, that He never returned to it again. See 1 Sam. vi. 1. 2 Sam. vi. 1 Kings viii. 1; where the several removals of the ark are spoken of, and which explain the remaining part of this Psalm. Because God suffered the Philistines to take the ark, it is said, ver. 61, He delivered his strength into captivity, and his glory into the enemy's hand; and ver. 67, that He refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the tribe of Ephraim: for Shiloh was in the tribe of Ephraim the son of Joseph; and God did not suffer His ark to return thither, but to go to Kirjath-Jearim, which was in the tribe of Benjamin; from thence to the house of Obed-Edom; and so to Zion in the tribe of Judah, as it follows, ver. 68.

The tabernacle which Moses had constructed in the wilderness, remained at Shiloh, even after the ark was taken by the Philistines, and afterwards sent to Kirjath-Jearim. From Shiloh it was transported to Nob; afterwards to Gibeah, apparently under the reign of Saul; and it was there at the commencement of Solomon's reign, for this prince went thither to offer sacrifices, 1 Kings iii. 4. From the time in which the temple was built, we know not what became of the tabernacle of Moses: it was probably laid up in some of the chambers of the temple. See Calmet.

Verse 63. Their maidens were not given to marriage.] לוליהן הלוליהן hullahin, were not celebrated with marriage songs.

Verse 64. Their priests fell by the sword] חופני ופינעה Hophni and Phineas, who were slain in that unfortunate battle against the Philistines, in which the ark of the Lord was taken. 1 Sam. iv. 11.

A Chaldee targum on this passage says, "In the time in which the ark of the Lord was taken by the Philistines, Hophni and Phineas, the two priests, fell by the sword at Shiloh: and when the news was brought, their wives made no lamentation, for they both died the same day."

Verse 65. Then the Lord awaked] He seemed as if He had totally disregarded what was done to His people, and the reproach that seemed to fall upon Himself and His worship by the capture of the ark.

Like a mighty man] כגבור ke-gibbor, like a hero that shouteth by reason of wine. One who, going forth to meet his enemy, having taken a sufficiency of wine to refresh himself, and become a proper stimulus to his animal spirits, shouts, gives the war-signal for the onset; impatient to meet the foe, and sure of victory. The idea is not taken from the case of a drunken man. A person in such a state would be very unfit to meet his enemy, and could have little prospect of conquest.

Verse 66. He smote his enemies in the hinder part] This refers to the hemorrhoids with which He afflicted the Philistines. See the Note on 1 Sam. v. 6—10.

Verse 67. He refused the tabernacle of Joseph] See the Note on ver. 60.

Verse 69. He built his sanctuary like high palaces] במקום כמו רמנים ramim, which several of the Versions understand of the monoceros, or rhinoceros. The temple of God at Jerusalem was the only one in the land; and stood as prominent on Mount Zion as the horn of the unicorn or rhinoceros does upon his snout. And there He established His ark, to go no more out as long as the temple should last. Before this time it was in a frequent migratory state;

67 Moreover he refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the tribe of Ephraim:
 68 But chose the tribe of Judah, the mount Zion which he loved.
 69 And he * built his sanctuary like high palaces, like the earth which he hath * established for ever.
 70 * He chose David also his servant, and took him from among the sheepfolds:
 71 * From following the * ewes great with young, he brought him * to feed Jacob his people, and Israel his inheritance.
 72 So he fed them according to the * integrity of his heart; and guided them by the skillfulness of his hands.

Verse 70. He chose David] See the account, 1 Sam. xvi. 11, &c.

Verse 71. From following the ewes] Instances of this kind are not unfrequent in the ancient Greek and Roman history. Cresus said that Gyges, who was the first of his race, was a stave, and rose to sovereignty, succeeding his predecessor, of whose sheep he had been the pastor.

Verse 72. So he fed them] Here David is mentioned as having terminated his reign. He had fed the people, according to the integrity of his heart; for that was ever disposed to do the will of God in the administration of the kingdom: and his hand being skilful in war, he always led them out to victory against their enemies.

ANALYSIS OF THE SEVENTY-EIGHTH PSALM.

The Psalmist, considering that it is God's command that His works be not forgotten, but that the father should deliver his former doings to posterity that they might be to them both comfort and instruction, deter them from sin, and persuade them to fear God,—gives, in this Psalm, a long catalogue of God's dealings with His people, even from their coming out of Egypt to the conclusion of the reign of David.

There are three principal parts in this Psalm:—

I. A preface, in which the Psalmist exhorts men to learn and declare the way of God; ver. 1—9.

II. A continued narrative of God's administration among the people, and their stubbornness, disobedience, and contumacy; together with the punishments which God inflicted upon them, ver. 9—67.

III. His mercy, manifested in the midst of judgment;—that He did not cut them off, but, after the rejection of Ephraim, (Israel) made choice of Judah, Zion and David.

I. In the PREFACE, or exordium, he labours to gain attention. Give ear, O my people, ver. 1.

1. Shows that he is about to deliver doctrines and precepts from heaven. It is God's law, and it should be heard:—1. For its excellence, ver. 2. 2. For its certainty, ver. 3.

2. He shews the end, which is another argument for attention. 1. It must not be hidden from their children, that God might be praised, ver. 4. 2. And His power magnified; and, 3. His people edified, ver. 5.

Then follow the duties of their children, which are three:—1. That they might know God,—His law,—His works, ver. 6. 2. That they might trust in Him, ver. 7. 3. That they might be obedient, ver. 8.

II. THE NARRATION. Their fathers were stubborn and rebellious, of which he gives several examples:—

1. In Ephraim. They turned back in the day of battle, ver. 9.

2. They kept not the covenant of God, ver. 10.

3. They forgot his works in Egypt, ver. 11.

The Psalmist extends his narrative; and shews,—

1. God's goodness. 2. Israel's obstinacy. 3. Their punishment.

1. His goodness in bringing them out of Egypt in such a marvellous way, ver. 12. 1. He divided the Red sea, ver. 13. 2. He made the waters to stand as an heap, ver. 13.

1. His care in guiding them. 1. In the day-time by a cloud, ver. 14. 2. In the night by fire, ver. 14.

2. His love in providing for them. 1. He clave the rock that they might have water, ver. 15. 2. He caused these waters to follow them as rivers, ver. 16. 3. And thus they had an abundant supply, ver. 16.

II. Israel's obstinacy. 1. They sinned. 2. More and more. 3. Provoked the Holy One of Israel, ver. 17, 18.

They were incredulous. 1. They tempted God by desiring other supplies than PSALM LXXIX.

The Psalmist complains of the cruelty of his enemies, and the desolations of Jerusalem, and prays against them, 1-7. He prays for the peace and restoration of his people, and promises gratitude and obedience, 8-13.

XVI. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

A Psalm of Asaph.

O GOD, the heathen are come into thine inheritance; thy holy temple have they defiled; they have laid Jerusalem on heaps.

2. The dead bodies of thy servants have they given to be meat unto the fowls of the heaven, the flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth.

3. Their blood have they shed like water round about Jerusalem; and there was none to bury them.

4. We are become a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and derision to them that are round about us.

5. How long, LORD? wilt thou be angry for ever? shall thy jealousy burn like fire?

6. Pour out thy wrath upon the heathen that have not known thee, and upon the kingdoms that have not called upon thy name.

7. For they have devoured Jacob, and laid waste his dwelling-place.

8. O remember not against us former iniquities.

His providences had designed. He gave them manna; they would have flesh.

2. They questioned His power, ver. 19.

3. They were foolishly impatient; and must have immediately whatever they thought proper, else they murmured. 1. They said, He smote the rock, and the water gushed out. 2. But can he give bread also? ver. 20.

m. Their punishment. 1. The Lord was wroth, ver. 21. 2. A fire was kindled. 3. Because they believed him not, nor trusted in His salvation, ver. 22.

He provided manna for them; an especial blessing on various considerations.

1. It came from heaven, ver. 23.

2. It came abundantly. He rained it down, ver. 24.

3. It was most excellent. Man did eat angels' food, ver. 25.

Wearied of this, they desired flesh. In this also God heard them. 1. He brought quails. 2. In abundance. 3. Brought them to, and about, the camp, so that they had no labour to find them, ver. 25, 26, 28. 4. They were all gratified with them, ver. 29.

See God's justice in their punishment, and the cause of it. 1. They were not estranged from their lust, ver. 30. 2. His wrath came upon them. 3. It came suddenly. 4. It slew them. 5. Even the chief of them, ver. 31.

See their sin notwithstanding. 1. For all this, they sinned yet more. 2. They were incredulous, ver. 32. 3. He caused them to consume their days in vanity. 4. And their years (forty long years) in trouble, ver. 33.

They began apparently to relent. 1. They sought Him. 2. They returned. 3. They sought after God. 4. They remembered that He was their Rock. 5. And the Most High their Redeemer, ver. 34, 35.

But in this, their apparent amendment, they were guilty.—1. Of hypocrisy, ver. 36. 2. Of insincerity, ver. 37. 3. Of instability. They were not steadfast in his covenant, ver. 37.

On a review of this the prophet extols the goodness of God that bore with such a people.

1. He opened to them the fountain of mercy. He being full of compassion.

2. He displayed an act of this mercy. He forgave their iniquity.

3. Though he punished in a measure, yet He restrained His vindictive justice, and destroyed them not, ver. 38.

His motives for his tenderness:—1. He remembered that they were but flesh. 2. That their probation once ended, their state was fixed for ever, ver. 39. See the Note.

He proceeds with the story of their rebellions. 1. They provoked Him often in the wilderness. 2. They grieved Him in the desert, ver. 40. 3. They returned to sin. Tempted Him. 4. Insulted Him. 5. And forgot all his past mercies, ver. 41, 42, 43. More particularly,—1. They remembered not His hand, ver. 42. 2. Nor His signs in Egypt, ver. 44.

The wonders which He wrought in Egypt. Five of the plagues mentioned:—

First plague. He turned their rivers into blood, ver. 44.

Fourth plague. He sent divers flies, ver. 45.

Second plague. The frogs destroyed them, ver. 45.

Eighth plague. The locusts, ver. 46.

Seventh plague. Their vines, &c. were destroyed, ver. 47.

1. He cast upon them the fierceness of His wrath. 2. Sent evil angels among them. 3. And made a path for his anger, ver. 48.

The first plague. He gave their life to the pestilence, ver. 50.

The last plague. He slew their first-born, ver. 51.

He now gives a recital of God's mercy in the following particulars:—

1. He brought His people through the Red sea, ver. 52.

2. He guided them as a flock.

3. He kept them in safety, ver. 53.

4. He did not suffer them still to wander, but brought them,—1. To the borders of his sanctuary. 2. Even to Mount Zion. 3. Cast out the heathen before them. 4. And divided them an inheritance by lot, ver. 54, 55.

Yet still, 1. They tempted and provoked him. 2. Kept not his testimonies. 3. Turned aside from his worship. 4. Were unfaithful. 5. And idolatrous, ver. 56-58.

For this,—1. God's wrath grows more hot against the people. 2. He greatly abhorred Israel. 3. Forsook the tabernacle. 4. Delivered up the ark. 5. Gave the people to the sword. 6. Gave up the priests to death. 7. And brought upon them general desolation, ver. 59-64.

Once more, God—1. Remembers them in mercy. 2. Fixes His tabernacle among them. 3. Chooses David to be their king. 4. During the whole of whose days they had prosperity in all things, ver. 65-72.

Behold here the goodness and severity of God. Reader, learn wisdom by what those have suffered.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXIX.

The title, A Psalm of Asaph, must be understood as either applying to a person of the name of Asaph who lived under the Captivity; or else to the family of Asaph, or to a band of singers still bearing the name of that Asaph who flourished in the days of David; for most undoubtedly the Psalm was composed during the Babylonish Captivity, when the city of Jerusalem lay in heaps, the temple defiled, and the people in a state of captivity. David could not be its author. Some think it was composed by Jeremiah; and it is certain that the sixth and seventh verses are exactly the same with Jer. x. 25. Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy name: for they have eaten up Jacob, and devoured him, and consumed him; and have made his habitation desolate.

Verse 1. The heathen are come into thine inheritance] Thou didst cast them out, and take Thy people in; they have cast us out, and now taken possession of the land that belongs to Thee. They have defiled the temple, and reduced Jerusalem to a heap of ruins; and made a general slaughter of Thy people.

Verse 2. The dead bodies of thy servants] It appears that in the destruction of Jerusalem the Chaldeans did not bury the bodies of the slain, but left them to be devoured by beasts and birds of prey. This was the grossest inhumanity.

Verse 3. There was none to bury them.] The Chaldeans would not; and the Jews, who were not slain, were carried into captivity.

Verse 4. We are become a reproach to our neighbours] The Idumeans, Philistines, Phœnicians, Ammonites, and Moabites, all gloried in the subjugation of this people; and their insults to them were mixed with blasphemies against God.

Verse 5. How long, LORD? Wilt Thou continue thine anger against us; and suffer us to be insulted, and Thyself blasphemed?

Verse 6. Pour out thy wrath] Bad as we are, we are yet less wicked than they. We, it is true, have been unfaithful; but they never knew Thy name, and are totally abandoned to idolatry.

Verse 7. Laid waste his dwelling-place] The Chaldees understands this of the temple. This, by way of eminence, was Jacob's place. I have already remarked that these two verses are almost similar to Jer. x. 25, which has led many to believe that Jeremiah was the author of this Psalm.

Verse 8. Remember not against us former iniquities] Visit us not for the sins of our forefathers.

Speedily prevent us] Let them go before us, and turn us out of the path of destruction; for there is no help for us but in Thee.

ties: let thy tender mercies speedily prevent us: for we are brought very low.

9 Help us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy name: and deliver us, and purge away our sins, for thy name's sake.

10 Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is their God? let him be known among the heathen in our sight by the revenging of the blood of thy servants which is shed.

11 Let the sighing of the prisoner come before thee; according to the greatness of thy power preserve thou those that are appointed to die;

12 And render unto our neighbours sevenfold into their bosom their reproach, wherewith they have reproached thee, O Lord.

13 So we thy people and sheep of thy pasture will give thee thanks for ever: we will shew forth thy praise to all generations.

Verse 9. Purge away our sins] כפר capet, be propitiated, or receive an atonement (אָתוּמָהּ by al chatoletinu) on account of our sins.

Verse 10. Where is their God?] Shew where Thou art by rising up for our redemption, and the infliction of deserved punishment upon our enemies.

Verse 11. The sighing of the prisoner] The poor captive Israelites in Babylon, who sigh and cry because of their bondage.

Those that are appointed to die.] בני תמוה beney temulah, "sons of death." Either those who were condemned to death because of their crimes: or condemned to be destroyed by their oppressors. Both these senses apply to the Israelites: They were sons of death, i. e. worthy of death, because of their sins against God; they were condemned to death, or utter destruction, by their Babylonian enemies.

Verse 12. Sevenfold into their bosom] That is, Let them get in this world what they deserve for the cruelties they have inflicted on us. Let them suffer in captivity, who now have us in bondage. Probably, this is a prediction.

Verse 13. We thy people] Whom Thou hast chosen from among all the people of the earth.

And sheep of thy pasture] Of whom Thou, Thyself, art the Shepherd. Let us not be destroyed by those who are Thy enemies; and we, in all our generations, will give thanks unto Thee for ever.

ANALYSIS OF THE SEVENTY-NINTH PSALM.

This Psalm contains the four following parts:

- I. A complaint for the desolation of Jerusalem, ver. 1-5.
- II. A deprecation of God's anger, ver. 5.
- III. A twofold petition:—
 1. Against the enemies of God's people, ver. 6, 7, 10-12.
 2. For the people, ver. 8, 9.
- IV. A doxology, ver. 13.
- I. The complaint is bitter, and is amplified by a climax,—
 1. The heathen are come into Thy inheritance, ver. 1.
 2. The holy temple they have defiled, ver. 1.
 3. They have laid Jerusalem in heaps, ver. 2.
 4. They have exercised cruelty towards the dead.
 5. They have shed blood like water, ver. 3.
 6. They have not even buried those whom they slaughtered.
 7. We are become a reproach, a scorn, and a derision, ver. 4.
- II. Next comes the cause of their calamity.
 1. God's anger was kindled because of their sins, ver. 5.
 2. This anger he deprecates, ver. 5.
- III. The twofold prayer,—
 1. Against the enemy:—1. Pour out Thy wrath on them, not on us, ver. 6. 2. He adds the reason. They have desecrated Jacob, ver. 7.

2 Before Ephraim and Benjamin and Manasseh stir up thy strength, and come and save us.

3 Turn us again, O God, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

4 O Lord God of hosts, how long will thou be angry against the prayer of thy people?

5 Thou feedest them with the bread of tears; and givest them tears to drink in great measure.

6 Thou makest us a strife unto our neighbours: and our enemies laugh among themselves.

7 Turn us again, O God of hosts, and cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

8 Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt: thou hast cast out the heathen, and planted it.

9 Thou preparedst room before it, and didst cause it to take deep root, and it filled the land.

10 The hills were covered with the shadow of it, and the boughs thereof were like the goodly cedars.

11 She sent out her boughs unto the sea, and her branches unto the river.

12 Why hast thou then broken down her hedges, so that all they which pass by the way do pluck her?

1. Numb. 2. 18-21.—1. Heb. come for salvation to us.—1. Ver. 7. 18. Lam. 5. 21. 1 Numb. 2. 25. Ps. 4. 5 & 67. 1.—2. Heb. with thy smoke. Ps. 74. 1.—3. Ps. 44. 2. & 102. 5. Lam. 5. 22.—4. Ps. 44. 13. & 78. 4.—5. Ver. 3. 18.—6. Lam. 5. 7. Jer. 2. 21. Ezek. 15. 6. & 17. 8. & 18. 10.—7. Ps. 44. 2. & 78. 55.—8. Exod. 23. 22. Josh. 24. 12.—1. Heb. the cedars of God.—a. Ps. 72. 8.—7. Ps. 20. 41. Lam. 5. 2. Nah. 2. 2.

2. The second part of the prayer is in behalf of the people.—1. Remember not against us former offences, ver. 8. 2. Let thy mercy prevent us. The reason,—We are brought very low. 3. His prayer is directed for help to the God of salvation. 4. For deliverance, and pardon of sin, ver. 9.

His arguments to prevail with God:—

1. The blasphemy of the heathen, ver. 10.
2. The misery of the people, ver. 11. And another prayer against the enemy, ver. 12.

IV. The doxology.
 1. We, who are Thy people, will be thankful.
 2. We will leave a record of Thy mercy to all generations, ver. 13.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXX.

The title.—see Psalm xlv. lx. and lxix. where every thing material is explained. This Psalm seems to have been written on the same occasion with the former. One ancient MS. in the public library in Cambridge writes this, the eightieth, and the seventy-ninth, all as one Psalm: the subject-matter is precisely the same;—was made on the same occasion, and probably, by the same author.

Verse 1. O Shepherd of Israel] The subject continued from the last verse of the preceding Psalm.

Leadest Joseph] Israel and Joseph mean here the whole of the Jewish tribes:—all were at this time in captivity,—all had been the people of the Lord,—and all, no doubt, made supplication unto Him now that His chastening was upon them; and for all, the Psalmist makes supplication.

That dwellest between the cherubim] It was between the cherubim, over the cover of the ark, called the propitiatory, or mercy-seat, that the glory of the Lord, or symbol of the Divine presence, appeared. It is on this account that the Lord is often said to dwell between the cherubim. On these symbolical beings there is a long and painful account, or system of conjectures, in Parkhurst's Hebrew Lexicon, of about twenty quarto pages! under the word כִּרְיָב carab.

Shine forth.] Restore Thy worship; and give us such evidences of Thy presence now, as our fathers had under the first tabernacle, and afterwards in the temple built by Solomon.

Verse 2. Before Ephraim, and Benjamin, and Manasseh] It is supposed that these three tribes represent the whole;—Benjamin being incorporated with Judah, Manasseh comprehending the country beyond Jordan, and Ephraim all the rest. Dadid.

Verse 3. Turn us again] אָתוּמָהּ haabenu, convert, or restore us. There are four parts in this Psalm, three of which end with the above words;—see the third, seventh, and nineteenth verses; and one with words similar, ver. 14.

Verse 5. Thou feedest them with the bread of tears] They have no peace, no comfort, nothing but continual sorrow.

In great measure] שָׂבַע shalish, threefold. Some 13 The bear out of the wood doth waste it, and the wild beast of the field doth devour it.

14 Return, we beseech thee, O God of hosts: look down from heaven, and behold, and visit this vine;

15 And the vineyard which thy right hand hath planted, and the branch that thou madest strong for thyself.

16 It is burned with fire, it is cut down: they perish at the rebuke of thy countenance.

17 Let thy hand be upon the man of thy right hand, upon the son of man whom thou madest strong for thyself.

18 So will not we go back from thee: quicken us, and we will call upon thy name.

19 Turn us again, O Lord God of hosts, cause thy face to shine; and we shall be saved.

x. Psa. 68. 21.—v. Ver. 3, 7.

think it was a certain measure used by the Chaldeans, the real capacity of which is not known. Others think it signifies abundance, or abundantly.

Verse 6. Thou madest us a strife] The neighbouring districts have a controversy about us; we are a subject of contention to them. A people so wonderfully preserved, and so wonderfully punished, is a mystery to them. They see in us both the goodness and severity of God. Or, all the neighbouring nations join together to malign and execute us. We are hated by all; derided and cursed by all.

Verse 8. Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt] This is a most elegant metaphor, and every where well supported. The same similitude is used by Isaiah, chap. v. 1, &c.; by Jeremiah, chap. ii. 21; by Ezekiel, chap. xvii. 5, 6; by Hosea, chap. x. 1; by Joel, chap. i. 7; by Moses, Deut. xxxii. 32, 33; and often by our Lord Himself, Matt. xx. 1, &c.; xxi. 33, &c.; Mark xii. 1, &c. And this was the ordinary figure to represent the Jewish church. We may remark several analogies here:—

1. This vine was brought out of Egypt that it might be planted in a better and more favourable soil. The Israelites were brought out of their Egyptian bondage, that they might be established in the land of Canaan, where they might grow, and flourish, and worship the true God.

2. When the husbandman has marked out a proper place for his vineyard, he hews down, and roots up, all other trees; gathers out the stones, brambles, &c. that might choke the young vines, and prevent them from being fruitful. So God cast out the Heathen nations from the land of Canaan, that His pure worship might be established, and that there might not remain there any incitements to idolatry.

Verse 9. Thou preparedst before it] 3. When the ground is properly cleared, then it is well digged and manured; and the vines are placed in the ground at proper distances, &c. So when God had cast out the Heathen, He caused the land to be divided by lot to the different tribes, and then to the several families of which these tribes were composed.

And didst cause it to take deep root] 4. By sheltering, propping up, and loosening the ground about the tender plants, they are caused to take a deep and firm rooting in the ground. Thus did God, by especial manifestations of His kind providence, support and protect the Israelites in Canaan; and by various religious ordinances, and civil institutions, He established them in the land; and, by the ministry of priests and prophets, did every thing necessary to make them morally fruitful.

It filled the land.] 5. To multiply vines, the gardener cuts off a shoot from the old tree, leaving a joint or knob both at top and bottom; then plants it in proper soil: the lower knob furnishes the roots, and the upper the shoot, which should be carefully trained as it grows, in order to form another vine. By these means one tree will soon form a complete vineyard, and multiply itself to any given quantity. Thus God so carefully, tenderly, and abundantly, blessed the Israelites, that they increased and multiplied; and, in process of time, filled the whole land of Canaan. Vines are propagated not only by cullings, but by layers, seed, grafting, and inoculation.

Verse 10. The hills were covered] 6. The vine, carefully cultivated in a suitable soil, may be spread to any extent. In the land of Judea it formed shades, under which the people not only sheltered and refreshed themselves in times of sultry heats; but it is said they even ate, drank, and dwelt, under the shelter of their vines. See 1 Kings iv. 25; Mic. iv. 4; 1 Mac. xiv. 12. So God blessed the Jews, particularly in the days of David and Solomon, that all the neighbouring nations were subdued, the Syrians, Idumeans, Philistines, Moabites, and Ammonites.

Verse 11. She sent out her boughs unto the sea, and her branches unto the river.] The Israelitish empire extended from the river Euphrates on the East to the Mediterranean sea on the West, and from the same Euphrates on the North of the Promised Land to its farthest extent on the South; Syria bounding the North, and Arabia and Egypt the South. And this was according to the promises which God had made to the fathers, Exod. xxiii. 31; Deut. xi. 24.

Verse 12. Why hast thou broken down] 7. When a vineyard is planted, it is properly fenced to preserve it from being trodden down, or otherwise injured, by beasts; and to protect the fruit from being taken by the unprincipled passenger. So God protected Jerusalem and His temple by His own Almighty arm; and none of their enemies could molest them as long as they had that protection. As it was now spoiled, it was a proof that that protection had been withdrawn; therefore, the Psalmist addresses the Lord with, Why hast thou broken down her hedges? Had God continued His protection, Jerusalem would not have been destroyed.

Verse 13. The bear out of the wood] Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, who was a fierce and cruel sovereign.

Verse 14. Return—O God of hosts] Thou hast abandoned us; and, therefore, our enemies have us in captivity. Come back to us, and we shall again be restored.

Behold, and visit this vine] Consider the state of Thy own people, Thy own worship, Thy own temple. Look down! Let Thine eye affect Thy heart.

Verse 15. The vineyard which thy right hand hath planted] Thy holy and pure worship which Thy Almighty power had established in this city.

And the branch—thou madest strong for thyself.] The original is, בן עץ ve-el ben, "and upon the Son whom Thou hast strengthened for Thyself." Many have thought that the Lord Jesus is meant. And so the Chaldee understood it, as it translates the passage thus: משיח בן עץ ve-al maleca messicha, And upon the King Messiah, whom Thou hast strengthened for Thyself. The Syrian, Vulgate, Septuagint, Æthiopic, and Arabic, have the son of man, as in the seventeenth verse. Eighteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. have בן אדם ben Adam, "Son of man"—and as the Versions have all the same reading, it was probably that of the original copies. As Christ seems here to be intended, this is the first place in the Old Testament, where the title Son of man is applied to Him. The old Psalter understands this of setting Christ at the right hand of God.

Verse 17. The man of thy right hand] The only Person who can be said to be at the right hand of God, as Intercessor, is Jesus the MESSIAH. Let him become our Deliverer: appoint Him for this purpose, and let His strength be manifested in our weakness! By whom are the Jews to be restored, if indeed they ever be restored to their own land, but by Jesus Christ? By Him alone can they find mercy; through Him alone can they ever be reconciled to God.

Verse 18. So will we not go back from thee] We shall no more become idolaters: and it is allowed on all hands that the Jews were never guilty of idolatry after their return from the Babylonish captivity.

Quicken us] Make us alive, for we are nearly as good as dead.

We will call upon thy name] We will invoke Thee. Thou shalt be for ever the Object of our adoration, and the centre of all our hopes.

Verse 19. Turn us again] Redeem us from this Captivity. O Lord God of hosts] Thou who hast all power in heaven and earth; the innumerable hosts of both worlds being at Thy command.

Cause thy face to shine] Let us know that Thou art reconciled to us. Let us once more enjoy Thy approbation. Smile upon Thy poor rebels, weary of their sins, and prostrate at Thy feet imploring mercy.

And we shall be saved] From the power and oppression of the Chaldeans, from the guilt and condemnation of our sins, and from Thy wrath and everlasting displeasure. Thus, O God, save us!

ANALYSIS OF THE EIGHTIETH PSALM.

- The parts of this Psalm are the following:—
 I. A prayer, ver. 1—3.
 II. A complaint by way of expostulation, ver. 4—7.
 III. In the twelve last verses, to move God's mercy, he 1. Shews God's love to Israel under the allegory of a vine, ver. 8—12. 2. Deplores the waste made upon it, ver. 12, 13. 3. Prays for its restoration, ver. 13—16.
 IV. He makes a vow of perpetual service, ver. 19.

PSALM LXXXI.

An exhortation to the people to praise God for His benefits, 1-7. And to attend to what He had provided, 8-10. Their disobedience insinuated, 11. The music brought on themselves by their transgressions, 12-14.

To the chief Musician upon Gittith, A Psalm of Asaph. SING aloud unto God our strength: make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob.

2 Take a psalm, and bring hither the timbrel, the pleasant harp with the psaltery.

3 Blow up the trumpet in the new moon, in the time appointed, on our solemn feast day.

4 For this was a statute for Israel, and a law of the God of Jacob.

5 This he ordained in Joseph for a testimony, when he went out through the land of Egypt: where I heard a language that I understood not.

6 I removed his shoulder from the burden: his hands were delivered from the pots.

I. The first part, his petition, ver. 1. 1. For audience, ver. 2. 2. For assistance, ver. 3. 3. For grace to amend, ver. 3.

The arguments he uses to induce the Lord to hear. 1. He was formerly thy shepherd. 2. He sat between the cherubim, on the mercy seat. 3. He has only to shine forth, and shew Himself; and they shall be saved.

II. The second part, his complaint. He complains, 1. That God was angry with them. 2. That the people were in the most distressed circumstances, ver. 5. 3. Of what they suffered from their neighbours, ver. 6.

On which he redoubles his prayer. 1. Turn us. 2. Cause Thy face to shine. And, 3. Then we shall be saved, ver. 7.

III. The third part: what God had done for His people. 1. He brought the vine out of Egypt, ver. 8. 2. He cast out the Heathen, ver. 8. 3. He planted it. 4. He prepared the soil for it. 5. He caused it to take deep root. 6. And it filled the land,—from the river Euphrates to the Mediterranean sea, ver. 9—11.

He deploras the waste made upon it. 1. The fence was broken down. 2. It was spoiled by those who passed by; and by the wild beasts.

Then he prays;—1. Look down from heaven. 2. Visit this vine. 3. It is cut down. 4. It is burnt with fire. 5. Let Thy power in its behalf be shewn by the Man of Thy right hand. (See the Notes.)

Some think Zerubbabel is meant; others think the Jewish nation is thus called the son of man and the man of God's right hand.

IV. The last part of the Psalm:—gratitude and obedience are promised. 1. We will beakside no more, ver. 18. 2. We are nearly dead; quicken us, and we will live to Thee. 3. We will invoke Thy name. We will serve Thee alone, and never more bow down to any strange god, ver. 18.

All these things considered, he thinks he has good ground for his prayer; and, therefore, confidently repeats what he had twice before said. Turn us again, O Lord God of hosts, cause thy face to shine, &c.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXXI.

The title is the same as at Psalm viii. which see. There are various opinions concerning the occasion and time of this Psalm: but it is pretty generally agreed that it was either written for, or used at, the celebration of the Feast of Trumpets, (see on Lev. xxiii. 24.) which was held on the first day of the month Tisri, which was the beginning of the Jewish year; and on that day it is still used in the Jewish worship. According to Jewish tradition, credited by many learned Christians, the world was created in Tisri, which answers to our September. The Psalm may have been used in celebrating the Feast of Trumpets on the first day of Tisri, the Feast of Tabernacles on the fifteenth of the same month, the creation of the world, the Feasts of the New Moons, and the deliverance of the Israelites from Egypt; to all which circumstances it appears to refer.

Verse 1. Sing aloud unto God our strength] There is much meaning here: as God is our strength, let that strength be devoted to His service; therefore, sing aloud! This is principally addressed to the priests and Levites.

Verse 2. Take a psalm] זמרה zimrah. I rather doubt this was the name of a musical instrument.

Bring hither the timbrel] תוף toph; some kind of drum, or tom tom.

The pleasant harp] קנור kinnor. Probably, a sistrum, or something like it. A STRINGS or WIRED instrument.

With the psaltery.] נבל nabel, the nabla;—the cythara, Septuagint.

7 Thou calledst in trouble, and I delivered thee; I answered thee in the secret place of thunder: I proved thee at the waters of Meribah. Selah.

8 Hear, O my people, and I will testify unto thee: O Israel, if thou wilt hearken unto me; 9 There shall no strange god be in thee; neither shalt thou worship any strange god.

10 I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt: open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it.

11 But my people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would none of me.

12 Sol gave them up unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels.

13 Oh that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways;

Verse 3. Blow up the trumpet] שופר shophar, a species of horn. Certainly, a wind instrument; as the two last were stringed instruments. Perhaps, some chanted in recitative a Psalm, while all these instruments were used as accompaniments. In a representative system of religion, such as the Jewish, there must have been much outside work,—all emblematical of better things: no proof that such things should be continued under the Gospel dispensation, where outsides have disappeared, shadows flown away, and the substance alone is presented to the hearts of mankind. He must be ill off for proofs in favour of instrumental music in the church of Christ, who has recourse to practices under the Jewish ritual!

The Feast of the New Moon was always proclaimed by sound of trumpet. Of the ceremonies on this occasion I have given a full account in my Discourse on the Escharist. For want of astronomical knowledge the poor Jews were put to sad shifts to know the real time of the new moon. They generally sent persons to the top of some hill or mountain, about the time which, according to their supputations, the new moon should appear. The first who saw it was to give immediate notice to the Sanhedrim: they closely examined the reporter as to his credibility; and whether his information agreed with their calculations. If all was found satisfactory, the president proclaimed the new moon by shouting out, מיקדוש! "It is consecrated." This word was repeated twice aloud by the people; and was then proclaimed every where by blowing of horns, or what is called The sound of trumpets.

Verse 4. This was a statute for Israel] See the statute, Numb. x. 10. and Lev. xxiii. 24.

Verse 5. I heard a language I understood not.] This passage is difficult. Who heard? And what was heard? All the Versions, except the Chaldee, read the pronoun in the third person, instead of the first. "He heard a language that he understood not." And to the Versions Kennicott reforms the Text, ושמעו את נשוא שפחה לו יאדאח יזמרה; "a language which he did not understand he heard." But what was that language? Some say the Egyptian;—others, who take Joseph to signify the children of Israel in general, say it was the declaration of God by Moses, that Jehovah was the true God, that He would deliver their shoulder from their burthens, and their hands from the pots,—the moulds and furnaces in which they formed and baked their brick.

Verse 7. Thou calledst in trouble] They had cried by reason of their burthens, and the cruelty of their task-masters; and God heard that cry, and delivered them. See Exod. iii. 7, &c.

In the secret place of thunder] On mount Sinai: where God was heard, but not seen. They heard a voice, but they saw no shape.

At the waters of Meribah.] See this transaction, Exod. xvii. 1, &c.

Verse 8. Hear, O my people] These are nearly the same words with those spoken at the giving of the law, Exod. xx. 2.

Verse 10. Open thy mouth wide] Let thy desires be ever so extensive, I will gratify them if Thou wilt be faithful to me. Thou shalt lack no manner of thing that is good.

Verse 11. Israel would none of me.] ויזמרו לו עבא ה, They would me not,—they would not have me for their God.

Verse 12. Unto their own hearts' lust] To the obstinate wickedness of their heart.

In their own counsels.] God withdrew His restraining grace, which they had abused; and then they fulfilled the inventions of their wicked hearts.

14 I should soon have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries.

15 The haters of the LORD should have submitted themselves unto him: but their time should have endured for ever.

16 He should have fed them also with the finest of the wheat: and with honey out of the rock should I have satisfied thee.

Verse 13. Oh that my people had hearkened unto me, Israel had walked in my ways. Nothing can be more plaintive than the original: sense and sound are surprisingly united. I scruple not to say to him who understands the Hebrew; however learned, he has never found in any poet, Greek or Latin, a finer example of deep-seated grief, unable to express itself in appropriate words without frequent interruptions of sighs and sobs, terminated with a mournful cry.

He who can give the proper guttural pronunciation to the letter y ayin; and gives the y auw, and the y od, their full Asiatic sound; and not pinch them to death by a compressed and worthless European enunciation; will at once be convinced of the propriety of this remark.

Verse 14. I should soon have subdued] If God's promise appeared to fail in behalf of His people; it was because they rejected His counsel, and walked in their own. While they were faithful, they prospered; and not one jot or tittle of God's word failed to them.

Verse 15. Their time should have endured for ever.] That is, their prosperity should have known no end.

Verse 16. With the finest of the wheat] מֵחֶלֶב מֵחֵלֶב chelab chillah; literally, with the fat of wheat, as in the margin.

Honey out of the rock] And he fed them of the grease of wheat: And of the honey stone be thaim filled, old Psalter. Thus paraphrased: "He fed thaim with the body of Criste and gastely understandyng; and of hony that ran of the stone, that is, of the wiselome, that is swete to the hert." Several of the fathers understand this place of Christ.

ANALYSIS OF THE EIGHTY-FIRST PSALM.

The contents of this Psalm are the following:—

I. The Psalmist exhorts them to celebrate God's name in their festivals, ver. 1-4.

II. The reasons why they should do this: God's benefits conferred on Israel, ver. 5-10.

III. Israel's ingratitude, and its consequences, ver. 11, 12.

IV. God's love and call to amendment, with the reasons for obedience, ver. 13-16.

I. He exhorts them to rejoice: but this must be,—I. In God, ver. 1. 2. At His festivals, ver. 2, 3.

II. The reasons. 1. It was God's command, ver. 4. 2. It was an ancient ordinance, ver. 5. 3. Their deliverance from base servitude, ver. 6. 4. When in deep affliction, ver. 7. 5. In a miraculous manner, ver. 7. 6. His mercy shewn at the waters of Meribah, ver. 7. 7. His giving them His law, ver. 8, 9.

He then inculcates obedience, for which he gives three reasons:—1. I am the Lord thy God, ver. 10. 2. Who redeemed thee from bondage, ver. 10. 3. He will make thee truly happy:—Open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it, ver. 10.

III. Israel's ingratitude, and its consequences. 1. God gave them up; left them to themselves, ver. 12. 2. They walked in their own counsels, ver. 12. And came to ruin.

IV. God's love and call, &c.

He calls them to repentance, ver. 13. The fruits of which would be three great benefits. 1. The subjugation of their enemies, ver. 14. 2. A long uninterrupted prosperity. 3. An abundance of all temporal and spiritual blessings, ver. 15, 16.

Under the emblem of the finest wheat, and the purest honey, from the hives of bees in the rocks, where they abounded in Judæa, he shews them that His followers

NOTES ON PSALM LXXXII.

This Psalm, which, in the title, is attributed to Asaph, was probably composed in the time when Jehoshaphat reformed the courts of justice throughout his states, see 2 Chron. xix. 6, 7, where he uses nearly the same words as in the beginning of this Psalm.

Verse 1. God standeth in the congregation of the mighty] The Hebrew should be translated God standeth in the assembly of God. God is among his people: and He presides especially in those courts of justice which Himself has established. The Court of King's Bench is properly the place where the king presides, and where he is supposed to be always present. But the kings of England seldom make their appearance there. King James I. sometimes attended: at such times it might be said, "The king is in the king's court." I believe the case above to be similar. Judges! beware what you do! God is in His court—and in the midst (of the assembly) God will judge: See Parkhurst under נָשָׂא.

Verse 2. Accept the persons of the wicked?] "Lift up their faces"—encourage them in their oppressions.

Selah.] "Mark this: ye do it, and sorely shall ye suffer for it.

Verse 3. Defend the poor] You are their natural protectors under God. They are oppressed: punish their oppressors, however rich or powerful; and deliver them.

Verse 5. They know not] The judges are not acquainted with the law of God, on which all their decisions should be founded!

Neither will they understand] They are ignorant, and do not wish to be instructed. They will not learn: they cannot teach. Happy England! how different from Judæa, even in the days of Jehoshaphat. All thy judges are learned, righteous, and impartial. Never did greater men in their profession dignify any land or country.—(1822.)

All the foundations of the earth] "All the civil institutions of the land totter." Justice is at the head of all the institutions in a well regulated state: when that gets poisoned or perverted, every evil, political and domestic, must prevail. Even religion itself ceases to have any influence.

Verse 6. Ye are gods] Or, with the prefix of כּ he, the particle of similitude, כְּאֱלֹהִים ke-elohim, "like God." Ye are my representatives, and are clothed with my power and authority to dispense judgment and justice; therefore, all of them are said to be children of the Most High.

Verse 7. But ye shall die like men] כְּאָדָם ke-adam, "Ye shall die like Adam," who fell from his high perfection and dignity, as ye have done. Your high office cannot secure you an immortality.

And fall like one of the princes.] Justice shall pursue you, and judgment shall overtake you; and you shall be executed like public state criminals. Ye shall not, in the course of nature, fall into the grave:—but your life shall be brought to an end by a legal sentence, or a particular judgment of God.

Verse 8. Arise, O God, judge the earth] Justice is perverted in the land: take the sceptre, and rule, Thyself.

For thou shalt inherit all nations.] Does not this last verse contain a prophecy of our Lord, the calling of the Gentiles, and the prevalence of Christianity over the earth? Thus several of the Fathers have understood the passage. It is only by the universal spread of Christianity over the world, that the reign of righteousness and justice is to be established—and of whom can it be said that he shall inherit all nations, but of Jesus Christ?

PSALM LXXXIII.

The Psalmist calls upon God for immortals help against a multitude of confederate enemies who had risen up against Judah, 1-2. He mentions them by name, 5-8. Shows how they were to be punished, 9-17. And this was to be done for the glory of God, 18.

ANALYSIS OF THE EIGHTY-SECOND PSALM.

There are three parts in this Psalm:—

I. The prophet's proclamation, ver. 1.

II. God's controversy with the judges of the land, ver. 2-7.

III. The prophet's prayer that God would rise and judge, ver. 8.

I. God's presence proclaimed in court. At an assize the judge sits in the midst of the justices. God standeth in the congregation, &c. ver. 1.

II. 1. He reproves them, ver. 2. 1. For their unjust judgment. Ye judge unjustly. 2. For their obstinate continuance in it. How long will ye, &c. Ye have not done it once, but often. 3. For their partiality; they accepted persons, ver. 2.

2. He exhorts them to do their duty. 1. Defend the poor and fatherless. Do right to every man. 2. Deliver the poor and needy, ver. 3.

3. He acquaints them with the events that shall follow where justice is not done:—all is out of order; and the judges are the cause of it.

1. Through ignorance. They know not the law, ver. 5.

2. Through obstinacy. They will not learn it, ver. 5.

3. Through their determination to walk in their own way, ver. 5.

4. They should, in consequence, be brought,—1. To an untimely death. Ye shall die like men. 2. To a shameful death. Ye shall fall like one of the princes,—ye shall have a mighty fall, ver. 7.

III. The prophet's prayer. Since judgment and justice have failed in the land, he says, 1. Arise, O Lord! He does not say, Arise, O people, and put down those unjust judges. No; their function is from God, and God alone is to reform, or strip, or punish them. 2. Judge the earth. Take the state of all people into Thy consideration: there is much injustice in the earth. 3. For this petition he gives a reason. For thou shalt inherit all nations, ver. 8. Publish Thy own laws, appoint Thy own officers; and let them in Thy name dispense righteousness and true holiness throughout the world!

NOTES ON PSALM LXXXIII.

The title, A Song or Psalm of Asaph, has nothing particular. Among a multitude of conjectures relative to the time and occasion of this Psalm, that which refers it to the confederacy against Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, mentioned 2 Chron. xx. is the most likely. The following reasons make it probable. 1. The children of Ammon, that is, the Ammonites, and Moabites, were the principal movers in this war. 2. The Idumeans came to their assistance, 2 Chron. xx. 22, with certain Ammonites or Moabites, referred to here in verse 8, and in 2 Chron. xx. 1. 3. There were also in this confederacy many strangers of Syria, and from beyond the sea, most likely the Dead sea, which seems to indicate the Assyrians, Hagarenes, and Ishmaelites, designed expressly here, ver. 7, 8. 4. In that transaction there was a prophet of the race of Asaph, named Jahaziel; who foretold to Jehoshaphat their total overthrow, 2 Chron. xx. 14, &c. and probably this Jahaziel is the same with Asaph, the author of this Psalm. In the course of the Notes we shall see other circumstances relative to the war of the Moabites and Ammonites against Jehoshaphat, which illustrate several particulars in this Psalm. See Calmet.

Verse 1. Keep not thou silence] A strong appeal to God just as the confederacy was discovered. Do not be inactive; do not be neuter. Thy honour and our existence are both at stake.

Verse 2. Thine enemies make a tumult] They are not merely the enemies of Thy people, but they are the enemies of Thyself: Thy worship, ordinances and laws. They make a tumult,—they throng together.

They have lifted up the head.] They had made an intrusion into the land of Judah, and encamped at Engaddi, by the Dead sea. 2 Chr. xx. 1, 2.

Verse 3. Consulted against thy hidden ones.] תרצו תשפחנעו—Thy hidden things,—places, persons. The hidden things in thy treasures.—CHALDÆE. Thy holy ones.—SYRIAC. Thy saints.—VULGATE and SEPTUAGINT; and so the Æthiopic and Arabic. The people of Israel are probably meant. Or, perhaps, the temple, the ark, and the treasures of the temple, are intended.

Verse 4. Let us cut them off] Let us exterminate the whole race, that there may not be a record of them on the face of the earth. And their scheme was well laid: eight or ten different nations united themselves in a firm bond to do this; and they had kept their purpose so secret, that the king of Judah does not appear to have heard of it, till his territories were actually invaded, and the different bodies of this coalition had assembled at Engaddi. Never was Judah before in greater danger.

Verse 5. They have consulted together with one consent] With a united heart, יחד לב; leb yachadav. Their heart and soul are in the work.

They are confederate against thee] "They have made a covenant," ברית יצרו berith yikaritu, "They have cut the covenant sacrifice." They have slain an animal; divided him in twain; and passed between the pieces of the victim; and thus bound themselves to accomplish their purpose.

Verse 6. The tabernacles of Edom] The tents of these different people are seen in the grand encampment. Tents are probably mentioned because it was the custom of some of these people, particularly the Ishmaelites, to live a migratory or wandering life: having no fixed habitation, but always abiding in tents. Their posterity remain to the present day; and act, and live, in the same manner.

Hagarenes.] These people dwelt on the east of Gilead; and were nearly destroyed in the days of Saul, being totally expelled from their country, 1 Chron. v. 10; but afterwards recovered some strength and consequence: but where they dwell after their expulsion by the Israelites, is not known.

Verse 7. Gebal] The Gibeites, who were probably the persons here designed, were a tribe of the ancient inhabitants of the Land of Canaan, and are mentioned as unconquered at the death of Joshua, chap. xiii. 5. They are called stone-squarers, or Gibeites, 1 Kings v. 18, and were of considerable assistance to Hiram, king of Tyre, in preparing timber and stones for the building of the temple. They appear to have been eminent in the days of Ezekiel, who terms them the ancients of Gebal, and the wise men thereof, who were ship-builders, chap. xxvii. 3. What is now called Gibyle, a place on the Mediterranean sea, between Tripoli and Sidon, is supposed to be the remains of the city of the Gibeites.

Ammon and Moab were the descendants of the children of Lot. Their bad origin is sufficiently known. See Gen. xix. 30, &c. Calmet supposes that Ammon is put here for Men, or Maon, the Moabites, a people who lived in the neighbourhood of the Amalekites and Idumeans. See the Notes on 2 Chron. xx. 1, xxvi. 7.

Awalek] The Amalekites are well known as the ancient and inveterate enemies of the Israelites. They were neighbours to the Idumeans.

The Philistines] These were tributaries to Jehoshaphat, 2 Chron. xviii. 11, but it seems took advantage of the present times, to join in the great confederacy against him.

The inhabitants of Tyre] These probably joined the confederacy in hopes of making conquests, and extending their territory on the main land.

Verse 8. Assur also is joined] The Ammonites might have got those auxiliaries from beyond the Euphrates, against Jehoshaphat, as formerly they were brought against David.—See 2 Sam. x. 16.

They have holpen the children of Lot.] The Ammonites, who appear to have been the chief instigators in this war.

as to Sisera, as to Jabin, at the brook of Kison:

Verse 9. Do unto them as unto the Midianites] Who were utterly defeated by Gideon, Judg. vii. 21, 22.

As to Sisera] Captain of the army of Jabin, king of Canaan, who was totally defeated by Deborah and Barak, near mount Tabor, by the river Kishon; and himself, after having fled from the battle, slain by Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite. See Judg. iv. 15, &c.

Verse 10. Perished at En-dor] This refers to the defeat of the Midianites by Gideon, who were encamped in the valley of Jazreel, at the foot of mount Gilboa, and near to Tabor, Judg. vi. 33, vii. 1, and consequently in the environs of En-dor. There Gideon attacked and defeated them; and, in various places during their flight, they were destroyed, and left to rot upon the earth. Judg. vii. 22, 23, 24, 25.

Verse 11. Make their nobles like Oreb and like Zeeb] They were two of the chiefs, or generals, of the Midianites; and were slain in the pursuit of the Midianites, by the men of Ephraim; and their heads brought to Gideon on the other side of Jordan. See Judg. vii. 24, 25.

Yea, all their princes as Zebah, and as Zalmonna.] These were the kings of Midian, who were encamped at Kerioth with fifteen thousand men, whom Gideon attacked there, and defeated, and took the kings prisoners; and, finding that they had killed his own brothers, slew them both. See Judg. viii. 10—21. Of the Midianites there fell at this time one hundred and twenty thousand men.

Verse 12. Let us take to ourselves the houses of God in possession.] Nearly the words spoken by the confederates when they came to attack Jehoshaphat. They come (says the king in address to God) to cast us out of thy possession, which thou hast given us to inherit. See 2 Chron. xx. 11.

Verse 13. O my God, make them like a wheel] Alluding to the manner of threshing corn in the east. A large broad wheel was rolled over the grain on a threshing floor, which was generally in the open air; and the grain being thrown up by a shovel against the wind, the chaff was thus separated from it, in the place where it was threshed.

Verse 14. The flame setteth the mountains on fire] This may refer to the burning of the straw and chaff after the grain was threshed and winnowed. And as their threshing floors were situated often on the hills or mountains, to take the advantage of the wind; the setting the mountains on fire, may refer to the burning of the chaff, &c. in those places. Let them be like stubble driven away by the wind, and burnt by the fire.

Verse 15. So persecute them] In this and the two following verses we find several awful execrations: and all this seems to be done in reference to that ancient custom,—"pouring execrations on an enemy previously to battle." Of this I have already given specimens in this work; and the Reader is particularly requested to refer to the case of Balaam being hired by the king of Moab to curse Israel previously to his intended attack:—see the Note on Numb. xxi. 4, where the subject is treated at large.

This custom prevailed much among the Romans, and the ancient Druids of Britain. In all cases the priests were employed to utter the execrations, as they were supposed to have the greatest influence with the gods, in whose name the curses were uttered.

Verse 16. That they may seek thy name] Let them be confounded in all their attempts on Israel; and see, so manifestly, that Thou hast done it, that they may invoke Thy name, and be converted to Thee.

Verse 17. Let them—perish.] That is, in their present attempts. Some have objected to the execrations in this Psalm, without due consideration. None of these execrations refer either to their souls, or to their eternal state;—but merely to their discomfiture in their present attempts.

16 Fill their faces with shame; that they may seek thy name, O LORD.

17 Let them be confounded and troubled for ever; yea, let them be put to shame, and perish!

18 "That men may know that thou, whose name alone is JEHOVAH, art " the Most High over all the earth.

PSALM LXXXIV.

The Psalmist longs for communion with God in the sanctuary, 1—3. The blessedness of those who enjoy God's ordinances, 4—7. With confidence in (Gd), he prays for restoration to His house and worship, 8—12.

To the chief Musician " upon Gittith, A Psalm " for the sons of Korah.

HOW " amiable are thy tabernacles, O LORD of hosts!

Suppose the continental powers should join together to subjugate Britain, and destroy the Protestant religion:—is there a Christian in the land that would not be justified in meeting them with the same or similar execrations? On the knees of my soul would I offer every one of them to God against such invaders. Selah. A. C.

Verse 18. That men may know] That they may acknowledge, and be converted to Thee. Here is no malice;—all is self-defence.

ANALYSIS OF THE EIGHTY-THIRD PSALM.

This Psalm divides itself into these four parts:—

I. A short ejaculation, ver. 1.

II. A complaint against God's enemies, which is the reason of this prayer, ver. 2—10.

III. A fearful imprecation against them, ver. 12—17.

IV. The charitable ends proposed, ver. 18.

I. The ejaculation or prayer. Keep not thou silence—be not still. Thy enemies are loud in their threatenings, and active in their endeavours, to destroy Thy people, and Thy worship. Hold not thy peace!

II. He complains—these are enemies,—1. To Thy people, ver. 2. 2. To God himself, ver. 5. Then he describes them, ver. 6—8.

1. They were banditti, spoilers. They make a tumult, ver. 2.

2. Proud and arrogant. They have lifted up the head, ver. 2.

3. They were subtle and crafty. They have taken crafty counsel, ver. 3.

4. They carried their cunning counsel into acts of aggression. Come, and let us cut them off, &c. ver. 4.

5. They were conspirators,—1. Against God. 2. Against His people. All the world against God and his church! not an uncommon case.

6. He gives us a catalogue of these conspirators, ver. 6—8. Edom, &c.

III. He prays to God against them. In which there are four particulars:—1. Their fall and ruin. 2. Their persecution. 3. Their terror. 4. Their disgrace.

These he illustrates by five similitudes. 1. Of a wheel that, running on, crushes all under it, successively. 2. Of stubble or chaff, easily driven away by the wind, ver. 13.

3. Of a wood or forest in a state of general conflagration, ver. 14. 4. Of a flame that even consumes the mountains, ver. 14.

Their fall and ruin he wished to be

1. Speedy and perpetual. Do unto them as unto the Midianites, &c. ver. 9—13.

2. Sudden and violent. As fire, ver. 13.

3. Let it be terrible and shameful. Fill their faces with shame, ver. 15, 16.

There are here three particulars of their punishment:—

1. Flight. 2. Terror. 3. Shame and ignominy.

IV. The charitable ends proposed. These were two:—

1. That they might seek after God; be converted to Him, ver. 16.

2. That they might know Him to be Jehovah, the only true God, that they might be saved from all idolatry, ver. 18.

The spirit of this prayer is,—1. If they will not seek Thee, and be converted; let them be confounded in their attempts against Thy people. 2. If they will not acknowledge Thee, let them be utterly routed and overthrown. Let them be put to shame, and perish!

NOTES ON PSALM LXXXIV.

The title here is the same as that of Psalm lxxxi.;—only that was for Asaph, this for the sons of Korah. This person was one of the chief rebels against Moses and Aaron: there were three, Korah, Dathan and Abiram, who made an insurrection; and the earth opened, and swallowed them and their partisans up, Numb. xvi.

PSALM LXXXV.

Desiring to (and for restoration to the Divine favour, 1-3. Prayer for further mercy, 4-7. The Psalmist waits for a gracious answer, in full confidence to receive it, 8. He resolves to continue in the greatest things, and exults in the prospect, 9-12.

To the chief Musician, A Psalm ^a for ^b the sons of Korah.

will and a strong shield; grace and glory will the Lord give, and will not deprive those of blessedness who walk in perfection.—Critics in general take the word as signifying a defence, or a guard. Instead of non shemesh, sun, Houbigant reads non shemah, a keeper, or guardian; and says that to represent God as the sun is without example in the Sacred Writings. But is not Mal. iv. 2, a parallel passage to this place? "Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings." No MS. countenances the alteration of Houbigant.

The Lord will give grace] To pardon, purify, and save, the soul from sin:—and then He will give glory to the sanctified in His eternal kingdom; and even here He withholdeth no good thing from them that walk uprightly. Well, therefore, might the Psalmist say, verse 12, O Lord of hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee.

ANALYSIS OF THE EIGHTY-FOURTH PSALM.

This Psalm may be divided into the following parts:—

I. The Psalmist, absent from the public worship of God, shews his love to the house of God, and his desire to be present in it, ver. 1-3.

II. The happiness of those who continue in that assembly, ver. 4-7.

III. He prays for restoration to it, and sets down the causes, ver. 8-11.

IV. The blessedness of the man who trusts in God, ver. 12.

I. 1. He begins with a pathetic exclamation.—How amiable are thy tabernacles! A mode of expression, which intimates, there is none equal to them.

2. He expresses his ardent affection to the house of God. 1. My soul longeth, &c. 2. My heart and flesh cry out, &c.

3. He laments his absence from God's house. The sparrows and swallows have their respective houses, where they may be present,—build,—hatch their young,—sing, &c.; but he could have no access to God's house. And thus he expresses in an affecting appeal to God, to move His pity. 1. O Lord of hosts! I acknowledge Thee as my Leader. 2. My King. I acknowledge myself as Thy subject. 3. My God. Whom I serve, and have taken for my portion.

II. The happiness of those who have liberty to worship God in His temple.

1. Blessed are they. They enjoy Thy ordinances, and have blessings in all.

2. Who dwell. Who continue in union with God, ever praising His ordinances.

3. They will be still praising thee. As being continually happy in Thy presence.

4. Blessed is the man whose strength is in thee. Who knows his own weakness, and depends upon Thee for his continual support.

This is the happiness of those who are near God's house: but there is a happiness for those also whose hearts are there, though their bodies are detained at a distance from it.

1. Blessed are they in whose hearts are the ways of them, ver. 5.

2. Even when they are passing through desert and inhospitable countries, ver. 6.

3. They go from strength to strength.—1. They get from one place of protection to another.—2. They increase in the Divine light and life.—3. They get many companions on the way.

III. His prayer. 1. He begs to be heard. 2. He remembers God who succoured Jacob in weakness and distress. 3. He considers himself as the anointed of God, and under His especial care, ver. 8. He wishes to be employed even in the meanest offices, in the house of God,—which he illustrates by an opposition of time, place, and persons.

1. Times. One day in Thy courts is better than a thousand out of it.

2. Places. God's house, to the tents of wickedness.

3. Persons. A doorkeeper, a Korahite at the temple, rather than an emperor in his palace.

2. Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of thy people, thou hast covered all their sin. Selah.

3. Thou hast taken away all thy wrath: thou hast turned thyself from the fierceness of thine anger.

4. Turn us, O God of our salvation, and cause thine anger toward us to cease.

5. Wilt thou be angry with us for ever? wilt thou draw out thine anger to all generations?

^a Ps. 32, 1.—(Or, thou hast turned thine anger from us) Duet. 18, 17. Ps. 90, 7.—(Ps. 74, 1. & 78, 5. & 90, 4.)

For this he gives five reasons:—

1. The Lord is a sun. He dispels darkness; comforts, warms, gives life.

2. He is a shield. The Defender and Protector of His followers.

3. He gives grace, to prepare for heaven.

4. Glory, to crown that grace.

5. He is all-sufficient. He will withhold no good thing.

But sinners and hypocrites need not expect these blessings; they are for them that walk uprightly.

1. They must walk, go on,—be constant,—abide in the way.

2. They must be upright, truly sincere and obedient.

IV. The blessedness of the man who trusts in God. O Lord of hosts, blessed is the man that trusts in thee!

This acclamation may be intended to answer an objection: "If those be blessed who dwell in Thy temple, then those must be wretched who are exiled from it." No, says the Psalmist; though there be many advantages enjoyed by those who can attend the ordinances of God, and some may attend them without profit; yet he who trusts in God can never be confounded. Faith in God will always be crowned; and, when absent through necessity, every place is a temple.

^a *Though this command me to the furthest verge Of the green earth—
Yet God is ever present, ever felt,
In the wide waste as in the city fall;
And where his vital reigns, there must be joy."*

NOTES ON PSALM LXXXV.

The title of this Psalm we have seen before, Ps. xlii. As to the time, it seems to have been written during, or even after the return from the Babylonish captivity. In the three first verses the Psalmist acknowledges the goodness of God in bringing the people back to their own land: he next prays to God to restore them to their ancient prosperity. In the spirit of prophecy, he waits on God, and hears Him promise to do it; and then exults in the prospect of so great a good. The whole Psalm seems also to have a reference to the redemption of the world by Jesus Christ.

Verse 1. Lord, thou hast been favourable] Literally, Thou hast been well pleased with Thy land.

Thou hast brought back the captivity] This seems to fix the time of the Psalm to be after the return of the Jews from Babylon.

Verse 2. Thou hast forgiven the iniquity] פָּרַט נַפְשׁוֹ נַאֲסָתָא דְּוֹמ, Thou hast borne, or carried away, the iniquity. An allusion to the ceremony of the scape goat.

Thou hast covered all their sin.] As Thou hast freely forgiven it, its offensiveness and abominable nature no longer appear. The whole is put out of sight; and, as we are restored from our captivity, the consequences no longer appear.

Selah.] This is true. Our return to our own land is the full proof.

Verse 3. Thou hast taken away] פָּדַת אֲשָׁפְלָא, "Thou hast gathered up all Thy wrath." This carries on the metaphor in the second verse: "Thou hast collected all Thy wrath, and carried it away with all our iniquities."

Verse 4. Turn us, O God of our salvation.] Thou hast turned our captivity;—now convert our souls. And they find a reason for their prayer in an attribute of their God: the God of their salvation. And as His work was to save, they beg that His anger towards them might cease. The Israelites were not restored from their captivity all at once. A few returned with Zerubbabel; some more with Ezra and Nehemiah; but a great number still remained in Babylonia, Media, Assyria, Egypt, and other parts. The request of the Psalmist is to have a complete restoration of all the Israelites from all places of their dispersion.

Verse 5. Will thou draw out thine anger] We have already suffered much, and long: our fathers have suffered, and we have succeeded to their distresses. Draw not out Thy anger against us from generation to generation.

6 Wilt thou not revive us again: that thy people may rejoice in thee?

7 Shew us thy mercy, O LORD, and grant us thy salvation.

8 I will hear what God the LORD will speak: for he will speak peace unto his people, and to his saints: but let them not turn again to folly.

9 Surely his salvation is nigh them that fear him: that glory may dwell in our land.

Verse 6. Wilt thou not revive us] We have long had the sentence of death in ourselves; and have feared an utter extinction. Let our nation live before Thee! Let us become once more numerous, pious, and powerful; and,

Thy people shall rejoice in thee?] As the source of all our mercies, and give Thee the glory due to Thy name.

Verse 7. Shew us thy mercy] Blot out all our sins. And grant us thy salvation.] Give us such a complete deliverance as is worthy of Thy majesty and mercy to bestow!

Verse 8. I will hear what God the LORD will speak] The Psalmist goes as a prophet to consult the Lord; and, having made his request, waits an answer from the Spirit of prophecy. He is satisfied that the answer will be gracious; and having received it, he relates it to the people.

He will speak peace] He will give prosperity to the people in general; and to His saints, His followers, in particular.

But let them not turn again to folly.] Let them not abuse the mercy of their God, by sinning any more against Him.

Verse 9. Surely his salvation is nigh] To him who fears God, and trembles at His word, His salvation is nigh at hand.

That glory may dwell in our land.] That Thy worship may be restored; the temple rebuilt; and the Divine shekinah, or symbol of the presence of God, may resume its place. The pure and undefiled religion of God preached, professed, and experienced, in a nation, is the glory of that land. The prophet Haggai had said that the glory of the latter house, the temple built after their return from Babylon, should be greater than the glory of the former, viz. of that built by Solomon: but, as a building, it was far inferior to the former; yet it had a superior glory in being visited by Jesus Christ. This was the glory that excelled.

Verse 10. Mercy and truth are met together] It would be more simple to translate the original,

חסד ואמת נישא
צדק ושלום נשקו

Chesed ve-emeth nishgashu;
Tsedek ve-shalom nishaku.

"Mercy and truth have met on the way, Righteousness and peace have embraced."

This is a remarkable text, and much has been said on it: but there is a beauty in it which I think has not been noticed.

Mercy and peace are on one side: truth and righteousness on the other. Truth requires righteousness; mercy calls for peace.

They meet together on the way; one going to make inquisition for sin, the other to plead for reconciliation. Having met, their differences on certain considerations (not here particularly mentioned) are adjusted: their mutual claims are blended together in one common interest; on which peace and righteousness immediately embrace. Thus, righteousness is given to truth; and peace is given to mercy.

Now, Where did these meet?—In Christ Jesus.

When were they reconciled?—When He poured out His life on Calvary.

Verse 11. Truth shall spring out of the earth] In consequence of this wonderful reconciliation, the truth of God shall prevail among men. The seeds of it shall be so plentifully sown by the preaching of Christ and His apostles that true religion shall be diffused over the world.

And righteousness shall look down from heaven.] And be delighted with the reformation of the sons of Adam; and shall be so satisfied with the glorious work which is carried forward that—

Verse 12. The LORD shall give—good] טוב ha-tob, THE GOOD thing,—what is the supremely good,—the summum bonum,—for which man has searched in vain through all his generations. Those who are reconciled to Him through the Son of His love shall enjoy the favour of their God; to have which is the supreme happiness of man.

Our land shall yield her increase.] There shall be neither death nor barrenness; for truth, that springs out

10 Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other.

11 Truth shall spring out of the earth; and righteousness shall look down from heaven.

12 Yea, the LORD shall give that which is good; and our land shall yield her increase.

13 Righteousness shall go before him; and shall set us in the way of his steps.

of the earth, shall yield an abundant harvest, in the conversion of all nations to the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Verse 13. Righteousness shall go before him] Perhaps, this verse may receive its best solution from Rom. iii. 25. Whom God hath set forth a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past. This term the apostle uses to point out God's method of justifying or saving mankind. And this, in the preaching of the pure Gospel, is ever going before to point out the Lord Jesus, and the redemption that is in His blood. And thus going before Him, the sinner who feels his need of salvation, is set—in the way of his steps; as Bartimeus sat by the way-side begging, by which way, Jesus walked; and, when He came where he was, heard his prayer, and restored him his sight. Or, righteousness, the pure and holy law of God, must be proclaimed as broken by sinners, and calling aloud for vengeance, before they can see and feel their need of Christ crucified. By the preaching of the law they are prepared to receive the grace of the Gospel.

ANALYSIS OF THE EIGHTY-FIFTH PSALM.

Mystically, this Psalm may be considered as treating of the redemption of the world by Jesus Christ. It has the three following parts:—

I. An acknowledgment of God's former mercies, ver. 1—3.

II. A petition on that ground that he would repeat them, ver. 4—7.

III. A profession of obedience, and an advice to continue in it, ver. 8. That men may be partakers of the promises, both spiritual, ver. 9, 10, 11, and temporal, ver. 12, which shall be fulfilled to those who keep in the ways of God, ver. 13.

I. In the three first verses, the Psalmist commemorates God's mercies to His people; of which His good will or favour is the Fountain. These mercies are, 1. Temporal; Thou hast been favourable unto thy land, &c. 1. 2. Spiritual; Thou hast—1. Forgiven the iniquities of thy people—Justification. 2. Thou hast taken away all thy wrath—Reconciliation.

II. Upon this he founds a prayer. Turn us, O God.

1. Thou hast turned away the captivity. Restore and convert us.

2. Thou hast brought us back. Revive our hearts, that they may rejoice in Thee.

3. Thou hast been reconciled to our fathers: be reconciled to us.

4. Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of Thy people. Save us!

III. He promises obedience. I will hear what God will speak; and I shall hear nothing from Him but what is for His own glory, and His people's good.

1. He will speak peace.] He will turn all their sufferings to their advantage.

2. But they must hear, and be steady. They must not turn again to folly; let them remember this.

3. To such His promise is sure. His salvation is nigh them.

4. And it comes, that glory may dwell in our land; that it may be crowned with peace and plenty.

In this prosperity of theirs, there shall be a combination of mercy, truth, justice, and peace.

1. Justice and peace shall embrace; for there is such a league between these two, that where peace is made without justice, it cannot long continue. And mercy and truth must, for it is inconsistent with mercy to be in concord with falsehood.

2. Truth shall spring out of the earth. Men shall observe it in all their transactions, contracts, and promises.

3. Righteousness shall look down from heaven. God will smile on this state of things, and pour out upon them the continual dew of His blessing.

4. In a word,—1. They shall enjoy all spiritual blessings; for the Lord shall give that which is good. 2. All temporal; for the land shall yield her increase.

For these mercies He sets down our duty:—

1. Righteousness shall go before him. All His saints shall walk before Him in righteousness and true holiness.

PSALM LXXXVI.

The Psalmist prays to God for support, from a conviction that He is merciful, good, ready to forgive, and that there is none like Him, 1-3. All nations shall bow before Him because of His wondrous works, 9, 10. He prays to be instructed, and promises to praise God for His great mercy, 11-13. Describes his enemies, and appeals to God, 14-16. Says a nation from God, that his enemies might be confounded, 17.

XVII. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

A Prayer of David.

BOW down thine ear, O LORD, hear me: for I am poor and needy.

2 Preserve my soul; for I am holy: O thou my God, save thy servant, that trusteth in thee.

3 Be merciful unto me, O LORD: for I cry unto thee daily.

4 Rejoice the soul of thy servant: for unto thee, O LORD, do I lift up my soul.

5 For thou, LORD, art good, and ready to forgive; and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon thee.

6 Give ear, O LORD, unto my prayer; and attend to the voice of my supplications.

7 In the day of my trouble I will call upon thee: for thou wilt answer me.

8 Among the gods there is none like unto thee, O LORD: neither are there any works like unto thy works.

9 All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O LORD, and shall glorify thy name.

10 For thou art great, and doest wondrous things: thou art God alone.

11 Teach me thy way, O LORD; I will walk in thy truth: unite my heart to fear thy name.

12 I will praise thee, O LORD my God, with all my heart: and I will glorify thy name for evermore.

13 For great is thy mercy toward me: and thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell.

14 O God, the proud are risen against me, and the assemblies of violent men have sought after my soul; and have not set thee before them.

15 But thou, O LORD, art a God full of compassion, and gracious, long suffering, and plenteous in mercy and truth.

16 O turn unto me, and have mercy upon

By many of the ancients and moderns the whole of this Psalm has been applied to Christ, and His salvation. See the preceding Notes.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXXVI.

The title attributes this Psalm to David; and in this all the Versions agree: but in its structure it is the same with those attributed to the sons of Korah; and was probably made during the Captivity. It is a very suitable prayer for a person labouring under affliction from persecution or calumny.

Verse 1. Bow down thine ear] Spoken after the manner of men: I am so low, and so weak, that, unless Thou stoop to me, my voice cannot reach Thee.

Poor and needy] I am afflicted, and destitute of the necessities of life.

Verse 2. Preserve my soul] Keep it as in a strong place.

For I am holy] כִּי אֲנִי קָדוֹשׁ ki chasid ani, for I am merciful. The spirit of this prayer is,

"That mercy to others show
That mercy show to me!"

Save thy servant] I have long taken Thee as my Master and Lord: I receive the word from Thy mouth, and obey Thee.

Verse 3. Be merciful unto me] I have no merit;—I plead none,—but trust in Thee alone.

I cry unto thee daily.] My state deeply affects me; and I incessantly cry for Thy salvation.

Verse 4. Rejoice the soul of thy servant] I want spiritual blessings; I want such consolation as Thou dost impart to them that love Thee. I present that soul to Thee, which I wish Thee to console.

Verse 5. For thou, Lord, art good] I found my expectation of help on thy own goodness, through which Thou art always ready to forgive. And I found it also on Thy well known character, to which all Thy followers bear testimony, viz. that Thou art plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon thee.

Verse 6. Give ear, O LORD] Attend to me. Millions call upon Thee for help and mercy;—but who has more need than myself? That the Psalmist was deeply in earnest, his conduct shews. 1. He prayed. 2. His prayer was vehement; he lifted up his voice. 3. He continued in prayer; he abounded in supplications.

Verse 7. Thou wilt answer me.] Because Thou art good, merciful, and ready to forgive; and I call upon Thee fervently, and seek Thee in Thy own way.

Verse 8. Among the gods there is none like unto thee, O LORD] None that trusted in an idol ever had help in time of need;—none that prayed to any of them ever had an answer to his petitions. Thou savest; they cannot: Thou upholdest; they must be upheld by their foolish worshippers. Thou art my Director, אֲדוֹנָי adonai; but they cannot direct nor teach: they have mouths, but they speak not.

Verse 9. All nations] Thy word shall be proclaimed among all the Gentiles; they shall receive Thy testimony, and worship Thee as the only true and living God.

n Deut. 6. 3. & 32. 39. Isai. 37. 16. & 44. 6. Mark 12. 29. 1 Cor. 3. 4. Verse 10. For thou art great] Almighty, infinite, eternal. And doest wondrous things] נִפְלְאוֹת וְמוֹצְאוֹת ve-niflaoth niphlaoth; Thou art the Worker of miracles. This Thou hast done in numerous instances, and thereby shewed Thy infinite power and wisdom.

This appears to be a prophecy of the calling of the Gentiles to the faith of Christ, and the evidence to be given to His Divine mission by the miracles which He should work.

Thou art God alone] Σὺ εἶ ὁ Θεός, ὁ μόνος—Sept. Thou art the only, THE GREAT God. In this the Ethiopic and Arabic agree.

Verse 11. Teach me thy way] Instruct me in the steps I should take; for, without Thy teaching, I must go astray.

Unite my heart] יוֹדֵךְ יָרִי יוֹדֵךְ yachad leabi, join all the purposes, resolutions, and affections, of my heart together, to fear and to glorify Thy name. This is a most important prayer. A divided heart is a great curse: scattered affections are a miserable plague. When the heart is not at unity with itself, the work of religion cannot go on. Indecision of mind and division of affections mar any work. The heart must be one, that the work may be one. If this be wanting, all is wrong. This is a prayer which becomes the mouth of every Christian.

Verse 12. I will praise thee—with all my heart] When my heart is united to fear Thy name, then shall I praise Thee with my whole heart.

Verse 13. Thou hast delivered my soul from the lowest hell.] This must mean more than the grave; a hell below hell: a place of perdition for the soul, as the grave is a place of corruption for the body.

Verse 14. The assemblies of violent men] קָדוֹת עֲוֹנוֹת edath avonim, the congregation of the terrible ones. Men of violent passions, violent counsels, and violent acts; and, because they have power, terrible to all.

Have not set thee before them.] Who sins that sets God before his eyes? Who does not sin who has no consciousness of the Divine presence?

Verse 15. But thou, O LORD] What a wonderful character of God is given in this verse! אֲדוֹנָי Adonai, the Director, Judge, and Support; but, instead of אֲדוֹנָי Adonai, thirty-four of Kennicott's MSS. have יְהוָה Yehovah, the self-existent and eternal Being: אֵל El, the strong God; רַחוּם rachum, tenderly compassionate; אֲנִי anani, the Dispenser of grace or favour; אֵל אֱמֶת el emeth, suffering long,—not easily provoked; אֱמֶת emeth, faithful and true. Such is the God who has made Himself more particularly known to us in Christ. The scanty language of our ancestors was not adequate to a full rendering of the original words: כִּי בְּחַיִּיךְ סוֹב גְּמִילְתְּךָ כִּי מִלְּחֻנְךָ, kebydyb, כי מועל מלחונתך כִּי גְּמִילְתְּךָ כי מועל מלחונתך, and thus God, gemildtsend, and mildhoert, gelyhdig and mucel mildhoertness and softfast. "And Thou, Lord God, art mild, and mildhearted, patient, and of much mildheartedness, and softfast,"—steady in truth.

In the old Psalm, the language is but little improved: אֲנִי תוֹרַתְּךָ אֱלֹהִים מִצְדִּיק, and mizdik, and thus Thou art God merciful, and merciful, suffering, and of much mercy, and softfast.

The word mizdik is interpreted, do and dede of mercy.

Verse 16. O turn unto me.] He represents himself as following after God; but he cannot overtake Him: and me; give thy strength unto thy servant, and save the son of thine handmaid.

17 Shew me a token for good; that they which hate me may see it, and be ashamed: because thou, LORD, hast holpen me, and comforted me.

PSALM LXXXVII.

The nature and glorious privileges of Zion and Jerusalem, 1-3. No other city to be compared to this, 4. The privilege of being born in it, 5, 6. Its praises celebrated, 7.

A Psalm or Song for the sons of Korah.

then he prays that He would turn and meet him through pity; or give him strength that he might be able to hold on his race.

Give thy strength unto thy servant] The Vulgate renders, da imperium tuum puero tuo, "give Thy empire to Thy child." The old Psalter, gyf empyre to tþi barn, and make safe the son of tþi þane mayden. Thi barn—Thy tender child. cnapan or cnapan binum, Anglo-Saxon; Thy knave; signifying either a serving man, or a male child. As many servants were found to be purloiners of their masters' property, hence the word cnapan, and cnapan, and knave, became the title of an unprincipled servant. The term fur, which signifies a thief in Latin, for the same reason became the appellation of a dishonest servant.

Quid domini facient, audent cum talia furēs ?

When masters do such things, what may not be expected from the servants (thieves.) VING. Æccl. iii. 16.

So PLAUTUS, speaking of a servant, Aulul. ii. 46, says, Homo es trium literatum, "Thou art a man of three letters," i. e. FUR, a thief. The word knave is still in use: but is always taken in a bad sense. The paraphrase in the old Psalter states the handmaid to be the kirk, and the son of this handmaid to be a true believer.

Verse 17. Shew me a token for good] rwv vov nwy dech fmmi oth, "Make with me a sign." Fix the honourable mark of Thy name upon me, that I may be known to be Thy servant. There seems to be an allusion here to the marking of a slave, to ascertain whose property he was. The Anglo-Saxon, do mid me tacn on gobe, do with me a token in good. Old Psalter Be tistþ me signe in gibe. From tacn tacn, we have our word token, which signifies a sign, mark, or remembrancer, of something beyond itself;—a pledge that something, then specified, shall be done, or given. Give me, from the influence of Thy Spirit in my heart, a pledge that the blessings which I now ask shall be given in due time. But he wished for such a sign as his enemies might see; that they might know God to be his Helper, and be confounded when they sought his destruction.

ANALYSIS OF THE EIGHTY-SIXTH PSALM.

This Psalm is a continued prayer, and may be divided into four parts:—

I. The first part is a petition for safety, drawn from his own person, ver. 1-4.

II. The second, a quickening of the same petition, drawn from the person and nature of God, ver. 5-13.

III. The third, taken from the quality of his adversaries, ver. 14.

IV. The fourth, a conjunction of all these three: the first, ver. 15. The second, ver. 16. The third, ver. 17.

I. The reasons of his petition, drawn from himself.

1. Bow down thine ear. Reason.—I am poor and needy, ver. 1.

2. Preserve my soul. Reason.—I am holy, or merciful, ver. 2.

3. Save thy servant. Reason.—He puts his trust in thee, ver. 3.

4. Be merciful unto me. Reason.—I cry unto thee daily, ver. 4.

5. Rejoice the soul of thy servant. Reason.—For unto thee do I lift up my soul, ver. 4.

II. A quickening of the petition, drawn from the nature of God.

1. For thou, God, art good, &c. ver. 5, 6.

2. I will call upon thee:—for thou wilt answer me, ver. 7.

3. There is none like unto thee, ver. 8.

4. Nor any works like unto thy works, ver. 8. This shall be amply proved; for

5. All nations, now worshipping idols, shall be converted to thee, ver. 9.

2 * The LORD loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob.

3 * Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God. Selah.

4 I will make mention of * Rahab and Babylon to them that know me: behold Philistia, and Tyre, with Ethiopia; this man was born there.

5 And of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her: and the highest himself shall establish her.

6 * The LORD shall count, when he writeth up the people, that this man was born there. Selah.

c. Ps. 78. 67, 68.—d See Isai. 60.—e Ps. 69. 10. Isai. 51. 8.—f Ps. 92. 20.—g Eccl. 12. 8.

6. Because thou art great, and doest wondrous works, ver. 10.

On this reason, that there is none like God,—

1. He begs to be governed by His word and Spirit, v. 11.

2. Promises to praise Him for His great mercy, ver. 12, 13.

III. He presses another argument taken from his enemies.

1. They were proud. The proud are risen against me.

2. They were powerful. The assemblies of violent men.

3. They were ungodly. They did not set thee before them, ver. 14.

IV. He amplifies his former argument.

1. From the nature of God. Thou art full of compassion, &c. ver. 15.

2. From his own condition. Turn unto me, and have mercy upon me, ver. 16.

3. From the quality of his adversaries. Shew me a token—that they which hate me may be ashamed, ver. 17.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXXVII.

The title, A Psalm or song for the sons of Korah, gives us no light into the author or meaning of this Psalm. It begins and ends so abruptly, that many have thought it to be only a fragment of a larger Psalm. This opinion is very likely. Those who suppose it to have been made when Jerusalem was rebuilt and fortified, imagine it to have been an exclamation of the author on beholding its beauty, and contemplating its privileges. If this opinion be allowed, it will account for the apparent abruptness in the beginning and end. As to its general design, it seems to have been written in praise of Jerusalem: and those who are for mystic meanings, think that it refers to the Christian church; and, on this supposition, it is interpreted by several writers, both ancient and modern. To pretend to have found out the true meaning, would be very absurd. I have done the best I could to give its literal sense.

Verse 1. His foundation is in the holy mountains.] Jerusalem was founded on the mountains or hills of Zion and Moriah. The after increase of the population obliged the inhabitants to enclose all the contiguous hills: but Zion and Moriah were the principal. We know that ancient Rome was built on seven hills.

Verse 2. The LORD loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob.] That is, he preferred Zion for His habitation, for to be the place of His temple and sanctuary, before any other place in the Promised Land. Mystically, The Lord prefers the Christian church to the Jewish; the latter was only a type of the former; and had no glory by reason of the glory that excelleth. To this position no exception can be made.

Verse 3. Glorious things are spoken of thee.] Or, there are glorious words or doctrines in Thee. Does this refer to the glorious doctrines of the Christian church?—These are glorious sayings indeed.

Verse 4. I will make mention of Rahab] The meaning seems to be, Rahab, i. e. Egypt, Babylon, Tyre, Philistia, and Ethiopia, are not so honourable as Jerusalem. To be born in any of them is no privilege when compared with being a native of Jerusalem. Their cities are but heads of villages; Jerusalem alone is a CITY. I have met with a very similar sentiment in a Persian work, of which I know not the author.

چه مصر و چه شام و چه بئر و بکر
همه روستاي ابد و شيرازي شهر

The Meer, o tche Sham, o tche Bئر o Bئر.

Homē rustace and, we Sheerazes Shahr.

"What celebrity can Egypt or Syria, or any thing on earth, or on the sea, pretend to.

"When compared to Sheeraz, those are but villages, but this alone is a city."

PSALM LXXXVIII.

7 As well the singers as the players on instruments shall be there: all my springs are in thee.

PSALM LXXXVIII.

The earnest prayer of a person in deep distress, abandoned by his friends and neighbours, and apparently forsaken of God, 1-12.

A Song or Psalm ^a for the sons of Korah, to the chief Musician upon Mahalath ^b Leannoth, ^c Maschil of a Heman the Ezrahite.

O LORD ^a God of my salvation, I have ^c cried day and night before thee:

^a Or, of—^b That is, To Asaph—^c Or, A Psalm of Heman the Ezrahite, giving instruction.—^d 1 Kings 4. 3. 1 Chron. 2. 6.

The meaning seems to be the same in both the Hebrew and Persian poet.

Verse 5. This and that man was born in her] It will be an honour to any person to have been born in Zion. But how great is the honour to be born from above, and be a citizen of the Jerusalem that is from above! To be children of God, by faith in Christ Jesus. The Targum has, "David the king, and Solomon his son, was brought up here."

The highest himself shall establish her.] The Christian church is built on the foundation of the prophets and apostles; Jesus Christ Himself being the corner stone.

Verse 6. The Lord shall count, when he writeth up the people] מִיָּמִין מִיָּמִין beethob ammim, in the register of the people. When He takes account of those who dwell in Jerusalem, He will particularly note those who were born in Zion.

This has an easy spiritual meaning. When God takes an account of all professing Christians, He will set apart those for inhabitants of the New Jerusalem, who were born in Zion, who were born again, received a new nature, and were fitted for heaven.

Verse 7. As well the singers, &c.] Perhaps this may mean no more than, the burden of the songs of all the singers and choristers shall be, "All my fountains (ancestors and posterity) are in Thee;" and consequently, entitled to all Thy privileges and immunities. Instead of מְשֻׁבְּרֵי שִׁירִים, "singers," many MSS. and early printed editions have, שִׁירִים, "princes." Some for מְשֻׁבְּרֵי מַיִם, "my fountains," would read with several of the Versions, מְשֻׁבְּרֵי מְשֻׁבְּרֵי, "habitations:"—but no MS. yet discovered, supports this reading.

It would be a very natural cause of exultation when, considering the great privileges of this royal city, to know that all his friends, family, and children, were citizens of this city; were entered in God's register, and were entitled to His protection and favour. Applied to the Christian church, the privileges are still higher. Born of God, enrolled among the living in Jerusalem, having their hearts purified by faith, and being washed and made clean through the blood of the covenant, and sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, such have a right to the inheritance among the saints in light. I need not add that springs, wells, fountains, and cistern, and waters, are used metaphorically in the Sacred Writings, for children, posterity, fruitful women, people, &c.; see among others Prov. v. 15, 16; Psa. lxxvii. 27; Isa. xlviii. 1; and Rev. xvii. 15. The old Psalter understands the whole as relating to gospel times; and interprets it accordingly. Biahop Horne takes it in the same sense. The whole Psalm is obscure and difficult. I will venture a literal version of the whole, with a few explanatory interpolations, instead of Notes, in order to cast a little more light upon it.

1. A Psalm to be sung by the posterity of Korah. A prophetic song.

2. Jehovah loves His foundation, the city built by him on holy mountains: He loves the gates of Zion more than all the habitations of Jacob.

3. Honourable things are declared of Thee, O city of God! Selah.

4. I will number Egypt and Babylon among my worshippers: behold Philistia and Tyre! They shall be born in the same place. They shall be considered as born in the city of God.

5. But of Zion it shall be said, "This one, and that one," persons of different nations, "was born in it:" and the Most High shall establish it.

6. Jehovah shall reckon in the registers of the people, "This one was born there."

7. The people shall sing, as in leading up a choir, "All my fountains, the springs of my happiness, are in Thee."

I have nearly followed here the version of Mr. N. M. Berlin, who wonders that there should be any doubt concerning this translation of the last verse, when Symmachus and Aquila, who must have well known the sense of the Masoretic Text, have translated; καὶ ἀδωρὲς ὡς χηπέοι,

2 Let my prayer come before thee: incline thine ear unto my cry;

3 For my soul is full of troubles; and my life draweth nigh unto the grave.

4 ^a I am counted with them that go down into the pit: ^b I am as a man that hath no strength:

5 Free among the dead, like the slain that lie in the grave, whom thou rememberest no more: and they are ^c cut off ^d from thy hand.

6 Thou hast laid me in the lowest pit, in darkness, in the deeps.

^a Psa. 37. 9. & 51. 14.—^b Luke 13. 7.—^c Psa. 107. 12.—^d Psa. 23. 1.—^e Psa. 31. 12. 1 Sam. 23. 8.—^f Or, by thy hand.

וַיִּשְׁמַע יְהוָה אֶת צוֹן וְעוֹ: "And they shall sing, as in leading up a dance, All my fountains are in thee." The translation cannot be far from the meaning.

ANALYSIS OF THE EIGHTY-SEVENTH PSALM.

This Psalm contains marks of the beauty and perfection of the church.

1. Its foundation. The Author is God: it is His foundation; not laid in the sand, but upon the mountains;—not common, but holy mountains, &c. v. 1.

2. The Lord loveth his church;—this assembly beyond all others. The Lord loveth, &c. v. 2.

3. All the prophets have spoken glorious things concerning it, and have considered it as the city of God, ver. 3.

4. One of the glorious things spoken of it was the conversion of the Gentiles to it. So here Egyptians, Babylonians, Tyrians, Ethiopians, &c. are to be gathered into it by regeneration. They shall all be brought to know the true God; and shall be classed in the multitude of those who know him, i. e. who offer Him a pure and holy worship, ver. 4.

5. By having the word of God in this true church, they shall be converted to God; so that it may be said, This and that man were born to God in it, ver. 5.

6. All other cities shall decay and perish; but the church of God, the city of the Great King, shall be established for ever, the gates of hell shall never prevail against it, ver. 5.

7. The converted Gentiles shall have equal privileges with the converted Jews; and in the Christian church they shall all be enrolled without difference, or precedence, ver. 6.

8. They shall enjoy a perpetual solemnity. They shall ever have cause to sing and rejoice, ver. 7.

9. The highest privilege is that in God's church He opens the fountains of living water;—in His ordinances God dispenses every blessing: every sincere and upright soul rejoices in opportunities to wait on God in His ordinances. Such an one can sing, All my springs are in thee. All other fountains are muddy; this alone is as clear as crystal. Worldly springs yield no pure delight;—all there, are mixed and turbulent; all here are refreshing, satisfying, and delightful.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXXVIII.

Perhaps, the title of this Psalm, which is difficult enough, might be thus translated:—"A poem to be sung to the conqueror by the sons of Korah, responsively, in behalf of a distressed person; to give instruction to Heman the Ezrahite." Kennicott says, "This Psalm has three titles, and the last only belongs to it: and supposes it to be the prayer of a person shut up in a separate house, because of the leprosy, who seems to have been in the last stages of that distemper; this disease, under the Mosaic dispensation, being supposed to come from the immediate stroke of God." Calmet supposes it to refer to the Captivity; the Israelitish nation being represented here under the figure of a person greatly afflicted through the whole course of his life. By some, Heman is supposed to have been the author: but who he was is not easy to be determined. Heman and Ethan, whose names are separately prefixed to this and the following Psalm, are mentioned as the grandsons of Judah by his daughter-in-law Tamar, 1 Chron. ii. 6, for they were the sons of Zera, his immediate son by the above. And Tamar, his daughter-in-law, bore him Pharez and Zerah, ver. 4. And the sons of Zerah, Zimri, and Ethan, and Heman, and Calcol, and Dara (or Dordia), ver. 6. If these were the same persons mentioned 1 Kings iv. 31, they were eminent in wisdom; for it is there said that Solomon's wisdom excelled the wisdom of all the children of the east country, and all the wisdom of Egypt. For he was wiser than all men; than Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman, and Calcol, and Dara, the sons of Mahol, ver. 30, 31. Probably Zerah was also called Mahol. If the Psalm in question was written by these men, they are the oldest poetical compositions extant: and the most ancient part of Divine Revelation; as these persons lived at least one hundred and seventy years before Moses. This may be true of the seventy-eighth Psalm: but certainly not of the following, as it speaks of transactions that took place long afterwards, at least as late as the days of David, who is particularly mentioned in it. Were we sure of Heman as the author, there would be no difficulty in applying the whole of the Psalm to the state of the Hebrews in Egypt, persecuted and oppressed by Pharaoh. But to seek, or labour to reconcile, matters contained in the titles to the Psalms, is treating them with too much respect, as many of them are wrong placed, and none of them divinely inspired.

Verse 1. O Lord God of my salvation] This is only the continuation of prayers and supplications already often sent up to the throne of grace.

Verse 2. Let my prayer come before thee] It is weak and helpless, though fervent and sincere: take all hindrances out of its way, and let it have a free passage to Thy throne. One of the finest thoughts in the Iliads of Homer concerns prayer: I shall transcribe a principal part of this incomparable passage; incomparable, when we consider its origin:

Και γαρ τε Διαι εισι Διος κουρα μεγαλοιο, Χωλοι τε, ρυσσαι τε, παραβλοκεις τ' οφθαλμοι· Αι βα τε και μετοισθ' Αθη αλεγοντι κινουσαι· Η δ' Αθη σθεναρη τε και αρτικος' δυνηκα πασσασ Πολλον υπεκπροβει, φθαιει δε τε πασαν εν' αιαν, Βλαπτονω' ανθρωπων· αι δ' εζαχονται οισσασ· Ος μεν τ' αιδουεται κουρας Διος, ασπον ιουσασ, Τον δε μεγ' ωνησασ, και τ' εκλονσ ενζαμνοιο· Ος δε κ' ανηρηται, και τε στερωσ αποιστη. Διουσαι δ' αρα ταιεσ Δια Κρονιωα κινουσαι, Το Αθη εν' ερεσθαι, ινα θγαθβεισ αποιστη. ΑΑΔ' Αχιλευ, πορσ και συ Διος κουρειν ενεσθαι, Τιμησ, ητ' αλλων περ επιγυνημπετ φηνασ εσθλων. Iliad. ix. 498—510.

Prayers are Jove's daughters; wrinkled, lame, slant-eyed, Which, though far distant, yet with constant pace Follow his face. Offence, relent of blood, And breaking firm the ground, outstrips them all, And over all the earth, before them runs Harsh to man: they, following, bend the hurt. Resolved especially when they approach, They yield to aid, and listen when we pray. But if we slight, and with obdurate heart, Resist them, to Saturnian Jove they cry Against us, imploring, that offence May cleave to us for vengeance of the wrong. Thou, therefore, O Achilles! honour yield To Jove's own daughters, vanquish as the brave Have oft times been, by honour paid to Thee.

Cowper.

On this allegory the translator makes the following remarks:—"Wrinkled, because the countenance of a man, driven to prayer by a consciousness of guilt, is sorrowful and dejected. Lame, because it is a remedy to which men recur late, and with reluctance. Slant-eyed, either because, in that state of humiliation, they fear to lift up their eyes to heaven, or are employed in taking a retrospect of their past misconduct. The whole allegory, considering when and where it was composed, forms a very striking passage."

Prayer to God for mercy must have the qualifications marked above. Prayer comes from God. He desires to save us: this desire is impressed on our hearts by His Spirit, and reflected back to himself. Thus says the allegory,—prayers are the daughters of Jupiter. But they are lame; as reflected light is much less intense and vivid than light direct. The desire of the heart is afraid to go into the presence of God, because the man knows, feels, that he has sinned against goodness and mercy. They are wrinkled,—dried up and withered, with incessant longing: even the tears that refresh the soul are dried up and exhausted. They are slant-eyed;—look aside through shame and compassion,—dare not look God in the face. But transgression is strong, bold, impudent, and destructive: it treads with a firm step over the earth, bringing down curses on mankind. Prayer and repentance follow, but generally at a distance. The heart, being hardened by the deceitfulness of sin, does not speedily relent. They, however, follow; and when, with humility and contrition, they approach the throne of grace, they are respectfully received. God acknowledges them as His offerings, and heals the wounds made by transgression. If the heart remain obdurate, and the man will not humble himself

10 ² Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? shall the dead arise and praise thee. Selah.

11 Shall thy loving-kindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction?

12 ² Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?

13 But unto thee have I cried, O Lord; and in the morning shall my prayer prevent thee.

before his God; then his transgression cleaves to him; and the heartless lifeless prayers which he may offer in that state, presuming on God's mercy, will turn against him; and to such an one the sacrificial death and mediation of Christ are in vain. And this will be the case especially with the person who, having received an offence from another, refuses to forgive. This latter circumstance is that to which the poet particularly refers. See the whole passage with its context.

Verse 4. I am counted with them, &c.] I am as good as dead; nearly destitute of life and hope.

Verse 5. Free among the dead] באמת חיים ba-metim chapshî, I rather think, means stripped among the dead. Both the fourth and fifth verses seem to allude to a field of battle—the slain and the wounded are found scattered over the plain; the spoilers come among them and strip, not only the dead, but those also who appear to be mortally wounded, and cannot recover; and are so feeble as not to be able to resist. Hence the Psalmist says, I am counted with them that go down into the pit; I am as a man that hath no strength, ver. 4. And I am stripped among the dead, like the mortally wounded (חללים chalalim) that lie in the grave. "Free among the dead," inter mortuos liber, has been applied by the Fathers, to our Lord's voluntary death: all others were obliged to die; He alone gave up His life, and could take it again, John x. 18. He went into the grave, and came out when He chose. The dead are bound in the grave: He was free, and not obliged to continue in that state as they were.

They are cut off from thy hand.] An allusion to the roll in which the general has the names of all that compose his army under their respective officers. And when one is killed he is erased from this register, and remembered no more, as belonging to the army: but his name is entered among those who are dead, in a separate book. This latter is termed the black book, or the book of death; the other is called the book of life, or the book where the living are enrolled. From this circumstance, expressed in different parts of the Sacred Writings, the doctrine of reprobation and election has been derived! How wonderful!

Verse 7. Thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves] The figures in this verse seem to be taken from a tempest at sea. The storm is fierce, and the waves cover the ship.

Verse 8. Thou hast made me an abomination] This verse has been supposed to express the state of a leper,—who, because of the infectious nature of his disease, is separated from his family;—is abominable to all, and at last shut up in a separate house, whence he does not come out to mingle with society.

Verse 10. Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? מתים metim, "dead men."

Shall the dead] שמהו rephaim, the manes or departed spirits,—

Arise and praise thee] Any more in this life? The interrogations in this and the two following verses imply the strongest negations.

Verse 11. Or thy faithfulness in destruction?] Faithfulness in God refers as well to His fulfilling His threatenings as to His keeping his promises. The wicked are threatened with such punishments as their crimes have deserved: but annihilation is no punishment. God, therefore, does not intend to annihilate the wicked; their destruction cannot declare the faithfulness of God.

Verse 12. The land of forgetfulness] The place of separate spirits, or the invisible world. The Heathens had some notion of this state. They feigned a river in the invisible world, called Lethe, Ληθη, which signifies oblivion, and that those who drank of it remembered no more any thing relative to their former state.

Animo, quibus altera, fato Corpore debetur, lethæ ad fluminis undam Securus lætæ, at longa oblitiva potant. Virg. Æn. vi. 713. To all those souls who round the river wait New mortal bodies are decreed by fate; To you drink streams the quelling shades repair, And quell deep draughts of long oblivion there.

Verse 13. Shall my prayer prevent thee.] It shall get before thee: I will not wait till the accustomed time to offer my morning sacrifice; I shall call on thee long before others come to offer their devotions.

Verse 14. Why castest thou off my soul.] Instead of my soul, several of the ancient Versions have my prayer: Why dost thou refuse to hear me, and dost thus abandon me to death?

Verse 15. From my youth up.] I have always been a child of sorrow; afflicted in my body, and distressed in my mind.—There are still found in the church of God persons in similar circumstances: persons who are continually mourning for themselves and for the desolations of Zion. A disposition of this kind is sure to produce an unhealthy body; and, indeed, a weak constitution may often produce an enfeebled mind: but where the terrors of the Lord prevail, there is neither health of body nor peace of mind.

Verse 16. Thy fierce wrath goeth over me.] It is a mighty flood by which I am overwhelmed.

Verse 17. They came round about me daily like water.] Besides his spiritual conflicts, he had many enemies to grapple with. The waves of God's displeasure broke over him, and his enemies came around him like water, increasing more and more, rising higher and higher, till he was at last on the point of being submerged in the flood.

Verse 18. Lover and friend.] I have no comfort, and neither friend nor neighbour to sympathize with me.

Mine acquaintance into darkness.] All have forsaken me; or מִיְדָדִים מִיְדָדִים miyuddaim macheshak, "Darkness is my companion." Perhaps he may refer to the death of his acquaintances; all were gone! there were none left to console him! That man has a dismal lot who has outlived all his old friends and acquaintances; well may such complain. In the removal of their friends they see little else than the triumphs of death. Khosroo, an eminent Persian poet, handles this painful subject with great delicacy and beauty in the following lines:—

زخم صوي خطيره بگريستيم بزار
از هبزه لومنان كه امير بنا شدند
گفتم اي نشان كه شدند و خطر
داد از صدا جواب اي نشان كه

Restum saana khustorab beharatum beas

ANALYSIS OF THE EIGHTY-EIGHTH PSALM.

There are four parts in this Psalm:—

I. A petition, ver. 1, 2.

II. The cause of this petition, his misery, which he describes, ver. 3—9.

III. The effects produced by this miserable condition,—

1. A special prayer, ver. 10—12. 2. An expostulation with God for deliverance, ver. 10—12.

IV. A grievous complaint, from ver. 14—18.

The Psalmist offers his petition: but before he begins, he lays down four arguments why it should be admitted,—

1. His confidence and reliance on God. O Lord God of my salvation.

2. His earnestness to prevail. I have cried.

3. His assiduity. Day and night.

4. His sincerity. I have cried before thee.

And then he tenders his request for audience. Let my prayer come before thee, incline thine ear unto my cry.

II. And then next he sets forth the pitiful condition he was in, that thereby he might move God to take compassion, which he amplifies several ways:—

1. From the weight and variety of his troubles: many they were, and press'd him to death. For my soul is full of troubles, and my life draweth nigh to the grave.

2. From the danger of death in which he was.

Which is illustrated by three degrees:—

1. That he was moribundus, dying, no hope of life in him, even by the estimate of all men. I am counted with them that go down to the pit; I am as a man that hath no strength.

2. That he was planè mortuus, nearly dead: but as a

17 They came round about me daily like water: they compassed me about together.

18 Lover and friend hast thou put far from me, and mine acquaintance into darkness.

w Psa. 31. 11. & 38. 11.

dead man, Free among the dead; freed from all the business of this life: as far separate from them as a dead man.

3. Yea, dead and buried. Like the slain that lie in the grave; whom thou rememberest no more, i. e. to care for in this life; and they are cut off from Thy hand, i. e. Thy providence, Thy custody, as touching matters of this life.

And yet he farther amplifies his sad condition by two similitudes:—

1. Of a man in some deep dark dungeon. Thou hast laid me in the lowest pit, in darkness, in the deeps; as was Jeremiah, chap. xxxvii.

2. Of a man in a wreck at sea, that is compassed with the waves, to which he compares God's anger. Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. One wave impels another. The recurrence of his troubles was perpetual, one no sooner gone but another succeeded.

And, add to this his sorrow, his friends (whose visits in extremity used to alleviate the grief of a troubled soul,) even these proved perfidious, and came not to him; he had no comfort from them: which was also God's doing, and thus augmented his grief.

The auxesis is here very elegant.

1. Thou hast put away mine acquaintance from me. THOU.

2. Thou hast made me an abomination to them. No less; an abomination.

3. I am shut up, I cannot come forth. As a man in prison, I cannot come at them, and they will not come to me.

III. The effect of which grievous affliction was threefold:—1. An internal grief and wasting of the body. 2. An ardent affection in God; and—3. An expostulation with God.

1. My eye mourns by reason of affliction. An evidence that I am troubled and grieved to the heart, that my eye droops and fails: for, when the animal and vital spirits suffer a decay, the eye will quickly, by her dimness, deadness, and dulness, discover it.

2. It produces an ardent affection, a continuance and assiduity in prayer, which is here made evident by the adjuncts.

1. His voice. I have called daily upon thee. It was,—

1. A cry. 2. It was continual.

2. By the extension of his hands. I have stretched out my hands to thee. Men used to do so when they expected help; when they looked to receive; whence we sometimes say, Lend me thy hand.

3. The third effect was, an expostulation with his God, in which he presseth to spare his life from the inconvenience that might thereby happen, viz. that he should be disabled to praise God, and celebrate his name, as he was bound, and desired to do, among the living. An argument used before, Psal. vi. 3. This argument, though it savours too much of human frailty, yet he thought by it to move God, who above all things is jealous of his own glory, which by his death he imagines will suffer loss; and therefore he asks,—

1. Will thou shew wonders among the dead? That is, thy desire is to set forth Thy honour, which cannot be done if I go to the grave, except by some miracle I should be raised from thence.

2. Shall the dead arise again and praise thee? It is the living that shall shew forth Thy praise, Thy power, and goodness; Thy fidelity in keeping Thy promises to the sons of men. The dead, as dead, cannot do this; and they return not from the grave, except by miracle.

3. Shall thy loving-kindness be declared in the grave, or thy faithfulness in destruction? shall thy wonders be known in the dark, or thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness? Such is the grave, a place of oblivion; for Abraham is ignorant of us. The goodness and faithfulness of God, which he makes known to us in this life, are not known, nor can be declared by the dead: the living see them; they have experience of them; and therefore he desires that his life may be spared to that end, lest if he die now that faculty should be taken from him; he should no longer be able to resound the praise of God, which is the end for which men ought to desire life.

IV. He returns to his complaint; and again repeats what he had said before, and almost in the same words, and gives three instances:—

PSALM LXXXIX.

The Psalmist shews God's great mercy to the House of David, and the Promises which he had given to it of support and perpetuity, 1-37. He complains that notwithstanding these Promises, the Kingdom of Judah is overthrown, and the royal family nearly ruined, 38-45. He earnestly prays for their restoration, 46-52.

XVII. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

Maaschil of ^b Ethan the Ezrahite.

I WILL sing of the mercies of the LORD for ever: with my mouth will I make known thy faithfulness ^c to all generations.

2 For I have said, Mercy shall be built up for ever: ^d thy faithfulness shalt thou establish in the very heavens.

3 ^e I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have ^f sworn unto David my servant,

^a Or, a Psalm for Ethan, the Ezrahite, to give instruction. — ^b 1 Kings 4. 31. ^c Chron. 2. 6. — ^d Heb. to generation and generation. So ver. 4.—^e 1 Kings 19. 10. ^f 1 Kings 8. 15.

1. In his prayer. But unto Thee have I cried, O Lord, and in the morning shall my prayer prevent thee. He prayed earnestly, early, not drowsily; for he did prevent God: he prayed, and would continue in prayer, and yet all in vain.

2. For God seems to be inexorable, of which he complains, Lord, why castest thou off my soul? why hidest thou thy face from me? Even the best of God's servants have sometimes been brought to that strait, that they have not had a clear sense of God's favour, but conceived themselves neglected and deserted by Him, and discountenanced.

His second instance is, his present affliction mentioned before, ver. 4, 5, 6, 7. I am afflicted and ready to die, which he here exaggerates:

1. From the time and continuance of it; for he had borne it even from his youth up.

2. From the cause. It did not proceed from any outward or human cause, that might have been borne and helped; but it was an affliction sent from God. Thy terrors have I suffered: it came from a sense of God's wrath.

3. From an uncomfortable effect. It wrought in his soul amazement, unrest, a perpetual trouble and astonishment. Thy terrors have I suffered with a troubled mind: I am distracted with them.

He amplifies this wrath by the former similes, ver. 7, waves and water.

1. Thy fierce wrath goes over me. As waves over a man's head at sea. Thy terrors have cut me off. As a weaver's thrum.

2. They came round about me like water: daily like water.

3. They compassed me about together, as if they conspired my ruin: all thy waves, v. 7.

His third instance, which is the same, ver. 8. The perfidiousness and desertion of friends: a loving friend is some comfort in distress; but this he found not. Lover and friend hast thou put far from me, and mine acquaintance into darkness. They appear no more to me to give me any counsel, help or comfort, than if they were hidden in perpetual darkness. His case, therefore, was most deplorable.

NOTES ON PSALM LXXXIX.

It is most probable that this Psalm was composed during the Captivity. Of Ethan and Heman we have already seen something in the introduction to the preceding Psalm; see also the parallel places in the margin. The title should probably be translated,—To give instruction to Ethan the Ezrahite. The Chaldees have, "A good instruction, delivered by Abraham, who came from the east country." The Septuagint and Aethiopic have Ethan the Israelite;—the Arabic has Nathan the Israelite.

The Psalm divides itself into two grand parts; the first extends from ver. 1 to 37, in which the Psalmist shews God's mercy to the house of David, and the promises which He has given to it of support and perpetuity. The second part begins with ver. 38, and ends with the Psalm; and in it the author complains that, notwithstanding these promises, the kingdom of Judah is overthrown and the royal family ruined; and he entreats the Lord to remember his covenant made with that family, and restore them from their captivity.

Verse 1. I will sing of the mercies of the LORD I will celebrate the mercy of God to the house of Jacob; the mercy that has been shewn to our fathers from time immemorial.

To all generations] What I say concerning Thy mercy and goodness, being inspired by Thy Spirit, is not only true, but shall be preserved by the Divine providence for ever.

Verse 2. Mercy shall be built up for ever] God's good-

6 ^k For who in the heaven can be compared unto the LORD: who among the sons of the mighty can be likened unto the LORD?

7 ^l God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him.

8 O LORD God of hosts, who is a strong LORD ^m like unto thee? or to thy faithfulness round about thee?

ness is the foundation on which His mercy rests; and from that source, and on that foundation, acts of mercy shall flow and be built up for ever and ever.

Thy faithfulness shalt thou establish] What Thou hast promised to do to the children of men on earth, Thou dost register in heaven; and Thy promise shall never fail.

Verse 3. I have made a covenant with my chosen] I have made a covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; and renewed it with Moses and Joshua in reference to the Israelites in general: but I have made one with David in especial relation to himself and posterity, of whom, according to the flesh, the Christ is to come. And this is the covenant with David:—

Verse 4. Thy seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations] And this covenant had most incontestably Jesus Christ in view. This is the seed, or posterity, that should sit on the throne, and reign for ever and ever. David and his family are long since become extinct; none of his race has sat on the Jewish throne for more than two thousand years; but the Christ has reigned invariably since that time, and will reign till all His enemies are put under His feet; and to this the Psalmist says Selah. It will be so; it is so,—and it cannot be otherwise; for the Lord hath sworn that He shall have an everlasting kingdom, as he has an everlasting priesthood.

Verse 5. The heavens shall praise thy wonders] The works that shall be wrought by this Descendant of David shall be so plainly miraculous as shall prove their origin to be Divine: and both saints and angels shall join to celebrate His praises.

Thy faithfulness also] All Thy promises shall be fulfilled; and particularly and supereminently those which respect the congregation of the saints,—the assemblies of Christian believers.

Verse 6. For who in the heaven] prw shachak, signifies the ethereal regions,—all visible or unbounded space;—the universe. Who is like Jesus! Even in his human nature none of the sons of the mighty can be compared with Him. He stoness for the sin of the world, and saves to the uttermost all who come unto God through Him.

This may also be considered a reproof to idolaters. Is there any among the heavenly hosts like to God? Even the most glorious of them were made by His hands. Can the stars,—the more distant planets,—the moon or the sun, be likened unto God most high?

Who among the sons of the mighty] Instead of עֲלֵימִים elim, mighty ones, four of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. have עֲלֵי עֵל eil, strength:—sons of strength, strong persons. Several of the Versions seem to have read עֲלֵימִים elohim, God, instead of עֲלֵימִים elim, strong ones. So my old Psalter, following the Vulgate,—For who fit the clothes sal be ebened to Lorbe; like sal be to God in sons of God? which it paraphrases thus:—"Emang al haly men nane may be eveded to Ihu Crist: and nane may be like to hym in God's sons: for he is God's son to be kynde, and thai through grace."

Verse 7. God is greatly to be feared] In all religious assemblies the deepest reverence for God should rest upon the people. Where this does not prevail, there is no true worship. While some come with a proper scriptural boldness to the throne of grace, there are others who come into the presence of God with a reprehensible, if not sinful, boldness.

Verse 8. O LORD God of hosts] Thou who hast all armies at Thy command, and canst serve Thyself by every part of Thy creation, whether animate or inanimate.

Who is a strong LORD] See ver. 6.

Thy faithfulness round about thee] Or, more properly, thy faithfulness is round about thee. Thou still keepest Thy promises in view. God's truth leads Him to fulfil His promises: they stand round His throne as the faithful servants of an eastern monarch stand round their master, be with him: and ^b in my name shall his horn be exalted.

25 ¹ I will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers.

26 He shall cry unto me, Thou art ^m my father, my God, and ^a the rock of my salvation.

27 Also I will make him ^a my firstborn, ^b higher than the kings of the earth.

28 ^a My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and ^m my covenant shall stand fast with him.

29 ^a His seed also will I make to endure for ever, and his throne ^a as the days of heaven.

30 ^v If his children ^v forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments;

31 If they ^a break my statutes, and keep not my commandments;

32 Then ^v will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes.

33 ^a Nevertheless my loving-kindness ^a will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer my faithfulness ^b to fail.

34 My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips.

35 Once have I sworn ^b by my holiness ^d that I will not lie unto David.

36 ^a His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne ^a as the sun before me.

37 It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah.

38 But thou hast ^a cast off and ^b abhorred, thou hast been wroth with thine anointed.

39 Thou hast made void the covenant of thy servant; ¹ thou hast profaned his crown by casting it to the ground.

40 ^b Thou hast broken down all his hedges; thou hast brought his strong holds to ruin.

41 All that pass by the way spoil him: he is ^a a reproach to his neighbours.

42 Thou hast set up the right hand of his adversaries; thou hast made all his enemies to rejoice.

43 Thou hast also turned the edge of his sword, and hast not made him to stand in the battle.

The Philistines, the Ammonites, Syrians, &c. united all their forces to crush him, but in vain. God beat down all his foes before his face, and variously plagued those who opposed him, ver. 23.

Verse 25. I will set his hand also in the sea] This was literally fulfilled in David. Hand signifies power or authority; He set His hand on the sea in conquering the Philistines, and extending his empire along the coast of the Mediterranean sea, from Tyre to Pelusium. All the coasts of the Red sea, the Persian Gulf, and the Arabic ocean, might be said to have been under his government; for they all paid tribute to him or his son Solomon.

His right hand in the rivers] First, the Euphrates;—He subjected all Syria, and even a part of Mesopotamia, 2 Sam. viii. 3; 1 Chron. xviii. 3. He also took Damascus, and consequently had his hand, or authority, over the river Chrysorhoes, or Baraddi; and in his conquest of all Syria his hand must have been on the Orontes and other rivers in that region. But if this be considered as referring to the typical David, we see that He was never conquered; He never lost a battle; the hosts of hell pursued Him in vain. Satan was discomfited, and all His enemies bruised under His feet. Even over death He triumphed; and as to His dominion it has spread and is spreading over all the isles of the sea, and the continents of the world.

Verse 27. I will make him my firstborn] I will deal by him as a father by his first-born son, to whom a double portion of possessions and honours belong. First-born is not always to be understood literally in Scripture. It often signifies simply a well-beloved, or best-beloved son; one preferred to all the rest, and distinguished by some eminent prerogative. Thus God calls Israel his son, His first-born, Exod. iv. 32. See also Ecclus. xxxv. 12. And even Ephraim is called God's first-born, Jer. xxxi. 9. In the same sense it is sometimes applied even to Jesus Christ Himself, to signify His super-eminent dignity; not His eternal Sonship, as inveterate prejudice and superficial thinking have supposed.

Verse 29. His seed also will I make to endure for ever] This can apply only to the spiritual David. The posterity of David are long since extinct, or so blended with the remaining Jews as to be utterly indiscernible; but Jesus ever liveth, and His seed (Christians) are spread, and are spreading over all nations; and His throne is eternal. As to His manhood, He is of the house and lineage of David: the government is upon His shoulders, and of its increase there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and on his kingdom to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice, from henceforth even for ever. Isa. ix. 7.

Verse 30. If his children forsake my law] See the Notes on 2 Sam. vii. 13, where this and some of the following verses are explained.

Verse 34. My covenant will I not break] My determination to establish a spiritual kingdom, the Head of which shall be Jesus, the Son of David, shall never fail. My prophets have declared this, and I will not alter the thing that is gone out of my mouth.

Verse 35. Once have I sworn] I have made one determination on this head; and have bound myself by my holiness:—it is impossible that I should change; and there needs no second oath, the one already made is of endless obligation.

Verse 36. His throne as the sun] Splendid and glorious! dispensing light, heat, life, and salvation, to all mankind.

Verse 37. As the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven.] That is, as long as the sun and moon shall endure, as long as time shall last, His kingdom shall last among men. The moon appears to be termed a faithful witness here, because by her particularly, time is measured. Her decrease and increase are especially observed by every nation; and by these, time is generally estimated, especially among the eastern nations. So many moons is a man old,—so many moons since such an event happened; and even their years are reckoned by lunations. This is the case with the Mohammedans to the present day. Or, the rainbow may be intended;—that sign which God has established in the cloud; that faithful witness of His that the earth shall no more be destroyed by water. As long, therefore, as the sun, the moon, and the rainbow, appear in the heavens, so long shall the spiritual David reign, and His seed prosper and increase.

Selah.] It is confirmed: it shall not fail.

Verse 38. But thou hast cast off] Hitherto the Psalmist has spoken of the covenant of God with David and his family, which led them to expect all manner of prosperity, and a perpetuity of the Jewish throne;—now he shews what appears to him a failure of the promise, and what he calls in the next verse the making void the covenant of his servant. God cannot lie to David;—how is it then that His crown is profaned,—that it is cast down to the ground; the land being possessed by strangers, and the twelve tribes in the most disgraceful and oppressive captivity?

Verse 40. Thou hast broken down all his hedges] Thou hast permitted the land to be stripped of all defence:—there is not even one strong place in the hands of Thy people.

Verse 41. All that pass by the way spoil him.] The land is in the condition of a vineyard, the hedge of which is broken down, so that they who pass by may pull the grapes, and dismantle or tear down the vines. The Chaldeans and the Assyrians began the ravage: the Samaritans on the one hand, and the Idumeans on the other, have completed it.

Verse 42. Thou hast set up the right hand of his adversaries] Thou hast given them that strength which Thou didst formerly give to Thy own people: therefore these are depressed, those exalted.

Verse 43. Thou hast also turned the edge of his sword.] The arms and military prowess of Thy people are no longer of any use to them: Thou art against them, and therefore they are fallen. In what a perilous and hopeless state must that soldier be who, defending his life against his mortal foe, his sword breaks, or its edge turns; or, in modern warfare, whose gun misses fire! The Gauls, when invaded by the Romans, had no method of hardening iron; at every blow their swords bended, so that they were obliged, before they could strike again, to put them under foot, or over their knee, to straighten them; and in most cases, before this could be done, their better armed foe had taken away their life! The edge of their sword was turned, so that they could not stand in battle; and hence the Gauls were conquered by the Romans!

44 Thou hast made his glory to cease, and cast his throne down to the ground.

45 The days of his youth hast thou shortened; thou hast covered him with shame. Selah.

46 How long, LORD? wilt thou hide thyself for ever? shall thy wrath burn like fire?

47 Remember how short my time is: wherefore hast thou made all men in vain?

48 What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave? Selah.

Verse 44. Thou hast made his glory to cease] The kingly dignity is destroyed; and there is neither king nor throne remaining.

Verse 45. The days of his youth hast thou shortened] Our kings have not reigned half their days, nor lived out half their lives. The four last kings of Judea reigned but a short time; and either died by the sword, or in captivity.

Jehoaaz reigned only three months; and was led captive to Egypt, where he died. Jehoiakim reigned only eleven years; and was tributary to the Chaldeans, who put him to death, and cast his body into the common sewer. Jehoiachin reigned three months and ten days; and was led captive to Babylon, where he continued in prison to the time of Evilmerodach, who, though he loosed him from prison, never invested him with any power. Zedekiah, the last of all, had reigned only eleven years when he was taken, his eyes put out, was loaded with chains, and thus carried to Babylon. Most of these kings died a violent and premature death. Thus the days of their youth, of their power, dignity, and life, were shortened, and they themselves covered with shame. Selah; so it most incontestably is.

Verse 46. How long, LORD?] The promise cannot utterly fail. When then, O LORD, wilt thou restore the kingdom to Israel?

Verse 47. How short my time is] If Thou deliver not speedily, none of the present generation shall see Thy salvation. Are all the remnants of our tribes created in vain? shall they never see happiness?

Verse 48. What man is he that liveth] All men are mortal, and death is uncertain; and no man by wisdom, might, or riches, can deliver his life from the hand, the power, of death and the grave.

Verse 49. LORD, where are thy former loving-kindnesses] Wilt Thou not deal with us as Thou didst with our fathers? didst Thou not swear unto David that Thou wouldst distinguish him as Thou didst them?

Verse 50. I do bear in my bosom] Our enemies, knowing our confidence, having often heard our boast in Thee, and now seeing our low and hopeless estate, mock us for our confidence, and blaspheme Thee. This wounds my soul; I cannot bear to hear Thy name blasphemed among the heathen. All these mighty people blaspheme the God of Jacob.

Verse 51. They have reproached the footsteps of thine anointed] They search into the whole history of Thy people—they trace it up to the earliest times; and they find we have been disobedient and rebellious; and on this account we suffer much, alas, deserved reproach. The Chaldees give this clause a singular turn, Thy enemies have reproached the slowness of the footsteps of the feet of Thy Messiah, O LORD. We have trusted in Him as our great Deliverer, and have been daily in expectation of His coming; but there is no deliverer, and our enemies mock our confidence. This expectation seems now wholly abandoned by the Jews: they have rejected the true Messiah, and the ground of their expectation of another is now cut off. When will they turn unto the LORD? When shall the veil be taken away from their hearts?

*Read by Thy grace; O hand or break
The iron sinews in their neck?*

Verse 52. Blessed be the LORD for evermore] Let Him treat us as He will, his name deserves eternal praises: our affliction, though great, is less than we have deserved.

This verse ends the THIRD BOOK of the PSALTER; and, I think, has been added by a later hand, in order to make this distinction, as every Masoretic Bible has something of this kind at the end of each book. The verse is wanting in one of Kennicot's and one of De Rossi's MSS.; in another it is written without points, to show that it does not belong to the text; and in three others it is written separately from the text. It is found, however, in all the ancient versions. The Chaldees finishes thus:—Blessed be the name of the Lord in this world. Amen and 49 LORD, where are thy former loving-kindnesses, which thou swarest unto David in thy truth?

50 Remember, LORD, the reproach of thy servants; how I do bear in my bosom the reproach of all the mighty people;

51 Wherewith thine enemies have reproached, O LORD; wherewith they have reproached the footsteps of thine anointed.

52 Blessed be the LORD for evermore. Amen, and Amen.

Amen. Blessed be the name of the Lord in the world to come. Amen and Amen. And the reader will find no difficulty to subscribe his AMEN, so be it!

ANALYSIS OF THE EIGHTY-NINTH PSALM.

In this Psalm the stability and perpetuity of Christ's kingdom, of which the kingdom of David was but a type, are excellently described and foretold.

The parts of this Psalm are these:—

I. The argument and sum of the whole; the loving-kindness and the truth of God, ver. 1, 2.

II. The particular instance of God's goodness and truth, in making a covenant with David, ver. 3, 4.

III. A doxology in which God is praised for His wonders, faithfulness, power, providence, justice, judgment, mercy and truth, ver. 3—15.

IV. The happy state of God's people, ver. 15—19.

V. A special example of God's goodness towards His church, exemplified in David, but verified in Christ, ver. 20—23.

VI. How David's posterity should be dealt with, on their disobedience, ver. 29—33.

VII. An expostulation on the contrary events, where the Psalmist deprecates the ruined state of the Jewish kingdom, ver. 33—47.

VIII. A petition for mercy and restoration, ver. 48—51.

IX. The conclusion, in which the Psalmist blesseth God for the hope he has in His favour, in all states, ver. 52.

1. The argument or sum of the Psalm, set down in the first verse, and amplified by the reason in the second.

1. I will sing. I will set this forth in a song; because, 1. It is the fittest way to express joy for any thing. 2. It will be best inculcated in this way. 3. It will be more easily remembered: and, 4. More easily delivered to others, in order to be remembered. Many ancient histories had not been preserved at all, had they not been delivered in poetry.

2. Of thy mercies. Plurally, for they are many; and a song of this kind should be of all.

3. For ever. Intentionally, not in himself, not actually: for as a wicked man, could he live always, would sin always; so a good man, could he live here for ever, would sing for ever of the mercies of the Lord.

4. With my mouth will I make known, &c. While I live I will make them known, and when I am dead they shall be known by the record which I leave behind. His reason for it is, because God's mercy is everlasting; it is therefore proper to be the subject of everlasting song.

1. For I have said. This is an indubitable truth.

2. Mercy shall be built up for ever. It is not exhausted in one age; but, as a house built on a strong foundation, it shall be firm, and last from age to age.

3. Thy faithfulness shall thou establish. As is thy mercy, so is thy faithfulness, perpetual as the heavens.

II. For the proof of God's goodness and truth he produces the instance of the covenant made with David, where he brings in God speaking:—

1. I have made a covenant with my chosen. I have made this covenant through my mere mercy, not on account of their merits. I have chosen David; not because he deserved it, but because he is fit for it.

2. I have sworn. In compassion to the weakness of men, I have condescended to bind myself by an oath; and the covenant and the oath are extant. 2 Sam. vii. 11.

3. The tenor of the covenant is,—“Thy seed will I establish for ever, and build up Thy throne to all generations.” Thy seed—this is true of Christ only, who was of the seed of David; and of whose kingdom there shall be no end. The words are not to be understood of David's earthly kingdom, but of Christ's spiritual kingdom, for that alone will be established for ever.

III. A Doxology.—What the Psalmist undertook in the first part he now performs, and thus he begins:—The heavens shall praise. By these some understand the Church, and the preachers in the Church; others the angels: both are true. God's followers and his angels praise him; and the subject of their praise is,—

1. God's wondrous works, and His truth. 2. The manner in which He shewed His works and His truth, in promising the Messiah, and in so faithfully keeping that promise.

And now he sings praise to His Majesty, setting forth its power in three respects:—

1. By way of comparison;—there is nothing in heaven or earth equal to it, ver. 6—8.

2. By His agency in governing the world: as, for example, the sea,—Thou stillest the raging of it, &c.

3. The creation of all things; the world and its fulness.

The other part of the praise, sung both by the prophets and the angels, is taken from His attributes, summed up in ver. 14. Justice and Judgment are the habitation of Thy throne, Mercy and Truth shall go before Thy face.

He represents God as a great King, sitting in his throne; the basis of which is,—1. Justice and judgment.

2. The attendants are Mercy and Truth.

1. Justice, which defends His subjects, and does every one right.

2. Judgment, which restrains rebels, and keeps off injuries.

3. Mercy, which shews compassion, pardons, supports the weak.

4. Truth, that performs whatsoever He promiseth.

IV. And in regard that God is powerful, just, merciful, faithful, he takes an occasion to set out the happy condition of God's people, that live under this King.

Blessed are the people that know the joyful sound: that is, do know that God is present with them, and His kingly Majesty is at hand to protect them. The phrase is taken from Moses. For the law was given by sound of trumpet. The calling of the feasts was by sound of trumpet; at that sound they removed; at that sound they assembled. Balaam said, The sound of a king is among them. Happy, then, are the people that know the joyful sound. God presents their King speaking, ruling, defending, pardoning them. Or, it may refer to the year of jubilee, (see the notes.) That they are happy the effects do evince: which are,—

1. They shall walk in the light of thy countenance, i. e. though beset with troubles, yet they shall walk confidently, being assured of God's favour.

2. In thy name shall they rejoice all the day long. Their joy is firm.

3. In thy righteousness shall they be exalted. They shall get a name, strength. In their union and communion with God they shall be happy.

Confident then, joyful and strong they are in all temptations, which yet they have not from themselves. All from God. For thou art the glory of their strength, and in thy favour our horn shall be exalted. For the Lord is our defence, the Holy One of Israel is our King.

V. The Doxology being now ended, and the happiness of God's people expressed and proved, the prophet now enlarges himself upon the covenant formerly mentioned, ver. 4, 5, exemplified in David, but truly verified in Christ. Which he continues to verse 30.

1. Then, i. e. when David was chosen to be king, and invested with the regal robe,—

2. Thou spakest in vision to thy Holy One. To Samuel for his anointing; and saidst,

3. I have laid help upon one that is mighty; I have exalted one chosen out of the people. That is, David in type, but Christ in the antitype. So explained, I have found David my servant; with my holy oil have I anointed him.

To which there follows the promises made to him.

1. For his establishment and confirmation in the throne. With whom my hand shall be established; mine arm also shall strengthen him.

2. For protection against his enemies. The enemy shall not exact upon him, nor the son of wickedness afflict him.

3. A conquest over his enemies. And will beat down his foes before his face, and plague them that hate him.

4. And that there be no doubt of the performance of these ample promises, nor yet those that follow, the prophet interposes the cause, viz. The faithfulness and mercy of God. In mercy He said it, and it should so come to pass. But my faithfulness and mercy shall be with him. And now he goes on.

5. His horn shall be exalted. His power shall be greatly increased.

And this his exaltation appears,—

1. In the dilatation of his empire. I will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers, i. e. From the sea to Euphrates, 2 Sam. viii.

2. In the honour done him, to call God, Father, his God, his Rock. He shall call me, Thou art my Father, my God, and the Rock of my Salvation.

3. Then that God asserts and fixes this prerogative upon him, acknowledging him to be his Son; his first-born Son. Also I will make him my first-born, higher than the kings of the earth.

4. In the perpetuity of his kingdom, which is rightly attributed to God's mercy: as verse 25. My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him.

5. In the promise made to his seed. His seed also will I make to endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven.

VI. And next the prophet puts a case, and answers it.—But what if David's seed transgress God's covenant, break His laws, violate His statutes, become rebels, and disobedient,—will God then keep covenant with them? shall his seed endure for ever? and his throne as the days of heaven? To this doubt God answers, from verse 30 to 38; shewing us how David's seed, if they transgress, shall be dealt with.

1. If his children forsake my law, that is, my whole doctrine of worship, religion, faith, &c.

2. And walk not in my judgments, i. e. in those laws which set out rewards and punishments.

3. If they break my statutes. Those statutes I have set down for my service, the rites, ceremonies, new moons, sabbaths, sacrifices, circumcisions, pass-over, &c.

4. And keep not my commandments; that is, the decalogue and moral law. In a word, if they become vicious in their morals, and profane, and rebels in my worship and religion.

This then shall happen unto them,—escape they shall not, but shall soundly smart for it. They shall feel,—1. The rod; and 2. The scourge. Then

1. I will visit, that is, punish their transgression with a rod.

2. And their iniquity with stripes. Which was often done by the Babylonians, Antiochus, &c. And yet in judgment I will remember mercy. I will remember my covenant, my promise, my word, my oath, and will make that good. I will not totally cast off David's seed; which I mean not after the flesh, for that is long since cast off, but after the Spirit. Christ, which was of the seed of David, and those which are His seed, viz. the church, shall enjoy the benefit of my covenant and oath for ever. Nevertheless, my loving-kindness will I not utterly take from him, nor suffer my faithfulness to fail. My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing gone out of my lips.

And that there be no doubt of this, he brings in God repeating His oath and covenant.

1. His oath. Once have I sworn by my holiness; that is, by myself, who am holy.

2. His covenant. That I will not lie unto David; for his seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. As the sun and moon are not liable to mutations, no more is this covenant: they must endure to the end of the world; and so must this covenant. They are faithful witnesses in heaven; and so we are to seek for the performance of this covenant in heaven; not in the earth, the covenant being about a heavenly kingdom, not an earthly, it being evident that the kingdom of David on earth has failed many ages since: but that of Christ shall never fail.

VII. Now that David's kingdom did fail, or at least was brought to a low ebb, is the complaint in the following words, which flesh and blood considering, gave a wrong judgment upon it, as if God did nothing less than perform His oath and covenant. This is what the prophet lays to God's charge. But thou hast cast off and abhorred, thou hast been wroth with thine anointed. Both king and people are cast aside, than which nothing seems more contrary to Thy covenant.

Thou hast made void the covenant of Thy servant, of which there are many lamentable consequences:—

1. His crown is cast to the ground. The glory of His kingdom trampled upon.

2. His hedges broken down. His strong holds brought to ruin.

3. All that pass by the way spoil him. He is exposed to all rapine and plunder.

4. He is a reproach to his neighbour. Exposed to all contumely and disgrace.

5. Thou hast set up the right hand of his enemies, and made all his adversaries to rejoice. Thou seemest to take part with the enemy against him, and makest him to exult and rejoice in oppressing him.

PSALM XC.

The eternity of God, 1, 2. The frailty of the state of man, 3-8. The general limits of human life, 9. The danger of displeasing God, 11. The necessity of considering the shortness of life, and of regarding the favour of the Almighty, 12. Earnest prayer for the restoration of Israel, 12-17.

XVIII. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

A Prayer of Moses, the man of God.

LORD, thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations.

2 Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God.

3 Thou turnest man to destruction; and sayest, Return, ye children of men.

4 For a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past, and as a watch in the night.

5 Thou carriest them away as with a flood; they are as a sleep: in the morning they are like grass which groweth up.

6 In the morning it flourisheth, and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down and withereth.

7 For we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled.

a Or, A Prayer, being a Psalm of Moses.—b Deut. 33. 1.—c Deut. 33. 27. Esai. 11. 10.—d Heb. in generation and generation.—e Prov. 8. 25, 26.—f Gen. 3. 19. Eccles.

12. 7.—g Eccles. 12. 10. 9 Pet. 3. 8.—h Or, when he hath passed them.—i Ps. 78. 30.—k Ps. 103. 15. Isai. 40. 6.—l Or, is changed.—m Ps. 92. 7. Job 14. 2.

6. Thou hast also turned the edge of his sword:—blunted his sword that was wont to slay, and hast not made him to stand in the battle, but to fly and turn his back.

7. Thou hast made his glory,—the glory, dignity, authority of his kingdom, to cease, and cast his crown to the ground.

8. The days of his youth hast thou shortened; cut him off in the prime and strength of his years. Thou hast covered him with shame;—made his opulent glorious kingdom ignominious, which was true in divers of David's posterity, especially Jehoiakim.

These were the sad complaints which the prophet pours out: but he quickly recovers and recalls his thoughts; and that he may move God to help, he falls to prayer, which is very pathetic.

VIII. He considers the nature of God as kind, loving, merciful, slow to anger; and asks,—

1. How long, Lord? wilt thou hide thyself for ever? Hide thy favour?

2. Shall thy wrath burn like fire? An element that hath no mercy.

He then uses other arguments, pathetically expressed, to move God to pity:—

1. Drawn from the brevity of man's life. Remember how short my time is.

2. From the end for which man was created, not in vain, but to be an object of God's goodness and favour.

3. From the weakness and disability of man. His life is short;—and can he lengthen it? What man is he that hath, and shall not see death? Yea, though he live long, yet he is a mortal creature. Shall he deliver his soul from the grass?

4. From the covenant, of which he puts God in mind. Lord, where are thy former loving-kindnesses, which thou owest to David in thy truth?

5. From the ignominy, scorn, sarcasms, by enemies cast upon them, which he desires God to look upon. 1. Remember, Lord, the reproach of thy servant. 2. And how I do bear in my bosom. Not spoken afar off, but in my hearing, and to my face, as if poured and emptied into my bosom; the rebukes, not of this or that man, but many people.

6. And, lastly, that these reproaches, in effect, fall upon God. For they who reproach God's servants are His enemies. Remember the reproaches.—1. Wherewith thine enemies have reproached, O Lord. 2. Wherewith they have reproached the footsteps of thine anointed, i. e. Either whatsoever he says or does; or else by footsteps is to be understood the latter end of David's kingdom, which was indeed subject to reproach. 3. But the Chaldees paraphrast, by footsteps, understands the coming of the Messiah in the flesh; which, because it was long promised and men saw not performed, they derided, mocked at, and reproached, as vain.

IX. The close of this long Psalm is a benediction, by which the prophet, after his combat with flesh and blood about the performance of the covenant, composes his troubled soul and acquiesces in God; blessing Him for whatsoever falls out, breaking forth into—

1. Blessed be the Lord for evermore. Blessed be His name who does and orders all things for the best to His people, although in the midst of calamities and troubles He seems to desert them.

2. And that we may know that he did this from his heart, he seals it with a double Amen. Amen, Amen. So I wish it; so be it.

NOTES ON PSALM XC.

The title of this Psalm is, A prayer of Moses the man of God. The Chaldees has, A prayer which Moses the prophet of the Lord prayed when the people of Israel had sinned in the wilderness. All the Versions ascribe it to Moses: but that it could not be of Moses the lawgiver, is evident from this consideration, that the age of man was not then seventy or eighty years, which is here stated to be its almost universal limits, for Joshua lived one hundred and ten years, and Moses himself one hundred and twenty; Miriam his sister, one hundred and thirty; Aaron his brother, one hundred and twenty-three; Caleb, fourscore and five years; and their contemporaries lived in the same proportion. See the Note on ver. 4. Therefore the Psalm cannot at all refer to such ancient times. If the title be at all authentic, it must refer to some other person of that name; and indeed, אֱלֹהִים אֱמִי ish elohim, a man of God, a divinely inspired man, agrees to the times of the prophets, who were thus denominated. The Psalm was doubtless composed during or after the Captivity; and most probably on their return, when they were engaged in rebuilding the Temple; and this, as Dr. Kennicott conjectures, may be the work of their hands, which they pray God to bless and prosper.

Verse 1. Lord, thou hast been our dwelling-place] נָדָב מִדְּבַר; but instead of this several MSS. have נָדָב מִדְּבַר, "place of defence," or "refuge," which is the reading of the Vulgate, Septuagint, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. Ever since Thy covenant with Abraham, Thou hast been the Resting-place, Refuge, and Defence of Thy people Israel. Thy mercy has been lengthened out from generation to generation.

Verse 2. Before the mountains were brought forth] The mountains and hills appear to have been everlasting; but as they were brought forth out of the womb of eternity, there was a time when they were not: but Thou hast been ab æternitate à parte ante, ad æternitatem à parte post; from the eternity that is past, before time began;—to the eternity that is after, when time shall have an end. This is the highest description of the eternity of God to which human language can reach.

Verse 3. Thou turnest man to destruction] Literally, Thou shalt turn dying man (וְמֵת עֹנֹה) to the small dust (אֶבֶר דַּקָּה); but thou wilt say, Return ye children of Adam. This appears to be a clear and strong promise of the resurrection of the human body, after it has long slept, mingled with the dust of the earth.

Verse 4. For a thousand years in thy sight] As if he had said, Though the resurrection of the body may be a thousand (or any indefinite number of) years distant; yet, when these are past, they are but as yesterday, or a single watch of the night. They pass through the mind in a moment, and appear no longer in their duration than the time required by the mind to reflect them by thought. But, short as they appear to the mind of the eye, they are nothing when compared with the eternity of God! The Author probably has in view also that economy of Divine justice and providence by which the life of man has been shortened from one thousand years to three score and ten, or fourscore.

Verse 5. Thou carriest them away as with a flood] Life is compared to a stream, ever gliding away; but sometimes it is as a mighty torrent, when by reason of plague, famine, or war, thousands are swept away daily. In particular cases, it is a rapid stream, when the young are suddenly carried off by consumptions, fevers, &c.; this is the flower that flourisheth in the morning, and in the evening is cut down and withered. The whole of life is like a sleep, or as a dream. The eternal world is real; all here is either shadowy or representative. On the whole, life is represented as a stream;—youth, as morning;—decline of life or old age, as evening;—death, as sleep;—and the resurrection, as the return of the flowers in spring. All these images appear in these curious and striking verses,—3, 4, 5, and 6.

Verse 7. We are consumed by thine anger] Death had not entered into the world, if men had not fallen from God.

By thy wrath are we troubled.] Pain, disease, and sickness, are so many proofs of our defection from original rectitude. The anger and wrath of God are moved against all sinners. Even in protracted life we consume away; and only seem to live, in order to die.

8 * Thou hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance.

9 For all our days are passed away in thy wrath: we spend our years as a tale that is told.

10 * The days of our years are threescore years and ten; and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, yet is their strength labour and sorrow; for it is soon cut off, and we fly away.

11 Who knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath.

12 * So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom.

13 Return, O Lord, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants.

14 O satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days.

15 Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil.

16 * Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children.

17 * And let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us: and establish thou the work of our hands upon us: yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.

n. Ps. 50, 21. Jer. 16. 17.—o. Ps. 10. 12.—p. Heb. turned away.—q. Heb. Or, as a meditation.—r. Heb. As for the days of our years, in them are seventy years.—s. Ps.

"Our wasting lives grow shorter still
As days and months increase;
And every beating pulse we tell
Leaves but the number less."

Verse 8. Thou hast set our iniquities before thee] Every one of our transgressions is set before thee; noted and minuted down in Thy awful register!

Our secret sins] Those committed in darkness and privacy are easily discovered by Thee, being shewn by the splendours of Thy face shining upon them. Thus we light a candle, and bring it into a dark place, to discover its contents. O what can be hidden from the all-seeing eye of God! Darkness is no darkness to Him: wherever He comes there is a profusion of light,—for God is Light!

Verse 9. We spend our years as a tale] The Vulgate has, Anni nostri sicut aranea meditantur. "Our years pass away like those of the spider." Our plans and operations are like the spider's web. Life is as frail, and the thread of it as brittle, as one of those that constitute the well-wrought and curious, but fragile, habitation of that insect. All the Versions have the word spider: but it neither appears in the Hebrew, nor in any of its MSS. which have been collated.

My old Psalter has a curious paraphrase here:—"Als the iran (spider) makes vayne webe for to take fiese (flies) with gile, swa oure yeres ere occupide in ydel and swikel castes aboute erthly thynghes; and passes with outen frute of guide werks, and waste in ydel thynkyna." This is too true a picture of most lives.

But the Hebrew is different from all the Versions. "We consume our years, (כמו נחם כמו הגחך) like a groan." We live a dying, whining, complaining life; and at last a groan is its termination! How amazingly expressive!

Verse 10. Threescore years and ten] See the Note on the title of this Psalm. This Psalm could not have been written by Moses, because the term of human life was much more extended when he flourished than eighty years, at the most. Even in David's time many lived one hundred years, and the author of Ecclesiasticus, who lived after the Captivity, fixed this term at one hundred years at the most: (chap. xviii. 9.) but this was merely a general average, for even in our country we have many who exceed a hundred years.

Yet is their strength labour and sorrow] This refers to the infirmities of old age; which to those well advanced in life, produce labour and sorrow.

It is soon cut off] It, the body, is soon cut off.

And we fly away] The immortal spirit wings its way into the eternal world.

Verse 11. Who knoweth the power of thine anger?] The afflictions of this life are not to be compared to the miseries which await them who live and die without being reconciled to God, and saved from their sins.

Verse 12. So teach us to number our days] Let us deeply consider our own frailty, and the shortness and uncertainty of life, that we may live for eternity, acquaint ourselves with Thee, and be at peace, that we may die in Thy favour, and live and reign with Thee eternally.

Verse 13. Return, O Lord, how long?] Wilt Thou continue angry with us for ever?

Let it repent thee] דברו חננכם, "be comforted," rejoice over them to do them good. Be glorified rather in our salvation than in our destruction.

Verse 14. O satisfy us early] Let us have Thy mercy soon, (literally, in the morning.) Let it now shine upon us, and it shall seem as the morning of our days; and we shall exult in Thee all the days of our life.

Verse 15. Makes us glad according to the days] Let Thy people have as many years of prosperity as they have had of adversity. We have now suffered seventy years of a most distressful captivity.

Verse 16. Let thy work appear unto thy servants] That Thou art working for us we know: but O let Thy work appear. Let us now see in our deliverance, that Thy thoughts towards us were mercy and love.

And thy glory] Thy pure worship, be established among our children for ever.

Verse 17. And let the beauty of the Lord] Let us have Thy presence, blessing, and approbation, as our fathers had.

Establish thou the work of our hands] This is supposed, we have already seen, to relate to their rebuilding the Temple, which the surrounding Heathens and Samaritans wished to hinder. We have begun, do not let them demolish our work—let the top stone be brought on with shouting grace, grace unto it.

Yea, the work of our hands] This repetition is wanting in three of Kennicott's MSS., in the Targum, in the Septuagint, and in the Ethiopic. If the repetition be genuine, it may be considered as marking great earnestness: and this earnestness was to get the Temple of God rebuilt, and His pure worship restored. The pious Jews had this more at heart than their own restoration: it was their highest grief that the Temple was destroyed, and God's ordinances suspended; that His enemies insulted them, and blasphemed the worthy name by which they were called. Every truly pious man feels more for God's glory than his own temporal felicity; and rejoices more in the prosperity of God's work, than in the increase of his own worldly goods.

A FEW INSTANCES OF MODERN LONGEVITY.

In the year 1790 I knew a woman in the city of Bristol, Mrs. Somerhill, then in the 106th year of her age. She read the smallest print without spectacles, and never had used any helps to decayed sight. When she could not go any longer to a place of worship through the weakness of her limbs, she was accustomed to read over the whole service of the Church, for each day of the year as it occurred, with all the Lessons, Psalms, &c. She had been from its commencement, a member of the Methodist Society; heard Mr. John Wesley the first sermon he preached when he visited Bristol in 1739; and was so struck with his clear manner of preaching the doctrine of justification through faith, that, for the benefit of hearing one more sermon from this apostolic man, she followed him on foot to Portsmouth, a journey of one hundred and twenty-five miles! On my last visit to her in the above year, I was admitted by a very old decrepit woman, then a widow of seventy-five years of age, and the youngest daughter of Mrs. Somerhill. I found the aged woman's faculties strong and vigorous, and her eyesight unimpaired, though she was then confined to her bed, and was hard of hearing. She died rejoicing in God in the following year.

Thomas Parr, of Wington in Shropshire, far outlived the term as set down in the Psalm. At the age of eighty-eight he married his first wife, by whom he had two children. At the age of one hundred and two he fell in love with Catharine Milton, by whom he had an illegitimate child, and for which he did penance in the church! At the age of one hundred and twenty he married a widow woman; and when he was one hundred and thirty could perform any operation of husbandry. He died at the age of one hundred and fifty-two, A. D. 1635. He had seen ten kings and queens of England.

Thomas Damson, of Leighton, near Minshul in Cheshire, lived one hundred and fifty-four years, and died A. D. 1648.

Agnes Stamer is another instance. She lived at Camberwell in Surrey; her husband, Richard Stamer, died in 1407, whom she survived ninety-two years. She died in 1499, aged one hundred and nineteen years.

The Countess of Desmond in Ireland. On the ruin of the house of Desmond, she was obliged at the age of one hundred one forty to travel from Bristol to London to solicit relief from the Court, being then reduced to poverty

She renewed her teeth two or three times; and died in 1612, aged one hundred and forty-five years.

Henry Jenkins, of Ellerton upon Swale, in Yorkshire, was sent when a boy of about twelve years of age, with a cart load of arrows to Northallerton, to be employed in the battle of Flodden Field, which was fought September 9, 1513. He was a fisherman; and often swam in the rivers when he was more than one hundred years of age! He died A. D. 1670, being then one hundred and sixty-nine years of age!

I shall add one foreigner, Peter Toston, a peasant of Temiswar, in Hungary. The remarkable longevity of this man exceeds the age of Isaac five years: of Abraham ten; falls short of Terah's, Abraham's father, twenty; and exceeds that of Nahor, Abraham's grand-father, thirty-seven years. He died A. D. 1724, at the extraordinary age of one hundred and eighty-five!

ANALYSIS OF THE NINETIETH PSALM.

There are four parts in this Psalm:—

I. An ingenuous acknowledgment of God's protection of the people, ver. 1, 2.

II. A lively narration of the mortality of man, the fragility and brevity of his life, together with the misery of it, ver. 2-7.

III. The causes, man's rebellion, and God's anger for it, ver. 7-12.

IV. A petition, which is double: 1. That God would instruct man to know his fragility. 2. That He would return, and restore him to His favour, ver. 12-17.

I. In the beginning the Psalmist freely acknowledges what God had always been unto His people. What he is in Himself, and His own nature:—

1. To His own people He had always been a refuge, as it were, a dwelling-place: though they had been pilgrims and sojourners in a strange land for many years, yet he had been, nay dwelt among them; and no question he alludes to the tabernacle of God that was pitched among them, as an evidence of His presence and protection: Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place, a secure place to rest in, in all generations, Deut. xxxiii. ver. 1-6.

2. But in Himself He was from everlasting: other creatures had a beginning, and their creation and ornaments from Him.—He, the Eternal Being, Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth, and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting thou art God. Not like man, then, whose mutability, fragility, mortality, brevity, he next describes.

II. Thou turnest man to destruction. Though framed according to Thy own image, yet he is but an earthen vessel; to that pass thou bringest him, till he be broken to pieces, broken as a potter's vessel. To him Thou sayest, Return, ye children of men, (of Adam) return; for dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou return. The mortality of man may not be then attributed to diseases, chance, fortune, &c., but to God's decree, pronounced to man upon his disobedience. First, then, let the sons of Adam remember, that they are mortal; next, that their life is but very short. Suppose a man should live the longest life, and somewhat longer than the oldest patriarch, a thousand years; yet let it be compared with eternity, it is as nothing. A thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday, when it is past; but as of a day which is short, of a day which is past and forgotten; which the prophet farther illustrates by elegant similitudes:—

1. And as a watch in the night. A time of three hours continuance, which is but the eighth part of a natural day, and so far less than he said before. The flower of our youth, our constant age, and our old age, may well be the three hours of this watch; and wise they are that observe their stations in either of them.

2. Thou carriest them away as with a flood. As a sudden inundation of waters our life passeth; we swell and fall. Or, as all waters come from the sea, and return thither, so from the earth we came, and thither return. Or, we are as water spilt on the earth, which cannot be gathered up again.

3. They are as a sleep, or rather a dream; all our happiness a dream of felicity. In our dreams many pleasant, many fearful things are presented; we pass half our time in sleep; drowsily, it is certain, for our life is extas ovap, the shadow of a dream. Pindar.

4. Or we are like grass. In the morning they are like grass that groweth up: in the morning it flourisheth and groweth up, in the evening it is cut down and withereth. The herb hath its morning and evening, and its mid-day, and so hath our life; naturally it fades, or violently it is cut off.

III. After he had spoken of and explained our mortality, the brevity, the misery of our life, he next descends to examine the causes of it, which are two:—1. God's anger; and that which brought it upon us, our own iniquities.

1. God's anger: We consume away by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled. The cause, then, of death and disease, is not the decay of the radical moisture, or defect of natural heat, but that which brought these defects upon us, God's wrath because of sin.

2. Our own sin: For this anger of God was not raised without a just cause; He is a just Judge, and proceeds not to punishment but upon due examination and trial; and to that end He takes an account, not only of our open sins, but even of our secret faults, such as are not known to ourselves, or such as we labour to conceal from others.

1. Thou hast set our iniquities before thee.
2. And our secret sins in the light of thy countenance. No hypocrisy, no contempt, can escape Thine eye: all to Thee is revealed, and clear as the light.

3. And then he repeats the effect, together with the cause: Therefore all our days, viz. the forty years in the wilderness and the seventy in captivity, are passed away in thy wrath. 2. We spend our days as a tale that is told; et fabula fies, the tale ended, it vanisheth, and is thought of no more.

4. And as for our age, it is of no great length: The days of our years are threescore years and ten. To that time some men may be said to live, because the faculties of their souls are tolerably vigorous, and their bodies proportionably able to execute the offices of life.

But allow that it so happen, which happens not to many, that by reason of strength, some excellent natural constitution, a man arrives to fourscore years, yet our life is encumbered with these three inconveniences, labour, sorrow, and brevity.

1. It is laborious, even labour itself. One is desirous to be rich, another wise; this man potent, another prudent, or at least to seem so; and this will not be without labour. All is affliction of spirit.

2. Sorrow; for our life is only the shadow of real life.

3. Short; for it is soon cut off, and we flee away: Avolat umbra. 1. God's anger for sin is not laid to heart; and of this the prophet in the next verse sadly complains, Who knows the power of thy anger? Thine anger is great for sin, the power of it fearful and terrible. Thou canst and wilt cast sinners into hell-fire,—but who regards it? Thy threats to men seem to be old wives' fables.

2. Even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath: but be it that this stupidity possess men, yet this is certain that Thy wrath is great; and it shall be executed according to Thy fear, in such proportion as men have stood in fear of Thee. They that have, in a reverential fear, stood in awe of Thee, shall escape it; they that have contemned and slighted thy wrath, shall feel it to the uttermost.

IV. Upon all the former considerations the Psalmist converts his words to a prayer, in which he implores God's mercy, that He would turn, 1. the stupidity of men into wisdom. 2. Our calamity into felicity. 3. His wrath into compassion. And, 4. Our sorrow into joy. For the first he begins thus:—

1. So teach us to number our days, to cast up the labour, the sorrow, the brevity, the fugacity; thy anger, our sin, that caused it.

2. That we may apply our hearts to wisdom; be no more stupid and secure, but wise; wise to avoid Thy anger, wise to set a true estimate on this life, and wise in time to provide for another.

3. So teach us; for God must teach it, or it will not be learned: this wisdom comes from above.

Secondly, He deprecates God's anger:—Return, O Lord, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants.

Thirdly, He begs restoration to God's favour; and what will follow upon it, peace of conscience.

1. O satisfy us with thy mercy. We hunger for it as men do for meat.

2. Early let it be done, quickly, before our sorrows grow too high and overwhelm us.

3. With thy mercy, not with wealth, delights, &c.

4. And with a perpetual joy of heart. That we may be glad and rejoice all our days.

5. And let thy joy bear proportion to our sorrows. Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil.

6. This is the work he calls God's work; for as to punish is His strange work, Isa. xxviii. so to have pity and mercy is His own proper work: and this he desires, that it should be made manifest. Let thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children.

Fourthly, He begs for success in all their work and labours.

1. Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us; for no action of ours is beautiful, except the beauty of God be stamped upon it, done by His direction, His rule, His word, and to His glory.

PSALM XCI.

The stibty of the godly man, and his confidence, 1, 2. How he is defended and preserved, 3-6. The angels of God are his servants, 11, 12. And he shall tread on the necks of his adversaries, 13. What God says of, and promises to, such a person, 14-24.

HE that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty.

2 I will say of the LORD, He is my refuge and my fortress; my God; in him will I trust.

3 Surely he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence.

4 He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust: his truth shall be thy shield and buckler.

5 Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day;

6 Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday.

7 A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee.

8 Only be with thine eyes shalt thou behold and see the reward of the wicked.

2. And therefore he prays, and repeats this prayer: Establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it. There must be opus, our work; for God bleaseth not the idle. 2. And opus manuum, a laborious work. 3. God's direction, His word the rule. 4. A good end in it; for that is His beauty upon it. 5. So it will be established, confirmed, ratified. 6. And, lastly, know that there is no blessing to be expected without prayer; and therefore he prays, Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us. See the notes on this Psalm.

NOTES ON PSALM XCI.

This Psalm has no title in the Hebrew; nor can it be determined on what occasion or by whom it was composed. It is most likely by the author of the preceding; and is written as a part of it by fifteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., commencing before the repetition of the four last words of the ninthieth. It is allowed to be one of the finest Psalms in the whole collection. Of it Simon de Muis has said,—“It is one of the most excellent works of this kind which has ever appeared. It is impossible to imagine any thing more solid, more beautiful, more profound, or more ornamented. Could the Latin, or any modern language, express thoroughly all the beauties and elegancies as well of the words as of the sentences, it would not be difficult to persuade the reader that we have no poem, either in Greek or Latin, comparable to this Hebrew ode.”

Verse 1. He that dwelleth in the secret place] The Targum intimates that this is a dialogus between David, Solomon, and Jehovah. Suppose we admit this,—then DAVID asserts, He who dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty, ver. 1.

SOLOMON answers, I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress; my God, in him will I trust, ver. 2.

DAVID replies, and tells him what blessings he shall receive from God if he abide faithful, ver. 3-13.

Then the SUPREME BEING is introduced, and confirms all that David had spoken concerning Solomon, ver. 14-16; and thus this sacred and instructive dialogue ends.

In the secret place of the Most High] Spoken probably in reference to the Holy of holies. He who enters legitimately there, shall be covered with the cloud of God's glory; the protection of the all-sufficient God. This was the privilege of the high priest only, under the law; but under the new covenant all believers in Christ have boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus; and those who thus enter are safe from every evil.

Verse 2. I will say of the LORD] This is my experience. He is my fortress, and in him will I continually trust.

Verse 3. Surely he shall deliver thee] If thou wilt act thus, then the God in whom thou trustest will deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, from all the devices of Satan, and from all dangerous maladies. As the original word, דָּבָר dabar, signifies a word spoken, and deber, the same letters, signifies pestilence; so some translate one way, and some another;—He shall deliver thee from the evil and slanderous word;—He shall deliver thee from the noisome pestilence,—all blasting and injurious winds, effluvia, &c.

Verse 4. He shall cover thee with his feathers] He shall set towards thee as the hen does to her brood,—take thee under his wings when birds of prey appear, and also to shelter thee from chilling blasts. This is a frequent metaphor in the Sacred Writings; see the parallel texts in the margin, and the notes on them. The Septuagint has, Ev rois mesoprotis avrov entekatai soi: he will overshadow thee between his shoulders; alluding to the custom of parents carrying their weak or sick children on their backs, and having them covered even there with a mantle. Thus the Lord is represented carrying the Israelites in the wilderness. See Deut. xxxii. 11, 12, where the metaphor is taken from the eagle.

His truth shall be thy shield and buckler] His Revelation;—His Bible. That truth contains promises for all times and circumstances; and these will be invariably fulfilled to him that trusts in the Lord. The fulfilment of a promise relative to defence and support, is to the soul what the best shield is to the body.

Verse 5. The terror by night] Night is a time of terrors, because it is a time of treasons, plunder, robbery, and murder. The godly man lies down in peace, and sleeps quietly, for he trusts his body, soul, and substance, in the hand of God; and he knows that He who keepeth Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps. It may also mean all spiritual foes,—the rulers of the darkness of this world. I have heard the following petition in an evening family prayer,—“Blessed Lord, take us into thy protection this night; and preserve us from sudden death, from the violence of the fire, from the edge of the sword, from the designs of wicked men, and from the influence of malicious spirits!”

Nor for the arrow] The Chaldee translates this verse,—“Thou shalt not fear the demons that walk by night; nor the arrow of the angel of death which is shot in the daytime.” Thou needest not to fear a sudden and unprovided for death.

Verse 6. Nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noonday.] The Rabbins supposed that the empire of death was under two demons, one of which ruled by day, the other by night. The Vulgate and Septuagint have—the noonday devil. The ancients thought that there were some demons who had the power to injure, particularly at noonday. To this Theocritus refers, Idyl. Lib. v. 15.

Ου θεμις ὁ ποιμαν, το μεσαμβριον, ου θεμις ἀρνιυ Σπυδαυ του Πανα δεδοικαυς η γαρ αν' αργας Τανικα κατακαυος αρπυγται, εν τινυ πιερος Και βι αν οριμεια χολα ποτι ριμι καθηται.

“It is not lawful, it is not lawful, O shepherd, to play on the flute at noonday: we fear Pan, who at that hour goes to sleep in order to rest himself after the fatigues of the chase: then he is dangerous, and his wrath easily kindled.”

Lucan, in the horrible account he gives us of a grove sacred to some barbarous power, worshipped with the most horrid rites, refers to the same superstition:—

Lucus erat longo nunquam violatus ab ovo—
Non illum cultus populi propterea frequentant,
Sed cessare deis: manio cum Phobus in axe est,
Aut caelum nox atra tenet, pavor ipse sacerdos
Accosus, dominumque timet deprecare lucum.

Lucan, lib. iii. ver. 369-375.

Not far away, for ages past, had stood
An old inviolated sacred wood—
The pious worshippers approach not near,
But down their gods, and fixed with distant fear:
The priest himself, when, on the day, or night,
Rolling, have reached their full meridian height,
Retains the gloomy palace with wary feet,
Dreading the demons of the grove to meet;
Who, terrible to sight, at that dread hour,
Still tread the round about this dreary bower.

Ross.

It has been stated among the heathens that the gods should be worshipped at all times, but the demons should be worshipped at midday:—probably because these demons, having been employed during the night, required rest at noonday; and that was the most proper time to appease them. See Calmet on this place. Both the Vulgate and Septuagint seem to have reference to this superstition.

The Syriac understands the passage of a pestilential wind, that blows at noonday. Aquila translates,—of the bite of the noonday demon.

Verse 7. A thousand shall fall at thy side] Calmet thinks this place should be translated thus:—“A thousand enemies may fall upon thee on one side, and ten thousand may fall upon thee on thy right hand: but they shall not come nigh thee to take away thy life.” It is a promise of perfect protection, and the utmost safety.

Verse 8. The reward of the wicked.] Thou shalt not only be safe thyself, but thou shalt see all thy enemies discomfited and cast down.

PSALM XCI.

9 Because thou hast made the Lord which is my refuge, even the Most High, thy habitation;

10 There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling.

11 For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways.

12 They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone.

13 Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder:

1 Ver. 2.—1 Psa. 71. 3. & 90. 1.—1 Prov. 12. 21.—1 Psa. 24. 7. & 71. 3. Matt. 4. 6. Luke 4. 10, 11. Heb. 1. 14.

Verse 9. Because thou hast made the Lord] Seeing thou hast taken Jehovah, the Most High, for thy Portion and thy Refuge, no evil shall come nigh thy dwelling; thou shalt be safe in thy soul, body, household, and property, ver. 10. Every pious man may expect such protection from his God and Father.

Verse 11. He shall give his angels charge over thee] Evil spirits may attempt to injure thee: but they shall not be able. The angels of God shall have an especial charge to accompany, defend, and preserve thee; and against their power the influence of evil spirits cannot prevail. These will, when necessary, turn thy steps out of the way of danger; ward it off when it comes in thy ordinary path; suggest to thy mind prudent counsels, profitable designs, and pious purposes; and thus minister to thee as a child of God, and an heir of salvation.

To keep thee in all thy ways.] The path of duty is the way of safety. Thou canst not reasonably expect protection if thou walk not in the way of obedience. Thy ways are the paths of duty, which God's word and providence have marked out for thee. The way of sin is not thy way,—thy duty,—thy interest. Keep in thy own ways, not in those of sin, Satan, the world, and the flesh; and God will take care of thee.

Verse 12. They shall bear thee up in their hands] Take the same care of thee as a nurse does of a weak and tender child; lead thee,—teach thee to walk,—lift thee up out of the way of danger, lest thou shouldst dash thy foot against a stone,—receive any kind of injury,—or be prevented from pursuing thy path with safety and comfort.

Let us remember that it is God, whose these angels are; He gives them charge,—from Him they receive their commission,—to Him they are responsible for their charge. From God thou art to expect them; and for their help He alone is to receive the praise. It is expressly said, he shall give his angels charge; to shew that they are not to be prayed to, nor praised; but God alone, whose servants they are. See the Note on Matt. iv. 6.

Verse 13. Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder] Even the king of the forest shall not be able to injure thee: should one of these attack thee, the angels whom God sends will give thee an easy victory over him. And even the asp (rus pelen) one of the most venomous of serpents, shall not be able to injure thee.

The asp is a very small serpent, and peculiar to Egypt and Libya. Its poison kills without the possibility of a remedy. Those who are bitten by it die in about from three to eight hours: and it is said they die by sleep, without any kind of pain. Lord Bacon says the asp is less painful than all the other instruments of death. He supposes it to have an affinity to opium, but to be less disagreeable in its operation. It was probably on this account that Cleopatra, queen of Egypt, chose to die by the asp, as she was determined to prevent the designs of Augustus, who intended to have carried her captive to Rome to grace his triumph.

The dragon shall thou trample] The pur tannin, which we translate dragon, means often any large aquatic animal; and perhaps here the crocodile or alligator.

Verse 14. Because he hath set his love upon me] Here the Most High is introduced as confirming the word of His servant. He has fixed His love,—His heart and soul, on me.

Therefore will I deliver him] I will save him in all troubles, temptations, and evils of every kind.

I will set him on high] I will place him out of the reach of all his enemies. I will honour and ennoble him, because he hath known my name; because he has loved, honoured, and served me; and rendered me that worship which is my due. He has known me to be the God of infinite mercy and love.

Verse 15. He shall call upon me] He must continue to pray,—all his blessings must come in this way;—when he calls I will answer him;—I will give him whatever is best for him.

I will be with him in trouble] Literally, I am with the young lion and the dragon shalt thou trample under feet.

14 Because he hath set his love upon me, therefore will I deliver him: I will set him on high, because he hath known my name.

15 He shall call upon me, and I will answer him: I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him and honour him.

16 With long life will I satisfy him, and shew him my salvation.

him. אָנֹכִי יִמְּוָי immo anoki; as soon as the trouble comes, I am there.

I will deliver him] For his good I may permit him to be exercised for a time; but delivered he shall be.

And honour him] אַבְרָהָם אַבְרָהָם acabadehu, "I will glorify him." I will load him with honour;—that honour that comes from God. I will even shew to men how highly I prize such.

Verse 16. With long life] Literally, with length of days will I fill him up. He shall neither live a useless life, nor die before his time. He shall live happy, and die happy.

And shew him my salvation] וְעָרַתְּ בִּישׁוּאִי ve-arehu bishuati, I will make him see (or contemplate) in my salvation. He shall discover infinite lengths, breadths, depths, and heights in my salvation. He shall feel boundless desires; and shall discover that I have provided boundless gratification for them. He shall dwell in my glory, and throughout eternity increase in his resemblance to, and enjoyment of me. Thus shall it be done to the man whom the Lord delighteth to honour: and He delights to honour that man who places his love on him. In a word, he shall have a long life, in this world, and an eternity of blessedness in the world to come.

ANALYSIS OF THE NINETY-FIRST PSALM.

The full intent and purpose of this Psalm is to encourage and exhort the godly in all extremities, pressures, troubles, temptations, afflictions, assaults, inward or outward; in a word, in all dangers, to put their trust and confidence in God, and to rely upon His protection.

There are two parts in this Psalm:—

I. A general proposition, in which is given an assurance of help and protection to every godly man, ver. 1. He that dwelleth, &c.

II. The proof of this by three witnesses:—

1. Of the just man, in whose person the Psalmist speaks, ver. 2. I will say of the Lord, &c.

2. Of the prophet, ver. 3. Surely he shall deliver thee from the snare, &c.;—which he amplifies by an enumeration of the dangers, God's assistance, and the angel's protection, ver. 3—14.

3. Of God Himself, whom he brings in speaking to the same purpose, ver. 14—16.

I. The first part, or verse, is a universal proposition, in which is contained a comfortable and excellent promise made by the Holy Ghost of security, viz. that God's help shall never be wanting to those who truly put their hope and trust in Him. He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide (or lodge) under the shadow of the Almighty.

1. He,—be he who he will, rich or poor, king or people; God is no respecter of persons.

2. That dwells. For that he must be sure to do, constantly, daily, firmly, rest and acquiesce in God, to persevere in the faith of His promise, and carry that about him, else he cannot be assured by this promise.

3. In the secret place. For His aid and defence is not as some strong hold or castle which is visible; it is a secret and invisible fortress, known only to a faithful soul. In that he may repose his hope, as a means and secondary defence; but he dwells, relies, rests, in that help of God which is secret, and is not seen except by the eye of faith.

4. Of the Most High. And upon this he relies, because he is the Most High. Above He is, and sees all; nothing is hid from Him. And again, above He is, sits in the highest throne, and rules all. All things are under His feet; He can therefore deliver His people from all troubles and dangers. Yes, He will do it for this faithful man; he that relies and trusts in Him shall never be frustrated of his hope: protected he shall be; he shall be safe. 1. He dwells, therefore he shall abide. He shall lodge quietly,—securely. 2. He dwells in the secret place, therefore he shall abide under the shadow. In the cool, the favour, the cover from the heat. 3. He dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High, therefore he shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty, i. e. of the all-powerful God, of the God of heaven; of that God whose name is Shaddai, All-sufficient; by which name He made His promise to Abraham, Gen. xvii. 1.

11. This proposition being most certainly true, in the next place the Psalmist explains it. And that no man may doubt of it, descends to prove it by three witnesses:—first, of a just man; secondly, of the prophet; thirdly, of God Himself.

He brings in the just man thus speaking in his own person:—I will say unto the Lord, he is my refuge, my fortress, my God; in him will I trust. Is it so? Shall he that dwells in the secret of the Most High, abide under the shadow of the Almighty? Therefore I will say in the person of all just men, to the Lord, that hath no superior, that hath no peer;—to that Lord to whose command all things are subject, and who can be commanded by none; I will say to him,—

1. Thou art my refuge. If pursued, I will flee to Thee as a Sanctuary.

2. Thou art my fortress. If set upon, I will betake myself to Thee as a strong Tower.

3. Thou art my God. If assaulted by men or devils, Thou, the Most High; Thou, Almighty, art a God able to defend me; and therefore I will hope in thee;—I will dwell, trust, rely upon Thee, and this Thy promise, in every temptation and danger.

Next, to assert the truth of this, he brings in the attestation of the prophet; for, being moved by the Holy Ghost, he saith as much.—Surely he shall deliver thee;—and then falls upon the particulars from which the godly man shall be delivered, set down in many metaphors.

1. He shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler; from the deceits of evil men or devils.

2. From the noisome pestilence, all danger to which we are incident, by plague, war, or famine.

Again, when thou art little in thine own eyes,—

1. He shall cover thee, as the hen does her young, with his feathers; and under his wing shall thou trust, secured from the rain, the storm, the heat of the sun, and birds of prey.

2. When thou art grown up, and able to encounter an enemy in the field, he shall help thee to a shield and buckler, and that shall be His truth, His veracity, thy faith in it; and, which is yet more,—

Thou shalt not be afraid,—
1. For the terror by night; any hidden secret temptation, danger, treachery, detraction, conspiracy.

2. Nor for the arrow that flies by day; any open persecution, calamity, fraud, assault, invasion.

3. Nor for the pestilence that walks in darkness; the machinations of wicked men hatched in the dark.

4. Nor for the pestilence that walks at noonday; the bold threats and decrees of tyrants and persecutors.

Möller observes rightly, that the promises of deliverance here made do not belong to one or other kind of evil, but to all kind of calamities, open or secret, and so may be applicable to any; some of which steal upon us, as in the night, secretly; others overwhelm us as in the day, openly. But the promise is general, as Bellarmine well observes: whether the danger come by day or night, those who trust in God are armed with His shield of truth against it. For if God be for us, who can be against us. Rom. viii.

The prophet goes on, and confirms the godly in their security by the dissimilarity or unlike condition of wicked men. When thou shalt be safe, they shall fall.

1. A thousand shall fall at thy side, on thy left hand, overcome by adversity.

2. Ten thousand on thy right hand, scattered into sin by prosperity. But neither the fear by night, nor the arrow by day, shall come nigh thee.

3. And, which is another cause of comfort and pleasure: Only with thine eyes shall thou behold, and see the reward of the wicked; which sometimes falls out in this life, as the Israelites saw the Egyptians dead upon the seashore; Moses and Aaron saw Dathan and Abiram swallowed up quick, &c. But it shall be fully fulfilled at the last judgment, Matt. xxv. Of which security, comfort, content, the prophet in the next verse gives the reason: the danger shall not come nigh thee; when they fall thou shalt see it, and consider it with content. Because thou hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, even the Most High, thy habitation; Thou trustest in Him as I do; and therefore shalt have the like protection, deliverance, comfort, that I by His promise have. Farther, there shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling. But the just man may say, I am secure that no evil shall befall me; I desire to know how I may be kept so, that I fall not among thieves. This objection the prophet prevents, saying, in effect, Fear not, For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways; they shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone.

In which verses consider,
1. That the good man is protected by angels; many angels have a care of one poor man.

2. That they are commanded by God to do it; for are not they ministering spirits sent by God to that end? Heb. i.

3. That it is a particular administration, a charge given to the poorest, the meanest saint.

4. That they are to keep, to look to, defend thee, and what is thine; thou hast an invisible guard.

5. But then mark the limitation and restriction: it is in all thy ways, in the walk of thy vocation to which God hath called thee; either walk in them, or the angels have no charge to keep thee.

6. Lastly, In all thy ways: not in one but all; for the ways of men are many, and in all he needs the custody of angels. 1. The law is a way, and the way of the law is manifold. 2. Our works and operations are manifold, which are our way too. 3. Our life is a way, and there be many parts and conditions of our life, various ages, manifold states; and in all these ways we need a guardian, for we may slip in every law, in every operation, in every age, in every state of life.

Which that it be not done, God hath given His angels charge over us, to keep us: to keep us only; nay, which is more,—

1. They shall bear thee, as kind mothers and nurses do their children.

2. They shall bear thee in their hands; the will, understanding, wisdom, and power are, as it were, the angels' hands: with all these they will bear us.

3. That thou dash not thy foot; that is, thy affections, which carry the soul to good or bad.

4. Against a stone; which are all difficulties and obstacles. And, which is yet more, under their custody we shall tread under foot Satan, and all his accomplices; him, a roaring lion, an old serpent, a fierce dragon, and all his associates, tyrants, persecutors and hyssoprites; for such is the promise; Thou shalt tread upon the lion and adder: the young lion and dragon shall thou trample under feet.

5. In the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word stand, saith God: and here we find the law strictly observed; it was to be proved, that all who truly trust in God were to be protected by God; of which one witness was the just man, ver. 2; another, the testimony of the Spirit by the prophet, from verse 3 to this verse; so which a third, we have here even God himself; for in these three last verses the prophet brings Him, God himself, testifying this great and comfortable truth with His own mouth.

1. Because he hath set his love upon me, pleased me, loved me, adhered to me, hoped in me, trusted to me with a filial love and adherence.

2. Because he hath known my name, acknowledged my power, wisdom, goodness: these are the causes and conditions presupposed in the protected.

3. He shall call upon me. Invocation is necessary also. Therefore I will deliver him, I will answer him, I will be with him in trouble, I will honour him. I will glorify him, or set him on high; and the second, I will deliver him, with long life will I satisfy him, and shew him my salvation.

1. I will deliver him, by the shield, by my angels, by other ways, directly or indirectly, yet so that it be remembered that I do it; for these shall not deliver without me.

2. I will answer him; answer his desires, answer his prayers, so they be cries.

3. I will be with him in trouble; join myself close to him, go into prison with him as it were, suffer with him, and think myself pursued when he is persecuted, give him comfort even then; they sung in prison; He neither delivers the martyrs from death, nor does he forsake them.

4. I will honour him. For the names of those who suffered for His sake are honourable; right dear in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints.

These promises may belong to this life; those that follow to the other.

1. I will deliver him. For the just by death are freed from the present and all future miseries: Blessed are the dead, for they rest from their labours.

2. I will glorify him. As if it were not enough to deliver him; such a thing in this life may fall out, as it happened to Joseph, Job, David, Daniel: but the true glory no question must be, when the righteous shall shine like the sun, be set upon their thrones, and judge the twelve tribes of Israel.

3. With long life will I satisfy him, i. e. with eternal felicity, with a continuance in bliss, which shall be eternal; for without eternity even length of days cannot satisfy; as appears by old men, who yet have complained of a short life.

PSALM XCII.

The Psalmist shows the duty and advantage of praising God, 1-3. Speaks of the greatness of God's works, 4-6. The fall of the wicked, 7-9. The happiness of the righteous, 10-14. And all this founded on the perfections of God.

A Psalm or Song for the Sabbath day.

1 It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High: 2 To shew forth thy loving kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night.

3 Upon an instrument of ten strings, and upon the psaltery, upon the harp with a solemn sound.

4 For thou, Lord, hast made me glad through thy work: I will triumph in the works of thy hands.

5 O Lord, how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep.

6 A brutish man knoweth not; neither doth a fool understand this.

7 When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be destroyed for ever:

8 But thou, Lord, art most High for evermore.

9 For, lo, thine enemies, O Lord, for, lo, thine enemies shall perish; all the workers of iniquity shall be scattered.

10 But my horn shalt thou exalt like the horn of an unicorn: I shall be anointed with fresh oil.

11 Mine eye also shall see my desire on mine enemies, and mine ears shall hear my desire of the wicked that rise up against me.

12 The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree: he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon.

13 Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God.

And that the prophet speaks of this eternal felicity is more than probable, because he adds, I will shew him my salvation; I will shew him Jesus, my salvation; that is, I will bring to pass, that when through his whole life I have given him sufficient evidences of my fatherly affection, I will at last translate him to a place where he shall no longer live by faith, but shall see, and experimentally feel, what he hath believed.

NOTES ON PSALM XCII.

The title, A Psalm or Song for the Sabbath, gives no information concerning the time, occasion, nor author. The Chaldee has, "Praise, and a song which the first man spoke concerning the Sabbath:" but this is an idle conceit; and, though entertained by some Rabbins, has been followed by none of the Versions. Calmet supposes the Psalm to have been composed by some of the Levites during or near the close of the Babylonish captivity, acknowledging the mercy of God, and foreseeing the desolation of their enemies, and their own return to Jerusalem, and their temple service.

Verse 1. It is a good thing to give thanks] This Psalm begins very abruptly. Good to confess unto the Lord. He had been acknowledging God's goodness, and praising him for His mercy; and now he breaks out and tells how good he felt this employment to be.

Verse 2. To shew forth thy loving-kindness] Thy abundant mercy, in the morning—that has preserved me throughout the night, and brought me to the beginning of a new day:—and thy faithfulness in the night, that has so amply fulfilled the promise of preservation during the course of the day.—This verse contains a general plan for morning and evening prayer.

Verse 3. Upon an instrument of ten strings] Eusebius, in his comment on this Psalm, says, ψαλτηρίου δε δεκαχορδου, η του Αγιου Πνευματος δια των αιδηθηριων, περι τον του σωματος, ισαριθμων δε της ψυχης δυναμεων, επιτελουμενη λατρευει. "The Psaltery of ten strings is the worship of the Holy Spirit, performed by means of the five senses of the body, and by the five powers of the soul." And, to confirm this interpretation, he quotes the apostle, 1 Cor. xiv. 15, I will pray with the spirit, and with the understanding also: I will sing with the spirit, and with the understanding also. "As the mind has its influence by which it moves the body, so the spirit has its own influence by which it moves the soul." Whatever may be thought of this gloss, one thing is pretty evident from it, that instrumental music was not in use in the Church of Christ in the time of Eusebius, which was near the middle of the fourth century. Had any such thing then existed in the Christian church, he would have doubtless alluded to, or spiritualized it: or, as he quoted the words of the apostle above, would have shewn that carnal usages were substituted for spiritual exercises. I believe the whole verse should be translated thus:—Upon the Azur, upon the Nebal, upon the Higgaion, with the Kinnor. Thus it stands in the Hebrew.

Verse 4. For thou, Lord, hast made me glad through thy work] I am delighted with Thy conduct towards me; with the work of Thy providence, the works of Thy grace, and Thy works of creation.

Verse 5. How great are thy works] They are multitudinous, stupendous, and splendid; and Thy thoughts, Thy designs and counsels, from which, by which, and in reference to which, they have been formed; are very deep, so profound as not to be fathomed by the comprehension of man.

Verse 6. A brutish man knoweth not:] בער אדם יחבב, the human hog—the stupid boar—the boor; the man who is all flesh; in whom spirit or intellect neither seems to work nor exist. The brutish man, who never attempts to see God in His works.

Neither doth a fool understand this.] כחב, kebil, the fool, is different from באב, baar, the brutish man; the latter has mind, but it is buried in flesh; the former has no mind, and his stupidity is unavoidable.

Verse 7. When the wicked spring as the grass] This is a lesson which is frequently inculcated in the Sacred Writings. The favour of God towards man is not to be known by outward prosperity; nor is His disapprobation to be known by the adverse circumstances in which any person may be found. When, however, we see the wicked flourish, we may take for granted that their abuse of God's mercies will cause Him to cut them off as cumberers of the ground; and, dying in their sins, they are destroyed for ever.

Verse 8. High for evermore] They are brought down and destroyed: but the Lord is exalted eternally, both for His judgments and His mercies.

Verse 10. Like the horn of a unicorn] ערעם, reeyem, perhaps here, the oryx or buffalo.—But the rhinoceros seems to be the real monocoeros of the Scriptures.

I shall be anointed with fresh oil.] Perhaps the allusion is here, not to any sacramental anointing, but to such anointings as were frequent among the Asiatics, especially after bathing, for the purpose of health and activity.

Verse 11. Mine eye also shall see—and mine ears shall hear.] Even in my own times my enemies shall be destroyed: and of this destruction I shall either be an eyewitness, or have authentic information.

Verse 12. The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree] Very different from the wicked, verse 7, who are likened to grass. These shall have a short duration: but those shall have a long and useful life. They are compared also to the cedar of Lebanon, an incorruptible wood, and extremely long-lived. Mr. Maundrel, who visited those trees in 1697, describes them thus: "These noble trees grow among the snow, near the highest part of Lebanon. Some are very old, and of prodigious bulk. I measured one of the largest; and found it twelve years six inches in girth, and yet sound; and thirty-seven yards in the spread of its boughs. At about five or six yards from the ground it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a large tree." Some of these trees are supposed to have lived upwards of one thousand years! The figure of the palm tree gives us the idea of grandeur and usefulness. The fruit of the palm tree makes a great part of the diet of the people of Arabia, part of Persia, and Upper Egypt. The stones are ground down for the camels; the leaves are made into baskets; the hard boughs, or rather strong leaves, some being six or eight feet in length, make fences; the juice makes arrack; the threads of the web-like integument between the leaves makes ropes, and the rigging of small vessels; and the wood serves for slighter buildings and fire-wood. In short, the palm or date tree, and the olive, are two of the most excellent and useful productions of the forest or the field.

The cedar gives us the idea of majesty, stability, durability, and incorruptibility. To these two trees, for the most obvious reasons, are the righteous compared.

Verse 13. Those that be planted in the house of the Lord] I believe the Chaldee has the true meaning here—His children shall be planted in the house of the sanctuary of the Lord, and shall flourish in the courts of our God. As these trees flourish in their respective soils and climates, so shall the righteous in the ordinances of God. I do not think there is any allusion to either plum trees or cedars planted near the tabernacle or temple.

14 They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourish;

15 To show that the Lord is upright: he is my rock, and there is no unrighteousness in him.

a Heb. green.—t Deut. 32. 4.—u Rom. 9. 14.

Verse 14. They shall still bring forth fruit in old age] They shall continue to grow in grace, and be fruitful to the end of their lives. It is a rare case to find a man in old age full of faith, love, and spiritual activity.

Verse 15. To show that the Lord is upright] Such persons shew how faithful God is to His promises; how true to His word; how kind to them who trust in Him. He is the Rock, the Fountain, whence all good comes.

[There is no unrighteousness in him.] He does nothing evil—nothing unwise—nothing unkind. He is both just and merciful.

ANALYSIS OF THE NINETY-SECOND PSALM.

I. A general proposition, ver. 1. It is good to give thanks to the Lord, &c., which is explained ver. 2, 3, and applied ver. 4.

II. A particular narration of such works, in which the goodness and faithfulness of God do especially consist, viz. the creation and government of the world, ver. 4, 5. And of the last he gives two instances:—

1. One in wicked men; of their stupidity, ver. 6. Then of their sudden extirpation, ver. 7, 8, 9.

2. Another in the godly, whose prosperity is great, ver. 10—14; and security certain, ver. 15.

I. He begins with a maxim. 1. It is good, i. e. just, profitable, pleasant, and commendable, to give thanks to the Lord. 2. And to sing praises, with heart and tongue, to thy glorious name, O thou Most High.

And both parts he explains. 1. That we give thanks at all times, morning and evening; in prosperity and in adversity; and in our praises especially to remember His loving-kindness and faithfulness. These must be the matter of our thanksgiving. It is good to shew forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night, ver. 2, and by all manner of means, ver. 3.

And thus the maxim being proposed and explained, he applies it to himself, and shews his own practice, and the reason of it:—For thou, Lord, hast made me glad through thy work; I will triumph in the works of thy hands, ver. 4.

1. Thou hast made me glad. He was first delighted and affected with God's work.

2. And then he exults and triumphs in it. The heart must be first truly affected with the work of God before a man shall take any true content or delight in it.

II. He had made mention of the works of God; and now he further opens what they are:—First, the creation of the universe. Secondly, His especial providence in ordering the things of this world, particularly about man.

1. First he begins with the work of creation, upon which he enters, with an expression of his admiration. O Lord, how great are thy works; and thy thoughts are very deep. As if he said, I cannot be satisfied in the contemplation of them. There is such a depth in them, that I cannot attain to it, nor comprehend it.

2. And he ends it, not without an indignation, that the wise men of the world, who yet in his judgment, for their disregard of it, are but fools, should not consider it. In the creature they look after nothing but profit and pleasure, in which regard they are but fools. For this brutish man knows not how great are His works; this fool understands not how deep are his cogitations.

And that he may illustrate their folly the more, from the work of creation, he comes to God's work of governance of the world; and shews, that as they who would be, and are reputed wise, are mistaken in the one, so also they are mistaken in the other: for they think the ungodly, and such as flourish in power and wealth, happy; and that the righteous men, sometimes oppressed, are unhappy; and upon these two instances he insists to the end of the Psalm. First, he instances in the ungodly. When the wicked spring up, rise on a sudden, (for such a time there is,) as the grass, that grows insensibly, and in a night, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish, become very conspicuous, exalted in power and pride, and abound in wealth,—Who would not now take them for happy men? No, saith our prophet, it is not so.

1. This their felicity is the greatest infelicity. It is, that they may perish, be destroyed.

2. That they may perish for ever; remember the rich man in the Gospel.

3. And this their destruction is from God, that sits in the throne, and is immutable in His decrees and ways. They flourish and are exalted: but it is but for a moment. But thou, Lord, art most high for evermore. And Thou wilt execute Thy decree upon them.

4. Which the prophet fully opens in the next verse, which the epizexis makes more emphatical. For, lo, thine enemies, O Lord, for, lo, thine enemies shall perish; and all the workers of iniquity shall be scattered.

1. Behold, they were green, they flourished: but the change shall be sudden.

2. They were enemies, thy enemies, workers of iniquity; therefore, cursed with a curse.

3. They shall perish, they shall be scattered; they rose, they flourished as grass, and they shall be scattered as dry grass which the wind blows from the face of the earth.

His second instance is in the godly, whose happy condition he demonstrates,—1. In hypothet, or in himself, ver. 10, 11; and,—2. In thet, in all others that be true members of the mystical church of Christ, ver. 12—15.

He instanceth in himself that his condition is not like the ungodly. He shot not up as the fading grass, but his strength and power should be as a unicorn.

1. But my horn shall thou exalt as the horn of an unicorn;—that is, my power, and glory, and felicity, shall still mount higher.

2. And I shall be anointed with fresh oil. Anointed to be king over Israel, by Samuel, with a horn of oil;—by God, with the gracious oil of His Spirit.

3. And that which adds to my flourishing estate. My eye shall see my desire upon my enemies, and my ears shall hear my desire of the wicked that rise up against me;—which David lived to see and hear in the ruin of Saul and his house.

And that which the prophet said of himself he now transfers to all just and righteous men, whom he compares to the palm and cedar.

1. The righteous shall flourish like a palm tree. So a good Christian; the greater weight he carries, the more he flourishes.

2. He shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon. Cedar-wood is not consumed by worms or time;—nor the church by antiquity nor persecution. The gates of hell shall not prevail against it, nor any true member of it.

Of which the reason is, because these palms and cedars, these righteous men, are planted, set by faith, watered by the word and sacraments, rooted by charity in the church,—which is the house of the Lord; and therefore they shall flourish, be green and vigorous, in the courts of our God. Nay, which is yet more, they shall be full of sap and laden with fruit.

1. They shall bring forth fruit in their old age. It shall be contrary to them, as with other trees. Those grow fruitless, and bear not when they grow old; these are then most laden with the fruits of grace.

2. They shall be fat and flourishing. Other trees, when old, are hard and dry; these then are fat in juice, and flourish in good works.

3. And the reason of this vigour, of the continuance of this radical and vital moisture to old age, is, that they bring forth fruit, which is specified in the last verse.

That they might shew forth God's faithfulness, praise him for that, as it is in the second verse. 1. That they might shew that the Lord is upright. Just and righteous in himself. 2. That he is a Rock. A sure stable foundation to trust to. 3. And that there is no unrighteousness in him. No injustice;—though for a time he suffer the wicked to flourish, and the just to be under the cross.

For in His good time He will shew His justice in rewarding the just, and punishing the unjust.

NOTES ON PSALM XCIII.

This Psalm has no title either in the Hebrew or Chaldee. The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, state it to be, "A song of praise of David, for the day preceding the sabbath, when the earth was founded;" but in such a title there is no information on which any man can rely. This Psalm is written as a part of the preceding in twelve of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. It was probably written at the close of the Captivity by the Levites, descendants of Moses.

Verse 1. The Lord reigneth] He continues to govern every thing He has created;—and He is every way qualified to govern all things, for he is clothed with majesty and with strength. Dominion is His, and He has supreme power to exercise it; and he has so established the world, that nothing can be driven out of order; all is ruled by Him. Nature is His agent; or rather, nature is the sum of the laws of His government; the operations carried on by the Divine energy, and the effects resulting from those operations.

Verse 2. Thy throne is established of old] There never was a time in which God did not reign; in which He was not a supreme and absolute Monarch;—for He is from everlasting. There never was a time in which He was not;—there never can be a period in which He shall cease to exist.

Verse 3. The floods have lifted up] Multitudes of people have confederated against Thy people; and troop succeeds troop as the waves of the sea succeed each other.

Mighty waves of the sea.] Even the most powerful empires can prevail nothing against Him; and therefore those who trust in Him have nothing to fear.

Verse 5. Thy testimonies are very sure] Thou wilt as surely fulfil Thy word as Thou wilt keep possession of Thy throne.

Holiness becometh thine house] Thy nature is holy,—all Thy works holy,—and Thy word is holy; therefore, Thy house, Thy church, should be holy. The building itself should be sanctified; should be so consecrated to Thy worship alone, that it shall never be employed in any other service. The ministers of this church should be holy,—the members holy,—all the ordinances holy;—its faith, its discipline, and its practices holy. And this at all times, and in all circumstances; for—Holiness becometh thine house—for ever, וְעַד לְעוֹלָם לְעוֹלָם lo-orce yamin, “for length of days.” During the whole lapse of time; till the sun and moon shall be no more. The old Psalter says, the house of God is man’s saule; and of this house holiness is (נֹרָא) naavaak “the ornament;” it produces that meek and quiet spirit which is in the sight of God of great price. No decoration of person, nor simplicity of dress can supply the place of this heavenly clothing.

ANALYSIS OF THE NINETY-THIRD PSALM.

In this Psalm it is the purpose of the prophet to comfort the church, oppressed by tyrants and persecutors; and yet she shall not utterly fail. The gates of hell shall not prevail against her; because Christ sits in His church as King. The sum of it is,—

I. The magnificence and power of Christ our eternal King, ver. 1, 2.

II. That He defends His church in the day of a storm, ver. 3, 4.

III. That His laws are holy and His church also, ver. 5.

The prophet in the first verse describes our King,—

1. From His office. He reigns. He is the great and chief Monarch: He is no idle Spectator of things below; but wisely, and justly, and powerfully, He administers all things.

2. He is a glorious King. He is clothed with majesty.

3. He is a potent King. The Lord is clothed with strength.

4. He is a warlike King. For he hath girded himself, buckled his sword upon his armour for offence towards His enemies; for defence of His kingdom.

Then for His kingdom,—

1. It is universal. The world.

2 ^a Lift up thyself, thou ^a Judge of the earth: render a reward to the proud.

3 LORD, ^a how long shall the wicked, how long shall the wicked triumph?

4 How long shall they ^a utter and speak hard things? and all ^b the workers of iniquity boast themselves?

5 They break in pieces thy people, O LORD, and afflict thine heritage.

6 They slay the widow and the stranger, and murder the fatherless.

7 ^a Yet they say, The LORD shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it.

8 ^a Understand, ye brutish among the people: and ye fools, when will ye be wise?

9 ^a He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? he that formed the eye, shall he not see?

10 He that chastiseth the heathen, shall not he correct? he that ^a teacheth man knowledge, shall not he know?

d Ps. 7. 6.—e Gen. 18. 25.—f Job 30. 5.—g Ps. 39. 15. Jude 15.—h Job 31. 3. & 34. 8. 22. Prov. 10. 20. Luke 12. 27.—i Ps. 10. 11, 13. & 50. 7.—k Ps. 73. 22 & 96. 6.—l Exod. 4. 11. Prov. 20. 12.—m Job 35. 11. Isai. 38. 20. 1 Cor. 4. 13. 1 John 2. 27.

2. It is fixed, firm, and stable. The world is also established, and cannot be moved.

3. It is an everlasting kingdom. From everlasting to everlasting;—thy throne is established of old:—thou art from everlasting.

II. But in this His kingdom there are those who raise tumults, commotions, and rebellions. These he compares to swelling waters, and foaming waves.

1. The floods, that is, tyrants, persecutors, &c. have lifted up, O Lord, the floods have lifted up their voice; the floods lift up their waves. The church dwells in the sea; and the waves of tyranny, ambition, and malice, beat furiously upon it.

2. Well, be it so; yet the Lord on high is mightier than the noise of many waters; yea, than the mighty waves of the sea. He wonderfully and strangely hath shewed His might in getting Himself the victory over all persecutors, and propagating and enlarging His kingdom over all the earth in despite of His enemies.

III. 1. And as His kingdom is immovable, so are the laws by which it is governed fixed and unalterable also. Thy testimonies are very sure. The Gospel is an eternal gospel; the doctrine thereof holy and inviolable; by which God hath witnessed his good will to man, and what He will have done by all His loving subjects; which is, that they be a holy people.

2. For holiness becometh thy house for ever. The temple, the priests, the people, must be a holy nation; for ever correspondent to the holiness of His law and testimonies. Be ye holy, for I am holy. Holiness becometh thy house, O Lord, for ever.

NOTES ON PSALM XCIV.

This Psalm has no title either in the Hebrew or Chaldee. The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, have—“A Psalm of David, for the fourth day of the week;” but this gives us no information on which we can rely. In three of Kennicott’s MSS. it is written as a part of the preceding. It is probably a prayer of the captives in Babylon for deliverance; and was written by the descendants of Moses, to whom some of the preceding Psalms have been attributed. It contains a description of an iniquitous and oppressive government, such as that under which the Israelites lived in Babylon.

Verse 1. O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongeth] God is the Author of retributive justice, as well as of mercy. This retributive justice is what we often term vengeance, but perhaps improperly; for vengeance with us signifies an excitement of angry passions, in order to gratify a vindictive spirit, which supposes itself to have received some real injury; whereas, what is here referred to is the simple act of justice, that gives to all their due.

Verse 2. Lift up thyself] Exert Thy power. Render a reward to the proud.] To the Babylonians, who oppress and insult us.

Verse 3. How long shall the wicked triumph?] The wicked are often in prosperity; and this only shews us of how little worth riches are in the sight of God, when He bestows them on the most contemptible of mortals. But their time and prosperity have their bounds.

Verse 4. They utter and speak] וַיִּבְרְחוּ yabidū, their hearts get full of pride and insolence; and then, from the abundance of such vile hearts, the mouth speaks: and the speech is of hard things,—threatenings, which they are determined to execute:—boastings of their power, authority, &c.

11 ^a The Lord knoweth the thoughts of man, that they are vanity.

12 ^b Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest, O Lord, and teachest him out of thy law;

13 That thou mayest give him rest from the days of adversity, until the pit be digged for the wicked.

14 ^c For the Lord will not cast off his people, neither will he forsake his inheritance.

15 But judgment shall return unto righteousness: and all the upright in heart shall follow it.

16 Who will rise up for me against the evil-doers? or who will stand up for me against the workers of iniquity?

17 ^d Unless the Lord had been my help, my soul had almost dwelt in silence.

^a 1 Cor. 2. 9.—^b Job 5. 17. Prov. 3. 11. 1 Cor. 11. 24. Heb. 12. 5, &c.—^c 1 Sam. 12. 22. Rom. 11. 1, 2.—^d Heb. shall be as/for it.—^e Ps. 124. 1, 2.—^f Or, quietly.

Verse 5. They break in pieces thy temple] This was true of the Babylonians. Nebuchadnezzar slew many,—carried the rest into captivity,—ruined Jerusalem,—overturned the temple; sacked, pillaged, and destroyed all the country.

Verse 6. They slay the widows] Nebuchadnezzar carried on his wars with great cruelty. He carried fire and sword every where;—spared neither age, sex, nor condition. The widows, the orphan, and the stranger, persons in the most desolate conditions of life were not distinguished from others, by his ruthless sword.

Verse 7. The Lord shall not see] This was either the language of infidelity or insult. Indeed, what could the Babylonians know of the true God? They might consider Him as the God of a district or province, who knew nothing, and did nothing out of His own territories.

Verse 8. Understand, ye brutish] These are the same expressions as in Ps. xcii. 6, on which see the note.

Verse 9. He that planted the ear, shall he not hear?] This is allowed to be an unanswerable mode of argumentation. Whatever is found of excellence in the creature must be derived from the Creator, and exist in Him in the plenitude of infinite excellence. God, says St. Jerome, is all eye, because He sees all;—He is all hand, because He does all things;—He is all foot, for He is every where present. The Psalmist does not say, He that planted the ear, hath he not an ear? He that formed the eye, hath he not eyes? No, but shall he not hear,—shall he not see. And why does He say so? To prevent the error of humanizing God; of attributing members or corporeal parts to the infinite Spirit. See Camel.

Verse 10. He that chastiseth the heathen, shall not he correct?] Yoo, who are heathens, and heathens of the most abandoned kind.

He that teacheth man knowledge] We here supply,—shall he not know? But this is not acknowledged by the original, nor by any of the Versions. Indeed it is not necessary; for, either the words contain a simple proposition, It is he who teacheth man knowledge; or this clause should be read in connexion with ver. 11. Jehovah, who teacheth man knowledge, he knoweth the devices of man, that they are vanity. As He teaches knowledge to man, must He not know all the reasonings and devices of the human heart?

Verse 12. Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest] יְיָוִי תֵּיטָרֵנְנִי, whom Thou instructest,—and teachest him out of thy law. Two points here are worthy of our most serious regard:—1. God gives knowledge to man; gives him understanding and reason. 2. He gives Him a revelation of himself; He places before that reason and understanding His Divine law. This is God's system of teaching; and the human intellect is His gift, which enables man to understand this teaching. We perhaps may add a third thing here; that, as by sin the understanding is darkened, He gives the Holy Spirit to dispel this darkness from the intellect, in order that His word may be properly apprehended and understood. But He gives no new faculty; He removes the impediments from the old, and invigorates it by His Divine energy.

Verse 13. That thou mayest give him rest] He whom God instructs is made wise unto salvation; and he who is thus taught has rest in his soul, and peace and confidence in adversity.

Verse 14. The Lord will not cast off his people] Though they are now suffering under a grievous and oppressive captivity, yet the Lord hath not utterly cast them off. They are His inheritance, and He will again restore them to their own land.

Verse 15. But judgment shall return unto righteousness] If we read יְשׁוּבָה yosheb, shall sit, for יְשׁוּבָה yashub, 18 When I said, My foot slippeth; thy mercy, O Lord, held me up.

19 In the multitude of my thoughts within me, thy comforts delight my soul.

20 Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law?

21 They gather themselves together against the soul of the righteous, and condemn the innocent blood.

22 But the Lord is my defence; and my God is the rock of my refuge.

23 And he shall bring upon them their own iniquity, and shall cut them off in their own wickedness: yea, the Lord our God shall cut them off.

shall return, which is only placing the vau before the vav instead of after it, we have the following sense,—Until the just one shall sit in judgment, and after him all the upright in heart. Cyrus has the epithet יְדֵי טְדֵקָה, the just one, in different places in the prophet Isaiah. See Is. xli. 2, 10; xlv. 8; li. 5. It was Cyrus who gave liberty to the Jews; who appeared as their deliverer and conductor to their own land, and they are all represented as following in his train.

Verse 16. Who will rise up for me] Who is he that shall be the deliver of Thy people? Who will come to our assistance against these wicked Babylonians?

Verse 17. Unless the Lord had been my help] Had not God in a strange manner supported us while under His chastising hand, we had been utterly cut off.

My soul had almost dwelt in silence] The Vulgate has in inferno, in hell, or the infernal world; the Septuagint in adp, in the invisible world.

Verse 18. When I said, my foot slippeth] When I found myself so weak, and my enemy so strong, that I got first off my guard, and then off my centre of gravity, and my fall appeared inevitable.

Thy mercy, O Lord, held me up] יְיָוִי יִסְדֵּנִי, propped me. It is a metaphor taken from any thing falling, that is propped, shored up, or buttressed. How often does the mercy of God thus prevent the ruin of weak believers, and of those who have been unfaithful.

Verse 19. In the multitude of my thoughts] Of my griefs (dolorum, Vulgate); my sorrows (δύσαν, Septuagint.) "According to the multitude of my trials and distresses have been the consolations which Thou hast afforded me." Or, while I have been deeply meditating on Thy wondrous grace and mercy, Divine light has broken in upon my soul, and I have been filled with delight.

Verse 20. Shall the throne of iniquity] No wicked king, judge or magistrate, shall ever stand in Thy presence. No countenance shall such have from Thy grace or providence.

Which frameth mischief] Devise, plan, and execute, as if they acted by a positive law, and were strictly enjoined to do what they so much delighted in.

Verse 21. They gather themselves together] In every thing that is evil they are in unity. The devil, his angels, and his children, all join and draw together when they have for object the destruction of the works of the Lord. But this was particularly the case with respect to the poor Jews among the Babylonians; they were objects of their continual hatred, and they laboured for their destruction.

This and the following verses have been applied to our Lord, and the treatment He met with both from his own countrymen and from the Romans. They pretended to judge him according to the law, and framed mischief against him; they assembled together against the life of the righteous one, and condemned innocent blood; but God evidently interposed, and brought upon them their own iniquity, according to their horrible imprecation, His blood be upon us and upon our children! and God cut them off in their own iniquity. All this had, in reference to Him, a most literal fulfilment.

Verse 22. The rock of my refuge] Alluding to those natural fortifications among rocks, which are frequent in the land of Judea.

Verse 23. Shall cut them off] This is repeated to shew that the destruction of the Babylonians was fixed and indubitable: and in reference to the Jews, the persecutors and murderers of our Lord and His apostles, it was not less so. Babylon is totally destroyed; not even a vestige of it remains. The Jesse are no longer a nation; they are scattered throughout the world, and have no certain place of abode. They do not possess even one village on the face of the earth.

PSALM XCIV.

The last verse is thus translated and paraphrased in the old Psalter:—

Trans. And be sal peld to thaim that testidnes, and in their malice be sal skater thaim: skater thaim sal be the same sure God.

Paraph. 'Alswa say after thair ill entent, that thai will do gude men harme; he sall yelde thaim pyne, and in thair malice thai sall be sundred fra the halli courts of hevenc, and skated emang the wiked fendes of hell.'

ANALYSIS OF THE NINETY-FOURTH PSALM.

In this Psalm the parts are,—

I. A petition for vengeance upon the wicked, ver. 1, 2.
II. A pitiful complaint, with the causes of it, which were two:—

1. The delay of God's judgments on them, ver. 3, 4.
2. Their insolence, oppression of the poor, and blasphemy against God, ver. 4—7.

III. A sharp reprehension of their blasphemy and atheism, and the refutation of it.

IV. A consolation to all good men,—that God will punish the wicked, and defend the righteous, ver. 12—23, which is confirmed,—

1. From God's faithfulness, who hath promised, and will perform it, ver. 14.

2. From David's own experience, ver. 16—20.

3. From God's hatred of injustice, tyranny, and oppression, ver. 20, 21. 1. Which will cause Him to be a Rock and Defence to His people, ver. 22. 2. A severe Revenger to the oppressors, ver. 23.

I. He begins with a petition that God would take vengeance of the oppressors of His people. O Lord God, to whom vengeance belongs, to whom vengeance belongs: as if he had said, Thou art the most powerful Lord, a God of justice and power, and hast vengeance in Thine own hand. Therefore now—

1. Shew thyself. Appear, shine forth evidently, and apparently shew Thy justice, ver. 1.

2. Lift up thyself, thou Judge of the earth. Do Thy office of judicature; ascend Thy throne and tribunal as judges use to do when they give judgment.

3. Render a reward unto the proud. For the proud humble themselves not unto Thee; they repent not.

II. And now the prophet begins to complain that by the delay of God's judgment wicked men were hardened in their impiety, and gloried in their villany.

1. How long? how long? This Thy forbearance seems tedious; especially since the wicked grow worse and worse by it, and insult over us the more.

2. For they triumph in their strength. They glory in their prosperity, and in their wickedness.

3. They utter and speak hard things. Boldly, rashly, proudly, they threaten ruin to Thy church.

4. They are workers of iniquity, and they boast themselves. It is not sufficient for them to do ill,—but they boast of it.

Now to what end do they make use of all these? The consequence is lamentable, the event sad. The effects are lamentable, for in their fury and injustice—

1. They break in pieces thy people, O Lord. The people dedicated to Thee.

2. They afflict thine heritage. The people that Thou hast chosen for Thy possession.

3. They slay the widow, destitute of the comfort of a husband,—1. And the stranger. A man far from his friends and country. 2. And murder the fatherless. All which Thou hast taken into Thy protection, and commanded that they be not wronged, Exod. xxii. Deut. xxiv. Yet such is their fury, that they spare neither sex, nor age, nor any condition of men.

Yet they say, The Lord shall not see, neither shall the God of Jacob regard it. This is their impiety,—this their blasphemy; this is the true cause of all their injustice, tyranny, cruelty, and oppression.

III. Now our prophet sets himself seriously to reprehend and confute this. By an apostrophe he turns to them, and calls them fools; and proves by a manifest argument that they are fools; demonstrating that God is neither deaf nor blind, as they presumed and conceived, from the cause to the effect: and urgeth them emphatically,—

1. Understand, ye brutish among the people. O ye fools when will ye be wise? What, will ye be brutish always? will you never have common sense in your heads?

2. He planted the ear; caused you to hear;—and shall he not then hear?

3. He formed the eye with all the tunicles, and put into it the faculty of vision by which you see;—and shall he not see? To say the contrary is as if you should affirm that the fountain that sends forth the stream had no water in it; or the sun that enlightens the world, had no light; or the fire that warms, no heat. Are these affirmations fit for wise men? Neither is it, that the God of Jacob doth not hear, nor see.

4. He chastiseth the heathen, as Sodom Gomorrah, &c., or he chastises them by the checks of their own conscience,—and shall not he then correct you, who go under the name of His people, and yet so impiously blaspheme?

5. He that teacheth man knowledge, hath endued him with a reasonable soul, and made him capable of all arts and sciences, is he stupid? is He without understanding? shall not he know? He looks into your hearts, and knows your thoughts and counsels, and findeth them all vain. The Lord knows the thoughts of man, that they are but vanity. With which he concludes his reprehension.

IV. And so from them he comes to the good man, and shews his happiness, whom he labours to comfort in his extremities, whom he pronounceth blessed. Blessed is the man; and his blessing lies in three things,

1. In his sufferings; because when he is punished, he is but chastised, and his chastisements are from the Lord. Blessed is the man whom thou chastenest.

2. In his teaching; that when he is chastised, he is but taught obedience to the law of God, taught by book, taught out of Thy law.

3. In consideration of the end; that he feel not, but bear more moderately, the injuries of the wicked: for the end why God chastiseth and teacheth thee out of His law is, That he may give thee rest, a quiet and even soul from the days of adversity; and that thou shouldest expect with patience, till the pit be digged up for the ungodly. Such a day there is, and the day will come. Hell is as ready to receive the sinner, as a grave digged up for a dead body. Expect, therefore, their punishment and thy deliverance, with a quiet mind.

4. And the reason is, that though God for a time seem to be angry, and suffer His people to be afflicted, yet He will not utterly neglect and forsake them. For the Lord will not cast off his people, neither will he forsake his inheritance.

5. A day of judgment, and execution of justice, shall come, when judgment shall return unto righteousness.

A second confirmation of the comfort he gave to the church in affliction is drawn from his own experience, ver. 16—20.

Object. Yes, but this time of judgment may be long, in the mean while it is necessary to have some helper and help against the persecutions and injuries of cruel men. Who will arise for me, and labour to protect me in so great a concourse of devils, or mischievous men? who will stand up for me, and defend me against the workers of iniquity?

Resp. Even he that then stood up for me. No man, but God alone. He did it; and unless the Lord had been my help, my soul had almost dwelt in silence. I had been laid in the grave among the dead, saith David, ver. 17.

2. If I said, and complained to him, that I was in any danger, my foot slips. I was tempted, and ready to fall, Thy mercy, O Lord, held me up; in mercy He lent me His hand, and sustained me.

3. In the multitude of the thoughts within me, thy comforts delight my soul:—

1. The thoughts within me were sorrows of heart; and many they were occasioned from within, from without a multitude of them.

2. Thy comforts delight my soul. As were the troubles in the flesh, so were comforts in my soul.

3. His third reason to comfort the church in affliction, is drawn from the nature of God, to whom all iniquity is hateful.

1. Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee? Thou art a just God;—and wilt Thou have any thing to do, any society, with those that sit upon thrones and seats of justice, and execute injustice?

2. Which frame mischief by a law, i. e. frame wicked laws; or, under the colour of law and justice, oppress the innocent. With those who do injustice by the sword of justice, God will have no fellowship.

3. And yet there is a third pretence of wicked men to colour their proceedings against innocent men. The first was their throne; and the second was the law; and the third is their council, and consultations in them. These they call to that end. They meet by troops as thieves; they assemble, they convene in synods; they gather themselves together, and that to a most wicked end.

1. Against the soul of the righteous. Onepwai, Septuagint. To hunt.

2. To condemn the innocent blood. Their laws are Draco's laws. Now what shall the poor innocent do in

An invitation to praise God, 1, 2. The reasons on which this is founded, the majesty and dominion of God, 3-5. An invitation to pray to God, 6. And the reasons on which that is founded, 7. XIX. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

COME, let us sing unto the Lord: let us make a joyful noise to the rock of our salvation.

2 Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms.

3 For the Lord is a great God, and a great King above all gods.

such a case? how shall he be comforted? Help he must not expect from man; from man it cannot come, it must come from Heaven; and therefore let him say with David, Let my enemies rage as they list, and exercise all cruelties towards me, under a pretence of zeal, piety and legal justice.

1. But the Lord is my defence, that their treachery and plots shall not hurt me.

2. My God is the rock of my refuge, on whom my hope shall safely rely.

3. I am fully assured, for I have His word and His promise engaged for it.

1. That he shall bring upon them their own iniquity; that is, that the iniquity of the wicked man shall return upon his own head.

2. And shall cast them off in their own wickedness; not so much for their sin as for the malice of it.

3. Which, for assurance of it, he repeats, and explains who it is that shall do it. Yea, the Lord our God shall cut them off; the Lord, whose providence they derided; our God, the God of Jacob, whom they contemned, ver. 7, he shall cut them off; they shall have no part with his people.

NOTES ON PSALM XCV.

This Psalm is also without a title, both in the Hebrew and Chaldee; but is attributed to David by the Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, Arabic and Syriac; and by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, iv. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Calmet, and other eminent critics, believe that it was composed during the time of the Captivity, and that the apostle only followed the common opinion in quoting it as the production of David, because in general the Psalter was attributed to him.

This Psalm is a solemn invitation to the people, when assembled for public worship, to praise God from a sense of His great goodness; and to be attentive to the instructions they were about to receive from the reading and expounding of the law; and on these accounts it has been long used in the Christian church, at the commencement of public service, to prepare the people's minds to worship God in spirit and in truth.

Houbigant, and other learned divines, consider this Psalm as composed of three parts.—1. The part of the people, ver. 1, to the middle of ver. 7. 2. The part of the priest, or prophet, from the middle of ver. 7, to the end of ver. 8. 3. The part of Jehovah, ver. 9-11. It is written as a part of the preceding Psalm by nine of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.: but certainly it must have been originally an ode by itself, as the subject is widely different from that in the foregoing.

Verse 1. O come, let us sing] Let us praise God, not only with the most joyful accents which can be uttered by the voices; but let us also praise him with hearts tuned to gratitude, from a full sense of the manifold benefits we have already received.

The rock of our salvation.] The strong Fortress in which we have always found safety; and the Source whence we have always derived help for our souls. In both these senses the word rock, as applied to God, is used in the Scriptures.

Verse 2. Let us come before his presence] פניו panait, "his face," with thanksgiving, כרתה be-todah, with confession; or, with the confession-offering. Praise Him for what He has already done; and confess your unworthiness of any of His blessings. The confession-offering, the great atoning Sacrifice, can alone render your acknowledgment of sin, and thanksgiving, acceptable to a holy and just God.

Verse 3. For the Lord is a great God] Or, a great

6 O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our Maker.

7 For he is our God; and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand. To-day if ye will hear his voice,

8 Harden not your heart, as in the provocation, and as in the day of temptation in the wilderness:

9 When your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my work.

10 Forty years long was I grieved with this generation, and said, It is a people that do err in their heart, and they have not known my ways:

11 Unto whom I swear in my wrath that they should not enter into my rest.

God is Jehovah, and a great King above all gods; or, God is a great King over all. The Supreme Being has three names here: אלהים El; יהוה Jehovah; and אלהים Elohim; and we should apply none of them to false gods. The first implies His strength, the second His being and essence, the third His covenant relation to mankind. In public worship these are the views we should entertain of the Divine Being.

Verse 4. In his hand are the deep places of the earth] The greatest deeps are fathomed by him.

The strength of the hills is his also.] And to Him the greatest heights are accessible.

Verse 5. The sea is his] The sea and the dry land are equally His; for He has formed them both, and they are His property. He governs and disposes of them as He sees good. He is the absolute Master of universal nature. Therefore there is no other object of worship nor of confidence.

Verse 6. O come, let us worship] Three distinct words are used here to express three different acts of adoration,—

1. Let us worship, נשתחוה nishlachaveh; let us prostrate ourselves;—the highest act of adoration, by which the supremacy of God is acknowledged. 2. Let us bow down, נכרכו nicroah, let us crouch, or cover down, bending the legs under, as a dog in the presence of his master, who solicitously waits to receive his commands. 3. Let us kneel, נכרעה nideroah, let us put our knees to the ground, and thus put ourselves in the posture of those who supplicate. And let us consider that all this should be done in the presence of Him who is Jehovah our Creator.

Verse 7. For he is our God] Here is the reason for this service. He has condescended to enter into a covenant with us, and has taken us for His own; and therefore

We are the people of his pasture] Or rather, as the Chaldee, Syriac, Vulgate, and Ethiopic, read, We are his people, and the sheep of the pasture of his hand. We are His own; He feeds and governs us, and His powerful hand protects us.

To-day if ye will hear his voice] To-day—you have no time to lose—to-morrow may be too late. God calls to-day; to-morrow He may be silent. This should commence the 8th verse, as it begins what is supposed to be the part of the priest or prophet, who now exhorts the people; as if he had said, Seeing you are in so good a spirit, do not forget your own resolutions, and harden not your hearts, as your fathers did in Meribah and Massah, in the wilderness; the same fact, and the same names, as are mentioned Exod. xvii. 7. When the people murmured at Rephidim, because they had no water; hence it was called Meribah, contention or provocation, and Massah, temptation.

Verse 9. When your fathers tempted me] Tried me by their insolence, unbelief, and blasphemy. They proved me;—they had full proof of my power to save and to destroy. There they saw my works;—they saw that nothing was too hard for God.

Verse 10. Forty years long] They did nothing but murmur, disbelieve, and rebel, from the time they began their journey at the Red sea till they passed over Jordan, a period of forty years. During all this time God was grieved by that generation; yet He seldom shewed forth that judgment which they most righteously had deserved.

It is a people that do err in their heart] Or, according to the Chaldee, these are a people whose idols are in their hearts. At any rate they had not God there.

They have not known my ways] The verb ידע yadd, to know, is used here, as in many other parts of Scripture, to express approbation. They knew God's ways well enough; but they did not like them; and would not walk

PSALM XCVI.

All the inhabitants of the earth are invited to praise the Lord, 1, 2. His supreme majesty, 3-6. The tribes of Israel are invited to glorify Him, 7-9. And to proclaim His name among the heathen, 10. The heavens and the earth are commanded to rejoice in Him, 11-13.

in them. "These wretched men," says the old Psalter, "were giffen to the lufe of this lyfe: knewe noight my ways of mekenes, & charite: for thi in my wreth I sware to thaim; that es, I sett stably that if that sal entre in till my rest"—that is, they shall not enter into my rest.

This ungrateful people did not approve of God's ways; they did not enter into his designs,—they did not conform to His commands,—they paid no attention to His miracles, and did not acknowledge the benefits which they received from His hands; therefore God determined that they should not enter into the rest which He had promised to them, that is, provided they were obedient, they should inherit the Promised Land. So none of those who came out of Egypt, except Joshua and Caleb, entered into Canaan; all the rest died in the wilderness, wherein, because of their disobedience, God caused them to wander forty years.

It is well known that the land of Canaan was a type of heaven; where, after all his toils, the good and faithful servant is to enter into the joy of his Lord. And as those Israelites in the wilderness were not permitted to enter into the land of Canaan because of their unbelief, their distrust of God's providence, and consequent disobedience, St. Paul hence takes occasion to exhort the Jews, Heb. iv. 2-11, to accept readily the terms offered to them by the Gospel. He shews that the words of the present Psalm are applicable to the state of Christianity; and intimates to them, that if they persisted in obstinate refusal of those gracious offers, they likewise would fall according to the same example of unbelief. ANALYSIS OF THE NINETY-FIFTH PSALM.

This Psalm contains two parts:—

I. An exhortation to praise God, to adore, worship, kneel, ver. 1, 2-6.

II. Reasons to persuade to it.

1. God's mercies, ver. 3, 4, 5-7.

2. His judgments in punishing His own people Israel for neglect of this duty.

1. The Psalmist begins this Psalm with an earnest invitation, including himself: saying,—

1. O come, let us; come along with me. Though a king, he thought not himself exempted.

2. And the assembly being come together, he acquaints them what they came for:—

1. To sing to the Lord, heartily, joyfully.

2. Let us make a joyful noise; make a jubilee of it.

3. Openly, and with a loud voice. Let us make a joyful noise with Psalms.

4. Reverently, as being in His eye, His presence.

5. Gratefully. Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving.

6. To worship, to bow down, to kneel, ver. 6. Adoration, humble adoration; outward worship, that of the body, as well as inward, that of the soul, is His due; and that for these reasons:—

II. 1. Because he is the rock of our salvation, whether temporal or spiritual, so long as we rely on Him as a Rock, we are safe from the tyranny of men, from the wrath of God, from the power of the devil, death and hell.

2. Because he is a great God, and a great King above all gods, Jehovah, a God whose name is, I am, an incommunicable name to any other; for His essence is from Himself, and immutable; all others derivative and mutable; and the great Jehovah, great in power, majesty, and glory, for He is above all gods.

3. The whole orb of the earth is under His power and dominion. In his hands are all the corners of the earth; the strength of the hills is his also. The globe in all its extensions is subject to Him.

4. And no wonder, for He is the Creator of both, which is another argument: The sea is His, and he made it; and his hands formed the dry land.

5. He is our Maker, the Creator and Lord of men also.

6. Our Lord God in particular, for He hath called us to be his inheritance. For we are the people of his pasture and the sheep of his hand.

In which duty, if we fail, he proposeth what is to be expected by the example of the Israelites.

1. God gave them a day, and He gives it to you; it is the hodie (to-day) of your life.

2. In this day He speaks, He utters His voice: outwardly He speaks by His word, inwardly by His Spirit.

3. This you are bound to hear, to obey it.

4. And it is your own fault if you hear it not, for you may hear it if you will; to that purpose He hath given you a day. To-day if you will hear his voice.

5. Suppose you hear it not, the cause is, the hardness of your hearts; and take heed of it: harden not your hearts.

For then it will be with you as it was with the Israelites.

1. As in the day of temptation in the wilderness, at Meribah and Massah.

2. When your fathers, the Israelites that then lived, tempted me and proved me. They asked whether God was among them or no? They questioned my power, whether I was able to give them bread and water, and flesh?

3. And they found that I was able to do it. They saw my works; for I brought them water out of the rock, and gave them bread from heaven, and flesh also.

Their stubbornness was of long continuance, and often repeated, for it lasted forty years. Forty years was I grieved with this generation, which drew God to pass this censure and verdict upon them.

1. His censure was, that they were an obstinate perverse people, a people that do always err in their hearts; that were led by their own desires, which caused them to err; the way of God they would not go in, they knew it not; that is, they liked it not.

2. This verdict upon them:—Unto whom I swear in my wrath that they shall not enter into my rest; i. e. literally, into the land of Canaan that I promised them. The oath is extant, Exod. xiv. As I live, saith the Lord, your carcasses shall fall in the wilderness; and in the wilderness they did fall, every one, except Caleb and Joshua, a fearful example against stubbornness and disobedience. Let him that readeth understand.

NOTES ON PSALM XCVI.

This Psalm has no title, either in the Hebrew or Chaldee. The Syriac, "Of David. A prophecy of the advent of Christ, and the calling of the Gentiles to believe in Him." The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, have, A Song of David, when the house was built after the Captivity. We have seen in 1 Chron. xvi. 23-33. a Psalm nearly like this, composed by David, on bringing the ark to Zion, from the house of Obed-edom. See the notes on the above place. But the Psalm, as it stands in the Chronicles, has thirty verses; and this is only a section of it, from the twenty-third to the thirty-third. It is very likely that this part was taken from the Psalm above mentioned, to be used at the dedication of the second Temple. The one hundred and fifth Psalm is almost the same with that in Chronicles, but much more extensive. Where they are in the main the same, there are differences for which it is not easy to account.

Verse 1. Sing unto the Lord a new song] A song of peculiar excellence; for in this verse the term new is repeatedly taken in the Scriptures. He has done extraordinary things for us, and we should excel in praise and thanksgiving.

Verse 2. Shew forth his salvation from day to day.] The original is very emphatic בשרו ימים ימים basru miyom leiyom yeshu'ato, Preach the gospel of His salvation from day to day. To the same effect the Septuagint, εὐαγγελίζετε ἡμέραν ἐξ ἡμέρας τὸ σωτηρίου αὐτοῦ, evangelizete his salvation from day to day.

Verse 3. Declare his glory among the heathen] The heathen do not know the true God: as His being and attributes are at the foundation of all religion, these are the first subjects of instruction for the Gentile world. Declare, ספרו saphru, detail, number out, His glory, כבודו kebedo, His splendour and excellence.

His wonders among all people.] Declare also to the Jews His wonders, נִפְלְאוֹתָיו, niphleotav, "His miracles." Dwell on the works which He shall perform in Judea. The miracles which Christ wrought among the Jews were full proof that He was not only the Messiah, but the mighty power of God.

Verse 4. He is to be feared above all gods.] I think the two clauses of this verse should be read thus:

Jehovah is great, and greatly to be praised.

Exaltum is to be feared above all.

6 Honour and majesty are before him: strength and beauty are in his sanctuary.

7 Give unto the LORD, O ye kindreds of the people, give unto the LORD glory and strength.

8 Give unto the LORD, the glory due unto his name: bring an offering, and come into his courts.

9 O worship the LORD in the beauty of holiness: fear before him, all the earth.

10 Say among the heathen that the LORD reigneth: the world also shall be established that it shall not be moved: he shall judge the people righteously.

11 Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof.

12 Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein: then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice

13 Before the LORD: for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth.

I doubt whether the word Elohim, is ever, by fair construction, applied to false gods or idols. The contracted form in the following verse appears to have this meaning.

Verse 5. All the gods of the nations are idols אֱלֹהֵי אֲרָצוֹת—All those reputed or worshipped as gods among the heathens are Elohim, vanities, emptinesses, things of nought. Instead of being Elohim, they are Elohim: they are not only not God, but they are nothing. Jehovah made the heavens. He who is the Creator is alone worthy of adoration.

Verse 6. Honour and majesty are before him] Does this refer to the cloud of His glory that preceded the ark, in their journeying through the wilderness? The words strength and beauty, and glory and strength, ver. 7, are those by which the ark is described, Psa. lxxviii. 61.

Verse 7. Ye kindreds of the people] Ye families, all the tribes of Israel in your respective divisions.

Verse 8. Come into his courts.] Probably referring to the second temple. Reference must be either to the tabernacle or temple.

Verse 9. Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness] I think קִדְּוָה נִרְדָּה be-hadareth kodesh, signifies holy ornaments, such as the high priest wore in his ministrations. These were given him for glory and beauty; and the Psalmist calls on him to put on his sacerdotal garments, to bring his offering minchah, and come into the courts of the Lord, and perform his functions, and make intercession for the people.

Verse 10. Say among the heathen that the Lord reigneth] Justin Martyr, in his dialogue with Trypho the Jew, quotes this passage thus: Εἰσαὶ εἰς τοὺς ἔθνη, O Kyrios καθύπερθε ἀπὸ τοῦ ζῆλου, Say among the nations, the Lord ruleth by the wood, meaning the cross; and accuses the Jews of having blotted this word out of their Bibles, because of the evidence it gave of the truth of Christianity. It appears that this reading did exist anciently in the Septuagint; or at least in some ancient copies of that work; for the reading has been quoted by Tertullian, Lactantius, Arnobius, Augustin, Cassiodorus, Pope Leo, Gregory of Tours, and others. The reading is still extant in the ancient Roman Psalter, Dominus regnavit à ligno, and in some others. In an ancient MS. copy of the Psalter before me, while the text exhibits the commonly received reading, the margin has the following gloss: Regnavit à ligno crucis, "the Lord reigns by the wood of the cross." My old Scolico-Latin Psalter has not à ligno in the text, but seems to refer to it in the paraphrase: Pro Christo regnavit effter the bede on the crossite. It is necessary, however, to add, that no such words exist in any copy of the Hebrew text now extant, nor in any MS. yet collated; nor in any of the ancient Versions. Neither Eusebius nor Jerom even refer to it, who wrote comments on the Psalms; nor is it mentioned by any Greek writer except Justin Martyr.

The world also shall be established] The word לְבַל lebel, signifies the habitable globe: and may be a metonymy here, the container put for the contained. And many think that by it the Church is intended: as the Lord, who is announced to the heathen as reigning, is understood to be Jesus Christ; and His judging among the people, His establishing the Holy Gospel among them, and governing the nations by its laws.

Verse 11. Let the heavens rejoice] The publication of the Gospel is here represented as a universal blessing—the heavens, the earth, the sea, and its inhabitants, the field, the grass, and the trees of the wood, are all called to rejoice at this glorious event. This verse is well and harmoniously translated in the old Psalter:

Sapne be detentes,—and the erth glad;
Stynde be the see,—and the fulness of it;
Sop sal felde,—and al that ere in thair.
And the paraphrase is at least curious:—
Rebentis, haly men. Etthe, meke men that receyves lare (learning). Feldeis, that is even men, mylde and softe: they sal joy in Criste. And all that is in thair, that es, strength, wyttes & skill."

I shall give the remaining part of this ancient paraphrase, which is an echo of the opinion of most of the Latin Fathers.

Verse 12. Thou shalt glad all the trees of woodes.—Thou, that is in another life. Erere of woodes.—Synful men that were fyrst withouten frut, and sithen taken in to God's temple.

Verse 13. For he cometh, he cometh.—He cometh, fyrste to be man.—Sythen he cometh to deme the erth.

He sal deme in ebenes the erth:—and folk in his sothfastnes. Nothing is evenor, or sothfaster than that he geder with hym perfitte men; to deme and to deperte to the rig hande (thaim) that did mercy:—pase to the lefts hande (thaim) that did it nogt.

The Psalmist here, in the true spirit of poetry, gives life and intelligence to universal nature, producing them all as exulting in the reign of the Messiah, and the happiness which should take place in the earth, when the gospel should be universally preached. These predictions seem to be on the eve of complete fulfilment. Lord, hasten the time! For a fuller explanation see the following analysis.

ANALYSIS OF THE NINETY-SIXTH PSALM.

Although this Psalm was composed by David at the bringing back of the ark, yet most of the ancient and modern Christian expositors acknowledge it a prophecy of Christ's kingdom to be enlarged by the accession of all the Gentiles; and, finally, His coming to judgment.

There are two parts in this Psalm:

I. A general exhortation to both Jews and Gentiles to praise God, ver. 1—3.

II. A prophecy of Christ's kingdom, described by its greatness, ver. 4, 5;—the honours and glory, 6;—of the majesty of the King, ver. 7, 8.

1. The amplitude of this kingdom, ver. 10.

2. His judicature in it, ver. 11—13.

I. 1. The invitation to praise God for the benefits conferred on the whole earth by Christ, ver. 1—3. 1. That the praise be full, he thrice repeats—O sing, sing, sing; to the honour of the Trinity, says Bellarmino, obscurely intimated in the Old, but plainly to be preached in the New Testament. 2. Show forth. Give praise by thanks and singing. 3. Declare. Carry good news; the gospel of glad tidings.

2. The song to be sung must be new. Sing unto the Lord a new song. New, for a new benefit;—new, to be sung by a new people;—new, as being on a most excellent subject.

3. It was to be sung by the whole earth. By new men, and all the world over; for God was not now to be known in Judea only, but by all nations.

4. It must be continually sung, from day to day, without cessation: for as one day succeeds another, so should there be a continual succession in His praise.

Afterwards he expresses the benefit for which the whole earth is to praise Him, which is for the redemption of the world by His Son.

1. He shews forth His salvation, which He has conferred on mankind by Christ.

2. Declare his glory among the heathen, his wonders among all people. Salvation was a glorious work, full of wonders. And this was to be evangelized, as before to the Jews, by the prophets;—so now, to all people, by the apostles.

II. And that this exhortation might appear more reasonable, he presents God as a King, and sets down the greatness, amplitude, and equity, of His kingdom.

1. Sing to the Lord all the earth, for he is Lord of the whole earth. 1. The Lord is great. Great in power, wisdom, goodness, mercy, dominion, riches;—great in every way of greatness. 2. He is greatly to be praised, or worthy of all praise for his innumerable benefits. He bestows them spiritually and temporally, in His creation, redemption, and preservation of the world. What is praiseworthy in any king may be found superlatively in Him.

2. He is to be feared above all gods; for He can cast body and soul into hell. They, though called gods, can do

PSALM XCVII.

The reign of Jehovah, his mercy and blessing, 1, 2. He is fearful to the wicked, 3-4. Monsters shall be destroyed, 7. The blessings of the righteous, 8-12.

A. U. C. 390.

THE LORD reigneth; let the earth rejoice; let the multitude of isles be glad thereof.

a. Ps. 95. 10.—b. Heb. mercy, or, great idea.—c. Isai. 60. 8.—d. 1 Kings 5. 12. Ps. 11. 1.—e. Ps. 99. 14.

neither good nor hurt; the devils, who set them up, believe that he is above them, and they tremble. Sing to Him then, for the supremacy is His: He is above all gods. If there be other gods, shew their works; produce the heavens they have made, or the earth they have framed. It is our God alone who made the heavens, and all things that are in them; fear Him, and not them.

The prophet elegantly derides the heathenish gods, and the heathen for fearing them.

1. For the multitude of them,—for they were many; which is contrary to the nature of God, who must be but one, for there can be but one Supreme.

2. For their division:—one of the Ammonites; another of the Moabites; one of the Philistines; many of the Assyrians, Egyptians, Greeks, Romans; their gods were according to the number of their cities;—three hundred Jupiters, thirty thousand deities.

3. They were idim, Diu minores. Moloch had the rule of the sun; Astarte of the moon; Ceres, of corn; Pluto, of hell; Neptune, of the sea, &c. Their power was not universal, as the power of God ought to be.

4. Lastly, in the opposition, which plainly shews the difference between God and idols. They are but the work of men's hands. Our God is a Creator; He made the heavens, and all that is contained in and under them. He, then, is terrible, and to be feared; not those diminutive, vain, unprofitable gods of the nations.

And so having removed out of his way all the gods of the nations, he returns to our God and King. Having said, he was great, greatly to be feared, and praised above all gods, he now sets forth His Majesty to the eye of the subject and stranger:—Honour, majesty, strength, beauty, so says our prophet. Honour and majesty are before him, strength and beauty are in his sanctuary. God is invisible: but His honour and majesty, strength and beauty, may be easily observed in His ordering, governing, and preserving the whole world and His church; both which may be justly called His sanctuary, and the last his holy place.

He has proved God to be a universal King; and now he endeavours to persuade his subjects, all kindreds of people, to return to their King His tribute,—His honour and worship, which he comprehends in these words,—Give,—bring an offering,—worship,—fear,—proclaim him to be King.

1. Give unto the Lord; and again, Give unto the Lord glory and strength. Give freely to Him, and alone attribute to Him the glory of your being and well-being; that He made and redeemed you, and that by the strength of His right hand He has plucked you out of the hands of your enemies. This was the glorious work of His mercy and power.

2. Give unto the Lord the honour due to his name. It is a debt; and a debt, in equity, must be paid. The honour due to His name is to acknowledge Him to be holy, just, true, powerful,—The Lord, the faithful God,—good, merciful, long-suffering, &c. Defraud not His name of the least honour.

3. Bring an offering, and come into his courts. Appear not before the Lord empty, as the Jews were commanded, to which the prophet alludes: They had their sacrifices, and we also have our spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God through Jesus Christ, to bring, 1 Pet. ii. 5. These are the sacrifices of a contrite heart; bring these when you enter into His courts, and into His house of prayer.

4. 0 worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness. They who enter into the presence of a king presently fall on their knees, in token of submission and homage: in the presence of your King do the same. Adore,—and remember to do it in the beauty of holiness: referred to the material temple, it is by relation a holy place, and should not be profaned; a beautiful place, and should not be defaced, but kept beautiful. If referred to the spiritual temple,—the temple of the Holy Ghost it is to be beautified with holiness,—a holy life, holy virtues, beautiful garments, righteousness and true holiness.

5. Fear before him all the earth. Join fear to your worship; for a man may be bold in the presence of his king. Serve the Lord with fear, and rejoice with reverence. There is a fear which arises out of an apprehension

2^d Clouds and darkness are round about him: righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne.

3^d A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about.

4th His lightnings enlightened the world: the earth saw, and trembled.

f. Or, establishment.—g. Ps. 14. 8. & 50. 3. Dan. 7. 10. Hab. 3. 5.—h. Exod. 19. 18. Ps. 77. 18. & 104. 32.

of greatness and excellency in the Person, together with our dependence on, and our submission to Him, which in body and mind makes us step back, and keep at a distance. This kind of fear produces reverence and adoration, and this the prophet here means.

6. Say among the heathen, The Lord reigns: or, as some say, The Lord reigns among the heathen. Be heralds; and proclaim with the sound of the trumpet,—God reigns, God is King.

The prophet begins to set forth the amplitude of Christ's kingdom:—

1. Before, it was confined to Judea, but is now enlarged. All nations are become his subjects; he reigns among the heathen.

2. Its stability. The world shall be established that it shall not be moved. The laws of this kingdom are not to be altered, as were the laws of Moses, but fixed and established for ever. The gospel is an eternal gospel; a standing law.

3. The equity to be observed in it. He shall judge the people righteously,—for He shall give to those who observe his laws rewards; to those who despise them, break them, and say, We will not have this man to reign over us,—condign punishment.

4. The prophet having described the King, and the state of His kingdom, exults in spirit, as if he had seen Him coming to sit upon the throne. He calls not the Gentiles only, whom it did very nearly concern, but all creatures, to rejoice with him;—heaven, earth, sea, trees, fields, &c. Although there are who by heaven understand angels; by the earth, men; by the sea, troublesome spirits; by trees and fields, the Gentiles who were to believe; this need not be thought strange; because such prospopœias are frequent in Scripture. The meaning is, that as the salvation was universal, so he would have the joy to be universal. Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof. Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein: then shall the trees of the wood rejoice before the Lord.

He invites all creatures to rejoice for Christ's coming, both for the first and for the second: for the first, in which He consecrated all things; for the second, at which He will free all things from corruption, Rom. viii. 19-22.

1. For he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth—Which first part of the verse the Fathers refer to His first coming, when He was incarnate, and came to redeem the world by His death: and was to the end to judge, that is, to rule and govern the world by His word, ordinances, and Spirit.

2. And again, He shall come to judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth: which coming, though terrible to the wicked, will be joyful and comfortable to the righteous. For, says our Lord, Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth near; and to comfort them, and terrify the wicked, He tells them He will judge with equity, that is, in justice and in truth, according to His word and promise. He will accept no man's person, but render to every man according to his works.

NOTES ON PSALM XCVII.

This Psalm has no title either in the Hebrew or Chaldee; and in fourteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. it is written as a part of the preceding. In the Vulgate it is thus intitled,—Psalmus David, quando terra ejus restituta est.—"A Psalm of David when his land was restored;" the meaning of which I suppose to be, after he had obtained possession of the kingdom of Israel and Judah, and became king over all the tribes; or perhaps, after he had gained possession of all those countries which were originally granted to the Israelites in the Divine promise. See 1 Chron. xviii. 1, 2. The Septuagint is nearly to the same purpose, ἐν τῇ γῆ αὐτοῦ καθίσταται, "when his land was established:" so the Ethiopic and Arabic. The Syriac has "A Psalm of David, in which he predicts the advent of Christ, (i. e. in the flesh) and through it his last appearing" (i. e. to judgment.) The author of the epistle to the Hebrews, chap. i. 6, quotes a part of the seventh verse of this Psalm, and applies it to Christ. Who the author was is uncertain: it is much in the spirit of David's finest compositions: and yet many learned men suppose it was written to celebrate the Lord's power and goodness in the restoration of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity.

5 The hills melted like wax at the presence of the LORD, at the presence of the LORD of the whole earth.

Verse 1. The Lord reigneth] Here is a simple proposition which is a self-evident axiom, and requires no proof. JEHOVAH is infinite and eternal; is possessed of unlimited power and unerring wisdom: as He is the Maker, so He must be the Governor of all things. His authority is absolute, and His government therefore universal. In all places, on all occasions, and in all times, Jehovah reigns.

But this supreme King is not only called יהוה JEHOVAH, which signifies His infinite and eternal being, unlimited power, and unerring wisdom; and as Creator, His universal government: but He is also אדוני ADONAI, the Director and Judge. He directs human actions by His word, Spirit, and providence. Hence are His laws, and revelation in general; for the governed should know their Governor, and should be acquainted with His laws, and the reasons on which obedience is founded. As Adonai, or Director, He shews them the difference between good and evil; and their duty to their God, their neighbours, and themselves: and He finally becomes the Judge of their actions. But as His law is holy, and His commandment holy, just, and good, and man is in a fallen sinful state; hence He reveals Himself as אלהים ELOHIM, God, entering into a gracious covenant with mankind, to enlighten his darkness, and help his infirmities; that he may see what is just, and be able to do it. But as this will not cancel the sins already committed, hence the necessity of a Saviour, an atonement,—and hence the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of our Lord Jesus. This is the provision made by the great God for the more effectual administration of His kingdom upon earth. Jehovah, Adonai, Elohim, reigneth; (et his animadversio) and these points considered, it is no wonder that the Psalmist should add,—

Let the earth rejoice; let the multitude of isles be glad] The earth, the terraqueous globe; especially here, the vast continents, over every part of which God's dominion extends. But it is not confined to them; it takes in the islands of the sea; all the multitude of those islands, even to the smallest inhabited rock; which are as much the objects of His care, the number of their inhabitants considered, as the vastest continents on which are founded the mightiest empires. All this government springs from His holiness, righteousness, and benignity; and is exercised in what we call providence, from pro, for, before, and video, to see, which word is well defined and applied by CICERO,—Providentia est, per quam futurum aliquid videtur, antequam factum sit, "Providence is that by which any thing future is foreseen before it takes place." De Invent. c. 53. And, in reference to a Divine providence, he took up the general opinion, viz. Essae deos, et eorum providentia mundum administrari. De divinac. c. 51. ad finem,—"There are gods; and by their providence the affairs of the world are administered."

This providence is not only general, taking in the earth and its inhabitants, en masse; and giving and establishing laws by which all things shall be governed: but it is also particular; it takes in the multitudes of the isles, as well as the vast continents; the different species, as well as the genera; the individual, as well as the family. As every whole is composed of its parts, without the smallest of which it could not be a whole; so all generals are composed of particulars. And by the particular providence of God, the general providence is formed: He takes care of each individual; and, therefore, He takes care of the whole. Therefore, on the particular providence of God the general providence is built; and the general providence could not exist without the particular, any more than a whole could subsist independently of its parts. It is by this particular providence that God governs the multitudes of the isles, notices the fall of a sparrow, bottles the tears of the mourner, and numbers the hairs of His followers. Now, as God is an infinitely wise and good Being, and governs the world in wisdom and goodness, the earth may well rejoice, and the multitudes of the isles be glad.

Verse 2. Clouds and darkness are round about him] It is granted that this is a subject which cannot be comprehended. And why? Because God is infinite: He acts from His own counsels, which are infinite, in reference to ends which are also infinite; therefore, the reasons of His government cannot be comprehended by the feeble, limited powers of man. There must be clouds and darkness, an impenetrable obscurity, round about Him; and we can no more comprehend Him in what is called eternitas à parte

6 The heavens declare his righteousness, and all the people see his glory.

7 Confounded be all they that serve graven

1 Exod. 20. 4. Lev. 26. 1. Deut. 5. 8. & 27. 15.

ante,—the eternity that passed before time commenced; than we can in the eternitas à parte post,—the eternity that is to come; when time shall be no more. Yet such a Being cannot but see all things clearly, and do all things well; therefore, the Psalmist properly asserts,—

Righteousness and judgment are the habitations of his throne.] Righteousness, צדק tsedek, the principle that acts according to justice and equity; that gives to all their due, and ever holds, in all things, an even balance. And judgment, שפט mishpat, the principle that discerns, orders, directs, and determines every thing according to truth and justice; these form the habitation of his throne; that is, His government and management of the world are according to these; and though we cannot see the springs, the secret counsels, and the times, which this omniscient and almighty FATHMA must ever have in His own power, yet we may rest assured that all His administration is wise, just, holy, good, and kind. For, although His counsels be inscrutable, and the dispensations of His providence be sometimes apparently unequal, yet righteousness and judgment are the habitation of His throne.

In this most sublime description the Psalmist, by the figure termed prosopœia, or personification, gives vitality and thought to all the subjects he employs: here, the very throne of God is animated; righteousness and judgment are two intellectual beings who support it. The fire, the lightning, the earth, the heavens themselves, are all intellectual beings, which either accompany, go before Him, or proclaim His majesty.

Verse 3. A fire goeth before him] Literally, this and the following verse may refer to the electric fluid, or to manifestations of the Divine displeasure, in which, by means of ethereal fire, God consumed His enemies. But fire is generally represented as an accompaniment of the appearances of the Supreme Being. He appeared on Mount Sinai in the midst of fire, thunder, and lightnings. Exod. xix. 16, 18. Daniel, chap. vii. 9, 10, represents the Sovereign Judge as being on a throne which was a fiery flame, and the wheels of His chariot like burning fire; and a fiery stream issuing from it, and coming forth from before Him. St. Paul tells us, (2 Thesa. i. 8) that the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with His mighty angels, in flaming fire; and St. Peter, (2 Epist. iii. 7, 10, 11,) that when the Lord shall come to judgment, the heavens and the earth shall be destroyed by fire, the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, the elements melt with fervent heat, and the earth and its works be burnt up. Here then will appear,

"Our God is grandeur, and our world on fire."

Burneth up his enemies round about] The fire is His pioneer which destroys all the hindrances in His way, and makes Him a plain passage.

Verse 4. His lightnings enlightened the world] Though this be no more than a majestic description of the coming of the Lord to confound His enemies, and succour His followers, yet some spiritualize the passage, and say, the lightnings signify the apostles who enlightened the world by their heavenly doctrine.

The earth saw, and trembled.] The earth is represented as a sentient being. It saw the terrible majesty of God; and trembled through terror, fearing it should be destroyed on account of the wickedness of its inhabitants.

Verse 5. The hills melted like wax] The fire of God seized on, and liquefied them, so that they no longer opposed His march; and the mountains before Him became a plain.

The Lord of the whole earth.] יהוה אדוני kol ha-arets, The Director, Stay, and Support, of the whole earth. The universal Governor, whose jurisdiction is not confined to any one place; but who, having created all, governs all that He has made.

Verse 6. The heavens declare his righteousness] They also, in this poetic description, become intelligent beings, and proclaim the majesty and the mercy of the Most High. Metaphorically, they may be said to declare His glory: their magnitude, number, revolutions, order, influence, and harmony, proclaim the wondrous skill, matchless wisdom, and unlimited power of the Sovereign of the universe. See the notes on Psalm xix.

And all the people see his glory.] Whatsoever God has made proclaims His eternal power and Godhead:—and who, from a contemplation of the work of His hands, can be ignorant of His being and providence?

Verse 7. Confounded be all they] Rather, They shall be confounded that boast themselves in idols. There is a remarkable play on the letters here, חמיתות ha-mith-images, that boast themselves of idols: " worship him, all ye gods.

8 Zion heard, and was glad; and the daughters of Judah rejoiced because of thy judgments, O Lord.

9 For thou, LORD, art high above all the earth: thou art exalted far above all gods.

10 Ye that love the LORD, hate evil: he preserveth the souls of his saints; he delivereth them out of the hand of the wicked.

11 Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart.

12 Rejoice in the LORD, ye righteous; and give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness.

PSALM XCVIII.

God is celebrated for His wonderful works, 1, 2. For the exact fulfilment of His gracious promises, 3. The manner in which He is to be praised, 4. The instrument of creation called to bear a part in this concert, 7, 8. The justice of His judgments, 9.

Analim, who move like mad men; referring to the violent gestures practised in idolatrous rites.

Of idols עֲבֹדָתָם be-elim, in vanities, empinesses; who "make much ado about nothing," and take a mad and painful pleasure in ridiculous and unprofitable ceremonies of religion.

Worship him] Who?—Jesus:—so says the Apostle, Heb. i. 6. Who will dare to dispute his authority?

All ye gods] 'Oi: εὐχαί: αγγε:λ:οι, his angels: so the Septuagint and the Apostle. Let all the angels of God worship him; and the words are most certainly applied to the Saviour of the world by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews; see the note there. The Chaldee says, All nations who worship idols shall adore him.

Verse 8. Zion heard, and was glad] All the land of Israel, long desolated, heard of the judgments which God had shown among the enemies of His people.

And the daughters of Judah] All the villages of the land, Zion as the mother, and all the villages of the country as her daughters, rejoice in the deliverance of God's people.

Verse 9. For thou, Lord, art high] Thou art infinitely exalted above men and angels.

Verse 10. Ye that love the Lord, hate evil] Because it is inconsistent with His love to you, as well as your love to Him.

He preserveth the souls of his saints] The saints צדיק:י חַסִּידָיו, his merciful people—their souls, lives, are precious in His sight. He preserves them; keeps them from every evil, and every enemy.

Out of the hand of the wicked.] From his power and influence.

Verse 11. Light is sown for the righteous] The Divine light in the soul of man is a seed which takes root, and springs up and increases, thirty, sixty, and one hundred fold. Gladness is also a seed: it is sown; and, if carefully improved and cultivated, will also multiply itself into thousands. Every grace of God is a seed, which He intends should produce a thousand fold in the hearts of genuine believers. It is not so much more of the same grace we want from God, as the cultivation of what we have received. God will not give more, unless we improve what we have got. Remember the parable of the talents. Let the light and gladness be faithfully cultivated; and they will multiply themselves till the whole body shall be full of light, and the whole soul full of happiness. But it is the righteous only for whom the light is sown; and the upright in heart alone for whom the gladness is sown.

The words may also signify, that however distressed, or persecuted, the righteous and the upright may be, it shall not be always so. As surely as the grain that is sown in the earth shall vegetate and bring forth its proper fruit in its season; so surely shall light, prosperity, and gladness, comfort and peace, be communicated to them. They also will spring up in due time.

Verse 12. Rejoice in the Lord, ye righteous] It is your privilege to be happy. Exult in Him through whom ye have received the atonement. Rejoice; but let it be in the Lord. All other joy is the mirth of fools, which is as the crackling of thorns under a pot: it is a luminous blaze for a moment, and leaves nothing but smoke and ashes behind.

At the remembrance of his holiness.] But why should you give thanks at the remembrance that God is holy? Because he has said, Be ye holy; for I am holy: and in holiness alone, true happiness is to be found. As he, therefore, who hath called you is holy; so be ye holy in all manner of conversation. False Christians hate the doctrine of Christian holiness: they are willing to be holy in Another, but not holy in themselves. There is too much cross-bearing and self-denial in the doctrine of holiness for them. A perfect heart they neither expect nor wish.

The Analysis considers the whole Psalm as relating to Jesus Christ, and the last judgment: so it was understood by several of the ancient Fathers. The reader may take it in either sense.

ANALYSIS OF THE NINETY-SEVENTH PSALM.

There are three parts in this Psalm, if we interpret it as referring to our blessed Lord:—

I. A prophetic description of His power and glory, especially at the day of judgment, ver. 1—6.

II. A manifest difference between the states of idolaters and the people of God, ver. 7—9.

III. An exhortation to love God and hate evil; and the reason on which it is founded,—a two-fold gracious reward, ver. 10—12.

I. The Psalmist begins with a solemn acclamation, The Lord reigneth. He is the supreme King; and He will use His mighty power both now and in the day of judgment. 1. For the good of His subjects. 2. For the confusion of His enemies.

1. For clouds and darkness are round about him, as when He gave the law on Mount Sinai. 2. Righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne; and therefore a just sentence shall come forth against His enemies, and in behalf of His friends, ver. 2—5. 3. His appearance shall be very glorious; for the heavens shall declare it, and all people shall see it, ver. 6.

II. The difference between the state of idolaters and the people of God.

1. Confusion and a curse shall fall upon the former. They shall be confounded, &c. ver. 7.

2. He exhorts all in power, men, magistrates, &c. and all who excel in strength, angels, to worship Him. Worship him, all ye gods, ver. 7. All confidence should be reposed in Him.

3. God's people rejoice when they find that it is their own Lord who is coming to judgment. Zion heard, and was glad; the daughters of Judah rejoiced, ver. 8.

4. And they rejoiced chiefly in knowing that their God was high above all the earth, and exalted far above all gods, ver. 9.

III. The expostulation, which gives us the character by which God's people may be known. He exhorts them to love God, and to hate evil.

Hence we see that the true followers of God,—1. Love Him. 2. Hate evil, as the infallible consequence of loving Him, ver. 10.

He shews them the gracious reward which God promises.

1. He preserveth the souls of his saints.—Often, their lives in an especial manner, are preserved by Him;—but, always their souls. The accuser of the brethren shall not hurt them.

2. He delivereth them out of the hands of the wicked. Sometimes out of their hand, that they fall not into it; and sometimes out of their hand, when they are in it. This is their first reward, ver. 10.

A second reward is in the next verse:—That in their miseries they shall be filled with spiritual happiness, when perhaps they little expect it. Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart, ver. 11.

1. By light we may understand a peculiar manifestation of God's favour, comfort, peace and joy, or deliverance from their spiritual and temporal oppressors.

2. This is sown as a seed. For the light of comfort, of peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Spirit, though it may be clouded in times of heaviness through manifold temptations, yet it will spring forth again, like the corn, which, after it is sown, lies hidden for some time under the clods of the earth; yet all that time it is vegetating and coming forth to public view. And deliverance from their enemies, though slow, will come; though the rod of the wicked come into the lot of the just, it shall not rest there.

3. From these premises the Psalmist draws this conclusion: Since God is preparing those blessings for you that fear and love Him; then, 1. Rejoice in the Lord—glory in Him as the Fountain of your blessedness. 2. Give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness. Remember the good He has done you, the grace He has bestowed on you, and the holiness you may yet receive from Him:—and rejoice in the encouragement, and give thanks. Rejoice that ye may be holy, for in that your happiness consists.

things: ' his right hand and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory.

2 ' The Lord hath made known his salvation; ' his righteousness hath he ' openly shewed in the sight of the heathen.

3 He hath ' remembered his mercy and his truth toward the house of Israel: ' all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God.

4 ' Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all the earth: make a loud noise, and rejoice and sing praise.

5 Sing unto the Lord with the harp; with the harp, and the voice of a psalm.

6 ' With trumpets, and sound of cornet, make a joyful noise before the Lord the King.

7 ' Let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.

8 Let the floods ' clap their hands: let the hills be joyful together

9 Before the Lord; ' for he cometh to judge the earth: with righteousness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity.

NOTES ON PSALM XCVIII.

In the Hebrew this is simply termed מִזְמוֹר mizmor, a Psalm. In the Chaldee, A prophetic Psalm. In the Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, A Psalm of David. In the Syriac it is attributed to David, and stated to be composed concerning the "Restoration of the Israelites from Egypt: but it is to be understood spiritually of the advent of the Messiah, and the vocation of the Gentiles to the Christian faith."

The Psalm in its subject is very like the ninety-sixth. It was probably written to celebrate the deliverance from the Babylonish captivity; but is to be understood prophetically of the redemption of the world by Jesus Christ.

Verse 1. A new song] A song of excellence. Give him the highest praise. See on Psa. xcvi. 1.

Hath done marvellous things] נִפְלְאוֹת niphlaoth, "miracles;" the same word as in Psa. xcvi. 3, where we translate it wonders.

His holy arm]—His Almighty power,— Hath gotten him the victory.] הוֹשִׁיבָה לִּי hoshi'vha lo, "Hath made salvation to himself."

Verse 2. Made known his salvation] He has delivered His people in such a way as to shew that it was supernatural, and that their confidence in the unseen God was not in vain.

Verse 3. He hath remembered his mercy] His gracious promises to their forefathers.

And his truth] Faithfully accomplishing what he had promised. All this was fulfilled under the Gospel.

Verse 5. With—the voice of a psalm.] I think זמרה zimrah, which we translate psalm, means either a musical instrument, or a species of ode modulated by different voices.

Verse 6. With trumpets] חַצְצֵרֹת chatsatseroth. Some kind of tubular instruments, of the form and management of which we know nothing.

And sound of cornet] שׁוֹפָר shopher, the word commonly used for what we call trumpet.

Verse 7. Let the sea roar] These are either fine poetic images; or,—if we take them as referring to the promulgation of the Gospel,—by the sea, all maritime countries and commercial nations may be intended.

Verse 8. Let the floods clap their hands] נַהֲרוֹת naharoth, properly the rivers—possibly meaning immense continents, where only large rivers are found; thus including inland people, as well as maritime nations, and those on the sea-coasts generally; as in those early times little more than the coasts of the sea were known. The Gospel shall be preached to the most secluded nations of the world.

Let the hills be joyful] All the inhabitants of rocky and mountainous countries.

Verse 9. For he cometh to judge the earth] He comes to make known His salvation, and shew His merciful designs to all the children of men.

With righteousness shall he judge the world] His word shall not be confined,—all shall know Him, from the least to the greatest: He shall shew that He is loving to every man, and hateth nothing that he hath made. See the notes on Psa. xcvi.—There is a very great similarity between this Psalm and the Song or Magnificat of the Blessed Virgin. I shall note some of the parallels, chiefly from Bishop Nicholson.

This Psalm is an evident prophecy of Christ's coming to save the world; and what is here foretold by David is, in the Blessed Virgin's song, chanted forth as being accomplished. David is the Voice, and Mary is the Echo.

- 1. David. O sing unto the Lord a new song.—(The Voice.)
- Mary. My soul doth magnify the Lord.—(The Echo.)
- 2. David. He hath done marvellous things.—(The Voice.)
- Mary. He that is mighty hath done great things.—(The Echo.)
- 3. David. With his own right hand and holy arm hath he gotten himself the victory.—(The Voice.)
- Mary. He hath shewed strength with his arm, and scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts.—(The Echo.)
- 4. David. The Lord hath made known his salvation; his righteousness hath he openly shewed, &c.—(The Voice.)
- Mary. His mercy is on them that fear him, from generation to generation.—(The Echo.)
- 5. David. He hath remembered his mercy and his truth toward the house of Israel.—(The Voice.)
- Mary. He hath holpen his servant Israel in remembrance of his mercy.—(The Echo.)

These parallels are very striking; and it seems as if Mary had had this Psalm in her eye when she composed her song of triumph. And this is a further argument that the whole Psalm, whether it record the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, or the Jews from the Babylonish captivity; yet it is to be ultimately understood of the redemption of the world by Jesus Christ, and the proclamation of His Gospel through all the nations of the earth: and, taken, in this view, no language can be too strong, nor poetic imagery too high, to point out the unsearchable riches of Christ.

ANALYSIS OF THE NINETY-EIGHTH PSALM.

This Psalm has the two following parts:

I. An exhortation to sing to the Lord, and the reasons of it, ver. 1—3.

II. A new invitation to praise Him, and that it be universal, ver. 4—9.

I. He calls upon them to praise God:—1. Sing—a song or hymn, to the Lord—and to none other. A new song—a song of excellency.

For this exhortation and command he gives the reasons. His work was a work of power and holiness.

1. He hath done marvellous things. He has opened His greatness and goodness in the work of redemption. What marvels has not Christ done? 1. He was conceived by the Holy Ghost. 2. Born of a Virgin. 3. Healed all manner of diseases. 4. Fed thousands with a few loaves and fishes. 5. Raised the dead. 6. And what was more marvellous, died Himself. 7. Rose again by His own power. 8. Ascended to heaven. 9. Sent down the Holy Ghost. 10. And made His apostles and their testimony the instruments of enlightening, and ultimately converting the world.

2. His right hand and his holy arm hath got him the victory. 1. It was all his own work, whatever were the instruments; for without His energy they could do nothing. 2. It was His holy arm—no bloody sword, but a holy hand to do a holy work. 3. He got himself the victory—over sin, Satan, death, and hell.

3. This salvation was made known:—1. By Himself to the Jews. 2. By His apostles to all nations.

4. This salvation has been applied. 1. He hath shewed His righteousness,—His method of justifying sinners through His own blood, and sanctifying them by His own Spirit. 2. This He hath openly shewed, plainly revealing the whole in His Gospel. 3. He has done this in the sight of the heathen, calling them to be partakers of the same salvation promised to Abraham and his posterity, both Jews and Gentiles.

5. That which moved Him to do this,—His mercy and truth. 1. He hath remembered his mercy. This mercy was to the house of Israel, and through them to the Gentiles; for the Gentiles were the first in the promise and covenant. There was no Jew when the covenant was made with Abraham: it was made with him while he was yet in unbelief; consequently the Gentiles, the whole human race, were originally included in that covenant. The descendants of Jacob were made depositaries of it for a season; but they, not having benefited by it, were rejected, and the salvation of Christ was given to the Gentiles, for whom it was originally intended, and who have kept the faith, and are daily profiting by it. 2. It is called mercy; for it was the merest mercy that said, The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head. 3. He remembered this; it was never out of the Divine mind.—Jesus was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. 4. As this mercy was intended for every human soul; so it is here prophetically said,—All the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God. This Gospel has been preached, is now in the course of being preached, and shortly will be preached to every people under heaven.

II. A new invitation to praise God; and to do this in every possible way.

1. Make a joyful noise. Jump for joy because of this most glorious news.

PSALM XCIX.

The empire of God in the world and the church 1, 2. He ought to be praised, 3. Justice and judgment are His chief glory, 4. He should be worshipped as among His saints of old, whom He graciously answered and saved, 5-8. Exalt Him because He is holy, 9.

A. U. C. 250.
Danti 1. R. F.
anno m. d. c. c.

THE LORD reigneth; let the people tremble: ¹ he sitteth between the cherubims; let the earth ² be moved.

³ The LORD is great in Zion; and he is ⁴ high above all the people.

⁵ Let them praise ⁶ thy great and terrible name; for it is holy.

⁷ The king's strength also loveth judgment; thou dost establish equity, thou executest judgment and righteousness in Jacob.

² As all are interested in it, so let all do it. All the earth.

³ In all possible ways. With harp, psaltery, trumpet, cornet; with vocal, choral, and pneumatic music. But it is the joyful music, the heart music, which the Lord seeks.

⁴ Before the Lord. In his immediate presence. Let all be sincere, pure, and holy.—Remember the eye of the Lord is upon you: do not draw near with your lips, pipes, or stringed instruments, while your hearts are far from Him.

⁵ And to make the music full, as if the inanimate creation had ears and hands to give an applause at the relation, and feet to dance because of it; he says—Let the sea roar,—the floods clap their hands, and the hills be joyful together.

And for all this he gives a reason, with which he concludes. For he cometh to judge the earth; which may be referred to His first and second coming.

¹ If to the first, then the sense is,—Let all creatures rejoice because He comes to judge, that is, to enlighten, order, and govern the world. For this purpose He was incarnated, suffered, died, and rose again for the redemption of mankind; and has sent His holy Gospel to enlighten the world, and His Spirit to apply its truths to the hearts of men.

² If we consider this as referring to His last coming; then let all men rejoice, as He comes to destroy evil, to root out incorrigible sinners, and to make a new heaven and a new earth.

³ All this shall be done with that rectitude of judgment, that there shall be nothing crooked, oblique, or savouring of iniquity, in it:—For he shall judge the world and the people with equity.

NOTES ON PSALM XCIX.

The Hebrews and Chaldees have no title: all the Versions but the Chaldee attribute it to David. The Syriac says it concerns "the slaughter of the Midianites which Moses and the children of Israel had taken captive; and is a prophecy concerning the glory of the kingdom of Christ." But the mention of Samuel shews that it cannot be referred to the time of Moses. Calmet thinks it was sung at the dedication of the city, or of the second temple, after the return from the Babylonish captivity. Eight of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. join it to the preceding Psalm.

Verse 1. The Lord reigneth] See the Note on Psa. xcvi. 1.

Let the people tremble] He will establish His kingdom in spite of His enemies; let those who oppose Him tremble for the consequences.

He sitteth between the cherubim] This is in reference to the ark, at each end of which was a cherub of glory; and the shekinah, or symbol of the Divine presence, appeared on the lid of the ark, called also the mercy seat, between the cherubim. Sitting between the cherubim implies God's graciousness and mercy. While then, in His reign, He was terrible to sinners, He is on the throne of grace to all who fear, love, and obey Him. Though this symbol were not in the second temple; yet the Divine Being might very well be thus denominated, because it had become one of His titles, He having thus appeared under the tabernacle and first temple.

Verse 2. The Lord is great in Zion] It is among His own worshippers that He has manifested His power, and glory in an especial manner. There He is known, and there He is worthily magnified.

Verse 3. Let them praise thy great and terrible name] Let them confess Thee to be great and terrible: let them tremble before Thee.

For it is holy] הוא קדוש הוא. As this not only ends this verse but the fifth also, and in effect the ninth, it seems to be a species of chorus which was sung in a very solemn manner at the conclusion of each of these parts. His holiness, the immaculate purity of His nature, was the reason why He should be exalted, praised, and worshipped.

Verse 4. The king's strength] If this Psalm were written by David, he must mean by it that he was God's vicegerent, or deputy; and that, even as king, God was his strength, and the pattern according to which equity, judgment, and righteousness, should be executed in Jacob.

Verse 5. Worship at his footstool] Probably meaning the ark on which the Divine glory was manifested. Sometimes the earth is called God's footstool, (Matt. v. 35. Isa. lxvi. 1,) sometimes Jerusalem; sometimes the temple; (Lam. ii. 1,) sometimes the tabernacle, (Psa. xxxii. 7,) and sometimes the ark, (1 Chron. xxviii. 2.) The Israelites, when they worshipped, turned their faces toward the ark, because that was the place where was the symbol of the Divine presence.

For he is holy.] The burden chaunted by the chorus.

Verse 6. Moses and Aaron] As Moses and Aaron among the priests, and as Samuel among the prophets, worshipped God in humility, gratitude, and the spirit of obedience, and received the strongest tokens of the Divine favour; so worship ye the Lord, that He may bless, support, and save you. Moses was properly the priest of the Hebrews before Aaron and his family were appointed to that office.

Verse 7. He spake unto them in the cloudy pillar] That is, He directed all their operations, marchings, and encampments by this cloudy pillar. See Exod. xxxiii. 9.

They keep his testimonies] Do ye the same, and God will be your portion as He was theirs.

Verse 8. Thou—forgavest them] When the people had sinned, and wrath was about to descend on them, Moses and Aaron interceded for them, and they were not destroyed.

Tookst vengeance of their inventions.] God spared them: but shewed His displeasure at their misdoings. He chastised, but did not consume them. This is amply proved in the history of this people.

Verse 9. Worship at his holy hill] Worship Him publicly in the temple.

For the Lord our God is holy.] The words of the chorus; as in the third and fifth verses.

ANALYSIS OF THE NINETY-NINTH PSALM.

There are two parts in this Psalm:—

I. A description of the kingdom of God.

1. From the majesty and terror of it against His enemies, ver. 1-3.

2. From its equity, in the execution of judgment and justice, ver. 4.

3. From His patience and clemency in giving audience to His servants, ver. 6-8.

II. A demand of praise and honour of all that acknowledge Him for their King, begun at the third verse, repeated at the fifth, and continued in the last. The Psalm contains a prophecy of the kingdom of Christ and its glory.

I. 1. The terror, power, and majesty, of this kingdom. The Lord reigneth. 1. He bids defiance to His enemies. Let the people tremble. 2. He sitteth between the cherubim. He is always present with His people; they need not fear, though the earth be moved. 3. He is great in Zion. More potent and higher than all people. 4. His name is great and terrible. His enemies have every thing to fear; while His friends have every thing to hope.

2. The Psalmist describes this kingdom, from its justice and equity. 1. He loveth judgment. This is one of His perfections. 2. He establishes equity. Gives just and equal laws to all. 3. He executeth judgment in Jacob. None of His followers shall live without law—they are obedient children, living according to His will.—4. And

PSALM C.

All nations are exhorted to praise the Lord, 1, 2. To acknowledge Him to be the Sovereign Good and their Creator, and that they are His people, and the flock of His pasture; 3; to worship Him publicly, and be grateful for His mercies, 4. The reasons on which this is founded; His own goodness; His everlasting mercy, and His everlasting truth, 5.

therefore He requires them to exalt and adore Him. 5. They are to worship at his footstool;—all their approaches are to be made in the deepest reverence, with the truest self-abasement. 6. For he is holy; and He requires all His followers to be holy also.

3. He describes it from the mercy and clemency of the Ruler. 1. He shewed His mercy and kindness to Moses, Aaron, and Samuel, as intercessors for the people. They called upon God, for themselves and for the people; and he answered them. 1. See the intercession of Moses, Exod. xxxiii. 31; 2. Of Aaron, Numb. xvi. 46—48; 3. Of Samuel, 1 Sam. vii. 5, 9, 10. 4. He spake to Moses, Exod. xxxiii. 8, 9, 11; and to Aaron, Numb. xii. 5—8.

And now, he adds the reason why He heard them,— 1. They kept his testimonies. Those precepts that were common to all others.

2. And the ordinances that he gave them. As public persons, who were to rule in church and state.

And that it was a great mercy that the Lord heard them the prophet acknowledges by this apostrophe:—

1. Thou answeredst them, O Lord our God. Which the history shews.

2. Thou forgavest them;—that is, the people for whom they prayed: for in Hebrew the relative is often put without an antecedent.

3. Thou tookest vengeance of their inventions. The golden calf was broken to pieces, Exod. xxxii; and the false gods were put away, 1 Sam. vii. The people were not consumed, though their sin was, in a certain manner, visited upon them. See Numb. xiv. 23, 30, and xx. 12.

II. The Psalmist concludes with a demand of praise to this kind God.

1. Exalt the Lord. Shew that He is high, holy, just, good, and kind,

2. Worship at his holy hill. Attend His public worship; and shew a godly example in this way to all others. He who is indifferent about the public worship of God, is generally not less so in private devotion.

3. The reason for all this is,—The Lord our God is holy. He requires this worship because it is a chief means by which He communicates his holiness to His followers. Without this holiness there is no happiness here, and without it none shall ever see God. Get holiness, that you may get happiness here, and heaven hereafter.

NOTES ON PSALM C.

This Psalm is intitled, in the Hebrew, מִזְמוֹר לַיהוָה מִצְמוֹר לֵי-יְהוָה; not, A Psalm of praise, as we have it, but "A Psalm for confession, or for the confession offering," very properly translated by the Chaldee, קְרִינָא עַל קִרְבָּן שְׁבַחָא אֱלִי קְרִיבָא לְיְהוָה shebacha el kurban todeha, "Praise for the sacrifice (or offering) of confession." The Vulgate, Septuagint, and Ethiopic, have followed this sense. The Arabic attributes it to David. The Syriac has the following prefixed:—"Without a name. Concerning Joshua the son of Nun, when he had ended the war with the Ammonites: but in the new covenant it relates to the conversion of the Gentiles to the faith." It is likely that it was composed after the Captivity, as a form of thanksgiving to God for that great deliverance, as well as an inducement to the people to consecrate themselves to Him, and to be exact in the performance of the acts of public worship.

Verse 1. Make a joyful noise] חָרִיּוּ חָרִיּוּ hariu, exult, triumph, leap for joy.

All ye lands] Not only Jews, but Gentiles; for the Lord bestows his benefits on all with a liberal hand.

Verse 2. Serve the Lord with gladness] It is your privilege and duty to be happy in your religious worship. The religion of the true God is intended to remove human misery, and to make mankind happy. He whom the religion of Christ has not made happy, does not understand that religion, or does not make a proper use of it.

Verse 3. Know ye that the Lord he is God] Acknowledge, in every possible way, both in public and private, that Jehovah, the uncreated, self-existent, and eternal Being, is Elohim, the God who is in covenant with man, to instruct, redeem, love, and make him finally happy.

It is he that hath made us] He is our Creator, and has consequently the only right in and over us.

3 Know ye that the LORD he is God: * it is he that hath made us, and not we ourselves: * we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.

4 Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise: be thankful unto him, and bless his name.

5 For the LORD is good: his mercy is everlasting; and his truth endureth to all generations.

a Ps. 95. 7. Ezek. 34. 30, 31.—b Ps. 65. 12. & 116. 17, 18.—c Ps. 136. 1, &c. k Heb. to generation and generation. Ps. 59. 1.

And not we ourselves] אֲנִי וְלֹא אֲנַחְנוּ ve-lo anachnu. I can never think that this is the true reading, though found in the present Hebrew Text, in the Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Syriac. Was there ever a people on earth, however grossly heathenish, that did believe, or could believe, that they had made themselves! In twenty-six of Kennicot's and De Rossi's MSS. we have אֲנִי וְלֹא ve-lo anachnu, "and His we are;" וְ לֹא, the pronoun, being put for וְ לֹא, the negative particle. This is the reading of the Targum, or Chaldee paraphrase, אֲנִי וְלֹא אֲנַחְנוּ ve-deliah anachna, "and His we are;" and is the reading of the Text in the Complutensian Polyglot, of both the Pealters which were printed in 1477, and is the keri, or marginal reading, in most masoretic bibles. Every person must see, from the nature of the subject, that it is the genuine reading. The position is founded on the maxim that what a man invents, constructs out of his own materials, without assistance in genius, materials, or execution from any other person, is HIS OWN; and to it, its use and produce, he has the only right. God made us;—therefore we are HIS:—we are His people, and should acknowledge Him for our God;—we are the sheep of His pasture, and should devote the lives to Him constantly which He continually supports.

Verse 4. Enter into his gates with thanksgiving] Publicly worship God; and when ye come to the house of prayer, be thankful that you have such a privilege; and when you enter his courts, praise Him for the permission. The word בְּרַחֲמֵי be-rahmei, which we render with thanksgiving, is properly with the confession offering, or sacrifice. See on the title.

Bless his name.] Bless Jehovah, that He is your Elohim, see ver. 3. In our liturgic service we say,—speak good of his name: we cannot do otherwise; we have nothing but good to speak of our God.

Verse 5. For the LORD is good] Goodness, the perfect eternal opposition to all badness and evil, is essential to God. Mercy and compassion are modifications of His goodness; and as His nature is eternal, so His mercy, springing from His goodness, must be everlasting. And as רַחֲמִים is an essential characteristic of an infinitely intelligent and perfect nature; therefore God's truth must endure from generation to generation. Whatsoever He has promised must be fulfilled, through all the successive generations of men, as long as sun and moon shall last.

As this is a very important Psalm, and has long made a part of our public worship, I shall lay it before the reader in the oldest vernacular versions I have hitherto met with, the Anglo-Saxon, and the Anglo-Scottish, with a literal interlineary translation of the former.

The Anglo-Saxon Hundredth Psalm.

The reader will see that, in order to make this translation as literal as possible, I have preserved some old English words, which we had from the Anglo-Saxon, and which have nearly become obsolete: e. g. Infare, to go

PSALM CI.

I might have noticed some various readings in Anglo-Saxon MSS. a. g. ver. 1, for byrmed idrymeth, "rhyme ye," pinrumb winsumiath, "be winsom."—"be joyful." And verse 5, for pinrum winsom, "cheerful," rpece, swete, "sweet."

Anglo-Scottish Version of the Hundredth Psalm.

- 1. Joyes to God at the erth; serves to Lord in gladnes.
2. Enters in his sight with joying.
3. Writes for Lorde he is God; he made us and nogt we;
4. Folke of hym, and scep of his pasture: enters the gates of him in schrit; bys Halls in prynces; scribes to him.
5. Loves his name, for sothe is Lorde; withhout end in his mercy; and in generation and generation the sothfastnes of hym.

Thus our forefathers said and sung in heart and mouth; and with their tongues made confession to salvation. There are but few words here which require explanation, ver. 3. Writes, wot ye, know ye. Ver. 4. Schrit, confession; scribes, confess ye. Ver. 5. Loves, praise ye, laud ye. Sothfastness, as above, steadfastness in the truth.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRETH PSALM.

There are two parts in this Psalm:—

I. An exhortation to praise God, and the manner in which it is to be done, ver. 1—4.

II. The reasons on which this is founded, ver. 3—5.

I. In his exhortation to praise God it is required,

- 1. That the praise be universal—All ye lands.
2. That it be hearty. Make a joyful noise. Let the soul be cheerful in the work.
3. That it be not partial nor restrained—Make a joyful noise—serve—be glad—sing—be thankful—give praise—bless his name. The various expressions shew the completeness of this blessed work.
4. That it be sincere—done in his presence.
5. That it be an intelligent service. Know ye.
6. That it be frequent and public. Enter his gates, go into his courts.
7. That gratitude shall be a part of it. With thanksgiving.

II. The reasons on which this is grounded:—they are,

- 1. Drawn from the nature of God. Know ye that Jehovah is Elohim, the true God; therefore, alone worthy to be worshipped.
2. Drawn from the benefits bestowed on us. 1. He has made us—capable of knowing Him, and being eternally happy with him. 2. He has called upon us by His grace to be his people and the sheep of his pasture. He both governs and feeds us.

And that we may be the more cheerful in this work, he puts us in mind of the Divine attributes engaged in our redemption, goodness, mercy, and truth.

- 1. He is good. This is His very nature.
2. He is merciful. This flows from His goodness.
3. He is true—keeping covenant for ever with them that fear Him; and fulfilling all His promises to the believing and obedient.

And that we may have the more confidence,

- 1. His mercy is everlasting. It continues through all the changes and chances of this life to them who trust in Him; and extends through all the generations of men.
2. His truth is like his mercy, it is pledged to fulfil His promises. God is not man that he should lie. He has promised, and will save to the uttermost all who come to Him through Christ Jesus. Be therefore thankful to him, and speak good of his name.

NOTES ON PSALM CI.

The Hebrew and all the Versions attribute this Psalm to David. It shews us the resolutions he formed when he 3 I will set no wicked thing before mine eyes: I hate the work of men that turn aside; it shall not cleave to me.

4 A froward heart shall depart from me: I will not know a wicked person.

5 Whoso privily slandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off: him that hath a high look and a proud heart will not I suffer.

6 Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with me: he that walketh in a perfect way, he shall serve me.

f. Josh. 23. 6. 1 Sam. 12. 20, 21. Ps. 20. 4. & 125. 5.—g. Matt. 7. 33. 2 Tim. 2. 19. h. Ps. 13. 37. Prov. 6. 17.—i. Or, perfect in the way. Ps. 119. 1.

came to the throne; and it is a perfect model according to which a wise prince should regulate his conduct and his government.

Verse 1. I will sing of mercy and judgment] David might say, Adverse and prosperous providences have been of the utmost use to my soul; therefore, I will thank God for both. Or, as he was probably now called to the government of all the tribes, he might make a resolution that he would shew much cheer, incessant benevolence, to the upright; and much mishpat, the execution of judgment to the wicked; and would make the conduct of God the model of his own.

Verse 2. I will behave myself wisely] God's law prescribes a perfect way in life: in this perfect way I have professed to walk, and I must act wisely in order to walk in it.

When wilt thou come unto me?] I can neither walk in this way, nor grow wise unto salvation, unless thou come unto me by Thy grace and Spirit; for without Thee I can do nothing.

I will walk within my house] It is easier for most men to walk with a perfect heart in the church, or even in the world, than in their own families. How many are as meek as lambs among others, when at home they are wasps or tigers! The man who, in the midst of family provocations, maintains a Christian character, being meek, gentle, and long-suffering to his wife, his children, and his servants, has got a perfect heart, and adorns the doctrine of God his Saviour in all things.

The original is very emphatic: אהלע ethalec, "I will set myself to walk,"—I will make it a determined point thus to walk. I will bear and forbear with children, servants, &c., not speaking rashly, nor giving way to bad tempers. Through various motives a man will behave with propriety and decorum among others; but none of these motives operate in his own house, where he feels himself master, and consequently under no restraint.

Verse 3. I will set no wicked thing before mine eyes] I will undertake no unjust wars;—will enter into no sinful alliances;—will not oppress my subjects by excessive taxation, to support extravagance in my court. I will not look favourably on things or words of Bethel. What is good for nothing, or evil in its operation;—what is wicked in its principle; and what would lead me away from righteousness and truth, I will never set before my eyes.

Them that turn aside] I shall particularly abominate the conduct of those who apostatize from the true religion, and those who deny its Divine authority, and who live without having their conduct governed by its influence, shall never be put in a place of political trust or confidence by me.

Verse 4. A froward heart] Rash and headstrong men shall not be employed by me.

I will not know a wicked person.] I will give no countenance to sinners of any kind; and whatever is evil will be an object of my abhorrence.

Verse 5. Whoso privily slandereth his neighbour] All flatterers and time-servers, and those who by insinuations and false accusations endeavour to supplant the upright, that they may obtain their offices for themselves or their dependants, will I consider as enemies to the state, abominate, and expel from my court.

The Chaldee gives a remarkable meaning to the Hebrew, מלשון תלמיש melashoni basetur reehu, which we translate, Whoso privily slandereth his neighbour, and which it renders thus.—לשון תלמיש על חבירו de mishlaty lishan telitai el chabreiah,—"He who speaks with the triple tongue against his neighbour." That is, the tongue by which he slays three persons, viz. 1. The man whom he slanders; 2. Him to whom he communicates the slander; and 3. Himself, the slanderer. Every slanderer has the triple tongue, and by every slander inflicts those three deadly wounds. Such a person deserves to be cut off. On this subject St. Jerom speaks nearly in the same way. Ille qui detrahit, et se, et illum qui audit, demergit. "He who slanders ruins both himself and him who hears him;"—he might have added, and him who is slandered, for this is often the case; and the innocent are ruined by detraction.

7 He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within my house: he that telleth lies, shall not tarry in my sight.

8 I will early destroy all the wicked of the land; that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of the Lord.

A high look and a proud heart] One who is seeking preferment; who sticks at nothing to gain it; and one who behaves himself haughtily and insolently in his office.

Will not I suffer.] לֹא אֶשְׁכַּח לֹא אֶשְׁכַּח, I cannot away with. These persons especially will I drive from my presence, and from all state employments.

Verse 6. Mine eyes] My approbation. Upon the faithful] The humble upright followers of God.

That they may dwell with me] Be my confidants and privy counsellors. No irreligious or wicked man, whatever his abilities may be, shall be countenanced or supported by me. I will purify my court from the base, the irreligious, the avaricious, the venal, the profligate, and the wicked.

He that walketh in a perfect way] He that is truly religious.

He shall serve me] Shall be my prime minister, and the chief officer in my army, and over my finances.

Verse 7. He that worketh deceit—that telleth lies] I will expel from my court all sycophants and flatterers. Tiberius encouraged flatterers; Titus burned some, banished several others, and sold many for slaves.

Verse 8. I will early destroy] I will take the first opportunity of destroying all the wicked of the land. I will purify my court, purge Jerusalem, and cleanse the whole land, of every abomination and abominable person; so that the city of my God, where holiness alone should dwell, shall indeed become the Holy City; that the state may be made prosperous, and the people happy. Such an administration must have been a good one, where such pious caution was used in choosing all the officers of the state.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FIRST PSALM.

There are two parts of this Psalm:—

I. The sum, with the dedication of it, ver. 1.

II. The full explanation of mercy and judgment, and how practised;—

1. Towards himself, ver. 2-5.

2. Towards ungodly men, ver. 4, 5, 7, 8.

3. Towards all good men, ver. 6.

I. The sum of the Psalm, mercy and judgment, the two great virtues of a king.

1. Mercy in countenancing, giving audience, judging, and rewarding, the good.

2. Judgment in discountenancing, being a terror to, and punishing, the evil-doers.

II. He begins with his own reformation and that of his house, that he may set a godly example to his kingdom.

1. I will behave myself wisely. Most act foolishly; I shall be guided by Divine wisdom.

2. I am in a perfect way. I have professed to believe in the God of Israel, and I must walk suitably to this profession.

3. When wilt thou come unto me? I am sincere in my resolves; but without Thee, I can do nothing. Stand by me, and I will walk uprightly.

In his own house he resolves, I will walk within my house with a perfect heart.

1. I will walk. It shall be my constant employment.

2. I will walk in my house. I will see that my family fear God.

3. I will walk with a perfect heart. I shall do nothing for show—all shall be sincere and pious.

In order to walk in this perfect way, he promises,—

1. I will set no wicked thing before my eyes. Evil desires enter more frequently into the soul by the eye than by any of the other senses.

2. I hate the work of them that turn aside. He that would leave sin must hate and abhor it: he that leaves God is an object of abhorrence.

2 Hide not thy face from me in the day when I am in trouble; incline thine ear unto me: in the day when I call answer me speedily.

3 For my days are consumed like smoke, and my bones are burned as a hearth.

4 My heart is smitten, and withereth like grass; so that I forget to eat my bread.

5 By reason of the voice of my groaning my bones cleave to my skin.

6 I am like a pelican of the wilderness: I am like an owl of the desert.

7 I watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the house top.

8 Mine enemies reproach me all the day: and they that are mad against me are sworn against me.

3. It shall not cleave to me. It will cleave to him who cleaves to it. He who does not hate it, will cleave to it.

He shews what he will be towards the ungodly.

1. A froward heart shall depart from me. The headstrong, stubborn, and refractory.

2. I will not know the wicked. I shall not only not approve of such; but I will cultivate no acquaintance with them.

These wicked persons he particularizes. They are,—

1. Slanderers. Him that slandereth his neighbour I will cut off.

2. The ambitious. Him that hath a high look,—who wants influence and honour.

3. The proud. The haughty, who thinks all born to be his vassals.

How he will treat the godly.

1. His eye shall be upon the faithful. Of them he will take especial care; he shall dwell with me.

2. The truly religious, he that walks in a perfect way, shall be employed by himself. He shall serve me.

He further states what he will do in reference to the ungodly.

1. No fraudulent person shall dwell in his house. He that worketh deceit, &c.

2. Liars shall be banished out of his sight.

In this work he tells us how he would proceed.

1. I will early destroy. I will make despatch, that the land be not polluted.

2. The end in reference to the church. I will cut off the wicked from the city of the Lord. The city, the seat of government, the place of God's altars, must be kept pure.

There must be a thorough, a radical reform. No corruption or abuse, either in things political, domestic, or religious, shall be tolerated. All must be holy, as He who has called us is holy. This is a reformation according to God's word; not according to the caprice of the multitude.

NOTES ON PSALM CII.

The Hebrew, and nearly all the Versions, give the following title to this Psalm: A prayer of the afflicted, when he is overwhelmed, and pours out his sighing before the Lord. There seems to be little doubt that this is the prayer of the captives in Babylon, when, towards the end of the Captivity, they were almost worn out with oppression, cruelty, and distress. The Psalm has been attributed to Daniel, to Jeremiah, to Nehemiah, or to some of the other prophets, who flourished during the time of the Captivity. The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews has applied the twenty-fifth, twenty-sixth, and twenty-seventh verses to our Lord, and the perpetuity of His kingdom.

Verse 1. Hear my prayer] The chief parts of the Psalm answer well to the title: it is the language of the deepest distress, and well directed to Him from whom alone help can come.

Verse 3. My days are consumed like smoke] He represents himself, for the Psalmist speaks in the name of the people, under the notion of a pile of combustible matter, placed upon a fire, which soon consumes it; part flying away in smoke, and the residue lying on the hearth in the form of charred coal and ashes. The Chaldeans were the fire, and the captive Jews the fuel, thus converted into smoke and ashes.

Verse 4. My heart is smitten and withered like grass] The metaphor here is taken from grass cut down in the meadow. It is first smitten with the scythe, and then withered by the sun. Thus the Jews were smitten with the judgments of God; and they are now withered under the fire of the Chaldeans.

Verse 6. I am like a pelican of the wilderness] It may be the pelican or the bittern. The original, מִן כְּאֵת, is mentioned Lev. xi. 18, and is there described.—See the note.

9 For I have eaten ashes like bread, and mingled my drink with weeping.

10 Because of thine indignation and thy wrath: for thou hast lifted me up, and cast me down.

11 My days are like a shadow that declineth; and I am withered like grass.

12 But thou, O LORD, shalt endure for ever; and thy remembrance unto all generations.

13 Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion: for the time to favour her, yea, the time is come.

14 For thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favour the dust thereof.

15 So the heathen shall fear the name of the LORD, and all the kings of the earth thy glory.

16 When the LORD shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory.

17 He will regard the prayer of the destitute, and not despise their prayer.

18 This shall be written for the generation to come: and the people which shall be created shall praise the LORD.

19 For he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the LORD behold the earth;

20 To hear the groaning of the prisoner; to loose those that are appointed to death;

21 To declare the name of the LORD in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem;

22 When the people are gathered together, and the kingdoms, to serve the LORD.

23 He weakened my strength in the way: he shortened my days.

24 I said, O my God, take me not away in the midst of my days: thy years are throughout all generations.

25 Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth: and the heavens are the work of thy hands.

Owl of the desert] ovp kos, some species of owl; probably the night raven. See the notes referred to above.

Verse 7. As a sparrow alone] ovp tsippor, seems to be often used for any small bird, such as the swallow, sparrow, or the like. Bochart supposes the screech owl is intended.

Verse 8. They that are mad against me are sworn against me.] The Chaldeans are determined to destroy us; and they have bound themselves by oath to do it. See a similar case related Acts xxiii. 12—14, where a number of Jews had bound themselves, by an oath, not to eat nor drink till they had slain Paul.

Verse 9. I have eaten ashes like bread] Fearful of what they might do, we all humbled ourselves before Thee, and sought Thy protection; well knowing that, unless we were supernaturally assisted, we must all perish; our enemies having sworn our destruction.

Verse 10. For thou hast lifted me up, and cast me down.] Thou hast lifted me on high, that Thou mightest dash me down with greater force. We were exalted in Thy favour beyond any people, and now Thou hast made us the lowest and most abject of the children of men.

Verse 11. My days are like a shadow that declineth] Or rather, my days decline like the shadow. I have passed my meridian, and the sun of my prosperity is about to set for ever. There may be here an allusion to the declination of the sun towards the south, which, by shortening their days, would greatly lengthen their nights. Similar to the exclamation of a contemporary prophet, Jer. viii. 20, The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved. There is now scarcely any human hope of our deliverance.

Verse 12. But thou, O LORD, shalt endure for ever] Our life is as a shadow; we can scarcely be called beings when compared with Thee, for Thou art eternal. Have mercy upon us, creatures of a day, and Thy kindness shall be a memorial in all our generations.

Verse 13. Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion] While he is humbled at the footstool of mercy, and earnestly praying for mercy, an answer of peace is given: he is assured, not only that they shall be delivered, but that the time of deliverance is at hand. The set time, the seventy years predicted by Jeremiah, was ended; and God gave him to see that he was ever mindful of His promises.

Verse 14. Thy servants take pleasure in her stones] Though Jerusalem was at this time in a heap of ruins, yet even her rubbish was sacred in the eyes of the pious; for this had been the city of the great King.

Verse 15. So the heathen shall fear thee] It is granted, that after the edict of Cyrus to restore and rebuild Jerusalem, which was about four hundred and ninety years before Christ, the name of the true God was more generally known among the heathen: and the translating the Sacred Writings into Greek, by the command of Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, about two hundred and eighty-five years before the Christian era, spread a measure of the light of God in the Gentile world which they had not before seen. Add to this, the dispersion of the Jews into different parts of the Roman empire, after Judea became a Roman province, which took place about sixty years before the advent of our Lord; and we may consider these as so many preparatory steps to the conversion of the heathen by the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. And to this last general illumination of the Gentile world the Psalmist must allude here, when he speaks of the heathen fearing God's name, and all the kings of the earth his glory.

Verse 16. When the Lord shall build up Zion] It is such a difficult thing, so wholly improbable, so far out of the reach of human power, that when God does it, He must manifest His power and glory in a most extraordinary manner.

Verse 17. The prayer of the destitute] ha-ardr, of him who is laid in utter ruin, who is entirely wasted.

Verse 19. The people which shall be created] "The Gentiles who shall be brought to the knowledge of salvation by Christ," as the Syriac states in its inscription to this Psalm: how often the conversion of the soul to God is represented as a new creation, no reader of the New Testament need be told. See Eph. ii. 10, iv. 24, 2 Cor. v. 17, Gal. vi. 15. Even the publication of the Gospel, and its influence among men, is represented under the notion of creating a new heaven and a new earth, Isa. lxxv. 17, 18.

Verse 19. For he hath looked down] This, with the three following verses, seem to me to contain a glorious prophecy of the incarnation of Christ, and the gathering in the Jews and the Gentiles to Him. The Lord looks down from heaven, and sees the whole earth groaning and trailing in pain; His eye affects His heart, and He purposes their salvation.

Verse 20. To hear the groaning] By sin all the inhabitants of the earth are miserable;—they have broken the Divine laws, are under the arrest of judgment, and all cast into prison. They have been tried, found guilty, and appointed to die; they groan under their chains, are alarmed at the prospect of death, and implore mercy.

Verse 21. To declare the name of the Lord] To publish that Messenger of the covenant, in whom the name of the Lord is; that Messiah, in whom the fullness of the Godhead dwelt; and to commence at Jerusalem, that the first offers of mercy might be made to the Jews, from whom the word of reconciliation was to go out to all the ends of the earth.

Verse 22. When the people are gathered together] When all the Gentiles are enlightened, and the kings of the earth brought to pay homage to the King of kings.

Verse 23. He weakened my strength in the way] We are brought so low in our captivity by oppression, every species of hard usage, and by death, that there is now no hope of our restoration by any efforts of our own.

Verse 24. I said, O my God] This and the following verses seem to be the form of prayer which the captives used previously to their deliverance.

Thy years are throughout all generations.] This was a frequent argument used to induce God to hear prayer. We are frail and perishing; Thou art everlasting:—deliver us, and we will glorify Thee.

Verse 25. Of old hast thou laid the foundation] None taught of God ever imagined the world to have been eternal. Of old, le-panim, before there were any faces or appearances, Thou didst lay the foundations of the earth. It was created by Thee; it did not grow by accretion, or aggregation from, a pre-existent nucleus. There was nothing; and Thou didst produce being, substance, or matter. Out of that created matter Thou didst make the earth and the heavens.

26 ' They shall perish, but ' thou shalt ' endure: yea, all of them shall old like a garment; as a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed.

27 But ' thou art the same, and thy years shall have no end.

28 ' The children of thy servants shall continue, and their seed shall be established before thee.

q Lmlah 34. 4. & 51. 6. & 65. 17. & 65. 22. Romans 8. 20. 2 Peter 3. 7, 10, 11, 12. r Ver. 12.

Verse 26. They shall perish] Nothing can be eternal à parte ante, or à parte post, but Thyself. Even that which Thou hast created, because not necessarily eternal, must be perishable; necessary duration belongs to God only: and it is by His will and energy alone that universal nature is preserved in existence, and preserved from running into speedy disorder, decay, and ruin.

Yea, all of them shall wax old] Every thing must deteriorate, unless preserved by Thy renewing and invigorating energy. Even the heavens and the earth are subject to this law; for that which is not, from the infinite perfection of its own nature, eternal, must be perishable; therefore, the heavens and the earth must necessarily come to an end. They contain the seeds of their own dissolution. It is true that, in sublunary things, the vicissitudes of seasons is a sort of check to the principle of dissolution: but it only partially corrects this tendency. Even the productions of the earth wear out, or deteriorate. Plant the same seed or grain for several years consecutively; and it degenerates so as at last not to be worth the labour of tillage, however expensively the soil may be manured in which it is planted. I may instance in wheat, and in the potato, the two grand supporters of life, in European countries. All other seeds and plants, as far as they have fallen under my observation, are subject to the same law.

Verse 27. But thou art the same] הוּא הוּא וְעַלְמָא עַלְמָא, but thou art He; that is, The ETERNAL: and consequently, He who only has immortality.

Thy years shall have no end.] יָמַי לֹא יִגְמָמוּ, "they shall not be completed." Every thing has its revolution:—its conception, growth, perfection, decay, dissolution, and death or corruption. It may be said that regeneration restores all these substances; and so it does in a measure, but not without deterioration. The breed of animals, as well as vegetables, wears out; but God's eternal round has no completion. I repeat it,—what is necessarily eternal is unchangeable and imperishable:—all created beings are perishable and mutable, because not eternal. God alone is eternal,—therefore God alone is imperishable and immutable.

Verse 28. The children of thy servants shall continue] Thy church shall be permanent, because founded on Thee; it shall live throughout all the revolutions of time. And as Thy followers are made partakers of the Divine nature, they shall live in union with God in the other world, deriving eternal duration from the inexhaustible Fountain of being. Nothing can be permanent but by God's supporting and renewing influence.

ANALYSIS OF THE ONE HUNDRED AND SECOND PSALM.

There are two general parts in this Psalm:— I. A description of the calamities of the church, under the person of an afflicted man, ver. 1—11.

II. The consolation afforded in these calamities, and the ground of it, ver. 12—28.

I. The description, &c. is formed into a prayer, proposed in the two first verses,—

- 1. Hear my prayer.
- 2. Hide not thy face.

In this prayer he complains, and shews his wretched state by various metaphors or figures.

- 1. A consumption of strength. My days are consumed.
- 2. From continual weeping. My bones cleave to my skin.
- 3. From his solitude. Like a pelican in the wilderness.
- 4. From his continual watching. I watch, and am like a sparrow, &c.

5. From the reproach of his enemies. Mine enemies reproach me.

6. From his sadness. I have eaten ashes like bread.

All these increased, from a sense of God's displeasure.

- 1. Because of thine indignation.
- 2. Because of his sufferings. Thou hast lifted me up, and hast cast me down.

3. And the effect produced. My days are as a shadow.

II. He comforts himself in the promises of God,—

PSALM CIII.

God is praised for His benefits to His people, 1, 2. He forgives their iniquities, and heals their diseases, 3; redeems their lives, crowns them with loving-kindness, 4; satisfies them with good things, renews their youth, 5. He helps the oppressed, makes His ways known, is merciful and gracious, and keeps not His anger for ever, 6—8. His forbearance, and pardoning mercy, 10—12. He is a tender and considerate Father, 13, 14. The frail state of man, 15, 16. God's everlasting mercy, and universal dominion, 17—18. All His angels, His hosts, and His works, are invited to praise him, 20—24.

A Psalm of David.

BLESS the LORD, O my soul: and all that is within me, bless his holy name.

1 Heb. stand.— Mal. 3. 6. Heb. 13. 8. Jam. 1. 17.—a Ps. 68. 96.—a Ver. 22. Ps. 104. 1. & 124. 1.

1. I am withered like grass: but thou shalt endure for ever.

2. I shall soon be forgotten: but thy remembrance is unto all generations.

3. Thou seemest to take no heed: but thou wilt arise. He was the more confident,—

1. Because the set time to favour Zion was come.

2. This he saw more clearly from the concern with which God had filled the hearts of the people. Thy servants take pleasure in her stones.

3. He consoled himself in the prospect of the conversion of the heathen themselves. So the heathen shall fear thy name.

4. For this he gives a particular reason. Because the Lord shall build up Zion.

5. And He will do this, because of the prayers of the people. He will regard the prayer, &c.

This should be done in such a manner, that,—

1. Record should be made of it. This shall be written.

2. And it should be a blessing to those that were unborn. The people which shall be created shall praise the Lord.

And for this he assigns the proper reasons.

1. The Lord looked down from heaven.

2. He heard the groans of the prisoners.

These mercies call for gratitude and obedience,—

1. They should declare the name of the Lord.

2. And this will take place when the people are gathered together, &c.

The Psalmist fears that he shall not live to see this deliverance,—

1. For he weakened my strength in the way,—he shortened my days.

2. Yet he earnestly desires to see it. Take me not away.

To strengthen this petition, he pleads God's unchangeableness; and he proves God to be eternal, because He is immutable.

1. Not so the earth, for it had a beginning. Of old thou hast laid, &c.

2. Not so the heavens; for they are the work of thy hands.

3. Neither shall they continue. They shall perish, &c.

But God is always the same. Every thing that is mutable acquires by its change some property, quality, form, or accident, which it had not before: but God being an infinite Spirit, and infinitely perfect, can suffer no loss; can have no addition. For as He wants nothing, nothing can be added to Him;—as He inhabits eternity, nothing can be taken from Him. In Him, therefore, there is no possibility of change; and consequently, none of decay or perishing.

From these considerations the Psalmist draws this comfortable conclusion:—

1. His church and servants shall continue also. The children of thy servants, the apostles, with the patriarchs, shall dwell in thy kingdom, in the new Jerusalem.

2. And their seed. As many as are begotten by the Gospel, if they remain in the faith that works by love, shall be established; persevere, remain, continue before thee; live in Thy presence for ever. As thou art eternal, so Thou wilt unite them to Thyself, and make them eternally happy.

NOTES ON PSALM CIII.

The inscription in the Hebrew, and in all the Versions, gives this Psalm to David; and yet many of the ancients believed it to refer to the times of the Captivity, or rather to its conclusion, in which the redeemed Jews give thanks to God for their restoration. It is a Psalm of inimitable sweetness and excellence; contains the most affectionate sentiments of gratitude to God for His mercies; and the most consoling motives to continue to trust in God, and be obedient to Him.

Verse 1. Bless the Lord] He calls on his soul, and all its faculties and powers, to magnify God for His mercies. Under such a weight of obligation the lips can do little; the soul and all its powers must be engaged.

16 For the wind passeth over it, and it is gone; and the place thereof shall know it no more.

17 But the mercy of the LORD is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and his righteousness unto children's children;

18 To such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them.

of these Scriptures, Let us sin that grace may abound, is a brute and demon, who has neither lot nor part in this thing.

Verse 15. His days are as grass] See the Note on Psa. xc. 5.

Verse 16. The wind passeth over it] Referring perhaps to some blasting pestilential wind.

Verse 17. The mercy of the LORD is from everlasting to everlasting] חסד chesed signifies more particularly the exuberant goodness of God. This is an attribute of His nature, and must be from everlasting to everlasting; and hence, his righteousness, (נקיט tsidekath,) His merciful mode of justifying the ungodly, is extended from one generation to another.

Unto children's children] It is still in force, and the doctrine of reconciliation through Christ shall continue to be preached till the conclusion of time.

Verse 18. To such as keep his covenant] The spirit of which was, I will be your God; we will be thy people. From the covenant came the commandments, and their obligation to remember and do them; and on such keepers of the covenant and doers of the commandments, God promises to pour out His mercy through all generations.

Verse 19. The LORD hath prepared his throne in the heavens] There He is Sovereign: but His dominion extends equally over all the earth; for His kingdom, regal government, influence, and sway, ruleth over all.

Verse 20. Bless the LORD, ye his angels] Every person who has a sense of God's goodness to his soul feels his own powers inadequate to the praise which he ought to offer; and therefore naturally calls upon the holiest of men, and the supreme angels, to assist him in this work.

That excel in strength] Some take נבירי נוח gubrey coach, the mighty in strength, for another class of the hierarchy,—they that do his commandments, hearkening to his words; and consider them to be that order of beings who are particularly employed in operations among and for the children of men; probably such as are called powers in the New Testament.

Verse 21. All ye his hosts; ye ministers of his] We know almost nothing of the economy of the heavenly host; and, therefore, cannot tell what is the difference between angels, mighty powers, hosts, and ministers who do His pleasure. All owe their being, and all its blessings, to God; all depend upon His bounty; and without Him they can do nothing; therefore, all should praise Him.

Verse 22. Bless the LORD, all his works] Let every thing He has done be so considered as to shew forth His praise.

Bless the LORD, O my soul.] Let me never forget my obligation to His mercy; for with tender mercies and loving-kindness has He crowned me. I will therefore be thankful unto Him, and speak good of His name.

ANALYSIS OF THE ONE HUNDRED AND THIRD PSALM.

There are three parts in this Psalm:—

I. The exordium, in which the Psalmist invites his own soul to praise the Lord, ver. 1, 2.

II. The narration, being a declaration of God's benefits conferred on him and others; and the causes of those benefits, ver. 3—19.

III. The conclusion, in which he calls on all creatures to assist him in praising the Lord, ver. 20—22.

I. The exordium,—

1. Bless God. Think on the benefit, and praise the Benefactor.

2. Let the soul join in this. Let it be done heartily;—lip-labour is little worth.

3. All that is within me. Every faculty,—understanding, will, memory, judgment, affections, desires, &c.

4. Bless Jehovah, who gave thee thy being, and all thy blessings.

5. Forget not his benefits. Most forget their obligations both to God and man: but ingratitude, which is the source of forgetfulness, is abominable.

6. All his benefits. Thou hast already forgotten many;

19 The LORD hath prepared his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all.

20 Bless the LORD, ye his angels, that excel in strength, that do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word.

21 Bless ye the LORD, all ye his hosts; ye ministers of his, that do his pleasure.

22 Bless the LORD, all his works in all places of his dominion: bless the LORD, O my soul.

See Psa. 79. 25.—c Matt. 6. 10. Heb. 1. 14.—d Gen. 32. 2. Josh. 5. 14. Psa. 68. 17. e Dan. 7. 9, 10. Heb. 1. 14.—f Psa. 148. 10.—g Ver. 1.

forget no more. The word גמול gamulay, signifies, literally, retributions or recompenses, as the Vulgate has well expressed it. And of what kind are these recompenses? Invariably good for evil: nor hast thou ever offered him one accent of praise that He has not compensated with a blessing of infinite value.

II. The narration. A declaration of benefits. 1. To himself. 2. To the church. These were,—I. Spiritual; 2. Temporal benefits.

First spiritual benefit;—justification. He forgiveth all thine iniquities.

Second spiritual benefit—regeneration, or sanctification. Healeth all thy diseases.

Third spiritual benefit;—redemption from the first and second death, in consequence of being thus justified and sanctified.

Fourth spiritual benefit;—glorification anticipated. Who crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercy. The crown comes from the loving-kindness and tender mercy of God; not from any merit in man.

The temporal benefits are,—

1. Abundance of the necessaries of life. Who satisfieth thy mouth with good things.

2. Health and long life. Thy youth is renewed like the eagle's. See the note on this passage.

The benefits to the whole church are,—

1. Defence and deliverance. The Lord executeth judgment.

2. Manifestation of his will. He made known his ways, &c.

All these spring from the four attributes mentioned below,—

1. He is merciful, רחם racham, bearing a paternal affection to His intelligent creatures, especially to those who fear Him.

2. Gracious, חנון chanun, the Giver of grace and favour; for he who has a fatherly heart will give.

3. Slow to anger, ארך אפים erech a-payim, "long in nostrils," not hasty; not apt to be angry.

4. Plenteous in mercy, רב חסד rab chesed, "multiplying kindness." Gives abundantly from His own bounty; not according to our merit.

The effects of all these are,—

1. Because He is merciful. He will not always chide.

2. Because He is gracious. He deals not with us after our sins.

3. Because He is slow to anger. He will not keep his anger for ever.

4. Because He is plenteous in mercies. His mercies surpass our sins as much as heaven surpasses the earth.

5. Because He is like a father. He pities his children; considers their frame, and makes all the allowance that justice, mingled with mercy, can make.

6. And as He is righteous, true, and faithful in performing His covenant, His mercy is everlasting to those that fear Him.

But let it be remembered who they are that have a right to expect such blessings:—

1. Those who fear him.

2. Those who keep his covenant.

3. Those who remember his commandments, and do them.

That He is able to do all that He has promised, the Psalmist marks His dominion:—

1. It is not circumscribed. His throne is in heaven.

2. It takes in all places and all nations. For his kingdom ruleth over all; He is King of kings, and Lord of lords.

III. The conclusion. For these benefits he invites all creatures to praise the Lord.

1. The angels, whom he describes,—1. from their excellence;—ye that excel in strength. 2. From their obedience;—ye that do his commandments. 3. From their readiness and cheerfulness in it;—ye that hearken to the voice of his words,—who are ever ready, at the slightest intimation, to perform his will.

PSALM CIV.

The majesty and power of God manifested in the creation of the heavens and the atmosphere, 1-3. Of the earth and sea, 4-9. Of the springs, fountains, and rivers, 10-18. Of vegetation and trees, 14-18. Of the sun and moon, 19. Of day and night, and their uses, 20-23. Of the riches of the earth, 24. Of the sea, its inhabitants, and its uses, 25, 31. God's general providence in providing food for all kinds of animals, 27-31. Of earthquakes and volcans, 32. God is praised for His mercy, and the instruction which His words afford, 33, 34. Sinners shall be destroyed, 35.

XX. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

Cyrl. Regis Psalmos, cir. an. prin. BLESS a the LORD, O my soul. O LORD my God, thou art very great; thou art clothed with honour and majesty:

a Ps. 102. l. ver. 35.—b Ps. 95. l.—c Dan. 7. 9.—d Isa. 40. 22 & 45. 12.—e Amos 9. 6.—f Isa. 19. 1.—g Ps. 10. 10.—h Hab. 1. 7.

2. All the hosts or armies of God.—Archangels, principalities, dominions, powers, thrones, &c.

3. He invites all the creatures of God to praise Him, whether animate or inanimates.—All creatures, in all places of his dominion. This extends throughout immensity. For this there is the strongest reason—He made all—rules over all—is in all places with all—preserves all—moves all.

4. To shew that he who calls upon others will not be backward himself to praise God; as he began, so he concludes with, Bless the Lord, O my soul! Thus he had the high praises of God continually in his mouth.

And thus finishes this most excellent and inimitable Psalm. The old Psalter concludes thus: "Blyasses to Lorde al his werks in ilk stede of his Lordschap; blisse my saule to Lorde. When men well lyfes, al thair werks blyasses God. Fra blyassyng we cum forth to blyassyng, gawe agayne, and tharein dwell we."

The more we praise God, the more occasion we shall see to praise Him; and the more spiritually minded we shall become. Praise proceeds from gratitude; gratitude from a sense of obligation: and both praise and gratitude will be in proportion to the weight of that obligation; and the weight will be in proportion to the sense we have of God's great goodness, and our own unworthiness. As the reader's heart may be in a heavenly frame, I shall help him to express his feelings by the following inimitable verses, which express the substance of the preceding Psalm:—

"From all that dwell below the skies Let the Creator's praise arise! Let the Redeemer's grace be sung In every land, by every tongue!"

Eternal are Thy mercies, Lord! Eternal truth attends Thy word! Thy praise shall sound from shore to shore, Till sun shall rise, and set no more.

Praise God, from whom all blessings flow! Praise Him, all creatures here below! Praise Him above, ye heavenly host! Praise Father, Son, and Holy Ghost."

Amos and Amos.

NOTES ON PSALM CIV.

This Psalm has no title either in the Hebrew or Chaldee: but it is attributed to David by the Vulgate, Septuagint, Æthiopic, Arabic, and Syriac. It has the following title in the Septuagint, as it stands in the Complutensian Polyglott:—Ύμνος τῷ Δαυὶδ περὶ τῆς τοῦ κόσμου συστάσεως, A Psalm of David concerning the formation of the world. The Syriac says it is "A Psalm of David when he went with the priests to adore the Lord before the ark." It seems a continuation of the preceding Psalm; and is written as a part of it in nine of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. It is properly a poem on the works of God in the creation and government of the world; and some have considered it a sort of epitome of the history of the creation as given in the book of Genesis.

Verse 1. O Lord, my God, thou art very great! The works of God, which are the subject of this Psalm, particularly shew the grandeur and majesty of God. The strongest proofs of the being of God, for common understandings, are derived from the works of creation, their magnitude, variety, number, oconomy, and use. And a proper consideration of those works presents a greater number of the attributes of the Divine nature than we can learn from any other source. Revelation alone is superior.

Verse 2. Who covereth thyself with light! Light, insufferable splendour, is the robe of the Divine Majesty. Light and fire are generally the accompaniments of the Supreme Being, when He manifests His presence to His creatures. He appeared thus to Abraham when He made a covenant with him, Gen. xv. 17; and to Moses when He appointed him to bring the people out of Egypt, Exod. iii. 2; and when He gave them His law on Sinai, Exod. xix. 18. Moses calls God a consuming fire, Deut. iv. 24. When Christ was transfigured on the Mount, His face shone like the sun, and His garment was white as the light, Matt. xvii. 2. And when the Lord manifests Himself to the prophets, he is always surrounded with fire, and the most brilliant light.

Bishop Lowth has some fine remarks on the imagery and metaphors of this Psalm. The exordium, says he, is peculiarly magnificent, wherein the majesty of God is described, so far as we can investigate and comprehend it, from the admirable construction of nature; in which passage, as it was for the most part necessary to use translatitious images, the sacred poet has principally applied those which would be esteemed by the Hebrews the most elevated, and worthy such an argument: for they all, as it seems to me, are taken from the Tabernacle. We will give these passages verbally, with a short illustration.

הוד וחדר לבשת hod ve-hadar libashta.

Thou hast put on honour and majesty.

The original לבשת libashta is frequently used when speaking of the clothing or dress of the priests.

Verse 2. כשלה אור כשלה אור besh or ka-selema.

Covering thyself with light as with a garment.

A manifest symbol of the Divine Presence: the light conspicuous in the Holiest is pointed out under the same idea; and from this single example a simile is deduced to express the ineffable glory of God generally and universally.

נשח שמים כיריק notch shamayim ka-yeridah.

Stretching out the heavens like a curtain.

The word כיריק rendered here curtain, is that which denotes the curtains, or uncovering, of the whole Tabernacle.

Verse 3. נשח חמרים במים חמרים ha-mekarah ba-mayim dliotain.

Laying the beams of his chambers in the waters.

The sacred writer expresses the wonderful nature of the air aptly, and regularly constructed, from various and flux elements, into one continued and stable series, by a metaphor drawn from the singular formation of the Tabernacle; which, consisting of many and different parts, and easily repairable when there was need, was kept together by a perpetual juncture and contignation of them all together. The poet goes on:—

הש ענני רוחו החמיר על-בפיריו hasim abim racuba, ha-mechallec el canphey ruach.

Making the clouds his chariot, Walking upon the wings of the wind.

He had first expressed an image of the Divine Majesty, such as it resided in the holy of holies, discernible by a certain investiture of the most splendid light; he now denotes the same from that light of itself which the Divine Majesty exhibited, when it moved together with the ark; sitting on a circumambient cloud, and carried on high through the air. That seat of the Divine Presence is even called by the sacred historians as its proper name הטרבה ha-mercebah. THE CHARIOT.

Verse 4. עשה מלאכיו רוחו עשה malacai ruchoth, mesharetaiv esh lohel.

The elements are described prompt and expedite to perform the Divine commands, like angels or ministers serving in the Tabernacle; the Hebrew word משרתי misharetaiv, being a word most common in the sacred ministrations.

Ver. 5. יסד ארץ על-סבתי יסד ארץ על-סבתי Yaad eretz el meconiah, bal tamot dlam ve ad.

Laying the earth upon its foundations, That it should not be shaken for evermore.

This image Bishop Lowth thinks evidently taken from the tabernacle, which was so laid upon its foundations, that nothing could move it, and the dispensation to which it was attached, till the end purposed by the secret counsel of God was accomplished: and thus the earth is established, till the end of its creation shall be fully answered; and then it and its works shall be burnt up. On the above ground the stability of the sanctuary, and the stability of the earth, are sometimes mentioned in the same words.

6 = Thou coverdest it with the deep as with a garment: the waters stood above the mountains.
7 = At thy rebuke they fled; at the voice of thy thunder they hasted away.

8 = They go up by the mountains; they go down by the valleys unto the place which thou hast founded for them.

9 = Thou hast set a bound that they may not pass over: that they turn not again to cover the earth.

10 = He sendeth the springs into the valleys, which run among the hills.

11 They give drink to every beast of the field: the wild asses quench their thirst.

Verse 6. Thou coverdest it with the deep] This seems to be spoken in allusion to the creation of the earth, when it was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep; and the waters invested the whole, till God separated the dry land from them; thus forming the sea and the terraqueous globe. The poet Ovid has nearly the same idea:—

*Demulcor his tellus, elementaque grandis traxit;
Et pressa est gravitate men, circumfusum humor
Ultima possedit, solidumque coarctavit orbem* Met. l. 1. v. 20.
Earth sinks beneath, and draws a numerous throng
Of pondrous, thick, unswifty seeds along;
About her centre stately waters roars;
And, rising on a ridge, smelt the shores. Dryden.

Ver. 7. At thy rebuke they fled] When God separated the waters which were above the firmament from those below, and caused the dry land to appear. He commanded the separation to take place; and the waters, as if instinct with life, hastened to obey.

At the voice of thy thunder] It is very likely God employed the electric fluid as an agent in this separation.

Verse 8. They go up by the mountains; they go down by the valleys] Taking the words as they stand here, springs seem to be what is intended. But it is difficult to conceive how the water could ascend through the fissures of mountains, up to their tops; and then come down their sides so as to form rivulets to water the valleys. Most probably all the springs in mountains and hills are formed from waters which fall on their tops in the form of rain; or from clouds which, passing over them, are arrested, and precipitate their contents, which, sinking down, are stopped by some solid strata, and, forcing their way at some aperture at their sides, form springs and fountains. Possibly, however, vapours and exhalations are understood; these by evaporation, ascend to the tops of mountains, where they are condensed and precipitated. Thus the vapours ascend, and then come down to the valleys, forming fountains and rivulets in those places which the providence of God has allotted them; that is, continuous valleys, with such a degree of inclination as determines their waters to run in that direction till they reach another river, or fall into the ocean.

Some have thought there is a reference to the breaking up of the fountains of the great deep, at the time of the flood; while the protrusion of the waters would raise the circumambient crust, so as to form mountains, the other parts falling in, to fill up the vacuum occasioned by the waters which were thrown up from the central abyss, would constitute valleys.

Ovid seems to paraphrase this verse:—

*Jussit at ardens campos, subsidere valles
Fronde tegi sylvas, lapidosos surgere montes.* Metam. l. 1. v. 43.
"He shades the woods, the valleys he restrains
With rocky mountains, and extends the plains." Dryden.

Verse 9. Thou hast set a bound that they may not pass] And what is this bound? The flux and reflux of the sea, occasioned by the solar and lunar attraction; the rotation of the earth on its own axis; and the gravitation of the waters to the centre of the earth. And what is the cause of all these? The will and energy of God. Thus the sea is prevented from drowning the earth equally where there are flat shores as where the sea seems hemmed in by huge mounds of land and mountains. The above, not these, are the bounds which it cannot pass, so that they cannot turn again to cover the earth.

Verse 10. He sendeth the springs into the valleys] Evaporation is guided and regulated by Divine Providence. The sun has a certain power to raise a certain portion of vapours from a given space. God has appointed the aqueous to the terrene surface, and the solar attraction to both. There is just as much aqueous surface as affords a sufficiency of vapours to be raised by the solar attraction to water the earthy surface. Experiments have been instituted which prove that it requires a given space of aqueous surface to provide vapours for a given space of terrene surface: and the proportion appears ordinarily to be seventeen of water to three of earth, and this is the proportion that the aqueous bears to the terrene surface of the globe. See Ray's three Physico-theological Discourses.

Verse 11. The wild asses quench their thirst] The wild para, onager, or wild ass, differs in nothing from the tame ass, only it has not a broken spirit, and is consequently more lively and active. It is so very swift that no horse except the Arab barb, can overtake it. It is a gregarious animal, and they go in troops to feed and to drink. It is very timid, or rather jealous of its liberty—and therefore retires deep into the desert; yet even there the providence of God regards it. Springs are provided, and it has the instinct to find them out.

Verse 12. By them shall the fowls of the heaven have their habitation] All fowls love verdure; and have their residence where they can find wood and water.

Verse 13. From his chambers] The clouds, as in ver. 3. The earth is satisfied] The inhabitants of it.

Verse 14. He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle] Doth God care for oxen? Yes, and there is not a beast of the field that does not share his merciful regards.

And herb for the service of man] Plants, esculent herbs, and nutritive grain in general; and thus he brings forth food, (or lechem) bread out of the earth. In the germination and growth of a grain of wheat there is a profusion of miracles. God takes care of man, and of all those animals which are so necessary to the convenience and comfort of man.

Verse 15. And wine] Wine, in moderate quantity, has a wondrous tendency to revive and invigorate the human being. Ardent spirits exhilarate, but they exhaust the strength; and every dose leaves man the worse. Wine, on the contrary, exhilarates and invigorates: it makes him cheerful; and provides for the continuance of that cheerfulness, by strengthening the muscles, and bracing the nerves. This is its use. Those who continue drinking till wine inflames them, abuse this mercy of God.

Oil to make his face to shine] That is, to anoint the body; and particularly those parts most exposed to the sun and weather. This is of high importance in all arid lands and sultry climates. By it the pores are kept open, and perspiration maintained.

Bread which strengtheneth man's heart] In hunger not only the strength is prostrated, but the natural courage is also abated. Hunger has no enterprise, emulation nor courage. But when, in such circumstances, a little bread is received into the stomach, even before concoction can have time to prepare it for nutriment, the strength is restored, and the spirits revived. This is a surprising effect; and it has not yet been satisfactorily accounted for.

Three of the choicest and most important articles of life are here mentioned:—WINE, for the support of the vital and intellectual spirits;—BREAD, for the support of the nervous and muscular system; and OIL, as a seasoner of food, and for those unctions so necessary for the maintenance of health. Where wine, oil, and bread, can be had in sufficient quantities, there animal food, ardent spirits, and all high seasoned aliments may be well dispensed with. Heavy taxes on these necessities of life are taxes on life itself; and infallibly lead to adulteration of the articles themselves; especially wine and oil, which, in countries where they are highly taxed, are no longer to be found pure.

Verse 16. The trees of the Lord are full of sap] יצרו ייאבדו, "are saturated."

The cedars of Lebanon] God's providence not only extends to men and cattle, but also to the trees of the field and forest. Many of these are not only sustained, but planted, by His providence. Who ever planted the seeds of the cedars of Lebanon, or of the thousands of woods and forests on the globe? God Himself sowed those seeds, and they have sprung up and flourished without the care of man.

Verse 17. Where the birds make their nests] תַּיִרִים תְּסַרְסַרִים signifies swallows, sparrows, and small birds in general; here opposed to the תַּיִרִים חַסִידִים, or stork. Perhaps the heron may be understood, which is said to be the first of all birds to build her nest, and she builds it on the very highest trees. The general meaning is, that God has provided shelter and support for the greatest and smallest birds: they are all objects of His providential regard.

Verse 18. The high hills are a refuge] The barren tops of the highest hills, and the craggy abrupt precipices of the most stupendous rocks, are not without their uses: they afford protection, refuge, and food, for creatures whose dispositions and habits are suited to such places; and thus no part of the creation is useless. The creatures who are their inhabitants are necessary links in the great chain of animated beings, and shew the wisdom and providence of God.

For a description of the coney, see Lev. xi. 5. The lyy yadl, translated here the wild goat, is no doubt a creature of the stag, or deer kind;—the ibex, chamois, antelope, &c.

Verse 19. He appointed the moon for seasons] The heathens thought that the sun and moon were gods, and worshipped them as such. The Psalmist shews,—1. That they are creatures dependant on God for their being and continuance; and—2. That they were made for the use of man. See what has been said on these luminaries in the Notes on the first chapter of Genesis.

Verse 20. Thou makest darkness] It is not the design of God that there should be either constant darkness or constant light. That man may labour, He gives him, by means of the sun, the light of the day; and that he may rest from his labour, and get his strength recruited, He gives him night, and comparative darkness. And, as it would not be convenient for man and the wild beasts of the forest to collect their food at the same time, He has given the night to them as the proper time to procure their prey, and the day to rest in. When MAN labours, THEY rest; when MAN rests, THEY labour.

Verse 22. The sun ariseth] The dawn of day is the warning for man to arise and betake himself to his work; and is the warning to them to retire to their dens. It is said of the lion, that his roaring is so terrible as to astonish and quite unnerve the beast which he pursues; so that, though fiercer than himself it falls down, and becomes an easy prey.

Verse 24. O LORD, how manifold are thy works] In this verse there are three propositions:—1. The works of the Lord are multitudinous and varied. 2. They are so constructed as to shew the most consummate wisdom in their design, and in the end for which they are formed. 3. They are all God's property, and should be used only in reference to the end for which they were created. All abuse and waste of God's creatures are spoil and robbery on the property of the Creator. On this verse Mr. Ray has published an excellent work, intitled "The Wisdom of God in the Creation," which the reader will do well not only to consult, but carefully to read over and study.

Verse 25. This great and wide sea] The original is very emphatic, וְהַיָּם הַגָּדוֹל הַרְבֵּי מַעַרְבֵי יָדָיו ze haiyam gadol u-rechab yadayim, "This very sea, great and extensive of hands." Its waters, like arms, encompassing all the terrene parts of the globe. I suppose the Psalmist was within sight of the Mediterranean when he wrote these words.

Verse 26. There go the ships] By means of navigation, countries the most remote are connected; and all the inhabitants of the earth become known to each other. He appears at this time to have seen the ships under sail.

That Leviathan] This may mean the whale, or any of the large marine animals. The Septuagint and Vulgate call it dragon. Sometimes the crocodile is intended by the original word.

To play therein.] Dreadful and tempestuous as the sea may appear, and uncontrollable in its billows and surges, it is only the field of sport, the play-ground, the bowling-green, to those huge marine monsters.

Verse 27. These wait all upon thee] The innumerable fry of the smaller aquatic animals, as well as whales, dolphins, porpoises, and sharks, all have their meat from God. He has in His gracious providence furnished that sort of food which is suitable to all. And this provision is various: not only for every kind of fish does God provide food, but a different kind of aliment for each in its different periods of growth. Here are displayed the goodness and infinitely varied providence of God; he giveth them their meat in due season.

Verse 28. That thou givest them they gather] All creatures are formed with such and such digestive organs, and the food proper for such is provided. As infinitely varied as are living creatures in their habits and internal economy, so are the aliments which God has caused the air, the earth, and the waters, to produce.

Thou openest thy hand] An allusion to the act of scattering grain among fowls.

Verse 29. Thou hidest thy face] If thou bring dearth or famine on the land, contagion in the air, or any destruction on the provision made by the waters, then beasts, fowl, and fish, die, and are dissolved.

Verse 30. Thou sendest forth thy spirit, they are created] וַיִּבְרָא יְיָ יִבְרָאֵם, "They are created again."

And thou renewest the face of the earth.] Do not these words plainly imply a resurrection of the bodies which have died, been dissolved, or turned to dust? And is not the brute creation principally intended here? Is it not on this account that it is said, ver. 31, the glory of the Lord shall endure for ever, (וְכָבוֹד לֵאלֹהִים), to be manifest in those times which are secret, when Jehovah Himself shall rejoice in his works; when the brute creation shall be delivered from the bondage of its corruption. See the Notes on Rom. viii. 19—23.

Verse 32. He looketh on the earth] Even the look of God terrifies all created nature!

He toucheth the hills] So easy is it for God to burn up the earth and the works thereof, that even His touch kindles the mountains into flames! See Etna, Vesuvius, Stromboli, &c. these are ignited by the touch of God. How majestic are these figures!

The renewal of the earth, and recreation of deceased animals, shall take place when He shall shake terribly the heavens and the earth; when they shall be wrapped together as a scroll, and the earth and its works be dissolved; that is, after the general convulsion and conflagration of the world.

Verse 33. I will sing unto the Lord] The Psalmist, exulting at the glorious prospect of the renovation of all things, breaks out in triumphant anticipations of the great event; and says, I will sing unto the Lord (וְהַלְלוּ אֱלֹהִים), 34 My meditation of him shall be sweet: I will be glad in the LORD.

35 Let the sinners be consumed out of the with my lioes, the life that I now have, and the life that I shall have hereafter.

I will sing praise to my God] בְּקוֹלִי בִּשְׂשׁוֹן, "in my eternity,"—my going on, my endless progression. What astonishing ideas! But then, how shall this great work be brought about? and how shall the new earth be inhabited with righteous spirits only? The answer is,—

Verses 35. Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and the wicked shall be no more] Or, he shall consume the wicked and the ungodly, till no more of them be found. Then the wicked shall be turned into hell, with all the nations that forget God. No wonder, with these prospects before his eyes, he cries out, Bless Jehovah, O my soul! Hallelujah! All ye that hear of these things, bless the Lord also.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FOURTH PSALM.

The scope of this Psalm is the same with that of the former, i. e. to excite them to praise God in consideration of His benefits: but yet on a different ground. In the former, on the benefits of grace conferred upon His church; in this, for the gifts of nature bestowed in general upon all. Those flow immediately from His mercy; these from His power, wisdom, and goodness, and depend upon His providence, and which are manifest in the creation, governance, and preservation, of all things. The creature, then, is the subject of this Psalm, relative to which we have a long, but very methodical, narration.

I. The exhortation proposed briefly, ver. 1.

II. The exhortation urged by the inspection of the fabric, the beauty, order, and government, of the world, ver. 1—33.

III. The duty practised by himself, ver. 33, 34.

IV. An imprecation on them that neglect the duty, ver. 35.

I. He begins with a double apostrophe:—

1. To his own soul to praise God. Bless the Lord, O my soul, which was the conclusion of the former Psalm.

2. To his God, O Lord my God, whom he describes to be great and glorious. That he may set forth His majesty and glory, borrowing his figure from the person of some great king, presenting himself very glorious to his people, in his robes, in his pavilion, with a glittering canopy extended over his throne; sometimes in his chariot, drawn by the swiftest horses, with his nobles, ministers, and servants, waiting on his pleasure.

In this way he describes the majesty of God, in the works of the first and second day; for by that order he proceeds in setting forth God's works; that in which they were made.

1. His robe is the light, the work of the first day, which is the purest, the most illustrious, and cheerful, of all God's creatures: with this He is clothed as with a garment, for He is light, John i. 1. And He dwells in that inaccessible light, that no man hath seen, nor can see, 1 Tim. vi.

2. His pavilion stretched round about Him is the heavens, the work of the second day. These are as the hangings and curtains of His chamber or presence, by His fiat and power stretched out as we now see them. He stretched out the heavens as a curtain.

3. His palace built in a most miraculous manner. The beams are laid, not as usual on a solid body, but upon that which is most fluent. He lays the beams of his chambers in the waters. In Gen. i. 7, we read of the waters above the firmament, which were a part of the second day's work, and of these the prophet surely speaks.

4. His chariot, the clouds. Who makes the clouds his chariot. Upon these He rides in a most wonderful manner, in all places he pleases; which are now in this place, and then instantly removed to another.

5. The horses that draw it, the winds, alipedeas, as the poets feigned the horses who drew the chariot of the sun. The Psalmist intends to shew, that by the power of God they are brought upon the face of heaven, and removed at His pleasure.

6. His attendants; angels. He maketh his angels spirits, his ministers a flaming fire. No creature of greater quickness and agility than a spirit; no element more active than fire: these blessed spirits He sends forth as He pleases, to defend His servants; and as a flame of fire to consume and burn up His enemies, in which appears His might and majesty.

II. Next, the prophet descends from the heavens, and out of the air, and speaks of the work of the third day; and begins with the earth, that element which is best known earth, and let the wicked be no more. 'Bless thou the LORD, O my soul. Praise ye the LORD.

s. Ver. 1.

to us, in which he shews the power and wisdom of God many ways.

1. In the foundation of it upon its centre. Strange it is, that so great and heavy a body should remain in the midst of it, and not sink: this the prophet attributes to the power and providence of God. Who laid the foundations of the earth that it should not be removed for ever.

2. Another part of His providence about the earth was, that the water being the lighter element, covered the earth, and thus rendered it useless. God, either by taking some parts of the upper superficies out of the earth in some places, made it more hollow, and putting them in others, made it convex; or, in other words, by raising some and depressing others, made room for the sea: this was the work of God's word; and the prophet speaks of this in the three following verses.

1. He shews in what condition the earth was in the first creation, it was covered, and under water. Thou coverest it with the deep as with a garment; the waters stood above the mountains.

2. He shews that the earth became uncovered by the voice, power, and fiat, of God: Let the waters be gathered together into one place, and let the dry land appear. This the Psalmist here calls the rebuke of God, the voice of thunder; for God no sooner spake than it was done. At thy rebuke they fled, at the voice of thy thunder they were afraid.

3. And so there became a new world. The mountains and valleys take the lower place; the mists and vapours go up by the mountains.

4. There they inclose them: Thou hast set a bound, &c. Yet not violently kept there, but restrained by an ordinary law of nature, it being natural for water to descend to the lower places.

III. He next speaks of the rivers and springs, and shews God's wonderful providence over them:—

1. He sendeth the springs, the streams of water, from the hills into the valleys.

2. The end of this infinitely declares God's providence: it is for the sustenance of beasts and fowls, or they must perish for thirst. The springs and rivers give drink to every beast of the field, the wild asses, &c.

IV. But the springs and rivers cannot water all parts of the earth; therefore, His wisdom devised the rain and the clouds.

He watereth the hills from his chambers. The effect of which is,—

1. In general, the satisfaction of the earth, which being thirsty gapes for rain. The earth is satisfied with the fruit of thy works.

2. In particular, the effects and consequences of the dew.

1. Grass for the cattle. He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle. 2. Herbs for meat and medicine. And herbs for the service of man. 3. All kinds of food. And that he may bring forth food. And 4. And wine that makes glad the heart of man, lawfully used. 5. And oil to make his face to shine. Oil supplies and strengthens the nerves, and keeps the flesh smooth, fresh, and youthful. 6. And bread which strengtheneth man's heart; for it is always the chief and necessary part of the service.

V. Neither hath the God of providence forgotten to provide us trees for shade, building and fuel, as well as to yield us fruit.

1. The trees of the Lord also. His trees, because He first made them, and now causes them to grow. They are full of sap, which is another effect of the rain.

2. Where the birds make their nests.

3. Other creatures are not forgotten; not the goats nor the conies. For the high hills, &c.

The Psalmist next mentions the work of the fourth day; the creation of the two great luminaries, the sun and the moon.

1. God appointed the moon for certain seasons.

2. And the sun knoweth his going down.

And in this division of time, the providence of God is admirable: Thou makest darkness, and it is night.

1. For the good of the beasts, even the wildest, that they be sustained. 1. The night comes, and the beasts of the forest creep forth. The young lions, &c. 2. Again, the day appears: The sun ariseth, and they appear not, &c.

2. For the good of man. Man goeth forth to his labour. Labour he must all day, and then take rest; labour till the evening.

Upon the consideration of all which the prophet exclaims,—O God, how manifold are thy works; in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of thy riches.

PSALM CV.

An exhortation to praise God for His wondrous works, 1-6. His goodness to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, 6-16. To Joseph in Egypt, 17-28. To Israel in Egypt, 29-34. To Moses in the same land, 35. The plagues sent on the Egyptians, 35-38. The deliverance of the Israelites out of Egypt, 39, 40. How He supported them in the wilderness, 40-43. And brought them into Canaan, 44, 45.

7 He is the LORD our God: ^f his judgments are in all the earth.

8 He hath ^g remembered his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations.

9 ^h Which covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac;

10 And confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant:

11 Saying, ⁱ Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, ^k the lot of your inheritance:

12 ^l When there were but a few men in number; yea, very few, ^m and strangers in it.

13 When they went from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people;

1. How manifold are thy works. How great, how excellent, how worthy of praise; such that I cannot express them.

2. In wisdom hast thou made them all. Nothing is done by chance or rashness, but with great reason; nothing too much or too little.

3. All the earth is full of thy riches. No place, no part of it, but Thy works proclaim that Thou art a bountiful and most wise Creator; an open-handed and liberal Bestower of riches.

The prophet has hitherto set forth God's wisdom in His works; in the heavens, air, the earth, and now he descends into the sea.

1. In the amplitude of it. It is the great and wide sea.

2. In the abundance of the fish, the work of the fifth day. Whereto are things creeping innumerable.

3. In the useful art of navigation, which God taught by Noah's ark. There go the ships.

4. In the whale. There is that leviathan.

And the conservation of the creature now follows, from verse 27 to 30; where their dependance is shewed upon the providence of God, both for their meat, life, and continuation of their species.

1. These all wait upon thee; they expect till Thou givest.

2. That thou mayest give them their meat. Meat fit for every season of the year, and when they want it.

3. That thou givest them they gather. That, and no more or less: and His power and blessing must co-operate with the second cause.

4. This he farther explains: Thou openest thine hand, and they are filled with good.

Farther, life and death are in Thy power. Death, and the forerunner of it; trouble.

1. Thou hidest thy face; seamest displeas'd, and withdrawest help and assistance; and they are troubled.

2. Thou takest away their breath; they die.

And life also.

1. Thou sendest forth thy Spirit, a vital spirit, by restoring new individuals to every species.

2. And by this thou renewest the face of the earth; which, if not done, the whole would fail in an age.

Now, after this long catalogue of the creatures, and God's power, wisdom, and goodness, made most manifest in the creation, governance, and sustentation of them, he descends, ver. 32.

1. Let the glory of the Lord, his glory, for his wisdom, goodness, and power, endure for ever. Hallowed be his name.

2. The Lord shall rejoice in his works. Let man be so careful to use them well, that by the abuse he grieves not God, and causes Him to repent that He made them.

3. Which, if it happen, it would be remembered that he is a God, and able to punish the ungrateful person. For if he looketh on the earth with a threatening brow, it trembleth.

He makes them an open profession of his own practice.

1. I will sing unto the Lord as long as I live, &c.

2. And this he would do with delight. My meditation of him shall be sweet, &c.

3. And he concludes with an imprecation against unthankful and negligent persons, who regard not the works of God, and will not see His glory, power, wisdom, and goodness, in His creating, governing, and sustaining this universe; and therefore very little praise Him. Against these he prays that they may be confounded or converted.

But, O my soul, be not thou like to them. Bless the Lord. Hallelujah.

NOTES ON PSALM CV.

We find several verses of this Psalm in 1 Chron. xvi. from which it is evident that David was the author of the principal part of it: but it was probably enlarged and sung at the restoration of the people from the Babylonish captivity. The hallelujah, which terminates the preceding Psalm, is made the title of this by the Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic: but it has no title either in the Hebrew or Chaldee. The Syriac considers it as a paraphrase on the words, "Fear not, Jacob, to go down into Egypt;" and teaches us spiritually not to fear when we are obliged to contend with devils; for God is our shield, and will fight for us." The Psalm is a history of God's dealings with Abraham and his posterity, till their settlement in the Promised Land.

Verse 1. O give thanks] He had been meditating on God's gracious dealings with their fathers; and he calls upon himself and all others to magnify God for His mercies.

Verse 2. Talk ye of all his wondrous works.] ἡμῶν τὰς ἀφίλοτις, "of his miracles." Who have so many of these to boast in as Christians! Christianity is a tissue of miracles: and every part of the work of grace on the soul is a miracle. Genuine Christian converts may talk of miracles from morning to night; and they should talk of them, and recommend to others their miracle-working God and Saviour.

Verse 3. Glory ye in his holy name] Shew the name Jesus: exult in it—praise it. His name was called Jesus, because He came to save His people from their sins.

Let the heart of them rejoice] That is, the heart of those shall rejoice who seek the Lord: therefore it is added,

Verse 4. Seek the Lord] Worship the one only Supreme Being, as the only and all-sufficient good for the soul of man.

And his strength] Man is weak; and needs connection with the strong God, that he may be enabled to avoid evil and do good.

Seek his face] Reconciliation to Him. Live not without a sense of His favour.

Evermore.] Let this be thy chief business. In and above all thy seeking, seek this.

Verse 5. Remember his marvellous works] Keep up communion with thy Maker, that thou mayest neither forget Him nor His works.

The judgments of his mouth] Whatsoever He has spoken concerning good or evil. His commands, promises, threatenings; and particularly what He has foretold, and what He has done.

Verse 6. O ye seed of Abraham] Ye Jews especially, who have been the peculiar objects of the Divine favour.

Verse 7. He is the Lord our God] He is Jehovah, the self-existent and eternal God. He is our God.—He is our portion;—has taken us for His people, and makes us happy in His love.

The following abstract of the history of the Israelites, presents but few difficulties. See the notes on Psalm lxxviii.

Verse 12. But a few men] When all appearances were against them; and nothing but the arm of God could have brought them through their difficulties, and given them a settlement in the Promised Land.

Verse 13. When they went from one nation to another] From several circumstances in the history of the travels of the ancient Hebrews, we find that the wilderness through which they then passed was well peopled.

15 Saying, Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.

16 Moreover he called for a famine upon the land: he brake the whole staff of bread.

17 He sent a man before them, even Joseph, who was sold for a servant:

18 Whose feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in iron:

19 Until the time that his word came: the word of the Lord tried him.

20 The king sent and loosed him; even the ruler of the people, and let him go free.

21 He made him lord of his house, and ruler of all his substance:

22 To bind his princes at his pleasure: and teach his senators wisdom.

23 Israel also came into Egypt; and Jacob sojourned in the land of Ham.

24 And he increased his people greatly; and made them stronger than their enemies.

25 He turned their heart to hate his people, to deal subtilly with his servants.

26 He sent Moses his servant; and Aaron whom he had chosen.

27 They showed his signs among them, and wonders in the land of Ham.

28 He sent darkness, and made it dark; and they rebelled not against his word.

29 He turned their waters into blood, and slew their fish.

30 Their land brought forth frogs in abundance, in the chambers of their kings.

31 He spake, and there came divers sorts of flies, and lice in all their coasts.

32 He gave them hail for rain, and flaming fire in their land.

33 He smote their vines also, and their fig-trees; and brake the trees of their coasts.

34 He spake, and the locusts came, and caterpillars, and that without number,

35 And did eat up all the herbs in their land, and devoured the fruit of their ground.

36 He smote also all the first-born in their land, the chief of all their strength.

37 He brought them forth also with silver and gold: and there was not one feeble person among their tribes.

38 Egypt was glad when they departed: for the fear of them fell upon them.

39 He spread a cloud for a covering; and fire to give light in the night.

40 The people asked, and he brought quails, and satisfied them with the bread of heaven.

41 He opened the rock, and the waters gushed out; they ran in the dry places like a river.

42 For he remembered his holy promise, and Abraham his servant.

43 And he brought forth his people with joy, and his chosen with gladness:

44 And gave them the lands of the heathen; and they inherited the labour of the people;

45 That they might observe his statutes, and keep his laws. Praise ye the Lord.

Verse 15. Touch not mine anointed] It is supposed that the patriarchs are here intended: but the whole people of Israel may be meant. They were a kingdom of priests and kings unto God; and prophets, priests, and kings, were always anointed.

Verse 19. Until the time that his word came] This appears to refer to the completion of Joseph's interpretation of the dreams of the chief butler and baker.

The word of the Lord tried him] This seems to refer to the interpretation of Pharaoh's dreams, called, מִטְרָה אִמְרַת יְהוָה, "the oracle of the Lord," because sent by Him to Pharaoh. See Gen. xli. 25, and Kennicott in loco.

Verse 25. He turned their hearts] "Their heart was turned."—So the Syriac and Arabic. After befriending the Hebrews on Joseph's account, to whom they were so deeply indebted, finding them to multiply greatly in the land, and at last to become more powerful than the Egyptians themselves, they turned their attention to the adoption of measures, in order to prevent the Hebrews from possessing themselves of the government of the whole land; curtailed them of their privileges, and endeavoured to depress them by all possible means, and by a variety of legal enactments. This appears to be the sole meaning of the phrase, He turned their hearts; or, their hearts was turned.

Verse 27. They showed his signs] Here is a reference to the plagues with which God afflicted the Egyptians. See the places in the margin, and the notes on them.

Verse 28. They rebelled not against his word] Instead of רָבּוּ מַרְדּוּ, "they rebelled," some think that wo shin has been lost from before the word, and that it should be רָבּוּ שָׁמְרוּ, they did not observe or keep his word. Or the words may be spoken of Moses and Aaron: they received the commandment of God, and they did not rebel against it. They believed what He had spoken, and acted according to His orders. It could not be spoken of the Egyptians; for they rebelled against His words through the whole course of the transactions.

Verse 33. He smote their vines also, and their fig trees] This is not mentioned in Exodus: but we have had it before, Psalm lxxviii. 47.

Verse 41. He opened the rock, and the waters gushed out] See the note on Exod. xvii. 6; to which I can now add, that a piece of this rock, broken off by the hand of my nephew, E. S. A. Clarke, in the course of the present year, 1822, now lies before me. It is fine granite; and so well distinguished as a granite, that the feldt-spar, the mica, and the quartz, of which granite is composed, appear very distinctly. It is worthy of remark,—that as granite is supposed, in the most accredited systems of geology, to be the very basis of the earth, the original rock, and all other substances to be superimpositions upon it; and that the decompositions of the feldt-spar produce pure vegetable earth;—that this rock should be used for this purpose, and should be an emblem of Jesus Christ, the Creator and Redeemer of the human race; that it should signify Him who is the basis of all things, and upholds all by the word of His power: without whom nothing is stable, nothing fruitful; from whom alone the water of life proceeds, and in whose name only is salvation! And that rock (in the wilderness) was Christ! and is the only remaining emblem of Him in creation.

Verse 45. That they might observe his statutes] That they might be properly instructed, and properly disciplined. This is the end proposed by Divine revelation:—men are to be made wise unto salvation, and then to be brought under the yoke of obedience. He who is not conformed to God's word shall not enter into Christ's kingdom.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FIFTH PSALM.

The title of this Psalm is Hallelujah, as are also the two following; and the first fifteen verses of it were sung at the bringing up of the ark by David, 1 Chron. xvi.

The scope of it is the same with the two former Psalms, That we praise God: but yet with this difference in the one hundred and third, That he be magnified for his benefits of redemption; in the hundred and fourth, For the manifestation of his power and providences in creating, governing, and sustaining the world. But in this, for the gracious covenant he made with Abraham, and in him with his whole church.

- I. An exhortation to praise God, ver. 1—7.
 - II. An enumeration of the favours God bestowed to persuade to it, from verse 7 to the end.
 - I. He that loves his prince truly desires also that others should magnify and honour him.—This was David's case: he was a true lover of his God, and set a true estimate upon Him. He honoured and praised God himself; and desired that others should do the same outwardly and inwardly; heart and tongue; he thought all too little, and therefore he repeats the duty often, and shews how it is to be done.
 1. By giving of thanks. O give thanks unto the Lord.
 2. By invocation. Call upon his name.
 3. By communication. Make known his deeds among the people.
 4. By voices, psalms, and hymns. Sing unto him: sing psalms unto him.
 5. By frequent colloquies of His works. Talk ye of all his wondrous works.
 6. By boasting of Him. Glory ye in his holy name.
- Profess that you are happy men, that God's holy name was ever made known to you. He that glories let him glory in the Lord, 2 Cor. xi.

He invites all outwardly to exhibit praise; and now he advises that it be done inwardly also, with exultation and gladness of heart.

1. Let the heart of them rejoice. The holy spirit does not sing but out of a joyous heart.

2. Let them seek the Lord. For, indeed, they only who seek Him rejoice heartily: they can acquiesce in God, in His promises of grace, pardon, and acceptance; which is so necessary to every one who will make his approaches to the throne of grace, and have his praise rendered acceptable, that the prophet seriously urges the duty.

1. Seek the Lord. Cast all impiety and wickedness away: seek Him.

2. Seek his strength. Which at that time was the ark, it being the symbol of His presence. Seek Him in His church.

3. Seek his face evermore. His favour, and grace, and reconciliation; seek them in His word and sacraments, &c.

4. Evermore seek him. Now and then is too little; it must be our constant work.

Having thus spoken of the heart, he comes to the memory. Remember, forget not. And the things to be remembered are:—1. His marvellous works. 2. His wonders. 3. His judgments. Which three are the substance of this whole Psalm, and are explained according to their heads. They ought to be particularly remembered by the Israelites, the posterity of Abraham, and the sons of Jacob.

Remember his marvellous works, &c. O ye seed of Abraham, his servant; ye children of Jacob, his chosen. Remember that he made Abraham, and chose Jacob, to be His servants, gave you laws, and shewed you with what rites He would be worshipped. Forget them not.

II. But at the seventh verse the prophet begins his narration; and tells the Israelites, and in them us, what marvellous works God has done for His people, all which he presses as arguments to his people that they should praise, honour, worship and obey Him. There is much reason for it.

1. He is the Lord our God. The same argument presses the commandments. I am the Lord thy God.

2. His judgments are in all the earth. He is a mighty Monarch, and has all nature under His empire.

And if neither of these move, yet there is another drawn from His many and infinite favours. On ye Israelites, and all mankind as well; for on the fall of man his covenant was, That the seed of the woman should break the serpent's head; and this be forgot not. He that remembered his covenant, &c.

1. Which covenant he made with Abraham, and confirmed it by sacrifice, Gen. xv. 13.

2. His oath unto Isaac, Gen. xxvi. 3, 4.

3. And confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, &c. Gen. xxviii. 13, 14, 15.

4. The form of the covenant recited:—Saying, Unto thee will I give, &c. for it was divided to the tribes by lots.

Which covenant God made with their fathers and them, not out of any merit that could be in them, Deut. viii. 4, 5, 6. Josh. xxiv. 2.

1. When they were but a few men and humble; ye, very few.

2. And they strangers in the land. For the patriarchs only sojourned in Canaan.

3. Yes, when they went from one nation to another, &c. Now when they were in this condition, very few strangers, sojourners, and pilgrims, God protected and defended them.

1. He suffered no man to do them wrong, &c. no not the greatest, for he reprov'd even kings for their sakes.

2. For He gave the command, Touch not mine anointed. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who were anointed with the Holy Ghost, though not with material oil; and do my prophets no harm, i. e. the same men, for they were prophets. Abraham foresaw the bondage of his seed in Egypt; Isaac foretold what should befall Esau's posterity, Gen. xxvii. Jacob by a prophetic spirit gave his blessings, Gen. xlix. Of Abraham it is expressly said, He is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee, Gen. xx. 7.

Two of these mercies, the covenant and protection, are already named; and now he goes on and insists upon the third, verses 16—23, for which there was infinite matter of praise for the wonderful wisdom of God, that brought out of the greatest evils the chiefest good, by preserving their lives in Egypt in the midst of famine, Gen. xxxvii.

1. Moreover he called for a famine upon the land. It came not by chance.

2. He brake the whole staff of bread. The upholder of our lives; and this He brake when He ordered that there should be no ploughing, sowing, nor harvest, Gen. xiv.

3. By this famine the patriarchs were to suffer; yet God provided for their subsistence. He sent a man, a wise man, before them—Joseph.

4. This Joseph was sold by the envy and cruelty of his brethren.

And now he comes,—1. To his base usage. 2. His advancement.

1. By the false accusation of Potiphar's wife, who turned her base love into hatred. His feet were hurt with fetters of iron.

2. He was laid in iron; or, as some read, the iron entered into his soul. Grief that he should lie under foul aspersions.

There he lay. Until the time that his word came. So long then he lay in prison, and no longer.

1. Until the time his word came;—His word—God's word for his deliverance. Or, as others; Joseph's word to the butler.

2. The word of the Lord tried him. God tried his patience; or, the interpretation of the dreams proved that the Lord he spake.

And now follows his honour and advancement.

1. Pharaoh, by his butler, hearing of Joseph's wisdom. He sent, &c.

2. Even the ruler of the people let him go free. A work fit for a king.

And his advancement follows:—

1. He made him lord of his house.

2. A ruler of all his substance. A viceroy, a grand vizier.

The king's end in it: not only in the famine to provide bread for their bodies, but for the good of their souls.

1. To punish the rebellious. To bind his princes at his pleasure.

2. To instruct his counsellors in wisdom, arts, sciences, religion. It is supposed that all the learning in which the Egyptians excelled was first taught them by Joseph.

The fourth benefit follows of God towards His people, ver. 22—37, which was their nourishment, increase in Egypt, their oppression and deliverance.

1. He begins with Jacob's descent thither:—1. Israel also, Joseph's father, went down into Egypt, Gen. xiv. 2. And Jacob with all his family, &c.

2. He proceeds with their strange increase there; for it is wonderful that in so short a time they should grow into such a multitude, Exod. xvii. At their going out they were six hundred thousand, besides children, Exod. xii. 37. And he increased his people greatly, and made them stronger than their enemies, Exod. i. 9.

This was the occasion of their afflictions, bondage, and sufferings; for

1. He turned the Egyptians' heart to hate his people. He suffered them to be turned. For there arose another king, &c.

2. And to deal subtilly with his people. Come on, say they, &c.

To set over them task-masters, &c., Exod. i. 11. But when they saw that the more they afflicted them, the more they multiplied, ver. 12; then they ordered, that all the male children should be strangled by the midwives, ver. 16. And when even this would not do, then Pharaoh charged that every son that was born, &c. ver. 22. Thus subtilly they dealt: but it did not hinder their multiplication. There is no counsel against God.

Now God, seeing their affliction, and hearing their groans, sent them a deliverer.

1. He sent Moses his servant, and Aaron whom he had chosen.

2. They shewed his signs among them. 1. To the Israelites. And wonders in the land of Ham.

The catalogue follows:—

1. He sent darkness, &c.

2. He turned their waters into blood, &c.

3. The land brought forth frogs, &c.

4. He spake, and there came divers sorts of flies, &c.

5. He gave them hail for rain, &c.

6. He smote the vines also, and the fig trees, &c.

7. He spake, and the locusts came, &c.

8. He smote also the firstborn of their land, &c.

These were the wonders that God wrought in Egypt by the hand of Moses and Aaron for the deliverance of His people, which the Psalmist briefly records that they might remember, be thankful, and praise Him.

The fifth benefit that the Psalmist records is, that God brought not out His people beggars, but enriched them with the spoils of Egypt.

1. He brought them forth with silver and gold. For they were sent by God to ask jewels; and when the Jews pretend by their example to rob more honest men than themselves, when they can shew an immediate commission

PSALM CVI.

God is praised for His merciful mercies, 1-3. The prophet prays for himself, 4, 5. A recapitulation of the history of the Hebrew people; of God's mercies towards them, and their rebellions, 6-38. The judgments and afflictions which their transgressions brought upon them, 39-52. God's mercy to them notwithstanding their transgressions, 53-58. He prays for their restoration, 57, 58.

XXI. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

PRAISE ye the LORD. O give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

2 Who can utter the mighty acts of the LORD? who can shew forth all his praise?

3 Blessed are they that keep judgment, and that doeth righteousness at all times.

a Heb. Hallelujah.—b 1 Chron. 16. 34.—c Psa. 107. 1. & 118. 1. & 132. 1.—d Psa. 68. 5.—e Psa. 132.

from God to do it, I am content that they borrow and never restore: rob and spoil whom they please. Till this be shewn, they are thieves and sacrilegious persons.

2. Farther, they left the Egyptians afflicted with some strange disease, of which their firstborn had died; yet they were healthy. There was not one, no not one, feeble person among them.

The terror of them was so great, and the fear of death so instant, that regarding not their jewels, they urged them to be gone,—they thrust them out; which the prophet expresses,—Egypt was glad when they departed.

The sixth benefit follows after their departure, which was the pillar of cloud by day, and of fire by night. He spread a cloud for a covering, &c. which most interpret as if the cloud kept off the heat of the sun; and, therefore, the prophet says,—He spread it for a covering.

The seventh benefit was quails and manna.

1. The people asked, and he brought quails. Those given Exod. xvi.

2. And satisfied them with the bread of heaven. Manna, because it was made of the sweet dew descending from the air, and therefore called heavenly bread; the earth having nothing to do with its production.

The eighth benefit was the water out of the rock; for they travelled through a dry wilderness.

1. He opened the rock. He did not turn the rock into water, but opened a passage for the fountain He had made.

2. For the waters gushed out upon the passage made for them.

3. And they ran in dry places.

Now here he inserts the reason both of the former and latter benefits,—which was his covenant and promise to Abraham. For he remembered his holy promise, &c.

The ninth benefit was, He brought them not only out of Egypt; but that too in such a manner, that they had reason to exult and triumph, Exod. xv. And he brought forth his people with joy, &c.

And, to make the number of His benefits complete, He adds a tenth, which was the exact fulfilling of His promise, His introduction of them into Canaan, ejection of the inhabitants, and the donation of their inheritances to His people, which they afterwards possessed.

He gave them the lands of the heathen, &c. The houses they built not, the vines they planted not, the lands they tilled not, fell to them.

For which benefits God requires no more than their obedience: this He requires as His due and tribute. He bestowed so many benefits on them for one end only:

That they might observe his statutes, and keep his laws. Hallelujah! Let your light so shine before men, that they may glorify your Father who is in heaven.

NOTES ON PSALM CVI.

As a part of the preceding Psalm is found in 1 Chron. xvi. so the first and two last verses of this are found in the same place, (verses 34, 35, 36,) and yet it is supposed by eminent commentators to be a prayer of the captives in Babylon, who acknowledge the mercies of God, confess their own sins and those of their forefathers, and implore the Lord to gather them from among the heathen and restore them to their own country. In none of the Versions except the Syriac has it any title, except HALLELUJAH, Praise ye the Lord, the word with which the original commences. The Syriac gives us a sort of table of its contents; or rather shews us the subjects to which it may be applied, and the uses we should make of it. After stating that it has no title, it says,—“It calls upon men to observe the Divine precepts; and teaches us that the more the Jews transgressed, the more we should fear. That we should not talk together in the church, nor ever contend with our brethren on any account; and especially when we assist in the celebration of the Divine mysteries, and in prayer; and that when we sin we should repent.” All this is very good: but it would be difficult to find these subjects in the Psalm, or any thing on which they could be rationally founded. But it shews us that the Scriptures were very easily accommodated to particular uses, not originally intended: and hence arose much of the practice of spiritualizing and allegorizing; which, to say the least of it, has been of no use to the church of Christ.

Verse 1. Praise ye the LORD] This, which is a sort of title, is wanting in several MSS., and in the Syriac Version.

O give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good] Ye who live by His bounty should praise His mercy. God is the good Being, and of all kinds of good He is the Author and Dispenser. That the term God among our Anglo-Saxon ancestors expressed both the Supreme Being and good or goodness is evident from the Anglo-Saxon version of this clause—andbetrað ðuhtne þonþon god, þonþon on þonþon miltþeocnyttre. “Confess Lord for that God; for that on world mildheartness his.” Which the old Psalter thus translates and paraphrases:—

Trans. Schreyes to Ælfric for þe is gode; for þu twiðe the merty of þim.

Paraph. Schreyes synes, and louynge to God, for he is gode of kynde, that nane do bot aske his mercy; for it lastes to the worldis ende in wriches whame it comfortes and delyvers: and the blysfulhede that is gyfen through mercy is endles. That is,—

Confess your sins, and give praise to God, for He is good in His nature to all that ask His mercy; for it lasts to the world's end in comforting and delivering the wretched: and the blessedness that is given through mercy is endless.

Verse 2. Who can utter the mighty acts of the LORD] His acts are all acts of might; and particularly those in behalf of His followers.

Verse 3. Blessed are they that keep judgment, and he that doeth righteousness at all times.] How near do the Anglo-Saxon, the ancient Scottish Version, and the present translation, approach to each other.

Anglo-Saxon, Gædig ðæbe heaðað ðom, 7 ðoð miltþyrtnyttre on miltþeocnyttre. “Blessed they that holdeth doom, and doth righteousness in ilker tide.”

Anglo-Scottish. Blisful tha that kepes dome, and duee rightwines in ilk tyme.

Those are truly blessed or happy whose hearts are devoted to God, and who live in the habit of obedience. Those, the general tenor of whose life is not conformed to the will of God, have no true happiness.

Verse 4. Remember me] This and the following clauses are read in the plural by several MSS.—Remember us,—that we may rejoice,—that we may glory, &c.: and thus all the Versions except the Chaldee; and this is more agreeable to the context.

Verse 5. That I may see the good of thy chosen] That I may enjoy the good, for so the word see is understood among the Hebrews. Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God: they shall enjoy Him, possess His favour, and be made like unto Him.

Verse 6. We have sinned] Here the confession begins; what preceded was only the introduction to what follows:—Our forefathers sinned, and suffered; we, like them, have sinned, and do suffer.

Verse 7. Our fathers understood not] They did not regard the operation of God's hands; and therefore they understood neither His designs nor their own interest.

At the sea, even at the Red sea.] Some of the Rabbins suppose that the repetition of the words point out two faults of the Israelites at the Red sea. 1. They murmured against Moses for bringing them out of Egypt, when they saw the sea before them and Pharaoh behind them. 2. When the waters were divided, they were afraid to enter in lest they should stick in the mud which appeared in the bottom. The word seems to be added by way of explanation, and perhaps may refer to the above: they provoked to 7 þi þam “At the sea;” 7 þe 73 þonþon suph, “in the sea Suph,” or Red sea. They provoked Him at it, and in it.

41 And ^b he gave them into the hand of the heathen; and they that hated them ruled over them.

42 Their enemies also oppressed them, and they were brought into subjection under their hand.

43 * Many times did he deliver them; but they provoked ^c him with their counsel, and were * brought low for their iniquity.

Saxon fyren, fyren, signifies to fire, to ignite; fyrennan, fyrenan, to commit adultery. So fyren-plagen, is a prostitute, a whore, and fyren ligenman, fyren ligenian, is to go a whoring, to fornicate; probably from fyren, or fyren, to fire, and ligan to lie, or licence, a giulon, one who lies with fire,—who is ignited by it;—who is greedily intent upon the act by which he is inflamed. And do not the words themselves shew, that in former times whoredom was punished, as it is now, by a disease which produces the sensation of burning in the unhappy prostitutes, whether male or female? And to this meaning the following seems particularly to be applicable.

Verse 40. Therefore was the wrath of the LORD kindled] God kindled a fire in His judgments for those who by their flagitious conduct had inflamed themselves with their idols, and the impure rights with which they were worshipped.

Verse 43. Many times did he deliver them] See the Book of Judges:—it is a history of the rebellions and deliverances of the Israelites.

Verse 46. He made them also to be pitied] This was particularly true as to the Babylonian Captivity, for Cyrus gave them their liberty; Darius favoured them, and granted them several privileges; and Artaxerxes sent back Nehemiah, and helped him to rebuild Jerusalem and the temple. See the books of Ezra and Nehemiah; and see Calmet.

Verse 47. Save us, O LORD—and gather us] These words, says Calmet, are found in the hymn that was sung at the ceremony of bringing the ark to Jerusalem, 1 Chron. xvi.: but it is supposed they were added by Ezra or some other prophet;—here they are in their natural place. The author of the Psalm begs the Lord to gather the Israelites who were dispersed through different countries; for, at the dedication of the second temple, under Nehemiah, (where it is probable this Psalm, with the cvth and the cvith, were sung) there were very few Jews who had as yet returned from their Captivity.

Verse 48. Blessed be the LORD God of Israel] Here both gratitude and confidence are expressed:—gratitude for what God had already wrought; and confidence that He would finish the great work of their restoration.

From everlasting to everlasting] מן עולם ועד עולם מן ה' min ha-alam, ve-ada ha-alam: "from the hidden term to the hidden term," from the beginning of time to the end of time; from eternity and on to eternity. פתח פולחב ו' ob populbe. This is the end of the fourth book of the Psalms.

ANALYSIS OF THE ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTH PSALM.
The intention of the prophet in this Psalm is to express God's long-suffering in bearing with rebellious sinners; and yet in pardoning them upon the confession of their sins, and turning to Him; both which he exemplifies by a long narration of Israel's rebellions, repentance, and turning to God; and God's dealing with them, which gave him just occasion to praise God, and to pray for His church and people.

I. An exhortation to praise God, with the reasons in general, ver. 1; and who are fit to perform this duty, ver. 2, 3.

II. A petition and prayer directed to God in his own person for the whole church, and the end of it, ver. 4, 5.

III. A confession of sin, particularly of the Israelites; together with God's patience with them, and their repentance, ver. 6 to 46.

IV. His prayer that God would collect His church out

44 Nevertheless he regarded their affliction, when ^b he heard their cry:

45 = And he remembered for them his covenant, and * repented * according to the multitude of his mercies.

46 = He made them also to be pitied of all those that carried them captives.

47 * Save us, O LORD our God, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name, and to triumph in thy praise.

48 * Blessed be the LORD God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting: and let all the people say, Amen. * Praise ye the LORD. of all nations, that they might meet and praise Him, ver. 47, 48.

I. Praise ye the Lord, O give thanks unto the Lord. To this the prophet invites, for two reasons,—

1. Because he is good. He is before hand with us, and prevents men with many benefits.

2. Because his mercy endures for ever. It is everlasting, and far exceeds our sins and miseries; for after men have offended Him, and deserve no mercy, yet He receives the penitent offenders. But who is sufficient for these things? Who fit to praise Him, and set forth His mercies? Who can utter the mighty acts of the Lord? That is, the infinite benefits exhibited to His people. Or, Who can shew forth all his praise in preserving, pardoning, and propagating His church?

They alone are happy men who keep judgment, and do righteousness at all times.

1. They are happy in prosperity and adversity; they dwell in the house of God, under His protection.

2. They keep his judgments. Follow in their lives the strict rules of Divine law, by which they judge all their actions, and so keep faith and a good conscience.

3. They do righteousness at all times. They approve that which is right, true, and just; condemn, hate, and punish what is unjust: such are fit to praise God with their tongues, because they praise Him in their lives.

II. After the prophet had invited men to praise God, and shewed who were fit to do it, he begins his petition, which he proposes in his own person for the whole church.

1. Remember me. Me: but not me alone; rather Thy whole church. By what we suffer Thou hast seemed to forget thy covenant and promise: but now call it to mind again.

2. Which I expect, not for any desert of mine, but merely from Thy good will. Remember me with the favour, &c.

3. O visit me; but not in wrath, for such a visitation there is; but in mercy and grace.

4. With thy salvation. Save me at this time from my sins, and from my present calamities.

And to this end I desire Thy favour, Thy salvation.

1. That I may see the good of thy chosen. Be a partaker of and in their happiness.

2. That I may rejoice in the gladness of the nation. Partake it.

3. That I may glory with thine inheritance. Glorify Thee with them.

But observe here the three eminent titles given to God's church,—

1. They are a chosen people; which is a glorious and gracious title, and intimates favour.

2. They are his nation, his peculiar people.

3. They are his inheritance.

III. In the following part of the Psalm, from ver. 7 to 46, he makes use of a new argument to move God to mercy. He represents not the present condition the people of God are in; not their captivity, miseries, and afflictions; but ingenuously confesses how they had offended God, and how justly they suffered.

1. We have sinned with our fathers. Trodden in their steps, and filled up the measure of their sins.

2. We have committed iniquity. Not only from infirmity, but choice.

3. We have done wickedly. The intent and purpose in it was evil. And by these three steps he exaggerates the sin;—the act, the frequency, the intent; as every true confessionist to God ought never to extenuate, but to aggravate the offence against himself.

And because he had mentioned their fathers at large, now he instances their rebellions. Our fathers understood not thy wonders in Egypt, that is, they laid them not to heart.

1. They remembered not the multitude of thy mercies, &c. When they saw Pharaoh's army on one side, and the

As on the other, they grew heartless, diffident, and murmured.

2. This was their sin at that time : but God was then merciful to them. Nevertheless he saved them.

For which he assigns two reasons :—

1. For his name's sake. To advance His glory and honour.

2. That he might make his mighty power to be known. Pharaoh and the Egyptians might have taken notice of it by the plagues He had already brought upon them.

In the following verses, by a distribution, he shews the manner of their deliverance,—

1. By God's rebuke, and drying up of the sea. He rebuked the Red sea also, &c.

2. By the unheard of way ; He led them through the depths as through the wilderness ; there was no more water there to offend them than in the sands of Arabia.

3. By the consequence of it. And he saved them by the hand of him, &c.

4. And the waters covered their enemies, &c.

The effect was, that for the present,—

1. It extorted from them a confession that God was true in His promises. Then believed they his words.

2. It excited them to praise Him. They sang his praise, Exod. xv. But these very men, who were forced to confess His power, and sing His praises for the overthrow of Pharaoh in the Red sea, were scarcely departed from those banks, when they, for want of a little bread and water, grow as impatient and distrustful as they were before.

1. They made haste to forget. They soon forgot : which aggravates their sin.

2. They forgot his omnipotence, his providence.

3. They waited not for his counsel. With patience they expected not the end, why God in His wisdom suffered them now to want, which was to prove their faith, hope, and love.

4. And what they did at this time, they did also at others. For they lusted exceedingly in the wilderness.

Now God yielded to these desires of the people. He gave them bread, flesh, and water.

1. And he gave them their request, Exod. xvi. 12.

2. But he sent leanness into their souls. Which certainly has reference to the quails in Numb. xi. 20, and 33, where the people ate, and died with the plague.

Another rebellion the prophet now touches, which was when they rose up against the king and the priest.

1. They envied also Moses in the camp ; objecting that he had usurped a power over them, and taken it upon his own head.

2. And Aaron the saint of the Lord. He whom God had chosen, and sanctified to the priest's office.

The punishment follows, Numb. xvi.

1. The earth opened, and swallowed up Dathan, and covered the congregation of Abiram.

2. And a fire was kindled in their company : the same burned up the wicked. That is, the two hundred and fifty men that presumed to offer incense ; and presently after the fourteen thousand seven hundred that murmured, and objected to Moses and Aaron that they had killed the people of the Lord.

Still the prophet goes on in his story of Israel's stubbornness and rebellion ; and comes to their grand sin, their idolatry in erecting the golden calf, Exod. xxxii.

1. They made a calf in Horeb, &c. contrary to God's command.

2. Thus they changed their glory. That is, the true God, who indeed was their glory, into the similitude of an ox, a brute beast that eateth grass ; a base creature ; which much aggravates their sin.

3. But the prophet aggravates their stupidity and folly. They forgot God, &c.

In the following verse is expressed God's just anger and mercy,—

1. His anger against their sins. Therefore he saith, &c. Pronounced His will to destroy them.

2. His mercy, in that He spared them at the intercession of Moses. Had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the breach. That breach and division which this sin had made between God and his people, like that in the wall of a besieged town, in which some valiant captain stands and opposes himself against the assault of the enemy ; so did Moses.

For his end was the same, it was to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy ; and the effect was answerable,—it was turned away.

Further yet he calls to mind a new rebellion, which fell out upon the report of the spies sent to search the land, Numb. xiii. 26, &c. and xiv.

1. They despised the pleasant land, and wished to return into Egypt, Numb. xiv. 1.—5.

2. They believed not his word ; for they said, Hath the Lord brought us, &c.

3. But murmured in their tents, and hearkened not, &c. Numb. xiv. 10. As their sin, so their punishment, is extant, Numb. xiv. 29. Therefore he lift up his hand against them, &c. Your carcases shall fall in the wilderness ; ye shall not come into the land.

This punishment fell upon the murmurers themselves ; but if their children should be guilty of the like rebellion, they should not escape, for they too should be overthrown ; which is fully brought to pass.

The prophet joins to that of the golden calf another piece of idolatry in the wilderness, to which there was joined fornication also, by the counsel of Balaam, and the policy of Balak. This caused them to eat and sacrifice to their god, Numb. xxv. which the prophet next insists upon,

1. They joined themselves to Baal-peor, because the idol was set up upon that mountain.

2. And ate the offerings of the dead. They left the sacrifice of the living God, and ate those meats offered to dead idols.

Upon which there followed God's wrath, and their punishment :—

1. God was angry. For they provoked him to wrath.

2. And the plague brake in upon them, like mighty waters, or as an army into a city at a breach ; for there died of it twenty-four thousand, Numb. xxv. 9.

In the former idolatry, God's anger was averted by the intercession of Moses ; in this, by the execution of judgment by Phinehas ; for—

1. There stood up Phinehas ; moved, no question, with a zeal for God's honour.

2. And he executed judgment upon Zimri and Cozbi ; for which, let men conceive as they please, I see nothing to the contrary that he had his commission from Moses, or rather God, Numb. xxv. 4, 5.

3. The event was, the plague was stayed :—the execution of offenders pacifies the anger of God.

Which zeal of his was well rewarded. This was accounted to him for righteousness, &c. And an ample reward he had for it ; for God established the dignity of the high priesthood in Phinehas and his posterity, as long as the Jewish commonwealth continued.

The prophet comes to another remarkable sin of the Jews, Numb. xx. where the people chid Moses for want of water :

1. They angered him also at the waters of strife, when they contradicted Moses.

2. So that it went ill with Moses for their sakes ; for, being disturbed with choler, he spake unadvisedly with his lips,—Hear now, ye rebels, &c. ; and he smote the rock. By their murmuring they so provoked his spirit to bitterness, that he who at other times was cheerful, and ready to obey God's commands, now acted with reluctance.

Hitherto the prophet has set down seven several rebellions of the Jews during their abode in the wilderness ; and now he shews how they behaved themselves after they came into the land of Canaan. Better, a man would think, they should be after God had fulfilled His word to them ; but an Æthiopian cannot change his skin, nor they their manners ; disobedient, stubborn, and rebellious, they remained.

1. God had expressly commanded that the nations of Canaan should be destroyed, Deut. vii. 1, 2, 3. But they did not destroy the nations, &c.

2. But they mingled among the heathen. In leagues and marriages, Judg. ii. and iii.

3. And learned their works. Many superstitions and evil customs.

But, beyond all, they learned to be idolaters ; forsook God for the devil.

1. They served their idols, which was a snare unto them, for that they became their slaves, Judg. ii., &c.

2. Yea, they sacrificed their sons, &c. to Moloch.

3. With inhuman sin, they shed innocent blood : the blood of innocent children, &c.

The consequences of which are double. First, A double pollution. Secondly, a heavy punishment.

1. A pollution of the land. The land was defiled with blood.

2. A pollution of their own souls. Thus were they defiled with their own works.

The judgment, or punishment, now follows ; and a signification whence it proceeded : it came not by chance, but by God's order and anger.

1. Therefore was the wrath of the Lord kindled, &c. For their idolatry, murder, whoredom ; so that he was not only angry, but His anger was kindled to a flame.

2. Inasmuch that he abhorred his own inheritance.

And the punishment He took upon them was very just,—

1. He gave them into the hand, that is, the power, of

PSALMS.

PSALM CVII.

A Thanksgiving of the people for deliverance from difficulties and dangers; their state compared to a journey through a frightful wilderness, 1-9; to confinement in a dreary dungeon, 10-16; to a dangerous malady, 17-21; to a tempest at sea, 22-28. The Psalmist calls on men to praise God for the merciful dispensation of his providence, in giving rain and fruitful seasons, after afflictions by drought and famine, 29-34. For supporting the soul in affliction, and bringing down the oppressor, 35-41. The man which the righteous should make of them, 42-43. And the advantage to be derived from a close consideration of God's merciful providence, 44.

XIII. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

O GIVE thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

the heathen. God had given the heathen into their hands to destroy them; which, because they did not, but learned their works, therefore God gave them into the hands of the heathen.

2. He made them their lords; and hard masters they were, as plainly appears from the Book of Judges, and 1 Samuel.

And little they; for the prophet in the next verse adds, 1. Their enemies oppressed them. Tyrants, oppressors, they were. Read the Book of Judges, &c.

2. They were brought into subjection, &c. under the Philistines, Moabites, Ammonites, &c.

In which condition God did not forget them, for many times did he deliver them; not once only, but often, as by Gideon, Jephthah, Deborah, Samson, and others. But, O the ingratitude of a sinful nation! Instead of serving God, they provoked him with their counsel, that is, by following the dictates of their own hearts.

And so were very justly brought into the same case they were before; for—they were brought low for their iniquity.

And now the prophet adds, which indeed he infers through the whole Psalm, the wonderful and immutable goodwill of God to them. Though He forgave and delivered them upon their repentance, and they in a short time provoked Him again; yet He received them to grace, even after their relapses. And the causes that moved Him to this were external and internal.

The cause that outwardly and occasionally moved Him to it was their affliction and cry. He regarded their affliction, &c.

But the cause that inwardly swayed Him was His word passed to them, and His mercy.

1. His word and His promise were passed to Abraham, to be their God; and He would not break it. And he remembered for them his covenant.

2. His tender affection that He bare them; this caused Him to repent, and grieve that they should be in misery. He repented, &c.

3. And the effect which all these causes had was beneficial to them in their bondage and captivity; for even their very enemies' hearts were often turned to do them good, as is evident in Jeremiah, David, Daniel, Ezra, Zerubbabel, Mordecai, and indeed the whole nation under the Babylonian, Philitian, Egyptian, and Persian kings, which the prophet sets down, ver. 46. He made them also to be pitied of all those that carried them captives. According to the saying of the wise man, When a man's ways please God, he will make his very enemies at peace with him. Prov. xvi. 7.

4. And this sense makes the way plainer to what follows, the petition and the doxology; for if God shewed Himself merciful in the time of His anger, and made it apparent even to the very view of their enemies, encouragement they might have,—

1. To pray. Save us, O Lord our God, and gather us from among the heathen, &c.

2. Then to give thanks.—1. Blessed be the Lord God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting. 2. And for it let the people do their duty; that is, the solemn and necessary forms. Let all the people say Amen. Hallelujah.

NOTES ON PSALM CVII.

This Psalm has no title, either in the Hebrew, or any of the Versions: the word Hallelujah, which is prefixed to some of the latter, is no title; but was most probably borrowed from the conclusion of the preceding Psalm. The author is unknown: but it was probably made (like Psalms cv. and cvi.) and sung at the dedication of the second temple. The three Psalms seem to be on the same subject. In them the author has comprized the marvellous acts of the Lord towards His people; the transgressions of this people against God; the captivities and miseries they endured in consequence; and finally God's merciful kindness to them in their restoration from captivity, and re-establishment in their own land.

This Psalm seems to have been sung in parts: the 8th, 15th, 21st, and 31st verses, with the 6th, 13th, 19th, and 28th, forming what may be called the burden of the song. In singing of which the whole chorus joined.

2 Let the redeemed of the Lord say so, whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy;

3 And gathered them out of the lands, from the east, and from the west, from the north, and from the south.

4 They wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way; they found no city to dwell in.

5 Hungry and thirsty, their soul fainted in them.

d Ps. 106. 47. Is. 42. 5. Jer. 28. 14. & 31. 9. 10. Eccl. 26. 27, 28.—e Heb. from the sea.—f Ver. 10.—g Deut. 28. 10.

We may easily perceive that the Psalm must have been sung in alternate parts, having a double burden, or intercalary verse often recurring, and another immediately following, giving a reason for the former. See the 8th and 9th, the 15th and 16th, the 21st and 22d, the 31st and 32d, and the 42d and 43d, may be reckoned under the same denomination.

Dr. Lowth, in his 29th prelection, has made some excellent remarks on this Psalm. "It is observable," says he, "that after each of the intercalary verses one is added, expressive of deliverance or praise. I would farther observe, that if the Psalm be supposed to be made with a view to the alternate response of one side of the choir to the other, then it may be considered as if it were written exactly after the method of the ancient pastorals, where, be the subject of their verse what it will, each strain endeavours to excel the other; and one may perceive their thoughts and expressions gradually to arise upon each other; and hence a manifest beauty may be discovered in this Divine pastoral. We will suppose, then, that the author composed it for the use of his brethren the Jews, when, in the joy of their hearts, they were assembled after their return from captivity. At such a time, what theme could be so proper for the subject of his poem, as the manifest goodness of Almighty God. The first performers, therefore, invite the whole nation to praise God for this; a great instance of it being their late return from captivity. At verse 10, the other side take the subject; and rightly observe that the return of their great men, who were actually in chains, was a more remarkable instance of God's mercy to them, than the return of the people in general, who were only dispersed, we may suppose, up and down the open country. Then the first performers beautifully compare this unexpected deliverance to that which God sometimes vouchsafes to the languishing dying man, when he recalls, as it were, the sentence of death, and restores him to his former vigour. The others again compare it, with still greater strength and expression, to God's delivering the affrighted mariner from all the dreadful horrors of the ungovernable and arbitrary ocean. But the first, still resolved to outdo the rest, recur to that series of wonderful works, which God had vouchsafed to their nation, verse 32, and of which they had so lately said a convincing proof. Wherefore at last, as in a common chorus, they all conclude with exhorting each other to a serious consideration of these things, and to make a proper return to Almighty God for them.

"No doubt the composition of this Psalm is admirable throughout; and the descriptive part of it adds at least its share of beauty to the whole: but what is most to be admired is its conciseness, and withal the expressiveness of the diction, which strikes the imagination with inimitable elegance. The weary and bewildered traveller,—the miserable captive in the hideous dungeons,—the sick and dying man,—the seaman foundering in a storm—are described in so affecting a manner, that they far exceed any thing of the kind, though never so much laboured." I may add that had such an Kyji appeared in Theocritus or Virgil—or had it been found as a scene in any of the Greek tragedians, even in Æschylus himself, it would have been praised up to the heavens, and probably been produced as their masterpiece.

Verse 1. O give thanks] Here is a duty prescribed; and the reasons of it are immediately laid down. 1. He is good. This is His nature. 2. His mercy endureth for ever. This is the stream that flows from the fountain of His goodness.

Verse 2. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so] For they have had the fullest proof of this goodness, in being saved by the continuing stream of His mercy.

Verse 3. And gathered them out of the lands] Though many Jews returned into Jerusalem from various parts of the world, under the reigns of Darius Hystaspes, Artaxerxes, and Alexander the Great; yet this prophecy has its completion only under the Gospel, when all the ends of the earth hear the salvation of God.

Verse 4. They wandered in the wilderness] Here begins the first comparison; the Israelites in captivity are compared to a traveller in a dreary, uninhabited, and barren desert, spent with hunger and thirst, as well as by the fatigues of the journey, ver. 5.

Verse 6. Then they cried unto the Lord] When the Israelites began to pray heartily, and the eyes of all the tribes were as the eyes of one man turned unto the Lord, then He delivered them out of their distresses.

Verse 7. That they might go to a city of habitation.] God stirred up the heart of Cyrus to give them liberty to return to their own land: and Zerubbabel, Ezra, and Nehemiah, at different times, brought many of them back to Judea.

Verse 8. Oh that men would praise the Lord] This is what is called the intercalary verse, or burden of each part of this responsive song:—see the Introduction. God should be praised because He is good. We naturally speak highly of those who are eminent. God is infinitely excellent, and should be celebrated for His perfections. But He does wonders for the children of men; and, therefore, men should praise the Lord. And He is the more to be praised, because these wonders נִפְלְאוֹת niphlaotey, miracles of mercy and grace, are done for the undeserving. They are done לְבֵנֵי אָדָם libeny Adam, for the children of Adam, the corrupt descendants of a rebel father.

Verse 9. For he satisfieth the longing soul] This is the reason which the Psalmist gives for the duty of thankfulness which he prescribes. The longing soul נִפְּשָׁה שׁוֹקֵקָה nephesh shokekah, the soul that pushes forward in eager desire after salvation.

Verse 10. Such as sit in darkness] Here begins the second similitude, which he uses to illustrate the state of the captives in Babylon, viz. that of a prisoner in a dreary dungeon. 1. They sit in, or inhabit darkness. They have no light, no peace, no prosperity. 2. In the shadow of death. The place where death reigns, over which he has projected his shadow;—those against whom the sentence of death has been pronounced. 3. They are bound in this darkness:—have no liberty to revisit the light, and cannot escape from their executioners. 4. They are afflicted, not only by want and privation in general, but they are tortured in the prison, by they, afflicted, humbled, distressed. 5. Their fetters are such as they cannot break; they are iron. The reason of their being in this wretched state is given.

Verse 11. Because they rebelled against the words of God] 1. God shewed them their duty and their interest, and commanded them to obey His word: but they cast off all subjection to His authority, acted as if they were independent of heaven and earth, and broke out into open rebellion against Him. 2. He counselled and exhorted them to return to Him: but they contemned His advice, and turned His counsel into ridicule. 3. As lenient means were ineffectual, He visited them in judgment: Hence it is added,

Verse 12. He brought down their heart with labour] He delivered them into the hands of their enemies; and, as they would not be under subjection to God, He delivered them into slavery to wicked men. So they fell down, and there was none to help: God had forsaken them because they had forsaken Him.

Verse 13. Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble] This was the salutary effect which their afflictions produced: they began to cry to God for mercy and help; and God mercifully heard their prayer, and reversed their state; for,

Verse 14. He brought them out of darkness] 1. Gave them again peace and prosperity. 2. Repealed the sentence of death. 3. Unbound the poor prisoners. 4. By breaking their iron bonds in sunder.

Verse 15. Oh that men, &c.] This is the intercalary verse, or burden of the second part, as it was of the first. See verse 8.

Verse 16. For he hath broken] This is the reason given for thanks to God for His deliverance of the captives. It was not a simple deliverance; it was done so as to manifest the irresistible power of God. He tore the prison in pieces, and cut the bars of iron asunder.

Verse 17. Fools because of their transgression] This is the third comparison; the Captivity being compared to a person in a dangerous malady. Our Version does not express this clause well. Fools מִדַּעַם miderech pishelm, because of the way of their transgressions, are afflicted. Most human maladies are the fruits of sin; misery and sin are married together in bonds that can never be broken.

Verse 13. Their soul abhorreth all manner of meat] A natural description of a sick man: appetite is gone, and all desire for food fails; nutriment is no longer necessary, for death has seized upon the whole frame. See a similar image, Job xxxiii. 20.

Verse 19. Then they cry] The effect produced by affliction as before.

Verse 20. He sent his word, and healed them] He spoke, Be thou clean, be thou whole; and immediately the disease departed; and thus they were delivered from the destructions that awaited them.

Verse 21. Oh that men, &c.] The intercalary verse, or burden, as before.

Verse 22. And let them sacrifice] For their healing they should bring a sacrifice; and they should offer the life of the innocent animal unto God, as He has spared their lives; and let them thus confess that God has spared them when they deserved to die; and let them declare also His works with rejoicing;—for who will not rejoice when he is delivered from death!

Verse 23. They that go down to the sea in ships] This is the fourth comparison. Their captivity was as dangerous and alarming as a dreadful tempest at sea to a weather-beaten mariner.

Verse 24. These see the works of the Lord] Splendid, divinely impressive, and glorious, in fine weather.

His wonders in the deep.] Awfully terrible in a tempest.

Verse 25. For he commandeth] And what less than the command of God can raise up such winds, as seem to have old ocean from his bed.

Verse 26. They mount up to the heaven] This is a most natural and striking description of the state of a ship at sea in a storm: when the sea literally runs mountains high, and often the vessel seems for a moment to stand on the sharp ridge of one most stupendous, with a valley of a thousand fathoms deep between it and a similar mountain, which appears to be flying in the midst of heaven, that it may submerge the hapless bark, when she descends into the valley of death below. This is a sight the most terrific that can be conceived: nor can any man conceive or form an adequate idea of it, who has not himself been at sea in such a storm.

Their soul is melted because of trouble. This is not less expressive than it is descriptive. The very action of raising the vessel to the clouds and precipitating her into the abyss, seems to dissolve the very soul: the whole mind seems to melt away, so that neither feeling, reflection, nor impression remains, but the mere apprehension of inevitable destruction! When the ship is buffeted between conflicting waves, which threaten either to tear her asunder, or crush her together—when she reels to and fro, and staggers like a drunken man, not being able to hold any certain course—when sails and masts are an encumbrance, and the helm of no use—when all hope of safety is taken away; and when the experienced captain, the skilful pilot, and the hardy sailors, cry out with a voice more terrible than the cry of fire at midnight, We are all lost! we are all lost!—Then, indeed, are they at their wit's end; or, as the inimitable original expresses it, כל כחכם וכל חוכמתם תבלל, "And all their skill is swallowed up"—seems to be gulped down by the frightful abyss into which the ship is about to be precipitated. Then, indeed, can the hand of God alone bring them out of their distresses. Then, a cry to the Almighty, (and in such circumstances it is few that can lift up such a cry), is the only means that can be used to save the perishing wreck! Reader, dost thou ask why I paint thus? and from whose authority I describe? I answer, not from any books describing storms, tempests, and shipwrecks—not from the relations of shipwrecked mariners—not from viewing from the shore a tempest at sea, and seeing a vessel beat to pieces, and all its crew (one excepted) perish. Descriptions of this kind I have read; with the shipwrecked mariner I have conversed;—the last scene mentioned above, I have witnessed. But none of these could give the fearful impressions, the tremendous and soul-melting apprehensions, described above.—"Where then, have you had them?" I answer, From the great deep. I have been at sea in the storm, and in the circumstances I describe: and, having cried to the Lord in my trouble, I am spared to describe the storm, and recount the tale of His mercy. None but either a man inspired by God, who, in describing, will shew things as they are; or one who has been actually in these circumstances; can tell you with what propriety the Psalmist speaks; or utter the thousandth part of the dangers and fearful apprehensions of all concerned in a tempest at sea; where all the winds of heaven seem collected to urge an already crazy vessel among the most tremendous rocks, upon a lee shore! God save the Reader from such circumstances!

When, in the vicissitudes of the wind,
 He takes the ruffian billows by the top,
 Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging them,
 With ominous clamours, on the slippery crown,
 Thus with the lucky death itself awakes!—Isa. 17.

A storm at sea—the lifting the vessel to the clouds—her sinking into the vast marine valleys—the melting of the soul—the being at their wit's end, are well touched by several of the ancient poets. See particularly Virgil's description of the storm that dispersed the fleet of Æneas, who was himself not unacquainted with the dangers of the sea.

Tollens in calum curvato gurgite, et idem
 Subducit ad mœnes imos descendunt undæ.

Now on a towering arch of waves we rise,
 Hear'd on the bounding billows to the skies;
 Then, as the roaring surge retreating fell,
 We shoot down headlong to the gates of hell.—Pitt.

*Racter in incerto est, nequid fugiat, potestis,
 Insensit: ambiguit are stupet ipse malis.*

"The pilot himself is in doubt what danger to shun, or whether to steer for safety he knows not: his skill is nonplumbed by the choices of the difficulties before him."

See more in the Analysis.

Verse 29. He maketh the storm a calm] He causes the storm to stand dumb; and hushes the waves. See the original, where senses and sound emphatically meet

קם סערה ליםמה יחשו נללו
 galphum se-yechooch il-damalsh seer'ah yalshu

He shall cause the whirlwind to stand dumb, and he shall hush their billows.

Verse 30. Then are they glad because they be quiet] The turbulence of the sea being hushed, and the waves still, they rejoice to see an end to the tempest; and thus, having fine weather, a smooth sea, and fair wind, they are speedily brought to the desired haven.

Verse 31. Oh that men! The intercalary verse, or burden, as before. See verse 8.

Verse 32. Let them exalt him also in the congregation] Their deliverance from such imminent danger; and in a way which clearly shewed the Divine interposition, demands not only gratitude of heart, and the tongue of praise, at the end of the storm; but, when they come to shore, they should publicly acknowledge it in the congregation of God's people. I have been often pleased, when in seaport towns, to see and hear notes sent to the minister from pious sailors, returning thanks to the Almighty for preservation from shipwreck; and, in general, from the dangers of the sea; and for bringing them back in safety to their own port. Thus they exalt the Lord in the congregation; and praise him in the assembly of the elders. And is it not something of this kind that the Psalmist requires?

Verse 33. He turneth rivers into a wilderness] After having, as above, illustrated the state of the Jews in their captivity, and the deliverance which God wrought for them, he now turns to the general conduct of God in reference to the poor and the needy; and His gracious interpositions in their behalf, the providential supply of their wants, and His opposition to their oppressors. On account of the wickedness of men, He sometimes changes a fruitful land into a desert:—see the general state of Egypt in the present time; once a fertile land, now an arid sandy wilderness. Again, by His blessing on honest industry, He has brought deserts into highly fertile ground. And, as for the wickedness of their inhabitants, many lands are cursed and rendered barren; so, when a people acknowledge Him in all their ways, He blesses their toil, gives them rain and fruitful seasons, and fills their hearts with joy and gladness.

Verse 36. And there he maketh the hungry to dwell] All this seems to apply admirably to the first colonists of any place. They flee from a land of want, an ingrata terra that did not repay their toil; and they seek the wilderness where the land wants only cultivation to make it produce all the necessaries of life. He by His providence so guides their steps as to lead them to rivers which they can navigate, and from which they can procure plenty of fish; and shews them wells, or springs, which they have not digged. The hungry dwell there; and jointly agree, for convenience and defence, to build them a city for habitation. They sow the fields which they have cleared; and plant vineyards, and orchards which yield them increasing fruits, ver. 37, and He multiplies their cattle greatly, and does not suffer them to decrease, ver. 38. What a fine picture is this of the first peopling and planting of America, and of the multiplication and extension of that people!—of the Divine blessing on their industry, and the general and astonishing prosperity of their country. May they never again know what is spoken in the following verse!

PSALM CVII.

Verse 39. Again, they are minished] Sometimes by war, or pestilence, or famine. How minished and brought low was the country already spoken of, by the long and destructive war which began in 1775, and was not ended till 1783? And what desolations, minishings, and ruin, have been brought on the fertile empires of Europe by the war which commenced in 1792, and did not end till 1814. And how many millions of lives have been sacrificed in it, and souls sent unprepared into the eternal world! When God makes inquisition for blood, on whose heads will He find the blood of these slaughtered millions! Alas! O, alas!

Verse 40. He poureth contempt upon princes] How many have lately been raised from nothing, and set on thrones!—and how many have been cast down from thrones, and reduced to nothing! And where are now those mighty troublers of the earth? On both sides, they are in general gone to give an account of themselves to God. And what an account!

Where there is no way.] Who can consider the fate of the late emperor of the French, Napoleon, without seeing the hand of God in his downfall! All the powers of Europe were leagued against him in vain; they were as stubble to his bow. He came—He saw—and He conquered, almost every where, till God, by a Russian frost, destroyed his tens of thousands of veteran troops. And afterwards his armies of raw conscripts would have over-matched the world, had not a particular providence intervened at Waterloo, when all the skill and valour of his opponents had been nearly reduced to nothing! How terrible art thou, O Lord, in Thy judgments! Thou art fearful in praises, doing wonders.

The dreary rock of St. Helena, where there was no way, saw a period to the mighty conqueror, who had strode over all the countries of Europe!

Verse 41. Yet setteth he the poor on high] This probably refers to the case of the Israelites, and their restoration from captivity. But these are incidents which frequently occur, and mark the superintendence of a benign Providence, and the hand of a just God; and are applicable to a multitude of cases.

Verse 42. The righteous shall see it] The wicked are as inconsiderate, as they are obstinate and headstrong.

And rejoice! To have such ample proofs that God ruleth in the earth; and that none that trust in Him shall be desolate.

All iniquity shall stop her mouth.] God's mercies and judgments are so evident, and so distinctly marked, that atheism, infidelity, and irreligion, are confounded; and the cause of error and falsehood has become hopeless. It was only the mouth that could do any thing—and that only by lies, calumnies, and blasphemies: but God closes this mouth, pours contempt upon the head, and judgment upon the heart. This may also be applied to the case of the Israelites and the Babylonians. The former, when they turned to God, became righteous; the latter were a personification of all iniquity.

Verse 43. Whoso is wise] That is, he that is wise, he that fears God, and regards the operation of His hand—will observe, lay up, and keep these things. He will hide them in his heart, that he sin not against Jehovah. He will encourage himself in the Lord, because he finds that He is a never-failing spring of goodness to the righteous.

They shall understand the loving-kindness of the Lord.] וְיִשְׂרָאֵל יִשְׂרָאֵל יְהוָה, the exuberant goodness of Jehovah. This is His peculiar and most prominent characteristic among men; for judgment is His strange work. What a wonderful discourse on Divine Providence, and God's management of the world, does this inimitable Psalm contain. The ignorant cannot read it without profit; and, by the study of it, the wise man will become yet wiser.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND SEVENTH PSALM.

The title of this Psalm is Hallelujah, because it sets forth the praises of God for delivering such as are oppressed from four common miseries; after each of which is expressed those intercalary verses.—Oh that men would praise the Lord, &c. Then they cried unto the Lord in their trouble. It also praises God for His providence in its effects.

41 ^vYet setteth he the poor on high ^vfrom affliction, and ^vmaketh him families like a flock.

42 ^vThe righteous shall see it, and rejoice: and all ^viniquity shall stop her mouth.

43 ^vWhoso is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the loving-kindness of the Lord.

b Job 22. 12. Psa. 52 & 53. 16.—c Job 5. 14. Psa. 63. 11. Prov. 14. 11. Rom. 5. 12.—d Psa. 68. 2. Jer. 2. 12. Hos. 14. 9.

I. A preface, in which He exhorts all to praise God, especially the redeemed, ver. 1, 2.

II. A declamation of His goodness in particulars.

1. To the travellers, and strangers, famished, from ver. 3 to 9.

2. To the prisoners and captives, from ver. 10 to 16.

3. To the sick, from ver. 18 to 23.

4. To the mariners, from ver. 23 to 32.

III. A praise of God's power and providence, which is evidently seen in the changes and varieties in the world, of which He gives many instances, which prove that He is the sole Disposer and Governor of the universe, from ver. 33 to 42.

IV. The conclusion, which sets forth the use we are to make of it, ver. 42, 43.

I. 1. This Psalm, like the former, begins, That we celebrate and set forth God's praise, and for the same reasons. O give thanks unto the Lord. 1. For he is god. 2. And merciful. For his mercy endureth for ever.

2. And those whom He invites to perform this duty are all who are sensible that they have received any mercy or goodness from Him either in soul or body, whom he calls the redeemed of the Lord, that men may know, when they are freed from any evil, that it is not by chance, or their wisdom. God's hand is in it; He is the first cause—the rest are only His instruments.

1. Let the redeemed of the Lord say, i. e. That He is good and merciful.

2. They say so whom he hath redeemed, &c. If the Holy Ghost means, when He speaks of our redemption by Christ, the enemy, the devil, or some tyrant, tribulation, &c. then a corporeal and temporal redemption is meant. The next verse seems to refer to their banishment.

3. And gathered them out of the lands, &c. Which is yet as true of our spiritual redemption, Matt. viii. 11. John x. 16. and xi. 52.

II. Most expositors begin the second part, at the second verse, but some at the fourth; but it is not material. In those two there was mention made of God's goodness in their deliverance, in their collection from all lands. But the following is a declaration of what they suffered during their absence from their country. And this is the misery which the prophet first instances in this place; then shews the course the travellers took; and lastly acquaints us with the manner of their deliverance. Their misery was,—

1. That they wandered. No small discomfort for an ingenious native to go from place to place as a vagrant. God's people were for a time pilgrims; few and evil were their days.

2. The place adds to their misery. Travellers are not confined always to solitary places, they occasionally have company; but those wandered in the wilderness in a solitary place, &c. Literally it was fulfilled in the Israelites, while they travelled through the wilderness.

3. Hungry and thirsty. Men may wander, and be solitary; and yet have a sufficient supply of food: but God's people sometimes fast, as Elijah, David, &c.

4. And the famine was so great, that their souls, that is, their life, was ready to faint. This is the incrementum that the prophet uses to aggravate the misery of the travellers, and are the several steps by which it rises.

The prophet shews the course which these travellers and hungry souls took for ease and help; and that it did not fail them, nor any one else who has tried it.

1. Then in their trouble. God let them be brought into trouble to bring them back to Himself.

2. They cried. In their petition they were very earnest; it was no cold prayer, which froze on the way before it got to heaven; but fervent.—A cry.

3. And they cried. Not to any false god—but unto the Lord.

The success was answerable to their desire.

1. In general, He delivered them out of their distresses.

2. But in particular, the deliverance was every way fit.

1. They wandered in the wilderness, &c. ver. 4. But he led them forth, that they might go to a city of habitation.

2. They were hungry, and thirsty, &c. But he filled the hungry soul, &c.

And upon this he concludes his exhortation to praise

God, which he is so earnest for them to do, that he inserts the exhortation between each mention of the mercies.

1. The Lord delivered. The Lord led them forth. Praise Him then.

2. Of His mere mercy, not of desert. For he is good.

3. And the effects of His goodness were seen in His works: let His praise then be as public as His works. Oh that men, &c.

The second corporeal misery to which men are subject is captivity and imprisonment: he then shews the course the captives took, and God's mercy in their deliverance.

1. Captives: they were taken by the enemy, put in dungeons and prisons, where they were debarred the comfort of the sun. For they sat in darkness, &c. And in fear of death.

2. Besides, in this place, they were fast bound with affliction, &c. because of their rebellion against the Lord. The iron entered into their soul. He brought them low: but they sought help of the Lord.

They cried unto the Lord in their trouble. And found the same favour as the travellers did. And he saved them out of their distresses.

The manner was suitable to their distress.

1. For they sat in darkness, &c. But he brought them out, &c.

2. They were bound in affliction and iron, &c. The prison was not so strong, but he was stronger, and delivered them from captivity. Now the Psalmist interposes his thanksgiving: Oh that men, &c.

The third misery is some great sickness, or pining away of the body, under some grievous disease, such as when stung by fiery serpents, as the Israelites. 1. He describes the danger under which they languished. 2. Shews the method they took for their recovery.

1. The appellation he fastens on the diseased persons, fools: not but that, generally speaking, they were wise enough; but in that they sinned with a high hand against God, they are fools.

2. Now such fools God often smites with an incurable disease. Fools, because of their transgression, &c. Not but what all sickness is from sin; but this that the prophet speaks of was of their general apostasy, rebellion, and contempt of God's will and commandment.

The effect was lamentable and double.

1. Their soul abhorred all manner of meat. Meat, with which the life of man is sustained, became loathsome to them, the disease was so grievous.

2. And deadly too: no art of the physician could cure them. For they drew near to the gates of death, that is, the grave, where Death exercises his power, as the judges of Israel did in the gates.

But these being but dead men in the eye of man, took the same course as they did before.

1. They cried unto the Lord in their trouble.

2. And by God's blessing they recovered. God was alone their Physician.

3. This was the manner of their cure. He saved them out of their distresses.

1. He sent his word, and healed them. He said the word only, and they were made whole. Or, if any medicine were made use of, it was His word which made it medicinal; as in the case of the bunch of figs; and therefore the prophet uses an apt word to put them in mind. He sent his word, as a great prince sends forth his ambassadors to do his commands. Most probably the centurion had this in his mind when he said, Say the word only, and my servant shall be whole.

2. And he delivered them from their destructions, which is opposed to their previous danger. They drew nigh, &c.

3. But he exhorts the saved to be thankful. Oh that men, &c.

And he adds,

1. Let them sacrifice their sacrifices.

2. But with these conditions and limitations. 1. That it be with a thankful heart, for an outward sacrifice is nothing. 2. That with the sacrifices there go an annunciation: that men declare, and publish, that the cure came from God. 3. That it be done with rejoicing: that we have an experience of God's presence, favour, and mercy, for which the heart ought to rejoice more than for the cure of the body.

The fourth misery arises from the danger at sea.

1. He describes;

2. Shews the course they take in a storm;

3. And the event following upon their prayers.

Upon which he calls upon them, as upon the three before, to praise God.

1. They that go down to the sea in ships. For the sea is lower than the earth.

2. That do business in great waters. As merchants, mariners, &c.

3. These men see the works of the Lord, &c. Others hear of them by relation, but these see them: they see the great whales, innumerable kinds of fish, and monsters; islands dispersed and safe in the waves; whirlpools, quicksands, rocks; and have experience of the virtue of the loadstone. They discover many stars we know not; and they behold the vast workings of the sea, which fills the most valiant with fear.

4. For He commandeth;

Now he describes the tempest;

1. From the cause. God speaks the word.

2. By it he raiseth the stormy wind.

3. Which, inspired by His word, lifts up the waves thereof.

— Fluctus ad sidera tollit.

“The waves arise to heaven.”

4. They, (that is, the passengers,) mount up to heaven, &c.

Hi summo in factu pendunt, his unda delatata.

“They hang upon the wave; the sea yawns under them; and the bottom seems to be laid bare between the surges.”

5. Their soul is melted because of trouble. Their spirit fails.

Exemplo Aeneas solentur frigore membra.

“The limbs of the hero himself dissolve with terror.”

6. They reel to and fro. Tossed this way and that.

Tres Eurvs ab alto in brachia, et cyrtos urget.

“They are dashed against the shoals and quicksands.”

7. They stagger and totter, &c. An apt simile.

Cui dubii stantque inaequae pedes.

“They cannot keep their feet.”

8. And are at their wit's end. Omnis sapientia eorum absorbetur.—“Their judgment roves; their art fails; their skill is at end.”

Et meminit via media Palinurus in unda.

“Even the pilot loses his way in the troubled deep.”

Hitherto the prophet has poetically described the tempest and storm; and now he gives an account of the course they took to save their lives. Then they cried unto the Lord, &c. An old proverb says,—Qui nescit orare, discat navigare. “He who knows not how to pray, let him learn to be a sailor.”

And the consequence of their praying was,—And he brings them out, &c. In this manner,

1. He makes the storm a calm.

— Dicto citius humida aquora placet.

“By His word the swelling sea becomes calm.”

2. So that the waves thereof are still. Et cunctus pelagi cecidit fragor. “And the noise of it is hushed to silence.”

3. Then are they glad, &c. No more reeling to and fro, whence arises their joy.

— Lato testantur gaudia plausu.

“The clapping of hands expresses their joy.”

4. And to increase it, So he brings them to their desired haven.

— Magno saltant amore,

Egressi optata navula potiuntur arena,

Et celsa iubilant artus in litore possunt.

“The weather-beaten mariners having reached the shore, in an ecstasy of joy, kiss the sand and lay themselves down upon the beach.”

And now, in the last place, he calls upon them to pay their tribute of thankful duty for the miracle done them in their preservation. O that men would praise the Lord, &c. And probably in their danger they might have made a vow, which is frequently done in such cases. Read the Life of Nazianzen. This vow the prophet would have them pay openly.

1. Let them exalt him also in the congregation, &c.

2. And that not only before the promiscuous multitude; but let them praise him in the assembly of the elders, &c. Sua tabula ocer volupa paries indicat, usida suspendisse potenti vestimenta maris Dea. “Let them here suspend their votive tablet; and hang their wet clothes against a wall, as a grateful offering to Him who rules the seas.”

III. The prophet had exalted God's mercies in freeing men from these four miseries and calamities; these travellers through the wilderness, captivity, sickness, shipwreck; and now He manifests His power, providence, and wisdom, in the vicissitudes we meet with below. In the earth we see strange mutations, in kingdoms wonderful revolutions; yet we must go higher, and not rest short of the hand which governs all.

The prophet first instances the earth's changes.

1. He turns rivers into a wilderness, &c. The fertility of any land arises from its rivers, as is apparent in Egypt from the overflowing of the Nile. And when Elisha would free the soil from barrenness, he first healed the waters. The drying up of rivers produces famine; and, when the channels are directed from their courses, the fruitful land becomes a wilderness,

PSALM CVIII.

The Psalmist encourages himself to praise the Lord for the great mercies he had received, 1-5. He prays for the Divine succour, 6. And encourages the people to expect their restoration, and the enjoyment of all their former privileges and possessions, 7-13.

XXII. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.
A Song, or Psalm of David.

O GOD, my heart is fixed; I will sing and give praise, even with my glory.
2 ^o Awake, psaltery and harp: I myself will awake early.
3 I will praise thee, O LORD, among the people: and I will sing praises unto thee among the nations.
4 For thy mercy is great above the heavens: and thy truth reacheth unto the clouds.
5 ^o Be thou exalted, O God, above the heavens: and thy glory above all the earth;
6 ^o That thy beloved may be delivered: save with thy right hand, and answer me.
7 God hath spoken in his holiness; I will rejoice, I will divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Succoth.

a. Ps. 67. 7.—b. Ps. 57. 8.—c. Or, abien.—d. Ps. 57. 5, 11.—e. Ps. 60. 5, &c.

2. And the cause of this is, The iniquity of them that dwell therein.

On the contrary God illustrates His mercy by sometimes changing the wilderness into a fruitful and abundant place.

1. He turneth the wilderness into a standing water, &c. They shall be fruitful for man's sake.

2. For there he makes the hungry to dwell. God puts it into men's minds to plant colonies in some new found and good land, where the hungry find plenty, and are satisfied.

3. And to build houses. That they may prepare a city, &c.

Pars aperit locum lecto, pars ducens murus.
"Some dig out the foundations, others raise the walls."

4. The endeavours of the colonists are:—1. To sow fields. 2. To plant vineyards. Which was the first trade in the world.

5. And God's blessing on those endeavours. God blessed them also.—1. In children. So that they multiplied greatly. 2. In cattle. And suffered not their cattle to decrease.

But there is nothing in this world perpetual and stable: even those God had sometimes blessed and enriched continued not at one stay.

1. These are minished and brought low.
2. These are worn out by oppression, &c. By some public calamity, war, famine, invasion, &c. Even monarchs are subject to changes.

1. He pours contempt upon princes. It is a heavy judgment for princes, civil or ecclesiastical, to become contemptible; for then the reins of discipline are let loose, confusion follows, and all things grow worse. And this for the iniquity of those, &c.

2. He causeth them to wander in the wilderness, &c., which clause is subject to a double interpretation.

Either that he suffers princes to err in their counsels, lives, and example; or they enact unjust laws, favour wicked men, or oppress the good. But in the following verse there is some comfort.

Yet setteth he the poor man on high, &c. Delivers him from all affliction.

And maketh him families like a flock. Becomes His Shepherd, and governs him by His special providence.

IV. He concludes the Psalm with an epiphonema, in which he persuades good men to consider the former promises, and lay them to heart; to observe the whole course of God's providence, that they impute not the changes of the world to chance or fortune, but bless God for all His dispensations.

1. The righteous shall see it, &c. Consider, meditate upon it.

2. And rejoice. When they are assured that God is their Guardian, and that all He lays upon them is for their real good.

And all iniquity shall stop her mouth. By the observation of the event, at least evil-doers shall not have cause to laugh and blaspheme, but to confess that all is justly and wisely done by God.

And this consideration is that of the wise man who looks afar off.

1. Who is so wise, &c. To mark these changes in the world properly.

2. And they shall understand the loving-kindness of the Lord. It shall be seen by them how ineffable is His mercy towards those who truly fear Him, and call upon His name: but our life is hid with Christ in God.

9 Gilead is mine; Manasseh is mine; Ephraim also is the strength of mine head; ^o Judah is my lawgiver;

9 Moab is my washpot; over Edom will I cast out my shoe; or Philistia will I triumph.

10 ^o Who will bring me into the strong city? who will lead me into Edom?

11 Will not thou, O God, who hast cast us off? and wilt not thou, O God, go forth with our hosts?
12 Give us help from trouble: for vain is the help of man.

13 ^o Through God we shall do valiantly: for he it is that shall tread down our enemies.

PSALM CIX.

The Psalmist speaks against his inveterate enemies, 1-5. He prays against them, and denounces God's judgments, 6-15. The reason on which this is grounded, 16-20. He prays for his own safety and salvation, using many arguments to induce God to have mercy upon him, 21-24.

NOTES ON PSALM CVIII.

This Psalm is compounded of two Psalms which we have had already under review. The 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, and 5th verses are the same with the 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th verses of Psalm lvii. And the 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and 13th, are the same with the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th of Psalm lx. The variations are few, and of little moment; and the explanation may be seen in the notes on the preceding Psalms, which need not be repeated here. That the Psalms referred to were made by David, and were applicable to the then state of his affairs, has been the opinion of many; and it is probable that the captives in Babylon composed this out of the two above, and applied it to the state of their affairs. The Captivity being now ended, or nearly at an end, they look and pray for their restoration to their own land, as empty as it was possessed in the most prosperous days of David. The Syriac considers it as a prophecy of the vocation of the Gentiles. The Hebrew, and all the Versions, attribute it to David.

Verse 1. Even with my glory. My greatest glory shall be in publishing Thy praise. Some make the glory here to mean the LORD Himself—some the ARK of the covenant—some the soul of the Psalmist—others his TONGUE—some the GIFT of PROPHECY—and some, the Psalmist's SPIRIT or VEIN of poetry. See the notes on Psalm lvii. 8.

Verse 3. Among the people] The Jews.
Among the nations.] The Gentiles. Wherever this Psalm is sung or read, either among Jews or Gentiles, David may be said to sing praise to God.

Verse 7. God hath spoken in his holiness] בקדשו bekedesho; some think this means, in his Holy One, referring to the prophet Jeremiah, who predicted the Captivity, its duration of seventy years, and the deliverance from it.

Verse 10. The strong city] The possession of the metropolis is a sure proof of the subjugation of the country.

Verse 13. Through God we shall do valiantly] From Him we derive our courage—from Him our strength—and by Him our success.

[For the ANALYSIS see the Psalms from which this is composed.]

NOTES ON PSALM CIX.

The title of this Psalm, To the chief Musician, a Psalm of David, has already often occurred; and on it the Versions offer nothing new. The Syriac says, it is "a Psalm of David, when the people, without his knowledge, had made Abalom king; on which account he was slain; but to us (Christians) he details the passion of Christ." That it contains a prophecy against Judas and the enemies of our Lord is evident from Acts i. 20. Probably in its primary meaning, for such a meaning it certainly has, it may refer to Ahitophel. The execrations in it should be rendered in the future tense, as they are mere prophetic denunciations of God's displeasure against sinners. Taken in this light, it cannot be a stumbling-block to any person. God has a right to denounce those judgments which He will inflict on the workers of iniquity. But, perhaps, the whole may be the execrations of David's enemies against himself.—See on verse 20. Ahitophel, who gave evil counsel against David, and being frustrated, hanged himself, was no mean prototype of Judas, the traitor: it was probably on this account that St. Peter, Acts i. 20, applied it to the case of Judas, as a prophetic declaration concerning him; or at least a subject that might be accommodated to his case.

Verse 1. Hold not thy peace] Be not silent; arise, and defend my cause.

2 For the mouth of the wicked and the ^bmouth of the deceitful ^aare opened against me: they have spoken against me with a lying tongue.

3 They compassed me about also with words of hatred; and fought against me ^dwithout a cause.

4 For my love they are my adversaries: but I give myself unto prayer.

5 And ^ethey have rewarded me evil for good, and hatred for my love.

6 Set thou a wicked man over him: and let ^fSatan ^gstand at his right hand.

^b Heb. mouth of deceit.—^c Heb. have opened themselves.—^d Ps. 25. 7. & 28. 4. John 15. 25.—^e Ps. 25. 7, 12. & 28. 20.—^f Zech. 1. 1.—^g Or, an adversary.

Verse 2. The mouth of the wicked—and the deceitful are opened against me] Many persons are continually uttering calumnies against me. Thou knowest my heart and its innocence; vindicate my uprightness against these calumniators.

Verse 4. For my love they are my adversaries] In their behalf I have performed many acts of kindness; and they are my adversaries notwithstanding: this shews principles the most vicious, and hearts the most corrupt. Many of the fathers and commentators have understood the principal part of the things spoken here as referring to our Lord, and the treatment He received from the Jews; and whatever the original intention was, they may be safely applied to this case, as the 2d, 3d, 4th, and 5th verses are as highly illustrative of the conduct of the Jewish rulers toward our Lord as the following verses are of the conduct of Judas: but, allowing these passages to be prophetic, it is the Jewish state, rather than an individual, against which these awful denunciations are made; as it seems to be represented here under the person and character of an extremely hardened and wicked man; unless we consider the curses to be those of David's enemies. See the note on verse 20.

But I give myself unto prayer] וְאֵינִי מְפַלֵּל va-ani tephilla. And I pray. The Chaldee וְאֵינִי מְפַלֵּל va-ana atsalleh, "but I pray." This gives a good sense; which is followed by the Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. The Syriac, I will pray for them. This, not so correctly; as dreadful imprecations, not prayers, follow. But probably the whole ought not to be interpreted according to the mode laid down, verse 20. The translation and paraphrase in the old Psalter are very simple.—

TRANS. For that thing that that sulde hate lufed me, that babbited me; bot I prayed.

Paraph. That is, that sulde haf lufed me for I was godson, and that babbited me sayande, in Belzebug he castes out fendes; bot I prayed for thaim.

Verse 6. Let Satan stand at his right hand.] As the word שָׂטָן Satan, means an adversary simply, though sometimes it is used to express the evil spirit, Satan; I think it best to preserve here its grammatical meaning—"Let an adversary stand at his right hand;" i. e. Let him be opposed and thwarted in all his purposes.

All the Versions have deuil, or some equivocal word. The ARABIC has الشيطان ibless, the chief of the apostate spirits: but the name is probably corrupted from the GREEK διαβολος, diabolos; from which the LATIN Diabolus, the ITALIAN Diavolo, the SPANISH Diabolo, the FRENCH Diabie, the IRISH or CELTIC Diabail, the DUTCH Duivel, the GERMAN Teufel, the ANGLO-SAXON Deofol, and the ENGLISH Devil, are all derived. The original διαβολος, comes from δια βαλλειν, to shoot, or pierce through.

Verse 7. Let him be condemned] יָשָׁר מִן יְשָׁרָה yetse rasha, "Let him come out a wicked man;" that is, let his wickedness be made manifest.

Let his prayer become sin.] Thus paraphrased by Calmet:—"Let him be accused, convicted, and condemned; and let the defence which he brings for his justification only serve to deepen his guilt, and hasten his condemnation." I once more apprise the reader, that if these are not the words of David's enemies against himself, (see on verse 20), they are prophetic denunciations against a rebellious and apostate person or people, hardened in crime, and refusing to return to God.

Verse 8. Let another take his office.] The original is—וְקָבַל מִמֶּנּוּ pekudato, which the Margin translates charge; and which literally means superintendence, oversight, inspection from actual visitation. The translation in our common Version is too technical—his bishopric, following the Septuagint, Eusebius, and Vulgate, episcopatum, and has given cause to some light people to be witty, who have said, "The first bishop we read of was Bishop Judas." But it would be easy to convict this witicism of blasphemy, as the word is used in many parts of the Sac-

7 When he shall be judged, let him ^bbe condemned: and ^clet his prayer become sin.

8 Let his days be few; and ^dlet another take his ^eoffice.

9 = Let his children be fatherless, and his wife a widow.

10 Let his children be continually vagabonds, and beg: let them seek their bread also out of their desolate places.

11 = Let the extortioner catch all that he hath; and let the strangers spoil his labour.

^b Heb. go out gully, or, wicked.—^c Prov. 21. 2.—^d Acts 1. 20.—^e Or, charge. In Exod. 22. 9.—^f Job 15. 5. & 18. 9.

red Writings, from Genesis downward, to signify offices and officers, appointed either by God immediately, or in the course of His providence, for the accomplishment of the most important purposes. It is applied to the Patriarch Joseph, Gen. xxxix. 4. וַיַּמְנֵן אֱלֹהִים אֶת-יוֹסֵף—He made him bishop, alias overseer; therefore, it might be as wisely said, and much more correctly, "the first bishop we read of was Bishop Joseph;" and many such bishops there were of God's making long before Judas was born. After all, Judas was no traitor when he was appointed to what is called his bishopric, office, or charge, in the apostolate.—Such witticisms as these amount to no argument, and serve no cause that is worthy of defence.

Our common Version, however, was not the first to use the word: it stands in the Anglo-Saxon, ᵹbiscopahad hir, unyo oðer, and his episcopacy let take oðer. The old Psalter is nearly the same; I shall give the whole verse,—ᵹa be made his days, and his bysschopryk another take. "For Mathai was sett in stede of Judas; and his days was fa that hynged himself."

Verse 9. Let his children be fatherless, &c.] It is said that Judas was a married man, against whom this verse, as well as the preceding, is supposed to be spoken; and that it was to support them he stole from the bag in which the property of the apostles was put, and of which he was the treasurer.

Verse 10. Let his children—beg] The father having lost his office, the children must necessarily be destitute; and this is the hardest lot to which any can become subject, after having been born to the expectation of an ample fortune.

Verse 11. Let the strangers spoil his labour.] Many of these execrations were literally fulfilled in the case of the miserable Jews, after the death of our Lord. They were not only expelled from their own country, after the destruction of Jerusalem; but they were prohibited from returning; and so taxed by the Roman government, that they were reduced to the lowest degree of poverty. Domitian expelled them from Rome; and they were obliged to take up their habitation without the gate Capena, in a wood contiguous to the city, for which they were obliged to pay a rent, and where the whole of their property was only a basket and a little hay. See JUVENAL, Sat. iii. v. 11.

Subleuisti ad ostium arcus, mendicantes Capenam: hic, ubi nocturna Numo constituta seneca, Mense sacri fontis nemus, et delubra locustarum: Judas: quorum copiosus, famelicus pupillus: Omnis enim populo mercedem pendere Jussa est Arbor, et ejusdem mendicantem siles Camæda. He stopp'd a little at the conduit gate, Where Numo mendicall' chose the Roman state; In night's concourse with his nymph retir'd: Though now the sacred shades and fountains are hid By banish'd Jews, who their whole wealth can lay In a small basket, on a wisp of hay. Yet each our wretched is, that every time Pays for his head: nor sleep itself is free; Nor place nor person now are sacred held, From their own grove the stoness are expell'd. Dryden.

The same poet refers again to this wretched state of the Jews, Sat. vi. ver. 441; and shews to what vile extremities they were reduced in order to get a morsel of bread.

Cum sedisti illic locum, copioso famelicus pupillo Arcanum Judas trames, mendicant in ærem, Interpret legum Polymorum, et magna sacerdos Arborea, ac omnia Jula interuenientia casti. Impiet et illic merces, sed parvulus, are miserus. Quævis corpus vobis, Judas sanctis vendens.

Here a Jewess is represented as coming from the wood mentioned above, to gain a few obols by fortune-telling; and, trembling lest she should be discovered, she leaves her basket and hay, and whispers lowly in the ear of some female, from whom she hopes employment in her line. She is here called by the poet the interpretes of the laws of Solyma, or Jerusalem; and the priestess of a tree, because obliged, with the rest of her nation, to lodge in a wood—so that she and her countrymen might be said to seek their bread out of desolate places, the stranger having spoiled their labour. Perhaps the whole of the Psalm relates to their infidelities, rebellions, and miseries inflicted on them, from the crucifixion of our Lord till the present

His immaculate innocence by His resurrection from the dead.

The whole of this Psalm is understood by many as referring solely to Christ, the traitor Judas, and the wicked Jews. This is the view taken of it in the Analysis.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND NINTH PSALM.

The later expositors expound this Psalm of Doeg, Ahiathophel, and other persecutors of David; and so it may be understood in the type: but the ancient Fathers apply it to Judas, and the Jews who put Christ to death: which opinion, because it is more probable, and by Peter, (Acts i. 20,) is applied to Judas out of this Psalm, I shall expound the passage as of Christ, whom David personated, and of Judas, and the malicious Jews, as understood in the persons of his wicked and slanderous enemies.

The Psalm has four parts:—

- I. A short ejaculation, ver. 1, and the reasons expressed in a complaint of the fraud and malice of his enemies, ver. 6.
- II. A bitter imprecation against their fury, ver. 6—21.
- III. A supplication presented to God for himself, from ver. 21, and the reasons, to ver. 30.
- IV. A profession of thanks.

I. He begins with an ejaculation. Hold not thy peace, O God of my praise.

1. Either actively, that is, O God, whom I praise, even in the greatest calamities.

2. Or passively; Who art my praise. The Witness and Advocate of my innocency when I am condemned by malicious tongues; which sense appears best for this place.

Hold not thy peace. Tacere, in Scripture, when referred to God, is to connive, to rest, to appear not to regard; and, the contrary, loqui, to speak, to do something for revenge or deliverance: it is what David here asks that, when the malice of his enemies arrived at its height, God should not suffer them, but shew His displeasure.

Then, by way of complaint, he describes their malicious nature, which he aggravates by an elegant gradation. For the mouth of the wicked: and they were, I. Impious. 2. Deceitful. 3. Liars.

1. For the mouth of the wicked. Caiaphas, Judas, the priests, Jews, &c.

2. And the mouth of the deceitful, &c. They sought to entrap him in his words.

3. They have spoken against me, &c. He casteth out devils through Beelzebub, &c.

And yet the mischief rises higher; even to hatred and malice.

1. They compassed me about, &c. Manifesting in plain words the malice they carried in their hearts. This man is not of God, &c.

2. They hated me without a cause. Wantonly, idly. They were not only evil, deceitful, and malicious; but very ungrateful. He went about doing good; and how often would I have gathered you, &c.; and for this love they returned hatred.

1. For my love they are my adversaries. But, nevertheless,

2. I give myself to prayer. "Father, forgive them; they know not," &c. Which base ingratitude of theirs he opens in fuller words. They have rewarded me evil. And Theognis truly says,

Ἡ χάρις ἀλλάζει τὴν φύσιν ἐν δούρατι.

No kindness can invert an evil nature;

A Jew will ever be a Jew.

II. The prophet having complained of the malice, and spiteful usage, and ingratitude of his nation, their crafty dealing with him, and their lies against him, proceeds to pray against them, and that in most bitter and fearful imprecations. Enemies he foresaw they would be to the flourishing state of Christ's church, and that nothing had power to restrain or amend them; and therefore he curses them with a curse the most bitter that ever fell from the lips of man. In particular Judas, who was guide to them who took Jesus, is pointed out: but, as Augustine observes, he represented the person of the whole synagogue; therefore, it is involved necessarily. But some understand these curses as uttered by the Jews against David. [See the note on ver. 20.]

1. Set thou a wicked man over him, &c. A fearful imprecation. Subject him to the will of some impious and wicked man, to whose lust and violence he may be no better than a slave. Others understand, by a wicked man, a false teacher, who may seduce him by false doctrines.

2. Let Satan stand at his right hand. Have full power over him. Let him stand; which signifies a perpetual endeavour to urge him forward till he effect his intended mischief. And so it was with Judas and the Jews: Satan was their guide, and they followed him.

The second is, When he shall be judged, let him be condemned. Find no mercy, no favour, at the judge's hands: thus, when Judas, accused and condemned by his own conscience, went to the high priest, who had bribed him, he would not acquit him; and Judas, in despair and grief for his sin, went out and hanged himself.

The third, Let his prayer become sin. He turned his ear from hearing God,—Why then should God hear him? No prayer is acceptable to God but through Christ, and that out of a sincere heart: any other prayers become sin.

The fourth is the shortening of their life and honour.

1. Let his days be few. Length of days is promised only to the obedient, and is a blessing: but the prayer is that this man's life be a short one, and so Judas's was.

2. And let another take his office. Which must be applied to Judas, since St. Peter (Acts i. 21,) so interprets it; and it is at this day as true of the Jews, for they have no high priest. Another of the order of Melchisedek, has succeeded Aaron's priesthood.

The fifth is—

1. Let his children be fatherless, &c. Which follows on the former curse.

2. Let his children be continually vagabonds, and beg. And such the Jews are to this day; and beggars they were for a long time after the overthrow of Jerusalem.

The sixth execration is upon his goods.

1. Let the extortioner catch all that he hath. Probably the publicans.

2. And let the strangers spoil his labour. Which was verified by the soldiers of Titus, who ripped up the bellies of the captive Jews for gold.

But the prophet again returns to his children.

1. Let there be none to extend mercy unto him, &c. To beg, or to want, is a misery; but there is some comfort in it, when beggars meet with some to relieve it. But the prophet says, Let there be none to pity him or his. Judas found none to pity him.

2. Men, because they must die themselves, desire, if possible, to be immortal in their issue. Bellarmine observes, that Judas had no issue; for that Matthias, who came in his place, did not derive his office from him. Though a posterity of the Jews remained after the flesh, yet, in the next generation, their ecclesiastical and civil polity was at an end; and since their dispersion they are without king, without priest, without sacrifice, without altar, without ephod, and without teraphim, as foretold by Hosea.

3. Let the iniquity of his fathers be remembered, &c. This imprecation answers God's threat: I will visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children. And this curse has come upon the Jews to the uttermost: they are self-devoted—Let his blood be upon us, and upon our children. The guilt of His blood is yet upon them; the iniquity of their fathers is yet remembered; and the sin of their mother, the synagogue, is not yet done away.

He repeats again the sin of their fathers, and the sin of the synagogue: this verse being but the exposition of the former.

1. Let them be before the Lord continually. The sin their father and mother committed; never let it be forgotten by God.

2. That he may cut off the memory, &c. Except it be in contempt.

The prophet having now finished his execrations, acquaints us with the causes of them.

1. Their want of pity to them in distress. Have ye no regard, all ye that pass by? Lam. i. 22. 'Tis but just then that they find judgment without mercy, that would shew no mercy.

2. So far from that, that he persecuted the poor and needy man, &c. which is the second cause: the inhumanity of Judas and the Jews against Christ, who is here called—

1. Poor, because, when he was rich, for our sakes he became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich, 2 Cor. ix. 2. The needy man, for the forces have holes, &c. Luke ix. 53. 3. The broken in heart. For he was in agony, and His soul was troubled, when He sweat great drops of blood; when he cried, My God, my God! but not with compunction or contrition for any fault He had committed, but from a sense of pain, and the solicitude for the salvation of mankind.

In this verse there is noted the extreme cruelty and inhumanity of the Jews; for whoever persecutes a man for his life is inclined to it either from some real or supposed injury, or else through envy: but Christ was humble and low in heart: He went about doing good, and yet they persecuted Him.

But, thirdly, he complains. He loved cursing; therefore, it is but reason that he should have what he loved: As he clothed himself with cursing—so let it come, &c. No man can love a curse or hate a blessing, if it be proposed to the will under the form of a curse or blessing: but PSALM CX.

The Messiah, sitting in His kingdom at the right hand of God, His enemies being subdued under Him, 1, 2. The nature and extent of His government, 3. His ever-lasting priesthood, 4. His execution of justice and judgment, 5, 6. The reason on which all this is founded, His position and exaltation, 7.

XXXIII. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

A Psalm of David.

THE LORD said unto my Lord,
Sit thou at my right hand, until
I make thine enemies thy footstool.

a. Matt. 22. 44. Mark 12. 35. Luke 22. 62. Acts 2. 34. 1 Cor. 15. 26. Heb. 1. 13. 1 Pet. 3. 22. Rev. 5. 10. 6, 7.

a man is said to love a curse when he follows a wicked course, and avoids the blessing of a good life. This Judas and the Jews did: Judas by loving money more than his Master; the Jews, Let his blood, &c.

Neque enim car jusserit velle aut, &c.

It is just that a man should suffer for his own wicked inventions. But the prophet adds, Let it sit close to him as a garment; let it be converted into his substance; let him carry it perpetually, &c.

1. As he clothed himself with cursing, &c. As in clothes he delights in.

2. So let it come as waters, &c. As the stomach concocts and turns into the very flesh of the animal; so let his curse be converted into his nature and manners.

3. Let it come as oil into his bones, &c. Oil will pierce the bones; water will not.

This curse must be of great efficacy: he must always carry it.

1. Let it be unto him, &c. Stick close as a garment.

2. And for a girdle, &c. Compass him round about.

For a garment some read pallium. A cloak that a man puts off at home, and calls for when he goes abroad: thus, let God set an outward mark upon him; let him be known as a castaway.

If Doeg were the type of Judas, as most agree, in this Psalm, then by the girdle might be understood cingulum militare, the military girdle, which, while they were of that profession, they cast not off; and he, Doeg, being a military man, the curse was to cleave to him, and compass him as his girdle.

The prophet concludes this part of the Psalm with an exclamation, as being persuaded his curses were not in vain.

Let this be the reward of mine adversaries, &c., who say that I am a deceiver, and deny me to be the Saviour of the world.

III. The prophet now turns from curses to prayer; and, in the Person of Christ, directs it to God for protection and deliverance both of himself and the whole church.

1. But do thou for me, &c. He asks help against his persecutors on these three grounds:—1. Because his Lord was Jehovah, the Fountain of all being and power. 2. Because it would be for His honour. Do it for thy name's sake. Thy faithfulness and goodness to the church, and justice in executing vengeance on her enemies. 3. Do it because thy mercy is good, easily inclined to succour the miserable.

2. Deliver me, may have reference to Christ's prayer, Father, save me from this hour, &c.

1. Deliver me, &c. For I am destitute of all human help.

2. Deliver me—for my heart is wounded within me, &c.

And to these he adds many other reasons; and uses two similes, the one drawn from the shadow of the evening, the other from the locust.

1. I am gone like a shadow, &c. Which passes away in a moment silently: so was Christ led away as a prisoner, without any murmur. He was led as a lamb, &c. Isa. liii.

2. I am tossed up and down as the locust. From one tribunal to another, as the locust carried from place to place, Exod. x. 12, 19. Thus the apostles and martyrs died patiently.

Secondly, he reasons from his bodily debility.

1. My knees are weak through fasting. The little sustenance Christ took before His passion, and His watching in prayer all night.

2. And my flesh failed of fatness, through the excess of his fatigue, and the anguish of His Spirit: thus He could not bear His cross.

3. A third reason why God should pity and deliver is drawn from the opprobrious usage, and the scorn they put upon Him, than which there is nothing more painful to an ingenuous and noble nature. I am become also a reproach unto them, &c. The four Gospels are an ample comment upon this verse.

The second part of his prayer is for a speedy resurrec-

2 The LORD shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies.

3 Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holiness from the womb of the morning: thou hast the dew of thy youth.

4 The LORD hath sworn, and will not repent, b Judg. 5. 2.—c Ps. 92. 4.—d Or, more than the womb of the morning: thou shalt arise, &c.—e Num. 23. 19.

tion. Help me, O Lord my God: O save me, &c. And he supports his petition with a strong reason, drawn from the final cause: Save me, that they may know, &c. That all men, the Jews especially, may be convinced by my rising again, in despite of the watch and the seal, that it was not their malice and power that brought me to this ignominious death, but that my passion, suffering, and death, proceeded from Thy hand. By his resurrection he was declared, Rom. i. 4. And in the close of His prayer he sings a triumph over his enemies, the devil, Judas, the Jews, those bitter enemies of His and the church.

1. Let them curse. Speak evil of me and my followers.

2. But bless thou. Bless all nations that have faith in me.

3. When they arise. For, I. Arise they will, and endeavour by every means to destroy my kingdom. 2. But let them be ashamed. Confounded that their wishes are frustrated.

4. But let thy servant, (which condition Christ took upon Himself,) rejoice: because Thy name is thereby glorified.

And he continues His execrations by way of explanation. Let mine adversaries, &c. be confounded at the last day, for their ingratitude and malice, before angels and men.

IV. He closes all with thanks, which he opposes to the confusion of the wicked.

1. I will greatly praise the Lord. With affection and a great jubilee.

2. I will praise him among the multitude. Before all the world.

For which he assigns this reason,—

1. He shall stand at the right hand of the poor. That is, such as are poor in spirit, who ask and find mercy from God, to such I will be as a shield and buckler.

2. I will stand at the right hand of the poor to save him, &c. From the devil and all his instruments. Christ is the all-covering shield of His Church. He hath blotted out the handwriting of ordinances, &c. So that cum à mundo damnatur, à Christo absolvemur. When we are condemned by the world, we are absolved by Christ.

NOTES ON PSALM CX.

The Hebrews, and all the Versions, except the Arabic, attribute this Psalm to David; nor can this be doubted, as it is thus attributed in the New Testament, see the places in the Margin. We have in it the celebration of some great potentate's accession to the crown; but the subject is so grand, the expressions so noble, and the object raised so far above what can be called human, that no history has ever mentioned a prince to whom a literal application of this Psalm can be made. To Jesus Christ alone, to His everlasting priesthood and government, as King of kings and Lord of lords, can it be applied.

The Jews, aware of the advantage which the Christian religion must derive from this Psalm, have laboured hard and in vain to give it a contrary sense. Some have attributed it to Eliezer, the servant or steward of Abraham; and state that he composed it on the occasion of his master's victory over the four kings at the valley of Shaveh, Gen. xiv. Others say it was done by David in commemoration of his victory over the Philistines. Others make Solomon the author. Some refer it to Hezekiah, and others to Zerubbabel, &c.: but the bare reading of the Psalm will shew the vanity of these pretensions. A King is described here who is David's Lord; and sits at the right hand of God, a Conqueror reigning at Jerusalem, King from all eternity—having an everlasting priesthood, Judge of all nations, triumphing over all potentates, indefatigable in all His operations, and successful in all His enterprises. Where has there ever appeared a prince in whom all these characters met? There never was one, nor is it possible there ever can be one such, the Person excepted to whom the Psalm is applied by the authority of the Holy Spirit Himself. That the Jews who lived in the time of our Lord believed this Psalm to have been written by David, and that it spoke of the Messiah alone, is evident from this, that when our Lord quoted it, and drew arguments from it in favour of His mission, Matt. xxiii. 42, they did not attempt to gainsay it. St. Peter, Acts i. 34, and St. Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 25, Heb. i. 13. v. 6, 10, vii. 17, x. 12, 13, apply it to shew that Jesus is the Messiah. Nor was there any attempt to contradict them:—not even an intimation that they had misapplied it, or mistaken its meaning. Many of the later Jews also have granted that it applied to the Messiah, though they dispute its application to Jesus of Nazareth. All the critics and commentators whom I have consulted apply it to our Lord; nor does it appear to me to be capable of interpretation on any other ground. Before I proceed to take a general view of it, I shall set down the chief of the various readings found in the MSS. on this Psalm.

Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek.

5 The LORD is at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath.

Ver. 1. Said unto my Lord—Instead of לַדּוֹנִי ladoni, my Lord, some MS. seems to have read לַיְהוָה layhovah, "Jehovah said unto Jehovah, Sit thou on my right hand, &c. See De Rossi.

Thy footstool—לְרֵגְלֵיךָ לַדּוֹנִי hadom le-ragleyc, "the footstool to thy feet." But eight MSS. drop the prefix לֵ; and read the word in the genitive case, with the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Arabic. Many also read the word in the singular number.

Ver. 3.—Instead of קִדְשֵׁי בְהָרֵי קֹדֶשׁ behadrey kodesh, "in the beauties of holiness," קִדְשֵׁי בְהָרֵי קֹדֶשׁ be-harerey kodesh, "in the mountains of holiness," is the reading of thirty-four of Kennicott's MSS. and fifty-three of those of De Rossi, and also of several printed editions.

Ver. 3. Instead of יַדְיָדְךָ yadudc, "of thy youth," יַדְיָדְךָ yadudc, "I have begotten thee," is the reading as to the consonants of sixty-two of Dr. Kennicott's, and twenty-three of De Rossi's, and some ancient editions, with the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon.

Ver. 4. After the order—אֲחֵרֵי דִבְרָתֶיךָ dibrati. דִּבְרָתֶיךָ dib-rato, "his order," is the reading of twelve of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.

Ver. 5. The LORD—אֲדוֹנִי adoni:—but יְהוָה Yehovah, is the reading of a great number of the MSS. in the above collections.

Ver. 6. Instead of בְּתוֹכָם baggoyim, "among the heathens," or nations, גּוֹיִם goyim, "he shall judge the heathen," is the reading of one ancient MS.

Instead of רֹאשׁ rosh, "the head," רֹשֵׁי roshay, "the heads," is the reading of one MS., with the Chuldee, Septuagint, Vulgate, and Anglo-Saxon.

Ver. 7. For יָרִים yarim, "he shall lift up," יָרִים yarom, shall be lifted up, is the reading of six MSS. and the Syriac.

Instead of רֹאשׁ rosh, "the head," רֹשׁוֹ rosho, "his head," is the reading of two MSS. and the Syriac.

A few add הַלְלֵי הַלֵּל halelu yah, "Praise ye Jehovah:" but this was probably taken from the beginning of the following Psalm.

The learned Venema has taken great pains to expound this Psalm: he considers it a Divine oracle, partly relating to David's Lord, and partly to David himself.

1. David's Lord is here inducted to the highest honour, regal and sacerdotal, with the promise of a most flourishing kingdom, founded in Zion, but extending every where, till every enemy should be subdued.

2. David is here promised God's protection:—that his enemies shall never prevail against him; but he must go through many sufferings in order to reach a state of glory.

3. The time in which this oracle or prophecy was delivered was probably a little after the time when David had brought home the ark, and before he had his wars with the neighbouring idolatrous nations. The kingdom was confined in his hand: but it was not yet extended over the neighbouring nations.

Verse 1. The LORD said unto my Lord] Jehovah said unto my Adoni. That David's Lord is the Messiah is confirmed by our Lord Himself, and by the apostles Peter and Paul, as we have already seen.

Sit thou on my right hand] This implies the possession of the utmost confidence, power, and pre-eminence.

Thou I make thine enemies] Jesus shall reign till all His enemies are subdued under Him. Jesus Christ, as God, ever dwelt in the fulness of the Godhead: but it was as God-man that, after His resurrection, He was raised to the right hand of the majesty on high, ever to appear in the presence of God for us.

Verse 2. The rod of thy strength] The gospel—the doctrine of Christ crucified; which is the powerful sceptre of the Lord that bought us—is quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword; and is the power of God to salvation to all them that believe.

The kingdom of our Lord was to be founded in Zion; and thence, by gradual conquests, to be extended over the whole earth. It was in Zion the preaching of the gospel first began; and it is by the gospel that Christ rules, even in the midst of his enemies: for the gospel extends a moralizing influence over multitudes who do not receive it to their salvation.

Verse 3. Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power] This verse has been woefully perverted. It has been supposed to point out the irresistible operation of the grace of God on the souls of the elect, thereby making them willing to receive Christ as their Saviour. Now, whether this doctrine be true or false, it is not in this text, nor can it receive the smallest countenance from it. There has been much spoken against the doctrine of what is called free will by persons who seem not to have understood the term. Will is a free principle. Free will is as absurd as bound will: it is not will if it be not free; and if it be bound, it is no will. Volition is essential to the being of the soul, and to all rational and intellectual beings. This is the most essential discrimination between matter and spirit. MATTER can have no choice, עֲצוּרָה has. Ratiocination is essential to intellect; and from these volition is inseparable. God uniformly treats man as a free agent; and on this principle the whole of Divine Revelation is constructed, as is also the doctrine of future rewards and punishments. If man be forced to believe, he believes not at all:—it is the forcing power that believes, not the machine forced. If he be forced to obey, it is the forcing power that obeys; and he, as a machine, shews only the effect of this irresistible force. If man be incapable of willing good, and willing evil, he is incapable of being saved as a rational being; and if he acts only under an overwhelming compulsion, he is as incapable of being damned. In short, this doctrine reduces him either to a punctum stans, which by the vis inertiae is incapable of being moved but as acted upon by foreign influence; or, as an intellectual being, to non-entity. "But if the text supports the doctrine laid upon it, vain are all these reasonings." Granted. Let us examine the text. The Hebrew words are the following: קָטַן כִּי־תִּהְיֶה אֱמֶעָמָה נֶעֱדָבֹתָ בֶּ-יּוֹם חֵילֶעָא, which literally translated is, thy princely people, or free people, in the day of thy power. Which is thus paraphrased by the Chaldee: "Thy people, O house of Israel, who willingly labour in the law, thou shalt be helped by them in the day that thou goest to battle."

The Syriac has—"This praiseworthy people in the day of Thy power."

The Vulgate—"With Thee is the principle (principium) in the day of Thy power." And this is referred, by its interpreters, to the Godhead of Christ; and they illustrate it by John i. 1. In principio erat Verbum.—"In the beginning was the Word."

The Septuagint is the same; and they use the word as St. John has it in the Greek text, μετὰ σου ἡ ἀρχὴ τοῦ κόσμου ὡς οὐρανός σου.—"With thee is the Arché, or principle, in the day of thy power."

The Ethiopic is the same; and the Arabic nearly so, but rather more express. "The government (الحكومة) ricasat, exists with Thee in the day of Thy power."

The Anglo-Saxon, mid be gnuma on bege mægnar dænes. With thee the principle in day of thy greatness.

The old Psalter, עִלְיָתָּהּ הַבְּגִינְנִיּוֹת בַּיּוֹם הַזֶּה הַבְּטוּתָּהּ. Which it thus paraphrases—I, the feder begynnyn with the begynnynng I and thou, an begynnynng of al thyng in day of thi verte.

Concordance thus, In the day of thy power shalt my people offer the free will offerings with an holy worship. So Tindal, Cardamarden, Beck, and the Liturgic Version.

The Bible printed by Barker, the king's printer, 4to. Lond. 1615, renders the whole verse thus:—"Thy people shall come willingly at the time of assembling thine army in holy beauty: the youth of thy womb shall be as the morning dew."

By the authors of the Universal History, vol. iii. p. 223, the whole passage is thus explained:—"The Lord shall send the rod, or sceptre, of thy power out of Zion, i. e. out of the tribe of Judah, (compare Gen. xlix. 20, and Psa. lxxviii. 68.) Rule thou over thy free-will people;—for none but such are fit to be Christ's subjects, see Matt. xi. 29. In the midst of thine enemies—Jews and heathens; or, in a spiritual sense, the world, the flesh, and the devil. In the day of thy power, i. e. when all power shall be given

6 He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; he shall wound the heads over many countries.

7 He shall drink of the brook in the way: therefore shall he lift up the head.

1 Pa. 62. 21. Hab. 3. 13.—Kr. great.

1 Judg. 7. 5, 6.—m. Isa. 52. 12.

Him, both in heaven and earth. Matt. xxviii. 18. In the beauties of holiness, which is the peculiar characteristic of Christ's reign, and of His religion."

None of the ancient Versions, nor of our modern translations, give any sense to the words which countenances the doctrine above referred to: it merely expresses the character of the people who shall constitute the kingdom of Christ. נָדָב nadab, signifies to be free, liberal, willing, noble; and especially liberality in bringing offerings to the Lord, Exod. xxv. 2, xxxv. 21, 29. And נָדִיב nadib, signifies a nobleman, a prince, Job xxi. 8; and also liberality. נִדְבָה nedebah, signifies a free-will offering,—an offering made by superabundant gratitude: one not commanded, see Exod. xxxvi. 3, Lev. vii. 16, and elsewhere. Now the נִדְבָהוֹת am nadeboth is the people of liberality—the princely, noble, and generous people;—Christ's real subjects;—His own children, who form His church, and are the salt of the world. The bountiful people who live only to get good from God that they may do good to man. Is there, has there ever been, any religion under heaven that has produced the liberality, the kindness, the charity, that characterize Christianity? Well may the followers of Christ be termed the am nadeboth—the cheerfully beneficent people. They hear His call,—come freely,—stay willingly,—act nobly,—live purely,—and obey cheerfully.

The day of Christ's power is the time of the gospel—the reign of the Holy Spirit in the souls of His people. Wherever and whenever the Gospel is preached in sincerity and purity, then and there is the day or time of Christ's power. It is the time of His exaltation. The days of His flesh were the days of His weakness; the time of His exaltation is the day of His power.

In the beauties of holiness נִדְבָהוֹת קֹדֶשׁ be-haderey kodesh, "In the splendid garments of holiness." An allusion to the beautiful garments of the high priest. Whatever is intended or expressed by superb garments, they possess in holiness of heart and life, indicative of their Divine birth, noble dispositions, courage, &c. Their garb is such as become the children of so great a King. Or, they shall appear on the mountains of holiness, bringing glad tidings to Zion.

From the womb of the morning] As the dew flows from the womb of the morning, so shall all the godly from Thee. They are the dew of thy youth;—they are the offspring of Thy own nativity. As the human nature of our Lord was begotten by the creative energy of God in the womb of the Virgin; so the followers of God are born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, but by the Divine Spirit.

Youth may be put here not only for young men, but for soldiers. So the Trojana juvenis, "the Trojan troops," or soldiers, in Virgil, Æn. i. ver. 467; and for persons of courage; heroic, strong, active, and vigorous. Such were the apostles, and first preachers of the Gospel; and, indeed, all genuine Christians. They may be fully compared to dew, for the following reasons:—

1. Like dew, they had their origin from heaven.
2. Like dew, they fructified the earth.
3. Like dew, they were innumerable.
4. Like dew, they were diffused over the earth.
5. Like dew, they came from the morning; the dawn, the beginning of the gospel day of salvation.

1. As the morning arises in the EAST; and the Sun, who produces it, proceeds to the WEST: so was the coming of the Son of man, and of His disciples and apostles.

2. They began in the EAST,—Asia Proper and Asia Minor: and shone unto the WEST,—Europe, America, &c. Scarcely any part of the world has been hidden from the bright and enlivening power of the Sun of righteousness: and now this glorious Sun is walking in the greatness of its strength.

Saw ye not the cloud arise,
I, like as a human hand?
Now it spreads along the skies,
Hangs o'er all the thirsty land:
Lo, the promise of a shower,
Drops already from above:
But the Lord will shortly pour,
All the spirit of His love.

The heavenly dew is dropping every where from the womb of the morning; and all the ends of the earth are about to see the salvation of God.

Verse 4. The Lord hath sworn] Has most firmly purposed, and will most certainly perform it; feeling Himself bound by His purpose, as an honest man would by his oath.

And will not repent] Will never change this purpose; it is perfectly without condition, and without contingency.

Nothing is left here to the will of man or angel. Christ shall be incarnated, and the gospel of His salvation shall be preached over the whole earth. This is an irresistible decree of that God who loves mankind.

Thou art a priest for ever] The word כֹּהֵן cohen, not only signifies a priest, but also a prince; as in the patriarchal times, most heads of families had, and exercised, both political and sacerdotal authority over all their descendants. Every priest had a threefold office:—1. He was an instructor of the family or tribe over which he presided. 2. He offered sacrifices for the sins of the people, to reconcile them to God, and give them access to His presence. 3. He was their mediator, and interceded for them. So is Christ, the grand, the universal Instructor, by His word and Spirit. The Lamb of God, who, by His sacrificial offering of Himself, takes away the sin of the world, and still continues to exhibit Himself before the throne in His sacrificial character. He is also the great Mediator between God and man, and in these characters is a Priest for ever. He will instruct; apply the sacrificial offering, and intercede for man, till time shall be no more.

After the order of Melchizedek.] For the elucidation of this point the Reader is requested to refer to the notes on Gen. xiv. 18, 19, and to the Observations at the end of that Chapter, where the subject, relative to the person, name, and office, of this ancient king, is fully discussed; and it will be necessary to read that note, &c. as if appended to this place.

Melchizedek was king of Salem, that is, king of Jerusalem; for Salem was its ancient name: but by Salem, signifies peace, and pax tesdek, righteousness. Christ is styled the Prince of peace; and He is the King that rules in the empire of righteousness; and all peace and righteousness proceed from Him. Heb. vii. 2.

He is Priest after the order of Melchizedek—after his pattern; in the same kind or manner of way in which this ancient king was priest.

Calmet properly observes that there were three orders of priesthood. 1. That of royalty. All ancient kings being, in virtue of their office, priests also. This seems to have been considered as the natural right of royalty, as it obtained in almost every nation of the earth, from the beginning of the world down to the end of the Roman empire. 2. That of the first-born. This right appertained naturally to Reuben, as the first-born in the family of Jacob. 3. That of the Levites, instituted by God Himself, and taken from Reuben because of his transgression. The Levitical priesthood ended with the Jewish polity; and that also of the first-born, which had been absorbed in it. This order, therefore, was not perpetual; it was intended to last only for a time. But that of royalty is perpetual (though not now in general use,) because founded in what is called natural right. It is, therefore, according to this most ancient order, that Christ is a Priest for ever. The kings of England, as heads of the church, appointing all bishops, continue to assume, in a certain way, this original right.

Melchizedek is said to be without father, without mother, without beginning of days, or end of life. We have no account of his parents; nothing of his birth; nothing of his death. Christ, as to his Divine nature, is without father or mother, and without beginning of days: nor can He have any end. Other priests could not continue by reason of death: but He is The Eternal, He cannot die; and therefore can have no successor—He is a priest for ever. Therefore, as Melchizedek was a priest and a king, and had no successor; so shall Christ be; of the increase and government of His kingdom there shall be no end.

Melchizedek was priest of the Most High God; and consequently not of one people or nation, but of the universe. Aaron was priest of one people, and for a time only: Jesus is Priest of all mankind, and for ever. He tasted death for every man; He is the King eternal; He has the keys of hell and death. As God is the King and Governor of all human beings, Christ being the Priest of the Most High God, He must also be the Priest for, and over, all whom this Most High God made and governs; and therefore He is the Priest, the atoning Sacrifice of the whole human race. In this the main similitude exists between the order of Melchizedek and that of Christ.

Verse 5. The Lord at thy right hand] Here Venema thinks the Psalm speaks of David. As Jesus is at the right hand of God; so He will be at thy hand, giving thee all the support and comfort requisite.

He shall strike through kings] As He did in the case of Abraham, Gen. xiv. 1-16, (for to this there seems to be an allusion,) where he smote four kings, and filled the pits with the dead bodies of their troops. That this allusion is to the above transaction seems the most probable; because in the same chapter, where the defeat of the four kings is mentioned, we have the account of Melchizedek coming to meet Abraham, and receiving the tenth of the spoils.

Verse 6. He shall judge among the heathen] David shall greatly extend his dominion and rule over the Idumeans, Moabites, Philistines, &c.

He shall fill—with dead bodies] He shall fill pits—make heaps of slain; there shall be an immense slaughter among his enemies.

He shall wound the heads] He shall so bring down the power of all the neighbouring kings, as to cause them to acknowledge him as their lord, and pay him tribute.

Verse 7. He shall drink of the brook in the way] He shall have sore travail, and but little ease and refreshment: but he shall still go on from conquering to conquer.

Therefore shall he lift up the head] Or his head. He shall succeed in all his enterprises, and at last be peaceably settled in his ample dominions.

But these verses, as well as the former, may be applied to our Lord. The fifth verse may be an address to Jehovah. Adonai at thy right hand (O Jehovah) shall smite kings,—bring down all powers hostile to His empire. In the day of his wrath—when, after having borne long, He arises and shakes terribly the rulers of the earth.

Ver. 6. He shall judge—give laws among the heathen—send His gospel to the whole Gentile world. He shall fill the field of battle with the dead bodies of the slain, who had resisted His empire, and would not have Him to reign over them.

He shall wound the head over many countries.—This must be spoken against some person possessing a very extensive sway. Perhaps Antichrist is meant; he who has so many countries under his spiritual domination. Christ shall destroy every person, and every thing, which opposes the universal spread of His own empire. He will be a King, as well as a Priest, for ever.

Ver. 7. He shall drink of the brook.—He shall suffer sorely, and even die in the struggle: but in that death His enemies shall all perish; and he shall lift up his head. He shall rise again from the dead, possessing all power in heaven and earth, ascend to the throne of glory, and reign till time shall be no more. He must suffer and die, in order to have the triumphs already mentioned.

While all have acknowledged that this Psalm is of the utmost importance, and that it speaks of Christ's priesthood and victories, it is amazing how various the interpretations are which are given of different passages. I have endeavoured to give the general sense in the preceding notes, and to explain all the particular expressions that have been thought most difficult; and, by giving the various readings from the MSS. have left it to the learned Reader to make further improvements.

It has, however, long appeared to me that there is a key by which all the difficulties in the Psalm may be unlocked. As this has not been suggested by any other, as far as I know, I shall, without apology, lay it before the Reader.

The One Hundred and Tenth Psalm is a WAR SONG, and every phrase and term in it is MILITARY.

I. In the first place may be considered here the proclamation of the Divine purpose relative to the sacerdotal, prophetic, and regal offices of the Lord JESUS CHRIST.

Jehovah said unto my Lord, SIT THOU ON MY RIGHT HAND.

2. A grievous battle, and consequent defeat and victory over the enemy, foretold. I WILL MAKE THINE ENEMIES TRY FOOTSTOOL TO THY FEET, ver. 1.

3. The ensign displayed. THE LORD SHALL SEND FORTH THE ROD OF THY STRENGTH;—the pole on which the banner shall be displayed, at the head of His strength,—His numerous and powerful forces.

4. The inscription, device, or motto, on this ensign.—RULE THOU IN THE MIDD OF THINE ENEMIES, ver. 2.

5. The muster of the troops. A host of bold spirited volunteers,—not mercenaries,—neither kidnapped nor impressed; וְיִצְחָק בְּעַם נְדָבוֹת, a volunteer people; high born,—loyal subjects, veteran soldiers,—every man bringing gifts to his General and King.

6. The regimentals, or uniform, in which they shall appear. THE BEAUTIES OF HOLINESS; הַדָּרֵי הַקֹּדֶשׁ haderey kodesh, the SPLENDID GARMENTS OF HOLINESS. The apparel shewing the richness of the King, and the worth and order of the soldiers; every man being determined to do his duty, and assured of conquest. The Lacedemonian soldiers were clothed in scarlet; and never went to battle without crowns and garlands upon their heads, being always sure of victory. Potter, Antiq. vol. ii. p. 55.

7. The number of the troops. They shall be as the drops of dew at break of day—innumerable; and this shall be in consequence יְרֵי יַאֲדֻלְעָא, of thy NATIVITY,—the manifestation of Jesus. Thou shalt be born unto men;—they shall be born of thy Spirit.—ver. 3.

8. The title of the Commander. THOU ART A PRIEST, כֹּהֵן cohen, a Priest and a Prince. So was Agamemnon in Homer, and Aeneas, in Virgil. Both were princes; both were priests; and both were heroes.

9. The perpetuity of this office. FOR EVER; לְעוֹלָם leolam, for futurity,—for all time,—till the earth and the heavens are no more.

10. The resolution of setting up such a Priest and King, and levying such an army. ACCORDING TO THE ORDER OF MELCHIZEDEK. The Commander, muster, and establishment of the corps, shall be according to the plan of that ancient king and priest:—or, translating the words literally, מַלְכֵי מַלְכֵי מַלְכֵי מַלְכֵי מַלְכֵי, all shall be executed as I have spoken to my Righteous King;—I have sworn, and will not change my purpose. All my purposes shall be fulfilled. This speaking may refer to the purpose, ver. 1, confirmed by an oath, ver. 4.

11. Victory gained. ADONAI AT THY RIGHT HAND HATH TRANSFIXED (וְיָרָד מַחֲטָוִי) KINGS in the day of his wrath, i. e. of battle and victory. Jesus, the Almighty King and Conqueror, fights and gains his battles, while sitting at the right hand of the Majesty on high, ver. 5.

12. Judgment instituted, and executed. He shall judge among the heathen, כֹּנֵן ba-goyim, among the nations. He shall bring forth, judge, and condemn His enemies; and He shall fill pits with the bodies of executed criminals, ver. 6.

13. False religion, supporting itself by the secular arm, under the name of true religion, shall be destroyed. וְיִצְחָק מַחֲטָוִי מַחֲטָוִי מַחֲטָוִי machatsoi rosh al arets rabbah. He smites the head that is over an extensive land, or country. The priesthood that is not according to the order of Melchizedek shall be destroyed; and all government that is not according to Him who is the eternal King and Priest shall be brought down and annihilated. Who is this great HEAD? This usurping power? This antichristian authority? Let the Italian archbishop answer, ver. 6.

14. Refreshment and rest—the fruits of the victories which have been gained. He shall drink of the brook in the way; therefore, shall he lift up the head. He and his victorious army having defeated and pursued his enemies, spent with fatigue and thirst, are refreshed by drinking of a rivulet providentially met with in the way. But the rout being now complete and final,—

15. The emperor is proclaimed and triumphs. God lifts up the HEAD, וְיָרָד מַחֲטָוִי, THE CHIEF,—the CAPTAIN,—as the word often means. Jesus, the Captain of our salvation, has a complete triumph; eternal peace and tranquility are established. The Messiah is all in all,—the last enemy death is destroyed. Jesus having overcome, has sat down with the Father upon His throne; and His soldiers, having also overcome, through the blood of the Lamb, seated with Him on the same throne, are for ever with the Lord. They see him as he is; and eternally contemplate and enjoy His glory,

"Far from a world of grief and sin,
With God eternally about us."

Hallelujah! The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth! Amen, Amen!

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND TENTH PSALM.

This Psalm is short in appearance, but deep and copious in mysteries. The subject, without doubt, is Christ; since both St. Peter (Acts ii. 34,) and St. Paul (Heb. i. 13,) expound it of Christ; and in Matt. xxiii. 44, Christ applies it to Himself.

In this Psalm Christ is described as a Priest and a King. I. Christ's kingdom; in the three first verses.

II. His priesthood; from the fourth to the seventh.

I. In reference to His kingdom the prophet acquaints us,

1. With His Person. 2. With His power, and the acquisition of it. 3. The continuance of it. 4. The execution of it.—First, Over His enemies;—Secondly, Over His own people, which is the sum of the three first verses.

1. The Person who was to reign was David's Lord: his son according to the flesh; but his Lord as equal to God. Phil. ii. 6, 7. As made flesh, and born of a virgin, the son of David; but as Immanuel, the Lord of David, which the Jews not understanding could not reply to Christ's question, Matt. xxii. 45.

2. As to His power; the Author of it was God. The Lord said to my Lord, &c. Decreed it from everlasting. And again, The Seed of the woman, &c.

3. And of His kingdom. He took possession, when the Lord said unto Him, Sit thou on my right hand. Christ, as the Son of God, was ever at God's right hand, equal to Him in might and majesty: but, as man, was exalted to honour, not before His glorious ascension, Acts ii. 34. Ephes. i. 20. Phil. ii. 8.

4. For the continuance of it. It is to be UNTIL, which notes not a portion of time, but a perpetuity. Sit till I make, &c. Sit at God's right hand, that is, in power and glory, till He shall say to all the wicked, Depart from me, Matt. xxv., but not so as to be then dethroned. But when once all His enemies shall be made His footstool, then He shall visibly rule, sitting at his father's right hand for evermore; go on to reign, neither desist to propagate and enlarge Thy kingdom, till all men bow the knee to Thy name, till all opponents be overthrown.

The beginning of this kingdom was in Zion. The Lord shall send, &c.

1. The rod of His power was His sceptre; that is, His word, the gospel, the wisdom of God, 1 Thess. ii. 13. The sword of the Spirit, Ephes. vi. 17. The mighty power of God, &c., Rom. i. 16.

2. And this was to be sent out of Zion, Isa. xxiii. It behoved Christ to suffer, &c. Luke xxiv. 47. The sound of the apostles' words went into all lands: but Zion must first hear, Acts xiii. 46.

And now the prophet comes to the execution of His power. Rule thou in the midst, &c. Converting all such as believe His gospel, and confounding those who will not have Him to reign over them. Now these enemies are the most in number: for the church, however greatly increased, is still surrounded by Turks, Jews, &c. Rule Thou; be Thou Ruler—go on, and set up Thy standard universally; for believers are easily dealt with: they love Thy government.

1. For thy people shall be willing. Not forced by compulsion; they shall flow together as water, Isa. ii.

2. But not before Thy grace has brought down their hearts. In the day of thy power, that is, in the days of Thy solemn assemblies, when the gospel light shall be sent forth, and the apostles and messengers go abroad to preach Thy truth.

3. The third quality of this good people is, that they be holy. For some read the words thus;—They shall offer freewill offerings with a holy worship. Our last translators point it, They people shall be willing in the day of thy power. Here they pause, and read on thus:—In the beauty of holiness, from the womb of the morning. The Vulgate, In splendoribus sanctorum. In the splendour of the saints, and stops there: but let the reading be as it will, all expositors are agreed that holiness must be the ornament of Christ's church:—

4. Which sanctity these good people have not from themselves, but, by the influence of the Holy Spirit; for they shall worship in the beauty, &c. This is a very difficult place; and the rendering of it is so various, so perplexed by the several modes of pointing it, that the difficulty is increased. But see the Notes. The Fathers expound this passage of Christ Himself; and the later divines of His people, which is most probable. By their youth they understand their regeneration: by the dews, the graces bestowed on them; which comes immediately from God. The prophet phrases it, From the womb of the morning. As if the Holy Ghost had said, "The preaching of Thy word shall bring forth a great and good people, plentiful as the drops of the morning dew. As the secret and refreshing dews come from heaven to refresh the earth; so Thy power, regenerating the hearts of men by the secret operation of Thy Holy Spirit, shall produce an immortal seed, children begotten to God. Thou hast the dew, the grace of God, to beautify thy youth, and to make thee holy by the direct influence of Thy Spirit, to produce entire regeneration.

II. The prophet having foretold Christ's kingdom, now predicts His priesthood, under which His prophetic office may be applied. That Messiah was to be a Priest at His coming God swears:—

1. The Lord swears. His word of assurance was given with His oath. In the priesthood of Christ lies the main weight of our redemption; therefore, God swears that He shall be a Priest to offer Himself, and to intercede for us, without which He had in vain been our Prophet and our King.

2. And will not repent. This is also added for our greater assurance. God is sometimes represented as repenting; as in the case of Nineveh: but now that He was to save the world by this Priest, His Son, He takes an oath to do it, and He will not repent. His sentence for judgment is ever conditional: but His decree for mercy is absolute. He will not repent, &c.

The matter of the oath follows: Thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchizedek.

1. Thou is emphatical: Thou, David's Lord, art a Priest, and none such a Priest as Thou.

2. Art: For this Priest was the I am; therefore, justly said, Thou art.

3. A Priest, whose office the apostle describes, Heb. v. 1.

4. For ever. Not as Aaron and his successors, who were many priests, &c., Heb. vii. 23, 24.

5. After the order—The right, the law, the custom, the rites. [See the Notes.]

6. Of Melchizedek—Which is opposed to the order of Aaron. He was not then to be a Priest after the order of Aaron, but by a former and higher order.

The difference lies in this:—

1. In the constitution of Him to the priesthood. He was made with an oath; and so were not any of Aaron's order, Heb. vii. 20, 21.

2. In the succession. In Aaron's priesthood,—the high priest being mortal, he died, and another succeeded: but this Priest, as Melchizedek, had neither beginning of days, nor end of life, Heb. vii.

3. Melchizedek was priest and king:—so was Christ. Aaron was only a priest.

4. Aaron and his sons offered up oxen, &c. Lev. xvi.

6. But Christ being holy, &c. offered no sacrifice for Himself; but for our sins, Isa. liii. 9.

5. Aaron was a local priest: but Christ an universal Priest, John iv. 22.

6. Aaron anointed with material oil; Christ with the Holy Ghost, Luke iv. 18, 21.

7. Aaron's priesthood was temporary;—Christ's for ever.

A priest is to be,—

1. A person taken from among men; but select, fit for the office: thus was Christ a perfect man.

2. A priest must be ordained by God. For no man, &c. So Christ glorified not Himself to be made a High Priest.

Thou art my Son, &c.

3. The high priest was ordained of men in things pertaining to God, to be their advocate, mediator, interpreter, and reconciler, in all those things in which men make their addresses to God; or God is to signify His will to them; and so was Christ, for He is the Advocate, the Mediator, for His people; He reconciles them to God; He interprets His will to us by preaching His gospel to the poor.

4. The high priest was ordained that He might offer gifts and sacrifices for sin. Their sacrifices were the blood of bulls, &c.: but Christ's was most infinitely precious, even his own blood, Ephes. v. 2. Heb. ix. 26. and Heb. x. 10, 11, 12.

5. The high priest must have compassion on the ignorant, and those who are out of the way: such was Christ. For we have not, &c. Heb. iv. 15.

6. Lastly, the high priest was compassed with infirmities; and so was Christ. In all things it became him— he took our infirmities, &c.

It remains now to shew,—

1. How he is a Priest for ever?

2. How a Priest after the order of Melchizedek?

He is a Priest for ever, in respect to His person, office, and effect.

1. In respect of his person and office. For He succeeded no priest, His vocation being immediate. Neither is any to succeed Him in this priesthood; for He lives for ever, and therefore needs not, as the priests under the old law, any successor to continue His priesthood.

2. A Priest he is for ever in respect of the effect; because by that sacrifice which He once offered on the cross, He purchased the inestimable effects of redemption and eternal salvation, in which sense the priesthood is eternal.

That Christ is a Priest for ever is evident: but it remains to be shewn how a Priest after the order,—the rite, the manner, the word, and power, given and prescribed to Melchizedek?

1. This Melchizedek was king of Salem, and priest of the most high God, Gen. xiv. so was Christ a King of Jerusalem above, God's own city, and a Priest—Offering himself a sacrifice for sin.

2. Melchizedek is, by interpretation, King of righteousness: so is Christ the Lord our righteousness, Jer. xxiii. 6. 1 Cor. i. 30.

3. Melchizedek is king of Salem; i. e. peace: so Christ is the Prince of peace, Isa. ix. 6.

4. Melchizedek was without father or mother: so was this our Priest as revealed by God to us, without beginning of days, or end of life, as touching His Godhead.

5. Melchizedek blessed Abraham: so Christ us, in turning every one of us away from his iniquities.

PSALM CXI.

The Psalmist praises the Lord, and extols His works as great, honourable, glorious, and magnificent. 1-4. His providence and kindness to His followers, 5-8. The redemption He has granted to His people, 9. The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, 10.

PRAISE ye the LORD. ^b I will praise the LORD with my whole heart, in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation.

2 ^c The works of the LORD are great, ^d sought out of all them that have pleasure therein.
3 His work is ^e honourable and glorious; and his righteousness endureth for ever.
4 He hath made his wonderful works to be

^a Heb. Hallelujah.—^b Psa. 35. 10. & 89. 5. & 107. 32. & 109. 30. & 149. 1.—^c Job 28. & 29. & 30. & 41. Psa. 92. 5. & 139. 14. Rev. 15. 3.—^d Psa. 142. 5.—^e Psa. 145. 4, 5, 10.—^f Psa. 88. 5. & 103. 5.

6. Melchizedek brought forth bread and wine to refresh Abraham's army: so Christ instituted the sacrament, set forth in bread and wine, to refresh the hungry and thirsty souls of His genuine followers.

After the prophet had said that the Messiah shall be a Priest, &c. he intimates in this verse that, notwithstanding all opposition that shall be made against Him, yet His priesthood should be eternal; for,

- 1. The Lord is on thy right hand. Giving Thee power in defence of His church.
- 2. And this thy Lord shall strike through kings, &c. The greatest of thy enemies.
- 3. In the day of his wrath. For such a day there is, and it will come, when the proudest tyrant shall not escape.

In the following verse Christ is described as a valiant Conqueror.

- 1. He shall rule and judge. Not only the Jews, but all people.
 - 2. He shall fill the places, &c. Make such a slaughter among His enemies, as enraged soldiers do in the storming of a city, when they fill the trenches with the dead bodies.
 - He shall wound the heads, &c.* Even kings and monarchs, those in the greatest power and authority.
- The prophet, through the whole of the Psalm, had spoken of Christ's exaltation: that He was set at God's right hand; by oath was made a priest; and that, in defence of His kingdom and priesthood, He would subdue, conquer, and break to pieces, His enemies. In this last verse he tells us by what means He came to this honour: His cross was the way to the crown; His passion and humiliation to His exaltation. He, saith David, shall drink of the brook in the way; therefore, shall he lift up his head; as if he had said with the apostle, He humbled himself, and became obedient to death, &c.

- 1. He shall drink. To drink is to be afflicted, Jer. xlix. 12.
- 2. He shall drink of the brook; נַחַל nachal, of the torrent; and that is more than of the cup, for a cup contains but a certain portion of sorrows, but a torrent a whole flood of miseries. In a cup that which is drank may be clear and clean: but in a torrent a man can expect nothing but muddy and troubled water. Thus the prophet intimates here that the drink offered Him should be much and troubled. And in His passion He descended into the depth of the torrent, and drank deep of it.
- 3. In the way. On His journey that preceded His resurrection and ascension.

But claritas humilitatis præmium, Glory is the reward of humility. Because He thus humbled Himself, and willingly underwent his death and passion, for the glory of His Father, and the salvation of man; therefore shall God lift up his head; He shall ascend into heaven; sit on His right hand, and be constituted the Judge of quick and dead. He shall rise from the dead, and have all power committed to him in heaven and earth.

NOTES ON PSALM CXI.

This is one of the alphabetical or acrostic Psalms: but it is rather different from those we have already seen, as the eight first verses contain each two members; and each member commences with a consecutive letter of the Hebrew alphabet. But the two last verses are composed of three members each, characterized the same way, making twenty-two members or hemistichs in the whole, to each of which a consecutive letter of the alphabet is prefixed. But this division is not proper: it should follow the arrangement in the Hebrew poetry, where every hemistich stands by itself, and each contains a complete sense. The Psalm has no title in the Hebrew, unless the word Hallelujah be reckoned as such; and the thanksgivings which it contains were probably composed for the benefit of the Jews after their return from Captivity.

Verse 1. I will praise the Lord with my whole heart remembered: ^f the LORD is gracious and full of compassion.

5 He hath given ^g meat ^h unto them that fear him: he will ever be mindful of his covenant.

6 He hath shewed his people the power of his works, that he may give them the heritage of the heathen.

7 The works of his hands are ⁱ verity and judgment; ^k all his commandments are sure.

8 ^l They ^m stand fast for ever and ever, and are ⁿ done in truth and uprightness.

9 ^o He sent redemption unto his people: he hath commanded his covenant for ever: ^p holy and reverend is his name.

If we profess to "sing to the praise and glory of God," the heart, and the whole heart, without division and distraction, must be employed in the work.

In the assembly] בְּסוּד be-sod, in the secret assembly—the private religious meetings for the communion of saints. And in the congregation—עֲדָה edah, the general assembly, the public congregation. There were such meetings as the former ever since God had a church on the earth;—and to convey general information there must be public assemblies.

Verse 2. The works of the Lord are great] גְּדוּלִים gedolim, vast in magnitude; as רַבִּים rabim, signifies their multitude and variety.

Sought out] Investigated, carefully examined.

By all them that have pleasure therein.] By all that delight in them: by every genuine philosopher; every lover of nature, he who traces out the great First Cause by means of His works. And the man that does so will be astonished at the perfections of the Creator, and admire all the operations of His hands.

Verse 3. His work is honourable, &c.] He has done nothing in nature or grace that does not redound to His own honour and glory; and because all is done in righteousness, it endureth for ever.

Verse 4. He hath made his wonderful works] He who seeks them out will never forget them: and every thing of God's framing is done in such a way, as to strike the imagination, interest the senses, and charm and edify the intellect. But the Psalmist may here intend principally the works of God in behalf of the Jewish people; and particularly in their deliverance from the Babylonish captivity; which, it is supposed, this Psalm celebrates.

Verse 5. He hath given meat] לֶחֶם lechem, PREY. This may allude to the quails in the wilderness. The word signifies what is taken in hunting—wild beasts, venison, or fowls of any kind; particularly such as were proper for food. It also signifies spoil taken from enemies. And he may also refer to the wondrous manner in which they were fed and supported during their captivity; and by His support He proved that He was mindful of His covenant. He had promised such blessings; He was faithful to His promises.

Verse 6. The power of his works] They have seen that these things did not arrive in the common course of nature; it was not by might, nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord of hosts they were done. And it required a display of the power of God to give them the heritage of the heathen.

Verse 7. Verity and judgment] His works are verity or truth, because they were wrought for the fulfilment of the promises He had made to the fathers. And they were just;—for their punishment was in consequence of their infidelities; and the punishment of the Babylonians was only in consequence of their gross iniquities; and in both respects He had proved His work to be according to justice and judgment.

Verse 8. They stand fast for ever] סֹמְעִים samucim, they are propped up, buttressed for ever. They can never fail; for God's power supports His works, and His providence preserves the record of what He has done.

Verse 9. He sent redemption] He sent Moses to redeem them out of Egypt;—various judges to deliver them out of the hands of their oppressors; Ezra, Nehemiah, and Zerubbabel, to deliver them from Babylon;—and the Lord Jesus to redeem a whole lost world from sin, misery, and death.

Holy and reverend is his name.] The word reverend comes to us from the Latin, reuerendus, and is compounded of re, intensive, and veror, to be feared:—and most or right reverend, reuerendissimus, signifies to be greatly feared. These terms are now only titles of ecclesiastical respect; especially in the Protestant ministry. But there was a time in which these were no empty titles. Such was the power of the clergy that, when they walked not in the fear of the Lord, they caused the people to fear; and they themselves were to be feared: but, when the secular power was added to the spiritual power, they were then truly reverendi and reverendissimi, to be feared, and greatly to be feared. But reverend is not applied to God in this way; nor does the word מורé, bear this signification—it rather means terrible, holy and terrible—or, holy and tremendous is his name. This title belongs not to man; nor does any minister, in assuming the title reverend, assume this. Indeed, the word reverend, as now used, gives us a very imperfect expression of the original term. Holy and tremendous is God's name. He is glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders, both in the way of judgment and in the way of mercy.

Verse 10. The fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom | The original stands thus, —חַיִּים חֲסִידֵי יְהוָה רֵשִׁית חֵכְמָה, yirath Yehovah.—The beginning of wisdom is the fear of Jehovah. Wisdom itself begins with this fear;—true wisdom has this for its commencement. It is the first ingredient in it, and is an essential part of it. In vain does any man pretend to be wise, who does not fear the Lord; and he who fears the Lord departs from evil;—he who lives in sin neither fears God, nor is wise.

A good understanding have all they that do his commandments | These last words we add as necessary to make up the text; but there is no need of this expedient, as the words of the original literally read thus,—“The beginning of wisdom is the fear of Jehovah; good discernment to the doers.” That is, they who act according to the dictates of wisdom, the commencement of which is the fear of Jehovah, have a sound understanding; discern their duty and their interest; live to secure their own peace, their neighbour's good, and God's glory.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND ELEVENTH PSALM.

It is supposed that this hymn was set by the author to be sung at the Passover; and, that it might be the more readily learned and remembered, the colons are in number as many, and arranged in the order of the Hebrew alphabet. It is an exhortation to praise God for His wonderful benefits bestowed on the world at large, and especially on Israel and the church.

There are three parts in this Psalm:—

I. A resolution of the Psalmist to praise God, the manner in which he would do so, and the company with whom he would do it, ver. 1.

II. An expression of the reasons which moved him to it, viz. His admirable benefits, special and general, ver. 2-9.

III. An inference from the premises by way of sentiment, in which he commends the fear of God, ver. 10.

I. The title of this Psalm is Hallelujah, praise ye the Lord; and he adds,—

- 1. I will praise the Lord. And shew how it should be done.
- 2. Not hypocritically;—not with the lips only, but with the heart.
- 3. With the whole heart.
- 4. Not secretly, but in the assembly of the upright, &c.

1. Both in the assembly, where these good and upright men are. 2. And also in a mixed multitude, and secretly among good men.

II. And, having made a pious confession of his readiness to practise the duty, he next sets down the ground and matter of his praise.

1. His works of power in the creation and conservation of the world, or the favours shewed to the church. And these works of the Lord are great. 1. Great, not only for variety and beauty; but also in base creatures His wisdom is admirable, and to be admired. 2. Great; for it was great to take to himself a people out of another people, to make a covenant with them, and to reveal His promises, and give them a law, to settle among them a policy for church and state. 3. Fools and impious men, indeed, but little consider these works; they think not of their Author: but in the eyes of all wise men they are sought out, &c.

2. His works of wisdom in governing the creatures He has created, and in the guiding and collecting His church. 1. It is honourable. And much more so its Author. 2. And glorious. Far above the works of princes. 3. He is LORD, that * delighteth greatly in his commandments.

2 * His seed shall be mighty upon earth : the generation of the upright shall be blessed.

3 * Wealth and riches shall be in his house : and his righteousness endureth for ever.

4 † Unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness : he is gracious, and full of compassion, and righteous.

a righteous God, and his righteousness endureth for ever. For he never departs from the exact rule of justice.

His fourth work is that of mercy, which record must be kept.

1. He hath made his wonderful works, &c. As in the Jewish hosts.

2. For the Lord is gracious, &c. These proceed from mere mercy. 1. Gracious in doing these works. 2. Full of compassion, as a father towards his children.

Of which the prophet gives several instances:—

1. He hath given meat, &c. He nourished His people for forty years in the wilderness, giving them meat from heaven.

2. He will ever be mindful, &c. Notwithstanding their provocations.

3. He hath shewed his people, &c. As in the turning of Jordan backwards, overthrowing Jericho, staying the sun and moon, &c.

4. That he might give them, &c. By the expulsion of the Canaanites. The works of the Lord are great, &c.

Again he uses an acclamation: The works of his hands are,—

1. Verity. Making good His promise to Abraham.

2. Judgment. Executed on idolaters and profane persons. He shews unto the whole world that—

1. All his commandments are sure. That His laws, especially His moral laws, are of everlasting obligation on all.

2. That these commands stand fast for ever; for they are established in truth, equity, justice, and reason.

The prophet now speaks of a mercy far exceeding all the rest, the work of human redemption by Christ. This may be thus expounded, and better than in reference to the redemption of Israel out of Egypt.

1. He sent redemption, &c. A Redeemer, so long promised.

2. He hath commanded his covenant, &c. Which is still extant.

III. The prophet having enumerated many of God's works of power, wisdom, and mercy, concludes the Psalm with three acclamations.

Holy and reverend, &c. Either in His service, or whenever He is signified.

1. Holy. Unpolluted by hypocrisy: the command is, Be ye holy, for I am holy.

2. Reverend. Not rashly or negligently performed. Or, as some read it, terrible; and it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

The second acclamation follows upon the preceding:—

1. This fear is the beginning of wisdom. For these men begin to be wise; to eschew evil, and do good.

2. This fear, if it be right, will be practical. For a good understanding, &c.

The third acclamation is, His praise endureth for ever. Which some refer to God, others to man: but both are true. For the praise must continue for ever. His power, mercy, &c.

1. If referred to man, then the sense will be,—

1. His praise. For they that dwell in Thy house, &c. Psa. lxxxiv. 4.

2. Or his praise. The commendation of a good man will be had in everlasting remembrance, (Psa. cxii. 6.) The name of the wicked shall rot, &c. (Prov. x. 7. Well done, thou good and faithful servant, &c. (Matt. xxv. 21.) His praise is in this world lasting; but in the world to come everlasting.

NOTES ON PSALM CXII.

This is another of the acrostic or alphabetical Psalms, under the title Hallelujah. It is formed exactly as the preceding in the division of its verses. It has ten verses in the whole; the eight first contain each two hemistichs, beginning with a consecutive letter of the alphabet; the ninth and tenth verses three each, making twenty-two in the whole. It is understood to have been written after the Captivity, and probably by Zechariah and Haggai: to them it is ascribed by the Vulgate.

Verse 1. Blessed is the man that feareth the LORD | This seems to be the continuation of the preceding Psalm: 351

5 * A good man sheweth favour, and lendeth : he will guide his affairs ^b with ^c discretion.
 6 Surely ^a he shall not be moved for ever : ^d the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.
 7 = He shall not be afraid of evil tidings : his ^e heart is fixed, ^f trusting in the LORD.

 9 = He hath dispersed, he hath given to the poor ; * his righteousness endureth for ever ; his ⁱ horn shall be exalted with honour.

 10 = The wicked shall see it, and be grieved ; ^j he shall gnash with his teeth, and ^k melt away : ^l the desire of the wicked shall perish.

there it was asserted that the beginning of wisdom was the fear of the Lord ; and here the blessedness of the man who thus fears is stated.

[That delighteth greatly] It is not enough to fear God, we must also love him :—fear will deter us from evil, love will lead us to obedience. And the more a man fears and loves God, the more obedient will he be, till at last he will delight greatly in the commandments of his Maker.

Verse 2. His seed shall be mighty] ^א זרעו ^ב יצא ^ג זרעו—his posterity. So the word should always be understood in this connexion.

Verse 3. Wealth and riches shall be in his house] This is often the case :—a godly man must save both time and money. Before he was converted he lost much time, and squandered his money. All this he now saves, and therefore wealth and riches must be in his house : and if he do not distribute to the necessities of the poor, they will continue to accumulate till they be his curse ; or God will, by his providence, sweep them away. Both ^א נאמרו ^ב יאדעו ^ג ויאמרו, and ^ד יאמרו, are often used not only to signify justice and righteousness, but also beneficence and almsgiving : and this is most probably the meaning here. See verse the ninth.

Verse 4. There ariseth light in the darkness] The upright is always happy : and, when tribulations come, God lifts up the light of His countenance upon him, and causes all occurrences to work together for his good.

He is gracious, and full of compassion, and righteous.] He enjoys the favour of God ; that grace makes him compassionate ; and in the general tenor of his conduct he is righteous. From these principles he shews favour, (ver. 5.) to him that needs it, that is, to the real poor ; he gives of his substance : and others he obliges by lending, they not being utterly in want, but standing in need only of a little present help. But he takes heed to whom he gives, and to whom he lends, that in the first case his bounty may be well applied : and, in the second, he may not oblige the person who only seeks, under the notion of a loan, to appropriate the money borrowed. To prevent evils of this kind he acts prudently, and guides his affairs with discretion, ver. 5.

Verse 7. He shall not be afraid of evil tidings] He knows that God governs the world ; therefore, he fears not for futurity. And as to the calamities of men, he fears them not ; because his heart is fixed, determined to walk in the path of duty, whatever persecutions he may suffer, for he trusts in the Lord.

Verse 8. His heart is established] ^א לבו ^ב סמוך ^ג ליבו, "his heart is propped up ;" he is buttressed up by the strength of his Maker.

Verse 9. He hath dispersed] He has scattered abroad his beneficence ;—he has given particularly to the poor : his righteousness, his almsgiving, his charities remain for ever. See on ver. 3.

His horn] His power and authority shall be exalted with honour. He shall rise to influence only through his own worth, and not by extortion or flattery.

Verse 10. The wicked shall see it] ^א רשע ^ב רשעו, the wicked one. Some think Satan is meant. It is distinguished from ^א רשעים ^ב רשעים, wicked men, in the conclusion of the verse.

Shall gnash with his teeth] Through spite and ill-will. And melt away] Through envy and hopeless expectation of similar good : for his desire in reference to himself, and in reference to him who is the object of his envy, shall perish,—shall come to nothing.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND TWELFTH PSALM.

David having put it down for an infallible maxim in the close of the former Psalm, that the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, in this sets down the felicity of that man who fears God in several particulars.

There are two parts in this Psalm :—

- I. A general proposition, that he is blessed.
- II. An enumeration of particulars in which that blessedness consists, from ver. 2, to the end.

I. To the first part he prefixes a hallelujah, praise the Lord, which is the intent and scope of the Psalm : that He be praised for those rewards of piety He bestows on such as fear Him.

He delivers this one general proposition to persuade them to piety. Blessed is the man, &c. that believes, honours, and serves Him.

For fear a man should mistake, supposing he fears the Lord when he really does not, he adds these three restrictions to his proposition :—

- 1. Keep his commandments. An obedient fear.
- 2. He delights in them, &c. Is pleased with their equity, and loves them.
- 3. He delights greatly, &c. It must be a thankful and ready fear, performed with alacrity and earnestness, done with all the heart.

II. In the rest of the Psalm he insists on what this blessedness consists in :—

- 1. That the righteous shall have temporal goods, and that they shall be blessings.
- 2. That, though they shall enjoy them, they are not exempted from crosses, 2 Tim. iii. 12.
- 3. That God distributes these temporal blessings, not equally, but most profitably for him.

This being premised, he enumerates the blessings here promised :—

- 1. His seed shall be mighty, &c. Which was verified in Abraham, and his posterity. I will shew mercy to thousands, &c.
- 2. Wealth and riches, &c. That is, abundance of all things shall be in his house, and remain in it for his just dealing ; and contentment preserves his well obtained goods to his posterity.

3. Unto the upright there ariseth light, &c. The light of counsel and consolation in the midst of doubts, tribulations, and afflictions, which the prophet ascribes to God's mercy and goodness.

4. He hath bowels of compassion, of which He shews two effects. 1. A good man shews favour, &c. Easily forgives an injury. 2. Imagines he is not born for himself, but to do good to others.

5. He will guide his affairs with discretion. Discern between truth and falsehood ; be no acceptor of persons, but in all things just and upright.

6. He is patient and constant. Troubles and dangers may increase : but in the midst of all he looks to heaven, and remains firm in his principles.

7. The righteous shall be had, &c. His name is written in the book of life ; and it is precious in the church, such as those of the martyrs ; while the wicked are detested, such as Judas, Cain, Pilate. At the last day the one shall have, Come ye blessed ; the other, Go, ye cursed.

8. He shall not be afraid of evil tidings. Scandals may arise : but he remembers the servant is not above his lord ; therefore he bears all patiently, and for these reasons, 1. Because his heart is fixed, &c. He has a sure rock ; God will clear his innocence. 2. His heart is established, &c. He knows God will take care of him.

9. The ninth felicity to the righteous is, God has given him a charitable heart. 1. He hath dispersed, acts liberally, that others as well as himself may reap. 2. He does it freely, without looking for any thing again. He gives. 3. He hath given to the poor. To those who need his kindness.

For this liberality he is a great gainer in two respects :— 1. The good work he hath done, &c. His charity and piety are increased by it.

2. His horn, &c. His power, honour, dignity, and glory. His last felicity is,—

- 1. The wicked shall see it, and be grieved at his felicity.
- 2. He shall gnash his teeth, as a mad dog, and seek his ruin.
- 3. But shall not be able to harm him. The desire of the wicked shall perish. He that fears God is a happy man ; he that fears him not meet unhappy. Reader, in what state art thou?—Happy, or unhappy?

solemn festivals, and particularly at the Pass-over. To these reference is made by the Evangelists, Matt. xxvi. 30, and Mark xxiv. 26, there called the hymn, which Jesus and His disciples sung at the Pass-over; for the whole of the Psalms were considered as one grand hymn, or thanksgiving. It was probably composed after the return from the Captivity. It has no title but Hallelujah in the Hebrew and ancient Versions.

Verse 1. Praise, O ye servants] Probably an address to the Levites. The Anglo-Saxon, has heþað cnapan driht, praise the Lord, ye knaves. Knapa, or knave, signified among our ancestors a servant; sometimes a male, a young man.

Verse 3. From the rising of the sun] From morning to evening, be always employed in the work. Or, it may be a call on all mankind to praise God for His innumerable mercies to the human race. Praise Him from one end of the world unto the other. And therefore the Psalmist adds,—

Verse 4. The Lord is high above all nations] He governs all, He provides for all; therefore, let all give Him praise.

Verse 5. Who is like unto the Lord] Those who are highly exalted are generally unapproachable; they are proud and overbearing, or so surrounded with magnificence and flatterers, that to them the poor have no access; but God, though infinitely exalted, humbleth himself to behold even heaven itself; and much more does He humble himself when He condescends to behold earth and her inhabitants (ver. 6.) But so does He love His creatures, that He rejoices over even the meanest of them, to do them good.

Verse 7. He raiseth up the poor] The poorest man, in the meanest and most abject circumstances, is an object of His merciful regards. He may here allude to the wretched state of the captives in Babylon, whom God raised up out of that dust and dunghill. Others apply it to the resurrection of the dead.

Verse 8. With the princes] נדיבים nedebim, very properly translated by the Anglo-Saxon, eadbojmannum, the aldermen, the most respectable of His people.

Verse 9. He maketh the barren woman to keep house] This is a figure to point out the desolate decreasing state of the captives in Babylon, and the happy change which took place on their return to their own land. These are nearly the words of Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 5.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND THIRTEENTH PSALM.

The scope of this Psalm is the same with those that went before, that is, to excite men to praise God.

This Psalm contains three parts:—

- I. An exhortation to God's servants to praise Him.
II. A form set down how and where to praise Him, ver. 2, 3.

III. The reasons to persuade us to it. 1. By His infinite power, ver. 4, 5. 2. His providence, as displayed in heaven and earth, ver. 6.

I. The prophet exhorts men to praise the Lord; and, 1. He doubles and trebles his exhortation, that it be not coldly but zealously done, or else to shew that he alone is worthy of praise.

2. Praise the Lord, O ye servants, &c.] They are to praise Him, for He is their Lord; praise Him likewise with a pure heart.

II. The manner of praising Him. Say

1. Blessed be the name of the Lord, Job i.

2. From this time forth, &c. In prosperity or adversity, in this life or the future.

3. From the rising of the sun, &c. In all places, even over all the world.

PSALM CXIV.

4 The mountains skipped like rams, and the little hills like lambs.

III. And now follow the reasons to persuade men to praise God.

1. Because of His majesty, infinite power, and glory, which extend not to earth alone, but heaven also. The Lord is high above, &c.

2. Because of His providence, benignity, and bounty, which, being united with so much majesty, appears the more admirable. Who is like the Lord, &c. None in heaven or on earth are to be compared to Him. Yet he humbleth himself, &c. He is present with the highest angels, and with the poorest of His creatures to help him.

In humbling himself to behold the things on earth. He gives two instances: 1. In states and kingdoms. 2. In private families.

1. In states. He raiseth up the poor, &c. Let then no man say, that God does not regard them that are of low estate, He raiseth up the poor, to the end, that he may set him with the princes, &c.

2. In private families. He maketh the barren woman, &c. Children are an heritage of the Lord. Some expositors refer the meaning of this last verse to the church of the Gentiles. Rejoice, O heaven, &c. Isa. liv. 1.

NOTES ON PSALM CXIV.

This Psalm has no title. The word Hallelujah is prefixed in all the Versions except the Chaldee and Syriac. It seems like a fragment, or a part of another Psalm. In many MSS. it is only the beginning of the following; both making but one Psalm in all the Versions, except the Chaldee. It is elegantly and energetically composed: but begins and ends very abruptly, if we separate it from the following. As to the author of this Psalm, there have been various opinions: some have given the honour of it to Shadrack, Meshech, and Abed-nego; others to Esther; and others to Mordecai.

Verse 1. A people of strange language] This may mean no more than a barbarous people;—a people whom they did not know, and who did not worship their God. But it is a fact that the language of the Egyptians in the time of Joseph was so different from that of the Hebrews, that they could not understand each other. See Ps. lxxxii. 5. Gen. xlii. 23.

The Chaldee has here מעמי ברבריא me-ammej barbarej, which gives reason to believe that the word is Chaldee, or more properly Phœnician. See this word fully explained in the Note on Acts xxviii. 2. My old Psalter understood the word as referring to the religious state of the Egyptians: En gangning of Æstel suite of Egypt, of the house of Jacob fra þætten folke.

Verse 2. Judah was his sanctuary] He set up His true worship among the Jews, and took them for His peculiar people.

And Israel his dominion.] These words are a proof, were there none other, that this Psalm was composed after the days of David, and after the division of the tribes,—for then the distinction of Israel and Judah took place.

Verse 3. The sea saw it, and fled] Mr. Addison has properly observed (see Spect. No. 461,) that the author of this Psalm designedly works for effect, in pointing out the miraculous driving back the Red sea and the river Jordan, and the commotion of the hills and mountains, without mentioning any agent. At last, when the Reader sees the sea rapidly retiring from the shore, Jordan retreating to its source, and the mountains and hills running away like a flock of affrighted sheep, that the passage of the Israelites might be every where uninterrupted; then the Cause of all is suddenly introduced, and the presence of God in His grandeur solves every difficulty.

5 What ailed thee, O thou sea, that thou fleddest? thou Jordan, that thou wast driven back?

6 Ye mountains, that ye skipped like rams; and ye little hills, like lambs?

g Hab. 3. 2.

Verse 5. What ailed thee, O thou sea] The original is very abrupt; and the prosopepia, or personification, very fine and expressive:—

What to thee, O sea, that thou fleddest away! O Jordan, that thou didst roll back! Ye mountains, that ye leaped like rams! And ye hills, like the young of the field!

After these very sublime interrogations God appears; and the Psalmist proceeds as if answering his own questions:

At the appearance of the Lord, O earth, thou didst tremble; At the appearance of the strong God of Jacob. Converting the rock into a pool of waters; The granite into water springs.

I know the present Hebrew text reads חַיִּי חַיִּי, "tremble thou," in the imperative; but almost all the Versions understood the word in the past tense, and read as if the Psalmist was answering his own questions, as stated in the translation above. Tremble thou, O earth. As if he had said, Thou mayest well tremble, O earth, at the presence of the Lord,—at the presence of the God of Jacob.

Verse 8. The flint] I have translated חֲבַלֵּי חַלְמִישׁ, GRANTS; for such is the rock of Horeb, a piece of which now lies before me.

This short and apparently imperfect Psalm, for elegance and sublimity, yields to few in the whole book.

It is so well translated in the old Psalter, that I think I shall gratify the Reader by laying it before him.

Ver. 7. From sight Lord's stirred is earth; From sight God of Jacob.
Ver. 8. Who turned stone in mere waters; And cliffs in walls waters.

I have retained some words above in nearly their Saxon form, because, they still exist in our old writers; or, with little variation, in those of the present day.

Ver. 2. Anchoald, government. Hence, weal, and wealth, common-weal, or wealth,—the general government; that which produces the welfare of the country.

Ver. 4. Fægnedon, fained. Desired fervently,—felt delight in expectation.

Ver. 4. Burgh, a hill,—a mound or heap of earth, such as was raised up over the dead. Hence a barrow; and hence the word bury, to inhum the dead.

Ver. 8. Mers, or meer, a large pool of water, a lake, a lough, still in use in the north of England. Gentlemen's ponds, or large sheets of water so called; and hence Winder-mer, a large lake in Cumberland. Mers also signifies limit or boundary: hence the Mersey, the river which divides Lancashire from Cheshire, and serves as a boundary to both counties. The mere, that spreads itself out to the sea.

Instead of chudas, which signifies rocks, one MS. has clyf, clyf, which signifies a craggy mountain, or broken rock.

The Reader will see from this specimen how much of our ancient language still remains in the present; and perhaps, also, how much, in his opinion, we have amplified and improved our mother tongue.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FOURTEENTH PSALM.

David in this Psalm chants forth the wonderful works and miracles that God wrought, when He brought forth Israel out of Egypt.

This Psalm has two parts:—

I. A narration of Israel's deliverance, amplified by the state they were in, ver. 1; the state to which they were brought, ver. 2; the miracles then done, ver. 3; and the law given, ver. 4.

II. A prosopepia set down by way of dialogue.

1. The prophet asks the sea and Jordan why they fled, ver. 5, 6. 2dly, To which the answer is, that the earth trembled, &c. ver. 7, 8.

I. In the narration, Israel's condition is set down by way of comparison, in order that their deliverance might make the deeper impression. We must recollect that Jacob and Judah in this place signify the whole nation of the Israelites that descended out of Jacob's loins: but of the house of Jacob there is made particular mention, because with him they came into Egypt; and of Judah, because from him they were called Jews. This being premised,—I. We are presented with the condition of the Jews before their deliverance; before they were formed into a state or church: they were among a people of a strange language.

2. The condition of the Jews after their deliverance. When Israel went out of Egypt, &c. then Judah was his sanctuary, &c. 1. His sanctuary. A people sanctified and adopted by Him, consecrated to His worship as holy temples and sanctuaries, and having a holy priest to govern them in points of piety. 2. His dominion. In which He reigned as King by His laws and Spirit, and appointed godly magistrates to rule them in matters of policy; for the government was a theocracy, till they cast it off by choosing a king.

The prophet explains the manner of their deliverance, which was by miracles and signs; and gives us these instances:—

1. The sea saw it, and fled, as the people advanced to it. At the presence of the Lord it turned back all night, Exod. xiv. In a poetical strain he attributes this to the sense of the sea, The sea saw, &c.

2. Jordan was driven back, &c. Forty years after, when they were entering the Promised Land, then Jordan suffered a long reflux. Josh. iv.

3. At Sinai, when the law was given, then the mountains and hills quaked. The mountains skipped like rams, &c.

II. This Psalm abounds with poetical imagery; and, having related the wonderful deliverances wrought for God's people, the Psalmist expostulates with the sea and mountains, and interrogates them as to what so strangely altered their course. What ailest thee, O thou sea, &c.?—Ye mountains, that ye skipped like rams, &c.

To which, in the person of the earth speaking to herself, the prophet answers; thus making both a prosopepia and an apostrophe.

1. Tremble, thou earth, at the presence of the Lord, &c. As if it had been said, Would ye know the reason why we fly? The cause is, the Lord has appeared and

PSALM CXV.

God alone is to be glorified, 1-3. The vanity of idols, 4-8. Israel, the house of Aaron, and all that fear God, are exhorted to trust in the Lord, 9-11. The Lord's goodness to His people, and His gracious promises, 12-16. As the dead cannot praise Him, the living should bless Him, 17, 18.

NOT unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but unto thy name give glory, for thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake.

Wherefore should the heathen say, Where is now thy God?

But our God is in the heavens: he hath done whatsoever he hath pleased.

Their idols are silver and gold, the work of men's hands.

They have mouths, but they speak not: eyes have they, but they see not:

They have ears, but they hear not: noses have they, but they smell not:

They have hands, but they handle not: feet have they, but they walk not: neither speak they through their throat.

They that make them are like unto them; so is every one that trusteth in them.

O Israel, trust thou in the Lord: he is their help and their shield.

O house of Aaron, trust in the Lord: he is their help and their shield.

Ye that fear the Lord, trust in the Lord: he is their help and their shield.

The Lord hath been mindful of us: he will bless us; he will bless the house of Israel; he will bless the house of Aaron.

He will bless them that fear the Lord, both small and great.

The Lord shall increase you more and more, you and your children.

Ye are blessed of the Lord which made heaven and earth.

The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's; but the earth hath he given to the children of men.

The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence.

But we will bless the Lord from this time forth and for evermore. Praise the Lord.

showed His force and power, and laid His commands upon us; and, therefore, not abiding His presence, the mountains are moved, &c.

Of His power this miracle is sufficient for an instance,—Which turned the rock into a standing water, the fount into a fountain of waters. Causing not only waters to flow from thence, but turning the very substance of a flint, which is apter to yield fire than water, into that fluid element, Numb. xx.

NOTES ON PSALM CXV.

This Psalm is written as a part of the preceding, by eighteen of Kennicott's and fifty-three of De Rossi's MSS.; by some ancient editions; the Septuagint, the Syriac, the Vulgate, the Ethiopic, the Arabic, and the Anglo-Saxon. The old Anglo-Scottish Psalter reads it consecutively with the foregoing. Who the author of both was we know not, nor on what occasion it was written. It seems to be an epinicion, or triumphal song, in which the victory gained is entirely ascribed to Jehovah.

Verse 1. Not unto us, O Lord.] We take no merit to ourselves: as Thine is the kingdom, and the power in that kingdom; so is Thy glory.

For thy mercy, and for thy truth's sake.] Thy mercy gave the promise; Thy truth fulfilled it.

Verse 2. Wherefore should the heathen say] This appears to refer to a time in which the Israelites had suffered some sad reverses, so as to be brought very low, and to be mocked by the heathen.

Verse 3. He hath done whatsoever he hath pleased.] There was too much cause for His abandoning us to our enemies: yet He still lives, and rules in heaven and in earth.

Verse 4. Their idols are silver, &c.] They are metal, stone, and wood. They are generally made in the form of man; but can neither see, hear, smell, feel, walk, nor speak. How brutish to trust in such! and next to them, in stupidity, and inanity must they be who form, with the expectation of deriving any good from them. So obviously vain was the whole system of idolatry, that the more serious heathens ridiculed it; and it was a butt for the jests of their freethinkers and buffoons. How keen are those words of Juvenal:—

Jupiter, hæc? nec labra movens cum saltibus coccum
Solvitur, nec marisærasus vel æmulus? out cur
In carbone non charis, pia flure solida.
Povius, et ædem videri jurat, æthyopæcori
Omnia? ut videri, nullum dicitur habundant aut
Ægypte inter vestras, statuæque Bathyli. Sat. xlii. v. 112.

Doest thou hear, O Jupiter, these things? nor move thy lips when thou oughtest to speak out, whether thou art of marble or of bronze? Or, why do we put the sacred incense on thy altar from the opened paper, and the extracted liver of a calf, and the white caul of a hog? As far as I can discern, there is no difference between thy statue and that of Bathyllus.

This irony will appear the keener, when it is known that Bathyllus was a fiddler and player, whose image, by the order of Polyoratus, was erected in the temple of Juno at Samos, See Isa. xli. 1, &c. xlvi. 7. Jer. x. 4, 5, &c. and Psalm cxxxv. 15, 16.

Verse 9. O Israel.] The body of the Jewish people.
Verse 10. O house of Aaron.] All the different classes of the priesthood.

Verse 11. Ye that fear the Lord.] All real penitents, and sincere believers, trust in the Lord. In the almighty, omniscient, and infinitely good Jehovah.

He is their help and shield.] He is the succour, support, guardian, and defence of all who put their confidence in Him.

Verse 12. The Lord hath been mindful] He has never yet wholly abandoned us to our enemies.

He will bless the house of Israel.] He will bless the people as a nation. He will bless the priesthood and Levites:—He will bless all them who fear Him, great and small—in whatsoever station or circumstances found. There is a great deal of emphasis in this verse: several words are redoubled to make the subject the more affecting. I give a literal translation:—

Verse 12. "The Lord has been mindful of us; He will bless, He will bless the house of Israel; he will bless the house of Aaron.—Ver. 13. He will bless them that fear Jehovah, the small with the great.—Ver. 14. Jehovah will add upon you, upon you and upon all your children.—Ver. 15. Blessed are ye of the Lord, the Maker of heaven and earth.—Ver. 16. The heavens of heavens are the Lord's: but the earth He hath given to the sons of Adam."

Jehovah is absolute Master of the universe. He has made the heavens of heavens, and also the earth; and this He gives to the children of Adam. When He exiled him from Paradise, He turned him out into the earth, and gave it to him and his sons for ever, that they might dress, till, and eat of its produce, all their days.

Verse 17. The dead praise not the Lord] חסות חסות, those dead men, who worshipped as gods those dumb idols, dying in their sins, worship not Jehovah; nor can any of those who go down into silence praise Thee: this is the place to praise the Lord for His mercies, and get a preparation for His glory.

Verse 18. But we will bless the Lord.] Our fathers, who had received so much from Thy bounty, are dead; their tongues are silent in the grave: we are in their place, and wish to magnify Thy name, for Thou hast dealt bountifully with us. But grant us those farther blessings before we die, which we so much need: and we will praise Thee as living monuments of Thy mercy; and the praise we begin now shall continue for ever and ever.

The Targum, for any that go down into silence, have, "nor any that descend into the house of earthly sepulture,"—that is, the tomb. The Anglo-Saxon? na ealle ðæbe ðeærparcigis on healle, neiðer all they that go down into hell. Neað the ðeær sal loue the ðære, we al that lyygtes in þell. Old Psalter. The word hell among our ancestors meant originally the covered, or hidden obscure place, from helan, to cover, or conceal; it now expresses only the place of endless torment.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH PSALM.

The prophet, being zealous of God's honour, which the heathens were solicitous to give to their idols, earnestly beseeches God to manifest that power which belongs to Him alone, and which he will not give to another.

This Psalm has four parts:—

- I. His petition for God's honour, ver. 1; which belongs to no idol, ver. 3-9.
- II. An exhortation to praise God, and hope in Him, ver. 10-12.
- III. The benefit that will arise from it, a blessing, ver. 12-16.

PSALM CXVI.

The Psalmist praises God for his deliverance from trouble, which he compares to death and the grave, 1-9. The exercises through which he had passed, 10, 11. His gratitude for these mercies, and resolution to live to God's glory, 12-13.

XXIV. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

Deuti. I. Regis Perseorum, cir. annum sextum. I LOVE the LORD, because he hath heard my voice and my supplications.

2 Because he hath inclined his ear unto me, therefore will I call upon him as long as I live.

a Ps. 18. 1.-b Heb. in my days.-c Ps. 18. 4, 5, 6.-d Heb. found me.

IV. A profession, that for the blessing they will bless God, ver. 17, 18.

1. Some join this Psalm to the former, conceiving that the prophet having expressed the goodness of God in the deliverance of His people from Egypt, would not have any of the glory attributed to Moses or Aaron, but wholly to God. Therefore he begins:

1. Not unto us, &c. Or any leader among us. 2. But unto thy name, &c. We seek it not; take it wholly to Thyself.

And this for these reasons he desires might always be shewed to his people.

1. Give glory to thy name, &c. For the manifestation of His mercy.

2. Do it for thy truth's sake. As a promise-keeping God. 3. Wherefore should the heathen say, &c. Give them not occasion to blaspheme, as if Thou hadst forsaken Thy people. Should the heathen ask, we can answer,—As for our God, he is in the heavens, which His miracles testify. He can deliver or afflict his people as He pleases.

But where are their gods?

1. Their idols are silver and gold. The mere productions of the earth.

2. The work of men's hands. Works, and not makers of works.

3. They are of no use or power, though formed like men. For they have mouths, &c. They have hands, but they handle not, &c. They have not even the power of articulating sounds, like even the beasts that perish.

The prophet, having thus described the idols, now notices their makers.

1. They that make them, &c. Quite senseless people. 2. So is every one that puts his trust, &c. Christ says, Having eyes, &c. Mark viii.

II. The prophet having passed this sarcasm upon the idols and idolaters, he leaves them, and exhorts the Israelites.

1. O Israel, trust thou, &c. You are God's servants; and to encourage them he adds, He is their help, &c. The Protector of the whole nation.

2. O house of Levi, &c. You are the leaders and guides in religion; and, therefore, you ought especially to trust in Him who is the shield of your tribe.

3. Ye that fear the Lord, &c. In whatever nation you live; for all who fear Him, and do righteously, are accepted of Him.

III. That this exhortation might be the deeper rooted, he puts them in mind that God hath been mindful of us, by His special providence.

1. He will bless the house of Israel as a nation.

2. He will bless the house of Aaron as the priesthood.

3. He will bless them that fear the Lord, &c., without distinction.

The prophet, taking his example from God, pours his blessing upon them also, and upon their children.

1. The Lord shall increase you, &c.

2. Ye are the blessed of the Lord, &c. Though the world speak evil of you.

3. The Lord which made heaven and earth. Which words are added that they may be assured that their blessings are real, and come forth from His hand directly and alone.

4. They come from One able to bless; for, 1. The heaven, even the heavens, &c. In them He especially shews His presence, majesty, and glory; but sends His dews and rain upon earth. 2. As for the earth he hath given it, &c. that by His blessing upon their labours they might have food and raiment; therefore, praise Him.

IV. For this is the true end of their being: which he illustrates by an antithesis.

1. For the dead praise not the Lord, &c. These temporal blessings are not felt by the dead,—they need them not: but the living should render continual thanks for them to God their Author.

2. But we that are upon earth enjoy His protection and temporal care of us; and besides we have his far richer spiritual blessings; therefore, we will bless the Lord, &c. by ourselves while we live, and aim by our instructions

3 The sorrows of death compassed me, and the pains of hell gat hold upon me: I found trouble and sorrow.

4 Then called I upon the name of the LORD; O LORD, I beseech thee, deliver my soul.

and prayers that our posterity may do the same when we are gone down into silence.

NOTES ON PSALM CXVI.

This Psalm is also without a title, and its author is unknown. It appears to have been written after the Captivity, and to be a thanksgiving to God for that glorious event. The Psalmist compares this Captivity to death and the grave; and shews the happy return to the Promised Land, called here The Land of the Living. The people recollect the vows of God which were upon them, and purpose to fulfil them. They exult at being enabled to worship God in the temple at Jerusalem.

The Syriac, which abounds in conjectural prefaces, suppose this Psalm to have been written on the occasion of Saul coming to the mouth of the cave in which David lay hidden: but, spiritually taken, it relates to the bringing of a new people, the Gentiles, to the Christian faith. In a few MSS. this Psalm is joined to the preceding. Many think it relates wholly to the passion, death, and triumph, of Christ. Most of the Fathers were of this opinion.

Verse 1. I love the LORD, because he hath heard] How vain and foolish is the talk "to love God for His benefits to us is mercenary, and cannot be pure love." Whether pure or impure, there is no other love that can flow from the heart of the creature to its Creator. We love him, said the holiest of Christ's disciples, because he first loved us; and the increase of our love and filial obedience is in proportion to the increased sense we have of our obligation to Him. We love Him for the benefits bestowed on us. Love begets love.

Verse 2. Because he hath inclined his ear] The Psalmist represents himself to be sick and weak, that he could scarcely speak. The Lord, in condescension to this weakness, is here considered as bowing down his ear to the mouth of the feeble supplicant, that He may receive every word of his prayer.

Therefore will I call upon him] I have had such blessed success in my application to Him, that I purpose to invoke Him as long as I shall live. He that prays much will be emboldened to pray more, because none can supplicate the throne of grace in vain.

Verse 3. The sorrows of death] חבלים חבלים chebley maveth, the cables, or cords of death: alluding to their bonds and fetters during their Captivity; or to the cords by which a criminal is bound, who is about to be led out to execution; or to the bandages in which the dead were enveloped, when head, arms, body, and limbs, were all laced down together.

The pains of hell] מצרית מצרית metsarey sheol, the strictness of the grave. So little expectation was there of life, that he speaks as if he were condemned, executed, and closed up in the tomb. Or, he may refer here to the small niches in cemeteries, where the coffins of the dead were placed.

Because this Psalm has been used in the thanksgiving of women, after safe delivery, it has been supposed that the pain suffered in the act of parturition was equal, for the time, to the torments of the damned: but this supposition is shockingly absurd. The utmost power of human nature could not, for a moment, endure the wrath of God, the deathless worm, and the unquenchable fire. The body must die, be decomposed, and be built up on indestructible principles, before this punishment can be borne.

Verse 5. Gracious is the LORD] In His own nature. And righteous] In all His dealings with men.

Our God is merciful] Of tender compassions to all penitents.

Verse 6. The LORD preserveth the simple] פתוחים pe-thayim, which all the Versions render little ones. Those who are meek and lowly of heart, who feel the spirit of little children, these He preserves, as He does little children; and he mentions this circumstance, because the Lord has a peculiar regard for these young ones, and gives his angels charge concerning them. Were it otherwise, chil-

18 I will pay my vows unto the LORD now in the presence of all his people,
19 In the courts of the LORD's house, in the midst of thee, O Jerusalem. Praise ye the LORD.

Ver. 14.—a Ps. 98. 5. & 100. 4. & 135. 2.

Verse 19. In the midst of thee, O Jerusalem.] He speaks as if present in the city, offering his vowed sacrifices in the Temple to the Lord.

Most of this Psalm has been applied to our Lord and His church; and in this way it has been considered as prophetic; and, taken thus, it is innocently accommodated, and is very edifying. This is the interpretation given of the whole by the Old Psalter.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND SIXTEENTH PSALM.

This Psalm is gratulatory; for it shews how great straits the Psalmist was brought into, from which God delivered him.

This Psalm has three parts:—

I. The Psalmist makes profession of his love; and shews the reasons of it,—God's goodness in hearing, and delivering him from his low and sad condition, ver. 1—9.

II. He professes his duty and faith, ver. 9—11.

III. He promises to be thankful, and in what manner, ver. 12—19.

1. He begins with the expression of his content and love. I love the Lord. And he gives these reasons:—

1. Because he hath heard, &c. This is reason enough why I should love Him.

2. Because he hath inclined, &c. An evidence that he was heard. Upon which experience that he was heard he adds, Therefore will I call, &c.

Another reason which moved him to love God was, that He heard him in the extremity of his deep distress; for,

1. The sorrows of death, &c. Death is the king of fear.

2. The pains of hell, &c. He feared the anger of God for his sins.

3. I found trouble and sorrow. The Psalmist was sensible of his condition: though others might suppose him compassed with prosperity, yet he knew himself distressed.

But he prayed to the Lord.

1. Then. In these troubles and pangs.

2. I called upon, &c. Invocation to God was his sole refuge.

3. O Lord, I beseech thee, &c. He sets down the very words of his prayer.

And then, that he might shew that he prayed to God in faith and hope, he points out the attributes of God for the encouragement of others.

1. God is gracious. It is He who inspires prayer and repentance, remits sins, and pardons those who fly in faith to Him for mercy.

2. And righteous and just. That will perform what He has promised.

3. Yea, our God is merciful. He mingles mercy with His justice; He corrects with a father's hand, and loves to forgive more than to punish. Of which David gives an instance in himself,—I was brought low, and he helped me. And all others may find the same, who come in the way that I did to Him for pardon.

Another reason he gives for loving God was, the tranquillity of soul he found after this storm was over. Therefore, return unto thy rest, O my soul. Hitherto thou hast been tossed up and down on the waves of sorrow, finding no port or haven: now faith has opened to thee an harbour where thou mayest be safe. For the Lord hath dealt, &c.: but of His infinite mercy He has given thee joy for madness.

He attributes to Him the whole of his work.

1. Thou hast delivered, &c. Turned my heaviness into joy, by removing all fear of death.

2. Thou hast delivered my eyes, &c. Made me joyful.

3. Thou hast delivered my feet, &c. When my infirmity is great, the devil takes advantage of me that I might fall: but now Thou hast settled my feet; made me able to resist him. And this God does for all who call upon Him, and trust Him.

II. The Psalmist, having expressed his sorrows and God's goodness, now professes his dutiful attachment:—

1. By his obedience. 2. By a faithful confession of his errors, and future confidence.

1. I will walk before the Lord, &c. Be careful to please God by walking not after the flesh, but the Spirit.

2. I believed, and therefore, &c. Which confidence came from faith.

PSALM CXVII.

The Psalmist calls upon the nations of the world to praise the Lord for His mercy and kindness, and the fulfillment of His promises, 1, 2.

O PRAISE THE LORD, all ye nations: praise him, all ye people.

Dart I. Regis

a Rom. 15. 11.

3. I was greatly afflicted, &c. but I became docile and humble to the Spirit of God. When David was tossed between hope and despair, he found those sorrows were not easily quieted: for I said in my haste, &c.

Which clause is differently understood by some.

1. They suppose it to be an amplification of his former grief. I was so amazed, and overwhelmed with sorrow, that if any one reminded me of God's promises, I said in my haste, all men are liars. I will not believe God, He hath no care for me.

2. Others again refer this clause to the preceding: they talk of happiness and felicity, but none is to be found in the land of the living.

3. Some again refer it to Absalom, who deceived David by his vow at Hebron; or to Ahitophel, who revolted from him.

4. Again, others suppose that he taxed even Samuel himself that he spoke not by God's Spirit, when he anointed him king over Israel; because, during Saul's persecution, there appeared so little hope of it. But the first sense is most cogent.

III. Henceforth, to the end of the Psalm, David declares his gratitude. What shall I render to the Lord, &c. As if he had said, I acknowledge the benefits God has bestowed upon me:—but in what way can I best evince my gratitude?

1. I will take the cup of salvation. Here interpreters vary as to what is to be understood by the cup of salvation.

1. Some refer it to the eucharistical sacrifices of the old law, in which, when a man offers a sacrifice to God for some deliverance, he made a feast to the people, as did David, 1 Chron. i. ii. iii. 2. The Fathers understood it of the cup of patience and affliction, which is often in Scripture called a cup, Matt. xx. 22. 3. But here it seems to signify plenty, abundance, &c. [See the note.]

2. I will pay my vows, &c. It was usual in God's servants to make vows, or to confess His name in an open assembly. God cares for all His people, however circumstanced; for precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints. The servants of God trouble themselves in vain, when they distrust Him; for in life He is with them, and in death he will not forsake them.

The Psalmist does not become proud upon God's favours; but in all humility, though a king, he exclaims—

1. O Lord, truly I am thy servant, &c.

2. And yet no slave, but a willing servant. Thou hast loosed my bonds. Taken from my neck the bonds of fear: thou hast made me Thy servant through love.

3. And therefore will I do what Thy servants ought to do.

Shewing his earnestness, he repeats again, I will offer to thee the sacrifice of thanksgiving, and will call upon the name of the Lord. I will pay my vows unto the Lord now in the presence of all his people, in the courts of the Lord's house, in the midst of thee, O Jerusalem. Praise ye the Lord. Within the church, and at all times, he would praise and do Him worship. What is not done according to God's word and Spirit is of little service. He who neglects public worship is not very likely to keep up private devotion either in his family, or in his closet. I will pay my vows in the midst of thee, O Jerusalem!

NOTES ON PSALM CXVII.

This is the shortest Psalm in the whole collection; and is written as a part of the preceding in thirty-two of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and is found thus printed in some ancient editions. The whole Psalm is omitted in one of Kennicott's and in two of De Rossi's MSS. It celebrates the redemption from the Babylonian Captivity, the grand type of the redemption of the world by our Lord Jesus.

The Syriac says, "It was spoken concerning Ananias and his followers when they came out of the furnace: but it also foretells the vocation of the Gentiles, by the preaching of the gospel." In this way St. Paul applies it, Rom. xv. 11.

Verse 1. O praise the Lord, all ye nations] Let all the Gentiles praise Him, for He provides for their eternal salvation.

Praise him, all ye people.] All ye Jews, praise Him; for ye have long been His peculiar people. And while He sends His Son to be a light to the Gentiles, he sends Him also to be the glory of His people Israel.

2 For his merciful kindness is great toward us: and the truth of the LORD endureth for ever. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXVIII.

A general exhortation to praise God for His mercy; 1-4. The Psalmist, by his own experience, encourages the people to trust in God; and shows them the advantage of it, 5-6. Describes his enemies, and shows how God enabled him to destroy them, 10-12. The people rejoice on the account, 15, 16. He speaks again of the help he received from the Lord; and declares admission into the temple, that he may enter and praise the Lord, 17-19. The gate is opened, 20. He offers praise, 21. The priests, &c. acknowledge the hand of the Lord in the deliverance wrought, 24-26. The Psalmist prays for prosperity, 27. The priest performs his office, blesses the people, and all join in praise, 28, 29. The Psalmist expresses his confidence, 30. The general doxology, or chorus, 31.

O GIVE thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: because his mercy endureth for ever.

2 Let Israel now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

3 Let the house of Aaron now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

1 Ps. 102. 6.—1 Chron. 16. 9, 24. Ps. 102. 1. & 127. 1. & 128. 1.—2 Sam. Ps. 115. 9. &c.—Ps. 123. 1.—2 Heb. out of distress.—Ps. 123. 1.—Ps. 37. 1. & 38. 9.

Verse 2. For his merciful kindness is great [is great] gabar, is strong: it is not only great in bulk, or number: but it is powerful: it prevails over sin, Satan, death, and hell.

And the truth of the Lord endureth for ever.] Whatsoever He has promised that He will most infallibly fulfill. He has promised to send His Son into the world,—and thus He has done. He has promised that He should die for transgressors;—and this he did. He has promised to receive all who come unto him through Christ Jesus:—and this He invariably does. He has promised that His gospel shall be preached in every nation;—and this He is doing. The truth of the Lord remaineth for ever; therefore, Praise ye the Lord!

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEENTH PSALM.

This Psalm contains a doxology to God for His mercy and truth; and it is prophetic; in reference to the calling of the Gentiles, Rom. xv. 11.

It contains two parts:—

I. An exhortation to praise God.

II. The reason for it.

I. 1. He speaks to the Gentiles. Praise the Lord, all ye nations. Praise Him for the promise of salvation;—and then, when fulfilled, praise Him for the enjoyment of this salvation,—for the remission of sins, and gift of the Holy Ghost.

2. He speaks to the converted Jews, whom he notes under the name of people, as they are called Ps. ii. 1, Acts iv. 25. As they and the Gentiles are intended to make one church, so they should join in the praise of Him of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named.

II. The reason given:—

1. Because his mercy is great;—it is strong; confirmed towards us, in sending His Son to save both Jews and Gentiles from their sins.

2. Because the truth of His promises is fulfilled. The promised Messiah is come, and has performed all that was prophesied of Him.

3. Because this truth is for ever. His promises and their fulfilment belong to all generations. There will never be another Messiah: Jesus is the true One; He tasted death for every man; He forgives iniquity, transgression, and sin; and His blood cleanses from all unrighteousness. Now, for all this, praise ye the Lord!

[N. B.—Proclaiming the eternal mercy of God in Christ is more likely to persuade sinners to return to their Maker than all the fire of hell.]

NOTES ON PSALM CXVIII.

Most probably David was the author of this Psalm, though many think it was done after the Captivity. It partakes of David's spirit, and every where shews the hand of a master. The style is grand and noble; and the subject majestic.

Dr. Kennicott, who joins this and the hundred and seventeenth Psalm together, considers the whole as a dialogue, and divides it accordingly. The whole of the hundred and seventeenth he gives to the Psalmist as part the first, with the first four verses of the hundred and eighteenth. The second part, which is from the fifth verse to the twenty-first inclusive, he gives to the Messiah. The third part, from the twenty-second verse to the twenty-seventh, he gives to the chorus. And the fourth part, the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth verses, he gives to the Psalmist. Of the whole he has given an improved Version.

Bishop Horsley is still different. He considers the hundred and seventeenth Psalm as only the exordium of this. The whole poem, he states, is a triumphant processional song. The scene passes at the front gate of the temple. A conqueror with his train appear before it; he demands admittance to return thanks for his deliverance and final success, in an expedition of great difficulty and danger. The conqueror and his train sing the hundred 4 Let them now that fear the LORD say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

5 I called upon the LORD in distress: the LORD answered me, and set me in a large place.

6 The LORD is on my side; I will not fear: what can man do unto me?

7 The LORD taketh my part with them that help me: therefore shall I see my desire upon them that hate me.

8 It is better to trust in the LORD than to put confidence in man:

9 It is better to trust in the LORD than to put confidence in princes.

and seventeenth Psalm, and the first four verses of the hundred and eighteenth, as they advance to the gate of the temple in this manner.—The hundred and seventeenth Psalm, Chorus of the whole procession. The first verse of the hundred and eighteenth Psalm, A single voice. The second, Another single voice. The third, A third single voice. The fourth, Chorus of the whole procession. Arrived at the temple gate, the conqueror alone sings the fifth, sixth, and seventh verses. The eighth and ninth are sung by his train in chorus. The conqueror again alone, sings the tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth verses. His train, in chorus, sing the fifteenth and sixteenth. The conqueror alone sings the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth verses. The twentieth is sung by the priests and Levites within, in chorus. The twenty-first by the conqueror alone within the gates. The twenty-second, by the priests and Levites in chorus. The twenty-third, by the conqueror's train in chorus. The twenty-fourth, by the conqueror alone. The twenty-fifth, by the united chorus of priests and Levites, and the conqueror's train, all within the gates. "Now," the learned bishop adds, "the Jewish temple was a type of heaven; the priests within represent the angelic host, attending round the throne of God in Heaven: the Conqueror is Messiah, and His train the redeemed." On this distribution the Bishop has given a new version. The simple distribution in parts, which I have given in the contents, is, in my opinion, the best. Ingenious as those of Dr. Kennicott and Bishop Horsley are, they seem to me too mechanical. This is the last of those Psalms which form the great hallel, which the Jews sung at the end of the Passover.

Verse 2. Let Israel now say] Seeing the hand of the Lord so visibly, and the deliverance gained, that God's mercy endureth for ever.

Verse 3. The house of Aaron] The priesthood is still preserved, and the temple worship restored.

Verse 4. That fear the Lord] All sincere penitents and genuine believers. See the Notes on Ps. cxv. 9—11.

Verse 5. I called upon the Lord] I am a standing proof and living witness of God's mercy. Take encouragement from me.

Verse 7. The Lord taketh my part with them that help me] Literally, the Lord is to me among my helpers; therefore, shall I see my desire upon them that hate me.—Literally, And I shall look upon them that hate me. As God is on my side, I fear not to look the whole of them in the face. I shall see them defeated.

Verse 8. Better to trust in the Lord] Man is feeble, ignorant, fickle, and capricious; it is better to trust in Jehovah than in such.

Verse 9. In princes.] Men of high estate are generally proud, vainglorious, self-confident, and rash: it is better to trust in God than in them. Often they cannot deliver, and often they will not, when they can. However, in the concerns of our salvation, and in matters which belong to Providence, they can do nothing.

Verse 10. All nations compassed me about] This is by some supposed to relate to David, at the commencement of his reign, when all the neighbouring Philistine nations endeavoured to prevent him from establishing himself in the kingdom. Others suppose it may refer to the Samaritans, Idumeans, Ammonites, and others, who endeavoured to prevent the Jews from re-building their city and the temple after their return from the Captivity in Babylon.

But in the name of the Lord will I destroy them.] Dr. Kennicott renders אָמִילָם amilam, "I shall disappoint them;" Bishop Horsley, I cut them to pieces; Mr. N. Bertin, repulsed, I have repelled them. I will cut them off; CHALDEE. Ullus sum in eos, I am avenged on them; VULGATE. See the SEPTUAGINT.

11 They compassed me about; yea, they compassed me about: but in the name of the Lord I will destroy them.

12 They compassed me about like bees; they are quenched as the fire of thorns: for in the name of the Lord I will destroy them.

13 Thou hast thrust sore at me that I might fall: but the Lord helped me.

14 The Lord is my strength and song, and is become my salvation.

15 The voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous: the right hand of the Lord doeth valiantly.

16 The right hand of the Lord is exalted: the right hand of the Lord doeth valiantly.

17 I shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the Lord.

18 The Lord hath chastened me sore: but he hath not given me over unto death.

19 Open to me the gates of righteousness: I will go in to them, and I will praise the Lord.

20 This gate of the Lord, into which the righteous shall enter.

21 I will praise thee: for thou hast heard me, and art become my salvation.

22 The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner.

23 This is the Lord's doing: it is marvellous in our eyes.

24 This is the day which the Lord hath made; we will rejoice and be glad in it.

25 Save now, I beseech thee, O Lord: O Lord, I beseech thee, send now prosperity.

26 Blessed be he that cometh in the name of the Lord: we have blessed you out of the house of the Lord.

27 God is the Lord, which hath shewed us light: bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar.

28 Thou art my God, and I will praise thee; thou art my God, I will exalt thee.

29 O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

Verse 12. They compassed me about like bees; they are quenched as the fire of thorns] I shall refer to Dr. Delaney's note on this passage. The Reader has here in miniature two of the finest images in Homer; which, if his curiosity demands to be gratified, he will find illustrated and enlarged, Iliad ii. ver. 86.

ἦντι εὐνὰ εἰσι μελισσῶν ἀδιάνων,
Πετρῆς ἐκ γλάφυρης αἰεῖ νεον ἐρχομένων,
Βοτρυόθεν δὲ πεπονται ἐκ' ἀνθεῖναι εἰαρινοῖσιν,
Αἰ μὲν τ' εὐθὰ ἄλλῃς πεπονηται, αἰ δὲ τε εὐθὰ
Ὡς τῶν εὐνὰ πολλὰ βῶν ἀπο καὶ κλισίων
Ἡῖονος προκαροῖδε βαθεῖν ἐσι χροῶντο
Ἰάδων εἰς ἀγορῶν.

The following host
Pours'd forth by thousands darken all the coast.
As from some rocky cliff the shepherd sees,
Clustering in heaps on heaps, the driving bees,
Rolling and blackening, swarm ascending swarms,
With deeper murmurs and more hoarse alarms;
Dusky they spread a close embolled crowd,
And o'er the vale descend in the living cloud:
So from the tents and ships a lengthening train
Spreads all the beach, and wide embulles the plain:
Along the region ruses a death'ning sound;
Beneath their footsteps groans the trembling ground. Pope.

The other image, the fire consuming the thorns, we find in the same book, ver. 455.

ἦντι πυρ ἀπὸ λόφου ἐπιέλεγεν ἀσπετον ἄλην,
Ὅμοιος ἐν κορυφῆς ἑκαθὲν δὲ τε φαίνεται ἀνῆν
Ὡς τῶν ἐρχομένων, ἀπο χάλκου θεοπειτοῖο
Αἰγλή παρῆφωσσα δι' αἰθέρος οὐρανὸν ἰεῖ.

As on some mountain, thro' the lofty grove,
The crackling flames ascend and blaze above;
The fire expanding, as the wind arise
Shook their long beams, and wide o'ershades the skies:
So, from the polish'd arms, and brass shields,
A gleamy splendor flash'd along the fields. Pope.

The arms resembling a gleaming fire is common both to the Psalmist and Homer: but the idea of that fire being quenched, when the army was conquered, is peculiar to the Psalmist.

Verse 13. Thou hast thrust sore at me] "In pushing thou hast pushed me that I might fall."

But the Lord helped me.] Though he possessed skill, courage, and strength, yet these could not have prevailed, had not God been his Helper; and to Him he gives the glory of the victory.

Verse 15. The voice of rejoicing] Formerly there was nothing but wailings: but now there is universal joy because of the salvation, the deliverance which God has wrought for us.

Verse 16. The right hand of the Lord is exalted] Jehovah lifted up His right hand, and with it performed prodigies of power.

Verse 17. I shall not die] I was nigh unto death: but I am preserved;—preserved to publish the wondrous works of the Lord.

Verse 19. Open to me the gates] Throw open the doors of the temple that I may enter, and perform my vows unto the Lord.

Verse 20. This gate of the Lord] Supposed to be the answer of the Levites to the request of the king.

Verse 21. I will praise thee] He is now got within the gates, and breaks out into thanksgivings for the mercies he had received. He is become my salvation. He Himself hath saved me from all mines enemies.

Verse 22. This is the day which the Lord hath made] See a full elucidation of these two verses in the Notes on Matt. xxi. 42.

Verse 24. This is the day which the Lord hath made] As the Lord has called me to triumph, this is the day which He has appointed for that purpose. This is a gracious opportunity: I will improve it to His glory.

Verse 25. Save now, I beseech thee] These words were sung by the Jews on the feast of Tabernacles, when carrying green branches in their hands; and, from the מִצְהָרָה hoshiah-na, we have the word hosanna. This was sung by the Jewish children, when Christ made His public entry into Jerusalem. See Matt. xxi. 9; and see the note there, in which the word and the circumstances are both explained.

Verse 26. We have blessed you] The answer of the Levites to the king.

Verse 27. God is the Lord] Rather מֵי יְהוָה El Jehovah, the strong God Jehovah.

Which hath shewed us light] וְיָאֵר פָּנָיו וְיָאֵר פָּנָיו,—"And He will illuminate us." Perhaps at this time a Divine splendour shone upon the whole procession; a proof of God's approbation.

Bind the sacrifice with cords] The Chaldee paraphrases this verse thus:—"Samuel the prophet said, Bind the little one with chains for a solemn sacrifice, until ye have sacrificed him, and sprinkled his blood on the horns of the altar." It is supposed that the words refer to the feast of Tabernacles; and מִצְהָרָה, here, means the festival victim. Several translate the original, keep the festival with thick boughs at the horns of the altar. In this sense the Vulgate and Septuagint understood the passage. David, in this entry into the temple, was a type of our blessed Lord, who made a similar entry, as related Matt. xxi. 8—10.

Verse 29. O give thanks unto the Lord] This is the general doxology or chorus. All join in thanksgiving; and they end as they began, His mercy endureth for ever. It began at the creation of man; it will continue till the earth is burnt up.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND EIGHTEENTH PSALM.

The parts of this Psalm are the following:—

- I. An exhortation to praise God for His mercy, ver. 1—5.
- II. A persuasion to trust in God, and that from the Psalmist's own example who called upon God, and was delivered from trouble, ver. 5—14.
- III. The exultation of the church for it, ver. 15—18.
- IV. A solemn thanksgiving kept for it, and in what manner it was celebrated, ver. 19—27.
- V. A short doxology.

I. The Psalmist invites all to praise God. O give thanks, &c. and adds his reasons:—

1. For he is good. How briefly and powerfully spoken. He is absolutely good.

2. He is good, and ever good. To us He is a merciful God, which flows from His goodness: His mercy created, redeemed, protects, and will crown us.

Thus His mercy extends especially to His people; therefore,—

- 1. Let Israel now say, &c. The whole nation.
- 2. Let the house of Aaron, &c. That whole consecrated tribe.

3. Let them now that fear the Lord, &c. Proselytes, &c. II. And thus having given a general recommendation

PSALM CXIX.

The various excellencies and important use of the law of God.
XXIV. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

W ALEPH.

Blessed are the undefiled in the way,
who walk in the law of the Lord.

A Or, perfect, or, etcetera.—b Ps. 125. 4.

of His mercy, he descends to instance in what it consists; that is, God's great deliverance of him.

1. I was in distress, &c. A frequent case with God's people, as well as with David.

2. I called upon the Lord, &c. I fled to him, not trusting in myself, and found mercy.

3. The Lord answered me, and set me in a larger place. This was the issue.

Upon which experience the Psalmist exults, and attributes it to God's mercy.

1. The Lord is my helper, &c. The Lord is for me; therefore, I shall not suffer.

2. The Lord takes my part, &c. I shall be in safety, while my enemies will be cast down, and the church freed.

From which he deduces a third inference:—

1. It is better to trust in the Lord, &c. He is both able and willing to help.

2. It is better to trust in the Lord than to put confidence in princes. David found this in the case of Achish king of Gath.

In a song of triumph he acquaints us in what dangers he was, and from which God delivered him. It is good then to trust in the Lord.

1. All nations compassed me about, &c. But to no purpose.

2. They compassed me about; yea, they compassed me about, &c.

3. They compassed me about like bees, &c. Angry and armed with stings: but my trust is alone in the Lord. In His name and by His help, I will destroy them.

He told us of a multitude of enemies; and for the overthrow of these he sang his triumph.

1. Thou hast thrust sore at me, &c. I was in great danger; there was little hope of escape.

2. But the Lord helped me. No help was in myself, but the Lord.

In the next verse he fully acknowledges the Lord as his strength.

1. My strength. By which I resist my enemies.

2. My salvation. To deliver me from my enemies.

3. My song. Him whom I joyfully sing after my deliverance.

III. And that this song might be fuller, he calls for the whole choir to sing with him. His delivery concerned the whole church, and therefore it must be sung by the whole church; and so it was kept as a jubilee, a day of thanksgiving.

1. The voice of rejoicing, &c. They congratulate their own safety in mine.

2. The right hand of the Lord, &c. This anthem the whole quire sang.

Now this anthem was no sooner ended by the quire, than the Psalmist took his harp again, and, exulting over his enemies, sings, I will not die, &c. Not be heartbroken, but declare the works of the Lord.

And among His works this is one.

1. The Lord hath chastened me sore, &c. Within have I struggled hard with sin; without, have I been assaulted with bitter enemies.

2. But he hath not given me over, &c. I acknowledged in this His fatherly affection.

IV. It is supposed that this Psalm was composed by David in order that it might be sung when the people and the priests were assembled before the Lord for the purpose of thanksgiving: we may, with Jenius, form it into a dialogue.

1. David speaks of the priests and Levites who had the care of the tabernacle. Open to me the gates, &c. that is, the Lord's house; for I will go in to them, &c.

2. To this the priests reply, This is the gate, &c. The sole gate of justice that leads to Him.

3. David replies, showing in brief his reason,—I will praise thee, &c. and, to the twenty-eighth verse, he shows how God has settled him in his kingdom, making him the head of the corner—which words, though they refer to David, there is no doubt of their having reference also to Christ, of whom David was a type; and of Christ then I shall rather interpret them.

The stone which the builders refused, &c.

1. The church is sometimes in Scripture called a building: the saints are the living stones, and Christ is the chief corner stone.

2. Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart.

3. They also do no iniquity: they walk in his ways.

c 1 John 2. 8 & 9. 13.

2. But the Jews, the priests, to whom belonged the office of building the church, refused this stone. We will not have this man, &c.

3. But he is become the head of the corner. And whatever is not connected with Him cannot be saved. 1. This was the Lord's doing, &c. That Christ became our salvation. 2. And it is marvellous in our eyes. And so ever must be, that Christ should die, the just for the unjust, to bring us to God.

In commemoration of so great a work, a day should be set apart.

1. This is the day, &c. Which, without doubt, was the day of the resurrection; the Lord making it a high and holy day.

2. We will be glad and rejoice, &c. Adam's fall was a doleful day. On the day of Christ's resurrection we will be glad.

3. In the midst of our rejoicing we will pray, and sound forth Hosanna to the Son of David. This was done by the people on the entering of Christ into Jerusalem. It was the opinion of the Jews that this form of acclamation would be used before the Messiah.

The whole prophecy of Christ's coming, riding into Jerusalem in triumph, rejection, passion, &c. being thus explained, the prophet puts this into the mouths of the priests:—

1. We have blessed you. All true happiness is under this King.

2. Out of the house of the Lord, &c. From out of the church.

3. God is the Lord, &c. Revealed unto us His Son as the Light of the world.

4. Bind the sacrifices with cords, &c. Be thankful to Him, and meet in the church to celebrate your thanksgiving.

V. The prophet concludes with a doxology.

1. Thou art my God, I have taken Thee for my Portion.

2. And I will praise thee; which he doubles:—Thou art my God, and I will call thee. Which repetition shews his ardent desire of evincing his gratitude.

And thus the Psalmist concludes with the same exhortation with which he began the Psalm.

O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever. And let him that readeth, and him that heareth, say Amen!

This is an uncommonly fine Psalm; and among the many noble ones it is one of the most noble. Its beauties are so many and so prominent, that every reader, whose mind is at all influenced by spiritual things, must see, feel, and admire them.

The 22d verse, The stone which the builders rejected is become the head stone of the corner, must have been a proverbial expression: but what gave birth to it, I cannot find; but like all other proverbs, it doubtless had its origin in some fact. One thing is evident from the Jewish doctors. The most enlightened of them understand this as a prophecy of the Messiah: and it was this general opinion, as well as the knowledge that the spirit of prophecy thus intended it, that caused our Lord to apply it to Himself, Matt. xxi. 42; nor did any of them attempt to dispute the propriety of the application.

NOTES ON PSALM CXIX.

This is another of the alphabetical or acrostic Psalms. It is divided into twenty-two parts, answering to the number of letters in the Hebrew alphabet. Every part is divided into eight verses; and each verse begins with that letter of the alphabet which forms the title of the part, e. g. The eight first verses have M aleph prefixed, the second eight B beth, and so of the rest. All connection, as might be naturally expected, is sacrificed to this artificial and methodical arrangement.

It is not easy to give any general Analysis of this Psalm: it is enough to say that it treats in general on the privileges and happiness of those who observe the law of the Lord. That law is exhibited by various names and epithets, tending to shew its various excellencies. Earnest prayers are offered to God for wisdom to understand it, and for grace to observe it faithfully. These particulars may be collected from the whole composition, and appear less or more in every part.

The words which express that revelation which God had then given to men, or some particular characteristic

4 Thou hast commanded us to keep thy precepts diligently.

d Exod. 18. 28. Lev. 24. 10, 14.

of it, are generally reckoned to be the ten following:— 1. Testimonies, 2. Commandments, 3. Precepts, 4. Word, 5. Law, 6. Ways, 7. Truth, 8. Judgments, 9. Righteousness, and 10. Statutes. To these some add the following, —1. Faithfulness, 2. Judgment, 3. Name: but these are not used in the sense of the other ten words. I believe it is almost universally asserted that in every verse of this Psalm, one or other of those ten words is used, except in verse 122; but, on a closer inspection, we shall find that none of them is used in the above sense in the 84th, 90th, 121st, 122d, and 132d. See the notes on these verses.

To save myself unnecessary repetition, and the reader time and trouble, I shall here, once for all, explain the above words, which the reader will do well to keep in remembrance.

I. THE LAW, תּוֹרָה TORAH, from יָרָא yarah, to direct, guide, teach, make straight, even, to point forward: because it guides, directs, and instructs, in the way of righteousness—makes our path straight, shews what is even and right, and points us onward to peace, truth, and happiness. It is even our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, that we may be justified through faith; and by it is the knowledge of sin.

II. STATUTES, חֻקֵי חֻקִּים, from חָק chak, to mark, trace out, describe, and ordain; because they mark out our way, describe the line of conduct we are to pursue, and order or ordain what we are to observe.

III. PRECEPTS, צִוִּים פְּקֻדֹתַי, from צָוָה pakad, to take notice, or care of a thing, to attend, have respect to, to appoint, to visit; because they take notice of our way, have respect to the whole of our life and conversation, superintend, overlook, and visit us in all the concerns and duties of life.

IV. COMMANDMENTS, מִצְוֹת מִצְוֹתַי, from מָצַו tsavah, to command, order, ordain; because they shew us what we should do, and what we should leave undone, and exact our obedience.

V. TESTIMONIES, עֲדוּתֵי עֲדוּתֵי, from עָד ad, denoting beyond, farther, all along, to bear witness, or testimony. The rites and ceremonies of the law; because they point out matters beyond themselves, being types and representations of the good things that were to come.

VI. JUDGMENTS, שֹׁפֵטִים מִשְׁפָּטַי, from שָׁפַט shaphat, to judge, determine, regulate, order, and discern; because they judge, concerning our words and works; shew the rules by which they should be regulated; and cause us to discern what is right and wrong, and decide accordingly.

VII. TRUTH, אֱמוּנָה אֱמוּנָה, from אָמַן aman, to make steady, constant, to settle, to trust, believe. The law, that is established, steady, confirmed, and ordered in all things, and sure; which should be believed on the authority of God, and trusted to as an infallible testimony from Him who cannot lie nor deceive.

VIII. WORD, דָּבָר dabar, from the same root, to discourse, utter one's sentiments, speak consecutively and intelligibly; in which it appears to differ from מַלַל malal, to utter, articulate sounds. Any prophecy or immediate communication from heaven, as well as the whole body of Divine Revelation, is emphatically called דָּבָר דָּבָר Yehovah, the word of Jehovah. On the same ground we call the whole Old and New Testament, THE WORD OF THE LORD, as we term the volume in which they are contained THE BIBLE—THE BOOK. In the Revelation God speaks to man; shews Him in a clear, concise, intelligible, and rational way, his interest, his duty, his privileges; and, in a word, the reasonable service that He requires of him.

IX. WAY, דֶּרֶךְ, from the same root, to proceed, go on, walk, tread. The way in which God goes in order to instruct and save man; the way in which man must tread in order to be safe, holy, and happy. God's manner of acting or proceeding in providence and grace; and the way that man should take in order to answer the end of his creation and redemption.

X. RIGHTEOUSNESS, צְדָקָה צְדָקָה, from צָדַק tsadak, to do justice, to give full weight. That which teaches a man to give to all their due; to give God His due; man his due, and himself his due; for every man has duties to God, his neighbour, and himself, to perform. This word is applied to God's judgments, testimonies and commandments: they are all righteous, give to all their due, and require what is due from every one.

The three words which some add here, are I. FAITHFULNESS, אֱמוּנָה אֱמוּנָה; but see this under No. VII, nor does it appear in ver. 90, where it occurs, to be used

5 O that my ways were directed to keep thy statutes!

e Lev. 18. 4, 21. & 19. 12. & 20. 8, 22. Deut. 4. 30. & 6. 2. & 95. 17. & 28. 45. & 32. 18.

as a characteristic of God's law, but rather His exact fulfilment of His promises to man.

The second is שֹׁפֵט, mishpat. See this under No. VI: it occurs in ver. 84, and 121, When wilt thou execute judgment, &c.; but is not used in those places as one of the ten words.

The third is נָמַר, or them; see verse 132; but this is no characteristic of God's law; it refers here simply to Himself. Those that love thy Name is the same as those that love thee. Bishop Nicolson inserts promises among the ten words: but this occurs no where in the Psalm. Fourth, We might with more propriety add אֲמַר, or אֲמַר, from אָמַר amar, to break out, spread, or diffuse itself, as the branches of a tree; and which is often used for a word spoken, a speech. This often occurs in the Psalm; and we regularly translate it word, and put no difference or distinction between it and דָּבָר dabar, No. VIII: but it is not exactly the same; דָּבָר dabar may apply more properly to history, relation, description, and such like; while אֲמַר amar, thy word, may mean an immediate oracle, delivered solemnly from God to His prophet for the instruction of men. But the two words appear often indifferently used; and it would not be easy to ascertain the different shades of meaning between these two roots.

Having thus far introduced the Psalm to the reader's attention, I should probably speak at large of the elegance of its composition, and the importance and utility of its matter. Like all other portions of Divine Revelation, it is elegant, important, and useful; and while I admire the fecundity of the Psalmist's genius, the unabating flow of his poetic vein, his numerous synonyms, and his copia verborum, by which he is enabled to expand, diversify, and illustrate the same idea; presenting it to his reader in all possible points of view, so as to render it pleasing, instructive, and impressive; I cannot rob the rest of the book of its just praise by setting this, as many have done, above all the pieces it contains. It is by far the largest, the most artificial, and most diversified; yet, in proportion to its length, it contains the fewest ideas of any in the Book.

Several of the ancients, particularly the Greek Fathers, have considered it as an abridgement of David's life; in which he expresses all the states through which he had passed; the trials, persecutions, succours, and encouragements, he had received. The Latin Fathers perceive in it all the morality of the Gospel, and rules for a man's conduct in every situation of life. Cassiodorus asserts that it contains the sentiments of the prophets, apostles, martyrs, and all the saints! In the introduction to the Book of Psalms I have conjectured that many of them were composed from notes taken at different times, and in widely different circumstances; hence the different states described in the same Psalm, which could not have been at one and the same time the experience of the same person. It is most likely that this Psalm was composed in this way; and this, as well as its acrostical arrangement, will account for its general want of connexion.

Though the most judicious interpreters assign it to the times of the Babylonish captivity; yet there are so many things in it descriptive of David's state, experience, and affairs, that I am led to think it might have come from his pen; or, if composed at or under the Captivity, was forged out of his notes and memoranda.

I shall now make short remarks on the principal subjects in each part; and at the end of each endeavour, by the Analysis, to shew the connexion which the eight verses of each have among themselves, and the use which the reader should make of them. In all the Versions, except the Chaldee, this Psalm is numbered cxviii.

CHAPTER XLV.—First division.

Verse 1. Blessed are the undefiled in the way] אֲשֶׁר יָשְׁבוּ צְדָקָה צְדָקָה ahshrey tamemy derek, O the blessedness of the perfect ones in the way. This Psalm begins something like the first, where see the Notes. By the perfect, which is the proper meaning of the original word, we are to understand those who sincerely believe what God has spoken, religiously observe all the rules and ceremonies of His religion, and have their lives and hearts regulated by the spirit of love, fear, and obedience. This is farther stated in the second verse.

Verse 3. They also do no iniquity.] They avoid all idolatry, injustice, and wrong; and they walk in God's ways, not in those ways to which an evil heart might entice them, nor those in which the thoughtless and the profligate tread.

Verse 4. Thy precepts diligently.] נֶאֱמָר נֶאֱמָר, super-

PSALM CXIX.

6 ' Then shall I not be ashamed, when I have respect unto all thy commandments.

7 ' I will praise thee with uprightness of heart, when I shall have learned thy righteous judgments.

8 I will keep thy statutes: O foreake me not utterly.

tively,—to the uttermost. God has never given a commandment, the observance of which He knew to be impossible. And to whatsoever He has commanded He requires obedience; and His grace is sufficient for us. We must not trifle with God.

Verse 5. O that my ways were directed] "I wish that my way may be conformed to keep thy statutes."—Without Thee I can do nothing: my soul is unstable and fickle; and it will continue weak and uncertain, till Thou dost strengthen and establish it.

Verse 6. Then shall I not be ashamed] Every act of transgression in the wicked man tends to harden his heart, and render it callous. If a man who fears God is so unhappy as to fall into sin, his conscience reproaches him, and he is ashamed before God and man. This is a full proof that God's Spirit has not utterly departed from him; and that he may repent, believe, and be healed.

Unto all thy commandments.] God requires universal obedience, and all things are possible to him whom Christ strengthens; and all things are possible to him that believes. Allow that any of God's commandments may be transgressed, and we shall soon have the whole decalogue set aside.

Verse 8. O foreake me not utterly.] וַיִּזְכֹּר אֱלֹהִים אֶת מִנְיַן אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה לְמֹשֶׁה וְלְיִשְׂרָאֵל בְּיָדָאֵם—to utter dereliction; never leave me to my own strength, nor to my own heart!

Analysis of Letter Aleph—First Division.

I. In this first section the prophet commends us to the love of God; and persuades us to practise it by two arguments.—1. Happiness, ver. 1, 2. 2. The excellence of the Lawgiver, ver. 4.

II. He shows his affection to this law, desiring grace to keep it, ver. 5.

On which he knew there would follow two effects:—

1. Peace of conscience. He should not be ashamed, &c.
2. Thankfulness to God for his teaching, ver. 7.

Blessed are they who are undefiled in the way, &c.

Blessed are they who keep his testimonies, &c.

They also do no iniquity, &c.

I. The first argument used by the prophet to persuade men to obedience, is blessedness. He that would be happy must be obedient; and his obedience, if true, may be thus discerned.

1. He must be undefiled in the way. Keep himself from sin.

2. He must walk in the law of the Lord, &c. Which is the rule of our faith, life, and worship.

3. He must keep his testimonies. Search them out in God's word.

4. He must seek him with a whole heart. With sincerity search His law to the utmost, both what it bids, and what it forbids, in order to know the mind of the Lawgiver.

5. They also do no iniquity. They work no iniquity with 1. Purpose of heart; 2. Delight; 3. With perseverance; 4. Nor at all, when the heart is fully sanctified unto God; Christ dwelling in it by faith.

6. They walk in his way, which the wicked do not: but the righteous have taken it for their path through life; and should they at any time swerve from it, they come back by repentance, and confession to God.

The prophet's second argument to persuade to obedience, is the authority of the Lawgiver. All disobedience proceeds either from contempt of God's laws, or rebellion against them: but David brings to our mind the authority of the Lawgiver, from a consideration of who He is who commands our obedience as His servants. Thou hast commanded that we keep, &c.

1. Thou, Who knowest when we err, and wilt punish us.

2. Hast commanded—absolutely enjoined.

3. That we keep, &c.—they cannot be dispensed with.

4. Diligently, &c. Not negligently or lazily, or Satan will take advantage of us.

II. The blessedness promised to the keepers of God's law moved the prophet to send forth this ardent prayer, O that my ways, &c.

1. David was a great king, and yet desires to be obedient.

way? by taking heed thereto according to thy word.

10 With my whole heart have I sought thee: O let me not wander from thy commandments.

11 Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee.

12 Blessed art thou, O Lord: = teach me thy statutes.

k Ver. 21, 113.—l Ps. 57. 21. Luke 2. 19, 51.—m Ver. 20, 28, 64, 68, 108, 114, 124. Ps. 28. 4.

2. He answers God's command by a prayer, to be enabled to perform by His grace.

3. O that my ways, &c. My councils, actions, &c. were conformable to the strictness and regularity of Thy law.

4. He knew he could not be too closely united to God; and, therefore, he prays to be directed.

Which prayer he knew God would hear; and that the effect would be quietness of soul, and boldness at a throne of grace.

1. Then shall I not be confounded, &c. If his heart were right with God, he should not fly from Him, as did Adam: that was the effect of disobedience.

2. If God directed his ways to the keeping of His commandments, he should find no amazement in his conscience, but holy boldness.

And this effect will produce another fruit,—a thankful heart.

1. I will praise thee. Give thee thanks for Thy grace and assistance.

2. With uprightness of heart. Not with his tongue only, but with an honest and upright heart.

3. But this could not be done till God had taught him. I will praise thee when I shall have learned, &c. Not to know them only with my understanding, but to make them the rule of my life, which cannot be but by the influence of the Spirit of God.

And what follows upon this will be a firm purpose of heart to be obedient to God's laws.

1. I will keep thy statutes. So am I fully resolved and decreed with myself. And it is a great help to godliness to resolve to live a godly life,—for how shall that be performed which is not purposed.

2. And yet this purpose or conclusion he makes in God's strength; and, therefore, constantly prays,—O forsake me not utterly. Without Thy aid I can do nothing: but if at any time in Thy just judgment Thou desert me, that I may know and feel my own weakness, and learn the better to fly to Thee, let it not be an utter desertion. Forsake me not, neither too much nor too long.

LETTER 3 BETH—Second Division.

Verse 9. A young man cleans his way] נַחַם אֲרֵחַ, which we translate way here, signifies a track, a rut, such as is made by the wheel of a cart or chariot. A young sinner has no broad beaten path; he has his private ways of offence,—his secret pollutions:—and how shall he be cleansed from these? how can he be saved from what will destroy mind, body, and soul? Let him hear what follows; the description is from God.

1. He is to consider that his way is impure, and how abominable this must make him appear in the sight of God.

2. He must examine it according to God's word, and carefully hear what God has said concerning him and it.

3. He must take heed to it, וַיִּשְׁמַר liehmar, to keep, guard, and preserve his way, his general course of life, from all defilement.

Verse 10. With my whole heart have I sought thee] 4. He must seek God; make earnest prayer and supplication to Him for Divine light, for a tender conscience, and for strength to walk uprightly. 5. His whole heart; all his affections must be engaged here, or he cannot succeed. If he keep any affection for the idol or abomination; if his heart do not give it before the Lord, he may make many prayers, but God will answer none of them. 6. He must take care to keep in the path of duty, of abstinence and self-denial; not permitting either his eye, his hand, or his heart, to wander from the commandments of his Maker.

Verse 11. Thy word have I hid in my heart] 7. He must treasure up those portions of God's word in his mind and heart which speak against uncleanness of every kind; and that recommend purity, chastity, and holiness. The word of Christ should dwell richly in him. If God's word be only in his Bible, and not also in his heart, he may soon and easily be surprised into his besetting sin.

Verse 12. Blessed art thou] 8. He must acknowledge the mercy of God, in so far preserving him from all the consequences of his sin. 9. He should beg of Him to become His Teacher, that his heart and conscience might be instructed in the spirituality of His statutes.

13 With my lips have I declared all the judgments of thy mouth.

14 I have rejoiced in the way of thy testimonies, as much as in all riches.

15 I will meditate in thy precepts, and have respect unto thy ways.

16 I will delight myself in thy statutes: I will not forget thy word.

GIMEL.

17 Deal bountifully with thy servant, that I may live and keep thy word.

18 Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law.

a Ps. 24. 11.—p Ps. 1. 2. ver. 23, 45, 78.—p Ps. 1. 2. ver. 25, 47, 70, 77.—p Ps. 116. 7. r Heb. reveal.—e Gen. 47. 9. 1 Chron. 23. 15. Ps. 22. 12. 2 Cor. 5. 6. Heb. 11. 13.

Verse 13. With my lips have I declared] 10. He should declare to his own heart, and to all his companions in iniquity, God's judgments against himself and them; that if His long-suffering mercy have not made a proper impression on their hearts, they may tremble at His approaching judgments.

Verse 14. I have rejoiced] 11. He must consider it his chief happiness to be found in the path of obedience, giving his whole heart and strength to God; and, when enabled to do it, he should rejoice more in it than if he had gained thousands of gold and silver. O how great is the treasure of a tender and approving conscience!

Verse 15. I will meditate] 12. He should encourage self-examination and reflection; and meditate frequently on God's words, works, and ways; and especially on His gracious dealings towards him. 13. He should keep his eye upon God's steps; setting the example of his Saviour before his eyes, going where he would go, and no where else; doing what He would do, and nothing else; keeping the company that He would keep, and none else; and doing every thing in reference to the final judgment.

Verse 16. I will delight myself] The word is very emphatical: pyynw eshdshd, I will skip about and jump for joy. 14. He must exult in God's word as his treasure, live in the spirit of obedience as His work, and ever glory in God who has called him to such a state of salvation. 15. He must never forget what God has done for him, done in him, and promised farther to do: and he must not forget the promises he had made, and the vows of the Lord that are upon him. Any young man who attends to these fifteen particulars will get his impure way cleansed; victory over his sin; and, if he abide faithful to the Lord that bought him, an eternal heaven at last among them that are sanctified.

Analysis of Letter Beth—Second Division.

In the first part the Psalmist having commended God's law, from its Author, God, and its end, happiness; shews us, in the second Part, the efficacy and utility of it to a holy life, without which there can be no happiness. And, in order to shew this effect, he chooses the most unlikely subject.

I. A young man, in whom the law of the members is most strong. He wants experience; he is headstrong, and generally under the government, not of reason nor religion, but of his own passions.

II. The Psalmist shews that, to cleanse the ways of such, he must take heed to them, watch over his ways, and remember his Creator in the days of his youth.

As a man must become holy in order to be happy, he shews how this holiness is to be attained, and adduces his own experience.

1. Seek God with the whole heart. Be truly sensible of your wants.

2. Keep and remember what God says. Thy words have I hidden, &c.

3. Reduce all this to practice. That I might not sin against thee.

4. Bless God for what he has given. Blessed art thou, &c.

5. Ask more—Teach me thy statutes.

6. Be ready to communicate His knowledge to others. With my lips have I declared.

7. Let it have a due effect on his own heart. I have rejoiced, &c.

8. Meditate frequently upon them. I will meditate, &c.

9. Deeply reflect on them. I will have respect, &c. As food undigested will not nourish the body; so the word of God, not considered with deep meditation and reflection, will not feed the soul.

10. Having pursued the above course, he should continue in it, and then his happiness would be secured. I will not forget thy word. I will (in consequence) delight myself in thy statutes.

19 I am a stranger in the earth: hide not thy commandments from me.

20 My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times.

21 Thou hast rebuked the proud that are cursed, which do err from thy commandments.

22 Remove from me reproach and contempt; for I have kept thy testimonies.

23 Princes also did sit and speak against me: but thy servant did meditate in thy statutes.

24 Thy testimonies also are my delight, and my counsellors.

LETTER GIMEL—Third Division.

Verse 17. Deal bountifully] לדג גמול, reward thy servant. Let him have the return of his faith and prayers that the Divine life may be preserved in his soul! Then he will keep Thy word. From לדג גמול, to reward, &c. comes the name of gimel, the third letter in the Hebrew alphabet, which is prefixed to every verse in this Part, and commences it with its own name. This is a stroke of the Psalmist's art and ingenuity.

Verse 18. Open thou mine eyes] וּפְתַח עֵינַי, reveal my eyes, illuminate my understanding, take away the veil that is on my heart; and then shall I see wonders in Thy law. The Holy Scriptures are plain enough, but the heart of man is darkened by sin. The Bible does not so much need a Comment, as the soul does the light of the Holy Spirit. Were it not for the darkness of the human intellect, the things relative to salvation would be easily apprehended.

Verse 19. I am a stranger in the earth] In the land. Being obliged to wander about from place to place, I am like a stranger, even in my own country. If it refer to the captives in Babylon, it may mean that they felt themselves there as in a state of exile; for, although they had been seventy years in it, they still felt it as a strange land, because they considered Palestine their home.

Verse 20. My soul breaketh] We have a similar expression:—it broke my heart—that is heart-breaking—she died of a broken heart. It expresses excessive longing, grievous disappointment, hopeless love, accumulated sorrow. By this we may see the hungering and thirsting which the Psalmist had after righteousness often mingled with much despondency.

Verse 21. Thou hast rebuked the proud] This was done often in the case of David; and was true also in reference to the Babylonians, who held the Israelites in subjection; and their kings were among the proudest of human beings. Instead of צדים zedim, the proud, some MSS. read צורים zorim, strangers, and one reads גוים goyim, the heathen, and so the Syriac.

Verse 22. Remove from me reproach and contempt] Of these the captives in Babylon had a more than ordinary load.

Verse 23. Princes also did sit] It is very likely that the nobles of Babylon did often, by wicked misrepresentations, render the minds of the kings of the empire evil affected towards the Jews.

Verse 24. Thy testimonies also are—my counsellors] וְאֵלֵי אֲנֹכְהֵם אֲשֶׁר־אֵלֵי, "the men of my counsel." I sit with them; and I consider every testimony Thou hast given as a particular counsellor; one whose advice I especially need.

The Analysis will farther explain the particular uses of this part.

Analysis of Letter Gimel—Third Division.

In this division the Psalmist—

I. reckons up the impediments he may meet with in endeavouring to keep God's law.

II. Prays God to remove them.

First Impediment. A dead soul, and a dull heart; and therefore he prays for grace that he may live and keep God's word.

Second Impediment. Blindness of understanding. Open my eyes that I may see wonders in thy law. The wonderful equity, wisdom, and profit of it.

Third Impediment. His wayfaring and uncertain situation. I am a stranger upon the earth; therefore, hide not thy commandments from me. Should I be frequently destitute of Thy ordinances, leave me not without Thy Spirit's teaching.

Fourth Impediment. His infirmity and imperfection. My soul breaks, &c. I wish to be at all times, what I am sometimes, full of desire, fervour, zeal, prayer, and faith. Then shall I be what I should be, when my heart is steady in seeking Thy salvation.

DALETH.

25 ' My soul cleaveth unto the dust: ' quicken thou me according to thy word.

26 I have declared my ways, and thou heardest me: ' teach me thy statutes.

27 Make me to understand the way of thy precepts; so ' shall I talk of thy wondrous works.

28 ' My soul ' melteth for heaviness; strengthen thou me according unto thy word.

29 Remove from me the way of lying: and grant me thy law graciously.

30 I have chosen the way of truth: thy judgments have I laid before me.

31 I have stuck unto thy testimonies: O Lord, put me not to shame.

32 I will run the way of thy commandments, when thou shalt ' enlarge my heart.

Fifth Impediment. Pride of heart. This he saw in others, and was afraid that it might take place in himself; and he knew if it did, he should wander from the commandment, and come under a curse.

Sixth Impediment. The reproach and contempt he met with in consequence of his endeavours to live a godly life. Against this he prays as a grievous temptation. Remove from me reproach and contempt.

Seventh Impediment. The rulers of the people plotted against his life; they even met in council about it. Princes did also sit and speak against me. It is difficult to bear reproach even for Christ's sake; though it should be a matter of glorying; but he must be strong in the faith, who can stand against keen railery, and state persecution.

But what effect had all this upon the Psalmist?

1. He cleaved to God's testimonies, and conscientiously observed them.

2. He made them his counsellors,—drew all his wisdom from them; and he was amply rewarded, for they became his delight. Every man profits who is faithful to his God.

LETTER 7 DALETH—Fourth Division.

Verse 25. My soul cleaveth unto the dust.] It would be best to translate was naphsi, my life; and then cleaving to the dust may imply an apprehension of approaching death; and this agrees best with the petition.

Quicken thou me.] חי צאיני, "make me alive." Keep me from going down into the dust.

Verse 26. I have declared my ways.] ספרתי sipharti, "I have numbered my ways;"—I have searched them out;—I have investigated them. And that he had earnestly prayed for pardon of what was wrong in them is evident; for he adds, Thou heardest me.

Verse 28. My soul melteth.] דלתי dalathi, signifies to distil, to drop as tears from the eye. As my distresses cause the tears to distil from my eyes, so the overwhelming load of my afflictions cause my life to ebb and leak out.

Verse 29. The way of lying.] The propensity to falsity and prevarication; whatsoever is contrary to truth. Remove me from its solicitations, and remove it from me. Grant me Thy law graciously; give it to me as a rule of moral conduct: but give it to me graciously, through the Gospel; and then it will not be the letter that killeth, but will be sanctified to me so as to become to me holy, just, and good.

Verse 30. I have chosen the way of truth.] And that I may continue in it, remove from me the way of lying. See above.

Verse 31. I have stuck.] דבקתי dabakti, I have cleaved to,—been glued to them: the same word as in ver. 25. My soul cleaves as much to thy testimonies, as my life has cleaved to the dust.

O Lord, put me not to shame.] Let my sins and follies be blotted out by Thy mercy; and so hide and cover them that they shall never appear, either in this or the coming world, to my shame and confusion! How many need to be importunate with God in this prayer!

Verse 32. I will run.] The particle א, which we translate when, should be translated because. Because thou shalt enlarge, dilate my heart; make plain my path by cleansing me from my impurity, and taking the hindrances out of my way. I will then run without dread of stumbling, and every day make sensible progress.

The Psalmist—

I. Sets down the state of an imperfect man.

II. Confesses it.

XXV. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

HE.

33 ' Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes; and I shall keep it ' unto the end.

34 ' Give me understanding, and I shall keep thy law; yea, I shall observe it with my whole heart.

35 Make me to go in the path of thy commandments; for therein do I ' delight.

36 Incline my heart unto thy testimonies, and not to ' covetousness.

37 ' Turn ' away mine eyes from ' beholding vanity; and ' quicken thou me in thy way.

38 ' Establish thy word unto thy servant, who is devoted to thy fear.

39 Turn away my reproach which I fear: for thy judgments are good.

40 Behold, I have ' longed after thy precepts: ' quicken me in thy righteousness.

1 Ver. 25, Prov. 2:6, James 1:5—8 Ver. 16.—1 Esak. 22:21, Mark 7:21, 22, Luke 12:12, 1 Tim. 2:10, Heb. 13:6.—m. Isa. 23:16.—n. Heb. make to possess.—o. Prov. 23:4, p. Ver. 28.—q. 2 Sam. 7:25.—r. Ver. 28.—s. Ver. 25, 27, 28, 107, 140, 150, 158.

III. Asks grace and mercy.

IV. Professes what in consequence he would do.

1. My soul cleaveth. His affections cleaved to things below, instead of being set on things above.

2. Quicken thou me. Give me a life according to thy law. By cleaving to the earth, he was earthly; by cleaving to the flesh, he was carnal: but, by living according to the spiritual law, he was to become one spirit with God.

II. He confesses his imperfections.

1. I have declared my ways. I acknowledge all my wanderings, sins, follies, and unfaithfulness; I have hidden nothing from Thee.

2. Thou didst hear me; forgavest me out of Thy mere mercy.

3. Do the like now; teach me thy statutes. These two things should be sought together:—mercy to pardon, and grace to assist and renew.

III. He proceeds in this prayer.

1. Make me to understand, &c. Where the mind is darkened, the heart cannot be well ordered.

2. He that asks good things from God should ask them for a good end. Make me to understand; so shall I talk, &c.

3. He would shew God's wondrous works. I shall talk of Thy wondrous law,—Thy wondrous gospel,—Thy wondrous mercy in saving sinners,—the wondrous means Thou usest, &c.

IV. He returns to his confession, and states what he purposes to do.

1. My soul melts. I am full of trouble and distress.

2. Strengthen thou me. Give me the grace Thou hast promised.

3. Remove from me the way of lying; give me power to avoid all sin.

4. Grant me thy law graciously. Print the matter of it in my heart, and abolish my corruption.

5. He chooses the truth.

6. He adheres to it.

7. He will continue in it.

8. Yea, and with greater diligence than ever. To make up for lost time, he will now run: and, while running, keep in God's way. Some run: but they run out of it.

LETTER 7 HE—Fifth Division.

Verse 33. Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes.] To understand the spiritual reference of all the statutes, &c. under the law, required a teaching which could only come from God.

I shall keep it unto the end.] Here is a good thing asked for a good end. He wishes for heavenly teaching; not to make a parade of it, but to enable him to discern his duty, that he might act accordingly.

Verse 34. With my whole heart.] I will not trifle with my God,—I will not divide my affections with the world; God shall have all.

Verse 36. Not to covetousness.] Let me have no inordinate love for gain of any kind; nor for any thing that may grieve Thy Spirit, or induce me to seek my happiness here below.

Verse 37. From beholding vanity.] An idol, worldly pleasure, beauty, finery; any thing that is vain, empty, or transitory. Let me not behold it; let me not dwell upon it. Let me remember Achan:—he saw,—he coveted,—he took,—he hid his theft, and was slain for his sin.

Verse 38. Establish thy word.] Fulfil the promises Thou hast made to me.

Verse 39. Turn away my reproach which I fear.] This may be understood of the reproach which a man may meet with in consequence of living a godly life; for such a life was never fashionable in any time or country. But I have found the following note on the passage:—"I have done a secret evil; my soul is sorry for it: if it become public, it will be a heavy reproach to me. O God, turn it away, and let it never meet the eye of man!" Amen.

Verse 40. Behold, I have longed] Thou searchest the heart; Thou knowest that I have long desired Thy salvation; Thou seest that this desire still remains. Behold it! it is Thy work; and through Thy mercy I breathe after Thy mercy.

Quicken me] I am dying; O give me the spirit of life in Christ Jesus!

Analysis of Letter He—Fifth Division.

In this part, which is wholly precatory, the Psalmist prays,—

- I. That God may illuminate his mind.
- II. That He would remove all those hindrances which might prevent him from doing his duty.
 - i. The first petition is for illumination:—Teach me,—point me out what I am to learn, and how I am to learn it.
 - ii. The second is,—Give me understanding. Let me comprehend, that I may profit by thy teaching.
 - iii. The end for which he asks,—That he may keep the law.

He specifies the manner:—1. He will be no temporizer; he will keep it to the end. 2. He will be no hypocrite; he will keep it with his whole heart.

1. He prays for power. Make me to go. Without Thy Spirit's help I can do nothing; I do not know the way without Thy teaching; I cannot walk in it without Thy help.

2. He wishes to go in the path,—the way in which all God's followers have walked.

3. It is a path, not a public road; a path where no beast goes, and men seldom.

4. He gives a reason why his petition should be granted. Therein do I delight.

II. He prays to have all impediments removed.

1. Incline my heart] Bind it down to a willing obedience.

2. Not to covetousness. Keep me from the love of money,—the world,—the creature.

3. He prays against the desire of the eye. Turn away mine eyes. Let the eye of my body be turned away from vanity; the eye of my mind turned away to thee.

4. Let me find the benefit of this turning. Stablish thy word,—make good Thy word; give me grace to stand.

5. For which he gives this reason. I am thy servant, and am devoted to thy fear.

6. He is afraid of the consequences, if he be not faithful. Turn away thy reproach. Let it not be said at the day of judgment, I was hungry, and you gave me no meat, &c.

7. He knows if God condemns, it must be justly; for thy judgments are good. Man may condemn, where thou approvest. He may approve, where thou condemnest. Thy judgments alone are good.

8. He concludes, desiring the Lord to look on the state of his heart. Behold! 1. Is not my heart right before thee? 2. If so, quicken me; make me alive, and keep me alive! Without the latter, the former will answer no end.

LETTER VAU—Sixth Division.

Verse 41. Let thy mercies come] Let me speedily see the accomplishment of all my prayers! Let me have thy salvation,—such a deliverance as it becomes Thy greatness and goodness to impart. Let it be according to thy word; Thy exceeding great and precious promises.

Verse 42. So shall I have wherewith to answer] Many say, "My hope in Thy mercy is vain;" but when Thou fulfillst Thy promises to me, then shall I answer to the confusion of their infidelity.

Verse 43. Take not the word of truth] Grant that the assurances which thy prophets have given to the people, of the approaching deliverance, may not fall to the ground: let it appear that they have spoken thy mind, and that thou hast fulfilled their word.

present bondage, we shall rejoice in obedience to Thy testimonies; we shall delight to keep all Thy ordinances.

Verse 46. I will speak—before kings] Dr. Delaney supposes that this is spoken in reference to Achish, king of Gath, whom David had instructed in the Jewish religion: but we have already seen that it is most likely that the Psalm was compiled under the Babylonish Captivity. But the words may, with more propriety, be referred to the case of Daniel, and other bold and faithful Israelites, who spoke courageously before Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, and Darius.—See the Books of Daniel, Ezra, and Nehemiah.

Verse 47. Thy commandments, which I have loved.] O shame to Christians who feel so little affection to the gospel of Christ; when we see such cordial, conscientious, and inviolate attachment in a Jew to the laws and ordinances of Moses, that did not afford a thousandth part of the privileges!

Verse 48. My hands also will I lift up] I will present every victim and sacrifice which the law requires. I will make prayer and supplication before Thee, lifting up holy hands without wrath and doubting.

Analysis of Letter Vau—Sixth Division.

The Psalmist prays for mercy; and promises to shew his thankfulness two ways,—

- I. By a bold confession of God's law.
- II. By holy obedience to it.

The whole section consists of two petitions and six promises.

I. 1. First petition, Let thy mercies come also unto me—even thy salvation. He joins these two, mercy and salvation, as cause and effect; for God's mercy alone brings salvation.

This being granted, he vows to be thankful and courageous.

1. He vows to confess God's law; and answer any adversary who may say, "It is vain for him to hope in the Lord," by shewing that God has fulfilled His word.

2. That he will put his trust in God,—because He is omnipotent, and He is merciful.

II. The second petition is, Take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth. For which he gives a reason, I have hoped in thy judgments.

1. Take not thy word,—in which I boast and glory before my adversaries.

2. Take not the word out of my mouth,—so that I dare not speak, nor openly profess it.

3. Take it not away utterly. If for my unfaithfulness Thou shouldest shut my mouth for a time; restore Thy favour to me, that I may again make confession unto salvation.

4. For which he gives this reason, I have hoped, &c. I trust in Thy fidelity and justice, that Thou wilt accomplish in promises and threatenings whatsoever Thou hast engaged to perform.

II. Now he shews his thankfulness by determining to make confession of God's mercy in a holy life; serving God.

1. With a free heart. I will walk at liberty,—sin shall have no dominion over me.

2. With a loosened tongue. I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings. It is a difficult thing to speak to great men concerning their salvation;—it requires great boldness, and equal humility. Rudeness, under the guise of zeal, spoils every good.

3. With hearty affection. I will delight myself. He who can delight in His duty, has made considerable progress in piety.

4. With correspondent practice. My hands will I lift up: my life shall declare that I have not received the grace of God in vain.

5. With a considerate mind. I will meditate in thy statutes. My understanding shall frequently examine them, approve of them, and turn them over to a heart full of fervent affection.

6. This was a work to which he was accustomed. I have loved thy commandments and statutes. Love feels no loads, and habit is a second nature.

ZAIN.

49 Remember the word unto thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope.

50 This is my comfort in my affliction: for thy word hath quickened me.

51 The proud have had me greatly in derision: yet have I not declined from thy law.

52 I remembered thy judgments of old, O Lord, and have comforted myself.

53 Horror hath taken hold upon me, because of the wicked that forsake thy law.

54 Thy statutes have been my songs in the house of my pilgrimage.

55 I have remembered thy name, O Lord, in the night, and have kept thy law.

56 This I had, because I kept thy precepts.

57 Thou art my portion, O Lord: I have said that I would keep thy words.

58 I entreated thy favour with my whole heart: be merciful unto me, according to thy word.

59 I thought on my ways, and turned my feet unto thy testimonies.

60 I made haste, and delayed not to keep thy commandments.

LETTER ZAIN—Seventh Division.

Verse 49. Remember the word] Thou hast promised to redeem us from our captivity; on that word we have built our hope. Remember that Thou hast thus promised, and see that we thus hope.

Verse 50. This is my comfort] While enduring our harsh Captivity, we anticipated our enlargement; and Thy word of promise was the means of keeping our souls alive.

Verse 51. The proud have had me] We have been treated not only with oppressive cruelty, but also with contempt, because we still professed to trust in thee, the living God, who, because of our transgressions, hadst been greatly displeased with us; yet we have not declined from thy law.

Verse 52. I remembered thy judgments of old] The word judgments is here taken for providential dealing; and indeed kind treatment; that which God shewed to the Hebrews in bearing with and blessing them. And it was the recollection of these judgments that caused him to comfort himself.

Verse 53. Horror hath taken hold upon me] The word ayyir silephah, which we render horror, is thought to signify the pestilential burning wind called by the Arabs sydm.—Here it strongly marks the idea that the Psalmist had of the destructive nature of sin; it is pestilential,—it is corrupting, mortal.

Verse 54. Thy statutes have been my songs] During our Captivity all our consolation was derived from singing Thy praises, and chanting among our fellow-captives portions of Thy law and the precepts it contains.

Verse 55. I have remembered thy name] Thou art Jehovah; and as our God Thou hast made Thyself known unto us. In the deepest night of our affliction this has comforted me.

Verse 56. This consolation I had, because I kept thy precepts] Though Thou didst leave us under the power of our enemies, yet Thou hast not left us without the consolation of Thy Spirit.

Analysis of Letter Zain—Seventh Division.

In this part the Psalmist—

I. Prays.

II. Shews his trust in God, notwithstanding his discouragements.

III. Commends the word of God, by showing what blessed effects it had produced in him.

1. He prays. Remember;—accomplish and perfect Thy promise. God's promises are made to prayer and faith: if men do not exert these, God will not fulfil the others.

2. Made to thy servant. The promises are made to the obedient. It is in vain to desire God to remember his promises made to us, if we make no conscience to perform our promises made to him.

3. Wherein thou hast caused me to put my trust. This is a forcible argument to induce God to fulfil his promises. They are Thy promises; Thou hast made them to us; and Thou hast caused us to hope, because made by Thee, that they must be fulfilled.

II. He shews that the hope he had in God made him steady, even in afflictions.

1. This is my comfort in affliction. That is, God's word and promise.

2. Thy word hath quickened me; brought me life, strength, and courage.

3. He mentions his afflictions. 1. The proud have had me in derision. 2. Yet I have not declined from Thy law. 3. For in my afflictions I remembered Thy judgments; His casting down the proud and exalting the humble. And, 4. from these considerations he derived comfort.

III. His knowledge of God's purity and judgments caused him to commiserate the state of the wicked.

1. Horror hath taken hold upon me. For those who trampled under foot God's word, and persecuted the righteous, he grieved; not because of the evil they did him, but of the evil they did themselves. He describes those men.

2. They forsook God's laws. Probably apostate Israelites.

3. He was not without consolation, though much afflicted and harassed. He took delight in God's law, and made his songs of it.

4. And this was a source of joy to him both day and night.

5. He concludes with this acclamation. This I had; I had this spirit,—this power,—this comfort, because I kept thy precepts. While I suffered for God, I was enabled to rejoice in God. As I made him my portion, so He has been my praise.

LETTER CHETH—Eighth Division.

Verse 57. Thou art my portion, O Lord] From the fifty-seventh to the sixtieth verse may be seen the progress of the work of grace on the human heart, from the first dawn of heavenly light till the soul is filled with the fulness of God. But as I consider this Psalm as Notes selected from Diaries of past experience, formed at different times; and that the author has been obliged, for the support of his acrostic plan, to interchange circumstances, putting that sometimes behind which in the order of grace comes before; because, to put it in its right place, the letters would not accord with the alphabetical arrangement: I shall therefore follow what I conceive to be its order in the connexion of grace, and not in the order in which the words are here laid down.

Verse 59. First.—I thought on my ways] chashabti, I deeply pondered them; I turned them upside down: I viewed my conduct on all sides. The word, as used here, is a metaphor taken from embroidering, where the figure must appear the same on the one side as it does on the other; therefore, the cloth must be turned on each side every time the needle is set in, to see that the stitch be fairly set. Thus narrowly and scrupulously did the Psalmist examine his conduct; and the result was, a deep conviction that he had departed from the way of God and truth.

SECONDLY.—And turned my feet unto thy testimonies.] Having made the above discovery, and finding himself under the displeasure of God, he abandoned every evil way, took God's word for his directory, and set out fairly in the way of life and salvation.

Verse 60. Thirdly.—I made haste, and delayed not] He did this with the utmost speed; and did not trifle with his convictions, nor seek to drown the voice of conscience.

The original word, which we translate delayed not, is amazingly emphatical. velo helmahmahati,—I did not stand what, what, what; or, as we used to express the same sentiment, shilly shallying with myself: I was determined, and so set out. The Hebrew word, as well as the English, strongly mark indecision of mind, positive action being suspended, because the mind is so unfixed as not to be able to make a choice.

Verse 58. Fourthly.—Being determined in his heart, he tells us, I entreated thy favour with my whole heart] He found he had sinned; that he needed mercy; that he had no time to lose; that he must be importunate; and therefore he sought that mercy with all his soul.

Fifthly.—Feeling that he deserved nothing but wrath, that he had no right to any good, he cries for mercy in the way that God had promised to convey it: Be merciful unto me! And to this he is encouraged only by the promise of God; and therefore prays, Be merciful unto me according to thy word.

Verse 57. Sixthly.—To keep himself firm in his present resolutions, he binds himself unto the Lord. I have said that I would keep thy words. Thy vows are upon me, and I must not add to my guilt by breaking them.

SEVENTHLY.—He did not seek in vain: God reveals Himself in the fulness of blessedness to him, so that he is enabled to exclaim, Thou art my portion, O Lord! My whole soul trusts in Thee; my spirit rests supremely satisfied with Thee. I have no other inheritance, nor do I desire any. Here then is the way to seek,—the way to find,—and the way to be happy. Other effects of this conversion may be seen below.

61 The bands of the wicked have robbed me; but I have not forgotten thy law.

62 At midnight I will rise to give thanks unto thee, because of thy righteous judgments.

63 I am a companion of all them that fear thee, and of them that keep thy precepts.

64 The earth, O Lord, is full of thy mercy: teach me thy statutes.

Verse 61. The bands of the wicked have robbed me] חבלים chebly, the cables, cords, or snares of the wicked. They have hunted us like wild beasts; many they have taken for prey, and many they have destroyed.

Verse 62. At midnight I will rise] We are so overpowered with a sense of Thy goodness, that in season, and out of season, we will return Thee thanks.

Verse 63. I am a companion] This was the natural consequence of his own conversion,—he abandoned the workers of iniquity, and associated with them that feared the Lord.

Verse 64. The earth—is full of thy mercy] What an astonishing operation has the grace of God! In the midst of want, poverty, affliction, and bondage, it makes those who possess it happy! When Christ dwells in the heart by faith, we have nothing but goodness around us. Others may complain: but to us even the earth appears full of the mercy of the Lord.

Analysis of Letter Cheth—Eighth Division.

In this part we have—

I. The assertion of the Psalmist, that God was his portion: and his resolution upon it to keep God's law.

II. His prayer for grace to enable him to do it.

III. His profession of duty and a holy life.

IV. His concluding acclamation and prayer.

I. Thou art my portion. Let others choose as they please, Thou art sufficient for me: I ask no more.

1. And on this I resolve to be Thy obedient servant. I have said that I would keep thy words.

11. But Thou knowest I am unable without thy grace to do this; therefore, I must entreat thy favour: be merciful unto me! There are three helps to a godly life, all which we meet here, viz.

1. Determination. This makes a man begin well. I have said.

2. Supplication. This makes a man continue well. I entreated.

3. Consideration. This makes a man, when he errs, come back to the way again.

II. He was ready to co-operate with grace. I have thought on my ways. If we be not workers with God, vain are our prayers. Two things are required of us: 1. Aversion from evil. 2. Conversion to good. Both must meet together.

1. Aversion from evil. I thought on my ways. But he did not rest here.

2. Conversion to good. I turned my feet unto thy testimonies.

III. And his sincerity is shewn many ways:—

1. By his readiness and zeal. I made haste, and delayed not.

2. By his courage and constancy. Though he was plundered, for his adherence to God, by the bands of the wicked; yet he did not forget God's law.

3. By his fervour about it. He was always employed in the work; and would rather take something from his natural rest than not gratify his hunger and thirst after righteousness. At midnight I will rise to give thanks.

4. By selecting his company. "He who walks with the lame, will learn to limp;" therefore, avoiding the society of the wicked, he seeks the company of them that fear the Lord, and keep his precepts.

IV. He concludes with an acclamation and prayer.

1. The earth, O Lord, is full of thy mercy. There is not a creature that is not a partaker of Thy goodness: let me have my portion in it!

2. Teach me thy statutes. That is, continue to instruct me. I need constant teaching, line upon line, and precept upon precept. Teach Thou, and I will learn; and as I learn from Thy teaching, I will practice by Thy grace.

68 Thou art good, and doest good; teach me thy statutes.

Verse 66. Teach me good judgment and knowledge] למדני tubh loam vs-death lamidani. Teach me (to have) a good taste and discernment. Let me see and know the importance of Divine things, and give me a relish for them!

Verse 67. Before I was afflicted I went astray] Many have been humbled under affliction, and taught to know themselves and humble themselves before God, that probably without this could have never been saved: after this, they have been serious and faithful. Affliction sanctified is a great blessing; un sanctified, is an additional curse.

Verse 68. Thou art good] And because Thou art good, thou doest good; and because Thou delightest to do good, teach me thy statutes.

Verse 69. The proud have forged a lie] The poor captives in Babylon had their conduct and motives continually misrepresented, and themselves belied and calumniated.

Verse 70. Their heart is as fat as grease] They are egregiously stupid; they have fed themselves without fear,—they are become flesh,—brutalized, and given over to vile affections, and have no kind of spiritual relish: but I delight in thy law. I have, through Thy goodness, a spiritual feeling, and a spiritual appetite.

Verse 71. It is good for me that I have been afflicted] See on ver. 67.

Verse 72. The law of thy mouth is better] Who can say this? Who prefers the law of his God, the cross that bought him, and the heaven to which he hopes to go, when he can live no longer upon earth, to thousands of gold and silver? Yea, how many are there who, like Judas, sell their Saviour even for thirty pieces of silver? Hear this, ye lovers of the world and of money!

As the letter v teff begins but few words, not forty, in the Hebrew language, there is less variety under this division than under any of the preceding.

Analysis of Letter Teth—Ninth Division.

The Psalmist having been afflicted, shews,—

I. How graciously God dealt with him, in bringing him profitably through it.

II. Prays for a right judgment and knowledge.

III. Expresses his love to God's law, and the value he set upon it.

I. The Psalmist gives thanks for mercy granted in affliction.

1. Thou hast dealt graciously with thy servant. Graciously in afflicting him, and graciously in relieving him.

2. And this thou hast done, according to thy word. Thou hast fulfilled Thy promise.

II. He prays to be taught of God:—

1. Teach me good judgment. Many judge badly; for they think that affliction is a sign of God's displeasure. Let me have that good judgment that receives it as a fatherly correction from thee.

2. He asks for science and knowledge. A spiritual perception and taste for heavenly things.

3. For this he gives his reason. I have believed thy commandments. If we believe not God, we cannot profit by His word.

4. There is something remarkable in the manner of asking: 1. A good, or sound judgment. 2. Knowledge—for without a sound judgment, knowledge is of no use.

III. He acknowledges that God's chastisements had done him good.

1. Before I was afflicted. Prosperity is often the mother of error.

2. Now have I kept thy word. Schola crucis, schola lucis, "The school of the cross is the school of light."

3. He acknowledges that the good God had done him good. To have a right notion of God, is a great blessing.

IV. Much of the Psalmist's affliction proceeded from wicked men. These he describes:—
1. They were proud. Pride is the mother of rebellion, both against God and man.

XXV. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.
YOD.

73 Thy hands have made me and fashioned me: give me understanding that I may learn thy commandments.

74 They that fear thee will be glad when they see me; because I have hoped in thy word.

75 I know, O LORD, that thy judgments are right, and that thou in faithfulness hast afflicted me.

76 Let, I pray thee, thy merciful kindness be for my comfort, according to thy word unto thy servant.

3. They forged these lies. They invented them:—there was none ready to their hand; so they framed some to serve their purpose.

4. The Psalmist opposes them with humility and truth. I will keep thy precepts.

5. He shews more particularly their moral character. Their heart was as fat as grease; they were stupid, brutish, hog-like. Their god was their belly. 1. Because they abounded in wealth, they were proud. 2. Because they pampered themselves, they were stupid, and incapable of moral feeling. The fat is the least sensible part of the animal system.

1. He shews the condition of the godly.

Verse 73. Thy hands have made me] Thou hast formed the mass out of which I was made, and fashioned me; Thou hast given me that particular form that distinguishes me from all Thy other creatures.

[Give me understanding] As Thou hast raised me above the beasts that perish, in my form and mode of life, teach me, that I may live for a higher and nobler end, in loving, serving, and enjoying Thee for ever! Shew me that I was made for heaven—not for earth.

Verse 74. They that fear thee] They who are truly religious will be glad—will rejoice at this farther proof of the saving power of God.

Verse 75. I know—that thy judgments are right] All the dispensations of Thy providence are laid in wisdom, and executed in mercy; let me see that it is through this wisdom and mercy that I have been afflicted.

Verse 76. Thy merciful kindness] Let me derive my comfort and happiness from a diffusion of Thy love and mercy, חסדך chesedek, thy exuberant goodness through my soul.

Verse 77. Let thy tender mercies] רחמיך rachameyca, thy fatherly and affectionate feelings.

Verse 78. Let the proud be ashamed] To reduce a proud man to shame, is to humble him indeed. Let them be confounded; without cause, without any colourable pretext have they persecuted me.

Verse 79. Let those that fear thee] The truly pious. Turn unto me] Seeing Thy work upon me, they shall acknowledge me as a brand plucked from the burning.

Verse 80. Let my heart be sound in thy statutes] Let it be perfect—all given up to Thee, and all possessed by Thee.

Analysis of Letter Yod—Tenth Division.

I. In the first verse the Psalmist prays for understanding, comfort and mercy; and uses this argument, "I am Thy creature." Thy hands have fashioned me.

II. He prays for understanding. Give me heavenly light and influence.

III. He prays for this that he may learn God's commandments. This was his end.

1. He endeavours to persuade God to this by the benefits that others would receive from seeing his conversion. They that fear Thee will be glad, &c.

2. He acknowledges that if he was at any time deserted, it was because he was unfaithful, and that it was in very faithfulness that God had corrected him; therefore, God's judgments were right.

79 Let those that fear thee turn unto me, and those that have known thy testimonies.

80 Let my heart be sound in thy statutes; that I be not ashamed.

CAPH.

81 My soul fainteth for thy salvation: but I hope in thy word.

82 Mine eyes fail for thy word, saying, When wilt thou comfort me?

83 For I am become like a bottle in the smoke; yet do I not forget thy statutes.

84 How many are the days of thy servant? when wilt thou execute judgment on them that persecute me?

85 The proud have digged pits for me, which are not after thy law.

86 All thy commandments are faithful: they persecute me wrongfully; help thou me.

3. He prays that God's merciful kindness may be extended to him. But this prayer he would not presume to have offered, had he not been authorized and encouraged by God's word. According to thy word. When God gives a promise, he binds Himself to fulfil it.

4. He desires to be treated as a child in the heavenly family; and, therefore, prays for God's fatherly mercies—His bowels of compassion.

5. And he prays for them for this end, that he may live. And here, also, he adds a reason why he should be heard. Thy law is my delight.

6. He puts up another petition for his enemies, if they will take timely warning. Let the proud be ashamed;—let them see their unprincipled conduct, and blush that they have been persecuting and calumniating innocent people.

7. He next expresses his own resolution. I will meditate on thy statutes. Howsoever they deal with me, I will cleave unto my God.

8. He prays that he may be acknowledged by the godly. Let them that fear thee turn unto me. God's church is a communion of saints, and to them has God so distributed His graces that one stands in need of another. Where one doubts, the light of another may solve his difficulty. One grieves, another may comfort him. One is tempted, another may uphold and restore him. This company the Psalmist would have joined to him for these ends.

9. He prays that he may be sound in the faith; for without this he could not be steady in his obedience. Though an orthodox creed do not constitute true religion, yet it is the basis of it, and it is a great blessing to have it. And soundness of mind is a strong help to the retention of a sound creed.

Finally, he shews the end for which he desires this blessing, that he may not be ashamed. That he may continue sincere and upright, have dominion over all sin, give no place to secret iniquities, that he may never be put to the blush before God or man. Reader, beg of God to enable thee to lay these things profitably to heart.

Analysis of Letter Caph—Eleventh Division.

I. In this section the Psalmist laments his being grieved with some inward anguish.

II. Complains of his enemies.

III. Expresses his hope and constancy; and,

IV. Prays to God for comfort and grace.

1. He begins with a sad complaint. My soul fainteth. As the body will fail if it want natural food; so the soul, if it get not the Bread of life.

2. His eyes also failed with looking up. The blessing was long delayed.

3. Yet he hoped in God's word. He knew that it would not fail.

4. He made complaint. When will thou comfort me?

5. His state was most deplorable: his body dried, and shrivelled up, through long fasting and affliction, that it resembled a leathern bottle hung up in the smoke.

6. Yet still he continued faithful. I do not forget thy statutes.

II. He complains against his enemies.

1. How long he should be obliged to suffer them.

2. He inquires when the Lord will execute judgments.

He describes these enemies from their qualities:—

1. They were proud. They would not bow down to nor acknowledge God.

2. They were treacherous. They digged pits for him:—used every kind of means in order to destroy him; cruel, treacherous, and cowardly.

3. They were impious. In heart and conduct they were not according to God's law.

4. They acted without a shadow of justice;—wrongfully against law and justice.

III. He prays for succour. Help thou me. Here are three things of especial note:—

1. O Thou who art infinite.

2. Help: for Thou hast all power in heaven and in earth.

3. Me, who cannot stand against my enemies: but I trust in thee.

IV. 1. He closes with a frequent petition. Quicken thou me—make me alive. All true religion consists in the life of God in the soul of man.

2. The manner in which he wishes to be quickened. After thy loving-kindness. He wishes not to be raised from the death of sin by God's thunder, but by the loving voice of a tender father.

3. The effect it should have upon him. So shall I keep the testimony of thy mouth. Whatever thou speakest I will hear—receive—love—and obey.

Verse 89. For ever, O LORD, thy word is settled in heaven. Thy purposes are all settled above; and they shall be all fulfilled below.

Verse 90. Thy faithfulness] That which binds Thee to accomplish the promise made. And this shall not be for an age merely, but from generation to generation; for Thy promises refer to the whole duration of time.

Thou hast established the earth] Thou hast given it its appointed place in the system, and there it abideth.

Verse 91. They continue this day] This verse should be thus read: All are thy servants; therefore, they continue this day according to thy ordinances. "All the celestial bodies are governed by Thy power. Thou hast given an ordinance or appointment to each: and each fulfils Thy will in the place Thou hast assigned it."

we not had the consolations of religion, we should long ago have died of a broken heart.

Verse 93. I will never forget thy precepts] How can I? It is by them I live.

Verse 94. I am thine, save me] He who can say this need fear no evil. In all trials, temptations, dangers, afflictions, persecutions, I am Thine. Thy enemies wish to destroy me! Lord, look to Thy servant;—Thy servant looks to thee. O how sovereign is such a word against all the evils of life! I am Thine!—therefore, save thine own!

Verse 96. I have seen an end of all perfection] Literally, of all consummations I have seen the end: as if one should say, every thing of human origin has its bounds and limits, and end, howsoever extensive, noble, and excellent. All arts and sciences, languages, inventions, have their respective principles, have their limits and end. As they came from man, and relate to man, they shall end with man: but Thy law, Thy revelation, which is a picture of Thy own mind, an external manifestation of Thy own perfections, conceived in Thy infinite ideas, in reference to eternal objects, is exceeding broad; transcends the limits of creation, and extends illimitably into eternity! This has been explained as if it meant,—All the real or pretended perfection that men can arrive at in this life is nothing when compared with what the law of God requires. This saying is false in itself, and is no meaning of the text. Whatever God requires of man He can, by His grace, work in man.

Analysis of Letter Lamed—Twelfth Division.

This section contains the encomium of the Word of God;—of its perfection and immutability; and the comfort the Psalmist received from it.

I. In the three first verses the Psalmist shews that God's word is immutable, by an instance in the creatures.

1. In the HEAVENS. They continue to this day as He made them in the beginning.

2. In the EARTH. As it was established in the beginning, so it abideth.

3. So also of the other heavenly bodies. They also abide as they were created; and answer still, most exactly the ends for which they were made.

4. The reason of which is,—All are God's servants, made to obey His will: and from obedience they never swerve.

II. He shews the excellence of this word by a rare effect it had on himself. Unless thy law had been my delight, I should have perished. No such comfort in trouble as God's word and promise. This he remembers with gratitude.

1. I will never forget thy precepts. Only those forget them who reap no good from them.

2. This word had quickened him, i. e. God speaking and working by that word.

3. He will, therefore, be the Lord's servant for ever. I am thine.

4. He knows he cannot continue so, but by Divine help. Save me!

5. He shews his love to God's word. He seeks his precepts, that he may obey them.

III. He needed the help of God, because he had inveterate enemies. These he describes:—

1. By their diligence. The wicked have waited for me.

2. By their cruelty. They waited to destroy me.

3. His defence against them. I will consider, power abibonen, I will set myself to consider. I will use all proper means to enable me to understand them.

IV. Having shewn the perfection of God's word,—

1. In establishing and upholding the frame of the world.

2. In bringing comfort to the soul. In the close,

3. He compares it to all other things which we esteem as excellent and perfect,—riches, honours, crowns, sceptres, kingdoms, &c. over which the word of God has still the pre-eminence:—they perish, but it endures for ever. I have seen an end of all perfection. Jonah's gourd was smitten by a worm. The golden head had feet of clay; the most beautiful form shall dissolve into dust. Babylon, the wonder of the world, has perished from the face of the earth. The fairest day begins at midnight; and so of other things. But the commandment is exceeding broad: all the principles of justice are contained in it; no just notion of God without it; all the rules of a holy life, and all the promises of life eternal, are found in it. It is the word of God, and it endureth for ever. When the heavens and the earth shall be no more, this word shall stand up and flourish.

LETTER D MEM.—Thirteenth Division.

Verse 97. O how love I thy law] This is one of the strongest marks of a gracious and pious heart, cast in the mould of obedience. Such love the precepts of Christ:—in His commandments they delight; and this delight is shewn by their making them frequent subjects of their meditation.

Verse 98. Wiser than mine enemies] Some have thought that this Psalm was composed by Daniel, and that he speaks of himself in these verses. Being instructed by God, he was found to have more knowledge than any of the Chaldeans, magicians, soothsayers, &c. &c.; and his wisdom soon appeared to the whole nation vastly superior to theirs.

Verse 99. I have more understanding than all my teachers] As he had entered into the spiritual nature of the law of God, and saw into the exceeding breadth of the commandment, he soon became wiser than any of the priests, or even prophets who instructed him.

Verse 100. I understand more than the ancients] God had revealed to him more of that hidden wisdom which was in His law, than he had done to any of his predecessors. And this was most literally true of David, who spoke more fully about Christ than any who had gone before him; or indeed followed after him. His compositions are, I had almost said, a sublime gospel.

Verse 101. I have refrained my feet] By avoiding all sin, the spirit of wisdom still continues to rest upon me.

Verse 102. Sweeter than honey to my mouth!] What deep communion must this man have had with his Maker! These expressions shew a soul filled with God. O ye Christians, how vastly superior are your privileges! and alas! how vastly inferior, in general, are our consolations, our communion with God, and our heavenly-mindedness!

Verse 104. Through thy precepts I get understanding] Spiritual knowledge increases while we tread in the path of obedience. Obedience is the grand means of growth and instruction. Obedience trades with the talent of grace, and thus grace becomes multiplied.

Analysis of Letter Mem.—Thirteenth Division.

In this division we see,—

I. The affection of the Psalmist to the law of God.

II. The great benefits he derived from it.

I. 1. O how love I thy law. God alone knows how great that love is which I feel.

2. As true love always seeks opportunities of conversing with the beloved object, the Psalmist shews his by day and night meditation on God's law.

He gives us several encomiums on God's word:—

1. The wisdom he derived from it. It made him wiser than his enemies. It taught him how to conduct himself towards them, so as to disappoint many of their plans, and always ensure his own peace.

2. It made him wiser than his teachers. Many, even of the Jewish teachers, took upon them to teach to others which they had never learned themselves. He must have been wiser than these. Many in the present day take upon themselves the character of Ministers of Jesus Christ, who have never felt His gospel to be the power of God to their salvation. A simple woman, converted to God, and who has the witness of his Spirit that she is His child, has a thousand times more true wisdom than such persons, though they may have learned many languages, and many sciences.

3. It made him wiser than the ancients;—than any of the Jewish elders, who had not made that word the subject of their deep study and meditation.

A second encomium. God's word gives power over sin. I have refrained: and the Psalmist was no speculatist; he was in every respect a practical man.

A third encomium is, the more a man resists evil forbidden by that law, and practises righteousness commanded by it, the stronger he grows. The Psalmist refrained from every evil way, that he might keep God's word.

Least any one should think that he pretends to have acquired all these excellencies by his own study and industry, he asserts that he had nothing but what he had received. I have not declined, &c.; for Thou hast taught me.

A fourth encomium is, that God's law gives indescribable happiness to them who love and obey it. O how sweet are thy words, &c.

II. In the last verse he proves all that he said by the blessed effects of God's word upon himself.

1. He got understanding by it. He became learned, wise, and prudent.

2. He was enabled to hate every false way. False religion, lying vanities, empty pleasures; and every thing that did not tend to, and prepare for, an eternity of blessedness.

LETTER D NUN.—Fourteenth Division.

Verse 105. Thy word is a lamp] This is illustrated thus by Solomon, Prov. vi. 23. "The commandment is a lamp, and the law is light, and reproofs of instruction are the way of life;" God's word is a candle which may be held in the hand to give us light in every dark place and chamber; and it is a general light shining upon all His works, and upon all our ways.

Verse 106. I have sworn] Perhaps this means no more than that he had renewed his covenant with God; he had bound himself to love and serve Him only.

Verse 107. I am afflicted very much] אדמך רע אד מעוד, to extremity, excessively. We are in the most oppressive captivity.

Quicken me] Deliver us from our bondage.

Verse 108. The freewill offerings of my mouth] נדבות פי, voluntary offerings which I have promised. Or, as we are in captivity, and cannot sacrifice to Thee, but we would if we could; accept the praises of our mouth, and the purposes of our hearts, instead of the sacrifices and offerings which we would bring to Thy altar, but cannot.

Verse 109. My soul is continually in my hand] נפשי נשפתי, my life; that is, it is in constant danger: every hour I am on the confines of death. The expression signifies to be in continual danger. So Xenarchus, in Athenæus, lib. xiii. c. 4, Εν τη χειρι την ψυχην εχοντα, "having the life in the hand," signifies continual danger and jeopardy. There is something like this in the speech of Achilles to Ulysses, Hom. II. ix. ver. 322.

Αιτα εμην ψυχην παραβαλλομενος πολεμίζειν

"Always presenting my life to the dangers of the fight."

My soul is in thy hand, is the reading of the Syriac, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic: but this is a conjectural and useless emendation.

Verse 110. The wicked have laid a snare] Thus their lives were continually exposed to danger.

111 Thy testimonies have I taken as a heritage for ever: for they are the rejoicing of my heart.

112 I have inclined mine heart to perform thy statutes alway, even unto the end.

To these he was heir: he had inherited them from the fathers; and he was determined to leave them to his family for ever. If a man can leave nothing to his child but a Bible, in that he bequeaths him the greatest treasure in the universe.

Verse 112. I have inclined mine heart] I used the power God gave me, and turned to His testimonies with all my heart. When we work with God, we can do all things.

Analysis of Letter Nun—Fourteenth Division.

In this division the Psalmist points out farther excellencies of God's word, in the use he made of it. 1. God's word was a lamp to his feet, to guide him through every dark place. 2. It was a light to his path, ever shewing him, generally, the way in which he should walk.

1. He therefore resolves to keep it, and binds himself to fulfil his resolution. As the lamp was going before, and the light was shining, it was necessary that he should walk while the light shone. He therefore, 1. Binds himself by an oath or vow. I have sworn. 2. He will be faithful to his oath. I will perform it. 3. Not merely to admire, but to keep God's word. 4. Not its promises merely, but its righteous judgments.

2. And this he will do in all circumstances, even in extreme affliction. Then he requests two things from the Lord. 1. That He would accept the freewill offerings of his mouth. All his praises, thanksgivings, and vows. 2. That He would teach him his judgments, that he might perform what he had vowed.

3. He shews the difficulties he was in. 1. My soul is continually in my hand. I am in continual danger. He had got the sword of the Spirit, and his life depended on the use he made of it; if the soldier, whose life depends on his drawn sword, does not use it well, his enemy kills him. 2. Hence, he says, I do not forget thy law. I am making a proper use of my sword. 3. And that I have need of it is evident, for the wicked have laid a snare for me. 4. This did not intimidate him: he did not leave the path of duty for fear of a snare being in that path. I erred not from thy precepts. I did not go about to seek a safer way.

4. He keeps his resolution, and vows still. 1. He preferred God's testimonies, even to the land of Canaan,—to riches and crowns. I have taken them for my heritage. 2. He delighted in them. They are the rejoicing of my heart.

5. In this work he was determined to continue. 1. I have inclined my heart. The counsel of the soul is like a balance; and the mind which hath the commanding power over the affections, inclines the balance to that which it judges best. 2. It was to perform it, that he thus inclined his heart. 3. And this not for a time, or on some particular occasion; but always, and unto the end. Then the end of life would be the beginning of glory.

LETTER D SAMECH.—Fifteenth Division.

Verse 113. I hate vain thoughts] I have hated תפף תפף, tumultuous violent men. I abominate all mobs and insurrections, and troublers of the public peace.

Verse 114. My hiding place] My asylum. And my shield] There is a time in which I may be called to suffer in secret; then Thou hidest me. There may be a time in which Thou callest me to fight; then Thou art my Shield and Protector.

Verse 115. Depart from me] Odi profanum vulgus, et arceo, I abominate the profane, and will have no communion with them. I drive them away from my presence.

Verse 116. Uphold me] תומכי שמועתי, prop me up, give me Thyself to lean upon.

Verse 117. Hold thou me up] I shall grow weary and faint in the way, if not strengthened and supported by Thee.

And I shall be safe] No soul can be safe, unless upheld by Thee.

I may live: and let me not be ashamed of my hope.

117 Hold thou me up, and I shall be safe: and I will have respect unto thy statutes continually.

Verse 118. Thou hast trodden down] All Thy enemies will be finally trodden down under Thy feet.

Their deceit is falsehood.] Their elevation is a lie. The wicked often become rich and great; and affect to be happy: but it is all false; they have neither a clean nor an approving conscience. Nor can they have Thy approbation; and, consequently, no true blessedness.

Verse 119. Thou puttest away all the wicked of the earth like dross] There is no true metal in them: when they are tried by the refining fire, they are burnt up; they fly off in fumes, and come to no amount. There is probably an allusion here to the scum, or scoria, at the surface of melting metals, which is swept off previously to the metal's being cast into the mould.

Therefore I love thy testimonies.] Thy testimonies will stand; and Thy people will stand; because Thou who didst give the one, and who upholdest the other, art pure, immovable, and eternal.

Verse 120. My flesh trembleth for fear of thee] I know Thou art a just and holy God: I know Thou requirest truth in the inner parts. I know that Thou art a Spirit, and that they who worship Thee must worship Thee in spirit and truth: and I am often alarmed lest I fall short. It is only an assurance of my interest in Thy mercy, which can save me from distressing fears and harassing doubts. It is our privilege to know we are in God's favour; and it is not less so to maintain a continual filial fear of offending Him. A true conception of God's justice and mercy begets reverence.

In this section the Psalmist—

I. Declares his hatred to wickedness, and his detestation of wicked men.

II. Expresses his love to God's law.

III. Prays for grace to sustain him in the observance of it.

IV. Foretells the destruction of the wicked.

I. I hate vain thoughts;—not only evil itself, but the thought that leads to it.

II. 1. Thy law do I love. I strive to keep every affection exercised on its proper object.

2. This is my privilege: for Thou art,—1. My hiding place, that public evils may not reach me; and, 2. My shield, to ward off the fiery darts of the wicked one.

3. To God therefore, and His word, he would adhere in all extremities; and would have no communion with the wicked. 1. These he would drive away as the pests of piety. Depart from me. 2. Because he would keep the commandments of God, while the others were bent on breaking them.

III. He prays for the grace of God to sustain him.

1. Uphold me; if Thou do not, I fall.

2. Hold thou me up; for I am falling. One part of this prayer is against the occurrence of evil; the other against evil as actually taking place.

IV. He foretells the destruction of wicked men.

1. Thou hast trodden down. They who tread thy commandments under their feet shall be trodden down under thy feet. The first treading shall bring on the second.

2. They deceive themselves in supposing Thou wilt not resent this. This is a deception, and a dangerous one too, for it is against the most positive declarations of Thy truth;—therefore, it is falsehood.

3. This is most certain, for thou puttest away all the wicked of the earth like dross;—they are utterly vile, and of no account in Thy sight.

4. Therefore I love thy testimonies. Because, among other reasons, that I may avoid their judgments.

5. Foreseeing the judgments to fall on the wicked, it was necessary that he should be filled by a salutary fear. 1. My flesh trembleth. Happy is he who by other men's harms learns to be wise. 2. We should work out our salvation with fear and trembling. God is holy and just, as well as merciful;—therefore, we should fear be-

Verse 121. I have done judgment and justice] I have given the best decision possible on every case that came before me: and I have endeavoured to render to all their due.

Verse 122. Be surety for thy servant] ^o ayy ayrob, give a pledge, or takes, that Thou wilt help me in times of necessity. Or, be bail for thy servant. What a word is this! Pledge Thyself for me, that Thou wilt produce me safely at the judgment of the great day! Then sustain, and keep me blameless, till the coming of Christ. Neither of these two verses has any of the ten words in reference to God's law or attributes. The judgment and the justice refer to the Psalmist's own conduct in ver. 121. The hundred and twenty-second has no word of the kind.

Verse 126. It is time for thee, LORD, to work] The time is fulfilled in which Thou hast promised deliverance to Thy people. They,—the Babylonians,—

Have made void thy law] They have filled up the measure of their iniquities.

Verse 127. Therefore I love thy commandments. I see Thou wilt do all things well. I will trust in Thee.

Above gold] ^o ayy mi-zahab, more than resplendent gold; gold without any stain or rust.

Yea, above fine gold] ^o ayy u-mi-paz, above solid gold; gold separated from the dross, perfectly refined.

Verse 128. All thy precepts concerning all things to be right] There are too many supplied words here to leave the text unsuspected. All the ancient Versions except the Chaldaic, seem to have omitted the second ^o kol, ALL; and read the text thus, "Therefore I have walked straight in all thy precepts." I go straight on in all thy precepts, hating every false way. I neither turn to the right hand nor to the left; the false ways are crooked,—Thy way is straight. I am going to heaven; and that way lies straight before me. To walk in the way of falsity I cannot, because I hate it; and I hate such ways, because God hates them.

In this part the Psalmist—

I. Makes a profession of his integrity.

II. Prays for protection against his enemies.

III. Resolves to walk in the right way.

I. He makes a profession of his integrity.

1. I have done judgment and justice.

2. Though he had done so, yet he was not free from calumny and oppression. He commands, therefore, his righteous cause to God. Leave me not to mine oppressors.

3. Be surety for thy servant;—give me an assurance that Thou wilt stand by me.

4. Let not the proud oppress me. For miserable are the destitute, when they fall into such hands.

H. He shews us how he has prayed against his enemies, and for God's salvation.

1. Mine eyes fail. My faith is almost gone; and the eye of my mind become dim.

2. It was the salvation of God he had in view. For thy salvation.

3. The ground on which he prayed was the word of God's righteousness.

He proceeds in his prayer; and begs God to deal with him as a needy servant, and also an ignorant scholar.

1. Deal with thy servant. I am ready to do Thy will: but treat me in Thy mercy.

2. Teach me thy statutes. I wish to learn what Thy will is; and, when I know it, faithfully to do it.

He urges the same request, with nearly the same reasons for it. I am thy servant. I am no stranger to Thee. I have frequently come to Thee to get grace to enable me to serve Thee. I am one of Thy domestics, a member of Thy church.

He comes now with his complaint.

1. It is time for thee to work. Thy enemies are strong, and Thy people weak.

2. They have made void thy law. They have entirely trampled it under foot.

III. The zeal of the Psalmist increased as the love of many waxed cold.

1. Therefore, because they despise Thy word, ordinances, and people.

2. I love thy commandments. As they hate so I love. When we love God's commandments, it is a sign that we have not received the grace of God in vain.

3. To shew the greatness of his love, he says, I love thy commandments above gold; yea, above fine gold. My love is greater to Thy law, than that of the miser is to his bags.

4. He received all God's precepts to be right; and he takes not some, but the whole of them.

5. Whatever gain idolatry and time serving might hold out to him, he abandoned it, because he hated every false way. His love of God, His law, and holiness, was greater than his love of life.

Verse 129. Thy testimonies are wonderful] There is a height, length, depth, and breadth, in Thy word and Testimonies, that are truly astonishing; and on this account my soul loves them, and I deeply study them. The more I study, the more light and salvation I obtain.

Verse 130. The entrance of thy word giveth light] ^o ayy patach, the opening of it: when I open my Bible to read, light springs up in my mind. Every sermon, every prayer, every act of faith, is an opening by which light is let into the seeking soul.

Verse 131. I opened my mouth, and panted] A metaphor taken from an animal exhausted in the chase. He runs open-mouthed, to take in the cooling air; the heart beating high, and the muscular force nearly expended through fatigue. The Psalmist sought for salvation, as he would run from a ferocious beast, for his life. Nothing can shew his earnestness in a stronger point of view.

Verse 132. As thou usest to do] Treat me as thy mercy has induced Thee to treat others in my circumstances. Deal with me as Thou dealest with Thy friends.

Verse 133. Order my steps] ^o ayy hacen, make them firm: let me not walk with a halting or unsteady step.

Have dominion over me.] ^o ayy bi, in me. Let me have no governor but God; let the throne of my heart be filled by Him, and none other.

Verse 135. Make thy face to shine] Give me a sense of Thy approbation. Let me know, by the testimony of Thy Spirit in my conscience, that Thou art reconciled to me. The golly in all ages received their happiness from a consciousness of the Divine favour. The witness of God's Spirit in the souls of believers was an essential principle in religion from the foundation of the world.

Verse 136. Rivers of waters run down mine eyes] How much had this blessed man the honour of God, and the salvation of souls at heart. O for more of that spirit which mourns for the transgressions of the land! But we are not properly convinced of the exceeding sinfulness of sin.

Analysis of Letter Pe—Seventeenth Division.

- I. Praises God's word.
- II. Shews his affection to it.
- III. Prays for grace to keep it.
- IV. Mourns for those who do not.

I. The elogy he gives to God's word here is from a new quality not mentioned before. Thy testimonies are wonderful; wondrous mysteries are contained in the Divine oracles.

1. The ceremonial law is wonderful, because the mystery of our redemption by the blood of Christ is pointed out in it.

2. The prophecies are wonderful, as predicting things, humanly speaking, so uncertain, and at such great distance of time, with so much accuracy.

3. The decalogue is wonderful, as containing in a very few words all the principles of justice and charity.

4. Were we to go to the New Testament, here wonders rise on wonders! All is astonishing: but the Psalmist could not have this in view.

The second elogy is, that God's law is the dispenser of light.

1. The entrance of it, the first chapter of Genesis:—what light does that pour on the mind of man! What knowledge of the most important things which we should never have known without it!

2. It gives light to the simple; to those who are not double; who have but one end in view, and one aim to that end.

3. Of those simple ones, or babes, our Lord speaks, Matt. xi. 31, and St. Paul, 1 Cor. i. 25, 26, &c.

II. The Psalmist shews that he was one of those simple ones.

1. He opened his mouth by prayer, and sought the spirit of light and piety.

2. He panted after it as men do that want breath, and are longing to get fresh air.

3. And this he did, because he longed for God's commandments; had a vehement desire to know, and to keep them.

III. He now betakes himself to prayer, and acquaints us with the petitions he had offered.

1. He said, Look upon me. Consider Thy poor, dependant, helpless creature.

2. Have mercy upon me. Look, not with indignation, which I deserve; but with the mercy which Thou knowest I need.

3. As thou usest to do. Act by me as Thou doest by them that love Thee.

4. Order my steps. Give me grace to be obedient. Many look for mercy to pardon their sin, but do not look for grace to enable them to be obedient.

5. Let not any iniquity have dominion over me. Let me be saved from all my spiritual captivity.

6. Deliver me from the oppression of men. Let neither wicked men, nor wicked spirits, rule over me.

7. Makes thy face to shine upon me! Let me have Thy light, Thy peace, and Thy approbation.

8. And teach me thy statutes. Keep me at Thy feet, under continual instruction.

IV. He concludes, by telling how he grieved for the wickedness of others, and the dishonour of God. If we grieve not for others, their sin may become ours. See Ezek. ix. 8, 1 Cor. v. 2.

LETTER T TSADDI—Eighteenth Division.

Verse 137. Righteous art thou] Thou art infinitely holy in Thy nature; and therefore Thou art upright in thy judgments,—all Thy dispensations to men.

Verse 138. Thy testimonies] Every thing that proceeds from Thee partakes of the perfections of Thy nature.

Verse 139. My zeal hath consumed me] My earnest desire to promote Thy glory, and the pain I feel at seeing transgressions multiplied, have worn down both my flesh and spirits.

Verse 140. Thy word is very pure] נורא טהור טהור, it is purification. It is not a purified thing; but a thing that purifies. "Now ye are clean, said Christ, by the word I have spoken unto you." God's word is a fire to purify, as well as a hammer to break.

Verse 141. I am small and despised] And on these accounts have every thing to fear. Being small, I cannot resist; being despised, I am in danger: but even all this does not induce me to start aside, or through the fear of man to be unfaithful to Thee.

Verse 142. Thy righteousness is an everlasting righteousness] The word צדק tsedek, is a word of very extensive meaning in the Bible. It signifies not only God's inherent righteousness and perfection of nature, but also His method of treating others;—His plan of redemption;—his method of saving sinners. And the word דיבורים, to which it answers in the Septuagint, and in the New Testament, is used with the same latitude of meaning, and in the same sense; particularly in that remarkable passage, Rom. iii. 25, 26, where see the Notes. Thy merciful method of dealing with sinners, and justifying the ungodly, will last as long as the earth lasts; and Thy law that witnesses this, in all its pages, is the truth.

Verse 143. Trouble and anguish] I am exercised with various trials, from men and devils.

Have taken hold on me] But still I cleave to my God, and am delighted with His law.

Verse 144. The righteousness of thy testimonies is everlasting] Thy moral law was not made for one people, or for one particular time; it is as imperishable as Thy nature, and of endless obligation. It is that law by which all the children of Adam shall be judged.

Give me understanding] To know and practise it.

And I shall live] Shall glorify Thee, and live eternally; not for the merit of having done it, but because Thou didst fulfil the work of the law in my heart, having saved me from condemnation by it.

Analysis of Letter Tsaddi—Eighteenth Division.

In this division the Psalmist—

I. Commends the law of God; from its Author,—its equity,—its purity,—and its perpetuity.

II. A consideration of which led him to love and delight in it, though opposed by many enemies.

I. 1. Righteous art thou. Thouallest not with times; Thou changeest not with persons; Thou art ever the same.

2. Thy judgments, in giving rewards, and dispensing punishments, are upright.

3. Thy testimonies, that declare this, are righteous and faithful.

He consequently felt an ardent zeal for God's glory.

1. This zeal consumed him, and he expresses the cause.

2. Men forgot God's words. He pined away for grief on this account. He turns to another character of God's law.

Thy word is very pure.

1. It is pure in itself, and the purifier of the heart.

2. On this account he loved it; and we know that love is the fulfilling of the law.

A third effect was a careful remembrance of it, though tried by his enemies.

1. I am small. Of no weight or authority; have no secular power.

2. Despised. Have no credit nor respect.

3. Yet do I not forget thy precepts. Nothing can move me while upheld by Thee; and Thou wilt uphold me, while I cleave to Thee.

A fourth commendation of God's law is its immutability.

1. It is immutable, and can never be dispensed with. It is a righteousness that is everlasting.

2. It is the truth:—1. It has priority of all laws. 2. Contains no falsehood.

3. Its promises and threatenings shall all be punctually fulfilled.

II. He loved and delighted in it, notwithstanding he had trouble and anguish.

1. Trouble and anguish. The righteous are often under the cross.

XXVI. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

145 I cried with my whole heart; hear me, O Lord: I will keep thy statutes.

146 I cried unto thee; save me, and I shall keep thy testimonies.

148 Mine eyes prevent the night watches, that I might meditate in thy word.

2. Yet thy commandments are my delights. While faithful to Thee, all my afflictions are sanctified to me, so that I can rejoice while I suffer.

He speaks again about the immutability of God's word.

1. The righteousness of thy testimonies. Thy word is like Thyself, for it comes from Thee.

2. Give me understanding. I always stand in need of teaching.

3. And I shall live. All is death without Thee. Live in me, that I may live by Thee.

LETTER p KOPH—Nineteenth Division.

Verse 145. I cried with my whole heart! The whole soul of the Psalmist was engaged in this good work. He whose whole heart cries to God will never rise from the throne of grace without a blessing.

Verse 147. I prevented the dawning] קידמתי kidumti, I went before the dawn or twilight.

Verse 148. Mine eyes prevent] קדמו kidemu, go before the watches. Before the watchman proclaims the hour I am awake, meditating on Thy words. The Jews divided the night into three watches, which begun at what we call six o'clock in the evening, and consisted each of four hours. The Romans taught them afterwards to divide it into four watches, of three hours each; and to divide the day and night into twelve hours each, wherein different guards of soldiers were appointed to watch. At the proclaiming of each watch, the Psalmist appears to have arisen and performed some act of devotion. For a remarkable custom of our Saxon ancestors, see the Note on ver. 164.

Verse 150. They draw nigh] They are just at hand who seek to destroy me.

They are far from thy law.] They are near to all evil, but far from thee.

Verse 151. Thou art near] As they are near to destroy, so art Thou near to save. When the enemy comes in as a flood, the Spirit of the Lord lifts up a standard against him.

Verse 152. Concerning thy testimonies, I have known of old] קדמתי קדמי קדמי קדמי, "Long ago I have known concerning Thy testimonies." Thou hast designed that Thy testimonies should bear reference to, and evidence of, those glorious things which Thou hast provided for the salvation of men; and that this should be an everlasting testimony. They continue, and Christ is come.

Analysis of Letter Koph—Nineteenth Division.

I. The Psalmist is earnest in his prayers for deliverance.
II. He shews the end for which he desires it.
III. The necessity of its being speedy, as his enemies were at hand.

1. His prayer was earnest; it was a cry, rather than a petition.

2. It was sincere. I cried with my whole heart. There was no hypocrisy in it.

3. It was in season. I prevented the dawning of the morning.

4. It was out of season. Mine eyes prevented the night-watches.

What he prayed for,—

1. Audience. Hear me, O Lord.

2. Deliverance. Save me.

3. Increase of grace. Quicken me.

II. The end for which he prayed.

1. That he might keep God's statutes.

2. That he might keep his testimonies. [See the explanation of these words at the beginning of this Psalm.]

3. That he might meditate on God's word.

RESH.

153 Consider mine affliction, and deliver me; for I do not forget thy law.

154 Plead my cause, and deliver me: quicken me according to thy word.

155 Salvation is far from the wicked: for they seek not thy statutes.

156 Great are thy tender mercies, O Lord: quicken me according to thy judgments.

157 Many are my persecutors and mine enemies; yet do I not decline from thy testimonies.

158 I beheld the transgressors and was grieved: because they kept not thy word.

159 Consider how I love thy precepts: quicken me, O Lord, according to thy loving-kindness.

160 Thy word is true from the beginning: and every one of thy righteous judgments endureth for ever.

4. That he might increase in the life of God. The arguments he uses:—

1. His faith and hope. I cried, because I waited and hoped in Thy word.

2. God's mercy. According to thy loving-kindness.

3. The danger he was in from his pursuing enemies.

1. They draw nigh. 2. They are mischievously bent. 3. They are most impious men. Far from the law of God: they despised and hated it.

III. Near as they may be to destroy, Thou art nearer to save.

1. Thou art near. They cannot come where Thou art not.

2. All thy commandments are truth. And Thou hast commanded us to trust in thee; and therefore we shall not fear evil. Thou wilt support Thy servants, and destroy Thine enemies.

He concludes with an acclamation:—

1. Concerning thy testimonies. Thy will, which Thou hast testified in Thy word.

2. I have known of old. Ever since I looked into them, began to study and practise them.

3. That thou hast founded them for ever. They are of eternal truth, immutable and indispensable. And this is the anchor of our souls, that we may not be carried away by trials and temptations. Not one title of God's truth has ever failed any of His sincere followers. No one promise of His that has been sought by faith in Christ has ever been unfulfilled. Blessed be God!

Verse 153. Consider mine affliction] See my affliction, or humiliation: but the eye of the Lord affects his heart; and therefore He never sees the distresses of His followers without considering their situation, and affording them help.

Verse 154. Plead my cause] ריבתי ריבתי ribah ribi. "Be my Advocate in my suit." Contend for us against the Babylonians, and bring us out of our bondage.

According to thy word] Spoken by Thy prophets for our comfort and encouragement.

Verse 155. Salvation is far from the wicked] There is no hope of their conversion.

Because they seek not thy statutes.] And they who do not seek, shall not find.

Verse 156. Great are thy tender mercies] They are רבים rabim, multitudes. They extend to all the wretchedness of all men.

Verse 158. I beheld the transgressors, and was grieved] Literally, I was affected with anguish.

Verse 160. Thy word is true from the beginning] ראש rosh, the head or beginning of Thy word is true. Does he refer to the first word in the Book of Genesis, בראשית beresh-ith, "in the beginning?" The learned Reader knows that ראש rosh, or raash, is the root in that word. Every word Thou hast spoken from the first in Bereshith (Genesis) to the end of the law and prophets, and all Thou wilt yet speak, as flowing from the fountain of truth, must be true; and all shall have, in due time, their fulfilment. And all these, Thy words, endure for ever. They are true, and ever will be true.

They are tender; they are misericordiae, q. d. miseria cordis, feelings which occasion pain and distress to the heart. רחמים rachamim, such as affect and flow from the tender yearnings of the bowels. The word signifies what a mother feels for the infant that lay in her womb.

2. He prays to be quickened. Let me not die, but live.

IV. He complains of his adversaries:—

1. They are many. Many devils; many men; many visible, more invisible.

2. Yet he continued steadfast. I do not decline, &c.

3. They were transgressors. Not simple sinners, but workers of iniquity.

4. He was greatly distressed on their account. I beheld them, and was grieved.

V. He brings this as a proof of his attachment to God.

1. Consider how I love. No man dare say to God, "Look upon me;" but he who is persuaded that when God looks upon him he will like him. This was a sure proof of the Psalmist's sincerity.

2. He loves not merely the blessings he receives from God, but he loves God's law; and none will love this, who does not delight in obedience. And how few are there of this character, even in the church of God.

3. And because he loves he prays to be quickened. The soul only which is spiritually alive, can obey.

VI. He concludes with a commendation of God's word.

1. Thy word is true, in its principle, and in all its details, from Adam to Moses; and from Moses to Christ; from Christ to the present time; and from the present time to the end of the world.

2. For it endures for ever. All other things wear out, or decay; lose their testimony, and become obsolete. But God will ever bear testimony to His own word, and continue to support its veracity by fulfilling it to all successive generations.

LETTER ♫ SCHIN—Twenty-first Division.

Verse 161. Princes have persecuted me] This may refer to what was done by prime ministers, and the rulers of provinces, to sour the king against the unfortunate Jews, in order still to detain them in bondage. In reference to David, the plotting against him in Saul's court, and the dangers he ran in consequence of the jealousies of the Philistine lords while he sojourned among them, are well known.

My heart standeth in awe] They had probably offers made them of enlargement or melioration of condition, providing they submitted to some idolatrous conditions: but they knew they had to do with a jealous God; their hearts stood in awe, and they were thereby kept from sin.

Verse 162. As one that findeth great spoil.] רב ללף שאלה shalal rab. This appears to refer to such spoil as is acquired by stripping the dead in a field of battle; taking the rich garments of the slain chiefs: or it may refer to plunder in general. As God opened his eyes, he beheld wonders in his law; and each discovery of this kind was like finding a prize.

Verse 163. I—abhor lying] Perhaps they might have made the confessions which the Chaldeans required, and by mental reservation, have kept an inward firm adherence to their creed: but this, in the sight of the God of truth, must have been lying; and at such a sacrifice they would not purchase their enlargement, even from captivity.

Verse 164. Seven times a day do I praise thee] We have often seen that seven was a number expressing perfection, completion, &c. among the Hebrews; and that it is often used to signify many, or an indefinite number, 165 ^d Great peace have they which love thy law: and ^e nothing shall offend them.

 166 ^f Lord, I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments.
 167 My soul hath kept thy testimonies: and I love them exceedingly.
 168 I have kept thy precepts and thy testimonies: ^g for all my ways are before thee.

shall have no stumbling-block.—f Genesis 28. 13. Verse 174.—g Proverbs 5. 2 see Prov. xxiv. 16. Lev. xxvi. 28. And here it may mean no more than that his soul was filled with the spirit of gratitude and praise, and that he very frequently expressed his joyous and grateful feelings in this way. But Rabbi Solomon says, this is to be understood literally; for they praised God twice in the morning before reading the decalogue, and once after; twice in the evening before the same reading, and twice after; making in the whole seven times. The Roman church has prescribed a seven hours a day devotion.

In a manuscript Saxon Homily, Domin. 3, in Quadrag. A. D. 971, I find the following singular directions:—

Callum Epytzenum mannum or beboden bat hi ealne heopa lichaman reofon ribum gebetcrion mid Epytzer jode tacne.

1. sneret on apne morgen.
2. obne ride on unceon tid.
3. sribben ride on midne beg.
4. reofban ride on non tid.
5. riptan ride on sren.
6. rxtan ride on nibt en he pette.
7. reofban ride on uhtan hupu he hine gode ba.

Every Christian man is commanded that he always his body seven times bless with the sign of Christ's cross.

1. First, at day break.
2. Second time, at undern tide, (nine o'clock in the morning.)
3. The third time, at midday.
4. The fourth time at noontide (3 o'clock, p. m.)
5. The fifth time, in the evening.
6. The sixth time, at night ere he go to rest.
7. The seventh time, at midnight. A good man would do so if he awoke.

It seems that the sign of the cross was thought sufficient, even without prayer.

Verse 165. Great peace have they] They have peace in their conscience, and joy in the Holy Spirit; and Nothing shall offend] Stumble, or put them out of the way.

Verse 166. Lord, I have hoped] Thou hast promised deliverance, and I have expected it on the ground of that promise.

Verse 167. My soul hath kept] I have not attended to the letter merely; but my spirit has entered into the spirit and design of Thy testimonies.

Verse 168. For all my ways are before thee.] Thou knowest that I do not lie: Thy eye has been upon my heart and my conduct: and Thou knowest that I have endeavoured to walk before Thee with a perfect heart.

Analysis of Letter Schin—Twenty-first Division.

In this section the Psalmist shews,—

- I. His love to God; and
- II. The ardour and perfection of that love.

I. The first sign of His love was, that it stood in the midst of persecution.
 1. Princes have persecuted.
 2. But without a cause, though they pretended many.
 3. But my heart stands in awe. My love and confidence have due respect to thy infinite justice and immaculate purity.

The second sign of his love is, the joy and delight he took in God's law: it was greater than a conqueror could feel at the fortunate issue of a battle, and the spoils of the vanquished, howsoever rich or immense.

The third sign was, his hatred to all iniquity. I hate and abhor lying.

The fourth sign was, his fervour and earnestness in devotion. Seven times, &c.

The fifth sign was, the satisfaction he took in the welfare of others.

1. Great peace have they which love thy law.
2. Nothing shall offend them. They go on their way rejoicing; and they that love God, rejoice with them that do rejoice.

II. He shews the perfection of his love,—

1. By his hope and confidence. Lord, I have hoped, &c.
2. By his obedience. And done thy commandments.
3. By keeping God's testimonies with all his soul.

PSALM CXIX.

TAU.

169 Let my cry come near before thee, O Lord:

give me understanding according to thy word.

170 Let my supplication come before thee:

deliver me according to thy word.

171 My lips shall utter praise, when thou hast taught me thy statutes.

172 My tongue shall speak of thy word: for all thy commandments are righteousness.

And this he repeats.
1. I have kept thy precepts and testimonies.
2. I have done this through the present motives, as Thou knowest; for all my ways are before thee. Whatever he did, he did as in God's sight; for he well knew that the eye of the Lord was constantly upon him.
For other particulars, see the preceding notes.

LETTER TAU—Twenty-second Division.

Verse 169. Let my cry come near before thee] This is really a fine image: it is of frequent occurrence, and is little heeded. Here the Psalmist's cry for deliverance is personified; made an intelligent being, and sent up to the throne of grace to negotiate in his behalf. He pursues this prosopopoeia in the next verse; and sends his supplication in the same way. I have already had occasion to refer to a similar figure in Homer, where prayers are represented as the daughters of Jupiter.

Verse 171. My lips shall utter praise] תהלה tehillah, a song of praise.

Verse 172. My tongue shall speak of thy word] There is a curious distinction here. In the preceding verse he says, My lips shall utter—here no reference is made to articulate sounds, except as affixed to musical notes. In this verse he says, My tongue shall speak; here articulated and intelligible words are intended. He first utters sounds, connected with words expressive of his grateful feelings; in the second, he speaks words, principally those which God himself had spoken, containing promises of support, purposes relative to the redemption of His people, and denunciations against their enemies.

Verse 173. Let thine hand help me] Exert Thy power in my defence.

Verse 175. Let my soul live] Let my life be preserved, and my soul quickened!

Verse 176. I have gone astray like a lost sheep] A sheep, when it has once lost the flock, strays in such a manner as to render the prospect of its own return utterly hopeless. I have seen them bleating when they have lost the flock; and when answered by the others, instead of turning to the sound, have gone on in the same direction in which they were straying, their bleatings answered by the rest of the flock, till they were out of hearing! This fact shews the propriety of the next clause.

Seek thy servant] I shall never find Thee; come to the wilderness, take me up, and carry me to the flock. See the Notes on the parable of the Lost Sheep, Luke xv. 4, &c. The Psalmist began with, Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord. And he concludes it with, I have gone astray like a lost sheep; seek thy servant. And thus, conscious of the blessedness of those who are in the way of righteousness, he desires to be brought into it, that he may walk in newness of life. Ver. 1. It is a good way, and they are blessed that walk in it. Verse the last, Bring me into this way, that I may be blessed: and thus the Psalm, in sentiment, returns into itself; and the latter verse is so connected with the former, as to make the whole a perfect circle, like the serpent biting its own tail.

There is one extraordinary perfection in this Psalm: begin where you will, you seem to be at the commencement of the piece; and where you will, you seem to close with a complete sense. And yet it is not like the Book of Proverbs, a tissue of detached sentences: it is a whole, composed of many parts; and all apparently as necessary to the perfection of the Psalm, as the different alphabetical letters, under which it is arranged, are to the formation of a complete alphabet. Though there be a continual recurrence of the same words, which would of itself prevent it from having a pleasing effect upon the ear; yet these words are so connected with a vast variety of others, which shew their force and meaning in still new and impressive points of light, that attention is still excited, and devotion kept alive, during the whole reading. It is constructed with admirable art; and every where breathes the justest and highest encomiums on the revelation of God; shews the glories of the God who gave it, the necessities and dependence of His intelligent creatures, the bounty of the Creator, and the praise and obedience which are His 173 Let thine hand help me; for I have chosen thy precepts.

174 I have longed for thy salvation, O Lord; and thy law is my delight.

175 Let my soul live, and it shall praise thee; and let thy judgments help me.

176 I have gone astray like a lost sheep: seek thy servant: for I do not forget thy commandments.

due. It is elegant throughout, is full of beauties; and I have endeavoured, in the preceding Notes, to mark some of them; but the number might have been greatly multiplied. To no Psalm can its own words be better applied, ver. 18. Open thou mine eyes that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law.

Analysis of Letter Tau—Twenty-second Division.

In this last section the Psalmist seems to sum up all his preceding exercises.

- I. He prays.
- II. Gives thanks.
- III. Confesses his errors.
- IV. Craves mercy; and,
- V. Promises obedience.

I. In the first two verses he prays for his prayers, begging God to accept them.

- 1. Let my cry come near before thee!
- 2. Let my supplication come before thee! This repetition shews his earnestness, fervency, importunity, and perseverance. See Luke xi. 1, &c.

That for which he prays is, 1. Understanding. 2. Deliverance.

- 1. Give me understanding. I want more light.
- 2. Give me this according to thy word. In the measure which Thou hast promised.
- 3. And give it to me for this end, that I may know thy law, be obedient to its precepts, and finally, by Thy mercy, obtain everlasting life.
- 4. Deliver me according to thy word. I want salvation, and that measure of it which Thy word promises.

II. He gives thanks.

- 1. My lips shall utter praise. I will celebrate Thy praises with songs.
- 2. My tongue shall speak. I shall set forth Thy wondrous deeds.

3. Shall shew that all Thy commandments are righteousness; just, holy, impartial.

4. But these things I cannot do till thou hast taught me thy statutes.

III. He proceeds to other parts of prayer:—

- 1. Let thy hand help me. My own strength will avail little.
- 2. I have chosen thy statutes: and without Thy help I cannot obey them.

3. I have longed for thy salvation. Thou knowest my heart is right with Thee.

4. And thy law is my delight. A man naturally longs for that which he delights to possess.

Here he notes three things:—

- 1. I have chosen thy precepts.
- 2. I have longed for thy salvation.
- 3. Delighted in thy law; therefore let thy hand be with me.

He prays for,—

- 1. Life. Let my soul live.
- 2. And it shall praise thee. When the soul is not alive to God, there is neither gratitude nor obedience.

3. Let thy judgments help me. Cause the merciful dispensations of thy providence ever to work in my behalf. In this sense the word judgments is frequently taken in this Psalm.

IV. He confesses his errors:

- 1. I have gone astray. Departed from Thee, my Shepherd.
- 2. And like a lost sheep too. See the Note.

3. My errors, however, have not been wilful and obstinate. I did not sufficiently watch and pray, and my sheep-like simplicity was practised upon by my arch enemy.

4. The consequence, however, has been, I am lost—far from Thy fold. But Thou didst come to seek and save that which was lost.

5. Therefore, O Lord, seek me. I am in the wilderness; leave the ninety and nine that do not need Thee as I do, and seek me! for, by Thy grace, I seek Thee.

V. I look for Thee in the spirit of obedience.

- 1. Seek Thy servant. I am ready to do Thy will, though I erred from Thy ways.

PSALM CXX.

The Psalmist, in great distress, calls on the Lord for deliverance from calumny and defamation, 1, 2. Shows the punishment that awaits his persecutors, 3, 4. Describes the necessity of his restlessness with the negatively, 5-7.

XXVII. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

2. I do not forget thy commandments, though I have often come short of my duty.

These words may be very suitable to a person who has backslidden, and who is returning to God with a penitent and believing heart.

1. Though he had fallen, the light of God continued to shine into his conscience.

2. He had not forgotten God's way, nor lost sight of his own state. The word of the Lord, applied by His Spirit,—1. When he was slumbering, awakened him. 2. When he was dead, quickened him. 3. When he was in danger, preserved him. 4. When he was wounded, cured him. 5. When he was assailed by his foes, armed and defended him. 6. And by this word he was nourished and supported. It was ever well with the Psalmist, and it is ever well with all the followers of God, when they do not forget God's word.

It may be just necessary to note here that if this Psalm be considered as belonging to the times of the Babylonish Captivity, which it most probably does, the Psalmist, though speaking in his own person, is ever to be considered as speaking in the persons of all the captives in Babylon.

NOTES ON PSALM CXX.

This Psalm, and all the rest that follow it, to the end of Psalm cxxiv. fifteen in number, are called Psalms of degrees; for thus the Hebrew title ha-mêlôth is generally translated, as coming from the root alâh, to ascend or mount upwards. Hence robya mâ-elôth, steps or stairs for ascending, 1 Kings x. 19, 20. 2 Kings ix. 13. But as the word may be applied to elevation in general, hence some have thought that it may here signify the elevation of voice; "these Psalms being sung with the highest elevations of voice and music." Others have thought the word expresses rather the matter of these Psalms, as being of peculiar excellence: and hence Junius and Tremellius prefix to each Canticum excellentissimum, a most excellent ode.

R. D. Kimchi says, "there were fifteen steps by which the priests ascended into the temple, on each of which they sang one of these fifteen Psalms." This opinion I find referred to in the Apocryphal Gospel of the birth of Mary:—"Her parents brought her to the Temple, and set her upon one of the steps. Now there are fifteen steps about the Temple, by which they go up to it, according to the fifteen Psalms of Degrees." But the existence of such steps and practices cannot be proved.

Aben Ezra supposes that the word means some kind of tune sung to these Psalms. It is more likely, if the title be really ancient, that it was affixed to them on account of their being sung on the return from the Babylonish Captivity, as the people were going up to Jerusalem: for, though some of them are attributed to David, yet it is very probable that they were all made long after his time, and probably during the Captivity, or about the end of it. The author of these fifteen Psalms is not known; and most probably they were not the work of one person. They have been attributed to David, to Solomon, to Ezra, to Haggai, to Zechariah, and to Malachi, without any positive evidence. They are, however, excellent in their kind; and written with much elegance, contain strong and nervous sentiments of the most exalted piety, expressed with great felicity of language in a few words.

Verse 1. In my distress] Through the causes afterwards mentioned:—

I cried unto the Lord] Made strong supplication for help.

And he heard me.] Answered my prayer by comforting my soul.

It appears to be a prayer of the captives in Babylon for complete liberty; or, perhaps, he recites the prayer the Israelites had made previously to their restoration.

Verse 2. Lying lips, and from a deceitful tongue] From a people without faith, without truth, without religion—who sought by lies and calumnies to destroy them.

Verse 3. What shall be given unto thee] Thou art worthy of the heaviest punishments.

what shall be done unto thee, thou false tongue?

4 ^d Sharp arrows of the mighty, with coals of juniper.

5 Wo is me that I sojourn in Mesech, that I dwell in the tents of Kedar!

6 My soul hath long dwelt with him that hateth peace.

7 I am ^e for peace: but when I speak, they are for war.

the mighty man with coals of juniper.—e Gen. 10. 2. *Gen. 27. 13.—f Gen. 28. 13. 1 Sam. 26. 1. *Jar. 49. 24, 25.—g Or, a man of peace.

Verse 4. Sharp arrows] The Chaldees has, "The strong sharp arrows are like lightning from above; with coals of juniper kindled in hell beneath." On the juniper see the Note on Job xxx. 4, where this passage is explained. Firing arrows, or arrows wrapped about with inflamed combustibles, were formerly used in sieges to set the places on fire. See my Note on Eph. vi. 16.

Verse 5. That I sojourn in Mesech] The Chaldees has it, "Wo is me that I am a stranger with the Asiatics (wow aussey), and that I dwell in the tents of the Arabs." Calmet, who understands the Psalm as speaking of the state of the captives in Babylon, and its provinces, says, "Mesech was apparently the father of the Mosquians, who dwell in the mountains that separate Iberia from Armenia, and both from Colchis. These provinces were subjugated by Nebuchadnezzar: and it is evident from 2 Kings xvii. 23, 24. xviii. 11, & xix. 12, 13, that many of the Jews were held in captivity in those countries. As to Kedar, it extended into Arabia Petraea, and towards the Euphrates; and is the country afterwards known as the country of the Saracens."

Verse 6. My soul hath long dwelt with him that hateth peace.] A restless, barbarous, warlike, and marauding people.

Verse 7. I am for peace] We love to be quiet and peaceable: but they are continually engaged in excursions of rapine and plunder. It is evident that the Psalmist refers to a people like the Scenites, or wandering Arabs, who live constantly in tents, and subsist by robbery; plundering and carrying away all that they can seize. The poor captives wished them to cultivate the arts of peace, and live quietly: but they would hear of nothing but their old manner of life.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND TWENTIETH PSALM.

The Psalmist in distress—

I. Flees to God by prayer.

II. Sets forth the miseries of a foul and deceitful tongue.

III. Complains of his banishment.

I. 1. He is in distress, and cries to the Lord;—the surest and best way.

2. He tells us of the success of his prayer God heard him.

3. Of the matter of it. Lord, I beseech thee deliver my soul! 1. From lying lips. Detractions, calumnies, and defamations. 2. From a deceitful tongue, which, under the colour of friendship, covers deceit. A detractor does his mischief openly, a flatterer secretly; so that when a deceitful tongue is joined with lying lips, the mischief is intolerable.

II. He sets forth the evil that shall fall on such deceivers and slanderers.

1. Arrows—which wound afar off, suddenly and invisibly.

2. Sharp arrows, well-headed, and keen, that can pierce deeply.

3. Sharp arrows of the mighty, shot by a strong hand, and so much the more dangerous.

4. With coals—inflamed arrows, such as set all things on fire.

5. With coals of juniper, which of all coals are the hottest, and keep fire the longest.

III. The Psalmist complains of his banishment.

1. He laments his situation on account of the wickedness of the people among whom he sojourns.

2. They were barbarous and inhuman, enemies to piety and civility.

3. His state was the more intolerable, as it had been of long duration. My soul hath long dwelt, &c.

His disposition was quite contrary to theirs.

1. I am for peace. I wish to live in peace, and cultivate it.

2. But when I speak of peace, they are for war; they are fierce and inhuman. It was said of the Macedonians in Philip's time, Elis pacem esse bellum, et bellum pacem. "To them peace was war, and war was peace." Such were the people of the provinces, among whom many of the Israelites were in captivity.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXI.

This appears to be a prayer of the Jews in their captivity, who are solicitous for their restoration. It is in form of a dialogue.

Verse 1, 2. The person who worships God speaks the two first verses, I will lift mine eyes—my help cometh,—ver. 1, 2.

Ver. 3. The ministering priest answers him, He will not suffer thy feet to be moved.—He that keepeth thee will not slumber, ver. 3.

To which the worshipper answers, that he knows that he who keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep, ver. 4: but he seems to express a doubt whether he shall be an object of the Divine attention.

Ver. 5, &c. The priest resumes; and, to the conclusion of the Psalm, gives him the most positive assurances of God's favour and protection.

Verse 1. Unto the hills] Jerusalem was built upon a mountain; and Judea was a mountainous country; and the Jews, in their several dispersions, turned towards Jerusalem when they offered up their prayers to God.

Verse 2. My help cometh from the LORD] There is no help for me but in my God; and I expect it from no other quarter.

Verse 3. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved] The foundation, God's infinite power and goodness, on which thou standest, cannot be moved; and whilst thou standest on this basis, thy foot cannot be moved.

Verse 4. He that keepeth Israel] The Divine Being represents Himself as a Watchman, who takes care of the city and its inhabitants during the night watches; and who is never overtaken with slumbering or sleepiness. There is a thought in the Antigone of Sophocles, that seems the counterpart of this of the Psalmist.

Τὸν εὐν, Ζεῦ, δεῦραίς τις ἀνδρῶν

Small men below conceal great Jews above,
Whose eyes by all misbegun sleep
Are never closed, as feeble mortals' are;

Verse 6. The sun shall not smite thee by day] Thus expressed by the Chaldees: "The morning spectres shall not smite thee by day, during the government of the sun; nor the nocturnal spectres by night during the government of the moon." I believe the Psalmist simply means, they shall not be injured by heat and cold: by a sun-stroke by day, nor a frost-bite by night.

Verse 7. The LORD shall preserve thee from all evil] Ghostly and bodily, natural and moral.

He shall preserve thy soul.] Take care of thy life, and take care of thy soul.

Verse 8. Thy going out and thy coming in] Night and day—in all thy business and undertakings; and this through the whole course of thy life: for evermore.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIRST PSALM. The scope of this Psalm is to shew that God alone is the refuge of the distressed.

I. While some are looking for earthly comfort and support, I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, &c.

II. Faith sees God, the only Helper: and says, My help is the Lord.

And the first reason for this is given: God's omnipotence and sufficiency. The Lord that made the heaven and earth, and is consequently the Author and Dispenser of all spiritual and temporal blessings.

And the second reason is, His grace and goodness. He will not suffer thy foot to be moved.

A third reason is, his watchful care. He that keepeth thee will not slumber.

III. The end which God proposes in His watching,—to keep them.

1. He is the Keeper of Israel. He guards His church; He is as a wall of fire about it.

2. He is a shade. This certainly refers to that kind of umbraculum, or parasol, which was in very ancient use in the eastern countries. The sense of the passage is,—Neither the day of prosperity nor the night of adversity shall hurt thee; nor the heat of persecution, nor the coldness of friends or relatives: all these shall work thy good.

3. He shall preserve thee from all evil;—and, 4. Especially from every thing that might hurt thy soul. He shall preserve thy soul.

The Psalmist concludes with this encouraging assurance.

1. The Lord shall preserve thy going out. We are always beginning or ending some action, going abroad or returning home; and we need the protecting care of God in all.

2. From this time forth. Now that thou hast put thy whole trust and confidence in God, He will be thy continual portion and defence in all places, in all times, in all actions. In life, in prosperity, in adversity, in death, in time, and in Eternity.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXII.

In the preceding Psalms, we find the poor captives crying to God for deliverance; here they are returning thanks that they find they are permitted to return to their own land, and to the ordinances of their God.

Verse 1. I was glad when they said] When Cyrus published an edict for their return, the very first object of their thanksgiving was the kindness of God in permitting them to return to His ordinances.

Verse 2. Our feet shall stand] For seventy years we have been exiled from our own land: our heart was in Jerusalem, but our feet were in Chaldaea. Now God has turned our captivity, and our feet shall shortly stand within the gates of Jerusalem. What a transition from misery to happiness!—and what a subject for rejoicing!

Verse 3. Jerusalem—compact together.] It is now well rebuilt, every part contributing to the strength of the whole. It is also in a state of great political and spiritual union. It is the centre of union to all the tribes; for each tribe has an equal interest in that God who is worshipped there.

Verse 4. The testimony of Israel] There is the ark, where the presence of God is manifested; there is the Holy of holies; and there all the tribes assembled to worship Jehovah. He no doubt alludes to the assembling of the tribes annually at each of the three grand national festivals.

Verse 5. There are set thrones of judgment] There were the public courts, and thither the people went up to obtain justice; and, while the thrones of the house of David were there, they obtained justice.

Verse 6. Pray for the peace of Jerusalem] nyw shalom, signifies both peace and prosperity. Let her unanimity never be disturbed; let her prosperity ever be on the increase?

They shall prosper that love thee.] In the peace and prosperity of the city, they shall find their peace and their prosperity: and even on this ground they should love the city, and labour to promote its best interests. There is a masters; who, during the time they are receiving it, keep their eyes fixed on the hand that is inflicting punishment upon them, professing deep sorrow, and intreating for mercy. And this sense seems to be countenanced by the following words:—

Verse 3. Have mercy upon us, O LORD] Chastise us no more; we will no more revolt against Thee.

We are exceedingly filled with contempt.] We not only suffer grievously from our captivity, but are treated in the most contemptuous manner by our masters.

Verse 4. Those that are at ease] The Babylonians who, having subdued all the people of the neighbouring nations, lived at ease, had none to contend with them; and now became luxurious, indolent, and insolent: they were contemptuous and proud.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-THIRD PSALM.

The oppressed followers of God make application to Him for mercy. In this application they express three things:—

I. Their confidence in God.

II. Prayer for mercy.

III. Give an account of their oppressors.

I. Their trust in God.

1. Unto thee lift I up mine eyes] We trust in Thee alone.

2. O thou that dwellest in the heavens] Infinitely raised above us: but affected with our miserable condition, and always ready to help us.

This he shews by a double similitude:—

1. As the eyes of servants, i. e. men-servants, are on their masters.

2. As the eyes of a maiden unto the hand of her mistress: both might be beaten; and here both beg to be saved from farther stripes.

3. So our eyes, &c. God's children are always looking up to Him.

4. Until that he have mercy; abate His stripes, and take off His hand.

II. Their prayer for mercy.

1. Before they lifted their eyes to God, but now they cry for mercy.

For this crying they give the following reasons:

1. We are exceedingly filled with contempt. To suffer contempt is much, to be filled with it is more; and to be exceedingly filled with it is worst of all.

2. We are scorned; they join words and actions to shew how much they despise us.

III. They give the character of those by whom they suffer.

1. They are at ease, loaded with wealth, and sunk in indolence.

2. They are proud, puffed up with a sense of their own importance; and this leads them to despise others. Proud men are for the most part empty, shallow-pated men: and contempt and scorn from such wounds deeply; especially if they rise, as they often do, from the dunghill. The sick lion in the fable found it extremely galling to be kicked by the foot of an ass.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXIV.

In our present Hebrew copies this Psalm is attributed to David, לְדָוִד le-david: but this inscription is wanting in three of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., as also in the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, Ethiopic, and Arabic; and in most of the ancient Fathers, Greek and Latin, who found no other inscription in their copies of the Text than a Psalm of degrees. It was composed long after David's days; and appears to be either a thanksgiving for their deliverance from the Babylonian captivity, or for some remarkable deliverance which they had from some potent and insidious enemy after their return to Judea. Or, what appears to me more likely, it is a thanksgiving of the Jews for their escape from the general massacre intended by Haman, prime minister of Ahasuerus, king of Persia. See the whole Book of Esther.

Verse 1. If it had not been the LORD] If God had not, in a very especial manner, supported and defended us, we

4 Then the waters had overwhelmed us, the stream had gone over our soul:

5 Then the proud waters had gone over our soul.

6 Blessed be the LORD, who hath not given us as a prey to their teeth.

7 Our soul is escaped: as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped.

8 ^a Our help is in the name of the LORD, ^b who made heaven and earth.

c Ps. 91. 3. Prov. 6. 8.—d Ps. 121. 2.—e Gen. 1. 1. Ps. 124. 3.

had all been swallowed up alive, have been destroyed by a sudden destruction, so as not one would have been left. This might refer to the plot against the whole nation of the Jews, by Haman, in the days of Mordecai and Esther; when, by his treacherous schemes, the Jews, wheresoever dispersed in the provinces of Babylon, were all to have been put to death in one day. This may here be represented under the figure of an earthquake, when a chasm is formed, and a whole city and its inhabitants are in a moment swallowed up alive.

Verse 5. Then the proud waters] The proud Haman had nearly brought the flood of desolation over his lives.

Verse 7. Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare] This is a fine image; and at once shews the weakness of the Jews, and the cunning of their adversaries. Haman had laid the snare completely for them; humanly speaking, there was no prospect of their escape: but the Lord was on their side; and the providence that induced Ahasuerus to call for the book of the records of the kingdom to be read to him, as well indeed as the once very improbable advancement of Esther to the throne of Persia, were the means used by the Lord for the preservation of the whole Jewish people from extermination. God thus broke the snare, and the bird escaped; while the poacher was caught in his own trap, and executed. See the Book of Esther, which is probably the best comment on this Psalm.

Verse 8. Our help is in the name of the LORD] בְּשֵׁם יְיָ בִּשְׁמִי בִּשְׁמִי beshem meisra dayat, Chaldee, "In the name of the Word of the Lord." So in the second verse, "Unless the Word of the Lord had been our helper!" the substantial WORD; not a word spoken, or a prophecy delivered, but the Person who was afterward termed 'Ο Λόγος τῶν Θεῶν, THE WORD OF GOD. This deliverance of the Jews appears to me the most natural interpretation of this Psalm: and probably Mordecai was the author.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FOURTH PSALM.

The people of God, newly escaped from some great danger, acknowledge it, and celebrate God as their Deliverer.

I. The Psalmist begins abruptly, as is usual in pathetic expressions.

1. If it had not been the LORD. And so deeply was he affected with a sense of God's goodness, and the narrowness of the escape, that he repeats it. Unless the LORD, &c. Nothing else could have saved us.

2. Now may Israel say; the whole body of the Jewish people may well acknowledge this.

3. When men rose up: when they were all leagued against us as one man to destroy us; and, humanly speaking, our escape was impossible.

II. This danger and escape the Psalmist illustrates by two metaphors:—

1. One taken from beasts of prey. They had swallowed us up quick. They would have rushed upon us, torn us in pieces, and swallowed us down, while life was quivering in our limbs.

2. This they would have done in their fury. The plot was laid with great circumspection and caution: but it would have been executed with a reissless fury.

III. The second similitude is taken from waters which had broken through dikes, and at once submerged the whole country. The stream had gone over our soul; the proud waters, resistless, now that the dikes were broken, would have gone over our soul,—destroyed every life.

IV. He next acknowledges the deliverance.

1. We are not given a prey to their teeth.

2. It is the blessed God who has preserved us. Blessed be God, &c.

As this deliverance was beyond expectation, he illustrates it by another metaphor, a bird taken in, but escaping from, a snare.

1. We were in the snare of the fowler.

2. But our soul is escaped.

3. And the fowler disappointed of his prey. The disappointment of Haman was, in all its circumstances, one of the most mortifying that ever occurred to man.

a Proverbs 22. 3. Isa. 14. 5.—b Heb. wickedness.

V. He concludes with a grateful acclamation.

1. Our help is in the name of the Lord. In open assaults, and in insidious attacks, we have no helper but God; and from Him our deliverance must come.

2. This help is sufficient; for He made the heaven and the earth; has both under His government; and can employ both in the support, or for the deliverance of His followers.

Or, take the following as a plainer analysis:—

I. The subtlety of the adversaries of the church in laying snares to entrap it, as fowlers do birds, ver. 7.

II. Their cruelty in seeking to tear it to pieces, as some cruelly do beasts of prey: or, as mighty inundations that overflow all in their way, ver. 3—6.

III. The cause of this subtlety and cruelty: wrath and displeasure, ver. 3.

IV. The delivery of the church from both, by the power and goodness of God, ver. 1, 2, 6, 7.

V. The duty performed for this deliverance; praises to God, ver. 6.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXV.

This Psalm is without a title: it belongs most probably to the times after the Captivity; and has been applied, with apparent propriety, to the opposition which Sanballat the Horonite, Geshem the Arabian, and Tobiah the Ammonite, gave to the Jews, while employed in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem, and restoring the temple.

Verse 1. They that trust in the Lord] Every faithful Jew, who confides in Jehovah, shall stand, in those open and secret attacks of the enemies of God and truth, as unshaken as mount Zion; and shall not be moved by the power of any adversary.

Verse 2. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem] Jerusalem, according to Sandys, was situated on a rocky mountain every way to be ascended (except a little on the north,) with steep ascents and deep valleys, naturally fortified. It is surrounded with other mountains, at no great distance, as if placed in the midst of an amphitheatre: for on the east is mount Olivet, separated from the city by the valley of Jehoshaphat, which also encompasses a part of the north; on the south, the mountain of Offiner interposed with the valley of Gehinnom; and on the west it was formerly fenced with the valley of Gihon, and the mountains adjoining. The situation was such as to be easily rendered impregnable.

The Lord is round about his people] He is above, beneath, around them; and while they keep within it, their fortress is impregnable, and they can suffer no evil.

Verse 3. For the rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous] In our liturgic version this clause is thus rendered: The rod of the ungodly cometh not into the lot of the righteous. "This," said one of our forefathers, "is neither truth nor Scripture. First, it is not truth: for the rod of the wicked doth come into the inheritance of the righteous, and that often. Secondly, it is not Scripture; for the text saith, The rod of the wicked shall not rest there. It may come, and stay for a time: but it shall not be permitted to abide." This is only one, and not the worst, of the many bad blemishes which deform the Version in our national Prayer Book. In short, the Version of the Psalms in that book is wholly unworthy of regard; and should be thrown aside, and that in the authorized Version in the Bible, substituted for it. The people of God are misled by it; and they are confounded with the great and glaring differences they find between it and what they find in their Bibles, where they have a version of a much better character, delivered to them by the authority of church and state. Why do not our present excellent and learned prelates lay this to heart, and take away this sore stumblingblock out of the way of the people? I have referred to this subject in the Introduction to the Book of Psalms.

Lest the righteous put forth] Were the wicked to bear rule in the Lord's vineyard, religion would soon become extinct; for the great mass of the people would conform to their rulers. Fear not your enemies, while ye fear

3 For the rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous; lest the righteous put forth their hands unto iniquity.

4 Do good, O Lord, unto those that be good, and to them that are upright in their hearts.

5 As for such as turn aside unto their crooked ways, the Lord shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity: but peace shall be upon Israel.

c Prov. 2. 15.—d Psalm 135. 6.—Gal. 6. 16.

God. Neither Sanballat, nor Tobiah, nor Geshem, nor any of God's foes, shall be able to set up their rod, their power, and authority, here. While you are faithful, the Lord will laugh them to scorn.

Verse 4. Do good, O Lord, unto those that be good] Let the upright ever find Thee his sure defence! Increase the goodness which Thou hast already bestowed upon them; and let all who are upright in heart find Thee to be their stay and their support!

Verse 5. As for such as turn aside] Who are not faithful; who give way to sin; who backslide, and walk in a crooked way, widely different from the straight way of the upright, ישר yesharim, the straight in heart; they shall be led forth to punishment with the common workers of iniquity. Thus Thy church will be purified, and Thy peace rest upon Thy true Israel. Let him that readeth understand.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIFTH PSALM.

It is the purpose of the Psalmist to comfort the people of God,—

I. By an assurance of their perpetuity, both from God's presence and protection, ver. 1, 2.

II. That though he may permit them to be harassed by the wicked, yet He will not leave them under their rod, ver. 3.

III. He prays for the good; and

IV. Sets down the portion of the wicked, ver. 4, 5.

I. A general promise of the perpetuity of the church; that is, of them that trust in God.

1. They that trust in the Lord. "The congregation of God's faithful people who have the pure word of God preached, and the sacraments duly administered." Acts xix.

2. Shall be as mount Zion, secure and immovable; immovable because a mountain,—a holy mountain,—and particularly dear to God.

3. Which abideth for ever. So surely as mount Zion shall never be removed, so sure shall the church of God be preserved. Is it not strange that wicked and idolatrous powers have not joined together, dug down this mount, and carried it into the sea, that they might nullify a promise in which the people of God exult! Till ye can carry mount Zion into the Mediterranean sea, the church of Christ shall grow and prevail. Hear this, ye murderous Mohammedans!

4. As the mountains are round about Jerusalem—to fortify it.

5. So the Lord is round about his people—to preserve them.

6. From henceforth, even for ever. Through both time and eternity.

II. 1. But the church is often persecuted and harassed. Granted; for the rod, the power and scourge, of the wicked may come into the heritage of the righteous.

2. But then may it not finally prevail? No: for though it come, it shall not rest.

3. And why? Because it might finally destroy the church, pervert the good, and cause them to join issue with the ungodly. Therefore, they shall not be tempted above that they are able.

III. Therefore the Psalmist prays,—

1. Do good to the good. Give them patience, and keep them faithful.

2. And to the upright in heart. Let not the weak and the sincere be overcome by their enemies!

IV. He sets down the lot of the ungodly:—

1. They turn aside.

2. They get into crooked paths; they get into the spirit of the world, and are warped into its crooked and winding ways.

3. They shall be condemned, and then led forth to punishment. The backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways; he shall have writhing in pain, for crooked walking in sin.

4. But while this is their portion, peace, prosperity, and blessedness, shall be upon Israel.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXVI.

This Psalm is not of David, has no title in the Hebrew or any of the Versions, and certainly belongs to the close of the Captivity. It might have been composed by Haggai and Zechariah, as the Syriac supposes; or by Ezra, according to others. It is beautiful, and highly descriptive of the circumstances which it represents.

Verse 1. When the Lord turned again the captivity] When Cyrus published his decree in favour of the Jews, giving them liberty to return to their own land, and rebuild their city and temple,—

We were like them that dream.] The news was so unexpected that we doubted for a time the truth of it. We believed it too good news to be true, and thought ourselves in a dream or illusion. When the Romans had vanquished Philip, king of Macedonia, they restored liberty to the Grecian cities by proclamation. It was done at the time of the Isthmian games, and by the crier, who went into the circus to proclaim them; none but the Roman general, T. Quintus, knowing what was to be done. Multitudes from all Greece were there assembled; and the tidings produced nearly the same effect upon them, according to Livy, that the publication of the decree of Cyrus did on the Jews, according to what is here related by the Psalmist. I shall give the substance of this account from the Roman historian. When the Romans had sat down to behold the games, the herald, with his trumpet, went into the arena, according to custom, to proclaim the several games. Silence being obtained, he solemnly pronounced the following words:—

SENATUS ROMANUS ET T. QUINTIUS IMPERATOR, PHILIPPO REGIS MACEDONISQUE DEVICTIS; LIBEROS, IMMUNE, SUIUS LEGIBUS ESSE JUBET CORINTHIOS, PHOCENSIS, LOCRENSISQUE OMNES, ET INSULAM EUBOEAM, ET MAGNETAS, THESSALOS, PERHEBOS, ACHEOS, PHTHIOTAS!

"The Roman Senate, and T. Quintus the general, having vanquished king Philip and the Macedonians, do ordain that the Corinthians, Phocensians, all the Locrensians, the island of Euboea, the Magnesians, Thessalians, Perhebeans, Achæans, and Pthiotians, shall be free, be delivered from all taxes, and live according to their own laws!"

The effect that this produced on the astonished Grecians, who were present, is related by this able historian in a very natural and affecting manner; and some parts of it nearly in the words of the Psalmist.

Audisti voce præconis, majus, gaudium fuit, quam quod universonum homines caperent. Vix satis se credere se quique audisse: alii alios intueri mirabundi velut somnii vanam speciem: quod ad quemque pertineret, suarum aurium fidei minimum credentes, proximis interrogabant. Revocatur præco, cum unusquisque non audire, sed videre libertatis suæ nuncium averit, iterum pronunciarit eadem. Tum ab certo jam gaudio tantus cum clamore plausus est ortus, lolesque repetitus, ut facile appareret, nihil omnium honorum multitudini gratius quam LIBERTATEM esse.—T. Liv. Hist. lxxxiii. c. 32.

"This proclamation of the herald being heard, there was such joy, that the people in general could not comprehend it. Scarcely could any person believe what he had heard. They gazed on each other, wondering as if it had been some illusion, similar to a dream;—and, although all were interested in what was spoken, none could trust his own ears, but inquired each from him who stood next to him what it was that was proclaimed? The herald was again called, as each expressed the strongest desire not only to hear, but see, the messenger of his own liberty: the herald, therefore, repeated the proclamation. When by this repetition the glad tidings were confirmed, there arose such a shout, accompanied with repeated clappings of hands, as plainly shewed, that of all good things none is so dear to the multitude as LIBERTY."

O that God may raise up some other deliverer to save these same cities, with their inhabitants, from a worse yoke than ever was imposed upon them by the king of Macedonia; and from a servitude, which has now lasted three hundred years longer than the captivity of the Israelites in the empire of Babylon!

Constantinople was taken by the Turks in 1453; and since that time till the present, (October 1822,) three hundred and sixty-nine years have elapsed.

Why do the Christian powers of Europe stand by, and see the ark of their God in captivity; the Holy Name by which they are called despised and execrated; the vilest indignities offered to those who are called Christians, by barbarians the most cruel, ferocious, and abominable, that ever disgraced the name of man?—Great God, vindicate the cause of the distressed Greeks, as summarily, as effectually, as permanently, as Thou once didst that of Thy oppressed people the Jews! Let the crescent never more fill its horns with a victory, or with the spoils of any who are called by the sacred name of Jesus: but let it wane back into total darkness; and know no change for the better, till illuminated by the orient splendour of the Sun of righteousness! Amen! Amen!

Verse 2. Then was our mouth filled with laughter] The same effect as was produced on the poor liberated Grecians mentioned above.

Then said they among the heathen] The liberty now granted was brought about in so extraordinary a way, that the very heathens saw that the hand of the great Jehovah must have been in it.

Verse 3. The Lord hath done great things for us] We acknowledge the hand of our God. Deus nobis hæc omnia fecit, God alone has given us this enlargement.

We are glad.] This is a mere burst of ecstatic joy. O, how happy are we!

Verse 4. Turn again our captivity] This is either a recital of the prayer they had used before their deliverance; or it is a prayer for those who still remained in the provinces beyond the Euphrates. The Jewish captives did not all return at once: they came back at different times, and under different leaders, Ezra, Nehemiah, Zerubbabel, &c.

As the streams in the south.] Probably the Nile is meant. It is now pretty well known that the Nile has its origin in the kingdom of Damot; and runs from south to north through different countries, till passing through Egypt, it empties itself in the Mediterranean sea. It is possible, however, that they might have had in view some rapid rivers that either rose in the south, or had a southern direction; and they desired that their return might be as rapid, and as abundant, as the waters of those rivers. But we know that the Nile proceeds from the south, divides itself into several streams as it passes through Egypt, and falls by seven mouths into the Mediterranean.

Verse 5. They that sow in tears shall reap in joy.] This is either a maxim which they gather from their own history, or it is a fact which they are now witnessing. We see the benefit of humbling ourselves under the mighty hand of God; we have now a sweet return from our bitter tears. Or, we have sown in tears; now we reap in joy. We are restored after a long and afflicting captivity to our own country, to peace, and to happiness.

Verse 6. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed] The metaphor seems to be this:—A poor farmer has had a very bad harvest: a very scanty portion of grain and food has been gathered from the earth. The seed time is now come, and is very unpromising. Out of the famine, a little seed has been saved to be sown, in hopes of another crop: but the badness of the present season almost precludes the entertainment of hope. But he must sow, or else despair and perish. He carries his all, his precious seed, with him in his seed basket; and with a sorrowful heart commits it to the furrow, watering it in effect with his tears, and earnestly imploring the blessing of God upon it. God hears:—the season becomes mild—he beholds successively the blade,—the ear,—and the full corn in the ear. The appointed weeks of harvest come, and the grain is very productive. He fills his arms, his carriages, with the sheaves and shocks; and returns to his large expecting family in triumph, praising God for the wonders He has wrought. So shall it be with this handful of returning Israelites. They also are to be sown, scattered all over the land: the blessing of God shall be upon them, and their faith and numbers shall be abundant.

dantly increased. The return here referred to, Isaiah describes in very natural language:—"And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering to the Lord out of all nations upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the Lord, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel unto the house of the Lord:"—chap. lxxvi. ver. 20.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SIXTH PSALM.

The parts of this Psalm are three:—

I. An expression of joy for their strange deliverance from captivity.

II. A prayer for the return of the remaining part.

III. A moral collected by the Psalmist from it.

I. The Psalmist celebrates their return, and amplifies it three ways:—

1. From the Cause—Jehovah. Cyrus gave a commission for it: but it was the Lord disposed his heart so to do. When the Lord turned, &c.

2. From the manner of it. It was strange and wonderful;—they could scarcely believe it.

3. From the joy at it, inward and external. 1. Their mouths were filled with laughter. 2. Their tongues with stringing. A thankful tongue expressed the feelings of a thankful heart.

That God did this for them he proves by two evidences:—

1. The heathen.—Then said they among the heathen. They saw that they were permitted to return by virtue of a royal edict; that the very king who gave the commission was named by a prophet; that they had rich gifts given them, the vessels of gold and silver restored, &c. who could do all these things but God?

2. The Jews. It is true, said the Jews, what you acknowledge. 1. The Lord hath done great things for us. Beyond our merit, beyond our hope. 2. Whereof we are glad, for we are freed from a galling yoke.

II. But there were some Jews left behind, for whom they pray.

1. Turn their captivity also. Put it in their hearts to join their brethren. Several, no doubt, staid behind, because they had married strange wives, &c.

2. Turn it as the streams in the south. Or, as some read it, streams of water on a parched land. Judea has been lying waste; we need many hands to cultivate it. When all join together in this work, the land will become fruitful, like the parched ground, when powerful rivulets are sent through it in all directions.

III. The benefit of this will be great; for, although it may cost us much hard labour and distress in the beginning, yet the maxim will hold good,—They who sow in tears shall reap in joy. Which the Psalmist amplifies in the next verse.

1. He that goeth forth and weepeth. The poor husbandman, for the reasons given above, and in the notes, bearing precious seed, seed bought with a high price, which augments his grief, being so poor.

2. He shall doubtless come again—in harvest, with joy, having a plentiful crop; for every grain sown, at least one full fed ear of corn, with, at the lowest, thirty fold. Some maxims are to be gathered from the whole:—Penitential sorrow shall be followed by the joy of pardoning mercy; he that bears the cross shall wear the crown; and, trials and difficulties shall be followed by peace and prosperity.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXVII.

The Hebrew, Chaldee, and Vulgate, attribute this Psalm to Solomon. The Syriac says it is a Psalm of David concerning Solomon; and that it was spoken also concerning Haggai and Zechariah, who forwarded the building of the Temple. The Septuagint, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon, have no title, but simply a Psalm of Degrees. It was most likely composed for the building of the second Temple, under Nehemiah, and by some prophet of that time.

Verse 1. Except the Lord build the house] To build a house is taken in three different senses in the Sacred Writings; 1. To build the Temple of the Lord, which was called ha-beith, the house, by way of eminence; 2. To build any ordinary house, or place of dwelling; 3. To have a numerous offspring. In this sense it is supposed to be spoken concerning the Egyptian midwives; that because they feared the Lord, therefore He built them houses. See the Note on Exod. i. 21. But, however the above passage may be interpreted, it is a fact that בן ben, a son, and בַּת bath, a daughter, and בַּיִת beith, a house, come from the same root בָּנָה banah, to build; because sons and daughters build up a household, or constitute a family, as much and as really as stones and timbers constitute a building. Now it is true that, without the good hand of God be upon us, we cannot prosperously build a place of worship for His name. Unless we have His blessing, a dwelling-house cannot be comfortably erected: and if His blessing be not on our children, the house (the family) may be built up; but instead of its being the house of God, it will be the synagogue of Satan. All marriages that are not under God's blessing, will be a private and public curse. This we see every day.

2 It is vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrows: for so he giveth his beloved sleep.

3 Lo, children are a heritage of the LORD: and the fruit of the womb is his reward.

4 As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man; so are children of the youth.

Except the LORD keep the city] When the returned Jews began to restore the walls of Jerusalem, and rebuild the city; Sanballat, Tobiah, and others, formed plots to prevent it. Nehemiah, being informed of this, set up proper watches and guards. The enemy, finding this, gathered themselves together; and determined to fall upon them at once, and cut them all off. Nehemiah having gained intelligence of this also, armed his people, and placed them behind the wall. Sanballat and his company, finding that the Jews were prepared for resistance, abandoned their project; and Nehemiah, to prevent surprise of this kind, kept one half the people always under arms, while the other half was employed in the work. To this the Psalmist alludes; and in effect says, Though you should watch constantly, guard every place, and keep on your armour, ready to repel every attack; yet remember the success of all depends upon the presence and blessing of God. While, therefore, ye are not slothful in business, be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord: for there is no success, either in spiritual or secular undertakings, but in consequence of the benediction of the Almighty.

Verse 2. It is vain for you to rise up early] There seems to be here an allusion to the daily and nightly watches which Nehemiah instituted. The people were worn out with constant labour and watching: he, therefore, divided them in such a manner, that they who had worked in the day should rest by night; and that they who worked by night should rest in the day; and thus His beloved, a title of the Jews, the beloved of God, got sleep, due refreshment and rest. As for Nehemiah and his servants, they never put off their clothes day or night, but for washing.

Verse 3. Lo, children are a heritage of the LORD] That is, to many God gives children in place of temporal good. To many others He gives houses, lands, and thousands of gold and silver; and with them the womb that beareth not; and these are their inheritance. The poor man has from God a number of children, without lands or money; these are his inheritance: and God shews Himself their Father, feeding and supporting them by a chain of miraculous providences. Where is the poor man who would give up his six children, with the prospect of having more, for the thousands or millions of him who is the centre of his own existence; and has neither root nor branch, but his forlorn solitary self, upon the face of the earth? Let the fruitful family, however poor, lay this to heart: Children are a heritage of the LORD; and the fruit of the womb is his reward. And He who gave them will feed them; for it is a fact, and the maxim formed on it has never failed, Wheresoever God sends mouths he sends meat. "Murmur not," said an Arab to his friend, "because thy family is large; know that it is for their sakes that God feeds thee."

Verse 4. As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man] Each child will, in process of time, be a defence and support to the family, as arrows in the quiver of a skilful and strong archer:—the more he has, the more enemies he may slay, and consequently the more redoubted shall he be. Children of the youth.] The children of young people are always more strong and vigorous, more healthy, and generally longer lived, than those of elderly, or comparatively elderly persons. Youth is the time for marriage;

5 Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them: they shall not be ashamed, but they shall speak with the enemies in the gate.

PSALM CXXVIII.

I do not mean infancy or a comparative childhood, in which several fools join in marriage, who are scarcely fit to leave the nursery or school. Such couples generally disagree: they cannot bear the boyish and girlish petulancies and caprices of each other; their own growth is hindered, and their offspring (if any) have never a much better than embryo existence. On the other hand, age produces only a dwarfish or rickety offspring, that seldom live to procreate; and, when they do, it is only to perpetuate deformity and disease. It would be easy to assign reasons for all this: but the interpretation of Scripture will seldom admit of physiological details. It is enough that God has said, Children of the youth are strong and active, like arrows in the hands of the mighty.

Verse 5. Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them. This is generally supposed to mean, his house full of children, as his quiver is full of arrows: but I submit, whether it be not more congenial to the metaphors in the text to consider it as applying to the wife,—“Happy is the man who has a breeding or fruitful wife;” this is the gravidæ sagittis pharetra, “the quiver pregnant with arrows.” But it may be thought the metaphor is not natural. I think otherwise: and I know it to be in the Jewish style; and the style of the times of the Captivity, when this Psalm was written; and we find the pudendum mulieris, or human matrix, thus denominated, Ecclus. xxvi. 12, καταρτιζει παντος κατασπαλον καθορται, και εναντι βελων, ανοιζει φαρετραν. The reader may consult the place in the Apocrypha, where he will find the verse well enough translated.

With his enemies in the gate.] “When he shall contend with his adversaries in the gate of the house of judgment.”—Targ. The reference is either to courts of justice, which were held at the gates of cities; or to robbers, who endeavour to force their way into a house, to spoil the inhabitants of their goods. In the first case, a man falsely accused, who has a numerous family, has so many witnesses in his behalf as he has children. And in the second case, he is not afraid of marauders, because his house is well defended by his active and vigorous sons. It is, I believe, to this last that the Psalmist refers.

This Psalm may be entitled, “The Soliloquy of the Happy Householder:—The poor man, with a large loving family; and in annual expectation of an increase, because his wife, under the Divine blessing, is fruitful.” All are blessed of the Lord; and His hand is invariably upon them for good.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-SEVENTH PSALM.

The Jews were at this time very busy in rebuilding their Temple, houses, and walls of their city; and the prophet teaches them that, without the assistance of God, nothing will be blessed or preserved, and that their children are His especial blessings also. This the prophet shews by these words repeated, nisi, nisi, frustra, frustra; and proves it by an induction.

1. In civil affairs, whether in house or city.

1. Except the Lord build the house, &c. God must be the chief Builder in the family; His blessing and help must be prayed for for the nourishment of wife, children, servants, cattle, &c.

2. Except the Lord keep the city, &c. And so it is in kingdoms and commonwealths. The Jews had now a trowel in one hand, and a sword in the other, for fear of their enemies: but the prophet tells them that the Lord must be their Protector and Keeper, else their watch, magistrates, judges, &c. would be of little value.

And this he illustrates by an elegant hypothesis of an industrious man who strives to be rich, but looks not to God.

1. He riseth early. He is up with the rising of the sun.

2. He sits up late. Takes little rest.

3. He eats the bread of sorrow. Defrauds himself of necessary food. His mind is full of anxiety and fear: but all this without God's blessing is vain. It is vain for you to rise up early, &c. On the contrary, he who loves and fears God has God's blessing. For so he gives his beloved sleep, in the place of fear and distraction.

11. The prophet then sets down the blessing a man possesses in his children. In reference to their birth,—

1. Lo, children are an heritage, &c. They are alone the Lord's gift.

2. As regarding their education: being brought up in the fear of the Lord, they become generous spirits. As arrows are in the hand of a mighty man, &c. enabled to do great actions, and to defend themselves and others.

And the benefit will rebound to the father in his old age.

1. Happy is the man that hath, &c. Of such good children.

2. He shall not be ashamed, &c. He shall be able to defend himself, and keep out all injuries, being fortified by his children. And if it so happen that he has a cause pending in the gate, to be tried before the judges, he shall have the patronage of his children, and not suffer in his plea for want of advocates: his sons shall stand up in a just cause for him.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXVIII.

This Psalm has no title, either in the Hebrew or any of the Versions; though the Syriac supposes it to have been spoken of Zerubbabel, prince of Judah, who was earnestly engaged in building the Temple of the Lord. It seems to be a continuation of the preceding Psalm, or rather the second part of it. The man who is stated to have a numerous offspring, in the preceding Psalm, is here represented as sitting at table with his large family. A person in the mean while coming in, sees his happy state, speaks of his comforts, and predicts to him and his, all possible future good. And why? Because the man and his family fear God, and walk in his ways.

Verse 2. Thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands. Thou shalt not be exempted from labour. Thou shalt work: but God will bless and prosper that work, and thou and thy family shall eat of it. Ye shall all live on the produce of your own labour, and the hand of violence shall not be permitted to deprive you of it. Thus

Happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.]

Thou shalt have prosperity.

Verse 3. Thy wife shall be as a fruitful vine. Thy children in every corner and apartment of thy house, shall be the evidences of the fruitfulness of thy wife, as bunches of grapes, on every bough of the vine are the proofs of its being in a healthy thriving state. Being about the house sides or apartments, is spoken of the wife, not the vine; being around the table is spoken of the children, not of the olive-plants. It does not appear that there were any vines planted against the walls of the houses in Jerusalem; nor any olive trees in pots or tubs in the inside of their houses; as may be found in different parts of Europe.

Verse 4. Thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the LORD. A great price for a small consideration. Fear God and thou shalt have as much domestic good as may be useful to thee.

Verse 5. The LORD shall bless thee out of Zion. In all thy approaches to Him in His house, by prayer, by sacrifice, and by offering, thou shalt have His especial blessing. Thou shalt thrive every where, and in all things.

And thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem. Thou shalt see the cause of God flourish in thy lifetime, and His church in great prosperity.

Verse 6. Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children. Thou shalt not die till thou have seen thy family all settled in the world, and those of them who may be married blessed with children.

And peace upon Israel. This is the same conclusion as in Psalm cxv.; and should be translated, Peace be upon Israel! May God favour His own cause, and bless all His people.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-EIGHTH PSALM.

In this Psalm the prophet persuades men to fear God upon the several rewards that attend upon piety.

PSALM CXXIX.

The Jews give an account of the afflictions which they have passed through, 1.—3. And thank God for their deliverance, 4. The judgments that shall fall on the workers of iniquity, 5.—8.

A Song of Degrees.

MANY a time have they afflicted me from my youth, may Israel now say:

2 Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth: yet they have not prevailed against me.

3 The plowers plowed upon my back: they made long their furrows.

a Or, Mack—b See Exod. 23. 3. Hos. 2. 15. & 11. 1.

It is divided into three parts.

I. He describes the pious man, and pronounces him blessed, ver. 1.

II. He proposes the particulars of his blessing, ver. 2—6.

III. He gives his acclamation to it, ver. 4.

I. He describes the man who is to expect the blessing. Two qualities he must have:—

1. He must fear the Lord. Fear, and not decline from Him.

2. He must walk in his ways. This is the true character of his fear.

3. This man shall be blessed. Whether rich or poor, high or low; all such shall experience the blessing of the Lord.

II. And the blessedness consists in three particulars.

1. He shall enjoy those goods he has honestly obtained with his hands. For thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands: his happiness consists not in having much, but in enjoying what he has.

2. Happy shalt thou be, &c. Able to help others, and leave to thy children.

3. Happy he shall be in his marriage, if his choice be prudent, and in the Lord. 1. His wife shall be, &c. Fœtiferâ, non sterilitis. 2. Upon the walls of thy house. Staying at home, and caring for the things of the house, while her husband is taking care abroad.

4. Happy in his children. 1. Thy children like olive plants. Fresh, green, spreading, fruitful, and pledges of peace: not like sharp and pricking thorns. 2. Round about thy table. Sit, eat, and converse with thee.

III. The acclamation follows these temporal blessings. Thus shall the man be blessed, &c. In his goods, wife, and children.

But there is a blessing far beyond these, the sum of which is—

1. God's blessing. The Lord shall bless thee, &c. By a federal, a church blessing.

2. Thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem, &c. The prosperity of the church.

3. Yea, thou shalt see thy children's children.

Et nates natorum, et post natorum ab illis.

4. And peace upon Israel. A flourishing commonwealth and kingdom: for by peace is understood all prosperity.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXIX.

This Psalm was written after the Captivity; and contains a reference to the many tribulations which the Jews passed through from their youth, i. e. the earliest part of their history, their bondage in Egypt. It has no title in any of the Versions, nor in the Hebrew Text, but the general one of a Psalm of Degrees. The author is uncertain.

Verse 1. Many a time have they afflicted me [The Israelites had been in general in affliction or captivity from the earliest part of their history, here called their youth. So Hos. ii. 15, "She shall sing as in the days of her youth, when she came up out of the land of Egypt." See Jer. ii. 2, and Ezek. xvi. 4, &c.]

Verse 2. Yet they have not prevailed [They endeavoured to annihilate us as a people: but God still preserves us as His own nation.]

Verse 3. The plowers plowed upon my back [It is possible this mode of expression may signify that the people, during their captivity, were cruelly used by scourging, &c.; or it may be a sort of proverbial mode of expression for the most cruel usage. There really appears here to be a reference to a yoke, as if they had actually been yoked to the plough, or to some kind of carriages, and been obliged to draw like beasts of burden. In this way St. Jerom understood the passage; and this has the more likelihood, as in the next verse God is represented as cutting them off from these draughts.]

Verse 4. The Lord—hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked. [The words have been applied to the sufferings of Christ: but I know not on what authority. No such 4 The Lord is righteous: he hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked.

scourging could take place in His case, as would justify the expression,

"The plowers made long furrows there Till all His body was one wound!"

It is not likely that He received more than thirty-nine stripes.

Verse 5. Let them all be confounded [They shall be confounded. They who hate Zion, the church of God, hate God Himself: and all such must be dealt with as enemies, and be utterly confounded.]

Verse 6. As the grass upon the house-tops [As in the East the roofs of the houses were flat, seeds of various kinds falling upon them would naturally vegetate, though in an imperfect way; and, because of the want of proper nourishment, it would necessarily dry, and wither away. If grass, the mower cannot make hay of it; if corn, the reaper cannot make a sheaf of it. Let the Babylonians be like such herbage, good for nothing; and come to nothing.]

Withereth afore it groweth up. [Before psw shalak, it is unseathed; i. e. before it ears, or comes to seed.]

Verse 8. Neither do they which go by say [There is a reference here to the salutations which were given and returned by the reapers in the time of the harvest. We find that it was customary, when the master came to them in the field, to say unto the reapers, The Lord be with you! And for them to answer, The Lord bless thee! Ruth ii. 4. Let their land become desolate, so that no harvest shall ever appear more in it. No interchange of benedictions between owners and reapers. This has literally taken place. Babylon is utterly destroyed, no harvests grow near the place where it stood.]

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-NINTH PSALM.

The intent of the prophet in composing this Psalm is to comfort the church in affliction, and to stir her up to glorify God for His providence over her, always for her good, and bringing her enemies to confusion, and a sudden ruin.

It is divided into three parts:—

I. The indefatigable malice of the enemies of the church, ver. 1, 3.

II. That their malice is vain. God saves them, ver. 2, 4.

III. God puts into the mouth of His people what they may say to their enemies, even when their malice is at the highest.

1. Many a time have they afflicted me, &c. In which observe,—

1. That afflictions do attend those who will live righteously in Christ Jesus.

2. These afflictions are many. Many a time, &c.

3. That they begin with the church. From my youth. Prophets, martyrs, &c.

4. This affliction was a heavy affliction. The plowers plowed upon my back, &c. They dealt unmercifully with me, as a husbandman does with his ground.

II. But all their malice is to no purpose.

1. Yet they have not prevailed against me. To extinguish the church.

2. The reason is, the Lord is righteous. And, therefore, He protects all those who are under His tuition, and punishes their adversaries.

3. The Lord is righteous, &c. Cut asunder the ropes and chains with which they made their furrows. He hath delivered Israel, &c.

III. In the following verses to the end, the prophet, by way of prediction, declares the vengeance God would bring upon His enemies, which have three degrees:—

1. Let them all be confounded, &c. Fail in their hopes against us.

2. Let them be as the grass, &c. That they quickly perish: grass on the house-tops is good for nothing. Which withereth afore it groweth up, &c. Never is mowed, or raked together.

3. Neither do they which go by say, The blessing of the Lord, &c. No man says so much as God speed him, as is usual to say to workmen in harvest: but even this the enemies of the church, and of God's work, say not, for they wish it not.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXX.

This Psalm has no title or author's name, either in the Hebrew, or in any of the Versions; though the Syriac says it was spoken of Nehemiah, the priest. It was most probably composed during the Captivity; and contains the complaint of the afflicted Jews, with their hopes of the remission of those sins which were the cause of their sufferings, and their restoration from captivity to their own land. This is one of those called Penitential Psalms.

Verse 1. Out of the depths] The captives in Babylon represent their condition like those who are in a prison, an abyss or deep ditch, ready to be swallowed up.

Verse 2. LORD, hear my voice] They could have no helper but God, and to Him they earnestly seek for relief.

Verse 3. If thou—shouldst mark iniquities] If Thou shouldst set down every deviation in thought, word, and deed, from Thy holy law; and if Thou shouldst call us into judgment for all our infuldities, both of heart and life: O Lord, who could stand? Who could stand such a trial, and who could stand acquitted in the judgment? This is a most solemn saying; and if we had not the doctrine that is in the next verse,—who could be saved?

Verse 4. But there is forgiveness with thee] Thou canst forgive; mercy belongs to Thee, as well as judgment. The doctrine here is the doctrine of St. John. "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and He is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world."—"Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth: for the Lord hath spoken!" Jesus has died for our sins; therefore, God can be just, and yet the Justifier of him who believeth in Jesus.

Verse 5. I wait for the LORD] The word מָנָה kavah, which we translate to wait, properly signifies the extension of a cord from one point to another. This is a fine metaphor: God is one point, the human heart is the other; and the extended cord between both is the earnest believing desire of the soul. This desire, strongly extended from the heart to God, in every mean of grace, and when there is none, is the active energetic waiting which God requires, and which will be successful.

Verse 6. More than they that watch for the morning] I believe the original should be read differently from what it is here. The Chaldee has, "More than they who observe the morning watches, that they may offer the morning oblation." This gives a good sense; and is, perhaps, the true meaning. Most of the Versions have, From the morning to the night watches. Or, the passage may be rendered, My soul waiteth for the Lord from the morning watches to the morning watches. That is, I wait both day and night.

Verse 7. Let Israel hope in the LORD] This, to hope for salvation, is their duty, and their interest. But what reason is there for this hope? A twofold reason:

1. With the LORD there is mercy] חַסֵּד ha-chesed, THAT mercy, the fund, the essence of mercy.

2. And with him is plenteous redemption.] וְרַבּוּת ve-ha-rebbah immo paduth; and that abundant redemption, that to which there is none like,—the Fountain of redemption, the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. The article הַ ha, both in וְרַבּוּת ve-ha-rebbah, and חַסֵּד ha-chesed, is very emphatic.

Verse 8. He shall redeem Israel] Και αὐτος ἄρπασεν, He will make a ransom for Israel. He will provide a great price for Israel, and by it will take away all his iniquities. I would not restrict this to Israel in Babylon. Every believer may take it to himself. God perfectly justifies, and perfectly sanctifies, all that come unto Him through the Son of His love.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND THIRTIETH PSALM. In this Psalm the Spirit of God proposes to us the case

6 My soul waiteth for the LORD more than they that watch for the morning: I say, more than they that watch for the morning.

7 Let Israel hope in the LORD: for with the LORD there is mercy, and with him is plenteous redemption.

8 And he shall redeem Israel from all his iniquities.

PSALM CXXXI.

The Psalmist professes his humility, and the peaceableness of his disposition and conduct, 1, 2. Exhorts Israel to hope in God, 3.

A Song of Degrees of David.

LORD, my heart is not haughty, nor mine eyes lofty: neither do I exercise myself in great matters, or in things too high for me.

g Ps. 63:6 & 119:167-b Or, which watch unto the morning.—1 Ps. 131:1. h Ps. 98:5, 15. Im. 65:7.—1 Ps. 103:3, 4. Matt. 1:21.—m Rom. 12:15.—n Heb. walk.—o Heb. wonderful, Job 42:3. Ps. 139:6.

of a person oppressed with the wrath of God against sin, yet flying to Him for comfort, remission, and purification.

I. Acknowledging his miserable condition, he prays to be heard, ver. 12.

II. He desires remission of sin, ver. 3, 4.

III. He expresses his hope and confidence, ver. 5, 6.

IV. He exhorts God's people to trust in Him, ver. 7, 8.

I. The Psalmist likens himself to a man in the bottom of a pit.

1. Out of the depths have I cried, &c. A true penitent cries out of the depths of his misery, and from the depth of a heart sensible of it.

2. LORD, hear my voice. Although I be so low, Thou canst hear me.

3. Let thine ears be attentive, &c. Or I cry in vain.

II. But there was a reason why God should not hear. He was a grievous sinner: but all men are the same; therefore,

1. If thou, LORD, shouldst mark iniquity. And I have nothing of my own but it to bring before Thee, yet execute not Thy just anger on account of my transgressions; for,

2. There is mercy with thee, &c. True repentance requires two things,—the recognition of our own misery, and the persuasion of God's mercy. Both are needful; for, if we know not the former, we shall not seek mercy; and if we despair of mercy, we shall never find it.

3. That thou mayest be feared. Not with a servile but a filial fear, which involves prayer, faith, hope, love, adoration, giving of thanks, &c. This fear leads to God's throne as a merciful and pardoning God.

III. The method of God's servants in their addresses to heaven is, that they believe, hope, pray, and expect. Thus did the Psalmist.

1. I expect the LORD. In faith.

2. My soul doth wait. His expectation was active and real, and proceeded from fervency of heart.

3. His expectation was not presumptive, but grounded upon God's word and promise. In his word is my hope.

4. My soul waiteth for the LORD. Which he illustrates by the similitude of a watchman, who longs for the morning.

5. I wait for the LORD more than they, &c. It was now night with him; darkness and misery were upon his soul: the morning he expected was the remission of his sins, which must come from God's mercy. For this he eagerly waited.

IV. He proposes his own example to God's people:—

1. Let Israel hope in the LORD—like me—and cry from the depths.

2. For with the LORD there is mercy. This is the reason and encouragement for the hope. Mercy flows from Him.

3. And with him is redemption. Which we need, being all sold under sin; and this redemption was purchased for us by the death of his Son.

4. And this redemption is plenteous; for by it He has redeemed the whole world, 1 John 1:2.

5. And this is to take effect upon Israel. For he shall redeem Israel, &c. It is not, as the Jews expected, a temporal redemption, but a spiritual, as the angel told Joseph; His name shall be Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXXI.

Some think that David composed this Psalm as a vindication of himself, when accused by Saul's courtiers that he affected the crown, and was laying schemes and plots to possess himself of it. Others think the Psalm was made during the Captivity, and that it contains a fair account of the manner in which the captives behaved themselves, under the domination of their oppressors.

Verse 1. LORD, my heart is not haughty] The principle of pride has no place in my heart: and, consequently, the high, lofty, and supercilious look does not appear in my 3 Let Israel hope in the Lord ^a from henceforth and for ever.

PSALM CXXXII.

The Psalmist prays that God would remember His promises to David, 1. His purpose to bring the ark into a place of rest, 2-5. Where it was found, and the prayer in removing it, 6-9. The promises made to David and his posterity, 10-12. God's choice of Zion for a habitation, and His promises to the people, 13-17. All their enemies shall be confounded, 18.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXXII.

Some attribute this Psalm to David, but without sufficient ground; others to Solomon, with more likelihood; and others to some inspired author at the conclusion of the Captivity; which is, perhaps, the most probable. It refers to the building of the second Temple, and placing the ark of the covenant in it.

Verse 1. LORD, remember David] Consider the promises Thou hast made to this Thy eminent servant, that had respect not only to him and to his family, but to all the Israelitish people.

Verse 2. How he swore unto the LORD] It is only in this place that we are informed of David's vow to the Lord, relative to the building of the Temple. But we find he had fully purposed the thing.

Verse 3. Surdy I will not come] This must refer to the situation of the Temple; or, as we would express it, he would not pass another day till he had found out the ground on which to build the Temple, and projected the plan, and devised ways and means to execute it. And we find that he would have acted in all things according to his oath and vow, had God permitted him. But even when the Lord had told him that Solomon, not he, should build the house, he still continued to shew his good will by collecting treasure and materials for the building, all the rest of his life.

Verse 5. The mighty God of Jacob] אביר עמב"י abir yacob, the Mighty One of Jacob. We have this epithet of God for the first time, Gen. xlix. 24. Hence, perhaps, the abirim of the heathen, the stout ones, the strong beings.

Verse 6. Lo, we heard of it at Ephrathah] This may be considered as a continuation of David's vow: as if he had said—As I had determined to build a Temple for the ark, and heard that it was at Ephrathah, I went and found it in the fields of Jaar, (ע"י not the wood, but Kirjath Jaar, or Jearim, where the ark was then lodged;) and having found it, he entered the tabernacle, ver. 7; and having adored that God whose presence was in it, he invited Him to arise and come to the place which he had prepared for Him.

Verse 8. Arise, O LORD, into thy rest; thou and the ark of thy strength.] Using the same expressions which Solomon used when he dedicated the Temple, 2 Chron. vii. 41, 42. There are several difficulties in these passages. Ephrathah may mean the tribe of Ephraim; and then we may understand the place thus,—“I have learned that the ark had been in the tribe of Ephraim, and I have seen it at Kirjath-Jearim, or Field of the Woods”; but this is not a proper place for it, for the Lord hath chosen Jerusalem.” It is true that the ark did remain in that tribe from the days of Joshua to Samuel, during three hundred and twenty-eight years; and thence it was brought to Kirjath-Jearim, where it continued seventy years, till the commencement of the reign of David over all Israel.

But if we take verses 6, 7, and 8, not as the continuation of David's vow, but as the words of the captives in Babylon, the explanation will be more plain and easy. “We have heard, O Lord, from our fathers, that Thy tabernacle was formerly for a long time at Shiloh, in the tribe of Ephraim. And our history informs us that it has been also at Kirjath-Jearim, the fields of the wood; and afterwards it was brought to Jerusalem, and there established: but Jerusalem is now ruined, the Temple destroyed, and Thy people in captivity. Arise, O Lord, and re-establish Thy dwelling-place in Thy holy city!” See Calmat and others on this place.

Verse 9. Let thy priests be clothed with righteousness] Let them be as remarkable for inward holiness, as they are for the splendour of their holy vestments.

Verse 10. The face of thine anointed.] David. Remember Thy promises to him, that we may be restored to Thee and to Thy worship. Digitized by Google eyes. I neither look up (with desire to obtain) to the state of others; nor look down with contempt on the meanness or poverty of them below me. And the whole of my conduct proves this: for I have not exercised myself, walked in high matters, nor associated myself with the higher ranks of the community; nor in great matters נפלהאח, niphleiaoth, wonderful or sublime things; too high for me, כחסי מים, chasi mim-meni, alien from me, and that do not belong to a person in my sphere and situation in life.

Verse 2. I have behaved and quieted myself as a child] On the contrary, I have been under the rod of others, and when chastised have not complained; and my silence under my affliction was the fullest proof that I neither murmured nor repined, but received all as coming from the hands of a just God.

My soul is even as a weaned child.] I felt I must forego many conveniences and comforts which I once enjoyed; and these I gave up without repining or demur.

Verse 3. Let Israel hope in the LORD] Act all as I have done: trust in Him who is the God of justice and compassion; and, after you have suffered awhile, He will make bare His arm and deliver you. Short as it is, this is a most instructive Psalm: he who acts as the Psalmist did is never likely to come to mischief, or do any to others.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIRST PSALM.

I. The Psalmist having been accused of proud and haughty conduct, protests his innocence, states his humble thoughts of himself, and the general meekness of his deportment.

II. That his confidence was in God; in Him he trusted, and therefore was far from ambition.

III. And by his own example calls on Israel to trust in God as he did.

I. He protests his humility.

1. There was no pride in his heart: and he calls God to witness it. Lord, my heart is not haughty.
2. There was no arrogance in his carriage. Nor mine eyes lofty.
3. Nor in his undertakings. Neither do I exercise myself in great matters. He kept himself within his own bounds and vocation, and meddled not with state affairs.

II. What preserved him from pride was humility. He brought down his desires, and wants, and views, to his circumstances.

1. Surely I have behaved and quieted myself. Have I not given every evidence of my mild and peaceable behaviour? and I certainly never permitted a high thought to rise within me.

2. I acted as the child weaned from his mother. When once deprived of my comforts, and brought into captivity, I submitted to the will of God, and brought down my mind to my circumstances.

III. He proposes his own example of humility and peaceableness for all Israel to follow.

1. Let Israel hope] Never despair of God's mercy, nor of His gracious providence. The storm will be succeeded by fair and fine weather.

2. Let Israel hope in the Lord. Never content yourselves with merely supposing that in the course of things these afflictions will wear out. No; look to God, and depend on Him, that He may bring them to a happy conclusion.

Remember that he is Jehovah.

1. Wise to plan.
2. Good to purpose.
3. Strong to execute, and will withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly.
4. Trust from henceforth. If you have not begun before, begin now.

5. And do not be weary;—trust for ever. Your case can never be out of the reach of God's power and mercy.

11 * The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; ° Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne.

12 If thy children will keep my covenant and my testimony that I shall teach them, their children shall also sit upon thy throne for evermore.

13 ° For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation.

14 * This is my rest for ever: here will I dwell; for I have desired it.

15 * I will abundantly bless her provision: I will satisfy her poor with bread.

1. Ps. 83. 4, 23. &c. & 110. 4.—2 Sam. 7. 12. 1 Kings & 25. 2 Chron. 6. 16. Luke 1. 68. Acts 2. 30.—p. Heb. thy belly.—q. Ps. 43. 1, 2.—r. Ps. 65. 16.—s. Ps. 117. 14.—t. Or, surely.

Verse 11. The Lord hath sworn] As David swore to the Lord, so the Lord swears to David, that He will establish his throne, and place his posterity on it: and that He had respect to David's Antitype, we learn from St. Peter, Acts ii. 20, where see the Note. This verse and the following refer to the spiritual David, and the Christian church.

Verse 12. If thy children will keep my covenant] This was conditional with respect to the posterity of David. They have been driven from the throne, because they did not keep the Lord's covenant: but the true David is on the throne, and His posterity forms the genuine Israelites.

Verse 13. The Lord hath chosen Zion] Therefore neither Shiloh nor Kirjath-Jearim is the place of his rest.

Verse 14. This is my rest for ever] Here the Christian church is most indubitably meant. This is God's place for ever. After this there never will be another dispensation: Christianity closes and completes all communications from heaven to earth. God has nothing greater to give to mankind on this side heaven; nor does man need any thing better, nor is his nature capable of any thing more excellent.

Verse 15. I will abundantly bless her provision] There shall be an abundant provision of salvation made for mankind in the Christian church. Our Lord's multiplication of the loaves was a type and proof of it.

Verse 16. I will also clothe her priests] All Christian ministers, with salvation; this shall appear in all their conduct. Salvation, redemption from all sin through the blood of the Lamb, shall be their great and universal message.

Verse 17. There will I make the horn of David to bud] There, in the Christian church, the power and authority of the spiritual David shall appear.

I have ordained a lamp] I have taken care to secure a posterity, to which the promises shall be expressly fulfilled.

Verse 18. His enemies will I clothe with shame] Every opponent to the Christian cause shall be confounded.

But upon himself (Christ the Saviour) shall his crown flourish.] There shall be no end of the government of His kingdom. From verse 11 to the end, the spiritual David and His posterity are the subjects of whom the Psalm treats.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SECOND PSALM.

This Psalm is divided into three parts:—

I. A petition, before which is David's care and vow to settle the ark, and with what reverence they would settle it in the Temple; and he sets down the solemn prayer then used, ver. 1—11.

II. An explication of the promises made unto David for the continuance of his kingdom in his posterity, ver. 11, 12, and God's love to his church, ver. 13.

III. A prophecy, spoken in the Person of God, for the stability of Christ's church, and the blessings upon the people, the priests, and the house of David, from ver. 14, to the end.

I. In all prayer a man must reflect upon God's promise; otherwise he cannot pray in faith.

1. Lord, remember David. Thy promises made to him. First he prays for the king; then for the ecclesiastics, ver. 8, 9; then for the people, ver. 8.

2. And all his afflictions. Many he had before he was king; and one of the greatest was the settling of the ark.

Now this his ardent and sincere desire appears by his oath. And now,—

1. How he swore unto the Lord, &c.
2. The substance of which was, Surely I will not come, &c.

Now this is hyperbolic; for we must not conceive that he went not into his house or bed till he found out a place to build God's house.

1. I swear that I will not enter, &c. So as to forget to build God's house.

2. I will not climb up into my bed, &c. Or let any thing make me forget the work.

16 * I will also clothe her priests with salvation; ° and her saints shall shout aloud for joy.

17 * There will I make the horn of David to bud: ° I have ordained a ° lamp for mine anointed.

18 His enemies will I ° clothe with shame: but upon himself shall his crown flourish.

PSALM CXXXIII.

The comfort and benefit of the communion of saints, 1—3.

A Song of Degrees of David.

BEHOLD, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!

Part I. Regis Perseorum, cir. ann. sextuag.

2 Chron. 6. 41. Ver. 9. Ps. 148. 3.—v. 11. 11. 12.—w. Each. 29. 21. Luke 1. 68. r. See 1 Kings 11. 36. & 13. 2. 2 Chron. 31. 7.—y. Or, candle.—z. Ps. 33. 26. & 108. 29. a Gen. 13. 8. Heb. 13. 1.—q. Heb. even together.

3. I will not give sleep, &c. But make provision for building the Temple.

And here the prophet inserts two verses by way of gratitude.

First, he exults for the news of the ark. Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah, &c.

By Ephratah some understand the land of Ephraim, in which the ark remained at Shiloh. Being afterwards sent home, it was found in the field of Joshua; thence conveyed to the house of Aminadab, who dwelt in Kirjath-Jearim, that signifies a woody city. Hence, David might well say, And found it in the fields of the woods, &c.

And the place for the ark being found, he calls on Israel saying:—

1. We will go into his tabernacles. Now the ark is rested in mount Zion.

2. And we will worship, &c. Not make rash approaches to the ark; but come with reverence, and bow in His presence.

The ark being brought into the Temple, he uses this solemn form,—

1. Arise, O Lord, &c. He prays and invites Him to dwell in His temple.

2. Into thy rest. To pass no more from place to place.

3. Thou, and the ark of thy strength. Show Thy power and strength, as Thou didst at Jordan, &c.

Before the ark in the Temple he prays,—

1. Let thy priests be clothed, &c. Inwardly, in heart and soul.

2. Let thy saints shout, &c. With a cheerful voice, for the ark rests.

3. For thy servant David's sake, &c. 1. David is not here to be taken absolutely for his person only, as having the covenants and promise made to him, but for the promise sake. 2. Turn not away, &c. Suffer me not to depart from Thy presence unheard.

II. The prophet now proceeds to count up the promises made to David, which God confirmed by oath, in which we are to observe,—1. The manner of the promise, The Lord hath sworn in truth, &c. It was merciful to promise: but more so to bind himself by oath. 2. The matter of his oath expressed in the 11th and to the 14th verse.

1. For the seed of David, as respects Christ, is categorical and absolute. Of the fruit of thy body, &c. Which word St. Peter refers to Christ, Acts ii. 30. According to the flesh He was David's seed; for by the mother's side Christ was to be David's seed, not by the father's.

2. For the seed of David, as it relates to his posterity, the oath is hypothetical and conditional. If thy children will keep, &c.

As the external kingdom was by this oath annexed to one family, so the external worship was assigned by it to one place.

1. For the Lord hath chosen Zion, &c.

2. This is my rest for ever. Zion was the seat of the sanctuary till the coming of the Messiah. But Zion was but a type of Christ's church, which He hath chosen to be His rest for ever.

III. The prophet represents God as promising good things to His church.

1. He promises such abundance of temporal things that the poor shall not want. I will abundantly bless her provision, &c.

2. He promises that her priests shall be clothed with salvation, &c.

3. And, thirdly, He promises, There will I make the horn of David to flourish, &c. That is, the kingdom of the Messiah.

4. The fourth benefit God promises, is the confusion of their enemies, and the eternal authority in this kingdom. His enemies will I clothe with shame, but upon himself shall his crown flourish.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXXIII.

There are different opinions concerning this Psalm: it is the most probable is, that it represents the priests and Levites

III. The fourth argument the prophet uses to persuade men to praise God is from the vengeance He executes on the enemies of His people.

1. Upon the Egyptians, Who smote the firstborn of Egypt, &c.

2. Who sent tokens and wonders, &c. And he smote great nations, &c.

IV. To the commemoration of the justice God exercised upon their enemies, the prophet exhorts them to extol God.

1. Thy name, O Lord, &c.

2. And thy memorial, &c.

And the reason is drawn from His mercy

1. For the Lord will judge his people. Judge their cause, and deliver them.

2. And he will repent himself, &c. If they repent, and turn to Him.

The prophet having proved that God is great in Himself, now proves that He is above all gods, which are but vanity.

1. From their composition. Silver and gold.

2. From their makers. The work of men's hands.

3. From their impotency. They have mouths, &c.

4. From the nature of their worshippers. They that make them, &c.

Lastly, he invites all true worshippers of God to praise Him, because they are lively images of the living God, from whom all their faculties have proceeded. To this he invites—

1. All Israel. Bless the Lord, O house of Israel.

2. The priests. Bless the Lord, O house of Aaron.

3. The Levites. Bless the Lord, O house of Levi.

4. Lastly, all the laity. Ye that fear the Lord, bless the Lord.

To which he adds his own note, concluding—

1. Blessed be the Lord out of Zion. Where He shews His presence by the ark.

2. Which dwelleth at Jerusalem. Who though in essence He is every where, yet He more especially manifests His presence in His church by His indwelling Spirit.

Therefore, let all people bless the Lord for His great mercy: but let the citizens of Zion and Jerusalem never cease to praise Him.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXXVI.

This Psalm is little else than a repetition of the preceding, with the burden, וְיִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה לַיהוָה לֵב לֵב le-dam chasdo, "because his mercy endureth for ever," at the end of every verse. See below. It seems to have been a responsive song: the first part of the verse sung by the Levites, the burden by the people. It has no title in the Hebrew, nor in any of the Versions. It was doubtless done after the Captivity. The Author is unknown.

Verse 1. O give thanks unto the Lord: for he is good]

This sentiment often occurs: the goodness of the Divine nature, both as a ground of confidence and of thanksgiving.

For his mercy endureth for ever.] These words, which are the burden of every verse, וְיִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה לַיהוָה לֵב לֵב le-dam chasdo, might be translated; For his tender mercy is to the coming age: meaning, probably, that peculiar display of His compassion, the redemption of the world by the Lord Jesus. These very words were prescribed by David as an acknowledgment, to be used continually in the Divine worship, see 1 Chron. xv. 41: also by Solomon, 2 Chron. vii. 3, 6, and observed by Jehoshaphat; 2 Chron. xx. 21; all acknowledging that however rich in mercy God was to them, the most extensive displays of His goodness were reserved for the age to come, see 1 Pet. i. 10-12. "Of which salvation the prophets have inquired, and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you,—unto whom it was revealed, that not unto themselves, but unto us, they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that preached the gospel unto you by the power of the Holy Ghost, sent down from heaven," &c.

Verse 2. The God of gods] וְיִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה לַיהוָה לֵב לֵב ladonai ha-adonim. An adonai signifies director, &c. it may apply here not to idols, for God is not their god; but to the priests and spiritual rulers; as Lord of lords may apply to kings and magistrates, &c. He is God and Ruler over all the rulers of the earth, whether in things sacred or civil.

Verse 4. Who alone doeth great wonders] MIRACLES. No power but that which is almighty can work miracles. וְיִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה לַיהוָה לֵב לֵב niphelath, the inversion, or suspension, or destruction, of the laws of nature.

Verse 5. By wisdom made the heavens] In the contrivance of the celestial bodies, in their relations, connections, influences on each other, revolutions, &c., the wisdom of God particularly appears.

Verse 6. Stretched out the earth above the waters] Or, upon the waters. This seems to refer to a central abyss of waters, the existence of which has not been yet discovered.

Verse 7. Great lights] See the Notes on the parallel passages in Genesis, &c.

Verse 10. Smote Egypt in their first-born] This was one of the heaviest of strokes: a great part of the rising generation was cut off; few but old persons and children left remaining.

Verse 13. Divided the Red sea into parts] Some of the Jews have imagined that God made twelve paths through the Red sea, that each tribe might have a distinct passage. Many of the Fathers were of the same opinion: but it is very unlikely.

Verse 16. Which led his people through the wilderness] It was an astonishing miracle of God to support so many hundreds of thousands of people in a wilderness totally deprived of all necessaries for the life of man, and that for the space of forty years.

26 O give thanks unto the God of heaven: for his mercy endureth for ever.

PSALM CXXXVII.

The desolate and afflicted state of the captives in Babylon, 1, 2. How they were imitated by their enemies, 3, 4. Their attachment to their country, 5, 6. Judgments denounced against their enemies, 7-9.

BY the rivers of Babylon, there we sat down, yea, we wept, when we remembered Zion.

a Heb. the words of a song.—b Heb. laid us on heaps.

Verse 23. Who remembered us in our low estate] He has done much for our forefathers; and he has done much for us in delivering us, when we had no helper, from our long captivity in Babylon.

Verse 25. Giveth food to all flesh] By whose universal providence every intellectual and animal being is supported and preserved. The appointing every living thing food, and that sort of food which is suited to its nature, (and the nature and habits of animals are endlessly diversified,) is an overwhelming proof of the wondrous providence, wisdom, and goodness of God.

The Vulgate, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon, add a twenty-seventh verse, by repeating here ver. 3, very unnecessarily.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SIXTH PSALM.

This Psalm has the same argument with the preceding. It is divided into three parts:—

I. A general exhortation to praise God for His goodness and majesty, ver. 1, 2, 3.

II. A declaration of that goodness and majesty in their effects, ver. 4-10.

III. A conclusion fit for the exordium, ver. 26.

1. Of His creation, ver. 4-10.

2. Of His providence in preserving the church, and punishing her enemies, verse 10-25.

3. That His providence extends to all His creatures, v. 25.

I. In the three first verses, the prophet invites us to praise God for His mercy and goodness. And in these three verses expositors find the Trinity:—

1. Jehovah. God the Father, who is the Fountain of being.

2. God the Son. Who is God of gods, and over all.

3. The Holy Ghost. Who is Lord of lords.

The Psalmist's reasons for calling upon us thus to praise Him are, for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.

The prophet now begins to praise God for His wonderful works, and which He alone was able to do.

1. Who hath done wonderful things. Such as the work of creation.

2. For his mercy endureth for ever. In sustaining and preserving all things.

To him give thanks for the wisdom manifested in the heavens; for, contemplate them as we may, they appear full of beauty, order, and splendour.

Praise Him for His formation of the earth, as the mansion of man.

Give thanks to him that stretched out, &c. Naturally this could not be, because the earth is heavier than water: but God furrowed the earth for the waters to flow into them, that man and beasts might live on the earth.

For his mercy endureth for ever. In this there was a threefold mercy.

1. In reference to the earth. To make it something of nothing.

2. As respects the water. To prepare it a settled place.

3. In regard of man. To whom He gave the earth uncovered from water, and yet plentifully supplied with rivers and fruits.

The third instance is the two great luminaries, and the stars, in the three following verses. These do astonishingly adorn the heaven, and profit the earth. The sun and moon illuminate the earth, and comfort us. Perhaps the prophet instances these, because they are alike blessings bestowed and shared by all the world.

II. From the wonderful works of the creation the prophet descends to those of His providence, in the preservation of the church; and instances it in the redemption of His people Israel from the Land of Egypt, &c. dwelling at large upon it, ver. 10-22.

In these verses the prophet records how God performed to Israel all the offices of a good Captain, Guide, Leader, and even Father; for He fed them with bread from heaven, gave them water out of the rock, caused that their clothes were not out, cured their sick, defended them from their enemies, &c.

All this God did for them before they entered Canaan. And then the prophet reminds them how they rebelled against God, and He humbled them by bringing the Philistines and the Babylonian kings against them, who conquered, and subjected them; but, when they cried to Him, He turned their captivity; for he remembered us when we were in our low estate, &c. And hath redeemed us from our enemies, &c.

Lastly, that His goodness is not only extended over His people, but His creatures; to all flesh, which word signifies every thing that hath life.

III. He concludes, as he began, O give thanks unto the God of heaven, &c. The prophet calls Him the God of heaven, because He alone made the heavens, and has His throne there, having the whole world under Him; and by His wisdom and providence He preserves, moderates, and governs, all things.

NOTES ON PSALM CXXXVII.

The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, say, ridiculously enough, a Psalm of David for Jeremiah.

Anachronisms with those who wrote the titles to the Psalms were matters of no importance. Jeremiah never was at Babylon; and, therefore, could have no part in a Psalm that was sung on the banks of its rivers by the Israelitish captives. Neither the Hebrew nor Chaldee have any title: the Syriac attributes it to David.

Some think it was sung when they returned from Babylon. Others, while they were there. It is a matter of little importance. It was evidently composed during, or at the close of the Captivity.

Verse 1. By the rivers of Babylon] These might have been the Tigris and Euphrates, or their branches; or streams that flowed into them. In their captivity and dispersion, it was customary for the Jews to hold their religious meetings on the banks of rivers. Mention is made of this, Acts xvi. 13, where we find the Jews of Philippi resorting to a river side, where prayer was wont to be made. And sometimes they built their synagogues here, when they were expelled from the cities.

Verse 2. We hanged our harps upon the willows] The אֲרָבִים arabim, or willows, were very plentiful in Babylon: The great quantity of them that were on the banks of the Euphrates has caused Isaiah, chap. xv. 7, to call it the brook, or river of willows. This is a most affecting picture. Perhaps resting themselves after toil, and wishing to spend their time religiously, they took their harps, and were about to sing one of the songs of Zion; but, reflecting on their own country, they became so filled with distress, that they unstrung their harps with one consent, and hung them on the willow bushes, and gave a general looe to their grief. Some of the Babylonians, who probably attended such meetings, for the sake of the music, being present at the time here specified, desired them to sing one of Zion's songs: this is affectingly told.

Verse 3. They that carried us away captive required of us a song] This was as unreasonable, as it was insulting. How could they who had reduced us to slavery, and dragged us in chains from our own beautiful land and privileges, expect us to sing a sacred ode to please them, who were enemies both to us, and to our God? And how could those who wasted us expect mirth from people in captivity, deprived of all their possessions, and in the most abject state of poverty and oppression.

Verse 4. How shall we sing the Lord's song] אֵיךְ אֶשְׁרֵי אֵיךְ ich! nashir; oh, we sing! Who does not hear the deep sigh in the strongly guttural sound of the original אֵיךְ ich! wrung as it were from the bottom of the heart? Can we, in this state of slavery,—we, exiles from our country— we, stripped of all our property,—we, reduced to contempt by our strong enemy,—we, deprived of our religious privileges,—we, insulted by our oppressors,—we, in the land of Heathens,—we sing, or be mirthful in these circumstances? No. God does not expect it; man should not desire it; and it is base in our enemies to require it.

Verse 5. If I forget thee, O Jerusalem] Such conduct would be, in effect, a renunciation of our land; a tacit acknowledgment that we were reconciled to our bondage; a concession that we were pleased with our captivity, and could profane holy ordinances by using them as means of sport or pastime to the Heathen. No. Jerusalem, we remember thee, and thy Divine ordinances; and especially 6 If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth: if I prefer not Jerusalem above my chief joy.

7 Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom in the day of Jerusalem; who said, ' Raise it, raise it, even to the foundation thereof.

thy King, and our God, whose indignation we must bear, because we have sinned against Him.

Let my right hand forget Let me forget the use of my right hand. Let me forget that which is dearest and most profitable to me; and let me lose my skill in the management of my harp, if I ever prostitute it to please the ungodly multitude, or the enemies of my Creator.

Verses 6. Let my tongue cleave Let me lose my voice, and all its powers of melody; my tongue, and all its faculty of speech, my ear, and its discernment of sounds; if I do not prefer my country, my people, and the ordinances of my God, beyond all these, and whatever may constitute the chiefest joy I can possess in aught else beside. This is truly patriotic; truly noble and dignified. Such sentiments can only be found in the hearts and mouths of those slaves whom the grace of God has made free.

Verses 7. Remember—the children of Edom It appears from Jer. xii. 6, xxv. 14, Lam. iv. 21, 22, Ezek. xxv. 12, Obadiah 11—14, that the Idumeans joined the army of Nebuchadnezzar against their brethren the Jews; and that they were main instruments in razing the walls of Jerusalem even to the ground.

Verses 8. O daughter of Babylon, who art to be destroyed Or, O thou daughter of Babylon the destroyer; or, who art to be ruined. In being reduced under the empire of the Persians, Babylon was already greatly humbled and brought low from what it was in the days of Nebuchadnezzar; but it was afterwards totally ruined, so that not a vestige of it remains. After its capture by Cyrus, A. M. 3465, it could never be considered a capital city: but appeared to follow the fortunes of its various conquerors till it was, as a city, finally destroyed.

Rewardeth thee as thou hast served us. This was Cyrus, who was chosen of God to do this work; and is therefore called happy, as being God's agent in its destruction. Greater desolations were afterwards brought upon it by Darius Hystaspes, who took this city after it had revolted; and slaughtered the inhabitants, men and women, in a barbarous manner. Herod. lib. iii.

Verses 9. Happy—that taketh and dasheth thy little ones That is, so oppressive hast thou been to all under thy domination, as to become universally hated and detested; so that those who may have the last hand in thy destruction, and the total extermination of thy inhabitants, shall be reputed happy, shall be celebrated and extolled as those who have rid the world of a curse so grievous. These prophetic declarations contain no excitement to any person or persons to commit acts of cruelty and barbarity: but are simply declarative of what would take place in the order of the retributive providence and justice of God; and the general opinion that should in consequence be expressed on the subject; therefore, praying for the destruction of our enemies, is totally out of the question. It should not be omitted, that the Chaldee considers this Psalm a dialogue, which it thus divides: The three first verses are supposed to have been spoken by the Psalmist, By the rivers, &c. The Levites answer from the porch of the Temple, in ver. 4, How shall we sing, &c. The voice of the Holy Spirit responds in ver. 5, 6, If I forget thee, &c. Michael, the prince of Jerusalem, answers in ver. 7, Remember, O Lord, &c. Gabriel, the prince of Zion, then addresses the destroyer of the Babylonian nation, in ver. 8—9, Happy shall he be that rewardeth thee, &c. To slay all when a city was sacked, both male and female, old and young, was a common practice in ancient times. Homer describes this in words almost similar to those of the Psalmist:—

Υιαι δ' ἄλλοιμους, ἐλευθερίας τε θυγατρὰς, καὶ θαλαμῶς κεραύζομενους, καὶ ἠπεία τέκνα βαλλόμενα προτὶ γαίην ἐν αἰνῇ δῆϊότητι,
Ἐλευθερίας τε νουνο ὀλοῦς ἴπο χερσίν Ἀχαιοῶν.

Il. lib. xxii. ver. 62.

My heroes slain, my bridal bed o'ertorn'd;
My bleeding infants dash'd against the door;
My daughters ravish'd, and my city burn'd!
These I have yet to see; perhaps, yet more.

Pope.

These excesses were common in all barbarous nations; and are only prophetically declared here. He shall be reputed happy, prosperous, and highly commendable, who shall destroy Babylon.

9 Happy shall he be, that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SEVENTH PSALM.

When this Psalm was composed, the Jews were in captivity in Babylon, far from their own country, the Temple, and the public exercises of religion; and the scoff and scorn of their enemies; and they contrast what they were, with what they are. This Psalm has two parts:—

I. The complaint of Israel: because of the insults of the Babylonians, they deplore their sad condition, long for the Temple, and their return to Jerusalem, ver. 1—7.

II. An imprecation, or prayer for vengeance, on their persecutors, ver. 7—9.

I. Their complaint arises from their captivity; and it is aggravated,—

1. From the place, Babylon. By the rivers of Babylon. A place far from their country; who were aliens from the covenant made by God with Abraham, scorers of their religion, had laid waste their city, and forced them to base and servile labour.

2. From the continuance of their captivity and misery. There we sat down, &c. Took up the seats allotted to us; and that for seventy years.

3. From the effects it produced. Yea, we wept, &c.

4. From the cause which drew these tears. The remembrance of what they had enjoyed, (now lost,) the services of religion. We wept, when we remembered Zion, &c.

5. From the intenseness of their grief, which was so great that they could not even tune their harps. We hanged our harps, &c.

That which increased their grief was the joy their enemies manifested at it.

1. There, in a strange land, the place of our captivity.

2. They that carried us away captive.

3. They required of us a song. They required of us mirth, saying,

4. O thou Jew, or captive, come now, sing us one of the songs, &c.

In this sarcasm the captive Jews return a double answer. How shall we sing the Lord's song in a strange land. You are aliens, and this is a strange land: we cannot sing God's service there, which is destined to His honour, to you, or in this place, without offending our God.

They reply by a protestation of their hope and constancy in religion; and accurse themselves, if they do not continue in it.

1. If I forget thee, &c. Forget the worship and feasts I kept there.

2. If I do not remember thee, &c. If I do not prefer, and make mention of Jerusalem, then let my tongue cleave, &c. Let me no more have the use of that excellent organ of God's glory. It would be unworthy of my religion, and a dishonour to my God, to sing the songs of Zion thus circumstanced, and to scoffers and aliens.

II. This seems to be the sense of the first part of the Psalm. The second part has reference to the imprecations poured out against Edom and Babylon, both persecutors of God's people. The Babylonians carried them away captive, and the Edomites persecuted their brethren with the sword, Amos i. 12.

1. Against Edom.

1. Remember, O Lord, the children of Edom, &c. How they carried themselves towards Thy people on that day when Thy anger smote against them, and the Babylonians carried us away.

2. Remember how they added to our affliction, saying, Raise it, &c.

II. Against Babylon. To her he turns his speech by an apostrophe: but at the same time foretells her ruin. O daughter of Babylon, &c. Thou seemest to thyself to be most happy: but thy ruin approaches. Shortly after the Medes, led by Cyrus, destroyed them.

1. Happy shall he be that rewardeth, &c. [See the Notes.]

2. Happy shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy little ones, &c. [See the Notes.]

NOTES ON PSALM CXXXVIII.

on the throne of Israel. As the Septuagint and Arabic prefix also the names of Haggai and Zechariah, it is probable that it was used by the Jews as a form of thanksgiving for their deliverance from all their enemies, and their ultimate settlement in their own land, after Ahasuerus (supposed by Calmet to be Darius Hystaspes) had married Esther, before which time they were not peaceably settled in their own country.

Verse 1. I will praise thee with my whole heart. I have received the highest favours from Thee, and my whole soul should acknowledge my obligation to Thy mercy. The Versions and several MSS. add יהוה Yehovah, "I will praise Thee, O LORD," &c.

Before the gods will I sing. נגד אלהים neged Elohim, in the presence of Elohim; most probably meaning before the ark, where were the sacred symbols of the Supreme Being. The Chaldee has, before the judges. The Vulgate, before the angels. So the Septuagint, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. The Syriac, before kings will I sing unto thee. This place has been alleged, by the Roman Catholics, as a proof that the holy angels, who are present in the assemblies of God's people, take their prayers and praises, and present them before God. There is nothing like this in the text; for supposing, which is not granted, that the word Elohim here signifies angels, the praises are not presented to them, nor are they requested to present them before God. It is simply said, before Elohim will I sing praises unto thee. Nor could there be need of any intermediate agents, when it was well known that God Himself was present in the sanctuary, sitting between the cherubim. Therefore this opinion is wholly without support from this place.

Verse 2. For thy loving-kindness. Thy tender mercy shewn to me; and for the fulfilment of Thy truth, the promises Thou hast made.

Thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name. All the Versions read this sentence thus:—For thou hast magnified above all the name of thy holiness; or, thy holy name. Thou hast proved that Thou hast all power in heaven and in earth, and that Thou art true in all Thy words. And by giving the word of prophecy, and fulfilling those words, Thou hast magnified thy holy name above all things.—Thou hast proved Thyself to be inflexibly great. The original is the following:—כי הגדלת כל שם אמתך כי הגדלת אל כל שמיעה, imrtecca, which I think might be thus translated:—For, thou hast magnified thy name and thy word over all,—or, on every occasion. Kennicott reads, "He preferred faithfulness to his promise to the attribute of His power." I believe my own translation to be nearest the truth. There may be some corruption in this clause.

Verse 3. With strength in my soul. Thou hast endured my soul with many graces, blessings, and heavenly qualities.

Verse 4. All the kings of the earth. Of the land:—all the neighbouring nations seeing what is done for us, and looking in vain to find that any human agency was employed in the work, will immediately see that it was thy hand; and, consequently, by confessing that it was thee, will thus give praise to Thy name.

Verse 5. They shall sing in the ways of the LORD. They shall admire Thy conduct, and the wondrous workings of Thy providence; if they should not even unite with Thy people.

Verse 6. Though the LORD be high. Infinitely great as God is, He regards even the lowest, and most inconsiderable part, of His creation: but the humble and afflicted man attracts His notice particularly.

But the proud he knoweth afar off. He beholds them at a distance, and has them in utter derision.

Verse 7. Though I walk in the midst of trouble. I have had such experience of Thy mercy, that, let me fall into whatsoever trouble I may, yet I will trust in Thee. Thou wilt quicken me, though I were ready to die; and Thou wilt deliver me from the wrath of my enemies.

Verse 8. The LORD will perfect. Whatever is farther necessary to be done, He will do it.

Forsake not the works of thine own hands. My body—my soul—Thy work begun in my soul—Thy work in behalf of Israel—Thy work in the evangelization of the world—Thy work in the salvation of mankind. Thou wilt not forsake these.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHTH PSALM.

I. In the three first verses of this Psalm David promises a grateful heart, and to sing the praises of God, because He has heard his cries, and sent him comfort and deliverance.

II. In the three next he shews what future kings would do, when the works and truth of God should be known to them.

III. In the two last verses he professes his confidence in God; shews what He hopes for from him; and, in assurance that God will perfect His work, prays Him not to desert or forsake him.

1. The prophet shews his thankfulness, which he illustrates and amplifies.

1. I will praise thee with my whole heart. Sincerely, cordially.

2. Before the gods, &c. Publicly before potentates, whether angels or kings.

3. I will worship toward, &c. It was true God ruled as King in His palace: there will I bow; it is the symbol of His presence.

4. And praises thy name, &c. From a feeling sense of Thy goodness. 1. For thy loving-kindness, &c. In calling me to the kingdom from the sheepfold. 2. And for thy truth. In performing Thy promise. By which

5. Thou hast magnified, &c. This clause is differently read. Thou hast magnified thy name in thy word; by performing thy word above all things. Or, Thou hast magnified thy name and thy word above all things. [See the Notes.]

6. In the day when I cried, &c. Finite creatures as we are, we must sometimes faint in our temptations and afflictions, if not strengthened by God.

II. The prophet having set down what God had in mercy done for him in calling him from following the ewes, &c. and making him king, and performing his promises to him. Seeing all this, the prophet judges it impossible but that the neighbouring and future kings should acknowledge the miracle, and praise God. This appears the literal sense: but it may have reference to the conversion of kings in future ages to the faith.

1. All the kings of the earth, &c. Or the future kings of Israel.

2. Yea, they shall sing in the ways, &c. His mercy, truth, clemency, &c. For great is the glory of the Lord. Righteous and glorious in all His works, of which this is one. Though the Lord be high, &c. Of which David was an instance. But the proud, &c. He removes far from him. Saul and others are full examples of this.

III. Because God who is high, &c. And David being conscious of his own humility of mind, confidently ex-

3. Thou shalt stretch forth thy hand, &c. Cities; and the power of my enemies.

4. And thy right hand, &c. Thy power over other enemies who, in Isa. liii. is called the arm of the Lord of Judea.

The last verse depends on the former. Their conduct in prophet knew that many troubles and afflictions yet to be undergone; therefore, he was sure of thy conduct, their same God would still deliver and make them perfect.

1. The Lord will perfect, &c. No With them I have His mercy.

2. Of which he gives the reason Investigate my conduct, &c. It does not exist only but for a purpose.

3. And he concludes with a promise last, and examine my his work. Forsake not the work, begun this work, increase and perfect it. Any thing false in work alone, not mine. If we desire to be perfect, we must be contrary to piety to and look to Him continually.

14 I will praise thee; for I am fearfully and wonderfully made: marvellous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth * right well.

15 * My substance was not hid from thee when I was made in secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth.

16 Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book * all my members were written, * which in continuance were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them.

17 * How precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them!

18 If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: when I awake, I am still with thee.

19 Surely, thou wilt * slay the wicked, O God: * depart from me, therefore, ye bloody men.

20 For they * speak against thee wickedly, and thine enemies take thy name in vain.

21 * Do not I hate them, O Lord, that hate thee? and am not I grieved with those that rise up against thee?

22 I hate them with perfect hatred: I count them mine enemies.

23 * Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts:

24 And see if there be any * wicked way in me, and * lead me in the way everlasting.

human fetus that is formed, it may here mean, Thou hast laid the foundation of my being.

Verse 14. I am fearfully and wonderfully made] The texture of the human body is the most complicate and curious that can be conceived. It is, indeed, wonderfully made; and it is withal so exquisitely nice and delicate, that the slightest accident may impair or destroy in a moment some of those parts essentially necessary to the continuance of life; therefore, we are fearfully made. And God has done so to shew us our frailty, that we should walk with death, keeping life in view; and feel the necessity of depending on the all-wise and continual superintending care and providence of God.

Verse 15. My substance was not hid from thee] עָצְמִי אֲשֶׁמָה, my bones or skeleton.

Curiously wrought] עָבְדָה רֻקְמָתִי, embroidered, made of needlework. These two words, (says Bishop Horsley) describe the two principal parts of which the human body is composed: the bony skeleton, the foundation of the whole; and the external covering of muscular flesh, tendons, veins, arteries, nerves, and skin; a curious web of fibres. On this passage Bishop Louth has some excellent observations:—"In that most perfect hymn, where the immensity of the omnipresent Deity, and the admirable wisdom of the Divine Artificer in framing the human body, are celebrated, the poet uses a remarkable metaphor, drawn from the nicest tapestry work:

When I was formed in secret,
When I was wrought, as with a needle, in the lowest parts of the earth.

He who remarks this, (but the man who consults Versions only will hardly remark it) and at the same time reflects upon the wonderful composition of the human body, the various implication of veins, arteries, fibres, membranes, and the 'inexplicable texture' of the whole frame; he will immediately understand the beauty and elegance of this most apt translation. But he will not attain the whole force and dignity, unless he also considers that the most artful embroidery with the needle was dedicated by the Hebrews to the service of the sanctuary; and that the proper and singular use of their work was, by the immediate precept of the Divine law, applied in a certain part of the high priest's dress, and in the curtains of the Tabernacle, Exod. xxviii. 39. xxvi. 36, xxvii. 16, and compare Ezek. xvi. 10, xiii. 13. So that the Psalmist may well be supposed to have compared the wisdom of the Divine Artificer, particularly with that specimen of human art, whose dignity was through religion the highest, and whose elegance (Exod. xxxv. 30—35,) was so exquisite, that the sacred writer seems to attribute it to a Divine inspiration."

In the lowest parts of the earth.] The womb of the mother, thus expressed by way of delicacy.

Verse 16. Thine eyes did see my substance] עָלִיתִי גַלְעָמִי, my embryo state—my yet indistinct mass, when all was wrapped up together, before it was gradually unfolded into the lineaments of man. "Some think (says Dr. Dodd) that the allusion to embroidery is still carried on. As the embroiderer has still his work, pattern, or carton, before him, to which he always recurs: so, by a method as exact, were all my members in continuance fashioned, i. e. from the rude embryo, or mass, they daily received some degree of figuration; as from the rude skeins of variously coloured silk or worsted, under the artificer's hands, there at length arises an unexpected beauty, and an accurate harmony of colours and proportions."

And in thy book all my members were written] "All those members lay open before God's eyes; they were discerned by him as clearly, as if the plan of them had been drawn in a book, even to the least figuration of the body of the child in the womb."

Verse 17. How precious also are thy thoughts] עֲדָה רַבָּה דַּעְתְּךָ, thy cogitations; a Chaldaism, as before.

How great is the sum of them] מַה טַּוּב עֲדָתֵי רַאשֵׁייתֵי

אֲשֶׁמָה ראשֵׁיהֶם; How strongly rational are the heads or principal subjects of them. But the word may apply to the bones, עֲצָמוֹת, ossements, the structure and uses of which are most curious and important.

Verse 18. If I should count them] I should be glad to enumerate so many interesting particulars: but they are beyond calculation.

When I awake] Thou art my Governor and Protector night and day.

I am still with thee.] All my steps in life are ordered by Thee: I cannot go out of Thy presence;—I am ever under the influence of Thy Spirit.

The subject, from the 14th verse to the 16th inclusive, might have been much more particularly illustrated: but we are taught by the peculiar delicacy of expression in the Sacred Writings to avoid, as in this case, the entering too minutely into anatomical details. I would, however, make an additional observation on the subject in the 15th and 16th verses. I have already remarked the elegant allusion to embroidery, in the word עָבְדָה רֻקְמָתִי, in the astonishing texture of the human body; all of which is said to be done in secret, בְּסֵתֶר, ba-se-ter, in the secret place, viz. the womb of the mother, which, in the conclusion of the verse, is, by a delicate choice of expression, termed the lower parts of the earth.

The embryo state עָלִיתִי גַלְעָמִי, galemi, has a more forcible meaning than our word substance amounts to. גַּלְעָמִי, galam, signifies to roll, or wrap up together; and expresses the state of the fetus before the constituent members were developed. The best system of modern philosophy allows, that in semine masculino all the members of the future animal are contained; and that these become slowly developed or unfolded, in the case of fowls, by incubation; and in the case of the more perfect animals, by gestation in the maternal matrix. It is no wonder that, in considering these, the Psalmist should cry out, How precious, or extraordinary, are thy thoughts! how great is the sum—heads, or outlines, of them. The particulars are, indeed, beyond comprehension; even the heads, the general contents, of Thy works, while I endeavour to form any tolerable notion of them, prevail over me—they confound my understanding, and are vastly too multitudinous for my comprehension.

Verse 19. Surely, thou wilt slay the wicked] The remaining part of this Psalm has no visible connexion with the preceding. I rather think it a fragment, or a part of some other Psalm.

Ye bloody men.] אַנְשֵׁי דַמִּים אַנְשֵׁי דַמִּים ansahey damim—men of blood, men guilty of death.

Verse 20. Thine enemies take thy name in vain.] Bishop Horsley translates the whole verse thus:—

"They have deserted me who are disobedient to Thee; they who are sworn to a rash purpose—thy refractory adversaries."

The original is obscure: but I cannot see these things in it. Some translate the Hebrew thus:—"Those who oppose Thee iniquitously seize unjustly on Thy cities;" and so almost all the Versions. The words, thus translated, may apply to Sanballat, Tobiah, and the other enemies of the returned Jews, who endeavoured to drive them from the land, that they might possess the cities of Judea.

Verse 21. Do not I hate them] I hold their conduct in abomination.

Verse 22. With perfect hatred] Their conduct, their motives, their opposition to Thee, their perfidy and idolatrous purposes, I perfectly abhor. With them I have neither part, interest, nor affection.

Verse 23. Search me, O God] Investigate my conduct, examine my heart, put me to the test, and examine my thoughts.

Verse 24. If there be any wicked way] דַּעְתְּךָ רַבָּה דַּעְתְּךָ derech steeb: a way of idolatry, or of error. Any thing false in religious principle;—any thing contrary to piety to PSALM CXL.

The Psalmist prays against his enemies, 1-4. Returns thanks for help, 7. Describes his enemies, and prays further against them, 8-11. His confidence in God, 12, 13.

To the chief Musician, a Psalm of David.

DELIVER me, O LORD, from the evil man: preserve me from the violent man; 2 Which imagine mischiefs in their heart; 3 continually are they gathered together for war. 4 They have sharpened their tongues like a serpent; adders' poison is under their lips. Selah.

a Ver. 4.-b Heb. man of violence.-c Psa. 55. 6.-d Psa. 55. 4. Rom. 3. 13.

Thyself, and love and benevolence to man. And he needed to offer such a prayer as this, while filled with indignation against the ways of the workers of iniquity; for he who hates, utterly hates, the practices of any man, is not far from hating the man himself. It is very difficult "To hate the sin with all my heart, And yet the sinner love."

Lead me in the way everlasting. עוֹלָם בֶּעֶדְרֵךְ be-derek olam, in the old way—the way in which our fathers walked, who worshipped Thee, the infinitely pure Spirit, in spirit and in truth. Lead me, guide me, as Thou didst them. We have עוֹלָם אֵרֶץ arach olam, the old path, Job xxiii. 15. "The two words עוֹלָם derek and אֵרֶץ arach, differ, (says Bishop Horsley) in their figurative senses: derek is the right way, in which a man ought to go; arach is the way, right or wrong, in which a man actually goes by habit." The way that is right in a man's own eyes is seldom the way to God.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-NINTH PSALM. David, having had aspersions laid upon him, calls upon God in this Psalm to witness his innocency. Now, that this his appeal be not thought unreasonable, he presents God in His two especial attributes, omniscience and omnipresence; then he shews he loved goodness, and hated wickedness.

This Psalm is divided into four parts:—

- I. A description of God's omniscience, ver. 1-7.
II. A description of his omnipresence, ver. 7-13.
III. David's hatred to evil, and evil men, ver. 19-23.
IV. A protestation of his own innocency, which he offers to the trial of God, ver. 23, 24.

I. He begins with God's omniscience. O Lord, thou hast searched me, &c. Examined me with scrutiny. He searches and knows our actions.

- 1. Thou knowest, &c. When and for what reasons I ever act.
2. Thou understandest my thoughts, &c. Thou knowest my counsels and thoughts.
3. Thou compassed my path, &c. The end I aim at.
4. There is not a word, &c. Every word and thought thou knowest.

And for this he gives this reason: God is our Maker; Thou hast beset me, &c. These two arguments prove God knows all things.

1. God knows all the past and future. Beset behind and before.

2. He governs man. Thou, O God, madest man, &c. The prophet concludes this attribute, God's omniscience, with an acclamation:—Such knowledge, &c. It is beyond my reach and capacity.

II. From God's omnipresence the prophet argues that man cannot hide any thing from God, for He is every where present.

- 1. Where shall I go, &c. That I may be hid from thy knowledge.
2. Or whither shall I, &c. From thy face and eye.
There is no place that is not before Thee.
1. If I ascend up to heaven, &c.
2. If I make my bed in hell, &c.
3. If I take the wings of the morning, &c.

And among many instances that might be brought forward to prove God's omniscience and omnipresence, we may simply instance the formation of a child in the womb.

- 1. Thou hast possessed my reins, &c. Thou hast undertaken wholly to frame, and cherish me when formed.
2. Thou hast covered me, &c. Clothed me with flesh, skin, bones, &c.

Then the prophet breaks out in admiration of God's works.

- 1. I will praise thee, &c.
2. I am fearfully, &c. His works are enough to strike all men with reverential fear.
3. Marvellous are thy works, &c.

Then he proceeds with the formation of the infant embryo. 1. My substance, &c. My strength, my essence. Is not hid, &c.

4 Keep me, O LORD, from the hands of the wicked; preserve me from the violent man; who have purposed to overthrow my goings.

5 The proud have hid a snare for me, and cords; they have spread a net by the wayside; they have set gins for me. Selah.

6 I said unto the LORD, Thou art my God: hear the voice of my supplications, O LORD.

7 O God the LORD, the strength of my salvation, thou hast covered my head in the day of battle.

e Psa. 71. 4.-f Ver. 1.-g Psa. 85. 7. & 87. 5. & 119. 110. & 141. 9. Jer. 12. 22.

2. When I was made in secret, &c. In the secret cell of my mother's womb.

3. And curiously wrought, &c. The word in the Hebrew signifies to interweave variously coloured threads. Man is a curious piece, and the variety of his faculties shew him such. [See the Notes.]

4. In the lowest parts of the earth. In the womb, where it is as secret as if God wrought it in the lowest parts of the earth.

5. Thine eyes did see my substance, &c. When in embryo, and without any distinct parts.

6. And in thy book, &c. The idea of them was with Thee, as the picture in the eye of the painter.

7. Which in continuance, &c. The prophet closes this part with an exclamation.

1. How precious also are thy thoughts, &c. In this and other respects.

2. O how great is the sum of them. They are infinite.

3. And for this cause. When I awake, &c. Thy wisdom and providence are ever before my mind, and my admiration are full of them.

The prophet, having ended his discourse on the omniscience and omnipresence of God, justifies himself at God's tribunal.

- 1. Surely thou wilt slay the wicked, &c. I dare not then associate with them.
2. Depart, therefore, from me, &c. Keep at a distance.
3. For they speak against thee wickedly, &c. Blasphe my God.

So far from giving them the right hand of fellowship, he asks,—

- 1. Do not I hate them, O Lord, &c. I hate them as sinners, but feel for and pity them as men.
2. Then he returns this answer to himself, Yea, I hate them, &c. I count them my enemies, for they are Thine.

IV. Lastly, it would appear that his heart was sincere and pure, or he would not abide such a trial.

- 1. Search me, O God. In the beginning of this Psalm he shewed what God did—now he intreats Him to do it.
2. Try me, &c. Examine my heart and my ways.
3. And see if there be any wicked way, &c. Presumptuous sins.

4. And lead me in the way everlasting. This was the end proposed by his trial; that if God saw any wickedness in him that might seduce him, that He would withdraw him from it; and lead him to think, and to devise and do those things which would bring him to life eternal.

NOTES ON PSALM CXL.

The Hebrew, and all the Versions, attribute this Psalm to David; and it is supposed to contain his complaint, when persecuted by Saul. The Syriac determines it to the time when Saul endeavoured to transfix David with his spear.

Verse 1. From the evil man] Saul, who was full of envy, jealousy, and cruelty, against David (to whom both himself and his kingdom were under the highest obligations) endeavoured by every means to destroy him.

Verse 2. They gathered together] He and his courtiers form plots and cabals against my life.

Verse 3. They have sharpened their tongues] They employ their time in forging lies and calumnies against me; and those of the most virulent nature.

Verse 4. Preserve me from the violent man] Saul again; who was as headstrong and violent in all his measures, as he was cruel, and inflexibly bent on the destruction of David.

Verse 5. Have hid a snare for me] They hunted David as they would a dangerous wild beast: one while striving to pierce him with the spear, another to entangle him in their snares, so as to take and sacrifice him before the people, on pretence of his being an enemy to the state.

Selah.] This is the truth.

Verse 7. Thou hast covered my head] Not only when I fought with the proud blaspheming Philistine; but in the various attempts made against my life by my sworn enemies.

8 Grant not, O LORD, the desires of the wicked; further not his wicked device; ¹lest ¹they exalt themselves. Selah.

9 As for the head of those that compass me about, ²let the mischief of their own lips cover them.

10 ¹Let burning coals fall upon them: let them be cast into the fire; into deep pits, that they rise not up again.

11 Let not ²an ²evil speaker be established in the earth: evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him.

12 I know that the LORD will ³maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor.

13 Surely the righteous shall give thanks unto thy name: the ⁴upright shall dwell in thy presence.

PSALM CXLI.

The Psalmist prays that his devotions may be accepted, 1, 2. That he may be enabled so to wait that he do not offend with his tongue; and that he may be preserved from wickedness, 3, 4. His willingness to receive reproof, 5. Complaints of distress, 6, 7. His trust in God, and prayer against his enemies, 8-10.

A Psalm of David.

LORD, I cry unto thee: ¹make haste unto me; give ear unto my voice when I cry unto thee.

2 Let ²my prayer be ²set forth before thee: ³as incense: and ³the lifting up of my hands ³as ³the evening sacrifice.

Verse 8. Further not his wicked device] He knew his enemies still desired his death, and were plotting to accomplish it: and here he prays that God may disappoint and confound them. The Chaldee understands this of Doeg.

Verse 10. Let burning coals] The Chaldee considers this as spoken against Ahithophel, who was head of a conspiracy against David; and translates this verse thus:—Let coals from heaven fall upon them, precipitate them into the fire of hell, and into miry pits, from which they shall not have a resurrection to eternal life. This is a proof that the Jews did believe a resurrection of the body, and an eternal life for that body, in the case of the righteous.

Verse 11. Let not an evil speaker be established] אשׁוּי יֵשׁ לָשׁוֹן, "a man of tongue." There is much force in the rendering of this clause in the Chaldee יְבִיט בְּרִי יִשְׂרָאֵל גִּבּוֹר דִּמְיֵהוּ לִישׁוֹן גִּבּוֹר דִּמְיֵהוּ גִבּוֹר דִּמְיֵהוּ גִבּוֹר דִּמְיֵהוּ "The man of detraction, or inflammation, with the three-forked tongue." He whose tongue is set on fire from hell; the talebearer, slanderer, and dealer in scandal:—with the three-forked tongue; wounding three at once: his neighbour whom he slanders; the person who receives the slander; and himself who deals in it. What a just description of a character which God, angels, and good men, must detest. Let not such an one be established in the land; let him be unmasked, let no person trust him; and let all join together to hoot him out of society. He shall be hunted by the angel of death, and thrust into hell.—CHALDEE.

Verse 12. The cause of the afflicted] Every person who is persecuted for righteousness sake has God for his peculiar help and refuge; and the persecutor has the same God for his especial Enemy.

Verse 13. The righteous shall give thanks] For Thou wilt support and deliver him.

The upright shall dwell in thy presence.] Shall be admitted to the most intimate intercourse with God.

The persecuted have ever been dear to God Almighty: and the martyrs were, in an especial manner, his delight; and in proportion as He loved those, so must he hate and detest these.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FORTIETH PSALM. David, being persecuted by Saul, Doeg, and the men of Ziph, prays to God against their evil tongues. But the Fathers apply it more largely to the church, in its persecution by wicked men and devils.

The Psalm is divided into four parts:—

I. A petition to be delivered from his enemies, whom he describes, ver. 1-6.

II. A protestation of his confidence in God, ver. 6, 7.

III. A prayer against them, ver. 8-11.

IV. A manifestation of his hope, that God will maintain his just cause, ver. 12, 13.

I. He first summarily proposes his petition.

1. Deliver me, O Lord, &c. From Saul, Doeg, or the devil.

2. Preserve me, &c. From his violence and malice, and their effects. 1. Evil counsels, and wicked stratagems, Which imagine mischief, &c. 2. From their evil words, which were consonant with their thoughts.

They have sharpened their tongues, &c. With calumnies and frauds.

Like a serpent, &c. Their bitter words are as the poison of the viper and adder, which, without pain, extinguishes life.

He repeats his petition. Keep me, O Lord, &c. To move God, he shews their intentions.

1. They have purposed, &c. To make me walk slowly, or not at all, in the ways of God; to turn me back.

2. The method they took to attain their purpose. The proud have laid a snare, &c. As hunters do for birds and beasts. So the devil shews the bait, but hides the hook: under pleasure he hides the bitterness of its reward and consequences.

II. He implores aid from God against the evil and danger.

1. I said unto the Lord, &c. I do not cast away my confidence.

2. Hear the voice, &c. Better to shew the ground of his constancy, he shews,—

1. What esteem he had for his God. Thou art the strength, &c. My fortification against all my enemies.

2. What he had formerly done for him. Thou hast covered my head, &c.

III. The other part of his petition consists in praying against their plots.

1. Grant not, O Lord, &c. Let them not have their wishes.

2. Further not his wicked device, &c. Give them no prosperity in them.

3. Let them exalt themselves, &c. Triumph in my being conquered by them.

After praying against them, he predicts their punishment. As for the head of those that compass me about, &c.

1. Let the mischief of their own lips, &c.

2. Deal severely with them. Let burning coals, &c. Let them suffer extreme punishment. Let them be cast into the fire, &c.

3. Let not an evil speaker, &c.—A liar, flatterer, &c.—Be established in the earth.

4. Evil shall hunt, &c. Give no rest, but pursue the wicked man to his utter ruin: all those who persecute the church, who write their counsels in her blood.

IV. To the commission of punishment to the wicked he subjoins, by an antithesis, the promise of God for the defence of the righteous, and so concludes.

1. I know, &c. Am certainly persuaded by my own experience, and the example of my forefathers, whom Thou hast delivered in their trials and temptations.

2. That the Lord will maintain, &c. He may defer His help and deliverance: but he will not take it from them.

And this he confirms and amplifies from the final cause, which is double.

1. That they praise Him. Surely the righteous shall give thanks, &c. Being delivered, they attribute the honour not to themselves, or their innocency or merit; but give the glory of His grace and love to God alone.

2. That they remain before Him in His church militant and triumphant. That they may dwell in thy presence, &c. Walk before His face here, dwell in His favour, and enjoy the beatific vision hereafter.

NOTES ON PSALM CXLI.

This Psalm is generally attributed to David; and to have been composed during his persecution by Saul. Some suppose that he made it at the time that he formed the resolution to go to Achish, king of Gath. See 1 Sam. xxvi. It is generally considered to be an evening prayer; and has been long used as such in the service of the Greek church. It is in several places very obscure.

Verse 1. LORD, I cry unto thee] Many of David's Psalms begin with complaints: but they are not those of habitual plaint and peevishness. He was in frequent troubles and difficulties; and he always sought help in God. He ever appears in earnest; at no time is there any evidence that the devotion of David was formal. He prayed, meditated, supplicated, groaned, cried, and even roared, as he tells us, for the disquietude of his soul. He had speedy answers; for he had much faith, and was always in earnest.

Verse 2. As incense] Incense was offered every morn-

3 Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips.

4 Incline not my heart to any evil thing, to practise wicked works with men that work iniquity: and let me not eat of their dainties.

5 Let the righteous smite me; it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head: for yet my prayer also shall be in their calamities.

6 When their judges are overthrown in stony places, they shall hear my words; for they are sweet.

7 Our bones are scattered at the grave's mouth, as when one cutteth and cleaveth wood upon the earth.

8 But mine eyes are unto thee, O God the Lord: in thee is my trust; leave not my soul destitute.

9 Keep me from the snares which they have laid for me, and the gins of the workers of iniquity.

10 Let the wicked fall into their own nets, whilst that I withal escape.

ing and evening before the Lord, on the golden altar, before the veil of the sanctuary. Exod. xxix. 39, and Numb. xxxviii. 4.

As the evening sacrifice.] This was a burnt offering, accompanied with flour and salt. But it does not appear that David refers to any sacrifices; for he uses not זבח, which is almost universally used for a slaughtered animal; but מנחה, which is generally taken for a gratitude offering, or unbloody sacrifice. The literal translation of the passage is, "Let my prayer be established for incense before Thy faces; and the lifting up of my hands, for the evening oblation." The Psalmist appears to have been at this time at a distance from the sanctuary; and, therefore, could not perform the Divine worship in the way prescribed by the law. What could he do? Why, as he could not worship according to the letter of the law, he will worship God according to the spirit: then prayer is accepted in the place of incense; and the lifting up of his hands, in gratitude and self-dedication to God, is accepted in the place of the evening minchah or oblation. Who can deplore the necessity that obliged the Psalmist to worship God in this way?

Verse 3. Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth] While there are so many spies on my actions and words, I have need to be doubly guarded, that my enemies may have no advantage against me. Some think the prayer is against impatience: but if he were now going to Gath, it is more natural to suppose that he was praying to be preserved from dishonouring the truth, and from making sinful concessions, in a Heathen land; and at a court where, from his circumstances, it was natural to suppose he might be tempted to apostasy by the Heathen party. The following verse seems to support this opinion.

Verse 4. Let me not eat of their dainties.] This may refer either to eating things forbidden by the law; or to the partaking in banquets or feasts in honour of idols.

Verse 5. Let the righteous smite me] This verse is extremely difficult in the original. The following translation in which the Syriac, Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, nearly agree, appears to me to be the best:—"Let the righteous chastise me in mercy, and instruct me: but let not the oil of the wicked anoint my head. It shall not adorn (יני) yani, from נחם) navah,) my head; for still my prayer shall be against their wicked works."

The oil of the wicked may here mean his smooth flattering speeches; and the Psalmist intimates that he would rather suffer the cutting reproof of the righteous, than the oily talk of the flatterer. If this were the case, how few are there now-a-days of his mind! On referring to Bishop Horsey, I find his translation is something similar to my own:

Let the just one smite me, let the pious reprove me. Let not the ointment of the impious anoint my head. But still I will tolerate in their calamities.

Verse 6. When their judges are overthrown in stony places] בני סלע biyedy seld, "In the hands of the rock." Does this rock signify a strong or fortified place; and its hands the garrison which have occupied it, by whom these judges were overthrown? If we knew the occasion on which this Psalm was made, we might be the better able to understand the allusions in the Text.

They shall hear my words; for they are sweet.] Some think there is here an allusion to David's generous treatment of Saul in the cave of Engedi, and afterwards at the hill of Hachilah, in this verse, which might be translated, Their judges have been dismissed in the rocky places; and have heard my words, that they were sweet. Or, perhaps, there may be a reference to the death of Saul and his sons, and the very disastrous defeat of the Israelites at Gilboa. If so, the seventh verse will lose its chief difficulty, Our bones are scattered at the grave's mouth: but if we take them as referring to the slaughter of the priests at Nob, then instead of translating לבי שחל) lepi shool, at the grave's mouth, we may translate at the command of Saul; and then the verse will point out the manner in which those servants of the Lord were massacred; Doeg cut them in pieces, hewed them down as one cleaveth wood. Some understand all this of the cruel usage of the captives in Babylon. I could add other conjectures, and contend for my own: but they are all too vague to form a just ground for decided opinion.

Verse 8. But mine eyes are unto thee] In all times, in all places, on all occasions, I will cleave unto the Lord, and put my whole confidence in Him.

Verse 10. Let the wicked fall into their own nets] This is generally the case: those who lay snares for others fall into them themselves. Harm watch, harm catch, says the old adage. How many cases have occurred where the spring-guns that have been set for thieves have shot some of the family! I have known some dismal cases of this kind, where some of the most amiable lives have been sacrificed to this accursed machine.

Whilst—I withal escape.] They alone are guilty; they alone spread the nets and gins: I am innocent, and God will cause me to escape.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIRST PSALM.

The contents and sum of this Psalm are the following:—

- I. His prayer, ver. 1, 2.
- II. That God would restrain his tongue, and compose his mind, that through anger or impatience, he offend not, ver. 3, 4.
- III. He prays that, if he must be reprov'd, it be by the just, not the unjust man, ver. 5; whose judgment he declares, ver. 5, 6, and will not have any society with him.
- IV. He shews the malice of the wicked to good men, ver. 6, 7.
- V. He puts his trust in God, and prays to be delivered from snares, ver. 8—10.

1. 1. Lord, I cry unto thee, &c. Speedily hear my prayer, which is fervently and affectionately addressed to Thee.

2. Let my prayer be set forth before thee, &c. Which was offered with the sacrifice. Why does David pray that his prayer might be accepted as the evening, rather than the morning sacrifice? Perhaps the evening sacrifice might be more noble, as a figure of Christ's sacrifice on the cross, which was in the evening.

II. His second petition is, that God would restrain his tongue, that he might know when to speak, and when to be silent. The metaphor is taken from the watch and gate of a city, which to be safely kept, no one must be suffered to go in or out, that ought not. The gate will not be sufficient without the watch; for it will always be shut, or ever open.

His third petition is for his heart, because it is deceitful above all things. Man is weak without the grace of God.

1. Incline not my heart, &c. Suffer it not to be bent, or set on any evil thing.

2. Incline not my heart to practices, &c. To do iniquity, being invited by their example.

3. Let me not eat, &c. Partake with them in their feasts, doctrines, feigned sanctity, power, riches, or dignities.

III. His fourth petition is, that if reprov'd, it may be in the kindness of friendship, not revenge or bitterness.

1. Let the righteous smite me, &c. Smite with a reproof.

2. It shall be a kindness, &c. I shall account it an act of charity, and I will love him for it.

3. And let him reprove me, &c. An excellent oil, to heal my wounds of sin.

IV. His next petition he prefaces. Let my prayer, &c. When their judges are overthrown, &c. refers to the judicature. The chief seats, authorities, &c. are swallowed up, as men are by the sea; as the ship is dashed against the rock, and broken to pieces.

And this sense the following verse will justify. Our bones are scattered, &c. They beset me and my company so closely, we despair of life; and our bones must be scat-

PSALM CXLII.

The Psalmist, in great distress and difficulty, calls upon God, 1-7.

XXIX. DAY. EVENING PRAYER.

I Maasil of David; a Prayer when he was in the cave. I CRIED unto the LORD with my voice; with my voice unto the LORD did I make my supplication.

2 I poured out my complaint before him; I shewed before him my trouble.

3 When my spirit was overwhelmed within me then thou knewest my path. In the way wherein I walked have they privily laid a snare for me.

4 I looked on my right hand, and beheld, but there was no man that would know me: refuge failed me; no man cared for my soul.

5 I cried unto thee, O LORD: I said, Thou

V. Therefore, he presents his last petition, which has two parts. 1. But mine eyes are unto thee, &c. 2. Leave not my soul destitute.

1. For his own safety. Leave not my soul, &c. Let me not fall into their hands.

2. Which prayer is grounded on his confidence in God. Mine eyes are unto thee, &c. I depend and look alone to Thee for deliverance.

3. Keep me from the snares, &c. From their frauds and ambushes.

Lastly, he imprecates confusion on the heads of his enemies.

1. Let the wicked fall, &c.
2. Whilst that I withal escape. Pass by, or through them, unhurt.

NOTES ON PSALM CXLII.

The title says, An Instruction of David, or a Psalm of David, giving instruction. A prayer when he was in the cave.

David was twice in great peril in caves.—1. At the cave of Adullam, when he fled from Achish, king of Gath, 1 Sam. xxii. 2. When he was in the cave of En-gedi, where he had taken refuge from the pursuit of Saul; and the latter, without knowing that David was in it, had gone into it on some necessary occasion, 1 Sam. xxiv. If the inscription can be depended on, the cave of En-gedi, is the most likely of the two, for the scene laid here. But were there doubts concerning the legitimacy of the title, I should refer the Psalm to the state of the captives in Babylon, to which a great part of the Psalms refer. Bishop Horley calls it, A prayer of the Messiah, taken and deserted. It may be so; but where is the evidence, except in the conjectural system of Origen?

Verse 1. I cried unto the Lord] See on the first verse of the preceding Psalm.

Verse 3. Then thou knewest my path] When Saul and his army were about the cave in which I was hidden, thou knewest my path—that I had then no way of escape but by miracle: but Thou didst not permit them to know that I was wholly in their power.

Verse 4. There was no man that would know me] This has been applied to the time in which our Lord was deserted by His disciples. As to the case of David in the cave of En-gedi, he had no refuge:—for what were the handful of men that were with him to Saul and his army?

Verse 5. Thou art my refuge] Even in these most disastrous circumstances, I will put my trust in Thee.

Verse 6. I am brought very low] Never was I so near total ruin before.

Deliver me from my persecutors] They are now in full possession of the only means of my escape.

They are stronger than I] What am I and my men against this well appointed armed multitude, with their king at their head.

Verse 7. Bring my soul out of prison] Bring me, O neph-shi, my life out of this cave in which it is now imprisoned; Saul and his men being in possession of the entrance.

The righteous shall compass me about] יצטרפו יצטרפו—they shall crown me—perhaps meaning that the pious Jews, on the death of Saul, would cheerfully join together to make him king, being convinced that God, by His bountiful dealings with him, intended that it should be so. The Old Psalter, which is imperfect from the twenty-first part of Psalm cxix. to the end of Psalm cxli. concludes this Psalm thus: “Lede my soul out of corruption of my body; that corruption is bodily pynne, in which my soule is anguyst; after that in Godes house, sal sh be louyng (praising) of the.”

art my refuge and my portion in the land of the living.

6 Attend unto my cry: for I am brought very low: deliver me from my persecutors; for they are stronger than I.

7 Bring my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name: the righteous shall compass me about; for thou shalt deal bountifully with me.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SECOND PSALM.

The substance of this Psalm is the earnest prayer of the Psalmist that he might be delivered from the danger he was in.

The parts are,—
I. An exordium; in which he
1. Shews what he did in his trouble, took himself to prayer, ver. 1, 2.

2. Then his consternation and anxiety of mind, which arose from the malice and craft of his enemies, and want of help from his friends, ver. 3, 4.

II. His address and petition to God, ver. 5-7. 1. The two first verses shew the Psalmist's intention. I cried unto the Lord, &c. 2. I poured out my supplication, &c.

This he amplifies,—
1. From the vehemence. I cried, I supplicated.
2. From the object. Unto the Lord. I invoked Him, and no other.

3. From the instrument. With my voice.
4. From the humility in prayer. It was a supplication.
5. From his free and full confession. I poured out, &c.
6. From his sincerity and confidence in God.

The reason was,—

1. This I did when my spirit was overwhelmed, &c. There being no sufficiency in me, I betook myself to the all-sufficient God.

2. For thou knowest my path, &c. My actions and intentions.

The craft and subtily of his enemies, especially Saul.

1. In the way wherein I walked, &c. My vocation.

2. Have they privily laid, &c. Saul gave him his daughter Michal to be a snare to him; and a dowry he must have of a hundred foreskins of the Philistines, that David might fall by their hands.

His destitution in the time of trouble.

1. I looked on my right hand, &c. But no friend was near; There was no man, &c. The miserable have few friends.

2. Refuge failed me, &c. I have no place of safety.

3. No man cared, &c. Regarded my life, or cared if I perished.

II. The Psalmist having no human help, calls upon God.

1. Thou art my refuge, &c. My hiding place.

2. Thou art my portion, &c. While I live in this world. Then he sends up his prayer, fortified by a double argument.

1. From the lamentable condition he was brought into. I was brought low, &c.

2. From the malice and power of his enemies. Deliver me, &c.

Again he renews his prayer, and presses it from the final cause. Bring my soul, &c.

Upon which follow two effects—

1. His gratitude. That I may praise thy name.

2. That of others. The righteous shall compass me, &c. Come unto me.

3. The reason for this. For thou shalt deal bountifully with me. Bestow favours upon me, having delivered me from my former miseries; which men seeing, who are commonly the friends of prosperity, will magnify, and resort to me.

NOTES ON PSALM CXLIII.

The Hebrew, and all the Versions, attribute this Psalm to David; and the Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, state that it was composed on the rebellion of his son Absalom: nor is there any thing in the Psalm that positively disagrees with this inscription. This is the last of the seven Psalms, styled penitential.

Verse 1. In thy faithfulness answer me] Thou hast

2 And enter not into judgment with thy servant: for in thy sight shall no man living be justified.

3 For the enemy hath persecuted my soul; he hath smitten my life down to the ground; he hath made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead.

4 Therefore is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate.

5 I remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the work of thy hands.

6 I stretch forth my hands unto thee: my soul thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land. Selah.

7 Hear me speedily, O Lord: my spirit faileth: hide not thy face from me, lest I be like unto them that go down into the pit.

promised to support me in my difficulties; and, though my children should forsake me, never to withdraw Thy loving-kindness from me. See the present unnatural rebellion of my son. Lord, undertake for me!

Verse 2. Enter not into judgment] אלהי אל תבוא אל תבוא. Do not come into court, either as a Witness against me, or as a Judge, else I am ruined; for Thou hast seen all my ways that they are evil, and Thy justice requires Thee to punish me. Nor can any soul that has ever lived be justified in the sight of Thy justice and righteousness. Had I my desert from Thee, I should have worse than even my unnatural son intends me. O what a relief is Jesus crucified to a soul in such circumstances!

Verse 3. He hath made me to dwell in darkness] Literally, in dark places. This may be understood of David's taking refuge in caves and dens of the earth, to escape from his persecuting son; yea, even to take refuge in the tombs, or repositories of the dead.

Verse 4. Therefore is my spirit] I am deeply depressed in spirit, and greatly afflicted in body.

My heart within me is desolate.] It has no companion of its sorrows, no sympathetic friend. I am utterly destitute of comfort.

Verse 5. I remember the days of old] Thou hast often helped me,—often delivered me. I will therefore trust in Thee, for Thy mercy has not clean gone from me.

Verse 6. I stretch forth my hands] This is a natural action. All in distress, or under the influence of eager desire, naturally extend their hands and arms as if to catch at help, and obtain succour.

As a thirsty land] Parched and burnt by the sun, longs for rain, so does my thirsty soul for the living God.

Verse 7. Hear me speedily] מהר maher, make haste to answer me! A few hours, and my state may be irretrievable. In a short time my unnatural son may put an end to my life.

Verse 8. Cause me to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning] This petition was probably offered in the night season. David had despatched his messengers in all directions; and prays to God that he might, by the morning, get some good news.

Cause me to know the way wherein I should walk] Absalom and his partisans are in possession of all the country. I know not in what direction to go, that I may not fall in with them: point out by Thy especial providence the path I should take.

Verse 9. I flee unto thee to hide me.] That I may not be found by my enemies, who seek my life to destroy it.

Verse 10. Teach me to do thy will] רצונו רצונו, Thy pleasure. To be found doing the will of God, is the only safe state for man.

Thy Spirit is good] The Author of every good desire, and holy purpose.

Lead me] Let it lead me by its continued inspirations and counsels.

Into the land of uprightness.] Into a right land, CHALDEE. Into the place where I shall be safe. The old Psalter has, עִיר גֹּשֶׁת גֹּדֶה שָׁל לְעִמֵּי לְעִיר גֹּשֶׁת גֹּדֶה.

Verse 11. Quicken me] I am as a dead man, and my hopes are almost dead within me.

Verse 12. And of thy mercy] To me and the kingdom. Cut off mine enemies] Who, if they succeed, will destroy the very form of godliness. The steps he has already taken shew that even morality shall have no countenance, if Absalom reign.

I am thy servant.] Whoever is disloyal to me, I will love and serve Thee.

For a full explanation of this Psalm, as applied to penitents, see the Analysis.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-THIRD PSALM. David, being driven from Jerusalem by his son Absalom, wisely calls to mind his sin, as being the cause of it.

8 Cause me to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning; for in thee do I trust: cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; for I lift up my soul unto thee.

9 Deliver me, O Lord, from mine enemies: I flee unto thee to hide me.

10 Teach me to do thy will; for thou art my God: Thy Spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness.

11 Quicken me, O Lord, for thy name's sake: for thy righteousness' sake bring my soul out of trouble.

12 And of thy mercy cut off mine enemies, and destroy all them that afflict my soul: for I am thy servant.

This Psalm has four parts:—

I. A prayer for remission of sin, grounded on God's promise, ver. 1; not on his own worthiness, ver. 2.

II. A narration of the sad state of his affairs, ver. 3, 4.

III. The comfort he received in his sad condition, and whence, ver. 5, 6.

IV. His petition, containing many particulars and reasons, ver. 7 to the end.

I. He prays for audience. Hear my prayer, O Lord, &c. He does not plainly express the matter he prayed for: but it may be gathered from the context that it was for remission of sin.

1. In thy faithfulness, &c. Thou art a faithful God, and hast promised to pardon the penitent. I am a penitent; have mercy on me.

2. And in thy righteousness, &c. Which here signifies mercy, loving-kindness.

This sense appears more plainly from the next verse.

1. And enter not into judgment, &c. Call me not to a strict account at the bar of Thy justice. This he deprecates; so that justitia in the former verse could not be taken for that justice.

2. For in thy sight, &c. Not I, nor any other man: pardon me then for the sake of Thy mercy and promise, not my merits.

II. And now he enters upon the narration of his sad condition.

1. For the enemy hath persecuted, &c. My son Absalom seeks my life: but it was Satan who enticed me to adultery and homicide.

2. He hath smitten, &c. Humbled me: made me a lover of earth; vile in Thy sight.

3. He hath made me to dwell, &c. After Satan had entangled me with earthly pleasures, I was in spiritual darkness, and saw not the way of life, any more than those who have been long dead.

The effect this darkness produced was fear and consternation.

1. Therefore is my spirit, &c. I suffered a kind of swoon in my soul; I was ready to faint when I considered Thy holiness and my impurity.

2. My heart within me, &c. Far from comfort, in heavy trouble.

III. In this sadness of heart and mind,—

1. I remember the days of old, &c. Thy past kindness to me, and to others.

2. I meditate, &c. I did not slightly run them over, but pondered on them.

And I derived great profit from my meditation; for—

1. I stretch forth my hands, &c. I began earnestly to pray to Thee.

2. My soul thirsteth, &c. After Thy righteousness, as the dry land wanting water. For as the earth without rain has no consistence, but is pulverized; so the soul, not moistened with the grace of God, falls on the right and left hand into temptation, and brings forth no fruit to God's glory.

IV. The sad case in which David was, upon a sense of God's indignation, makes him seek out a remedy.

1. Hear me speedily, &c. And his reason for this is the sad condition in which he was till God was pacified for his sin.

2. Hide not thy face, &c. Thy presence, Thy favour. His next petition resembles the former in substance.

1. Cause me to hear, &c. Thy pardoning mercy out of Thy word; it is Thy Spirit which must work with it to save me.

2. In the morning, &c. Betimes, speedily, quickly, &c.

3. His reason. For in thee do I trust, &c. I did not let go my hold even in my extremity; but still hoped against hope.

PSALM CLXIV.

The Psalmist praises God for His goodness, 1, 2. Exclamations relative to the vanity of human life, 3, 4. Prays against his enemies, 5-8. Extols God's mercy for the temporal blessings enjoyed by his people, 9-15.

XXX. DAY. MORNING PRAYER.

A Psalm of David.

Davidis, Regis Israelitarum, cir. ann. xxviii.

BLESSED be the LORD a my strength, b which teacheth my hands c to war, and my fingers to fight:

2 d My goodness, and my fortress; my high tower, and my deliverer; my shield, and he in whom I trust; who subdueth my people under me.

3 e LORD, what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him! or the son of man, that thou makest account of him?

4 f Man is like to vanity: b his days are as a shadow that passeth away.

5 i Bow thy heavens, O LORD, and come down: h touch the mountains, and they shall smoke.

6 j Cast forth lightning, and scatter them: shoot out thine arrows, and destroy them.

7 k Send thine a hand from above; o rid me, and deliver me out of great waters, from the hand of p strange children;

8 Whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood.

9 I will sing a new song unto thee, O God: upon a psaltery and an instrument of ten strings will I sing praises unto thee.

10 l It is he that giveth salvation unto kings: who delivereth David his servant from the hurtful sword.

11 m Rid me, and deliver me from the hand of strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood:

12 That our sons may be v as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner stones, w polished after the similitude of a palace:

13 That our garners may be full, affording x all manner of store: that our sheep may bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our streets:

14 That our oxen may be y strong to labour; that there be no breaking in, nor going out; that there be no complaining in our streets.

15 What is Adam, that thou approvest of him? Can he do any thing worthy of Thy notice? Or the son of feeble perishing man, that thou shouldest hold him in repute? What care, love, and attention, dost Thou lavish upon him!

Verse 4. Man is like to vanity] וְאִישׁ כְּעָפָר Adam la-Hebel demah, literally, Adam is like to Abel, exposed to the same miseries, accidents, and murderers; for in millions of cases the hands of brothers are lifted up to shed the blood of brothers. What are wars but fratricide in the great human family!

His days are as a shadow] The life of Abel was promissory of much blessedness; but they afforded but the shadow of happiness. He was pure and holy, beloved of his parents, and beloved of God: but, becoming the object of his brother's envy, his life became a sacrifice to his piety.

Verse 5. Bow thy heavens] See the Note on Psa. xviii. 9. Verse 6. Cast forth lightning] See the Note, ib. ver. 13, 14.

Verse 7. Deliver me out of great waters] See the Note, ib. ver. 16.

Verse 9. I will sing a new song] A song of peculiar excellence. I will pour forth all my gratitude, and all my skill, on its composition. See on Psa. xxxiii. 2, 3.

Verse 10. He that giveth salvation unto kings] Monarchy, in the principle, is from God: it is that form of government which in the course of the Divine providence, has principally prevailed; and that which, on the whole, has been most beneficial to mankind. God, therefore, has it under His peculiar protection. It is by Him that kings reign; and by His special providence they are protected.

Verse 12. That our sons may be as plants] God had promised to His people, being faithful, THREE descriptions of BLESSINGS, Deut. xxviii. 4. 1. The fruit of the body,—sons and daughters. 2. The fruits of the ground,—grass and corn in sufficient plenty. 3. Fruit of the cattle,—“the increase of kine, and flocks of sheep.” These are the blessings to which the Psalmist refers here, as those in which he might at present exult and triumph: blessings actually enjoyed by his people at large; proofs of his mild and paternal government, and of the especial blessing of the Almighty. The people who were in such a state, and revolted, had no excuse: they were doubly guilty, as ungrateful both to God and man.

Verse 13. That our garners, &c.] Our garners are full. These are not prayers put up by David for such blessings: but assertions, that such blessings were actually in possession. All these expressions should be understood in the present tense.

Ten thousands in our streets] וְעֶשְׂרֵת בְּחוּצוֹת עִירֵינוּ should be translated in our pens, or sheep-walks; for sheep bringing forth in the streets of cities or towns is absurd.

Verse 14. Our oxen may be strong to labour] We have not only an abundance of cattle; but they are of the most strong and vigorous breed.

No breaking in] So well ordered is the police of the kingdom, that there are no depredations, no robbers, house-breakers, or marauding parties in the land; no sudden incursions of neighbouring tribes or banditti breaking into fields or houses, carrying away property, and taking with Notes on Psalm CXLIV. The Hebrew, and all the Versions, attribute this Psalm to David. The Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, term it a Psalm of David against Goliath. The Syriac says, “A Psalm of David when he slew Asaph, the brother of Goliath.” Calmet thinks, and with much probability, that it was composed by David after the death of Absalom, and the restoration of the kingdom to peace and tranquillity. From a collation of this with Psalm xviii. (of which it appears to be an abridgment, preserving the same ideas, and the same forms of expression,) there can be no doubt of both having proceeded from the same pen; and that David was the author. There is scarcely an expression here of peculiar importance that is not found in the prototype; and for explanation I must refer generally to the above Psalm.

Verse 1. Teacheth my hands to war] To use sword, battle-axe, or spear. And my fingers to fight] To use the bow and arrows, and the sling.

Verse 2. Who subdueth my people] Who has once more reduced the nation to a state of loyal obedience. This may refer to the peace after the rebellion of Absalom.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-FOURTH PSALM.

This Psalm is divided into three parts:—

- I. A thanksgiving, ver. 1—5.
- II. A petition, ver. 5—11.
- III. A discussion on happiness, and in what it consists, ver. 12, to the end.

1. The prophet gives thanks, and praises God.
 1. Blessed be the Lord, &c. Who has taught me in a general way the art of war, in a particular way the use of the sling; giving me skill, &c.

2. His is my strength, &c. The strength I have is from Him.

3. My goodness, &c. Benignity, or mercy.
 4. My fortress, &c. To Him I fly as to a strong hold.
 5. And my Deliverer. Therefore will I trust in Him. From the consideration of so many benefits the Psalmist exclaims, Lord, what is man, &c.

To which question he replies,—
 1. Man is like to vanity. If God be not his fulness and strength.

2. His days, &c. God is always the same: but man changes every moment.

II. He prays for God's assistance. Bow thy heavens, &c. Cast forth lightning, &c. If men will not acknowledge Thy mercy, let them see Thy judgments. This first part of His petition against His enemies being ended, he prays,—

1. Rid me, and deliver me, &c. From dangers of men.
 2. From the hand of strange children, &c. Moabites, Philistines, &c.

Upon whom he sets these two characters.

1. Whose mouth speaketh vanity, &c. Lies, insincere words.
 2. And their right hand, &c. They use their power to oppress and deceive.

Then the Psalmist exclaims, as in a short hymn—

1. I will sing a new song, &c. And this I will do because thou hast given victory, &c. Thou hast delivered David, &c. from Saul, &c.

2. And then he repeats, and concludes his petition as before. Rid me, &c.

III. His petition being ended, he discourses on the nature of happiness, which is of two kinds, temporal and spiritual. The addition of temporal blessings is pleasant, and promised to the obedient: but godliness is the only safety in this, and especially in the life to come. For godliness, &c. God created temporal goods not merely for the wicked; they are often the rewards of piety. The Psalmist therefore prays,—

1. That our sons, &c. They are the pillars of a house; let them be flourishing.

2. That our daughters, &c. Stones that join the building, beautiful, as well as useful.

3. That our garners may be full, &c. That we may have abundance.

4. That our sheep, &c. Our flocks, increase.

5. That our oxen, &c. May be healthy and strong.

6. That there be no breaking, &c. No plundering among us.

7. That there be no complaining, &c. No want of 4 One generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts.

5 I will epeak of the glorious honour of thy majesty, and of thy wondrous works.

6 And men shall speak of the might of thy terrible acts: and I will declare thy greatnesses.

7 They shall abundantly utter the memory of thy great goodness, and shall sing of thy righteousness.

8 ^b The LORD is gracious, and full of compassion: slow to anger, and ⁱ of great mercy.

9 ^k The LORD is good to all: and his tender mercies are over all his works.

bread, or any cause of tumult. David prays that, during his reign, the people may be happy, and enjoy the fruits of peace.

Then he concludes the Psalm with this acclamation:

1. Happy is that people, &c. Those he has described.
 2. Yea, happy, &c. That have the true God for their God: who know God to be their Father; and that He takes care of them, providing for their temporal necessities, and supplying all their spiritual wants. Others understand these words not as prayers, but as a description of the state David and his people were then in. [See the Notes.]

NOTES ON PSALM CXLV.

This Psalm is attributed to David by the Hebrew and all the Versions. It is the last of the acrostic Psalms; and should contain twenty-two verses, as answering to the twenty-two letters of the Hebrew alphabet: but the verse between the thirteenth and fourteenth, beginning with the letter nun, is lost out of the present Hebrew copies; but a translation of it is found in the Syriac, Septuagint, Vulgate, Ethiopic, Arabic, and Anglo-Saxon. See below. It is an incomparable Psalm of praise; and the Rabbins have it in such high estimation, that they assert, if a man with sincerity of heart repeat it three times a-day, he shall infallibly enjoy the blessings of the world to come. It does not appear on what particular occasion it was composed; or, indeed, whether there was any occasion but gratitude to God for his ineffable favours to mankind.

Verse 1. I will extol thee] I will raise Thee on high, I will lift thee up.

I will bless thy name] ירעלעו le-olam va-ed, for ever and onward, in this and the coming world. These sort of expressions, which are very difficult to be translated, are on the whole well expressed by those words, in a hymn of Mr. Addison:

Thou' all eternity to thee
 A joyful song I'll raise;
 But O, eternity's too short
 To utter all Thy praise!

This contains a strong hyperbole: but allowable in such cases.

Verse 3. His greatness is unsearchable.] Literally, To his mightiness there is no investigation. All in God is unlimited and eternal.

Verse 4. One generation] Thy creating and redeeming acts are recorded in Thy word: but Thy wondrous providential dealings with mankind must be handed down by tradition, from generation to generation; for they are in continual occurrence, and consequently innumerable.

Verse 8. The LORD is gracious] His holy nature is ever disposed to shew favour.

Full of compassion] Wherever He sees misery, His eye affects His heart.

Slow to anger] When there is even the greatest provocation.

Of great mercy.] Great in His abundant mercy. These four things give us a wonderful display of the goodness of the Divine nature.

Verse 9. The LORD is good to all] There is not a soul out of hell that is not continually under his most merciful regards: so far is he from willing or desiring before their creation the damnation of any man.

His tender mercies] His bowels of compassion are over all His works; He feels for his intelligent offspring, as the most affectionate mother does for the child of her own bosom. And through this matchless mercy, these bowels of compassion, His son Jesus tasted death for every man. How far is all that is here spoken of the nature of God, opposed to the Molochian doctrine of the eternal decree of reprobation.

His grace for every soul is free:
 For him, who forged the dire decree;
 For every reprobate and foe.

PSALM CXLVI.

The Psalmist, full of gratitude, purposes to praise God for ever, 1, 2. Exhorts not to trust to man, not even the most powerful; for which he gives his reasons, 3, 4. The great advantage of trusting in God, 5. Points out the mercies which they who trust in God may expect, 6-9. God's everlasting government, 10.

PRAISE ^a ye the LORD. ^b Praise the LORD, O my soul.
² While I live will I praise the LORD: I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being.
³ Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help.

a Heb. Hallelujah.—b Psa. 103. 1.—c Psa. 104. 33.—d Psa. 118. 8, 9. Isa. 2. 22. e Or, salvation.—f Psa. 104. 23. Eccles. 12. 7. Isa. 2. 22.

1. For the heavens declare, &c. The sun, moon, and stars, in their splendour, magnitude, and perpetual motion, shew forth God's honour and majesty.

2. A second kind of works are the terrible acts of His justice, such as the deluge, the fire of Sodom, Pharaoh's overthrow in the Red sea, the earth opening to swallow up Korah, Dathan, and Abiram.

Then there follows His acts of love and mercy, spoken of at large.

1. Thy great works shall abundantly utter, &c. Thy bounty shall make all generations eloquent in Thy praise, and shall sing of Thy righteousness, in exhibiting Thy promised blessings; in bestowing temporal benefits; but, above all, in the gifts of Thy grace. In the incarnation, passion, resurrection, ascension, the coming of the Holy Ghost, calling of the Gentiles, justification, sanctification, and eternal life: for all these, and each of them, men shall abundantly utter Thy righteousness.

2. The Lord is gracious, &c.

3. The Lord is good to all, &c.

4. His tender mercies are over, &c. Even to the most wicked God gives time and opportunity for repentance, before he outs them off.

III. The prophet having sung of God's great works in glory, terror, and mercy, now adds, All thy works shall praise thee, O Lord. And now he begins a new matter, the erection of His peculiar kingdom in His church. A peculiar people, &c. His saints. These will continue to mark Thy wonders, and sing to Thy glory: these thy saints shall bless thee for all, and in all, Thy acts. They shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, &c. To make known to the sons of men, &c. Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, &c. Now the power and glory of Christ's kingdom differ in a fourfold manner from that of the sons of men.

1. The kings on earth require obedience from their subjects; they exact subsidies, tributes, taxes, &c.

2. Earthly kings glory in their power, and rejoice in their dignity: but their crown is full of thorns, anxiety, care, &c.

3. Earthly kings reign but for a time, Christ for ever.

1. They shall speak of the glory, &c. Excelling all others.
2. To make known, &c. Thy acts far beyond theirs.
3. Thy kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, &c. Not so theirs.

The prophet having described Christ's kingdom, begins to extol the qualities and virtues of a good king, which agrees with Christ.

i. His veracity.

ii. His probity. The Lord is faithful, &c.

iii. This is another quality of a good king, so to govern his subjects that they fall not, or raise them if fallen. Christ sustains and upholds His people; or restores them if they fall from Him, and return by repentance to Him: this was exemplified in David, Peter, the prodigal, &c. The eyes of all, &c. Thou openest thine hand, &c.

iv. Liberality and bounty is an excellent quality in a king, who cares for his subjects; and may properly be applied to Christ, who provides for His church in all things. And—

1. The eyes of all wait upon thee. In expectation.
2. And thou givest, &c. It is a gift, not a debt.
3. Their meat. Every thing fit for them.
4. In due season. When fit and necessary.
5. Thou openest thine hand. Givest bountifully.
6. And satisfiest, &c. The covetous always want; content is from God.
7. The desire of every living thing, &c. The Lord is righteous, &c.

v. This is another virtue of a good king, and refers to Christ. The Lord is nigh unto all them, &c.

vi. This is the sixth quality of a good king, to shew himself ready of access to all who implore his aid.

1. Faith. For he that prays without it will not be answered.
2. Hope and confidence. He prays not seriously, who hopes not to be heard.

4 'His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth: in that very day ⁵ his thoughts perish.
⁵ Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the LORD his God:
⁶ Which made heaven, and earth, the sea, and all that therein is: which keepeth truth for ever:
⁷ Which executeth judgment for the oppressed: which giveth food to the hungry.
⁸ The LORD looseth the prisoners:

g See 1 Cor. 2. 6.—h Psa. 144. 15. Jer. 17. 7.—i Gen. 1. 1. Rev. 14. 7.—k Psa. 103. 6. l Psa. 107. 9.—m Psa. 68. 6. & 107. 10, 14.

3. Love. No man prays who hates God.

4. Desire. Nor that desire not to obtain.

5. Attention and intention, without which prayer is idle. The Lord will fulfil, &c.

vii. The seventh quality of a good king is to grant petitions.

1. He will fulfil, &c. But with limitation. So they fear him.

2. He also will hear their cry. When it is earnest and sincere.

3. And will save them. The Lord preserveth all them, &c.

viii. The eighth quality of a good king is, to spare the humble, and destroy the proud. Which Christ will do; He preserves His martyrs in patience, and then receives them into glory.

IV. The conclusion is an acclamation, and answers to the beginning of the Psalm.

1. My mouth shall speak, &c. This will I do while I live.

2. And let all flesh, &c. And let all follow his example.

NOTES ON PSALM CXLVI.

This is the first of the Psalms, called Hallelujah Psalms, of which there are five, and which conclude the book. No author's name is prefixed to this, either in the Hebrew or Chaldee. But the Syriac, Vulgate, Septuagint, Ethiopic, and Arabic, attribute it to Haggai and Zechariah. It was probably written after the Captivity; and may refer to the time when Cyrus, prejudiced by the enemies of the Jews, withdrew his order for the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem; to which revocation of the royal edict the third verse may refer. Put not your trust in princes, &c.

Verse 2. While I live will I praise] The true feeling of a heart overpowered with a sense of God's goodness.

While I have any being.] כִּי־יִבְרַח be-oddi; in my continuance, in my progression, my eternal existence. This is very expressive.

Verse 3. Put not your trust in princes] This may refer, as has been stated above, to Cyrus, who had revoked his edict for the rebuilding of Jerusalem. Perhaps they had begun to suppose that they were about to owe their deliverance to the Persian king. God permitted this change in the disposition of the king, to teach them the vanity of confidence in men, and the necessity of trusting in Himself.

Verse 4. His breath goeth forth] His existence depends merely, under God, on the air he breathes. When he ceases to respire, he ceases to live: his body from that moment begins to claim its affinity to the earth: and all his thoughts, purposes, and projects, whether good or evil, come to nought, and perish. He then who has no other dependence, must necessarily be miserable.

Verse 5. Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help] While he that trusts in man is miserable, he that trusts in God is happy. In the son of man, בֶּן־אָדָם ben Adam, there is no help, לֹא־יִשְׁעוּ teshuah, no saving principle. Every son of Adam comes into the world without this; and must continue so till the Lord open the eyes of the blind, ver. 8. This son of Adam returns to his earth, לְאֲדָמָתוֹ le-adamato, to the ground, from which he was taken; this refers directly to Gen. ii. 7; iii. 19. But he that has the God for his help, that helped Jacob in his distress, and was with him and sustained him in and through all adversities, can never be destitute; for this God changes not; he lives for ever, and his projects cannot perish. He has purposed that Israel shall be delivered from this Captivity. Cyrus may change, but God will not: trust, therefore, in HIM. He has all power; He made heaven and earth; He has them under His government and at His disposal: and should earth itself fail, heaven endures. And He keeps His truth for ever; and, therefore, His promises must be fulfilled to them that trust in Him. Fear not.

Verse 7. Which executeth judgment for the oppressed] For those who suffer by violence or calumny. This may refer to the Israelites, who suffered much by oppression from the Babylonians, and by calumny from the Samari-

8 * The LORD openeth the eyes of the blind :
 v the LORD raiseth them that are bowed down :
 the LORD loveth the righteous :

9 * The LORD preserveth the strangers ; he relieveth the fatherless and widow : * but the way of the wicked he turneth upside down.

10 * The LORD shall reign for ever, even thy God, O Zion, unto all generations. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXLVII.

The Psalmist praises God for His goodness to Jerusalem, 1-3. Shows His great mercy to them that trust in Him, 4-6. He extols Him for His mercies, and providential kindness, 7-11. For His defence of Jerusalem, 12-15. For His wonders in the seasons, 16-18. And his word unto Jacob, 19, 20.

Giveth food to the hungry] No doubt fed the poor captives by many displays of His peculiar providence.

The Lord looseth the prisoners] And as He has sustained you so long under your captivity, so will He bring you out of it.

Verse 8. Openeth the eyes of the blind] He brings us out of our prisonhouse, from the shadow of death ; and opens our eyes that we may behold the free light of the day. And it is the Lord only that can open the eyes of any son of Adam, and give him to see his wretchedness, and where help and salvation may be found.

Raiseth them that are bowed down] Through a sense of their guilt and sinfulness.

The Lord loveth the righteous] These He makes partakers of a Divine nature ; and He loves those who bear His own image.

Verse 9. Preserveth the strangers] He has preserved you strangers in a strange land, where you have been in captivity for seventy years ; and, though in an enemies' country, He has provided for the widows and orphans as amply as if they had been in the Promised Land.

The way of the wicked he turneth upside down.] He subverts, turns aside. They shall not do all the wickedness they wish ; they shall not do all that is in their power. In their career He will either stop them, turn them aside, or overturn them.

Verse 10. The Lord shall reign for ever] Therefore He can never fail ; and He is thy God, O Zion. Hitherto he has helped you and your fathers : and has extended that help from generation to generation. Therefore trust in Him and praise the Lord.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SIXTH PSALM.

The subject of this Psalm is the same with the former.

It is divided into four parts :—

- I. An exhortation to praise God, ver. 1. Which the Psalmist resolves to do, ver. 2.
- II. A dehortation from confidence in man, ver. 3, 4.
- III. He pronounces them happy who trust in God, ver. 5.
- IV. And to persuade to this he uses every reason, ver. 6, to the end.

I. He begins with a dialogism.

1. He speaks to all. Praise ye the Lord.

2. Then by an apostrophe he turns to himself. Praise the Lord, O my soul.

3. And his soul answers, While I live, &c. While I am, while I shall be.

II. But the prophet, for fear men should trust too much in the great, and not rely wholly upon God, he exhorts them,—Put not your trust in princes, &c.

He gives his reasons for the warning :—

- 1. Because of their impotency. There is no help in them, &c.
- 2. Because of their mortality. Their breath goeth forth, &c.

III. If a man will be happy, the prophet shews him that he must alone rely upon God ; for,

1. Happy is he that hath, &c. Him in whom Jacob trusted.

2. And whose hope, &c. Not in short-lived man.

And this he confirms by many reasons :—

- 1. From His omnipotence. He is God the Creator, &c.
 - 11. From His veracity. Who keeps truth for ever, &c.
- His word is passed for our protection ; and He can and will keep it.

III. From His justice. He executeth judgment, &c.

IV. From His mercy.

1. He giveth food, &c. Relieves men in their necessities.

2. The Lord looseth the prisoner. Another act of grace, again.

3. The Lord openeth the eyes, &c. Whether spiritually or corporally.

4. The Lord raiseth them that are bowed down, &c. By sin, or misery.

v. From His love. The Lord loveth, &c. Of which the effects are,—

- 1. The Lord preserveth, &c.
- 2. He delivereth the fatherless, &c.
- 3. But the ungodly find a far different effect. But the way of the wicked, &c. He makes their glory to perish utterly.

vi. From the eternity of His kingdom.—Kings of the earth die, and are no more remembered ; but He is a King for ever, &c. In His church. The Lord shall reign for ever, even thy God, &c.

NOTES ON PSALM CXLVII.

This Psalm, which is without title in the Hebrew, Chaldee, and Vulgate, is attributed by the other Versions to Haggai and Zechariah. It was probably penned after the Captivity, when the Jews were busily employed in rebuilding Jerusalem, as may be gathered from the second and thirteenth verses. It may be necessary to remark that all the Versions, except the Chaldee, divide this Psalm at the end of the eleventh verse, and begin a new Psalm at the twelfth. By this division the numbers of the Psalms agree in the Versions with the Hebrew ; the former having been, till now, one behind.

Verse 1. Praise is comely.] It is decent, befitting, and proper, that every intelligent creature should acknowledge the Supreme Being ; and as He does nothing but good to the children of men, so they should speak good of his name.

Verse 2. The Lord doth build up.] The Psalmist appears to see the walls rising under his eye, because the outcasts of Israel, those who had been in captivity, are now gathered together to do the work.

Verse 3. He healeth the broken in heart] שברו ה שבורה in heart. From the root שבר shavar, to break in pieces, we have our word shiver, to break into splinters, into shivers. The heart broken in pieces by a sense of God's displeasure.

Verse 4. He telleth the number of the stars] He whose knowledge is so exact as to tell every star in heaven, can be under no difficulty to find out and collect all the scattered exiles of Israel.

Verse 5. His understanding is infinite.] To his intelligence there is no number : though He numbers the stars, His understanding is without number. It is infinite ; therefore, He can know, as He can do, all things.

Verse 6. The Lord listeth up the meek] The humbled, the afflicted.

Verse 7. Sing unto the Lord] שׁוּבָנוּ, sing a responsive song, sing in parts, answer one another.

Verse 8. Who covereth the heaven with clouds] Collects the vapours together, in order to cause it to rain upon the earth. Even the direction of the winds, the collection of the clouds, and the descent of the rain, are under the especial management of God. These things form a part of His providential management of the world.

Maketh grass to grow upon the mountains.] After this clause the Vulgate, the Septuagint, Æthiopic, Arabic, 11 The LORD taketh pleasure in them that fear him, in those that hope in his mercy.

12 Praise the LORD, O Jerusalem; praise thy God, O Zion.

13 For he hath strengthened the bars of thy gates; he hath blessed thy children within thee.

14 He maketh peace in thy borders, and filleth thee with the finest of the wheat.

15 He sendeth forth his commandment upon earth: his word runneth very swiftly.

16 He giveth snow like wool: he scattereth the hoar-frost like ashes.

17 He casteth forth his ice like morsels: who can stand before his cold?

18 He sendeth out his word, and melteth them; he causeth his wind to blow, and the waters flow.

19 He sheweth his word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel.

20 He hath not dealt so with any nation: and as for his judgments, they have not known them. Praise ye the LORD.

and Anglo-Saxon, add, and herb for the service of man. It appears that a hemistic, or half-line, has been lost from the Hebrew Text; which, according to the above Versions, must have stood thus: וְעֵשֶׂב לְעֹבְדֵי הָאָדָם ve-eseb le-abadeth hu-adam, as in Psalm civ. 14, And herbage for the service of mankind.

Verse 10. He delighteth not] The horse, among all animals, is most delighted in by man for beauty, strength, and fleetness. And a man's legs, if well proportioned, are more admired than even the finest features of his face. Though God has made these, yet they are not His peculiar delight.

Verse 11. The Lord taketh pleasure in them that fear him] That are truly religious.

In those that hope in his mercy.] Who are just beginning to seek the salvation of their souls. Even the cry of the penitent is pleasing in the ear of the Lord. With this verse the hundred and forty-sixth Psalm ends in all the Versions, except the Chaldee. And the hundred and forty-seventh commences with the 12th verse. I believe these to be two distinct Psalms. The subjects of them are not exactly the same, though something similar; and they plainly refer to different periods.

Verse 13. He hath strengthened the bars of thy gates] He has enabled thee to complete the walls of Jerusalem. From the former part of the Psalm it appears the walls were then in progress; from this part, they appear to be completed, and provisions to be brought into the city, to support its inhabitants. The gates were set up and well secured by bars, so that the grain, &c. was in safety.

Verse 14. He maketh peace] They were now no longer troubled with the Samaritans, Moabites, &c.

Verse 15. He sendeth forth his commandment] His substantial Word. It is here personified, מִצְוַת מַיְמְרָא, Chaldee; and appears to be a very active Agent running every where, and performing the purposes of His will.

Verse 16. He giveth snow like wool] Falling down in large flakes; and in this state nothing in nature has a nearer resemblance to fine white wool.

Scattereth the hoar-frost like ashes.] Spreading it over the whole face of nature.

Verse 17. He casteth forth his ice] קָרָחוֹ karecho, (probably hailstones) like crumbs.

Who can stand before his cold?] At particular times the cold in the east is so very intense as to kill man and beast. Jacobus de Vitriaco, one of the writers in the Gesta Dei per Francos, says, that in an expedition in which he was engaged against Mount Tabor, on the 24th of December, the cold was so intense that many of the poor people, and the beasts of burthen, died by it. And Albertus Aquensis, another of these writers, speaking of the cold in Judea, says that thirty of the people who attended Baldwin I. in the mountainous districts near the Dead sea were killed by it; and that in that expedition they had to contend with horrible hail and ice; with unheard-of snow and rain. From this we find that the winters are often very severe in Judea; and in such cases as the above, we may well call out, Who can stand against his cold!

Verse 18. He sendeth out his word] He gives a command: the south wind blows; the thaw takes place; and the ice and snow being liquefied, the waters flow, where before they were bound up by the ice.

Verse 19. He sheweth his word unto Jacob] To no nation of the world beside had God given a revelation of His will.

Verse 20. And as for his judgments] The wondrous ordinances of His law, no nation had known them; and, consequently, did not know the glorious things in futurity to which they referred.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-SEVENTH PSALM.

The parts of this Psalm are two:—

I. An exhortation to praise God, ver. 1, which is repeated, ver. 7 and 12.

II. The arguments to persuade to it: God's bounty, wisdom, power, providence, justice, and mercy, dwelt on through the whole Psalm.

I. The exhortation is briefly proposed, Praise the Lord. Which the prophet, as the chanter of the quire, begins; and then more fully repeats, Sing unto the Lord, &c. And again, Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem, &c. ver. 12; where the Arabic, Greek, and Latin translators begin a new Psalm: but in the Hebrew they are conjoined, and form but one hymn.

II. The prophet, having ended his exhortation, adds his reasons for it.

- 1. It is pleasant and becoming.
- 2. His bounty in building Jerusalem, and bringing back the dispersed, ver. 2. In comforting the distressed, ver. 3. For His wisdom, ver. 4. For His power, ver. 5. For His mercy and justice, ver. 6.

His first arguments are drawn from the thing itself.

- i. Good. For it is good, &c. For many reasons this may be called good.
- 1. For it is God's command, and must not be neglected.
- 2. It elevates the heart from earth to heaven.
- 3. Good again, because we are bound to it by obligations.

ii. To praise God is pleasant.

- 1. Because it proceeds from love.
- 2. Because it is pleasant to perform our duty, and the end of our creation.
- 3. Because God is pleased with it. He that offereth me praise, glorifieth me, &c.

4. Because God is pleased with the virtues of faith, hope, charity, humility, devotion, &c. of which praise is the effect.

iii. It is comely. There is no sin greater than that of ingratitude.

These are the first arguments the prophet uses, and they are drawn from the nature of the thing itself: they may apply to all ages of the church.

He dwells upon the deliverance of Israel from captivity.

- 1. The Lord doth build up His church, the seat of His sanctuary. He hath restored our policy and religion.
- 2. He gathereth together, &c. The banished and scattered ones. The Gentiles.
- 3. He healeth the broken in heart, &c. Oppressed by captivity or sin.

4. And bindeth up, &c. Like a good surgeon.

The second argument is drawn from His wisdom.

- 1. He telleth the number of the stars, &c. A thing to man impossible.
- 2. He calleth them, &c. They are His army, and He knows them.

By the stars in this place some understand God's saints.

- 1. The stars are infinite in number. So are the saints.
- 2. Among them are planets. Saints have their circuits; and always revolve round Him—the Sun of righteousness.
- 3. The stars shine clearest in the night. The saints in persecution.
- 4. One star differeth from another in glory. Some saints excel others in piety.
- 5. The stars are above. The saints' conversation is in heaven.

6. The stars are obscured by clouds. The church is sometimes obscured by affliction and persecution.

His third argument is drawn from God's power. Great is the Lord, &c.

His fourth argument is drawn from God's justice and mercy.

- 1. His mercy. The Lord lifteth up the meek, &c. Sustains and exalts them.
- 2. His justice. He casteth the wicked down, &c. They shall not always triumph.

But, before the prophet proceeds farther, he repeats,—

- 1. Sing unto the Lord with thanksgiving. Do it in words.
- 2. Sing praises upon the harp, &c. Do it in works.

Then he proceeds to argue from God's providence.

PSALM CXLVIII.

The Psalmist calls on all the creation to praise the Lord. The angels and visible heavens, 1-4. The earth and the sea, 7. The meteors, 8. Mountains, hills, and trees, 9. Beasts, reptiles, and fowls, 10. Kings, princes, and mighty men, 11. Men, women, and children, 12, 13. Especially all the people of Israel, 14.

PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise ye the LORD from the heavens: praise him in the heights.

2 ^b Praise ye him, all his angels: praise ye him, all his hosts.

3 Praise ye him, sun and moon: praise him, all ye stars of light.

4 Praise him, ye heavens of heavens, and ye waters that be above the heavens.

a Heb. Hell-hajah.—b Ps. 103. 20, 21.—c 1 Kings 8. 27. 2 Cor. 12. 2.—Gen. 1. 7.—Gen. 1. 1, 6, 7. Ps. 33. 6, 8.—f Ps. 86. 37. & 119. 90, 91. Jer. 31. 35, 36. & 23. 32.

1. Who covereth the heaven, &c. Not to obscure, but fructify, the earth.

2. Who maketh grass to grow, &c. By His blessing on the most barren places.

3. He giveth to the beast, &c. They gather it from His supplies.

4. And to the young ravens, &c. No bird suffers its young so soon to provide for themselves: but God hears and sends them food. Christ Himself uses this argument to encourage us to rely on God's providence, Matt. vi.

Should the distrustful Jew argue, Alas, we have no strength, ammunition, horse, or armour, the prophet replies—

1. He delighteth not, &c. When used as a warlike creature.

2. He taketh not pleasure, &c. In the nimbleness of man, when used for warlike preparations.

But He delights in His servants.
1. The Lord taketh pleasure, &c. In those who obey and love Him.

2. In those that hope, &c. Have faith and confidence in Him.

3. He again repeats his proposition, and calls upon the church to perform it. Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem, &c. Thy God, O Zion. Should others be negligent, be not ye.

He then adds four reasons why Zion should praise Him. 1. Security and defence. 2. Benediction. 3. Peace.

4. Substance.
1. Security. For he hath strengthened, &c.
2. Benediction. He hath blessed, &c. His officers with wisdom, &c.

3. Peace. He maketh peace. The vision of peace is the literal interpretation of the word Jerusalem.

4. Provision. Filleth this with the finest of the wheat. That God has done this for Jerusalem is evident from His general providence over the world. And this argument the prophet uses: He sendeth forth his commandment upon earth, &c. For

1. He giveth snow like wool. Beautiful in appearance, and in order to preserve vegetables from the nipping but necessary frost, when long continued.

2. He scattereth the hoar-frost, &c. Thickening the air with it like ashes; freezing all the vapours that float in it.

3. He casteth forth his ice, &c. Fragments of ice.

4. Who can stand before his cold. Able to endure it unprovided.

But, having described all these powerful agents, the prophet next shews how easily they are governed by His word.

1. He sendeth out his word, and melteth them.

2. He causeth his wind to blow, &c. And the ice and snow return to water. All these are His, and on Him we must depend for safety and comfort.

By these God teaches alike nations to acknowledge Him. But there are particular acts which refer to His people; for, 1. He sheweth his word, &c. By Moses and the prophets.

2. He hath not dealt so, &c. None at that time, but since to His church.

3. As for his judgments, &c. His evangelical precepts. He is sending forth His word; the nations could not find out His precepts otherwise; therefore for this praise ye the Lord.

NOTES ON PSALM CXLVIII.

This Psalm has no title: but by the Syriac it is attributed to Haggai and Zachariah; and the Septuagint and the Aethiopic follow it. As a hymn of praise, this is the most sublime in the whole book.

Verse 1. Praise ye the Lord from the heavens] The Chaldees translates, "Praise the Lord, ye holy creatures from the heavens. Praise Him, ye armies of supreme angels. Praise Him all ye angels who minister before Him." מִן הַשָּׁמַיִם min hashamayim, signifies whatever belongs to the heavens, all their inhabitants: as מִן הַיָּם min ha-arets, ver. 7, signifies all that belong to the earth, all its inhabitants and productions.

5 Let them praise the name of the LORD: for he commanded, and they were created.

6 He hath also stablished them for ever and ever: he hath made a decree which shall not pass.

7 Praise the Lord from the earth, ye dragons, and all deeps:

8 Fire, and hail; snow, and vapours; stormy wind fulfilling his word:

9 Mountains, and all hills; fruitful trees, and all cedars:

10 Beasts, and all cattle; creeping things, and flying fowl:

g Isa. 43. 20.—h Ps. 147. 15-18.—i Isa. 44. 23. & 49. 13. & 55. 12.—k Heb. birds of wing.—l Gen. 1. 25. & 2. 19. & 7. 23. & 8. 17. & 9. 2. 20. Deut. 4. 17. Ezek. 30. 17. Deut. 7. 6.

min ha-arets, ver. 7, signifies all that belong to the earth, all its inhabitants and productions.

Verse 3. Praise ye him, sun and moon] The meaning of this address, and all others to inanimate nature, is this: Every work of God's hand partakes so much of His perfections, that it requires only to be studied and known, in order to shew forth the manifold wisdom, power, and goodness, of the Creator.

Stars of light] The brightest and most luminous stars: probably, the planets may be especially intended.

Verse 4. Heavens of heavens] Heavens exceeding heavens. Systems of systems extending as far beyond the solar system, as it does beyond the lowest deeps. The endless systematic concentration of worlds.

Ye waters that be above the heavens] This refers to Gen. i. 7, where see the Notes. Clouds, vapours, air, exhalations, rain, snow, and meteors of every kind.

Verse 5. He commanded, and they were created] He spake the word expressive of the idea in His infinite mind; and they sprang into being according to that idea.

Verse 6. He hath also stablished them] He has determined their respective revolutions, and the times in which they are performed, so exactly as to shew His all-comprehensive wisdom and skill, that they have never passed the line marked out by His decree, nor intercepted each other in the vortex of space, through revolutions continued for nearly 6000 years.

Verse 7. Praise the Lord from the earth] As, in the first address, he calls upon the heavens, and all that belong to them; so here, in this second part, he calls upon the earth, and all that belong to it.

Ye dragons] דַּרְוֵן tanninim, whales, porpoises, sharks, and sea-monsters, of all kinds.

And all deeps] Whatever is contained in the sea: whirlpools, eddies, ground tides, with the astonishing flux and reflux of the ocean.

Every thing in its place and nature, shews forth the perfections of its Creator.

Verse 8. Fire and hail; snow and vapours] All kinds of meteors, water, and fire, in all their forms and combinations. And air, whether in the gentle breeze, the gale, the whirlwind, the tempest, or the tornado; each accomplishing an especial purpose, and fulfilling a particular will of the Most High.

Verse 9. Mountains, and all hills] Whether primitive, secondary, or alluvial; of ancient or recent formation, with all their contents, quarries, mines, and minerals. But what a profusion of wisdom and skill is lavished on these! To instance only in the different metals, earths, and minerals; especially the precious stones.

Fruitful trees] פְּרִי עֵץ per, fruit trees of all kinds.

And all cedars] Every kind of forest tree. The formation of the fruits, their infinitely varied hues and saps, proclaim the unsearchable wisdom and goodness of God: not less so, the growth, structure, and various qualities and uses, of the forest trees.

Verse 10. Beasts] חַיָּוָה ha-chaiyah, wild beasts of every kind.

All cattle] בְּהֵמָה behemah, all domestic animals, those used for the service of the house, and those for agricultural purposes.

Creeping things] All the class of reptiles, from the Boa constrictor, that can combat, kill, and swallow whole, the royal tiger, to the cobra de manilla, a poisonous reptile as small as a fine needle; with those still smaller animals that are found in water, and require the power of the microscope to bring them to view. In the production, preservation, habits, and properties, of all these there is a profusion of wisdom and economy that would require ages to exhibit.

Flying fowl] The structure of fowls is astonishing; and the exact mathematical manner in which flying fowls swim the air, steer their course wheresoever they

11 Kings of the earth, and all people: princes, and all judges of the earth:

12 Both young men, and maidens; old men, and children;

13 Let them praise the name of the LORD; for his name alone is excellent; his glory is above the earth and heaven.

14 He also exalteth the horn of his people, the praise of all his saints: even of the chil-will; the feathers and their construction, with the muscles which give them motion; strike the observer of nature with astonishment and delight.

Verse 11. Kings of the earth] As being representatives of the Most High; and all people, the nations governed by them. Princes, as governors of provinces, and all judges executing those laws that bind man to man, and regulate and preserve civil society;—praise God, from whom ye have derived your power and influence: for by him kings reign. And let the people magnify God for civil and social institutions; and for the laws by which, under Him, their lives and properties are preserved.

Verse 12. Both young men and maidens] Who are in the bloom of youth, and in the height of health and vigour—know that God is your Father; and let the morning and energy of your days be devoted to Him.

Old men and children] Very appropriately united here, as the beginning and conclusion of life present nearly the same passions, appetites, caprices, and infirmities: yet in both the beneficence, all-sustaining power, and goodness of God are seen.

Verse 13. Let them] All already specified—praise the name of Jehovah—because He excels all beings: and His glory, as seen in creating, preserving, and governing all things, is upon or over, by all, the earth and heaven. All space and place, as well as the beings found in them, shew forth the manifold wisdom and goodness of God.

Verse 14. He also exalteth the horn] Raises to power and authority His people.

The praise] Jehovah is the subject of the praise of all His saints.

A people near unto him] The only people who know Him, and make their approaches unto Him with the sacrifices and offerings which He has Himself prescribed. Praise ye the Lord!

O what a hymn of praise is here! It is an universal chorus! all created nature have a share here, and all perform their respective parts.

All intelligent beings are especially called to praise Him who made them in His love, and sustains them by His beneficence. Man particularly, in all the stages of his being,—infancy, youth, manhood, and old age; all human beings have their peculiar interest in the great Father of the spirits of all flesh.

He loves man, wheresoever found, of whatsoever colour, in whatever circumstances, and in all the stages of his pilgrimage from his cradle to his grave.

Let the lip of the infant, the shout of the adult, and the sigh of the aged, ascend to the universal Parent, as a gratitude offering. He guards those who hang upon the breast; controls and directs the headstrong and giddy; and sustains old age in its infirmities, and sanctifies to it the sufferings that bring on the termination of life.

Reader, this is thy God! How great! how good! how merciful! how compassionate! Breathe thy soul up to Him; breathe it into Him, and let is be preserved in His bosom, till mortality be swallowed up of life, and all that is imperfect be done away!

Jesus is thy sacrificial offering—Jesus is thy Mediator.—He has taken thy humanity, and placed it on the throne! He creates all things new, and faith in His blood will bring thee to His glory! Amen, hallelujah!

The beautiful morning hymn of Adam and Eve, (Paradise Lost, Book V. line 153, &c.)

"These are thy glorious works, Parent of good; Almighty, Thine this universal frame."

has been universally admired. How many have spoken loud in its praises, who have never attempted to express their feelings in a stanza of the hundred and forty-eighth Psalm! But to the rapturous adorers of Milton's poetry what is the song of David, or this grand music of the spheres!—Know this, O forgetful man, that Milton's Morning Hymn is a paraphrase of this Psalm, and is indebted to it for every excellency it possesses. It is little else than the Psalmist speaking in English, instead of Hebrew verse.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-EIGHTH PSALM.

The Psalmist calls upon the whole creation to be instrumental in praising God. By which he shews, dren of Israel, a people near unto him. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXLIX.

All the congregation are invited to praise God for His mercies, 1-3. Their great privileges, 4, 5. Their victories, 6-9.

PRAISE ye the LORD. Sing unto the LORD a new song, and his praise in the congregation of saints.

q Ps. 149. 9.—r Ephes. 2. 17.—s Heb. Hallelujah.—t Ps. 33. 3. Isa. 42. 10.

I. His ardent desire that God be praised. As if creatures endowed with reason were too few; therefore, he calls on inanimate things to join and be heralds of His wondrous works.

II. His intention; what he would, and could have done.

III. That what could be done, should be done.

IV. That all really do praise Him in their kind and manner.

This Psalm is disposed into excellent distribution. 1. He calls upon celestial creatures in general. 2. In particular. 1. On angels. Praise ye the Lord from the heavens, &c. Ye of celestial order. 2. Praise him in the heights, &c. The heavens above. 3. Praise him all his hosts, &c. Which in St. Luke are called The heavenly host.

2. Praise ye him, sun, moon, and stars. Though not with the voice, yet by your beauty, motion, light, efficacy, &c.

He mentions the whole body of the heavenly orbs.

1. Praise him ye heavens of heavens, &c. The highest state of bliss.

2. And ye waters, &c. All the orbs above the air, in Scripture called heavens.

And in the two next verses he gives the reason.

1. He commanded, &c. They are His creatures; therefore,

2. He hath established them, &c. They are incorruptible. From the heavens he now descends to the earth, air, water, &c. Praise the Lord from the earth, &c. All ye elementary substances.

1. Ye dragons. Whales, great fishes.

2. All deeps. All kinds of waters.

3. Fire and hail, &c. Meteors, &c.

4. Mountains and hills, &c.

5. Fruitful trees, &c. Trees fit to build with, and fruit-trees.

6. Beasts and all cattle. Both wild and tame.

7. Creeping things, &c. Worms and serpents.

8. And all flying fowls.

And, lastly, he cites all mankind to praise God.

1. The highest kings, &c. They who command, and they who obey.

2. Princes and all judges, &c. All inferior magistrates.

3. Both young men and maidens. Both sexes.

4. Old men and children. All ages. Let them praise the name of the Lord

And for this reason:—

1. For his name is excellent alone. No name is so sublime and worthy.

2. His glory is above the earth and heaven. All good comes from Him.

The prophet concludes this Psalm with God's goodness to the church, which furnishes him with another reason:—

1. He also exalts the horn, &c. The power and glory of His people.

2. He is the praise, &c. The Guide of Israel.

3. Even of the children of Israel, &c. A people consecrated to God. All which is to be understood not merely of Israel according to the flesh, but God's spiritual church. Now those who are true Israelites, and those especially, he excites to sing,— Hallelujah! Praise ye the Lord!

NOTES ON PSALM CXLIX.

This seems to be an epinicion, or Song of Triumph, after some glorious victory; probably in the time of the Maccabees. It has been also understood as predicting the success of the Gospel in the nations of the earth. According to the Syrian, it concerns the New Temple, by which the Christian church is meant. It has no title in the Hebrew, nor in any of the Versions, and no author's name.

Verse 1. Sing unto the LORD a new song] That is, as we have often had occasion to remark, an excellent song—the best we can possibly pronounce. So the word חֲדָשׁ chadosh is often understood; and so the word novus, "new," was often used among the Latin writers.

PSALM CXLIX.

2 Let Israel rejoice in him that made him: let the children of Zion be joyful in their King.
 3 Let them praise his name in the dance: let them sing praises unto him with the timbrel and harp.
 4 For the LORD taketh pleasure in his people: he will beautify the meek with salvation.
 5 Let the saints be joyful in glory: let them sing aloud upon their beds.

6 Let the high praises of God be in their mouth, and a two-edged sword in their hand:
 7 To execute vengeance upon the heathen, and punishments upon the people;
 8 To bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron;
 9 To execute upon them the judgment written: this honour have all his saints. Praise ye the LORD.

Tamely and inexpressively translated by Dryden :

"Pollio my rural verse vomachus to read.
 My Pollio writes himself."

O what a falling off is here !
 Servius, in his comment on nova says, magna, miranda. Nova means great, admirable.

So on Novum Nectar, Eccl. v. ver. 71, he says, id est, magna dulcedo : nectar of excellent flavour.

[Congregation of saints.] The Israelites, who were, by profession and by injunction a holy people.

Verse 2. In him that made him] Let them remember in their exultations to give all glory to the Lord; for He is the Author of their being, and of their blessings. And let them know that He is their King also; that they should submit to His authority, and be guided and regulated in their hearts and conduct by His laws.

Verse 3. Let them praise his name in the dance] כחול be-machol, with the pipe, or some kind of wind music, classed here with תוף toph, the tabour or drum, and קנור kinnor, the harp. מַחֹל machol, says Parkhurst, "some secular wind instrument of music, with holes, as a flute, pipe, or flûte, from מַחַל chal, to make a hole, or opening." I know no place in the Bible where מַחֹל machol, מַחֹלִים machalath, mean dance of any kind; they constantly mean some kind of pipe.

Verse 4. The Lord taketh pleasure in his people] The pleasure or good-will of God is in his people: He loves them ardently, and will load them with His benefits, while they are humble and thankful: for,

He will beautify יְפָאֵר yephaer, He will make fair the meek, אֲנָעִיב anevim, the lovely, the humble, with salvation, מְשַׁלֵּם meshelem, which St. Jerom thus translates, "Et exaltabit manus tuas in Jesu. And he will exalt the meek in Jesus." Whether this rendering be correct or not, there is no other way by which the humbled soul can be exalted, but by Jesus, as the redeeming Saviour.

Verse 5. Let the saints be joyful in glory] Let them be gloriously joyful: seeing themselves so honoured, and so successful, let them be joyful. God has put glory or honour upon them; let them give him the thanks due to His name.

Sing aloud upon their beds.] While they are reclining on their couches. At their festal banquets, let them shout the praises of the Lord. In imitation of this we often have at our public entertainments the following words sung, taken from the Vulgate of Psalm cxv. ver. 1, "NON NOBIS, DOMINE, NON NOBIS; sed NOMINI TUO DA GLORIAM! super MISERICORDIA TUAE VERITATE TUAE. NOT UNTO US, O LORD, NOT UNTO US, BUT UNTO THY NAME give glory, for Thy mercy, and for Thy truth's sake. Let them mingle their feasting with Divine songs. This reclining on couches while they took their food, is still practised in Asiatic countries.

Verse 6. Let the high praises of God] Let them sing songs the most sublime, with the loudest noise consistent with harmony.

And a two-edged sword in their hand] Perhaps there is an allusion here to the manner in which the Jews were obliged to labour in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem: "every one with one of his hands wrought in the work, and with the other hand held a weapon," Neh. iv. 17.

The two-edged sword, in Hebrew, is פִּיּוֹחַ pi-oth, "mouth, mouths."

Verse 7. To execute vengeance upon the heathen] This may refer simply to their purpose of defending themselves to the uttermost, should their enemies attack them while building their wall: and they had every reason to believe that God would be with them; and that, if their enemies did attack them, they should be able to inflict the severest punishment upon them.

Punishments upon the people] The unfaithful and treacherous Jews; for we find that some, even of their nobles, had joined with Sanballat and Tobiah, see Neh. vi. 17—19. And it appears also that many of them had formed alliances with those heathens, which were contrary to the law. See Neh. xiii. 15—29.

Verse 8. To bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron] That is, if these kings, governors of provinces, and chiefs among the people, had attacked them, God would have enabled them to defeat them, and take their generals prisoners, and lead them in triumph to Jerusalem. It is certain, also, that in the times of the Maccabees the Jews had many signal victories over the Samaritans, Philistines, and Moabites; and over Antiochus, king of Syria. See the books of the Maccabees. To these the Psalmist may here refer in a hyperbolic way, not unusual in poetry and in songs of triumph.

Verse 9. To execute upon them the judgments written] In Deut. vii. 1, &c. God promises His people complete victory over all their enemies, and over the heathen. God repeatedly promises such victories to His faithful people; and this is, properly speaking, the judgment written, i. e. foretold.

This honour have all his saints] They shall all be supported, defended, and saved, by the Lord. Israel had this honour, and such victories over their enemies, while they continued faithful to their God. When they relapsed into iniquity, their enemies prevailed against them: they were defeated, their city taken, their Temple burnt to the ground, more than a million of themselves slaughtered, and the rest led into captivity; and, scattered through the world, they continue without king, or temple, or true worship, to the present day.

"But do not these last verses contain a promise that all the nations of the earth shall be brought under the dominion of the Church of Christ; that all heathen and ungodly kings shall be put down, and pious men put in their places?"—I do not think so. I believe God never intended that His church should have the civil government of the world. His church, like its Founder and Head, will never be a ruler and divider among men. The men who, under pretence of superior sanctity, affect this, are not of God: the truth of God is not in them; they are puffed up with pride, and fall into the condemnation of the devil. Wo unto the inhabitants of the earth, when the church takes the civil government of the world into its hands! Were it possible that God should trust religious people with civil government, anarchy would soon ensue; for every professed believer in Christ would consider himself on a par with any other and every other believer—the right to rule, and the necessity to obey, would be immediately lost, and every man would do what was right in his own eyes; for where the grace of God makes all equal, who can presume to say, I have Divine authority to govern my fellows? The Church of Rome has claimed this right; and the pope, in consequence, became a secular prince: but the nations of the world have seen the vanity and iniquity of the claim, and refused allegiance. Those whom it did govern, with force and with cruelty did it rule them; and the odious yoke is now universally cast off. Certain enthusiasts and hypocrites, not of that church, have also attempted to set up a fifth monarchy, a civil government by the saints!—and diabolic saints they were. To such pretenders God gives neither countenance nor support. The secular and spiritual government, God will ever keep distinct: and the church shall have no power but that of doing good; and this only in proportion to its holiness, heavenly-mindedness, and piety to God. That the verses above may be understood in a spiritual sense, as applicable to the influence of the word of God preached, may be seen in the following Analysis.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FORTY-NINTH PSALM.

In this Psalm the saints of God are excited to give due thanks.

I. From the grace and favour received from God, ver. 1—5.
 II. For the glory and privileges they shall receive, ver. 5—9.

1. Let Israel rejoice, &c. The saints. Which he amplifies:

1. The saints. For praise is not comely in the mouth of sinners.

2. The quality of the song. A new song. By renewed men.

3. From the place in which it must be done. The public congregation.

PSALM CL.

All are invited to praise God in every possible way, 1-4.

PRAISE ye the LORD. Praise God in his sanctuary; praise him in the firmament of his power.

2^b Praise him for his mighty acts: praise him according to his excellent greatness.

a Heb. Hallelujah.—b Psa. 145. 4, 6.—c Deut. 3. 24.—d Or, cornet. Psa. 93. 6. e Psa. 81. 2. & 149. 3.—f Exod. 15. 30.

4. From the manner. With alacrity.

5. From the object. God their Creator and King. Let Israel rejoice, &c.

And this part he concludes with a strong reason:—

1. For the Lord taketh pleasure, &c. He loves those who love Him, those who most resemble Him in holiness and purity.

2. He will beautify the meek, &c. The people who trust Him He will save.

II. And now he describes their future glory.

1. Let the saints, &c. None others will He beautify.

2. Let them rejoice, &c. The mansions prepared for them in heaven. There they rest from labour, but not from praise.

Their work is twofold. Present and future.

1. Present. The high praises, &c. The highest that can be thought of.

2. For the future. Let a two-edged sword, &c. When Christ shall come to judgment, the saints at the last shall be judges.

Then the exercises of this judiciary power shall be,—

1. To execute vengeance, &c. To judge them to punishment.

2. To bind their kings with chains, &c. The phrase is metaphorical. Bind him hand and foot, &c. Matt. xxii. Christ's iron sceptre shall bruise the head of His enemies.

3. To execute upon them the judgment written, &c. Against evil-doers.

He concludes with an acclamation. This glory, of sitting with Christ and judging the world, is the glory of all his saints. Hallelujah.

NOTES ON PSALM CL.

This Psalm is without title and author in the Hebrew, and in all the ancient Versions. It is properly the full chorus of all voices and instruments in the temple, at the conclusion of the grand Hallelujah, to which the five concluding Psalms belong.

Verse 1. Praise God in his sanctuary] In many places we have the compound word הלל-יהוה Halelu-Jah, praise ye Jehovah: but this is the first place in which we find הלל-אל Halelu-El, praise God, or the strong God. Praise Him who is Jehovah, the infinite and self-existent Being; and praise Him who is God, El, or Elohim, the great God in covenant with mankind, to bless and save them unto eternal life.

In his sanctuary.—In the Temple; in whatever place is dedicated to His service. Or, in his holiness, through His own holy influence in your hearts.

The firmament of his power.] Through the whole expanse, to the utmost limits of His power. As רקיקי rakiâ is the firmament or vast expanse that surrounds the globe, and probably that in which all the celestial bodies of the solar system are included, it may have that meaning here. Praise Him whose power and goodness extends through all worlds: and let the inhabitants of all those worlds share in the grand chorus, that it may be universal.

Verse 2. For his mighty acts] Whether manifested in creation, government, mercy, or justice.

His excellent greatness.] כבוד גדלו ke-rob gadelo, according to the multitude of His magnitude, or of His majesty. ארבע מנות arבע מנות muclenot חן; After the manifoldness of his meekness. After the meekness of his greatness.—OLD PSALTER. Let the praise be such as is becoming so great, so holy, and so glorious a Being.

Verse 3. The sound of the trumpet] שופר shopfar, from its noble, cheering, and majestic sound; for the original has this ideal meaning.

With the psaltery] נבל nebel; the naba, a hollow stringed instrument; perhaps like the guitar, or the old symphony.

And harp.] קנור kinnor, another stringed instrument, played on with the hands or fingers.

Verse 4. Praise him with the timbrel] תוף toph, drum, tabret, or tom-tom, or tympanum, of the ancients; a skin stretched over a broad hoop; perhaps something like the tambourine. Anglo-Saxon.—זית-באמ, the glad pipe. Taburna.—OLD PSALTER.

And dance] מחול machol, the pipe. The Craude.—OLD

3 Praise him with the sound of the trumpet: praise him with the psaltery and harp.

4 Praise him with the timbrel and dance: praise him with stringed instruments and organs.

5 Praise him upon the loud cymbals: praise him upon the high sounding cymbals.

6 Let every thing that hath breath praise the LORD. Praise ye the LORD.

g Or, pipe. Psa. 149. 2.—h Psa. 33. 2. & 92. 3. & 144. 2. Isa. 30. 30.—i Chron. 15. 16, 19, 23. & 16. 5. & 23. 1, 6.

Psalter; a species of violin. It never means dance, see the note on Psa. cxlix. 3. Croth, signifies a saddle in Welsh.

Stringed instruments] טרין minnim. This literally signifies strings put in order; perhaps a triangular kind of hollow instrument on which the strings were regularly placed, growing shorter and shorter till they came to a point. This would give a variety of sounds from a deep base to a high treble. In an ancient MS. Psalter before me, David is represented in two places, playing on such an instrument. It may be the sambuck, or psaltery, or some such instrument.

Organs.] ארג uggab. Very likely the syrens, or mouth organ; Pan's pipe; both of the ancients and moderns. The flutula, septem disparibus nodis conjuncta, made of seven pieces of cane, or thick straw, of unequal lengths, applied to the lips, each blown into, according to the note intended to be expressed. This instrument is often met with in the ancient buolic or pastoral writers.

Verse 5. Loud cymbals] צלצלים tsaltsalim. Two hollow plates of brass, which being struck together, produced a sharp clanging sound. This instrument is still in use. What the high-sounding cymbals meant I know not; unless those of a larger make, struck above the head, and consequently emitting a louder sound.

Verse 6. Let every thing that hath breath] Either to make a vocal noise, or a sound by blowing into pipes, flutes, futes, trumpets, &c. Let all join together; and put forth all your strength, and all your skill, in sounding the praises of Jehovah; and then let a universal burst with HALLELUJAH close the grand ceremony. It is evident that this Psalm has no other meaning than merely the summoning up all the voices, and all the instruments, to complete the service in FULL CHORUS.

Of such peculiar importance did the Book of Psalms appear to our blessed Lord and His apostles, that they have quoted nearly fifty of them several times in the New Testament. There is scarcely a state in human life that is not distinctly marked in them; together with all the variety of experience which is found among not merely pious Jews, but among Christians, the most deeply acquainted with the things of Christ.

The minister of God's word, who wishes to preach experimentally, should have frequent recourse to this Sacred Book; and by considering the various parts that refer to Jesus Christ, and the Christian church, he will be able to build up the people of God on their most holy faith; himself will grow in grace, and in the knowledge of God; and he will ever have an abundance of the most profitable matter for the edification of the church of Christ.

ANALYSIS OF THE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH PSALM.

This Psalm is the same with the former. In the hundred and forty-eighth all creatures are invited to praise God. In the hundred and forty-ninth, men especially, and those who are in the church; but in this, that they praise Him with all kinds of instruments.

I. An invitation to praise God, which word he repeats thirteen times according to the thirteen attributes of God, as the Rabbins reckon them.

II. That this be done with all sorts of instruments, intimating that it is to be performed with all the care, zeal, and ardency of affection.

I. Throughout the Psalm he calls on men to praise God. 1. Praise God in his sanctuary. Or in your hearts, which are the temples of the Holy Ghost.

2. Praise him in the firmament, &c. His magnificence when He sits on His throne. Some understand the church by it, in which His saints shine as stars in the firmament.

3. Praise him for his mighty acts, &c. The works of His power.

4. Praise him according, &c. Whereby he excels all things; he being absolutely great, they only comparatively so. II. The prophet desires that no way be omitted by which we may shew our zeal and ardency in praising Him.

1. Praise him with the sound of the trumpet, &c. An instrument used in their solemn feasts.

2. Praise him with the psaltery, &c. And with these they sing so that there is also music with the voice.

PSALM CLI.

3. Praise him with the timbrel, &c. In the quire with many voices.

4. Praise him with stringed instruments, &c. Lutes, viols, organs, &c.

5. Praise him upon the high sounding cymbals, &c. An instrument which yields a loud sound, as bells among us. His conclusion is of universal reference. Let every thing, &c.

1. Every thing that hath breath, &c. That hath faculty, or power to do it.

2. Every thing that hath life, &c. Whether spiritual, as angels; or animal, as man and beasts. Or, metaphorically, such as, though inanimate, may be said to praise God, because they obey His order and intention. Thus, all things praise God, because all things that have life or being derive it immediately from Himself.

Masoretic Notes on the Book of Psalms.
Number of verses two thousand five hundred and twenty-seven. Middle verse, Psalm lxxviii. 36. Sections, nineteen.

At the end of the Syriac we have this colophon:—
"The hundred and fifty Psalms are completed. There are five books, fifteen Psalms of degrees, and sixty of praises. The number of verses is four thousand eight hundred and thirty-two. There are some who have added twelve others; but we do not need them. And may God be praised for ever!"

At the end of the Arabic, is the following:—
The end of the five books of Psalms. The first book ends with the fortieth Psalm; the second with the seventieth Psalm; the third with the eightieth Psalm; the fourth ends with the hundred and fifteenth; and the fifth with the last Psalm, i. e. the hundred and fiftieth.

Besides these hundred and fifty Psalms, there is one additional in the Syriac, Septuagint, Æthiopic, and Arabic, of which it will be necessary to say something, and to give a translation.

1. The Psalm is not found in the Hebrew, nor in the Chaldee, nor in the Vulgate.
2. It is found, as stated above, in the Syriac, Septuagint, Æthiopic, and Arabic; but not in the Anglo-Saxon, though Dom. Calmet has stated the contrary. But I have not heard of it in any MS. of that Version; nor is it in Spelman's printed copy.

3. It is mentioned by Apollinaris, Athanasius, Euthymius, Vigilius Tapscensis, and St. Chrysostom.
4. It has never been received either by the Greek or Latin church; nor has it ever been considered as canonical.
5. It is certainly very ancient, stands in the Codex Alexandrinus, and has been printed in the Paris and London Polyglots.

6. Though the Greek is considered the most authentic copy of this Psalm, yet there are some things in the Syriac and Arabic necessary to make a full sense. The Arabic alone states the manner of Goliath's death.

The title is, "A Psalm in the hand-writing of David, beyond the number of the Psalms, composed by David when he fought in single combat with Goliath." I shall make it as complete as I can from the different Versions.

PSALM CLI.

I WAS the least among my brethren; and the youngest in my father's house; and I kept also my father's sheep.

2 My hands made the organ; and my fingers jointed the psaltery.

3 And who told it to my LORD? [Arab. And who is he who taught me?] The LORD himself, he is my Master, and the Hearer of all that call upon him.

4 He sent his angel, and took me away from my father's sheep; and anointed me with the oil of his anointing. [Others, the oil of his mercy.]

5 My brethren were taller and more beautiful than I; nevertheless the LORD delighted not in them.

6 I went out to meet the Philistine, and he cursed me by his idols.

7 [In the strength of the LORD I cast three stones at him. I smote him in the forehead, and felled him to the earth.] Arab.

8 And I drew out his own sword from its sheath, and cut off his head, and took away the reproach from the children of Israel.

If we were sure this was David's composition, we should not be willing to see it out of the number of the Psalms, or standing among the apocryphal writings. As a matter of curiosity, I insert it; as, if a forgery, it is very ancient: and I leave it to the intelligent Reader to add his own Notes, and form his own Analysis.

The subscription to the Syriac says, some add twelve more. The Codex Alexandrinus has fourteen more. They are the following:—

1. The Song of Moses and the children of Israel, Exod. xv. 1, &c.
2. Ditto, from Deut. xxxii. 1, &c.
3. The Song of Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 1, &c.
4. The Prayer of Isaiah, Isa. xxvi. 9, &c.
5. The Prayer of Jonah, Jonah ii. 3, &c.
6. The Prayer of Habakkuk, Hab. iii. 2, &c.
7. The Prayer of Hezekiah, Isa. xxxviii. 10, &c.
8. The Prayer of Manasseh, see the Apocrypha.
9. The Prayer of Azarias, or of the Three Children.—Apocrypha.
10. The Hymn of our Fathers, see the Benedicite omnia opera in the Liturgy.
11. The Magnificat, or Song of the Blessed Virgin, Luke i. 46, &c.
12. The Nunc dimittis, or Song of Simeon, Luke ii. 29, &c.
13. The Prayer of Zacharias, Luke i. 68, &c.
14. The Ypros tudivos, or Morning Hymn used in the service of the Greek Church.

My old Psalter seems to have copied such authority as the Codex Alexandrinus; for it has added several similar pieces after the hundred and fiftieth Psalm, where we read Explicit Psalmos, incipit canticum Ysaie.

1. The Hymn of Isaiah, Isa. xii. 1, &c.
2. The Prayer of Hezekiah, Isa. xxxviii. 10—20, inclusive.
3. The Prayer of Hannah, 1 Sam. ii. 1, &c.
4. The Song of Moses at the Red sea, Exod. xv. 1—19.
5. The Prayer of Habakkuk.
6. The Song of Moses, Deut. xxxii. 1—43.
7. The Magnificat, or Song of the Blessed Virgin, Luke i. 46—55.
8. The Ten Commandments.
9. There are several curious maxims, &c. which follow the Commandments; such as Seven verkes of Mercy. Seven gastely verkes of mercy. Seven Virtues. The keeping of the five senses. Fourteen points of trouthe. Another head, which is torn off. Lastly, Some godly advices in poetry, which terminate the book.

I suppose these hymns were added on the same principle that the General Assembly of the Kirk of Scotland, added, by an act of 1749 and 1750, a number of verses and portions of the Sacred Writings (among which are several of the above,) to their authorized Version of the Psalms of David in metre, to be sung in all kirks and families.

The Analysis, in many instances, I have greatly shortened, in order to compress this Part as much as possible; and many of them I have wholly re-modded, and written anew.

SKETCH OF THE

LIFE AND CHARACTER OF DAVID.

WHEN the historical books of the Old Testament were under consideration, I formed the resolution to say but little on those parts where the history of David is concerned, till I should come to the end of the Psalms, where, if I did not give a general history of his life, I might at least draw his character. But so many facts in David's history were found to require illustration, I was obliged often to anticipate my design, and enter into discussions, which I had hoped to be able to produce with good effect, at the end of his writings. I must, therefore, refer back to several particulars in the Books of Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles, which concern the history of this most extraordinary man; and the objections produced against his spirit and conduct, by persons not friendly to Divine revelation.

When I have found David to blame I have not palliated his conduct; and though it is with me a maxim to lean to the most favourable side, when examining the characters of men; yet I hope I have no where served the cause of Antinomianism, which I abominate, nor endeavoured to render any thing morally evil, venial, because it was found in the conduct of a religious man, or a prophet. Vice must never be countenanced, though individuals, on the whole highly respectable, suffer by its disclosure; which disclosure should take place only when the interests of religion and truth absolutely require it.

David, Doud, or Daoud דָּוִד, the son of Jesse, of an obscure family in the tribe of Judah, and of the inconsiderable village of Bethlehem, in the same tribe, was born, according to the best accounts, A. M. 2919, B. C. 1085. He was the youngest of eight sons, and was keeper of his father's sheep. David was descended from Jacob by his son Judah, in that line which united both the regal and sacerdotal functions; and in his own person were conjoined the regal and prophetic offices. It is supposed he was anointed by Samuel, about A. M. 2934, when he was but about fifteen years of age; and that he slew Goliath in A. M. 2942, when he was in the twenty-third or twenty-fourth year of his age. He became king of Judah after the death of Saul, A. M. 2949; and king of all Israel, A. M. 2956, when he was about thirty-seven years of age; and died A. M. 2999, B. C. 1015, when he was about seventy-one years old.

He is often mentioned by the Asiatic writers, and by Mohammed, in the Koran, in these words,—“Daoud slew Goliath (Goliath);—and God gave him a kingdom and wisdom, and taught him whatsoever he wished to know.”

Hussain Vaez, one of the commentators on the Koran, observes on the above passage, “That Goliath was of such an enormous size, that his armour, which was of iron, weighed one thousand pounds; and that his helmet alone weighed three hundred; nevertheless David slung a stone with such force as to break through the helmet, pierce the skull, and beat out the Philistine's brains.

“God gave him the gift of prophecy, and the Book of Ziboor, (Psalms;) and taught him to make hair and sackcloth, which was the work of the prophets; and instructed him in the language of birds, which, with the stones of the field, were obedient to him: and iron was softened by his hands. During the forty days which he spent in bewailing his sins, plants grew where he watered the ground with his tears.”

The Mohammedans all allow that the Ziboor, or Book of Psalms, was given to David by immediate inspiration; and that it contains 150 sourats, or chapters. His skill in music is also proverbial among the Mohammedans. Hence, some verses in the Anvari Soheety, which are to this effect: “You decide the greatest difficulties with as much ease as Daoud touched the chords of his lyre, when he chaunted his Psalms.”

If we could persuade the Mohammedans that the Book of Psalms which we now possess, was the real work of David, something would be gained towards their conversion. But they say the Jews have corrupted it, as the Christians have the Anjeel (Gospel); and the book which they produce as the Psalms of David, consists of extracts only from the Psalms, with a variety of other matters, which have no relation either to David or his work.

In the Sacred Writings David is presented to our view,—1. As a shepherd; 2. A musician; 3. A skilful military leader; 4. A hero; 5. A king; 6. An ecclesiastical reformer; 7. A prophet; 8. A type of Christ; 9. A poet; and, 10. A truly pious man.

1. David stands before the world in his history and writings as a private person, destitute of ambition, apparently in a low, if not mean, situation in life, contributing to the support of a numerous family, of which he formed a part, by keeping the sheep of his father in the wilderness or champaign country, in the vicinity of Bethlehem. In those times, and in such rocky and mountainous countries as Judea, this situation required a person of considerable address, skill, courage, and muscular strength. The flock must not only be led out and in, to find the proper pasture; but their maladies must be skilfully treated, and they defended against the attacks of wild beasts, than which none could be more formidable for rapacity and strength than the lion and the bear. These were among the savage inhabitants of the country of Judea; and were the destroyers of the flocks, and the terror of the shepherds. The land was also infested with banditti, or lawless solitary rovers who sought by depredations among the flocks, to live at the expense of others. The office, therefore, of a shepherd was neither mean nor unimportant, as a principal part of the property of the Jews consisted in their flocks.

From the ancient history of all civilized nations we learn, that the persons thought qualified for it were such as had a liberal education, good natural parts, highly trustworthy, and courageous. These, most evidently, were all combined in the character of David. That his education was good, his language and skill in music prove; and that his mind was highly cultivated, the depth, sublimity, and purity of his compositions demonstrate; and that his courage and personal strength must have been great, his slaying of the lion and bear that had attacked the flock under his protection, are the clearest proofs.

2. His skill in music was so great as to be proverbial. In this curious art he excelled all his contemporaries, so as, alone, to acquire the character of the sweet singer of Israel. His success in quieting the turbulent and maniacal spirit of Saul, by his performances on the lyre, stands strongly marked in his history; and the effects produced were equal to any mentioned in the now fabulous histories of Greece or Rome. The wondrous harp of Orpheus, (by which beasts and birds were enraptured, and the very stones and trees moved in harmony together, so as to compose of themselves the celebrated city of Thebes,) we may well leave out of the question, as the fable is too gross to be credited; unless we take the exposition of an ancient author, Philodemus, some fragments of whose works have been recovered from the ruins of Herculaneum, from which we learn that the fable of the building of Thebes by the melody of his lyre arose from the fact, that he was a musician who attended the builders, played to them during their labour, by whose contributions he earned a competent support; and caused them to go so lightly through their work that he was hyperbolically said to have built the walls of the city by the power of his music. Nothing can be more natural than this explanation; nor could any thing serve better for the foundation of the fable. Indeed it has been conjectured by one of David's biographers, Dr. Delaney, that the history of David was the origin of that of Orpheus. The coincidence of the times, and the other circumstances alleged by this entertaining writer, have not served to persuade me of the truth of his hypothesis. We can amply support the credit of the Hebrew musician, without impairing the credibility of the history and identity of the person of the ancient Grecian lyricist.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND CHARACTER OF DAVID.

It is not likely, however, that David was a performer on one kind of instrument only. There were many kinds of musical instruments in his time, that were all used in the ordinances of religion, and apparently employed in those parts of it where the compositions of David were used. Calmel and others have properly divided these instruments into three classes. 1. STRINGED instruments. 2. WIND instruments. And 3. Such as were played on by a PLECTRUM.

I. STRINGED instruments. 1. The nabla, or psaltery. 2. The kinnor. 3. The cythera, or azur, an instrument of ten chords. 4. The symphony. 5. The sambuck. And, 6. The minnim.

II. WIND instruments. 1. The chalsotseroth. 2. The shophar, or trumpet. 3. The keren, or horn. 4. The ugab, a species of organ. 5. The masrokita, or syrinx. 6. The machaloth, a species of pipe or fife. 7. The chail, or flute.

III. Instruments which required a PLECTRUM. 1. The toph, a drum, tom tom, or tambourine. 2. The tsaltselim, or sistrum. 3. The shalishim, or triangle. 4. The metsothotshim, a species of bell.

As all these instruments were used in the service of God, and most of them are mentioned in the Psalms, it is very likely that such a consummate musician and poet played on the whole.

3. That David was a skilful military leader requires little proof. When, for the safety of his own life, he was obliged to leave the court of Saul, and become an exile in the wilds of a country so much indebted to his courage and valour, he was under the necessity of associating to himself men of desperate fortunes, and of no character. These, to the amount of four hundred, he so disciplined and managed, as to soften their lawless disposition, repress their propensity to plunder and rapine, so that they never went on any expedition that was not under his direction; and made no inroads but what tended to strengthen the hands of his countrymen, and weaken those of their enemies. Neither by day nor night, so complete was his authority over them, were they permitted even to take a lamb or a kid from the flock of any man, though they had frequent opportunities of doing so in countries so thinly inhabited, and where the flocks were numerous. On the contrary, they were protectors of the different herds which were fed in those parts of the wilderness, where they were obliged to sojourn. The case of Nabal is a proof in point, against which not one rational objection can be raised. To have succeeded in disciplining such a description of men is highly to the credit of his address and skill; especially when we consider that they were composed of such as had run away from the claims of their creditors; from the authority of their masters;—who were distressed in their circumstances, and discontented with the government, or their situation in life, 1 Sam. xxii. 2. I question much whether any of the heroes of the last or present century, from Peter and Fredric the Great, down to Napoleon Bonaparte, destitute of all subsidiary authority, and without any other officer to assist them in the command, could have disciplined four hundred such men; brought them under perfect obedience; and prevented them from indulging their restless and marauding spirit, with so many temptations before their eyes; while prey was so easy to be acquired, and their general privations rendered such supplies necessary.

4. As a hero, David appears very conspicuous, if we take this word in its general acceptation,—a man eminent for bravery. And here his proffering to fight with Goliath, the famous Philistine champion, who had defied and terrified all the hosts of Israel, is at once a proof of his bravery and patriotism. In very remote times, and down to a late period, military etiquette permitted feuds and civil broils to be settled by single combat. In the presence of the hostile armies, previously to the shock of general battle, a man either stepped out from the ranks; or, by a herald, bid defiance to any person in the hostile army, and stipulated certain conditions of combat, in order to spare the effusion of blood; to the exact fulfilment of which he pledged himself and his party. This was done very circumstantially in the case before us. When the Israelites and the Philistines had drawn up their forces in battle array at Ephes-Dammim, a champion of Gath, called Goliath, of gigantic stature and strength, came out of the camp of the Philistines; and stood and cried unto the armies of Israel: "Why are ye come out to set your battle in array? Choose you a man for you, and let him come down to me. If he be able to fight with me, and to kill me, then will we be your servants: but if I prevail against him, and kill him, then shall ye be our servants, and serve us." And he cou-cluded with defying the armies of Israel. Saul, though he was a man of great personal courage, and the whole Israelitish army, were greatly dismayed at this challenge; and the more particularly so, because no man dared to take it up, notwithstanding the king had offered "to enrich the acceptor with great gifts, give him his daughter in marriage, and make his father's house free in Israel," 1 Sam. xvii. 1, &c. David had come to the camp with provisions for his brothers who were in Saul's army; (for it appears that the Israelitish militia bore their own expenses when their services were requisite for the safety of their country;) and, hearing the defiance of the Philistine, proposed to take up his challenge; and, having obtained Saul's consent, went forth, fought with and slew the Philistine in the manner related in the chapter quoted above.

On numerous occasions he signalized himself in the same way: his natural courage, heightened by his constant dependance on God, never forsook him, and was always invincible. He was the life of his kingdom, and the soul of his army; knew well how to distinguish and employ eminent abilities; had the ablest generals; and the address to form a multitude of heroes like himself.

He had a company of champions, or, as they are generally termed, worthies, or mighty men, to the number of thirty-seven. The account given of these (2 Sam. xxiii.) would almost render credible the legend of king Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table; and it is probable that the first idea of that ancient romance was taken from the genuine History of David and his thirty-seven champions.

5. How David would have acquitted himself as a law-giver we cannot tell; for God had taken care to leave nothing of this kind to the wisdom, folly, or caprice of any man. The laws were all made, and the constitution framed, by Jehovah Himself; and no legitimate king of the Jews was permitted to enact any new laws, or abrogate or change the old. The faithful and constitutional king was he who ruled according to the laws already established, as well in religious as in civil matters; for, although the Jewish theocracy was somewhat changed by the election of Saul, yet the monarch was considered only as the vicegerent of the Almighty; and David taking care to abide by the laws as they then were, and governing his subjects accordingly; was said to be after God's own heart; or, a man after God's own heart; and this is the sense in which this phrase is to be understood. And as David took great care that no innovation should be made in the constitution, that the law of God should be made the law of the empire, and ruled according to that law, therefore he was most properly said to be a man after God's own heart, to fulfil all His counsels; and by this faithful attachment to the laws he was contradistinguished from Saul, who, in several respects, changed that law, and made not a few attempts to alter it in some of its most essential principles. On these grounds God rejected him, and chose David.

But as a civil magistrate David's conduct was unimpeachable: his court was regulated according to the maxims of the Divine law; and the universal prosperity of his kingdom is a decisive proof that judgment and justice were faithfully administered in it. The strong did not oppress the weak, nor the rich the poor: and, although the empire was seldom at rest from war during his reign, yet it was so conducted that his subjects were neither oppressed nor impoverished. Many of his Psalms bear testimony to these matters, as they contain appeals to God relative to the sincerity of his heart, the uprightness of his conduct, and his impartiality in administering justice among the people. To David the cry of the distressed was never uttered in vain; and the curse of the widow and fatherless was never pronounced against him for a neglect of justice, or partiality in administering it according to the laws.

6. David, I think, may be fitly ranked among ecclesiastical reformers; for, although the grand body of the Jewish religion was so firmly fixed, that it could not be changed, yet there were several circumstances in the form of Divine worship that appear to have been left to the pious discretion of the Jewish prophets, priests, and kings, to improve as time and circumstances might require. That God might be constantly worshipped; that the Jewish ritual might be carefully observed, and all the divinely appointed ecclesiastical persons have their proper share of the public service, David divided the thirty-eight thousand Levites into courses, assigning to each course its particular service, 1 Chron. xxiii. He did the same by the priests, porters, singers, &c. and appointed twelve captains to serve each a month, and have the rule and inspection of the different courses and orders, to see that the worship of God was properly conducted. The twenty-third, twenty-fourth, twenty-fifth, twenty-sixth, and twenty-seventh chapters of the first book of Chronicles, give a very detailed and circumstantial account of the improvements which David made in the form and execution of the different parts of public worship. Almost every pious king of Judah had matters of this kind to regulate and settle: but it appears that David's plan was so perfect, that it became a standard; and when any decay took place in the form of public worship, the chief aim of the succeeding kings was, to reduce every thing to the form in which David had left it. This is a full proof of the perfection of his plan.

7. That David was favoured with the gift of prophecy is, I think, universally allowed. And although there have been prophets pro tempore, who were not remarkable for piety, yet there never was one, on whom the prophetic Spirit rested, that was not truly pious. All such had deep communion with God: their souls were upright, and their bodies became temples of the Holy Ghost. This was most assuredly the case with David: the prophetic Spirit overshadowed and rested upon him; in general he held deep communion with God; and, even in his Psalms, we can scarcely say when he does not prophesy. Some learned and very pious men consider the whole Psalter as a tissue of prophecies concerning Christ and His kingdom; and in this way our Lord and His apostles quote many of them. Could we really ascertain which were David's, perhaps we might find them all of this description; though the subjects to which they apply might not be so clearly distinct: but there were so many written before, at, under, and after, the Babylonian Captivity, that are become so mixed with those of David, that it is difficult, and in some cases impossible, to ascertain them. Where he evidently prophesies of Christ and His church, I have particularly remarked it in the Notes. I have not gone so far as some learned and pious Commentators have gone, in applying the Psalms to Christ and His church, because I was not satisfied that they have such reference. Even those which are of David's composition, and have reference to Christ, are so mixed up with his own state, that it is often impossible to say when the Psalmist prophesies of the Root of Jesse, and when he simply refers to his own circumstances: and, on the whole, I am only sure of those which are thus quoted by our Lord and His apostles.

8. That David was a type of Christ is proved by the Scriptures themselves, see Jer. xxx. 9, They shall serve the Lord their God, and DAVID their king, whom I will raise up unto them. Ezek. xxxiv. 23, And I will set up one shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant DAVID; he shall feed them, and he shall be their Shepherd. Ver. 24, And I the Lord will be their God, and my servant DAVID a prince among them. See also Ezek. xxxvii. 24, and compare this with Jer. xxiii. 4, 5, John x. 11, Heb. xiii. 20, 1 Pet. ii. 25, and v. 4. Hosea, chap. iii. ver. 5, speaks in the same way, Afterward shall the children of Israel return, and seek the Lord their God, and DAVID their King; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days. That none of these Scriptures speak of David, the son of Jesse, is evident from this, that Hosea lived three hundred years after David, Jeremiah four hundred and seventy-three, and Ezekiel four hundred and ninety-three.

But in what was David a type of Christ? Principally, I think, in the name דָּוִד David, which signifies the beloved one, that one more loved than any other; and this is what is expressed from heaven by God Himself, when He says, This is my Son, יְהוָה אֱהַיְתָנִי, or ὁ εὐδοκῶσα, THE BELOVED ONE, in whom I have delighted. This is the genuine David; the man after my own heart. He was His type also, in being a royal prophet,—one in whom the Holy Spirit dwelt, and one who was a truly spiritual king; a character that seldom occurs in the history of the world.

Were we to consult those who have laboured on the types, we might find all the following resemblances stated; and, in their way, wondrously proved! David was a type of Christ: 1. In his originally mean appearance. 2. In his mean education. 3. In his unction. 4. In his eminent qualifications. 5. In his various persecutions. 6. In his enemies. 7. In his distresses. 8. In his deliverances. 9. "In his victories and conquests. And 10. In his taking to wife the adulterous woman, and thereby bringing guilt upon himself."—See Parkhurst. All the first nine particulars might be controverted, as having any thing in them exclusively typical; and the tenth is horrible, if not blasphemous. No analogies, no metaphorical meanings, can support this abominable position. I have already given my opinion:—to elucidate the particulars above I shall never attempt.

9. But the highest merit of David, and that which seems to have been almost exclusively his own, was his poetic genius. As a Divine poet, even God Himself had created none greater, either before or since. In this science and gift he is therefore the chef-d'œuvre of the Almighty. Moses wrote some fine verses; Solomon, two fine poems, an ode, and an elegy. The prophets, particularly Isaiah, in several chapters of his prophecy; Jeremiah, in his Book of Lamentations; and some of the minor prophets, in a few select verses; have given us specimens of a profound poetical genius: but we have no whole like that of David. The sublimity,—the depth,—the excessive fancy,—the discursive power,—the vast compass of thought,—the knowledge of heaven and earth, of God and nature,—the work of the Spirit,—the endlessly varied temptations of Satan,—the knowledge of the human heart,—the travail of the soul,—the full comprehension of the prosopœia or personification of the whole of inanimate nature,—of every virtue and of every vice,—the immense grasp of thought embodying and arranging, and afterwards clothing in suitable language, the vast assemblage of ideas furnished by the natural and spiritual world;—in a word, the spirit of poetry, the true genie créateur, the πνεῦμα τοῦ ποιῆτος, framework of the framer,—the poetry of the poet,—not the fiction of the inventive genius; but the production of truth, hidden before in the bosom of God and nature, and exhibited in the most pleasing colours, with the most impressive pathos, and irresistible harmonic diction:—these qualities,—these supra-mundane excellencies, are found in no other poet that ever graced the annals of the world: they exist in their perfection, only in David king of Israel. What is peculiarly remarkable in David is, he has succeeded to the very highest degree in every species of poetic composition, that has for its object the glory of God and the welfare of man; and there is not one poet who has succeeded him, that has not failed when he attempted to sing of God, the punishment and rewards of the future world, and the unsearchable riches of Christ.

The hymns which he produced have been the general song of the universal church; and men of all nations find in these compositions a language at once suitable to their feelings, and expressive of their highest joys and deepest sorrows, as well as of all the endlessly varied wishes and desires of their hearts. Hail, thou sweet singer of Israel! thy voice is still heard in all the assemblies of the saints.

In my Notes on different places of the Psalter I have taken the opportunity of pointing out some of the beauties of these incomparable productions. But I must here state that the true excellence of this work will never be fully known, till it be translated according to its rythmical order, or hemistichic plan, in which the harmony of its versification will be felt, and the whole be much more easily apprehended and practically understood. Had we a second Louth to take up David, as the first did Isaiah, the church of God would have the utmost reason to rejoice; and each devout penitent and believer would be enabled to sing more with the spirit and the understanding, than they can possibly do in taking up the best translation of the Psalms, whether metrical or prosaic, now extant.

We have no less than four versions, two in prose, and two in verse, given by public authority to the good people of this land. Of the former there is one in the public service of the church, compiled out of various translations; and one by king James's translators, in the authorized version of the Bible: the latter indubitably the better of this class. The two metrical Versions are by Sternhold, Hopkins, and others, and by Brady and Tate. The former is the most just and literal: but none of them worthy of the subject. All these have already passed under review.

10. That there should have been any doubt entertained as to the piety of David appears very strange: most certainly, no man ever gave more unequivocal proofs of piety and devotedness to God than he gave. It was utterly impossible that any man could have written such Psalms as David has, whose soul was not deeply imbued with the Spirit of holiness; and this appears not only in his writings, but in his general conduct. That in some cases he grievously departed from God, who would attempt to deny? His adultery with Bathsheba, and the consequent murder of the brave Uriah, were crimes of a very deep dye. I can say no more on these, than I have said already in my Notes on 2 Sam. xi. and in the Observations at the end of that Chapter; and to these I beg to refer the Reader. His pretended cruelty to the Ammonites has been adduced as a proof of a hard and wicked heart.—See the Notes on 2 Sam. xii. 31, where this charge is shewn to be unfounded. Whatever obliquities have been charged against him, from facts recorded in his history, have already been amply considered where the facts are mentioned. But all these, make the worst of them we can, are but insulated facts;—they never existed in habit, they made no part of his general character; and his repentance on the account of that which was his great blot, was the deepest and most exemplary we have on record. If a man have fallen into sin, and made the speediest return to God by confession and repentance, he proves that that transgression is no part of his character. He does not repeat it; he loathes and abhors it. It requires malice against God's Book to say this crime was a part of David's character. Adultery and murder were no part of the character of David: he fell once into the first, and endeavoured to cover it by the death of an innocent man:—but who can prove that he ever repeated either? While it is granted that a man of God should never sin against his Maker, it must also be granted that, in a state of probation, a holy man may sin;—that such may be renewed unto repentance, and sin against their God no more, are also possible cases. And it is not less possible that a holy man of God may fall into sin, continue in it, repeat it and re-repeat it, and rise no more. Of this dreadful possibility the Scripture gives ample proof. There are but few in the church of God that have kept their garments unspotted from the world, and retained their first love:—but it should have been otherwise; and had they watched unto prayer, they would not have fallen. I only contend for the possibility, not for the necessity, of the case. And I contend, that in the case of David, a life so long, so holy, so useful, and (except in these instances) so truly exemplary, entitles him to the character of a holy man of God; and, allowing but a little for the dispensation under which he lived, one of the holiest, if not the holiest, potentates that ever wore a crown, or wielded a sceptre. For the supposition that on his death-bed he retracted the promise of life to Shimei, see the Notes on I Kings ii. 9, where he is amply vindicated.

SKETCH OF THE LIFE AND CHARACTER OF DAVID.

On the whole, I can cheerfully sum up all in the words of Dr. Delaney, "David was a true believer, a zealous adorer of God, teacher of His laws and worship, and inspircer of His praise. A glorious example, a perpetual and inexhaustible fountain of true piety. A consummate and unequalled hero, a skilful and fortunate captain, a steady patriot, a wise ruler, a faithful, generous, and magnanimous friend; and, what is yet rarer, a no less generous and magnanimous enemy. A true penitent, a Divine musician, a sublime poet, and an inspired prophet. By birth a peasant, by merit a prince. In youth a hero, in manhood a monarch, and in age a saint."

The matter of Bathsheba and Uriah are almost his only blot. There he sinned deeply; and no man ever suffered more in his body, soul, and domestic affairs, than he did in consequence. His penitence was as deep and as extraordinary as his crime; and nothing could surpass both, but that eternal mercy that took away the guilt, assuaged the sorrow, and restored this most humbled transgressor to character, holiness, happiness, and heaven. Reader, let the God of David be exalted for ever!

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

PROVERBS OF SOLOMON,

THE SON OF DAVID, KING OF ISRAEL.

THERE has scarcely been any dispute concerning either the Author or Divine authority of this Book, either in the Jewish or Christian church: all allow that it was written by Solomon; and the general belief is, that he wrote the book by Divine inspiration.

It has, indeed, been supposed, that Solomon collected the major part of these proverbs from those who had preceded him, whether Hebrews or Heathens: but the latter opinion has been controverted, as derogating from the authority of the book. But this supposition has very little weight; for, whatever of truth is found in or among men, came originally from God; and if He employed an inspired man to collect those rays of light, and embody them for the use of His church, He had a right so to do, and to claim His own wheresoever found; and, by giving it a new authentication, render it more useful in reference to the end for which it was originally communicated. God is the Father of lights; and from Him came all true wisdom, not only in its discursive teachings, but in all its detached maxims for the government and regulation of life. I think it very likely that Solomon did not make them all: but he collected every thing of this kind within his reach; and what was according to the Spirit of truth, by which he was inspired, he condensed in this book; and as the Divine Spirit gave it, so the providence of God has preserved it, for the use of His church.

That true Light which lightens every man that cometh into the world first taught men to acknowledge Himself as the Fountain and Giver of all good: and then by short maxims, conveyed in terse energetic words, taught them to regulate their conduct in life, in respect to the dispensations of His providence; and in reference to each other in domestic, social, and civil life: and this was done by such proverbs as we find collected in this Book. The different changes that take place in society; the new relations, which in process of time men would bear to each other; the invention of arts and sciences; and the experience of those who had particularly considered the ways of the Lord, and marked the operation of His hands; would give rise to many maxims, differing from the original stock only in their application to those new relations and varying circumstances.

The Heathen who had any connexion with the first worshippers of the Almighty, would observe the maxims by which they regulated the affairs of life, and would naturally borrow from them: and hence those original teachings became diffused throughout the world; and we find there is not an ancient nation on earth that is without its Code of Proverbs, or proverbial maxims. The ancient SANSKRIT is full of them; and they abound in the Persian and Arabic languages, and in all the dialects formed from these, in all the countries of the East. The HEBREW of Vishnoo Sarmas, the Anvari Soheily, the Bahar Danush, Kalila we Duma, and all the other forms of that original work: the fables of Lockman, Aesop, Phaedrus, Avienus, &c. are all collections of proverbs, illustrated by their application to the most important purposes of domestic, social, and civil life.

Those nations with which we are best acquainted have their collections of Proverbs; and perhaps those with whose languages and customs we are unacquainted have theirs also. Messrs. Virdelou and Galand formed a collection of Asiatic Proverbs, and published it in their supplement to the Bibliothèque Orientale de D'Herbelot. This is a collection of very great worth, curiosity, and importance. Mr. J. Ray, F. R. S. formed a collection of this kind, particularly of such as are or have been in use in Great Britain: this is as curious as it is entertaining and useful.

The term PROVERB, proverbium, compounded of pro, for, and verbum, a word, speech, or saying, leads us to an original meaning of the thing itself. It was an allegorical saying, where more was meant than met the eye—a short saying that stood for a whole discourse, the words of which are metaphorical: e. g. this of the Rabbins,—“I have given thee my lamp; give me thy lamp. If thou keep my lamp, I will keep thy lamp: but if thou quench my lamp, I will quench thy lamp.” Here the word lamp is a metaphor, 1. for Divine Revelation; 2. for the human soul. I have given thee my word and Spirit; give me thy soul and heart. If thou observe my word, and follow the dictates of my Spirit, I will regulate thy heart, and keep thy soul from every evil: but if thou disobey my word, and quench my Spirit, I will withdraw my Spirit, leave thee to the hardness and darkness of thy own heart, and send thee at last into outer darkness.—Such as this is properly the proverb; the word which stands for a discourse.

But the Hebrew משלים mishlim, from משל mashal, to rule or govern, signifies a set or collection of weighty, wise, and therefore authoritative sayings, whereby a man's whole conduct, civil and religious, is to be governed; sayings containing rules for the government of life. Or, as the Divine author himself expresses it, in the beginning of the first chapter, the design is to lead men to know wisdom and instruction, to perceive the words of understanding; to receive the instruction of wisdom, justice, and judgment, and equity; to give subtily to the simple, and to the young man knowledge and discretion, ver. 2, 3. This was the design of proverbs; and perhaps it would be impossible to find out a better definition of the design and object of those of Solomon, than is contained in the two preceding verses. See my Dissertation on Parabolical Writing, at the end of the Notes on Matthew, chap. xiii.

Of the three thousand proverbs which Solomon spoke, we have only those contained in this book and in Ecclesiastes; and of the one thousand and five Songs which he made, only the Canticles have arrived at our times: or, in other words, of all his numerous works in divinity, philosophy, morality, and natural history, only the three above mentioned bearing his name, have been admitted into the Sacred Canon. His natural history of trees and plants, of beasts, fowls, and fishes, (for on all these he wrote) is totally lost. Curiosity, which never says it is enough, would give up the three we have for those on the animal and vegetable kingdom, which are lost. What God judged of importance to the eternal interests of mankind is preserved; and perhaps we know the vegetable and animal kingdoms now as well through Linnaeus and Buffon, and their followers, as we should have known them, had Solomon's books on Natural History come down to our times. Others would investigate nature, and to them those researches were left. Solomon spoke by inspiration; and therefore to him Divine doctrines were communicated, that he might teach them to man. Every man in his order.

The Book of Proverbs has been divided into five parts:—

I. A master is represented as instructing his scholar, giving him admonitions, directions, cautions, and exhortations to the study of wisdom, chap. i.—ix.

II. This part is supposed to contain the Proverbs of Solomon, properly so called; delivered in distinct, independent, general sentences. From chap. ix. to xxii. ver. 17.

III. In this part the tutor again addresses himself to his pupil, and gives him fresh admonitions to the study of wisdom; which is followed by a set of instructions, delivered imperatively to the pupil, who is supposed all the while to be standing before him. From chap. xxii. 17, to chap. xxv.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.

IV. This part is distinguished by being a selection of Solomon's Proverbs, made by the men of Hazekiah, conjectured to be Isiah, Hosea, and Micah, who all flourished under that reign. This part, like the second, is composed of distinct unconnected sentences, and extends from chap. xxv. to xxx.

V. The fifth part contains a set of wise expositions and instructions, which Agur, the son of Jakeh, delivered to his pupils Ibbiel and Ucal, chap. xxx. And the thirty-first chapter contains the instruction which a mother, who is not named, gave to Leemuel her son, being earnestly desirous to guard him against vice, to establish him in the principles of justice, and to have him married to a wife of the best qualities. These two last chapters may be considered a kind of Appendix to the Book of Proverbs, see Dr. Taylor: but others suppose that the thirty-first chapter contains Balthazar's words to Solomon, and his commendation of his mother.

There are many repetitions, and some transpositions in the Book of Proverbs, which makes it very probable that they were not all made at the same time, that they are the work of different authors, and have been collected by various hands: but still this sum total is delivered to us by Divine inspiration; and whoever might have been the original authors of distinct parts, the Divine Spirit has made them all its own by handing them to us in this form. Some attribute the collection, i. e. the formation of this collection, to Isaiah; others to Hilkiah, and Shebna the scribe; and others to Ezra.

That Solomon could have borrowed little from his predecessors, is evident from this consideration, that all uninspired ethnic writers, who are famous in history, lived after his times. Solomon began to reign A. M. 2969, which was 239 years before the first Olympiad; 479 before Cyrus, under whom flourished the seven wise men of Greece; 679 before Alexander the Great, under whose reign flourished Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle; and 1011 before the birth of Christ. Therefore, to the Gentiles he could be but little, if at all indebted.

It is impossible for any description of persons to read the Book of Proverbs without profit. Kings and courtiers, as well as those engaged in trade, commerce, agriculture, and the humblest walks of life, may here read lessons of instruction for the regulation of their conduct in their respective circumstances. Fathers, mothers, wives, husbands, sons, daughters, masters, and servants, may here also learn their respective duties: and the most excellent rules are laid down, not only in reference to morality, but to civil policy and economy. Many motives are employed by the wise man to accomplish the end at which he aims: motives derived from honour, interest, love, fear, natural affection, and piety towards God. The principal object he has in view is, to inspire a deep reverence for God, fear of His judgments, and an ardent love for wisdom and virtue. He exhibits injustice, impiety, profligacy, idleness, imprudence, drunkenness, and almost every vice, in such lively colours, as to render every man ashamed of them who has any true respect for his interest, honour, character, or for himself. And as there is nothing so directly calculated to ruin young men, as bad company, debauch, and irregular connexions, he labours to fortify his disciple with the most convincing reasons against all these vices, and especially against indolence, dissipation, and the company of lewd women.

Maxims to regulate life in all the conditions already mentioned, and to prevent the evils already described, are laid down so copiously, clearly, impressively, and in such variety, that every man who wishes to be instructed, may take what he chooses, and among multitudes those which he likes best.

Besides the original Hebrew, the Book of Proverbs exists in the following ancient Versions: the Chaldee, Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and Arabic. But the Septuagint, above all, takes greater liberty with the Sacred Text than any of the rest. It often transposes, changes, and adds; and all these in very considerable degrees; and this is the Version which is quoted in the New Testament. Several of these additions, as well as the most important changes, the reader will find noticed in the following Notes: but to mark them all would require a translation of almost the whole Greek text. How our forefathers understood several passages will be seen by quotations from an ancient MS. in my possession, which begins with this Book, and extends to the conclusion of the New Testament. It is well written upon strong vellum, very large folio; and highly illuminated in the beginning of each book, and first letter of each chapter. The language is more antiquated than in the translation commonly attributed to Wiclif. It was once the property of Thomas à Woodstock, youngest son of Edward III., and brother to John of Gaunt and the Black Prince. I have often quoted this MS. in my Notes on the New Testament.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. The proverbs of Solomon] For the meaning of the word Proverb, see the Introduction; and the dissertation upon parabolical writing at the end of the notes on Matt. xiii. Solomon is the first of the sacred writers whose name stands at the head of his works.

Verse 2. To know wisdom] That is, this is the design of parabolical writing in general: and the particular aim of the present work.

This and the two following verses contain the interpretation of the term parable, and the Author's design in the whole Book. The first verse is the title, and the next three verses an explanation of the nature and design of this very important tract.

Wisdom] חֵכֶמָה chokmah, may mean here, and in every other part of this Book, not only that Divine science by which we are enabled to discover the best end, and pursue it by the most proper means; but also the whole of that heavenly teaching that shews us both ourselves and God, directs us into all truth, and forms the whole of true religion.

And instruction] מוֹסֵר moseh, the teaching that discovers all its parts; to understand, to comprehend the words or doctrines which should be comprehended, in order that we may become wise to salvation.

Verse 3. To receive the instruction] הַשְׁכִּיל ha-sekel, the deliberately weighing of the points contained in the teaching, so as to find out their importance.

Equity] מִשְׁרָיִם mesarim, rectitude. The pupil is to receive wisdom and instruction, the words of wisdom and understanding, justice and judgment, so perfectly as to excel in all. Wisdom itself personified is his teacher; and when God's wisdom teaches, there is no delay in learning.

Verse 4. To give subtilty to the simple] The word simple, from simplex, compounded of stis, without, and ptica, a fold, signifies properly, plain and honest, one that has no bye ends in view; who is what he appears to be; and is opposed to complex, from complicto, to fold together; to make one rope or cord out of many strands: but because honesty and plain dealing are so rare in the world, and none but the truly religious man will practise them, farther than the fear of the law obliges him, hence simple has sunk into a state of progressive deterioration. First, it signified as above, without fold, unmixed, uncompounded: this was its radical meaning. 2dly, as applied to men, it signified innocent, harmless, without disguise. 3dly, as such persons were rather an unfashionable sort of people, it sunk in its meaning to homely, homespun, mean, ordinary. And, fourthly, as worldly men, who were seeking their portion in this life, and had little to do with religion, supposed that wisdom, wit, and understanding, were given to men that they might make the best of them in reference to the things of this life, the word sunk still lower in its meaning, and signified silly, foolish: and there, to the dishonour of our language and morals, it stands! I have taken these acceptations, which I have marked in Italics, out of the first dictionary that came to hand; Martin's: but if I went to Johnson, I might add to SILLY,

4 To give subtilty to the ^d simple, to the young man knowledge and ^e discretion.

5 'A wise man will hear, and will increase learning; and a man of understanding shall attain unto wise counsels:

6 To understand a proverb, and ^f the interpretation; the words of the wise, and their dark sayings.

7 'The fear of the Lord is ^g the beginning of knowledge: but fools despise wisdom and instruction.

not wise, not cunning: and simplicity, that meant at first, as MARTIN defines it, openness, plain dealing, downright honesty, is now degraded to weakness, silliness, foolishness. And they will continue thus degraded, till downright honesty and plain dealing get again into vogue. There are two Hebrew words generally supposed to come from the same root, which in our common Version are rendered the simple מְדַבְּרֵי פֶתַיִם, and מְדַבְּרֵי פֶתַיִם, or מְדַבְּרֵי פֶתַיִם: the former comes from מָדַבּ, to be rash, hasty; the latter from מָדַבּ, to draw aside, seduce, entice. It is the first of these words which is used here, and may be applied to youth; the inconsiderate, the unwary, who, for want of knowledge and experience, act precipitately. Hence the Vulgate renders it parvulus, little ones, young children or little children, as my old MS.; or very babes, as Coverdale. The Septuagint renders it scarcis, those that are without evil; and the Versions in general understand it of those who are young, giddy, or inexperienced.

To the young man] נָעַר nadr, is frequently used to signify such as are in the state of adolescence, grown up boys, very well translated in my old MS. grown fullgrown; what we would now call the grown up lads. These, as being giddy and inexperienced, stand in especial need of lessons of wisdom and discretion. The Hebrew for discretion, מִשְׁמָח, mismah, is taken both in a good and bad sense, as מִשְׁמָח, its root signifies to devise, or imagine; for the device may be either mischief, or the contrivance of some good purpose.

Verse 5. A wise man will hear] I shall not only give such instructions as may be suitable to the youthful and inexperienced, but also to those who have much knowledge and understanding. So said St. Paul:—We speak wisdom among those that are perfect. This and the following verse are connected in the Old MS. and in Coverdale. By hearing the wise man shall come by more wisdom; and by experience he shall be more apt to understand a parable and the interpretation thereof; the words of the wise and the dark speeches of the same.

Verse 6. Dark sayings] חֵידוּת chiduth, enigmas or riddles, in which the Asiatics abounded. I believe parables, such as those delivered by our Lord, nearly express the meaning of the original.

Verse 7. The fear of the Lord] In the preceding verses, Solomon shews the advantage of acting according to the dictates of wisdom; in the following verses, he shews the danger of acting contrary to them. The fear of the Lord signifies that religious reverence which every intelligent being owes to his Creator: and is often used to express the whole of religion, as we have frequently had occasion to remark in different places. But what is religion? The love of God, and the love of man; the former producing all obedience to the Divine will; the latter, every act of benevolence to one's fellows. The love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Spirit produces the deepest religious reverence, genuine piety, and cheerful obedience. To love one's neighbour as himself, is the second great commandment; and as love worketh no ill to one's neighbour; therefore, it is said to be the fulfilling of the law. Without love, there is no obedience; without 8 My son, hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother:

9 For they shall be an ornament of grace unto thy head, and chains about thy neck.

10 My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.

11 If they say, Come with us, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent without cause:

12 Let us swallow them up alive as the grave; and whole, as those that go down into the pit:

13 We shall find all precious substance, we shall fill our houses with spoil:

14 Cast in thy lot among us: let us all have one purse:

15 My son, walk not thou in the way with them; refrain thy foot from their path:

16 For their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood.

17 Surely in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird.

18 And they lay wait for their own blood; they lurk privily for their own lives.

19 So are the ways of every one that is greedy of gain; which taketh away the life of the owners thereof.

20 Wisdom crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets:

21 She crieth in the chief place of concourse, in the openings of the gates: in the city she uttereth her words, saying,

22 How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity? and the scornors delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge?

23 Turn you at my reproof: behold, I will pour out my spirit unto you, I will make known my words unto you.

24 Because I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded; reverence, there is neither caution, consistent conduct, nor perseverance in righteousness.

This fear, or religious reverence, is said to be the beginning of knowledge; תורת רשית, the principle, the first moving influence, begotten in a tender conscience by the Spirit of God. No man can ever become truly wise, who does not begin with God, the Fountain of knowledge; and he whose mind is influenced by the fear and love of God, will learn more in a month than others will in a year.

Fools despise עושי עוילם, evil men.—Men of bad hearts, bad heads, and bad ways.

Verse 8. My son, hear] Father was the title of preceptor, and son that of disciple or scholar, among the Jews. But here the reference appears to be to the children of a family; the father and mother having the principal charge, in the first instance, of their children's instruction. It is supposed that these parents have, themselves, the fear of the Lord, and that they are capable of giving the best advice to their children, and that they set before them a strict example of all godly living. In vain do parents give good advice, if their own conduct be not consistent. The father occasionally gives instruction; he is not always in the family; much of those occupations which are necessary for the family support, is carried on abroad. The mother—she is constantly within doors, and to her the regulation of the family belongs; therefore she has and gives law. The wise man says, in effect, to every child, Be obedient to thy mother within, and carefully attend to the instructions of thy father, that thou may the better see the reasons of obedience; and learn from him how thou art to get thy bread honestly in the world.

Verse 9. An ornament of grace unto thy head, and chains] That is, filial respect and obedience will be as ornamental to thee, as crowns, diadems, and golden chains and pearls, are to others.

Political dignity has been distinguished in many nations by a chain of gold about the neck. Solomon seems here to intimate, if we follow the metaphor, that the surest way of coming to distinguished eminence, in civil matters, is to act according to the principles of true wisdom, proceeding from the fear of God.

Verse 10. If sinners entice thee, consent thou not] אל-תבא אל-תבא, will—not. They can do thee no harm unless they will join in with them. God's eternal purpose with respect to man is, that his will shall be free: or rather, that the will, which is essentially free, shall never be forced, nor be forceable by any power. Nor even the Devil himself can lead a man into sin, till he consents. Were it not so, how could God judge the world!

Verse 11. If they say, Come with us] From all accounts, this is precisely the way in which the workers of iniquity form their partisans, and constitute their marauding societies to the present day.

Let us lay wait for blood] Let us rob and murder.

Let us lurk privily] Let us lie in ambush for our prey.

Verse 12. Let us swallow them up alive] Give them as hasty a death as if the earth were suddenly to swallow them up. This seems to refer to the destruction of a whole village. Let us destroy man, woman, and child; and then we may seize on and carry away the whole of their property; and the booty will be great.

Verse 14. Cast in thy lot] Be a fratrum conjuratus, a sworn brother; and thou shalt have an equal share of all the spoil.

Common sense must teach us, that the words here used are such as must be spoken when a gang of cut-throats, pick-pockets, &c. associate together.

Verse 16. For their feet run to evil] The whole of this verse is wanting in the Septuagint and in the Arabic.

Verse 17. Surely in vain the net is spread in the sight of any bird.] This is a proverb, of which the wise man here makes no particular use. But the meaning does not seem as difficult as some imagine. The wicked are represented as lurking privily for the innocent. It is in this way alone, that they can hope to destroy them, and take their substance; for if their designs were known, proper precautions would be taken against them, for it would be vain to spread the net in the sight of those birds which men wish to ensnare. Attend therefore to my counsels, and they shall never be able to ensnare thee.

Verse 18. They lay wait for their own blood] I believe it is the innocent who are spoken of here; for whose blood and lives these lay wait and lurk privily; certainly not their own, by any mode of construction.

Verse 19. Which taketh away the life] A covetous man is, in effect, and in the sight of God, a murderer: he wishes to get all the gain that can accrue to any or all who are in the same business that he follows; no matter to him how many families starve in consequence. This is the very case with him who sets up shop after shop, in different parts of the same town or neighbourhood, in which he carries on the same business, and endeavours to undersell others in the same trade, that he may get all into his own hand.

Verse 20. Wisdom crieth] Here wisdom is again personified, as it is frequently, throughout this Book: where nothing is meant but the teachings given to man either by Divine Revelation, or the voice of the Holy Spirit in the heart. And this voice of wisdom is opposed to the seducing language of the wicked mentioned above. This voice is every where heard—in public, in private, in the streets, and in the house. Common sense, universal experience, and the law of justice written on the heart, as well as the law of God, testify against rapine and wrong of every kind.

Verse 22. Ye simple ones] עושי פתים, ye who have been seduced and deceived. See on ver. 4.

Verse 23. Turn ye at my reproof] לחכותי le-chokchoti, at my convincing mode of arguing;—attend to my demonstrations. This is properly the meaning of the original word.

I will pour out my spirit unto you] I will express my mynde unto you. COVERDALE. Ich wil spal dringen forth to you my Spirit. Old MS. Bible. If you will hear, ye shall have ample instruction.

Verse 24. Because I have called] These and the following words appear to be spoken of the persons who are described ver. 11—19, who have refused to return from their evil ways till arrested by the hand of justice; and here the wise man points out their deplorable state.

They are now about to suffer, according to the demands of the law, for their depredations. They now wish they had been guided by wisdom, and had chosen the fear of the Lord: but it is too late;—die they must, for their crimes are proved against them; and justice knows nothing of mercy.

This, or something like this, must be the wise man's meaning; nor can any thing spoken here be considered as applying, or applicable, to the eternal state of the persons in question: much less to the case of any man convinced of sin, who is crying to God for mercy. Such persons as the above, condemned to die, may call upon justice for 25 But ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof:

26 I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh:

27 When your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind, when distress and anguish cometh upon you.

28 Then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me:

29 For that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the Lord:

30 They would none of my counsel: they despised all my reproof.

31 Therefore shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own devices.

32 For the turning away of the simple shall slay them, and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them.

33 But whose hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil.

The teacher promises his pupil the highest advantages, if he will follow the dictates of wisdom, 1-9. He shall be happy in his enjoyment, 10, 11. Shall be saved from wicked men, 12-15. And from the snares of bad wives, 16-19. Be a companion of the good and upright; and be in safety in the land, when the wicked shall be rooted out of it, 20-22.

pardon; and they may do this early, earnestly: but they will call in vain. But no poor penitent sinner, on this side of eternity, can call upon God early, or seek Him through Christ Jesus earnestly for the pardon of his sins, without being heard. Life is the time of probation, and while it lasts the vilest of the vile is within the reach of mercy. It is only in eternity, that the state is irreversibly fixed, and where that which was guilty must be guilty still. But let none harden his heart because of this long suffering of God; for if he die in his sin, where God is, he shall never come. And when once shut up in the unquenchable fire, he will not pray for mercy, as he shall clearly see and feel that the hope of his redemption is eternally cut off.

Verse 27. Your destruction cometh as a whirlwind] כספח ke-suphah, as the all-prostrating blast: sense and sound are here well expressed. Suph-ah here is the gust of wind.

Verse 29. They hated knowledge] This argues the deepest degree of intellectual and moral depravity.

Verse 32. For the turning away of the simple] This difficult place seems to refer to such a case as we term turning king's evidence; where an accomplice saves his own life by discovering on the rest of his gang. This is called his turning or repentance, משובה meshubath; and he was the most likely to turn, because he was one of the פלטים pelim, seduced or deceived persons. And this evidence was given against them when they were in their prosperity, שלש שאלוה, their security, enjoying the fruits of their depredations: and, being thus in a state of fancied security, they were more easily taken and brought to justice.

Verse 33. But whose hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely] The man hears the voice of wisdom in preference to the enticements of the wicked. He shall dwell in safety, ישיב בטח yishean-betach, he shall inhabit safety itself: he shall be completely safe and secure; and shall be quiet from the fear of evil; having a full consciousness of his own innocence and God's protection. Coverdale translates, And have yough without eney fears of evell. What the just man has, he got honestly; and he has the blessing of God upon it.

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. My son.] Here the tutor still continues to instruct his disciple.

Hide my commandments with thee] Treasure them up in thy heart, and then act from them through the medium of thy affections. He who has the rule of his duty only in his Bible, and in his head, is not likely to be a steady consistent character: his heart is not engaged; and his obedience in any case can be only forced, or done from a sense of duty. It is not the obedience of a loving dutiful child to an affectionate father. But he who has the word of God in his heart, works from his heart: his heart goes with him in all things; and he delights to do the will of his heavenly Father, because his law is in his heart. See chap. iii. ver. 3.

Verse 4. If thou seekest her as silver] How do men seek money? What will they not do to get rich?—Reader, seek the salvation of thy soul as earnestly as the covetous man seeks wealth: and be ashamed of thyself, if thou be less in earnest after the true riches, than they are after perishing wealth.

Hid treasures] The original word signifies property of any kind concealed in the earth, in caves or such like; and may also mean treasures, such as the precious metals, or precious stones, which are presumptively known to exist in such and such mines. And how are these sought? Learn from the following circumstance:—In the Brazil, slaves are employed to scrape up the soil from the bed of the Rio Janeiro: and wash it carefully, in order to find particles of gold and diamonds: and it is a law of the state, that he who finds a diamond of so many carats shall have his freedom. This causes the greatest ardour and diligence in searching, washing out the soil, picking, &c. in order to find such diamonds; and the greatest anxiety for success; so precious is liberty to the human heart. This species of searching for gold and precious stones is alluded to in chap. iii. ver. 13—15. In this way Solomon wishes men to seek for wisdom, knowledge, and understanding: and he who succeeds, finds the liberty of the children of God; and is saved from the slavery of sin, and the empire of death.

Verse 7. He layeth up sound wisdom] תשיב תשיב tushiyah. We have met with this word in Job; see chap. v. 12, vi. 13, xi. 6, xii. 16. See especially the note on Job xi. 6, where the different acceptations of the word are given. Coverdale translates, He preserveth the welfare of the righteous. It is difficult to find, in any language, a term proper to express the original meaning of the word; it seems to mean generally, the essence or substance of a thing—THE thing itself—that which is chief of its kind. He layeth up what is essential for the righteous.

Verse 9. Then shall thou understand] He who is taught of God understands the whole law of justice, mercy, righteousness and truth. God wrote this on his heart. He who understands these things by books only, is never likely to practise or profit by them.

Verse 11. Discretion shall preserve thee] ממש mizmah. See on chap. i. 4. Here the word is taken in a good sense; a good device. The man invents purposes of good; and all his schemes, plans, and devices, have for their object God's glory and the good of man: he deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things he shall stand. Coverdale translates, Then shall counsel preserve thee. A very good translation, much better than the present.

Verse 12. The man that speaketh froward things] תפסח תפסח tapsooth, things of subversion, from תפסח taphac, to turn or change the course of a thing. Men who wish to subvert the state of things, whether civil or religious. Who are seditious themselves, and wish to make others so. These speak much of liberty and oppression; deal greatly in broad assertions; and endeavour especially to corrupt the minds of youth.

Verse 16. The stranger which flattereth with her words] הַחֵלֶקֶת he-chelikeh, she that smooths with her words. The original intimates the glib oily speeches of a prostitute. The English lick is supposed to be derived from the original word.

Verse 17. Which forsaketh the guide of her youth] Leaves her father's house, and his instructions, and abandons herself to the public.

The covenant of her God:] Abandons the true religion, and mixes with idolaters; for among them prostitution was enormous. Or, by the covenant may be meant the matrimonial contract, which is a covenant made in the presence of God between the contracting parties, in which they bind themselves to be faithful to each other.

Verse 18. For her house inclineth unto death] It is generally in byes and secret places, where such women establish themselves. They go out of the high road to get a residence; and every step that is taken towards their house is a step towards death. The path of sin is the path of ruin: the path of duty is the way of safety. For her paths incline unto the dead, רֵפְאִימִם rephayim, the inhabitants of the invisible world. The woman who abandons herself to prostitution soon contracts, and generally communicates, that disease which above all others, signs the speediest and most effectual passport to the invisible world. Therefore, it is said,

Verse 19. None that go unto her return again] There are very few instances of prostitutes ever returning to the paths of sobriety and truth; perhaps not one of such as become prostitutes through a natural propensity to debauchery. Among those who have been deceived, debauched, and abandoned, many have been reclaimed; and, to such alone, penitentiaries may be useful: but to the others, they may be incentives to farther sinning. Rakes and debauchees are sometimes converted: but most of them never lay hold on the path of life; they have their health destroyed and never recover it. The original חַיִּים chayim, means lives: not only the health of the body is destroyed, but the soul is ruined. Thus the unhappy man may be said to be doubly slain.

Verse 20. That thou mayest walk] "Therefore thou shalt walk."

Verse 22. Transgressors] בּוֹגְדִים bogadim. The garment men, the hypocrites, those who act borrowed characters—who go under a cloak;—dissemblers. All such shall be rooted out of the land; they shall not be blest with posterity. In general it is so; and, were it not so, one evil offspring succeeding another, adding their own to their predecessors' vices, the earth would become so exceedingly corrupt, that a second flood, or a fire, would be necessary to purge it.

dience be from the heart: let thy heart keep my command- ments.

Verse 2. For length of days] Three eminent blessings are promised here:—1. אַרְבַּע יָמִים arach yamim, long days; 2. שְׁנֵי חַיִּים shenoth chayim, years of lives; 3. שְׁלוֹם shalom, prosperity; i. e. health, long life, and abundance.

Verse 3. Let not mercy and truth forsake thee] Let these be thy constant companions through life.

Bind them about thy neck] Keep them constantly in view, write them upon the table of thine heart. Let them be thy moving principles; feel them, as well as see them.

Verse 4. So shalt thou find favour] Thou shalt be acceptable to God, and thou shalt enjoy a sense of His approbation.

And good understanding] Men shall weigh thy character and conduct; and by this appreciates thy motives, and give thee credit for sincerity and uprightness. Though religion is frequently persecuted, and religious people suffer at first where they are not fully known; yet a truly religious and benevolent character will in general be prized wherever it is well known. The envy of men is a proof of the excellence of that which they envy.

Verse 5. Trust in the Lord with all thine heart] This is a most important precept: 1. God is the Fountain of all good. 2. He has made His intelligent creatures dependant upon Himself. 3. He requires them to be conscious of that dependance. 4. He has promised to communicate what they need. 5. He commands them to believe His promise, and look for its fulfilment. 6. And to do this without doubt, fear, or distrust, with their whole heart.

Lean not unto thine own understanding] אל-תִּשְׁתָּאן al-tishahn, do not prop thyself. It is on God, not thyself; that thou art commanded to depend. He who trusts in his own heart is a fool.

Verse 6. In all thy ways acknowledge him] Begin, continue, and end every work, purpose, and device, with God. Earnestly pray for His direction on the commencement; look for His continued support in the progress; and so begin and continue that all may terminate in His glory; and then it will certainly be to thy good; for we never honour God without serving ourselves. This passage is well rendered in my old MS. Bible.—Write trust in the Lord of all thine heart, and be sure that thou shalt find favour: in all the ways; think upon, and be sure thou shalt rule the goynges; be thou truly ancient thyself. Self-sufficiency, and self-dependance have been the ruin of mankind ever since the fall of Adam. The grand sin of the human race is their continual endeavour to live independently of God; i. e. to be without God in the world. True religion consists in considering God the Fountain of all good; and expecting all good from Him.

Verse 8. It shall be health to thy navel] We need not puzzle ourselves to find out what we may suppose to be a more delicate meaning for the original word נֶחֱם navel; but I am satisfied a more proper cannot be found. It is well known that it is by the umbilical cord that the fœtus receives its nourishment all the time that it is in the womb of its mother. It receives nothing by the mouth, nor by any other means: by this alone all nourishment is received, and the circulation of the blood kept up. When, therefore, the wise man says, that trusting in the Lord with the whole heart, and acknowledging him in all a man's ways, &c. shall be health to the navel, and marrow to the bones; he in effect says, that this is as essential to the life of God in the soul of man, and to the continual growth in grace, as the umbilical cord is to the life and growth of the fetus in the womb. Without the latter, no human being could ever exist, or be born; without the former, no true religion can ever be found. Trust or faith in God is as necessary to derive grace from Him to nourish the soul, and cause it to grow up into eternal life; as the navel string, or umbilical cord is to the human being in the first stage of its existence. I need not push this illustration farther: the good sense of the reader will supply what he knows. I might add much on the subject.

And marrow to thy bones.] This metaphor is not less proper than the preceding. All the larger bones of the body have either a large cavity, or they are spongy, and full of little cells: in both the one and the other the oleaginuous substance called marrow, is contained in proper vesicles like the fat. In the larger bones the fine oil, by the gentle heat of the body is exhaled through the pores of its small vesicles; and enters some narrow passages which lead to certain fine canals excavated in the substance of the bone, that the marrow may supply the fibres of the bones, and render them less liable to break. Blood vessels also penetrate the bones to supply this marrow, and this blood; and consequently the marrow is supplied in the infant by means of the umbilical cord. From the marrow diffused, as mentioned above, through the bones, they derive their solidity and strength. A simple experiment will cast considerable light on the use of the marrow to the bones:—Calcine a bone, so as to destroy all the marrow from the cells: you will find it exceedingly brittle. Immerse the same bone in oil so that the cells may be all replenished, which will be done in a few minutes; and the bone re-acquires a considerable measure of its solidity and strength; and would acquire the whole, if the marrow could be extracted without otherwise injuring the texture of the bone. After the calcination the bone may be reduced to powder by the hand; after the impregnation with the oil, it becomes hard, compact, and strong. As the marrow is to the support and strength of the bones, and the bones to the support and strength of the body; so is faith in God to the support, strength, energy, and salvation, of the soul. Behold then the force and elegance of the wise man's metaphor. Some have rendered the last clause, a lotion for the bones! What is this? How are the bones washed? What a pitiful destruction of a most beautiful metaphor.

Verse 9. Honour the LORD with thy substance] The מְנוּחָה מִנְּחָה or gratitude offering to God, commanded under the law, is of endless obligation. It would be well to give a portion of the produce of every article by which we get our support to God, or to the poor, the representatives of Christ. This might be done, either in kind, or by the worth in money. Whatever God sends us in the way of secular prosperity, there is a portion in it always for the poor, and for God's cause. When that portion is thus disposed of, the rest is sanctified: when it is withheld, God's curse is upon the whole. Give to the poor; and God will give to thee.

Verse 11. Despise not the chastening of the LORD] The word מִסָּר, signifies correction, discipline, and instruction. Teaching is essentially necessary to shew the man the way in which he is to go: discipline is necessary to render a teaching effectual; and often correction is requisite, in order to bring the mind into submission, without which it cannot acquire knowledge. Do not therefore reject this procedure of God: humble thyself under His mighty hand, and open thy eyes to thy own interest; and then thou wilt learn speedily and effectually. It is of no use to rebel: if thou do, thou kickest against the pricks; and every act of rebellion against Him is a wound to thine own soul. God will either end thee, or mend thee:—wilt thou then kick on?

Verse 12. Whom the LORD loveth] To encourage thee to bear correction, know that it is a proof of God's love to thee; and that thereby He shews that He treats thee as a father doth his son; even that one to whom he bears the fondest affection.

The last clause of the Septuagint translate, πατριος δε πατρα σιων or παπαδευρα, and chasteneth every son whom he receiveth. And the apostle, Heb. xii. 6, quotes this literatim. Both clauses certainly amount to the same sense. Every son whom he receiveth, and the son in whom he delighteth, have very little difference of meaning.

Verse 13. Happy is the man that findeth wisdom] This refers to the advice given in chap. ii. 4, where see the note.

Verse 14. For the merchandise] מְנוּחָה מִנְּחָה, the traffic, the trade that is carried on by going through countries and provinces, with such articles as they could carry on the backs of camels, &c. from מִן הַיַּם sacher, to go about, traverse. Chafarjunge, Old MS. Bible.

And the gain thereof] רִמְזָן יְבוּאָתָהּ, its produce; what is gained by the articles after all expenses are paid. The slaves, as we have already seen, got their liberty if they were so lucky as to find a diamond of so many carats weight: he who finds wisdom, the knowledge and salvation of God, gets a greater prize; for he obtains the liberty of the Gospel, is adopted into the family of God, and made an heir according to the hope of an eternal life.

Verse 15. She is more precious than rubies] מְנוּחָה מִנְּחָה mipenimim. The word principally means pearls; but may be taken for precious stones, in general. The root is מָה פָּנָה, he looked, beheld, and, as it gives the idea of the eye always being turned towards the observer, Mr. Parkhurst thinks, that it means the lodatone: see the note on Job xxviii. 18, where this subject is considered at large. If the oriental ruby, or any other precious stone, be intended here, the word may refer to their being cut and polished, so that they present different faces, and reflect the light to you in whatever direction you may look at them.

All the things thou canst desire] Superior to every thing that can be an object of desire here below. But who believes this?

Verse 16. Length of days is in her right hand] A wicked man shortens his days by excesses; a righteous man prolongs his by temperance.

Her left hand riches and honour.] That is, her hands are full of the choicest benefits. There is nothing to be understood here by the right hand in preference to the left.

Verse 17. Her ways are ways of pleasantness] These blessings of true religion require little comment. They are well expressed by the poet in the following elegant verses:

"Wisdom divine! Who tells the price
Of wisdom's costly merchandise?
Wisdom to silver we prefer,
And gold is dross compared to her.
Her hands are fill'd with length of days;
True riches, and immortal praise;
Riches of Christ on all bestowed,
And honour that descends from God.

To pursue joys she all invites,
Chaste, holy, spiritual delights:
Her ways are ways of pleasantness,
And all her slippery paths are peace.
Happy the man that finds the grace,
The blessing of God's chosen race,
The wisdom coming from above,
The faith that sweetly works by love." Wesley.

Verse 18. She is a tree of life] מִן יַי אֵלֶּה חַיִּים, "the tree of lives," alluding most manifestly to the tree so called, which God, in the beginning, planted in the garden of Paradise, by the eating of whose fruit all the wastes of nature might have been continually supplied, so as to have prevented death for ever. This is an opinion which appears probable enough. The blessings which wisdom, true religion, gives to men, preserve them in life, comfort them through life, cause them to triumph in death, and insure them a glorious immortality.

Verse 19. The LORD by wisdom hath founded the earth] Here wisdom is taken in its proper acceptation, for that infinite knowledge and skill which God has manifested in the creation and composition of the earth, and in the structure and economy of the heavens. He has established the order, as well as the essence, of all things; so that though they vary in their position, &c. yet they never change 20 * By his knowledge the depths are broken up, and the clouds drop down the dew.

21 My son let not them depart from thine eyes: keep sound wisdom and discretion:

22 So shall they be life unto thy soul, and grace to thy neck.

23 Then shalt thou walk in thy way safely, and thy foot shall not stumble.

24 When thou liest down, thou shalt not be afraid: yea, thou shalt lie down, and thy sleep shall be sweet.

25 Be not afraid of sudden fear, neither of the desolation of the wicked when it cometh.

26 For the Lord shall be thy confidence, and shall keep thy foot from being taken.

27 Withhold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in the power of thine hand to do it.

28 Say not unto thy neighbour, Go, and come again, and to-morrow I will give; when thou hast it by thee.

29 Devise not evil against thy neighbour, seeing he dwelleth securely by thee.

30 Strive not with a man without cause, if he have done thee no harm.

31 Envy thou not the oppressor, and choose none of his ways.

32 For the froward is abomination to the Lord; but his secret is with the righteous.

33 The curse of the Lord is in the house of the wicked: but he blesseth the habitation of the just.

34 Surely he scorneth the scorners: but he giveth grace unto the lowly.

35 The wise shall inherit glory: but shame shall be the promotion of fools.

either their places or their properties. Composition and analysis are not essential changes; the original particles, their forms and properties, remain the same.

Verse 20. By his knowledge the depths are broken up] He determined in His wisdom how to break up the fountains of the great deep, so as to bring a flood of waters upon the earth; and by His knowledge those fountains in the earth, through which springs of water arise, have been appointed and determined; and it is by His skill and influence that vapours are exhaled, suspended in the atmosphere, and afterwards precipitated on the earth in rain, dew, &c. Thus the wisest of men attributes those effects which we suppose to spring from natural causes, to the Supreme Being Himself.

Verse 21. Let them not depart from thine eyes] Never forget that God, who is the Author of nature, directs and governs it in all things; for it is no self-determining agent.

Keep sound wisdom and discretion] תוֹרָה וּמִצְוֹת תִּשְׁמָרְהֶם. We have met with both these words before. Tushiah is the essence or substance of a thing; mizmah is the resolution or purpose formed in reference to something good, or excellent. To acknowledge God as the Author of all good, this is the tushiah, this is the essence of a godly man's creed; to resolve, to act according to the directions of His wisdom, is the mizmah, the religious purpose that will bring good to ourselves, and glory to our God. These bring life to the soul, and are ornamental to the man who acts in this way, ver. 22.

Verse 24. When thou liest down] In these verses (23-26) the wise man shows the confidence, security, and safety, which proceed from a consciousness of innocence. Most people are afraid to sleep, lest they should never awake, because they feel they are not prepared to appear before God. They are neither innocent, nor pardoned. True believers know that God is their Keeper night and day: they have strong confidence in Him that He will be their Director, and not suffer them to take any false step in life, ver. 23. They go to rest in perfect confidence that God will watch over them: hence their sleep, being undisturbed with foreboding and evil dreams, is sweet and refreshing, ver. 24. They are not apprehensive of any sudden destruction, because they know that all things are under the control of God; and they are satisfied, that if sudden destruction should fall upon their wicked neighbour, yet God knows well how to preserve them, ver. 25. And all this naturally flows from the Lord being their confidence, ver. 26.

Verse 27. Withhold not good from them to whom it is due] מִיִּצְוֹת מִי-בֹאֵלַיִם. from the lords of it. But who are they? The poor. And what art thou, O rich man? Why thou art a steward to whom God has given substance that thou mayest divide with the poor. They are the right owners of every farthing thou hast to spare from thy own support, and that of thy family; and God has given the surplus for their sakes. Dost thou, by hoarding up this treasure, deprive the right owners of their property? If this were a civil case, the law would take thee by the throat, and lay thee up in prison: but it is a case in which God alone judges. And what will He do to thee? Hear! He shall have judgment without mercy, who hath showed no mercy. James 1. 13. Read, feel, tremble, and act justly.

Verse 28. Say not unto thy neighbour] Do not refuse a kindness when it is in thy power to perform it. If thou have the means by thee, and thy neighbour's necessities be pressing, do not put him off till the morrow: death may take either him or thee before that time.

Verse 30. Strive not with a man] Do not be of a litigious, quarrelsome spirit. Be not under the influence of too nice a sense of honour. If thou must appeal to judicial authority to bring him that wrongs thee to reason, avoid all enmity, and do nothing in a spirit of revenge. But, if he have done thee no harm, why contend with him? May not others in the same way, contend with and injure thee?

Verse 31. Envy thou not the oppressor] O how bewitching is power! Every man desires it; and yet all hate tyrants. But query—if all had power, would not the major part be tyrants?

Verse 32. But his secret] חֵסֶד סוֹדוֹ, his secret assembly; godly people meet there, and God dwells there.

Verse 33. The curse of the Lord] No godly people meet in such a house; nor is God ever an inmate there. But he blesseth the habitation of the just.] He considers it as His own temple. There he is worshipped in spirit and in truth; and hence God makes it His dwelling place.

Verse 34. Surely he scorneth the scorners: but he giveth grace unto the lowly.] The Septuagint has Κερεις υπερβαρις αντιστοιχια, ταπεινους δε διδωσιν χάριος. The Lord resisteth the proud: but giveth grace to the humble. These words are quoted by St. Peter, chap. v. 6, and by St. James, chap. iv. 6, precisely as they are in the Septuagint, with the change of 6 Κερεις, God, for Κερεις, the Lord.

Verse 35. The wise] The person who follows the dictates of wisdom, as mentioned above, shall inherit glory; because being one of the heavenly family, a child of God, he has thereby heaven for his inheritance: but fools, such as those mentioned, chap. i. and ii. shall have ignominy for their exaltation. Many such fools as Solomon speaks of are exalted to the gibbet and gallows. The way to prevent this and the like evils, is to attend to the voice of wisdom.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. Hear, ye children] Come my pupils, and hear how a father instructed his child. Such as I received from my father I give to you; and they were the teachings of a wise and affectionate parent to his only son; a peculiar object of his regards, and also those of a fond mother.

He introduces the subject thus, to shew that the teaching he received, and which he was about to give them, was the most excellent of its kind. By this he ensured their attention, and made his way to their heart. Teaching by precept is good; teaching by example is better: but teaching both by precept and example is best of all.

Verse 4. He taught me also, and said] Open thy heart to receive my instructions—receive them with affection. When heard, retain and practise them, and thou shalt live; the great purpose of thy being brought into the world shall be accomplished in thee.

19 The way of the wicked is as darkness; they know not at what they stumble.
 20 My son, attend to my words; incline thine ear unto my sayings.
 21 Let them not depart from thine eyes; keep them in the midst of thine heart.
 22 For they are life unto those that find them, and health to all their flesh.
 23 Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life.
 24 Put away from thee a froward mouth, and perverse lips put far from thee.
 25 Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee.
 26 Ponder the path of thy feet, and let all thy ways be established.
 27 Turn not to the right hand nor to the left: remove thy foot from evil.

MY son, attend unto my wisdom, and bow thine ear to my understanding; sphere, till at last he is completely elevated above the horizon, and then the prepared day has fully taken place, the sun having risen at the determined time. So, the truly wise man is but in his twilight here below: but he is in a state of glorious preparation for the realms of everlasting light; till at last, emerging from darkness and the shadows of death, he is ushered into the full blaze of endless felicity. Yet, previously to his enjoyment of this glory, which is prepared for him, he is going, walking in the commandments of his God blameless; and illuminating, reflecting the light of the salvation which he has received on all those who form the circle of his acquaintance.

Verse 21. Keep them in the midst of thine heart.] Let them be wrapped up in the very centre of thy affections; that they may give spring and energy to every desire, word, and wish.

Verse 23. Keep thy heart with all diligence] "Above all keeping," guard thy heart. He who knows any thing of himself, knows how apt his affections are to go astray.

For out of it are the issues of life] וּמִן הַלֵּב יֵצֵא הַחַיִּים tothoth chayim, the goings out of lives. Is not this a plain allusion to the arteries, which carry the blood from the heart through the whole body, and to the utmost extremities. As long as the heart is capable of receiving and propelling the blood, so long life is continued. Now, as the heart is the fountain whence all the streams of life proceed, care must be taken that the fountain be not stopped up or injured. A double watch for its safety must be kept up. So in spiritual things: the heart is the seat of the Lord of life and glory; and the streams of spiritual life proceed from Him to all the powers and faculties of the soul. Watch with all diligence, that this fountain be not sealed up, nor these streams of life be cut off. Therefore, put away from thee a froward mouth, and perverse lips; and let thy eyes look straight on. Or, in other words, look inward—look onward—look upward.

I know that the twenty-third verse is understood as principally referring to the evils which proceed from the heart, and which must be guarded against; and the good purposes which must be formed in it, from which life takes its colouring. The former should be opposed, the latter should be carefully encouraged and strengthened. If the heart be pure and holy, all its purposes will be just and good. If it be impure and defiled, nothing will proceed from it but abomination. But though all this be true, I have preferred following what I believe to be the metaphor in the text.

Verse 24. A froward mouth] Beware of hastiness, anger, and rash speeches.

And perverse lips] Do not delight in, nor acquire the habit of contradicting and gainsaying; and beware of calumniating and backbiting your neighbour.

Verse 26. Ponder the path of thy feet] Weigh well the part thou shouldst act in life. See that thou contract no bad habits.

Verse 27. Turn not to the right hand, nor to the left] Avoid all crooked ways. Be an upright, downright, and straight forward man. Avoid tricks, wiles, and deceptions of every kind.

To this the Septuagint and Vulgate add the following verse:—Αντος δε οφθαλμοι σου και ροχιας σου, και δε πορτασ σου εν εσπρησ ποταει. Ipsa autem rectos faciet cursus

2 That thou mayest regard discretion, and that thy lips may keep knowledge.
 3 For the lips of a strange woman drop as a honeycomb, and her mouth is smoother than oil:
 4 But her end is bitter as wormwood, sharp as a two-edged sword.
 5 Her feet go down to death; her steps take hold on hell.
 6 Lest thou shouldst ponder the path of life, her ways are moveable, that thou canst not know them.
 7 Hear me now therefore, O ye children, and depart not from the words of my mouth.
 8 Remove thy way far from her, and come not nigh the door of her house:
 9 Lest thou give thine honour unto others, and thy years unto the cruel:
 10 Lest strangers be filled with thy wealth; and thy labours be in the house of a stranger;
 11 And thou mourn at the last, when thy flesh and thy body are consumed, tuos; itinera autem tua in pace producet. "For himself will make thy paths straight, and thy journeyings will be conduct in prosperity." The Arabic has also a clause to the same effect. But nothing like this is found in the Hebrew, Chaldee, or Syriac; nor in those of Antwerp and Paris: but they are in the Greek text of those editions, in the Editio Princeps of the Vulgate, in five of my own MSS. and in the old MS. Bible. De Lyra rejects the clause as a gloss that stands on no authority. If an addition, it is certainly very ancient; and the promise it contains is true, whether the clause be authentic or not.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. Attend unto my wisdom] Take the following lessons from my own experience.

Verse 3. The lips of a strange woman] One that is not thy own, whether Jewess or heathen.

Drop as a honeycomb] Uses the most deceitful, flattering and alluring speeches;—as the droppings of the honey out of the comb are the sweetest of all.

Verse 4. Bitter as wormwood] קַלְמֵשׁ ke-la'anah, like the detestable herb wormwood, or something analogous to it: something as excessive in its bitterness, as honey is in its sweetness.

Verse 5. Her feet go down to death] She first, like a serpent, infuses her poison, by which the whole constitution of her paramour is infected, which soon or late brings on death.

Her steps take hold on hell.] First, the death of the body; and then the damnation of the soul. These are the tendencies of connexions with such women.

Verse 6. Lest thou shouldst ponder] To prevent thee from reflecting on thy present conduct, and its consequences, her ways are moveable; she continually varies her allurements.

Thou canst not know them.] It is impossible to conceive all her tricks and wiles: to learn these in all their varieties, is a part of the science first taught in that infernal trade.

Verse 7. Hear me—O ye children] בָּנִים banim, sons, young men in general: for these are the most likely to be deceived and led astray.

Verse 8. Come not nigh the door of her house] Where there are generally such exhibitions as have a natural tendency to excite impure thoughts, and irregular passions.

Verse 9. Lest thou give thine honour] The character of a debauchee is universally detested: by this, even those of noble blood lose their honour and respect.

Thy years unto the cruel] Though all the blandishments of love dwell on the tongue, and the excess of fondness appear in the whole demeanour of the harlot and the prostitute; yet cruelty has its throne in their hearts; and they will rob and murder (when it appears to answer their ends) those who give their strength, their wealth, and their years, to them. The unfaithful wife has often murdered her own husband for the sake of her paramour, and has given him over to justice in order to save herself. Murders have often taken place in brothels, as well as robberies: for the vice of prostitution is one of the parents of cruelty.

Verse 11. When thy flesh and thy body are consumed] The word וְשָׂרְךָ shaar, which we render body, signifies properly the remains, residue, or remnant of a thing: and is applied here to denote the breathing carcass, putrid with the concomitant disease of debauchery:—a public reproach which the justice of God entails on this species of iniquity. The mourning here spoken of, is of the most excessive kind: the word naham, is often applied to the growling of a lion, and the hoarse incessant murmuring of the sea. In the line of my duty, I have been often called to attend the death-bed of such persons, where groans and shrieks were incessant through the facilitating pains in their bones and flesh. Whoever has witnessed a closing scene like this will see at once with what force and propriety the wise man speaks. And how have I hated instruction, and despised the voice of my teachers, in that terrific time is the unavailing cry. Reader, whosoever thou art, lay these things to heart. Do not enter into their sin: once entered, thy return is nearly hopeless.

Verse 14. I was almost in all evil] This vice, like a whirlpool, sweeps all others into its vortex.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VI.

Verse 1. If thou be surety for thy friend] לְרֵעִי לִרְבֹּעָא for thy neighbour; i. e. any person. If thou pledge thyself in behalf of another, thou takest the burden off him, and placest it on thy own shoulders. And when he knows he has got one to stand betwixt him and the demands of law and justice, he will feel little responsibility; his spirit of exertion will become crippled, and listlessness as to the event will take place. His own character will suffer little; his property nothing, for his friend bears all the burthen; and perhaps the very person for whom he bore this burthen treats him with neglect; and, lest the restoration of the pledge should be required, will avoid both the sight and presence of his friend. Give what thou canst: but, except in extreme cases, be surety for no man. Striking or shaking hands when the mouth had once made the promise, was considered the ratification of the engagement: and thus the man became snared with the words of his mouth.

Verse 3. Do this—deliver thyself] Continue to press him for whom thou art become surety, to pay his creditor; give him no rest till he do it, else thou mayest fully expect to be left to pay the debt.

Verse 5. Deliver thyself as a roe] כִּי לִטְבִי the antelope. If thou art got into the snare, get out if thou possibly canst; make every struggle and exertion (as the antelope taken in the net, and the bird taken in the snare would) in order to get free from thy captivity.

Verse 6. Go to the ant, thou sluggard] נְמָלָה memalah, the ant, is a most remarkable creature for forethought, industry, and economy. At the proper seasons they collect their food, not in the summer to lay up for the winter; for they sleep during the winter, and eat not; and therefore such hoards would be to them useless: but when the food proper for them is in most plenty, then they collect it for their consumption in the proper seasons. No insect is more laborious, not even the bee itself; and none is more fondly attached to, or more careful of their young than the ants. When the young are in their aurelia state, in which they appear like a small grain of rice, they will bring them out of their nests, and lay them near their holes, for the benefit of the sun: and on the approach of rain, carefully remove them, and deposit them in the nest; the hole or entrance to which, they will cover with a piece of thin stone or tile to prevent the wet from getting in. It is a fact that they do not lay up any meat for winter; nor does Solomon either here, or in chap. xxx. 26, assert it. He simply says that they provide their food in summer, and gather it in harvest: these are the most proper times for a stock to be laid in for their consumption; not in winter, for no such thing appears in any of their nests, nor do they need it, as they sleep during that season; but for autumn, during which they wake and work. Spring, summer, and autumn, they are incessant in their labour. And their conduct affords a bright example to men.

Verse 10. Yet a little sleep, a little slumber] This, if not the language, is the feeling of the sluggard. The ant gathers its food in summer and in harvest, and sleeps in winter when it has no work to do. If the sluggard would work in the day, and sleep at night, it would be all proper. The ant yields him a lesson of reproach.

Verse 11. So shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth] i. e. With slow, but surely approaching steps.

They want as an armed man.] i. e. With irresistible fury; and thou art not prepared to oppose it. The Vulgate, Septuagint, and Arabic, add the following clause to this verse.

But if thou wilt be diligent, thy harvest shall be as a fountain; and poverty shall flee far away from thee.

It is also thus in the Old MS. Bible. If forsake thou shalt ben; shal comen as a welle tht rtp; and wete fer shal seen for thee.

Verse 12. A naughty person] אדם בלי יראת אדם belidid, "Adam good for nothing." When he lost his innocence. א man apostata, Old MS. Bible.

A wicked man] אדם רשע Iah aven, soon became a general transgressor after he had departed from his God. All his posterity, unless restored by Divine grace, are men of Belial, and sinners by trade; and most of them, in one form or other, answer the character here given. They yield their members instruments of unrighteousness unto sin.

Verse 13. He winketh with his eyes, he speaketh with his feet, he teacheth with his fingers] These things seem to be spoken of debauchees. And the following quotation from Ovid. Amor. lib. 1, El. iv. v. 15, shews the whole process of the villany spoken of by Solomon:—

Cum promit ille torum, vultu comas ipse modo
Iste, ut accumbas: clam mihi tangit palmam.
Me spectas, notansque mores, vultumque loquosum.
Ecce furtiva, et refer ipse nota.

Verba leges dictula, verba notata mero.
Cum tibi succurrit Venere lactata nostras,
Parpens tenere pollicis tangitq; comas, &c. &c.

The whole elegy is in the same strain: it is translated in Garth's Ovid. It cannot be introduced here.

Verse 14. He deviseth mischief] He plots schemes and plans to bring it to pass.

He soweth discord] Between men and their wives, by seducing the latter from their fidelity. See the preceding quotation.

Verse 15. Suddenly shall he be broken] Probably alluding to some punishment of the adulterer, such as being stoned to death. A multitude shall join together, and so overwhelm him with stones, that he shall have his flesh and bones broken to pieces; and there shall be no remedy, none to deliver or pity him.

Verse 16. These six—doth the Lord hate] 1. A proud look—exalted eyes; those who will not condescend to look on the rest of mankind. 2. A lying tongue. He who neither loves nor tells truth. 3. Hands that shed innocent blood, whether by murder or by battery. 4. A heart that deviseth wicked imaginations. The heart that fabricates such, lays the foundation, builds upon it, and completes the superstructure of iniquity. 5. Feet that be swift in running to mischief. He who works iniquity with greediness. 6. A false witness that speaketh lies. One who, even on his oath before a court of justice, tells any thing but the truth.

Seven are an abomination unto him] שבע נאפהו, "to his soul." The seventh is, him that soweth discord among brethren. He who troubles the peace of a family, of a village, of the state: all who, by lies and misrepresentations, strive to make men's minds evil affected towards their brethren.

Verse 20. Keep thy father's commandment] See on chap. 1. 8.

Verse 21. Bind them continually upon thine heart] See on chap. 11. 3. And see a similar command, to which this is an allusion, Deut. vi. 6—8.

Verse 22. When thou goest, it shall lead thee] Here the law is personified; and is represented as a nurse, teacher, and guardian, by night and day. An upright man never goes but as directed by God's word, and led by God's Spirit.

When thou sleepest] He commends his body and soul to the protection of his Maker when he lies down, and sleeps in peace. And when he awakes in the morning, the promises and mercies of God are the first things that present themselves to his recollection.

Verse 23. For the commandment is a lamp] It illuminates the path. It shews us how we should walk and praise God.

And the law is light] A general light, shewing the nature and will of God, and the interest and duty of MAN.

And reproofs of instruction] Or, that instruction which reproves us for our sins and errors leads us into the way of life.

Verse 24. To keep thee from the evil woman] Solomon had suffered sorely from this quarter; and hence his repeated cautions and warnings to others. The strange woman, always means one that is not a man's own: and sometimes it may also imply a foreign harlot, one who is also a stranger to the God of Israel.

Verse 25. Neither let her take thee with her eyelids.] It is a very general custom in the East to paint the eyelids. I have many Asiatic drawings in which this is expressed. They have a method of polishing the eyes with a preparation of antimony, so that they appear with an indescribable lustre; or, as one who mentions the fact from observation, "Their eyes appear to be swimming in bliss."

Verse 26. By means of a whorish woman] In following lewd women, a man is soon reduced to poverty and disease. The Septuagint give this a strange turn:—Την γαρ πορνν, βν κατ βοσ αρνν. For the price or hire of a whore is about one loaf. So many were they in the land, that they hired themselves out for a bare subsistence. The Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic, give the same sense. The Old MS. Bible has it thus:—The price forsothe of a strumpet is unneeth one lof: the woman forsothe taketh the precious liff of a man. The sense of which is, and probably the sense of the Hebrew too, While the man hires the whore for a single loaf of bread; the woman thus hired taketh his precious life. She extracts his energy, and poisons his constitution. In the first clause, נשח נשח ishah zonah, is plainly a prostitute: but should we render נשח eseth, in the second clause, an adulteress? I think not. The Versions in general join נשח נשח eseth ish, together, which, thus connected, signify no more than the wife of a man; and out of this we have made adulteress, and Coverdale, a married woman. I do think that the Old MS. Bible gives a good sense; and it requires a good deal of paraphrase to extract the common meaning from the text. Though the following verses seem to countenance the common interpretation; yet they may contain a complete sense of themselves: but taken in either way, the sense is good, though the construction is a little violent.

Verse 27. Can a man take fire] These were proverbial expressions, the meaning of which was plain to every capacity.

28 Can one go upon hot coals, and his feet not be burned?

29 So he that goeth in to his neighbour's wife; whoever toucheth her shall not be innocent.

30 Men do not despise a thief, if he steal to satisfy his soul when he is hungry;

31 But if he be found, he shall restore sevenfold; he shall give all the substance of his house.

32 But whose committeth adultery with a woman lacketh understanding: he that doeth it destroyeth his own soul.

33 A wound and dishonour shall he get; and his reproach shall not be wiped away.

34 For jealousy is the rage of a man: therefore he will not spare in the day of vengeance.

35 He will not regard any ransom: neither will he rest content, though thou givest many gifts.

Verse 29. So he that goeth in to his neighbour's wife] As sure as he who takes fire into his bosom, or who walks upon live coals, is burnt thereby; so sure, he that seduces his neighbour's wife shall be guilty. That is, he shall be punished.

Verse 30. Men do not despise a thief, if he steal] Every man pities the poor culprit who was perishing for lack of food, and stole to satisfy his hunger; yet no law clears him: he is bound to make restitution; in some cases double, in others quadruple and quintuple; and if he have not property enough to make restitution, to be sold for a bondman. Exod. xxii. 1-4. Lev. xxv. 39.

Verse 32. But whose committeth adultery] The case understood is that of a married man: he has a wife; and therefore not in the circumstances of the poor thief, who stole to appease his hunger, having nothing to eat. In this alone the opposition between the two cases is found: the thief had no food, and he stole some; the married man had a wife, and yet went in to the wife of his neighbour.

Destroyeth his own soul] Sins against his life; for, under the law of Moses, adultery was punished with death. Lev. xx. 10. Deut. xxii. 22.

Verse 33. A wound and dishonour shall he get] Among the Romans, when a man was caught in the fact, the injured husband took the law into his own hand; and a large radish was thrust up into the anus of the transgressor, which not only overwhelmed him with infamy and disgrace, but generally occasioned his death.

Verse 34. Jealousy is the rage of a man: therefore he will not spare] He will not, when he has detected the adulterer in the fact, wait for the slow progress of the law; it is then to him the day of vengeance; and, in general, he avenges himself on the spot, as we see above.

Verse 35. He will not regard any ransom] This is an injury that admits of no compensation. No gifts can satisfy a man for the injury his honour has sustained; and to take a bribe, or a ransom, would be setting up chastity at a price.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. My son, keep my words] See ch. ii. 1.

Verse 2. As the apple of thine eye] As the pupil of the eye, which is of such essential necessity to sight, and so easily injured.

Verse 3. Bind them upon thy fingers] See on chap. iii. 3.

Verse 4. Thou art my sister] Thou art my dearest friend, and I will treat thee as such.

Verse 5. The strange woman] The prostitute, the adulteress.

Verse 6. I looked through my casement] The casement is a small aperture in a large window, or a window opening on hinges. Here it means the lattice, for they had no glass windows in the East. And the latticed windows produced a double advantage: 1, making the apartments sufficiently private; and, 2, admitting fresh air to keep them cool.

Verse 7. Among the simple ones] The inexperienced, inconsiderate young men.

3 Bind them upon thy fingers, write them upon the table of thine heart.

4 Say unto Wisdom, Thou art my sister; and call understanding thy kinswoman:

5 That they may keep thee from the strange woman, from the stranger which flattereth with her words.

6 For at the window of my house I looked through my casement,

7 And beheld among the simple ones, I discerned among the youths, a young man void of understanding,

8 Passing through the street near her corner; and he went the way to her house,

9 In the twilight, in the evening, in the black and dark night:

10 And, behold, there met him a woman with the attire of a harlot, and subtle of heart.

11 She is loud and stubborn: her feet abide not in her house:

12 Now is she without, now in the streets, and lieth in wait at every corner.)

13 So she caught him, and kissed him, and with an impudent face said unto him,

A young man void of understanding] חסר חשבון חסר חשבון, "destitute of a heart." He had not wisdom to discern the evil intended; nor courage to resist the flatteries of the seducer.

Verse 6. He went the way to her house] She appears to have had a corner house sufficiently remarkable; and a way from the main street to it.

Verse 9. In the twilight, in the evening] Some time after sun-setting; before it was quite dark.

In the black and dark night] When there were neither lamps nor moon-shine.

Verse 10. A woman with the attire of a harlot] It appears that sitting in some open place, and covering the face, or having a veil of a peculiar kind on, was the evidence of a harlot, Gen. xxxviii. 14, 15-19. No doubt in Solomon's time, they had other distinctions. In all other countries, and in all times, the show of their countenances did testify against them; they declared their sin as Sodom: they hid it not. However, this does not seem to have been a mere prostitute; for she was, according to her own declaration, a married woman, and kept house, ver. 19. If her assertions relative to this, were not falsehoods, and calculated the better to render him secure, and prevent the suspicion of endangering himself by cohabiting with a common woman; which I am rather inclined to think was the case, for she was subtle of heart.

Verse 11. She is loud and stubborn] חסרת חסרת, she is never at rest, always agitated; busily employed to gain her end, and this is to go into the path of error: סוררת, "turning aside;" preferring any way to the right way. And, therefore, it is added, her feet abide not in her house; she gads abroad: and this disposition probably first led her to this vice.

Verse 12. Now is she without] She is continually exposing herself, and shewing by her gait and gestures what she is, and what she wants. These two verses are a parenthesis, intended to shew the character of the woman in question.

Verse 13. So she caught him] Laid fast hold on him, and kissed him, to shew that she was affectionately attached to him.

And with an impudent face] חסרת חסרת, she strengthened her countenance, assumed the most confident look she could; endeavoured to appear friendly and sincere.

Verse 14. I have peace-offerings with me] More literally, "the sacrifices of the peace-offerings are with me." Peace-offerings were offerings, assumed the most confident look she could; endeavoured to appear friendly and sincere. Peace-offerings were offerings, assumed the most confident look she could; endeavoured to appear friendly and sincere. When the blood of these was poured out at the altar, and the fat burnt there, the breast and right shoulder were the priests' portion: but the rest of the carcass belonged to the sacrificer, who might carry it home, and make a feast to his friends. See Lev. iii. 1-11.

Have I paid my vows] She seems to insinuate that she had made a vow for the health and safety of this 15 Therefore came I forth to meet thee, diligently to seek thy face, and I have found thee.

21 With her much fair speech she caused him to yield, with the flattering of her lips she forced him.

Verse 16. I have decked my bed] ארסי ארסי, my couch, or sofa; distinguished from מישכבי mishkabi, "my bed," ver. 17, the place to sleep on, as the other was the place to recline on at meals. The tapestry, רבדים rabadim, mentioned here, seems to refer to the covering of the sofa; exquisitely woven and figured cloth. חתכות חתכות chatuboth etun, the Targum translates painted carpets, such as were manufactured in Egypt; some kind of embroidered or embossed stuff is apparently meant.

Verse 17. I have perfumed my bed with myrrh] מור מור; aloes, אהלים ahalim, and cinnamon, קינמן kinnamon. We have taken our names from the original words: but probably the ahalim may not mean aloes, which is no perfume; but sandal wood, which is very much used in the East. She had used every means to excite the passions she wished to bring into action.

Come, let us take our fill of love] נרו נרו nirvel dudim, "Let us revel in the breasts:" and then it is added, let us solace ourselves with loves, נהננו נהננו nithaleah be-ahabim; let us gratify each other with loves, with the utmost delights. This does not half express the original: but I forbear. The speech shews the brazen face of this woman, well translated by the Vulgate, Veni, inebrietur uberibus; et fruamur cupidinis amplexibus. And the Septuagint has expressed the spirit of it:—Ελθε, και απολασσωμεν φιλιαις—depo, και εγκυλισωμεν ερωτι. Veni, et fruamur amicitia—Veni, et coluctemur cupidine. Though varied in the words, all the Versions have expressed the same thing. In the old MS. Bible, the speech of this woman is as follows:—I have arrayed with carbis my lftfil bed, and spread with pernitfu tapeits of Egypt: I have springid my lgginge place with mifre and aloes and canelcum, and be inwardly drunken with Tets, and use the cobeyfled clippings to the tyme that the Daf way lftg. The original itself is too gross to be literally translated: but quite in character as coming from the mouth of an abandoned woman.

Verse 19. For the good man] Literally, For the man is not in his house.

Verse 20. He hath taken] Literally, The money bag he hath taken in his hand. He is gone a journey of itinerant merchandizing. This seems to be what is intended.

And will come home at the day appointed.] לית וזכא loeyom hakkas, the time fixed for a return from such a journey. The Vulgate says, at the full moon. The Targum, the day of the assembly. In other words, he will return by the approaching festival.

Verse 21. With her much fair speech] With her blandishments and lascivious talk, she overcame all his scruples, and constrained him to yield.

Verse 22. As an ox goeth to the slaughter] The original of this and the following verse has been variously translated. Dr. Grey corrects and translates thus: He goeth after her straightway, as an ox goeth to the slaughter; as a dog to the chain; and as a deer till the dart strikes through his liver; as a bird hasteneth to the snare, and knoweth not that it is for its life. Very slight alterations in the Hebrew text produce these differences: but it is not necessary to pursue them; all serve to mark the stupidity and folly of the man who is led away by enticing women, or who lives a life of intemperance.

Verse 24. Hearken unto me now therefore, O ye children] Ye that are young and inexperienced, seriously consider the example set before your eyes; and take warning at another's expense.

Verse 26. For she hath cast down many wounded; yea, many strong men have been slain by her.] That is, such like women have been the ruin of many. חללים chalalim, which we render wounded, also signifies soldiers, or men of war; and דברי דברים demim, which we render strong men, may be translated heroes. Many of those who have distinguished themselves in the field and in the cabinet have been overcome and destroyed by their mistresses. History is full of such examples.

Verse 27. Her house is the way to hell] שול שול, the pit, the grave, the place of the dead, the eternal and infernal world. And they who, through such, fall into the grave, descend lower, into the chambers of death; the place where pleasure is at an end, and illusion mocks no more.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VIII.

Verse 1. Doth not wisdom cry] Here wisdom is again personified; but the prosopopæia is carried on to a greater length than before, and with much more variety. It is represented in this chapter in a two-fold point of view:—1. Wisdom, the power of judging rightly, implying the knowledge of divine and human things. 2. As an attribute of God, particularly displayed in the various and astonishing works of creation. Nor has it any other meaning in this whole chapter, whatever some of the Fathers may have dreamed, who find allegorical meanings every where. The wise man seems as if suddenly awakened from the distressful contemplation which he had before him, (of the ruin of young persons in both worlds by means of debauchery,) by the voice of wisdom as having lifted her voice in the most public places, where was the greatest concourse of the people, to warn the yet unsusured; that they might avoid the way of seduction and sin; and cause those who love her, to inherit substance, and to have their treasures filled with durable riches.

Verse 2. In the places of the paths.] כיר נתיבה נתיבה beith netiboth nitsabah, "The constituted house of the paths." Does not this mean the house of public worship? the tabernacle, or temple, which stands a centre to the surrounding villages, the paths from all the parts leading to, and terminating at it. In such a place, where the holy word of God is read or preached, there in a particular manner does wisdom cry, and understanding lift up her voice. There are the warnings, the precepts, and the promises, of eternal truth; there, the bread of God is broken to His children, and thither they that will may come and take the water of life freely.

Verse 3. She crieth at the gates] This might be well applied to the preaching of Jesus Christ and His apostles, and their faithful successors in the Christian ministry. He went to the Temple, and proclaimed the righteousness of the Most High:—He did the same in the synagogues—on the mountains—by the seaside—in the villages—in the streets of the cities, and in private houses. His disciples followed his track: in the same way, and in the same spirit, they proclaimed the unsearchable riches of Christ. God's wisdom in the hearts of His true ministers, directs them to go and to seek sinners. There are, it is true, temples, synagogues, churches, chapels, &c. but hundreds of thousands never frequent them; and, there-

4 Unto you, O men, I call; and my voice is to the sons of man.

5 O ye simple, understand wisdom: and ye fools, be ye of an understanding heart.

6 Hear; for I will speak of excellent things; and the opening of my lips shall be right things.

7 For my mouth shall speak truth; and wickedness is an abomination to my lips.

8 All the words of my mouth are in righteousness; there is nothing froward or perverse in them.

9 They are all plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge.

10 Receive my instruction, and not silver; and knowledge rather than choice gold.

fore, do not hear the voice of truth: wisdom, therefore, must go to them, if she wish them to receive her instructions. Hence the zealous ministers of Christ go still to the highways and hedges, to the mountains and plains, to the ships and the cottages, to persuade sinners to turn from the error of their ways, and accept that redemption which was procured by the sacrificial offering of Jesus Christ.

Verse 4. Unto you, O men] ישׁים ishim, men of wealth and power, will I call; and not to you alone, for my voice is אֵל כָּל בְּנֵי אָדָם al beney Adam, "to all the descendants of Adam;" to the whole human race. As Jesus Christ tasted death for every man, so the gospel proclaims salvation to all:—to you—to every individual, my voice is addressed. Thou hast sinned; and thou must perish, if not saved by grace.

Verse 5. O ye simple] פְּתוּלִים petholim, ye that are deceived, and with flattering words and fair speeches deluded and drawn away.

Ye fools] כְּסִיּוֹת kesitim, ye stupid, stiff-necked, senseless people. That preaching is never likely to do much good, that is not pointed; specifying and describing vices, and charging them home on the consciences of transgressors. Where this is not done, the congregation is unconcerned: no man supposes he has any thing to do in the business, especially if the preacher takes care to tell them,—"These were the crimes of Jews, Romans, Greeks, of the people at Corinth, Philippi, Thessalonica, Laodicea, and of heathens in general: but I hope better things of you who have been born in a Christian land, and baptized in the Christian faith." Thus he arms their consciences in double brass against the good effects of his own teaching.

Verse 6. Hear; for I will speak of excellent things] נִשְׁמָע נִשְׁמָע negedim, things which are pre-eminent, and manifestly superior to all others. The teaching is not trifling, though addressed to triflers.

The opening of my lips shall be right things] מִשְׁפָּטֵי מִשְׁפָּטֵי meysarim, things which are calculated to correct your false notions, and set straight your crooked ways. Hence she declares, Verse 7. My mouth shall speak truth] תִּצְדִּיק without falsity, or any mixture of error, shall be the whole matter of my discourse.

Verse 8. All the words—are in righteousness] בְּצֶדֶק btsedek, in justice and equity, testifying what man owes to his God, to his neighbour, and to himself; giving to each his due. This is the true import of צֶדֶק tsedak.

There is nothing froward] נִפְתָּל niphtal, tortuous, involved, or difficult.

Or perverse] שָׁפָה shephah, distorted, leading to obstinacy. On the contrary, Verse 9. They are all plain] נִשְׁתָּחִים neshochim, straight forward, over against every man, level to every capacity. This is true of all that concerns the salvation of the soul.

To them that find knowledge.] When a man gets the knowledge of himself, then he sees all the threatenings of God to be right. When he obtains the knowledge of God in Christ, then he finds that all the promises of God are right, yea, and amen.

Verse 10. Receive my instruction, and not silver] A Hebrew idiom; receive my instruction in preference to silver.

Verse 11. Wisdom is better than rubies] See on chap. iii. 15.

Verse 12. I wisdom dwell with prudence] Prudence is defined, wisdom applied to practice: so wherever true wisdom is, it will lead to action, and its activity will be always in reference to the accomplishment of the best ends by the use of the most appropriate means. Hence comes what is here called knowledge of witty inventions, 11 For wisdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it.

12 I wisdom dwell with prudence, and find out knowledge of witty inventions.

13 The fear of the LORD is to hate evil: pride, and arrogancy, and the evil way, and the froward mouth, do I hate.

14 Counsel is mine, and sound wisdom: I am understanding; I have strength.

15 By me kings reign, and princes decree justice.

16 By me princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth.

17 I love them that love me; and those that seek me early shall find me.

מִדָּעָה מִדָּעָה דַּעַת דַּעַת mesimmoth emetza, "I have found out knowledge and contrivance." The farther wisdom proceeds in man, the more practical knowledge it gains; and finding out the nature and properties of things, and the general course of Providence, it can contrive by new combinations to produce new results.

Verse 13. The fear of the Lord is to hate evil] As it is impossible to hate evil, without loving good; and as hatred to evil will lead a man to abandon the evil way;—and love to goodness will lead him to do what is right in the sight of God, under the influence of that Spirit which has given the hatred to evil, and inspired the love of goodness: hence this implies the sum and substance of true religion, which is here termed the fear of the Lord.

Verse 14. Counsel is mine] Direction how to act in all circumstances, and on all occasions, must come from wisdom: the foolish man can give no counsel, cannot shew another how he is to act in the various changes and chances of life. The wise man alone can give this counsel; and he can give it only as continually receiving instruction from God: for this Divine wisdom can say, תִּשְׁחִיחַ TUSHIAH, substance, reality, essence, all belong to me: I am the Fountain whence all are derived. Man may be wise, and good, and prudent, and ingenious: but these he derives from me; and they are dependently in him. But in me all these are independently and essentially inherent. And sound wisdom] See above. This is a totally false translation:—תִּשְׁחִיחַ tushiah, means essence, substance, reality, the source and substance of good. How ridiculous the support derived by certain authors from this translation in behalf of their system. See the writers on and quoters of Prov. viii.

I have strength.] Speaking still of wisdom, as communicating rays of its light to man, it enables him to bring every thing to his aid; to construct machines by which one man can do the work of hundreds. From it comes all mathematical learning, all mechanical knowledge; from it originally came the inclined plane, the wedge, the screw, the pulley in all its multiplications; and the lever in all its combinations and varieties came from this wisdom. And as all these can produce prodigies of power, far surpassing all kinds of animal energy, and all the effects of the utmost efforts of muscular force; hence the maxim of Lord Bacon, knowledge is power, built on the maxim of the tushiah itself;—לִּי גְבוּרָה li-geburah, MINE IS STRENGTH.

Verse 15. By me kings reign] Every wise and prudent king is such through the influence of Divine wisdom. And just laws and their righteous administration come from this source. In this and the following verse five degrees of civil power and authority are mentioned.

1. מַלְאֲכִים melachim, KINGS. 2. רוֹצְמִים roznim, CONSULS. 3. שָׂרֵי מַלְכוּת sarim, PRINCES, CHIEFS of the people. 4. נְדִיבִים nedibim, the NOBLES. And, 5. שֹׁפְטֵי מִשְׁפָּטֵי shophetim, JUDGES or CIVIL MAGISTRATES. All orders of government are from God. Instead of שֹׁפְטֵי מִשְׁפָּטֵי shophety arets, judges of the earth, צֶדֶק tsedek shophety tsedek, righteous judges, or judges of righteousness, is the reading of one hundred and sixty-two of Kennicott and De Rossi's MSS. either in the text or in the margin, and of several ancient editions. And this is the reading of the Vulgate, the Chaldees, and the Syriac; and should undoubtedly supersede the other.

Verse 17. I love them that love me] Wisdom shews itself; teaches man the knowledge of himself; shews him also the will of God concerning him,—manifests the snares and dangers of life,—the allurements and unsatisfactory nature of all sensual and sinful pleasures,—the blessedness of true religion,—and the solid happiness which an upright soul derives from the peace and approbation of its Maker. If then the heart embraces this wisdom, follows this Divine teaching, and gives itself to God. His love will be shed abroad in it by the influence of the Holy Spirit. Thus, we love God because He hath first loved us; and the more we love Him, the more we shall feel of His love, which will enable us to love Him yet more and more: and thus we may go on increasing to eternity. Blessed be God!

And those that seek me early shall find me.] Not merely betimes in the morning, though he who does so shall find it greatly to his advantage, see on Psalm iv.; but early in life, in youth, and as near as possible to the first dawn of reason. To the young this gracious promise is particularly made: if they seek, they shall find. Others who are old may seek and find; but never to such advantage, as they would have had, had they sought early. Youth is the time of advantage, in every respect: it is the time of learning, the time of discipline, the time of improvement, the time of acquiring useful, solid and gracious habits. As the first-fruits always belong to God, it is God's time; the time in which He is peculiarly gracious; and in which, to sincere youthful seekers, he pours out His benefits with great profusion. They that seek me early shall find me.

Hear, ye young, and ye little ones! God offers himself now to you, with all His treasures of grace and glory. Thank Him for His ineffable mercy, and embrace it without delay.

Verse 18. Riches and honour are with me] Often the wise, prudent, and discreet man arrives literally to riches and honour: but this is not always the case. But there are other riches of which he never fails; and these seem to be what Solomon has particularly in view, durable riches and righteousness; the treasure deposited by God in earthen vessels.

Verse 20. I lead in the way of righteousness] Nothing but the teaching that comes from God by His word and Spirit can do this.

Verse 22. The Lord possessed me in the beginning of His way] Wisdom is not acquired by the Divine nature; man, and even angels, learn it by slow and progressive degrees: but in God it is as eternally inherent as any other essential attribute of His nature. The Targum makes this wisdom a creature, by thus translating the passage:—אלוהים בראני בראשית בראיתו Elaha barani bershith biraitoah, "God created me in the beginning of his creature." The Syriac is the same. This is as absurd and heretical as some modern glosses on the same passage.

Verse 23. I was set up from everlasting] נסתי נישאתי, I was diffused or poured out, from נסו nasat, to diffuse, pour abroad, as a spirit or disposition, Isa. xxix. 10. See Parkhurst. Or from נסו, to cover, overspread, smear over, as with oil; to be anointed king. Hence some have translated it, principatum habui, I had the principality, or was a ruler, governor, and director, from eternity. All the schemes, plans, and circumstances relative to creation, government, providence, and to all being, material, animal, and intellectual, were conceived in the Divine mind, by the Divine wisdom, from eternity, or ever the earth was. There was no fortuitous creation, no jumbling concourse of original atoms, that entered into the composition of created beings; all was the effect of the plans before conceived, laid down, and at last acted upon by God's eternal wisdom.

Verse 24. When there were no depths] תהומות tehomoth, before the original chaotic mass was formed. See Gen. i. 2.

I was brought forth] חולאתי cholalti, I was produced as by labouring throes. Mr. Parkhurst thinks, that the heathen poets derived their idea of Minerva (wisdom) being born of Jupiter's brain, from such high poetic personifications as that in the text.

Verse 26. The highest part of the dust of the world.] חלקי אפר רשמי rosh aphroth tibel, the first particle of matter. The prima materia, the primitive atom. All these verses (3—29) are a periphrasis for I existed before creation; consequently, before time was. I dwelt in God, as a principle which might be communicated in its influence to intellectual beings, when formed.

Verse 27. When he prepared the heavens, I was there] For there is no part of the creation of God in which wisdom, skill, contrivance, are more manifest, than in the construction of the visible heavens.

When he set a compass upon the face of the depth] Does not this refer to the establishment of the law of gravitation? by which all the particles of matter, tending to a common centre, would produce in all bodies the orbicular form, which we see them have; so that even the waters are not only retained within their boundaries; but are subjected to the circular form, in their great aggregate of seas, as other parts of matter are. This is called here making a compass, נסו כחוקו be-chukko chug, sweeping a circle; and even this on the face of the deep, to bring the chaotic mass into form, regularity and order.

Verse 28. The clouds above] ענני shechakim, the ethereal regions, taking in the whole of the atmosphere, with all its meteors, clouds, vapours, &c.

Verse 29. When he gave to the sea his decree] When he assigned its limits, adjusted its saltness, and proportioned the extent of its surface to the quantity of vapours to be raised from it, for the irrigation of the terrene surface.

The foundations of the earth] Those irreversible laws by which all its motions are governed: its annual and diurnal rotation, and particularly its centrifugal and centripetal force; by the former of which it has its annual motion round the sun like all other planets; and by the latter all its particles are prevented from flying off, notwithstanding the great velocity of its motion round its own axis, which causes one thousand and forty-two miles of its equator to pass under any given point in the heavens in the course of a single hour! These are, properly speaking, the foundations of the earth; the principles on which it is constructed, and the laws by which it is governed.

Verse 30. Then I was with him as one brought up] נסתי אמונ, a nursing, a darling child. Wisdom continues its parable, says Calmet; and represents itself as a new-born child which is ever near its parent, and takes pleasure to see him act, and to sport in his presence. This is poetical, and highly figurative: and they who think they find the Deity of Jesus Christ in these metaphors should be very cautious how they apply such terms as these; so that, while they are endeavouring to defend the truth, they may do nothing against the truth; in which most of them unhappily fail.

Rejoicing always before him] All the images in this verse are borrowed from the state and circumstances of a darling affectionate playful child; as any one will be convinced who examines the Hebrew text.

Verse 31. Rejoicing in the habitable part of his earth] There God displays especially His wisdom in ordering and directing human beings, and in providing for their wants. The wisdom of God is in an especial manner manifested in His providence.

My delights were with the sons of men.] This Divine wisdom, as it delighted in the creation of man, so it continues to delight in his instruction. Hence it is represented as offering its lessons of instruction continually; and using every means and opportunity to call men from folly and vice to sound knowledge, holiness, and happiness. It 32 Now therefore hearken unto me, O ye children: for bleſſed are they that keep my ways.

33 Hear instruction, and be wiſe, and reſuſe it not.

34 Bleſſed is the man that heareth me,

o. Pſ. 119. 1, 2. & 125. 1, 2. Luke 11. 28.—Ch. 2. 13, 14.

is to man that God eſpecially gives wiſdom: and he haſt it in the form of reaſon beyond all other creatures; therefore it is ſaid, My delights are with the ſons of men: to them I open my choicest treaſures. They alone are capable of ſapience, intelligence, and diſcuſſive reaſon.

Verſe 32. Now therefore] Since I delight ſo much in conveying inſtruction; ſince I have the happineſs of the children of Adam ſo much at heart; hearken unto me: and this is for your own intereſt; for bleſſed are they who keep my ways.

Verſe 34. Watching daily at my gates] Wiſdom is repreſented as having a ſchool for the inſtruction of men: and ſeems to point out ſome of the moſt forward of her ſcholars, coming through their intense deſire to learn, even before the gates were opened; and waiting there for admiſſion, that they might hear every word that was uttered, and not loſe one accent of the heavenly teaching. Bleſſed are ſuch.

Verſe 35. Whoſe findeth me] The teaching that comes from God; teaching to avoid evil, and cleave to that which is good; findeth life, gets that knowledge which qualifies him to answer the purpoſes for which he was made; for he is quickened with Chriſt, and made a partaker of the Divine life. Chriſt dwells in his heart by faith; he lives a new life, for Chriſt liveth in him; the law of the ſpirit of life in Chriſt Jeſus making him free from the law of ſin and death. And ſhall obtain favour of the Lord. The more he walks after the Divine counſel, the more he obtains of the Divine image; and the more he reſembles his Maker, the more he partakes of the Divine favour.

Verſe 36. Wrongeth his own ſoul] It is not Satan; it is not ſin, properly ſpeaking, that hurts him; it is himſelf. If he received the teaching of God, ſin would have no dominion over him: if he reſiſted the devil, the devil would have fled from him.

Love death.] They do it in effect, if not even in fact: for as they love ſin that leads to death; ſo they may be juſtly ſaid to love death, the wages of ſin. He that works in this caſe, works for wages; and He muſt love the wages, ſeeing he labours ſo hard in the work.

I have gone through this fine chapter, and have given the beſt expoſition of it in my power. I have alſo, as well as others, weighed every word, and cloſely examined their radical import, their connexion among themſelves, and the connexion of the ſubject of the chapter with what has gone before, and with what follows after; and I cannot come conſcientiouſly to any other interpretation than that which I have given. I am thoroughly ſatisfied that it ſpeaks not one word either about the Divine or human nature of Chriſt, much leſs of any eternal ſtiation of his Divinity. And I am fully perſuaded, had there not been a preconceived creed, no ſoul of man, by fair criticism, would have ever found out that fond opinion of the eternal ſonſhip of the Divine nature, which ſo many commentators perſuade themſelves they find here. That it has been thus applied in early ages, as well as in modern times, I am ſufficiently aware; and that many other portions of the Divine records have been appealed to, in order to ſupport a particular opinion, and many that were falſe in themſelves, muſt be known to thoſe who are acquainted with the Fathers. But many quote them, who know nothing of them. As to the Fathers in general, they were not all agreed on this ſubject, ſome ſuppoſing Chriſt, others the Holy Spirit, was meant in this chapter. But of theſe we may ſafely ſtate, that there is not a truth in the moſt orthodox creed, that cannot be proved by their authority; nor a heresy that has diſgraced the Romiſh Church, that may not challenge them as its abettors. In points of doctrine, their authority is, with me, nothing. The word of God alone contains my creed. On a number of points I can go to the Greek and Latin Fathers of the church, to know what they believed; and what the people of their reſpective communions believed: but, after all this, I muſt return to God's word, to know what he would have me to believe. No part of a Proteſtant creed ſtands on the deciſions of Fathers and councils. By appealing to the Bible alone, as the only rule for the faith and practice of Chriſtians, they confounded and defeated their Papiſtical adverſaries, who could not prove their doctrines but by Fathers and councils. Hence their peculiar doctrines ſtand in their ultimate proof upon THESE: and thoſe of watching daily at my gates, waiting at the poſts of my doors.

35 For whoſe findeth me findeth life, and ſhall obtain ^b favour of the LORD.

36 But he that ſinneth againſt me wrongeth his own ſoul: all they that hate me love death.

g Heb. bring forth —h Ch. 12. 2.—Ch. 20. 2.

Proteſtantism on the Bible. Some late writers upon this ſubject, whoſe names I ſpare, have preſumed much on what they have ſaid on this ſubject: but before any man, who ſeeks for ſober truth, will receive any of their concluſions, he will naturally look whether their premiſes be ſound; or whether, from ſound principles, they have drawn legitimate concluſions. They ſay this chapter is a ſufficient foundation to build their doctrine on. I ſay it is no foundation at all; that it never has been proved, and never can be proved, that it ſpeaks at all of the doctrine in queſtion. It has nothing to do with it. On this conviction of mine, their proofs drawn from this chapter muſt go with me for nothing. I have been even ſhocked with reading over ſome things that have been lately written on the ſubject. I have ſaid in my heart, They have taken away my ETERNAL LORD, and I know not where they have laid Him. I cannot believe their doctrine: I never did, I hope I never ſhall. I believe in the Holy Trinity; in three perſons in the Godhead, of which none is before or after another. I believe Jehovah, Jeſus, the Holy Ghoſt, to be one infinite, eternal Godhead, ſubſiſting ineffably in Three Perſons: I believe Jeſus the Chriſt to be, as to his Divine nature, as unoriginated and eternal as Jehovah Himſelf; and with the Holy Ghoſt, to be one infinite Godhead, neither Perſon being created, begotten, nor proceeding, more than another. As to its eſſence, but one TRINITY, in an infinite, eternal and inſeparable UNITY; and this TRINITY God is the Object of my faith, my adoration, and my confidence. But I believe not in an eternal ſonſhip or generation of the Divine nature of Jeſus Chriſt. Here, I have long ſtood; here, I now ſtand; and here I truſt to ſtand in the hour of death, in the day of judgment, and to all eternity. Taking the Scriptures in general, I find a plurality in the Divine nature; taking the grand part mentioned, Matt. iii. 16, 17. I find that plurality reſtrained to a Trinity, in the moſt unequivocal and evident manner: Jeſus, who was baptized in Jordan; the Holy Ghoſt, who deſcended upon Him who was baptized; and the FATHER, maniſteſted by the voice from heaven that ſaid, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleaſed. And how that Perſon called Jeſus the Chriſt, in whom dwelt all the fulneſs of the Godhead bodily, could be called the Son of God, I have ſhewn in my note on Luke i. 36.

Some writers, in their defence of the doctrine above, which I venture to ſay, I do not believe, have made reflections, in real or pretended pity, on the belief of their Trinitarian brethren, which have very little to do with candour: viz: "How the ſupporters of this hypotheſis can avoid either the error of Tritheism on the one hand, or Sabellianism on the other, is difficult to conceive." Now the ſupporters of the doctrine of the underived and unbegotten eternity of Chriſt's divine nature, might as well ſay of them: How the ſupporters of the eternal ſonſhip of Chriſt can avoid the error of Arianism on the one hand, and Arianism on the other, it is difficult to conceive. But I would not ſay ſo: for though I know Arians who hold that doctrine, and expreſs their belief nearly in the ſame words; yet I know many moſt conſcientious Trinitarians, who hold the doctrine of the eternal ſonſhip, and yet believe in the proper Deity, or eternal Godhead of Jeſus Chriſt. After all, as a very wiſe and excellent man lately ſaid: "While we have every reaſon to be ſatisfied of the ſoundneſs of each other's faith; we muſt allow each to explain his own ſentiments in his own words: here, in the words uſed in explanation, a little latitude may be ſafely allowed." To this correct ſentiment I only add:—

Scimus; et hanc eandem patriſtopos doctrinam ſectamur.—Borow.

"I grant it; and the Roman give and take."

I have paſſed the waters of ſtrife, and do not wiſh to re-cross them.

And, while I am on this ſubject, let me add one thing which I am ſure will not pleaſe all the generation of His people; and it is this:—that Jeſus Chriſt, having taken upon Him human nature, which was afterwards crucified and expired upon the croſs, did, by thoſe acts, make a full, perfect, and ſufficient offering, ſacrifice, and atonement, for the ſin of the whole world. That He died, paid down the redemption price, for every ſoul of man, that was ever born into the world, and ſhall ever be born into it. And that all who lay hold on the hope ſet before them ſhall be ſaved: and all may lay this hold; and none ſhall perish but those who would not come to Christ that they might have life. And that they perish, not because they were not redeemed, but because they would not accept of the redemption.

To conclude on this subject, it will be necessary to refer the reader to the remarkable opposition that subsists between this and the preceding chapter. There, the prostitute is represented as going out into the streets to seek her prey; and the altering words of carnal wisdom to excite the animal appetite to sinful gratification, which she uses: here, heavenly wisdom is represented as going out into the streets, to the high places, the gates of the city, to counteract her designs, and lead back the simple to God and truth.

These personifications were frequent among the Jews. In the Book of Ecclesiasticus we find a similar personification, and expressed in almost similar terms; and surely none will suppose that the writer of that Apocryphal book had either the Christian doctrine of the Trinity, or the sonship of Christ, in view.

I will give a few passages:—

"WISDOM shall glory in the midst of her people; in the congregation of the Most High shall she open her mouth, and triumph before his power. I came out of the mouth of the Most High, and covered the earth as a cloud. I dwell in the high places; I alone compassed the circuit of the heaven, and walked in the bottom of the deep, in the waves of the sea, and in all the earth. He created me from the beginning, before the world; and I shall never fail; I am the mother of fair love, and fear, and knowledge, and holy hope: I therefore, being eternal, am given to all my children which are named of Him. Come unto me, and fill yourselves with my fruits. I also came out as a brook from a river, and a conduit into a garden." &c. &c. Eccles. xxiv. 1, &c. This kind of personification of wisdom we have had in the preceding chapters; and in the following chapter we shall find the figure still kept up.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IX.

The same wisdom speaks here, who spoke in the preceding chapter. There she represented herself as manifest in all the works of God in the natural world; all being constructed according to counsels proceeding from an infinite understanding. Here, she represents herself as the great potentia, who was to rule all that she had constructed; and having an immense family to provide for, had made an abundant provision, and calls all to partake of it. This, says Calmel, is the continuation of the parable begun in the preceding chapter, where wisdom is represented as a venerable lady, whose real beauties and solid promises are opposed to the false allurements of PLEASURE, who was represented in the seventh chapter under the idea of a debauched and impudent woman. This one, to draw young people into her snares, describes the perfumes, the bed, and the festival, which she has prepared. WISDOM acts in the same way: but instead of the debauchery, the false pleasures, and criminal connexions, which pleasure had promised, offers her guests a strong, well-built, magnificent palace, chaste, and solid pleasures, salutary instructions, and a life crowned with blessedness. This is the sum and the substance of the parable: but as in the preceding part, so in this, men have produced strange creatures of their own brain, by way of explanation, one specimen of this mode of interpretation may suffice.

The house built by wisdom is the holy humanity of Jesus Christ; the seven pillars are the seven sacraments, or the seven gifts of the Holy Ghost, or the whole of the apostles, preachers, and ministers of the Church: the slain beasts are the sacrifice of Christ's body upon the cross; and the bread and mingled wine are the bread and wine in the sacrament of the Lord's supper!—FATHERS and DOCTORS.

If we have recourse to any other particulars than those given above in the summary of the chapter, let us follow the first part of the parable, where wisdom is represented as laying the plan of the creation; and then perhaps we may say with safety, that wisdom having produced the grand technograph or ground plot of the whole, with all the requisite elevations and specifications of material, mingled her wine; she hath also furnished her table.

3 She hath sent forth her maidens: she crieth upon the highest places of the city,

4 ^h Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither: as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him,

5 ⁱ Come, eat of my bread, and drink of the wine which I have mingled.

^o Rom. 16. 15.—ⁱ Ch. 5. 1, 2.—g Ver. 14.—h Ver. 16. Ch. 6. 22. Matt. 11. 28. ⁱ Ver. 2. Cant. 5. 1. Isa. 55. 1. John 6. 27.

comes to shew us in this part, that the whole has been constructed on this plan; and specifies the end for which this august building has been raised.

Verse 1. Wisdom hath builded her house] The eternal counsel of God has framed the universe.

She hath hewn out her seven pillars] Every thing has been so constructed, as to exhibit a scene of grandeur, stability, and durability.

Verse 2. She hath killed her beasts] God has made the most ample provision for the innumerable tribes of animal and intellectual beings, which people the whole vortex of created nature.

Verse 3. She hath sent forth her maidens] The wisdom of God has made use of the most proper means to communicate Divine knowledge to the inhabitants of the earth; as a good and gracious Creator wills, to teach them whence they came, how they are supported, whither they are going, and for what end they were formed. It is a custom to the present day in Asiatic countries, to send their invitations to guests, by a company of females, preceded by eunuchs: they go to the doors of the invited, and deliver their message.

Verse 4. Whoso is simple] Let the young, heedless, and giddy, attend to my teaching.

Him that wanteth understanding] Literally, he that wanteth a heart, who is without courage, is feeble and sickle and easily drawn aside from the holy commandment.

Verse 5. Come, eat of my bread] Not only receive my instructions, but act according to my directions.

Drink of the wine I have mingled] Enter into my counsels; be not contented with superficial knowledge in any subject, where any thing deeper may be attained. Go by the streams to the fountain head. Look into the principles on which they were formed,—investigate their nature,—examine their properties,—acquaint thyself with their relations, connexions, influences, and various uses. See the skill, power, and goodness of God in their creation, and when thou hast learnt all within thy reach, know that thou knowest but little of the manifold wisdom of God. Let what thou hast learnt humble thee, by shewing thee how very little thou dost know. Thou hast drunk of the provided wine: but that wine was mingled with water, for God will hide pride from man. He dwells only on the surface of religious and philosophical learning, who does not perceive and feel that he is yet but a child in knowledge; that he sees through a glass darkly; that he perceives men like trees walking; and that there are lengths, breadths, depths, and heights, in the works and ways of God, which will require an eternity to fathom. Hence below the pure wine is mingled with water; but this is God's work. Yet there is enough; do not therefore be contented with a little. To this subject the words of the poet may be well applied:—

A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pegasus spring;
For scanty draughts intoxicate the brain,
But drinking largely sobers us again. Pope.

Among the ancient Jews, Greeks, and Romans, wine was rarely drunk without being mingled with water; and among ancient writers we find several ordinances for this. Some direct three parts of water to one of wine, some five parts, and Pliny mentions some wines that required twenty waters: but the most common proportions appear to have been three parts of water to two of wine. But probably the 700 or yayin masec, mingled wine, was wine mingled not with water, to make it weaker: but with spices and other ingredients, to make it stronger. The ingredients were honey, myrrh, mandragora, opium, and such like; which gave it not only an intoxicating but stupifying quality also. Perhaps the mixed wine here may mean, wine of the strongest and best quality, that which was good to cheer and refresh the heart of man.

If we consider the mixed wine as meaning this strong wine, then the import of the metaphor will be,—a thorough investigation of the works of God will invigorate the soul, strengthen all the mental powers, enlarge their capacity, and enable the mind to take the most exalted views of the wonders of God's skill manifested in the operations of his hand.

4 ' He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand : but * the hand of the diligent maketh rich.

5 He that gathereth in summer is a wise son : but he that sleepeth in harvest is * a son that causeth shame.

6 Blessings are upon the head of the just : but * violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.

7 * The memory of the just is blessed : but the name of the wicked shall rot.

8 The wise in heart will receive commandments : but * a prating fool * shall fall.

9 * He that walketh uprightly walketh surely : but he that perverteth his ways shall be known.

10 * He that winketh with the eye causeth sorrow : * but a prating fool * shall fall.

11 * The mouth of a righteous man is a well of life : but * violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.

12 Hatred stirreth up strifes : but * love covereth all sins.

13 In the lips of him that hath understanding wisdom is found : but * a rod is for the back of him that is void of * understanding.

bagodims, hypocrites, or perfidious persons, is the reading of twelve or fourteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and some editions : but it is not acknowledged by any of the ancient Versions.

The righteous have God for their Feeder : and because of His infinite bounty, they can never famish for want of the bread of life. On the contrary, the wicked are often, in the course of His providence, deprived of the property of which they make a bad use.

Verse 4. He becometh poor.] God has ordered in the course of His providence, that he who will not work shall not eat. And He always blesses the work of the industrious man.

Verse 5. He that gathereth in summer.] All the work of the field should be done in the season suitable to it. If summer and harvest be neglected, in vain does a man expect the fruits of autumn.

Verse 6. Violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.] As blessings shall be on the head of the just, so the violence of the wicked shall cover their face with shame and confusion. Their own violent dealings shall be visited upon them. The mouth forthwith of unrighteous men will utterance covereth.—Old MS. Bible. The forehead of the ungodly is past shame, and presumptuous.—Coverdale.

Verse 7. The memory of the just is blessed.] Or, is a blessing.

But the name of the wicked shall rot.] This is another antithesis : but there are only two antithetic terms ; for memory and name are synonymous.—Louth. The very name of the wicked man is as offensive as putrid carrion.

Verse 8. A prating fool shall fall.] This clause is repeated in the tenth verse. The wise man will receive the commandment ; but the shallow blabbing fool shall be cast down. See verse 10.

Verse 9. He that walketh uprightly.] The upright man is always safe : he has not two characters to support ; he goes straight forward, and is never afraid of detection, because he has never been influenced by hypocrisy or deceit.

Verse 10. He that winketh with the eye.] Instead of the latter clause, which see ver. 8, the Septuagint has, & δε αλεγειν μερα παρηγοια επιπροκασι, but he that reprovet with freedom maketh peace. This is also the reading of the Syriac and Arabic. A faithful open reproving of sin is more likely to promote the peace of society, than the passing by it slightly, or taking no notice of it : for, if the wicked turn to God at the reproof, the law of peace will soon be established in his heart ; and the law of kindness will flow from his tongue.

Verse 11. The mouth of a righteous man is a well of life.] mekor chayim, is the vein of lives ; an allusion to the great aorta, which conveys the blood from the heart to every part of the body. The latter clause of this verse is the same with that of ver. 8.

Verse 12. Hatred stirreth up strifes.] It seeks for occasions to provoke enmity. It delights in broils. On the contrary love conciliates, removes aggravations, puts the best construction on every thing ; and pours water, not oil, upon the flame.

Verse 13. A rod is for the back of him.] He that can learn, and will not learn, should be made-to learn. The 17 He is in the way of life that keepeth instruction : but he that refuseth reproof * erreth.

18 He that hideth hatred with lying lips, and * he that uttereth a slander is a fool.

19 * In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin : but * he that refraineth his lips is wise.

20 The tongue of the just is as choice silver : the heart of the wicked is little worth.

21 The lips of the righteous feed many : but fools die for want * of wisdom.

22 * The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it.

23 * It is as sport to a fool to do mischief : but a man of understanding hath wisdom.

rod is a most powerful instrument of knowledge. Judiciously applied, there is a lesson of profound wisdom in every twig.

Verse 14. Wise men lay up knowledge.] They keep secret every thing that has a tendency to disturb domestic or public peace : but the foolish man bleats all out, and produces much mischief. Think much ; speak little ; and always think before you speak ! This will promote your own peace and that of your neighbour.

Verse 15. The rich man's wealth is his strong city.] Behold a mystery in providence : there is not a rich man on earth but becomes such by means of the poor ! Property comes from the labour of the poor ; and the king himself is served of the field. How unjust, diabolically so, is it to despise or oppress those by whose labour all property is acquired.

The destruction of the poor is their property.] A man in abject poverty never arises out of this pit. They have no nucleus about which property may aggregate. The poet spoke well :

*Haud facile emergit, quorum virtutibus obstat
Res angusta domi.*

* They rarely emerge from poverty, whose exertions are cramped by want at home."

Verse 16. The labour of the righteous.] The good man labours that he may be able to support life ; this is his first object : and then to have something to divide with the poor ; this is his next object.

The fruit of the wicked to sin.] This man lives to eat and drink, and his property he spends in riot and excess. God's blessings are cursed to him.

Verse 17. He is in the way of life.] The truly religious man accumulates knowledge, that he may the better know how to live to God, and do most good among men.

Verse 18. He that hideth.] This is a common case. How many, when full of resentment and deadly hatred, meditating revenge and cruelty, and sometimes even murder, have pretended that they thought nothing of the injury they had sustained ; had passed by the insult, &c. Thus, lying lips covered the malevolence of a wicked heart.

Verse 19. In the multitude of words.] It is impossible to speak much, and yet speak nothing but truth ; and injure no man's character in the mean while.

Verse 20. The heart of the wicked is little worth.] עניו ke-medt, is like little, or nothing ; or, is-like dross ; while the tongue of the just is like silver. A sinner's heart is worth nothing, and is good for nothing : and yet because it is his most hidden part, he vaunts of its honesty, goodness, &c. Yes, yes : it is very honest and good, only the devil is in it. That is all.

Verse 22. The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich.] Whatever we receive in the way of Providence has God's blessing in it, and will do us good. Cares, troubles, and difficulties come with all property not acquired in this way : but God's blessing gives simple enjoyment, and levies no tax upon the comfort.

Verse 23. It is as sport to a fool to do mischief.] What a millstone weight of iniquity hangs about the necks of most of the festers, facetious, and witty people ! "How many lies do they tell in jest, to go to the devil in earnest !"

Verse 24. The fear of the wicked.] The wicked is full of fears and alarms ; and all that he has dreaded, and more than he has dreaded shall come upon him. The righteous is always desiring more of the salvation of God, and God will exceed even his utmost desires.

Verse 25. As the whirlwind passeth] As tornadoes that sweep every thing away before them; so shall the wrath of God sweep away the wicked: it shall leave him neither branch nor root. But the righteous, being built on the eternal foundation, יסוד ישר yesod yisrahel, shall never be shaken.

Verse 29. The way of the Lord is strength] In the path of obedience, the upright man ever finds his strength renewed; the more he labours, the stronger he grows. The same sentiment as that in Isa. xl. 31.

Verse 30. The righteous shall never be removed. Because he is built on the eternal foundation. See on ver. 25

Verse 31. The froward tongue shall be cut out.] This probably alludes to the punishment of cutting out the tongue for blasphemy, treasonable speeches, profane swearing, or such like. The tongue of schrevels schal perishes.—Old MS. Bible. Were the tongue of every shrew or scold, to be extracted, we should soon have less noise in the world.

Verse 32. The lips of the righteous know what is acceptable] And what they believe to be most pleasing and most profitable, that they speak: but the wicked man knows as well what is perverse, and that he speaketh forth. As the love of God is not in his heart; so the law of kindness is not on his lips.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XI.

Verse 1. A false balance is abomination] This refers to the balance itself deceitfully constructed, so that it is sooner turned at one end than at the other. This is occasioned by one end of the beam being longer than the other.

But a just weight] עֲשֵׂה עֲשֵׂה eben ehenelah, the perfect stone, probably because weights were first made of stone; see the law, Deut. xxv. 13, 35.

Verse 2. When pride cometh] The proud man thinks so much more of himself than any other can do; and expecting to be treated according to his own supposed worth, which treatment he seldom meets with, he is repeatedly mortified, ashamed, confounded, and rendered indignant.

With the lowly] עֲשֵׂה עֲשֵׂה, the humble, the modest, as opposed to the proud, referred to in the first clause. The humble man looks for nothing but justice; has the meanest opinion of himself; expects nothing in the way of commendation or praise; and can never be disappointed, but in receiving praise, which he neither expects nor desires.

Verse 4. Riches profit not in the day of wrath] Among men they can do all things: but they cannot purchase the remission of sins, nor turn aside the wrath of God when that is poured out upon the opulent transgressor.

Verse 7. When a wicked man dieth] Hope is a great blessing to man in his present state of trial and suffering; because it leads him to expect a favourable termination of his ills. But hope was not made for the wicked; and yet they are the very persons that most abound in it! They hope to be saved, and get at last to the kingdom of God; though they have their face towards perdition, and refuse to turn. But their hope goes no farther than the grave. Their wicked man's expectation is cut off, and his hope perisheth. But to the saint, the penitent, and the cross-bearers in general, what a treasure is hope! What a balm through life!

Verse 8. The wicked cometh in his stead] Often God makes this distinction: in public calamities and in sudden accidents He rescues the righteous, and leaves the wicked, who has filled up the measure of his iniquities, to be seized by the hand of death. Justice, then, does its own work; for mercy has been rejected.

Verse 9. A hypocrite with his mouth] אִישׁ חָנָף, might be better translated infidel, than hypocrite. The latter is one that pretends to religion; that uses it for secular purposes: the former is one who disbelieves Divine Revelation, and accordingly is polluted, and lives in pollution. This is properly the force of the original word. Such persons deal in calumny and lies, and often thus destroy the character of their neighbour. Besides, they are very zealous in propagating their own infidel notions; and thus, by this means, destroy their neighbour: but the experimental knowledge which the just have of God and His salvation, prevents them from being ensnared.

Verse 10. When it goeth well] An upright pious sensible man is a great blessing to the neighbourhood where he resides, by his example, his advice, and his prayers. The considerate prize him on these accounts, and rejoice in his prosperity. But when the wicked perish, who has been a general curse by the contagion of his example and conversation, there is not only no regret expressed for his decease; but a general joy because God has removed him.

Verse 12. He that is void of wisdom] A foolish man is generally abundant in his censures; he dwells on the defects of his neighbour, and is sure to bring them into the most prominent view. But a man of understanding, a prudent, sensible man, hides those defects wherever he can, and puts the most charitable construction on those which he cannot conceal.

Verse 13. A talabearer] כריל הולע holac raail, the walking busy body, the trader in scandal.

Revealeth secrets] Whatever was confided to him, he is sure to publish abroad. The word means a hawker, or travelling chapman, who is always a great news-monger; and will tell even his own secrets, rather than have nothing to say.

Verse 15. He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it] He shall find evil upon evil in it. See on chap. vi. 1.

Verse 16. A gracious woman retaineth honour] Instead of this clause, the Septuagint have, ἡ ἄγαθη ἡ γυναῖς ἐξυψίσει ἑαυτήν ἀνδρὶ δεσφῆ, A gracious woman raiseth up honour to the man; ὁ ὀργισθεὶς ἐν τῇ γυναῖκι ἡμίσηται ἑαυτήν, But she that hateth righteous things, is a throne of dishonour. A good wife is an honour to her husband; and a bad wife is her husband's reproach: and if this be so, how careful should a man be whom he marries?

Verse 17. The merciful man doeth good to his own soul] Every gracious disposition is increased while a man is exercised in shewing mercy. No man can shew an act of disinterested mercy without benefitting his own soul, by improving his moral feeling.

But he that is cruel troubleth his own flesh] We seldom see a peevish, fretful, vindictive man, either in good health, or good plight of body. I have often heard it observed of such, He frets his flesh off his bones.

Verse 18. Worketh a deceitful work] An unstable work; nothing is durable that he does except his crimes.

Verse 19. Righteousness tendeth to life] True godliness promotes health, and is the best means of lengthening out life: but wicked men live not out half their days.

Verse 21. Though hand join in hand] Let them confederate as they please to support each other, justice will take care that they escape not punishment.

Verse 22. A jewel of gold in a swine's snout] That is, beauty in a woman destitute of good breeding and modest carriage, is as becoming as a gold ring on the snout of a swine. Coverdale translates thus:—A fayre woman, without discrete maners, is like a rings of golde, in a swyne's snoute.

Verse 24. There is that scattereth and yet increaseth] The bountiful man who gives to the poor, never turning away his face from any one in distress, the Lord blesses his property, and the bread is multiplied in his hand. To the same purpose the following verse.

Verse 25. The liberal soul shall be made fat] He who gives to the distressed in the true spirit of charity, shall get a hundred fold from God's mercy. How wonderful is the Lord! He gives the property, gives the heart to use it aright, and recompenses the man for the deed, though all the fruit was found from Himself!

He that watereth] A man who distributes in the right spirit, gets more good himself, than the poor man does who receives the bounty. Thus, it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Verse 26. He that withholdeth corn] Who refuseth to sell because he hopes for a dearth, and then he can make his own price.

The people shall curse him] Yes, and God shall curse him also; and if he do not turn and repent, he will get God's curse, and the curse of the poor, which will be a canker in his money during time, and a canker in his soul throughout eternity.

Verse 29. Shall inherit the wind] He who dissipates his property by riotous living, shall be as unsatisfied, as he who attempts to feed upon air.

Verse 30. The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life] חַיִּים כַּרְמֵי הַצַּיִת chayim, the tree of lives. It is like that tree which grew in the paradise of God; increasing the bodily and mental vigour of those who eat of it.

He that winneth souls is wise] Wisdom seeks to reclaim the wanderers: and he who is influenced by wisdom will do the same.

Verse 31. Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, &c.] The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, read this verse as follows:—And if the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear? And this St. Peter quotes litteratim, 1 Pet. iv. 18, where see the note.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XII.

Verse 1. Whoso loveth instruction] מוּסַר musar, discipline, or correction, loves knowledge, for correction is the way to knowledge.

But he that hateth reproof is brutish] בָּעִיר baar, he is a bear; and expects no more benefit from correction than the ox does from the goad.

Verse 2. A good man obtaineth favour] First, it is God who makes him good; for every child of Adam is bad till the grace of God changes his heart. Secondly, while he walks in the path of obedience, he increases in goodness, and consequently in the favour of the Lord.

Verse 3. A man shall not be established by wickedness] Evil is always variable: it has no fixed principle except the root that is in the human heart; and even that is ever assuming new forms. Nothing is permanent but goodness; and that is unchangeable, because it comes from God. The produce of goodness is permanent, because it has God's blessing in it: the fruit of wickedness, or the property procured by wickedness, is transitory; because it has God's curse in it. The righteous has his root in God; and therefore, he shall not be moved.

Verse 4. A virtuous woman is a crown to her husband] יָרֵחַ נְכוּמָה עֲשֵׂת חַיִּיל chayil, a strong woman. Our word virtus (virtus) is derived from vir, a man; and as man is the 5 The thoughts of the righteous are right: but the counsels of the wicked are deceit.

6 The words of the wicked are to lie in wait for blood: but the mouth of the upright shall deliver them.

7 The wicked are overthrown, and are not: but the house of the righteous shall stand.

8 A man shall be commended according to his wisdom: but he that is of a perverse heart shall be despised.

9 He that is despised, and hath a servant, is better than he that honoureth himself, and lacketh bread.

10 A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast: but the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel.

11 He that tilleth his land shall be satisfied with bread: but he that followeth vain persons is void of understanding.

12 The wicked desireth the net of evil men: but the root of the righteous yieldeth fruit.

13 The wicked is snared by the transgression of his lips: but the just shall come out of trouble.

14 A man shall be satisfied with good by the fruit of his mouth: and the recompense of a man's hand shall be rendered unto him.

15 The way of the fool is right in his own eyes: but he that hearkeneth unto counsel is wise.

16 A fool's wrath is presently known: but a prudent man covereth shame.

17 He that speaketh truth sheweth forth righteousness: but a false witness deceit.

18 There is that speaketh like the piercings of a sword: but the tongue of the wise is health.

19 The lip of truth shall be established for ever: but a lying tongue is but for a moment.

noblest of God's creatures, virtue expresses what is becoming to man; what is noble, courageous, and dignified. And as vir, a man, comes from vis, power or strength; so it implies what is strong and vigorous in principle: and as in uncivilized life strength and courage were considered the very highest, because apparently the most necessary, of all virtues; hence the term itself might have become the denomination of all excellent moral qualities; and is now applied to whatever constitutes the system of morality and moral duties. In some parts, however, of the world, where arts and sciences have made little progress, strength is one of the first qualifications of a wife, where the labours of the field are appointed to them. It is not an uncommon sight in different parts of Africa, to see the wives (queens) of the kings and chiefs going out in the morning to the plantations, with their mattock in their hand, and their youngest child on their back; and when arrived at the ground, lay the young prince or princess upon the earth, which when weary of lying on one side, will roll itself on the other, and thus continue during the course of the day, except at the intervals in which its mother gives it suck, without uttering a single whimper; the parent employed all the while in labour, which we in Europe generally assign to our horses. In such cases, the strong wife is the highest acquisition; and is a crown to her husband, though he be a king of Bonny or Calabar. It is certain that in ancient times the women in Judea did some of the severest work in the fields, such as drawing water from the wells, and watering the flocks, &c. On this account, I think, the words may be taken literally; and especially when we add another consideration, that a woman healthy, and of good muscular powers, is the most likely to produce, and properly rear up, a healthy offspring; and children of this kind are a crown to their parents.

Is as rottenness in his bones.] Does not this refer to a woman irregular in her manners, who by her incontinence not only maketh her husband ashamed, but contracts and communicates such diseases as bring rottenness into the bones? I think so. And I think, this was the view taken of the text by Coverdale, who translates thus:—"A steadfast woman is a crowne unto her husshonde: but she that behaved herself unhonestly is a corruption in his bones."

Verse 7. The wicked are overthrown] Seldom does God give such a long life, or numerous offspring.

But the house of the righteous shall stand.] God blesses their progeny; and their families continue long in the earth; whereas the wicked seldom have many generations in a direct line. This is God's mercy, that the intail of iniquity may be in some sort cut off, so that the same vices may not be strengthened by successive generations. For generally the bad root produces not only a bad plant, but one worse than itself.

Verse 9. He that is despised, and hath a servant] I believe the Vulgate gives the true sense of this verse:—Melior est pauper, et sufficiens sibi; quam gloriosus, et indigens pane. "Better is the poor man who provides for himself; than the proud, who is destitute of bread." The Versions in general agree in this sense. This needs no comment. There are some who through pride of birth, &c. would rather starve, than put their hands to menial labour. Though they may be lords, how much to be preferred is the simple peasant, who supports himself and family by the drudgery of life!

Verse 10. A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast] One principal characteristic of a holy man is mercy: cruelty is unknown to him; and his benevolence extends to the meanest of the brute creation. Pity rules the heart of a pious man, and he can do nothing that is cruel. He considers what is best for the comfort, ease, health, and life, of the beast that serves him; and he knows that God Himself careth for oxen: and one of the ten commandments provides a seventh part of the time to be allotted for the rest of labouring beasts as well as for man.

I once in my travels met with the Hebrews on this clause on the sign board of a public inn:—יודע יסדיק נפש בהמה. "A righteous man considereth the life of his beast;" which being very appropriate, reminded me that I should feed my horse.

The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel.] אכזרי אכזרי, are violent, without mercy, ruthless. The wicked, influenced by Satan, can shew no other disposition than what is in their master. If they appear at any time merciful, it is a cloak which they use to cover purposes of cruelty. To accomplish its end, iniquity will assume any garb, speak respectfully, extol benevolence, sometimes even give to the poor! But, times Danaos, et dona ferentes. The cry of fire at midnight, provided it be in another's dwelling, is more congenial to their souls than the cry of mercy. Look at the human Herods, "out-heroding Herod," in horse-races, bruising matches, and cock-fights. The hell is yet undescribed, that is suited to monsters in cruelty.

Verse 11. He that tilleth his land] God's blessing will be in the labour of the honest agriculturalist.

But he that followeth vain persons] He who, while he should be cultivating his ground, preparing for a future crop, or reaping his harvest, associates with volenters, coursers of hares, hunters of foxes, or those engaged in any champaign amusements, is void of understanding; and I have known several such come to beggary.

To this verse the Septuagint add the following clause:—'Ος εστιν ηθος εν οικω διατριβας, εν τω λατρω οχρωματι καταλειπει επιμα. He who is a boon companion in banquets, shall leave dishonour in his own fortress. This has been copied by the Vulgate and the Arabic. That is, the man who frequents the ale-house enriches that, while he impoverishes his own habitation.

Verse 12. The wicked desireth the net of evil men] They applaud their ways, and are careful to imitate them in their wiles.

Verse 13. The wicked is snared by the transgression of his lips] A man who deals in lies and false oaths will sooner or later be found out to his own ruin. There is another proverb as true as this: A liar had need of a good memory. For as the truth is not in him, he says and unsays, and often contradicts himself.

Verse 16. A fool's wrath is presently known] We have a proverb very like this, and it will serve for illustration: A fool's bolt is soon shot.

A weak-minded man has no self-government;—he is easily angered, and generally speaks whatever comes first to his mind.

Verse 18. There is that speaketh] Instead of βοθη βοθη, blabbing out, blustering; several MSS. have βοθη βοθη, boasting, and instead of βοθη βοθη ko-madkerioth, as the piercings, seven MSS., with the Complutensian Polyglott, have βοθη βοθη bo-madkerioth, in the piercings. "There is that trusteth in the piercings of a sword: but the tongue of the wise is health." But I suppose the former to be the true reading.

Verse 19. A lying tongue is but for a moment] Truth stands for ever; because its foundation is indestructible: but falsehood may soon be detected; and, though it gain 20 Deceit is in the heart of them that imagine evil: but to the counsellors of peace is joy.

21 There shall no evil happen to the just: but the wicked shall be filled with mischief.

22 Lying lips are abomination to the Lord: but they that deal truly are his delight.

23 A prudent man concealeth knowledge: but the heart of fools proclaimeth foolishness.

24 The hand of the diligent shall bear rule: but the slothful shall be under tribute.

25 Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop: but a good word maketh it glad.

26 The righteous is more excellent than his neighbour: but the way of the wicked seduceth them.

27 The slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting: but the substance of a diligent man is precious.

28 In the way of righteousness is life; and in the pathway thereof there is no death.

credit for a while, it had that credit because it was supposed to be truth.

Verse 21. There shall no evil happen to the just] No, for all things work together for good to them that love God. Whatever occurs to a righteous man God turns to his advantage. But, on the other hand, the wicked are filled with mischief: they are hurt, grieved, and wounded, by every occurrence; and nothing turns to their profit.

Verse 23. A prudent man concealeth knowledge] "If a fool hold his peace, he may pass for a wise man." I have known men of some learning, so intent on immediately informing a company how well cultivated their minds were, that they have passed either for insignificant pedants or stupid asses.

Verse 24. The hand of the diligent shall bear rule] And why? because by his own industry he is independent; and every such person is respected wherever found.

Verse 25. Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop] Sorrow of heart, hopeless love, or a sense of God's displeasure, these prostrate the man, and he becomes a child before them.

But a good word maketh it glad.] A single good or favourable word will remove despondency: and that word, Son, be of good cheer, thy sins are forgiven thee, will instantly remove despair.

Verse 26. The righteous is more excellent than his neighbour] That is, if the neighbour be a wicked man. The spirit of the proverb lies here:—The poor righteous man is more excellent than his sinful neighbour, though affluent and noble. The Syriac has it, The righteous desireth good to his neighbour. A late commentator has translated it, The righteous explore their pastures. How wrong can be translated their pastures, I know not: but none of the Versions understood it in this way. The Vulgate is rather singular:—Qui negligit damnium propter amicum, justus est. "He who neglects or sustains a loss for the sake of his friend, is a just man." The Septuagint is insufferable:—The well-instructed righteous man shall be his own friend. One would hope these translators meant not exclusively:—he should love his neighbour as himself.

Verse 27. The slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting.] Because he is a slothful man, he does not hunt for prey; therefore, gets none, and cannot roast that he may eat. There is some obscurity in the original, on which the Versions cast little light. Coverdale translates the whole verse thus:—A discreetfull man schal fynde no vauantage: but he that is content with what he hath, is more worth than gold. My old MS. Bible:—The gulf man schal not fynd wynnunge: and the substance of a man schal be the pris of gold.

By translating רמיyah rimiyah, the deceitful, instead of the slothful man, which appears to be the genuine meaning of the word, we may obtain a good sense as the Vulgate has done: "The deceitful man shall not find gain: but the substance of a (just) man shall be the price of gold." But our common Version allowing רמיyah rimiyah, to be trans-

5 A righteous man hateth lying: but a wicked man is loathsome, and cometh to shame.

6 Righteousness keepeth him that is upright in the way: but wickedness overthroweth the sinner.

8 The ransom of a man's life are his riches: but the poor heareth not rebuke.

9 The light of the righteous rejoiceth: but the lamp of the wicked shall be put out.

10 Only by pride cometh contention: but with the well advised is wisdom.

11 Wealth gotten by vanity shall be diminished: but he that gathereth by labour shall increase.

12 Hope deferred maketh the heart sick: but when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life.

lated fraudulent, which is its proper meaning, gives the best sense. The fraudulent man roasteth not that which he took in hunting, the justice of God snatching from his mouth what he had acquired unrighteously.

But the substance of a diligent man.] One who by honest industry acquires all his property,—is precious, because it has the blessing of God in it.

Verse 28. In the way of righteousness is life] שני chayim, lives; life temporal, and life eternal.

And in the pathway thereof there is no death.] Not only do the general precepts and promises of God lead to life eternal, and promote life temporal; but every duty, every act of faith, patience of hope, and labour of love, though requiring much self-abasement, self-denial, and often an extension of corporal strength, all lead to life. For in every case, in every particular, "the path of duty is the way of safety." The latter clause is only a repetition of the sense of the former.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIII.

Verse 1. A wise son heareth his father's instruction] The child that has had a proper nurturing, will profit by his father's counsels: but the child that is permitted to fulfil its own will, and have its own way, will jest at the reproofs of its parents.

Verse 3. He that keepeth his mouth keepeth his life] How often have the foolish, headstrong, and wicked, forfeited their lives by the treasonable or blasphemous words they have spoken. The government of the tongue is a rare but useful talent.

But he that openeth wide his lips] He that puts no bounds to his loquacity, speaks on every subject, and gives his judgment and opinion on every matter. It has often been remarked that God has given us two eyes that we may see much; two ears that we may hear much: but has given us but one tongue; to indicate that though we hear and see much, we should speak but little.

Verse 4. The soul of the sluggard desireth, and hath nothing] We often hear many religious people expressing a desire to have more of the Divine life, and yet never get forward in it. How is this? The reason is,—they desire, but do not stir themselves up to lay hold upon the Lord. They are always learning, but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. They seek to enter in at the straight gate, but are not able, because they do not strive.

Verse 7. There is that maketh himself rich] That labours hard to acquire money, yet hath nothing: his excessive covetousness not being satisfied with what he possesses; nor permitting him to enjoy with comfort what he has acquired. The fable of the dog in the manger will illustrate this.

There is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches.] As poor, said St. Paul, yet making many rich; as having nothing, yet possessing all things. The former is the rich poor man; the latter is the poor rich man.

one's self, and often signifies feigning or pretending to be what one is not, or not to be what one is; the words may be understood of persons who feign or pretend to be either richer or poorer than they really are, to accomplish some particular purpose. "There is that feigneth himself to be rich, yet hath nothing; there is that feigneth himself to be poor, yet hath great riches." Both these characters frequently occur in life.

Verse 8. The ransom of a man's life] Those who have riches have often much trouble with them: as they had much trouble to get them, so they have much trouble to keep them. In despotic countries, a rich man is often accused of some capital crime; and to save his life, though he may be quite innocent, is obliged to give up his riches: but the poor, in such countries, are put to no trouble.

Verse 9. The light of the righteous rejoiceth] They shall have that measure of prosperity which shall be best for them: but the wicked, howsoever prosperous for a time, shall be brought into desolation. Light and lamp in both cases may signify posterity. The righteous shall have a joyous posterity: but that of the wicked shall be cut off. So 1 Kings xi. 36, "And unto his son will I give one tribe, that David my servant may have a light (v ner, a lamp) always before me." xv. 4, "Nevertheless for David's sake did the Lord give them a lamp, to set up his son after him." See also Psa. cxxxii. 17, and several other places.

Verse 10. By pride cometh contention] Perhaps there is not a quarrel among individuals in private life, nor a war among nations, that does not proceed from pride and ambition. Neither man nor nation will be content to be less than another; and to acquire the wished for superiority all is thrown into general confusion, both in public and private life. It was to destroy this spirit of pride, that Jesus was manifested in the extreme of humility and humiliation among men. The salvation of Christ is a deliverance from pride, and a being clothed with humility. As far as we are humble, so far we are saved.

Verse 11. Wealth gotten by vanity] Wealth, that is not the result of honest industry and hard labour, is seldom permanent. All fortunes acquired by speculations, lucky hits, and ministering to the pride or luxury of others, &c. soon become dissipated. They are not gotten in the way of providence, and have not God's blessing; and, therefore, are not permanent.

Verse 12. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick] When once a good is discovered, want of it felt, strong desire for the possession excited, and the promise of attainment made on grounds unsuspected, so that the reality of the thing and the certainty of the promise are manifest; hope posts forward to realize the blessing.—Delay in the gratification pains the mind; the increase of the delay prostrates and sickens the heart: and if delay sickens the heart, ultimate disappointment kills it. But when the thing desired, hoped for, and expected comes, it is a tree of life, עץ חיים chayim, the tree of lives: it comforts and invigorates both body and soul. To the tree of lives, in the midst of the garden of Paradise, how frequent are the allusions in the writings of Solomon, and in other parts of the Holy Scriptures! What deep and perhaps yet unknown mysteries were in this tree!

Verse 13. Whoso despiseth the word] The revelation which God has in His mercy given to man,—shall be destroyed: for there is no other way of salvation but that which it points out.

But he that feareth the commandment] That respects it so as to obey it, walking as this revelation directs,—shall be rewarded; shall find it to be his highest interest;

20 He that walketh with wise men shall be wise: but a companion of fools shall be destroyed.

21 Evil pursueth sinners: but to the righteous good shall be repayed.

22 A good man leaveth an inheritance to his children's children: and the wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just.

23 Much food is in the tillage of the poor; but there is that is destroyed for want of judgment.

24 He that spareth his rod hateth his son: but he that loveth him chasteneth him betimes.

25 The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul: but the belly of the wicked shall want.

x Heb. shall be broken.—y Psa. 22. 10.—z Job 27. 16, 17. Chap. 28. 8. Eccles. 2. 23.—a Chap. 12. 11.—b Chap. 19. 12. & 22. 15. & 23. 12. & 29. 15, 17.—c Psa. 24. 10. & 37. 2.

and shall be in peace or safety, as the Hebrew word (שׁוּבָה) may be translated.

Verse 14. The law of the wise is a fountain of life] Perhaps it would be better to translate, The law is to the wise man a fountain of life. It is the same to him, as the vein of lives, עין חיים mekor chayim, the great aorta, which transmits the blood from the heart to every part of the body. There seems to be here an allusion to the garden of Paradise,—to the tree of lives,—to the temple, —to the baleful issue of that temptation,—and to the death entailed on man by his unwisely breaking the law of his God.

Verse 15. The way of transgressors is hard] Never was a truer saying: most sinners have more pain and difficulty to get their souls damned, than the righteous have, with all their cross-bearing, to get to the kingdom of heaven.

Verse 17. A wicked messenger] The Septuagint:—βασιλεὺς θρασεύς, a bold king: instead of ἄγγελος malac, a messenger, they had read מלך melac, a king: but they are singular in this rendering; none of the other Versions have it so. He that betrays the counsels of his government, or the interests of His country, will sooner or later fall into mischief: but he that faithfully and loyally fulfils his mission, shall produce honour and safety to the commonwealth.

Verse 19. The desire accomplished] See on ver. 12.
Verse 20. He that walketh with wise men shall be wise] To walk with a person implies love and attachment; and it is impossible not to imitate those we love. So we say, "Shew me his company, and I'll tell you the man." Let me know the company he keeps, and I shall easily guess his moral character.

Verse 22. A good man leaveth an inheritance] He files many a prayer in heaven in their behalf; and his good example and advices are remembered and quoted from generation to generation. Besides, whatever property he left was honestly acquired; and well gotten goods are permanent. The general experience of men shews this to be a general case; and that property ill-gotten seldom reaches to the third generation. This even the heathens observed. Hence:—

De male quaeritis non gaudet tertius haerens.
"The third generation shall not possess the goods that have been unjustly acquired."

Verse 23. That is destroyed for want of judgment] O! how much of the poverty of the poor arises from their own want of management! They have little or no economy, and no foresight. When they get any thing, they speedily spend it; and a feast and a famine make the chief varieties of their life.

Verse 24. He that spareth his rod hateth his son] That is, if he hated him, he could not do him a greater disservice than not to correct him, when his obstinacy or disobedience requires it. We have met with this subject already, and it is a favourite with Solomon.—See the places referred to in the margin.

The Rev. Mr. Holden makes some sensible observations on this passage. "By the neglect of early correction, the desires (passions) obtain ascendancy; the temper becomes irascible, peevish, querulous. Pride is nourished; humility destroyed; and by the habit of indulgence the mind is incapacitated to bear with firmness and equanimity the cares and sorrows, the checks and disappointments, which sees is heir to."

Verse 25. To the satisfying of his soul] His desires are all moderate: he is contented with his circumstances, and is pleased with the lot which God is pleased to send. The wicked, though he use all shifts and expedients to acquire earthly good, not sticking even at rapine and wrong, is frequently in real want; and always dissatisfied with his portion. A contented mind is a continual feast.

CHAPTER XIV.

Various moral sentiments. The contrasts between wisdom and folly; and the different effects of each.

Verse 1. Every wise woman buildeth her house: but the foolish plucketh it down with her hands.

2 He that walketh in his uprightness feareth the Lord: but he that is perverse in his ways despiseth him.

3 In the mouth of the foolish is a rod of pride: but the lips of the wise shall preserve them.

4 Where no oxen are the crib is clean: but much increase is by the strength of the ox.

5 A faithful witness will not lie: but a false witness will utter lies.

6 A scorner seeketh wisdom, and findeth it not: but knowledge is easy unto him that understandeth.

7 Go from the presence of a foolish man, when thou perceivest not in him the lips of knowledge.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIV.

Verse 1. Every wise woman buildeth her house] By her prudent and industrious management she increases property in the family, furniture in the house, and food and raiment for her household. This is the true building of a house. The thrifless wife acts differently, and the opposite is the result. Household furniture, far from being increased, is dilapidated; and her household are ill-fed, ill-clothed, and worse educated.

Verse 3. The mouth of the foolish is a rod of pride] The reproofs of such a person are ill-judged and ill-timed; and generally are conveyed in such language as renders them not only ineffectual, but displeasing, and even irritating.

Verse 4. But much increase is by the strength of the ox.] The ox is the most profitable of all the beasts used in husbandry. Except merely for speed, he is almost in every respect superior to the horse. 1. He is longer-lived. 2. Scarcely liable to any diseases. 3. He is steady, and always pulls fair in his gears. 4. He lives, fattens and maintains his strength on what a horse will not eat; and, therefore, is supported on one third of the cost. 5. His manure is more profitable. And, 6. When he is worn out in his labour his flesh is good for the nourishment of man, his horns of great utility, and his hide almost invaluable. It might be added, he is almost no expense in choosing; and his gears are much more simple, and much less expensive, than those of the horse. In all large farms, oxen are greatly to be preferred to horses.—Have but patience with this most patient animal, and you will soon find that there is much increase in the strength and labour of the ox.

Verse 6. A scorner seeketh wisdom.] I believe the scorner means in this book the man that despises the counsel of God; the infidel. Such may seek wisdom: but he never can find it, because he does not seek it where it is to be found; neither in the teaching of God's Spirit, nor in the revelation of His will.

Verse 7. When thou perceivest not—the lips of knowledge] Instead of נֶרֶךְ דָּאָת, knowledge, several MS. have נֶרֶךְ שֹׁמֵר, a lie. How this reading came I cannot conjecture. The meaning of the adage is plain. Never associate with a vain empty fellow, when thou perceivest he can neither convey nor receive instruction.

Verse 8. Is to understand his way] Instead of חֵן חָבִין, to understand, חֵן חָכִין, to direct his way, is found in one MS. It makes a very good sense.

Verse 9. Fools make a mock at sin] And only fools would do so. But he that makes a sport at sinning, will find it no sport to suffer the vengeance of an eternal fire. Some learned men by their criticisms have brought this verse into embarrassments, out of which they were not able to extricate it. I believe we shall not come much nearer the sense than our present Version does.

Verse 10. The heart knoweth his own bitterness] חֵן מֵרַע נַפְשׁוֹ, "The bitterness of its soul." Under spiritual sorrow, the heart feels; the soul feels; all the animal nature feels, and suffers. But when the peace of God is spoken to the troubled soul, the joy is indescribable; the whole man partakes of it. And a stranger to these religious feelings, to the travail of the soul, and to the witness of the Spirit, does not intermeddle with them; he does not understand them: indeed, they may be even foolishness to him, because they are spiritually discerned.

Verse 12. There is a way which seemeth right unto a

8 The wisdom of the prudent is to understand his way: but the folly of fools is deceit.

9 Fools make a mock at sin: but among the righteous there is favour.

10 The heart knoweth his own bitterness; and a stranger doth not intermeddle with his joy.

11 The house of the wicked shall be overthrown: but the tabernacle of the upright shall flourish.

12 There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death.

13 Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful; and the end of that mirth is heaviness.

14 The backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways; and a good man shall be satisfied from himself.

15 The simple believeth every word: but the prudent man looketh well to his going.

16 A wise man feareth, and departeth from evil: but the fool rageth and is confident.

1 Heb. the bitterness of his soul.— Job 8. 15.— Ch. 16. 25.— Rom. 6. 21.— Ps. 5. 4. Eccles. 2. 2.— Ch. 1. 31. & 12. 14.— Ch. 22. 3.

man] This may be his early besetting sin,—the sin of his construction,—the sin of his trade. Or it may be his own false views of religion: he may have an imperfect repentance, a false faith, a very false creed; and he may persuade himself that he is in the direct way to heaven. Many of the Papists, when they were burning the saints of God in the flames at Smithfield, thought they were doing God service! And in the late Irish massacre, the more of the Protestants they piked to death, shot, or burnt, the more they believed they deserved of God's favour, and their church's gratitude! But cruelty and murder are the short road, the near way, to eternal perdition.

Verse 13. Even in laughter the heart is sorrowful] Many a time is a smile forced upon the face, when the heart is in deep distress. And it is a hard task to put on the face of mirth when a man has a heavy heart.

Verse 14. The backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways] 1. Who is the backslider? no sug. 1. The man who once walked in the ways of religion, but has withdrawn from them. 2. The man who once fought manfully against the world, the devil, and the flesh; but has retreated from the battle. 3. The man who once belonged to the congregation of the saints; but is now removed from them, and is set down in the synagogue of Satan.

2. But who is the backslider in heart? 1. Not him who was surprised and overcome by the power of temptation, and the weakness of his own heart. 2. But he who drinks down iniquity with greediness. 3. Who gives cheerful way to the bent of his own nature, and now delights in fulfilling the lusts of the flesh and of the mind. 4. Who loves sin, as before he loved godliness.

3. What are his own ways? Folly, sin, disappointment, and death; with the apprehension of the wrath of God, and the sharp twings of a guilty conscience.

4. What is implied in being filled with his own ways? Having his soul saturated with folly, sin, and disappointment. At last ending here below in death; and then commencing an eternal existence where the fire is not quenched, and under the influence of that worm that never dieth. Alas! alas! who may abide when God doeth this!

And a good man shall be satisfied from himself.] 1. Who is the good man? (אִישׁ אֲשֶׁר יֵשֶׁתּוֹב.) 1. The man whose heart is right with God, whose tongue corresponds to his heart, and whose actions correspond to both. 2. The man who is every thing that the sterner and backslider are not.

2. He shall be satisfied from himself.—He shall have the testimony of his own conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, he has his conversation among men.

He shall have God's Spirit to testify with his spirit, that he is a child of God. He hath the witness in himself, that he is born from above. The Spirit of God in his conscience, and the testimony of God in his Bible, shew him that he belongs to the heavenly family. It is not from creeds or confessions of faith that he derives his satisfaction: he gets it from heaven, and it is sealed upon his heart.

Verse 16. A wise man feareth] He can never trust in himself, though he be satisfied from himself.] He knows that his sufficiency is of God; and he has that fear that causes him to depart from evil, which is a guardian to the love he feels. Love renders him cautious; the other makes him confident. His caution leads him from sin; his confidence leads him to God.

17 He that is soon angry dealeth foolishly: and a man of wicked devices is hated.

18 The simple inherit folly: but the prudent are crowned with knowledge.

19 The evil bow before the good: and the wicked at the gates of the righteous.

20 * The poor is hated even of his own neighbour: but the rich hath many friends.

21 He that despiseth his neighbour, sinneth: but he that hath mercy on the poor, happy is he.

22 Do they not err that devise evil? but mercy and truth shall be to them that devise good.

23 In all labour there is profit: but the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury.

24 The crown of the wise is their riches: but the foolishness of fools is folly.

25 * A true witness delivereth souls: but a deceitful witness speaketh lies.

26 In the fear of the LORD is strong confidence; and his children shall have a place of refuge.

27 * The fear of the LORD is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death.

28 In the multitude of people is the king's honour: but in the want of people is the destruction of the prince.

29 * He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding: but he that is 'hasty of spirit exalteth folly.

30 A sound heart is the life of the flesh: but envy * the rottenness of the bones.

31 ^b He that oppresseth the poor reproacheth his Maker: but he that honoureth him hath mercy on the poor.

32 The wicked is driven away in his wickedness: but ^d the righteous hath hope in his death.

33 Wisdom resteth in the heart of him that hath understanding: but * that which is in the midst of fools is made known.

34 Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach ^f to any people.

35 * The king's favour is toward a wise servant: but his wrath is against him that causeth shame.

Verse 17. He that is soon angry] קצר אפ katsar aphim, "short of nostrils:" because when a man is angry, his nose is contracted, and drawn up towards his eyes.

Dealeth foolishly] He has no time for reflection; he is hurried on by his passions, speaks like a fool, and acts like a madman.

Verse 19. The evil bow before the good] They are almost constrained to shew them respect; and the wicked, who have wasted their substance with riotous living, bow before the gates of the righteous—of benevolent men, begging a morsel of bread.

Verse 20. But the rich hath many friends.] Many who speak to him the language of friendship: but if they profess friendship because he is rich, there is not one real friend among them. There is a fine saying of Cicero on this subject:—Ut hirundines festivo tempore praesto sunt, frigore pulae recedunt: ita fidei amici sereno tempore praesto sunt: simul atque fortuna hiemem viderint, evolvant omnes! Lib. iv. ad Herenn. "They are like swallows who fly off during the winter, and quit our cold climates; and do not return till the warm season: but as soon as the winter sets in, they are all off again." So Horace:—

Donec eris felix, multos numerabis amicos: Nullus ad amicum istis amicus opes.
"As long as thou art prosperous, thou shalt have many friends: but who of them will regard thee, when thou hast lost thy wealth!"

Verse 21. He that despiseth his neighbour, sinneth] To despise a man because he has some natural blemish is unjust, cruel, and wicked. He is not the author of his own imperfections; they did not occur through his fault or folly; and if he could, he would not retain them. It is, therefore, unjust and wicked to despise him for what is not his fault, but his misfortune.

But he that hath mercy on the poor] Who reproaches no man for his poverty or scanty intellect, but divides his bread with the hungry, happy is he. The blessing of God, and of them that were ready to perish, shall come upon him.

Verse 23. In all labour there is profit] If a man work at his trade, he gains by it; if he cultivate the earth, it will yield an increase; and in proportion as he labours, so will be his profit: but he who talks much labours little. And a man of words is seldom a man of deeds. Less talk and more work, is one of our own ancient adverbs.

Verse 24. But the foolishness of fools is folly] The Targum reads, The honour of fools is folly. The fool, from his foolishness, produces acts of folly. This appears to be the meaning.

Verse 26. In the fear of the LORD is strong confidence] From this, and from genuine Christian experience, we find that the fear of God is highly consistent with the strongest confidence in His mercy and goodness.

Verse 27. The fear of the LORD is a fountain of life] מקור חיים mekor chayim, the vein of lives. Another allusion to the great aorta which carries the blood from the heart to all the extremities of the body. Of this phrase, and the tree of lives, Solomon is peculiarly fond. See on chap. iv. 23; x. 12.

Verse 28. In the multitude of people] It is the interest of every state to promote marriage by every means that is just and prudent: and to discourage, disgrace, and debase celibacy; to render bachelors incapable, after a given age, of all public employments: and to banish nunneries and monasteries from all parts of their dominions;—they have ever, from their invention, contributed more to vice than virtue; and are positively point blank against the law of God.

Verse 29. That is hasty of spirit] קצר אפ katsar ruach, the short of spirit; one that is easily irritated; and, being in a passion, he is agitated so as to be literally short of breath. Here put in opposition to קצר אפ katsar ruach, long of nostrils; see on ver. 17, and of the same import with St. Paul's μακροθυμία, long-suffering, long-mindedness. See on Eph. iv. 2.

Verse 30. A sound heart is the life of the flesh] A healthy state of the blood, and a proper circulation of that stream of life, is the grand cause, in the hand of God, of health and longevity. If the heart be diseased, life cannot be long continued.

Verse 31. He that oppresseth the poor reproacheth his Maker] Because the poor, or comparatively poor, are, in the order of God, a part of the inhabitants of the earth; and every man who loves God will shew mercy to the poor, for with this God is peculiarly delighted. The poor have we ever with us, for the excitement and exercises of those benevolent, compassionate, and merciful feelings, without which men had been brutes.

Verse 32. The wicked is driven away in his wickedness] He does not leave life cheerfully. Poor soul! Thou hast no hope in the other world, and thou leavest the present with the utmost regret! Thou wilt not go off:—but God will drive thee.

But the righteous hath hope in his death.] He rejoices to depart and be with Christ: to him death is gain; he is not reluctant to go—he flies at the call of God.

Verse 34. But sin is a reproach to any people.] I am satisfied this is not the sense of the original, רועל ורועל רועל re-chaed le-ummim chatath; which would be better rendered, And mercy is a sin-offering for the people. The Vulgate has, Miseros autem facit populos peccatum, sin makes the people wretched. Ελασσωσιν δε φυλας απαρια:—Septuagint. But sins lessen the tribes. So also the Syriac and Arabic. The plain meaning of the original seems to be, a national disposition to mercy appears in the sight of God as a continual sin-offering. Not that it atones for the sin of the people: but as a sin-offering is pleasing in the sight of the God of mercy, so is a merciful disposition in a nation. This view of the verse is consistent with the purest doctrines of free grace. And what is the true sense of the words, we should take at all hazards and consequences: we shall never trench upon a sound creed by a literal interpretation of God's words. No nation has more of this spirit than the British nation. It is true, we have too many sanguinary laws: but the spirit of the people is widely different.

If any one will contend for the Common Version, he has my consent; and I readily agree in the saying, Sia is the reproach of any people. It is the curse and scandal of man.

Verse 35. The king's favour is toward a wise servant] The king should have an intelligent man for his minister; a man of deep sense, sound judgment, and of a feeling, merciful, disposition. He who has not the former, will plunge the nation into difficulties; and he who has not the latter, will embark her in disastrous wars. Most wars are occasioned by bad ministers,—men of blood, who cannot be happy but in endeavouring to unchain the spirit of discord. Let every humane heart pray, Lord, scatter thou the people who delight in war! Amen—so be it. Selah!

NOTES ON CHAPTER XV.

Verse 1. A soft answer] Gentleness will often disarm the most furious, where positive derangement has not taken place; one angry word will always beget another, for the disposition of one spirit always begets its own likeness in another: thus kindness produces kindness, and rage produces rage. Universal experience confirms this proverb.

Verse 2. Useth knowledge aright] This is very difficult to know:—when to speak, and when to be silent; what to speak, and what to leave unspoken; the manner that is best, and most suitable to the occasion, the subject, the circumstances, and the person. All these are difficulties, often even to the wisest men. Even wise counsel may be foolishly given.

Verse 3. The eyes of the Lord are in every place] Not only He sees all things, by His omnipresence, but His providence is every where: And if the consideration that his eye is in every place, have a tendency to appal those whose hearts are not right before him, and who seek for privacy that they may commit iniquity; yet the other consideration, that His providence is every where, has a great tendency to encourage the upright, and all who may be in perilous or distressing circumstances.

Verse 4. A wholesome tongue is a tree of life] Here again is an allusion to the paradisaical tree, עץ החיים etc chayim, "The tree of lives."

Verse 8. The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination] Even the most sedulous attendance on the ordinances of God, and performance of the ceremonies of religion, is an abomination to the Lord, if the heart be not right with Him, and the observance do not flow from a principle of pure devotion. No religious acts will do in place of holiness to the Lord.

The prayer of the upright is his delight.] What a motive to be upright; and what a motive to the upright to pray. But who is the upright? The man who is weary of sin, and sincerely desires the salvation of God; as well as he who has already received a measure of that salvation. Hence it is said in the next verse, He loveth him that followeth after righteousness.

Verse 11. Hell and destruction] שְׁעַל אַבְדוֹן Sheol ve-abaddon. Hades, the invisible world, the place of separate spirits till the resurrection; and, Abaddon, the place of torment; are ever under the eye and control of the Lord.

Verse 13. By sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken.] Every kind of sorrow worketh death, but that which is the offspring of true repentance. This alone is healthful to the soul.

Verse 16. Better is little with the fear of the Lord] Because where the fear of God is, there are moderation and contentment of spirit.

Verse 19. The way of the slothful man is as a hedge of thorns] Because he is slothful, he imagines ten thousand difficulties in the way which cannot be surmounted; but they are all the creatures of his own imagination; that imagination being formed by his sloth.

Verse 22. But in the multitude of counsellors] See note on chap. xi. 14. But רַב יְעֻזִים rab yeozim, the chief or master of the counsel, the prime minister; so it might be translated.

Verse 24. The way of life is above to the wise] There is a treble antithesis here:—1. The way of the wise, and that of the fool. 2. The one is above, the other below. 3. The one is of life, the other is of death.

Verse 25. The house of the proud] Families of this description are seldom continued long. The Lord hates pride; and those that will not be humble He will destroy.

Verse 27. He that is greedy of gain] He who will be rich troubleth his own house. He is a torment to himself and his family, by his avariciousness and penury; and a curse to those with whom he deals.

But he that hateth gifts] Whatever is given to pervert judgment.

Verse 28. The heart of the righteous studieth to answer] His tongue never runs before his wit: he never speaks rashly, and never unadvisedly; because he studies, ponders his thoughts and his words.

Verse 29. The Lord is far from the wicked] He is neither near to hear, nor near to help.

10 * A divine sentence is in the lips of the king: his mouth transgresseth not in judgment.

11 A * just weight and balance are the LORD's: all the weights of the bag are his work.

12 It is an abomination to kings to commit wickedness: for the throne is established by righteousness.

13 * Righteous lips are the delight of kings; and they love him that speaketh right.

14 b The wrath of a king is as messengers of death: but a wise man will pacify it.

15 In the light of the king's countenance is life; and his favour is as a cloud of the latter rain.

16 * How much better is it to get wisdom than gold? and to get understanding rather to be chosen than silver?

17 The highway of the upright is to depart from evil: he that keepeth his way preserveth his soul.

18 * Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall.

19 Better it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud.

20 * He that handleth a matter wisely shall find good: and whoso trusteth in the LORD, happy is he.

21 The wise in heart shall be called prudent: and the sweetness of the lips increaseth learning.

22 Understanding is a well-spring of life unto him that hath it: but the instruction of fools is folly.

23 * The heart of the wise teacheth his mouth, and addeth learning to his lips.

24 Pleasant words are as a honeycomb, sweet to the soul, and health to the bones.

25 * There is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death.

26 * He that laboreth, laboreth for himself; for his mouth craveth it of him.

27 * An ungodly man diggeth up evil: and in his lips there is as a burning fire.

28 * A froward man soweth strife: and a whisperer separateth chief friends.

29 A violent man enticeth his neighbour, and leadeth him into the way that is not good.

acting according to truth, could atone for his own iniquity. The Hebrew text is not ambiguous, כבוד אמת יצא כיסר because of-emith yecapher avon; By mercy and truth he shall atone for iniquity. He, God, by His mercy, in sending His Son Jesus into the world, shall make an atonement for iniquity, according to His truth, the word which He declared by His holy prophets since the world began. Or, if we retain the present Version, and follow the points in יאר yecapher, reading "iniquity is purged," or "atoned for," the sense is unexceptionable, when we refer the mercy and the truth to God. But what an awful comment is that of Dom Calmet, in which he expresses not only his own opinion, but the staple doctrine of his own church, the Romish. The reader shall have his own words. "L'iniquité le rachete par la misericorde et la verité. On expie ses pechez par des œuvres de misericorde envers le prochain, par la clemence, par la douceur, par compassion, par les aumônes; et par la verité, par la fidelité, la bonne foi, la droiture, l'équité dans le commerce. Voyez Prov. iii. 3; xiv. 22; xx. 28." "Iniquity is redeemed by mercy and truth. We expiate our sins by works of mercy towards our neighbour, by clemency, by kindness, by compassion, and by alms: and by truth, by fidelity, by trust-worthiness, by uprightness, and by equity in commerce." If this be so, why was Jesus incarnated?—why His agony and bloody sweat—His cross and passion—His death and burial—His resurrection and ascension?—Was it only to supply a sufficient portion of merit for those who had neglected to make a fund for themselves? Is the guilt of sin so small in the sight of Divine justice, that a man can atone for it by manifesting good dispositions towards his neighbours, by giving some alms, and not doing those things for which he might be hanged?—Why then did God make such a mighty matter of the redemption of the world? Why send His Son at all? An angel would have been more than sufficient; yea, even a sinner who had been converted by his own compassion, alms-deeds, &c. would have been sufficient. And is not this the very doctrine of this most awfully fallen and corrupt church? Has she not provided a fund of merit in her saints, of what was more than requisite for themselves, that it might be given, or sold out, to those who had not enough of their own? Now this is the doctrine of the Romish Church—grossly absurd, and destructively iniquitous! And because men cannot believe this, cannot believe these monstrosities, that church will burn them to ashes. Ruthless church! degenerated, fallen, corrupt, and corrupting! once a praise, now a curse, in the earth. Thank the blessed God, whose blood alone can expiate sin, that He has a church upon the earth; and that the Romish is not the Catholic church, and that it has not that political power by which it would subdue all things to itself.

Verse 7. When a man's ways please the LORD God is the Guardian and defence of all that fear and love Him. And it is truly astonishing to see how wondrously God works in their behalf; raising them up friends, and turning their enemies into friends.

Verse 9. A man's heart deviseth his way. This is precisely the same sentiment as that contained in the first verse, on the true meaning of which so much has been already said.

Verse 10. A divine sentence] נפ קסמ, "divination," as the margin has it. Is the meaning as follows?—Though divination were applied to a righteous king's lips, to induce him to punish the innocent and spare the guilty, yet would not his lips transgress in judgment; so firmly attached is he to God, and so much is he under the Divine care and influence. Whatever judgment such a one pronounces, it may be considered as a decision from God.

Verse 11. All the weights of the bag are his] Alluding, probably, to the standard weights laid up in a bag in the sanctuary, and to which all weights in common use in the land were to be referred, in order to ascertain whether they were just: but some think the allusion is to the weights carried about by merchants in their girdles, by which they weigh the money, silver and gold, which they take in exchange for their merchandises. As the Chinese take no coin but gold and silver by weight, they carry about with them a sort of small steel-yard, by which they weigh those metals taken in exchange.

Verse 12. It is an abomination to kings, &c.] In all these verses the wise man refers to monarchical government rightly administered. And the proverbs on this subject are all plain.

Verse 16. How much better—to get wisdom than gold?] Who believes this, though spoken by the wisest of men, under Divine inspiration?

Verse 17. The highway of the upright] The upright man is ever departing from evil; this is his common road: and by keeping on in this way, his soul is preserved.

Verse 18. Pride goeth before destruction] Here pride is personified: it walks along, and has destruction in its train.

And a haughty spirit before a fall.] Another personification. A haughty spirit marches on, and ruin comes after.

In this verse we find the following Masoretic note in most Hebrew Bibles, חלטי חספי chalsi ha-sopher: "the middle of the book." This verse is the middle verse; and the first clause makes the middle of the words of the book of Proverbs.

Verse 22. Understanding is a well-spring of life] מקור חיים mekor chayim; another allusion to the artery that carries the blood from the heart to distribute it to all the extremities of the body.

Verse 23. The heart of the wise teacheth his mouth] He has a wise heart: he speaks as it dictates, and therefore his speeches are all speeches of wisdom.

Verse 24. Pleasant words are as a honeycomb] The honey of which is sweeter than that which has been expressed from it, and has a much finer flavour before it has come in contact with the atmospheric air.

Verse 25. There is a way that seemeth right] This whole verse is precisely the same as that chap. xiv. 12.

Verse 26. He that laboreth] No thanks to a man for his labour and industry: if he do not work, he must starve.

Verse 27. An ungodly man diggeth up evil] How will the following suit:—

Effluvitur opeo irritamentis malorum.
"Woe, the inclination to all evil, is dug up out of the earth."
A wicked man labours as much to bring about an evil purpose, as the quarry-man does to dig up stones.

30 He shutteth his eyes to devise froward things: moving his lips he bringeth evil to pass.
 31 The hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found in the way of righteousness.
 32 He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city.
 33 The lot is cast into the lap: but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord.

CHAPTER XVII.

Contentment. The wise servant. The Lord tries the heart. Children a crown to their parents. We should hide our neighbour's faults. The poor should not be despised. Litigation and quarrels to be avoided. Wealth is useless to a fool. The good friend. A fool may pass for a wise man when he holds his peace.

A. M. Cir. 3004. B. C. Cir. 1000.

BETTER is a dry morsel, and quietness therewith, than a house full of sacrifices with strife.

2 A wise servant shall have rule over a son that causeth shame, and shall have part of the inheritance among the brethren.

3 The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold: but the Lord trieth the hearts.

4 A wicked doer giveth heed to false lips; and a liar giveth ear to a naughty tongue.

5 Whoso mocketh the poor, reproacheth his Maker: and he that is glad at calamities shall not be unpunished.

6 Children's children are the crown of old men; and the glory of children are their fathers.

In his lips—a burning fire.] His words are as inflammable in producing strife and contention among his neighbours, as fire is in igniting dry stubble.

Verse 30. He shutteth his eyes to devise, &c.] He meditates deeply upon ways and means to commit sin. He shuts his eyes that he may shut out all other ideas, that his whole soul may be in this.

Verse 31. The hoary head is a crown of glory] The latter part of the verse is very well added; for many a sinner has a hoary head!

Verse 32. He that ruleth his spirit, than he that taketh a city.] It is much easier to subdue an enemy without, than one within. There have been many kings who have conquered many nations, and were slaves to their own passions. Alexander, who conquered the world, was a slave to intemperate anger; and in a fit of it slew Clitus, the best and most intimate of all his friends, and one whom he loved beyond all others.

The spirit of this maxim is so self-evident, that most nations have formed similar proverbs. The classical reader will remember the following in Hor. Odar. lib. ii. Od. 2.

Latius regnes avidum domando
 Spiritum, quam si Libyam remolis
 Gadiibus jungas, et sitivis Peneis.
 ————
 Strictius aut.

By virtue's precepts to control
 The furious passions of the soul
 Is over wider realms to reign,
 Universal monarch, than to Spain
 You could to distant Libya join,
 And both the Carthage were thine." Francis.

And the following from OVID is not less striking.

Fortius est, qui se, quam qui fortissima vincit
 Mania, nec viribus alius tunc potest.

"He is more of a hero who has conquered himself, than a he who has taken the best fortified city."

Beyond this self-conquest, the highest courage cannot extend; nor did their philosophy teach any thing more sublime.

Verse 33. The lot is cast into the lap] On the lot, see the note on Numb. xxvi. 55. How far it may be proper now to put difficult matters to the lot, after earnest prayer and supplication, I cannot say. Formerly it was both lawful and efficient: for, after it was solemnly cast, the decision was taken as coming immediately from the Lord. It is still practised, and its use allowed even by writers on civil law. But those who need most to have recourse to the lot are those who have not piety to pray, nor faith to trust to God, for a positive decision. The lot should never be resorted to in indifferent matters: they should be those of the greatest importance, in which it appears impossible for human prudence or foresight to determine. In such cases, the lot is an appeal to God; and He disposes of it according to His goodness, mercy, and truth. The result, therefore, cannot be fortuitous.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVII.

Verse 1. Better is a dry morsel] Peace and contentment, and especially domestic peace, are beyond all other blessings.

7 Excellent speech becometh not a fool: much less do lying lips a prince.

8 A gift is as a precious stone in the eyes of him that hath it: whithersoever it turneth it prospereth.

9 He that covereth a transgression seeketh love: but he that repeateth a matter separateth very friends.

10 A reproof entereth more into a wise man than a hundred stripes into a fool.

11 An evil man seeketh only rebellion: therefore a cruel messenger shall be sent against him.

12 Let a bear robbed of her whelps meet a man, rather than a fool in his folly.

13 Whoso rewardeth evil for good, evil shall not depart from his house.

14 The beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water: therefore, leave off contention, before it be meddled with.

15 He that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, even they both are abomination to the Lord.

16 Wherefore is there a price in the hand of a fool to get wisdom, seeing he hath no heart to it?

17 A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity.

Verse 3. The fining pot is for silver] When silver is mixed, or suspected to be mixed, with base metal, it must be subjected to such a test as the cupel to purify it. And gold also must be purified by the action of the fire. So God tries hearts. He sends afflictions which penetrate the soul, and give a man to see his state, so that he may apply to the spirit of judgment, and the spirit of burning, to destroy what cannot stand the fire, to separate and burn up all dross.

Verse 4. A wicked doer giveth heed] An evil heart is disposed, and ever ready to receive evil, and liars delight in lies.

Verse 5. He that is glad at calamities] He who is pleased to hear of the misfortunes of another will, in the course of God's just government, have his own multiplied.

Verse 7. Excellent speech becometh not a fool] This proverb is suitable to those who affect in public speaking fine language, which neither comports with their ordinary conversation, nor with their education. Often fine words are injudiciously brought in; and are as unbecoming and irrelevant as a cart-wheel among clock work.

Verse 8. A gift is as a precious stone] It both enriches and ornaments. In the latter clause, there is an evident allusion to cut stones. Whithersoever you turn them, they reflect the light, are brilliant and beautiful.

Verse 10. A reproof entereth more] Though the rod, judiciously applied, is a great instrument of knowledge; yet it is of no use where incurable dullness, or want of intellect, prevails. Besides, there are generous dispositions on which counsel will work more than stripes.

Verse 12. Let a bear robbed of her whelps] At which times such animals are peculiarly fierce. See the note on 2 Sam. xvii. 8.

Verse 13. Whoso rewardeth evil for good] Here is a most awful warning. As many persons are guilty of the sin of ingratitude, and of paying kindness with unkindness, and good with evil; it is no wonder we find so much wretchedness among men; for God's word cannot fail: evil shall not depart from the houses and families of such persons.

Verse 14. The beginning of strife is as when one letteth out water] As soon as the smallest breach is made in the dike or dam, the water begins to press from all parts towards the breach; the resistance becomes too great to be successfully opposed, so that dikes and all are speedily swept away. Such is the beginning of contention, quarrels, lawsuits, &c.

Leave off contention, before it be meddled with.] As you see what an altercation must lead to: therefore, do not begin it. Before it be mingled together, פָּרַח הִילְגָּלָה, before the spirits of the contending parties come into conflict, are joined together in battle, and begin to deal out mutual reflections and reproaches. When you see that the dispute is likely to take this turn, leave it off immediately.

Verse 17. A friend loveth at all times] Equally in ad-

18 * A man void of understanding striketh hands, and becometh surety in the presence of his friend.

19 He loveth transgression that loveth strife: and he that exalteth his gate seeketh destruction.

20 * He that hath a froward heart findeth no good: and he that hath a perverse tongue fall-eth into mischief.

21 * He that begetteth a fool doeth it to his sorrow; and the father of a fool hath no joy.

22 * A merry heart doeth good like a medicine: but a broken spirit drieth the bones.

23 A wicked man taketh a gift out of the bosom to pervert the ways of judgment.

24 * Wisdom is before him that hath understanding: but the eyes of a fool are in the ends of the earth.

25 * A foolish son is a grief to his father, and bitterness to her that bare him.

26 * Also to punish the just is not good, nor to strike princes for equity.

27 * He that hath knowledge spareth his words: and a man of understanding is of an excellent spirit.

28 * Even a fool when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise: and he that shutteth his lips is esteemed a man of understanding.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The man who separates himself and seeks wisdom. The fool and the wise man. Deep wisdom; contention of fools; the tale-bearer and the stoical. The name of the Lord. Pride and presumption become virtues; wisdom of spirit; the wounded spirit; the influence of grief; the lot; the offended brother; the influence of the tongue; a wife a good from God; the true friend.

THROUGH desire a man, having separated himself, seeketh and intermeddeth with all wisdom.

2 A fool hath no delight in understanding, but that his heart may discover itself.

3 When the wicked cometh, then cometh also contempt, and with ignominy reproach.

4 * The words of a man's mouth are as deep waters, and the well-spring of wisdom as a flowing brook.

5 * It is not good to accept the person of the wicked, to overthrow the righteous in judgment.

verity as in prosperity. And a brother, according to the ties and interests of consanguinity, is born to support and comfort a brother in distress.

Verse 18. Striketh hands] Striking each other's hands, or shaking hands, was anciently the form, in concluding a contract. See notes on chap. vi. 1.

Verse 19. He that exalteth his gate] In different parts of Palestine they are obliged to have the doors of their courts and houses very low, not more than three feet high, to prevent the Arabs, who scarcely ever leave the backs of their horses, from riding into the courts and houses, and spoiling their goods. He then who, through pride and ostentation, made a high gate, exposed himself to destruction: and is said here to seek it, because he must know that this must be a necessary consequence of exalting his gate. But although the above is fact, yet possibly gate is here taken for the mouth: and the exalting of the gate may mean proud boasting, and arrogant speaking; such as has a tendency to kindle and maintain strife. And this interpretation seems to agree better with the scope of the context than the above.

Verse 22. A merry heart doeth good like a medicine] Instead of גֵּחָח gehah, a medicine, it appears that the Chaldees and Syriacs had read in their copies, גֵּו גֵּוָה, the body, as they translate in this way. This makes the apposition here more complete. "A merry heart doth good to the body; but a broken spirit drieth the bones." Nothing has such a direct tendency to ruin health and waste out life as grief, anxiety, fretfulness, bad tempers, &c. All these work death.

Verse 23. A gift out of the bosom] Out of his purse; as in their bosoms, above their girdles, the Asiatics carry their purses. I have often observed this.

Verse 24. Are in the ends of the earth.] Wisdom is within the sight and reach of every man: but he whose desires are scattered abroad, who is always aiming at impossible things, or is of an unsteady disposition, is not likely to find it.

Verse 26. Nor to strike princes for equity.] To fall out with the ruler of the people; and, under pretence of his not being a just or equitable governor, to take off his head; is unjust. To kill a king on the ground of justice is a most dreadful omen to any land. Where was it ever done, that it promoted the public prosperity? No experiment of this kind has ever yet succeeded.

Verse 28. Even a fool] He is counted wise as to that particular. He may know that he cannot speak well, and he has sense enough to keep from speaking. He is, as to that particular, a wise fool.

A man may be golden-mouthed and silver-tongued in eloquence: but to know when and where to speak, and to be silent, is better than diamonds. But who that thinks he can speak well, can refrain from speaking?

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVIII.

Verse 1. Through desire a man, having separated himself] The original is difficult and obscure. The Vulgate, Septuagint, and Arabic, read as follows:—"He who wishes to break with his friend, and seeks occasions or pretences, shall at all times be worthy of blame."

My old MS. Bible translates, Occasion seeketh that will go first for a friend: at all times he shall be worthy of blame.

Coverdale thus:—"Who so hath pleasure to some discord, picketh a quarrel in every thing."

Bible by Barker, 1615. "From the desire thereof he will separate himself to seek it, and occupy himself in all wisdom." Which has in the margin the following note, - "He that loveth wisdom will separate himself from all impediments, and give himself wholly to seek it."

The Hebrew לרוצה בקוץ נפרד יתחיל le-taasah yebbakeah niphrad, be-cot tuhiyah yithgalal. The nearest translation to the words is perhaps the following:—"He who is separated shall seek the desired thing, (i. e. the object of his desire) and shall intermeddle (mingle himself) with all realities, or all essential knowledge." He finds that he can make little progress in the investigation of Divines and natural things, if he have much to do with secular or trifling matters: he therefore separates himself as well from unprofitable pursuits, as from frivolous company; and then enters into the spirit of his pursuit, is not satisfied with superficial observations: but examines the substance and essence, as far as possible, of those things which have been the objects of his desire. This appears to me the best meaning; the Reader may judge for himself.

Verse 2. But that his heart may discover itself.] It is a fact that most vain and foolish people are never satisfied in company, but in shewing their own nonsense and emptiness. But this verse may be understood as confirming the view already given of the preceding; and may be translated thus:—"But a fool doth not delight in understanding, though it should ever manifest itself;" - so I understand נפרד יתחיל ni-phrad yithgalal. The separated person seeks understanding in every hidden thing; and feels his toil well repaid when he finds it, even after the most painful and expensive search; the other regards it not, though its secret springs should be laid open to him without toil or expense.

Verse 3. When the wicked cometh, &c.] Would it not be better to read this verse thus? When the wicked cometh, contempt cometh; and with ignominy cometh reproach. A wicked man is despised even by the wicked. He who falls under ignominy, falls under reproach.

Verse 4. The words of a man's mouth] That is, the wise sayings of a wise man, are like deep waters; - how-soever much you pump or draw off, you do not appear to lessen them.

The well-spring of wisdom] Where there is a sound understanding, and a deep well-informed mind, its wisdom and its counsels are an incessant stream, מקור חכמה makor chochmah, "the vein of wisdom," ever throwing out its healthy streams: but מקור חיים makor chayim, "the vein of life," is the reading of eight of Kennicott and De Rossi's MSS. and is countenanced by the Septuagint, - πηγή ζωῆς, the fountain of life. And so the Arabic, حية حية This is the more likely to be the true reading, because the figure of the heart propelling the blood through the great aorta, to send it to all parts of the animal system, is a favourite with Solomon, as it was with his father David. See the note on Psa. xxxvi. 9. Prov. x. 11, &c. &c.

Verse 5. To accept the person of the wicked] We must not, in judicial cases, pay any attention to a man's riches,

6 A fool's lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for strokes.
 7 * A fool's mouth is his destruction, and his lips are the snare of his soul.
 8 * The words of a *talebearer are * as wounds, and they go down into the * innermost parts of the belly.
 9 He also that is slothful in his work, is * brother to him that is a great waster.
 10 * The name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and * is safe.
 11 * The rich man's wealth is his strong city, and as a high wall in his own conceit.
 12 * Before destruction the heart of man is haughty, and before honour is humility.
 13 He that * answereth a matter ^d before he heareth it, it is folly and shame unto him.
 14 The spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity; but a wounded spirit who can bear?
 15 The heart of the prudent getteth knowledge; and the ear of the wise seeketh knowledge.

 16 * A man's gift maketh room for him, and bringeth him before great men.
 17 He that is first in his own cause seemeth just: but his neighbour cometh and searcheth him.
 18 The lot causeth contentions to cease, and parteth between the mighty.
 19 A brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city: and their contentions are like the bars of a castle.
 20 * A man's belly shall be satisfied with the fruit of his mouth; and with the increase of his lips shall he be filled.
 21 * Death and life are in the power of the tongue: and they that love it shall eat the fruit thereof.
 22 * Whoso findeth a wife findeth a good thing, and obtaineth favour of the Lord.

influence, friends, offices, &c.: but judge the case according to its own merits. But when the wicked rich man opposes and oppresses the poor righteous, then all those things should be utterly forgotten.
 Verse 8. The words of a talebearer] דִּבְרֵי רִבְרִי dibrey rirgan; "the words of the whisperer," the busy-body, the busy meddling croaker. Verba bilinguis, "the words of the double-tongued."—Vulgate. The words of the tūsel tung. —Old MS. Bible. The words of a slauderer.—Coverdale.

without an offering. Potentates wishing to be considered as petty gods, demanded a similar homage:—
 Moccus eredi miki, capitani hominibus Deoq; Placur dente Jupiter ipse vult. Ovid.
 "Believe me, gifts prevail much with both gods and men: even Jupiter himself is pleased with his own offerings."

The words of the deceiver, the fair spoken, deeply malicious man, though they appear soft and gracious, are wounds deeply injurious.

Verse 17. He that is first in his own cause] Any man may, in the first instance, make out a fair tale; because he has the choice of circumstances and arguments. But when the neighbour cometh and searcheth him, he examines all, dissects all, swears and cross-questions every witness; and brings out truth and fact.

The original word כֶּמֶלֶחֶם ke-milch-lahamim; they are as soft or simple, or undesigning. But Schultens gives another meaning. He observes that (כֶּ) lahamah, in Arabic, signifies to "swallow down quickly or greedily." Such words are like dainties, eagerly swallowed, because inviting to the taste; like ginger-bread, apparently gilded over, though with Dutch leaf, which is a preparation of copper—or sweetmeats powdered over with red candied seeds, which are thus formed by red lead—both deeply ruinous to the tender bowels of the poor little innocents; but because of their sweetness, and inviting colour, greedily swallowed down. This makes a good reading; and agrees with the latter clause of the verse, they go down into the innermost parts of the belly.

Verse 18. The lot causeth contentions to cease] See note on chap. xvi. 33.

Verse 9. He also that is slothful] A slothful man neglects his work, and the materials go to ruin: the waster,—he destroys the materials. They are both destroyers.

Verse 19. A brother offended is harder to be won than a strong city] Almost all the Versions agree in the following reading:—"A brother assisted by a brother, is like a fortified city; and their decisions are like the bars of a city." Coverdale is both plain and terse:—"The unite of brethren is stronger then a castell, and they that holde together are like the barre of a palace." The fable of the dying father, his sons, and the bundle of fagots, illustrates this proverb. Unity among brethren makes them invincible; small things grow great by concord. If we take the words according to the common Version, we see them express, what, alas! we know to be too generally true;—that when brothers fall out, it is with extreme difficulty that they can be reconciled. And fraternal enmities are generally strong and inveterate.

Verse 10. The name of the Lord is a strong tower] The name of the Lord may be taken for the Lord himself; He is a strong tower, a refuge, and place of complete safety, to all that trust in Him. What a strong fortress is to the besieged, the like is God to his persecuted, tempted, afflicted followers.

Verse 20. With the fruit of his mouth] Our own words frequently shape our good or evil fortune in life.

Verse 11. The rich man's wealth] See ch. x. 15.
 Verse 12. Before destruction] See on chap. xi. 2. and xvi. 18.

Verse 21. Death and life are in the power of the tongue] This may apply to all men. Many have lost their lives by their tongue; and some have saved their lives by it: but it applies most forcibly to public pleaders; on many of their tongues, hangs life or death.

Verse 13. He that answereth a matter] This is a common case: before a man can tell out his story, another will begin his. Before a man has made his response, the other wishes to confute piece-meal, though he has had his own speech already. This is foolishness to them. They are ill-bred. There are many also that give judgment before they hear the whole of the cause; and express an opinion before they hear the state of the case. How absurd, stupid, and foolish!

Verse 22. Whoso findeth a wife findeth a good thing] Marriage, with all its troubles and embarrassments, is a blessing from God; and there are few cases where a wife of any sort, is not better than none; because celibacy is an evil: for God Himself hath said, It is not good for man to be alone. None of the Versions, except the Chaldaic, is pleased with the naked simplicity of the Hebrew text; hence they all add, good—He that findeth a good wife findeth a good thing; and most people who have not deeply considered the subject think the assertion, without this qualification, is absurd. Some copies of the Targum, and apparently one of Kennicott's MSS., have the addition, טוב טובח, good; but these would be an authority too slender to justify the changing the Hebrew text; yet Houbigant, Kennicott, and other able critics, argue for it. The Septuagint is not satisfied without an addition:—"But he who puts away a good wife, puts away a good thing: and he that retains an adulteress, is a fool and wicked." In this addition, the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic, agree with the Septuagint. The Hebrew text, as it stands, teaches a general doctrine by a simple but general proposition. "He that findeth a wife findeth a good thing."—So St. Paul, Marriage is honorable in all. Had the world been left, in this respect, to the unbridled propensities of man, in what a horrible state would society have been! If indeed society could have existed, or civilization have taken place, if marriages had not obtained among men: As to good wives and bad wives, they are relatively so, in general: and most of them that have been Verse 14. The spirit of a man will sustain] A man sustains the ills of his body, and the trials of life, by the strength and energy of his mind. But if the mind be wounded,—if this be cast down,—if slow-consuming care and grief have shot the dagger into the soul, what can then sustain the man! Nothing but the unseen God. Therefore, let the afflicted pray. A man's own spirit has, in general, sufficient fortitude to bear up under the unavoidable trials of life: but when the conscience is wounded by sin, and the soul is dying by iniquity—who can lift him up? God alone! for salvation is of the Lord.

Verse 16. A man's gift maketh room for him] It is, and ever has been, a base and degrading practice in Asiatic countries, to bring a gift or present to the great man into whose presence you come. Without this, there is no audience—no favour—no justice. This arose from the circumstance that men must not approach the altar of God

23 The poor useth intreaties: but the rich answereth roughly.

24 A man that hath friends must show himself friendly: and there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.

CHAPTER XIX.

The worth of the poor upright man. Riches preserve friends. False witnesses. False friends. A king's wrath. The foolish son. The prudent wife. Slothfulness. Pity for the poor. The fear of the Lord. The spirit of truth. Obedience to parents.

1 BETTER is the poor that walketh in his integrity, than he that is perverse in his lips, and is a fool.

2 Also, that the soul be without knowledge, it is not good; and he that hasteth with his feet sinneth.

3 The foolishness of man perverteth his way; and his heart fretteth against the Lord.

4 Wealth maketh many friends: but the poor is separated from his neighbour.

5 A false witness shall not be unpunished, and he that speaketh lies shall not escape.

6 Many will entreat the favour of the prince: and every man is a friend to him that giveth gifts.

7 All the brethren of the poor do hate him: how much more do his friends go far from him? he pursueth them with words, yet they are wanting to him.

8 He that getteth wisdom loveth his own soul; he that keepeth understanding shall find good.

9 A false witness shall not be unpunished, and he that speaketh lies shall perish.

10 Delight is not seemly for a fool: much less for a servant to have rule over princes.

11 The discretion of a man deferreth his anger; and it is his glory to pass over a transgression.

12 The king's wrath is as the roaring of a lion: but his favour is as dew upon the grass.

13 A foolish son is the calamity of his father: and the contentions of a wife are a continual dropping.

14 House and riches are the inheritance of fathers: and a prudent wife is from the Lord.

15 Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep; and an idle soul shall suffer hunger.

And afterwards, have been good at first; and we well know the best things may deteriorate; and the world generally allows that where there are matrimonial contentions, there are faults on both sides.

Verse 24. A man that hath friends must show himself friendly] Love begets love; and love requires love as its recompense. If a man do not maintain a friendly carriage, he cannot expect to retain his friends. Friendship is a good plant: but it requires cultivation to make it grow.

There is a kind of factitious friendship in the world that, to shew oneself friendly in it, is very expensive, and in every way utterly unprofitable: it is maintained by expensive parties, feasts, &c., where the table groans with dainties, and where the conversation is either jejune and insipid, or calumnious;—backbiting, talebearing, and scandal, being the general topics of the different squads in company.

There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother.] In many cases the genuine friend has shewn more attachment, and rendered greater benefits than the natural brother. Some apply this to God, others to Christ; but the text has no such meaning.

But critics and commentators are not agreed on the translation of this verse. The original is condensed and obscure: וְיָרֵם אִישׁ אֶת רֵעֵהוּ לֵהֲלִיךְ רֹדֵף, or reading, as some would read, who translate:—A man of friends may ring again; i. e. he may boast and mightily exult. But there is a friend, אִישׁ אֶת, a lover; that sticketh closer, רֹדֵף, is glued, or cemented; אִישׁ מֵ-אֶח, beyond, or more than a brother. The former will continue during prosperity; but the latter continues closely united to his friend, even in the most disastrous circumstances.

Hence that maxim of Cicero so often repeated, and so well known:—

Amicus certus in re incerta cernitur. "In doubtful times the genuine friend is known."

A late commentator has translated the verse thus:

"The man that hath many friends is ready to be ruined: But there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother." Holden.

"A friend that doth love, doth a man more friendship, and doleth faster unto him, than a brother."—Coverdale.

"A man that hath friends ought to shew himself friendly; for a friend is nearer than a brother."—Barber's Bible, 1616.

"A man amiable to fellowship, more a friend schal ben thanne a brother."—Old MS. Bible. The two last verses in this chapter, and the two first of the next, are wanting in the Septuagint and Arabic.

These are the principal varieties; out of them the reader may choose. I have already given my opinion.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIX.

Verse 1. Better is the poor] The upright poor man is always to be preferred to the rich or self-sufficient fool.

Verse 2. Also, that the soul be without knowledge, it is not good] Would it not be plainer, as it is more liberal, to say,—Also, to be without knowledge, is not good for the soul." The soul was made for God; and to be without His knowledge, to be unacquainted with Him, is not only not good, but the greatest evil the soul can suffer, for it involves all other evils. The Chaldee and Syriac have,—He who knoweth not his own soul, it is not good to him. "Where no discretion is, there the soul is not well."—Coverdale.

And he that hasteth with his feet sinneth.] And this will be the case with him who is not divinely instructed. A child does nothing cautiously, because it is uninstructed;—a savage is also rash and precipitate, till experience instruct him. A man who has not the knowledge of God is incautious, rash, headstrong, and precipitate: and hence he sinneth; he is continually missing the mark, and wounding his own soul.

Verse 3. The foolishness of man] Most men complain of cross providences, because they get into straits and difficulties through the perverseness of their ways: and thus they fret against God; whereas, in every instance, they are the causes of their own calamities. O how inconsistent is man!

Verse 4. The poor is separated from his neighbour.] Because he has the "disease of all shunned poverty."

Verse 7. Do hate him] They shun him as they do the person that they hate. They neither hate him positively, nor love him: they disregard him; they will have nothing to do with him. נִשְׂנְאוּ, signifies not only to hate, but to shew a less degree of love to one than another. So Jacob loved Rachel, but hated Leah; shewed her less affection than he did to Rachel.

Verse 10. Delight is not seemly for a fool] נִינְי תִּדְבָּר, splendid or luxurious living, rank, equipage, &c. These sit ill on a fool, though he be by birth a lord.

For a servant to have rule over princes] I pity the king who delivers himself into the hands of his own ministers. Such a one loses his character; and cannot be respected by his subjects, or rather their subjects. But it is still worse when a person of mean extraction is raised to the throne, or to any place of power: he is generally cruel and tyrannical.

Verse 11. It is his glory to pass over a transgression.] No, say what are termed the laws of honour. "He must meet me as a gentleman: I must have his blood, let God say what He will." O poor dastardly coward! thou canst not bear the reproach of poor flimsy paltry fellows who ridicule thee, because thou hast refused to commit murder! Such laws should be put down by law; and the man that gives a challenge should be hanged, because he intends to commit murder.

Verse 12. The king's wrath is as the roaring of a lion] There is nothing more dreadful than the roaring of this tyrant of the forest. At the sound of it, all other animals tremble, flee away, and hide themselves. The king, who is above law, and rules without law, and whose will is his own law, is like the lion. This is strongly descriptive of Asiatic sovereigns.

Verse 13. The contentions of a wife are a continual dropping.] A man who has got such a wife, is like a tenant who has got a cottage with a bad roof, through every part of which the rain either drops or pours. He can neither sit, stand, work, or sleep, without being exposed to these droppings! God help the man who is in such a case, with house or wife!

Verse 14. A prudent wife is from the Lord.] One who has a good understanding, מְלִיכָה נָשִׂים יִשְׂרָאֵל מִשְׁכֵּלֶיהָ; who avoids complaining, though she may often have cause for it.

Verse 15. Into a deep sleep] תַּדְמָה תִּרְדָּמָה, the same into which Adam was thrown, before Eve was taken from 16 He that keepeth the commandment keepeth his own soul: but he that despiseth his way shall die.

17 He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again.

18 Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying.

19 A man of great wrath shall suffer punishment: for if thou deliver him, yet thou must do it again.

20 Hear counsel, and receive instruction, that thou mayest be wise in the latter end.

21 There are many devices in a man's heart: nevertheless the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand.

22 The desire of man is his kindness: and a poor man is better than a liar.

23 The fear of the Lord tendeth to life; and he that hath it shall abide satisfied; he shall not be visited with evil.

24 A slothful man hideth his hand in his bosom, and will not so much as bring it to his mouth again.

25 Smite a scorner, and the simple will beware; and reprove one that hath understanding, and he will understand knowledge.

26 He that wasteth his father, and chaseth away his mother, is a son that causeth shame, and bringeth reproach.

27 Cease, my son, to hear the instruction that causeth to err from the words of knowledge.

28 An ungodly witness scorneth judgment;

his side. Sloth renders a man utterly unconscious of all his interests. Though he has frequently felt hunger, yet he is regardless that his continual slothfulness must necessarily plunge him into more sufferings!

Verse 17. Lendeth unto the Lord] O what a word is this! God makes Himself Debtor for every thing that is given to the poor! Who would not advance much upon such credit? God will pay it again. And in no case has He ever forfeited His word.

Verse 18. Let not thy soul spare for his crying.] This is a hard precept for a parent. Nothing affects the heart of a parent so much as a child's cries and tears. But it is better that the child may be caused to cry, when the correction may be healthful to his soul, than that the parent should cry afterwards, when the child is grown to man's estate, and his evil habits sealed for life.

Verse 19. A man of great wrath] He who is of an irritable fiery disposition, will necessarily get himself into many broils; and he that is surety for him once is likely to be called on again and again for the same friendly office.

Verse 21. There are many devices, &c.] The same sentiment as in chap. xvi. 1, where see the note.

Verse 24. A slothful man hideth his hand in his bosom] Is too lazy to feed himself. If he dip his hand once in the dish, he is too lazy to put it in a second time. It is a strange case that a man through his excessive slothfulness, would rather starve than put himself to the trouble to eat.

Verse 26. He that wasteth his father] Destroys his substance by riotous or extravagant living, so as to embitter his latter end by poverty and affliction;—and adds to this wickedness the expulsion of his aged widowed mother from the paternal house;—is a son of shame, a most shameful man; and a son of reproach, one whose conduct cannot be sufficiently execrated. The torment of the father, and the mother, scornful shall be, and unprofitable.—Old MS. Bible. The common reading of the Vulgate is, et fugat matrem, and expels his mother: but the Old Bible was taken from a copy that had fugit matrem, shuns his mother, fees away from her,—leaves her to affliction and penury. It is prostitution of the term to call such, man.

Verse 27. Cease, my son] Hear nothing that would lead thee away from God and His truth.

Verse 28. Stripes for the back of fools] Profans and wicked men expose themselves to the punishments denounced against such by just laws. Avoid, therefore, both their company and their end.

29 Judgments are prepared for scorers, and stripes for the back of fools.

CHAPTER XX.

Against wine and strong drink. We should avoid contentions. The sluggard. The righteous man. Weights and measures. Thirstiness. The wicked son. The wise king. The glory of young men. The beauty of old men. The benefit of correction.

WINE is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.

2 The fear of the king is as the roaring of a lion: whose provoketh him to anger sinneth against his own soul.

3 It is an honour for a man to cease from strife: but every fool will be meddling.

4 The sluggard will not plough by reason of the cold; and therefore shall he beg in harvest, and have nothing.

5 Counsel in the heart of man is like deep water: but a man of understanding will draw it out.

7 The just man walketh in his integrity: his children are blessed after him.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XX.

Verse 1. Wine is a mocker] It deceives by its fragrance, intoxicates by its strength, and renders the intoxicated ridiculous.

Strong drink] w shekar, any strong fermented liquor, whether of the vine, date, or palm species.

Verse 2. The fear of a king] Almost the same with chap. xix. 12, which see.

Verse 3. It is an honour for a man] The same sentiment as chap. xix. 11.

Verse 4. The sluggard will not plough] For other parts of this character, see the preceding chapter. It is seldom that there is a season of very cold weather in Palestine; very cold days do occur, with wind, rain, and sleet. They begin their ploughing in the latter end of September, and sow their early wheat by the middle of October. And this is often the case in England itself. The meaning of the proverb is,—the slothful man, under the pretence of unfavourable weather, neglects cultivating his land till the proper time is elapsed.

Verse 5. Counsed in the heart of man] Men of the deepest and most comprehensive minds are rarely apt, unsolicited, to join in any discourse, in which they might appear even to the greatest advantage: but a man of understanding will elicit this, by questions framed for the purpose, and thus pump up the salubrious waters from the deep and capacious well. The metaphor is fine and expressive.

Verse 6. Most men will proclaim] Many men meritful ben clept: a feithful man forsoth, who shall finde?—Old MS. Bible.

Verse 8. A king that sitting in the throne of judgment] Kings should see to the administration of the laws, as well as of the state transactions of their kingdom. In the British constitution there is a court for the King, called the King's Bench, where he should sit; and where he is always supposed to be sitting. The eyes, the presence of the monarch in such a place, scatter evil. He sees into the case himself; gives right judgment, for he can have no self-interest. Corrupt judges, and falsifying counsellors, cannot stand before him; and the villain is too deeply struck with the majesty and state of the monarch, to face out iniquity before him.

Verse 9. Who can say, I have made my heart clean] No man. But thousands can testify that the blood of Jesus Christ has cleansed them from all unrighteousness. And he is pure from his sin, who is justified freely through the redemption that is in Jesus.

Verse 10. Divers weights, and divers measures] 2

11 Even a child is known by his doings, whether his work be pure, and whether it be right.

12 The hearing ear, and the seeing eye, the Lord hath made even both of them.

13 Love not sleep, lest thou come to poverty; open thine eyes, and thou shalt be satisfied with bread.

14 It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he has gone his way, then he boasteth.

15 There is gold and a multitude of rubies: but the lips of knowledge are a precious jewel.

16 Take his garment that is surety for a stranger: and take a pledge of him for a strange woman.

17 Bread of deceit is sweet to a man: but afterwards his mouth shall be filled with gravel.

18 Every purpose is established by counsel: and with good advice make war.

Verse 11. Even a child is known by his doings] That is, in general terms, the effect shews the nature of the cause: A child is known by his conversation, says Covardale. A child is easily detected when he has done evil: he immediately begins to excuse and vindicate himself, and profess his innocence, almost before accusation takes place. Some think the words should be understood, every child will dissemble; this amounts nearly to the meaning given above. But probably the principal thing intended by the wise man is, that we may easily learn from the child what the man will be. In general, they give indications of those trades and callings for which they are adapted by nature. And, on the whole, we cannot go by a surer guide in preparing our children for future life, than by observing their early propensities. The future engineer is seen in the little handicrafts man of two years old. Many children are crossed in these early propensities to a particular calling, to their great prejudice, and the loss of their parents, as they seldom settle at, or make much out, at the business to which they are tied, and to which nature has given them no tendency. These infantine predilections to particular callings, we should consider as indications of Divine Providence, and its calling of them to that work for which they are peculiarly fitted.

Verse 12. The hearing ear, and the seeing eye] Every good we possess comes from God; and we should neither use our eyes nor our ears, nor any thing we possess, but in strict obsequency to His will.

Verse 13. Love not sleep, lest thou come to poverty] Sleep, indescribable in its nature, is an indescribable blessing;—but how often is it turned into a curse! It is like food: a certain measure of it restores and invigorates exhausted nature; more than that, oppresses and destroys life. A lover of sleep is a paltry insignificant character.

Verse 14. It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer] How apt are men to decry the goods they wish to purchase, in order that they may get them at a cheaper rate; and when they have made their bargain, and carried it off, boast to others at how much less than its value they have obtained it. Are such honest men?—Is such knavery actionable?—Can such be punished only in another world? St. Augustin tells us a pleasant story on this subject:—A certain mountebank published in the full theatre, that at the next entertainment he would show to every man present what was in his heart. The time came, and the concourse was immense: all waited, with death-like silence, to hear what he would say to each. He stood up, and in a single sentence redeemed his pledge:

VILI VULTIS EMERE, ET CARO VENDERE.

"You all wish to buy cheap, and sell dear."

He was applauded: for every one felt it to be a description of his own heart, and was satisfied that all others were similar. In quo dicto levissimi sciant, omnes tam conscientias invenerunt suas.—DE TRINITATE, lib. xiii. c. 2. OPER. Vol. vii. col. 930.

Verse 15. There is gold] Gold is valuable, silver is valuable, and so are jewels: but the teachings of sound knowledge are more valuable than all.

Verse 16. Take his garment that is surety for a stran-

19 He that goeth about as a talebearer revealeth secrets: therefore meddle not with him that flattereth with his lips.

20 Whoso curseth his father or his mother, his lamp shall be put out in obscure darkness.

21 An inheritance may be gotten hastily at the beginning; but the end thereof shall not be blessed.

22 Say not thou, I will recompense evil; but wait on the Lord, and he shall save thee.

23 Divers weights are an abomination unto the Lord; and a false balance is not good.

24 Man's goings are of the Lord; how can a man then understand his own way?

25 It is a snare to the man who devoureth that which is holy, and after vows to make inquiry.

ger] I suppose the meaning to be: if a stranger or unknown person becomes surety in a case, greater caution should be used, and such security taken from this stranger as would prevent him from running away from his engagements.

Verse 17. Bread of deceit is sweet] Property acquired by falsehood, speculation, &c. without labour, is pleasant to the unprincipled slothful man: but there is a curse in it; and the issue will prove it.

Verse 18. With good advice make war] Perhaps there is not a precept in this whole Book so little regarded as this. Most of the wars that are undertaken are wars of injustice, ambition, aggrandizement, and caprice, which can have had no previous good counsel. A minister, who is perhaps neither a good nor a great man, counsels his king to make war; the cabinet must be brought into it, and a sufficient number out of the states of the kingdom gained over to support it. By and by, what was begun through caprice, must be maintained through necessity. Places must be created; and offices must be filled with needy dependants, whose interest it may be to protract the war, till they get enough to pay their debts, and secure independence for life. And for these most important ends the blood of the country is spilt, and the treasures of the people exhausted! I have met with a fact precisely of this kind under the reign of Louis XIV.

Verse 20. Whoso curseth his father] Such persons were put to death under the law. See Exod. xxii. 17. Lev. xx. 9; and here it is said, Their lamp shall be put out. They shall have no posterity; God shall cut them off, both root and branch.

Verse 21. An inheritance—gotten hastily] Gotten by speculation; by lucky hits; not in the fair progressive way of traffic, in which money has its natural increase. All such inheritances are short-lived; God's blessing is not in them, because they are not the produce of industry; and they lead to idleness, pride, fraud, and knavery. A speculation in trade is a public nuisance and curse. How many honest men have been ruined by such!

Verse 22. I will recompense evil] Wait on the Lord: judgment is His, and His judgments are sure. In the mean time pray for the conversion of your enemy.

Verse 24. Man's goings are of the Lord] He, by His providence, governs all the great concerns of the world. Man often traverses these operations: but he does it to his own damage. An old writer quaintly says,—"They who will carve for themselves, shall cut their fingers."

Verse 25. Who devoureth that which is holy] It is a sin to take that which belongs to God, His worship, or His work; and devote it to one's own use.

And after vows to make inquiry.] That is, if a man be inwardly making a rash vow,—the fitness or unfitness, the necessity, expediency, and propriety of the thing, should be first carefully considered. But how foolish to make the vow first, and afterwards to inquire whether it was right in the sight of God to do it! This equally condemns all rash and inconsiderate conduct. My old MS. Bible translates falling in of men often to bowen to serpents, and after, the bowts is agen bracten. Is it possible that Wickliff could have translated this verse thus? as it strongly countenances vows to and invocations of saints.

Verse 26. Bringeth the wheel over them] He thrashes them in His anger, as the wheel does the grain on the thrashing floor. Every body knows that grain was sown 27 * The spirit of man is the candle of the LORD, searching all the inward parts of the belly.

 30 The blueness of a wound is cleanness away evil: so do stripes the inward parts of the belly.

CHAPTER XXI.

The king's heart is in the hand of God. We should practise mercy and justice. The lying tongue. The quarrelsome woman. The punishment of the wicked. The uncharitable. The private gift. The happiness of the righteous. The wicked a ransom for the righteous. The treasure of the wise. He who guards his tongue. Desire of the sluggard. The false witness. Salvation is of the Lord.

THE king's heart is in the hand of the LORD, as the rivers of water: he turneth it whithersoever he will.

2 * Every way of a man is right in his own eyes; but the LORD pondereth the hearts.

3 * To do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the LORD than sacrifice.

4 * A high look, and a proud heart, and the ploughing of the wicked, is sin.

5 * The thoughts of the diligent tend only to plenteousness; but of every one that is hasty only to want.

rated from its husks, in Palestine, by the weight of the oxen tramping among the sheaves; or bringing a rough-shod wheel over them. Asiatic kings often thrashed their people, to bring out their property: but this is not what is intended here.

Verse 27. The spirit of man is the candle of the LORD] God has given to every man a mind, which he so enlightens by his own Spirit, that the man knows how to distinguish good from evil; and conscience, which springs from this, searches the inmost recesses of the soul.

Verse 28. Mercy and truth preserve the king] These are the brightest jewels in the royal crown; and the kings who are most governed by them have the stablest government.

Verse 29. The glory of young men is their strength] Scarcely any young man affects to be wise, learned, &c.: but all delight to shew their strength, and to be reputed strong. Agility, one evidence of strength, they particularly affect; and hence their various trials of strength and fleetness in public exercises.

And the beauty of old men is the gray head.] They no longer affect strength and agility: but they affect wisdom, experience, prudent counsels, &c.; and are fond of being reputed wise, and of having respect paid to their understanding and experience.

Verse 30. The blueness of a wound] חבורת chaburoth, from חבר chabar, to unite, to join together. Does it not refer to the cicatrice of a wound, when, in its healing, the two lips are brought together? By this union, the wound is healed; and by the previous discharge the lacerated ends of fibres and blood-vessels are purged away. So stripes, though they hurt for the time, become the means of correcting and discharging the moral evil of the inmost soul, the vice of the heart, the easily-begetting sin.

In this chapter, from the fourteenth to the nineteenth verse inclusive, are wanting in the Septuagint and Arabic; and the tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth, come in after the twenty-second. It is difficult to account for these variations: occasioned probably by the change of leaves in MSS.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXI.

Verse 1. The king's heart is in the hand of the LORD] The Lord is the only Ruler of princes. He alone can govern and direct their counsels. But there is an allusion here to the eastern method of watering their lands. Several canals are dug from one stream; and, by opening a particular sluice, the husbandman can direct a stream to whatever part he please: so the king's heart, wherever it turns; i. e. to whomsoever he is disposed to shew favour. As the land is enriched with the streams employed in irrigation; so is the favourite of the king, by the royal bounty; and God can induce the king to give that bounty to whomsoever he will. See Harmer.

Verse 2. The LORD pondereth his hearts.] Every man feels strongly attached to his own opinions, modes of acting, &c.; and though he will not easily give up any thing to the judgment of a neighbour, whom he will naturally consider at least as fallible as himself, yet he should consider that the unerring eye of God is upon him; and he

6 * The getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death.

7 The robbery of the wicked shall destroy them; because they refuse to do judgment.

8 The way of man is froward and strange: but as for the pure, his work is right.

9 * It is better to dwell in the corner of the housetop, than with a brawling woman in a wide house.

10 * The soul of the wicked desireth evil: his neighbour findeth no favour in his eyes.

11 * When the scorner is punished, the simple is made wise: and when the wise is instructed, he receiveth knowledge.

12 The righteous man wisely considereth the house of the wicked: but God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness.

13 * Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard.

should endeavour to see that what he does is acceptable in the eye of his Maker and Judge.

Verse 3. To do justice and judgment] The words of Samuel to Saul. See the note on 1 Sam. xv. 23.

Verse 4. A high look] The evidence of pride, self-conceit, and vanity; a proud heart, from which the high look, &c. come.

And the ploughing] נער, lucerna, the lamp, the prosperity and posterity of the wicked, is sin; it is evil in the seed, evil in the root, evil in the branch, and evil in the fruit. They are full of sin themselves, and what they do is sinful.

Verse 6. Of them that seek death.] Instead of מקטל mebakashey, "them that seek," several MSS., some ancient editions, with Symmachus, the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Arabic, have מקטל makashey, the snares. He who gets treasures by a lying tongue, pursues vanity into the snares of death. Our common translation may be as good. But he who, by the snares of his tongue, endeavours to buy and sell to the best advantage, is pursuing what is empty in itself; and he is enamored by death, while he is attempting to ensnare others.

Verse 7. The robbery of the wicked] The wicked shall be terrified and ruined by the means they use to aggrandize themselves. And as they refuse to do judgment, they shall have judgment without mercy.

Verse 9. In a corner of the housetop] A shed raised on the flat roof;—a wide house; or בית חבר beith chaber, "a house of fellowship;" what we call a lodging-house, or a house occupied by several families. This was no unusual thing in the East, no more than in the West. Some think a house of festivity is meant: hence my old MS. Bible has, the house and feast.

Verse 11. When the scorner is punished] When those who mock at religion, blaspheme against its Author, and endeavour to poison society, and disturb the peace of the community by their false doctrine, meet with that degree of punishment which their crimes, as far as they affect the public peace, deserve: then the simple, who were either led away, or in danger of being led away, by their pernicious doctrines, are made wise. And when those thus made wise, are instructed in the important truths which have been decry'd by those unprincipled men, then they receive knowledge; and one such public example is made a blessing to thousands. But only blasphemy against God and the Bible should be thus punished. Private opinion, the state should not meddle with.

Verse 12. The righteous man wisely considereth] This verse is understood as implying the pious concern of a righteous man, for a wicked family, whom he endeavours by his instructions to bring into the way of knowledge and peace.

Verse 13. Whoso stoppeth his ears] See the conduct of the priest and Levite to the man who fell among thieves; and let every man learn from this, that he who shuts his ear against the cry of the poor, shall have the ear of God shut against his cry. The words are quite plain; there is no difficulty here.

16 The man that wandereth out of the way of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead.

17 He that loveth pleasure shall be a poor man: he that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich.

18 The wicked shall be a ransom for the righteous, and the transgressor for the upright.

19 It is better to dwell in the wilderness, than with a contentious and an angry woman.

20 There is treasure to be desired and oil in the dwelling of the wise; but a foolish man spendeth it up.

21 He that followeth after righteousness and mercy findeth life, righteousness, and honour.

22 A wise man scaleth the city of the mighty, and casteth down the strength of the confidence thereof.

23 Whoso keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his soul from troubles.

24 Proud and haughty scorner is his name, who dealeth in proud wrath.

25 The desire of the slothful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour.

26 He coveteth greedily all the day long: but the righteous giveth and spareth not.

27 The sacrifice of the wicked is abomination: how much more when he bringeth it with a wicked mind?

28 A false witness shall perish: but the man that heareth speaketh constantly.

29 A wicked man hardeneth his face: but as for the upright, he directeth his way.

30 There is no wisdom nor understanding nor counsel against the Lord.

31 The horse is prepared against the day of battle: but safety is of the Lord.

CHAPTER XXII.

A good reputation; the rich and the poor; the life; good habits formed in infancy; justice and its effects; the providence of God; the lord woman; the necessity of timely correction; exhortation to wisdom; rob not the poor; be not the companion of the forward; avoid suretyship; be honest; the industrious shall be favoured.

A GOOD name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour better than silver and gold.

2 The rich and the poor meet together: the Lord is the maker of them all.

3 A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself: but the simple pass on, and are punished.

Verse 16. The man (once enlightened), that wandereth out of the way of understanding, (in which he had walked,) shall remain (have a permanent residence) in the congregation of the dead] נשאר רפאים, the lost: either separate spirits in general, or rather the assembly of separate spirits, which had fallen from primitive rectitude; and shall not be restored to the Divine favour; particularly those sinners who were destroyed by the deluge. This passage intimates, that those called rephaim are in a state of conscious existence. It is difficult to assign the true meaning of the word in several places where it occurs: but it seems to mean the state of separate spirits, i. e. of those separated from their bodies, and awaiting the judgment of the great day: but the congregation may also include the fallen angels. My old MS. Bible translates, The man that errith fro the wef of doctrine, in the felouship of gentils scjal benen.

Verse 17. He that loveth pleasure] That follows gaming, fowling, hunting, coursing, &c. when he should be attending to the culture of his fields, shall be a poor man. And I may safely add, that he shall be so deservedly poor, as to have none to pity him.

Verse 18. The wicked shall be a ransom for the righteous] God often in his judgments cuts off the wicked, in order to prevent them from destroying the righteous. And in general, we find that the wicked fall into the traps and pits they have digged for the righteous.

Verse 22. A wise man scaleth the city of the mighty] Wisdom is in many respects preferable to strength, even in the case of defence. See what skill does in the fortification and reduction of strong places.

Verse 25. The desire of the slothful killeth him] He desires to eat, drink, and be clothed; but as he does not labour, hence he dies with this desire in his heart, envying those who possess plenty through their labour and industry. Hence he is said to covet greedily all the day long, ver. 26, while the righteous, who has been laborious and diligent, has enough to eat, and some to spare.

Verse 27. When he bringeth it with a wicked mind] If such a person even bring the sacrifices and offerings which God requires, they are an abomination to Him, because the man is wicked; and if such offerings be imperfect in themselves, or of goods ill-gotten, or offered by constraint of custom, &c. they are doubly abominable.

Verse 29. He directeth his way] Instead of יבין yabin, he directeth, upwards of fly of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., several ancient editions, with some of the Versions, read יבין yabin, he understands;—and because he understand his way, he is able to direct himself in walking in it.

Verse 31. The horse is prepared against the day of battle] Horses were not used among the Jews before the time of Solomon. There was a Divine command against them, Deut. xvii. 16: but Solomon transgressed it, see 1 Kings x. 29. But he here allows that a horse is a vain thing for safety; and that, however strong and well appointed cavalry may be, still safety, escape, and victory, are of the Lord. Among the ancient Asiatics, the horse was used only for war: oxen laboured at the plough and cart; the ass and the camel carried back-loads; and mules and asses served for riding. We often give the credit of a victory to man, when they who consider the circumstances see that it came from God.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXII.

Verse 1. A good name] שם שמם, a name, put for reputation, credit, fame. Used nearly in the same way that we use it:—"He has got a name:" "his name stands high;" for he is a man of credit and reputation. טוב טובא, kalon, טוב hamood, and bonum, are added by the Chaldees, Septuagint, Arabic, and Vulgate, all signifying good or excellent.

Is rather to be chosen than great riches] Because character will support a man in many circumstances; and there are many rich men that have no name; but the word of the man of character will go farther than all their riches.

Verse 2. The rich and the poor meet together] אשר אשר, the opulent, whether in money, land, or property; ראש ראש, the man that is destitute of these, and lives by his labour, whether a handicraftsman, or one that tills the ground. In the order of God, the rich and the poor live together, and are mutually helpful to each other. Without the poor, the rich could not be supplied with the articles which they consume; for the poor include all the labouring classes of society:—and without the rich, the poor could get no vent for the produce of their labour; nor, in many cases, labour itself. The poor have more time to labour, than the mere necessaries of life require; their extra time is employed in providing a multitude of things which are called the superfluities of life, and which the rich especially consume. All the poor man's time is thus employed; and he is paid for his extra labour by the rich. The rich should not despise the poor, without whom he can neither have his comforts, nor maintain his state. The poor should not envy the rich, without whom he could neither get employment, nor the necessaries of life.

The Lord is the Maker of them all.] Both the states are in the order of God's providence; and both are equally important in His sight. Morely considered as men, God loves the simple artificer, or labourer, as much as he does the king; though the office of the latter, because of its entering into the plan of His government of the world, is of infinitely greater consequence than the trade of the poor artificer. Neither should despise the other; neither should envy the other. Both are useful, both important; both absolutely necessary to each other's welfare and support; and both are accountable to God for the manner in which they acquit themselves in those duties of life which God has respectively assigned them. The abject poor, those who are destitute of health and the means of life, God in effect lays at the rich man's door, that by his superfluities they may be supported. How wise is that ordinance which has made the rich and the poor! Pity it were not better understood!

Verse 3. A prudent man foreseeth the evil] God, in mercy, has denied man the knowledge of fatuurity: but 18 For it is a pleasant thing if thou keep them within thee; they shall withal be fitted in thy lips.

19 That thy trust may be in the Lord, I have made known to thee this day, even to thee.

20 Have not I written to thee excellent things in counsels and knowledge,

21 That I might make thee know the certainty of the words of truth: that thou mightest answer the words of truth to them that send unto thee?

22 Rob not the poor, because he is poor: neither oppress the afflicted in the gate:

23 For the Lord will plead their cause, and spoil the soul of those that spoiled them.

24 Make no friendship with an angry man; and with a furious man thou shalt not go:

25 Lest thou learn his ways, and get a snare to thy soul.

26 Be not thou one of them that strike hands, or of them that are sureties for debts.

Verse 19. That thy trust may be in the Lord, I have made known, &c.]

III. The END for which the wise man gives these instructions:—

1. That thy trust may be in the Lord. That thou mayest acknowledge HIM as the Fountain of all good; and refer every thing to HIM.

2. That this end may be accomplished, the instructions are specific and particular. I have made known to THEE, even to THEE.

3. And this has not only been done in times past, I have made known: but even in the present, I have made known THIS DAY!

IV. An appeal is made to the person himself relative to the matter and importance of the teaching.

1. Have I not written to thee excellent things; שְׁשָׁלֹשִׁים shalashim, literally threefold, thrice, in three different ways; which some think refers to his three Books. 1. Canticles. 2. Koheleth, or Ecclesiastes. And, 3. Proverbs.

Others, understanding it of the voice of Divine wisdom, suppose the three grand divisions of the Sacred Oracles are intended; viz. 1. The Law. 2. The Prophets. And, 3. the Hagiographa. And others interpret it of the three grand intellectual sciences. 1. Morality, or Ethics. 2. Natural Philosophy, or Physics. 3. Theology, or the science of Divine things, as reported in the Scriptures. But Solomon's Books of Natural Philosophy are lost.

And, lastly, some of the Rabbins and some Christians find in these shalashim, the three senses of Scripture:—

1. Literal. 2. Figurative. And, 3. Allegorical. After all, as we know the term thrice, was used as the term seven, a certain number for an uncertain; see Amos i. 11; 2 Cor. xii. 8, it may mean no more here than I have written to thee often. But perhaps it is safer to apply it to the Scriptures, and the excellent doctrines they contain: for שְׁשָׁלֹשִׁים shalashim, signifies also excellent princely things; things which become a king to speak. Indeed, it would not be difficult to prove that there is not one important art or science, which is not alluded to in the Holy Scriptures, and used to illustrate and inculcate heavenly truths.

2. These excellent, princely, or threefold teachings, consist of two grand parts:—1. COUNSELS, מַצְוֵי מוֹעֵצוֹת, from מַצְוֵי yadai, to give advice, counsel, or information. 1. These shew thee what thou shouldst know; and 2. advise thee what thou shouldst do. 2. KNOWLEDGE, מַצְוֵי דַעַת, from מַצְוֵי yadai, to perceive or feel, by means of the senses and internal perception; viz. what should be felt, experienced, known to be true by mental perception, and by their influences on the heart and affections.

V. All this is done to give the pupil the fullest satisfaction, and most plenary evidence, concerning the truths of God.

Verse 21. That I might make thee know the certainty of the words of truth]

1. These are words or doctrines of truth:—1. They are true in themselves. 2. Come from the God of Truth. And, 3. Are truly fulfilled to all that believe.

2. These words of truth are certain, שְׁשָׁלֹשִׁים shalashim, they are not of dubious or difficult interpretation: they point directly to the great end which God gave them; they promise, and they are fulfilled. He that pleads them by faith, receives their accomplishment in the spirit and power of Divine love. The Scriptures, as far as they concern the salvation of the soul, are to be experimentally understood; and by this experimental knowledge, every believer has the witness in himself, and knows the certainty of the words of truth.

VI. What we know ourselves to be true, and of in-nite importance to the welfare of men in general, we should carefully proclaim, and witness, that they also may believe.

That thou mightest answer the words of truth] 1. When the doctrine of salvation is preached, there will be many enquirers. What is this doctrine? Have any persons received these blessings? the remission of sins, witness of the Holy Spirit, purification of the heart, &c. &c. Who are they? What are the collateral arguments that prove these things: and shew us that you have not misapprehended the meaning of these Scriptures? 2. Enquiries of this kind should meet with the speediest and most distinct answers; and the doctrines of truth should be supported and illustrated with the words of truth. That thou mightest answer the words of truth to them that send unto thee.

Verse 22. Neither oppress the afflicted in the gate] In judgment, let the poor have a fair hearing; and let him not be borne down because he is poor. The reader has often seen that courts of justice were held at the gates of cities in the East.

Verse 23. For the Loan will plead their cause] Woe, therefore, to them that oppress them; for they will have God, not the poor, to deal with.

Verse 24. Make no friendship with an angry man] Spirit has a wonderful and unaccountable influence upon spirit. From those with whom we associate we acquire habits; and learn their ways, imbibe their spirit, shew their tempers, and walk in their steps. We cannot be too choicé of our company; for we may soon learn ways that would be a snare to our soul.

Verse 26. That strike hands] See on the parallel texts in the margin.

Verse 27. If thou hast nothing to pay] Should any man give security for more than he is worth? If he do,—is it not a default on the very face of the transaction?

Why should he take thy bed from under thee?] The creditor will not pursue the debtor whom he knows to be worth nothing; but he will sue the bail or bondsman. And why shouldst thou put thyself in such circumstances, as to expose thyself to the loss even of thy bed?

Verse 28. Remove not the ancient landmark] Do not take the advantage, in ploughing or breaking up a field contiguous to that of thy neighbour, that thou mayest enlarge thy own. Take not what is not thy own in any case. Let all ancient divisions, and the usages connected with them, be held sacred. Bring in no new dogmas, nor rites, nor ceremonies, into religion, or the worship of God, that are not clearly laid down in the Sacred Writings. "Stand in the ways; and seek and ask for the old paths, which is the good way, and walk therein; and ye shall find rest for your souls."—Jer. vi. 16. But if any church have lost sight of the genuine doctrines of the gospel, calling them back to these is not removing the ancient landmarks, as some have falsely asserted. God gave a law against removing the ancient landmarks, by which the inheritances of tribes and families were distinguished. See Deut. xix. 14. from which these words of Solomon appear to be taken.

Even among the heathens the landmark was sacred, so sacred that they made a deity of it. Terminus signifies the stone or post that served as a landmark. And Terminus was reputed a god, and had offerings made to him. Hence OVID:—

Tu quoque sacrum, Terminus, sine ara.—Poa. 2. 4. ver. 89.
Nec ubi transferret solito celebratur boveo,
Separat indido qui Deus ara sac.
Terminus, sine lapide, sine se defensor in agro

Et quoque serie ulla, sine quoque liba ferunt.—

30 They that tarry long at the wine; they that go to seek mixed wine.

31 Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his colour in the cup, when it moveth itself aright.

32 At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder.

33 Thine eyes shall behold strange women, and thine heart shall utter perverse things.

34 Yea, thou shalt be as he that lieth down in the midst of the sea, or as he that lieth upon the top of a mast.

Verse 26. My son, give me thine heart] This is the speech of God to every human soul,—give thy affections to God; so as to love him with all thy heart, soul, mind, and strength.

And let thine eyes observe my ways.] Be obedient to me in all things. My son, thou believest that I AM; and that I AM the Fountain of all good. Give me thy heart; it is I alone who can make thee happy. Observe my ways; follow me, do what is right in my sight. This exhortation contains three words:—BELIEVE!—LOVE!—OBEY! This is the sum of God's counsels to every child of man.

Verse 27. For a whore is a deep ditch] See on chap. xxiii. 14.

Verse 28. Increaseth the transgressors among men.] More iniquity springs from this one source of evil, than from any other cause in the whole system of sin. Women and strong drink cause multitudes of millions to transgress.

Verse 29. Who hath woe?] I believe Solomon refers here to the natural effects of drunkenness. And perhaps we of, which we translate woe, and נאם אבוי, which we translate sorrow, are mere natural sounds or vociferations that take place among drunken men, either from illness, or the nauseating effects of too much liquor. As to contentions among such; babbling on a variety of subjects, which they neither understand nor are fit to discuss; sounds got by falling out about nothing; and red eyes blood-shot with excess of drink, or black and blue eyes with fighting; these are such common and general effects of these computations, as naturally to follow from them. So that they who tarry long at wine, and use mixed wine to make it more inebriating, see chap. ix. 2, are the very persons who are most distinguished by the circumstances enumerated above.

Verse 31. Look not thou upon the wine] Let neither the colour, the odour, the sparkling, &c. of the wine, when poured out, induce thee to drink of it. However good and pure it may be; it will to thee be a snare, because thou art addicted to it, and hast no self-command.

Verse 33. Thine eyes shall behold strange women] Evil concupiscence is inseparable from drunkenness. Mr. Herbert shews these effects well:—

He that is drunken may his mother kill,
Big with his sin: he hath lost the reins;
Is outwaded by himself. All blades of ill
Dip, with his liquor, slide into his veins.
The drunkard forfeits men; and doth divert
All worldly right, save what he hath by merit.

Verse 34. Lieth down in the midst of the sea] He is utterly regardless of life, which is expressed very forcibly by one in a state of intoxication ascending the shrouds, clasping the masthead, and there falling asleep; whence in a few moments he must either fall down upon the deck, and be dashed to pieces; or fall into the sea, and be drowned. Reader, if thou be a man given to this appetite, put a knife to thy throat.

abused, full of pain, and exhibiting a frightful figure; yet so drunk was he, as to be insensible who had struck him; yet, after all this abuse and disgrace, he purposes to embrace the next opportunity of repeating his excesses! SIN makes a man contemptible in life, miserable in death, and wretched to all eternity. Is it not strange, then, that men should love it.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIV.

Verse 3. Through wisdom is a house builded] That is, a family; household affairs. See the notes on chap. ix. 1, &c.

Verse 5. A wise man is strong] His wisdom enables him to construct a great variety of machines, by which, under his own influence, he can do the labour of a hundred or even a thousand men. But, in all cases, wisdom gives power and influence: and he who is wise to salvation, can overcome even Satan himself. The Septuagint has:—The wise is better than the strong; and the man who has prudence, than a stout husbandman.

Verse 6. By wise counsel thou shalt make thy war] See Note on chap. xv. 18.

Verse 7. A fool—openeth not his mouth in the gate.] Is not put in public offices of trust and responsibility.

Verse 9. The thought of foolishness is sin] חסד חסד חסד zimmath aveleth chaitath. "The device of folly is transgression;" or, "an evil purpose is sinful; or, perhaps more literally, "the device of the foolish is sin." It has been variously understood by the Versions.

"The cunning of the fool is sin."—Targum.

"The imprudent man (or fool, אפוא, appow,) shall die in sins." Septuagint.

So the Arabic. The thinking of the fool is spurne.—Old MS. Bible. Fool is here taken for a wicked man, who is not only evil in his actions, but every thought of his heart is evil, and that continually. A simple thought about foolishness, or about sin, itself, is not sinful; it is the purpose or device, the harbouring evil thoughts, and devising how to sin, that is criminal.

Verse 10. If thou faint] If thou give way to discouragement and despair in the day of adversity; time of trial or temptation.

Thy strength is small] חסד חסד חסד tsar coheca, thy strength is contracted. So the old MS. Bible excellently—עם אפוא תהי אפוא, in the bal of anguishes, shall be made littl thy strength. In times of trial we should endeavour to be doubly courageous: when a man loses his courage, his strength avails him nothing.

Verse 11. If thou forbear to deliver] If thou see the innocent taken by the hand of lawless power, or superstitious zeal, and they are about to be put to death, thou shouldst rise up in their behalf, boldly plead for them, testify to their innocence when thou knowest it; and thus thou wilt not be guilty of blood; which thou wouldst be, if thou shouldst, through any pretence, neglect to save the life of a man unjustly condemned.

24 He that saith unto the wicked, Thou art righteous; him shall the people curse, nations shall abhor him:

25 But to them that rebuke him shall be delight, and a good blessing shall come upon them.

26 Every man shall kiss his lips that giveth a right answer.

27 Prepare thy work without, and make it fit for thyself in the field; and afterwards build thine house.

28 Be not a witness against thy neighbour without cause; and deceive not with thy lips.

29 Say not, I will do so to him as he hath done to me: I will render to the man according to his work.

30 I went by the field of the slothful, and by the vineyard of the man void of understanding:

31 And, lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof, and the stone wall thereof was broken down.

32 Then I saw, and considered it well: I looked upon it, and received instruction.

33 Yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep:

34 So shall thy poverty come as one that travelleth: and thy want as an armed man.

Verse 28. Be not a witness] Do not be forward to offer thyself to bear testimony against a neighbour, in a matter which may prejudice him, where the essential claims of justice do not require such interference: and especially do not do this in a spirit of revenge, because he has injured thee before.

Verse 30. I went by the field of the slothful] This is a most instructive parable; is exemplified every day in a variety of forms; and is powerfully descriptive of the state of many a backslider and trifler in religion. Calmet has an excellent note on this passage. I shall give the substance of it.

Solomon often recommends diligence and economy to his disciples. In those primitive times, when agriculture was honourable, no man was respected who neglected to cultivate his grounds, who sunk into poverty, contracted debt, or engaged in ruinous securities. With great propriety, a principal part of wisdom was considered by them as consisting in the knowledge of properly conducting one's domestic affairs, and duly cultivating the inheritances derived from their ancestors. Moses had made a law to prevent the rich from utterly depressing the poor; by obliging them to return their farms to them on the sabbatic year, and to remit all debts at the year of jubiles.

In the civil state of the Hebrews, we never see those enormous and suddenly raised fortunes, which never subsist but in the ruin of numberless families. One of the principal solicitudes of this legislator was, to produce, as far as possible, in a monarchical state, an equality of property and condition. The ancient Romans held agriculture in the same estimation, and highly respected those who had applied themselves to it with success. When they spoke in praise of a man, they considered themselves as giving no mean commendation, when they called him a good husbandman; an excellent labourer. From such men they formed their most valiant generals, and intrepid soldiers. CARO De Re Rustica, cap. 1. The property which is acquired by these means is most innocent, most solid, and exposes its possessor less to envy than property acquired in any other way. See Cicero De Officiis, lib. 1. In Britain the merchant is all in all; and yet the waves of the sea are not less uncertain, nor less tumultuous, than the property acquired in this way, nor the agitated life of the speculative merchant.

But let us look more particularly into this very instructive parable:—

I. The owner is described. 1. He was ish itsel, the loitering, sluggish, slothful man. 2. He was adam chaser lab, a man that wanted heart; destitute of courage, alacrity, and decision of mind.

II. His circumstances. This man had, lat, sedeh, a sowed field, arable ground. This was the character of his estate. 1. He was meadow and corn land. 2. He had kerem, a vineyard, what we would call perhaps garden and orchard, where he might employ his skill to great advantage in raising various kinds of fruits and culinary herbs for the support of his family.

III. The state of this heritage. 1. It was grown over with thorns. It had been long neglected, so that even brambles were permitted to grow in the fields. 2. Nettles had covered the face thereof. It was not weeded, and all kinds of rubbish had been suffered to multiply. 3. The stone wall was broken down. This belonged to the vineyard; it was neither pruned nor digged: and the fence, for want of timely repairs, had all fallen into ruins: ver. 31.

IV. The effect all this had on the attentive observer. 1. I saw it, עשיתי עשהzeh anochi, I fixed my attention on it. I found it was no mere report. It is a fact. I myself was an eye-witness of it. 2. I considered it well, נחמתי לבי ashith libbi, I put my heart on it. All my feelings were interested. 3. I looked upon it, ראיתי raiti, I took an intellectual view of it. And, 4. Thus I received instruction, לקחתי למוסר lakachti musar, I received a very important lesson from it: but the owner paid no attention to it. He alone was uninstructed; for he slumbered, sloth, and kept his hands in his boom. Ver 33. hugged himself in his sloth and carelessness.

V. The consequences of this conduct. 1. Poverty, which is described coming as a traveller, making sure steps, every hour coming nearer and nearer to the door. 2. Want, מחסור machsor, total destitution; want of all the necessaries, conveniences, and comforts of life; and this is described as coming like an armed man, כש כש כש keish Magen, as a man with a shield, who comes to destroy this unprofitable servant: or it may refer to a man coming with what we call an execution into the house, armed with the law, to take even his bed from the slumberer.

From this literal solution any minister of God may make a profitable discourse.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXV.

Verse 1. These are also proverbs of Solomon] In my old MS. Bible, this verse concludes the preceding chapter. It seems that the remaining part of this Book contains Proverbs which had been collected by the order of king Hezekiah; and were added to the preceding Book as a sort of supplement, having been collected from traditional sayings of Solomon. And as the men of Hezekiah may mean Isaiah, Shebna, and other inspired men, who lived in that time, we may consider them as of equal authority with the rest, else such men could not have united them to the sacred book. The chronological notes in the margin of this and the five following chapters denote the time when the proverbs contained in them were collected together in the reign of Hezekiah, about two hundred and seventy years after the death of Solomon.

Verse 2. It is the glory of God to conceal a thing] This has been understood as referring to the revelation of God's will in His word, where there are many things concealed in parables, allegories, metaphors, similitudes, &c. And it is becoming the majesty of God to publish His will so, that it must be seriously studied to be understood; in order that the truth may be more prized when it is discovered. And if it be to God's glory, thus partially to conceal His purposes: it is the glory of a king to search and examine this word, that he may understand how, by Him, kings reign, and princes decree judgment. Prophecies are partially concealed; and we cannot fully know their meaning till their accomplishment: and then the glory of God's wisdom and providence will be more particularly evident, when we see the event to correspond so particularly and exactly with the prediction. I know not, however, that there are not matters in the Book of God, that will not be fully opened till mortality is swallowed up of life. For here we see through a glass darkly; but there face to face: here we know in part; but there we shall know as we also are known.

On this subject I cannot withhold an observation delivered to myself, by a royal and learned personage.

"As far as I have presumed to dive into and occupy myself with the Sacred Volumes, I feel satisfied of their 22 For thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, and the Lord shall reward thee.

23 The north wind driveth away rain: so doth an angry countenance a backbiting tongue.

24 It is better to dwell in the corner of the house top, than with a brawling woman, and in a wide house.

25 As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country.

Verse 20. As vinegar upon nitre] The original word נִיֵּר natar, is what is known among chymists as the natron of the ancients and of the Scriptures, and carbonate of soda. It is found native in Syria and India, and occurs as an efflorescence on the soil. In Tripoli, it is found in crystalline incrustations of from one third to half an inch thick. It is found also in solution in the water of some lakes in Egypt and Hungary. The borders of these lakes are covered with crystalline masses, of a grayish white or light brown colour: and in some specimens the natron is nearly pure carbonate of soda, and the carbonate is easily discovered by effervescing with an acid. It appears to have its Hebrew name from נִיֵּר natar, to dissolve or loosen: because a solution of it in water is absterive, taken out spots, &c. It is used in the East for the purposes of washing. If vinegar be poured on it, Dr. Shaw says, a strong fermentation immediately takes place, which illustrates what Solomon says here:—The singing of songs to a heavy heart is like vinegar upon natron: that is, "there is no affinity between them; and opposition, collocation, and strife, are occasioned by any attempt to unite them."

And poureth vyneger upon chalke.—COVERDALE. This also will occasion an effervescence. See Jer. ii. 22.

Verse 21. If thine enemy be hungry] See this and the next verse explained, Rom. xii. 20.

Verse 22. Thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head] Not to consume, but to melt him into kindness; a metaphor taken from smelting metallic ores:—

"So artists melt the silver ore of lead, By heaping coals of fire upon its head: In the kind warmth the metal learns to glow, And pure from dross the silver runs below." S. Wesley.

Verse 23. The north wind driveth away rain] The margin has, The north wind bringeth forth rain. It is said that the "north wind brings forth rain at Jerusalem, because it brings with it the vapours arising from the sea, that lies north of it." The marginal is the true reading; and is supported by the Chaldee, Syriac, and Septuagint: but the Arabic reads south wind.

A backbiting tongue.] A hidden tongue.

Verse 24. It is better to dwell in a corner] See the Note on chap. xxi. 9.

Verse 27. It is not good to eat much honey] Coverdale translates the whole passage thus:—"Like as it is not good to eat to much honey; even so, he that will search out hie things, it shal be to hevry for him." As he that etith up the boue, and it is not to him good; so, that is a secker of mageste, schal ben oppressid of glorie.—Old MS. Bible. He that searches too much into mysteries, is likely to be confounded by them. I really think this is the meaning of the place; and shall not puzzle either myself or my reader with the discordant explanations which have been brought forward with the hope of illustrating this passage.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVI.

Verse 1. As snow in summer] None of these is suitable to the time; and at this unsuitable time, both are unwelcome;—so a fool to be in honour is unbecoming.

Verse 2. As the bird] viz tippor, is taken often for the sparrow; but means generally any small bird. As the sparrow flies about the house, and the swallow emigrates to strange countries; so an undeserved malediction may flutter about the neighbourhood for a season: but in a short time it will disappear as the bird of passage; and never take effect on the innocent person against whom it was pronounced.

Verse 3. A whip for the horse] Correction is as suitable to a fool, as a whip is for a horse, or a bridle for an ass.

Verse 4. Answer not a fool] On this and the following verse Bishop Warburton, who has written well on many things, and very indifferently on the doctrine of grace, has written with force and perspicuity. "Had this advice been given simply, and without circumstance, to answer the fool, and not to answer him, one, who had reverence for the text, would satisfy himself in supposing that the different directions referred to the doing a thing in and out of season:—1. The reason given why a fool should not be answered according to his folly, is, lest he (the answerer) should be like unto him. 2. The reason given why the fool should be answered according to his folly, is, lest he, (the fool) should be wise in his own conceit.

"1. The cause assigned for forbidding to answer, therefore, plainly insinuates that the defender of religion should not imitate the insulter of it in his modes of disputation, which may be comprised in sophistry, buffoonery, and scurrility.

"2. The cause assigned for directing to answer, as plainly intimates that the sage should address himself to confute the fool upon his own false principles, by shewing that they lead to conclusions very wide from, very opposite to, those impieties he would deduce from them. If any thing can allay the fool's vanity, and prevent his being wise in his own conceit, it must be the dishonour of having his own principles turned against himself, and shewn to be destructive of his own conclusions." Treatise on Grace.—Preface.

Verse 6. Cutteth off the feet] Sending by such a person is utterly useless.—My old MS. Bible translates well:—Halt in feet and drinking wickedness that sendeth words of a foole messenger. Nothing but lameness in himself can vindicate his sending it by such hands; and, after all, the expedient will be worse than the total omission, for he is likely to drink wickedness, i. e. the mischief occasioned by the fool's misconduct. Coverdale nearly hits the sense, as usual;—"He is lame of his fete, yee drunken is he in vanite, that committeth eye thinge to a foole."

Verse 8. As he that bindeth a stone in a sling, so is he that giveth honour to a fool.] It is entirely thrown away. This, however, is a difficult proverb; and the Versions give but little light on the subject. The Hebrew may be translated,—As a piece of precious stone among a heap of stones, so is he that giveth honour to a fool.—See the Margin, and Parkhurst: but on this interpretation the meaning would rather be, It is as useless to throw a jewel among a heap of stones to increase its bulk, as to give honour to a fool.

As he that sendeth a stoon into a hepe of monney; so he that giveth to an unprofitable man.

Old MS. Bible. "He that setteth a foole in hie dignite, that is even as yf a man dyd caste a precious stone upon the galous."—Coverdale. This translator refers to the custom of throwing a stone to the heap under which a criminal lay buried.

9 As a thorn goeth up into the hand of a drunkard; so is a parable in the mouth of fools.

10 The great God that formed all things both rewardeth the fool, and rewardeth transgressors.

11 As a dog returneth to his vomit; so a fool returneth to his folly.

12 Seest thou a man wise in his own conceit? there is more hope of a fool than of him.

13 The slothful man saith, There is a lion in the way; a lion is in the streets.

14 As the door turneth upon his hinges, so doth the slothful upon his bed.

15 The slothful hideth his hand in his bosom; it grieveth him to bring it again to his mouth.

16 The sluggard is wiser in his own conceit than seven men that can render a reason.

17 He that passeth by, and meddleth with strife belonging not to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears.

18 As a mad man who casteth firebrands, arrows, and death;

19 So is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and saith, Am not I in sport?

20 Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out; so where there is no talebearer, the strife ceaseth.

21 As coals are to burning coals, and wood to fire; so is a contentious man to kindle strife.

22 The words of a talebearer are as wounds, and they go down into the innermost part of the belly.

23 Burning lips and a wicked heart are like a potsherd covered with silver dross.

24 He that hateth dissembleth with his lips, and layeth up deceit within him:

25 When he speaketh fair, believe him not: for there are seven abominations in his heart.

26 Whose hatred is covered by deceit, his wickedness shall be shewed before the whole congregation.

27 Whoso diggeth a pit shall fall therein; and he that rolleth a stone, it will return upon him.

28 A lying tongue hateth those that are afflicted by it; and a flattering mouth worketh ruin.

CHAPTER XXVII.

To-morrow is uncertain. Self-praise forbidden. Anger and envy. Reproof from a friend. Want makes us feel the value of a supply. A good neighbour. Beware of surmising. Suspicious spirits. The quarrelsome woman. One friend helps another. Man invariable. The incorrigible fool. Domestic care. The profit of stocks for food and raiment.

BOAST not thyself of to-morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth.

2 Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth; a stranger, and not thine own lips.

3 A stone is heavy, and the sand weighty; but a fool's wrath is heavier than them both.

4 Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to stand before envy?

5 Open rebuke is better than secret love.

v Or, A great man grieveth all, and he hirsh the fool, he hirsh also transgressors. s 9 Put. 2. 22. — Exod. 8. 15. — u Heb. Irraiah his folly. — Ch. 22. 28. Luke 12. 11. Rom. 12. 14. The Vulgate gives some countenance to this translation:—"He who gives honour to a fool is like one who throws a stone to Mercury's heap." Mercury was considered the deity who presided over the highways; and stones were erected in different places to guide the traveller. Hence those lines of Dr. Young:—

"Death stands like Mercuries in every way; And kindly points us to our journey's end."

Verse 10. The great God that formed all things] See the Margin, where this verse is very differently translated. I shall add that of Coverdale:—"A man of experience discerneth all things well: but whose hyreth a fool, hyreth such one as wyl take no hede." The rab, may mean either the great God, or a great man: hence the two renderings in the text, and in the margin.

Verse 11. As a dog returneth to his vomit] See Note on 2 Pet. ii. 22.

Verse 13. The slothful man saith] See note on ch. xxii. 13.

Verse 16. Than seven men that can render a reason.] Seven only means here perfection, abundance, or multitude. He is wiser in his own eyes than a multitude of the wisest men. "Than seven men that sytt and teach."—Coverdale; i. e. Than seven doctors of the law, or heads of the schools of the prophets, who always sat while they taught.

Verse 17. He that passeth by] This proverb stands true ninety-nine times out of a hundred, where people meddle with domestic broile, or differences between men and their wives.

Verse 19. Am not I in sport?] How many hearts have been made sad, and how many reputations have been slain, by this kind of sport? "I designed no harm by what I said;"—"it was only in jest," &c. Sportive as such persons may think their conduct to be, it is as ruinous as that of the madman who shoots arrows, throws firebrands, and projects in all directions instruments of death, so that some are wounded, some slain, and houses burnt.

Verse 20. Where no wood is, there the fire goeth out] The tale-receiver, and the tale-bearer, are the agents of discord. If none received the slander in the first instance, it could not be propagated. Hence our proverb, The receiver is as bad as the thief. And our laws treat them equally; for the receiver of stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, is hanged, as well as he who stole them.

Verse 22. The words of a tale-bearer] The same with chap. xviii. 8, where see the note.

Verse 23. Burning lips and a wicked heart] Splendid, shining, smooth lips; that is, lips which make great professions of friendship, are like a vessel plated over with base metal, to make it resemble silver: but it only a vile pot; and even the outside is not pure.

Verse 25. When he speaketh fair] For there are such hypocrites and false friends in the world.

Believe him not] Let all his professions go for nothing. For there are seven abominations in his heart.] That is, he is full of abominations.

Verse 27. Whoso diggeth a pit] See note on Pas. vii. 15. There is a Latin proverb like this:—Malum consilium, Consultori pessimum. A bad counsel, but worst to the giver. Harm watch; harm catch.

Verse 28. A lying tongue hateth those that are afflicted by it] He that injures another hates him in proportion to the injury he has done him: and, strates to tell, in proportion to the innocence of the oppressed. The debtor cannot bear the sight of his creditor; nor the knave him that he has injured.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVII.

Verse 1. Boast not thyself of to-morrow] See note on James iv. 13, &c. Do not depend on any future moment for spiritual good which in present thou needest, and God is willing to give; and without which, should death surprise thee, thou must be eternally lost: such as repentance, faith in Christ, the pardon of sin, the witness of the Holy Spirit, and complete renovation of soul. Be incessant in thy application to God for these blessings.

My old MS. Bible translates thus:—"No glorie thou into the mornning. Here we see the derivation of our word mornning; mornning, from more, and wen or woun, to dwell, i. e. a continuance of time to live or dwell in your present habitation. Every man wishes to live longer; and, therefore, wishes for to-morrow; and when to-morrow comes, thou to-morrow, and so on.

Verse 2. Let another man praise thee, and not thine own mouth] We have a similar proverb, which illustrates this:—Self praise is no commendation.

Verse 4. Who is able to stand before envy?] The Rabbin have a curious story on this subject; and it has been formed by the moderns into a fable. There were two persons, one covetous and the other envious, to whom a certain person promised to grant whatever they should ask: but double to him who should ask last. The covetous man would not ask first, because he wished to get the double portion; and the envious man would not make the first request, because he could not bear the thoughts of thus benefiting his neighbour. However, at last, he requested that one of his eyes should be taken out, in order that his neighbour might lose both.

Verse 5. Open rebuke is better than secret love] Plutarch gives an account of a man who, aiming a blow at his enemy's life, cut open an imposthume, which, by a salutary discharge saved his life, that was sinking under a disease for which a remedy could not be found. Partial friendship covers faults: envy, malice, and revenge, will exhibit, heighten, and even multiply them. The former conceals us from ourselves; the latter shews us the worst part of our character. Thus we are taught the necessity

6 Faithful are the wounds of a friend; but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful.

7 The full soul loatheth a honey-comb; but to the hungry soul every bitter thing is sweet.

8 As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place.

9 Ointment and perfume rejoice the heart; so doth the sweetness of a man's friend by hearty counsel.

10 Thine own friend, and thy father's friend, forsake not; neither go into thy brother's house in the day of thy calamity: for better is a neighbour that is near, than a brother far off.

11 My son, be wise, and make my heart glad, that I may answer him that reproacheth me.

12 A prudent man foreseeth the evil, and hideth himself; but the simple pass on, and are punished.

13 Take his garment that is surety for a stranger, and take a pledge of him for a strange woman.

14 He that blesseth his friend with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted a curse to him.

1 Ps. 141. 5.—Or, earnest, or, frequent.—1 Heb. treadeth under foot.—m Job 6. 7.—a Heb. from the counsel of the soul.—Ch. 17. 17. & 18. 94. See Ch. 19. 7. p. Ch. 18. 1. & 23. 15, 34.—q Ps. 137. 5.—r Ch. 22. 3.—s See Exod. 22. 26. Ch. 30. 16 & Ch. 13. 13.

of amendment and correction. In this sense, open rebuke is better than secret love. Yet it is a rough medicine, and none can desire it. But the genuine open-hearted friend may be intended; who tells you your faults freely, but conceals them from all others:—hence the sixth verse, Faithful are the wounds of a friend.

Verses 8. As a bird that wandereth from her nest] Leaving her own brood, places of retreat, and feeding ground, behind; and going into strange countries, where she is exposed to every kind of danger. So is the man who leaves his family connexions and country, and goes into strange parts to find employment, better his circumstances, make a fortune, &c. I have seen multitudes of such wanderers from their place come to great misery and wretchedness. God's general advice is, Do good, and dwell in the land; and verily thou shalt be fed.

Verses 9. Ointment and perfume] Anointing the head and various parts of the body with aromatic oil is frequent in the East, and fuming the beards of the guests at the conclusion of an entertainment is almost universal; as is also sprinkling rose-water, and water highly odoriferous. Two of the curious vessels which are used for this purpose are now before me: they hold some quarts each, and are beautifully inlaid with silver in the form of sprigs, leaves, &c.

Verses 10. Thine own friend] A well and long tried friend is invaluable. He that has been a friend to thy family never forget, and never neglect. And, in the time of adversity, rather apply to such an one, than go to thy nearest relative, who keeps himself at a distance.

Verses 12. A prudent man foreseeth the evil] The very same as chap. xxii. 3.

Verses 13. Take his garment] The same as chap. xx. 16.

Verses 14. He that blesseth his friend] He who makes loud and public protestations of acknowledgments to his friend for favours received, subjects his sincerity to suspicion: and remember the Italian proverb elsewhere quoted,—“He who praises you more than he was wont to do, has either deceived you, or is about to do it.” Extravagant public professions are little to be regarded.

Verses 15. A continual dropping] See chap. xix. 13.

Verses 16. Whosoever hideth her, hideth the wind] You may as well attempt to repress the blowing of the wind, as the tongue of a scold; and to conceal this unfortunate propensity of a wife is as impossible as to hush the storm, and prevent its sound from being heard.

The ointment of his right hand] You can no more conceal such a woman's conduct, than you can the smell of the aromatic oil with which your hand has been anointed. The Hebrew is very obscure, and is variously translated. Coverdale thus:—“He that refrayneth her, refrayneth the wynde; and holdith oyle fast in his honde.” That is, he attempts to do what is impossible to be done.

Verses 17. Iron sharpeneth iron] As hard iron, viz. steel, will bring a knife to a better edge when it is properly whetted against it; so one friend may be the means of exciting another to reflect, dive deeply into, and illustrate a subject, without which whetting, or excitement, this 15 A continual dropping in a very rainy day and a contentious woman are alike.

16 Whosoever hideth her hideth the wind, and the ointment of his right hand, which bewrayeth itself.

17 Iron sharpeneth iron; so a man sharpeneth the countenance of his friend.

18 Whoso keepeth the fig-tree shall eat the fruit thereof; so he that waiteth on his master shall be honoured.

19 As in water face answereth to face; so the heart of man to man.

20 Hell and destruction are never full; so the eyes of man are never satisfied.

21 As the fining pot for silver, and the furnace for gold; so is a man to his praise.

22 Though thou shouldst bray a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him.

23 Be thou diligent to know the state of thy flocks, and look well to thy herds.

24 For riches are not for ever: and doth the crown endure to every generation?

25 The hay appeareth, and the tender grass sheweth itself, and herbs of the mountains are gathered.

had never taken place. Had Horace seen this proverb in the Septuagint translation when he wrote to the Pisos?

Ergo fanger vice cotis, acutum
Hedderi qua ferrum valet, atque increscendi.

“But let me sharpen others, as the hone Gives edge to razors, though itself have none.”

Francis.

Verses 19. As in water face answereth to face] All men's hearts are pretty nearly alike: water is not more like to water, than one heart is to another. Or, as a man sees his face perfectly reflected by the water, when looking into it; so the wise and penetrating man sees generally what is in the heart of another by considering the general tenor of his words and actions.

“Surely, if each man saw another's heart,
There would be no commerce;
All would disperse,
And live apart.”

Herbert.

Verses 20. Hell and destruction are never full] How hideous must the soul be of a covetous man, when God compares it to hell and perdition!

The eyes of man are never satisfied.] As the grave can never be filled up with bodies, nor perdition with souls; so the restless desire, the lust of power, riches, and splendour, is never satisfied. Out of this ever unsatisfied desire spring all the changing fashions, the varied amusements, and the endless modes of getting money, prevalent in every age, and in every country.

Verses 21. As the fining pot for silver] As silver and gold are tried by the art of the refiner, so is a man's heart by the praise he receives. If he feel it not, he deserves it: if he be puffed up by it, he is worthless.

Verses 22. Though thou shouldst bray a fool] Leaving all other conjectures, of which commentators are full, I would propose, that this is a metaphor taken from pounding metallic ores in very large mortars, such as are still common in the East, in order that, when subjected to the action of the fire, the metal may be the more easily separated from the ore. However you may try, by precept, or example, or both, to instruct a stupid man, your labour is lost; his foolishness cannot be separated from him. You may purge metals of all their dross; but you cannot purge the fool of his folly.

Verses 23. The state of thy flocks] The directions to the end of the chapter refer chiefly to pastoral and agricultural affairs. Do not trust thy flocks to the shepherd merely: number them thyself; look into their condition; see how they are tended; and when, and with what, and in what proportion, they are fed.

Verses 24. For riches are not for ever] All other kinds of property are very transitory. Money and the highest civil honours are but for a short season. Flocks and herds, properly attended to, may be multiplied and continued from generation to generation. The crown itself is not so naturally permanent.

Verses 25. The hay appeareth] Take care that this be timeously mown, carefully dried, and safely ricked or housed. And when the tender grass and the proper herbs appear in the mountains in the spring, then send forth

26 The lambs are for thy clothing, and the goats are the price of the field.
27 And thou shalt have goats' milk enough for thy food, for the food of thy household, and for the maintenance for thy maidens.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The timidity of the wicked. Quiet succession in the government of a country is a punishment to the land. Of the poor. Who oppress the poor. The upright poor man, preferable to the wicked rich man. The unprofitable conduct of the usurer. The prosperity of the righteous a cause of rejoicing. He is blessed who fears always. A wicked ruler a curse. The murderer generally execrated. The faithful man. The corrupt judge. The foolishness of trusting in one's own heart. The charitable man. When the wicked are elevated, it is a public evil.

the lambs, the young of the flock, that they may get suitable pasturage, without too much impoverishing the home fields: for by the sale of the lambs and goats, the price of the fields is paid,—all the landlord's demands are discharged. Either a certain number of lambs, goats, and other cattle, was given to the landlord; or so much money, as so many lambs, &c. were then worth.

Verse 26. The lambs are for thy clothing] So many fleeces are given in some places as rent to the landlord.

Verse 27. Goats' milk enough for thy food] לַחֲמֵי לַאֲכִמְעָא, to thy bread; for they ate the bread and supped the milk to assist mastication, and help deglutition. And it seems that bread, with goats' milk, were the general articles of food for the master and his family; and for the servant maids who assisted in the household work, and performed the operations required in the dairy.

The Reader who wishes to see these maxims detailed and illustrated at large, may consult the writers De Re Rusticâ, where he will find much curious information.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVIII.

Verse 1. The wicked flee] Every wicked man, however bold he may appear, is full of drowsy apprehensions relative to both worlds. But the righteous has true courage, being conscious of his own innocence, and the approbation of his God. The unprofitable fleeth.—Old MS. Bible. This word is often used for impious, wicked, ungodly; hence it appears that our word pity meant anciently piety or godliness.

Verse 2. Many are the princes] Nations, as nations, cannot be judged in a future world; therefore, God judges them here. And where the people are very wicked, and the constitution very bad, the succession of princes is frequent: they are generally taken off by an untimely death. Where the people know that the constitution is in their favour, they seldom disturb the prince, as they consider him the guardian of their privileges.

But by a man of understanding] Whether he be a king, or the king's prime minister, the prosperity of the state is advanced by his counsels.

Verse 3. A poor man that oppresseth the poor] Our Lord illustrates this proverb most beautifully, by the parable of the two debtors, Matt. xviii. 23. One owed ten thousand talents, was insolvent, begged for time, was forgiven. A fellow-servant owed this one a hundred pence: he was insolvent; but prayed his fellow-servant to give him a little time, and he would pay it all. He would not, took him by the throat, and cast him into prison till he should pay that debt. Here the poor oppressed the poor;—and what was the consequence? The oppressing poor was delivered to the tormentors; and the forgiven debt charged to his amount, because he shewed no mercy. The comparatively poor are often shockingly uncharitable and unfeeling towards the real poor.

Like a sweeping rain] These are frequent in the East; and sometimes carry flocks, crops, and houses away with them.

Verse 4. They that forsake the law] He that transgresses says, in fact, that it is right to transgress; and thus other wicked persons are encouraged.

Verse 5. They that seek the Lord understand all things.] They are wise unto salvation; they have the unction from the Holy One, and they know all things, 1 John ii. 20., every thing that is essentially needful for them to know, in reference to both worlds.

Verse 8. He that by usury—increaseth his substance] By taking unlawful interest for his money; lending to a man in great distress money for the use of which he requires an exorbitant sum. O that the names of all those unfeeling hard-hearted consummate villains in the nation, who thus take advantage of their neighbour's necessities to enrich themselves, were published at every market cross; and then the delinquents all sent to their brother savages in New Zealand. It would be a happy riddance to the country.

Verse 9. He that turneth away his ear from hearing the law] Many suppose, if they do not know their duty, they shall not be accountable for their transgressions; and therefore avoid every thing that is calculated to enlighten them. They will not read the Bible, lest they should know the will of God; and they will not attend Divine ordinances for the same reason. But this pretence will avail them nothing; as he that might have known his master's will, but would not, shall be treated as he shall be who did know it, and disobeyed it. Even the prayers of such a person as this are reputed sin before God.

Verse 10. Who so causeth the righteous to go astray] He who strives to pervert one really converted to God, in order that he may pour contempt on religion, shall fall into that hell to which he has endeavoured to lead the other.

Verse 12. When righteous men do rejoice] When true religion is no longer persecuted, and the word of God duly esteemed, there is great glory; for the word of the Lord has then free course, runs, and is glorified: but when the wicked rise, when they are elevated to places of trust, and put at the head of civil affairs, then the righteous man is obliged to hide himself; the word of the Lord becomes scarce, and there is no open vision. The first was the case in this country, in the days of EDWARD VI; the second in the days of his successor MARY I. Popery, and knavery, under her, nearly destroyed the Church and the State in these islands.

Verse 13. He that covereth his sins] Here is a general direction relative to conversion. 1. If the sinner do not acknowledge his sins; if he cover and excuse them, and refuse to come to the light of God's word and Spirit, lest his deeds should be reproved, he shall find no salvation. God will never admit a sinful unhumiliated soul into his kingdom. 2. But if he confess his sin, with a penitent and broken heart, and by forsaking every evil way, give this proof that he feels his own sore, and the plague of his heart, then he shall have mercy. Here is a doctrine of vital importance to the salvation of the soul, which the weakest may understand.

Verse 14. Happy is the man that feareth alway] That ever carries about with him that reverential and filial fear of God, which will lead him to avoid sin, and labour to do that which is lawful and right in the sight of God his Saviour.

CHAPTER XXIX.

15 ^v As a roaring lion, and a ranging bear; ^{so} is a wicked ruler over the poor people.

16 The prince that wanteth understanding is also a great oppressor; but he that hateth covetousness shall prolong his days.

17 ^a A man that doeth violence to the blood of any person shall flee to the pit; let no man stay him.

18 ^b Whoso walketh uprightly shall be saved: but ^c he that is perverse in his ways shall fall at once.

19 ^d He that tilleth his land shall have plenty of bread: but he that followeth after vain persons shall have poverty enough.

20 A faithful man shall abound with blessings: ^e but he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be ^f innocent.

21 ^g To have respect of persons is not good; for, ^h for a piece of bread that man will transgress.

22 ⁱ He ^j that hasteth to be rich ^k hath an evil eye, and considereth not that poverty shall come upon him.

23 ^l He that rebuketh a man, afterward shall find more favour than he that flattereth with the tongue.

24 Whoso robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is no transgression; the same ^m is the companion of ⁿ a destroyer.

25 ^o He that is of a proud heart stirreth up strife: ^p but he that putteth his trust in the Lord shall be made fat.

26 He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool: but whoso walketh wisely, he shall be delivered.

27 ^q He that giveth unto the poor shall not lack: but he that hideth his eyes shall have many a curse.

28 ^r When the wicked rise, ^s men hide themselves: but when they perish, the righteous increase.

We must not despise correction. The prudent king. The flatterer. The just judge. Contend not with a fool. The prince who opens his ears to reports. The poor and the deceitful. The pious king. The insolent servant. The humiliation of the proud. Of the partner of a thief. The fear of man. The Lord the righteous Judge.

^a HE, ^b that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

2 ^c When the righteous are ^d in authority, the people rejoice: but when the wicked beareth rule, ^e the people mourn.

3 ^f Whoso loveth wisdom rejoiceth his father: ^g but he that keepeth company with harlots spendeth his substance.

4 The king by judgment establisheth the land: but ^h he that receiveth gifts overthroweth it.

5 A man that flattereth his neighbour spreadeth a net for his feet.

6 In the transgression of an evil man there is a snare: but the righteous doth sing and rejoice.

7 ⁱ The righteous considereth the cause of the poor: but the wicked regardeth not to know it.

8 ^j Scornful men ^k bring a city into a snare: but wise men ^l turn away wrath.

9 ^m If a wise man contendeth with a foolish man, ⁿ whether he rage or laugh, there is no rest.

10 ^o The ^p bloodthirsty hate the upright: but the just seek his soul.

11 ^q A fool uttereth all his mind: but a wise man keepeth it in till afterwards.

12 ^r If a ruler hearken to lies, all his righteous are wicked.

13 The poor and the deceitful man ^s meet together: ^t the Lord lighteneth both their eyes.

14 ^u The king that ^v faithfully judgeth the poor, his throne shall be established for ever.

15 ^w The rod and reproof give wisdom: but ^x a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame.

16 When the wicked are multiplied, transgression increaseth: ^y but the righteous shall see their fall.

Verse 16. The prince that wanteth understanding] A weak prince will generally have wicked ministers, for his weakness prevents him from making a proper choice; and he is apt to prefer them who flatter him, and minister most to his pleasures. The quantum of the king's intellect may be always appreciated by the mildness or oppressiveness of his government. He who plunges his people into expensive wars, to support which they are burdened with taxes, is a prince without understanding. He does not know his own interest, and does not regard that of his people. But these things, though general truths, apply more particularly to those despotic governments which prevail in Asiatic countries.

Verse 17. That doeth violence to the blood] He who either slays the innocent, or procures his destruction, may flee to hide himself: but let none give him protection. The law demands his life, because he is a murderer; and let none deprive justice of its claim. Murder is the most horrid crime in the sight of God and man: it scarcely ever goes unpunished, and is universally execrated.

Verse 18. Shall fall at once.] Shall fall without resource, altogether.

Verse 19. He that tilleth his land] See chap xii. 11.

Verse 20. He that maketh haste to be rich] See chap. xiii. 11; xx. 21.

Verse 24. Whoso robbeth his father] The father's property is as much his own, in reference to the child, as that of the merest stranger. He who robs his parents is worse than a common robber; to the act of dishonesty and rapine he adds ingratitude, cruelty, and disobedience. Such a person is the companion of a destroyer; he may be considered as a murderer.

Verse 25. Shall be made fat.] Shall be prosperous.

Verse 26. He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool] For his heart, which is deceitful and desperately wicked, will infallibly deceive him.

Verse 27. He that giveth unto the poor] See the notes on the passages referred to in the margin.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIX.
Verse 1. Hardeneth his neck] Becomes stubborn and obstinate.

Verse 3. But he that keepeth company] רעה רעה, he that feedeth harlots, יארב יארב, shall utterly destroy his substance. Has there ever been a single case to the contrary?

Verse 4. He that receiveth gifts] This was notoriously the case in this kingdom, before the passing of the Magna Charta, or great charter of liberties. Hence that article in it:—Nulli vendemus justitiam.—“We will not sell justice to any.” I have met with cases in our ancient records where, in order to get his right, a man was obliged almost to ruin himself in presents to the king, queen, and their favourites, to get the case decided in his favour.

Verse 5. Spreadeth a net for his feet.] Beware of a flatterer: he does not flatter merely to please you, but to deceive you, and profit himself.

Verse 9. Whether he rage or laugh] Coverdale translates:—“Yf a wyse man go to lawe with a foole, whether he deale with him friendly or roughly he geteth no rest.”

Verse 11. A fool uttereth all his mind] A man should be careful to keep his own secret; and never tell his whole mind upon any subject, while there are other opinions yet to be delivered; else, if he speak again, he must go over his old ground; and, as he brings out nothing new, he injures his former argument.

Verse 12. If a ruler hearken to lies] Wherever the system of espionage is permitted to prevail, there the system of falsity is established: for he who is capable of being a spy and informer, is not only capable of telling and swearing lies, but also of cutting his king's or even his father's throat. I have seen cases, where the same spy received pay from both parties, and deceived both.

Verse 13. The poor and the deceitful man] It is difficult to fix the meaning of ענין takim, which we here render the deceitful man. The TARGUM has, The poor and the man of little wealth. The SEPTUAGINT has, The usurer and the debtor. The VULGATE, The poor and creditor. COVERDALE, The poor and the lender. OTHERS, The poor and the rich; the poor and the oppressors. I suppose the meaning may be as in chap. xxii. 2. The rich and the poor meet together; the Lord is the Maker of them all. Where see the note.

Verse 16. When the wicked are multiplied] That, in 17 Correct thy son, and he shall give thee rest; yea, he shall give delight unto thy soul.

18 Where there is no vision, the people perish: but he that keepeth the law, happy is he.

19 A servant will not be corrected by words: for though he understand he will not answer.

20 Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words? there is more hope of a fool than of him.

21 He that delicately bringeth up his servant from a child shall have him become his son at the length.

22 An angry man stirreth up strife, and a furious man aboundeth in transgression.

23 A man's pride shall bring him low: but honour shall uphold the humble in spirit.

24 Whoso is partner with a thief hateth his own soul: he heareth cursing and bewrayeth it not.

25 The fear of man bringeth a snare: but whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe.

26 Many seek the ruler's favour: but every man's judgment cometh from the Lord.

27 An unjust man is an abomination to the just; and he that is upright in the way is abomination to the wicked.

the multiplication of the wicked, transgression is increased, requires no proof: but an important doctrine attaches to this. On this account, wicked nations and wicked families are out off, and rooted out. Were it not so, righteousness would in process of time be banished from the earth. This will account for many of the numerous instances in which whole families fail.

Verse 18. Where there is no vision] My old MS. Bible, following the Vulgate, translates:—Sicut prophete scilicet facti, the people scilicet ben to scattered. Where Divine revelation, and the faithful preaching of the Sacred Testimonies, are neither revered nor attended; the ruin of that land is at no great distance.

But he that keepeth the law, happy is he.] Go how it may with others, he shall be safe. So our Lord: Blessed are they who hear the word of God, and keep it.

Verse 21. He that delicately bringeth up his servant] Such persons are generally forgetful of his obligations, assume the rights and privileges of children, and are seldom good for any thing.

Verse 22. An angry man stirreth up strife] His spirit begets its like, wherever he goes.

And a furious man aboundeth in transgression.] His furious spirit is always carrying him into extremes, and each of these is a transgression.

Verse 23. A man's pride shall bring him low.] A proud man is universally despised; and such are often exposed to great mortifications.

Verse 24. Hateth his own soul] נפש naphso, his life; as outraged law may at any time seize on and put him to death.

He heareth cursing] אלה alah, the execration or adjuration: for all culprits were charged, as before God, to tell the truth, ואלו יאגיד; but he will not tell it. He has no fear of God, nor reverence for an oath; because his heart is hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

Verse 25. The fear of man bringeth a snare] How often has this led weak men, though sincere in their general character, to deny their God, and abjure His people! See the case of Peter; and learn from this, O Reader, that where the mighty have been slain thou wilt fall, unless thou call on the Strong for strength; and courage to use it. Be not ashamed of Jesus, nor of His people, nor of His cross. Glory in this that thou knowest Him, art joined to them, and art counted worthy to bear it.

Verse 26. Many seek the ruler's favour] To be screened from the punishment determined by the law: but should he grant the sought favour, and pardon the criminal, this takes not away his guilt in the sight of God; from whom all just judgment does proceed.

Verse 27. And he that is upright in the way] "But as for those that be in the right way, the wicked hate them." COVERDALE.

To this verse the VULGATE adds the following:—Verbum custodiens filius, extra perditionem erit. "The son that keeps the word shall not fall into perdition." This is not in all copies of the Vulgate: but it was in that from which my Old MS. Bible was made, where it is thus translated.—The sense keeping the word scilicet ben out of perdition. I believe verbum here is intended for the Divine word; the revelation from God.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXX.

Verse 1. The words of Agur the son of Jakeh] The words Agur, Jakeh, Ithiel and Ucal, have been considered by some as proper names; by others as descriptive characters. With some Agur is Solomon; and Jakeh, David; and Ithiel and Ucal epithets of Christ.

The Vulgate translates, Verba congregatis, filii vomentis. Visio quem locutus est vir, cum quo est Deus, et qui Deo secum morantis confortatus, ait:—"The words of the collector, the son of the vomiter; the vision of the man who has God with him, and who is fortified by God dwelling with him, saith."

COVERDALE makes the following words a title to the Chapter:

"The wordes of Agur the sonne of Jake."

"The prophetic of a true faithful man, whom God hath helped; whom God hath comforted and nourished."

The whole might be thus translated, keeping near to the letter:—

"The words of the epistle of the obedient son." Or,

"The words of the collector, the son of Jakeh. The parable which הַגֵּבֶר ha-geber, the strong man, the hero, spake unto Him who is God with me, even the strong God."

The blisfoun that a man spake with wischpe is God, and that God with him, wrong comfortis.—Old MS. Bible.

From this introduction, from the names here used, and from the style of the book, it appears evident that Solomon was not the author of this Chapter; and that it was designed to be distinguished from his work by this very preface, which specifically distinguishes it from the preceding work. Nor can the words in verses 2, 3, 8, and 9, be at all applied to Solomon:—they suit no part of Solomon's life, nor of his circumstances. We must, therefore, consider it an appendix or supplement to the preceding collection; something in the manner of that part, which the men of Hezekiah, king of Judah, had collected. As to mysteries here, many have been found by them who sought for nothing else: but they are all, in my view of the subject, hazarded and precarious. I believe Agur, Jakeh, Ithiel, and Ucal, to be the names of persons who did exist: but of whom we know but what is here mentioned. Agur seems to have been a public teacher, and Ithiel and Ucal to have been his scholars; and what he delivers to them was done by prophecy. It was what the prophets generally term מַוָּד מַסָּס, an ORACLE, something immediately delivered by the Holy Spirit for the benefit of man.

Verse 2. Surely I am more brutish] These words can, in no sense, nor by any mode of speech, be true of Solomon: for, while he was the wisest of men, he could not have said that he was more brutish than any man, and had not the understanding of a man. It is saying nothing to the purpose, to say he was so, independently of the Divine teaching. Had he put this in, even by inuendo, it might be legitimate: but he does not; nor is it by fair implication to be understood. Solomon is not supposed to have written the Proverbs after he fell from God. Then indeed he might have said he had been more brutish than any man. But Agur might have used these words with strict propriety, for aught we know; for it is very probable that he was a rustic, without education, and without any human help, as was the prophet Amos; and that all that he knew now was by the inspiration of the Almighty, independently of which he was a rustic, and uneducated.

Verse 3. I neither learned wisdom] I have never been a scholar in any of those schools of the wise men; nor have the knowledge of the holy, וְרַמְּבֵי קְדוּשִׁים, of the saints or holy persons.

The Septuagint gives this a different turn:—Οὐκ ἐδίδασκα

4 ^d Who hath ascended up into heaven, or descended? ^e Who hath gathered the wind in his fists? ^f who hath bound the waters in a garment? ^g who hath established all the ends of the earth? ^h what is his name, and what is his son's name, if thou canst tell?

5 ⁱ Every word of God is ^j pure: ^k he is a shield unto them that put their trust in him.

6 ^l Add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar.

με σοφίας, καὶ γινώσκω ἁγίων ἐπιστάς, "God hath taught me wisdom, and the knowledge of the saints I have known."

This may refer to the patriarchs, prophets, or holy men, that lived before the days of Solomon. That is, the translators might have had these in view.

Verse 4. Who hath ascended up into heaven, or descended? Calmet paraphrases this passage thus:—"Who hath descended, &c. In order to shew the truth of what he was about to say, he observes: I have not the science of the saints;—for, how could I have acquired it? Who is he who could attain to that? Who has ascended to heaven, to learn that science; and who has descended in order to publish it? Is the science of salvation one of those things that can be apprehended only by study? Is it not a pure gift of the goodness of God? Moses, after having shewn to the people the will of God, said to them:—This commandment which I command thee this day, is not hidden from thee; neither is it far off. It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? Deut. xxx. 11, 12. The person, whose words we are here examining, speaks a knowledge more sublime than that contained in the simple laws of the Lord, common to all the people of Israel. He speaks of the sublime science of the designs of God, of His ways, and of His secrets: and in this sense he affirms he has no knowledge."

Who hath gathered the wind in his fists? It is as difficult for a mortal man to acquire this Divine science by his own reason and strength, as to collect the winds in his fists. And who can command the spirit of prophecy, so that he can have it whensoever he pleases?

What is his name? Shew me the nature of this Supreme Being? Point out His Eternity, Omniscience, Omnipresence, Omnipotence,—comprehend and describe Him if thou canst.

What is his son's name? The Septuagint has ἡ ἁγία τοῖς ἁγίοις ἄγγελος; "Or the name of his sons;" meaning I suppose the holy angels, called his saints or holy ones. Ver. 3. The Arabic has, What is his name? ^g ^h ⁱ ^j ^k ^l ^m ⁿ ^o ^p ^q ^r ^s ^t ^u ^v ^w ^x ^y ^z ^{aa} ^{ab} ^{ac} ^{ad} ^{ae} ^{af} ^{ag} ^{ah} ^{ai} ^{aj} ^{ak} ^{al} ^{am} ^{an} ^{ao} ^{ap} ^{aq} ^{ar} ^{as} ^{at} ^{au} ^{av} ^{aw} ^{ax} ^{ay} ^{az} ^{ba} ^{bb} ^{bc} ^{bd} ^{be} ^{bf} ^{bg} ^{bh} ^{bi} ^{bj} ^{bk} ^{bl} ^{bm} ^{bn} ^{bo} ^{bp} ^{bq} ^{br} ^{bs} ^{bt} ^{bu} ^{bv} ^{bw} ^{bx} ^{by} ^{bz} ^{ca} ^{cb} ^{cc} ^{cd} ^{ce} ^{cf} ^{cg} ^{ch} ^{ci} ^{cj} ^{ck} ^{cl} ^{cm} ^{cn} ^{co} ^{cp} ^{cq} ^{cr} ^{cs} ^{ct} ^{cu} ^{cv} ^{cw} ^{cx} ^{cy} ^{cz} ^{da} ^{db} ^{dc} ^{dd} ^{de} ^{df} ^{dg} ^{dh} ^{di} ^{dj} ^{dk} ^{dl} ^{dm} ^{dn} ^{do} ^{dp} ^{dq} ^{dr} ^{ds} ^{dt} ^{du} ^{dv} ^{dw} ^{dx} ^{dy} ^{dz} ^{ea} ^{eb} ^{ec} ^{ed} ^{ee} ^{ef} ^{eg} ^{eh} ^{ei} ^{ej} ^{ek} ^{el} ^{em} ^{en} ^{eo} ^{ep} ^{eq} ^{er} ^{es} ^{et} ^{eu} ^{ev} ^{ew} ^{ex} ^{ey} ^{ez} ^{fa} ^{fb} ^{fc} ^{fd} ^{fe} ^{ff} ^{fg} ^{fh} ^{fi} ^{fj} ^{fk} ^{fl} ^{fm} ^{fn} ^{fo} ^{fp} ^{fq} ^{fr} ^{fs} ^{ft} ^{fu} ^{fv} ^{fw} ^{fx} ^{fy} ^{fz} ^{ga} ^{gb} ^{gc} ^{gd} ^{ge} ^{gf} ^{gg} ^{gh} ^{gi} ^{gj} ^{gk} ^{gl} ^{gm} ^{gn} ^{go} ^{gp} ^{gq} ^{gr} ^{gs} ^{gt} ^{gu} ^{gv} ^{gw} ^{gx} ^{gy} ^{gz} ^{ha} ^{hb} ^{hc} ^{hd} ^{he} ^{hf} ^{hg} ^{hh} ^{hi} ^{hj} ^{hk} ^{hl} ^{hm} ^{hn} ^{ho} ^{hp} ^{hq} ^{hr} ^{hs} ^{ht} ^{hu} ^{hv} ^{hw} ^{hx} ^{hy} ^{hz} ^{ia} ^{ib} ^{ic} ^{id} ^{ie} ^{if} ^{ig} ^{ih} ⁱⁱ ^{ij} ^{ik} ^{il} ^{im} ⁱⁿ ^{io} ^{ip} ^{iq} ^{ir} ^{is} ^{it} ^{iu} ^{iv} ^{iw} ^{ix} ^{iy} ^{iz} ^{ja} ^{jb} ^{jc} ^{jd} ^{je} ^{jf} ^{jj} ^{jk} ^{jl} ^{jm} ^{jn} ^{jo} ^{jp} ^{jq} ^{jr} ^{js} ^{jt} ^{ju} ^{jv} ^{jw} ^{jx} ^{ky} ^{kz} ^{la} ^{lb} ^{lc} ^{ld} ^{le} ^{lf} ^{lg} ^{lh} ^{li} ^{lj} ^{lk} ^{ll} ^{lm} ^{ln} ^{lo} ^{lp} ^{lq} ^{lr} ^{ls} ^{lt} ^{lu} ^{lv} ^{lw} ^{lx} ^{ly} ^{lz} ^{ma} ^{mb} ^{mc} ^{md} ^{me} ^{mf} ^{mg} ^{mh} ^{mi} ^{mj} ^{mk} ^{ml} ^{mm} ^{mn} ^{mo} ^{mp} ^{mq} ^{mr} ^{ms} ^{mt} ^{mu} ^{mv} ^{mw} ^{mx} ^{my} ^{mz} ^{na} ^{nb} ^{nc} nd ^{ne} ^{nf} ^{ng} ^{nh} ⁿⁱ ^{nj} ^{nk} ^{nl} ^{nm} ⁿⁿ ^{no} ^{np} ^{nq} ^{nr} ^{ns} ^{nt} ^{nu} ^{nv} ^{nw} ^{nx} ^{ny} ^{nz} ^{oa} ^{ob} ^{oc} ^{od} ^{oe} ^{of} ^{og} ^{oh} ^{oi} ^{oj} ^{ok} ^{ol} ^{om} ^{on} ^{oo} ^{op} ^{oq} ^{or} ^{os} ^{ot} ^{ou} ^{ov} ^{ow} ^{ox} ^{oy} ^{oz} ^{pa} ^{pb} ^{pc} ^{pd} ^{pe} ^{pf} ^{pg} ^{ph} ^{pi} ^{pj} ^{pk} ^{pl} ^{pm} ^{pn} ^{po} ^{pp} ^{pq} ^{pr} ^{ps} ^{pt} ^{pu} ^{pv} ^{pw} ^{px} ^{py} ^{pz} ^{qa} ^{qb} ^{qc} ^{qd} ^{qe} ^{qf} ^{qg} ^{qh} ^{qi} ^{qj} ^{qk} ^{ql} ^{qm} ^{qn} ^{qo} ^{qp} ^{qq} ^{qr} ^{qs} ^{qt} ^{qu} ^{qv} ^{qw} ^{qx} ^{qy} ^{qz} ^{ra} ^{rb} ^{rc} rd ^{re} ^{rf} ^{rg} ^{rh} ^{ri} ^{rj} ^{rk} ^{rl} ^{rm} ^{rn} ^{ro} ^{rp} ^{rq} ^{rr} ^{rs} ^{rt} ^{ru} ^{rv} ^{rw} ^{rx} ^{ry} ^{rz} ^{sa} ^{sb} ^{sc} ^{sd} ^{se} ^{sf} ^{sg} ^{sh} ^{si} ^{sj} ^{sk} ^{sl} sm ^{sn} ^{so} ^{sp} ^{sq} ^{sr} ^{ss} st ^{su} ^{sv} ^{sw} ^{sx} ^{sy} ^{sz} ^{ta} ^{tb} ^{tc} ^{td} ^{te} ^{tf} ^{tg} th ^{ti} ^{tj} ^{tk} ^{tl} tm ^{tn} ^{to} ^{tp} ^{tq} ^{tr} ^{ts} ^{tt} ^{tu} ^{tv} ^{tw} ^{tx} ^{ty} ^{tz} ^{ua} ^{ub} ^{uc} ^{ud} ^{ue} ^{uf} ^{ug} ^{uh} ^{ui} ^{uj} ^{uk} ^{ul} ^{um} ^{un} ^{uo} ^{up} ^{uq} ^{ur} ^{us} ^{ut} ^{uu} ^{uv} ^{uw} ^{ux} ^{uy} ^{uz} ^{va} ^{vb} ^{vc} ^{vd} ^{ve} ^{vf} ^{vg} ^{vh} ^{vi} ^{vj} ^{vk} ^{vl} ^{vm} ^{vn} ^{vo} ^{vp} ^{vq} ^{vr} ^{vs} ^{vt} ^{vu} ^{vv} ^{vw} ^{vx} ^{vy} ^{vz} ^{wa} ^{wb} ^{wc} ^{wd} ^{we} ^{wf} ^{wg} ^{wh} ^{wi} ^{wj} ^{wk} ^{wl} ^{wm} ^{wn} ^{wo} ^{wp} ^{wq} ^{wr} ^{ws} ^{wt} ^{wu} ^{wv} ^{ww} ^{wx} ^{wy} ^{wz} ^{xa} ^{xb} ^{xc} ^{xd} ^{xe} ^{xf} ^{xg} ^{xh} ^{xi} ^{xj} ^{xk} ^{xl} ^{xm} ^{xn} ^{xo} ^{xp} ^{xq} ^{xr} ^{xs} ^{xt} ^{xu} ^{xv} ^{xw} ^{xy} ^{xz} ^{ya} ^{yb} ^{yc} ^{yd} ^{ye} ^{yf} ^{yg} ^{yh} ^{yi} ^{yj} ^{yk} ^{yl} ^{ym} ^{yn} ^{yo} ^{yp} ^{yq} ^{yr} ^{ys} ^{yt} ^{yu} ^{yv} ^{yw} ^{yx} ^{yy} ^{yz} ^{za} ^{zb} ^{zc} ^{zd} ^{ze} ^{zf} ^{zg} ^{zh} ^{zi} ^{zj} ^{zk} ^{zl} ^{zm} ^{zn} ^{zo} ^{zp} ^{zq} ^{zr} ^{zs} ^{zt} ^{zu} ^{zv} ^{zw} ^{zx} ^{zy} ^{zz}

Many are of opinion that Agur refers here to the First and Second Persons of the ever-blessed TRINITY. It may be so;—but who would venture to rest the proof of that most glorious doctrine upon such a text, to say nothing of the obscure author? The doctrine is true, sublimely true: but many doctrines have suffered in controversy, by improper texts being urged in their favour. Every lover of God and truth should be very choice in his selections, when he comes forward in behalf of the more mysterious doctrines of the Bible. Quote nothing that is not clear,—advance nothing that does not tell. When we are obliged to spend a world of critical labour, to establish the sense in which a text is to be understood, which we intend to allege in favour of a doctrine which we wish to support, we may rest assured, we are going the wrong way to work. Those who indiscriminately amass every text of Scripture they think bears upon the subject they defend, give their adversaries great advantage against them. I see many a sacred doctrine suffering through the bad judgment of its friends every day.—The Godhead of Christ—salvation by faith—the great atoning sacrifice,—and other essential doctrines of this class, are all suffering in this way. My heart says, with deep concern,

Non telli auctorio, nec defensoribus istis
Tempora agit.

When truth is assailed by all kinds of weapons, handled by the most powerful foes, injudicious defenders may be ranked among its enemies. To such we may innocently say, "Keep your cabins; you do assist the storm."

Verse 5. Every word of God is pure] כל אמרת מלאה כול נאמרו kol imarath Eloah teuraphah—"Every oracle of God is purified." A metaphor taken from the purifying of metals. Every thing that God has pronounced, every inspiration which the prophets have received, is pure, without mixture of error, without dross. Whatever trials it may be exposed to, it is always like gold: it bears the fire; and comes out with the same lustre, the same purity, and the same weight.

He is a shield unto them] And this oracle among the rest. He is the defence of ALL them who put their trust in Him. לכל lecol, to ALL, is added here by nineteen of Kennicot's and De Rossi's MSS.; for instead of וְכֹלֵי le-cholim, to the trustees, they read וְכֹלֵי לֵכֹל le-col ha-cholim, "to EVERY ONE of them that trust;" Where the preposition and adjective are not only added, but the noun is written more full, and more emphatic: but a translation cannot well express it, without paraphrase.

Verse 6. Add thou not unto his words] You can no more increase their value by any addition, than you can that of gold, by adding any other metal to it. Take care that you do not any thing that this word forbids, nor leave undone any thing that it commands; for this is adding and diminishing in Scripture phrase.

Lest he reprove thee] Lest He try thy word by fire, as His has been tried; and it appear that, far from abiding the test, the fire shew yours to be reprobate silver; and so thou be found a falsifier of God's word, and a liar.

How amply has this been fulfilled in the case of the Romish church. It has added all the gross stuff in the Apocrypha, besides innumerable legends and traditions, to the word of God! They have been tried by the refiner's fire. And this church has been reprov'd, and found to be a liar, in attempting to filiate on the Most Holy God spurious writings discredited to His nature.

Verse 7. Two things have I required of thee] These two petitions are mentioned in the next verse; and he wishes to have them answered before he should die. That is, he wishes the answer now, that he may live the rest of his life in the state he describes.

Verse 8. Remove far from me vanity and lies] 1. אש שארף, all false shows, all false appearances of happiness, every vain expectation. Let me not set my heart on any thing that is not solid, true, durable, and eternal. 2. Lies, דברי כזב debrey cazab, all words of deception, empty pretensions, false promises, uncertain dependencies, and words that fail; promises which, when they become due, are like bad bills: they are dishonoured, because they are found to be forged, or the drawer insolvent.

From the import of the original, I am satisfied that Agur prays against idolatry, false religion, and false worship of every kind. אש שארף is used for an idol, a false god, Jer. xviii. 15,—My people have forsaken me; they have burnt incense to VANITY, לֹא־אֱלֹהִים, to an idol. Psa. xxxi. 6, I have hated them that regard lying VANITIES, לֹא־אֱלֹהִים הֵבֵלֵי שֹׂאֵר, vain idols. See also Hos. xii. 11. Jon. ii. 8. And כִּזְבִּי cazab, a thing that fails or deceives, may well apply to the vain pretensions, false promises, and deceptive religious rites of idolatry. So Jer. xv. 13, Will thou be unto me as a liar, כִּי־אֶמַר ke-mo acazob, like the false failing promises of the false gods; and as waters that fail; לֹא־נִאֲמָר לֹא־נִעֲמִינִי, that are not faithful,—not like the true God, whose promises never fail. According to this view of the subject, Agur prays, 1. That he may be preserved from idolatry. 2. That he may put no confidence in any words, but those pure words of God that never fail them that trust in him.

Give me neither poverty nor riches] Here are three requests. 1. Give me not poverty. The reason is added; lest, being poor, I shall get into a covetous spirit; and impelled by want, distrust my Maker, and take my neighbour's property; and in order to excuse, hide or vindicate my conduct, I take the name of my God in vain; וְלֹא־אֶמַר־תִּפְשָׁחִיתִי, I catch at the name of God. Or, by swearing falsely, endeavour to make myself pass for innocent. פְּשָׁעֵתִי the name of my God.—Old MS. Bible. Coverdale, "deny, or apostatize from Him."

2. Give me not riches. For which petition he gives a reason also;—lest I be full, and addict myself to luxurious living, pamper the flesh and starve the soul: and so deny thee—the Fountain of goodness: and, if called on to resort to first principles, I say, who is Jehovah? Why should I acknowledge, why should I serve him? And thus cast aside all religion, and all moral obligation.

3. The third request is, Feed me with food convenient is the LORD? or lest I be poor and steal, and take the name of my God in vain.

10 Accuse not a servant unto his master, lest he curse thee, and thou be found guilty.

11 There is a generation that curseth their father, and doth not bless their mother.

12 There is a generation that are pure in their own eyes, and yet is not washed from their filthiness.

13 There is a generation, O how lofty are their eyes! and their eyelids are lifted up.

14 There is a generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men.

15 The horseleech hath two daughters, crying, Give, give. There are three things that are never satisfied, yea, four things say not, It is enough:

16 The grave; and the barren womb; the earth that is not filled with water; and the fire that saith not, It is enough.

17 The eye that mocketh at his father, and despieth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it.

18 There be three things which are too wonderful for me, yea, four which I know not:

19 The way of an eagle in the air; the way of a serpent upon a rock; the way of a ship in the midst of the sea; and the way of a man with a maid.

for me, לֹמֵס לֶחֶם חֻקִּי ha-teripheni lechem chukki; the meaning of which is, give me as prey my statute allowance of bread, i. e. my daily bread, a sufficient portion for each day. There is an allusion made to hunting;—"Direct so by thy good providence, that I may each day find sufficient portion to subsist on, as a hunter in the forest prays that he may have good speed." It is the province of a preacher to shew the importance and utility of such a prayer; and dilate the circumstances, and expand the reasons, after the commentator has shewn the literal sense.

Verse 10. Accuse not a servant] Do not bring a false accusation against a servant, lest thou be found guilty of the falsehood; and he curse thee for having traduced his character, and in his turn traduce thine. In general, do not meddle with other people's servants.

Verse 11. There is a generation] There are such persons in the world. In this and the three following verses the wise man points out four grand evils, that prevailed in his time.

The first, Those who not only did not honour, but evil-treated their parents.

Verse 12. The second, Those who were self-righteous, supposing themselves pure, and were not so.

Verse 13. The third, Those who were full of vanity, pride, and insolence.

Verse 14. The fourth, The greedy, cruel and oppressive; and especially oppressive to the poor.

Verse 15. The horseleech hath two daughters, crying, Give, give] This horseleech, says Calmet, is "Covetousness; and her two daughters are Avarice and Ambition.—They never say, It is enough; they are never satisfied; they are never contented."

Many explanations have been given of this verse: but as all the Versions agree in rendering אֲלֻכָה Alukah, the horseleech, or bloodsucker, the general meaning collected has been, "There are persons so excessively covetous and greedy, that they will scarcely let any live but themselves; and when they lay hold of any thing, by which they may profit, they never let go their hold, till they have extracted the last portion of good from it." Horace has well expressed this disposition, and by the same emblem; applied to a poor poet, who seizes on and extracts all he can from an author of repute, and obliges all to hear him read his wretched verses.

Quem vero arripuit, tenet, occiditque legendo, Non misera culam, nisi plena cruore, hirudo De Arte Poet. ver. 478.

"But if he seize you, then the torture dead; He fastens on you till he read you dead; And like a leech, voracious of his food, Quits not his cruel hold, till gorg'd with blood." Francis.

The word אֲלֻכָה Alukah, which we here translate horseleech, is read in no other part of the Bible. May it be, like Agur, Jakah, Ithiel and Ucal, be a proper name, belonging to some well known woman of his acquaintance, and well known in the public, who had two daughters, notorious for their covetousness and lechery? And at first view the following verse may be thought to confirm this supposition:—"There are three things that are never satisfied; yea, four things say not, It is enough. The grave, the barren womb, the earth, the fire. What an astonishing similarity there is between this and the following institute, taken from the Code of Hindoo laws, ch. xx. sect. i. p. 203.

"A woman is never satisfied with the copulation of man, no more than a fire is satisfied with burning fuel; or the main ocean is with receiving the rivers; or death with the dying of men and animals."—You can no more satisfy these two daughters of Alukah, than you can the grave, &c.

Some of the Rabbins have thought that Alukah signifies destiny, or the necessity of dying, which they say has two daughters, Eden and Gehenna, Paradise and Hell. The former has never enow of righteous souls; the latter, of the wicked. Similar to them is the opinion of Bochart, who thinks Alukah means destiny; and the two daughters, the Grave and Hell; into the first of which the body descends after death; and into the second, the soul.

The Septuagint gives it a curious turn, by connecting the fifteenth with the sixteenth verse:—Τὴν Βάλλυ θεγυρεται; ἡσαν ἀγαπῶσαι ἀγαποῦμαι, καὶ δι' τρεῖς αὐτὰ οὐκ ἐνεπιμασαν αὐτήν, καὶ ἡ τετρατὴ οὐκ ἠρησθη εἰπῆς Ἰκανόν.—"The horseleech has three well-beloved daughters; and these three have not been able to satisfy her desire; and the fourth is not satisfied, so as to say, It is enough."

After all, I think my own conjecture the most probable. Alukah is a proper name; and the two daughters were of the description I have mentioned.

Verse 17. The eye that mocketh at his father] This seems to be spoken against those who curse their father, and do not bless their mother, ver. 11.

The ravens of the valley] Those which frequent the places where dead carcases and offal are most likely to be found. The raven, the crow, the rook, the dove, the carrion crow, and the Cornish chough, appear to be all of the same genus. Some of them live on pulse, and insects; others, the raven in particular, live on carrion.

The young eagles shall eat it.] The mother eagle shall scoop out such an eye, and carry it to the nest to feed her young. Many of the disobedient to parents have come to an untimely end: and in the field of battle, where many a profligate has fallen, and upon gibbets, have actually become the prey of ravenous birds.

Verse 19. The way of an eagle] I borrow with thanks the very sensible note of the Rev. Mr. Holden on this passage.

"The particle כֵּן (ken) plainly shews, that verses 19 and 20 are to be taken in connexion; consequently, it is a comparison between the way of an adulterous woman, and the way of the things here described.

"The adulterous woman goes about in search of her deluded victim, like as the eagle takes its flight into the air to spy out its prey. She uses every species of blandishment and insinuation to allure and beguile, as the serpent employs its winding and sinuous motions to pass along the rocks; she pursues a course surrounded with danger, as a ship in the midst of the sea is continually exposed to the fury of the tempest, and the hazard of the shipwreck; and she tries every means, and exercises all her sagacity, to prevent the discovery of her illicit enjoyments, as a man attempts to conceal his clandestine intercourse with a maid. Such is the conduct of a lewd woman, marked by specious dissimulation and traitorous blandishment; she cateth, and wipes her mouth; she indulges her adulterous lust, yet artfully endeavours to conceal it, and with unblushing countenance asserts her innocence, exclaiming—I have done no wickedness.

CHAUCER'S January and May is an excellent comment on such wiles and protestations.

The way of a man with a maid.] כִּבְלָהּ be-alemah, with or in a maid; but one of De Rossi's MSS. has כִּבְלָהּּ be-alemaio, in his youth; and with this the SEPTUAGINT, εἰ νεότητι, the VULGATE, in adolescentiâ, the SYRIAC and the ARABIC agree; and so also my old MS. Bible.—The twelf of a man fit his twarfy pouthe. Dr. Kennicott, in a Sermon preached at Oxford, 1765, p. 46, has defended the reading of the Versions, corroborating it by two MSS., one in the Harleian, and the other in the Bodleian Library, besides that mentioned by De Rossi. See De Rossi's Var. Lect.—Certainly the way of a man in his youth contains too many intricacies for human wisdom to explore. He only who searches the heart knows fully its various corrupt principles, and their productions.

20 Such is the way of an adulterous woman ; she eateth, and wipeth her mouth, and saith, I have done no wickedness.

21 For three things the earth is disquieted, and for four which it cannot bear :

22 For a servant when he reigneth ; and a fool when he is filled with meat ;

23 For an odious woman when she is married ; and a handmaid that is heir to her mistress.

24 There be four things which are little upon the earth, but they are exceeding wise :

25 The ants are a people not strong ; yet they prepare their meat in the summer ;

26 The conies are but a feeble folk, yet make they their houses in the rocks ;

27 The locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them by bands ;

28 The spider taketh hold with her hands, and is in kings' palaces.

29 There be three things which go well, yea, four are comely in going :

30 A lion, which is strongest among beasts, and turneth not away for any ;

31 A greyhound ; a he-goat also ; and a king, against whom there is no rising up.

32 If thou hast done foolishly in lifting up thyself, or if thou hast thought evil, lay thine hand upon thy mouth.

33 Surely the churning of milk bringeth forth butter, and the wringing of the nose bringeth forth blood : so the forcing of wrath bringeth forth strife.

The common reading may refer to the formation of a child in the womb. But some have understood it of the immaculate conception. See my note on Matt. i. 23, where the subject is largely considered.

If we take the four things, which Agur says were too wonderful for him, in their obvious sense, there is little difficulty in them. 1. The passage which a bird makes through the air. 2. That which is made by a serpent on a rock. And, 3. That made by a ship through the sea,—are such as cannot be ascertained:—for who can possibly shew the track in which either of them has passed? And as to the fourth, if it refer to the suspected incontinence of one reputed a virgin, the signs are so equivocal, as to be absolutely unascertainable. The existence of the hymen has been denied by the ablest anatomists; and the signs of continence or incontinence, except in the most recent cases, are such as neither man nor woman can swear to even to the present day; and they were certainly not less difficult to Agur and his contemporaries. I shall carry this matter no farther.

Verse 21. For three things the earth is disquieted, and for four which it cannot bear] This is another enigma. Four things insupportable to men. 1. A slave, when he becomes ruler. 2. An overfed fool. 3. An ill-tempered woman, when mistress of a family. And, 4. A servant maid, when the rule of the house is committed to her.

1. A slave, when he comes to bear rule, is an unprincipled tyrant. It has been often observed both in America, and in the West Indies, when it was judged necessary to arm some of the most confidential slaves, that no regiments were used so cruelly in the drill, &c., as those black regiments, that had black officers.

2. The overfed fool. The intellectually weak man, who has every thing at his command, has generally manners, which none can bear; and, if a favourite with his master, he is insupportable to all others.

3. An ill-tempered woman, when she gets embarrassed with domestic cares, is beyond bearing.

4. A servant maid, when either through the death of the mistress, or the sin of the husband, she is in fact exalted to be head over the family, is so insolent and impudent, as to be hateful to every one, and execrated by all.

Verse 24. There be four things] Of which it is said, they are very little, but very wise. 1. The Ants. 2. The Rabbits. 3. The Locusts. 4. The Spider.

1. The ants shew their wisdom by preparing their meat in the summer; seeking for it and storing it when it may be had; not for winter consumption, for they sleep all that time; but for autumn and spring. See the note on chap. vi. 6. The Ants are a people: they have their houses, towns, cities, public roads, &c. I have seen several of these, both of the brown and large black ant.

2. The rabbits act curiously enough in the construction of their burrows: but the word יַשְׁפָּחַן shaphan, probably does not here mean the animal we call coney or rabbit. It is most likely that this is what Dr. Shaw calls the Damman Israel; a creature very like a rabbit, but never burrowing in the ground, but dwelling in clefts and holes of rocks.

3. The locusts. These surprising animals we have already met with and described.—Though they have no leader; yet they go forth by troops, some miles in circumference, when they take wing.

4. The Spider. This is a singularly curious animal, both in the manner of constructing her house, her nets, and taking her prey. But the habits, &c. of these and such like must be sought in works on natural history.

Verse 29. There be three things which go well] Here is another set of emblems; four things which walk beautifully, and with majesty. 1. The Lion. 2. The Greyhound. 3. The He-Goat. And, 4. A King.

1. Nothing can be more majestic than the walk of the lion. It is deliberate, equal, firm, and in every respect becoming the king of the forest.

2. The greyhound. זַרְזִיר מַתַּנַּיִם zarzir matenayim, the girl in the loins: but what this beast is we do not distinctly know. It is most likely that it was the greyhound, which in the East are remarkably fine, and very steel.—Scarcely any thing can be conceived to go with greater fleetness, in full chase, than a greyhound: with its prey in view, it seems to swim over the earth.

3. The goat, זַיִשׁ zayish. This is generally allowed to be the he-goat,—and how he walks, and what state he assumes in the presence of his part of the flock, every one knows, who has at all noticed this animal. The ram also, which some suppose to be intended, is both fierce and majestic at the head of the sheep.

4. And a king, against whom there is no rising up. That is, a king whose court, counsels, and troops, are so firmly united to him, as to render all hopes of successful conspiracy against him utterly vain. He walks boldly and majestically about, being safe in the affections of his people. But the Hebrew is singular: it makes but two words; and these are they, מֶלֶךְ וְיֹסֵף u-melec Alkum, "and king Alkum." It is a doubt whether this may not be a proper name, as Agur abounds in them,—see Ithiel, Ucal, and probably Alukah, ver. 15. But it is said, "we know nothing of a king named Alkum,"—nor do we know any thing of Agur, Rhiel, Ucal, to say nothing of Alukah. And this might have been some remarkable chieftain, who carried his victories wherever he went, and was remarkably fortunate. If, however, we separate the word into מֶלֶךְ al, "not," and מֵךְ kum, "he arose," we may make the interpretation above given.

Verse 32. If thou hast done foolishly] And who has not, at one time or other of his life?

Lay thine hand upon thy mouth.] Like the leper; and cry to God, Unclean! unclean! and keep silence to all besides. God will blot out thy offence, and neither the world nor the church ever know it, for He is merciful; and man is rarely able to pass by a sin committed by his fellows, especially if it be one to which himself is by nature not liable or inclined.

Verse 33. And the wringing] עֲשֵׂה הַגֶּחַל סְמוּטִית וְצִאֵתוֹ עַד דָּמָה.—Old MS. Bible. This is well expressed in homely phrase. The Septuagint have, "draw the milk, and you may have butter: if you press the nostrils, you may bring out blood; and if you draw out your discourse to a great length, you may have strife and contention." Avoid, therefore, all strong excitements and irritations. Coverdale's translation of this verse is very simple. "Whoso chyrneth mylck maketh butter; he that wrubth his nose, maketh it blode; and he that causeth wrath, bryngeth forth strife."

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXI.

Verse 1. The words of king Lemuel] רַבִּי לִמְעֵל רַבִּי לִמְעֵל dibrey le-muel melec, "The words to Muel the king."—So the Syriac; and so I think it should be read, the lame, being the article or preposition.

But who is Muel, or Lemuel? Solomon, according to general opinion; and the mother here mentioned, Bathsheba. I cannot receive these sayings:—1. Whoever this was, he appears to have been the first-born of his mother; called here emphatically בְּרִי בִתּוֹ bar bitni, the son of my 6 Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be ⁱ of heavy hearts.

7 Let him drink, and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more.

8 Open thy mouth for the dumb ^m in the cause of all ⁿ such as are appointed to destruction.

womb; which is not likely to be true of Solomon, as his mother had been wife of Uriah, and possibly had borne that rough and faithful soldier some children. 2. It is intimated here that this son had come by a lawful marriage: hence בן ברי bar nridrai, the son of my vows, her matrimonial covenant; for so it is most natural to understand the words. But is there any proper sense in which we can say that this was correct in reference to David, Bathsheba, and Solomon? For although the son born in adultery died, it is by no means likely that Bathsheba made any particular vows relative to Solomon; for of her piety, so much vaunted of by some writers, we yet want the proofs.

But, however this may be, there is no evidence whatever that Muel or Lemuel means Solomon:—the chapter seems to be much later than his time; and the several Chaldaisms which occur in the very opening of it, are no mean proof of this. If Agur was not the author of it, it may be considered as another supplement to the Book of Proverbs. Most certainly Solomon did not write it.

The prophecy that his mother taught him. משוּ מַסָּא masa, may here signify the oracle; the subject that came by Divine inspiration, see on chap. xxx. ver. 1. From this and some other circumstances it is probable that both these chapters were written by the same author. Houbigant thinks that Massa here is the name of a place; and, therefore, translates, "The words of Lemuel, king of Massa, with which his mother instructed him."

Verse 2. What, my son? The Chaldee בן ברי ben, son. This verse is very elliptical; and commentators, according to their different tastes, have inserted words, indeed some of them a whole sentence, to make up the sense. Perhaps Coverdale has hit the sense as nearly as any other. "These are the words of kyng Lemuel; and the lesson that his mother taughte him. My sonne, thou son of my body, O my deare beloved sonne!"

Verse 3. Give not thy strength] Do not waste thy substance on women. In such connexions the strength both of body, soul, and substance, is destroyed. Such connexions are they that destroy kings, מילאין milacin, the Chaldee termination, instead of the Hebrew.

Verse 4. It is not for kings—to drink wine] An intemperate man is ill fit to hold the reins of government.

Verse 5. Lest they drink, and forget the law] When they should be administering justice, they are found either incapable of it; or, if they go into the judgment seat, may pervert justice.

Verse 6. Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish] We have already seen, that inebriating drinks were mercifully given to condemned criminals, to render them less sensible of the torture they endured in dying. This is what was offered to our Lord: but He refused it. See note on Ps. civ. 15.

Verse 8. Open thy mouth for the dumb] For such accused persons as have no counsellors, and cannot plead for themselves.

Are appointed to destruction] בני חַיִּף beney cheph,—variously translated, children of passage, i. e. indigent travellers; children of desolation, those who have no possessions, or orphans. I believe it either signifies those who are strangers, and are travelling from place to place, or those who are ready to perish in consequence of want or oppression.

Verse 10. Who can find a virtuous woman?] This and the following verses are acroestic, each beginning with a consecutive letter of the Hebrew alphabet:—ver. 10. א aleph; ver. 11. ב beth; ver. 12. ג gimel; and so on to the end of the Chapter, the last verse of which has the letter ט tau. From this to the end of the Chapter we have the character of a woman of genuine worth laid down: first, in general, ver. 10, 11, and 12; second, in its particular or component parts, ver. 13—29; and, third, the summing up of the character, ver. 30, 31.

1. She is a virtuous woman—a woman of power and strength. אשה חַיִּיל eset chayil, a strong or virtuous wife, full of mental energy.

2. She is invaluable; her price is above rubies: no quantity of precious stones can be equal to her worth.

Verse 11. The heart of her husband]

3. She is an unspotted wife, and makes no waste of any thing: the heart of her husband doth safely trust in her. She will take care that a proper provision is made for the household. He has no need of spoil,—he is not obliged to go out on predatory excursions, to provide for his family at the expense of the neighbouring tribes.

Verse 12. She will do him good]

4. She has her husband's happiness in view constantly. She recompenses all his kindness to her in beneficent acts. For kind words she gives kind deeds. 1. Her good is unmixed: she will do him good, and not evil. 2. Her good is not capricious; it is constant and permanent, while she lives and her husband lives. His heart safely trusts in her, for she will do him good all the days of her life. This is her general character.

Verse 13. She seeketh wool and flax, and worketh willingly, &c.

II. This is the second part of her character, giving the particulars of which it is composed.

1. She did not buy ready woven cloth: she procured the raw material, if wool, most probably from her own flocks: if flax, most probably from her own fields.

2. Here she manufactured; for she worketh willingly with her hands. And all her labour is a cheerful service; her will, her heart, is in it.

It needs no arguments to prove that women, even of the highest ranks among the Greeks, Romans, and Israelites, worked with their hands at every kind of occupation necessary for the support of the family. This kind of employment was not peculiar to the virtuous woman in the text.

Verse 14. She is like the merchants' ships]

3. She acts like merchants. If she buy any thing for her household, she sells sufficient of her own manufactures to pay for it. If she imports, she exports; and she sends articles of her own manufacturing or produce to distant countries; she traffics with the neighbouring tribes.

Verse 15. She riseth also while it is yet night]

4. She is an economist of time: and when the nights are long, and the days short, her family not only spend a part of the evening after sunset in domestic labour; but they all arise before daylight, and prepare the day's food, that they may not have their labour interrupted. To those who are going to the fields, and to the flock, she gives the food necessary for the day;—טרֵף teref, prey, a term taken from hunting; the object of which was, the supplying their natural wants. Hence applied to daily food. See note on chap. xxx. ver. 8. And to the women who are to be employed within she gives מְצוּחַ mezuch, the task,—the kind of work they are to do, the materials out of which they are to form it, and the quantity which she expects from each. Thus all the servants are settled; their food, work, and tasks, appointed. Every thing is done orderly.

Verse 16. She considereth a field and buyeth it]

5. She provides for the growing wants of her family: More land will shortly be needed, for the family is grow-

17 She girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms.

18 She perceiveth that her merchandise is good: her candle goeth not out by night.

19 She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff.

20 She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy.

21 She is not afraid of the snow for her house-

ing up; and having seen a field contiguous to her own, which was on sale, she estimates its worth, and purchases it a good bargain; and she pays for it by the fruit of her own industry.

6. She does not restrict herself to the bare necessities of life; she is able to procure some of its comforts. She plants a vineyard, that she may have wine for beverage, for medicine, and for sacrifice. This also is procured by the fruit of her hands, by the produce of her own labour. Whatever goes out brings its worth in; and barter, not buying, is her chief mode of traffic.

Verse 17. She girdeth her loins with strength]

7. She takes care of her own health and strength, not only by means of useful labour: but by healthy exercise. She avoids what might enervate her body, or soften her mind,—she is ever active, and girt ready for every necessary exercise. Her loins are firm, and her arms strong.

Verse 18. She perceiveth that her merchandise is good]

8. She takes care to manufacture the best articles of the kind; and to lay on a reasonable price, that she may secure a ready sale. Her goods are in high repute; and she knows she can sell as much as she can make. And she finds that while she pleases her customers, she increases her own profits.

9. She is watchful and careful. Her candle, her lamp, burns all night, which is of great advantage in case of sudden alarms: and in the times and places where there were so many banditti, this was a very necessary family regulation. Perhaps some works were carried on during the night; those employed, sleeping in the day-time. Thus labour never stood still: while some slept, others worked. This was no unusual thing in ancient times; and it prevails now: but, alas, little children are often thus employed to help to support their indigent parents, and to fill the coffers of their unfeeling taskmasters.

Verse 19. She layeth her hands to the spindle]

10. She gives an example of skill and industry to her household. She takes the distaff, that on which the wool or fax was rolled: and the spindle, that by twisting of which she twisted the thread, with the right hand, while she held the distaff in the guard of the left arm, and drew down the thread with the fingers of the left-hand. Allowing that spindle and distaff are proper translations of שׁוּבָר shubar, and לְבַיַּת lebayit, this was their use, and the way in which they were used. The spindle and distaff are the most ancient of all the instruments used for spinning, or making thread. The spinning-wheel superseded them in these countries: but still they were in considerable use till spinning machinery superseded both them and the spinning wheels in general.

Verse 20. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor]

11. She is truly charitable. She knows that in every portion of a man's gain God requires a lot for the poor; and if this is not given, God's blessing is not in the rest. And she is not contented to give common alms. While with one hand (יָד yad) she relieved the general poor; with both hands (שׁוּבָר yadeyah) she gives to the needy, לְבַיַּת le-bayit, to the afflicted poor.

Verse 21. She is not afraid of the snow]

12. She is not anxious relative to the health and comfort of her family in the winter season, she having provided clothes sufficient for each in the cold weather, in addition to those which they wore in the warm seasons.

[For all her household are clothed with scarlet.] Not scarlet, for the colour can avail nothing in keeping off the cold; nor would it be a proper colour for the bogs and dirt of winter. But שׁוּבָר shanim, from שׁוּבָר shamah, to iterate, to double, signifies not only scarlet, so called from being twice or double dyed: but also double garments; not only the ordinary coat, but the surcoat, or great coat also, or a cloak to cover all. But most probably double garments, or twofold to what they were accustomed to wear, are here intended. If the general clothing be intended, scarlet cannot be the meaning; nor did our translators entirely rely on it; and, therefore, put double garments, the true meaning, in the margin; from which it cannot be too speedily transferred to the text. The Vulgate has duplicibus. And my old M.S. very properly, alle forsoth fir boomif men, ben clostht wstf double. And Coverdale, with equal propriety, "For all hir householdes folkes are duple clothed." But if her husband and children alone are referred to, scarlet, which is the general meaning of the term, may be proper enough: as even in these countries of ours, scarlet, as being a lively bright colour, is used in the winter dresses.

22 She maketh herself coverings of tapestry; her clothing is silk and purple.

23 Her husband is known in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land.

24 She maketh fine linen, and selleth it; and delivereth girdles unto the merchant.

25 Strength and honour are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come.

y Or, double garments.—z Chap. 13. 4.

13. She is not regardless either of her own person, or of the decent proper appearance of her presses and wardrobe. She has coverings or carpeting for her guests to sit upon;—she has also tapestry, מֵרָבִידִים merabedim, either tapestry, carpeting, or quilted work for her beds; and her own clothing is שׁוּבָר shish, fine flax, or linen cloth, and purple; probably for a cloak or mantle. The fine linen or cotton cloth of Egypt is probably intended. I have seen it often wrapping the bodies of mummies; it is something like our coarse calico. The purple was supposed to have been dyed by a precious liquor obtained from the pinna magna, a large shell fish, of the muscle kind, found on the coasts of the Mediterranean sea. I have seen some of them nearly two feet in length. But it is a doubt whether ever any such liquor was obtained from this or any other fish: and the story itself is invented merely to hide the secret, the proper method of dyeing purple; which was kept so well, that it certainly died with the ancients.

Verse 23. Her husband is known in the gates]

14. She is a loving wife, and feels for the respectability and honour of her husband. He is an elder among his people, and he sits as a magistrate in the gate. He is respected not only on the account of the neatness and cleanliness of his person and dress: but because he is the husband of a woman who is justly held in universal esteem. And her complete management of household affairs gives him full leisure to devote himself to the civil interests of the community.

Verse 24. She maketh fine linen, and selleth it]

15. She is here remarkable for carrying on a traffic of splendid and ornamental dresses, or habits, as she is ver. 13, for a coarser manufacture. The שׁוּבָר sharon, is supposed to come from سارون in Arabic; and to signify a kind of loose inner garment, shirt, chemise, or fine muslin covering. Some of these are so exceedingly fine, like the abroon, that when spread on the grass, they are scarcely discernible. Some such garments as these are still worn by ladies in India, and in China; and are so thin and transparent, that every part of the body may be seen through them. I have many representations of persons clothed in this way before me, both of the Chinese, the Hindoo, and the Malabar ladies. Probably this eminent Jewish matron had such articles manufactured in her own house. She dealt also in girdles. These are still a very general and very expensive article of dress. I have seen them made of silk; and highly ornamented with gold and silver thread, worked into flowers and various curious devices. The loose Eastern robe is confined by these: and the word may also take in the shawl of the turban, which is often superb and costly. It is properly the girdle for the head. As these were generally woven, the consumption was great: and an able artist must have a good trade.

The Arabic gives a remarkable translation of this verse:—"She maketh towels (or table-cloths) and sells them to the inhabitants of Baira, (a city in Mesopotamia,) and fine linens, and sells them to the Canaanites." My old M.S. Bible has, שׁוּבָר shibet made and sold, and a little שׁוּבָר shibet take to Canaan. Perhaps לְבַיַּת le-bayit, for the merchants, may stand here for לְבַיַּת le-canaanim, the Canaanites.

Verse 25. Strength and honour are her clothing]

16. All the articles manufactured by herself, or under her care, have a double perfection:—1. They are strong. 2. They are elegant. Strength and honour are her clothing;—and on account of this she shall rejoice in time to come; she shall never have occasion to blush for any 26 She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

27 She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.

thing she has made, for any thing she or hers have worn, or for any thing she has sold. Besides, she has so conducted herself that she has reason to expect that the hand of the Lord shall be still with her, and shall keep her from evil that it may not grieve her.

Verse 26. She openeth her mouth with wisdom]

17. He comes now to the moral management of her family. 1. She is wise and intelligent;—she has not neglected the cultivation of her mind. 2. She is amiable in her carriage, full of good nature, well-tempered, and conciliating in her manners and address.

Her tongue is the law of kindness.] This is the most distinguishing excellence of this woman. There are very few of those who are called managing women who are not lords over their husbands, tyrants over their servants, and insolent among their neighbours. But this woman, with all her eminence and excellence, was of a meek and quiet spirit. Blessed woman!

Verse 27. She looketh well to the ways of her household]

18. She is a moral manager;—she takes care that all shall behave themselves well; that none of them shall keep bad company, or contract vicious habits. A religious industry, or an industrious religion, is the law of her house. She can instruct them in religion, as well as she can teach them in their labour. In her house, diligence in business, and fervency of spirit, serving the Lord, go hand in hand.

And eateth not the bread of idleness.]

19. She knows that idleness leads to vice; and, therefore, every one has his work, and every one has his proper food. That they may work well, they are fed well; and every one, at least, earns the bread that he eats—eateth not the bread of idleness.

Verse 28. Her children arise up, and call her blessed]

20. She considers a good education next to Divine influence; and she knows also that if she train up a child in the way he should go, when he is old he will not depart from it. 1. Her children are well bred; they rise up, and pay due respect. 2. They are taught the fear of the Lord, and obedience to His testimonies;—therefore, they call her blessed. So, they are of a decent, orderly, respectable, religious behaviour. 3. Her husband is so satisfied with her conduct towards himself, his household, his business, and their children, that he praiseth her. He shews himself sensible of her excellence; and encourages her, in her work, by the commendations he bestows.

Verse 29. Many daughters have done virtuously] This is undoubtedly the speech of the husband, giving testimony to the excellence of his wife:—her husband also, and he praiseth her, saying, Many daughters, women, have done virtuously, with due propriety as wives, mistresses, and mothers: but תרוח, my incomparable wife, excelleth them all: עלתה על כל רוחי כי וְאֵתָה אֵלֵיָה אֵל עֲלָנָה, but תרוח hast ascended above the whole of them; thou hast carried every duty, every virtue, and every qualification and excellency, to a higher perfection, than any of whom we have ever read or heard. And let the Reader seriously consider the above particulars, as specified under the different heads and subdivisions; and he will be probably of the same mind. But high as the character of this Jewish matron stands in the preceding description, I can say, that I have met at least her equal, in a daughter of the Rev. Dr. Samuel Annesley, the wife of Samuel Wesley, sen., Rector of Epworth in Lincolnshire, and mother of the late extraordinary brothers, John and Charles Wesley. I am constrained to add this testimony, after having traced her from her birth to her death, through all the relations that a woman can bear upon earth. Her Christianity gave to her virtues and excellencies a heightening, which the Jewish matron could not possess. Besides, she was a woman of great learning and information, and of a depth of mind, and reach of thought, seldom to be found among the daughters of Eve, and not often among the sons of Adam.

Verse 30. Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain, &c.]

III. Here is the summing up of the character. 1. Favour, in chen, grace of manner may be deceitful, many a fair appearance of this kind is put on, assumed for certain secular or more unworthy purposes: it is being by painful drilling in polished seminaries, and being the effect of mere physical discipline, it continues while the restraints last; but it is שׁוֹכֵר אֵי, a lit, a mere sim-

29 Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excelst them all.

30 Favour is deceitful, and beauty is vain: but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised.

31 Give her of the fruit of her hands; and let her own works praise her in the gates.

c Isa. 23. 1, 4.

blance, an outward varnish. It is not the effect of internal moral regulation; it is an outside, at which the inside murmurs; and which, because not ingenuous, is a burthen to itself.

2. Beauty, חַיִּי hayophi, elegance of shape, symmetry of features, dignity of mien, and beauty of countenance, are all הֶבֶל hebel, vanity; sickness impairs them, suffering deranges them, and death destroys them.

3. But a woman that feareth the Lord, possesses true religion, has that grace that harmonizes the soul, that purifies and refines all the tempers and passions, and that ornaments beauty; that meek and quiet mind, which, in the sight of God, is of great price.

She shall be praised.] This is the lasting grace, the unfading beauty.

Verse 31. Give her of the fruit of her hands] This may be a prayer. May she long enjoy the fruit of her labours! May she see her children's children, and peace upon Israel!

And let her own works praise her in the gates.] Let what she has done be spoken of for a memorial of her: let her bright example be held forth in the most public places. Let it be set before the eyes of every female, particularly of every wife, and especially of every mother; and let them learn from this exemplar, what men have a right to expect in their wives, the mistresses of their families, and the mothers of their children. Amen.

Masoretic Notes on this Book.

Number of Verses in the Book of Proverbs, 915.

Middle Verse, chap. xvi. 13.

Sections, 8.

The Syriac reckons 1363 verses.

The Arabic concludes thus:—"The discipline of Solomon written out by the friends of Hezekiah, king of Judah, the interpretation of which is extremely difficult, (but) is now completed by the assistance and influence of the Son of God."

In the Introduction to the Book of Proverbs, among the several collections of a similar nature which are mentioned there, I have referred to M. Galand's Maximes des Orientaux. From this work, as contained in the Supplement to the Bibliothèque Orientale, I have translated the following selection. They will serve to shew the curious Reader how much similar sayings to those of Solomon still abound in the East.

ASIATIC PROVERBS.

I fear God; and beside Him I fear none, but that man who fears him not.

He who knows not his Maker cannot know himself. Godliness is the greatest wisdom, and impiety the greatest of follies.

The fear of God is the greatest safeguard.

To sin once is too much; but a thousand acts of devotion towards God are not sufficient to honour Him.

If a man foresew his end, and his exit from life, he would abhor his actions, and their deceitfulness.

Life is a sort of sleep, from which many awake not but in death.

The life of man is a path that leads to death. The orphan is not the person who has lost his father: but he who has neither wisdom, nor a good education.

Want of good sense is worse than all the degrees of poverty.

Nothing so effectually hides what we are as silence. He who has least wisdom has most vanity.

There is no greatness of soul in avenging oneself. The heart of the fool is in his mouth, and the tongue of the wise man is in his heart.

He who runs with a slack rein, guided only by hope, encounters the last moment of his life, and falls.

Envy has no rest. When you have once received a benefit, render yourself not unworthy of it, by a want of gratitude.

The desire of revenge is a constant hindrance to a happy and contented life.

When you have got an advantage over your enemy, pardon him, in returning God thanks for that advantage.

When you are in prosperity, you need seek no other revenge against him who envies you, than the mortification he has from it.

ASIATIC PROVERBS.

How advantageous must wisdom be to its possessor, seeing it is of so great value, as not to be purchased by money.

Nothing obtains pardon more speedily than repentance. There is no disease so dangerous as the want of common sense.

Of all vices, vanity and love of contention are the most difficult to be corrected.

Visiting your neighbour is no crime; but your visits should not be so often repeated, as to induce him to say, It is enough.

If a prince would worship God in truth, he must remain in his limits, be true to his treaties, be content with what he has, and suffer patiently the privation of what he has not.

Nothing so much resembles flowers planted on a dung-hill, as the good which is done to an ignorant or worthless man.

In whatsoever company or society you be, engage not in those matters which concern the whole; for if you succeed, the whole company will attribute the success to itself; and if you succeed not, each person will lay the blame on you.

When the soul is ready to depart, what avails it whether a man die on a throne, or in the dust?

Take and give equity.

We need not be surprised when those who ask or seek for improper things, fall into misfortunes which they did not expect.

Riches dwell no longer in the hand of a liberal man, than patience in the heart of a lover, or water in a sieve.

As soon as a person takes pleasure in hearing slander, he is to be ranked in the number of slanderers.

That which a man suffers for this world, fills his heart with darkness: but that which he suffers for the other, fills it with light.

The greatest repose which a man can enjoy, is that which he feels in desiring nothing.

One seldom finds that which he seeks, when he searches for it with impatience.

Do not reproach a man for the sin which he has committed, when God has forgiven him.

He who pushes a jest farther than good breeding requires, shall never fail to be hated or despised.

He who is worthy of being called a man, is unshaken in adversity, humble in prosperity, active and bold in danger; and, if he be not learned, has at least a love for learning.

The man who is governed by his passions is in a worse state than the most miserable slave.

Men often give themselves much trouble to succeed in an affair from which they derive only vexation in the end.

He is a free man who desires nothing; and he is a slave, who expects that which he wishes.

The advice of a wise man is to be considered as a prediction.

Be sincere, though your sincerity should cost you your life.

Live not on credit, and you shall live in liberty.

A wise man practises the three following things:—he abandons the world before it abandons him; he builds his sepulchre before the time of entering it; and he does all with a design to please God, before entering into His presence.

He who lords it over those who are below him, shall one day find a master who will lord it over him.

Sin not if you would have less vexation in the hour of death.

He who takes not counsel before hand, will surely fail in accomplishing his projects.

Covetousness leads to poverty: but he is truly rich who desires nothing.

He who relates the faults of others to you, designs to relate yours to others.

Watch your friends; except those of whom you are certain: but know that none can be a true friend but he who has the fear of God.

The most perfect pleasures in this world are always mingled with some bitterness.

He who considers consequences with too much attention, is ordinarily a man of no courage.

The world is the hell of the good, and the heaven of the wicked; i. e. it is all the evil that the former shall meet with, and all the good that the latter shall enjoy.

By doing good to those who have evil intentions against you, you thereby shut their mouth.

He who knows well what he is capable of, has seldom had success.

He who has too good an opinion of himself, drives all others away from him.

He who loves jesting and raillery, brings himself into many troubles.

Partial knowledge is better than total ignorance; if you cannot get what you wish, get what you can.

He who has lost shame, may bury his heart.

The poor should get learning in order to become rich; and the rich should acquire it for their ornament.

A man should accommodate himself to the weakness of his inferiors, in order to derive from them the services he requires.

An avaricious man runs straight into poverty. He leads a life of poverty here below: but he must give the account of a rich man in the day of judgment.

The greatest advantage that a man can procure for his children, is to have them well educated.

Do good to him who does you evil, and by this means you will gain the victory over him.

Men, because of speech, have the advantage over beasts: but brutes are preferable to men whose language is indecent.

If you can do good to-day, defer it not till to-morrow.

The excellence of many discourses consists in their brevity.

Two things are inseparable from lying; many promises, and many excuses.

Deceivers, liars, and all persons who lead an irregular life, are intoxicated by the prosperity which smiles upon them in all things: but that intoxication is the just recompense of their evil actions.

He lives in true repose, who bridle his passions.

It is in vain to expect these five things from the following persons. A present from a poor man; service from a lazy man; succour from an enemy; counsel from an envious man; and true love from a prude.

It is unbecoming the character of a wise man to commit the fault for which he reproveth others.

A passionate man is capable of nothing:—how unfit then is such a person for a governor!

A rich man who is not liberal, resembles a tree without fruit.

You cannot keep your own secret,—what cause then have you to complain, if another to whom you have declared it, should reveal it?

It is the same with the administration of the affairs of kings, as with sea-voyages; you may lose, gain, amass treasures, and lose your life.

He who submits to a voluntary poverty neither possesses, nor is possessed by, any thing.

A wicked man should be considered as dead while he is alive: but a good man lives even in the tomb.

No man should undertake any thing till he has thoroughly examined it.

He who possesses any art or science, is at least equal to a great lord.

Honours, employments, and dignities, cannot recompense a man for the pains he has taken to acquire them.

On many occasions a good book supplies the place of an agreeable companion.

That day in which a man neither does some good action, nor acquires some useful knowledge, should not be (if possible) numbered in the days of his life.

He who is of a surly and unyielding disposition never fails to excite troubles even among relatives and friends.

A great monarch should fix a good reputation as an object to which he should continually bend his pursuits; because, of all the grandeur and eminences of this world, this is the only thing that shall survive him.

Leave not till to-morrow what you can perform to-day.

To have pity on one's enemy, when he is in distress, is the mark of a great soul.

He who does good shall not lose his reward. A good action never perishes, neither before God nor before men.

Covetousness proceeds ad infinitum; and therefore determine the bounds of your desires, and the objects of your pursuits. He who does not act thus, shall never become either rich or happy.

A monarch who considers his own interest should ever abide in his kingdom, and consider himself as a rose in the midst of a garden, which continually reposes on thorns.

Never despise a man because his employment is mean, or his clothing bad. The bee is an insect which is not very pleasing to the sight, yet its hive affords abundance of honey.

The people enjoy repose, when governed by princes who take note. The monarch who watches causes his people to repose in safety.

Confer your opinion with that of another, for truth is more easily discovered by two than one.

Do not rejoice at the death of your enemy; your life is not eternal.

Be always employed, that ye become not slothful; and refer to God all that you acquire by labour, otherwise you shall live in a continual and condemnable idleness.

It is extremely difficult to render him wise who knows nothing; because his ignorance causes him to believe that he knows more than he who attempts to instruct him.

ASIATIC PROVERBS.

One coat, one house, and one day's food, is enough for you; and should you die at noonday you will have one-half too much.

A covetous man is an enemy to all the poor; and is cursed both in this and the coming world.

Interested friends resemble dogs in public places, who love the bones better than those who throw them.

In order to live well, a man should die to all his passions, and every thing that depends on them.

A thousand years of delight do not deserve the risk of our lives for a single moment.

You shall only receive in proportion to what you give. The service of kings may be compared to a vast sea, where many merchants traffic, some of whom acquire great riches, and others are shipwrecked.

Fear the man who fears you. Do nothing without design.

Humble yourself in asking, that you may be raised up in obtaining what you request.

A wicked woman in the house of a good man is a hell to him in this world.

It cannot be said of a miser that he possesses his riches, however attached he may be to them.

The thought of evil frequently derives its origin from idleness.

Kings and subjects are equally unhappy, where persons of merit are despised, and where ignorant men occupy the chief places of trust.

Answer those who ask questions of you in such a manner as not to offend them.

The most proper method of punishing an envious person is, to load him with benefits.

Prudence suffers between impossibility and irresolution.

When you speak, let it be in such a manner as not to require an explanation.

The most precious acquisition is that of a friend. Never trust to appearances. Behold the drum; notwithstanding all its noise, it is empty within.

Keep not an evil conscience: but be diffident, to the end that you be never surprised nor deceived.

Nothing remains with punishment or reward.

A wise man by his speeches does things which a hundred armies conjoined could not execute.

Do not speak till you have thought on what you intend to say.

Those who believe they may gain by seditions and commotions never fail to excite them.

The best friends we have in this world, are the spies of our actions, who publish our faults.

Hope for nothing from this world, and your soul will enjoy rest.

He who applies himself to acquire knowledge, puts himself in the capacity of possessing all good things.

He who does not succeed in the business in which he is employed, because he is incapable of it, deserves to be excused; for it is to be believed that he has done all he could to accomplish his end.

Every kind of employment requires a particular sort of genius.

Riches increase in proportion as you give to the poor.

The greatest reputation is frequently an embarrassment.

Do not despise a poor man because he is such: the lion is not less noble because he is chained.

A young man, who has the wisdom of an old man, is considered as an old man among those who are wise.

A righteous prince is the image and shadow of God upon earth.

As soon as virtue begins to discover itself, vice begins its insolent insults.

Can it be said that a man has wisely considered what he has done, when the end corresponds not with what he proposed?

To the end that what you desire may be advantageous to you, never desire any thing but that which is proper for you.

Those who will not forgive an offence are the most accursed of all men.

Though it be pretended that no man can shun his destiny, yet it is well to do nothing without precaution.

It is a double present when given with a cheerful countenance.

Nobility is nothing, unless supported by good actions.

Evil speaking and calumny never quit their hold till they have destroyed the innocent on whom they have once seized.

Consider your estate, and leave playing and jesting to children.

Soft words may appease an angry man; bitter words never will.

Would you throw fire on a house in flames to extinguish them?

Continue to speak the truth, though you know it to be hateful.

It is a blessing to a house to have a number of guests at table.

Five things are useless when they are not accompanied each with another thing:—advice without effect;—riches without economy;—science without good manners;—almsgiving to improper objects, or without a pure intention;—and life without health.

If you wish your enemy never to know your secret, never divulge it to your friend.

Art thou a man in honour? Wouldst thou live without inquietude or remorse? Then do actions worthy of thy character.

When subjects are ill-treated by subaltern officers, and cannot make remonstrances to the prince, because the too great authority of ministers of state deprives them of the means; their lot is like to that of a man who, half-dead with thirst, approaches the river Nile to drink; but, perceiving a crocodile, is obliged to perish for lack of water, or submit to be devoured.

It is better to perish with hunger, than to deprive the poor of their bread.

If you be reproved for your faults, do not be angry with him who does it: but turn your anger against the things for which he has reproved you.

Poisonous food is preferable to bad discourse.

Do not discover the faults of others, if you be unwilling to have your own known.

Wage war against yourself, and you will thereby acquire true peace of soul.

One resembles those, the company of whom he most frequents.

The best expended riches are those which are given for God's sake.

If you have a dispute with any person, take heed that you say not of him all the evil which you know; otherwise you will leave no room for accommodation.

Your conversation is the index of your intellect, and your actions shew the bottom of your heart.

It is more difficult to manage riches well, than to acquire them.

The grandeur of kings is evidenced in the administration of justice.

Honour your parents, and your children will honour you. Cultivate no friendship with him who loves your enemy.

If you have a friend who takes offence at trifles, break entirely with him, for he is not to be trusted.

The happiness of life is only to be found, when the conscience is pure and clean.

Measure every man with his own measure; i. e. do not expect or require from him more than is in him.

Can any man boast who considers what he is come from? In whatever corner of the world you are, you will have something to suffer.

It will be more profitable for thee to adorn thy inside than thy outside.

The words of Lockman to his son.

My son, I wish thee to observe these six maxims, which comprehend all the morality of the ancients and moderns.

1. Have no attachment to the world, but in proportion to the short duration of thy life.
2. Serve God with all that fervour which the need which thou hast of Him demands.
3. Labour for the other life that awaits thee, and consider the time it must endure.
4. Strive to escape that fire, out of which those who are once cast in, can never escape.
5. If thou hast temerity enough to sin, measure beforehand the strength thou shalt require to endure the fire of hell, and the chastisements of God.
6. When thou wishest to transgress, seek for a place where God cannot see thee.

The words of Ali to his sons.

My sons, never despise any person: consider your superior as your father, your equal as your brother, and your inferior as your son.

Words addressed by a Mohammedan to the Messiah.

The heart of the afflicted draws all its consolation from Thy words.

The soul receives life and vigour at the bare mention of Thy name.

If ever the human spirit be rendered capable of contemplating the mysteries of the Divinity, it is Thou alone who givest it the light by which it understands, and the attractions by which it is penetrated.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

THE Book, intituled Kohelah or Ecclesiastes, has ever been received, both by the Jewish and Christian Church, as written under the inspiration of the Almighty; and was held to be properly a part of the Sacred Canon. But while this has been almost universally granted, there has been but little unanimity among learned men and critics, as to its author. To Solomon it has been most generally attributed, both in ancient and modern times.

Grotius, however, conjectured that it was written a long time after Solomon; and he says, at the close of his Notes on it, that it was revised in the days of Zerubbabel by some learned man, who in the twelfth verse of the last Chapter addresses his son Abiud: And further, by these, my son, be admonished. But such a conjecture appears to have little foundation. This great man was more successful in his criticism on the language of the Book; shewing that there are many words in it which do not savour of the purity of the Hebrew tongue; and are found in the times of the Captivity, and afterwards, and such as appear principally in the Books of Ezra and Daniel.

Calovius has on the other hand (not with as much success as he imagined) argued against Grotius for the purity of the language.

Mr. G. Zirkel of Wurtzburgh published an examination of this Book in 1792, in which he endeavours to prove:—

1. That the style of Ecclesiastes is that of the later Hebrew writers, as appears by the Chaldaisms, Syriacisms, and Hellenisms, that occur in it.

2. That it may have been written between the years 390 and 130 before Jesus Christ, if not later.

The Jena reviewers, seem to have thought it to be a translation from the Greek, and to have been written by a Jew of Alexandria, while the famous library was founding by Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, about the year 240 before Christ. And that it is to this circumstance that chap. xii. 12, alludes; of making many books there is no end; which could not have entered into the head of a Palestine Jew; and such a person might speak with propriety of an Israel in Jerusalem, chap. i. ver. 12, being acquainted with an Israel in Alexandria.

The Jews in general, and St. Jerom, hold the Book to be the composition of Solomon, and the fruit of his repentance when restored from his idolatry, into which he had fallen through means of the strange or heathenish women whom he had taken for wives and concubines.

Others of no mean note, who consider Solomon as the author, believe, that he wrote it before his fall; there being no evidence,—1. That he wrote it afterwards. 2. Nor that he ever recovered from his fall: 3. That it was in his old age, that his wives turned away his heart from God; and the Book bears too many evidences of mental energy to allow the supposition, that in his declining age, after so deep a fall from God, he was capable of writing such a treatise. And, 4. That this opinion goes far towards destroying the Divine inspiration of the Book; for if he did recover and repent, there is no evidence that God gave him back that Divine inspiration which he before possessed; for we hear of the Lord appearing to him twice before his fall, but of a third appearance there is no intimation. 5. Of the restoration of Solomon to the favour of God, there is no proof in the Sacred History: for in the very place where we are told that in his old age his wives turned away his heart from the Lord, we are told of his death, without the slightest intimation of his repentance.—See my character of Solomon at the end of 1 Kings xi.

Nothing, however, of this uncertainty can affect the character, importance, and utility, of the Book in question. It is a Book of singular worth; and the finest monument we have of the wisdom of the ancients, except the Book of Job.

But the chief difficulty attending this Book is the principle on which it should be interpreted. Some have supposed it to be a dialogue between a true believer and an infidel; which makes it to the unwary Reader appear to abound with contradictions, and in some instances false doctrine. And that the parts must be attributed to their respective speakers, before an interpretation can be successfully attempted. I am not convinced that the Book has any such structure; though in some places the opinions and sayings of infidels may be quoted; a. g. Chap. vii. ver. 16, and in some of the following Chapters.

In the year 1763, M. Desvœux, a learned foreigner, then resident in England, and in the British service, wrote and published a Philosophical and Critical Essay on this book, in which he endeavours to prove, that the design of the author was to prove the immortality of the soul; and that it is on this principle alone, that the Book can be understood and explained.

As a late Commentator on the Bible has adopted this plan, and woven the major part of this dissertation in his notes on the Book, I shall introduce the whole of Mr. Desvœux's analysis of its contents, the propositions, arguments, proofs, illustrations, corollaries, &c. on the ground of which he attempts its illustration.

"The whole of the discourse," he says, "may be reduced to the three following Propositions, each of which is attended with its apparatus of proofs, and special observations."

PROPOSITION I.

"No labour of man in this world can render him contented, or give him true satisfaction of soul."

PROPOSITION II.

"Earthly goods and possessions, are so far from making us happy, that they may be even viewed as real obstacles to our ease, quiet, and tranquillity of mind."

PROPOSITION III.

"Men know not what is or is not truly advantageous to them; because they are either ignorant or unmindful of that which must come to pass after their death."

"The three propositions, with their proofs and illustrations, are contained in the following Analysis."

PROPOSITION I.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

- Chap. Ver.
 ii. 24—26. iii. Pleasure.
 iii. 1, &c. Third proof.—Inconstancy of men's wills.
 9. Conclusion of the third proof.
A review of the second and third proofs, considered, jointly, with special observations and corollaries.
 10, 11. First observation.—God is inculpable.
 12—15. Second observation.—God is the Author of whatever befalls us in this world.
 16, 17. First corollary.—God shall redeem all grievances.
 18—21. Second corollary.—God must be exalted and man humbled.

- Chap. Ver.
 iii. 22. Third corollary.—God allows men to enjoy the present.
 iv. 1. Fourth proof.—Men's neglect of proper opportunities, evidenced in several instances, viz.
 1—3. i. Oppression.
 4. ii. Envy.
 5, 6. iii. Idleness.
 7—12. iv. Avarice.
 v. 13—19. v. Misapplication of esteem and regard.
 N. B. 1—9. Is a digression containing several admonitions, in order to prevent any misconstruction of the foregoing remarks.
 10—12. vi. Expensive living.

PROPOSITION II.—Ch. iv. ver. 13.

- Chap. Ver.
 v. 14—17. First proof.—Instability of riches.
 vi. 18. 2. Second proof.—Insufficiency of riches to make men happy.
 3—6. Corollary.—The fate of an abotise is, on the whole, preferable to that of him who lives without enjoying life.

 7—9. Third proof.—Men's insatiableness.
 10, 11. General conclusion from the first and second propositions.

PROPOSITION III.—Ch. iv. ver. 12.

- Chap. Ver.
 vii. 1, &c. First proof.—Wrong estimation of things.
A digression, intended like that ver. 1—9, to prevent any misconstruction of the preceding observations; and containing several advices, together with a strong commendation of him who gives them, in order to enforce the observation of the rules he lays down.
 9—12. First advice.—Do not blame Providence.
 13. Second advice.—Do not judge of Providence.
 14, 15. Third advice.—Submit to Providence.
 16—20. Fourth advice.—Avoid excesses.
 21, 22. Fifth advice.—Do not heed idle reports.
 23—25. Commendation of the foregoing advices from the author's application of every thing: and, especially,
 26—29. i. Wickedness and ignorance.

- Chap. Ver.
 viii. 1—8. ii. Wisdom.
Second proof.—Anticipated judgments;
 9—14. i. That sin shall go unpunished, because it is so in this world.
 ix. 15—6. ii. That life is preferable to death.
 7—9. First corollary.—Earthly enjoyments are not criminal.
 10. Second corollary.—We must make a proper use of our faculties.
 11—15. Third proof.—Judgments that are seemingly right, but entirely false.
 16, &c. Fourth proof.—Little regard paid to wisdom.
 16. i. Past services are forgotten.
 ii. The least fault is noticed.
 x. 5—19. iii. Favour gets what is due to merit.
 20. A caution, to prevent the abuse of the preceding remarks.

PRACTICAL INFERENCES.

- Chap. ver.
 xi. 1—4. i. From the first PROPOSITION.—We must give to earthly goods that stability of which they are capable.
 5, 6. ii. From the first and second PROPOSITIONS.—We must, in all our conduct, conform to the design of Providence, and leave the success to God.

- Chap. Ver.
 xii. 7, 8. iii. From the three PROPOSITIONS, but especially from the third, we must seek for happiness beyond the grave.
 9—12. Commendation of the work, from several considerations.
 13, 14. CONCLUSION of the whole."

This is the whole of Mr. Desvœux's analysis; and I place it here, that the Reader, who may approve of the plan, may keep it in view, while he is passing through the Book. For my own part, I doubt whether the author made any such technical arrangement.

The three propositions which Mr. Desvœux lays down, and which are so essential to the interpretation he gives of the Book, would have been expressly laid down by the inspired writer, had he intended such: but they appear no where in it; and Mr. D. is obliged to assume or gather them from the general scope of the work. However, on his plan, he has certainly made a number of judicious observations on different passages, though his translations are generally too bold; and seldom well supported by the original text.

In 1778, was published "Choheloth, or the Royal Preacher, a poetical Paraphrase of the Book of Ecclesiastes. Most humbly inscribed to the King." 4to. There is no name to this work. The late Rev. John Wesley gives the following account of the work and its author in his Journals:—

"Monday, Feb. 8, 1768. I met with a surprising poem, intituled Choheloth, or the Preacher: it is a paraphrase in tolerable verse, on the Book of Ecclesiastes. I really think the author of it, (a Turkey merchant) understands both the difficult expressions, and the connexion of the whole, better than any other, either ancient or modern writer, whom I have seen. He was at Lisbon during the great earthquake, just then sitting in his night gown and slippers. Before he could dress himself, part of the house he was in fell, and blocked him up. By this means his life was saved; for all who had run out were dashed to pieces by the falling houses."

Mr. Wesley had certainly read this book in 1763; but it does not appear to have been printed till ten years after! How can we account for this? I know of no way, but one of these two:—1. Either there was a second edition, or a second title; which I have not been able to ascertain: or, 2. Mr. W. read the work in MS. He seems to have known the author well: but did not like to tell his name. About the year 1739 that eminent man recommended this work to me; and told me several particulars relative to it, which have escaped my memory. I procured the book the first opportunity, and read it with great satisfaction: and from it derived no small portion of information. Having now examined it anew, I can most cordially subscribe to Mr. Wesley's opinion. I really believe that the Author understood both the difficult expressions, and the connexion of the whole, better than any other writer, whether ancient or modern, at least known to me. Had it comported with my plan, I should have thought a reprint of his work, with the text (which he does not insert) and a few philological notes, would have been quite sufficient to have given my readers a safe and general view of the whole work and its design: though I can by no means adopt the author's hypothesis, that the Book was written by Solomon after he was restored from his grievous apostasy. This is an assumption that never was proved, and never can be.

From the Preface to this work I have selected some general observations which I consider to be important, and subjoin to this Introduction; and what I borrow from the work itself I mark with a C, not knowing the author's name. Of the authenticity of the Book of Ecclesiastes I have no doubt: but I must say, the language and style puzzle me not a little. Chaldaisms and Syriacisms are certainly frequent in it, and not a few Chaldaic words and terminations; and the style is such as may be seen in those writers who lived at or after the Captivity. If these can be reconciled with the age of Solomon, I have no objection : but the attempts that have been made to deny this, and overthrow the evidence, are in my view often trifling, and generally ineffectual. That Solomon, son of David, might have been author of the whole matter of this, and a subsequent writer put it in his own language, is a possible case : and were this to be allowed, it would solve all difficulties. Let us place the supposition thus : Solomon said all these things, and they are highly worthy of his wisdom ; and a Divine writer, after his time, who does not mention his name, gives us a faithful version of the whole in his own language.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

On other subjects relative to this Book the author of Choheloth shall speak for me.

"I. Not to perplex our readers with the various expositions of the word Choheloth, the title of this Book in the original ; (for, in truth, we can find none better or more significant than that commonly received, viz. Ecclesiastes, or the Preacher ;) let us now come to the book itself. Nothing can be more interesting than the subject it treats of, to wit, the chief or sovereign good, which man, as a rational and accountable being, should here propose to himself. Every human creature, it is certain, naturally aims at happiness : but though all apply themselves with equal ardour to this desirable end, yet such is the violence of passion, and want of reflection in the generality of mankind, that the means they use for obtaining it, instead of conducting them to the safe and direct road, only serve to mislead and bewilder them in the dark and intricate labyrinths where it is impossible to find what they seek for. Now as it was absolutely necessary to convince such men of the vanity of their pursuits, in order to induce them to turn back into the right way, Solomon shews, in the first place, what is not happiness, and then what really is. Like a skillful physician, he searches deeply into the latent cause of the malady, and then prescribes a radical cure.

"II. In the former disquisition, he enumerates all those particulars which mankind are most apt to fix their hearts upon ; and shews from his own dear-bought experience, and the transient and unsatisfactory nature of the things themselves, that no such thing as solid felicity is to be found in any of them. What he asserts on this head carries with it the greater weight, as no man upon earth was ever better qualified to speak decisively on such a subject, considering the opportunities he had of enjoying to the utmost all that this world affords. After having thus cleared away the obstacles to happiness, he enters on the main point, which is to direct us how and where it may be found. Thus he affirms at the conclusion of the Book, where he recapitulates the sum and substance of the sermon, as some not improperly have styled it, consists in a religious and virtuous life, with which, as he frequently intimates, a man in the lowest circumstances may be happy, and without which one in the highest must be miserable. As the whole Book tends to this single point ; so, in discussing thereof, many excellent observations are interspersed, relating to the various duties of life, from the highest to the lowest station ; the advantages resulting even from poverty ; the genuine use of riches, and extreme folly of abusing them ; the unequal dispensations of Divine Providence ; the immortality of the human soul ; and great day of final retribution. All these noble and important subjects are treated of in such a style and manner as nothing among the ancients can parallel.

"We have here given the genuine character of this inestimable piece ; yet such has been the ignorance, inattention, or depravity, of some persons, that it would be hard to find an instance of any thing written on so serious and interesting a subject, which has been so grossly misrepresented. How often has a handle been taken from certain passages, ill understood, and worse applied, to patrenize libertinism, by such as pretend to judge of the whole from a single sentence, independent of the rest, without paying the least regard to the general scope or design ! According to which rule the most pious discourse that ever was written may be perverted to Atheism. Some fanatics have fallen into the contrary extreme ; for, on reading that all here below was vanity, they have been so wrong-headed, as to condemn every thing as evil in itself. This world, according to them, cannot be too bitterly inveighed against ; and man has nothing else to do with it, but to spend his days in sighing and mourning. But it is evident that nothing could be further from the Preacher's intention ; for notwithstanding he speaks so feelingly of the instability and unsatisfactory nature of all subinary things, and the vanity of human cares, schemes, and contrivances ; yet, lest any one should mistake his meaning, he advises every man, at the same time, to reap the fruit of his honest labours, and take the comfort of what he possesses with a sober freedom and a cheerful spirit. Not to harass and disturb his mind with anxious cares and restless solicitudes about future events ; but to pass the short space which heaven has allotted him here, as pleasantly as his station will admit, with a quiet conscience. He does not condemn the things themselves, such as science, prudence, mirth, riches, honours, &c. ; but only their abuse, that is, the useless studies, unreasonable pursuits, and immoderate desires, of those who pervert God's blessings to their own destruction.

"On this head Solomon gives his sentiments, not only as a divine and philosopher, but like one thoroughly acquainted with the foibles of the human heart. It was not his design to drive people out of the world, or to make them live wretchedly in it : but only that they should think, and act, like rational creatures ; or, in other words, be induced to consult their own happiness.

"There is nothing in the whole body of Pagan philosophy so elevated and magnificent, as what some have written on the important subject of this poem : but we find their opinions so various and contradictory, and the most plausible so blended with errors, (even those of the divine Plato not excepted) that their sublimest sentiments on the sovereign good, or ultimate happiness of man, when compared with those of the Royal Preacher, not only appear cold and languid, but always leave the mind unsatisfied and restless. We are lost in a pompous flow of words ; and dazzled, but not illuminated. One sect, by confining happiness to sensual pleasures, so greatly slackened the cord, as to render it wholly useless : another, by their too austere and rigid maxims, stretched it so tight, that it snapped asunder ; though the experience of all ages has evinced that these latter imposed both on themselves and the world, when they taught that virtue, however afflicted here, was its own reward, and sufficient of itself to render a man completely happy. Even in the brazen bull of Perillus, truth will cry out from the rack, against such fallacious teachers, and prove them liars. The extravagant figments, therefore, of the stoical apathy, no less than those of the voluptuous Epicurean, both equally vanish at the splendour of the Divine truth delivered by Solomon. He alone decides the great question in such a manner that the soul is instantly convinced ; it need seek no farther.

"III. To prevent all misapprehensions, which a slight and cursory reading of this Book is apt to raise in many persons, it will be requisite to observe two cautions : First, that Solomon, who tells us that he applied his heart not only to the search of wisdom and knowledge, but also to folly and madness, frequently speaks, not according to his own sentiments, though he proposes the thing in a naked and simple manner, designedly making use of such terms as might set the picture in a fuller and clearer light, so that we often meet with certain expressions which, unless we search into their true design, seem to have a quite different force and meaning from what the author really intended. We must, therefore, take particular care to distinguish the doubts and objections of others from Solomon's answers ; the want of attending to which has made this Book much more obscure than otherwise it would appear. Secondly, we should not judge of the entire discourse from some parts of it : since many things are pertinently said, according to the present subject, which, in themselves, and strictly taken, are far from true. In order to come at the genuine sense, we should form our opinion from the different circumstances of the matter treated of, comparing the antecedent with the consequent passages, and always considering the Preacher's real scope and design. By carefully attending to these two cautions, this Book will be seen in a very different light, from what it now appears in, to the generality of readers.

"IV. This Book, besides the figurative and proverbial expressions, to be found in no other part of the Scripture, is undoubtedly metrical ; and, consequently, the grammatization, in many places, not a little perplexed, from the frequent ellipses, abbreviations, transposition of words, and other poetical licences, allowed in all languages ; to say nothing of the carelessness or ignorance of transcribers, as appears from the variety of readings. Yet, notwithstanding we are so little acquainted with the nature of the Hebrew metre, and the propriety of certain words and phrases, which, at this vast distance of time, in a language that has been dead upwards of two thousand years, must unavoidably occasion the same difficulties and obscurities as occur in works of far less antiquity, and in languages more generally studied and better understood ; notwithstanding this, I say, a diligent and attentive observer will always find enough to recompense his trouble ; and, if he has any taste, cannot avoid being struck with the exquisite beauty and regularity of the plan.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

"V. The most judicious Commentators have remarked on this Book, that we have here a conspicuous example of that form of disputing, which was so justly admired in the soundest of the Pagan philosophers: particularly in Socrates, who, whilst others were taken up with abstruse speculations about the nature of things, and investigating the number, motions, distance, and magnitude of the stars, brought down philosophy from the upper regions, and fixed its abode on earth; that is, by teaching such precepts as served for the regulation of life and manners, by far the most useful of all sciences, as being most conducive to the welfare of society, and the general benefit of mankind. Of this we have a noble specimen in the memoirs of that ancient moralist, collected by Xenophon. It is, I think, beyond all contradiction, that no one ever made deeper researches into nature, or had made so great a progress in every branch of science, both speculative and experimental. But what, after all, was the result of his inquiries? A thorough conviction of the utility of such studies, and how little they conduce towards the obtaining that peace and tranquillity of mind wherein true happiness consists. He applied himself, therefore, to that study which might produce a real and lasting advantage, namely, to render men wise to some purpose; that is, truly virtuous. The manner of his treating this important subject bears some resemblance to that of the celebrated Greek moralist. He does not give us a long roll of dry formal precepts, with which the mind is soon tired: but, to confirm the truth of every thing he says, appeals not only to his own experience, but the general sense of unbiassed reason. At the same time he sets before us, in the liveliest colours, the sad effects of vice and folly; and makes use of every incentive to engage the heart to be enamoured with virtue, and pursue its own interest. Whatever he intends to inculcate is first barely proposed, and then more accurately explained and illustrated, though by gentle and almost imperceptible transitions; with this peculiarity, that there is always much more implied than expressed; insomuch that the Reader, from a slight hint given him, is left to draw such inferences as his own reflection must naturally suggest. Every thing, in short, is drawn in this admirable composition, with equal simplicity and elegance; and hath as distinguished a superiority to whatever the best Pagan philosophers have given us on the same subject, as the borrowed light of the moon is surpassed by that of the sun in his full meridian lustre; or, to use a still stronger comparison, as Solomon's knowledge of the one true God excelled the idle notion of their fictitious deities."

Some have supposed that the Book of Ecclesiastes is a poem. That some poetic lines may be found in it there is no doubt: but it has nothing in common with poetic books; nor does it exist in the hemistic form in any printed edition, or MS. yet discovered. It is plain prose, and is not susceptible of that form in which the Hebrew poetic books appear.

The author already quoted thinks that the Book of Ecclesiastes is metrical. I cannot see this: but it has what is essential to poetry, a truly dignified style; there are no mean creeping words in it, whether pure Hebrew, or borrowed from any of its dialects. They are all well chosen, nervous, and highly expressive. They are, in short, such as become the subject, and are worthy of that inspiration by which the author was guided.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. The words of the Preacher] Literally, The words of Kohaleth, son of David, king of Jerusalem. But the Targum explains it thus:—"The words of the prophecy, which Kohaleth prophesied; the same is Solomon, son of David the king, who was in Jerusalem. For when Solomon, king of Israel, saw by the spirit of prophecy that the kingdom of Rehoboam his son was about to be divided with Jeroboam, the son of Nebat; and the house of the sanctuary was about to be destroyed, and the people of Israel sent into captivity: he said in his word—Vanity of vanities is all that I have laboured, and David my father; they are altogether vanity."

The word קהלת Kohaleth, is a feminine noun, from the root קהל kahal, to collect, gather together, assemble; and means, she who assembles or collects a congregation; translated by the Septuagint, Εκκλησιας, a public speaker, a speaker in an assembly; and hence translated by us a preacher. In my old MS. Bible it is explained thus:—a talker to the people; or together cleaving.

Verse 2. Vanity of vanities] As the words are an exclamation, it would be better to translate, O vanity of vanities! Emptiness of emptiness. True substantial good is not to be found in any thing liable to change and corruption.

The author referred to in the Introduction begins his paraphrase thus:—

"O vain delin world! whose largest gifts
Thine emptiness betray, like painted clouds,
Or wat'ry bubbles; as the vapor flies,
Dispersed by lightest blast, so fleet thy joys,
And leave no trace behind! This serious truth
The royal preacher found, profound, unspoken
By all experience; with a sigh repeats
The mournful theme, that nothing here below
Can solid comfort yield: 'tis all a scene
Of vanity, beyond the power of words
To express, or thought conceive. Let every man
Survey himself, then ask, what fruit remains
Of all his fond pursuits? What has he gained,
By toiling thus for more than nature's want?
Require I? Why thus with endless projects rack'd
His heated brain, and to the labouring mind
Repose denied? Why such expense of time,
That waste away so fast, and ne'er or soon be back?
Could man his wish obtain, how short the space
For its enjoyment! No less transient here
The time of his duration, than the things
That anxiously possess'd. For, as the wind,
In search of bliss, fix'd on no solid point,
For ever fluctuates; so our little frames,
In which we glory, haste to their decline,
Nor permanent can find. The human race
Drop like autumn'd leaves, by spring revived:
One generation from the stage of life
Withdraws, another comes, and thus makes room
For that which follows. Mightiest realms decay,
Sink by degrees; and to new form'd states
Rise from their ruins. Even the earth itself,
Still object of our hopes and fears,
Shall have its period, thought to man unknown."

Verse 3. What profit hath a man] What is the sum of the real good he has gained by all his toils in life? They, in themselves, have neither made him contented nor happy.

Verse 4. One generation passeth away] Men succeed each other in unceasing generations: but the earth is still the same; it undergoes no change that leads to melioration, or greater perfection. And it will continue the same, לְעוֹלָם לְעוֹלָם, during the whole course of time; till the end of all things arrives.

Verses 5 & 6. These verses are confused by being falsely divided. The first clause of the sixth should be joined to the fifth verse.

The sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, and hasteth to his place where he ariseth; going to the south, and circulating to the north.

Verse 6. The wind is continually whirling about, and the wind returneth upon its whirlings.

It is plain, from the clause which I have restored to the fifth verse, that the author refers to the approximations of the sun to the northern and southern tropics, viz. of Cancer and Capricorn.

All the Versions agree in applying the first clause of the sixth verse to the sun, and not to the same, לְעוֹלָם לְעוֹלָם alone has mistaken the meaning. My old MS. Bible is quite correct:

The sunne riseth up, and goth down, and to his place turneth again; and there again rising, goth about to the south, and then again to the north.

The author points out two things here:—1. Day and night, marked by the appearance of the sun above the horizon; proceeding apparently from East to West; where he sinks under the horizon, and appears to be lost during the night. 2. His annual course through the twelve signs of the zodiac, when, from the equinoctial, he proceeds southward to the tropic of Capricorn; and thence turneth about towards the north, till he reaches the tropic of Cancer; and so on.

Verse 7. All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full] The reason is, nothing goes into it either by the rivers or by rain, that does not come from it: and to the place whence the rivers come, whether from the sea originally by evaporation, or immediately by rain, thither they return again; for the water exhaled from the sea by evaporation is collected in the clouds, and in rain, &c. falls upon the tops of the mountains; and, filtered through their fissures, produce streams, several of which uniting, make rivers which flow into the sea. The water is again evaporated by the sun; the vapours collected are precipitated, and being filtered through the earth, become streams, &c. as before.

Verse 8. All things are full of labour] It is impossible to calculate how much anxiety, pain, labour, and fatigue, are necessary in order to carry on the common operations of life. But an endless desire to gain, and an endless curiosity to witness a variety of results, cause men to labour on. The eye sees much; but wishes to see more. The ear hears of many things; but is curious to have the actual knowledge of them. So, desire and curiosity carry men (under the Divine providence) through all the labours and pains of life.

3 ⁴ I sought in mine heart * to give myself unto wine, (yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom,) and to lay hold on folly, till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven ⁶ all the days of their life.

4 I made me great works; I builded me houses; I planted me vineyards:

5 I made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits:

6 I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees:

7 I got me servants and maidens, and had ⁸ servants born in my house; also I had great possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me:

8 ⁹ I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces: I gat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as ¹ musical instruments, and that of all sorts.

the things of this world, but of intemperate pleasure, whose two attendants, laughter and mirth, are introduced by a beautiful prosopopœia, as two persons; and the contemptuous manner wherewith he treats them, has something remarkably striking. He tells the former to her face, that she is mad: but as to the latter, he thinks her so much beneath his notice, that he only points at her, and instantly turns his back.

Verse 3. To give myself unto wine, (yet acquainting (כִּי נִוְנֵג, "guiding") mine heart with wisdom.) I did not run into extremes, as when I gave up myself to mirth and pleasure. There, I threw off all restraint; here, I took the middle course, to see whether a moderate enjoyment of the things of the world might not produce that happiness which I supposed man was created to enjoy here below.

Verse 4. I builded me houses] Palace after palace; the house of the forest of Lebanon, 1 Kings vii. 1, &c.—a house for the queen;—the Temple, &c. 2 Chron. viii. 3, &c. 1 Kings ix. 19, &c. besides many other buildings of various kinds.

Verse 5. I made me gardens and orchards] פִּרְדֵּיִם paradisim, paradises. I doubt much whether this be an original Hebrew word. פִּרְדֵּיִם ferdoos, is found in the Persian and Arabic; and signifies a pleasant garden, a vineyard. Hence our word paradis, a place full of delights. How well Solomon was qualified to form gardens, orchards, vineyards, conservatories, &c. may be at once conceived when we recollect his knowledge of natural history; and that he wrote treatises on vegetables and their properties, from the cedar to the hyssop.

Verse 6. Pools of water] Tanks and reservoirs. To water therewith the wood] Aqueducts to lead the water from the tanks to different parts.

Verse 7. Servants and maidens] For my works, fields, folds, and various domestic labours.

Servants born in my house] Besides those hired from without, he had married couples in the precincts of his grounds, palaces, &c. who, when their children grew up, got them employment with themselves.

Great and small cattle] Oxen, neat, horses, asses, mules, camels, and such like; with sheep and goats. And multitudes of most of these he needed, when we are told that his household consumed daily ten stall-fed oxen, with twenty from the pastures, with a hundred sheep; besides harts, roebucks, fallow deer, fatted fowls, and other kinds of provision. Probably, such another court for splendour and expense was not in the universe.

Verse 8. The peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces] 1. The taxes levied off his subjects. 2. The tribute given by the neighbouring potentates. Both these make the peculiar treasure of kings; taxes and tribute.

Men-singers and women-singers] This includes all instrumental and vocal performers. These may be called the delights of the sons of men.

Musical instruments, and that of all sorts.] For these seven words, there are only two in the original, מְנַחֵם shidah ve-shiddah. These words are acknowledged on all hands to be utterly unknown, if not utterly inexplicable. Some render them male and female captives; others, cups and flacons; others, cooks and confectioners; others, a species of musical compositions derived from a celebrated Phœnician woman named Sido, to whom Sanchoiatho attributes the invention of music. Others, with 9 So ² I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me.

10 And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them, I withheld not my heart from any joy; for my heart rejoiced in all my labour: and ¹ this was my portion of all my labour.

11 Then I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do: and, behold, all was ² vanity and vexation of spirit, and there was no profit under the sun.

12 And I turned myself to behold wisdom, ³ and madness and folly: for what can the man do that cometh after the king? ⁴ even that which hath been already done.

13 Then I saw ⁵ that wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness.

14 ⁶ The wise man's eyes are in his head; but the fool walketh in darkness: and I myself perceived also that ⁷ one event happeneth to them all.

more probability, wises and concubines; of the former of whom Solomon had seven hundred, and of the latter three hundred; and if these be not spoken of here, they are not mentioned at all, whereas music, and every thing connected with that, was referred to before. The author of Choheloth paraphrases thus:

To complete
This scene of earthly bliss, how large a span
Of that which most delights the sons of men
Fell to my portion! What a lovely train
Of blooming beauties, by convulsed lies,
By purchase, or the gift of neighbouring kings,
Or spoils of war, made mine.

If, after all this, I may add one conjecture, it shall be this: מִדְּבַר sadeh, in Hebrew, is a field, and occurs in various parts of the Bible. מִדְּבַר siddoth, is fields, 1 Sam. xxii. 7, the points in such a case are of no consideration. May not Solomon be speaking here of farms upon farms, or estates upon estates, which he had added by purchase to the common regal portion? We know that a king of Israel (Ahab) once desired to have a vineyard (Naboth's) which he could not obtain: now, Solomon having spoken before of gardens, orchards, and vineyards,—why may he not here speak of supernumerary estates?—Perhaps every man who critically examines the place will be dissatisfied, and have a conjecture of his own.

Verse 10. I withheld not my heart from any joy] He had every means of gratification: he could desire nothing that was not within his reach; and whatever he wished he took care to possess.

Verse 11. And, behold, all was vanity] Emptiness and insufficiency in itself.

And vexation of spirit] Because it promised the good I wished for, but did not, could not, perform the promise; and left my soul discontented and chagrined.

Verse 12. For what can the man do that cometh after the king] I have examined every thing proposed by science, by maddening pleasure, and by more refined and regulated mirth. I seized on the whole, and used them to the uttermost: and so far, as none ever shall be able to exceed me; as none can, in the course of things, ever have such powers and means of gratification.

Verse 13. Then I saw that wisdom excelleth folly] Though in none of these pursuits I found the supreme good, the happiness my soul longed after; yet I could easily perceive that wisdom excelled the others, as far as light excels darkness. And he immediately subjoins the reasons.

Verse 14. The wise man's eyes, &c.] Well expressed by Choheloth:—

"The wise are circumspect, maturely weigh
The consequence of what they undertake,
Good ends propose, and fit means apply
To accomplish their designs."

But the fool walketh in darkness]

"But fools, deprived
Of reason's guidance, or in darkness grope,
Or, unreflecting like a frantic man,
Who on the brink of some steep precipice
Attempts to run a race with headless sheep,
Rush to their own perdition."

One event happeneth to them all.]

"Though wide the difference,—what has human pride
To home? Even I myself too plainly saw,
That one event to both alike befalls;
To various accidents of life exposed,
Whose distinction nor can wisdom serve
From dangers, disappointments, grief, and pain."

15 Then said I in my heart, As it happeneth to the fool, so it happeneth even to me; and why was I then more wise? Then I said in my heart, that this also is vanity.

16 For there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; seeing that which now is in the days to come shall all be forgotten. And how dieth the wise man? as the fool.

17 Therefore I hated life: because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: for all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

18 Yea, I hated all my labour which I had taken under the sun: because I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me.

19 And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have showed myself wise under the sun. This is also vanity.

20 Therefore I went about to cause my heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun.

21 For there is a man whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity; yet to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he leave it for his portion. This also is vanity and a great evil.

22 For what hath man of all his labour, and of the vexation of his heart, wherein he hath laboured under the sun?

23 For all his days are sorrows, and his travail grief; yea, his heart taketh not rest in the night. This is also vanity.

24 There is nothing better for a man than that he should eat and drink, and that he should make his soul enjoy good in his labour. This also I saw, that it was from the hand of God.

25 For who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?

26 For God giveth to a man that is good in his sight wisdom, and knowledge, and joy; but to the sinner he giveth travail, to gather and to heap up, that he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

CHAPTER III.

Every thing has its time and season, 1-3. Men are satisfied with labour, 8, 10. Every thing is beautiful in its season, 11. Men should enjoy thankfully the gifts of God, 12, 13. What God does is for ever, 14. There is nothing new, 15. The corruption of judgment: but the judgments of God are right, 16, 17. Man is foolish, and soon and brutes die in like manner, 18-22. Man may enjoy the fruit of his own labours, 23.

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven: 1-4.

sense of this passage is well expressed in the following lines:—

“For these disorders wouldst thou find a cure, Such ours as human frailty will admit? Drive from these anxious cares; let reason curb Thy passions; and with cheerful bears enjoy That little which the world affords: for here, Though vain the hope of perfect happiness, Yet still the road of life, rugged at best, Is not without its comforts.— Wouldst thou their sweetest taste, look up to heaven, And praise th’ all bounteous Donor, who bestows The power to use aright.”

Verse 25. For who can eat—more than I? But instead of כחל חמל chuls mimenu, more than I, חמל חמל mimenu, without him, is the reading of eight of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., as also of the Septuagint, Syriac and Arabic.

“For who maye eate, drynke, or bryng anythings to passe without him?”—COVERDALE.

I believe this to be the true reading. No one can have a true relish of the comforts of life without the Divine blessing. This reading connects all the sentences. This also I saw, that it was from the hand of God;—for who can eat, and who can relish, without him? For God giveth to man that is good. It is through His liberality that we have any thing to eat or drink; and it is only through His blessing that we can derive good from the use of what we possess.

Verse 26. Giveth—wisdom, and knowledge, and joy] 1. God gives wisdom; the knowledge of Himself, light to direct in the way of salvation. 2. Knowledge; understanding to discern the operation of His hand; experimental acquaintance with Himself in the dispensing of His grace, and the gifts of His Spirit. 3. Joy; a hundred days of ease for one day of pain: one thousand enjoyments for one privation; and to them that believe, peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost.

But to the sinner he giveth travail] He has a life of labour, disappointment, and distress: for, because he is an enemy to God, he travails in pain all his days; and, as the wise man says elsewhere, the wealth of the wicked is laid up for the just.

NOTES ON CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose.] Two general remarks may be made on the eight first verses of this Chapter. 1. God by his providence governs the world, and has determined particular things and operations to particular times. In those times such things may be done with propriety and success: but if we neglect the appointed seasons, we sin against this Providence, and become the authors of our own distresses. 2. God has given to man that portion of duration called TIME; the space in which all the operations of nature, of animals, and intellectual beings, are carried on: but while nature is steady in its course, and animals faithful to their instincts, man devotes it to a great variety of purposes; but very frequently to that for which God never made time, space, or opportunity. And all we can say, when an evil deed is done, there was a time in which it was done, though God never made it for that purpose.

Verse 15. As it happeneth to the fool] Literally, according as the event is to the fool, it happens to me, even me. There is a peculiar beauty and emphasis in the repetition of me. Having pointed out the advantages that wisdom has over folly, he takes this opportunity of reminding us of the danger of trusting too much to it, by shewing that it is equally subject to the common accidents of life; and, therefore, incapable of making us completely happy. Having given his sentiments on this point in general terms, he proceeds to those particular instances wherein human prudence chiefly exerts itself; and shews how egregiously it is mistaken in every one of them.—C.

Verse 16. There is no remembrance] The wise and the fool are equally subject to death; and, in most instances, they are equally forgotten. Time sweeps away all remembrances, except the very few out of millions which are preserved for a while in the page of history.

Verse 17. Therefore I hated life] חמלתי את החיים, the lives; both of the wise, the madman, and the fool. Also, all the stages of life; the child, the man, the sage. There was nothing in it worth pursuing; no period worth re-living; and no hope, that if this were possible, I could again be more successful.

Verse 18. I hated all my labour] 1. Because it had not answered the end for which it was instituted. 2. Because I could enjoy the fruits of it but a short time. 3. Because I must leave it to others; and know not whether a wise man, a knave, or a fool, may possess it.

Verse 19. A wise man or a fool] Alas! Solomon, the wisest of all men, made the worst use of his wisdom; had seven hundred wives, and three hundred concubines; left but one son behind him, to possess his estates and his throne; and that one was the silliest of fools!

Verse 20. I went about to cause my heart to despair] What makes all worse, there is no remedy. It is impossible in the present state of things to prevent these evils.

Verse 21. For there is a man] Does he not allude to himself? As if he had said,—“I have laboured to cultivate my mind in wisdom and in science; in knowledge of men and things; and have endeavoured to establish equity, and dispense justice. And now I find I shall leave all the fruits of my labour to a man that hath not laboured therein, and consequently cannot prize what I have wrought.” Does he not refer to his son Rehoboam?

Verse 22. For what hath man of all his labour] Labour of body, disappointment of hope, and vexation of heart, have been all my portion.

Verse 23. His days are sorrows] What a picture of human life, where the heart is not filled with the peace and love of God! All his days are sorrows; all his labours, griefs; all his nights, restless; for he has no portion but merely what earth can give; and that is embittered by the labour of acquisition, and the disappointment in the using.

This is also vanity] Emptiness of good, and substantial misery.

Verse 24. There is nothing better for a man] The 19 ^v For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath; so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast: for all is ^w vanity.

same roof. Such a fact as this may at least illustrate the doctrine. An intelligent shepherd, whom he met upon the mountains, is said to have exhibited the herb, and the illustration, while discoursing on certain difficulties in the Christian faith. When a child, I heard a learned man relate this fact.

Verse 15. That which hath been is now] God governs the world now, as He has governed it from the beginning; and the revolutions and operations of nature are the same now, that they have been from the beginning. What we see now, is the same as has been seen by those before us.

And God requireth that which is past.] i. e. that it may return again in its proper order. The heavens themselves, taking in their great revolutions, shew the same phenomena. Even comets are supposed to have their revolutions, though some of them are hundreds of years in going round their orbits.

But, in the economy of grace, does not God require that which is past? Whatever blessing or influence God gives to the soul of man, He intends shall remain and increase; and it will, if man be faithful. Reader, canst thou produce all the secret inspirations of His Spirit?—all the drawings of His love?—His pardoning mercy?—His sanctifying grace?—the heavenly mindedness produced in thee?—thy holy zeal?—thy spirit of prayer?—thy tender conscience?—the witness of the Spirit?—which thou didst once receive and enjoy?—WHERE are they?—God requireth that which is past.

Verse 16. The place of judgment, that wickedness was there] The abuse of power, and the perversion of judgment, have been justly complained of in every age of the world. The following paraphrase is good:—

^a But what enjoyment can our labours yield,
When even the ransomed purchased by heaven
To cure disorders proves our deadliest base?
When God's vicarages destined to protect
The weak from insolence of power, to guard
These lives and fortunes, impious robbers turn,
And, or by force or fraud, deprive of both?—
To what avails shall the injured fly
From her tribunal, where perverted law
Accuses the guilty, till insouciant conscience?^b—C.

Verse 17. For there is a time there for every purpose] Man has his time here below, and God shall have his time above. At His throne the judge shall be rejudged, and iniquity for ever close her mouth.

Verse 18. That they might see that they themselves are beasts.] The author of Choheth has given a correct view of this difficult verse, by a proper translation:—I said in my heart, reflecting on the state of the sons of men, O! that God would enlighten them, and make them see that even they themselves are like beasts. These words are to be referred to those in authority who abused their power; particularly to the corrupt magistrats mentioned above.

Verse 19. For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts] From the present comparison of great men to beasts, the author takes occasion to enforce the subject, by mentioning the state of mankind in general, with respect to the mortality of their bodies; and then, by an easy transition, touches in the next verse on the point which is of such infinite consequence to religion.

As the one dieth, so dieth the other] Animal life is the same both in the man and in the beast.

They have all one breath] They respire in the same way; and, when they cease to respire, animal life becomes extinct.

Befalleth beasts—This is wanting in six of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.

20 All go unto one place; ^x all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again.

21 ^y Who knoweth the spirit of man that goeth upward, and the spirit of the beast that goeth downward to the earth?

22 ^z Wherefore I perceive that there is nothing better, than that a man should rejoice in his own works; for ^a that is his portion: ^b for who shall bring him to see what shall be after him?

CHAPTER IV.

The vanity of life increased by oppression, 1.—3. By envy, 4. By idleness, 5. The misery of a solitary life, and the advantages of society, 6.—12. A poor and wise child better than an old foolish king, 13. The uncertainty of popular favour, 14.—18.

SO I returned, and considered all the ^coppressions that are done under the sun: and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comfort; and on the ^dside of their oppressors there was power; but they had no comfort.

Verse 20. All go unto one place]

^a Man was born
To die, nor aught exceeds in this respect
The vilest brute. Both transient, frail, and vain,
Draw the same breath; alike grow old, decay,
And then expire: both to one grave descend.
There blended lie, to native dust return'd.—C.

Verse 21. Who knoweth the spirit of man] I think the meaning of this important verse is well taken by the above able writer.

^a The nobler part of man, 'tis true, survives
The frail corporeal frame:—but who regards
The difference? Those who live like beasts, as such Would die, and be no more, if their own fate
Depended on themselves. Who once reflects,
Amidst his revels, that the human soul,
Of might celestial, mounts aloft,
While that of brutes to earth shall downward go.^b

The word רוּחַ ruach, which is used in this and the nineteenth verse, has two significations, breath and spirit. It signifies spirit, or an incorporeal substance, as distinguished from flesh, or a corporeal one, 1 Kings xxii. 21, 22, and Isa. xxxi. 3. And it signifies the spirit or soul of man. Psa. xxxi. 6. Isa. lviii. 16, and in this Book, chap. xii. 7, and in many other places. In this Book it is used also to signify the breath, spirit, or soul, of a beast. While it was said in ver 19, they have all one breath, i. e. the man and the beast lives the same kind of animal life; in this verse, a proper distinction is made between the רוּחַ ruach, soul of man; and the רוּחַ ruach, or soul of the beast; the one goeth upwards, the other goeth downwards. The literal translation of these important words is this: Who considereth the רוּחַ ruach, immortal spirit of the sons of Adam, which ascendeth; it is from above, רוחו מן הי למדלה; and the spirit or breath of the cattle, which descendeth; it is downwards unto the earth, i. e. it tends to the earth only. This place gives no countenance to the materiality of the soul; and yet it is the strongest hold which the cold and fruitless materialist can resort.

Solomon most evidently makes an essential difference between the human soul and that of brutes. Both have souls, but of different natures: the soul of man was made for God, and to God it shall return: God is its portion; and, when a holy soul leaves the body, it goes to Paradise. The soul of the beast was made to deride its happiness from this lower world.—Brutes shall have a resurrection, and have an endless enjoyment in a new earth. The body of man shall arise, and join his soul that is already above; and both enjoy final blessedness in the enjoyment of God. That Solomon did not believe they had the same kind of spirit, and the same final lot as some materialists and infidels say, is evident from chap. xii. 7. The spirit shall return to God, who gave it.

Verse 22. A man should rejoice in his own works] Do not turn God's blessings into sin, by perverseness and complaining; make the best of life. God will sweeten its bitterness to you, if you be faithful. Remember this is the state to prepare for glory; and the evils of life may be so sanctified to you, as to work for your good. Though even wretched without, you may be happy within; for God can make all grace to abound towards you. You may be happy if you please; cry to God, who never rejects the prayer of the humble; and gives His Holy Spirit to all them that ask Him.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. Considered all the oppressions] אָשָׁחַ ashakim, signifies any kind of injury which a man can receive in his person, his property, or his good fame.

On the side of their oppressors there was power] And, therefore, neither protection nor comfort for the oppressed.

2 * Wherefore I praised the dead which are already dead more than the living which are yet alive.

3 † Yea, better is he than both they, which hath not yet been, who hath not seen the evil work that is done under the sun.

4 Again, I considered all travail, and * every right work, that † for this a man is envied of his neighbour. This is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

5 The fool * foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own flesh.

6 † Better is a handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit.

7 Then I returned, and I saw vanity under the sun.

8 There is one alone, and there is not a second; yea, he hath neither child nor brother: yet is there no end of all his labour; neither is his eye satisfied with riches; † neither saith he, For whom do I labour, and bereave my soul of good? This is also vanity, yea, it is a sore travail.

9 Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labour.

10 For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but wo to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up.

c Job 37, &c.—d Job 31, 16, 21. Ch. 6, 2.—e Heb. all the righteousness of work. f Heb. this is the envy of a man from his neighbour.—g Prov. 6, 10, & 24, 28. h Prov. 15, 17, & 18, 18.—i Prov. 17, 22. j John 2, 6.

Verse 2. Wherefore I praised the dead] I considered those happy who had escaped from the pilgrimage of life to the place where the wicked cease from troubling, and where the weary are at rest.

Verse 3. Which hath not yet been] Better never to have been born into the world, than to have seen and suffered so many miseries.

Verse 4. For this a man is envied] It is not by injustice and wrong only, that men suffer, but through envy also. For if a man act uprightly and proper in the world, he soon becomes the object of his neighbours' envy and calumny too. Therefore, the encouragement to do good, to act an upright part, is very little. This constitutes a part of the vain and empty system of human life.

Verse 5. The fool foldeth his hands] After all, without labour and industry, no man can get any comfort in life; and he who gives way to idleness is the veriest of fools.

Verse 6. Better is a handful with quietness] These may be the words of a slothful man, and spoken in vindication of his idleness; as if he had said, "Every man who labours and amasses property, is the object of envy; and is marked by the oppressor as a subject for spoil; better, therefore, to act as I do; gain little and have little, and enjoy my handful with quietness." Or, the words may contain Solomon's reflection on the subject.

Verse 8. There is one alone, and there is not a second] Here covetousness and avarice are characterized. The man, who is the centre of his own existence, has neither wife, child, nor legal heir; and yet is as intent on getting money as if he had the largest family to provide for: nor does he only labour with intense application, but he even refuses himself the comforts of life out of his own gains! This is not only vanity, the excess of foolishness; but it is also sore travail.

Verse 9. Two are better than one] Married life is infinitely to be preferred to this kind of life, for the very reasons alleged below, and which require no explanation.

Verse 13. Better is a poor and wise child] The Targum applies this to Abraham. "Abraham was a poor child of only three years of age; but he had the spirit of prophecy; and he refused to worship the idols which the old foolish king, Nimrod, had set up; therefore, Nimrod cast him into a furnace of fire. But the Lord worked a miracle, and delivered him. Yet there was no knowledge in Nimrod, and he would not be admonished." The Targum proceeds:—

Verse 14. For out of prison he cometh to reign] "Then Abraham left the country of the idolaters, where he had been imprisoned, and came and reigned over the land of Canaan; and Nimrod became poor in this world." This is the fact to which the ancient Rabbins supposed Solomon to allude.

Verse 15. With the second child that shall stand up] The Targum applies this to the case of Jeroboam and Rehoboam. History affords many instances of mean persons raised to sovereign authority; and of kings being reduced to the meanest offices, and to a morsel of bread.

11 Again, if two lie together, then they have heat: but how can one be warm alone?

12 And if one prevail against him, two shall withstand him; and a threefold cord is not quickly broken.

13 Better is a poor and a wise child, than an old and foolish king, † who will no more be admonished.

14 For out of prison he cometh to reign: whereas also he that is born in his kingdom becometh poor.

15 I considered all the living which walk under the sun, with the † second child that shall stand up in his stead.

16 There is no end of all the people, even of all that have been before them: they also that come after shall not rejoice in him. Surely this also is † vanity and vexation of spirit.

CHAPTER V.

The reverence to be used in attending Divine worship, 1.—2. We should be faithful to our engagements, 4.—7. The oppression of the innocent, 8. The king dependent on the produce of the soil, 9. Against covetousness, 10, 11. The peace of the honest labourer, 12. The evil effect of riches, 13, 14. Man cannot carry his property to the grave, 15.—17. We should thankfully enjoy the blessings of God, 18.—20.

KEEP * thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, † than to give the sacrifice of fools: for they consider not that they do evil.

i Ps. 26, 6.—j Heb. who knoweth not to be admonished.—k 1 Kings 11, 22. n Ch. 1, 2, 14.—o See Exod. 2, & Isa. 1, 12, &c.—p 1 Sam. 15, 22. Ps. 50, 8. Prov. 15, 3 & 21, 27. Hec. 6, 6.

Agrippa himself mounted the throne of Israel after having been long in prison.—See Josephus, Ant. lib. c. xviii. §. This the heathens attributed to Fortune.

Si fortuna volet, fas de throno conati;

Si volet hoc cœdem, fas de consilio throni;

Juv. Sat. vii. ver. 197.

Though I have given what the Jews suppose to be an allusion in these verses, yet the Reader may doubt whether the reference be correct. There is a case implied, whether from fact or assumption, I cannot say: but it seems to be this:

A king who had abused the authority vested in him, by oppressing the people, had a son whose prudent conduct promised much comfort to the nation, when he should come to the throne. The father seeing the popular wish, and becoming jealous of his son, shut him up in prison. In the interim, the old king either dies, or is deposed; and the son is brought out of prison, and placed on the throne. Then (ver. 15, 16) multitudes of the people flock to him, and begin to walk under the sun, i. e. the prosperous state to which the nation is raised by its redemption from the former tyranny. However, the wise man insinuates that this sunshine will not last long. The young king feeling the reins in his own hands, and being surrounded by those whose interest it was to flatter, in order to obtain and continue in court favour; he also becomes corrupted, so that those who come after shall have no cause of rejoicing in him. This appears to be the case; and similar cases have frequently occurred, not only in Asiatic, but also in European history. I have, in another place, referred to the Rushn Achter, who was brought out of prison, and set upon the throne of Hindoostan. This is expressed in the following elegant Persian couplet, where his fortune is represented as similar to that of the patriarch Joseph:—

روشن اختر برد اکنون ماه شد
یوسف از زندان بر آمد شاه شد

"The bright star is now become a moon:
Joseph is taken out of prison, and become a king."

Rushn Achter signifies a bright or splendid star.

Verse 16. There is no end of all the people] This is supposed to refer to the multitudes of people who hail the advent and accession of a new sovereign; for, as Suetonius remarks, A plerisque adorant solem orientem, "Most people adore the rising sun." But when the new king becomes old, very few regard him; and perhaps he lives long enough to be as much despised by the very persons who before were ready to worship him. This is also a miserable vanity. Thus the blooming heir—

"Shall feel the end reverse: honoured awhile;
Then, like his sire, esteem'd, abhor'd, forgot."—C.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. Keep thy foot] This verse the Hebrews, and all the Versions, join to the preceding Chapter.

Solomon having before intimated, though very briefly,

2 Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God: for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth: therefore let thy words be few.

3 For a dream cometh through the multitude of business; and a fool's voice is known by multitude of words.

4 When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; for he hath no pleasure in fools: pay that which thou hast vowed.

5 Better is it that thou shouldst not vow, than that thou shouldst vow and not pay.

6 Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin; neither say thou before the angel, that it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and destroy the work of thine hands?

7 For in the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities: but fear thou God.

8 If thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not at the matter: for he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and there be higher than they.

9 Moreover the profit of the earth is for all; the king himself is served by the field.

c Or, word.—d Prov. 10. 19. Matt. 6. 7.—e Prov. 10. 19.—f Numb. 30. 2. Deut. 23. 21, 22, 23. Psa. 56. 14. & 76. 11.—g Prov. 66. 12, 14.—h Prov. 23. 23. Acts 5. 4. 1 Cor. 11. 10.

that the only cure against human vanity is a due sense of religion; now enters more largely on this important subject, and gives some excellent directions with regard to the right performance of Divine service, the nature of vocal and mental prayer, the danger of rash vows, &c.—C.

The whole verse might be more literally translated thus:—
"Guard thy steps as thou art going to the house of God; and approach to hearken, and not to give the sacrifice of fools, for none of them have knowledge about doing evil." They offer gifts for their sins, and do not turn from their evil works; for they know not (they distinguish not,) between good and evil.—See the Chaldee.

Verse 2. Be not rash with thy mouth] Do not speak with thy mouth;—weigh thy words,—feel deeply,—think much,—speak little.

"When ye approach His altar, on your lips be strictest guard; and let your thoughts be pure, fervent, and recollected. Thus prepared, send up the silent breathings of your souls, submissive to his will."

C.

Verse 3. For a dream cometh] That is, as dreams are generally the effect of the business in which we have been engaged during the day, so a multitude of words evidence the feeble workings of a foolish heart.

Verse 4. When thou vowest a vow] When in distress and difficulty, men are apt to promise much to God if he will relieve them; but generally forget the vow when the distress or trouble is gone by.

Verse 5. Better is it that thou shouldst not vow, &c.] We are under constant obligations to live to God;—no vow can make it more so. Yet, there may be cases in which we should bind ourselves to take up some particular cross—to perform some particular duty, to forego some particular attachment that does not tend to bring our souls nearer to God. Then, if fully determined, and strong in faith relative to the point, bind and hold fast: but if not fully, rationally, and conscientiously determined, do not suffer thy mouth to cause thy soul to sin.

Verse 6. Neither say thou before the angel, that it was an error] Nor think of saying "before the cruel angel, who shall exercise authority over thee in the judgment of the great day, that thou didst it through ignorance."—Chaldee. I believe by the angel nothing else is intended than the priest, whose business it was to take cognizance of vows and offerings.—See Lev. v. 4, 5. In Mal. ii. 7, the priest is called the angel of the Lord of hosts.

Verse 7. In dreams are divers vanities: but fear thou God] If, by the disturbed state of thy mind during the day, or by Satanic influence, thou dream of evil, do not give way to any unreasonable fears, or gloomy forebodings, of any coming mischief:—FEAR GOD. Fear neither the dream, nor its interpretation: God will take care of and protect thee. Most certainly, he that fears God, need fear nothing else. Well may an upright soul say to Satan himself,—I fear God:—and because I fear Him, I do not fear thee.

Verse 8. If thou seest the oppression of the poor] For this was a frequent case under all governments; and especially in the provinces or colonies, which, being far 10 He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase: this is also vanity.

11 When goods increase, they are increased that eat them: and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes?

12 The sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep.

13 There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.

14 But those riches perish by evil travail: and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.

15 As he came forth of his mother's womb, naked shall he return to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his labour, which he may carry away in his hand.

16 And this also is a sore evil, that in all points as he came, so shall he go: and what profit hath he that hath laboured for the wind?

17 All his days also he eateth in darkness, and he hath much sorrow and wrath with his sickness.

from the seat of government, were generally oppressed by the sovereign's deputies.

Marvel not at the matter] Yarn ha-chophets, the will, &c. of God; which permits such evils to take place: but all things shall work together for good to them that love Him.

Marvel not,
Ye righteous, if His dispensations here
Unusual seem. What though disorders reign,
He still presides, and with soothing hand
Directs the vast machine. His wisdom can
From discord harmony produce; and make Ev'n vice itself subservient to His ends.

Verse 9. The profit of the earth is for all] The earth, if properly cultivated, is capable of producing food for every living creature: and without cultivation none has a right to expect bread.

The king himself is served by the field] Without the field he cannot have supplies for his own house; and, unless agriculture flourish, the necessary expenses of the state cannot be defrayed. Thus, God joins the head and feet together; for while the peasant is protected by the king as executor of the laws, the king himself is dependent on the peasant; as the wealth of the nation is the fruit of the labourers' toil.

Verse 10. He that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver] The more he gets, the more he gets: for the saying is true,—

Credit amor incensum, quantum ipse pecunia credit.
"The love of money increases, in proportion as money itself increases."

Verse 11. When goods increase] An increase of property always brings an increase of expense, by a multitude of servants: and the owner really possesses no more, and probably enjoys much less, than he did, when every day provided its own bread, and could lay up no store for the next. But if he have more enjoyment, his cares are multiplied; and he has no kind of profit.—This also is vanity.

Verse 12. The sleep of a labouring man is sweet] His labour is healthy exercise. He is without possessions, and without cares: his sleep being undisturbed is sound and refreshing.

Verse 13. Riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt] This may be the case through various causes:—1. He may make an improper use of them, and lose his health by them. 2. He may join in an unfortunate partnership, and lose all. 3. His riches may excite the desire of the robber; and he may spoil him of his goods, and even take away his life. 4. Or, he may leave them to his son, who turns profligate, spends the whole, and ruins both his body and soul. I have seen this again and again.

Verse 14. And he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand] He has been stript of his property by unfortunate trade, or by plunderers; and he has nothing to leave to his children.

Verse 15. As he came forth] However it may be, he himself shall carry nothing with him into the eternal world. If he die worth millions, those millions are dead to him for ever: so he has had no real profit from all his labours, cares, anxieties, and vast property!

Verse 17. All his days also he eateth in darkness] Even his enjoyments are embittered by uncertainty. He 18 Behold that which I have seen: 'it' is good and comely for one to eat and to drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labour that he taketh under the sun 'all the days of his life, which God giveth him: ' for it is his portion.

19 ' Every man also to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice in his labour; this is the gift of God.

20 ' For he shall not much remember the days of his life; because God answereth him in the joy of his heart.

CHAPTER VI.

The vanity of riches without use, 1, 2. Of children and of old age without riches and enjoyment, 3-7. Man does not know what is good for himself, 8-12.

Asse 1. Olym. chapter 26. A. U. C. cir. 26. THERE 'is an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men:

2 A man to whom God hath given riches, wealth, and honour, 'so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth, 'yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it: this is vanity, and it is an evil disease.

3 If a man beget a hundred children, and live many years, so that the days of his years be many, and his soul be not filled with good, and

'also that he have no burial; I say, that 'an untimely birth is better than he.

4 For he cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness.

5 Moreover he hath not seen the sun, nor known any thing: this hath more rest than the other.

6 Yea, though he live a thousand years twice told, yet hath he seen no good: do not all go to one place?

7 'All the labour of man is for his mouth, and yet the 'appetite is not filled.

8 For what hath the wise more than the fool? what hath the poor, that knoweth to walk, before the living?

9 Better is the sight of the eyes 'than the wandering of the desire; this is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

10 That which hath been is named already, and it is known that it is man: 'neither may he contend with him that is mightier than he.

11 Seeing there be many things that increase vanity, what is man the better?

12 For who knoweth what is good for man in this life, 'all the days of his vain life which he spendeth as 'a shadow? for 'who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun?

fears for his goods: the possibility of being deprived of them fills his heart with anguish. But instead of how good, he shall eat, y^r yeak, he shall walk, is the reading of several MSS. He walks in darkness—he has no evidence of salvation. There is no ray of light from God to penetrate the gloom; and all beyond life is darkness impenetrable!

And wrath with his sickness.] His last hours are awful; for,

"Coming on long years of pleasure here, He's quite unfurnished for the work to come."

He is full of anguish at the thought of death: but the fear of it is horrible. But if he have a sense of God's wrath in his guilty conscience, what horror can be compared with his horror!

Verse 18. Behold that which I have seen] This is the result of my observations and experience. God gives every man, in the course of His providence, the necessities of life: and it is His will that he should thankfully use them.

For it is his portion] What is requisite for him in the lower world: without them his life cannot subsist; and earthly blessings are as truly the portion of his body and animal life, as the salvation of God is the portion of his soul.

Verse 20. For he shall not much remember] The person who acts in this way, extracts all the good requisite from life. He passes through things temporal so as not to lose those that are eternal.

"Calm and serene, the road of life to him, Or long or short, rugged or smooth, with thorns O'spread, or gay with flowers, is but a road. Such fare as others grateful he accepts, And smiling to his native home proceeds."—C.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VI.

Verse 2. A man to whom God hath given riches] A man may possess much earthly goods, and yet enjoy nothing of them. Possession and fruition are not necessarily joined together; and this is also among the vanities of life. It is worthy of remark, that it belongs to God as much to give the power to enjoy, as it does to give the earthly blessings. A wise heathen saw this:—

Di tibi divitiis dederunt, artemque fruendi.
Hor. Ep. 1b. i. ep. 4. ver. 7.
"The gods have given thee riches, and the art to enjoy them."

Verse 3. If a man beget a hundred children] If he have the most numerous family, and the largest possessions, and is so much attached to his riches that he grudges himself a monument; an abortion in the eye of reason is to be preferred to such a man: himself is contemptible, and his life worthless. The abortion comes in with vanity; balks expectation; departs in darkness; never opened its eyes upon the light, and its name is covered with darkness; it has no place in the family register, nor in the chronicles of Israel. This, that hath neither seen the sun, nor known any thing, is preferable to the miser, who has his coffers and granaries well furnished, should he have lived a thousand years, and had a hundred children. He has seen (possessed) no good; and he and the abortion go to one place, equally unknown, and wholly forgotten.

Verse 7. All the labour of man] This is the grand primary object of all human labour; merely to provide for the support of life by procuring things necessary. And life only exists for the sake of the soul: because man puts these things in place of spiritual good, the appetite, the intense desire after the supreme good, is not satisfied. When man learns to provide as distinctly for his soul as he does for his body, then he will begin to be happy; and may soon attain his end.

Verse 8. For what hath the wise more than the fool] They must both labour for the same end. Both depend upon the labour of themselves or others for the necessities of life. Both must eat and drink in order to live; and the rich man can no more eat two meals at a time, than he can comfortably wear two changes of raiment. The necessities of life are the same to both;—and their condition in life is nearly similar; liable to the same diseases, dissolution, and death.

Verse 9. Better is the sight of the eyes than the wandering of the desire] This is translated by the Vulgate as a sort of adage,—Melius est videre quod cupias, quam desiderare quod nescias, "It is better to see what one desires, than to covet what one knows not." It is better to enjoy the present, than to feed oneself with vain desires of the future. What we translate the wandering of desire, וַיִּשְׁתַּדַּל מֵחַקֵּץ נַפְשׁוֹ, is the travelling of the soul. What is this? Does it simply mean desire? Or is there any reference here to the state of separate spirits? It, however, shews the soul to be in a restless state, and consequently to be unhappy. If Christ dwell in the heart by faith, the soul is then at rest; and this is properly the rest of the people of God.

Verse 10. That which hath been is named already] The Hebrew of this verse might be translated,—Who is he who is? His name has been already called. And it is known that he is Adam; and that he cannot contend in judgment with him who is stronger than he.

"What is more excellent than man; yet can he not, in the law, get the victory of him that is mightier than he."—COVERDALE.

ADAM is his name; and it at once points out—1. His dignity. He was made in the image of God. 2. His fall. He sinned against his Maker, and was cast out of Paradise. And, 3. His recovery by Christ. The second man, Adam, was the Lord from heaven, and a quickening Spirit.

Verse 12. For who knoweth what is good for man in this life] Those things which we deem good are often evil. And those which we think evil are often good. So ignorant are we, that we run the greatest hazard in making a choice. It is better to leave ourselves and our concerns in the hands of the Lord, than to keep them in our own.

For who can tell a man what shall be after him.] Futurity is with God. While he lives, man wishes to know what is before him. When he is about to die, he wishes to know what will be after him. All this is vanity; to God, because He is merciful, will reveal neither.

A GOOD name is better than precious ointment; and the day of death than the day of one's birth.

2 It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart.

3 Sorrow is better than laughter: for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better.

4 The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning; but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth.

5 It is better to hear the rebuke of the wise, than for a man to hear the song of fools.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. A good name] Unsatisfactory as all sublunary things are, yet still there are some which are of great consequence; and among them a good name. The place is well paraphrased in the following verses:—

By virtuous deeds acquired, is sweetest fame Than fragrant balms, whose odours round diffused Repale the invited guests.—Well may such men Rejoice at death's approach, and bless the hours That end their tedious pilgrimage; assured That all the race of life is but a noise Can be completely blest."

Verse 2. It is better to go to the house of mourning] Birth days were generally kept with great festivity; and to these the wise man most probably refers: but, according to his maxim, the miseries of life were so many, and so oppressive, that the day of a man's death was to be preferred to the day of his birth. But, independently of the allusion, it is much more profitable to visit the house of mourning for the dead, than the house of festivity. In the former we find occasion for serious and deeply edifying thoughts and reflections: from the latter we seldom return with one profitable thought, or one solid impression.

Verse 3. Sorrow is better than laughter] The reason is immediately given; for by the sorrow of the countenance, the grief of heart that shews itself in the countenance,—

The heart is made better.] In such cases, most men try themselves at the tribunal of their own consciences, and resolve on amendment of life.

Verse 4. The heart of the wise is in the house of mourning.] A wise man loves those occasions from which he can derive spiritual advantage; and therefore prefers visiting the sick, and sympathizing with those who have suffered privations by death. But the fool, the gay, thoughtless, and giddy, prefer places and times of diversion and amusement. Here they are prevented from seriously considering either themselves or their latter end. The grand fault and misfortune of youth.

Verse 5. For as a crackling of thorns] They make a great noise, a great blaze; and are extinguished in a few moments. Such indeed, comparatively, are the joys of life: they are noisy, flashy, and transitory.

Verse 7. Oppression maketh a wise man mad] This has been translated with good shew of reason.—Surely oppression shall give lustre to a wise man; but a gift corrupteth the heart. The chief difference here is in the word יְהוֹלֵה yeholeh, which from the root יָחַל halal, signifies to glisten, irradiate, as well as to move briskly, to be mad, furious, in a rage; and certainly the former meaning suits this place best. We cannot think that the wise man, he that is truly religious,—for this is its meaning in the language of Solomon,—can be made mad, by any kind of oppression; but as he trusts in God, so in patience he possesses his soul.

Verse 8. Better is the end] We can then judge of the whole, and especially, if the matter relate to the conduct of Divine Providence. At the beginning we are often apt to make very rash conjectures, and often suppose that such and such things are against us; and that every thing is going wrong. Dr. Byrom gives good advice on such a subject.

"With patient mind thy course of duty run; God nothing does, nor suffers to be done, But thou wouldst do thyself, could'st thou but see The end of all events, as well as He."

I may add, in the words of our paraphrast,—

"Walk the result, nor seek with frantic rage Why God permits such things. His ways the 'new Israel' in clouds and darkness, will appear All right: wiser from thine eyes the road is clear'd. Till then, to learn submission to his will More wisdom shews, than vainly thou 'st attempt Exploring what thou cannot comprehend. And God for wiser ends than thine fit to hide"—C.

Verse 9. Anger resteth in the bosom of fools.] A wise man, off his guard, may feel it for a moment: but in him it cannot rest; it is a fire which he immediately casts out of his breast. But the fool, the man who is under the dominion of his own temper, harbours and fosters it, till it takes the form of malice, and then excites him to seek full revenge on those whom he deems his enemies.

Verse 10. The former days were better than these] This is a common saying; and it is as foolish as it is common. There is no weight nor truth in it; but men use it to excuse their crimes, and the folly of their conduct. "In former times, say they, men might be more religious—use more self-denial—be more exemplary." This is all false. In former days men were wicked as they are now, and religion was as unfashionable. God also is the same now, as He was then. As just, as merciful, as ready to help; and there is no depravity in the age that will excuse your crimes, your follies, and your carelessness.

Among the oriental proverbs I find the following:— Many say this is a corrupt age. This mode of speaking is not just: it is not the age that is corrupt, but the men of the age.

Verse 11. Wisdom is good with an inheritance] In this Chapter, Solomon introduces many observations which appear to be made by objectors against his doctrine: and as he was satisfied of their utility, he proposes them in their own full strength, and then combats and destroys them. It is quite necessary to attend to this; else we shall take the objector's words for those of Solomon; and think, as some have done, that the wise man contradicts and refutes himself. Observations, reflections, and objections, of friends and adversaries, are frequently introduced in the works of ancient authors, with outmentioning them as such. This is frequent, more particularly in Ethic writers; and we have many specimens in Horace; and without this distinction, it would be impossible to make sense of some of his writings. Here, an objector, who had listened to the wise man declaiming in favour of wisdom, suddenly interrupts him, and says in effect,—“I grant the truth of what you have said. Wisdom is very good in its place;—but what is it without property? A man who has a good inheritance may be profited by wisdom, because it will shew him how to manage it to the best advantage.”

Verse 12. Wisdom is a defence] To whom Solomon answers:—All true wisdom is most undoubtedly a great advantage to men in all circumstances; and money is also of great use: but it cannot be compared to wisdom. Knowledge of Divine and human things is a great blessing. Money is the means of supporting our animal life: but wisdom, the religion of the true God, gives life to those that have it. Money cannot procure the favour of God, nor give life to the soul.

Verse 13. Consider the work of God] Such is the nature of his providence, that it puts money into the hands of few: but wisdom is within the reach of all. The first is not necessary to happiness; therefore, it is not offered to men: the latter is; and therefore God, in His goodness, 14 In the day of prosperity be joyful, but in the day of adversity consider: God also hath set the one over against the other, to the end that man should find nothing after him.

15 All things have I seen in the days of my vanity: there is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness, and there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life in his wickedness.

16 Be not righteous over much: neither make thyself over wise: why shouldest thou destroy thyself?

17 Be not over much wicked, neither be thou foolish: why shouldest thou die before thy time?

18 It is good that thou shouldest take hold of this; yea, also from this withdraw not thine hand: for he that feareth God shall come forth of them all.

19 Wisdom strengtheneth the wise more than ten mighty men which are in the city.

1 Ch. 14. Dent. 32. 47.—a Hab. smoke.—1 Ch. 8. 14.—1 Prov. 25. 16.—v Eccles. 2. 22. Rom. 12. 3.—y Hab. be desolate.—1 Job 15. 32. Ps. 55. 23. Prov. 10. 27. 7 Hab. not in thy time.—1 Prov. 21. 21. & 24. 5. Chap. 9. 15, 19.—a 1 Kings 8. 46. 3 Chron. 6. 33. Prov. 20. 9. Rom. 3. 25. 1 John 1. 8.

offers it to the whole human race. The former can rarely be acquired, for God puts it out of the reach of most men, and you cannot make that straight which he hath made crooked: the latter may be easily attained by every person who carefully and seriously seeks it from God.

Verse 14. In the day of prosperity be joyful] When ye receive these temporal gifts from God, enjoy them, and be thankful to the Giver: but remember, this sunshine will not always last. God has balanced prosperity and adversity against each other; and were it not so, how many would put the former in the place of God Himself.

Verse 15. There is a just man that perisheth] This is another objection; as if he had said,—“I also have had considerable experience; and I have not discovered any marked approbation of the conduct of the righteous, or disapprobation of that of the wicked. On the contrary, I have seen a righteous man perish, while employed on the work of righteousness; and a wicked man prosperous, and even exalted, while living wickedly. The former is indeed a victim to his righteousness, while the life and prosperity of the latter were preserved:—hence I conclude, it is not prudent, whatever good there may be in religion, and whatever excellence in wisdom, that men should be over much righteous, or over wise: for why should they by austerities and hard study, destroy themselves?” So far the objector.

Verse 16. Why shouldest thou destroy thyself] תישומם tishomem, make thyself desolate, so that thou shalt be obliged to stand alone; neither make thyself over wise, ארומם tihachakam, do not pretend to abundance of wisdom. Why shouldest thou be so singular? In other words, and in modern language,—“There is no need of all this watching, fasting, praying, self-denial, &c. you carry things to extremes. Why should you wish to be reputed singular and precise?” To this the man of God answers:

Verse 17. Be not over much wicked, neither be thou foolish: why shouldest thou die before thy time?] אל תרבה אל תרבה אל tishah ha rebbeh. Do not multiply wickedness; do not add direct opposition to godliness to the rest of your crimes. Why should you provoke God to destroy you before your time? Perdition will come soon enough. If you will not turn from your sins, and avoid it finally; yet keep out of it as long as you can.

It cannot be supposed, except by those who are totally unacquainted with the nature of true religion, that a man may have too much holiness, too much of the life of God in his soul! And yet a learned Doctor, in these Sermons on this text, has endeavoured to show, out-doing Solomon's infidel,—“the sin, folly, and danger, of being righteous over much!” O rare darkness!

Verse 18. It is good that thou shouldest take hold of this] Do not let such an observation slip: take hold of this; do not forget that Get what you can in an honest way: but do not forget to get true religion: for he that fears God will be saved from all evil.

Verse 19. Wisdom strengtheneth the wise] One wise, thoroughly learned, and scientific man, may be of more use in fortifying and defending a city than ten princes. Witness the case of Syracuse when attacked by the Romans both by sea and land. Archimedes by his engines burnt and dashed their fleet to pieces, and destroyed all that came near the walls. And had not the city been betrayed, and be killed, all their force and skill could not have taken it.

20 For there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not.

21 Also, take no heed unto all words that are spoken; lest thou hear thy servant curse thee:

22 For oftentimes also thine own heart knoweth that thou thyself likewise hast cursed others.

23 All this have I proved by wisdom: I said, I will be wise; but it was far from me.

24 That which is far off, and exceeding deep, who can find it out?

25 I applied mine heart to know, and to search, and to seek out wisdom, and the reason of things, and to know the wickedness of folly, even of foolishness and madness:

26 And I find more bitter than death the woman, whose heart is snares and nets, and her hands as bands: whose pleaseth God shall escape from her; but the sinner shall be taken by her.

27 Behold, this have I found, saith the
