Verse 20. There is not a just man upon earth that doeth good, and sinneth not.] שרם אל יצחקה, that may not sin. There is not a man upon earth, howsoever just he may be, and habituated to do good, but is peccable, liable to commit sin; and therefore should continually watch and pray, and depend upon the Lord. But the text does not say, the just man does commit sin,—but simply that he may sin; and so our translators have rendered it in 1 Sam. ii. 25, twice in 1 Kings viii. 31, and 46, and 2 Chron. vi. 36, and the Reader is requested to consult the Note on 1 Kings viii. 46, where the proper construction of this word may be found, and the doctrine in question fully considered.

Verse 21. Also take no heed unto all words that are spoken.] This is good advice, and much for every man's peace through life.

Thy servant curses thee] מכללעו mekalleco, make light of thee, speak evil of thee.

Verse 22. Thou thyself—hast cursed others] כאללעו kalalle, thou hast spoken evil; hast vilified others. O! who is free from evil speaking,—from uncharitable speaking,—from detailing their neighbour's faults,—from whispering, tale-bearing, and backbiting! Do not wonder if God, in His justice, permit thee to be calumniated, seeing thou hast so frequently calumniated others.

Verse 23. All this have I proved by wisdom.] These rules I have laid down for my own conduct, and sought after more wisdom: but have fallen far short of what I wished to be.

Verse 24. That which is far off] Though the wisdom that is essential to our salvation may be soon learnt, through the teaching of the Spirit of wisdom; yet in wisdom itself there are extents and depths which who can reach or fathom!

Verse 25. I applied mine heart] I cast about, סבטתי sabotai, I made a circuit;—I circumscribed the ground I was to traverse: and all within my circle I was determined to know, and to investigate, and to seek out wisdom, and the reason of things. Has man reason and understanding? If so, then, this is his work. God as much calls him to use these powers in this way, as to believe on the Lord Jesus that he may be saved: and he that does not, according to the means in his power, is a slothful servant, from whom God may justly take away the misemployed or not used talent, and punish him for his neglect. Every doctrine of God is a subject both for reason and faith to work on.

To know the wickedness of folly, even of foolishness and madness.]

“And my own heart, with scrutiny severe, By far the harder task surveyed; intent To trace that wisdom which from heaven descends, Fountain of living waters; and to explore The source of human folly, whose foul streams Intoxicate and kill.”—C.

Verse 26. And I find more bitter than death the woman] After all his investigation of the wickedness of folly, and the foolishness of madness, he found nothing equally dangerous and ruinous, as the blandishments of cursing women. When once the affections are entangled, escape, without ruin, is almost impossible.

Whoso pleaseth God] The man who walks with God, and he alone, shall escape this sore evil: and even he that fears God, if he get with an artful woman, may be soon robbed of his strength, and become like other men. A bad or artful woman is represented as a company of hunters, with nets, gins, &c. to catch their prey.

charge in that war; neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it.

9 All this have I seen, and applied my heart unto every work that is done under the sun: there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his own hurt.

10 And so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy, and they were forgotten in the city where they had so done: this is also vanity.

11 * Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.

12 * Though a sinner do evil a hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him.

13 But it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

14 There is a vanity which is done upon the earth; that there be just men, unto whom it * happeneth according to the work of the wicked: again, there be wicked men, to whom it happeneth according to the work of the righteous: I said that this also is vanity.

15 * Then I commended mirth, because a man hath no better thing under the sun, than to eat, and to drink, and to be merry: for that shall abide with him of his labour the days of his life, which God giveth him under the sun.

16 When I applied mine heart to know wisdom, and to see the business that is done upon the earth: (for also there is that neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes:)

17 Then I beheld all the work of God, that a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun: because though a man labour to seek it out, yet he shall not find it; yea, farther; though a wise man think to know it, yet shall he not be able to find it.

prevent the animal life from leaving the body of man." Others translate to this sense,—"No man hath power over the wind, to restrain the wind; and none has power over death, to restrain him: and when a man engages as a soldier, he cannot be discharged from the war till it is ended; and by wickedness no man shall be delivered from any evil." Taking it in this way, these are maxims which contain self-evident truths. Others suppose the verse to refer to the king who tyrannizes over and oppresses his people. He also shall account to God for his actions; he shall die, and he cannot prevent it: and when he is judged, his wickedness cannot deliver him.

Verse 9. One man ruleth over another to his own hurt] This may be spoken of rulers generally; who, instead of feeding, fleece the flock. Tyrants and oppressors, who come to an untimely end by their mismanagement of the offices of the state. All these things relate to Asiatic despots, and have ever been more applicable to them than to any other sovereigns in the world. They were despotic; they still are so.

Verse 10. Who had come and gone from the place of the holy] The place of the holy is the sacred office which they held, anointed either as kings or priests to God; and having not fulfilled the holy office in a holy way, have been carried to their graves without lamentation, and lie among the dead without remembrance.

Verse 11. Because sentence] divine pithgam, a Divine decree or declaration. This is no Hebrew, but a mere Chaldean word; and occurs only in the later books of the Bible; Esther, Ezra, and Daniel; and no where else, but in this place. Because God does not immediately punish every delinquency, men think he disregards evil acts; and, therefore, they are emboldened to sin on: so, this long-suffering of God, which leadeth to repentance, is abused so as to lead to farther crimes! When men sin against the remedy of their salvation,—how can they escape perdition?

Verse 12. Though a sinner do evil a hundred times] If God bear so long with a transgressor, waiting in His long-suffering for him to repent and turn to Him, surely He will be peculiarly kind to them that fear Him, and endeavour to walk uprightly before Him.

Verse 13. But it shall not be well with the wicked] Let not the long-spared sinner presume, that because sentence is not speedily executed on his evil works, and that he is suffered to go on to his hundredth transgression, that God has forgotten to punish.—No: he feareth not before God; and, therefore he shall not ultimately escape.

Verse 14. There be just men] See on chap. vii. ver. 16.

Verse 15. Then I commended mirth] These are some more of the cavils of the infidel objector.—"Since virtue is frequently under oppression, and vice triumphs in health, and rolls in wealth; I see plainly that we should not trouble ourselves about future things; and therefore should be governed by the maxim, EDÉ, SIBE, LVDS. Post mortem nulla voluptas.

Verse 16. When I applied mine heart to know wisdom] This is the reply of the wise man: "I have also considered these seeming contradictions. God governs the world: but we cannot see the reasons of His conduct; nor know why he does this, omits that, or permits a third thing. We may study night and day, and deprive ourselves of rest and sleep; but we shall never fathom the depths that are in the Divine government: but all is right and just. This is the state of probation; and in it neither can the wicked be punished, nor the righteous rewarded. But eternity is at hand; and then shall every man receive according to his works. He that spends his life in the eat, drink, and play, will find in that day, that he has lost the time in which he could have prepared for eternity.

Verse 17. Then I beheld all the work of God, that a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun] I saw it to be of such a nature,—1. That a man cannot find it out. 2. That if he labour to find it out, he shall not succeed. 3. That though he be wise, the most instructed among men, and think to find it out, he shall find he is not able. It is beyond the wisdom and power of man. How vain then are all your cavils against Providence. You do not understand it,—you cannot comprehend it. Fear God!

NOTES ON CHAPTER IX.

Verse 1. The righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God] This is a continuation of the preceding subject: and here the wise man draws a conclusion from what he had seen, and from the well-known character of God; that the righteous, the wise, and their conduct, were all in the hand, protected by the power of God, and safe in his approbation: but we cannot judge, from the occurrences which take place in life, who the objects of God's love or displeasure may be.

Verse 2. All things come alike to all] This is very generally true: but God often makes a difference: and His faithful followers witness many interventions of Divine providence in their behalf. But there are general blessings, and general natural evils, that equally affect the just and the unjust. But in this all is right: the evils that are in nature are the effects of the fall of man; and God will not suspend general laws, or alter them, to favour individual cases. Nor does He design that His approbation or disapprobation shall be shown by any of these occurrences. Every holy man has a testimony of God's approbation in his own heart: and this makes him truly happy let outward things be as they may. And, in general, what the wicked suffer is the fruit of their own doings. But the general state of nature, as to what are called natural evils, is just as it ought to be. There is evil enough to shew that man has fallen from God; and good enough to shew that 3 This is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all, yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live, and after that they go to the dead.

4 For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

5 For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten.

6 Also their love and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

7 Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart; for God now accepteth thy works.

8 Let thy garments be always white; and let thy head lack no ointment.

9 Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest all the days of the life of thy vanity, which he hath given thee under the sun, all the days d Job 14. 12. Isa. 63. 16.—Job 7. 9, 10. Isa. 26. 14.—Chap. 3. 15.—g Heb. See, or, enjoy life.—Chap. 2. 10, 24. & 3. 13, 22. & 5. 18.

God deals with him in mercy. I cannot see that there is any rational cause for me to stumble at the dispensations of Divine providence on these accounts.

Verse 3. The heart of the sons of men are full of evil] No wonder then that the curse of God should be frequent in the earth.

Verse 4. For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope] While a man lives he hopes to amend, and he hopes to have a better lot; and thus life is spent, hoping to grow better, and hoping to get more. The Vulgate has, There is none that shall live always, nor has any, hope of such a thing. Perhaps the best translation is the following:—What, therefore, is to be chosen? In him that is living, there is hope. Then choose the eternal life, which thou hopest to possess.

A living dog is better than a dead lion.] I suppose this was a proverb. The smallest measure of animal existence is better than the largest of dead matter. The poorest living peasant is infinitely above Alexander the Great.

Verse 5. The living know that they shall die] This is so self-evident that none can doubt it; and, therefore, all that have this conviction should prepare for death and eternal blessedness.

But the dead know not any thing] Cut off from life, they know nothing of what passes under the sun. Their day of probation is ended; and, therefore, they can have no farther reward in living a holy life: nor can they be liable to any farther punishment for crimes in a state of probation, that being ended.

Verse 6. Also their love and their hatred] It is evident that he speaks here of the ignorance, want of power, &c., of the dead, in reference only to this life. And though they have no more a portion under the sun, yet he does not intimate that they have none any where else. A man threatens to conquer kingdoms, &c. He dies;—what are his threats!

Verse 7. Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy] Do not vex and perplex yourselves with the dispensations and mysteries of Providence; enjoy the blessings which God has given you, and live to His glory; and then God will accept your works.

Verse 8. Let thy garments be always white] The Jews wore white garments on festal occasions, as emblems of joy and innocence. Be always pure, and always happy.

The Targum says.—“At all times let thy garments be washed and pure from the stain of sin. Acquire a good name, which is likened to the oil of anointing, that blessings may be called down upon thy head, and goodness not forsake thee.”

Verse 9. Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest] Marry prudently, keep faithfully attached to the wife thou hast chosen, and rejoice in the labour of thy hands.

Some understand this, as the words of the libertine objector. Live joyfully with the woman whom thou lovest best. But this does not comport so well with the scope of the place.

Verse 10. Whosoever thy hand findeth to do] Examine here the WHAT, the HOW, and the WHY.

I. What is necessary to be done in this life, in reference to another? 1. Turn from sin. 2. Repent. 3. Frequent the ordinances of God, and associate with the upright. 4. Read the Scriptures. 5. Pray for pardon. 6. Believe on the Lord Jesus that thou mayest obtain it. 7. Look for the gift of the Holy Spirit. 8. Bring forth in their seasons the fruits of,—1. Repentance. 2. Faith. And, 3. The Holy of thy vanity: for that is thy portion in this life, and in thy labour which thou takest under the sun.

10 Whosoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

11 I returned, and saw under the sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, nor yet riches to men of understanding, nor yet favour to men of skill; but time and chance happeneth to them all.

12 For man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

13 This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and it seemed great unto me:

14 There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

i Amos 2. 14, 15. Jer. 9. 23.—k Ch. 8. 7.—1 Prov. 23. 6. Luke 12. 20, 29. & 17. 36, &c. 1 Thim. 5. 3.—m Sec. 2 Sam. 30. 16-22.

Spirit. 9. Live to get good. 10. And to do good. 11. And refer every purpose and act to the eternal world.

II. How should these be done? With thy might. 1. Be fully convinced of the necessity of these things. 2. Be determined to act according to this conviction. 3. Then act with all thy strength; put forth all thy power in avoiding evil, repenting for sin, &c. &c.

III. Why should this be done? 1. Because thou art a dying man. 2. Thou art going into the grave. 3. When thou leavest this life, thy state of probation, with all its advantages, is eternally ended. 4. If thou die in sin, where God is thou shalt never come. For, 1. There is no work, by which thou mayest profit. 2. No device by which thou mayest escape punishment. 3. No knowledge of any means of help. 4. And no wisdom, restoration of the soul to the favour and image of God, in that grave whither thou goest. Therefore work while it is called to-day.

My old MS. Bible translates this nervously. Whosoever thinge may thir hand don, bestly doo: for noother wecc, ne resoun, ne wisdom, ne keepinge schuld be a rentis hell, whither thou goest. Properly speaking, every sinner is going to hell, and the wisdom of God calls upon him to turn and live.

Verse 11. The race is not to the swift] It is not by swiftness, nor by strength and valour, that races are gained, and battles won. God causes the lame often to take the prey, the prize; and so works, that the weak overthrow the strong; therefore, no man should confide in himself. All things are under the government, and at the disposal, of God.

But time and chance] ny et, time or opportunity, and yo pagá, incident or occurrence,— Happeneth to them all.] Every man has what may be called time and space to act in, and opportunity to do a particular work. But in this time and opportunity there is incident, what may fall in, and occurrence, what may meet, and frustrate, an attempt. These things should be wisely weighed, and seriously balanced: for those four things belong to every human action. While you have time, seek an opportunity to do what is right: but let him calculate on hindrances and oppositions, because time and opportunity have their incident and occurrence. Coverdale translates this verse well:—“I saw that in runnyng, it helpeth not to be swift; in batayll, it helpeth not to be stronge; to fedyng, it helpeth not to be wyse; to riches, it helpeth not to be aytill; to be had in favour, it helpeth not to be connyng: but that all lyeth in time and fortune.”

Verse 12. As the birds that are caught] Man acts so heedlessly, notwithstanding all his wisdom, and all his warnings, that he is often taken, as a fish is, by the baited hook; and the bird by the baited snare. And thus, an evil time, like the snare, gin, trap, hook, falleth suddenly upon them; and they are taken in a moment, and have no means of escaping. How frequently do we see these comparisons illustrated!

Verse 14. There was a little city and few men within it] Here is another proof of the vanity of sublimary things: the ingratitude of men, and the little compensation that genuine merit receives. The little history mentioned here may have either been a fact, or intended as an instructive fable. A little city, with few to defend it, being besieged by a great king, and a powerful army, was delivered by the cunning and address of a poor wise man: and afterwards his townsmen forgot their obligation to him.

15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city: yet no man remembered that same poor man.

16 Then said I, Wisdom is better than strength: nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.

17 The words of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.

18 Wisdom is better than weapons of war: but one sinner destroyeth much good.

Those who spiritualize this passage, making the little city the Church, the few men the Apostles, the great king the Devil, and the poor wise man Jesus Christ, abuse the text.

But the Targum is not less whimsical:—"The little city is the human body; few men in it, few good affections to work righteousness; the great king, evil concupiscence, which, like a strong and powerful king, enters into the body to oppress it, and besieges the heart so as to cause it to err; built great bulwarks against it, evil concupiscence builds his throne in it, wheresoever he wills, and causes it to decline from the ways that are right before God; that it may be taken in the greatest nets of hell, that he may burn it seven times, because of its sins. But there is found in it a poor wise man; a good, wise, and holy affection, which prevails over the evil principle, and snatches the body from the judgment of hell, by the strength of its wisdom. Yet, after this deliverance, the man did not remember what the good principle had done for him: but said in his heart, I am innocent." &c.

What a wonderful text has this been in the hands of many a modern Targumist; and with what force have the Keachonians preached Christ crucified from it.

Such a passage as this receives a fine illustration from the case of Archimedes, saving the city of Syracuse from all the Roman forces besieging it by sea and land. He destroyed their ships by his burning glasses, lifted up their galleys out of the water by his machines, dashing some to pieces, and drowning others. One man's wisdom here prevailed for a long time against the most powerful exertions of a mighty nation. In this case, wisdom far exceeded strength. But was not Syracuse taken, notwithstanding the exertions of this poor wise man? No. But it was betrayed by the baseness of Mericus, a Spaniard, one of the Syracusan generals. He delivered the whole district he commanded into the hands of Marcellus, the Roman consul; Archimedes having defeated every attempt made by the Romans, either by sea or land: yet he commanded no company of men; made no sorties: but confounded and destroyed them by his machines. This happened about 208 years before Christ; and nearly about the time in which those who do not consider Solomon as the author, suppose this book to have been written. This wise man was not remembered; he was slain by a Roman soldier, while deeply engaged in demonstrating a new problem, in order to his farther operations against the enemies of his country. See Plutarch, and the historians of this Syracusan war.

When Alexander the Great was about to destroy the city Lampsacus, his old master Anaximenes came out to meet him. Alexander suspecting his design, that he would intercede for the city, being determined to destroy it, he swore that he would not grant him any thing he should ask. Then said Anaximenes,—"I desire that you will destroy this city." Alexander respected his oath, and the city was spared. Thus, says Valerius Maximus, the narrator (lib. vii. c. iii. No. 4, Extern.) by this sudden turn of sagacity, this ancient and noble city was preserved from the destruction by which it was threatened. Hæc velocitas sagacitatis oppidum vetusta nobilitate inclitum, exitio cui destinatum erat, subtraxit.

A stratagem of Jaddua, the high priest, was the means of preserving Jerusalem from being destroyed by Alexander, who, incensed because they had assisted the inhabitants of Gaza when he besieged it; as soon as he had reduced it, marched against Jerusalem, with the determination to raze it to the ground; but Jaddua and his priests in their sacerdotal robes meeting him on the way, he was so struck with their appearance, that he not only prostrated himself before the high priest, and spared the city, but also granted it some remarkable privileges. But the case of Archimedes and Syracuse is the most striking and appropriate in all its parts. That of Anaximenes and Lampsacus is also highly illustrative of the maxim of the wise man: Wisdom is better than strength.

Verse 16. The poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard. I cannot help pursuing this illustration a little farther. The soldier, who found Archimedes busily employed in drawing figures upon the sand, put to him some impertinent question, withal rudely obtruding himself on his operations. To whom this wonderful mathematician replied,—"Stand off, soldier, and do not spoil my diagram; on which the bloody savage struck him dead!"

Verse 17. The words of wise men are heard in quiet. In the tumult of war the words of Archimedes were not heard; and his life was lost.

Verse 18. Wisdom is better than weapons of war. So proved in the case of Archimedes.

But one sinner. Such as the Roman butcher above mentioned.

Destroyeth much good. Such as were the life and skill of the Syracusan mathematician. One sinner has often injured the work of God; one stumblingblock has sometimes destroyed a revival of religion. Sin acts like a ferment,—whatever comes in contact with it, it assimilates to itself.

NOTES ON CHAPTER X.

Verse 1. Dead flies. Any putrefaction spoils perfume; and so, a foolish act ruins the character of him who has the reputation of being wise and good. Alas! alas! in an unguarded moment how many have tarnished the reputation which they were many years in acquiring! Hence, no man can be said to be safe, till he is taken to the Paradise of God.

Verse 2. A wise man's heart is at his right hand. As the right hand is ordinarily the best exercised, strongest, and most ready, and the left, the contrary, they show,—1. The command which the wise man has over his own mind, feelings, passions, &c. and the prudence with which he acts. And, 2. The want of prudence and management in the fool, who has no restraint on his passions, and no rule or guard upon his tongue. The right hand and the left are used in Scripture to express good and evil. The wise man is always employed in doing good; the fool in nonsense or evil.

Verse 3. When—a fool walketh by the way. In every act of life, and in every company he frequents, the irreligious man shows what he is. Vanity, nonsense, and wickedness, are his themes: so that in effect he saith to every one that he is a fool.

Verse 4. If the spirit of the ruler rise up against thee. If the king get incensed against thee:—Leave not thy place. Humble thyself before him, that is thy place and duty; for yielding to him, and not standing stoutly in thy defence, pacifieth great offences: and then when his anger is appeased, he will hear any thing in thy justification, if thou have any thing to offer. This is good advice to a child in reference to his parents, and to an inferior of any kind in reference to his superiors.

Several of the Fathers understood this differently. If the spirit of the ruler, the influence of Satan, hath risen up against and prevailed over thee, to bring thee into some sin; leave not thy place; do not despair of God's mercy; humble thyself before Him, and seek pardon through the Son of His love; and this will be marephé a remedy or cure even for neivim chaitim gedolim, great errors or sins. All this is true in itself, whether found in this text or not.

Verse 5. An error which proceedeth from the ruler. What this error in the ruler is, the two following verses Prov. 13. 16. & 18. 2.—d Ch. 8. 2.—e 1 Sam. 25. 31, &c. Prov. 25. 15.—f Heb. from before.—g Eccl. 3. 1.—h Heb. in great heights.—i Prov. 13. 10. & 20. 22.

8 He that diggeth a pit shall fall into it: and whoso breaketh a hedge, a serpent shall bite him.

9 Whoso removeth stones shall be hurt therewith; and he that cleaveth wood shall be endangered thereby.

10 If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength: but wisdom is profitable to direct.

11 Surely the serpent will bite without enchantment; and a babbler is no better.

12 The words of a wise man's mouth are gracious; but the lips of a fool will swallow up himself.

13 The beginning of the words of his mouth is foolishness; and the end of his talk is mischievous madness.

14 A fool also is full of words: a man cannot tell what shall be; and what shall be after him, who can tell him?

point out: it is simply this,—an injudicious distribution of offices, and raising people to places of trust and confidence, who are destitute of merit, are neither of name nor family to excite public confidence, and are without property, so that they have no stake in the country; and their only solicitude must naturally be, to enrich themselves, and provide for their poor relatives. This is frequent in the governments of the world; and favouritism has often brought prosperous nations to the brink of ruin. Folly was set in dignity; the man of property, sense, and name, in a low place. Servants, menial men, rode upon horses, carried every thing with a high and proud hand; and princes, the nobles of the people, obliged to walk by their sides, and often from the state of things to become in effect their servants. This was often the case in this country, during the reign of Thomas à Becket and Cardinal Wolsey. These insolent men lorded it over the whole nation; and the people and their gentry were raised or depressed according as their pride and caprice willed. And through these kinds of errors, not only a few sovereigns have had most uncomfortable and troublesome reigns; but some have even lost their lives.

Verse 8. Whoso breaketh a hedge, a serpent shall bite him.] While spoiling his neighbour's property, he himself may come to greater mischief: while pulling out the sticks, he may be bit by a serpent, who has his nest there. Some have supposed that נחש nachash, here means a thorn; perhaps from the similarity of its prick to the serpent's sting. He who forces his way through a hedge, will be pricked by the thorns.

Verse 9. Whoso removeth stones] This verse teaches care and caution. Whoever pulls down an old building, is likely to be hurt by the stones; and in cleaving wood, many accidents occur for want of sufficient caution.

Verse 10. If the iron be blunt] If the axe have lost its edge, and the owner do not sharpen it, he must apply the more strength to make it cut: but the wisdom that is profitable to direct will teach him, that he should whet his axe, and spare his strength. Thus, without wisdom and understanding, we cannot go profitably through the meanest concerns in life.

Verse 11. The serpent will bite without enchantment] נחש בלעו belo lachash, without hissing. As a snake may bite before it hiss, so also will the babbler, talkative person, or calumniator. Without directly speaking evil, he insinuates by innuendoes, things injurious to the reputation of his neighbour. עיף העדר ביקע בן שילעה, nothing laze than be bath that prubly backbiteth.—Old MS. Bible. "A babbler of his tongue is no better than a serpent that styngeth without hyssynge."—COVERDALE. The moral of this saying is simply this:—A calumniator is as dangerous as a poisonous serpent; and from the envenomed tongue of slander and detraction no man is safe. The comparing the serpent נחש nachash to a babbler, has something singular in it. I have already supposed that the creature mentioned, Gen. iii. 1, was of the genus simia. This has been ridiculed: but not disproved.

Verse 12. The words of a wise man's mouth] Every thing that proceeds from him is decent and orderly: creditable to himself, and acceptable to them who hear him. But the lips of the fool which speak every thing at random, and have no understanding to guide them, are not only not pleasant to others, but often destructive to himself.

Verse 14. A man cannot tell what shall be] A foolish babbling man will talk on every subject, though he can say as little on the past, as he can on the future.

15 The labour of the foolish wearieth every one of them, because he knoweth not how to go to the city.

16 Wo to thee, O land, when thy king is a child, and thy princes eat in the morning!

17 Blessed art thou, O land, when thy king is the son of nobles, and thy princes eat in due season, for strength, and not for drunkenness!

18 By much slothfulness the building decayeth; and through idleness of the hands the house droppeth through.

19 A feast is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry: but money answereth all things.

20 Curse not the king, no, not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bed-chamber: for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter.

Verse 15. He knoweth not how to go to the city] I suppose this to be a proverb: he knows nothing; he does not know his way to the next village. He may labour: but, for want of judgment, he wearies himself to no purpose.

Verse 16. Wo to thee, O land, when thy king is a child] Minorities are, in general, very prejudicial to a state. Regents either disagree, and foment civil wars; or oppress the people. Various discordant interests are raised up in a state during a minority; and the young king, having been under the tutelage of interested men, acts partially and injuriously to the interests of the people when he comes to the throne; and this produces popular discontent, and a troubled reign.

They do nothing in order; turn night into day, and day into night; sleep when they should wake, and wake when they should sleep; attending more to chamberings and banquetings, than to the concerns of the state.

Verse 17. When thy king is the son of nobles] Yes; אצילים, the son of free men; persons well acquainted with the principles of civil liberty, and who rule according to them. Septuagint. Such an one as comes to the throne in a legitimate way, from an ancient regal family, whose right to the throne is incontestable. It requires such a long time to establish a regal right, that the state is in continual danger from pretenders and usurpers, where the king is not the son of nobles.

All persons in places of trust for the public weal, from the king to the lowest public functionary, should know that the public are exceedingly scandalized at repeated accounts of entertainments, where irregularity prevails, much money is expended, and no good done. These things are drawn into precedent, and quoted to countenance debauch in the inferior classes. The natural division of the day for necessary repasts is, BREAKFAST, eight, or half after; DINNER, one, or half after; and SUPPER, eight, or half after. And these, or even earlier hours, were formerly observed in these countries.—Then we had scarcely any such thing as gout; and no nervous disorders.

In ancient nations the custom was to eat but once: and then about mid-day.

Verse 18. By much slothfulness] This is remarkably the case in some countries. Houses are not repaired till they almost fall about the ears of the inhabitants. We have an adage that applies to all such cases:—"A stitch in time saves nine."

Verse 19. A feast is made for laughter] The object of it is to produce merriment; to banish care, and concern of every kind. But who are they who make and frequent such places? Epicures and drunkards generally; and such as those of whom Horace speaks:

Non numerus vultus, et fruges consumere nati.

These whose names stand as indications of men, the useless many; and who appear to be born only to consume the produce of the soil.

But money answereth all] This saying has prevailed every where.

Sibi et uxorem cum dote, Ademque et amicos, Et genus, et formam, regine pecunia donat; Ac bene numeratum decorat Sundaia, Venenque.

time give vent to thy thoughts, and so thou be chargeable with treason.

For a bird of the air shall carry the voice] Does he refer here to such fowls as the carrier pigeon, which were often used to carry letters under their wings to a great distance, and bring back answers? The Targum turns it curiously: "Do not speak evil of the king in thy conscience, nor in the secret of thy heart; nor in the most hidden place in thy house curse not a wise man: for Raziel calls daily from heaven upon Mount Horeb, and his voice goes through the whole world; and Elijah, the great priest, goes flying through the air like a winged eagle, and publishes the words which are spoken in secret by all the inhabitants of the earth."

Civil government is so peculiarly of God, that He will have it supported for the benefit of mankind; and those who attempt to disturb it are generally marked by His strong disapprobation. And though there have been multitudes of treasons hatched in the deepest secrecy; yet, through the providences of God, they have been discovered in the most singular manner. This shows God's care for government.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XI.

Verse 1. Cast thy bread upon the waters] An allusion to the sowing of rice; which was sown upon muddy ground, or ground covered with water, and trodden in by the feet of cattle; it thus took root, and grew, and was found after many days in a plentiful harvest. Give aims to the poor, and it will be as a seed sown in good ground. God will cause thee afterwards to receive it with abundant increase. The Targum understands it of giving bread to poor sailors. The Vulgate, and my Old Bible have the same idea. Send thy bread upon men passing waters.

Verse 2. Give a portion to seven] Never cease giving while thou seeest a person in distress, and hast wherewithal to relieve him.

Thou knowest not what evil] Such may be the change of times, that thou mayest stand in need of similar help thyself. Do as thou wouldst be done by.

Verse 3. If the clouds be full of rain] Act as the clouds: when they are full, they pour out their water indifferently on the field, and on the desert. By giving charity indiscriminately, it may be that thou wilt often give it to the unworthy: but thou shouldst ever consider that he is an object of thy charity, who appears to be in real want; and better relieve or give to a hundred worthless persons, than pass by one who is in real distress.

Where the tree falleth, there it shall be.] Death is at no great distance; thou hast but a short time to do good. Acquire a heavenly disposition while here; for there will be no change after this life. If thou die in the love of God, and in the love of man; in that state wilt thou be found in the day of judgment. If a tree about to fall, lean to the north, to the north it will fall; if to the south, it will fall to that quarter. In whatever disposition or state of soul thou diest, in that thou wilt be found in the eternal world. Death refines nothing, purifies nothing, kills no sin, helps to no glory. Let thy continual bent and inclination be to God, to holiness, to charity, to mercy, and to heaven: then fall when thou mayest, thou wilt fall well.

Verse 4. He that observeth the wind shall not sow] The man that is too scrupulous is never likely to succeed in any thing. If a man neither plough nor sow till the weather is entirely to his mind, the season will in all probability pass before he will have done any thing: so if thou be too nice in endeavouring to find out who are the impos-

6 In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether I shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.

7 Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes ^a to behold the sun:

8 But if a man live many years, and rejoice in them all; yet let him remember the days of darkness: for they shall be many. All that cometh is vanity.

9 Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou, that for all these things ^a God will bring thee into judgment.

10 Therefore remove ^a sorrow from thy heart, and ^b put away evil from thy flesh: ^c for childhood and youth are vanity.

[Eph. 5. 18.—g John 3. 8.—h Ps. 139. 14, 15.—i Heb. shall be right.—k Ch. 7. 11. 1 Num. 15. 32.—m Ch. 12. 14. Rom. 2. 6-11.—n Or, anger.—o 2 Cor. 7. 1. 2 Tim. 2. 12.—p Ps. 39. 5.]

tors among those who profess to be in want; the real object may perish, which otherwise thou mightest have relieved, and whose life might have been thereby saved. The very punctilious and scrupulous people, who will sift every thing to the bottom, in every case; and before they will act, must be fully satisfied in all points, seldom do any good, and are themselves generally good for nothing. While they are observing the clouds and the rain, others have joined hands with God, and made a poor man live.

Verse 5. As thou knowest not—the way of the spirit] Why God should have permitted such and such persons to fall into want, and how they came into all their distresses, thou canst not tell, no more than thou canst how their soul is united to their body, how it came to inform that body, nor how the child was formed in the womb of its mother. Nor canst thou discern the end which God has in view in these things. He maketh all, every thing is open to Him: and take heed lest, while pretending motives of scrupulosity and prudence, in not relieving the distresses of those thou pretendest to suspect to be unworthy, He does not see that a love of money is the motive of thy conduct, and a want of the bowels of mercy the cause why thou drivest this suspected beggar from thy door!

Verse 6. In the morning sow thy seed] Be ready at all times to shew mercy; begin in the morning, continue till the evening. Thou knowest not the most worthy object; it is enough God knoweth; and if thy motive be good, He will applaud and reward thee; not according to the worthiness or unworthiness of the object of thy charity, but according to the motive which induced thee to relieve him.

Verse 7. Truly the light is sweet] Life is dear to every man as the light of the sun is to the eye. A man would give all that he has for his life; and it is particularly dear to him, when he is in ease and affluence: but let each remember that,—

Verse 8. If a man live many years] And even have prosperity through the whole; yet the days of darkness, times of affliction, weakness, and perhaps old age, will be many. If he die not a violent death, which no man can wish, he will die a lingering death; and this is ordinarily attended with many pains, and many sorrows: therefore, let him prepare to meet his God; and to carry this thought through life, that all must terminate in death. The writer of Ecclesiasticus, chap. vii. ver. 36, has a good saying similar to this:—"Whatsoever thou takest in hand, remember thy end: and thou shalt never do amiss;" οὐκ ἀποφρονεῖς, τὸν χρόνον οὐκ ἔσθης.

Verse 9. Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth] Youth is devoid of cares; and, consequently, of many perplexities and distresses. Were it not so, we should have no old men; nay, perhaps not one even of middle age. It is in the order of a most gracious God, that the young should rejoice in their youth: but they should make such a moderate use of all their enjoyments, that they may not be confounded in the day of judgment. But, O young man, if thou wilt follow the propensities of thy own heart, the noisy mirth of the fool, and the dissipation of the profligate—go on; take thy full swing; but take this with thee, that for all these things God will judge thee; and where the righteous are scarcely saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear!

Verse 10. Therefore remove sorrow] οὐκ ἔσθης, ἄγος; every kind of violent passion, all filthiness of the flesh and spirit. Childhood and youth are vanity; they pass away and come to nothing. Eternity alone is permanent life for eternity.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XII.

Verse 1. Remember now thy Creator בוראך Boreia, thy CREATORS. The word is most certainly in the plural number in all our common Hebrew Bibles; but it is in the singular number, בוראך Boraca, in one hundred and seventy-six of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., and ninety-six of De Rossi's, and in many ancient editions; and in all the ancient Versions. There is no dependence on the plural form in most of the modern editions; though there are some editions of great worth, which exhibit the word in this form; and among them the Complutensian, Antwerp, Paris, and London Polyglots.

The evidence, therefore, that this text is supposed to give to the doctrine of the Ever-blessed Trinity is but precarious, and on it little stress can be laid: and no man who loves truth, would wish to support it by dubious witnesses. Injudicious men by laying stress on texts dubious in themselves, and which may be interpreted a different way, greatly injure the true faith. Though such in their hearts may be friends to the orthodox faith, they are in fact its secret friends; and their assistance is such as helps their adversaries.

But what does the text say? It addresses the youth of both sexes, throughout the creation; and says in effect,—

I. You are not your own, you have no right to yourselves. God made you—He is your Creator; He made you that you might be happy: but you can be happy only in Him. And as He created you, so He preserves you;—He feeds, clothes, upholds you. He has made you capable of knowing, loving, and serving Him in this world, and of enjoying Him in His own glory for ever. And when ye had undone yourselves by sin, He sent His Son to redeem you by His blood; and He sends His Spirit, to enlighten, convince, and draw you away from childishness, from vain and trifling, as well as from sinful pursuits.

II. Remember Him: consider that He is your Creator—your loving and affectionate Father. In youth memory is strong and tenacious: but, through the perversion of the heart by sin, young people can remember any thing better than God. If you get a kindness from a friend, you can remember that, and feel gratitude for it; and the person is therefore endeared to you. Have any ever given you such benefits as your Creator? Your body and soul came from Him; He gave you your eyes, ears, tongue, hands, feet, &c. What blessings are these! how excellent! how useful! how necessary!—and will you forget Him?

III. Remember Him in thy youth, in order that you may have a long and blessed life, that you may be saved from the corruption and misery into which young people in general run; and the evils they entail upon themselves by giving way to the sinful propensities of their own hearts. As in youth all the powers are more active and vigorous, so they are capable of superior enjoyments. Faith, hope, and love, will be in their best tenor, their greatest vigour, and in their least encumbered state. And it will be easier for you to believe, hope, pray, love, obey, and bear your cross, than it can be in old age and decrepitude.

IV. Remember Him now, in this part of your youth—you have no certainty of life;—now is yours; to-morrow may not. You are young; but you may never be old. Now He waits to be gracious; to-morrow may be too late. God now calls; His Spirit now strives; His ministers now exhort. You have now health; sin has not so much dominion over you as it will have, increasing by every future moment, if you do not give up your hearts to your Maker.

V. There is another consideration which should weigh with you, should you live to old age: it is a very disadvantageous time to begin to serve the Lord in. Infirmities press down both body and mind, and the oppressed nature has enough to do to bear its own infirmities; and as there is little time, so there is generally less inclination to call upon the Lord. Evil habits are strengthened by long continuance; and every desire and appetite in the soul is a strong hold for Satan. There is little time for repentance, little for faith, none for obedience. The evil days are come, and the years, in which you will feelingly be obliged to say, Aha! we have no pleasure in them; and, what is worse, the heart is hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

Verse 2. While the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars, be not darkened] i. e. in the spring, prime, and prosperity of life.

Nor the clouds return] The infirmities of old age, of which winter is a proper emblem, as spring is of youth, in the former clause of this verse.

Verse 3. In the day when the keepers of the house] The body of man is here compared to a house:—mark the metaphors, and their propriety.

1. The keepers shall tremble; the hands become paralytic, as is constantly the case, less or more, in old age.

2. The strong men shall bow] The legs become feeble, and unable to support the weight of the body.

3. The grinders cease because they are few] The teeth decayed and mostly lost: the few that remain being incapable of properly masticating hard substances, or animal food. And so they cease; for soft or pulpy substances, which are requisite then, require little or no mastication; and these aliments become their ordinary food.

4. Those that look out of the windows] The optic nerves, which receive impressions, through the medium of the different humours of the eye, from surrounding objects; they are darkened: the humours becoming thick, flat, and turbid, are no longer capable of transmitting those images in that clear distinct manner as formerly. There may be an allusion here to the pupil of the eye. Look into it, and you will see your own image in extreme miniature, looking out upon you; and hence it has its name pupillus, a little child, from pupus, a baby, a doll; because the image in the eye resembles such. The optic nerve being seated at the bottom of the eye, has the images of surrounding objects painted upon it; it looks out through the different humours. The different membranes and humours which compose the eye, and serve for vision, the tunica conjunctiva, the tunica sclerotica, the cornea, the iris, the pupil, the choroides, and the retina. The iris is perforated to admit the rays of light, and is called the pupil; the retina is a diffusion of the optic nerve, in the bottom of the eye, on which the images are painted or impressed, that give us the sensation we term sight or vision. All these membranes, humours, and nerves, are more or less impaired, thickened or rendered opaque, by old age, expressed by the metaphor, those that look out of the windows are darkened.

Verse 4. And the doors shall be shut in the streets]

5. The doors; the lips, which are the doors by which the mouth is closed.

6. Be shut in the streets] The cavities of the cheeks and jaws, through which the food may be said to travel, before it is fitted by mastication or chewing to go down the oesophagus into the stomach. The doors or lips are shut to hinder the food in ohewing from dropping out; as the teeth, which prevented that before, are now lost.

7. The sound of the grinding is low] Little noise is now made in eating, because the teeth are either lost, or become so infirm as not to suffer their being pressed close together; and the mouth being kept shut to hinder the food from dropping out, the sound in eating is scarcely heard. The teeth are divided into three kinds:—1. The Dentes incisores, or cutting teeth, in the front of the jaw. 2. The Dentes canini, dog teeth, those in the sides of the jaws, for gnawing, or tearing and separating hard or tough substances. And, 3. Dentes molares, or grinding teeth, the posterior or double teeth in both jaws, generally termed the grinders; because their office is to grind down the substances that have been cut by the fore-teeth, separated into their parts or fibres by the dog teeth, and thus prepare it for digestion in the stomach.

8. He shall rise up at the voice of the bird] His sleep is not sound as it used to be: he slumbers rather than sleeps; and the crowing of the cock awakes him. And so much difficulty does he find to respire while in bed, that he is glad of the dawn, to rise up and get some relief. The chirping of the sparrow is sufficient to awake him.

9. All the daughters of music shall be brought low] The 5 Also when they shall be afraid of that which is high, and fears shall be in the way, and the almond tree shall flourish, and the grasshopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail: because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets:

6 Or ever the silver cord be loosed or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern.

7 Then shall the dust return to the earth as voice, that wonderful instrument, almost endless in the strength and variety of its tones, becomes feeble and squeaking; and merriment and pleasure are no more. The tones emitted are all of the querulous or mournful kind.

Verse 5. When they shall be afraid of that which is high]

10. Being so feeble, they are afraid to trust themselves to ascend steps, stairs, &c., without help. And when they look upwards, their heads turn giddy, and they are ready to fall.

11. Fears shall be in the way] They dare not walk out, lest they should meet some danger, which they have not strength to repel, or agility to escape. A second childishness has taken place,—apprehensions, fears, terrors, and weakness.

12. The almond tree shall flourish] תאמר yenaate, not flourish, but fall off. The hair begins to change, first gray, then white: it having no longer that supply of nutritive juices which it once had, this animal vegetable withers, and falls off. The almond tree, having white flowers, is a fit emblem of a hoary head; or, as Hasselquist says, who observed the trees in full flower in Judea, "like an old man with his white locks."

13. The grasshopper shall be a burden] Even such an inconsiderable thing as a locust, or a very small insect, shall be deemed burthensome; their strength is so exceedingly diminished. In cases of the gout, especially in old men, the shadow of a person passing by puts them to acute pain! how much less can they bear the smallest pressure! But probably the words refer to the man himself, who bent at the loins, and his arms hanging down, exhibits some caricature of the animal in question. The poor grasshopper is become a burden to himself. Another interpretation has been given of the grasshopper; but I pass it by as impertinent and contemptible; such commentators appear as if they wished to render the text ridiculous.

14. Desire shall fail] Both relish and appetite for food, even the most delicate, that to which they were formerly so much attached, now fails. The teeth are no longer able to masticate the food, or all are dropped out; the stomach no longer able to digest any thing; and, as the body is no longer capable of receiving nourishment, appetite and relish necessarily fail.

15. Because man goeth to his long home] למ ביתו el beith bama, "to the house of his age;" the place destined to receive him, when the whole race or course of life shall be finished; for בית olam, takes in the whole course or duration of a thing: if applied to a dispensation, such as the law, it takes in its whole duration; to the life of man, it takes in the whole life; to time, it includes the whole compass; to eternity, it expresses its infinite duration. So old age terminates the olam, the complete duration of human life; and when food is no longer desired, and nutrition ceases, the olam of man is terminated. My old MS. Bible translates it, the house of his everlastingness.

16. He is just departing into the invisible world; and this is known by the mourners going about the streets, the long hollow groans, and throat-rattlings which proceed from him; the sure prognostications of the extreme debility and speedy cessation of those essential animal functions next mentioned.

Verse 6. Or ever the silver cord be loosed] We have already had all the external evidences of old age, with all its attendant infirmities; next follow what takes place in the body, in order to produce what is called death, or the separation of body and soul.

1. The silver cord] The medulla oblongata, or spinal marrow, from which all the nerves proceed; as itself does from the brain. This is termed a cord from its exact similitude to one; and a silver cord from its colour, as it strikingly exhibits the silver gray. And from its preciousness, this is said to be loosed;—as the nervous system became a little before, and at the article of death, wholly debilitated. The last loosing being the fall of the under jaw, the invariable and never-failing evidence of immediate death; a few struggles more, and the soul is dismissed from its clay tenement.

it was: and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.

8 Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher, all is vanity.

9 And moreover, because the preacher was wise, he still taught the people knowledge; yea, he gave good heed, and sought out, and set in order many proverbs.

10 The preacher sought to find out acceptable words: and that which was written was upright, even words of truth.

k Psa. 62. 9. Ch. 1. 2.—l Or, the more wise the preacher was, &c.—m 1 Kings 4. 32. n Heb. words of delight.

2. The golden bowl be broken] The brain contained in the cranium or skull, and enveloped with the membranes called the dura and pia mater; here called a bowl from its resemblance to such a vessel, the container being put for the contained; and golden, because of its colour, and because of its exceeding preciousness, as has been noticed in the former case. Broken; is rendered unfit to perform its functions, neither supplying nor distributing any nervous energy.

3. Or the pitcher be broken at the fountain] The vena cava, which brings back the blood to the right ventricle of the heart, here called the fountain, מוביל ha-mebul, the spring whence the water gushes up; properly applied here to the heart, which by its systole and diastole (contraction and expansion) sends out and afterwards receives back the blood; for all the blood proceeds from, and returns back to the heart.

4. The wheel broken at the cistern] The great aorta, which receives the blood from the cistern, the left ventricle of the heart, and distributes it to the different parts of the system. These may be said, as in the case of the brain above, to be broken, i. e. rendered useless; when, through the loosening the silver cord, the total relaxation of the nervous system, the heart becomes incapable of dilatation and contraction; so that the blood on its return to the right ventricle of the heart is not received, nor that already contained in the ventricles propelled into the great aorta. The wheel is used in allusion to the Asiatic wheels, by which they raise water from their wells and tanks, and deep cisterns, for domestic purposes, or to irrigate the grounds. Thus then the blood becomes stagnate, the lungs cease to respire, the blood is no longer acidized, all motion voluntary and involuntary ceases, the body, the house of the immortal spirit, is no longer tenable, and the soul takes its flight into the eternal world. The man D—I—E—S! This is expressed in the following verse:—

Verse 7. Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God]

5. Putrefaction and solution take place; the whole mass becomes decomposed, and in process of time is reduced to dust from which it was originally made; while the spirit, רוח ha-ruach, that spirit, which God at first breathed into the nostrils of man, and he in consequence became a living soul, an intelligent, rational, discursive animal, returns to God who gave it. Here the wise man makes a most evident distinction between the body and the soul:—they are not the same;—they are not both matter. The body, which is matter, returns to dust, its original: but the spirit, which is immaterial, returns to God. It is impossible that two natures can be more distinct, or more emphatically distinguished. The author of this book was not a materialist.

Thus ends this affecting, yet elegant and finished picture, of OLD AGE and DEATH.

It has often been remarked, that the circulation of the blood, which has been deemed a modern discovery by our countryman Dr. Harvey, in 1616, was known to Solomon, or whoever was the author of this Book; the fountains, cisterns, pitcher, and wheels, giving sufficient countenance to the conclusion.

Verse 8. This affecting and minute description of old age and death is concluded by the author, with the same exclamation by which he began his Book; O vanity of vanities, saith Koheleth; all is vanity. Now that man, the masterpiece of God's creation, the delegated sovereign of this lower world, is turned to dust, what is there stable or worthy of contemplation besides! All—ALL is VANITY!

Verse 9. Because the preacher (Koheleth) was wise, he still taught the people knowledge] And, in order to do this, he took good heed; considered what would be most useful. He set in order, collected and arranged many parables; probably alluding to the Book over which we have already passed.

Verse 10. He sought to find out acceptable words] דבר דבר dibrey chapheh, words of desire, words of will, the best, the most suitable words; those which the people could best understand. But these words were not such as might merely please the people; they were words of truth; such as came from God, and might lead them to Him.

Verse 11. The words of the wise] Doctrines of faith, illustrated by suitable language, are as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies. מְדַבְּרֵי אֱמֻנָה badley asuphoth, the master of collections, those who had made the best collections of this kind; the matter of which was of the most excellent nature: every saying sinking as deeply into the mind, by the force of the truth contained in it, as a nail well pointed does into a board, when impelled by the hammer's force. These masters of collections have been supposed to be public persons appointed by the prince himself, the sole shepherd, to see that nothing was put into the people's hands but what would be profitable for them to read; and that, when any wise man gave public instructions, a good scribe sat by, to take down the words; and then the master examined what he had written, to see that it was upright, and that the words were doctrines of truth. These were something like our licensers of the press: but the existence of such is little more than conjecture.

After all, masters of assemblies may mean public teachers; that which was written, the oracles of God, out of which they instructed the people; the one Shepherd, God ALMIGHTY, from wisdom they received their authority and unction to preach the truth; and by the energy of whose Spirit the heavenly teaching was fastened in their hearts, as a well driven nail in a sound piece of wood.

Verse 12. And further, by these, my son, be admonished] Hear such teachers, and receive their admonitions; and do not receive the grace of God in vain.

Of making many books there is no end] Two thousand years have elapsed since this was written; and since that time some millions of treatises have been added on all kinds of subjects, to those which have gone before. The press is still groaning under and teeming with books, books innumerable; and no one subject is yet exhausted, notwithstanding all that has been written on it. And we who live in these latter times are no nearer an end, in the investigation of NATURE and its properties; of God, His attributes, His providence, His justice, and His mercy; of MAN, his animal life, his mode of nutrition and existence, and his soul and its powers; of JESUS, and the redemption by Him; of ETERNITY, and what it implies as exhibiting to us the pains of the cursed, and the glories of the blessed. Of several of these we know no more than they who have lived five thousand years before us: nor do we know any thing certainly by the endless books that have been published, except what bears the seal of the God of heaven, as published in that word which was declared by His Spirit.

And much study is a weariness of the flesh.] O how true is this! Let the trembling knees, the palsied hands, the darkened eyes, the aching heart, and the puzzled mind, of every real student declare! And should none be within reach more worthy of the name of student to consult, the writer of this work is a proof in point.

Verse 13. After all, the sum of the great business of human life is comprised in this short sentence, on which some millions of books have been already written!

FEAR GOD, AND KEEP HIS COMMANDMENTS.

1. Know that HE is, and that He is a Rewarder of them that diligently seek Him. 2. Reverence Him; pay Him adoration. 3. Love Him that you may be happy.

Keep his commandments] They are contained in two words: 1. Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart; 2. And thy neighbour as thyself. Blessed be God, much reading and much study are not necessary to accomplish this, which is called כֹּל הַדָּמָה kol ha-adam; the whole of Adam; the whole which God required of the first man and of all his posterity. But the Gospel of Jesus Christ must be understood to comprehend the full force of this short saying.

The word duty, added here by our translators, spoils, if not פְּרַעַרְתָּ, the sense.

The whole passage is rendered with great simplicity by Coverdale.

"The same preacher was not wysse alone: but taught the people knowledge also. He gave good hede, sought out the grounde, and set forth many parabes. His diligence was to fynde out acceptable wordes, right scripture, and the wordes of truth. For the wordes of the wysse are like prickes and nales that go thorow, wherewith men are kepte together: for they are geven of one Shepherd onely. Therefore beware (my sonne) that above these thou make thee not many and innumerable bookes, nor take dyverser doctrynes in hande, to weery thy body withall.

"Let us heare the conclusion of all thinges: Feare God, and keepe His commandementes, for that toucheth all men; for God shall judge all workes and secrete thinges, whether they be good or evell."

I shall give the same from my old MS. Bible.

And van Ecclesiastes was most wysse he taught the peppe, and told out what he had don, and enserchinge maade many parabis. He socht profitable wordis, and wrote most ryt sermons, and ful of treuth. The wordis of wisdom are prickis and as nalls into herte pigt: that if the counseyle of maisteris ben geven of oon scheperd. Felte than thes one myn, ne seche thou; of making many booke is noon end, and oft betinking is tormenting of the besche. End of speaking alle togdyde herce mee. Weede God, and His bestis kepe; that is eche man. Alle thingis that ben maade schal bringen into dome, for eche erde thinge, whither good or evyl it be.

Verse 14. For God shall bring every work into judgment] This is the reason why we should fear God and keep his commandments. 1. Because there will be a day of judgment. 2. Every soul of man shall stand at that bar. 3. God, the infinitely wise, the heart-searching God, will be Judge. 4. He will bring to light every secret thing: all that has been done since the creation, by all men; whether forgotten or registered; whether done in secret, or in public. 5. All the works of the godly, as well as all the works of the wicked, shall be judged in that day; the good which the godly strove to conceal, as well as the evil which the wicked endeavoured to hide. This, then, will be the conclusion of the whole mortal story. And although in this world all is vanity; yet, there, "vanities will be vain no more." Every thing, whether good or evil, will have its own proper stable eternal result. O God! Prepare the Reader to give up his accounts with joy in that day! Amen.

INTRODUCTION

CANTICLES, OR SONG OF SOLOMON.

THE Book before us is called in the Hebrew שִׁיר הַשִּׁירִים SHIR HA-SHIRIM, The Song of Songs; or, An Ode of the Odes. Which might be understood, an ode taken or selected from others of a similar kind; or an ode, the most excellent of all others, this being an idiom common to the Hebrew language; e. g. The God of gods, is the supreme God.—The Lord of lords, the supreme Lord.—The King of kings, the supreme King.—The heaven of heavens, the supreme or highest heavens. It may therefore be designed to express “a song of the utmost perfection; one of the best that existed, or had ever been penned.” Perhaps the title may have a reference to the other poetical compositions of Solomon, which were no less than one thousand and five; and this was considered the most excellent of the whole, and the only one that remains, unless we suppose Solomon, with some of the Jews, to be author of Psalms lxxii. and cxxvii; but this cannot be proved.

There have been some doubts concerning the Author of this Book. Some of the Rabbins supposed it to be the work of the prophet Isaiah; but this sentiment never gained much credit. Most have without hesitation attributed it to Solomon, whose name it bears: and if the Book of Ecclesiastes be his, this will follow in course, as the style is exactly the same, allowing for the difference of the subject. Both books seem to have been written about the same time, and to have had the same Author.

This Book, if written by Solomon, could not have been written in his old age, as some have supposed the Book of Ecclesiastes to have been, which sentiment is I think sufficiently disproved; for we find that long before Solomon's old age he had seven hundred wives, and three hundred concubines: but at the time this Song was written, Solomon had only sixty wives and eighty concubines. And the Song most certainly celebrates a marriage; whether between Solomon and the daughter of Pharaoh, or between him and some Jewish princess, has not been fully agreed on among critics and commentators. It is most likely to have been a juvenile, or comparatively juvenile production; and indeed the high and glowing colouring, and the strength of the images, are full proofs of this. Though Anacreon made amatory odes when he was bald-headed, yet neither he nor any one else, humanly speaking, could have made such odes as the Canticles, when stricken in years.

But to what denomination of writing do the Canticles belong? Are they mere Odes, or Idyls, or Pastorals; or are they an Epithalamium? Let us define these terms, and examine the Song of Solomon by them. 1. The ODE is generally understood to be a species of poetry containing sublime and important matter, always sung, or accompanied by the harp, or some proper musical instrument. 2. The IDYL implies a short poem, containing some adventure. 3. The PASTORAL contains what belongs to shepherds, and their occupations. 4. The EPITHALAMIUM is the congratulatory song, sung to a new married pair, wishing them abundant blessings, a numerous and happy offspring, &c. Strictly speaking, the Book of Canticles falls under neither of these descriptions: it is rather a composition sui generis, and seems to partake more of the nature of what we call a MASK, than any thing else; an entertainment for the guests, which attended a marriage ceremony, with a dramatic cast throughout the whole, though the persons who speak and act are not formally introduced.

As to the persons chiefly concerned, it is generally believed that Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter are the bridegroom and bride; with their proper attendants, viz. companions of the bridegroom, and companions of the bride, with certain mutes, who only appear or are mentioned by others, without taking any particular part in the transactions.

But it is much more easy to satisfy oneself on the species of composition, to which this Book belongs, than to the meaning of the Book itself. Is it to be understood in the obvious manner in which it presents itself? And are Solomon and his bride, their friends and companions, to be considered as mere dramatic persons? Or are they typical or representative persons? Does this marriage represent a celestial union? Do the speeches of each contain Divine doctrines? Are the metaphors, taken from earthly things, to be understood of spiritual matters? In a word, does Solomon here represent Jesus Christ? The daughter of Pharaoh the Christian Church? Or, according to some Roman Catholics, the Virgin Mary? Are watchmen, vineyard-keepers, shepherds, &c. the ministers of the Gospel? Wine and various fruits, the influences and graces of the Divine Spirit? &c. &c.—How multitudinous and positive are the affirmative answers to these questions! And yet, though many agree in the general principle, how various their expositions of the different parts of the piece! And where, all this time, is the proof that the principle is not misunderstood? As to conjectures, they are as uncertain as they are endless; and what one pious or learned man may think to be the meaning, is no proof to any other that he should make up his mind in the same way.

Let us for a moment consider the different opinions held on this Book, without entering into the discussion of their propriety or impropriety. They are the following:—

I. It is a plain Epithalamium on the marriage of Solomon with the daughter of Pharaoh, king of Egypt; and is to be understood in no other way.

II. It is an allegory relative to the conduct of God towards the Hebrews, in bringing them out of Egypt through the wilderness to the Promised Land.

III. It is intended to represent the incarnation of Jesus Christ, or His marriage with human nature, in reference to its redemption.

IV. It represents Christ's love to the Church, or elected souls, and their love to Him.

V. It is an allegorical poem on the glories of Jesus Christ and the Virgin Mary.

VI. It is a collection of sacred idyls; the spiritual meaning of which is not agreed on.

Now each of these opinions has its powerful supporters, and each of these has reasons to offer for the support of the opinion which he espouses; and nothing but a direct revelation from God can shew us which of these opinions is the correct one, or whether any of them be correct.

The antiquity of an opinion, if that be not founded on a revelation from God, is no evidence of its truth; for there are many ungodly opinions which are more than a thousand years old. And as to great men, and great names, we find them enrolled and arranged on each side of all controversies. It may be asked, what does Christ or his Apostles say of it?

1. If Jesus Christ or any of his Apostles had referred to it as an allegory, and told us the subject which it pointed out, the matter would have been plain: we should then have had data, and had only to proceed in the way of elucidation. But we find nothing of this in the New Testament.

2. If they had referred to it as an allegory, without intimating the meaning; then we should be justified in searching every where for that meaning; and conjectures itself would have been legal, till we had arrived at some self-justifying issue.

3. If they had referred to it at all, in connexion with spiritual subjects, then we should have at once seen that it was to be spiritually understood; and, comparing spiritual things with spiritual, we must have humbly sought for its spiritual interpretation.

4. Had the Supreme Being been introduced, or referred to in any of His essential attributes, or by any of the names which He has been pleased to assume in His revelations to men, we should have then seen, that the writer was a spiritual man, and wrote probably in reference to a spiritual end; and, that we should pass by or through his letter, in order to get to the spirit concealed under it. But none of these things appear in this Book: the name of God is not found in it; nor is it quoted in any part of the New Testament. As to certain references which its allegorical expositors suppose are made to it, either in the Gospels, Epistles, or Apocalypses, they are not express, and do not, by any thing in or connected with them, appear unequivocally to point out this Book. And, after all that has been said, I am fully of opinion, it is not once referred to in the New Testament. But this is no proof of its not being canonical; as there are other books, on which there is no doubt, that are in the same predicament. But still, if it refer so distinctly to Christ and His Church, as some suppose, it certainly would not have been passed over by both evangelists and apostles without pointed and especial notice.

From all this, it will appear to the intelligent Reader, that the spiritual meaning of this Book cannot easily be made out:—1. Because we do not know that it is an allegory. 2. If one, the principles on which such allegory is to be explained, do no where appear.

Who then, are we to follow in the interpretation of this very singular Book? The Targumist, who applies it to God and the Hebrews, in their journeyings from Egypt to the Promised Land? Origen, who made it a Christian allegory? Apponius, who spiritualized it? Gregory the Great, who in the main copied them? The good man, who in 1717, at Paris, so illustrated it as "to induce men to devote themselves to Jesus Christ and the Virgin Mary?" Mr. Durham, Mr. Robotham, Mr. Ainsworth, Mr. Romaine, and Dr. Gill, who endeavour to prove that it concerns Christ and the elect? Or Mr. Harmer and others, who acknowledge it to be an inimitable composition, and to be understood only of Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter? Or, finally, Dr. Mason Goode, who considers it a collection of sacred idyls, the spiritual interpretation of which is not agreed on?

I had for a long time hesitated whether I should say any thing on this Book; not because I did not think I understood its chief design and general meaning, for of this I really have no doubt; but because I did not understand it as a spiritual allegory, representing the loves of Christ and His Church. I must own, I see no indubitable ground for this opinion. And is it of no moment whether the doctrines drawn from it, by those who allegorize and spiritualize it, be indubitably founded in it or not? The doctrines may be true in themselves, (which is indeed more than can be said of those of most of its interpreters;) but is it not a very solemn, and indeed awful thing to say, this is the voice of Christ to His Church. This is the voice of the Church to Christ, &c. &c. &c. when there is no proof from God, nor from any other portion of His word, that these things are so!

It is much better therefore, if explained or illustrated at all, to take it in its literal meaning, and explain it in its general sense. I say general sense; because there are many passages in it which should not be explained, if taken literally, the references being too delicate; and Eastern phraseology on such subjects is too vivid for European imaginations. Let any sensible pious medical man read over this Book: and, if at all acquainted with Asiatic phraseology, say whether it would be proper, even in medical language, to explain all the descriptions and allusions in this Poem.

After what I have said on the difficulty of interpreting this Book in a spiritual way, it would not be fair to withhold from the Reader the general arguments on which the theory of its allegorical meaning is founded. The principal part of the commentators on this Book, especially those who have made it their separate study, have in general taken for granted, that their mode of interpretation is incontrovertible; and have proceeded to spiritualize every figure, and every verse, as if they had a Divine warrant for all they have said. Their conduct is dangerous; and the result of their well-intentioned labours has been of very little service to the cause of Christianity in general, or to the interests of true morality in particular. By their mode of interpretation an undignified, not to say mean and carnal, language has been propagated among many well meaning religious people, that has associated itself too much with selfish and animal affections, and created feelings that accorded little with the dignified spirituality of the religion of the Lord Jesus. I speak not from report; I speak from observation and experience, and observation not hastily made. The conviction on my mind, and the conclusion to which I have conscientiously arrived, are the result of frequent examination, careful reading, and close thinking at intervals, for nearly fifty years: and, however I may be blamed by some, and pitted by others, I must say, and I say it as fearlessly as I do conscientiously, that in this inimitably fine elegant Hebrew ode I see nothing of Christ and His Church, and nothing that appears to have been intended to be thus understood; and nothing if applied in this way that, per se, can promote the interests of vital godliness; or cause the simple and sincere not to know Christ after the flesh. Here I conscientiously stand:—May God help me!

The most rational view of the subject, that I have seen, is that taken by Mr. Harmer, who has indeed detailed and strengthened the arguments of his predecessors, who have declared for the spiritual meaning. In his outlines of a comment upon Solomon's Song, he supposes that the song refers to Solomon's marriage with the daughter of Pharaoh; and that he had a Jewish queen, who is frequently referred to in the work; and that, unless this be allowed, there are several important passages in the Book that cannot be understood; and indeed it is on this principle that he finds his chief ground for a spiritual and allegorical interpretation.

"Whatever was the intention of God," says he, "in bringing about this marriage, and in causing it to be celebrated in such an extraordinary manner, by songs that were directed to be placed among the Sacred Writings, it is certain there never was any resemblance more striking between the circumstances and transactions of any of the remarkable personages of the Old Testament, and those of Messiah, than the likeness we may observe between Solomon marrying a Gentile princess, and making her equal in honour and privileges with his former Jewish Queen, and in her being frequently mentioned afterwards in history, while the other is passed over in total silence; and the conduct of the Messiah towards the Gentile and Jewish churches."

"The two remarkable things in the conduct of the Messiah towards the two churches are, the making the Gentiles follow-hers of the same body and partakers of the promises, without any difference; and the giving up to neglect the Jewish church, while that of the Gentiles has long flourished in great honour, and been the subject of many a history. St. Paul takes notice of both these circumstances with particular solemnity: of the first, in the third chapter of Ephesians, and elsewhere; of the other, in the eleventh chapter of Romans. They are points, then, that deserve great attention.

"They are both called mysteries, (Rom. vi. 25. Eph. iii. 3.) that is, things that had been concealed afortime: but it by no means follows that there were no shadowy representations of these events in the preceding ages; only that they were not clearly and expressly revealed."

"Kingdoms and cities are frequently spoken of in Holy Writ as women. Sacred as well as secular bodies of men are represented under that image. Universal Church is spoken of under the notion of a bride, and the Messiah as her Husband, Eph. v. The two churches of Jews and Gentiles, or the church under the Mosaic dispensation, and the church freed from those ceremonies, are represented as two women, (the one formerly treated as the principal wife, and the second as having been for a long time neglected, but afterwards producing a much more numerous issue than the first) by the prophet Isaiah in his fifty-fourth chapter according to the explanation St. Paul has given of that passage in Gal. iv. Particular churches are mentioned after the same manner. So, concerning the church at Corinth, St. Paul says, I have espoused you to one Husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ. 2 Cor. xi. 2.

"Since then it is common for the Scriptures to represent the Church of God under the notion of a woman, and the Messiah under that of a Husband; since the two bodies of men, that which worshipped God according to the Mosaic rites, and that which observed them not, are compared to two women; and since the circumstances of these two churches are such as I have given an account of from St. Paul; it must be acknowledged that there is a lively resemblance betwixt Solomon's espousing the Egyptian princess, and the Messiah's admitting the Gentiles to equal privileges with the Jews, whether it was or was not designed by God as an emblem and type of it: celebrated by His prophets for this cause, in holy songs; and those songs preserved with care to this day among writings of the most sacred kind on that account."

This is the whole of Mr. Harmer's argument; see his Outlines, page 74—77. And what is proved by it? Nothing in reference to this Book. We know that the Jewish people, not the church exclusively, are represented under the notion of a woman afflicted, and a wife unfaithful, divorced, and forsaken, &c. And that the Corinthians were represented under the notion of a chaste virgin espoused to Christ. And we know that all this was done to shew, that as the marriage union was the closest, strictest, and most sacred, among men; the union of the soul to God, and its connexion with Him, might be most fitly represented by that union; and unfaithfulness to Him, by infidelity in the other case. But what has this to do with the Canticles? Where is the intimation that Solomon represents Christ, Pharaoh's daughter the Church of the Gentiles, and the Jewish queen the Church of the Israelites? No where. Why then assume the thing that should be proved: and then build doctrines on it, and draw inferences from it, as if the assumption had been demonstrated?

Were this mode of interpretation to be applied to the Scriptures in general, (and why not, if legitimate here,) in what a state would religion soon be? Who could see any thing certain, determinate, and fixed, in the meaning of the Divine Oracles, when fancy and imagination must be the standard interpreters? God has not left His word to man's will in this way.

Every attempt, however well intentioned, to revive this thriftless, not to say dangerous, Origenian method of seducing the Scriptures to particular creeds and purposes, should be regarded with jealousy; and nothing received as the doctrine of the Lord but that which may be derived from those plain words of the Most High, which lie most on a level with the capacities of mankind. Allegory, metaphor, and figures in general, where the design is clearly indicated, which is the case with all those employed by the Sacred Writers, may come in to illustrate and more forcibly to apply Divine truth: but to extort celestial meanings from a whole Book, where no such indication is given, is most certainly not the way to arrive at the knowledge of the true God, and Jesus Christ whom He has sent.

As the Jewish marriages were celebrated for seven days, it has been often observed that this Song divides itself into seven periods, and describes the transactions of each.

I. The first Chapter represents the bridegroom and bride as a shepherd and shepherdess. The bride asks her spouse where he takes his flocks at noon, to preserve them from the excessive heat, lest she, in seeking him, should go astray into some strange pastures. After this day, the first night succeeds, which is pointed out, chap. ii. ver. 4, 5, 6. The bridegroom rises early in the morning, leaves the bride asleep, and goes hastily to the fields to his necessary occupations, ver. 7.

II. The second night is pointed out, chap. ii. ver. 8, 9, &c. The bridegroom comes to the window of his spouse. She opens it, and he enters; and on the morrow, he returns to the fields to his flocks, ver. 17.

III. The third night, the bridegroom having delayed his coming, the bride being uneasy, arises from her bed, and goes out and inquires of the guards of the city, whether they had seen her beloved? She had not gone far from them till she met with him; she conducts him to her apartment, chap. iii. ver. 1—4. Very early in the morning, he retires to the country, leaving the bride asleep, ver. 5. Afterwards she arises, and goes also to the fields, ver. 6.

The fourth Chapter is an eulogium on the bride's beauty; and seems to be a conversation between the parties in the country. She invites the bridegroom to visit her, chap. v. ver. 1. He leaves his friends, with whom he was feasting, and comes to the door of his spouse, ver. 2. She hesitating to let him in, he withdraws, and goes to his garden. The bride follows: but, not knowing whither he was retired, asks the guards of the city, by whom she is maltreated; thence goes to the daughters of Jerusalem, and inquires of them, ver. 3, &c. At last she meets with him, chap. vi. ver. 1, &c., and having spent some time with him, returns.

IV. Chapter vi. 9, points out the fourth night of the marriage.

V. The fifth night is pointed out, chap. vii. 1, &c. The bridegroom gives his bride nearly the same praise and commendations which he had received from her in the preceding Chapters; and early in the morning they go out together to the fields, ver. 11—13.

VI. The sixth night they pass at a village in the country, at the house of a person who is termed the bride's mother, ch. vii. 13. viii. 1—3. She invites her spouse thither, and promises to regale him with excellent fruits and choice wine; and early in the morning the bridegroom arises, leaves the bride asleep as formerly, and retires to the country, ch. viii. 4.

VII. The seventh night is passed in the gardens.—From chap. viii. 5, we have a series of dialogues between the bride and bridegroom. In the morning the bridegroom, having perceived that they were overheard, begs the bride to permit him to retire. She assents, ver. 13, 14. and exhorts him to make haste, and be like a roe, or a young hart on the mountains of spices.

This is the division, which is in the main, most followed, especially by the best critics. But, besides this, several others have been proposed: and the Reader, who wishes to enter more particularly into the subject, may consult Bishop Bossuet, Calmet, and Bishop Louth. For my own part I doubt the propriety of this technical arrangement, and do not think that any thing of the kind was intended by the Author. The division is not obvious; and therefore, in my apprehension, not natural. Of Dr. Goode's division I shall speak below.

The dramatic personæ have been marked by some of the ancient interpreters, and the different portions of the whole Song appointed to several persons who are specified: and this division served for the basis of a Commentary. The most regular division of this kind with which I have met is in a MS. of my own; the Bible which I have often quoted in my Comment.

This, attributed by some to Wiclif, and by others to an older translator, I have carefully transcribed, with all the distinction of parts and speeches. The translation is very simple; and in many cases is much more faithful to the meaning of the Hebrew text, though in the main taken from the Vulgate, than our own Version. It is a great curiosity, and certainly was never before printed; and is a fine specimen of our mother tongue as spoken in these countries in M.CCCLX. which may be about the date of this translation. On the common mode of interpretation I venture to assert that my Readers will understand this Song ten times better from this translation and its rubrics, than they have ever done from all the forms in which it has been presented to them, to the present time. For this addition, I anticipate the thanks of every intelligent Reader. The indications of the speakers printed here in black letter are all rubric, in the beautiful original. I have added a short glossary on some of the more difficult or obsolete words, which will assist the less experienced Reader, under whose notice such remote specimens of his own tongue seldom fall.

Between twenty and thirty years ago I received from India a part of the Gita Govinda, or Songs of Jayadava. This poet, the finest lyric poet of India, flourished before the Christian era; and the poem above, which makes the tenth book of the Bhagavat, was written professedly to celebrate the loves of Christna and Radha, or the reciprocal attraction between the Divine goodness and the human soul. The author leaves us in no doubt concerning the design of this little pastoral drama; for in the conclusion he thus speaks: "Whatever is delightful in the modes of music, whatever is divine in meditations on Vishnu, whatever is exquisite in the sweet art of love, whatever is graceful in the fine strains of poetry; all that, let the happy and wise learn from the Songs of Jayadava, whose soul is united with the foot of Narayan." Vishnu and Narayan are epithets of Christna, or the supreme incarnated god of the Hindoos. I found the general phraseology of this work, and its imagery as well as its subject, to correspond so much with those of the Canticles, that in the short Notes which I wrote on this book in 1793, I proposed the illustration of many of its passages from the Gita Govinda; and was pleased to find, several years after, that my view of the subject had been confirmed by that Encyclopædia of learning and science, Dr. Mason Goode, who in his translation of the Song of Songs, with critical notes, published 1803, 8vo. has illustrated many passages from the Gita Govinda.

After having made a selection from this ancient poet for the illustration of the Canticles, I changed in some measure my purpose, and determined to give the whole work, and leave it to my Readers to apply those passages which they might think best calculated to throw light upon a book which professedly has the wisest of men for its author, and according to the opinion of many, the most important doctrines of the Christian Religion for its subject. I have not followed the metrical version which I received from India, but rather the prose translation of Sir William Jones; dividing it into parts and verses, after the model of the metrical version above mentioned; and adding verbal interpretations of the principal proper names and difficult terms which are contained in the work.

Having been long convinced that the Chaldee Targum is at once the oldest and most valuable comment upon this Book, I have also added this. And here I might say that I have not only followed my own judgment, but that also of a very learned divine, Dr. John Gill, who having preached one hundred and twenty-two sermons on the Song of Solomon, to the Baptist Congregation at Horseleydown, near London, embodied them all in what he calls "An Exposition" of this Book, to which he added a translation of the Targum, with short explanatory notes, fol. 1728. This was, however, suppressed in all the later editions of this exposition: but why, I cannot tell. This piece I give to my Readers, and for the same reasons alleged by this very learned and excellent man himself:—

"At the end of this Exposition I have given," says he, "a version of the Targum or Chaldee paraphrase upon the whole book, with some notes thereon, induced hereunto by the following reasons:

"First, to gratify the curiosity of some who, observing frequent mention and use made of it in my Exposition, might be desirous of perusing the whole.

"Secondly, for the profitableness thereof. Our learned countryman Mr. Broughton says, this paraphrase is worth our study both for delight and profit. It expounds several passages of Scripture, and some in the New Testament, which I have directed to in my notes upon it; and I am persuaded that the writings of the Jews, the ancient Jews especially, would give us much light into the phraseology and sense of abundance of texts in the New Testament."

It is certain that this paraphrase does very often direct us, or at least confirm us, as to the persons speaking in this Song, to know which is of very great use in the explication of it. I shall add another reason: I believe the Book of Canticles refers more to the Jewish than to the Christian Church, and I think the Targumist has made a more rational use of it than any of his successors.

I have thus placed within the reach of my Readers three especial helps towards a good understanding of this Book.—

1. The ancient English translation with its curious dramatis personæ. 2. The Gitagovinda, a most curious poem of the spiritual and allegorical kind. 3. The Chaldee Targum, the oldest comment on this Song. And I add my prayers, May God guide the Reader into all truth through Christ Jesus. Amen.

On this part of the subject it would be almost criminal not to mention, still more particularly, Dr. Mason Good's translation and notes on the Song of Songs. He has done much to elucidate its phraseology, and his notes are a treasury of critical learning. He considers the Book to be a collection of Sacred Hymns, twelve in number; and his division is as follows:—

Royal Bride, Attendant Virgins,	Idyl I. Chap. I. Verses 2, 3, 4. Part of the fourth verse beginning; "We will exult,"	Royal Bride, Virgins, Royal Bride,	Idyl VII. Chap. V. Verses 2,3,4,5,6,7,8. 9. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16.
Royal Bride, Attendant Virgins,	— Verses 5, 6, 7. — 8.	Virgins, Royal Bride, King Solomon,	— VI. Verse 1. — 2, 3 — 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.
King Solomon, Royal Bride, King Solomon, Royal Bride,	Idyl II. Chap. I. Verses 9, 10, 11. — 12, 13, 14. — 15. — 16, 17. Ch. II. Ver. 1.	Royal Bride, Virgins, Royal Bride,	Idyl VIII. Chap. VI. Verses 11, 12. — 13. Part of ver. 13, be- ginning, "What do you expect?"
King Solomon, Royal Bride,	— II. — 2. — 3,4,5,6,7.	Virgins,	— Latter part of ver. 13, beginning, "Fortitude."
Royal Bride,	Idyl III. Chap. II. Verses 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17.	Virgins, King Solomon,	Idyl IX. Chap. VII. Verses 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. — 6, 7, 8, 9.
Royal Bride,	Idyl IV. Chap. III. Verses 1,2,3,4,5.	Royal Bride,	Idyl X. Chap. VII. Verses 10, 11, 12, 13. Chap. VIII. Verses 1, 3, 4.
Attendant Virgins, Other Virgins, Royal Bride, King Solomon,	Idyl V. Scene, a Chioek or Pavilion. Chap. III. Verse 6. — 7, 8, 9, 10. — 11. — IV. — 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7.	Virgins, King Solomon,	Idyl XI. Chap. VIII. Verse 5. — Part of verse 5, beginning, "I excited thee." — Verse 6. — 7.
King Solomon,	Idyl VI. Chap. IV. Verses 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. — Verse 16.	Royal Bride, King Solomon,	Idyl XII. Chap. VIII. Verse 8. — 9. — 10, 11, 12. — 13. — 14.
Royal Bride, King Solomon, Royal Bride,	— V. — 1. — Part of the first verse beginning; "Eat, O friend."	Royal Bride, King Solomon, Royal Bride,

There have been various opinions on this division; and many will still think that much remains yet to be done. Dr. Goode considers it a spiritual allegory: but he does not attempt a spiritual application of any part of it. This perhaps is no mean proof of his good sense and judgment. I have acted in the same way, though not so convinced of its spirituality as Dr. Goode appears to be. If I took it up in this way, I should explain it according to my own creed, as others have done according to theirs; and could I lay it down as a maxim, that it is to be spiritually interpreted in reference to the Christian Revelation, I might soon shew the Reader that it points out the infinite love of God to every human soul, in the incarnation of Christ; the means He uses to bring all mankind to an acquaintance with Himself; the redemption of true believers from all unrighteousness through the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit; their consequent holy life and godly conversation; the calling of the Gentiles; the restoration of the Jews; and the final judgment! And my comment on this plan would have just as solid a foundation as those of my predecessors, from Origen to the present day.

To conclude, I advise all young Ministers to avoid preaching on Solomon's Song. If they take a text out of it, to proclaim salvation to lost sinners; they must borrow their doctrines from other portions of Scripture, where all is plain and pointed. And why then leave such, and go out of their way to find allegorical meanings, taking a whole book by storm, and leaving the word of God to serve tables!

It is curious to see the manner in which many preachers and commentators attempt to expound this Book. They first assume that the Book refers to Christ and His Church; His union with human nature; His adoption of the Gentiles; and His everlasting love to elect souls, gathered out of both people: then take the words bride, bridegroom, spouse, love, watchmen, shepherds, tents, door, lock, &c. &c. and finding some words either similar or parallel, in other parts of the Sacred Writings, which have there an allegorical meaning, contend that those here are to be similarly understood; and what is spoken of those apply to these: and thus, in fact, are explaining other passages in Scripture their own way, while professing to explain the Canticles! What eminent talents, precious time, great pains, and industry, have been wasted in this way! One eminent scholar preaches to his congregation one hundred and twenty-two sermons upon the Song of Solomon; while all this time the evangelists and apostles have been comparatively forgotten, but as far as they may be referred to in illustration of the particular creed which such writers and preachers found on this Book. How can they account to God for so much time spent on a tract, which requires all their ingenuity and skill to make edifying, even on their own plan; a text of which they are not admitted to allege, in controversy, to prove the truth of any disputed doctrine! This, however, is not the fault of any particular class of ministers exclusively; several of all classes, though of some more than of others, have been found, less or more, labouring at this thrifless craft. Some having preached on it, during the whole of their ministry, have carried it, in a certain way, beyond the grave. An aged minister once told me, in a very solemn manner, that as God had been exceedingly merciful to him in saving his soul, and putting him in the ministry, thus accounting him faithful, he hoped that when called to the Church above, if any funeral-sermon were preached for him, it should be from Canticles, chap. i. ver. 8. Go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feed thy kids beside the shepherds' tents. That he could have applied these words to his own state, and the use which should be made of his life and death, I have no doubt: but who, from this text, would have chosen to pronounce the funeral oration?

I repeat it, and I wish to be heard by young ministers in particular; take the plainest texts when you attempt to convince men of sin, and build up believers on their most holy faith; and thus shew rather your love for their souls, than your dexterity in finding out spiritual meanings for obscure passages, on the true signification of which few either among the learned or pious are agreed.

I now, according to my promise, lay before my readers a transcript from my old MS. Bible, which is, most probably the first translation of this Song, that was ever made into the English language. I have added for the sake of reference the figures for the present division into verses, in the margin; these are not in the MS. The dramatis personæ, here in black letter, are red in the MS. The Orthography is scrupulously followed.

THE BOOK OF CANTICLES.

[Carefully transcribed from a MS. of the fourteenth century in the Editor's possession.]

Here begynnyth the Boke that is clepid Songs of Songs, of the Seruicis of Crist and of the Chyrche.

7. I adjure gou, gee dogtris of Jerusalem by the capretis and the hertis of feeldis, ne rere gee, ne makith my leef to waken, to the time that sche wille.

The boice of the Chyrche, of Crist.

8. The voice of my lemman: Loo, this commith lepinge

9. in mounteynes, and over lepinge hillis. Lic is my lemman to an capret and to an hert, calf of hertis. Loo, he stant behinden our wall beholding bi the wyn-

Ver. 10. dowis a fer lokng thurg the latises. Loo my lemman spekiþ to me: Riis, go thou my leef, my culver my

11. schappli and cum. Now forsothe wynter passide,

12. wedir geed fro, and is gon awei. Floures appeereden in oure lond—tyme of cutting is cummen; the voice of

13. the turtur is herd in oure londe. The fige tree brogt forth his first figs: The vynes flouryng geven their smell.

The boice of Crist to the Chyrche.

14. Riis, go my leef, my schapli and cum thou my culver, in the hoolis of the stoon wal. Schewe thou to me thi face, and soun thi voice in my eris; thi voice forsoth is sweet, and thi face seemli.

The boice of Crist to the Chyrche agein herytis.

15. Take gee to us litil foxis that destruyen vynes; for oure vyne flourede.

The boice of the Chyrche, of Crist.

16. My loved to me, and I to him, that is fed among lilies, to the tyme that the days springe, and schadewis ben

17. bowed in. Turne agein; lic be thou O my lemman to a capret, and to the hert, calf of hertis, upon the mounteynes of Bether.

CAP. III.

The boice of the Chyrche gedred togther of Gentilis.

1. In my litil bed bi nigus, I sougt whom lovede my

2. soule: I sogte him, and I founde not. I schal risen and gon about the cytee, by tounes and streetis: I schal sechen whom loveth my soule. I sogt him and found not.

There founden me the wacheris that kepen the cytee.

The Chyrche seyth of Crist, to the Apostilis.

4. Wheyther whom loveth my soule, gee seegen? A litil whann I hadde passid hem, I found whom lovith my soule; I heeld him and I schal not leven to the tyme that I bringe him into the hous of my moder; and into the bed of hir that gat me.

The boice of Crist, of the Chyrche.

5. I adjure gou gee dogtris of Jerusalem, by capretis and hertis of feeldis, ne reire gee, ne make gee my leef to waken to the tyme that sche wille.

The Synagoge, of the Chyrche.

6. What is sche this that stiegiþ up by desert, as a litil gerde of smoke of the swote spoces of mirre and of cense, and of al pymentarie poudre?

The boice of the Chyrche, of Crist.

7. Loo the litil bed of Salomon; sixti stronge men com-passen, of the most strong men of Israel; the whiche

8. alle ben holdinge swerdis; and to bataile best tagt.

Of eche oon the swerd upon his hip, for the nig dredis.

Of Crist, and of the Chyrche chosen of Gentilis.

9. A chaier king Salomon maad to him of the trees of

10. Liban. His pileers, he maade sylveren; the lenyng place, golden; the steiging up, purple; the myddis he enournde with charite, for the dogteris of Jerusalem.

The boice of the Chyrche, of Crist.

11. Goth out and seeth gee dogtris of Syon, Kyng Salomon, in the dyademe in the whiche crowned him his modir, in the dai of spousing of him; and in the dai of gladnesse of his herte.

CAP. IV.

The boice of Crist to the Chyrche.

1. Hou fair art thou my leef, how fair erth thou! Thyne eegen of culveris, with out it that with ine forth is hid. Thin heris as the flockis of Got, that steigiden up fro the hill of Galaad.

2. Thi teeth as the flockis of clippid sheep that steigeden up fro the wasching place. Alle with double lombis in the wombe; and bareyn is not ther among hem.

3. Als a furrede sylken fylte, thi lippis, and thi fair speche swote. Als the brekyng of a powmgarnet, so thi cheekis; without it, that withine forth litt hid. Als the tour of David thi neck that is bild out with pynaculis. A thousand scheeldis hangen of it at the armour

5. of strong men. Thi two tetis as two yunge capretis twynglingis of the capret, that ben fed in hilies: to the tyme that the day brethe out, and the schadewis ben in bowid. I schal gou to the mount of mirre, and to

7. the hill of cens. Al fair thou art my leef, and wemm
 8. cum in thee. Cumm thou fro Libane my spouse, cumm fro Liban; cum thou schalt ben crowned fro the heued of Amans; fro the frount of Sannir, and of Ermon; fro the couchis liouas, and the hill of Paradise. Thou hast woundide myn herte myn suster, my spouse, thou hast woundide myn herte in oon of thin eegen; and in oon here of thi neck. Hou fair ben thi tetis my suster, my spouse, fairer ben thi tetis than wyne; and the smell of thin oymmentis, over alle
 11. spices. A dropping honeycomb thi lippis, spouse: honey and mylc undir thi tunge; and the smell of thi clothing is, as the smell of cens. A closid gardyn my
 13. suster, spouse; a closid gardyn, a welle selid. Thyn out sendingis is paradis of paumgarnetis: with thi fruytis of applis. Of cypre tree with narde; and narde with safrun, and fystula and canel, with alle the trees of Liban, mirre and aloes, with alle the first oymmentis. The welle of gardynes, the pit of luyving wateris that flouen with burre fro Liban. Riis North, and cum South, blow thurg my gardyn, and thei schul flouen swote spices of it.

CAP. V.

The Ehrche seith of Crist.

1. Cum my leef into his gardyn; and ete the be fruyt of his applis.

Crist seith to the Ehrche.

1. Cum into my gardyn, my sistir, my spouse; I have gadered my mirre with my swote spices; I cete myn hony comb with mya hony. I dranke my wyne with my myle.

Crist to the Apostolis seith.

2. Eith gee freendis and drinkith: and gee most der-worth beth inwardli maad drunken. I sleep and myn herte wakith.

The voice of the Ehrche, of Crist.

- The voice of my Lemman knocking, open thou to me my sustir, my leef, my culver, my unwemmyd, for my heued is ful of dewe, and my temple heris of the droop-
 3. is of nigitis. I spoyhide me my coote; hou schal I be cloidid it? I waschide my feet, hou schal I beoulen
 4. hem? My lemman putte his hond bi the hool; my
 5. wombe inwardly trembled at the touching of him. I rose that I schokke openen to my lemman. My hondis droppiden mirre; and my fingris ful of best proved mirre. The lacche of my dore, I opened to my lemman; and he hadde bowid asyde and passide. My soule is moltyn as my lemman spac. I sogte and founde not him. I clepid and he answered not to me.
 7. There founden me keperis that gon about the cytes. Thei smyten me, and woundiden me; takin my mantill the keperis of the wallis. I adjure gou ye dogtris of Jerusalem, gif gee schul fynden my lemman that gee telle to him, for I languisch for love.

The voice of freendis seith to the Ehrche.

9. Whichis is thi lemman of the loved, O thou most fair of wymmen? Whichis is thi lemman of the loved? Forsoth thou hast adjured us.

The voice of the Ehrche of Crist seith to the freendis.

10. My lemman whit and roodi chosen of thousandis.
11. His heued, best gold; his her as bunchis of palmys,
12. thick leved blac as a crowe. His eegen as culveris upon litil ryvers. Of wateris that ben waschid with mylk; and sitte by the most full flowing of wateris.
13. The cheekis of litil flours of swote spices plantud of pimentaries. His lippis dropping the first myrre; the hondis of him able to turnen about, golden and ful of jacyntis. His wombe is yvren depertid by saphiris. His lippis marbil pileeris, that ben foundid upon golden feet. His fairness as of Lyban, and chosen as of cedre. The throat of him most swote; and he al desirable. Siche is my loved, and this is my lemman, gee dogtris of Jerusalem.

CAP. VI.

The voice of holl soulls of the Ehrche.

1. Whider grede awei thi lemman? O thou most fair of wymmen? Whither bowiden doun thi leef, and we schul sechen him with thee?

The voice of the Ehrche, of Crist.

2. My leef went doun into his gardyne to the floore of swote spices: that there he fed in the gardynes; and

- Ver.*
3. lilies he gadired. I to my leef, and my self, and my leef to me, that is fed among lilies.

The voice of Crist to the Ehrche.

4. Fair thou art my leef; swote and fair as Jerusalem;
5. ferful as the scheltrun of tentis ordeyned. Turne awei thin eegen fro me; for thei maden me to feen awei. Thin heris as the flockis of sche got, that apereiden
6. fro Galaad. Thi teeth as a floc of skeep that steigedeu up fro the wasching place; al with double fruyt of
7. wombe and bareyn there is not in hem. As the rynde of poumgarnet; so thi cheekis without thin hid thingis.
8. Sixty ben queenes, and eighty ben secundane wiives;
9. and of yunge waxe wymmen there is no noumbre. Oon is my culver, my perfite: oon is to her modir, chosen of hir modir; chosen of hir that gat hir. There seegen hir the dogtris of Syon, and most blisful preisen hir: the queenes and secundarie wiives preisen hir. What is sche this that goth forth as the morew tide, rising fair as the mone, chosen as the sunne; ferful as of tentis scheltrun ordeyned.

The voice of the Ehrche, of the Synagoge.

11. I went doun into my gardyne that I schulde seen the applis of valeys; and beholden gif the vynes hadden
12. flouride, and the poumgarnetis hadden burriouened, I wiste not, my soule distourbed me, for the foure horrid cartis of Amynadab.

The voice of the Ehrche to the faith of the Natyngte.

13. Turne agein, turne agein Sunamytis; turne agein, turne agein that we beholden thee.

The voice of Crist to the Ehrche, of the Synagoge.

What schalt thou seen in the Sunamyte, but queeris of tentis?

CAP. VII.

The voice of Crist to the Ehrche.

1. Hou fair ben thi goingis in schoon, thou dogtir of the prince? the joyntures of thin hippis as broochis that ben forgid with hond of the craffsman. Thin navel a turned cuppe, never needing driankis. Thi wombe as an hepe of whete, of whete set abouen with lilies.
3. Thi two tetis as two yunge capretis, gemelwis of the
4. sche capret. Thi necke as an yvren tour; thin eegen as the cysterays in Esebon; that ben in the gate of the dogtir of the multitude. Thi noose as the tour of Liban
5. that beholdith ageins damaak. Thyn heued as carnele, thin heris of thin heued as the purpore of the kyng
6. joyned to waitir pipis. Hou faire thou art, and hou
7. seemli thou most derworthe in delicis? Thi stature is lickened to a palme tree; and thi tetis to clusteris.

Crist, of the holl crosse seith.

8. I seide I schal steigen into a palme tree; and I schal taken the fruytis of it.

THE Song of songs, which is Solomon's.

2 Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth: ^b for thy love is better than wine.

3 Because of the savour of thy good ointments thy name is as ointment poured forth, therefore do the virgins love thee.

4 Draw me, we will run after thee: the king hath brought me into his chambers: we will be glad and rejoice in thee, we will remember thy love more than wine: ^c the upright love thee.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. The song of songs] A song of peculiar excellence.—See the Introduction. The Rabbins consider this superior to all songs. Tex songs, says the Targum, have been sung; but this excels them all. 1. The first was sung by Adam when his sin was pardoned.—2. The second was sung by Moses and the Israelites at the Red sea.—3. The third was sung by the Israelites when they drank of the rock in the wilderness.—4. The fourth was sung by Moses when summoned to depart from this world.—5. The fifth was sung by Joshua when the sun and moon stood still.—6. The sixth was sung by Deborah and Barak after the defeat of Sisera.—7. The seventh was sung by Hannah when the Lord promised her a son.—8. The eighth was sung by David for all the mercies given him by God.—9. The ninth is the present, sung in the spirit of prophecy by Solomon.—10. The tenth is that which shall be sung by the children of Israel when restored from their captivities.—See the Targum.

Verse 2. Let him kiss me, &c.] She speaks of the bridegroom in the third person, to testify her own modesty, and to shew him the greater respect.

Thy love is better than wine.] The Versions in general translate דודעא, thy breasts; and they are said, spiritually, to represent the Old and New Testaments.

Verse 3. Thy name is as ointment poured forth.] Ointments and perfumes were, and still are, in great request among the Asiatics. They occur constantly in their entertainments. Thy name is as refreshing to my heart, as the best perfumes diffused through a chamber are to the senses of the guests.

Therefore do the virgins love thee.] She means herself: but uses this periphrasis through modesty.

Verse 4. Draw me.] Let me have the full assurance of thy affection.

We will run after thee.] Speaking in the plural through modesty, while still herself is meant.

The king hath brought me.] My spouse is a potentate, a mighty king, no ordinary person.

Into his chambers.] He has favoured me with his utmost confidence.

The upright love thee.] The most perfect and accomplished find thee worthy of their highest esteem.

Verse 5. I am black, but comely.] This is literally true of many of the Asiatic women; though black or brown, they are exquisitely beautiful. Many of the Egyptian women are still fine: but their complexion is much inferior to that of the Palestine females. Though black or swarthy in my complexion, yet am I comely, well proportioned in every part.

As the tents of Kedar.] I am tawny, like the tents of the Arabians, and like the pavilions of Solomon, probably covered by a kind of tanned cloth. The daughters of Jerusalem are said to represent the synagogue; the bride

5 I am black, but comely, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, as the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Solomon.

6 Look not upon me, because I am black, because the sun hath looked upon me: my mother's children were angry with me; they made me keeper of the vineyards; but mine own vineyard have I not kept.

7 Tell me, O thou whom my soul loveth, where thou feedest, where thou makest thy flock to rest at noon: for why should I be ^b as one that turneth aside by the flocks of thy companions?

8 If thou know not, O thou fairest among women, go thy way forth by the footsteps of the flock, and feed thy kids beside the shepherds' tents.

f Psa. 45. 14, 15. John 14. 2.—g Or, they love that uprightly.—h Or, as one that is veiled.—i Ch. 6. 9. & 6. 1.

the church of Christ. It is easy to find spiritual meanings: every creed will furnish them.

Verse 6. Because the sun hath looked upon me.] The bride gives here certain reasons why she was dark complexioned. The sun hath looked upon me—I am sunburnt, tanned by the sun; being obliged, perhaps, through some domestic jealousy or uneasiness, to keep much without. My mother's children were angry; they made me keeper of the vineyards. Here the brown complexion of the Egyptians is attributed to the influence of the sun or climate.

My mother's children were angry with me.] Acted severely. The bringing of a foreigner to the throne would no doubt excite jealousy among the Jewish females; who, from their own superior complexion, national and religious advantages, might well suppose, that Solomon should not have gone to Egypt for a wife and queen, while Judea could have furnished him with every kind of superior excellence.

Verse 7. Tell me—where thou feedest.] This is spoken as if the parties were shepherds, or employed in the pastoral life. But how this would apply either to Solomon, or the princess of Egypt, is not easy to ascertain. Probably in the marriage festival there was something like our masks, in which persons of quality assumed rural characters and their employments.—See that fine one composed by Milton, called Comus.

To rest at noon.] In hot countries the shepherds and their flocks are obliged to retire to shelter during the burning heats of the noon-day sun. This is common in all countries in the summer heats, where shelter can be had.

One that turneth aside.] As a wanderer; one who, not knowing where to find her companions, wanders fruitlessly in seeking them. It was customary for shepherds to drive their flocks together for the purpose of conversing, playing on the pipe, or having trials of skill in poetry or music.—So VIRGIL.

Foris sub arguta considerat ilice Daphniae,
Complanataque grege Corydon et Thyris in unum;
Thyris oras, Corydon distantes lacte capellas.
Ambo forentes estationa, Arcades ambo,
Et canentes porce, et respondens parati.

Æc. vii. v. 1.

Beneath a horn repaired two jolly swains:
Their sheep and goats together graze the plains;
Both young Arcadians, both alike inspired
To sing and answer as the song required.

Dryden.

This does not express the sense of the original: for the different pastures in which they had been accustomed to feed their flocks, they drove their sheep and goats together for the purpose mentioned in the pastoral; and in course, returned to their respective pasturages, when their business was over.

Verse 8. If thou know not.] This appears to be the reply of the virgins.—They know not exactly; and, therefore, direct the bride to the shepherds, who would give information.

9 I have compared thee, O my love, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots.

10 Thy cheeks are comely with rows of jewels, thy neck with chains of gold.

11 We will make these borders of gold with studs of silver.

12 While the king sitteth at his table, my spike-nard sendeth forth the smell thereof.

13 A bundle of myrrh is my well-beloved unto me; he shall lie all night betwixt my breasts.

14 My beloved is unto me as a cluster of camphire in the vineyards of Eng-edi.

15 Behold, thou art fair, O my love; behold, thou art fair, thou hast doves' eyes.

16 Behold, thou art fair, my beloved, yea, pleasant: also our bed is green.

17 The beams of our house are cedar, and our rafters of fir.

Verse 9. I have compared thee—to a company of horses] This may be translated more literally, "I have compared thee 'le-susati, to my mare, in the chariots or courses of Pharaoh;" and so the Versions understood it. Mares, in preference to horses, were used both for riding and chariots in the East. They are much swifter, endure more hardship, and will go longer without food, than either the stallion or the gelding. There is perhaps no brute creature in the world so beautiful as a fine well bred horse or mare; and the finest woman in the universe, Helen, has been compared to a horse in a Thessalian chariot by Theocritus. Idyl. xviii. ver. 23.

Ὀδὲ καὶ ἡ χρυσὴ Ἐλένα διαφαίνεται ἐν ἡμῖν, Πειρα μὲγαλὰ δ' ἀνδραμὲν οὖμος ἀρούρα, Ἡ κίττω κικαρισσός, ἡ ἀρματὶ Θεσσαλὸς ἵππος.

"The golden Helen, tall and graceful, appears as distinguished among us as the furrow in the field, the cypress in the garden, or the Thessalian horse in the chariot."

This one passage amply justifies the Hebrew bard, in the simile before us. See Jer. vi. 2.

Verse 10. Thy cheeks are comely] D'Arvieux has remarked that "the Arabian ladies wear a great many pearls about their necks and caps. They have gold chains about their necks, which hang down upon their bosoms with strings of coloured gauze; the gauze itself bordered with zechins and other pieces of gold coin, which hang upon their foreheads and both cheeks. The ordinary women wear small silver coins with which they cover their forehead-piece like fish scales, as this is one of the principal ornaments of their faces." I have seen their essences bottles ornamented with festoons of aspers, and small pieces of silver, pearls, beads, &c.

Verse 11. Borders of gold] I have observed several of the handkerchiefs, shawls, and head attire, of the eastern women, curiously and expensively worked in the borders, with gold and silver, and various coloured silk; which has a splendid effect.

Verse 12. While the king sitteth at his table] במסבו be-misabo, in his circle; probably meaning the circle of his friends, at the marriage festivals; or a round table.

Verse 13. He shall lie all night betwixt my breasts.] Mr. Harmer contends that it is the bundle of myrrh which the bride says shall lie all night betwixt her breasts, to which she compares the bridegroom, his name being as pleasing and refreshing to her mind, as the myrrh or slacks was to her senses, by its continual fragrance.

Verse 14. A cluster of camphire] Mr. Hasselquist supposes this to mean a bunch of the Cyprus grape: but this is supposed to mean a shrub so called, not any production of the isle of Cyprus; the best kinds of which were found at En-gaddi. This place belonged to the tribe of Judah.

Verse 15. Thou hast doves' eyes] The large and beautiful dove of Syria is supposed to be here referred to; the eyes of which are remarkably fine.

Verse 16. Also our bed is green] שן ארצ, from its use in several places of the Hebrew Bible, generally signifies a mattress; and here probably a green bank is meant, on which they sat down, being now on a walk in the country. Or it may mean a bower in a garden; or the nuptial bed.

Verse 17. The beams of our house are cedar] Perhaps it was under a cedar tree whose vast limbs were interwoven with the בורג berog, a tree of the cypress kind, where they now sat. And this natural bower recommended itself to the poet's attention by its strength, loftiness, and its affording them a shady cover, and cool retreat. How natural to break out into the praise of a bower, by whose branches and foliage we are shielded from the intense heat of the sun! Even the shelter of a great rock in a rocky land is celebrated by the pen of the first of prophets, and greatest of poets. Isa. xxxii. 2.

With this Chapter the first day of the marriage ceremonies is supposed to end.

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. I am the rose of Sharon] Sharon was a very fruitful place, where David's cattle were fed. I Chron. xxvii. 29. It is mentioned as a place of excellence, Isa. xxxv. 2, and as a place of flocks, Isa. lxx. 10. Perhaps it would be better, with almost all the Versions, to translate, I am the rose of the field. The bridegroom had just before called her fair: she, with a becoming modesty, represents her beauty as nothing extraordinary, and compares herself to a common flower of the field. This in the warmth of his affection he denies, insisting that she as much surpasses all other maidens as the flower of the lily does the bramble, ver. 2.

Verse 3. As the apple tree] The bride returns the compliment; and says, as the apple or citron tree is among the trees of the wood, so is the bridegroom among all other men. I sat down under his shadow] I am become his spouse, and my union with him makes me indescribably happy.

Verse 4. He brought me to the banqueting house] Literally the house of wine. The ancients preserved their wine not in barrels or dark cellars under ground as we do; but in large pitchers, ranged against the wall in some upper apartment of the house; the place where they kept their most precious effects. We have a proof of this in Homer:—

Ὡς φαν' ὁ δ' ἑβροφρον θαλαμον καταβασατο πατρὸς Ἐβρον, ὅθι νηὸς χρυσοῦ καὶ χαλκοῦ αἴετο, Ἐσθῆς τ' ἐν χηλοῖσιν, ἄλις τ' εὐωδὸς εἰλαιῶν. Ἐν δὲ κίβωοι οἰνοῖο κελαιῶν ἕδυστοιο Ἐσσάν, ἀκρητὸν βίον ποτὸν ἐντὸς χροῖτης, Ἐξίαις ποτὲ τοιχῶν ἀρηγοῖς: εἶπα'. Ὀδύσσευς Οἰκάδ᾽ ἠνεστρεῖε, καὶ ἀλγέα πολλὰ μογρήσας. Κληῖται δ' ἔπειαν σάνιδας ποικίλους ἀραρνῆαι, Δικλιδῆς, ἐν δὲ γωνίᾳ ταμῆν νεκτὰς τε καὶ κραρ Ἐσχ', κ. τ. λ. Odys. lib. ii. ver. 337.

Mean time the lofty rooms the prince surveys Where lay th' treasures of the Ithacian race. Here, ruddy brass and gold reflecting blazed; There, polliab'd chests embroder'd' seaters gleamed. Here, pots of oil breath'd forth a rich perfume; There, jars of wine in rows adorn'd the dome. (Pure flavours wine, by gods in bounty given— And worthy to exalt the feasts of heaven.) Utouch'd they stood, till, his long labours o'er, The great Ulysseus reach'd his native shore. A double strength of bars secured the gates; Fast by th' door the woe Eurycles wait, &c. Pope.

Verse 5. Stay me with flagons] I believe the original words mean some kind of cordials with which we are unacquainted. The Versions in general understand some kind of ointments or perfumes by the first term. I suppose the good man was perfectly sincere who took this for his text; and after having repeated, stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples, for I am sick of love, sat down, perfectly overwhelmed with his own feelings; and was not able to proceed! But while we admit such a person's sincerity, who can help questioning his judgment?

Verse 7. I charge you—by the roses] This was probably some rustic mode of adjuration. The verses themselves require little comment.

With this verse the first night of the first day is supposed to end.

that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

8 The voice of my beloved! behold, he cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills.

9 My beloved is like a roe, or a young hart: behold, he standeth behind our wall, he looketh forth at the windows, shewing himself through the lattice.

10 My beloved spake, and said unto me, Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away.

11 For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone;

12 The flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land.

13 The fig tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. Arise, my love, my fair one, and come away.

14 O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs, let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely.

15 Take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the vines: for our vines have tender grapes.

16 My beloved is mine, and I am his: he feedeth among the lilies.

17 Until the day break, and the shadows flee away, turn, my beloved, and be thou like a roe or a young hart upon the mountains of Bethel.

CHAPTER III.

The bride mentions the absence of her spouse, her search after him, and her ultimate success, 1-5. A description of the bridegroom, his bed, chariot, &c. 6-11.

BY night on my bed I sought him whom my soul loveth, I sought him, but I found him not.

2 I will rise now, and go about the city in the streets, and in the broad ways I will seek him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not.

3 The watchmen that go about the city found me: to whom I said, Saw ye him whom my soul loveth?

1 Ver. 12.—a Heb. flourishing.—b Ver. 12.—c Ver. 12.—d Ch. 3. 12.—e Ps. 50. 13. Ezek. 15. 4. Luke 15. 32.

Verse 8. Behold, he cometh leaping] This appears to be highly characteristic of the gambols of the shepherds; and points out the ecstasy with which those who were enamoured ran to their mates. It is supposed that the second day's eclogue begins at this verse. The author of what was then called A new translation of Solomon's Song observes,—1. The bride relates how the bridegroom, attended by his companions, had come under her window, and called upon her to come forth and enjoy the beauties of the spring, ver. 9, 10, 11, &c. 2. She then returns to her narration, chap. iii. 1, the bridegroom did not come according to her wishes. Night came on; she did not find him in her bed; she went out to seek him—found him and brought him to her mother's pavilion, ver. 4, and then, as before, conjures the virgins not to disturb his repose, ver. 5.

Verse 9. He standeth behind our wall] This may refer to the wall by which the house was surrounded, the space between which and the house constituted the court. He was seen first behind the wall, and then in the court; and lastly, came to the window of his bride's chamber.

Verse 11. The winter is past] Mr. Harmer has made some good collections on this part, from Drs. Shaw and Russel, which I shall transcribe. One part of the winter is distinguished from the rest of it by the people of the East, on account of the severity of the cold. At Aleppo it lasts about forty days, and is called by the natives maurbanie. I would propose it to the consideration of the learned, whether the word here used, and translated winter, might not be understood to mean what the Aleppines express by the term maurbanie. It occurs no where else in the Old Testament; and another word is used for the rainy part of the year in general. If this thought be admitted, it will greatly illustrate the words of the bridegroom. Lo! the winter is past; the rain is over, is gone. For then the last clause will not be explanatory of the first, and signify that the moist part of the year was entirely past; with which, Dr. Russel assures us, all pleasantness withdraws at Aleppo: but the words will import,—“The maurbanie is past and over; the weather become agreeably warm; the rain too is just ceased, and consequently hath left us the prospect of several days of serenity and undisturbed pleasantness.”

The weather of Judea was, in this respect, I presume, like that at Algiers: where, after two or three days of rain, there is usually, according to Dr. Shaw, “a week, a fortnight, or more, of fair and good weather. Of such a sort of cessation of rain alone, the bridegroom, methinks, is here to be understood; not of the absolute termination of the rainy season, and the summer droughts being come on. And, if so,—what can the time that is past mean, but the maurbanie? Indeed, Dr. Russel, in giving us an account of the excursions of the English merchants at Aleppo, had undesignedly furnished us with a good comment on this and the two following verses. These gentlemen, it seems, dine abroad under a tent, in spring and autumn, on Saturdays and often on Wednesdays. They do the same during the good weather in winter: but they live at the gardens in April, and part of May. In the heat of the summer they dine at the gardens, as once or twice a week they dine under a tent in autumn and spring.” The cold weather is not supposed by Solomon to have been long over, since it is distinctly mentioned; and the Aleppines make these incursions very early: the narcissus flowers during the whole of the maurbanie; hyacinths and violets at least before it is quite over. The appearing of flowers then doth not mean the appearing of the first and earliest flowers, but must rather be understood of the earth's being covered with them; which at Aleppo is not till the middle of February; a small crane's bill appearing on the banks of the river there about the middle of February, quickly after which comes a profusion of flowers. The nightingales too, which are there in abundance, not only afford much pleasure by their songs in the gardens, but are also kept tame in the houses, and let out at a small rate to divert such as choose it in the city; so that no entertainments are made in the spring without a concert of these birds. No wonder then that Solomon makes the bridegroom speak of the singing of birds; and it teaches us what these birds are, which are expressly distinguished from turtle doves.

Verse 13. The fig tree putteth forth her green figs] The fig tree in Judea bears double crops; the first of which is ripe in spring. But the tree, as I have elsewhere observed, bears figs all the year through, in the climates congenial to it. That is, the fig tree has always ripe or unripe fruit on it. I never saw a healthy tree naked. But in the beginning of spring they grow fast, and become turgid.

The vines with the tender grape] The Versions understand this of the flowers of the vine. These were formerly put into the new wine (2lbs. to every cask) to give it a fine flavour.

Verse 14. My dove—in the clefts of the rock] He compares his bride hiding herself in her secret chambers and closets, to a dove in the clefts of the rock.

Verse 15. Take us the foxes] That these were ruinous to vines all authors allow. They love the vines; and are eaten in Autumn in some countries, according to Galen, when they are very fat with eating the grapes. They abounded in Judea; and did most damage, when the clusters were young and tender. It is likely that these are the words of the bridegroom to his companions, just as he was entering the apartment of his spouse. “Take care of the vineyard: set the traps for the foxes, which are spoiling the vines; and destroy their young, as far as possible.”

Verse 16. My beloved is mine] The words of the bride on his entering: “I am thy own;—Thou art wholly mine.”

He feedeth among the lilies] The odour with which he is surrounded, is as fine as if he passed the night among the sweetest scented flowers.

Verse 17. Until the day break] Literally, until the day breathe; until the first dawn, which is usually accompanied with the most refreshing breezes.

The shadows flee away] Referring to the evening or setting of the sun, at which all shadows vanish.

The mountains of Bethel.] Translated also mountains of division, supposed to mean the mountains of Beth-horon. There was a place called Bethron, 2 Sam. ii. 29, on the other side of Jordan; and, as the name signifies PARTITION, it might have had its name from the circumstance of its being divided or separated from Judea by the river Jordan.

With this Chapter the second night is supposed to end.

NOTES ON CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. By night on my bed I sought him] It appears that the bridegroom only saw the bride by night: that on the night referred to here he did not come as usual. The bride, troubled on the account, rose and sought him; enquired at the city guards; and continued to seek till at last she found him, and brought him to her apartment, ver. 2-4.

4 It was but a little that I passed from them, but I found him whom my soul loveth: I held him, and would not let him go, until I had brought him into my mother's house, and into the chamber of her that conceived me.

5 I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the hinds of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

6 Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness like pillars of smoke perfumed with myrrh and frankincense, with all powders of the merchant?

7 Behold his bed, which is Solomon's; three-score valiant men are about it, of the valiant of Israel.

8 They all hold swords, being expert in war: every man hath his sword upon his thigh because of fear in the night.

9 King Solomon made himself a chariot of the wood of Lebanon.

10 He made the pillars thereof of silver, the bottom thereof of gold, the covering of it of purple, the midst thereof being paved with love, for the daughters of Jerusalem.

11 Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, and behold king Solomon with the crown wherewith his mother crowned him in the day of his espousals, and in the day of the gladness of his heart.

CHAPTER IV.

The bridegroom's description of his bride, her person, her accomplishments, her chastity, and her general excellence, 1-16.

BEHOLD, thou art fair, my love; behold, thou art fair; thou hast doves' eyes within thy locks: thy hair is as a flock of goats, that appear from mount Gilead.

2 Thy teeth are like a flock of sheep that are even shorn, which came up from the washing; whereof every one bear twins, and none is barren among them.

3 Thy lips are like a thread of scarlet, and thy speech is comely: thy temples are like a piece of a pomegranate within thy locks.

Verse 4. Into my mother's house] The women in the East have all separate apartments, into which no person ever attempts to enter except the husband. We find Isaac bringing Rebecca into his mother's tent, when he made her his wife, Gen. xxiv. 67. What is here related appears to refer to the third night of these nuptials.

Verse 5. I charge you] The same adjuration as before, chap. ii. 7.

Verse 6. Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness] Going to Egypt was called descending or going down, coming from it was termed coming up. The bride having risen goes after her spouse to the country; and the clouds of incense arising from her palaces seemed like pillars of smoke; and the appearance was altogether so splendid, as to attract the admiration of her own women, who converse about her splendour, excellence, &c. and then take occasion to describe Solomon's nuptial bed and chariot. Some think that it is the bridegroom who is spoken of here.

With this verse the third night is supposed to end.

Verse 7. Threescore valiant men] These were the guards about the pavilion of the bridegroom; who were placed there because of fear in the night. The security and state of the prince required such a guard as this: and the passage is to be literally understood.

Verse 8. They all hold swords] They are swordsmen. Every man has a sword, and is well instructed how to use it.

Verse 9. Of the wood of Lebanon] Of the cedar that grew on that mount. It is very likely that a nuptial bed, not a chariot, is intended by the original word פרוכת אפרון. Montanus properly translates it Sponsarium Thalium, a nuptial bed. It may, however, mean a palaces.

Verse 10. The pillars—of silver] The bed-posts were made of silver, or cases with wrought silver plates, like the king's chairs brought from Hanover, now in one of the state rooms in Windsor Castle.

The bottom thereof of gold] This may refer to cords made of gold thread; or to the mattress which was made of cloth, ornamented with gold.

The covering—of purple] Most probably the canopy.

The midst—paved with love] The counterpane, a superb piece of embroidery, wrought by some of the noble maids of Jerusalem: and as a proof of their affection, respect, and love, presented to the bride and bridegroom on their nuptial day. This is most likely to be the sense of the passage, though some suppose it to refer to the whole court.

A Turkish couch is made of wooden lattices, painted and gilded: the inside is painted with baskets of flowers and nosegays, intermixed with little mottoes, according to the fancy of the artist. Solomon's couch may have been of the same kind, and decorated in the same way; and the paving with love may refer to the amatory verses worked either on the counterpane, hangings, or embroidered carpet. And as this was done by the daughters of Jerusalem, they might have expressed the most striking parts of such a chaste history of love, as Halaly's Leely and Mejnoon on the different parts. I see that Dr. Goode is of this opinion. It is sufficiently probable.

Verse 11. Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion] This is the exhortation of the companions of the bride, to the females of the city, to examine the superb appearance of the bridegroom, and especially the nuptial crown, which appears to have been made by Bathsheba, who, it is supposed, might have lived till the time of Solomon's marriage with the daughter of Pharaoh. It is conjectured that the prophet refers to a nuptial crown, Isa. lxi. 10. But a crown both on the bride and bridegroom, was common among most people on such occasions. The nuptial crown among the Greeks and Romans was only a chaplet or wreath of flowers.

In the day of the gladness of his heart] The day in which all his wishes were crowned by being united to that female, whom beyond all others he loved.

Here the third day is supposed to end.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. Thou hast doves' eyes within thy locks] Perhaps this refers rather to a sort of veil worn by many of the Eastern women, but especially in Egypt. It is a species of black cloth made of the hair of some animal, probably the black goat; is suspended from the head by silken cords, one of which comes from the crown of the head, down the forehead, to the upper part of the nose, just under the eyes, at which place the veil begins; for the forehead and the eyes are uncovered, (except the cord above mentioned, which is ornamented with gold, silver, and precious stones, according to the circumstances of the wearer.) This partial veil not only covers all the face, the eyes and forehead excepted, but the neck also; and hangs loosely down over the bosom. One of them, lately brought from Egypt, now lies before me. But the clause within thy locks מִבְּדָד לְשֵׁמֶתָּהּ is perhaps not well translated, either by ourselves, or by the Versions. Jerom's translation is an indication of the meaning, absque eo quod intrinsecus latet—without that, or independently of that which lies hidden within. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, have, besides thy silence. Calmet contends that none of these gives the true meaning; and that the word תְּשֵׁמֶתָּהּ has not the meaning of hair or locks, wherever it occurs, and has a quite different meaning in Isa. xlvi. 2. St. Jerom on this place expresses himself thus:—Nolentibus qui interpretati sunt transferre nomen quod in Sancta Scriptura sonat turpitudinem.—Ergo תְּשֵׁמֶתָּהּ, quod Aquila posuit, verenda mulieris appellantur, cujus ethymologia apud eos sonat sitiens tuis. Calmet translates, Vous êtes toute belle, mon amie, vous êtes toute belle, vos yeux sont des yeux de colombe: sans ce que la pudeur et la modestie tiennent caché. I leave the translations of these to the learned reader. See another description under verse 7.

Like a flock of goats] Because it was black and sleek as the hair of the goats of Arabia and Palestine, is known to be: which, with its fine undulation, is supposed to bear some resemblance to the curls, or plaits of a woman's tresses. The mountains of Gilead were beyond Jordan, on the frontiers of Arabia Deserta.

Verse 2. Thy teeth are like a flock] This comparison appears to be founded on the evenness, neatness, and whiteness, of the newly shorn and newly washed sheep.

Verse 3. Thy lips are like a thread of scarlet] Both lips and cheeks were ruddy; sicut fragmen mali punici.—VULGATE. Like the section of a pomegranate; that side cut off on which is the finest blush. This is a good and apt metaphor. But the inside may be referred to, as it is finely streaked with red and white, melting into each other. She had beautiful hair, beautiful eyes, beautiful cheeks and lips, and a most pleasing and dulcet voice.

Within thy locks] See on ver. 1, and on ver. 7.

4 Thy neck is like the tower of David builded for an armoury, whereon there hang a thousand bucklers, all shields of mighty men.

5 Thy two breasts are like two young roes that are twins, which feed among the lilies.

6 Until the day break, and the shadows flee away, I will get me to the mountain of myrrh, and to the hill of frankincense.

7 Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee.

8 Come with me from Lebanon my spouse, with me from Lebanon: look from the top of Amanah, from the top of Shenir and Hermon, Ch. 7. 4.—Neb. 3. 18.—w. See Prov. 5. 18. Ch. 7. 2.—x. Ch. 2. 17.—y. Heb. breathe. s. Eph. 5. 27.—4. Deut. 3. 9.

Verse 4. Thy neck is like the tower of David] It is certain that bucklers were frequently hung about towers, both for their ornaments, and to have them at hand when their use was required; see Ezek. xxvii. 10. But the allusion here may be to those pillars which are often seen in armouries, on which weapons of various kinds are hung, formed into a great variety of shapes, and very splendid. Whoever has seen the armoury in the tower of London, or such like places, has most probably seen something very similar to that of which the poet speaks.

Verse 5. Thy two breasts are like two young roes] I have met with many attempts to support this similitude, or rather to shew that there is a similitude; but I judge them unworthy of citation. The poet speaks the language of nature; and in a case of this kind, where the impassioned lover attempts to describe the different perfections of his bride, language often fails him; and his comparisons and similitudes are often without strict correctness. In love songs, we have heard the ladies' necks compared to that of the swan, not only for its whiteness, but also for its length! The description here shews more of nature than of art, which I consider a high recommendation.

Feed among the lilies] It may be the nipples especially, which the poet compares to the two young roes; and the lilies may refer to the whiteness of the breasts themselves.

Verse 6. Until the day break] Until the morning breeze. See chap. ii. ver. 17.

The shadows flee away] Till the sun sets. Mountains of myrrh] Probably the same as the mountains of Bethor, chap. ii. 17. Mountains, where the trees grew, from which myrrh and incense were extracted.

Verse 7. Thou art all fair—there is no spot in thee] My beloved, every part of thee is beautiful: thou hast not a single defect.

The description given of the beauties of Daphne, by Ovid, Metam. lib. i. ver. 497, has some similarity to the above verses:—

Spectat inornata collo pendere capillos. Et, Quid si comaster? ait. Videt igne micantes. Ederunt simul oculos; visus occulit, que non Est vilium satis. Lascit digitos, manusque Fracturæ, et nudos metta plus parte lacertos. At que latent mollera putat.

Her well turn'd neck he view'd, (her neck was bare) And on her shoulders her dishevel'd hair. O, were it combed, said he, with what a grace Would every waving curl become her face! He viewed her eyes, like heavenly lamps that shone, He viewed her lips, too sweet to view alone; Her taper fingers, and her parting breast. He prizes all he sees, and for the rest Believes the beauties put unseen the best. Dryden.

Jayadeva describes the beauty of Radha in nearly the same imagery:—"Thy lips, O thou most beautiful among women, are a bandhujiva flower; the lustre of the madhuca beams upon thy cheek; thine eye outshines the blue lotus; thy nose is a bud of the tila; the cunda blossom yields to thy teeth. Surely thou descendest from heaven, O slender damsel! attended by a company of youthful goddesses; and all their beauties are collected in thee."—See these Poems, and the short notes at the end.

The same poet has a parallel thought to that in ver. 5. Thy two breasts, &c. The companions of Radha thus address her:—"Ask those two round hillocks which receive pure dew drops from the garland playing on thy neck, and the buds on whose tops start aloft with the thought of thy beloved."

Verse 8. My spouse] The רבא callah, which we translate spouse, seems to have a peculiar meaning. Mr. Harmer thinks the Jewish princess is intended by it; and this seems to receive confirmation from the bridegroom calling her sister, ver. 9, that is, one of the same stock and country; and thus different from the Egyptian bride.

Mr. Harmer's opinion is very probable, that two queens are mentioned in this song: one Pharaoh's daughter, the other a Jewess. See his Outlines. But I contend for no system relative to this Song.

10 How fair is thy love, my sister, my spouse! how much better is thy love than wine! and the smell of thine ointments than all spices!

11 Thy lips, O my spouse, drop as the honeycomb: honey and milk are under thy tongue; and the smell of thy garments is like the smell of Lebanon.

Look from the top of Amanah, &c.] Solomon, says Calmet, by an admirable poetic fiction, represents himself as a mountain nymph, wholly occupied in hunting the lion and the leopard on the mountains of Lebanon, Amanah, Shenir, and Hermon. As a bold and undisciplined virgin, who is unwilling to leave her wild and rural retreats, he invites her to come from those hills; and promises to deck her with a crown, and to make her his bride. Thus the poets represent their goddess Diana, and even Venus herself:—

Per jura, per arvum, demagogus saeva vagatur Nuda gremio, vestem riu succincta Dianæ; Hortaturque canes; totaque animalia preda, Aut prouos lepores, aut celsum in cornua cervum, Aut agitat imago; a fortibus stultus agitur. Mel. lib. x. vet. MSS. Now buakin'd like the virgin huntress goes Through woods and pathless wilds, and mountain nooks. With her own tawful voice she begs to cheer The panting hounds that chase the flying deer. She runs the lab'rinth of the fearful lares, But fearless beasts and dangerous prey forbears.

Mount Libanus separates Phœnicia from Syria. Amanus is between Syria and Cilicia. Shenir and Hermon are beyond Jordan, to the south of Damascus and Mount Libanus, and northward of the mountains of Gilead. Hermon and Shenir are but different parts of the same chain of mountains which separates Trachonitis, or the country of Manassees from Arabia Deserta. For these places see 2 Kings v. 12, and Deut. iii. 9, where they are probably meant.

Verse 9. Thou hast ravished my heart] ליבאתי libab-tani, Thou hast hearted me, i. e. taken away my heart; as we say, he has barked the tree, i. e. he has stripped it of its bark; he has fleeced the flock, deprived them of their wool.

With one of thine eyes] בעיניך אחת be-ached me-eymeyka. This has been thought a harsh expression, and various emendations have been sought. The Masoretes have put אחת be-achath, "at once, in the margin; and this is confirmed by twenty of Kennicott's MSS.: but De Rossi does not notice it. It is scarcely necessary; and the rose to me is clear and good without it. "Even one of thine eyes, or one glance of thine eyes, has been sufficient to deprive me of all power: it has completely overcome me;" for glance may be understood, and such forms of speech are common in all languages, when speaking on such subjects. If even taken literally, the sense is good; for the poet may refer to a side glance, shot in passing by, or turning away, where only one eye could be seen. I think this a better sense than that which is obtained from the Masoretic emendation.

With one chain of thy neck] Probably referring to the play of the cervical muscles, rather than to necklaces, or ringlets of hair.

Verse 10. How much better is thy love] דודעך הדודעך. Hebrew. Masor. ev.—Septuagint. Uberta tua.—Vulgate.—Thy breasts. And so all the Versions, except the Chaldee.

Smell of thy ointments] Perfumes. Verse 11. Thy lips—drop as the honeycomb] Thy words are as delicious to my heart as the first droppings of the honeycomb are to the palate.

Honey and milk are under thy tongue] Eloquence and persuasive speech were compared among the ancients to honey and milk.

Thus Homer, Iliad, lib. i. ver. 247.

Τοιοὶ δὲ Νεσφὸς Ἡ δούρατ ἀνορθοῦν, λίγυτ σπυλιῶν ἀγορῆστ, Τεὸ καὶ ἀπο γλοσσῆτ μέλιτῶτ γλοσσῶν περὶ ἀνῶτ. Experienced Nestor, in persuasion still'd, Words must as honey from his lips distill'd.

But the figure is common in all writers and languages. A similar expression will be seen in the GitaGovinda.

Verse 12. A garden inclosed—a spring shut up—a fountain sealed.] Different expressions to point out the fidelity of the bride, or of the Jewish queen.—See the Outlines. She is unsullied, a chaste pure virgin. None has ever entered into this garden; none has yet tasted of this spring: the seal of this fountain has never been broken. All this is plain: but how many will make metaphors out of metaphors!

Verse 13. Thy plants are an orchard of pomegranates] This seems to refer to the fecundity of the bride, or Jewish queen: to the former, it would be a prediction; to the latter, a statement of what had already taken place. The word פריה paredes, which we translate an orchard, is the same which has given birth to our paradise, a garden of pleasure. The other expressions in this and the following verse seem to refer wholly to matters of a connubial nature.

Verse 15. A fountain of gardens] Perhaps פוֹן גַּנִּים, gardens, was originally פוֹן חַיִּים, lives—a living fountain, a continual spring.—See Houbigant. But this is expressed afterwards, though there would be nothing improper in saying a living fountain, a well of living waters, and streams from Mount Lebanon. A fountain of gardens, may mean one so abundant as to be sufficient to supply many gardens, to water many plots of ground; an exuberant fountain. This is the allusion; the reference is plain enough.

Verse 16. Awake, O north wind, and come, thou south] It is granted that the south wind in Palestine, in the summer, is extremely hot and troublesome; therefore, another interpretation of this passage has been proposed by Mr. Harmer; who thinks "אֶרְבָּא בּוֹרִי, which we render come, signifies enter into thy repositories: and, therefore, supposes the true interpretation of the words to be as follows:—Arise, thou north wind, (and retire, thou south,) blow upon my garden: let the spices thereof flow forth, that my beloved may come into his garden invited by the coolness and fragrantcy of the air, and may eat his pleasant fruits; for, if the south wind blow, the excessive heat will forbid his taking the air, and oblige him to shut close the doors and windows of his apartments." Others think that he wishes the winds from all directions to carry throughout the land the fume of his spices, virtue, and perfections.

Let my beloved come into his garden] This is the invitation of the bride: and if we look not for far-fetched meanings, the sense is sufficiently evident. But commentators on this Song sometimes take a literal sense where the metaphor is evident; at other times they build an allegory upon a metaphor. The GitaGovinda has an elegant passage similar to this. See the place, Part vii. beginning with, Enter, sweet Radha.

The whole of this Chapter is considered to be unconnected with any particular time of the marriage ceremonies.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. I am come into my garden] אֶרְבָּא בּוֹרִי, I came, or have come; this should be translated in the past tense, as the other preterite verbs in this clause. I think the latter clause of the preceding verse should come in here: Let my beloved come into his garden, and eat his pleasant fruits. I have come into my garden, my sister, callah, or spouse; I have gathered my myrrh, &c. I have taken thee for my spouse, and am perfectly satisfied that thou art pure and immaculate.

Eat, O friends; drink, abundantly] These are generally supposed to be the words of the bridegroom, after he returned from the nuptial chamber, and exhibited those 4 My beloved put in his hand by the hole of the door, and my bowels were moved for him.

5 I rose up to open to my beloved; and my hands dropped with myrrh, and my fingers with sweet smelling myrrh, upon the handles of the lock.

signs of his wife's purity which the customs of those times required. This being a cause of universal joy, the entertainment is served up; and he invites his companions, and the friends of both parties, to eat and drink abundantly, as there was such a universal cause of rejoicing. Others think that these are the words of the bride to her spouse: but the original will not bear this meaning; the verbs are all plural.

Verse 2. I sleep, but my heart waketh] This is a new part; and some suppose that the fifth day's solemnity begins here. Though I sleep; yet so impressed is my heart with the excellencies of my beloved, that my imagination presents him to me in the most pleasing dreams throughout the night. I doubt whether the whole, from this verse to the end of the seventh, be not a dream: several parts of it bear this resemblance; and I confess there are some parts of it, such as her hesitating to rise, his sudden disappearance, &c. which would be easier of solution on this supposition. Or part of the transactions mentioned might be the effects of the dream she had, as rising up suddenly, and going out into the street, meeting with the watchmen, &c. before she was well awake. And her being in so much disorder and dishabille might have induced them to treat her as a suspicious person, or one of questionable character. But it is most likely the whole was a dream.

For my head is filled with dew] She supposed he had come in the night; and was standing without wet, and exposed to the inclemency of the weather.

Verse 3. I have put off my coat] The bride must have been in a dream, or in much disorder of mind, to have made the frivolous excuses here mentioned. The words relate to the case of a person who had gone to take rest on his bed. As they wore nothing but sandals, they were obliged to wash their feet previously to their lying down. I have washed my feet, taken off my clothes, and am gone to bed: I cannot therefore be disturbed.

Verse 4. My beloved put in his hand] If it were a real scene, which is mentioned in this and the two following verses, it must refer, from the well known use of the metaphors, to matrimonial endearments. Or, it may refer to his attempts to open the door, when she hesitated to arise, on the grounds mentioned ver. 3. But this also bears every evidence of a dream.

Verse 5. My hands dropped with myrrh] It was a custom among the Romans, as Brissotius, Isidore, and others relate, to conduct the bride to the house of the bridegroom with lighted torches; and those who brought her anointed the door-posts with fragrant oils, whence the name uzor, or as it was formerly written uzor, for a wife or married woman, because of the anointing which took place on the occasion; for sometimes the bride herself anointed the door-posts, and sometimes those who brought her; probably both at the same time. The same custom might have existed among the Jews.—See Vossius' Etymologicon.

Verse 7. Took away my veil] They tore it off rudely, to discover who she was.—See on ver. 2. To tear the veil, signifies, in Eastern phrase, to deflower or dishonour a woman.

Verse 8. I am sick of love] "I am exceedingly concerned for his absence; and am distressed on account of my thoughtless carriage towards him." The latter clause may be well translated, What should ye tell him? Why, that I am sick of love. This ends the transactions of the third day and night.

Verse 9. What is thy beloved more than another beloved? This question gives the bride an opportunity to break out into a highly wrought description of the beauty and perfection of her spouse.

Verse 10. My beloved is white and ruddy Red and white, properly mixed, are essential to a fine complexion; and this is what is intimated: he has the finest complexion among ten thousand persons; not one in that number is equal to him. Literally, he bears the standard among ten thousand men; or, he is one before whom a standard is borne, i. e. he is captain or chief of the whole.

Verse 11. His head is as the most fine gold He has the most beautiful head, fine and majestic. Gold is here used to express excellence.

His locks are bushy Crisped or curled. This may refer to his mustachios.

Black as a raven His hair is black and glossy.

Verse 12. His eyes are as the eyes of doves See on chap. iv. ver. 1.

Washed with milk The white of the eye, exceedingly white. By the use of stibium, in the East, the eye is rendered very beautiful; and receives such a lustre from the use of this article, that, to borrow the expression of a late traveller, "their eyes appear to be swimming in bliss." I believe this expression to be the meaning of the text.

Fitly set Or, as the margin very properly, sitting in fitness; not sunk, not contracted.

Verse 13. His cheeks are as a bed of spices Possibly meaning a bed in the garden, where odoriferous herbs grew. But it has been supposed to refer to his beard, which in a young well made man is exceedingly beautiful. I have seen young Turks, who had taken much care of their beards, mustachios, &c. look majestic. Scarcely any thing serves to set out the human face to greater advantage than the beard, when kept in proper order. Females admire it in their suitors and husbands. I have known cases, where they not only despised but execrated Europeans, whose faces were close shaved. The men perfume their beards often; and this may be what is intended by spices and sweet-smelling myrrh.

His lips like lilies The arvose shoshanim, may mean any flower of the lily kind, such as the rubens lilium, mentioned by Pliny, or something of the tulip kind. There are tints in such flowers that bear a very near resemblance to a fine ruby lip.

Verse 14. His hands—gold rings set with the beryl This really seems to refer to gold rings set with precious stones on the fingers, and perhaps to circlets or bracelets about the wrists. Some suppose it to refer to the roundness and exquisite symmetry of the hand and fingers. Or, beryl, which we translate beryl, a gem of a sea green tincture, had better be translated chrysolite, which is of a gold colour.

His belly—bright ivory overlaid with sapphires. This must refer to some garment set with precious stones, which went round his waist, and was peculiarly remarkable. If we take it literally, the sense is plain enough. His belly was beautifully white, and the blue veins appearing

CHAPTER VI.

The companions of the bride inquire after the bridegroom, 1—3. A description of the bride, 4—18

WHITHER is thy beloved gone, O thou fairest among women? whither is thy beloved turned aside? that we may seek him with thee.

2 My beloved is gone down into his garden, to the beds of spices, to feed in the gardens, and to gather lilies.

3 I am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine: he feedeth among the lilies.

4 Thou art beautiful, O my love, as Tirzah, comely as Jerusalem, terrible as an army with banners.

5 Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me: thy hair is as a flock of goats that appear from Gilead.

6 Thy teeth are as a flock of sheep, which go up from the washing, whereof every one beareth twins, and there is not one barren among them.

7 As a piece of a pomegranate are thy temples within thy locks.

under the skin resembled the sapphire stone. But one can hardly think that this was intended.

Verse 15. His legs are as pillars of marble Exquisitely turned and well-shaped; the sockets of gold may refer to his slippers. On these a profusion of gold and ornaments are still lavished in Asiatic countries.

His countenance is as Lebanon As Lebanon exalts its head beyond all the other mountains near Jerusalem; so my beloved is tall and majestic, and surpasses in stature and majesty all other men. He is also as straight and as firm as the cedars.

Verse 16. His mouth is most sweet His eloquence is great, and his voice is charming. Every word he speaks is sweetness, mildness, and benevolence itself. Then her powers of description failing, and metaphor exhausted, she cries out,—The whole of him is loveliness. This is my beloved, and this is my companion, O ye daughters of Jerusalem.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VI.

Verse 1. Whither is thy beloved gone? These words are supposed to be addressed to the bride by her own companions; and are joined to the preceding Chapter by the Hebrew, and all the Versions.

Verse 2. My beloved is gone down into his garden The answer of the bride to her companions.

Verse 4. Beautiful—as Tirzah This is supposed to be the address of Solomon to the bride. Tirzah was a city in the tribe of Ephraim (Josh. xi. 24), and the capital of that district. It appears to have been beautiful in itself, and beautifully situated, for Jeroboam made it his residence before Samaria was built; and it seems to have been the ordinary residence of the kings of Israel, 1 Kings xiv. 17; xv. 53. Its name signifies beautiful or delightful.

Comely as Jerusalem This was called the perfection of beauty, Psa. lxxviii. 2, 3; 1, 2. And thus the poet compares the bride's beauty to the two finest places in the land of Palestine, and the capitals of the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah.

Terrible as an army with banners This has been supposed to carry an allusion to the caravans in the East; and the manner in which they are conducted in their travels by night. The caravans are divided into companies, called cottors, according to Thevenot; and each company is distinguished by the form of the brazier in which they carry their lights. After night, these braziers are placed on the ends of long poles, and carried by a person who walks at the head of the company. Some have ten or twelve lights, and are of different forms; some triangular, or like an N, some like an M, by which each pilgrim readily knows his own company, both by night and day. A whole caravan, composed of many thousands of hadgees or pilgrims, divided into various cottors or companies, each having its own distinguishing brazier or light, must necessarily produce a very splendid, if not a terrible appearance.

Verse 5. Turn away thine eyes As the sight of so many fires after night was extremely dazzling, and the eye could not bear the sight; so the look of the bride was such as pierced the heart, and quite overwhelmed the person who met it. Hence the bridegroom naturally cries out, Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me.

CHAPTER VII.

A further description of the bride, 1-8. Her invitation to the bridegroom, 10-12.

8 There are threescore queens, and fourscore concubines, and virgins without number.

9 My dove, my undefiled is but one; she is the only one of her mother, she is the choice one of her that bare her. The daughters saw her, and blessed her; yea, the queens and the concubines, and they praised her.

10 Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners?

11 I went down into the garden of nuts to see the fruits of the valley, and to see whether the vine flourished, and the pomegranates budded.

12 Or ever I was aware, my soul made me like the chariots of Ammi-nadib.

13 Return, return, O Shulamite; return, return, that we may look upon thee. What will ye see in the Shulamite? As it were the company of two armies.

HOW beautiful are thy feet with thy shoes, O prince's daughter! the joints of thy thighs are like jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman.

2 Thy navel is like a round goblet, which wanteth not liquor: thy belly is like a heap of wheat set about with lilies.

3 Thy two breasts are like two young roes that are twins.

4 Thy neck is as a tower of ivory: thine eyes like the fishpools in Heshbon, by the gate of Bath-rabbim: thy nose is as the tower of Lebanon which looketh toward Damascus.

5 Thine head upon thee is like Carmel, and the hair of thine head like purple; the king is held in the galleries.

6 How fair and how pleasant art thou, O love, for delights;

Verse 8. There are threescore queens] Though there be sixty queens and eighty concubines, or secondary wives, and virgins innumerable, in my harem; yet thou, my dove, my undefiled, art now achah, one, the only one, she in whom I delight beyond all.

Verse 9. The daughters saw her, and blessed her] Not only the Jewish women in general spoke well of her on her arrival; but the queens and concubines praised her as the most accomplished of her sex.

With this verse the fourth night of the marriage week is supposed to end.

Verse 10. Looketh forth as the morning] The bride is as lovely as the dawn of day, the Aurora, or perhaps the morning star, Venus. She is even more resplendent, she is as beautiful as the Moon. She even surpasses her, for she is as clear and bright as the Sun; and dangerous withal to look on, for she is as formidable as the vast collection of lights that burn by night at the head of every company in a numerous caravan. See the note on ver. 4. The comparison of a fine woman to the splendour of an unclouded full moon, is continually recurring in the writings of the Asiatic poets.

Verse 11. I went down into the garden of nuts] I believe this and the following verse refer at least to the preparations for a farther consummation of the marriage, or examination of the advancement of the bride's pregnancy. But many circumstances of this kind are so interwoven, and often anticipated, and also postponed, that it is exceedingly difficult to arrange the whole so as to ascertain the several parts, and who are the actors and speakers. But other writers find no difficulty here; because they have their system, and that explains all things.

It is probably not the hazel, but the almond nut, that is referred to here.

Verse 12. The chariots of Ammi-nadib] Probably for their great speed these chariots became proverbial. The passage marks a strong agitation of mind, and something like what we term palpitation of the heart. As I am not aware of any spiritual meaning here, I must be excused from commenting on that which is literal. Ammi-nadib signifies my noble or princely people: but it may here be a proper name, and Ammi-nadib might be celebrated for his skill and rapidity in driving, as Jehu was.

Verse 13. Return, O Shulamite] This appears to be addressed to the bride, as now the confirmed, acknowledged wife of Solomon: for shulamith, appears to be a feminine formed from shalemoh, or shalemon, as we form Charlotte from Charles; Henrietta from Henry; Janelle from John, &c.

The company of two armies] Or the musicians of the camps. She is as terrible as hosts of armed men, on the ground of what is said on verses 4, 5. The two armies may refer to the choirs of the bride's virgins, and the bridegroom's companions: but the similitude is not very perceptible. The Targum explains it of "the camps of Israel and Judah;" as if the bridegroom should say, My beloved possesses all the perfections both of the Israelitish and Jewish women. But how little satisfaction do the best conjectures afford.

With this Chapter the fifth night is supposed to end.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. How beautiful are thy feet with shoes] "How graceful is thy walking." In the sixth Chapter, the bridegroom praises the Shulamite, as we might express it, from head to foot. Here he begins a new description, taking her from foot to head.

The shoes, sandals, or slippers, of the Eastern ladies are most beautifully formed, and richly embroidered. The majestic walk of a beautiful woman in such shoes is peculiarly grand. And to show that such a walk is intended, he calls her a prince's daughter.

The joints of thy thighs] Must refer to the ornaments on the beautiful drawers, which are in general use among ladies of quality in most parts of the East.

Verse 2. Thy navel is like a round goblet] This may also refer to some ornamental dress about the loins. These suppositions are rendered very probable from hundreds of the best finished and highly decorated drawings of Asiatic ladies in my own collection, where every thing appears in the drawings, as in nature.

A heap of wheat set about with lilies.] This is another instance of the same kind. The richly embroidered dresses in the above drawings may simply illustrate this also. Ainsworth supposes the metaphor is taken from a pregnant woman; the child in the womb being nourished by means of the umbilical cord or navel string, till it is brought into the world. After which it is fed by means of the mother's breasts, which are immediately mentioned. Possibly the whole may allude to the bride's pregnancy.

Verse 3. Thy two breasts] Where the hair and breasts are fine, they are the highest ornaments of the person of a female.

Verse 4. Thy neck—as a tower of ivory] High, white, and ornamented with jewelry, as the tower of David was with bucklers. See on chap. iv. 4.

The fishpools in Heshbon] Clear, bright, and serene. These must have been very beautiful to have been introduced here in comparison. These two fountains appear to have been situated at the gate that led from Heshbon to Rabba, or Rabboth Ammon. There is a propriety in this metaphor, because fountains are considered to be the eyes of the earth.

Thy nose—as the tower of Lebanon] There was doubtless a propriety in this similitude also which cannot now be discerned. If we are to understand the similitude as taken from the projecting form of the nose, even here I see nothing striking in the metaphor; for surely the tower of Lebanon did not project from the mountain, as the human nose does from the face. It is better to acknowledge that there was undoubtedly some fit resemblance: but in what circumstance we know not. But some commentators are always extolling the correctness of the imagery in those very difficult places, where no soul sees the similitude but themselves.

Verse 5. Thine head—like Carmel] Rising majestically upon thy neck, and above thy shoulders, as mount Carmel does in its district. Carmel was the name of the mountain where Elijah had his contest with the prophets of Baal, see 1 Kings xviii. 19, &c.

The hair of thine head like purple] Ornamented with ribands and jewelry of this tint.

The king is held in the galleries] Or is detained in the antichamber. His heart is captivated by thy person and conduct. Some understand the ringlets of the bride's hair.

Verse 6. How fair and how pleasant] Thou art every way beautiful, and in every respect calculated to inspire pleasure and delight.

7 This thy stature is like to a palm tree, and thy breasts to clusters of grapes.

8 I said, I will go up to the palm tree, I will take hold of the boughs thereof: now also thy breasts shall be as clusters of the vine, and the smell of thy nose like apples;

9 And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine for my beloved, that goeth down sweetly, causing the lips of those that are asleep to speak.

10 I am my beloved's, and his desire is toward me.

11 Come, my beloved, let us go forth into the field; let us lodge in the villages.

12 Let us get up early to the vineyards; let us see if the vine flourish, whether the tender grape appear, and the pomegranates bud forth: there will I give thee my loves.

13 The mandrakes give a smell, and at our gates are all manner of pleasant fruits, new and old, which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved.

Verse 7. Like to a palm tree] Which is remarkably straight, taper, and elegant.

And thy breasts to clusters of grapes] Dates are the fruit of the palm tree, they grow in clusters; and it is these, not grapes, which are intended.

Verse 8. I will go up to the palm tree] I will take hold on the boughs of this tree, and climb up by them, in order to gather the clusters of dates at the top. The rubric here in the Old MS. interprets this of the cross of Christ.

Verse 9. The roof of thy mouth is like the best wine] The voice or conversation of the spouse is most probably what is meant.

Causing the lips of those that are asleep to speak.] As good wine has a tendency to cause the most backward to speak fluently, when taken in moderation; so a sight of thee, and hearing the charms of thy conversation, is sufficient to excite the most taciturn to speak, and even to become eloquent in thy praises.

Verse 10. I am my beloved's, and his desire is toward me.] It is worthy of remark that the word which we translate his desire, is the very same used Gen. iii. 16, thy desire, thy ruling appetite, רצונך teshukatec, shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee. This was a part of the woman's curse. Now here it seems to be reversed; for the bride says, I am my beloved's, and his desire, or ruling appetite and affection, רצונך teshukato, is by אלה, upon me. The old MS. translates this with considerable force, I to my leaf, and to me the turnpage of him.

Verse 11. Let us go forth into the field] It has been conjectured that the bridegroom arose early every morning, and left the bride's apartments, and withdrew to the country; often leaving her asleep, and commanding her companions not to disturb her till she should awake of herself. Here the bride wishes to accompany her spouse to the country, and spend a night at his country-house.

Verse 12. Let us get up early to the vineyards] When in the country, we shall have the better opportunity to contemplate the progress of the spring vegetation; and there she promises to be peculiarly affectionate to him.

Verse 13. The mandrakes give a smell] See the Note on Gen. xxx. 14, where the mandrake is particularly described; from which this passage will receive considerable light. The Reader is requested to consult it.

All manner of pleasant fruits] Fruits new and old; flowers and herbs of every kind which the season could yield. The literal sense, allowing for the concealing metaphors, is, I believe, of a widely different nature from what is generally given. But this must be left to the Reader's sagacity and prudence.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VIII.

Verse 1. O that thou wert as my brother] The bride fearing that her fondness for her spouse might be construed into too great a familiarity, wishes that he were her little brother; and then she might treat him in the most affectionate manner, and kiss him even in the streets, without suspicion, and without giving offence to any one.

Verse 2. Would—bring thee into my mother's house, who would instruct me] She would teach me how to conduct myself towards thee; as she would how to nurse a young child.

mother! when I should find thee without, I would kiss thee; yea, I should not be despised.

2 I would lead thee, and bring thee into my mother's house, who would instruct me: I would cause thee to drink of spiced wine of the juice of my pomegranate.

3 His left hand should be under my head, and his right hand should embrace me.

4 I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, until he please.

5 Who is this that cometh up from the wilderness, leaning upon her beloved? I raised thee up under the apple tree: there thy mother brought thee forth; there she brought thee forth that bare thee.

6 Set me as a seal upon thine heart, as a seal upon thine arm: for love is strong as death; jealousy is cruel as the grave: the coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a most vehement flame.

7 Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it: if a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would be utterly contemned.

To drink of spiced wine] Wine rendered peculiarly strong and invigorating. The bride and bridegroom on the wedding-day both drank out of the same cup, to shew that they were to enjoy, and equally bear together, the comforts and adversities of life.

Verse 3. His left hand] See on chap. ii. ver. 6.

With the fourth verse, the sixth night of the marriage week is supposed to end.

Verse 5. That cometh up from the wilderness] Perhaps the words of the daughters of Jerusalem,—seeing the bride returning from the country, leaning on the arm of her beloved,—who are filled with admiration at her excellent carriage and beauty.

I raised thee up under the apple tree] The original of this clause is obscure, and has given birth to various translations. The following is nearly literal:—"Under the apple tree I excited thee (to espouse me); there, thy mother contracted thee;—there, she that brought thee forth contracted thee (to me). Or, it may be understood of the following circumstance:—The bridegroom found her once asleep under an apple tree, and awoke her; and this happened to be the very place where her mother, taken in untimely labour, had brought her into the world." And here the bridegroom, in his fondness and familiarity, recalls these little adventures to her memory.

The Vulgate gives this an abominable meaning.

Sub arbore malo suscitavi te: ibi corrupta est mater tua; ibi violata est generis tua. "I raised thee up under the apple tree: it was there, that thy mother was corrupted; it was there, that she who brought thee forth, was violated." Spiritually, all this is applied to Eve losing her purity by sin; and Jesus as the promised Seed raising her up by the promise of mercy, through the blood of His cross. But the text says nothing of this.

Verse 6. Set me as a seal upon thine heart] It was customary in the Levant and other places to make impressions of various kinds upon the arms, the breast, and other parts. I have seen these often: some slight punctures are made; and the place rubbed over with a sort of blue powder that, getting between the cuticle and cutis, is never discharged; it continues in all its distinctness throughout life. The figures of young women are frequently thus impressed on the arms and on the breasts. If the bride alludes to any thing of this kind, which is very probable, the interpretation is easy. Let me be thus depicted upon thine arm, which being constantly before thy eyes, thou wilt never forget me: and let me be thus depicted upon thy breast, the emblem of the share I have in thy heart and affections. Do this as a proof of the love I bear to thee, which is such, that nothing but death can destroy; and do it, to prevent any jealousy I might feel, which is as cruel as the grave; and as deadly as fiery arrows, or poisoned darts shot into the body.

A most vehement flame.] שאלהבתיה shalhebetiah, the flame of God; for the word is divided מן שאלהבתיה shalhebetiah, the flame of Jehovah, by one hundred and sixteen of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. and by one hundred and fourteen of those of De Rossi. It may mean the lightning; or, as our text understands it, a most vehement or intense fire.

8 ⁸ We have a little sister, and she hath no breasts: what shall we do for our sister in the day when she shall be spoken for?

9 If she be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver: and if she be a door, we will inclose her with boards of cedar.

10 I am a wall, and my breasts like towers: then was I in his eyes as one that found favour.

11 Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hamon; he let out the vineyard unto keepers; every one for the fruit thereof was to bring a thousand pieces of silver.

12 My vineyard which is mine, is before me: thou, O Solomon, must have a thousand, and those that keep the fruit thereof two hundred.

13 Thou that dwellest in the gardens, the companions hearken to thy voice: cause me to hear it.

Verse 7. Many waters] Neither common, nor uncommon adversities, even of the most ruinous nature, can destroy love, when it is pure; and pure love is such that nothing can procure it. If it be not excited naturally, no money can purchase it, no property can procure it, no arts can persuade it. How vain is the thought of old rich men hoping to procure the affections of young women, by loading them with resents and wealth. No woman can command her affections; they are not in her power. Where they do not rise spontaneously, they can never exist. If a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would be utterly contemned. Let the old, as well as the gay and the giddy, think of this.

Verse 8. We have a little sister] This young girl belonged most probably to the bride.

She hath no breasts] She is not yet marriageable. What shall we do for our sister] How shall we secure her comfort and welfare.

In the day when she shall be spoken for] When any person shall demand her in marriage.

Verse 9. If she be a wall] All these expressions, says Calmet, shew that it was necessary to provide a husband for this young sister. For a woman without a husband is like a wall without towers, and without defence; is like a gate or door without bar or lock; and like a city without walls. They must, therefore, provide for their sister a rich, powerful, and illustrious man; qualities here figured by towers or palaces of silver, and doors of cedar. As it is customary to build towers upon a wall, and to put bells and bars upon a door, in order to secure it; so the expressions may point out the defence, protection, and guardianship, which they imagined this young woman to require.

Verse 10. I am a wall, and my breasts like towers] I am become marriageable, and I stood in need of the defence I have now in my beloved; and as soon as I was so, and became pleasing in the eyes of my beloved, I was given to him in marriage, and have ever since found favour in his sight. As soon then as my sister is in my state, let a proper match be sought out for her. These expressions shew the solicitude which the bride felt for her sister; and in her favour she wishes to interest her spouse.

Verse 11. Solomon had a vineyard] Calmet translates and paraphrases the Hebrew of these two verses thus:—"Ver. 11. Solomon has a vineyard at Baal-hamon; he has let it out to keepers, each of whom for the fruit of it was to bring a thousand pieces of silver. Ver. 12. As for me, my vineyard is before me; that is, it is my own.

I am its proprietor; keep thyself, O Solomon, thy thousand pieces of silver, and let those who dress (thy vineyard) have two hundred for their trouble. I neither envy thee of thy vineyard, nor them of their profits. I am satisfied with my own. My beloved is my vineyard—my heritage; I would not change him for all the riches of the universe."

Some suppose that there is a reference here to some property which Pharaoh had given to Solomon with his daughter. See Harmer's Outline, where this subject is considered at large.

Verse 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens] This is supposed to refer to the bridegroom asking permission of his spouse early in the morning to retire, as was his usual custom.—He intimates the companions were waiting to hear, and he wished to hear it in the way of permission to depart.

Verse 14. Make haste, my beloved] These appear to be the words of the bride giving permission, but entreating him to speed his return. What these mountains of spices were we cannot particularly tell; but they must have been thus named from their producing the trees on which the spices grew. They might have been the same as the mountains of Bethel, chap. ii. 17, or the mountains of myrrh, chap. iv. 6, where see the Notes.

Thus ends this most singular Book; the oldest pastoral in the world, if it rank among this species of writing. And to whatever species of composition it belongs, it is, beyond all controversy, the finest, the most sublime for imagery and colouring; that ever came from the pen of man.

Here ends the seventh night of the marriage week.

In the preceding Notes I have carefully avoided all attempts to spiritualize this Song. My reasons I have already given in the Introduction; and in the course of writing these short notes I have seen no cause to alter my opinion. Any man may allegorize it; that is an easy matter; for when he once considers it to be an allegory, his own creed will furnish him with enough to say, write, or preach, upon the spiritual meanings of every part, which will be an exhibition of his own confession of faith! But when he has finished his work, the question will recur, By what authority do you give it these meanings? And till the day of judgment none shall be able to say, "I have the authority of God for my exposition."

CHALDEE PARAPHRASE ON THE SONG OF SONGS.

CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. The song of songs, &c.] The songs and hymns which Solomon the prophet, king of Israel, delivered by the spirit ^b of prophecy, before Jehovah, the Lord of the whole world. Ten songs are sung in this world: but this is the most excellent of them all. The first song Adam sang, at the time when his sins were forgiven him; and when the sabbath-day came, he put a covering upon his lips, and sung ^a a psalm or song for the sabbath day. The second song sung Moses with the children of Israel, at the time when the Lord of the world divided the Red Sea for them; then they all of them opened their mouths, and sung as one song, as it is written, ^d "Then sang Moses and the children of Israel." The third song the children of Israel sang at the time that the well of water was given to them, as it is written, ^e "Then sang Israel." The fourth song Moses the prophet sang, when his time was come to depart ^f out of the world, and in which he reproved the people of the house of Israel, as it is written, ^g "Give ear O heavens, and I will speak." The fifth song Joshua, the son of Nun, sang, when he fought in Gibeon, and the sun and moon stood still for him ^h thirty and six hours; and they ceased from singing, he himself opened his mouth, and sung this song, as it is written, ⁱ "Then sang Joshua before the Lord." The sixth song Barak and Deborah sang, in the day that the Lord delivered Sisera and his army into the hands of the children of Israel, as it is written, ^k "Then sang Deborah and Barak, the son of Abinoam." The seventh song Hannah sang, at the time when a son was given her by the Lord, as it is written, ^l "And Hannah prayed by the spirit of prophecy, and said." The eighth song, David the king of Israel sang, on the account of all the wonders which the Lord did for him. He opened his mouth, and sung this song, as it is written, ^m "And David sang by the spirit of prophecy before the Lord." The ninth song, Solomon the king of Israel sang, by the Holy Spirit before Jehovah, the Lord of the whole world. And the tenth song the children of the captivity shall sing at the time when they shall come out of captivity; as it is written and explained by Isaiah the prophet, ⁿ "This song shall be unto you for joy in the night, that the feast of the passover is kept holy, and gladness of heart; as when the people go to appear before the Lord, three times in a year, with all kinds of music, and sound of the pipe, when they go up to the mountain of the Lord, to worship before the Lord, the mighty one of Israel.

Verse 2. Let him kiss me, &c.] Solomon the prophet said, Blessed be the name of the Lord, who hath given us the law by the hands of Moses, the great scribe, written upon two tables of stone, and the six parts of the Mishna and Talmud to study in; and he was speaking to us face to face, as a man kisseth his friend, because of the greatness of the love with which he loved us more than the ^r seventy nations.

Verse 3. Because of the savour, &c.] At the report of thy wonders and of thy power, which thou wroughtest for thy people the house of Israel. All the nations trembled who heard of the fame of thy greatness, and of thy favours, and thy holy name was heard in all the earth, which is more excellent than the anointing oil that was poured upon the heads of the kings and priests; and, therefore, the righteous love to walk in thy good way, that they may possess ^s this world, and the world to come.

Verse 4. Draw me, &c.] When the people of the house of Israel came out of Egypt, the Shechinah of the Lord of the world went before them ^t in a pillar of cloud by day, and in a pillar of fire by night. The righteous of that generation said, Lord of all the world, draw us after Thee, and we will run in Thy good way; and bring us to the foot of mount Sinai, and give us the law out of Thy treasure house, the firmament: and we will rejoice and be glad, in the ^u twenty-two letters with which it is written; and we will remember them, and love Thy Deity; and will withdraw ourselves from the idols of the nations; and all the righteous which do what is right before thee shall fear Thee, and love thy commandments.

Verse 5. I am black, &c.] When the house of Israel made the calf, their faces became black, like the sons of Cush, ^v which dwell in the tents of Kedar: but when they returned by repentance, and were forgiven, the brightness of the glory of their faces was increased, like the angels, because they made curtains for the tabernacle; therefore the Shechinah of the Lord dwelt among them: and Moses, their master, went up into the ^w firmament, and made peace between them and their King.

Verse 6. Look not upon me, &c.] The congregation of Israel said before the nations, Do not despise me, because I am blacker than you, for I have done according to your works, and have ^x worshipped the sun and moon; for false prophets have been the cause that fierce anger of the Lord hath come down upon me; and they taught me to worship your idols, and to walk in your laws: but the Lord of the world, who is my God, I have not served, nor walked in His commandments, nor have I kept His statutes and His law.

Verse 7. Tell me, O thou, &c.] When the time of Moses the prophet was come, to ^y depart out of the world, he said before the Lord, It is revealed unto me, that this people will sin, and go into captivity; now shew me how they shall be governed and dwell among the nations, whose ^a The word שיר signifies an exposition, or interpretation, or a translation of one language into another; and here of the Hebrew text into the Chaldean language, with an explanation. The first use of these translations was after the return of the Jews from Babylon, where they had almost lost the Hebrew language; and therefore, they were necessary for the understanding the law and the prophets. The translation of the five books of Moses was done by Onkelos, and that of the prophets by Jonathan Ben Uzziel, the former of which lived a little after Christ, and the latter a little before Him: but the translation of the Hagiographa, among which is this book of Canticles, is generally thought to be done by J. Joseph Cocoes. The paraphrase on this book could not be written till after the finishing of the Talmud, seeing express mention is made of it in it.

Kinsh on Josh. x. 12, says that this miracle was wrought in the summer solstice, and on the longest day in the year, when the day of Canaan consists out of fourteen hours; whereas the Targum here says, the sun stood still thirty-six hours, which makes three artificial days, or one annual day and a half. decrees are grievous as the heat, and as the scorplings of the sun at noon, in the summer solstice; and, wherefore it is that they shall wander among the flocks of the sons of Esau and Ishmael, who join to These their idols, for companions.

Verse 8. If thou know not, &c. The holy blessed God said to Moses, the prophet, it is their desire to smite the captivity of the congregation of Israel, which is like to a fair damsel: but my soul loveth her, therefore let her walk in the ways of the righteous, and let her order her prayer according to the direction of her governors, and let her lead her posterity, and teach her children, which are like to the kids of the goats, to go to the synagogue, and the school; and by that righteousness they shall be governed in the captivity, until the time that I send the king Messiah, and he shall lead them quietly to their habitations; yea, he shall bring them to the house of the sanctuary, which David and Solomon, the shepherds of Israel, built for them.

Verse 9. To a company of horses, &c. When Israel went out of Egypt, Pharaoh and his host pursued after them, with chariots and horsemen, and their way was shut up on the four sides of them; on the right hand and on the left were wildernesses full of fiery serpents, and behind them was wicked Pharaoh, and his army, and before them was the Red Sea. What did the holy blessed God do? He was manifested in the power of His might upon the Red Sea, and dried the sea up: but the mud he did not dry up. The wicked and the mixed multitude, and the strangers which were among them, said, The waters of the sea He is able to dry up: but the mud He is not able to dry up. In that very hour the fierce anger of the Lord came upon them; and He sought to drown them in the waters of the sea, as Pharaoh and his army, his chariots, and his horsemen, and his horses, were drowned; had it not been for Moses, the prophet, who spread his hands in prayer before the Lord, and turned away the anger of the Lord from them. Then he and the righteous of that generation opened their mouths, and sang a song, and passed through the Red Sea on dry land, because of the righteousness of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, the beloved of the Lord.

Verse 10. Thy cheeks are comely, &c. When they went out into the wilderness, the Lord said to Moses, How fair is this people; that the words of the Law should be given unto them; and they shall be as brides in their jaws, that they may not depart out of the good way, as a horse turneth not aside that has a bridle in his jaw: and how fair is their neck to bear the yoke of my commandments; and it shall be upon them, as a yoke upon the neck of a bullock, which plougheth in the field, and feeds both itself and its master.

Verse 11. We will make thee borders of gold, &c. Then was it said to Moses, Go up into the firmament, and I will give thee the two tables of stone, hewed out of the sapphire of the throne of my glory, shining as the best gold, disposed in rows, written with my finger, in which are engraven the ten words, purer than silver that is purified seven times seven, which is the number of the things explained in them, forty-nine ways; and they shall be given by thine hand unto the people of the house of Israel.

Verse 12. While the king sitteth, &c. Whilst Moses their master was in the firmament, to receive the two tables of stone, and the law, and the commandments, the wicked of that generation and the mixed multitude that was among them rose up, and made a golden calf, and caused their works to stink; and there went out an evil report of them in the world, for before this time a fragrant odour of them was diffused in the world; but afterwards they stank like a nard, whose smell is very bad; and the plague of leprosy came down upon their flesh.

Verse 13. A bundle of myrrh, &c. At that time the Lord said unto Moses, Go down, for the people have corrupted themselves; desist from speaking to me, and I will destroy them. Then Moses returned and asked mercy of the Lord; and the Lord remembered for them the binding of Isaac, whom his father bound on mount Moriah, upon the altar, and the Lord turned from His fierce anger, and caused His Shechinah to dwell among them as before.

Verse 14. A cluster of camphire, &c. Lo, then went Moses down with the two tables of stone in his hands; and because of the sins of Israel, his hands grew heavy, and they fell and were broken. Then went Moses, and ground the calf to powder, and scattered the dust of it upon the river, and made the children of Israel drink it, and slew all that deserved to die, and went up a second time into the firmament, and prayed before the Lord, and made atonement for the children of Israel; then was he commanded to make a tabernacle and an ark. Immediately Moses hastened, and made the tabernacle, and all its furniture, and the ark; and he put in the ark the two other tables, and appointed the sons of Aaron the priests to offer the offerings upon the altar, and to pour the wine upon the offerings;—but from whence had they wine to pour? For in the wilderness they had no proper place for sowing, neither had they fig-trees, nor vines, nor pomegranates: but they went to the vineyards of Engedi, and took clusters of grapes from thence, and pressed wine out of them, and poured it upon the altar, the fourth part of an hin to one lamb.

Verse 15. Behold thou art fair, &c. When the children of Israel performed the will of their King, He Himself praised them, in the family of the holy angels, and says, How fair are thy works, my daughter, my beloved, O congregation of Israel, in the time that thou doest my will, and studiest in the words of my law? and how well ordered are thy works and thy affairs, as young doves that are fit to be offered up upon the altar.

Verse 16. Behold thou art fair, &c. The congregation of Israel answered before the Lord of the world, and thus she said, How fair is the Shechinah of Thy holiness, when Thou dwellest among us, and receivest our prayers with acceptance, and when Thou dwellest in our beloved bed, and our children are multiplied in the world, and we increase and multiply like a tree that is planted by a fountain of water, whose leaf is fair, and whose fruit is plenteous.

Verse 17. The beams of our house, &c. Solomon the prophet said, How beautiful is the house of the sanctuary of the Lord which is built by my hands of wood of Galmiah: but far more beautiful will be the house of the sanctuary, which shall be built in the days of the king Messiah, whose beams will be of the cedars of the garden of Eden, and whose rafters will be of brutine, fir, and box.

CHAPTER II.

Verse 1. I am the rose of Sharon, &c. The congregation of Israel said, When the Lord of the world causes His Shechinah to dwell in the midst of me, I am like the green daffodil of the garden of Eden, and my works are fair as the rose which is in the plain of the garden of Eden.

Verse 2. As the lily among thorns, &c. But when I turn aside out of the way that is right before me, and he removes the Shechinah of His holiness from me, I am like to a rose which flourishes among thorns, by which its leaves are pricked through and torn, even so am I pricked through and torn with wicked edicts, in the captivity among the kings of the nations.

Verse 3. As the apple tree among the trees, &c. As the pomecitron tree is beautiful, and to be praised among the unfruitful trees, and all the world knows it; so the Lord of the world was praised among the angels, when He was revealed on mount Sinai, and gave the law unto His ⁿ The word Shechinah comes from שכן shakan, which signifies to dwell, and Elias Levita in his Methurgeman says, that their worship called the Holy Spirit so, because it dwelt upon the prophets; though perhaps, he says, there may be another sense of it among the Cabalistic doctors, of which he declares himself ignorant. It seems to intend the glorious majesty and presence of God with His church and all people, and is the same with St. John's σκηνη σκη Skene, Tabernacle, or Habitation of God, which is said to be with men, Rev. xxi. 3, and may very well be applied to the Messiah, Jesus, who was made flesh, κατ' σάρκα kat' sarka, and dwelt among us, John 1. 14.

people; in that very hour I desired to sit under the shadow of His Shechinah, and the words of His law were fixed upon the roof of my mouth, and the reward of His commands is reserved for me in the world to come.

Verse 4. He brought me, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, The Lord brought me to the school which is in Sinai, to learn the law from the mouth of Moses the great scribe; and the banner of his commandments I took upon me in love, and said, All that the Lord commandeth I will do, and will obey.

Verse 5. Stay me with fagons, &c.] But when I heard His voice which spake out of the midst of the flame of fire, I trembled, and went backwards because of fear. Then I drew near to Moses and Aaron, and said unto them, Receive ye the voice of the words of the Lord, out of the midst of the fire, and bring me to the school, and sustain me with the words of the law on which the world is founded, and put veils upon my neck; for the interpretation of the holy words, which are sweet to my palate, are as the apples of the garden of Eden, and I will study in them; perhaps I may be healed by them, for I am sick of love.

Verse 6. His left hand is under my head, &c.] When the people of the house of Israel were travelling in the wilderness, they had four clouds of glory at the four winds of the world round about them, that the evil eye might not rule over them. There was one above them, that the heat and sun, as also the rain and hail, might not have power over them; and one below them, which carried them as a nurse carrieth her sucking child in her bosom; and another ran before them, at the distance of three days' journey, to level the mountains, and to elevate the plains; and it slew all the fiery serpents and scorpions which were in the wilderness; and it spied out a convenient place for them to lodge in, that they might study in the doctrine of the law, which was given them by the right hand of the Lord.

Verse 7. I charge you, O ye daughters, &c.] After that it was commanded Moses, by the spirit of prophecy from the Lord, to send spies to spy the land, and when they returned from spying it, they brought an evil report upon the land of Israel, wherefore they tarried forty years in the wilderness. Moses opened his mouth, and thus he said, I adjure you, O congregation of Israel, by the Lord of hosts, and by the fortress of the land of Israel, that ye presume not to go up to the land of Canaan until it is the will of the Lord, lest the whole generation of warlike men perish from the camp, even as your brethren, the children of Ephraim, who went out thirty years from Egypt, before the time came, and they fell into the hand of the Philistines, which dwell in Gath, and they slew them: but tarry ye unto the end of forty years, and your children shall go up and inherit it.

Verse 8. The voice of my beloved, &c.] Solomon the king said, When the people of the house of Israel dwelt in Egypt, their cry went up to the highest heavens. Lo, then was the glory of the Lord revealed to Moses on mount Horeb; and He sent him into Egypt to deliver them, and to bring them out of the oppression of the tyranny of Egypt; and he leaped over the appointed season through the righteousness of their fathers, who are like to mountains; and he skipped over the time of an hundred and ninety years' servitude, through the righteousness of their mothers, who are like to hills.

Verse 9. My beloved is like a roe, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, When the glory of the Lord was revealed in Egypt, in the night of the pass-over, and slew all the first-born, He rode upon a swift cloud, and ran like a roe or a young hart, and protected the houses in which we were, and stood behind our wall, and looked out of the windows, and beheld through the lattices, and saw the blood of the sacrifice of the pass-over, and the blood of circumcision which was fixed upon our gates: and he hastened from the highest heavens, and saw His people, who eat of the sacrifice of the feast that was roasted with fire, with Tamca and Ulahin, and unleavened bread; and He spared us, and did not give power to the destroying angel to destroy us.

Verse 10. My beloved spake, and said unto me, &c.] And in the morning my beloved answered, and said unto me, Arise, O congregation of Israel, my love, who was so old, and who art fair in good works; go, get thee out from the bondage of the Egyptians.

Verse 11. For, lo, the winter is past, &c.] For behold the time of bondage, which is like to winter, is ceased; and the years which I spake of to Abraham between the pieces are at an end; and the tyranny of the Egyptians, which is like to a violent rain, is over and gone; neither shall ye see them any more for ever.

Verse 12. The flowers appear on the earth, &c.] And Moses and Aaron, who are like to branches of palm-trees, appeared to do wonders in the land of Egypt; and the time of cutting the first-fruits is come, and the voice of the Holy Spirit of redemption, which I spake of to Abraham your father. Now ye hear what I said unto him; yea, the people whom ye shall serve I will judge, and after that ye shall come forth with great substance; and now it is my pleasure to do what I swore to him by my word.

Verse 13. The fig-tree putteth forth, &c.] The congregation of Israel, which is like to the first-fruits of figs, opened her mouth, and sung a song at the Red Sea; yea, the babes and sucklings praised the Lord of the world with their tongues. Immediately the Lord of the world said unto them, Arise, O congregation of Israel, my love, and my fair one, and go from hence into the land which I have sworn unto thy fathers.

Verse 14. O my dove, that art in the clefts of the rock, &c.] And when wicked Pharaoh pursued after the children of Israel, the congregation of Israel was like to a dove, that is shut up in the clefts of the rock, whom the serpent afflicts within, and the hawk oppresses without: even so the congregation of Israel was shut up on the four sides of the world, for before them was the sea, and behind them enemy pursued; and on the two sides of them were the wildernesses, which were full of fiery serpents, which bite and kill the sons of men with their poison. And immediately she opened her mouth in prayer before the Lord, and Bath Kol went out from the highest heavens, and thus it said, O thou congregation of Israel, who art like to a clean dove, and which is hid in the closure of the clefts of the rock, and in the secret places of the stairs, shew me thy countenance, and thy works which are right; cause me to hear thy voice, for thy voice is sweet in prayer in the house of the little sanctuary, and thy countenance is fair in good works.

Verse 15. Take us the foxes, &c.] After that they had passed through the sea, they murmured for water; then came wicked Amalek against them, who hated them on the account of the birthright and blessing which Jacob our father took away from Esau, and he came to make war with Israel, for they had made void the words of the law; and wicked Amalek stole under the wings of the clouds of glory several persons from the tribe of Dan, and slew them, because the idol of Micah was in their hand. In that very hour the house of Israel, which is like to a vineyard, was condemned to be destroyed, except the righteous of that generation, who were like to the best spice.

the coming of Jacob into Egypt one hundred and thirty years, Gen. xlviii. 9; and from thence to the coming of the children of Israel out of Egypt two hundred and ten years; which completes the number. And if we begin the date from Abraham's going out from Ur of the Chaldees, and allow five years for his dwelling in Haran, as the Jews do, see Aben Ezra in Exod. xli. 40, from whose departure from thence to the birth of Isaac were twenty-five years, Gen. xli. 4, and xli. 5, which thirty years being added to the above said four hundred, make up the number given by Moses, Exod. xli. 40, and by the apostle Paul, Gal. iii. 17.

^k The names of the latter herbs with which the paschal lamb was eaten, Exod. xli. 8. The same are mentioned in Targum Jon. in Exod. xli. 8; and in some of their writings three other herbs are mentioned, the names of which are Chazretzi, Chazabina, and Meror, by which they intend horseradish, and wild lettuce, cichory, and asch like herbs, for they themselves do not seem very well to understand them. See Mishna Tract. Pesach. c. 2, s. 6. Jerohi in ibid. and Malmon. Tract. Chumetz. Umetzta. c. 7, s. 13.

^o i. e. The enemy; compare with this Rom. vii. 7.

^p Precipent mention is made of this in the writings of the Jews. It was a voice from heaven which revealed secrets, foretold future events, decided controversies, and directed in difficult matters; it was used in the second temple as the room of prayer; which the Jews say they possess, Talmud Sota fol. 43, col. 2, and Sanhedrin, fol. 2, col. 4. R. Saadiah Gabon in Dan. ix. 34, Shirhashirim Rabba in c. 8, 9. It is thought by R. Levi Ben Gerson in 2 Sam. i. s. 27, to be a more excellent and complete kind of divination; and indeed I am inclined to think that most of those voices which go under this name were the more illustrious of Satan, designed to deceive the people, and lessen the credit of those voices which were heard from heaven in the times of Christ. See Matt. iii. 17, and xvii. 5. John xii. 28.

^q In Targ. Jon. in Exod. xli. 8, where the same story is mentioned, it is said that those men who were of Dan's tribe, Amalek took care that the cloud did not receive and protect the use of their identity.

they returned by repentance: then stood Moses the prophet, and prayed before the Lord; and Joshua, his minister, girded himself, and went out from under the wings of the clouds of the glory of the Lord, and with him mighty men that were righteous, who in their works are like to the rose; and they made war with Amalek, and they broke Amalek and his people with the anathema of the Lord, and with slaughter, and with breach, and with the edge of the sword.

Verse 17. Until the day break, &c.] But in a very few days the children of Israel made the golden calf, and the clouds of glory which covered them removed; and they were left open, and were spoiled of the apparatus of their armour, on which was engraven the Great Name, that is explained by seventy names. And the Lord sought to destroy them out of the world: but that He remembered before Him the oath which He swore to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, who were swift in their service, as a roe or a young hart, and the offering which Abraham offered up, even Isaac, his own son, on mount Moriah, and where, before then, he had offered his offering, and divided them equally.

CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. By night on my bed, &c.] And when the people of the house of Israel saw that the clouds of glory were removed from them, and the holy crown that was given to them at Sinai was taken from them, and they were left dark as the night; then they sought the holy crown, which was removed from them, but they found it not.

Verse 2. I will rise now, &c.] The children of Israel said one to another, Let us arise, and go, and surround the tabernacle of the congregation, which Moses fixed without the camp; and let us seek instruction from the Lord, and the holy Shechinah, which is removed from us. And they went about the cities, and in the streets, and in the broad places: but they found it not.

Verse 3. The watchmen that go about the city, &c.] The congregation of Israel said, Moses and Aaron, and the Levites, which keep the charge of the word of the tabernacle of the congregation, who go round about it, found me, and I inquired of them concerning the Shechinah of the glory of the Lord, which was removed from me. Moses, the great scribe of Israel, answered, and thus he said, I will go up to the highest heavens, and I will pray before the Lord; perhaps, atonement may be made for your transgressions, so that He may cause His Shechinah to dwell among you as before.

Verse 4. It was but a little that I passed, &c.] It was but a very little time, and the Lord turned from the fierceness of His anger, and commanded Moses, the prophet, to make the tabernacle of the congregation, and the ark, and caused his Shechinah to dwell in it, and the people of the house of Israel offered their offerings, and studied in the words of the law in the chamber of the school of Moses, their master, and in the chamber of Joshua, the son of Nun, his minister.

Verse 5. I charge you, &c.] When the seven nations heard that the children of Israel were about to possess their land, they arose as one man, and cut down the trees, and stopped up the fountains of water, and destroyed their cities, and fled. The holy blessed God said to Moses the prophet, I have sworn to their fathers, that I will bring their children to inherit a land flowing with milk and honey:—but how shall I bring them to a land that is desolate and empty? Now, therefore, I will cause them to stay forty years in the wilderness, and my law shall be mixed with them, and after that those wicked nations shall build what they have destroyed. And then said Moses to the children of Israel, I charge you, O congregation of Israel, by the Lord of hosts, and by the fortresses of the land of Israel, that ye presume not to go up to the land of Canaan, until the forty years are ended. When it shall be the good pleasure of the Lord to deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hands, then shall ye pass over Jordan, and the land shall be subdued before you.

Verse 6. Who is this that cometh out of the wilderness, &c.] When the Israelites came up out of the wilderness, and passed over Jordan, with Joshua the son of Nun; the people of the land said, Who is this choice nation which comes up out of the wilderness, perfumed with the sweet incense, and supported through the righteousness of Abraham, who worshipped and prayed before the Lord on mount Moriah, and is anointed with the anointing oil, through the righteousness of Isaac, who was bound in that place of the sanctuary, which is called the mountain of frankincense, for whom wonders are also wrought through the holiness of Jacob, who wrestled with Him, until the morning ascended, and prevailed over Him, and was delivered, he and the twelve tribes?

Verse 7. Behold his bed, which is Solomon's, &c.] When Solomon, the king of Israel, built the house of the sanctuary of the Lord in Jerusalem, the Lord said by His word, How beautiful is the house of this sanctuary, which is built for me by the hands of king Solomon, the son of David! and how beautiful are the priests, when they spread their hands, and stand upon their desks, and bless the people of the house of Israel, by the sixty letters which were delivered to Moses, their master, and with that blessing which surrounds them like an high and strong wall, and by which all the mighty men of Israel prevail and prosper.

Verse 8. They all hold swords, &c.] And the priests and the Levites, and all the tribes of Israel, all of them take hold of the words of the law, which are like to a sword, in which they employ themselves as men that are expert in war, and every one of them has the seal of circumcision sealed upon their flesh, even as it was sealed upon the flesh of Abraham; and by it they prevail as a man that has his sword girt upon his thigh, wherefore they are not afraid of noxious spirits, and apparitions, which walk in the night.

Verse 9. King Solomon made himself a chariot, &c.] King Solomon built for himself a holy temple of the trees of Zangebilla, fir trees, and cedars, which came from Lebanon; and covered it with pure gold.

Verse 10. He made the pillars thereof, &c.] And after that he had finished it he put in the midst of it the ark of the testimony, which is the pillar of the world; and in it the two tables of stone, which Moses placed there in Horeb, which are more precious than silver purified, and more beautiful than the best gold; and he spread and covered over it the veil of blue and purple, and between the cherubims, which are over the mercy seat, the Shechinah of the Lord abode, whose name dwelleth in Jerusalem, above all the cities of the land of Israel.

Verse 11. Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, &c.] When king Solomon came to make the dedication of the house of the sanctuary, a crier went forth in strength; and thus he said, Go forth and see, ye inhabitants of the provinces of the land of Israel, and ye people of Zion, the crown and diadem wherewith the people of the house of Israel crowned king Solomon in the day of the dedication of the house of the sanctuary, when he rejoiced with the joy of the feast of tabernacles; for king Solomon kept, at that time, the feast of tabernacles fourteen days.

CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. Behold, thou art fair, &c.] And in that day king Solomon offered up a thousand burnt-offerings upon the altar, and his offerings were graciously accepted by the Lord. Bath Kol went forth from heaven; and thus it said, How fair art thou, O congregation of Israel, and how

 z This is the name of Jehovah, which the Jews think unlawful to pronounce; and, therefore, explain it by other names, usually by Adonai, or Elohim. Here it is said to be explained by seventy names, sometimes by seventy-two; of which see Galatians de Aretius Cat. ver. 1, 2, a 17, and Schindler Lex. Pentaglot. p. 1492.
 a The same is mentioned in the Targums of Jon. and Jerus. in Exod. xxxii. 35. By this holy crown seems to be meant the Shechinah or presence of God; and so it is explained in Shirashirim Rabba in chap. iv. 12, or else the law, which is very frequently called so, Benishirim Rabba, Parash. 4. Midrash Kohelet in c. 7, l. 1. Pir. Aboth. c. 4, s. 12.
 b These are also supposed to be intended by the watchmen in Shirashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi and R. Aben Ezra in loc.
 c It was a common practice with the Jewish doctors to teach, dispute and converse about religion in chambers or upper rooms. See Mishna Tract. Shab. c. 1, s. 4.
 d The Hittites, the Gergasians, the Amorites, the Canaanites, the Perizzites, the Evitians, and the Jebusites, Dent. vi. 1.
 e The same is mentioned in Shirashirim Rabba in loc. and in Benishirim Rabba, Parash. 11. There being just this number of letters in the forms of blessings with which the priests were to bless the people of Israel, in Num. vi. 24, 25, 26.
 f The law is likewise compared to a sword, in Bereshit Rabba, Parash. 21. See Ept. vi. 17. Heb. iv. 12.

i By this chariot R. Aben Ezra also understands the house of the Lord; and in Shirashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi in loc. it is interpreted of the tabernacle, as R. is by some of the Jews, in Benishirim Rabba, Parash. 18; though others think the ark is intended; and others in the same place would have the world meant, which way they explain it in Zohar in Gen. fol. 2. 1. The word מַדְבַּר very properly signifies 'the marriage bed,' as called from a very usual phrase with the Rabbinis to express the celebration of marriage. Vide Buxtorf. spat. Heb. lib. 2, ep. 7.
 k Elias Levita, in the Medigraphon on this word, says, that this is cinnamon. He seems to mean a kind of red wood, which driers use; but observes, that some say it is the spice called ginger. So David de Pomis renders it in his Heb. fol. 54, 4; and indeed it is joined with pepper in Maimon. Tract. Sheitaf. ar. c. 2, s. 6. Bath. Hamid. dash. c. 7, s. 13; and Berachot, c. 8, s. 7. It is most likely to be a kind of cedar.
 l Vide Benishirim Rabba, Parash. 12. Shirashirim Rabba, and Jarchi in loc. in Most of the Jewish writers refer this to the time of the giving of the law on Mount Sinai, and the setting up of the tabernacle by Moses; so Jarchi and Shirashirim Rabba in loc. Shemoth Rabba, Parash. 52. Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 20. Benishirim Rabba, Parash. 2, and 12. Pirat. Feha Rabboti, fol. 21, 2. m In 1 Kings viii. 63, it is said that 'Solomon held it in hand seven days and seven days, even fourteen days;' the reason of which distinction is because the first seven days were kept for the dedication of the altar, and the other for the feast of tabernacles; see 2 Chron. vii. 3; whereas our Targumist would have the feast of tabernacles kept the whole fourteen days, contrary to the command in Lev. xxiii. 34. Tida R. Levi Hen Gerson, and R. David Kinshi in 1 Reg. viii. 65.
 n In 1 Kings viii. 63, the sacrifice of peace-offerings which Solomon offered was two and twenty thousand oxen, and a hundred and twenty thousand sheep; but the number of burnt-offerings is not mentioned.
 o See note on chap. II. 14.

g The apostle Paul calls chronomelion σημειον περιτομης σφραγιδου της δικαιοσυνης της πιστεως; 'the sign of chronomelion, a seal of the righteousness of the faith;' Rom. iv. 11.
 h So this 'fear in the night' is interpreted by some of the Rabbinis in Shirashirim Rabba in loc. and in Benishirim Rabba, Parash. 11. Though others of them in the said place explain it of the fear of hell, which is like to the night; as they do also in Gemara Bab. Tract. Sanhed. a. 1, fol. 7, col. 1.

fair are the princes of the congregation and the wise men, who sit in the Sanhedrim, who enlighten the world; the people of the house of Israel, and are like to young doves; yea, even the rest of the children of thy congregation; and the people of the earth are righteous, as the sons of Jacob, who gathered stones, and made a heap thereof, on the mount of Gilead.

Verse 2. Thy teeth are like, &c.] How fair are the priests and Levites, who offer up Thine offerings, and eat the holy flesh, and the tithes, and the offering of fruits, and are pure from all oppression and rapine, even as clean as Jacob's flocks of sheep, when they were shorn, and came up from the brook Jacob, among whom there was no oppression or rapine, and they are all of them like to one another, and always bear twins; neither is any barren or that miscarrieth among them.

Verse 3. Thy lips are like a thread, &c.] And the lips of the high priest inquire in prayer, on the day of atonement before the Lord; and his words turn the transgressions of Israel, which are like to a thread of scarlet, and make them white as a pure wool; and the king, who is their head, is full of the commandments, as a pomegranate; besides, the Amaranthin and Archeonin, who are next the king, who are righteous; neither is there any iniquity in them.

Verse 4. Thy neck is like the tower, &c.] And the head of the school, who is thy master, is powerful in righteousness, and mighty in good works, as David king of Israel, by the word of whose mouth the world is restored, who, in the doctrine of the law, employs himself; in which the people of the house of Israel placing their confidence, overcome in war; as if they held in their hands all kind of warlike instruments of mighty men.

Verse 5. Thy two breasts, &c.] Thy two Redeemers which shall redeem thee; Messiah, the son of David; and Messiah, the son of Ephraim, are like to Moses and Aaron the sons of Jochebed, who may be compared to young roses that are twins; who by their righteousness fed the people of the house of Israel forty years in the wilderness with manna, and with fatted fowls, and water of the well of Miriam.

Verse 6. Until the day break, &c.] And all the time that the house of Israel held fast, in their hands, the religion of their righteous fathers, they drove away those noxious spirits that walk in the night time, or in the morning, or at noon day; because that the Shechinah of the glory of the Lord dwelt in the house of the sanctuary, which was built on mount Moriah; for all the noxious and destroying spirits fled at the smell of the sweet incense.

Verse 7. Thou art all fair, &c.] And when thy people, the house of Israel, do the will of the Lord of the world, He praises them in the highest heavens; and thus He saith, Thou art all fair, O congregation of Israel, and there is no spot in thee.

Verse 8. Come with me from Lebanon, &c.] The Lord said by His word, Dwell with me, O congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest damsel, and go up with me to the house of the sanctuary, where the heads of the people, which dwell by the river of Amans, and the inhabitants that reside on the top of mount Talga, and the people, which are in Hermon, shall bring gifts unto thee, and they that inhabit the strong fortified cities, which are as powerful as lions, shall pay tribute to thee; yea, an offering shall be brought from the cities of the mountains, which are mightier than the leopards.

Verse 9. Thou hast ravished my heart, &c.] Fixed upon the table of my heart is thy love, O my sister, the congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest damsel; fixed upon the table of my heart is the love of the least of thy children, who is righteous as one of the great men of the Sanhedrim, as one of the kings of the house of Judah, on whose neck the crown of the kingdom is put.

Verse 10. How fair is thy love, &c.] How fair is thy love to me, my sister, the congregation of Israel, who art like to a modest damsel. How excellent is thy love to me, more than the seventy nations; and the good report of thy righteous ones is more excellent than all spices.

Verse 11. Thy lips, O my spouse, &c.] And when the priests pray in the holy court, their lips drop as the honey-comb; and so does thy tongue, O thou modest damsel, when thou deliverest songs and hymns, sweet as milk and honey; and the smell of the priests' garments is as the smell of Lebanon.

Verse 12. A garden inclosed, &c.] Thy women, which are married to modest men, are as a modest damsel, and as the garden of Eden, into which no man hath power to enter, except the righteous, whose souls are by angels carried into it; and thy virgins are hid and concealed in private chambers, and are sealed up because they are as a fountain of living water, which comes forth from under the tree, and is parted to the four heads of the rivers; but if it is sealed with the great and holy name, it goes forth and flows, and overflows all the world.

Verse 13. Thy plants are an orchard, &c.] And thy young men are full of thy commands, as pomegranates, and love their wives, and beget children as righteous as themselves; and thy smell, therefore, is as the excellent spices of the garden of Eden, even camphires with nards.

Verse 14. Spikenard with saffron, &c.] Nard and saffron, and calamus, and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense, pure myrrh, and lign aloes, with all kind of spices.

Verse 15. A fountain of gardens, &c.] And the waters of Siloah go softly, with the rest of the waters, which flow from Lebanon, to water the land of Israel, for the sake of those who study in the words of the law, which are like to a well of living water, and on the account of the righteousness of pouring of water, which they pour upon the altar, in the house of the sanctuary, that is built in Jerusalem, which is called Lebanon.

c So the words are explained in Shirhashirim Rabbin in loc. d So Christ calls His disciples the "light of the world." Matt. v. 14.

e This refers to the account that is given of what passed between Jacob and Laban, in Gen. xxxii. 46, 47. See Jarchi in loc.

f This is the first Jacob passed over with his wives and children, when he went out to meet his brother Esau, Gen. xxxiii. 22. Mention is made of it in several other places of Scripture, Deut. ii. 27, and iii. 10; Josh. xii. 2.

g The Jews say, that when the scape goat was sent into the wilderness, a scarlet thread was tied in the temple door, which, as soon as the goat was arrived in the wilderness, turned white, which was not only a token to his arrival there, but was also an indication of their sins being forgiven; as it is said, "Through your sins I am scarlet, but I will be as white as snow." Isa. l. 18. See Midrash, Tract. Yoma, c. 5, s. 4, and Ps. Cxxxix. i. This scarlet thread, they say, ceased turning white forty years before the destruction of the temple, which was about the time Jesus Christ, who was typified by the scape goat, made atonement for us; Talmud Yoma, fol. 24. col. 2. This tradition the Targumist seems to have in view here.

h These officers were of the tribe of Levi, Benishar Rabba Parash, 3. Their number was seven; but then seven; their work was to take the care and charge of the boys of the court; and one might not open the door, unless all seven were present, Mishna Tract. Shabbatin, c. 6, s. 2. Malmon. Hillel. Cate Hamuldash, c. 4, s. 17. Jarchi in 2 Reg. xii. 9, though Kimchi in 2 Reg. xii. 9, and xiii. 4, thinks that they were transgressors who had the charge of the public money. The etymology given of this word is very different. Baal Arach says, this officer was so called because he was לְבַיט מֵעַל מֶלֶךְ לְבַיט מֵעַל מֶלֶךְ, "Lord over all;" the same is given in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 5, where Shetna the treasurer, Isa. xxiii. 15, is said to be one of those officers. Elias Tarsia, in his Meshuraymon, says, he was so called because לְבַיט מֵעַל מֶלֶךְ לְבַיט מֵעַל מֶלֶךְ, "he said," or "preserved," all things.

i This is from the Greek word Ἀρχιστράτης, and signifies prince, ruler, or governor.

k The Jews observing different characters given of the Messiah, which they think irreconcilable in one person, have formed two Messiahs; the one they call Messiah, the son of David, who shall be a potent, prosperous and victorious prince; the other Messiah the son of Ephraim, or Joseph, as he is sometimes called, who shall be raised to many kingdoms and sufferings, and at last die in the war of Gog and Magog. Of these two Messiahs, see Talmud, Succoth, fol. 32, col. 1. Zohar in Num. fol. 60, 2, and 68, 2, and 101, 2. Jarchi in Isa. xxxiv. 13. Kimchi, Jarchi, and Eben Ezra in Jer. xlvi. 10.

l It is an opinion which obtains among the Jews, that on the account of the merit of Moses, the names were given; and on the account of those of Aaron, the clouds of glory; and for the sake of Miriam, the well of water, which they say they enjoyed all the forty years they were in the wilderness. o This was one of the rivers of Damascus; see 2 Kings v. 14, where it is read Abana; but both the Mosaic and Targum read it Amana; and Kimchi thinks it was called by both names.

p Or "the acreabreast of snow." Elias Levita, in his Meshuraymon, says, that Mount Siner was called so; perhaps mount Salmun may be meant, which had snow continually upon it; see Psa. lxxvii. 14, and R. Aben Ezra in loc.

x It was an ancient opinion of the Jews that the ministry of angels was used in carrying the souls of men to heaven. Thus in the Targum of Parash. 11, several angels are ordered by God to bring the soul of Moses to Him. Agreeable to this notion, it is said in Luke xvi. 22, that "the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom."

y It was very common with the Eastern people to keep their virgins, especially those of note and esteem, very secluded, and not admit them to public or common conversation; but admit them to abide much within doors. Hence they are called in the Hebrew language, פְּתוּרִים, from the word פָּתַח which signifies to open or cover; because of they were not exposed to public view; therefore the author of the second book of Maccabees calls them κατακλινας παρθένων "virgins that were shut up," i. e. in the houses of their parents, in private chambers, as the Targumist here says. See 2 Macc. iii. 19.

z Regard seems to be had to the river which went out of Eden, mentioned in Gen. ii. 10, and was parted into four heads or rivers, the names of which were Pison, Gihon, Hiddekel, and Euphrates. The calculus supposes a great many mysteries to be contained therein; see Zohar in Gen. fol. 55, 2, and in Exod. fol. 34, 5, and 37, 2, and in Lev. fol. 21, 5, where the name of this river is said to be Jobel, according to Jer. xlvii. 8, and so it is in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 22, and in Benishar Rabba, Parash. 21.

a See Isa. viii. 6, and Aben Ezra upon it, who expounds the text in Isaiah by this Caestides. Jarchi in Isa. viii. 6, says the name of this fountain was Gihon. In the New Testament it is called Siloam, John ix. 7, 11; it was a fountain near Jerusalem, Neh. iii. 15.

b The principal refers here to a ceremony used at the feast of tabernacles, when the people fetched water from Siloam, and brought it to the priest, who poured it upon the altar with the wine of the daily sacrifice; this they say Moses received from God at mount Sinai, though it is not written. This ceremony of drawing and pouring water at those times was attended with all the demonstrations of joy imaginable, as shouting, leaping, dancing, singing, blowing of trumpets, throwing of crowns, illumination of houses, &c. inasmuch that they say that those who never saw the rejoicing of drawing water, never saw rejoicing in their lives. Mishna, Tract. Succa, c. 2, s. 3.

c Talmud, c. 10, s. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and Jarchi, and E. C. Jarchi in Midr. Malmon. Tract. Tamulin, c. 10, s. 6, 7, 8, and Cate Hamuldash, c. 7, s. 4, and c. 8, s. 6. They fancied the Holy Ghost was much delighted with this vain joy; he said, "that in drawing and water they drew Him; i. e. processed His descent upon them, and abode with them as a Spirit of prophecies, which they say Jonah obtained at that time, and in this way; and, therefore, whilst they were performing the ceremony, frequently used these words in Isa. xli. 3. "With joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation, &c. which they understood of the Holy Ghost, Benishar Rabba, Parash. 70. Midrash which they understood of E. C. Jarchi and E. C. Jarchi in Malmon, ubi supra.

d This ceremony Christ is thought to allude, "when in the last day, the great day of this feast of tabernacles, he stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come and drink, and he that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water; but that spake He of the Spirit," &c. John vii. 37, 38, 39. Vide Tremell in ibid.

e So the temple is called in Zech. vi. 1. "Upon this day, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars;" according to the mind of several Jewish interpreters, who out of Talmud Yoma, fol. 30, 2, relate, that forty years before the destruction of the temple the doors thereof opened of themselves; as which Jochanan Ben Zaccabai being afflicted, said, O temple, temple, how know I that thy destruction is at hand; for as proposed in Zochari, i. s. the words of the Holy Spirit, Upon thy doors, &c. Vide R. Aben Ezra. Not. in Michal Yehi, Jarchi and Kimchi in Zech. vi. 1.

Verse 15. His legs are as pillars of marble, &c.] And the righteous they are the pillars of the world, set upon sockets of the best gold; these are the words of the law, in which they study, and reprove the people of the house of Israel, that they may do His will who is filled with compassion to them, as an old man; and makes the transgressions of the house of Israel as white as snow, and is ready to make victory and war among the nations who have transgressed His word, as a young man who is strong and robust as the cedars.

Verse 16. His mouth is most sweet, &c.] The words of His mouth are sweet as honey, and all His commandments are more desirable to His wise men than gold and silver; this is the praise of God, who is my beloved, and this is the power of the might of the Lord, who is dear to me, O ye prophets who prophesy in Jerusalem.

CHAPTER VI.

Verse 1. Whither is thy beloved gone, &c.] The prophets *replied, when they heard the praise of the Lord from the mouth of the congregation of Israel, and thus they said, For what offence is the Shechinah of the Lord removed from thee, O thou who art fairer in thy works than all the nations? and which way did thy beloved turn himself when he removed from thy sanctuary? The congregation of Israel said, Because of the sins, transgressions, and rebellion, which were found in me. The prophets said, But now return by repentance, and let us arise, both thou and we, and we will pray before Him, and seek mercy with thee.

Verse 2. My beloved is gone down into his garden, &c.] And the Lord of the world graciously received their prayer, and came down to the Sanhedrim of the wise men at Babylon, and gave refreshment unto His people, and brought them out of their captivity by the hands of Cyrus, and Ezra, and Nehemiah, and Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and the elders of Judah; and they built the house of the sanctuary, and appointed priests over the offerings, and Levites over the charge of the holy commandment; and He sent fire from heaven and graciously received the offerings, and the sweet incense; and as a man supplies his own beloved son with dainties, so did He deliciously feed them; and as a man that gathereth roses out of the plains, so did He gather them out of Babylon.

Verse 3. I am my beloved's, &c.] And when I served the Lord of the world, who is my beloved, my beloved caused the holy Shechinah to dwell with me, and He fed me with dainties.

Verse 4. Thou art beautiful, O my love, &c.] The Lord said by His word, How fair art thou, my love, when thou art willing to perform my pleasure, beautiful is the house of the sanctuary which thou hast built for me instead of the former sanctuary, which Solomon, king in Jerusalem, built for me, and thy dread was upon all the people in the day that thy four standards marched in the wilderness.

Verse 5. Turn away thine eyes from me, &c.] Set thy doctors, the wise men of the great congregation, in a circle over against me, for these made me their king in the captivity, and fixed the school, for the teaching of my law, and the rest of thy nobles, and the people of the earth justified me by the word of their mouth, as the sons of Jacob, who gathered stones and made an heap upon the mount of Gilead.

Verse 6. Thy teeth are as a flock of sheep, &c.] And the priests and Levites, who eat thine offerings, and the holy tithes, and the oblation of fruits, are pure from all oppression and rapine, for they are as clean as Jacob's flocks of sheep, when they came up from the brook of Jabok, for there is no oppression of rapine in them; but they are all of them like one another, and they always bear twins, neither is there any that miscarrieth or is barren among them.

Verse 7. As a piece of a pomegranate, &c.] And the kingdom of the house of the Hasmonæans are all of them full of the commandments, even as a pomegranate, besides, Matthias, the highpriest, and his sons, who are more righteous than them all, who very eagerly established the commandments, and the words of the law.

Verse 8. There are threescore queens, &c.] At that time the Grecians arose and gathered sixty kings of the children of Esau clothed with coats of mail, riding upon horses, being horsemen, and eighty dukes of the children of Ishmael, riding upon elephants, besides the rest of the nations and languages, of which there is no number, and they appointed king Alexander to be the general over them, and they came to make war against Jerusalem.

Verse 9. My dove, my undefiled, is but one, &c.] And at that time the congregation of Israel, which is like to an unblemished dove, was serving her Lord with a single heart, and was united to the law, and studied in the words of the law with a perfect heart, and her righteousness was as pure as in the day when she came out of Egypt. Lo, the sons of the Hasmonæans, and Matthias, and all the people of Israel, went forth and made war with them, and the Lord delivered them into their hands: which, when the inhabitants of the provinces saw, they blessed them, and the kingdoms of the earth, and the governors, and they praised them.

Verse 10. Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, &c.] The nations said, How splendid are the works of this people as the morning, fair are their young men as the moon, and their righteousness as clear as the sun; and their dread was upon all the inhabitants of the earth, as in the time their four standards marched in the wilderness.

Verse 11. I went down into the garden of nuts, &c.] The Lord of the world said, concerning the second temple, which was built by the hands of Cyrus, I will cause my Shechinah to dwell there, to behold the good works of my people, and see whether the wise men, who are like to a vine, multiply and increase, and whether their branches are full of good works, as the pomegranates.

Verse 12. Or ever I was aware, &c.] And when it appeared manifest before the Lord, that they were righteous, and studied in the law, the Lord said by His word, I will not humble them any more, yea, I will not consume them: but will consult with myself to do them good, and to set them, even their excellent ones, in the chariots of kings, because of the worthiness of the righteous of that generation, who are like in their works to Abraham their father.

It is very desirable. Simeon's stone was the topaz, Heb. pilah, Onk. yarkan, Jon. and Jerus. yarkala, because of its green colour; here it is called akik, but what gem is intended by it is not certain. Levi's stone was the carbuncle, Heb. barketh, Jon. and Jerus. barkata, and here barkan, and so in Onk. and is so called because of its bright red glowing light. Judah's stone was the emerald, Heb. nephes, Onk. lemargan, Jon. lemar, both seem to mean the smaragd; Jerus. calcedon, or the chalcidony; here it is called caudate; it is thought to be the smaragd. See Elias Levita Methurgeman, Baxtor an' Schelizer in voce. Issa-cher's stone was the sapphire, Heb. asaph, Onk. asaban, Jerus. asaphirum, Jerus. asoparyna; all intend the sapphire; here it is called isomard, or the smaragd. Zebulon's stone was the diamond, Heb. yehelion, Onk. asobahon; it bears those names from the hardness of it, Jon. eadimon or etadimon, Jerus. en gita, the calva eye; here it is called gihar, which some think to be the jasper. See Baxtor in voce. Dan's stone was the ligure, Heb. isodon, Onk. isodon, Jon. isadimon, Jerus. isain; here it is called birla, which some seem to be the beryl. Naphtali's stone was the agate, Heb. sheva, Onk. yarkia, Jon. sebia, Jerus. sibilin; and here it is called esphar, which may be thought to be the sapphire. Gad's stone was the amethyst, Heb. achmad, Onk. and Jon. en agia, the calva eye, Jerus. asopahon, the smaragd; and here it is called frozag, but what gem is meant by it is not known. Asher's stone was the beryl, Heb. tahash, Onk. Jon. and Jerus. oron zanna; here it is called frozag. Elias in his Methurgeman says, that a topaz, in the German language, is called from. Joseph's stone was the onyx, Heb. shalshon, Onk. berba, Jon. Lerchah; both seem to intend the beryl; Jerus. balchah or beldinon; here it is called meribag, which some take to be the onyx. See Baxtor in voce. Benjamin's stone was the jasper, Heb. yashph, Jerus. margalita, a pearl, Onk. yastere, Jon. apantur; and here apantor, which Elias in his Methurgeman says is so called because it comes from Pansot; but rather because some sorts of jaspers are variegated and spotted like panthers. In the same order were the names of the twelve tribes engraven both upon the stones in the breastplate, and on the two ivory stones upon the shoulders of the ephod, according to Maimon. Tract. Cole Hamidat, c. 2, s. 1, 2.

¶ Schelizer in his Lex. Pentaglot. fol. 630, says, that Matthias and his posterity were called so from מַטְרֵינִי Haimon, one of their ancestors, though I think there is no evidence of any of their ancestors being of that name. The Jewish writers pretty generally agree, that they were so called from the word מַטְרֵינִי Haimannim, which signifies justice, or great persons, and is so used in Ps. lxxvii. 32, for their king; the Targumists here call them so, but a common priest of the course of Jehoiakim, Heb. David Kineh, and H. Sol. Ben. Melec. in Psa. lxxvii. 32. David de Poinis, Lex. Heb. fol. 42, 1, and so likewise Scudler de Emend. Temp. lib. 5, p. 439, 437, who observes that Matthias was never so called, nor was he a highpriest, though the Targumists here call him so, but a common priest of the course of Jehoiakim, and of the town of Modlin. See I. Maccab. ii. 1, and that this family began to be called by the name of the Hasmonæans, from the times of Simon Hyrcanus, who was both highpriest and prince of the Jewish nation, which kind of government continued in that family unto the times of Herod the great, who destroyed both it and them; and this well agrees with what the Paraphrast here says, who manifestly distinguishes the kingdom of the house of the Hasmonæans, from Matthias and his sons, i. e. Judas Maccabæus, and Jonathan. Of these Hasmonæans Jerad and Aben Ezra explain the 10th and 12th verses of this chapter.

¶ It is said to be built by Cyrus, because he gave the Jews liberty and encouragement to build it; see Ezra I. 2, 3, 4.

¶ In Shirhashirim Rabba in loc. these words are referred to the deliverance of the Israelites out of Egypt, and their exaltation over the nations in the land of Canaan, so the raising of David in the throne of Israel, after he had been persecuted by Eli, and to the advancement of Mordecai to great dignities in Babylon, after his mourning in sackcloth and ashes; all which are represented as severely weeping to them.

in the world to come; and all the spoils which they shall take from the armies of Gog shall be his.

Verse 8. We have a little sister, &c.] At that time the angels of heaven shall say one to another, We have one nation in the earth, and her righteousness is very little, and the kings and governors do not bring her forth to make war with the armies of Gog. What shall we do for our sister, in the day when the nations shall speak of going up against her to war?

Verse 9. If she be a wall, &c.] Michael, the prince of Israel shall say, If she is fixed as a wall among the people, and gives silver to procure the unity of the name of the Lord of the world, I and you, together with their scribes, will surround her, as borders of silver, that the people may have no power to rule over her, even as a worm hath no power to rule over silver; and though she is poor in the commandments, we will seek mercies for her from the Lord, and the righteousness of the law shall be remembered to her, in which infants study, being written upon the table of the heart, and is placed over against the nations as a cedar.

Verse 10. I am a wall, &c.] The congregation of Israel answered and said, I am strong in the words of the law, as a wall, and my sons are mighty as a tower, and at that time the congregation of Israel found mercy in the eyes of her Lord, and all the inhabitants of the earth asked of her welfare.

Verse 11. Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hamon, &c.] One nation came up in the lot of the Lord of the world, with whom is peace, which is like to a vineyard; He placed it in Jerusalem, and delivered it into the hands of the kings of the house of David, who kept it as a vinedresser keeps his vineyard; after that Solomon king of Israel died, it was left in the hands of his son Rehoboam; Jeroboam the son of Nebat, came and divided the kingdom with him, and took out of his hands ten tribes, according to the word of Ahijah, of Shiloh, who was a great man.

Verse 12. My vineyard, which is mine, &c.] When Solomon, the king of Israel, heard the prophecy of Ahijah, of Shiloh, he sought to kill him; but Ahijah fled from Solomon, and went into Egypt. And at that time king Solomon was informed, by prophecy, that he should rule over the ten tribes all his days: but after his death Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, should rule over them; and the two tribes, Judah and Benjamin, Rehoboam the son of Solomon, should reign over.

Verse 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens, &c.] Solomon said at the end of his prophecy, The Lord of the world shall say to the congregation of Israel, in the end of days, O thou congregation of Israel, which art like to a garden highly esteemed of among the nations, and sits in the school with the companions of the Sanhedrim, and the rest of the people, which hearken to the voice of the chief of the school, and learn from his mouth his words, cause me to hear the law, the voice of thy words, when thou sittest to justify and condemn, and I will consent to whatever thou dost.

Verse 14. Make haste, my beloved, &c.] In that very hour the elders of the congregation of Israel shall say, Flee, O my beloved, the Lord of the world, from this defiled earth, and cause Thy Shechinah to dwell in the highest heavens, and in the time of straights, when we pray before Thee, be Thou like a roe, which when it sleeps, has one eye shut, and the other eye open; or as a young hart, which when it flees, looks behind it; so do Thou look upon us, and consider our sorrow and our affliction, from the highest heavens, until the time comes that Thou wilt take pleasure in us, and redeem us, and bring us to the mountain of Jerusalem, where the priests shall offer up before Thee the sweet incense.

^h See Dan. x. 13, 21, and xii. 1. The Jews suppose that every nation or kingdom has an angel set over it to be its president, protector, and defender, and that Michael was that president over Israel.

ⁱ l. z. The knowledge of the unity of God. The doctrine of the unity of the Divine Being is the second article of the Jewish creed, where they say that "God is one, and that there is no unity in any respect like His;" this they very much magnify and extol. Hence they often have those words in their mouths. "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord." Deut. vi. 4, which, they think, is entirely inconsistent with a Trinity of Persons. Hence says Maimonides, Hich. Yesod Hatorah, c. 1, s. 4, "This God is one, not two, or more than two; but one. For there is no unity like His, in any of the individuals, which are found in the world; neither is He one in species, which comprehends more individuals; nor one in body, which is divided into parts and extrinsics: but He is so one, that there is no other unity like it in the world." All which is not so much opposed to the polytheism of the heathens, as to the plurality of Persons in the Trinity, and the incarnation of Christ. But though modern Jews have exploded the doctrine of the Trinity, as inconsistent with that of the unity of the Divine Being, yet their more ancient writers do very manifestly speak of it, as the great mystery of faith, Zohar, edit. Bolognæ, in Gen. fol. 1, col. 3, and in Exod. fol. 15, 3, 4, and fol. 55, 1, and fol. 55, 2, 3; and in Lev. fol. 37, 2; and in Num. fol. 67, 3. Jettire, edit. Hitzingol, fol. 1, 4, 5, 35, 54. Vide Joseph, de Victim. Disp. Theolog. de S. Trinitate, Alla's judgment of the Jewish church, against the Unitarians, c. 9, 10, 11.

^k In Raya Melema in Zohar in Exod. fol. 28, 3, it is said, that "no man is poor but he that is so in the law, and in the commandments," and that "the riches of a man lie in them;" and in Vajikra Rabba, Parash. 34, where these words, in Prov. xxii. 2, "The rich and poor meet together," are mentioned. It is said, "The rich is he that is rich in the law, and the poor is he that is poor in the law;" See also Zohar in Numb. fol. 91, 3, with all which compare 1 Tim. vi. 18.

^m In Shirhashirim Rabba, in loc. it is explained the same way; R. Alen Ezra, by Solomon, king of Israel, by the Targum and Jarchi in loc. by Maimon. Yesod. Hatorah, c. 6, s. 12, and in Zohar in Exod. fol. 91, 3.

ⁿ So it is explained of the people of Israel, under the government of Solomon in Shirhashirim Rabba, and by Jarchi and Alen Ezra in loc.

^o This is a very great mistake of the Targumists, for it was Jeroboam, and not Ahijah, who fled into Egypt, whom Solomon sought to kill; See 1 Kings xi. 40.

^p The same is mentioned in Shirhashirim Rabba in loc.

THE GITAGOVINDA,

OR

THE SONGS OF JAYADEVA.

A mystical Poem, supposed to have a near resemblance to the BOOK of CANTICLES, many passages of which it illustrates.

PART I.

THE firmament is obscured by clouds, the woodlands are black with *Tumâla*¹ trees.
 That youth who roves in the forest must be fearful in the gloom of night.
 Go, my daughter; bring the wanderer home to my rustic mansion.
 Such was the command of NANDA,² the fortunate herdsman; and hence arose the loves of RADHA³ and MADHAVA,⁴ who sported on the bank of Yamunâ,⁵ or hastened eagerly to the secret bower.
 If thy soul be delighted with the remembrance of HĒRI,⁶ or sensible to the raptures of love, listen to the voice of JAYADEVA, whose notes are both sweet and brilliant.
 O thou who reclinest on the bosom of CAMALA,⁷ whose ears flame with gems, and whose locks are embellished with sylvan flowers;
 Thou from whom the day star derived his effulgence, who shewedst the venom-breathing CALIYA,⁸ who beamedst like a sun on the tribe of YADU,⁹ that flourished like a lotus; Thou, who sittest on the plumage of GARURA,¹⁰ who, by subduing demons, gavest exquisite joy to the assembly of immortals;
 Thou, for whom the daughter of JANACA¹¹ was decked in gay apparel, by whom DUSHANA¹² was overthrown;
 Thou, whose eye sparkles like the water lily, who calledst three worlds into existence;
 Thou, by whom the rocks of Mandar¹³ were easily supported; who sippest nectar from the radiant lips of PRĒMA,¹⁴ as the fluttering *Chacora*¹⁵ drinks the moon-beams;
Be victorious, O HĒRI, lord of conquest.
 RADHA sought him long in vain, and her thoughts were confounded by the fever of desire.
 She was roving in the vernal season, among the twining *Vasantis*¹⁶ covered with soft blossoms, when a damsel thus addressed her with youthful hilarity:
 "The gale that has wanted round the beautiful clove plant breathes from the hill of MATLAYA;¹⁷
 The circling arbours resound with the notes of the Cocila,¹⁸ and the murmurs of honey-making swarms;
 Now the hearts of damsels, whose lovers are travelling at a distance, are pierced with anguish;
 While the blossoms of *Bacul*¹⁹ are conspicuous among the flowrets covered with bees.
 The Tumâla, with leaves dark and fragrant, claims a tribute from the musk, which it vanquishes;
 And the clustering flowers of the *Cinruca*²⁰ resembling the nails of Câma,²¹ with which he rends the hearts of the young.
 The full blown *Cîsara*²² gleams like the sceptre of the world's monarch, love;
 And the pointed thyrus of the *Cîtaci*²³ resembles the darts by which lovers are wounded.
 See the bunches of *Pâtals*²⁴ flowers filled with bees, like the quiver of *Smaras*²⁵ full of shafts;
 While the tender blossom of the *Caruna*²⁶ smiles to see the whole world laying shame aside.
 The far-scented *Mâdhavi*²⁷ beautifies the trees, round which it twines;
 And the fresh *Mâlîca*²⁸ seduces with rich perfume even the hearts of hermits;
 While the *Amra*²⁹ tree with blooming tresses is embraced by the gay creeper Atimucta,³⁰
 And the blue streams of Yamuna wind round the groves of Vrindâvan.³¹
 In this charming season, which gives pain to separated lovers, Young HĒRI sports and dances with a company of damsels.
 A breeze, like the breath of love, from the fragrant flowers of the Cîtaci, kindles every heart.
 Whilst it perfumes the woods with prolific dust, which it shakes from the *Mallicâ*³² with half opened buds;
 And the Cocila bursts into song, when he sees the blossoms glistening on the lovely Rasâlâ.³³
 The jealous RADHA gave no answer;
 And, soon after, her officious friend, perceiving the foe of MURÂ³⁴ in the forest, eager for the rapturous embraces of the herdsman's daughters, with whom he was dancing, Thus again addressed his forgotten mistress:
 "With a garland of wild flowers, descending even to the yellow mantle that girds his azure limbs,
 Distinguished by smiling cheeks, and by earrings that sparkle as he plays, HĒRI exults in the assemblage of amorous damsels.
 One of them presses him with her swelling breast, while she warbles with exquisite melody.
 Another, affected by a glance from his eye, stands meditating on the lotos of his face.
 A third, on pretence of whispering a secret in his ear, approaches his temples, and kisses them with ardour.
 One seizes his mantle, and draws him towards her, pointing to the bower on the banks of Yamuna, where elegant *Vanjulas*³⁵ interweave their branches.
 He applauds another who dances in the sportive circle, whilst her bracelets ring, as she beats time with her palms.
 Now he caresses one, and kisses another, smiling on a third with complacency;
 And now he chases her, whose beauty has most allured him.
 Thus the wanton HĒRI frolics, in the season of sweets, among the maids of Vraja,³⁶
 Who rush to his embraces, as if he was pleasure itself assuming the human form:
 And one of them, under a pretext of hymning his divine perfections, whispers in his ear,
 'Thy lips, my beloved, are nectar.'

PART II.

RADHA remains in the forest: but, resenting the promiscuous passion of HĒRI, and his neglect of her beauty, which he once thought superior,
 She retires to a bower of twining plants, the summit of which resounds with the humming of swarms engaged in their sweet labours;
 And there, fallen languid on the ground, she thus addresses her female companion.
 "Though he take recreation in my absence, and smile on all around him,
 Yet my soul remembers him, whose beguiling reed modulates an air sweetened by the nectar of his quivering lip,
 While his ear sparkles with gems, and his eye darts amorous glances;

Him, whose locks are decked with the plumes of peacocks resplendent with many coloured moons ;
 And whose mantle gleams like a dark blue cloud illumined with rainbows ;
 Him, whose graceful smile gives new lustre to his lips, brilliant and soft as a dewy leaf, sweet and ruddy as the blossom of Bandhujiva,³⁷
 While they tremble with eagerness to kiss the daughters of the herdsmen ;
 Him, who disperses the gloom with beams from the jewels which decorate his bosom, his wrists, and his ankles.
 On whose forehead shines a circlet of sandal-wood, which makes even the moon contemptible, when it moves through irradiated clouds ;
 Him, whose earrings are formed of entire gems in the shape of the fish *Macara*³⁸ on the banners of love,
 Even the yellow robed god, whose attendants are the chiefs of deities, of holy men, and of demons ;
 Him who reclines under a gay Cadumba-tree,³⁹ who formerly delighted me, while he gracefully waded in the dance,
 And all his soul sparkled in his eye.
 My weak mind thus enumerates his qualities : and, though offended, strives to banish offence.
 What else can it do ? It cannot part with its affection for CRISHNA, whose love is excited by other damsels, and who sports in the absence of RADHA.
 Bring, O my sweet friend, that vanquisher of the demon Cesi,⁴⁰ to sport with me, who am repairing to a secret bower,
 Who look timidly on all sides, who meditate with amorous fancy on his divine transfiguration.
 Bring him, whose discourse was once composed of the gentlest words, to converse with me, who am bashful on his first approach,
 And express my thoughts with a smile sweet as honey.
 Bring him, who formerly slept on my bosom, to recline with me on a green bed of leaves just gathered, while his lips shed dew, and my arms enfold him.
 Bring him, who has attained the perfection of skill in love's art, whose hand used to press these firm and delicate spheres, to play with me, Whose voice rivals that of the Cócila, and whose tresses are bound with waving blossoms.
 Bring him, who formerly drew me by the locks to his embrace, to repose with me whose feet tinkle, as they move, with rings of gold and of gems.
 Whose loosened zone sounds, as it falls ; and whose limbs are slender and flexible as the creeping plant.
 That god, whose cheeks are beautified by the nectar of his smiles,
 Whose pipe drops in his ecstasy from his hand, I saw in the grove encircled by the damsels of Vrāja, who gazed on him astant from the corners of their eyes.
 I saw him in the grove with happier damsels, yet the sight of him delighted me.
 Soft is the gale which breathes over yon clear pool, and expands the clustering blossoms of the voluble Aśoka ;⁴¹
 Soft, yet grievous to me in the absence of the foe of MADHU.
 Delightful are the flowers of Amra trees on the mountain top, while the murmuring bees pursue their voluptuous toil ;
 Delightful, yet afflicting to me, O friend, in the absence of the youthful Césāva.⁴²

PART III.

Meantime, the destroyer of CANSA,⁴³ having brought to his remembrance the amiable RADHA, forsook the beautiful damsels of Vrāja :
 He sought her in all parts of the forest ; his old wound from love's arrow bled again ;
 He repented of his levity ; and seated in a bower near the bank of Yamunā, the blue daughter of the sun,
 Thus poured forth his lamentation.
 " She is departed,—she saw me, no doubt, surrounded by the wanton shepherdessees, Yet, conscious of my fault, I durst not intercept her flight.
 Wo is me ! she feels a sense of injured honour, and is departed in wrath.
 How will she conduct herself ? How will she express her pain in so long a separation ?
 What is wealth to me ? What are numerous attendants ?
 What are the pleasures of the world ? What joy can I receive from a heavenly abode ?
 I seem to behold her face with eyebrows contracting themselves through a just resentment ;
 It resembles a fresh lotos, over which two black bees are fluttering.
 I seem, so present is she to my imagination, even now to caress her with eagerness.
 Why then do I seek her in this forest ? why do I lament her without cause ?
 O slender damsel, I know that anger has torn thy soft bosom ;
 But whither thou art retired that I know not.
 How can I invite thee to return ?
 Thou art seen by me, indeed, in a vision ; thou seemest to move before me.
 Ah ! why dost thou not rush, as before, to my embrace ?
 Do but forgive me : never again will I commit a similar offence.
 Grant me but a sight of thee, O lovely Radhica ; for my passion torments me.
 I am not the terrible Māhāsa,⁴⁴ a garland of water lilies with subtle filaments decks my shoulders ; not serpents, with twisted folds.
 The blue petals of the lotos glitter on my neck, not the azure gleam of poison :
 Powdered sandal-wood is sprinkled on my limbs ; not pale ashes.
 O god of love, mistake me not for Mahadeva.⁴⁴
 Wound me not again ; approach me not in anger ;
 I love already but too passionately ; yet I have lost my beloved.
 Hold not in thy hand that shaft barbed with an Amra flower.
 Brace not thy bow, O conqueror of the world. Is it valour to slay one who faints ?
 My heart is already pierced by arrows from Rādha's eyes, black and keen as those of an antelope ;
 Yet my eyes are not gratified with her presence.
 Her eyes are full of shafts ; her eyebrows are bows ; and the tips of her ears are silken strings.
 Thus armed by Ananga,⁴⁵ the god of desire, she marches, herself a goddess, to ensure his triumph over the vanquished universe.
 I meditate on her delightful embrace, on the ravishing glances darted from her eye ;
 On the fragrant lotos of her mouth, on her nectar-dropping speech,
 On her lips, ruddy as the berries of the Bimba ⁴⁶ plant ;
 Yet even my fixed meditation on such an assemblage of charms increases, instead of alleviating, the misery of separation.

PART IV.

The damsel, commissioned by RADHA, found the disconsolate god under an arbour of spreading Vāniras by the side of Yamunā ; where, presenting herself gracefully before him, she thus described the affliction of his beloved :
 She despises essence of sandal-wood, and even by moonlight sits brooding over her gloomy sorrow ;
 She declares the gale of Malaya to be venom ; and the sandal-trees, through which it has breathed, to have been the haunt of serpents.
 Thus, O MADHAVA, is she afflicted in thy absence with the pain which love's dart has occasioned ; her soul is fixed on thee.

Fresh arrows of desire are continually assailing her, and she forms a net of lotos leaves as armour for her heart, which thou alone shouldst fortify.

She makes her own bed of the arrows darted by the flowery shafted god : but when she hoped for thy embrace, she had formed for thee a couch of soft blossoms.

Her face is like a water lily, veiled in the dew of tears; and her eyes appear like moons eclipsed, which let fall their gathered nectar through pain caused by the tooth of the furious dragon.

She draws thy image with musk in the character of the deity with five shafts, having subdued the Macar, or horned shark, and holding an arrow tipped with an Amra flower; thus she draws thy picture, and worships it.

At the close of every sentence, O MADHA, she exclaims, At thy feet am I fallen, and in thy absence even the moon, though it be a vase full of nectar, inflames my limbs.

Then by the power of imagination she figures thee standing before her; thee, who art not easily attained;

She sighs, she smiles, she mourns, she weeps, she moves from side to side, she laments and rejoices by turns.

Her abode is a forest; the circle of her female companions is a net;

Her sighs are flames of fire kindled in a thicket; herself (alas! through thy absence) is become a timid roe; and love is the tiger, who springs on her like YAMA, the genius of death.

So emaciated is her beautiful body, that even the light garland which waves over her bosom she thinks a load.

Such, O bright-haired god, is RADHA when thou art absent.

If powder of sandal-wood finely levigated be moistened and applied to her bosom, she starts, and mistakes it for poison.

Her sighs form a breeze long extended, and burn her like the flame which reduced CANDASPA⁴⁷ to ashes.

She throws around her eyes, like blue water-lilies with broken stalks, dropping lucid streams.

Even her bed of tender leaves appears in her sight like a kindled fire.

The palm of her hand supports her aching temple, motionless as the crescent rising at eve.

HEBI, HEBI, thus in silence she meditates on thy name, as if her wish were gratified, and she were dying through thy absence.

She rends her locks; she pants; she laments inarticulately;

She trembles; she pines; she muses; she moves from place to place; she closes her eyes;

She falls; she rises again; she faints: in such a fever of love, she may live, O celestial physician, if thou administer the remedy;

But shouldst thou be unkind, her malady will be desperate.

Thus, O divine healer, by the nectar of thy love must RADHA be restored to health; and, if thou refuse it, thy heart must be harder than the thunder stone.

Long has her soul pined, and long has she been heated with sandal-wood, moonlight, and water-lilies, with which others are cooled;

Yet she patiently and in secret meditates on thee, who alone canst relieve her.

Shouldst thou be inconstant, how can she, wasted as she is to a shadow, support life a single moment?

How can she, who lately could not endure thy absence even for an instant, forbear sighing now, when she looks with half-closed eyes on the Rasāla with blooming branches, which remind her of the vernal season, when she first beheld thee with rapture?

Here have I chosen my abode: go quickly to RADHA; sooth her with my message, and conduct her hither.

So spoke the foe of MADHUS to the anxious damsel, who hastened back, and thus addressed her companion:

Whilst a sweet breeze from the hills of Malaya comes wafting on his plumes the young god of desire;

While many a flower points his extended petals to pierce the bosoms of separated lovers,

The deity crowned with sylvan blossoms laments, O friend, in thy absence.

Even the dewy rays of the moon burn him; and as the shaft of love is descending, he mourns inarticulately with increasing distraction.

When the bees murmur softly, he covers his ears;

Misery sits fixed in his heart, and every returning night adds anguish to anguish.

He quits his radiant palace for the wild forest, where he sinks on a bed of cold clay, and frequently mutters thy name.

In yon bower, to which the pilgrims of love are used to repair, he meditates on thy form, repeating in silence some enchanting word, which once dropped from thy lips, and thirsting for the nectar which they alone can supply.

Delay not, O loveliest of women; follow the lord of thy heart: behold, he seeks the appointed shade, bright with the ornaments of love, and confident of the promised bliss.

Having bound his locks with forest flowers, he hastens to yon arbour, where a soft gale breathes over the banks of

Yamuna:

There again pronouncing thy name, he modulates his divine reed.

Oh! with what rapture doth he gaze on the golden dust, which the breeze shakes from expanded blossoms:

The breeze which has kissed thy cheek!

With a mind languid as a drooping wing, feeble as a trembling leaf, he doubtfully expects thy approach, and timidly looks on the path which thou must tread.

Leave behind thee, O friend, the ring which tinkles on the delicate ankle, when thou sportest in the dance;

Hastily cast over thee thy azure mantle, and run to the gloomy bower.

The reward of thy speed, O thou who sparklest like lightning, will be to shine on the blue bosom of MURARI,⁴⁸

Which resembles a vernal cloud, decked with a string of pearls like a flock of white water-birds fluttering in the air.

Disappoint not, O thou lotos-eyed, the vanquisher of MADHU; accomplish his desire.

But go quickly: it is night; and the night also will quickly depart.

Again and again he sighs; he looks around; he re-enters the arbour; he can scarce articulate thy sweet name;

He again smooths his flowery couch; he looks wild; he becomes frantic; thy beloved will perish through desire.

The bright-beamed god sinks in the west, and thy pain of separation may also be removed;

The blackness of the night is increased, and the passionate imagination of GOVINDA⁴⁹ has acquired additional gloom.

My address to thee has equalled in length and in sweetness the song of the Cécilia: delay will make thee miserable,

O my beautiful friend.

Seize the moment of delight in the place of assignation with the son of DEVACI,⁵¹ who descended from heaven to remove the burdens of the universe.

He is a blue gem on the forehead of the three worlds, and longs to sip honey like the bee from the fragrant lotos of thy cheek.

But the solicitous maid, perceiving that RADHA was unable, through debility, to move from her arbour of flowery creepers, returned to GOVINDA, who was himself disordered with love, and thus described her situation.

She mourns, O sovereign of the world, in her verdant bower;

She looks eagerly on all sides in hope of thy approach; then, gaining strength from the delightful idea of the proposed meeting, she advances a few steps, and falls languid on the ground.

When she rises, she weaves bracelets of fresh leaves; she dresses herself like her beloved, and looking at herself in sport, exclaims,—“Behold the vanquisher of MADHU!”

Then she repeats again and again the name of HEBI, and catching at a dark blue cloud, strives to embrace it, saying,

“It is my beloved who approaches.”

Thus, while thou art dilatory, she lies expecting thee: she mourns; she weeps; she puts on her gayest ornaments to receive her lord;

She compresses her deep sighs within her bosom: and, then meditating on thee, O cruel, she is drowned in a sea of rapturous imaginations.

If a leaf but quiver, she supposes thee arrived; she spreads her couch; she forms in her mind a hundred modes of delight;

Yet, if thou go not to her bower, she must die this night through excessive anguish.

PART V.

By this time the moon spread a net of beams over the groves of Vrindavan,
And looked like a drop of liquid sandal on the face of the sky, which smiled like a beautiful damsel;
And its orb with many spots betrayed, as it were, a consciousness of guilt, in having often attended amorous maids to the loss of their family honour.

The moon, with a black fawn couched on its disk, advanced in its nightly course.
But MADHAVA had not advanced to the bower of RADHA, who thus bewailed his delay with notes of varied lamentations.
The appointed moment is come; but HARI, alas! comes not to the grove.

Must the season of my unblemished youth pass thus idly away?
Oh! what refuge can I seek, deluded as I am by the guile of my female adviser?
The god with five arrows has wounded my heart; and I am deserted by him, for whose sake I have sought at night the darkest recess of the forest.

Since my best beloved friends have deceived me, it is my wish to die;
Since my senses are disordered, and my bosom is on fire,—why stay I longer in this world?
The coolness of this vernal night gives me pain, instead of refreshment.
Some happier damsel enjoys my beloved; whilst I, alas! am looking at the gems of my bracelets, which are blackened by the flames of my passion.

My neck, more delicate than the tenderest blossom, is hurt by the garland that encircles it:
Flowers are, indeed, the arrows of love, and he plays with them cruelly.
I make this wood my dwelling: I regard not the roughness of the Vélas trees;
But the destroyer of MADHU holds me not in his remembrance!
Why comes he not to the bower of blooming Vanjulas, assigned for meeting?
Some ardent rival, no doubt, keeps him locked in her embrace.
Or have his companions detained him with mirthful recreations?
Else why roams he not through the cool shades?

Perhaps, through weakness, the heart-sick lover is unable to advance even a step!
So saying, she raised her eyes; and, seeing her damsel return silent and mournful, unaccompanied by MADHAVA, she was alarmed even to phrensy;

And, as if she actually beheld him in the arms of a rival, she thus described the vision which overpowered her intellect.
Yes, in habiliments becoming the war of love, and with tresses waving like flowery banners,
A damsel, more alluring than RADHA, enjoys the conqueror of MADHU.

Her form is transfigured by the touch of her divine lover: her garland quivers over her swelling bosom;
Her face like the moon is graced with clouds of dark hair, and trembles while she quaffs the nectareous dew of his lip:
Her bright ear-rings dance over her cheeks, which they irradiate; and the small bells on her girdle tinkle as she moves.

Bashful at first, she smiles at length on her embracer, and expresses her joy with inarticulate murmurs;
While she floats on the waves of desire, and closes her eyes dazzled with the blaze of approaching CAMA:
And now this heroine in love's warfare falls, exhausted and vanquished by the resistless MURARI.
But alas! in my bosom prevails the flame of jealousy, and yon moon, which dispels the sorrow of others, increases mine.

See again, where the foe of MUKA sports in yon grove on the bank of the Yamuna.
See how he kisses the lip of my rival, and imprints on her forehead an ornament of pure musk, black as the young antelope on the lunar orb!
Now, like the husband of RETI,⁵³ he fixes white blossoms on her dark locks, where they gleam like flashes of lightning among the curled clouds.

On her breasts, like two firmaments, he places a string of gems like a radiant constellation.
He binds on her arms, graceful as the stalks of the water-lily, and adorned with hands glowing like the petals of its flower, a bracelet of sapphires, which resemble a cluster of bees.

Ah! see how he ties round her waist a rich girdle illumined with golden bells,
Which seem to laugh, as they tinkle, at the inferior brightness of the leafy garlands, which lovers hang on their bowers to propitiate the god of desire.

He places her soft foot, as he reclines by her side, on his ardent bosom, and stains it with the ruddy hue of Yavaca.
Say, my friend, why pass I my nights in this tangled forest without joy, and without hope,
While the faithless brother of HALADHERA clasps my rival in his arms?
Yet why, my companion, shouldst thou mourn, though my perfidious youth has disappointed me?
What offence is it of thine, if he sport with a crowd of damsels happier than I?
Mark, how my soul, attracted by his irresistible charms, bursts from its mortal frame, and rushes to mix with its beloved.

She, whom the god enjoys, crowned with sylvan flowers,
Sits carelessly on a bed of leaves with him, whose wanton eyes resemble blue water-lilies agitated by the breeze.
She feels no flame from the gales of Malaya with him, whose words are sweeter than the water of life.
She derides the shafts of soul-born CAMA with him, whose lips are like a red lotos in full bloom.
She is cooled by the moon's dewy beams, while she reclines with him, whose hands and feet glow like vernal flowers.
No female companion deludes her, while she sports with him, whose vesture blazes like tried gold.
She faints not through excess of passion, while she caresses that youth, who surpasses in beauty the inhabitants of all worlds.

O gale, scented with sandal, who breathest love from the regions of the south, be propitious but for a moment:
When thou hast brought my beloved before my eyes, thou mayest freely waft away my soul.
Love, with eyes like blue water-lilies, again assails me, and triumphs;
And, while the perfidy of my beloved rends my heart, my female friend is my foe;
The cool breeze scorches me like a flame, and the nectar-dropping moon is my poison.
Bring disease and death, O gale of Malaya! Seize my spirit, O god with five arrows!
I ask not mercy from thee: no more will I dwell in the cottage of my father.
Receive me in thy azure waves, O sister of YAMA,⁵⁴ that the ardour of my heart may be allayed.

PART VI.

Pierced by the arrows of love, she passed the night in the agonies of despair, and at early dawn thus rebuked her lover, whom she saw lying prostrate before her, and imploring her forgiveness.
Alas! alas! go, MADHAVA, depart, O CHHAYA,⁵⁴ speak not the language of guile;
Follow her, O lotos-eyed god, follow her, who dispels thy care.
Look at his eye half-opened, red with continual waking through the pleasurable night, yet smiling still with affection for my rival!

Thy teeth, O cerulean youth, are azure as thy complexion from the kisses which thou hast imprinted on the beautiful eyes of thy darling, graced with dark blue powder;
And thy limbs marked with punctures in love's warfare exhibit a letter of conquest written on polished sapphires with liquid gold.

That broad bosom, stained by the bright lotos of her foot, displays a vesture of ruddy leaves over the tree of thy heart, which trembles within it.

The pressure of her lip on thine, wounds me to the soul.
 Ah! how canst thou assert that we are one, since our sensations differ thus widely?
 Thy soul, O dark-limbed god, shews its blackness externally.
 How couldst thou deceive a girl who relied on thee; a girl who burned in the fever of love?
 Thou rovest in the woods, and females are thy prey;—what wonder?
 Even thy childish heart was malignant; and thou gavest death to the nurse, who would have given thee milk.
 Since thy tenderness for me, of which these forests used to talk, has now vanished;
 And since thy breast, reddened by the feet of my rival, glows as if thy ardent passion for her were bursting from it,
 The sight of thee, O deceiver, makes me, (ah! must I say it?) blush at my own affection.
 Having thus inveighed against her beloved, she sat overwhelmed in grief, and silently meditated on his charms; when her damsel softly addressed her.
 He is gone: the light air has wafted him away. What pleasure now, my beloved, remains in thy mansion?
 Continue not, resentful woman, thy indignation against the beautiful MADHAVA.
 Why shouldst thou render vain those round smooth vases, ample and ripe as the sweet fruit of yon Tala tree?
 How often and how recently have I said, Forsake not the blooming HARI?
 Why sittest thou so mournful? Why weepest thou with distraction, when the damsels are laughing around thee?
 Thou hast formed a couch of soft lotus leaves: let thy darling charm thy sight, while he reposes on it.
 Afflict not thy soul with extreme anguish: but attend to my words, which conceal no guile.
 Suffer Cesava to approach; let him speak with exquisite sweetness, and dissipate all thy sorrows.
 If thou art harsh to him, who is amiable; if thou art proudly silent, when he deprecates thy wrath with lowly prostrations;
 If thou shewest aversion to him, who loves thee passionately; if, when he bends before thee, thy face be turned contemptuously away;
 By the same rule of contrariety the dust of sandal-wood, which thou hast sprinkled, may become poison;
 The moon, with cool beams, a scorching sun; the fresh dew, a consuming flame; and the sports of love be changed into agony.
 MADHAVA was not absent long; he returned to his beloved; whose cheeks were heated by the sultry gale of her sighs.
 Her anger was diminished, not wholly abated: but she secretly rejoiced at his return, while the shades of night also were approaching.
 She looked abashed at her damsel, while he, with faltering accents, implored her forgiveness.
 Speak but one mild word, and the rays of thy sparkling teeth will dispel the gloom of my fears.
 My trembling lips, like thirsty Chacoras, long to drink the moon-beams of thy cheek.
 O my darling, who art naturally so tender-hearted, abandon thy causeless indignation.
 At this moment the flame of desire consumes my heart. Oh! grant me a draught of honey from the lotus of thy mouth.
 Or, if thou beest inexorable, grant me death from the arrows of thy keen eyes;
 Make thy arms my chains; and punish me according to thy pleasure.
 Thou art my life; thou art my ornament; thou art a pearl in the ocean of my mortal birth:
 Oh! be favourable now, and my heart shall be eternally grateful.
 Thine eyes, which nature formed like blue water-lilies, are become, through thy resentment, like petals of the crimson lotus.
 Oh! tinge with their effulgence these my dark limbs, that they may glow like the shafts of love tipped with flowers.
 Place on my head that foot like a fresh leaf; and shade me from the sun of my passion, whose beams I am unable to bear.
 Spread a string of gems on those two soft globes; let the golden bells of thy zone tinkle, and proclaim the mild edict of love.
 Say, O damsel, with delicate speech, shall I dye red with the juice of Alactaca those beautiful feet, which will make the full blown lotus blush with shame?
 Abandon thy doubts of my heart, now indeed fluttering through fear of thy displeasure, but hereafter to be fixed wholly on thee;
 A heart, which has no room in it for another: none else can enter it, but love, the bodiless god.
 Let him wing his arrows; let him wound me mortally; decline not, O cruel, the pleasure of seeing me expire.
 Thy face is bright as the moon, though its beams drop the venom of maddening desire;
 Let thy nectareous lip be the charmer, who alone has power to lull the serpent, or supply an antidote for his poison.
 Thy silence afflicts me: oh! speak with the voice of music, and let thy sweet accents allay my ardour.
 Abandon thy wrath: but abandon not a lover, who surpasses in beauty the sons of men, and who kneels before thee,
 O thou most beautiful among women.
 Thy lips are a Bandhujiva flower; and the lustre of the Madhava ⁵⁵ beams on thy cheek;
 This eye outshines the blue lotus; thy nose is a bud of the Tila,⁵⁶ the Cunda ⁵⁷ blossom yields to thy teeth;
 Thus the flowery shafted god borrows from thee the points of his darts, and subdues the universe.
 Surely, thou descendest from heaven, O slender damsel, attended by a company of youthful goddesses: and all their beauties are collected in thee.

PART VII.

He spake; and, seeing her appeased by his homage, flew to his bower, clad in a gay mantle.
 The night now veiled all visible objects; and the damsel thus exhorted Radha, while she decked her with beaming ornaments.
 Follow, gentle RADHICA, follow the son of MADHU;
 His discourse was elegantly composed of sweet phrases; he prostrated himself at thy feet, and he now hastens to his delighted couch by yon grove of branching Varjalas.
 Bind round thy ankle rings beaming with gems; and advance with mincing steps, like the pearl-fed Marala.
 Drink with ravished ears the soft accents of HARI; and feast on love, while the warbling Cocilas obeys the mild ordinance of the flower-darting god.
 Abandon delay: see, the whole assembly of slender plants, pointing to the bower with fingers of young leaves agitated by the gale, make signals for thy departure.
 Ask those two round hillocks, which receive pure dew-drops from the garland playing on thy neck, and the buds whose tops start aloft with the thought of thy darling;
 Ask, and they will tell, that thy soul is intent on the warfare of love:
 Advance, fervid warrior, advance with alacrity, while the sound of thy tinkling waist-bells shall represent martial music.
 Lead with thee some favoured maid: grasp her hand with thine, whose fingers are long and smooth as love's arrows.
 March; and with the noise of thy bracelets proclaim thy approach to the youth, who will own himself thy slave.
 She will come; she will exult in beholding me; she will pour accents of delight;
 She will enfold me with eager arms; she will melt with affection.
 Such are his thoughts at this moment; and, thus thinking, he looks through the long avenue;
 He trembles; he rejoices; he burns; he moves from place to place; he faints, when he sees thee not coming, and falls in his gloomy bower.
 The night now dresses in habiliments fit for secrecy the many damsels, who hasten to their places of assignment,
 She sets off with blackness their beautiful eyes; fixes dark Tamala leaves behind their ears;

Decks their locks with the deep azure of water lilies, and sprinkles musk on their panting bosoms. The nocturnal sky, black as the touchstone, tries the gold of their affections, And is marked with rich lines from the flashes of their beauty, in which they surpass the brightest Cosmiritans.
 RADHA, thus incited, tripped through the forest: but shame overpowered her, when, by the light of innumerable gems, on the arms, the neck, and the feet of her beloved;
 She saw him at the door of his flowery mansion; then her damsel again addressed her with ardent exultation.
 Enter, sweet RADHA, the bower of HEER; seek delight, O thou whose bosom laughs with the foretaste of happiness.
 Enter, sweet RADHA, the bower graced with a bed of Asoca leaves; seek delight, O thou, whose garland leaps with joy on thy breast.
 Enter, sweet RADHA, the bower illumined with gay blossoms; seek delight, O thou, whose limbs far excel them in softness.
 Enter, O RADHA, the bower made cool and fragrant by gales from the woods of Malaya; seek delight, O thou, whose amorous lays are softer than breezes.
 Enter, O RADHA, the bower spread with leaves of twining creepers; seek delight, O thou, whose arms have been long inflexible.
 Enter, O RADHA, the bower which resounds with the murmur of honey-making bees; seek delight, O thou, whose embrace yields more exquisite sweetness.
 Enter, O RADHA, the bower attuned by the melodious band of Cocilas; seek delight, O thou, whose lips, which out-shine the grains of the pomegranate, are embellished, when thou speakest, by the brightness of thy teeth.
 Long has he borne thee in his mind; and now, in an agony of desire, he pants to taste nectar from thy lip.
 Deign to restore thy slave, who will bend before the lotus of thy foot, and press it to his irradiated bosom;
 A slave, who acknowledges himself bought by thee for a single glance from thy eye, and a toss of thy disdainful eyebrow. She ended; and RADHA, with timid joy, darting her eyes on GOVINDA, while she musically sounded the rings of her ankles and the bells of her zone, entered the mystic bower of her only beloved.
 There she beheld her MADHAVA, who delighted in her alone;
 Who so long had sighed for her embrace; and whose countenance then gleamed with excessive rapture.
 His heart was agitated by her sight, as the waves of the deep are affected by the lunar orb.
 His azure breast glittered with pearls of unblemished lustre, like the full bed of the cerulean Yamuna, interspersed with curls of white foam.
 From his graceful waist flowed a pale yellow robe, which resembled the golden dust of the water-lily, scattered over its blue petals.
 His passion was inflamed by the glances of her eyes, which played like a pair of water-birds with blue plumage, that sport near a full-blown lotus on a pool in the season of dew.
 Bright ear-rings, like two suns, displayed in full expansion the flowers of his cheeks and lips, which glistened with the liquid radiance of smiles.
 His locks, interwoven with blossoms, were like a cloud variegated with moon-beams;
 And on his forehead shone a circle of odorous oil, extracted from the sandal of Malaya, like the moon just appearing on the dusky horizon;
 While his whole body seemed in a flame from the blaze of unnumbered gems.
 Tears of transport gushed in a stream from the full eyes of RADHA, and their watery glances gleamed on her best beloved.
 Even shame, which before had taken its abode in their dark pupils, was itself ashamed, and departed, when the fawn-eyed RADHA gazed on the brightened face of CRISHNA.
 While she passed by the soft edge of his couch, and the bevy of his attendant nymphs, pretending to strike the gnats from their cheeks in order to conceal their smiles, warily retired from the bower.

PART VIII.

GOVINDA, seeing his beloved cheerful and serene, her lips sparkling with smiles, and her eye speaking desire, thus eagerly addressed her; while she carelessly reclined on the leafy bed strewn with soft blossoms.
 Set the lotus of thy foot on this azure bosom; and let this couch be victorious over all who rebel against love.
 Give short rapture, sweet RADHA, to NARAYAN,⁵⁸ thy adorer.
 I do thee homage; I press with my blooming palms thy feet, weary with so long a walk.
 O that I were the golden ring, that plays round thy ankle!
 Speak but one gentle word; bid nectar drop from the bright moon of thy mouth.
 Since the pain of absence is removed, let me thus remove the thin vest that enviously hides thy charms.
 Blest should I be, if those raised globes were fixed on my bosom, and the ardour of my passion allayed.
 O! suffer me to quaff the liquid bliss of those lips;
 Restore with their water of life thy slave, who has long been lifeless, whom the fire of separation has consumed.
 Long have these ears been afflicted in thy absence by the notes of the Cocila.
 Relieve them with the sound of thy tinkling waist bells, which yield music, almost equal to the music of thy voice.
 Why are those eyes half-closed? Are they ashamed of seeing a youth to whom thy careless resentment gave anguish?
 Oh! let affliction cease; and let ecstasy drown the remembrance of sorrow.

PART IX.

In the morning she rose disarrayed, and her eyes betrayed a night without slumber; when the yellow-robed god, who gazed on her with transport, thus meditated on her charms in his heavenly mind:
 Though her locks be diffused at random; though the lustre of her lips be faded; though her garland and zone be fallen from their enchanting stations;
 And though she hide their places with her hands, looking towards me with bashful silence, yet even thus disarrayed, she fills me with extatic delight.
 But RADHA preparing to array herself, before the company of nymphs could see her confusion, spake thus with exultation to her obsequious lover.
 Place, O son of YADU, with fingers cooler than sandal-wood, place a circlet of musk on this breast, which resembles a vase of consecrated water, crowned with fresh leaves, and fixed near a vernal bower, to propitiate the god of love.
 Place, my darling, the glossy powder, which would make the blackest bee envious, on this eye, whose glances are keener than arrows darted by the husband of REER.
 Fix, O accomplished youth, the two gems, which form part of love's chain, in those ears whence the antelopes of thine eyes may run downwards, and sport at pleasure.
 Place now a fresh circle of musk, black as the lunar spots, on the moon of my forehead; and mix gay flowers on my tresses with a peacock's feathers, in graceful order, that they may wave like the banners of CAMA.
 Now replace, O tender-hearted, the loose ornaments of my vesture; and refix the golden bells of my girdle on their destined station, which resembles those hills, where the god with five shafts, who destroyed SAMBARA,⁵⁹ keeps his elephant ready for battle.
 While she spake, the heart of YADAVA triumphed; and, obeying her sportful behests, he placed musky spots on her bosom and forehead, dyed her temples with radiant hues, embellished her eyes with additional blackness, decked her braided hair and her neck with fresh garlands, and tied on her wrists the loosened bracelets, on her ankles the beamy rings, and round her waist the zone of bells, that sounded with ravishing melody.

Whatever is delightful in the modes of music, whatever is divine in meditations on VISHNU,⁶⁰ whatever is exquisite in the sweet art of love, whatever is graceful in the fine strains of poetry, all that let the happy and wise learn from the songs of JAYADEVA,⁶¹ whose soul is united with the foot of NARAYAN.

May that HARI be your support, who expanded himself into an infinity of bright forms, when, eager to gaze, with myriads of eyes, in the daughter of the ocean, he displayed his great character of the all-pervading deity, by the multiplied reflections of his divine person in the numberless gems on the many heads of the king of serpents, whom he chose for his couch;

That HARI, who, removing his lucid veil from the bosom of PRADMA, and fixing his eyes on the delicious buds that grew on it, diverted her attention by declaring that when she had chosen him as her bridegroom near the sea of milk, the disappointed husband of PERVATI⁶² drank in despair the venom, which dyed his neck azure!

I HAVE now placed before my readers this extraordinary Poem, which I believe will be considered, by every adequate judge, to be equal, if not superior, to every thing of the kind that has been produced, either by the ancients or moderns. The Poem is confessedly mystical, relating to the pure and affectionate intercourse between the Deity and human souls; and is capable of a very extended comment, to illustrate its phraseology, and explain its almost numberless allusions to the Mythological System of the Hindoos.

But the chief design of its introduction here, is to illustrate the phraseology of the Song of Songs. The most superficial reader cannot but be struck with the similarity of the language, of the metaphors and imagery. There are few turns of thought in the Song of Songs, that may not find a parallel in the Gitagovinda:—and even the strongly impassioned language of Solomon may be every where supported by that of Jayadeva, and vice versa. Could it be proved that the love between Christ and the Church were really the subject of the Canticles, the Gitagovinda might be applied with the utmost success to illustrate and explain all its imagery, and all its allusions. But we have no key to unlock its reference; no data to which we can confidently refer; and though it be generally allowed to be a mystic Song, yet all interpreters follow their own creed in its explanation; and it is only on the general subject that any two of them agree. As I am not satisfied that the common method used in its interpretation is either correct or genuine, I have simply avoided the rocks on which others have been wrecked: but have constructed no chart according to which a more prosperous voyage might be projected.

The late learned and pious Mr. Romaine seems to have thought that a competent knowledge of the original language might lead to its proper illustration; and is indignant at those who have attempted its explanation without this necessary qualification. Of his knowledge of the sacred language no man doubts. I also have brought some acquaintance with the original to bear on the subject: but, though perhaps as well acquainted with the meaning of the words as Mr. Romaine himself, I have not been able to discover his system in the Poem; and I dare not, by conjecture, put a meaning on any thing that professes to be a revelation sent from God. I respect many of its interpreters for their piety and learning, but I cannot follow their steps: they have not proved to me that Solomon's Song refers to the love of Christ and His Church. Let this be my apology with the candid reader for not entering into a more extended comment on this extraordinary book.

ADAM CLARKE.

To ascertain some of the latter PARTS of this poem, I have been obliged to trust to my own judgment; as Sir William Jones, from whom I have borrowed these, had not marked any division; and I have had the original of the four first PARTS only.

As to the Old Version of the Canticles here introduced, the reader will be pleased to observe, it is that which was used by our forefathers before and after the Reformation: one word of which I would not presume to alter or change. It is sacred both by age and use.

NOTES ON THE GITAGOVINDA.

- 1 Tamala tree.—A dark-leaved tree, common in Mat'hura and other parts, but not found in Bengal.—The laurel.
- 2 Nanda.—The foster father of Krishna.
- 3 Radhika.—One of the principal and favourite mistresses of Krishna.
- 4 Madhava.—One of the names of Krishna, implying the possession of Ma or Lachmi, his heavenly consort.
- 5 Yamuna.—Vulgarly called Jumna, the river which flows by Dehlee, Mat'hura, and Agra.
- 6 Hari.—A name of Krishna; importing the remover of sin and suffering.

- 61 Jayadeva.—A celebrated Hindu poet, the author of the preceding poem.
- 62 Pervati.—The consort of Siva.

INTRODUCTION

BOOK OF THE PROPHET ISAIAH.

ON the term Prophet, and on the nature and several kinds of prophecy, I have already discoursed in different parts of this Work. See the Notes on Gen. xv. 1; xx. 7, and the Preface to the Four Gospels and Acts of the Apostles. A few things only require to be recapitulated. נָבִיא naba, signifies not only to foretell future events, but also to pray and supplicate; and נָבִיא Nabia, the Prophet, was by office not only a declarer of events still future, but the general preacher of the day: and as he frequently foresaw the approach of disastrous times, such was the wickedness of the people, he employed his time in counselling sinners to turn from the error of their ways, and in making strong prayer and supplication to God to avert the threatened judgments; for such predictions, however apparently positive in their terms, were generally conditional, strange as this may appear to some who, through their general ignorance of every thing but the peculiarities of their own creed, suppose that every occurrence is impelled by an irresistible necessity.

To His own conduct, in reference to such matters, God has been pleased to give us a key, see Jer. xviii. which opens all difficulties, and furnishes us with a general comment on His own providence. God is absolute Master of His own ways; and as He has made man a free agent, whatever concerns him in reference to futurity, on which God is pleased to express His mind in the way of prophecy, there is a condition generally implied or expressed. As this is but seldom attended to by partial interpreters, (who wish by their doctrine of fatalism to bind even God Himself,) many contradictory sentiments are put in the mouths of His Prophets.

In ancient times those who were afterwards called Prophets, were termed Seers, 1 Sam. ix. 9, חֹרֵה ha-roeh, the seeing person; he who perceives mentally what the design of God is. Sometimes called also חֹזֵה chozeh, the man who has visions, or supernatural revelations, 1 Kings xxii. 17, 2 Kings xvii. 13. Both these terms are translated seer, in our common Version. They were sometimes also called men of God, and messengers, or angels of God. In their case, it was ever understood that all God's Prophets had an extraordinary commission, and had their message given them by immediate inspiration.

In this the Heathen copied after the people of God. They also had their Prophets and Seers; and hence their Augurs and Auguries, their Haruspices, Priests, and Priestesses, and their oracles; all pretending to be divinely inspired, and to declare nothing but the truth; for what was truth and fact among the former, was affected and pretended among the latter.

Many Prophets and Seers are mentioned in the Sacred Writings: but, fragments and insulated prophecies excepted, we have the Works of only SIXTEEN; four of whom are termed the former, or larger Prophets, and twelve the latter or minor Prophets. They have these epithets not from priority of time, or from minor importance: but merely from the places they occupy in the present arrangement of the Books in the Bible, and from the relative size of their productions.

The Jews reckon forty-eight Prophets, and seven Prophetesses; and Epiphanius, in a fragment preserved by Cotelerius, reckons not fewer than seventy-three Prophets, and ten Prophetesses: but in both collections there are many which have no Scriptural pretensions to such a distinguished rank.

The succession of Prophets in the Jewish Church is well worthy of note; because it not only manifests the merciful regards of God towards that people, but also the uninterrupted succession of the prophetic influence at least from Moses to Malachi, if not before, for this gift was not withheld under the patriarchal dispensation: indeed we might boldly ask any man to shew when the time was in which God left Himself without a witness of this kind.

To shew this succession I shall endeavour to give the different Prophets in order of time.

1. The first man ADAM has an undoubted right to stand at the head of the Prophets, as he does at the head of the human race. His declaration concerning marriage, "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife," is so truly prophetic, that no doubt can be formed on the subject. There was then nothing in nature or experience, to justify such an assertion; and he could have it only by Divine inspiration. The millions of instances which have since occurred, and the numerous laws which have been founded on this principle among all the nations of the earth, shew with what precision the declaration was conceived, and with what truth it was published to the world. Add to this, his correct knowledge of the nature of the different animals, so that he could impose on them names expressive of their respective natures or propensities; which proves that he must have acted under a Divine inspiration; for known only to God are all His works from the beginning.

2. ENOCH, the seventh from Adam, is expressly called a Prophet: and St. Jude, ver. 14, 15, has preserved a fragment of one of his prophecies, relative to the corruption of the antediluvian world, and the approaching judgments of God.

3. NOAH was a Prophet and Preacher of righteousness, and predicted the general deluge, and the time of respite which God in His mercy had granted to the offenders of that age.

4. ABRAHAM is expressly called a Prophet also, Gen. xx. 7; and it appears from Psa. cv. 15, that he partook of the Divine anointing.

5. ISAAC, Gen. xxvii. 27, predicted the future greatness of his son Jacob, and of the race that was to spring from him.

6. JACOB was so especially favoured with the prophetic gift, that he distinctly foretold what should happen to each of his sons. See Gen. xlix.

7. JOSEPH was favoured with several prophetic visions, and had the gift of interpreting dreams which portended future occurrences, see Gen. xxxvii. xl. xli; and foretold the redemption of the Israelites from Egypt, Gen. l. 25. Thus far the prophetic influence extended through the patriarchal dispensation for about two thousand three hundred and seventy years from the Creation.

With the Jewish Dispensation the prophetic gift revived; and,

8. MOSES became one of the most eminent Prophets that had ever appeared. He not only enjoyed the continual prophetic afflatus, but had such visions of, and intercourse with God, as no person either before or since possessed; and by which he was highly qualified to perform the arduous work which God had given him to do, and to frame that Code of Laws, which had no equal before the promulgation of the Gospel. See Deut. xxxiv. 10. He predicted expressly the coming of the Messiah. See Deut. xviii. 18.

9. AARON, the brother of Moses, his prime minister, and God's high priest, was also a partaker of His Divine influence, and declared the will of God to Pharaoh and the Israelites, not merely from information received from Moses, but also by immediate communication from God. See Exod. iv. 15.

10. MIRIAM, the sister of Moses and Aaron, is expressly called a Prophetess, Exod. xv. 20. Numb. xii. 2.

11. JOSHUA, who succeeded Moses, was a partaker of the same grace. He was appointed by Moses under the especial direction of God, Numb. xxvii. 18—23. Deut. xxxiv. 9, and has always been reckoned among the Jews as one of the Prophets. See Eccles. xli. 1—6.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF ISAIAH.

Though I cannot place them in the same rank, yet it is necessary to state that, by the Jews several of the Judges are classed among the Prophets; such as Othniel, Ehud, Samson, and Barak.

12. DEBORAH, the coadjutor of Barak, is called a Prophetess, Judges iv. 4. During her time, and down to the days of Eli the high priest, prophecy had been very scarce, there having been very few on whom the Spirit of the Lord had rested: "the word of the Lord was scarce in those days, and there was no open vision," 1 Sam. iii. 1.

13. HANNAH, the wife of Elkanah, is supposed to have partaken of the spirit of prophecy; and to have foretold, at least indirectly, the advent of the Messiah, and the glory that should be revealed under the Gospel. See her Song, 1 Sam. ii. 1-10. And what renders this more likely is, that it is on the model, and with many of the expressions, of this Song, that the blessed Virgin composed her Magnificat, Luke i. 46-55.

14. SAMUEL, her son, was one of the most eminent of the Jewish Prophets, and was the last and indeed the greatest of the Judges of Israel. In his time the prophetic influence seems to have rested upon many; so that we find even whole schools or colleges of Prophets which were under his direction. See 1 Sam. x. 5, 10; xix. 20. and elsewhere.

15. DAVID united in himself the character of Prophet and king, in the most eminent manner; and from his reign down to the Captivity the succession was not only not interrupted, but these extraordinary messengers of God became very numerous.

16. GAD flourished under his reign, and was emphatically called David's Seer, 2 Sam. xxiv. 11. 1 Chron. xxi. 9. 19, 20; and it appears that he had written a Book of Prophecies, which is now lost, 1 Chron. xxix. 29.

17. NATHAN lived also under the same reign, 2 Sam. vii. 2; and, in conjunction with God, composed a book of the acts of David, 1 Chron. xxix. 29.

18. To SOLOMON also, son of David, the prophetic gift has been attributed. This might be implied in the extraordinary wisdom with which God had endowed him, 1 Kings iii. 5-9. 2 Chron. i. 7; vii. 12; and in his writings several prophetic declarations may be found, even independently of the supposed reference to Christ and his Church in the Canticles.

19. IDO is termed a Seer, 2 Chron. xii. 15; xiii. 22; and was one of Solomon's biographers.

20. SHEMAIAH lived under Rehoboam; he is called a man of God, and to him the word of prophecy came relative to Judah and Benjamin, 1 Kings xii. 22-24. Some think this was the same person who was sent to Jeroboam relative to his idolatry, see 1 Kings xiii. 1, &c.

21. AMIJAH, the Shilonite, prophesied to Jeroboam, 1 Kings xi. 29-39.

22. HANANI the Seer prophesied under Asariah and Asa, 2 Chron. xvi. 7.

23. JEHU, son of Hanani, prophesied under Jehoshaphat, 1 Kings xvi. 1, 7; 2 Chron. xvi. 7, xix. 2; and xx. 34.

24. AZARIAH, the son of Oded, prophesied under Asa, 2 Chron. xv. 1.

25. ELIJAH prophesied under the reign of Ahab and Jezabel.

26. ELISHA succeeded Elijah under the same reigns. And these eminent men had many disciples on whom the spirit of prophecy rested. They, and their masters Elijah and Elisha, prophesied in the kingdoms both of Israel and Judah. Their histories make a prominent part of the 1st and 2d Books of Kings; and are well known.

27. MICAH, the son of Imlah, prophesied under the same reign, 1 Kings xxi. 9.

28. HOSHA prophesied under Jeroboam the second, king of Israel, and under the reign of Uzziah, king of Judah.

29. AMOS prophesied about the same time.

30. JOKAH, son of Amittai, is supposed to have been contemporary with the above.

31. ELINEAZ, the son of Dodayah, prophesied against Jehoshaphat and Ahaziah, 2 Chron. xx. 37.

32. JARAHIEL, son of Zechariah, prophesied against Judah and Israel under the same reign, 2 Chron. xx. 14.

33. ISAIAH prophesied in the reigns of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, Isa. i. 1.

34. MICAH prophesied against Samaria and Jerusalem, in the reigns of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah.

35. OSED, father of Azariah, prophesied against Asa, 2 Chron. xv. 8.

36. NAHUM prophesied under Hezekiah.

37. JOEL, under Josiah.

38. JEREMIAH, about the same time.

39. ZEPHANIAH, under the same reign. See their Prophecies.

40. HULDAH, the Prophetess, was contemporary with the above.

41. IGDALIAH, called a man of God, and probably a Prophet, was contemporary with Jeremiah, Jer. xxxiv. 4.

42. HABAKKUK lived about the end of the reign of Josiah, or the beginning of that of Jehoiakim.

43. EZEKIEL lived under the Captivity; and prophesied in Mesopotamia, about the time that Jeremiah prophesied in Jerusalem.

44. OBADIAH lived in Judea, after the capture of Jerusalem, and before the desolation of Idumea by Nebuchadnezzar.

45. DANIEL prophesied in Babylon during the Captivity.

46. HAGGAI prophesied during and after the Captivity.

47. URIJAH, the son of Shemaiah, prophesied under Jehoiakim. See Jer. xxvi. 20, 21.

48. ZECHARIAH, the son of Barachiah, flourished in the second year of Darius, after the Captivity.

49. MALACHI lived under Nehemiah, and some time after Haggai and Zechariah.

Here is a succession of divinely inspired men, by whom God at sundry times and divers manners speaks unto the Fathers, from the beginning of the world down to the restoration from the Babylonish Captivity, a period of three thousand six hundred years. From the time of Malachi, who was the last of the Prophets, till the time of Christ, a period of nearly four hundred years elapsed without vision or prophecy; but during the whole of that time the Jews had the law and the prophetical writings, to which, till the time of Christ, there was no necessity to add any thing; for God had, with the writings of the last mentioned Prophet, completed the canon of the Old Testament, nothing being farther necessary, till He should, in the fulness of time, superadd the GOSPEL; and this having taken place, vision and prophecy are now for ever sealed up, and the Temple of God is established among all genuine believers in Christ Jesus.

It is not easy to ascertain the order in which the the sixteen Prophets, whose writings are preserved, have succeeded to each other. There are chronological notes prefixed to several of their prophecies, which assist to settle generally, the times of the whole. Several were contemporary, as the reader has already seen in the preceding list. The major and minor Prophets may be thus arranged:—

1. JONAH—under the reign of Jeroboam the second.
2. HOSHA—under Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, &c.
3. JOEL—contemporary with Hosha.
4. AMOS—under Uzziah and Jeroboam the second.
5. ISAIAH—under Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah.
6. MICAH—contemporary with Isaiah.
7. NAHUM—under the reign of Hezekiah.
8. HABAKKUK—under the reign of Manasseh or Josiah.
9. ZEPHANIAH—under Josiah.
10. JEREMIAH—from Josiah to Zedekiah.
11. DANIEL—under the Captivity, after Zedekiah.
12. EZEKIEL—at the same time.
13. OBADIAH—during the Captivity.
14. HAGGAI—began to prophesy the second year of Darius.
15. ZECHARIAH—about the same time. See Zech. i. 1; vii. 1.
16. MALACHI—under Nehemiah. The last of all the Prophets.

The works of these Prophets constitute the principal and most important part of what is called THE BIBLE, or Old Testament.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF ISAIAH.

On the style of the Prophets much has been said by several learned men; particularly Calmet, Louth, Bishop Newton, Viringa, Michaelis, and Houbigant. Their chief observations, and especially those most within the reach of the common people, have been selected and abridged, with great care and industry, by the Rev. Dr. John Smith, of Cambleton, in his little Tract intitled "A Summary View and Explanation of the Writings of the Prophets," to which it forms preliminary observations, drawn up at the desire of the Scottish Society for propagating Christian Knowledge, in a small 8vo. 1804. From this Work I thankfully borrow what concerns the present subject: taking occasion, at the same time, to recommend the whole to all Christian Ministers, to private persons, and to all families, who wish to read the Prophets to their edification.

"The writings of the Prophets, the most sublime and beautiful in the world, lose much of that usefulness and effect which they are so well calculated to produce on the souls of men, from their not being more generally understood. Many prophecies are somewhat dark, till events explain them. They are, besides, delivered in such lofty and figurative terms, and with such frequent allusions to the customs and manners of times and places the most remote, that ordinary readers cannot, without some help, be supposed capable of understanding them. It must therefore be of use to make the language of prophecy as intelligible as may be, by explaining those images and figures of speech in which it most frequently abounds; and this may be done generally, even when the prophecies themselves are obscure.

"Some prophecies seem, as it were, not intended that they should be clearly understood before they are fulfilled. As they relate to different periods, they may have been intended for exciting the attention of mankind, from time to time, both to Providence and to Scripture; and to furnish every age with new evidence of Divine Revelation; by which means they serve the same purpose to the last ages of the world that miracles did to the first. Whereas, if they had been in every respect clear and obvious from the beginning, this wise purpose had been in a great measure defeated. Curiosity, industry, and attention, would at once be at an end; or, by being too easily gratified, would be little exercised.

"Besides, a great degree of obscurity is necessary to some prophecies before they can be fulfilled; and if not fulfilled, the consequence would not be so beneficial to mankind. Thus, many of the ancient prophecies concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, had a manifest relation to the remoter destruction by the Romans, as well as to the nearer one by the Chaldeans. Had the Jews perceived this, which was not indeed clear enough till the event explained it, they would probably have wished to have remained for ever in their Captivity at Babylon, rather than expose themselves or their offspring a second time to a destruction so dreadful as that which they had already experienced.

"With respect to our times, by far the greatest number of prophecies relate to events which are now past; and, therefore, a sufficient acquaintance with history, and with the language and style of prophecy, is all that is requisite, in order to understand them. Some prophecies, however, relate to events still future: and these too may be understood in general, although some particular circumstances connected with them, may remain obscure till they are fulfilled. If prophecies were not capable of being understood in general, we should not find the Jews so often blamed, in this respect, for their ignorance, and want of discernment. That they did actually understand many of them, when they chose to search the Scriptures, we know. Daniel understood, from the prophecies of Jeremiah, the time at which the Captivity in Babylon was to be at an end; and the scribes knew from Micah, and told Herod, where the Messiah was to be born. A very little attention might have enabled them, in the same manner, to understand others, as they probably did; such as the seventy weeks of Daniel; the destruction of the Babylonian empire, and of the other three that were to succeed; and also the ruin of the people and places around them; Moab, Ammon, Tyre, Sidon, Philistia, Egypt, and Idumea. Perhaps, indeed, a few enigmatical circumstances might have been annexed, which could not be understood till they were accomplished: but the general tenor of the prophecies they could be at no loss to understand. With regard to prophecies still future, we are in a similar situation. It is understood, in general, that the Jews will be gathered from their dispersions, restored to their own land, and converted to Christianity; that the fulness of the Gentiles will likewise come in; that Antichrist, Gog and Magog, and all the enemies of the Church, will be destroyed; after which the Gospel will remarkably flourish, and be more than ever glorified. But several circumstances connected with those general events must probably remain in the dark till their accomplishment shall clearly explain them.

"But this degree of obscurity, which sometimes attends prophecy, does not always proceed from the circumstances or subject; it frequently proceeds from the highly poetical and figurative style in which prophecy is for the most part conveyed, and of which it will be proper to give some account. To speak of all the rhetorical figures with which the Prophets adorn their style, would lead us into a field too wide, and would be more the province of the rhetorician than of the commentator. It will be sufficient for our purpose at present, to attend to the most common of them; consisting of Allegory, Parable, and Metaphor; and then to consider the sources from which the Prophets most frequently borrow their images in those figures, and the sense which they wish to convey by them.

"By allegory, the first of the figures mentioned, is meant that mode of speech in which the writer or speaker means to convey a different idea from what the words in their obvious and primary signification bear. Thus, 'Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns,' (Jer. iv. 3.) is to be understood not of tillage, but of repentance. And these words, 'Thy rowers have brought thee into great waters, the east wind hath broken thee in the midst of the seas,' (Ezek. xxvii. 6,) allude not to the fate of a ship, but of a city.

"To this figure the parable, in which the Prophets frequently speak, is nearly allied. It consists in the application of some feigned narrative to some real truth, which might have been less striking, or more disagreeable, if expressed in plain terms. Such is the following one of Isaiah, (v. 1. 2.) 'My well-loved hath a vineyard in a very fruitful hill. And he fenced it, and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also made a wine-press therein: and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes.' The 7th verse tells us that this vineyard was the house of Israel, which had so ill requited the favour which God had shewn it.—[On this subject see the Dissertation at the end of the Notes on Matthew xiii.]

"There is, besides, another kind of allegory not uncommon with the Prophets, called mystical allegory or double prophecy. Thus it is said of Eliakim, (Isa. xxii. 22.) 'And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; and he shall open and none shall shut; and he shall shut and none shall open.' In the first and obvious sense, the words relate to Eliakim; but in the secondary or mystical sense, and the figurative only is retained: in this, both the one and the other are reserved; and this is what constitutes the difference.

"But of all the figures used by the Prophets, the most frequent is the metaphor, by which words are transferred from their primitive and plain to a secondary and figurative meaning. This figure, common in all poetry, and in all languages, is of indispensable necessity in Scripture; which, having occasion to speak of Divine and spiritual matters, could do it only by terms borrowed from sensible and material objects. Hence it is that the sentiments, actions, and corporeal parts, not only of man, but also of inferior creatures, are ascribed to God Himself; it being otherwise impossible for us to form any conceptions of His pure essence and incommunicable attributes. But though the Prophets, partly from necessity, and partly from choice, are thus profuse in the use of metaphors, they do not appear, like other writers, to have the liberty of using them as fancy directed. The same set of images, however diversified in the manner of applying them, is always used, both in allegory and metaphor, to denote the same subjects, to which they are in a manner appropriated. This peculiar characteristic of the Hebrew poetry might perhaps be owing to some rules taught in the prophetic schools, which did not allow the same latitude in this respect as other poetry. Whatever it may be owing to, the uniform manner in which the Prophets apply these images, tends greatly to illustrate the prophetic style; and, therefore, it will be proper now to consider the sources from which those images are most frequently derived, and the subjects and ideas which they severally denote. These sources may be classed under four heads; Natural, Artificial, Religious, and Historical.

"I. The first and most copious, as well as the most pleasing source of images in the prophetic writings, as in all other poetry, is Nature; and the principal images drawn from nature, together with their application, are the following:—

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF ISAIAH.

“The sun, moon, and stars, the highest objects in the natural world, figuratively represent kings, queens, and princes, or rulers; the highest in the world politic. ‘The moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed.’ Isa. xxii. 23. ‘I will cover the heavens, and make the stars thereof dark: I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light.’ Ezek. xxii. 7.

“Light and darkness are used figuratively for joy and sorrow, prosperity and adversity: ‘We wait for light, but behold obscurity; for brightness, but we walk in darkness.’ Isa. lix. 9. An uncommon degree of light denotes an uncommon degree of joy and prosperity; and vice versa. ‘The light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold.’ Isa. xxx. 26—The same metaphors are likewise used to denote knowledge and ignorance. ‘If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them,’ Isa. viii. 20. ‘The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light,’ Isa. ix. 2.

“Dew, moderate rains, gentle streams, and running waters, denote the blessings of the gospel. ‘Thy dew is as the dew of herbs,’ Isa. xxvi. 19. ‘He shall come unto us as the rain,’ Hosea vi. 3. ‘I will water it every moment,’ Isa. xxvii. 3. ‘I will pour water on him that is thirsty,’ Isa. xlv. 3.

“Immoderate rains, on the other hand, hail, floods, deep water, torrents, and inundations, denote judgments and destruction. ‘I will rain upon him an overflowing rain, and great hailstones,’ Ezek. xxxviii. 22. ‘Waters rise up out of the north, and shall overflow the land,’ Jer. xlvii. 2.

“Fires also, and the east wind, parching and hurtful, frequently denote the same. ‘They shall cast thy choice cedars into the fire,’ Jer. xxii. 7. ‘He stayeth his rough wind in the day of the east wind,’ Isa. xxvii. 8.

“Wind in general is often taken in the same sense. ‘The wind shall eat up all thy pleasures,’ Jer. xxii. 22. Sometimes it is put for any thing empty or fallacious, as well as hurtful. ‘The Prophets shall become wind,’ Jer. v. 13. ‘They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind,’ Hos. viii. 7.

“Lebanon and Carmel; the one remarkable for its height and stately cedars, was the image of majesty, strength, or any thing very great or noble. ‘He shall cut down the thickets of the forest with iron, and Lebanon shall fall by a mighty one,’ Isa. x. 34. ‘The Assyrian was a cedar in Lebanon,’ Ezek. xxxi. 3. The other mountain, (Carmel) fruitful, and abounding in vines and olives, denoted beauty and fertility. ‘The glory of Lebanon shall be given it, the excellency of Carmel,’ Isa. xxxv. 2. The vine alone is a frequent image of the Jewish Church. ‘I had planted thee a noble vine,’ Jer. ii. 21.

“Rams and bullocks of Bashan, lions, eagles, sea-monsters, or any animal of prey, are figures frequently used for cruel and oppressive tyrants and conquerors. ‘Hear this word, ye king of Bashan, which oppress the poor,’ Amos iv. 1. ‘The lion is come up from his thicket,’ Jer. iv. 7. ‘A great eagle came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar,’ Ezek. xvii. 3. ‘Thou art as a whale in the seas,’ Ezek. xxxii. 2. ‘The unicorn shall come down,—and their land shall be soaked with blood,’ Isa. xxxiv. 7.

“II. The ordinary occupations and customs of life, with the few arts practised at the time, were another source from which the Prophets derived many of their figures; particularly,—

“From husbandry in all its parts, and from its implements. ‘Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy; break up your fallow ground,’ Hos. x. 12. ‘Put in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe,’ Joel iii. 12. ‘I am pressed under you, as a wain under a load of sheaves,’ Amos ii. 13. Threshing was performed in various ways (mentioned Isa. xxviii. 24, &c.) which furnish a variety of images denoting punishment. ‘Arise, and thresh, O daughter of Zion; for I will make thine horn iron, and thy hoofs brass,’ &c. Micah iv. 13. The operation was performed on rising grounds, where the chaff was driven away by the wind, while the grain remained; a fit emblem of the fate of the wicked, and of the salvation of the just. ‘Behold I will make thee a new threshing-instrument having teeth; thou shalt thresh the mountains, and beat them small, and thou shalt make the hills as chaff. Thou shalt fan them, and the wind shall carry them away, and the whirlwind shall scatter them,’ Isa. xli. 15, 16.

“The vintage and winepress also furnished many images, obvious enough in their application. ‘The press is full, the fats overflow, for their wickedness is great,’ Joel iii. 13. ‘I have trod the winepress alone.—I will tread down the people in mine anger,’ Isa. lxiii. 3, &c. As the vintage was gathered with shouting and rejoicing, the ceasing of the vintage-shouting is frequently one of the figures that denote misery and desolation. ‘None shall tread with shouting; their shouting shall be no shouting,’ Jer. xlviii. 33.

“From the occupation of tending cattle, we have many images. ‘Woe unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture,’ Jer. xxiii. 1. The people are the flock; teachers and rulers the pastors. ‘Israel is a scattered sheep, the lions have driven him away.’ ‘As a shepherd taketh out of the mouth of the lion two legs, or a piece of an ear,’ &c. Amos iii. 12. Some of the images derived from husbandry, tending cattle, &c. may perhaps appear mean to us; though not to the Jews, whose manner of life was simple and plain, and whose greatest men, (such as Moses, David, Gideon, &c.) were often husbandmen and shepherds. Accordingly, the Messiah himself is frequently described under the character of a shepherd. [See Fleury’s Manners of the Israelites.]

“It was customary in deep mournings to shave the head and beard, to retire to the house-tops, (which in those countries were flat, and furnished with little chambers adapted to the purposes of devotion or of sequestered grief,) also to sing dirges at funerals, and to accompany them with a mournful sort of music; and from these and the like circumstances, images are frequently borrowed by the Prophets to denote the greatest danger, and the deepest distress. ‘Mine heart shall sound for Moab like pipes.’—‘Every head shall be bald, and every beard clipt—there shall be lamentation on all the house-tops of Moab,’ Jer. xlviii. 36, 37, 38; Isa. xv. 2, 3.

“The mode of burying in the Jewish sepulchres, or ‘sides of the pit,’ and their Hades, or state of the dead, supplied many images of the same kind. See Observations on Isa. xiv. and Ezek. xxvi. 20.

“According to the barbarous custom of those times, conquerors drove their captives before them almost naked, and exposed to the intolerable heat of the sun, and the inclemencies of the weather. They afterwards employed them frequently in grinding at the hand-mill, (water-mills not being then invented;) hence nakedness, and grinding at the mill, and sitting on the ground, (the posture in which they wrought) express captivity. ‘Descend and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon—take the millstones—thy nakedness shall be uncovered,’ Isa. xlvii. 1—3.

“The marriage relation supplied metaphors to express the relation or covenant between God and His people. On the other hand, adultery, infidelity to the marriage-bed, &c. denoted any breach of covenant with God, particularly the love and worship of idols. ‘Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord, for I am married unto you,’ Jer. iii. 14. ‘There were two women, the daughters of one mother, and they committed whoredoms,—with their idols have they committed adultery,’ &c. Ezek. xxiii. 2, 3—37.

“The debility and stupefaction caused by intoxicating liquors, suggested very apt images to express the terrible effects of the Divine judgments on those who are the unhappy objects of them. ‘Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness—with the cup of thy sister Samaria,’ Ezek. xxiii. 33.

“From the method of refining metals in the furnace, images are often borrowed to denote the judgments inflicted by God on His people, with a view to cleanse them from their sins, as metal from its dross. ‘Israel is—dross in the midst of the furnace,’ Ezek. xxii. 18. ‘He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver,’ Mal. iii. 3.

“Among the other few arts, from which the Hebrew poets derive some of their images, are those of the fuller and potter, Mal. iii. 2, &c.; Jer. xviii. 1, &c.; of which the application is obvious. No less so is that of images derived from fishing, fowling, and the implements belonging to them; the hook, net, pit, snare, &c. which generally denote captivity or destruction. ‘I will send for many fishers, and they shall fish them,—and for many hunters, and they shall hunt them,—for their iniquity is not hid from mine eyes,’ Jer. xvi. 16, 17. ‘I will put hooks to thy jaws,’ Ezek. xxix. 4. ‘Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth,’ Isa. xxiv. 17.

“A few images are derived from building, as when the Messiah is denoted by a foundation and corner-stone, Isa. xxviii. 16. The next verse describes the rectitude of judgment by metaphors borrowed from the line and plummet; and by building with precious stones is denoted a very high degree of prosperity, whether applied to church or state, Isa. liv. 11, 12.

PRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF ISAIAH.

"III. Religion and things connected with it, furnished many images to the sacred poets.

"From the temple and its pompous service, from the tabernacle, Shechinah, mercy-seat, &c. are derived a variety of images, chiefly serving to denote the glory of the Christian church, the excellency of its worship, God's favour towards it, and his constant presence with it; the Prophets speaking to the Jews in terms accommodated to their own ideas. 'And the Lord will create upon every dwelling-place of mount Zion, and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night; for upon all the glory shall be a covering,' Isa. iv. 5. 'Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean,' Ezek. xxxvi. 25.

"The ceremonial law, and especially its distinctions between things clean and unclean, furnished a number of images, all obvious in their application. 'Wash ye, make you clean, put away the evil of your doings,' Isa. i. 16. 'Their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman,' Ezek. xxxvi. 17.

"The killing of sacrifices, and feasting upon them, serve as metaphors for slaughter. 'The Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozra,' Isa. xxxiv. 6; Ezek. xxxix. 17.

"The Pontifical robes, which were very splendid, suggested several images expressive of the glory of both the Jewish and Christian church. 'I clothed thee with brodered work,' &c. Ezek. xvi. 10. 'He clothed me with the garments of salvation,' Isa. lxi. 10. The prophets wore a rough upper garment; false prophets wore the like, in imitation of true ones: and to this there are frequent allusions. 'Neither shall they wear a rough garment to deceive,' Zech. xiii. 4.

"From the pots, and other vessels and utensils of the temple, are likewise borrowed a few metaphors obvious enough without explanation. 'Every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness,' Zech. xiv. 21.

"The prophets have likewise many images that allude to the idolatrous rites of the neighbouring nations, to their groves and high places, (Isa. xxvii. 9.) and to the worship paid to their idols, Baal, Moloch, Chemosh, Gad, Ment, Astaroth, Tamuz, &c. Ezek. viii. 10—14.

"Many of the metaphors and images used by the Prophets are likewise borrowed from history, especially sacred.

"From the fall of angels.—'How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning,' Isa. xiv. 12. 'Thou art the anointed cherub,—thou wast upon the holy mountain of God,' Ezek. xxviii. 14. And from the fall of man. 'Thou hast been in Eden, the garden of God,' ver. 13.

"From Chaos.—'I beheld the earth, and, lo! it was without form, and void; and the heavens, and they had no light,' Jer. iv. 23. 'He shall stretch over it the line of devastation, and the plummet of emptiness,' Isa. xxxiv. 11.

"From the deluge.—'The windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake,' Isa. xxiv. 18.

"From the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah.—'And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch,' Isa. xxxiv. 9.—Also from the destruction of the Hivites and Amorites, &c. Isa. xli. 9.

"The Exodus and deliverance from Egypt, is frequently used to shadow forth other great deliverances. 'Thus saith the Lord, who maketh a way in the sea, and a path in the mighty waters,' &c. Isa. xi. 15, 16; xliii. 16—19; li. 9, 10, &c.

"From the descent on Sinai.—'Behold the Lord cometh forth out of His place, and will come down and tread on the high places of the earth; and the mountains shall be molten under him,' Micah i. 3, 4.

"From the resurrection, the end of the world, and the last judgment, are derived many images, of which the application is natural and obvious. 'Thy dead men shall live, with my dead body shall they arise,—awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust,' &c. Isa. xxvi. 19.—'And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll; and all their host shall fall down as a leaf falleth from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree,' Isa. xxxiv. 4.

"The foregoing account of the images which most frequently occur in the writings of the Prophets may be of considerable use in studying their style: but as a thorough knowledge of this must be allowed to be of the highest importance, a few general remarks are farther added, although some part of them may appear to be superseded by what has been already observed.

"1. Although the Prophets use words so frequently in a figurative or metaphorical meaning; yet we ought not, without necessity, to depart from the primitive and original sense of language: and such a necessity there is, when the plain and original sense is less proper, less suitable to the subject and context, or contrary to other Scriptures.

"2. By images borrowed from the world natural the Prophets frequently understand something analogous in the world politic. Thus, the sun, moon, stars, and heavenly bodies, denote kings, queens, rulers, and persons in great power; their increase of splendour denotes increase of prosperity; their darkening, setting, or falling, denotes a reverse of fortune, or the entire ceasing of that power or kingdom to which they refer. Great earthquakes, and the shaking of heaven and earth, denote the commotion and overthrow of kingdoms; and the beginning or end of the world, their rise, or ruin.

"3. The cedars of Lebanon, oaks of Bashan, fir-trees, and other stately trees of the forest, denote kings, princes, potentates, and persons of the highest rank; briers and thorns the common people, or those of the meanest order.

"4. High mountains and lofty hills, in like manner, denote kingdoms, republics, states, and cities;—towers and fortresses signify defenders and protectors;—ships of Tarshish, merchants, or commercial people; and the daughter of any capital or mother city, the lesser cities, or suburbs around it. Cities never conquered are farther styled virgins.

"5. The Prophets likewise describe kings and kingdoms by their ensigns; as Cyrus and the Romans by an eagle;—the king of Macedon, by a goat;—and the king of Persia, by a ram; these being the figures on their respective standards, or in the ornaments of their architecture.

"6. The Prophets, in like manner, borrow some of their images from ancient hieroglyphics, which they take in their usual acceptation: thus, a star was the emblem of a god, or hero;—a horn, the emblem of great power, or strength; and a rod, the emblem of royalty: and they signify the same in the Prophets.

"7. The same prophecies have frequently a double meaning: and refer to different events, the one near, the other remote;—the one temporal, the other spiritual, or perhaps eternal. The Prophets having thus several events in their eye, their expressions may be partly applicable to one, and partly to another; and it is not always easy to mark the transition. Thus, the prophecies relating to the first and second restoration of the Jews, and first and second coming of our Lord, are often interwoven together; like our Saviour's own prediction (Matt. xxiv.) concerning the destruction of Jerusalem, and the end of the world. What has not been fulfilled in the first, we must apply to the second; and what has been already fulfilled, may often be considered as typical of what still remains to be accomplished.

"8. Almost all the prophecies of the Old Testament, whatever view they may have to nearer events, are ultimately to be referred to the New, where only we are to look for their full completion. Thus Babylon, under the Old Testament, was a type of mystical Babylon under the New; and the King of Syria (Antiochus Epiphanes) a type of Antichrist;—the temporal enemies of the Jews, types and figures of the spiritual enemies of Christians. We must not, however, expect to find always a mystical meaning in prophecy; and when the near and most obvious meaning is plain, and gives a good sense, we need not depart from it, nor be over-curious to look beyond it.

"9. In prophecies, as in parables, we are chiefly to consider the scope and design, without attempting too minute an explication of all the poetical images and figures with which the Sacred Writers use to adorn their style.

"10. Prophecies of a general nature are applicable by accommodation to individuals;—most of the things that are spoken of the church in general being no less applicable to its individual members.

"11. Prophecies of a particular nature, on the other hand, admit, and often require, to be extended. Thus, Edom, Moab, or any of the enemies of God's people, is often put for the whole;—what is said of one being generally applicable to the rest.

"12. In like manner, what is said of or of any of God's people, on any particular occasion, is of general application and use; all that stand in the same relation to God having an interest in the same promises.

"13. A cup of intoxicating liquor is frequently used to denote the indignation of God;—and the effects of such a cup, the effects of His displeasure.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF ISALAH.

"14. As the covenant of God with His people is represented under the figure of marriage; so their breach of that covenant, especially their idolatry, is represented by whoredom, adultery, and infidelity to the marriage bed; on which the Prophets sometimes enlarge, to excite detestation of the crime. The epithet strange does likewise, almost always, relate to something connected with idolatry.

"15. Persons or nations are frequently said in Scripture to be related to those whom they resemble in their life and conduct. In the same manner, men are denoted by animals whose qualities they resemble. A definite number, such as three, four, seven, ten, &c. is sometimes used by the Prophets for an indefinite, and commonly denotes a great many.

"16. In the reckoning of time, a day is used by the Prophets to denote a year;—and things still future, to denote their certainty, are spoken of as already past.

"17. When the Prophets speak of the last, or latter days, they always mean the days of the Messiah, or the time of the Gospel dispensation. That day means often the same, and always some period at a distance.

"18. When places are mentioned as lying north, south, east, or west, it is generally to be understood of their situation with respect to Judea or Jerusalem, when the context does not plainly restrict the scene to some other place.

"19. By the earth, (or the word so translated,) the Prophets frequently mean the Land of Judea; and sometimes, says Sir Isaac Newton, the great continent of all Asia and Africa, to which they had access by land. By the ites of the sea, on the other hand, they understood the places to which they sailed, particularly all Europe, and probably the islands and sea-coasts of the Mediterranean.

"20. The greatest part of the Prophetic Writings was first composed in verse, and still retains (notwithstanding all the disadvantages of a literal prose translation,) much of the air and cast of the original, particularly in the division of the lines, and in that peculiarity of Hebrew poetry by which the sense of one line or couplet so frequently corresponds with that of the other. Thus,—

I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, }
My soul shall be joyful in my God; }
For he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation; }
He hath covered me with the robe of righteousness; }
As a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments; }
And as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels. } Isa. lxi. 10.

"Attention to this peculiarity in sacred poetry will frequently lead to the meaning of many passages in the poetical parts of Scripture, (in which it perpetually occurs,) as the one line of a couplet, or member of a sentence, is generally a commentary on the other. Thus,—

The Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozra. }
And a great slaughter in the land of Idumea. } Isa. xxxiv. 6.

"Here the metaphor in the first line is expressed in plain terms in the next:—the sacrifice in Bozra means the great slaughter in Idumea, of which Bozra was the capital.

"It must be observed that the parallelism is frequently more extended. Thus,—

For I will pour out waters on the thirsty, }
And flowing streams upon the dry ground; }
I will pour out my Spirit on dry soil, }
And my blessing on thine offspring. } Isa. xlv. 3.

"Here the two last lines explain the metaphor in the two preceding."

As the gift of prophecy was the greatest which God gave to men upon earth; so the Prophet, as being the immediate instrument of revealing the will of God to the people, was the greatest, the most important, the most august, venerable, and useful person, in the Land of Israel. Ipsi eis exeant (says St. Augustin) philosophi ipsi sapientes, ipsi theologi, ipsi prophete, ipsi doctores, probitatis ac pietatis:—they were to the people the philosophers, the wise men, the divines, the prophets, and the teachers of truth and godliness. By their intercourse with God, they were His mediators with the people; and their persons, as well as their office, were considered as peculiarly sacred. They did not mix with the people, and only appeared in public when they came to announce the will of God. They were also a kind of typical persons,—whatever occurred to them was instructive, so that they were for signs, metaphors, and portents.

Most of the ancient Prophets were extraordinary messengers. They were not bred up to the prophetic function: as the office was immediately from God, as well as the message they were to deliver to the people, so they had no previous education—in reference to such an office; for no man knew whom the God of Israel might please to call to announce his righteousness to the people. Several of them were taken out of the walks of common life. Jonah appears to have been a private person at Gath-hopher in Galilee, before God called him to prophesy against Nineveh. Elisha was a ploughman at Abel-meholah (1 Kings xix. 16,) when called to the prophetic function. Zechariah appears to have been a husbandman, and a keeper of cattle, chap. xiii. 5. Amos was a herdman of Tekoa, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit, chap. i. 1; vii. 14, 15; and no doubt several others of the ancient prophets had an equally mean origin: but the office and the calling dignified the man. We know that our blessed Lord called not his disciples from the higher walks or offices of life; but out of fishermen, tax-gatherers, and tent-makers, he formed Evangelists and Apostles.

The Prophets appear to have gone in mean clothing; either sackcloth, hair-cloth, or coats of skin, appear to have been their ordinary clothing. They spoke against the pride and vain-glorious of man; and their very garb and manner gave additional weight to the solemn words they delivered. They lived in a retired manner; and when not sent on special errands, they employed their vacant time in the instruction of youth;—as this is probably what we are to understand by the schools of the Prophets, such as those over which Elijah, Elisha, and Samuel presided; though no doubt there were some of their disciples that were made partakers of the prophetic gift.

The Prophets do not appear to have been called to a life of celibacy. Isaiah was a married man, chap. viii. 3, and so was Hosea, chap. i. 2, unless we are to understand the latter case enigmatically. And that the sons of the prophets had wives we learn from 2 Kings iv. 1, &c.; and from this, as well as from the case of the Apostles, we learn that the matrimonial state was never considered, either by Moses or the Prophets, Christ or his Apostles, as disqualifying men from officiating in the most holy offices; as we find Moses, Aaron, Isaiah, Zechariah, and Peter, all married men, and yet the most eminent of their Order.

Of ISALAH, the writer of this Book, very little is known. He is supposed to have been of the tribe of Judah, and of the royal family of David. Himself says that he was the son of Amoz; and others tell us that this Amoz was the son of Joash, and brother of Amaziah, king of Judah. "Of his family and tribe we know nothing," says R. D. Kimchi, "only our Rabbins, of blessed memory, have received the tradition that Amoz and Amaziah were brothers;" and it is on this ground that he has been called the royal prophet. It has been also said that Isaiah gave his daughter in marriage to Manasseh, son of Hezekiah, king of Judah; and that himself was put to death by Manasseh, being sawn asunder with a wooden saw. But all these traditions stand on very slender authority, and are worthy of very little regard. Several Commentators have thought that his prophecies afford presumptive evidence of his high descent and elegant education:—1. Because his style is more correct and majestic than any of the other Prophets. 2. That his frequent use of images taken from royalty is a proof that this state was familiar to him, being much at court, as he must have been, had he been the brother of the king. These things are spoken by many with much confidence; for my own part, I had rather look to his inspiration for the correctness of his language and the dignity of his sentiments, than to those very inferior helps. On the other hypothesis nothing is left to the Divine Spirit, except the mere matter of his Prophecies. Suppositions of this kind are not creditable to Divine Revelation.

Isaiah appears to have had two sons,—who were typical in their names: one, Shear Jashub, "a remnant shall return," chap. vii. 3;—and the other Maher-shalal-hash-Baz, "haste to the spoil: quick to the prey," chap. viii. 3; and it is remarkable, that his wife is called a prophetess. Other matters relative to his character, will appear in the Notes on his Prophecies.

In the Notes on this Book, I have consulted throughout the Commentary of Rabbi David Kimchi; and have made much use of Bishop Louth, as the Reader will perceive. His various Readings I have re-collated with Dr.

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF ISAIAH.

Kennicott, and B. De Rossi; in consequence of which I have been enabled in many cases to add double weight to the authorities by which the learned Bishop was supported in the Readings which he has either mentioned or received into the Text. Bishop Lowth could avail himself only of the Collections of Dr. Kennicott—the sheets of Isaiah, in the Doctor's edition of the Hebrew Bible, as they passed through the press, were sent by him to the Bishop; but the Collections of De Rossi, more numerous and more accurate than those of Dr. Kennicott, were not published till six years after the Doctor had published his Bible, and about one year before this most learned and pious prelate went to his reward. I have also consulted some excellent Hebrew MSS. in my own library, from six to eight hundred years old, which have afforded me additional help in estimating the worth and importance of the Various Readings in the above Collections of Kennicott and De Rossi, as far as they are employed in the illustration of this Prophet. From the ancient English MS. Version of this Prophet I have extracted several curious translations of select parts; which, I have no doubt, will meet with every Reader's approbation. Though I have followed Bishop Lowth chiefly, yet I have consulted the best Commentators within my reach, in order to remove doubts, and clear up difficult passages; but have studied to be as brief as possible, that the Sacred Text might not be encumbered either with the multitude or length of the Notes, nor the Reader's time occupied with any thing not essentially necessary.

This Book, according to Vitringa, is twofold in its matter:—1. Prophetical. 2. Historical.

1. The prophetical is divided into five parts:—Part I. from chap. i. to chap. xiii. is directed to the Jews and Ephraimites; and contains five prophetic discourses. Part II. from chap. xiii. to chap. xxiv. declares the fate of the Babylonians, Philistines, Moabites, Syrians, Egyptians, Tyrians, and others; and contains eight prophetic discourses. Part III. from chap. xxiv. to chap. xxxvi. denounces judgments on the disobedient Jews, and consoles the true followers of God. This contains three discourses. Part IV. from chap. xl. to chap. xlix. refers to the Messiah and the deliverance of the Jews from the Babylonians; and contains four discourses.—Part V. from chap. xlix. to the end, points out the passion, crucifixion, and glory, of the Messiah, and contains five discourses.

2. The historical part begins with chap. xxxvi. and ends with chap. xxxix. and relates some of the transactions of the Prophet's own times. On this analysis Vitringa explains the whole Prophecy.

Calmel takes a different view of it. He divides it into eight parts, viz.—Part I. he supposes to relate to Jotham, son of Uzziah, king of Judah: this is included in the first six chapters. The Prophet inveighs against the crimes of the Jews; declares the judgments of God against them; predicts a more auspicious time, which took place under Hezekiah, who was a type of Christ. Part II. concerns the reign of Ahaz, and comprehends the six following chapters, in which he speaks of the siege of Jerusalem by Pekah and Resin;—of the birth of Immanuel, as a proof of the approaching deliverance of Judah;—predicts the calamities that were to fall on the kingdoms of Syria and Israel, &c. Part III. contains many prophecies against Babylon, the Philistines, Moabites, &c. Part IV. contains prophecies against Egypt, Babylon, Kedar, Arabia, &c. Part V. concerns the reign of Hezekiah, and especially the war of Sennacherib against the Jews, &c. The four historical chapters inserted here contain the account of the fulfilment of the preceding Prophecy. Part VI. included in chap. xl. to xlv. inclusive, contains the Prophet's discourses on the existence of God, the truth and perfection of the Jewish religion, the vanity of idolatry, the return of the people from captivity, and the coming of Christ. Part VII. From chap. xlix. to chap. lvi. the Prophet, personifying the Messiah, speaks of His sufferings, death, and burial;—predicts the return from the Babylonish Captivity, and the glory of the latter days. Part VIII. speaks of the coming of the Messiah, and the vocation of the Gentiles;—the disgrace and confusion of all false prophets and teachers; and the establishment of a pure and holy church, &c.

I might give other Analyses of this Book, but it is needless:—from what is before the Reader he will at once see how vain all attempts of this kind are, and how foolish to make divisions and subdivisions, partitions and classifications, where the Spirit of God has given no intimations of the kind; and where even the most learned men differ in their arrangement.

"God never left his work for man to mend." The Prophecies were given as they were necessary, and no classification was ever intended. We should take them up as we find them; and humbly endeavour to find out their objects and meaning, and how far ourselves are interested in these denunciations of Divine wrath;—and in those glorious promises of mercy and salvation through Him who was once the hope of Israel,—and now is salvation to the ends of the earth.

Bishop Lowth's Translation is by far the best that has ever been made of this sublime Prophet:—as he thoroughly understood his language, so he entered deeply into his spirit. Were it allowable, I should be glad to supersede what is called the Authorized Version, and put that of the learned Bishop in its place, as being abundantly more correct and nervous,—rendering the Sacred Text more clearly, and consequently more intelligibly, so that even the common Reader can understand this Text better without a comment, than he can the Authorized Version, even with one. His Notes, which are a treasure of learning and sound criticism, I have almost universally preserved, with which my own are intermingled, distinguished by being put within brackets; and I have often adopted his Text, as being vastly superior to that in common use; the catch words from this, included in parentheses, follow those from the Authorized Version. Should a New Translation of the Bible be ever published by authority, I have no doubt that, with a few alterations, that of Bishop Lowth would be adopted as the standard.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET ISAIAH.

Chronological Notes relative to the commencement of Isaiah's Prophecy.

Year from the creation of the world, according to the computation of Archbishop Usher, 3944.—Year from the Deluge, according to the generally received Hebrew Text, 1555.—Year from the vocation of Abram, 1161.—Year from the foundation of Solomon's temple, 951.—First year of the fifth Olympiad.—Year before the building of Rome, according to the Varroian computation, 7.—Fifteenth year of the reign of Thurimus, king of Macedonia.—Eleventh year of the reign of Theopompus, king of Lacedæmon.—Second year of the reign of Alyattes, king of Lydia.—Eighty-ninth year of Æschylus, perpetual archon of the Athenians.—Second year of the reign of Ptolemaeus, king of Egypt.—Fifty-first year of the reign of Asarhaddon, or Uzziah, king of Judah.—Epoch of the establishment of the Ephori at Lacedæmon by Theopompus.

CHAPTER I.

The Prophet, with a boldness and majesty becoming the herald of the Most High, begins with calling on the whole creation in attend when Jehovah speaks, 2. A charge of gross insensibility and ingratitude is then brought against the Jews, by contrasting their conduct with that of the ox and ass, the most stupid of animals, 3. This leads to an amplification of their guilt, 4; highly aggravated by their sighting the chastisements and judgments of God, though repeated till they had been left almost like Sodom and Gomorrah, 5-8. The incidental mention of these places leads to an address to the rulers and people of the Jews, (under the character of princes of Sodom, and people of Gomorrah) no less spirited and severe than it is elegant and unexpected, 10. The vanity of trusting to the performance of outward rites and ceremonies of religion is then exposed, 11-15; and the necessity of repentance and reformation is strongly enjoined, 16, 17, and urged by the most encouraging promises as well as by the most awful threatenings, 18-20. But neither of these producing the proper effect on that people, who were the Prophet's charge, he lastly laments their degeneracy, 21-23; and concludes with invoking God, declaring his purpose of inflicting such heavy judgments as would entirely cut off the wicked, and excite in the righteous, who should also pass through the furnace, an everlasting shame and abhorrence of every thing connected with idolatry, the source of their misery, 24, 25.

THE vision of Isaiah the son of Amoz, which he saw concerning ISAIAH exercised the prophetic office during a long period of time, if he lived to the reign of Manasseh; for the lowest computation, beginning from the year in which Uzziah died, when some suppose him to have received his first appointment to that office, brings it to sixty-one years. But the tradition of the Jews that he was put to death by Manasseh is very uncertain; and one of their principal Rabbins, (Aben Ezra, Com. in Isa. i. 1.) seems rather to think that he died before Hezekiah, which is indeed more probable. It is however certain that he lived at least to the fifteenth or sixteenth year of Hezekiah; this makes the least possible term of the duration of his prophetic office about forty-eight years. The time of the delivery of some of his prophecies is either expressly marked, or sufficiently clear from the history to which they relate: that of a few others may, with some probability, be deduced from internal marks; from expressions, descriptions, and circumstances interwoven. It may therefore be of some use in this respect, and for the better understanding of his prophecies in general, to give here a summary view of the history of his time.

The kingdom of Judah seems to have been in a more flourishing condition during the reigns of Uzziah and Jotham, than at any other time after the revolt of the ten tribes. The former recovered the port of Elath on the Red Sea, which the Edomites had taken in the reign of Joram. He was successful in his wars with the Philistines, and took from them several cities, Gath, Jabneh, Ashdod; as likewise against some people of Arabia Deserta, and against the Ammonites, whom he compelled to pay him tribute. He repaired and improved the fortifications of Jerusalem; and had a great army, well appointed and disciplined. He was no less attentive to the arts of peace; and very much encouraged agriculture, and the breeding of cattle. Jotham maintained the establishments and improvements made by his father; added to what Uzziah had done in strengthening the frontier places; conquered the Ammonites, who had revolted; and exacted from them a more stated and probably a larger tribute. However, at the latter end of his time, the league between Pekah, king of Israel, and Rezin, king of Syria, was formed against Judah; and they began to carry their designs into execution.

But in the reign of Ahaz, his son, not only all these advantages were lost, but the kingdom of Judah was brought to the brink of destruction. Pekah, king of Israel, overthrew the army of Ahaz, who lost in battle one hundred and twenty thousand men; and the Israelites carried away captives two hundred thousand women and children, which however were released and sent home again, upon the remonstrance of the Prophet Oed. After this, as it should seem, (see Vitringa on chap. vii. 2.) the two kings of Israel and Syria joining their forces, laid siege to Jerusalem: but in this attempt they failed of success. In this distress Judah and Jerusalem in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah.

2^b Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth: for the Lord hath spoken, I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me.

3^d The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider.

4 Ah sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers, children that are corrupters! They have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward.

Ahaz called in the assistance of Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria; who invaded the kingdoms of Israel and Syria, and slew Rezin: but he was more in danger than ever from his too powerful ally; to purchase whose forbearance, as he had before bought his assistance, he was forced to strip himself and his people of all the wealth he could possibly raise, from his own treasury, from the temple, and from the country. About the time of the siege of Jerusalem, the Syrians took Elath, which was never after recovered. The Edomites, likewise, taking advantage of the distress of Ahaz, ravaged Judea, and carried away many captives. The Philistines recovered what they had before lost; and took many places in Judea, and maintained themselves there. Idolatry was established by the command of the king in Jerusalem, and throughout Judea; and the service of the temple was either intermitted, or converted into an idolatrous worship.

Hezekiah, his son, at his accession to the throne, immediately set about the restoration of the legal worship of God, both in Jerusalem and through Judea. He cleansed and repaired the temple, and held a solemn passover. He improved the city, repaired the fortification, erected magazines of all sorts, and built a new aqueduct. In the fourth year of his reign, Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, invaded the kingdom of Israel, took Samaria, and carried away the Israelites into captivity, and replaced them by different people sent from his own country; and this was the final destruction of that kingdom in the sixth year of the reign of Hezekiah.

Hezekiah was not deterred by this alarming example from refusing to pay the tribute to the king of Assyria, which had been imposed on Ahaz: this brought on the invasion of Sennacherib in the fourteenth year of his reign, an account of which is inserted among the prophecies of Isaiah. After a great and miraculous deliverance from so powerful an enemy, Hezekiah continued his reign in peace. He prospered in all his works, and left his kingdom in a flourishing state to his son Manasseh, a son in every respect unworthy of such a father. See Louth.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1. The vision of Isaiah It seems doubtful whether this title belong to the whole book, or only to the prophecy contained in this Chapter. The former part of the title seems properly to belong to this particular prophecy; the latter part, which enumerates the kings of Judah under whom Isaiah exercised his prophetic office, seems to extend it to the whole collection of prophecies delivered in the course of his ministry. Vitringa (to whom the world is greatly indebted for his learned labours on this Prophet; and to whom we should have owed much more, if he had not so totally devoted himself to Masoretic authority,) has, I think, very judiciously resolved this doubt. He supposes that the former part of the title was originally 5 * Why should ye be stricken any more ? ye will revolt more and more: the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint.

k Chap. 9. 13. Jer. 2. 30. & 5. 3.

prefixed to this single prophecy; and that, when the collection of all Isaiah's prophecies was made, the enumeration of the kings of Judah was added, to make it at the same time a proper title to the whole book. As such it was plainly taken in 2 Chron. xxxii. 32, where the Book of Isaiah is cited by this title: "The vision of Isaiah the Prophet, the son of Amos."

The prophecy contained in this first Chapter stands single and unconnected, making an entire piece of itself. It contains a severe remonstrance against the corruptions prevailing among the Jews of that time; powerful exhortations to repentance; grievous threatenings to the impatient; and gracious promises of better times, when the nation shall have been reformed by the just judgments of God. The expression, upon the whole, is clear; the connexion of the several parts easy; and in regard to the images, sentiments, and style, it gives a beautiful example of the prophet's elegant manner of writing; though perhaps it may not be equal in these respects to many of the following prophecies.

Verse 2. Hear, O heavens—(Hear, O ye heavens,) God is introduced as entering into a public action, or pleading, before the whole world, against His disobedient people. The prophet, as herald or officer to proclaim the summons to the court, calls upon all created beings, celestial and terrestrial, to attend, and bear witness to the truth of his plea, and the justice of his cause. The same scene is more fully displayed in the noble exordium of Psa. 1. where God summons all mankind, from east to west, to be present to hear His appeal; and the solemnity is held on Zion, where He is attended with the same terrible pomp that accompanied Him on mount Sinai:

"A consuming fire goes before Him, And round Him rages a violent tempest: He calleth the heavens from above, And the earth, that he may contend in judgment with His people." Psa. 1. 3, 4.

By the same bold figure Micah calls upon the mountains, that is, the whole country of Judea, to attend to him, chap. vi. 1, 2.

"Arise, plead thou before the mountains, And let the hills hear Thy voice. Hear, O ye mountains, the controversy of Jehovah; And ye, O ye strong foundations of the earth: For Jehovah hath a controversy with His people, And He will plead His cause against Israel."

With the like invocation Moses introduces His sublime song; the design of which was the same as that of this prophecy, "to testify as a witness, against the Israelites," for their disobedience, Deut. xxxi. 21.

"Give ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; And let the earth hear the words of my mouth." Deut. xxxii. 1.

This in the simple yet strong oratorical style of Moses is, "I call heaven and earth to witness against thee this day: life and death have I set before thee; the blessing and the curse: choose now life, that thou mayest live, thou and thy seed." Deut. xxx. 19. The poetical style, by an apostrophe, sets the personification in a much stronger light.

Hath spoken—(That speaketh) I render it in the present time, pointing it דובר dober. There seems to be an impropriety in demanding attention to a speech already delivered. [But the present reading may stand, as the prophet may be here understood to declare to the people what the Lord had first spoken to him.]

I have nourished [The Septuagint have ετρέφωσα, I have begotten. Instead of גידלתי gidalti, they read ילדתי yildati; the word little differing from the other, and perhaps more proper: which the Chaldee likewise seems to favour; "vocavi eos filios." See Exod. iv. 22; Jer. xxxi. 9.

Verse 3. The ox knoweth [An amplification of the gross insensibility of the disobedient Jews, by comparing them with the most heavy and stupid of all animals, yet not so insensible as they. Bochart has well illustrated the comparison, and shewn the peculiar force of it. "He sets them lower than the beasts, and even than the most stupid of all beasts; for there is scarcely any more so than the ox and the ass. Yet these acknowledge their master; they know the manger of their lord; by whom they are fed, not for their own, but for his good; neither are they looked upon as children, but as beasts of burden; neither are they advanced to honours, but oppressed with great and daily labours. While the Israelites, chosen by the mere favour of God, adopted as sons, promoted to the highest dignity, yet acknowledged not their Lord and their God; but despised His commandments, though in the highest degree equitable and just." Hieroz. i. col. 409.

Jeremiah's comparison to the same purpose is equally

6 From the sole of the foot even unto the head there is no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores: = they have elegant: but has not so much spirit and severity as this of Isaiah.

1 Heb. increase revolt.—in Jer. 8. 22.

"Even the stars in the heavens knoweth her season; And the turtle, and the swallow, and the crane, observe the time of their coming; But my people doth not know the judgment of Jehovah." Jer. vii. 7.

Hosea has given a very elegant turn to the same image, in the way of metaphor or allegory:—

"I drew them with human cords, with the bands of love; And I was to them as he that lifteth up the yoke upon their chest; And I laid down their foder before them." Hos. xi. 4.

Salomo ben Melech thus explains the middle part of the verse, which is somewhat obscure: "I was to them at their desire as they that have compassion on a heifer, lest she be overworked in ploughing, and that lift up the yoke from off her neck, and rest it upon her cheek, that she may not still draw, but rest from her labour an hour or two in the day."

But [Israel] The Septuagint, Syriac, Aquila, Theodotum, and Vulgate, read ישראל va-yisrael, sicut Israel, adding the conjunction; which, being rendered as an adverbative, sets the opposition in a stronger light.

Doth not know] The same ancient Versions agree in adding ME, which very properly answers, the words possessor and lord preceding. [Ispah] de ME oxi cyrus. Sept. "Israel autem ME non cognovit;" Vulg. Ispah] de MOY oxi cyrus. Aquil., Theod. The testimony of so scrupulous an interpreter as Aquila is of great weight in this case. And both his and Theodotum's rendering is such, as shews plainly, that they did not add the word MOY to help out the sense; for it only embarrasses it. It also clearly determines what was the original reading in the old copies from which they translated. It could not be ידדני yaddani, which most obviously answers to the version of the Septuagint, and Vulgate, for it does not accord with that of Aquila and Theodotum. The version of these latter interpreters, however injudicious, clearly ascertains both the phrase, and the order of the words, of the original Hebrew: it was וישראל אוי לו ישראל ohi lo yadd. The word אוי ohi, has been lost out of the text. The very same phrase is used by Jeremiah, chap. iv. 22, וישראל לא ידדני ammi ohi lo yaddu. And the order of the words must have been as above represented; for they have joined וישראל yishrael, with אוי ohi, as in regimine; they could not have taken it in this sense, Israel meus non cognovit, had either this phrase or the order of the words been different. I have endeavoured to set this matter in a clear light, as it is the first example of a whole word lost out of the text; of which the reader will find many other plain examples in the course of these Notes. [But Rosenmuller contends that this is unnecessary, as the passage may be translated, Israel knows nothing: my people have no understanding.]

The Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate, read וישראל וישראל, "and my people:" and so likewise sixteen MSS. [of Kennicott, and fourteen of De Rossi.]

Verse 4. Ah sinful nation—(Degenerate.) Five MSS. (one of them ancient) read וישראל mashechitim, without the first yod; in hophel, corrupted, not corrupters. See the same word in the same form, and in the same sense, Prov. xxv. 26. Are corrupters—(Are estranged)] Thirty-two MSS. (five ancient) and two editions, read וישראל nazoru: which reading determines the word to be from the root נזר zur, to alienate, not from נזר nazar, to separate; so Kimchi understands it. See also Annotat. in Noldium, 68.

They are gone away backward—(They have turned their backs upon him.)] So Kimchi explains it: "They have turned unto Him the back, and not the face." See Jer. ii. 27; vii. 24. I have been forced to render this line paraphrastically; as the verbal translation "they are estranged backward" would have been unintelligible.

Verse 5. Why should ye be stricken any more?—(On what part, &c.) The Vulgate renders ידד לו אל mah, super quo, (see Job xxxviii. 6; 2 Chron. xxxii. 10) upon what part. And so Abdana on Sal. ben Melech: "There are some who explain it thus: Upon what limb shall you be smitten, if you add defection? for already for your sins have you been smitten upon all of them; so that there is not to be found in you a whole limb on which you can be smitten." Which agrees with what follows: from the sole of the foot even to the head, there is no soundness therein: and the sentiment and image is exactly the same with that of Ovid, Pont. ii. 7, 42.

"Vix habet in nobis jam nova plaga locum." [There is no place on you for a new stripe.]

not been closed, neither bound up, neither molli- fied with ointment.

7 Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire; your land, strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate, as over- thrown by strangers.

Or, or, or—Deut. 32. 61, 62—p Hab. as the overthrow of strangers.

Or that still more expressive line of Euripides; the great force and effect of which Longinus ascribes to its close and compressed structure, analogous to the sense which it expresses:

Ἦσαν κακῶν ὄν' ἡ' οὐκ ἔσθ' ἔτι τιθῆναι.

I'm full of miseries: there's no room for more. Herc. Fur. 124. Long. act. 68.

"On what part will ye strike again; will ye add correction?" This is addressed to the instruments of God's vengeance; those that inflicted the punishment, who or whatsoever they were. "Ad verbum certa persona intelligenda sunt, quibus ista actio [qua per verbum exprimitur] competit." [The words are addressed to the persons who were the agents employed in the work expressed by the original word,] as Glossius says in a similar case, Phil. Sacr. i. 3, 22. See chap. viii. 4.

As from yr yadd, רַב דַּדָּה, knowledge; from yr yadd, רַב דִּישָׁח, counsel; from yr yashan, רַב שָׁנָח, sleep, &c.; so from yr yaser, is regularly derived רַב עָרָה, correction.

The whole head is sick. [The king and the priest are equally gone away from truth and righteousness. Or the state is oppressed by its enemies, and the church corrupted in its rulers and in its members.]

Verse 6. They have not been closed, &c.—(It hath not been pressed, &c.) The art of medicine in the east consists chiefly in external applications: accordingly the prophet's images in this place are all taken from surgery. Sir John Chardin, in his note on Prov. iii. 8. "It shall be health to thy navel, and marrow to thy bones," observes, that "the comparison is taken from the plaisters, ointments, oils, frictions, which are made use of in the East upon the belly and stomach in most maladies. Being ignorant in the villages of the art of making decoctions and potions, and of the proper doses of such things, they generally make use of external medicines." Harmer's Observations on Scripture, vol. ii. p. 488. And in surgery their materia medica is extremely simple: oil making the principal part of it. "In India," says Tavernier, "they have a certain preparation of oil and melted grease, which they commonly use for the healing of wounds." Voyage Ind. So the good Samaritan poured oil and wine on the wounds of the distressed Jew: wine cleansing and somewhat astringent, proper for a fresh wound; oil, mollifying and healing. Luke x. 34. [Kimchi has a judicious remark here: "When various medicines are applied, and no healing takes place, that disorder is considered as coming immediately from God."]

Of the three verbs in this sentence one is in the singular number in the Text, another is singular in two MSS. (one of them ancient) חִבְשָׁה chobeshah; and the Syriac and Vulgate, render all of them in the singular number.

Verse 7-9. Your country is desolate] The description of the ruined and desolate state of the country in these verses does not suit with any part of the prosperous times of Uzziah and Jotham. It very well agrees with the time of Ahaz, when Judea was ravaged by the joint invasion of the Israelites and Syrians, and by the incursions of the Philistines and Edomites. The date of this prophecy is therefore generally fixed to the time of Ahaz. But on the other hand it may be considered whether those instances of idolatry which are urged in ver. 29, (the worshipping in groves and gardens,) having been at all times too commonly practised, can be supposed to be the only one which the Prophet would insist upon in the time of Ahaz; who spread the grossest idolatry through the whole country, and introduced it even into the temple; and, to complete his abominations, made his son pass through the fire to Moloch. It is said, 2 Kings xv. 27, that in Jotham's time—"the Lord began to send against Judah Retsin and Pekah." If we may suppose any invasion from that quarter to have been actually made at the latter end of Jotham's reign, I should choose to refer this prophecy to that time.

[And your cities are burned—Nineteen of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. and twenty-two of De Rossi's, some of my own, with the Syriac and Arabic, add the conjunction, which makes the hemistich more complete.]

Verse 7. רַב זָרִים (at the end of the verse.) This reading, though confirmed by all the ancient Versions, 8 And the daughter of Zion is left as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, as a besieged city.

9 Except the Lord of hosts had left unto us a very small remnant, we should have been as q Job 27. 18. Lam. 2. 6.—Jer. 4. 17.—Lam. 3. 22. Rom. 9. 23.

gives us no good sense; for "your land is devoured by strangers; and is desolate, as if overthrown by strangers," is a mere tautology; or, what is as bad, an identical comparison. Aben Ezra thought that the word in its present form might be taken for the same with רַב זָרִים zerem, an inundation; Schultens is of the same opinion; (see Taylor's Concord.) and Schindler in his Lexicon explains it in the same manner: and so, says Kimchi, some explain it. Abendana endeavours to reconcile it to grammatical analogy in the following manner,—"רַב זָרִים zarim, is the same with רַב זָרִים zerem; that is, as overthrown by an inundation of waters: and these two words have the same analogy as רַב קָדָם and רַב קֶדֶם. Or it may be a concrete of the same form with רַב שְׂכִיר shekir; and the meaning will be,—as overthrown by rain pouring down violently, and causing a flood." On Sat. ben Melec in loc. But I rather suppose the true reading to be רַב זָרִים zerem, and have translated it accordingly: the word רַב זָרִים in the line above, seems to have caught the transcriber's eye, and to have led him into this mistake. [But this conjecture of the learned prelate is not confirmed by any MS. yet discovered.]

Verse 8. As a cottage in a vineyard—(As a shed in a vineyard) A little temporary hut, covered with boughs, straw, turf, or the like materials, for a shelter from the heat by day, and the cold and dews by night, for the watchman that kept the garden or vineyard during the short season the fruit was ripening, see Job xxvii. 18, and presently removed when it had served that purpose. See Harmer's Observ. i. 454. They were probably obliged to have such a constant watch to defend the fruit from the jackals. "The jackal," (chical of the Turks), says Hasselquist, (Travels, p. 227.) "is a species of mustela which is very common in Palestine, especially during the vintage; and often destroys whole vineyards, and gardens of cucumbers." "There is also plenty of the canis vulpes, the fox, near the convent of St. John in the desert, about vintage time; for they destroy all the vines unless they are strictly watched." Ibid. p. 184. See Cant. ii. 15.

Fruits of the gourd kind, melons, water-melons, cucumbers, &c. are much used, and in great request in the Levant, on account of their cooling quality. The Israelites in the wilderness regretted the loss of the cucumbers and the melons among the other good things of Egypt, Numb. xi. 5. In Egypt, the season of water-melons, which are most in request, and which the common people then chiefly live upon, lasts but three weeks. See Hasselquist, p. 256. Tavernier makes it of longer continuance:—"L'on y void de grands carreaux de melons et de concombres; mais beaucoup plus des derniers, dont les Levantins font leur delices. Le plus souvent ils les mangent sans les peler, après quoi ils vont boire une verre d'eau. Dans toute l'Asie c'est la nourriture ordinaire d'un petit peuple pendant trois ou quatre mois; toute la famille en vit; et quand un enfant demande à manger, au lieu qu'en France ou ailleurs nous lui donnerions du pain, dans le Levant on lui presente un concombre, qu'il mange cru comme on le vient de cueillir.—Les concombres dans le Levant ont une bonté particulière, et quoiqu'on les mange crus, ils ne font jamais de mal." Tavernier, Relat. du Serrail, cap. xix.—["There are to be seen great beds of melons and cucumbers, but a greater number of the latter, of which the Levantines are particularly fond. In general they eat them without taking off the rind, after which they drink a glass of water. In every part of Asia this is the aliment of the common people for three or four months; the whole family live on them; and when a child asks something to eat, instead of giving it a piece of bread, as is done in France and other countries, they present it with a cucumber, which it eats raw as gathered. Cucumbers in the Levant are peculiarly excellent; and, although eaten raw, they are seldom injurious."]

[As a lodge, &c.—That is, after the fruit was gathered; the lodge being then permitted to fall into decay. Such was the desolate ruined state of the city.]

As a besieged city—(A city taken by siege) So the ωκ πολίς πολιορκουμένη; Vulgate; see also the Septuagint.

Verse 9. The Lord of hosts (Jehovah God of hosts) As this title of God, יְהוָה צְבָאוֹת Yehovah tsebaoth, "Jehovah of Hosts" occurs here for the first time, I think it proper to note, that I translate it always, as in this place,

'Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gomorrah.

10 Hear the word of the LORD, ye rulers of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gomorrah.

11 To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the LORD: I am full of the burnt offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he goats.

12 When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts?

13 Bring no more vain oblations; incense is an abomination unto me; the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with; it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting.

14 Your new moons and your appointed feasts my soul hateth: they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them.

15 And when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you: yea, when ye make many prayers, I will not hear: your hands are full of blood.

16 Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil;

17 Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.

18 Come now, and let us reason together, saith the LORD: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.

"JEHOVAH God of Hosts;" taking it as an elliptical expression for JEHOVAH יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵי יְהוֹשֻׁפָּה yehovah elohay yeshuah. This title imports that JEHOVAH is the God, or Lord, of hosts, or armies; as he is the Creator and Supreme Governor of all beings in heaven and earth, and disposeth and ruleth them all in their several orders and stations; the Almighty, Universal Lord.

[We should have been as Sodom.—As completely and finally ruined as that and the cities of the plain were, no vestige of which remains at this day.]

Verse 10. Ye princes of Sodom.—(Ye rulers of Sodom)] The incidental mention of Sodom and Gomorrah in the preceding verse suggested to the Prophet this spirited address to the rulers and inhabitants of Jerusalem, under the character of princes of Sodom and people of Gomorrah. Two examples of a sort of elegant turn of the like kind may be observed in St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, chap. xv. 4, 5, 12, 13. See Locke on the place; and see ver. 29, 30, of this Chapter, which gives another example of the same.

[AND—like unto Gomorrah.—The vau is added by thirty-one of Kennicott's MSS., twenty-nine of De Rossi's, and one, very ancient, of my own. See on ver. 6.]

Verse 11. To what purpose, &c.—(What have I to do)] The Prophet Amos has expressed the same sentiments with great elegance:—

"I hate, I despise your feasts; And I will not delight in the odour of your solemnities: Though ye offer unto me burnt-offerings; And your meat-offerings I will not accept: Neither will I regard the peace-offerings of your fattings. Take away from me the noise of your songs: And the melody of your viols I will not hear: But let judgment roll down like waters; And righteousness like a mighty stream."

Amos v. 21—24.

[So has Persius:—see Sat. ii. v. 71—75,—

"Quin damus id Superis, de magna quod dare lana," &c. The two or three last pages of Plato's Euthyphro contain the same idea. Sacrifices and prayers are not profitable to the offeror, nor acceptable to the gods, unless accompanied with an upright life.]

Verse 11. The fat of fed beasts, &c.] The fat and the blood are particularly mentioned, because these were in all sacrifices set apart to God. The fat was always burnt upon the altar; and the blood was partly sprinkled, differently on different occasions, and partly poured out at the bottom of the altar. See Lev. iv.

[Verse 12. When ye come to appear.—Instead of לראות יצאתם, to appear, one MS. has לראות לירושלם, to see. See De Rossi. The appearing here before God refers chiefly to the three solemn annual festivals. See Exod. xxiii. 14.]

Tread my courts (no more)] So the Septuagint divide the sentence, joining the end of this verse to the beginning of the next. [Ἰσραὴλ τῶν αὐτῶν πύλων, ἐν προσώπῳ σου, "To tread my court ye shall not add—ye shall not be again accepted in worship."]

Verse 13. The new moons and sabbaths.—(The fast and the day of restraint)] אָבֵן aven ve-dsterah. These words are rendered in many different manners by different interpreters; to a good and probable sense by all; but, I think, by none in such a sense as can arise from the phrase itself, agreeably to the idiom of the Hebrew language. Instead of אָבֵן aven, the Septuagint manifestly read ὡς tom, veritas, "the fast." This Houbigant has adopted. The Prophet could not well have omitted the fast in the enumeration of their solemnities; nor the abuse of it among the instances of their hypocrisy, which he has treated at large with such force and elegance in his fifty-sixth chapter. Observe also, that the Prophet Joel (chap.

i. 14, and ii. 15,) twice joins together the fast and the day of restraint:

קִרְוֵה נֶסֶם קִרְוֵה קִרְוֵה
Qterah kireu tom kadshu.
"Solemnly a fast; proclaim a day of restraint."

Which shows how properly they are here joined together. Qterah, the restraint, is rendered, both here and in other places in our English translation, the solemn assembly. Certain holy days ordained by the law were distinguished by a particular charge that "no servile work should be done therein." Lev. xxviii. 36; Numb. xxix. 35; Deut. xvi. 8. This circumstance clearly explains the reason of the name, the restraint, or the day of restraint, given to those days.

If I could approve of any translation of these two words which I have met with, it should be that of the Spanish version of the Old Testament, made for the use of the Spanish Jews: "tortura y detenimento," "it is a pain and a constraint unto me." But I still think that the reading of the Septuagint is more probably the truth.

Verse 15. When ye spread] The Syriac, Septuagint, and a MS. read בְּפָרְשֵׁיכֶם be-parshetchem, without the conjunction vau.

Your hands.—(For your hands)] Αἱ χεῖρες Sept. Manus enim vestrae. Vulg. They seem to have read יָדֵיכֶם ki yadeychem.

Verse 16. Wash ye] Referring to the preceding verse, "your hands are full of blood;" and alluding to the legal washings commanded on several occasions. See Lev. xiv. 8, 9, 47.

Verse 17. Relieve the oppressed.—(Amend that which is corrupted)] אֲשֶׁר חָמָן asheru chamols. In rendering this obscure phrase I follow Bochart, (Hieroz. Part. i. lib. ii. cap. 7.) though I am not perfectly satisfied with his explanation of it.

Verse 18. Though your sins be as scarlet] שָׁנִי shani, "scarlet, or crimson," dybaphum, twice dipped, or double dyed; from שָׁנָה shanan, stear, to double, or to do a thing twice. This derivation seems much more probable than that which Salmastius prefers, from שָׁנָה shanan, acere, to whet, from the sharpness and strength of the colour, ὀφθαλμιακόν oela, the same; properly the worm, vermicultus, (from whence vermel;) for this colour was produced from a worm, or insect, which grew in a coccus or excrescence of a shrub of the ilex kind; (see Plin. Nat. Hist. xvi. 8.) like the cochineal worm in the Opuntia of America. See Ulloa's Voyage, B. v. ch. 2, note to page 342. There is a shrub of this kind that grows in Provence and Languedoc, and produces the like insect, called the kermes oak, (see Miller, Dict. Quercus;) from kermaz, the Arabic word for this colour; whence our word crimson is derived.

Lana refert medicina fove,"

says the poet; applying the same image to a different purpose. To discharge these strong colours is impossible to human art or power: but to the grace and power of God all things, even much more difficult, are possible and easy. [Some copies have שָׁנֵים ke-shanim, "like crimson garments."]

[Though they be red, &c..—But the conjunction vau is added by twenty-one of Kennicott's, and by forty-two of De Rossi's MSS., by some early editions, with the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and Arabic. It makes a fuller and more emphatic sense. AND though they be red as crimson, &c.]

27 Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness.

28 And the destruction of the transgressors and of the sinners shall be together, and they that forsake the Lord shall be consumed.

29 For ye shall be ashamed of the oaks cease, and the remnant of Israel shall neither do iniquity nor speak lies.

Afterward—(And after this—) [The Septuagint, Syriac, Chaldee, and eighteen MSS., [and one of my own, very ancient,] add the conjunction vau, AND.

Verse 27. With judgment—(In judgment) By the exercise of God's strict justice in destroying the obdurate, (see ver. 28,) and delivering the penitent "in righteousness;" by the truth and faithfulness of God in performing His promises.

Verse 29. For they shall be ashamed of the oaks—(For ye shall be ashamed of the ilexes) Sacred groves were a very ancient and favourite appendage of idolatry. They were furnished with the temple of the god to whom they were dedicated; with altars, images, and every thing necessary for performing the various rites of worship offered there; and were the scenes of many impure ceremonies, and of much abominable superstition. They made a principal part of the religion of the old inhabitants of Canaan; and the Israelites were commanded to destroy their groves, among other monuments of their false worship. The Israelites themselves became afterwards very much addicted to this species of idolatry.

"When I had brought them into the land,
Which I swore that I would give unto them;
Then they saw every high hill, and every thick tree:
And there they slew their victims;
And there they presented the provocation of their offerings;
And there they placed their sweet savour:
And there they poured out their libations." Ezek. xx. 23.

"On the tops of the mountains they sacrifice;
And on the hills they burn incense:
Under the oak, and the poplar;
And the ilex, because her shade is pleasant." Hosea iv. 13.

Of what particular kinds the trees here mentioned are, it cannot be determined with certainty. In regard to אֵילֵי עֵלֶל, in this place of Isaiah, as well as in Hosea, Celsius (Hierobot.) understands it of the terebinth, because the most ancient interpreters render it so; in the first place the Septuagint. He quotes eight places: but in three of these eight places the copies vary, some having δῦος, the oak, instead of τερεβινθος, the terebinth, or turpentine tree. And he should have told us, that these same Septuagint render it in sixteen other places by δῦος, the oak: so that their authority is really against him: and the Septuagint, stant pro quercu, contrary to what he says at first setting out. Add to this that Symmachus, Theodotus, and Aquila, generally render it by δῦος, the oak; the latter only once rendering it by τερεβινθος, the terebinth. His other arguments seem to me not very conclusive; he says, that all the qualities of אֵילֵי עֵלֶל, agree to the terebinth; that it grows in mountainous countries; that it is a strong tree, long lived, large and high, and deciduous. All these qualities agree just as well to the oak, against which he contends; and he actually attributes them to the oak in the very next section. But I think neither the oak, nor the terebinth, will do in this place of Isaiah, from the last circumstance which he mentions, their being deciduous, where the prophet's design seems to me to require an evergreen; otherwise the casting of its leaves would be nothing out of the common established course of nature, and no proper image of extreme distress and total desolation, parallel to that of a garden without water, that is, wholly burnt up and destroyed. An ancient, who was an inhabitant and a native of this country, understands it in like manner of a tree bleasted with uncommon and immoderate heat; velut arborea, cum frondes astu torrente decusserunt. Ephrem Syr. in loc. edit. Assemani. Compare Psa. i. 4; Jer. xvii. 8. Upon the whole I have chosen to make it the ilex; which word Vossius (Etymolog.) derives from the Hebrew אֵילֵי עֵלֶל, that whether the word itself be rightly rendered or not, I might at least preserve the propriety of the poetic image.

[By the ilex the learned prelate means the holly, which, though it generally appear as a sort of shrub, grows in a good soil, where it is unmolested, to a considerable height. I have one in my own garden, rising three stems from the root, and between twenty and thirty feet in height. It is an evergreen.]

Verse 29. For they shall be ashamed—(For ye shall be ashamed) אֲשָׁמוּ תֹבוּשׁוֹ, in the second person, Vulgate, which ye have desired, and ye shall be confounded for the gardens that ye have chosen.

30 For ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water.

31 And the strong shall be as tow, and the maker of it as a spark, and they shall both burn together, and none shall quench them.

f Hab. breaking. — g Ch. 57. 5.— h Ch. 63. 2. & 68. 17.— i Ezek. 32. 21.— k Ch. 63. 17. Or, and his work.

Chaldee, three MSS. [one of my own, ancient] and one edition; and in agreement with the rest of the sentence.

Verse 30. Whose leaf—(Whose leaves) Twenty-six of Kennicott's, twenty-four of De Rossi's, [one ancient, of my own] and seven editions, read רָבִי אֵילֵי עֵלֶל, in its full and regular form. This is worth remarking, as it accounts for a great number of anomalies of the like kind which was only the same authority to rectify them.

As a garden that hath no water—(A garden wherein is no water.) In the hotter parts of the Eastern countries, a constant supply of water is so absolutely necessary for the cultivation, and even for the preservation and existence, of a garden, that should it want water but for a few days, every thing in it would be burnt up with the heat, and totally destroyed. There is therefore no garden whatever in those countries but what has such a certain supply, either from some neighbouring river, or from a reservoir of water collected from springs, or filled with rain water in the proper season, in sufficient quantity to afford ample provision for the rest of the year.

Moses having described the habitation of man newly created, as a garden planted with every tree pleasant to the sight and good for food; adds, as a circumstance necessary to complete the idea of a garden, that it was well supplied with water, Gen. ii. 10, and see xiii. 10. "And a river went out of Eden to water the garden."

That the reader may have a clear notion of this matter, it will be necessary to give some account of the management of their gardens in this respect.

"Damascus," says Maunderell, p. 122, "is encompassed with gardens, extending no less, according to common estimation, than thirty miles round; which makes it look like a city in a vast wood. The gardens are thick set with fruit-trees of all kinds, kept fresh and verdant by the waters of the Barrady, (the Chrysorrhoeas of the ancients,) which supply both the gardens and the city in great abundance. This river, as soon as it issues out from between the cleft of the mountain before mentioned into the plain, is immediately divided into three streams; of which the middlemost and biggest runs directly to Damascus, and is distributed to all the cisterns and fountains of the city. The other two (which I take to be the work of art) are drawn round, one to the right hand, and the other to the left, on the borders of the gardens, into which they are let as they pass, by little currents, and so dispersed all over the vast wood, insomuch that there is not a garden but has a fine quick stream running through it. The Barrady is almost wholly drunk up by the city and gardens. What small part of it escapes is united, as I was informed, in one channel again on the southeast side of the city; and, after about three or four hours' course, finally loses itself in a bog there, without ever arriving at the sea." This was likewise the case in former times, as Strabo, lib. xvi.; Pliny, v. 18, testify; who say, "that this river was expended in canals, and drunk up by watering the place."

"The best sight," says the same Maunderell, p. 39, "that the palace [of the emir of Beroos, anciently Berytus,] affords, and the worthiest to be remembered, is the orange garden. It contains a large quadrangular plat of ground, divided into sixteen lesser squares, four in a row, with walks between them. The walks are shaded with orange trees of a large spreading size. Every one of these sixteen lesser squares in the garden was bordered with stone; and in the stone-work were troughs, very artificially contrived, for conveying the water all over the garden; there being little outlets cut at every tree for the stream as it passed by to flow out and water it." The royal gardens at Ispahan are watered just in the same manner, according to Kempfer's description, Amoen. Exot. p. 193.

This gives us a clear idea of the אֵילֵי עֵלֶל palmyr mayim, mentioned in the first Psalm, and other places of Scripture, "the divisions of waters," the waters distributed in artificial canals; for so the phrase properly signifies. The Prophet Jermiah, chap. xvii. 8, has imitated, and elegantly amplified, the passage of the Psalmist above referred to:

"He shall be like a tree planted by the water side,
And which sends forth her roots to the aqueduct.
She shall not fear, when the heat cometh;
But her leaf shall be green;
And in the year of drought she shall not be anxious,
Neither shall she cease from bearing fruit."

CHAPTER II.

Prophecy concerning the kingdom of the Messiah, and the conversion of the Gentile world, 1-4. Great wickedness and idolatry of the unbelieving Jews, 5-8. Terrible consternation that will seize the wicked, who shall in vain seek for rocks and mountains to hide them from the face of God in the day of His judgments, 10-17. Total destruction of idolatry in consequence of the establishment of Messiah's kingdom, 18-21. An exhortation to put no confidence in man, 22.

a Mic. 4. 1, &c.—b Gen. 49. 1. Jer. 23. 30.—c Psa. 69. 15, 16.—d Or, prepared.

From this image the son of Sirach, Eccles. xxiv. 30, 31, has most beautifully illustrated the influence and the increase of religious wisdom in a well prepared heart.

"I also come forth as a canal from a river, And as a conduit flowing into a paradise. I said, I will water my garden; And I will abundantly moisten my border: And, lo! my canal became a river, And my river became a sea."

This gives us the true meaning of the following elegant proverb, Prov. xxi. 1:—

"The heart of the king is like the canals of waters in the hand of JEHOVAH; Whosoever it pleaseth Him, He inclineth it."

The direction of it is in the hand of JEHOVAH, as the distribution of the water of the reservoir through the garden by different canals is at the will of the gardener.

"Et, cum arvisus ager morientibus autum herbis, Evae superfluis effusus transiens tendam Edicit: Ille cadens resurgens per levis marmarum Sassa cis, oculatibus areolis temperat arse." Virg. Georg. i. 107.

"Then, when the heavy suns too fiercely play, And shrivell'd herbs on withering stems decay, The wary ploughman on the scoundrel's brow Undams his wat'ry stores; huge torrents flow; And rattling down the rocks, large moisture yield, Trampling the thirsty fever of the field." Dryden.

Solomon, Eccles. ii. 5, 6, mentions his own works of this kind:—

"I made me gardens, and paradise; And I planted in them all kinds of fruit-trees: I made me pools of water, To water with them the grove flourishing with trees."

Maundrell, p. 88, has given a description of the remains, as they are said to be, of these very pools made by Solomon, for the reception and preservation of the waters of a spring, rising at a little distance from them; which will give us a perfect notion of the contrivance and design of such reservoirs. "As for the pools, they are three in number, lying in a row above each other; being so disposed that the waters of the uppermost may descend into the second, and those of the second into the third. Their figure is quadrangular, the breadth is the same in all, amounting to about ninety paces. In their length there is some difference between them; the first being about one hundred and sixty paces long, the second two hundred, and the third two hundred and twenty. They are all lined with wall, and plastered; and contain a great depth of water."

The immense works, which were made by the ancient kings of Egypt, for recovering the waters of the Nile when it overflowed, for such uses, are well known. But there never was a more stupendous work of this kind than the reservoir of Saba, or Merab, in Arabia Felix. According to the tradition of the country, it was the work of Balkis, that queen of Sheba who visited Solomon. It was a vast lake formed by the collection of the waters of a torrent in a valley, where, at a narrow pass between two mountains, a very high mole or dam was built. The water of the lake so formed had near twenty fathoms depth; and there were three sluices at different heights, by which, at whatever height the lake stood, the plain below might be watered. By conduits and canals from these sluices the water was constantly distributed in due proportion to the several lands; so that the whole country for many miles became a perfect paradise. The city of Saba, or Merab, was situated immediately below the great dam; a great flood came, and raised the lake above its usual height; the dam gave way in the middle of the night; the waters burst forth at once, and overwhelmed the whole city, with the neighbouring towns and people. The remains of eight tribes were forced to abandon their dwelling, and the beautiful valley became a morass and a desert. This fatal catastrophe happened long before the time of Mohammed who mentions it in the Koran, chap. xxiv. ver. 15. See also Sale, Prelim. s. i. p. 10, and Michalix, Quest. aux Voyag. Dan. No. 94. Niebuhr, Descript. de l'Arabie, p. 240.

The prophecy contained in the second, third, and fourth, chapters makes one continued discourse. The first five verses of chap. ii. foretell the kingdom of Messiah, the conversion of the Gentiles, and their admission into it. From the sixth verse to the end of the second chapter is foretold the punishment of the unbelieving Jews for their idolatrous practices, their confidence in their own strength, and distrust of God's protection; and, moreover, the destruction of idolatry, in consequence of the establishment of 2 And it shall come to pass in the last days that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills; and all nations shall flow unto it.

Messiah's kingdom. The whole third chapter, with the first verse of the fourth, is a prophecy of the calamities of the Babylonian invasion and captivity; with a particular amplification of the distress of the proud and luxurious daughters of Sion. Chap. iv. 2-6, promises to the remnant, which shall have escaped this severe purgation, a future restoration to the favour and protection of God.

This prophecy was probably delivered in the time of Jotham, or perhaps in that of Uzziah, as Isaiah is said to have prophesied in his reign; to which time not any of his prophecies is so applicable as that of these Chapters. The seventh verse of the second, and the latter part of the third chapter, plainly point out times in which riches abounded, and luxury and delicacy prevailed. Plenty of silver and gold could only arise from their commerce; particularly from that part of it, which was carried on by the Red Sea. This circumstance seems to confine the prophecy within the limits above-mentioned, while the port of Elath was in their hands: it was lost under Ahaz, and never recovered.

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 2. In the last days—(In the latter days) "Wherever the latter times are mentioned in Scripture, the days of the Messiah are always meant," says Kimchi on this place: and, in regard to this place, nothing can be more clear and certain. [And the mountain of the Lord's house, says the same author, is mount Moriah, on which the temple was built.] The prophet Micah, (chap. iv. 1-4,) has repeated this prophecy of the establishment of the kingdom of Christ, and of its progress to universality and perfection, in the same words, with little and hardly any material variation: for as he did not begin to prophesy till Jotham's time, and this seems to be one of the first of Isaiah's prophecies, I suppose Micah to have taken it from hence. The variations, as I said, are of no great importance. Verse 2, מן הו, after מן בני ישראל, a word of some emphasis, may be supplied from Micah, if dropped in Isaiah. An ancient MS. has it here in the margin. It has in like manner been lost in chap. liii. 4, (see note on the place,) and in Psa. xxii. 29, where it is supplied by the Syriac and Septuagint. Instead of מן כל האומות, all the nations, Micah has מן כל אומות, peoples; where the Syriac has מן כל אומות, all peoples, as probably it ought to be. Verse 3, for the second מן אל, read מן אל-אל, seventeen MSS., [one of my own, ancient,] two editions, the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, Chaldee, and so Micah iv. 2. Verse 4, Micah adds, מן יד רשע, as far off, which the Syriac also reads in this parallel place of Isaiah. It is also to be observed that Micah has improved the passage by adding a verse, or sentence, for imagery and expression worthy even of the elegance of Isaiah:—

"And they shall sit every man under his vine, And under his fig-tree, and none shall frighten them: For the month of JEHOVAH God of hosts hath spoken it."

The description of well established peace, by the image of "beating their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks," is very poetical. The Roman poets have employed the same image, Martial. xiv. 34, "Falx ex ense."

"Fax me certa decus placidis curavit in usis: Agricola nunc sum; militis ante fui."

Sweet peace has transformed me. I was once the property of the soldier, and am now the property of the husbandman.

The prophet Joel, chap. iii. 10, hath reversed it, and applied it to war prevailing over peace:—

"Beat your ploughshares into swords, And your pruning-hooks into spears."

And so likewise the Roman poets:—

"Non solum aratro Digress homines: aspectus adhibet in arma colonic. Et curvam rightibus falces conflantur in enses." Virg. Georg. i. 505.

[Agriculture has now no honour: the husbandman being taken away to the wars, the fields are overgrown with weeds, and the crooked sickles are straightened into swords.]

"Bella die tenero viros: erat aprior ensis Vomer: carbatat natus arator ager. Sarcina comabat; versiplex in plia ligones; Fractaque de rursi poudere enses erant." Ovid. Fast. i. 607.

[War has lasted long, and the sword is preferred to the plough. The bull has given place to the warhorse; the weeding hooks to plows; and the harrow plows have been manufactured into helmets.]

The prophet Ezekiel, chap. xvii. 22-24, has prefigured the same great event with equal clearness, though in a more abstruse form, in an allegory; from an image sug-teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

4 And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

5 O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord.

6 Therefore thou hast forsaken thy people the house of Jacob, because they were replenished from the East, and are soothsayers like the Philistines, and they please themselves in the children of strangers.

7 Their land also is full of silver and gold, neither is there any end of their treasures; their land is also full of horses, neither is there any end of their chariots:

8 Their land also is full of idols; they worship the work of their own hands, that which their own fingers have made:

9 And the man mean boweth down, and the gested by the former part of the prophecy, happily introduced, and well pursued:—

^h Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH: I myself will take from the stout of the lofty cedar; Even a tender cion from the top of his cions will I pluck off: And I myself will plant it on a mountain high and eminent: On the lofty mountain of Israel will I plant it: And it shall exult in its branch, and bring forth fruit; And it shall become a majestic cedar: And under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; In the shadow of its branches shall they dwell; And all the trees of the field shall know: Thus I JEHOVAH have brought low the high tree; I have exalted the low tree; I have dried up the gross tree; And have made the dry tree to flourish: I JEHOVAH have spoken it, and will do it.^h

The word ve-natai, in this passage, ver. 22, as the sentence now stands, seems incapable of being reduced to any proper construction or sense. None of the ancient Versions acknowledge it, except Theodotion and the Vulgate; and all but the latter vary much from the present reading of this clause. Houbigant's correction of the passage, by reading instead of ve-natai, ve-natai, ve-yoneketh, (and a tender cion,) which is not very unlike it, (perhaps better ve-yonek, with which the adjective ve-rack, will agree without alteration,) is ingenious and probable; and I have adopted it in the above translation.

[Verse 3. To the house—The conjunction vau, is added by nineteen of Kennicott's, thirteen of De Rossi's MSS., one of my own, and two editions, the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, Arabic, and some copies of the Targum;—And to the house. It makes the sentence more emphatic.

He will teach us of his ways—Unless God grant a revelation of his will, what can we know?

We will walk in his paths—Unless we purpose to walk in the light, of what use can that light be to us?

For out of Zion shall go forth the law—In the house of God, and in His ordinances only, can we expect to hear the pure doctrines of revelation preached.—1. God alone can give a revelation of His own will. 2. We must use the proper means in order to know this will. 3. We should know it in order to do it. 4. We should do it, in order to profit by it. 5. He who will not walk in the light when God vouchsafes it, shall be shut up in everlasting darkness. 6. Every man should help his neighbour to attain that light, life, and felicity. Come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord.

Verse 4. Neither shall they learn war any more.—If wars are necessary, how deep must that fall be that renders them so! But what a reproach to humanity is the trade of war! Men are regularly instructed in it, as in any of the necessary arts.

^h How to dialize most souls from their frail shrines By balm, sword, ball, and bayonet, is the art Which some call great and glorious.^h

And is this a necessary part of a finished education in civilized society? O Earth! Earth! Earth!

Verse 6. They be replenished—(And they multiply) Seven MSS. and one edition for ve-yasepichu, read ve-yasepichu, and have joined themselves to the children of strangers; that is, in marriage, or worship. Dr. Juss. So Vulg. adhaserunt. Compare chap. xiv. 1. But the very learned professor Chevalier Michaelis has explained the word ve-yasepichu, Job xxx. 7, (German translation, note on the place) in another manner; which perfectly well agrees with that place, and perhaps will be found to give as good a sense here. Sapiach, the noun, means corn springing up, not from the seed regularly sown on cultivated land, but in the uncultivated field, from the scattered grains of the former harvest. This, by an easy metaphor, is applied to a spurious brood of children irregularly and casually begotten. The Septuagint seem to have understood the verb here in this sense, reading it as the Vulgate seems to have done. This justifies their version, which it is hard to account for in any other manner: και ταυτα πολλα αλλοφύλα εγενηθη αυτοις. Compare Hos. v. 7, and the Septuagint there. But instead of ve-yasepichu beyleday, and in their children, two of Kennicott's and eight of De Rossi's MSS. are ve-keyledai, and as the children. And they sin impudently as the children of strangers. See De Rossi.

And are soothsayers—(They are filled with diviners) Heb. They are filled from the East; or, more than the East. The sentence is manifestly imperfect. The Septuagint, Vulgate, and Chaldee, seem to have read כספי ke-mikedem; and the latter, with another word before it signifying idols: they are filled with idols as from of old. Houbigant for כספי mikedem reads כספי mikeseem, as Brentius had proposed long ago. I rather think that both words together give us the true reading: כספי mikedem, כספי mikeseem, with divination from the East; and that the first word has been by mistake omitted, from its similitude to the second.

Verse 7. Their land is also full of horses—(And his land is filled with horses) This was in direct contradiction to God's command in the law: "But he (the king) shall not multiply horses to himself; nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses:—neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold," Deut. xvii. 16, 17. Uzziah seems to have followed the example of Solomon, see 1 Kings x. 26—29, who first transgressed in these particulars: he recovered the port of Elath on the Red Sea, and with it that commerce which in Solomon's days had "made silver and gold as plenteous as Jerusalem as stones," 2 Chron. i. 15. He had an army of 307,500 men; in which, as we may infer from the testimony of Isaiah, the chariots and horse made a considerable part. "The law above-mentioned was to be a standing trial of prince and people, whether they had trust and confidence in God their Deliverer. See Bp. Sherlock's Discourses on Prophecy, Dissert. iv. where he has excellently explained the reason and effect of the law, and the influence which the observance or neglect of it had on the affairs of the Israelites.

Verse 8. Their land is also full of idols—(And his land is filled with idols) Uzziah and Jotham are both said, 2 Kings xv. 3, 4, 34, 35, "to have done that which was right in the sight of the Lord;" (that is, to have adhered to, and maintained, the legal worship of God, in opposition to idolatry, and all irregular worship; for to this sense the meaning of that phrase is commonly to be restrained); "save that the high places were not removed, where the people still sacrificed and burnt incense." There was hardly any time, when they were quite free from this irregular and unlawful practice; which they seemed to have looked upon as very consistent with the true worship of God; and which seems in some measure to have been tolerated, while the tabernacle was removed from place to place, and before the temple was built. Even after the conversion of Manasseh, when he had removed the strange gods, and commanded Judah to serve יהוה the God of Israel, it is added, "Nevertheless the people did sacrifice still on the high places, yet unto יהוה their God only," 2 Chron. xxxiii. 17. The worshipping on the high places therefore does not necessarily imply idolatry; and from what is said of these two kings, Uzziah and Jotham, we may presume, that the public exercise of idolatrous worship was not permitted in their time. The idols therefore here spoken of must have been such as were designed for a private and secret use. Such probably were the teraphim so often mentioned in Scripture; a kind of household gods, of human form, as it should seem, see 1 Sam. xiv. 13, and compare Gen. xxxi. 34, of different magnitude, used for idolatrous and superstitious purposes, particularly for divination; and as oracles, which they consulted for direction in their affairs.

Verse 9. Boweth down—(Shall be bowed down) This has reference to the preceding verse. They bowed themselves down to their idols; therefore shall they be bowed down and brought low under the avenging hand of God, great man humbly himself: therefore forgive them not.

10 Enter into the rock, and hide thee in the dust, for fear of the LORD, and for the glory of his majesty.

11 The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the LORD alone shall be exalted in that day.

12 For the day of the LORD of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up; and he shall be brought low.

13 And upon all the cedars of Lebanon, that are high and lifted up, and upon all the oaks of Bashan,

14 And upon all the high mountains, and upon all the hills that are lifted up,

15 And upon every high tower, and upon every fenced wall,

16 And upon all the ships of Tarshish, and upon all pleasant pictures.

17 And the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low: and the LORD alone shall be exalted in that day.

18 And the idols he shall utterly abolish.

19 And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the LORD, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth.

Verse 10. (When he ariseth to strike the earth with terror.) On the authority of the Septuagint, confirmed by the Arabic, and an ancient MSS; I have added here to the text a line, which in the 19th and 21st verses is repeated together with the preceding line, and has, I think, evidently been omitted by mistake in this place. The MS. here varies only in one letter from the reading of the other two verses: it has בארצם ba'aratzem, instead of בארצם ba'aratzem. [None of De Rossi's MSS. confirm this addition.]

Verse 11. Be humbled. "שפלה שפלה shaphel vesach, read שפלה שפלה shaphlu shach." Dr. Durell. Which rectifies the grammatical construction. [No MS. or Version confirms this reading.]

Verse 13—16. And upon all the cedars.—(Even against all the cedars) [Princes, potentates, rulers, captains, rich men, &c. So Kimchi.] These verses afford us a striking example of that peculiar way of writing, which makes a principal characteristic of the parabolic or poetical style of the Hebrews, and in which the prophets deal so largely; namely, their manner of exhibiting things Divine, spiritual, moral, and political, by a set of images taken from things natural, artificial, religious, historical, in the way of metaphor or allegory. Of these nature furnishes much the largest and the most pleasing share; and all poetry has chiefly recourse to natural images, as the richest and most powerful source of illustration. But it may be observed of the Hebrew poetry in particular, that in the use of such images, and in the application of them in the way of illustration and ornament, it is more regular and constant than any other poetry whatever; that it has for the most part a set of images appropriated in a manner to the explication of certain subjects. Thus you will find, in many other places beside this before us, that cedars of Libanus and oaks of Bashan are used, in the way of metaphor and allegory, for kings, princes, potentates of the highest rank; high mountains and lofty hills, for kingdoms, republics, states, cities; towers and fortresses, for defenders and protectors, whether by counsel or strength, in peace or war; ships of Tarshish, and works of art and invention employed in adorning them, for merchants, men enriched by commerce, and abounding in all the luxuries and elegancies of life, such as those of Tyre and Sidon; for it appears from the course of the whole passage, and from the train of ideas, that the fortresses and the ships are to be taken metaphorically, as well as the high trees and the lofty mountains.

Ships of Tarshish] Are in Scripture frequently used by a metonymy for ships in general, especially such as are employed in carrying on traffic between distant countries; as Tarshish was the most celebrated mart of those times, frequented of old by the Phœnicians, and the principal source of wealth to Judea and the neighbouring countries. The learned seem now to be perfectly well agreed that Tarshish is Tartessus, a city of Spain, at the mouth of the river Bætis; whence the Phœnicians, who first opened this trade, brought silver and gold, (Jer. x. 9; Ezek. xxvii. 12,) in which that country then abounded; and pursuing their voyage still farther to the Cassiterides, (Bocharf. Canaan, l. c. 39. Heut. Hist. de Commerce, p. 194.) the islands of Sicily and Cornwall, they brought from thence lead and tin.

Tarshish is celebrated in Scripture, (2 Chron. viii. 17, 18; ix. 21,) for the trade which Solomon carried on thither, in conjunction with the Tyrians. Jehoshaphat (1 Kings xxiii. 48; 2 Chron. xx. 36,) attempted afterwards to renew that trade. And from the account given of his attempt it appears, that his fleet was to sail from Eziongeber on the Red Sea; they must therefore have designed to sail round Africa, as Solomon's fleet probably had done before; (see Heut. Histoire de Commerce, p. 32,) for it was a three years' voyage, (2 Chron. ix. 21,) and they brought gold from Ophir, probably on the coast of Arabia; silver from Tartessus; and ivory, apes, and peacocks, from Africa. אפירי Afri, Africa, the Roman termination, Africa, terra. ארצות Tarshish, some city or country in Africa. So the Chaldees on 1 Kings xxii. 49, where he renders ארצות Tarshish, by אפיריקא Aphricak; and compare 2 Chron. xx. 36, from whence it appears, to go to Ophir and to Tarshish is one and the same thing." Dr. Jubb. It is certain, that under Pharaoh Necho, about two hundred years afterward, this voyage was made by the Egyptians. Herodot. iv. 42. They sailed from the Red Sea, and returned by the Mediterranean; and they performed it in three years, just the same time that the voyage under Solomon had taken up. It appears likewise from Pliny, Nat. Hist. ii. 67, that the passage round the Cape of Good Hope was known and frequently practised before his time, by Hanno the Carthaginian, when Carthage was in its glory; by one Eudoxus, in the time of Ptolemy Lathyrus, king of Egypt; and Cælius Antipater, a historian of good credit, somewhat earlier than Pliny, testifies that he had seen a merchant, who had made the voyage from Gades to Æthiopia. The Portuguese under Vasco de Gama, near three hundred years ago, recovered this navigation, after it had been intermitted and lost for many centuries.

Verse 13. Shall utterly abolish.—(Shall disappear) The ancient Versions and an ancient MS. read יעחלופו yechalophu, plural. [One of my MSS. reads יעחלופי yechalophi, probably a mistake for יעחלופי yechalophu.]

Verse 19—21. Into the holes of the rocks.—(Into caverns of rocks) The country of Judea being mountainous and rocky is full of caverns, as it appears from the history of David's persecution under Saul. At Engedi, in particular, there was a cave so large that David with six hundred men hid themselves in the sides of it; and Saul entered the mouth of the cave without perceiving that any one was there, 1 Sam. xxiv. Josephus, Antiq. lib. xiv. c. 15, and Bell. Jud. lib. 1. c. 16, tells us of a numerous gang of banditti, who having infested the country, and being pursued by Herod with his army, retired into certain caverns almost inaccessible, near Arbela in Galilee, where they were with great difficulty subdued. Some of these were natural, others artificial. "Beyond Damascus," says Strabo, lib. xvi. "are two mountains called Trachones; (from which the country has the name of Trachonitis;) and from hence towards Arabia and Iuerea are certain rugged mountains, in which there are deep caverns, one of which will hold four thousand men." Tavernier, Voyage de Perse, Part ii. ch. 4, speaks of a grot, between Aleppo and Bir, that would hold near three thousand horse. "Three hours distant from Sidon, about a mile from the sea, there runs along a high rocky mountain, in the sides of which are hewn a multitude of grots, all very little differing from each other. They have entrances about two feet square: on the inside you find in most or all of them a room of about four yards square. There are of these subterraneous caverns two hundred in number. It may, with probability at least, be concluded that these places were contrived for the use of the living, and not of the dead. Strabo describes the habitations of the Troglodytes to have been somewhat of this kind." Maundrell, p. 113. The Horites, who dwelt in mount Seir, were Troglodytes, as their name ארצות horim, imports. But those mentioned by Strabo were on each side of the Arabian gulf. Mohammed (Koran, chap. xv. and xxvi.)

20 In that day a man shall cast his idols of silver and his idols of gold, which they made each one for himself to worship, to the moles and to the bats;

21 To go into the clefts of the rocks and into the tops of the ragged rocks, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth.

22 Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils: for wherein is he to be accounted of?

CHAPTER III.

The whole of this Chapter, with the first verse of the next, is a prophecy of those calamities that should be occasioned by the Babytonish invasion and captivity. These calamities are represented as so great and so general, that even royal honours, in such a state, are so far from being desirable, that hardly any can be got to accept them, 1-7. This visitation is declared to be the consequence of their profanity and guilt; for which the prophet further reproves and threatens them, 8-16. Particular amplification of the distress of the delicate and luxurious daughters of Zion; whose deplorable situation is finely contrasted with their former prosperity and ease, 16-38.

FOR, behold, the Lord, the Lord of hosts, shall doth take away from Jerusalem and from Judah the stay and the staff, the whole stay of bread, and the whole stay of water.

speaks of a tribe of Arabians, the tribe of Thamud, "who hewed houses out of the mountains to secure themselves." Thus, "because of the Midianites, the children of Israel made them the dens which are in the mountains, and caves and strong holds," Judg. vi. 2. To these they betook themselves for refuge in times of distress and hostile invasion: "When the men of Israel saw that they were in a strait, (for the people were distressed,) then the people did hide themselves in caves, and in thickets, and in rocks, and in high places, and in pits," 1 Sam. xiii. 6, and see Jer. xii. 9. Therefore "to enter into the rock, to go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth," was to them a very proper and familiar image to express terror and consternation. The prophet Hosea, chap. x. 8, hath carried the same image farther, and added great strength and spirit to it:

"They shall say to the mountains, Cover us; And to the hills, Fall on us."

Which image, together with these of Isaiah, is adopted by the sublime author of the Revelation, chap. vi. 15, 16, who frequently borrows his imagery from our prophet.

Verse 20. Which they made each one for himself to worship—(Which they have made to worship) The word lo, for himself, is omitted by two ancient MSS. and is unnecessary. It does not appear that any copy of the Septuagint has it, except MS. Pachom. and MS. I. D. II. and they have kaurois, nri lahem, to themselves.

To the moles] They shall carry their idols with them into the dark caverns, old ruins, or desolate places, to which they shall flee for refuge; and so shall give them up, and relinquish them to the filthy animals that frequent such places, and have taken possession of them as their proper habitation. Bellonius, Greaves, P. Lucas, and many other travellers, speak of bats of an enormous size, as inhabiting the Great Pyramid. See Harmer. Observ. Vol. II. 455. Three MSS. express hophorphoroth, the moles, as one word.

[Verse 22. Cease ye from man] Trust neither in him, nor in the gods that he has invented. Neither he, nor they, can either save or destroy.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. The stay and staff—(Every stay and support)] Hebrew "the support masculine, and the support feminine;" that is, every kind of support, whether great or small, strong or weak. "Al kanitz, wal-kanitzah; the wild beast, male and female. Proverbially applied both to fishing and hunting: i. e. I seized the prey, great or little, good or bad. From hence, as Schultens observes, is explained Isa. iii. 1, literally, the male and female stay;" i. e. the strong and weak, the great and small." Chappelow, note on Hariri, Assembly I. Compare Eccles. ii. 8.

[The Hebrew words maschen u-meshnah, come from the same root shdn, to lean against, to incline, to support; and here, being masculine and feminine, they may signify all things necessary for the support both of man and woman. My old MS. understands the staff and stay as meaning particular persons, and translates the verse thus:—'Lo forsoth, the Lordship of Hosts shall not stay to Jerusalem and its Juda the staff-wood and the stronge.')

The two following verses, 2, 3, are very clearly explained by the sacred historian's account of the event, the captivity of Jehoiachin by Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon: "And he carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour, even ten thousand captives, and all the craftsmen and smiths; none remained save the poorest sort of the people of the land." 2 Kings xxiv. 14. [Which is supplied by our Version.]

Verse 4. I will give children to be their princes—(I will make boys their princes)] This also was fully accomplished in the succession of weak and wicked princes, from the death of Josiah to the destruction of the city and temple, and the taking of Zedekiah, the last of them, by Nebuchadnezzar.

[Babes shall rule over them—By menysche men schal lorchschpen to hem. Old MS. Bible.]

Verse 6. Of the house of his father—(Of his father's house)] For baith, the ancient interpreters seem to have read mideth; ros ouxion ros xarpes avros, Septuagint; domesticum patris suis, Vulgate; which gives no good sense. But the Septuagint MS. I. D. II. for ouxion, has ouxos. And his brother, of his father's house, is little better than a tautology. The case seems to require, that the man should apply to a person of some sort of rank or eminence; one that was the head of his father's house, (see Josh. xii. 14,) whether of the house of him who applies to him, or of any other; rosch baith abav. I cannot help suspecting, therefore, that the word rosch has been lost out of the text.

Saying] Before simelah, garment, two MS. (one ancient) and the Babylonish Talmud, have the word lomer, saying; and so the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, and Chaldee. I place it, with Houbigan, after semoleh.

Thou hast clothing—(Take by the garment)] That is, shall treat him in a humble and supplicating manner. "Ten men shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, Let us go with you; for we have heard that God is with you," Zech. viii. 23. And so in Isa. iv. 1, the same gesture is used to express earnest and humble entreaty. The behaviour of Saul towards Samuel was of the same kind, when he laid hold on the skirt of his raiment, 1 Sam. xv. 27. The preceding and following verses shew, that his whole department, in regard to the prophet, was full of submission and humility.

And let this ruin be under thy hand—(And let thy hand support)] Before tachath yadeca, a MS. adds tehech; another MS. adds in the same place, tachath beyadecca, which latter seems to be a various reading of the two preceding words, making a very good sense; "take into thy hand our ruinous state." Twenty-one MSS. of Kennicott, thirteen of De Rossi, [one of my own, ancient], and three editions of the Babylonish Talmud, have yadecca, plural.

Verse 7. In that day shall he swear—(Then shall he openly declare)] The Septuagint, Syriac, and Jerom, read sayissa, adding the conjunction, which seems necessary in this place.

[I will not be an healer—am not a leche. Old MS. Bible. Leech was the ancient English word for a physician.]

For in my house is neither bread nor clothing—(For in my house is neither bread nor raiment)] "It is customary through all the East," says Sir J. Chardin, "to gather together an immense quantity of furniture and clothes; for their fashions never alter." Princes and great men are obliged to have a great stock of such things in readiness for presents upon all occasions. "The kings of Persia,"

8 For Jerusalem is ruined, and Judah is fallen: because their tongue and their doings are against the LORD, to provoke the eyes of his glory.

9 The show of their countenance doth witness against them; and they declare their sin as Sodom, they hide it not. Woe unto their soul! for they have rewarded evil unto themselves.

10 Say ye to the righteous, that it shall be well with him: for they shall eat the fruit of their doings.

11 Woe unto the wicked! it shall be ill with him: for the reward of his hands shall be given him.

says the same author, "have great wardrobes, where there are always many hundreds of habits ready, designed for presents, and sorted." Harmer, Observ. II. 11, and 88. A great quantity of provision for the table was equally necessary. The daily provision for Solomon's household, whose attendants were exceedingly numerous, was proportionably great, 1 Kings iv. 22, 23. Even Nehemiah, in his strait circumstances, had a large supply daily for his table; at which he received a hundred and fifty of the Jews and rulers, besides those that came from among the neighbouring Heathens. Neh. v. 17, 18.

This explains the meaning of the excuse made by him that is desired to undertake the government. He alleges that he has not wherewithal to support the dignity of the station, by such acts of liberality and hospitality as the law of custom required of persons of superior rank. See Harmer's Observations, I. 340, II. 88.

Verse 8. The eyes.—[The cloud] This word appears to be of very doubtful form, from the printed editions, the MSS. and the ancient Versions. The first job in vay einy, which is necessary according to the common interpretation, is in many of them omitted; the two last letters are upon a rasure in two MSS. I think it should be py dnen, a cloud, as the Syriac reads; and the allusion is to the cloud in which the glory of the Lord appeared above the tabernacle; see Exod. xvi. 9, 10; xl. 34—38. Numb. xvi. 41, 42.

[Either of the readings gives a very good sense. The allusion may be to the cloud of the Divine Presence in the wilderness: or the eyes of the Lord may be meant; as they are in every place beholding the evil and the good. And he cannot look upon iniquity but with abhorrence; therefore, the eyes of his glory might be well provoked by their crimes.

Verse 9. The show of their countenance.—Bishop Lowth has it the steadfastness of their countenance,—they appear to be bent on iniquity—their eyes tell the wickedness of their hearts. The eye is the index of the mind. Envy, hatred, malice, malevolence, conceit, and murder, when in the heart, look most intelligently out at the eye. They tell the innocent to be on their guard; and serve the same purpose as the sonorous rings, in the tail of the rattlesnake,—they announce the presence of the destroyer.

They declare their sin as Sodom.—Impure propensities are particularly legible in the eyes: whoever has beheld the face of a debauchee or a prostitute knows this. They wish to appear what they really are. They glory in their iniquity. This is the highest pitch of ungodliness.

They have rewarded evil unto themselves.—Every man's sin is against his own soul. Evil awaiteth sinners—and he that offends his God injures himself.

Verse 10. Say ye to the righteous—le-tadik; the lamed is added here by one MS. and the Chaldee. The righteous is the person—1. Who fears God. 2. Departs from evil. 3. Walks according to the testimony of God. 4. And expects and prepares for a glorious immortality.]

(Pronounce ye) The reading of this verse is very dubious. The Septuagint for amru amru, read amru amru, or both, amru amru amru amru; and le-tob le-tob le-tob le-tob. Amru amru amru amru amru amru amru amru. Perhaps, for amru amru, the true reading may be amru amru amru, bless you; or, amru amru amru amru amru, say ye, blessed is. The Vulgate and an ancient MS. read in the singular number, amru amru, comedit, he shall eat.

[It shall be well with him:—le-tob, that good. Say nothing to such but good. He is a good man; he does nothing but good, and has a good God to deal with, from whom he expects nothing but goodness. It shall be well with such in all circumstances of life. 1. In prosperity. 2. In adversity. 3. In sickness. 4. In health.

5. In death. 6. In judgment. And, 7. through eternity. In every case, occurrence, and circumstance, he shall eat the fruit of his doings,—he shall derive benefit from being a righteous man, and walking in a righteous way.

Verse 11. Wo unto the wicked—le-rasha, the man who is, 1. Evil in his heart. 2. Evil in his purposes. 3. Evil in his life. As he is wicked, he does that which is wicked; and is influenced by the wicked one, of whom he is the servant and the son. It shall be ill with him, le-râ; in a single word say to him—evil! Of him who can speak no good; and to him you can speak no good—all is evil, in him—before him—after him—round about him—above him—below him. Evil in time—evil through eternity!

The reward of his hands.—What he has deserved he shall get. He shall be paid for that for which he has laboured, and his reward shall be in proportion to his work. O what a lot is that of the wicked! Cursed in time, and accursed through eternity!

Verse 12. Err.—(Pervert) le-billu, swallow. Among many unsatisfactory methods of accounting for the unusual meaning of this word in this place, I choose Jarchi's explanations, as making the best sense. "Read le-billu, unfound, Syriac,"—Dr. Jubb. "Read le-billu, disturb, or trouble,"—Socker. So Septuagint.

[This verse might be read "The collectors of grapes shall be their oppressors; and usurers (nasim, instead of nashim, women) shall rule over them."

Verse 13. The people.—(His people) le-ammo. Septuagint.

Verse 14. The vineyard.—(My vineyard) le-kerami, Septuagint, Chaldee, Jerom.

Verse 15. And grind the faces] The expression and the image is strong, to denote grievous oppression: but is exceeded by the prophet Micah, chap. iii. 1—3.

"Hear, I pray you, ye child of Seebah, And ye prince of the house of Israel: Is it not yours to know what is right? Ye that hate good and love evil: Who tear their skin from off them, And their flesh from off their bones: Who devour the flesh of my people; And they from of them their skin; And their bones they dash in pieces; And chop them in sunder, as morsels for the pot; And as flesh throws into the midst of the cauldron."

In the last line but one, for keasher, read, by the transposition of a letter, kehaasar, with the Septuagint and Chaldee.

Verse 16. And wanton eyes.—[And falsely setting off their eyes with paint] Hebrew, le-falsifying, their eyes, I take this to be the true meaning and literal rendering of the word; from le-shaker. The Masoretes have pointed it, as if it were from le-sakar, a different word. This arose, as I imagine, from their supposing that the word was the same with le-sakar, Chaldee, intuere, intuere oculus; or that it had an affinity with the noun le-sakra, which the Chaldeans, or the Rabbins at least, use for stibium, the mineral which was commonly used in colouring the eyes. See Jarchi's Comment on the place. Though the colouring of the eyes with stibium be not particularly here expressed, yet I suppose it to be implied, and so the Chaldee paraphrase explains it; "stibio linitis oculus." This fashion seems to have prevailed very generally among the Eastern people in ancient times; and they retain the very same to this day.

Pietro della Valle, giving a description of his wife, an Assyrian lady born in Mesopotamia, and educated at Bagdad, whom he married in that country, (Viaggi, Tom. I. Lettera 17.) says, "Her eye lashes, which are long, and according to the custom of the East, dressed with stibium, (as we often read in the Holy Scriptures of the Hebrew women of old, Jer. iv. 30; Ezek. xxiii. 40; and in Xen-

"Great eyes," says Sandys, Travels, p. 67, speaking of the Turkish women, "they have in principal repute; and of those the blacker they be the more amiable; inasmuch that they put between the eyelids and the eye a certain black powder, with a fine long pencil, made of a mineral, brought from the kingdom of Fez, and called Alcohol; which by the not disagreeable staining of the lids doth better set forth the whiteness of the eye; and though it be troublesome for a time, yet it comforteth the sight, and repelleth ill humours." "Vitæ ejus [stibii] astringere ac refrigerare, principalis autem circa oculos; namque ideo etiam perlique Platyophthalmon id appellaverit, quoniam in calliblopharis mulierum dilatatur oculos; et fluxiones inhibet oculorum ulcerationesque." *Pliny, Nat. "But none of those [Moorish] ladies," says Dr. Shaw, Travels, p. 294, fol., "take themselves to be completely dressed, all they have tinged the hair and edges of their eyelids with al-kahol, the powder of lead ore. This operation is performed by dipping first into the powder a small wooden bodkin of the thickness of a quill; and then drawing it afterwards through the eyelids, over the ball of the eye." Ezekiel, chap. xxiii. 40, uses the same word in the form of a verb, קָחַל עֵינַיךָ kachal et ainai, "thou didst dress thine eyes with al-kahol;" which the Septuagint render κοκκίζον τοὺς ὀφθαλμούς σου, "thou didst dress thine eyes with stibium;" just as they do when the word קָחַל phuk, is employed: compare 2 Kings ix. 30; Jer. iv. 30. They supposed, therefore, that קָחַל phuk, and קָחַל kahol, or in the Arabic form, Al-kahol, meant the same thing; and probably the mineral used of old for this purpose was the same that is used now; which Dr. Shaw (ibid. note), says, is "a rich lead ore, pounded into an impalpable powder." Alcoholad; the word מִשְׁכַּרְתֵּי meshakkaroth, in this place is thus rendered in an old Spanish translation. Sanctius. See also Russell's Nat. Hist. of Aleppo, p. 102.

The following inventory, as one may call it, of the wardrobe of a Hebrew lady must, from its antiquity and the nature of the subject, have been very obscure, even to the most ancient interpreters which we have of it; and from its obscurity must have been also peculiarly liable to the mistakes of transcribers. However it is rather matter of curiosity than of importance; and indeed it is, upon the whole, more intelligible and less corrupted than one might have reasonably expected. Clemens Alexandrinus, Pædag. Lib. ii. c. 12, and Julius Polux, Lib. vii. c. 22, have each of them preserved from a comedy of Aristophanes, now lost, a similar catalogue of the several parts of the dress and ornaments of a Grecian lady; which, though much more capable of illustration from other writers, though of later date, and quoted and transmitted down to us by two different authors, yet seems to be much less intelligible, and considerably more corrupted, than this passage of Isaiah. Salmastius has endeavoured by comparing the two quotations, and by much critical conjecture and learned disquisition, to restore the true reading, and to explain the particulars; with what success, I leave to the determination of the learned Reader, whose curiosity shall lead him to compare the passage of the comedian with this of the prophet, and to examine the critic's learned labours upon it. Escrivi. Plinian. p. 1148; or see Clem. Alex. as cited above, edit. Potter, where the passage, as corrected by Salmastius, is given.

Nich. Guil. Schroöderus, professor of Oriental languages in the university of Marburg, has published a very learned and judicious treatise upon this passage of Isaiah. The title of it is, "Commentarius Philologico-Criticus de Vestitu Mulierum Hebræarum ad Iesaii iii. ver. 16—24. Lugd. Bat. 1745." 4to. As I think no one has handled this subject with so much judgment and ability as this author, I have for the most part followed him, in giving the explanation of the several terms denoting the different parts of dress, of which this passage consists; signifying the reasons of my dissent, where he does not give me full satisfaction.

[The daughters of Zion—walk—What is meant by these several kinds of action and articles of dress cannot be well conjectured. How our ancestors understood them will appear from the following, which is the translation of these verses in my old MS. Bible.

16. The daughters of Sion wenten witht straight out necks, and in beckis (winking) of egeen, geeden and flappenen witht pentbis for sope, and geeden; and witht theire feet in curcus goping geeden—17. the Lord schal full make baldis the top of the daughters of Sion; and the Lord the per of hem schal naken. And for ournemente schal be schenschip.

18. In that day, the Lord schal den away the ournemente of Sychon and boosis; 19. and beegis, and broochis, and armetecelis, and myrtis; 20. and coombs, and rybaris and rebertis at the penyngs, and oymnat beois and eeringis; 21. and ryngis and femys in the front hongyng; 22. and chaunginge clafbis, and ltil galls, and schectis, and pryngs; 23. and scheteris, and necke kerpeyngs, and spletis, and robetis; 24. and ther schal be for stout smel, styrke, and for gpybl a ltil coob; and for crisp bet, ballbness; and for breast beand an beyr.

Some of these things are hard to be understood: but there is little doubt that articles of clothing and dress bore these names in the fourteenth century.

Verse 17. The Lord will smite—(will the Lord humble) פָּרַעוֹתָם, Septuagint; and so Syriac and Chaldee. For נָשֵׁי שֹׁפְחֹת, they read נָשֵׁי שְׁפָחַת. [Instead of נָשֵׁי יְהוּדָה, many MSS. have נָשֵׁי אֲדוֹמָי.]

Will discover their secret parts—(Expose their nakedness) It was the barbarous custom of the conquerors of those times to strip their captives naked, and to make them travel in that condition, exposed to the inclemency of the weather; and, the worst of all, to the intolerable heat of the sun. But this to the women was the height of cruelty and indignity; and especially to such as those here described, who had indulged themselves in all manner of delicacies of living, and all the superfluities of ornamental dress; and even whose faces had hardly ever been exposed to the sight of man. This is always mentioned as the hardest part of the lot of captives. Nahum, chap. iii. 5, 6, denouncing the fate of Nineveh, paints it in very strong colours:—

"Behold I am against thee, with JEROWAR, God of hosts: And I will discover thy skirts upon thy face; And I will expose thy nakedness to the nations; And to the kingdoms thy shame: And I will throw corpses upon thee; And I will make thee vile, and set thee as a grazing stock."

Verse 18. Ornaments about their feet—(The ornaments of the feet rings) The late learned Dr. Hunt, Professor of Hebrew and Arabic in the University of Oxford, has very well explained the word טָבַע deas, both verb and noun, in his very ingenious Dissertation on Prov. vii. 22, 23. The verb means to skip, to bound, to dance along; and the noun, those ornaments of the feet which the eastern ladies wore; chains or rings, which make a tinkling sound as they moved nimbly in walking. Eugene Roger, Description de la Terre Sainte, Liv. ii. ch. 2, speaking of the Arabian women of the first rank in Palestine, says,—"Au lieu de bracelets elles ont de menottes d'argent, qu'elles portent aux poignets et aux pieds; où sont attachés une quantité de petits annelets d'argent, qui font un cliquetis comme d'une cymbale, lorsqu'elles cheminent ou se mouvent quelque peu." See Dr. Hunt's Dissertation; where he produces other testimonies to the same purpose from authors of travels.

And their cauls—(the net-works) I am obliged to differ from the learned Schroöderus almost at first setting out. He renders the word מַשְׂכָּרְתֵי shebisim by solicuti, little ornaments, bulle, or studs, in shape representing the sun, and so answering to the following word מַהֲרֹמִים maharonim, lunula, crescents. He supposes the word to be the same with מַשְׂכָּרְתֵי shemisim, the yod in the second syllable making the word diminutive, and the letter v mem being changed for v bet, a letter of the same organ. How just and well founded his authorities for the transmutation of these letters in the Arabic language are I cannot pretend to judge; but, as I know of no such instance in Hebrew, it seems to me a very forced etymology. Being dissatisfied with this account of the matter, I applied to my good friend above mentioned, the late Dr. Hunt, who very kindly returned the following answer to my inquiries:—

"I have consulted the Arabic Lexicons, as well MS. as printed, but cannot find מַשְׂכָּרְתֵי shebisim in any of them, nor any thing belonging to it; so that no help is to be had

- 19 The chains, and the bracelets, and the mufflers,
- 20 The bonnets, and the ornaments of the legs, and the head-bands, and the tablets, and the ear-rings,
- 21 The rings, and nose-jewels,
- 22 The changeable suits of apparel, and the mantles, and the wimples, and the crisping-pins,

- 23 The glasses, and the fine linen, and the hoods, and the veils.
- 24 And it shall come to pass, that instead of sweet smell there shall be stink; and instead of a girdle a rent; and instead of well set hair baldness; and instead of a stomacher a girding of sackcloth; and burning instead of beauty.

from that language towards clearing up the meaning of this difficult word. But what the Arabic denies, the Syriac perhaps may afford; in which I find the verb שׁוּב shabas, to entangle, or interweave, an etymology which is equally favourable to our marginal translation, net-works, with פְּזוּז shabata, to make chequer-work, or embroider, (the word by which Kimchi and others have explained שׁוּב shabis), and has moreover this advantage over it, that the letters שׁוּב shis and שׁוּב samech are very frequently put for each other, but שׁוּב shabis and שׁוּב samech scarce ever. Aben Ezra joins שׁוּב shabisim and שׁוּב basim, (which immediately precedes it) together; and says, that שׁוּב shabis was the ornament of the legs, as שׁוּב bas was of the feet. His words are, שׁוּב shabis של רגלי, וְשׁוּב bas של רגלי, וְשׁוּב shabis של רגלי, וְשׁוּב bas של רגלי.

[Verse 20. The tablets—The words בָּתַי הַנְּשֵׂפֶת batey hanepheth, which we translate tablets, and Bishop Lowth perfume boxes, literally signify houses of the soul; and may refer to strong scented bottles used for pleasure and against fainting; similar to bottles with altar of roses, worn by the ladies of the East to the present time.]

Verse 21. Nose-jewels—(The jewels of the nostril) נְזִימַי nezimay ha-aph. Schröderus explains this, as many others do, of jewels, or strings of pearl hanging from the forehead, and reaching to the upper part of the nose, [than which nothing can be more ridiculous, as such are seldom seen on an Asiatic face.] But it appears from many passages of Holy Scripture that the phrase is to be literally and properly understood of nose-jewels, rings set with jewels hanging from the nostrils, as earrings from the ears, by holes bored to receive them.

Ezekiel, enumerating the common ornaments of women of the first rank, has not omitted this particular, and is to be understood in the same manner, chap. xvi. 11, 12. See also Gen. xxiv. 47.

“And I decked thee with ornaments;
And I put bracelets upon thine hands,
And a chain on thy neck;
And I put a jewel on thy nose,
And earrings on thine ears,
And a splendid crown upon thine head.”

And in an elegant proverb of Solomon, Prov. xi. 22, there is a manifest allusion to this kind of ornament, which shews it to have been used in his time:—

“As a jewel in gold in the snout of a swine;
So is a woman beautiful, but wanting discretion.”

This fashion, however strange it may appear to us, was formerly, and is still common in many parts of the East, among women of all ranks. Paul Lucas, speaking of a village, or clan of wandering people, a little on this side of the Euphrates,—“The women,” says he, (2d Voyage du Levant, Tom. i. art. 24.) “almost all of them travel on foot; I saw none handsome among them. They have almost all of them the nose bored; and wear in it a great ring, which makes them still more deformed.” But in regard to this custom better authority cannot be produced than that of Pietro della Valle, in the account which he gives of the lady before mentioned, Signora Maani Gioerida, his own wife. The description of her dress, as to the ornamental parts of it, with which he introduces the mention of this particular, will give us some notion of the taste of the Eastern ladies for finery. “The ornaments of gold and of jewels for the head, for the neck, for the arms, for the legs, and for the feet, (for they wear rings even on their toes,) are indeed, unlike those of the Turks, carried to great excess, but not of great value: for in Baghdad jewels of high price either are not to be had, or are not used; and they wear such only as are of little value, as turquoises, small rubies, emeralds, carbuncles, garnets, pearls, and the like. My spouse dresses herself with all of them according to their fashion; with exception however of certain ugly rings of very large size, set with jewels, which, in truth, very absurdly, it is the custom to wear fastened to one of their nostrils, like buffaloes: an ancient custom however in the East, which, as we find in the Holy Scriptures, prevailed among the Hebrew ladies even in the time of Solomon, Prov. xi. 22. These nose rings, in compliance to me, she has left off; but I have not yet been able to prevail with her cousin and her sisters to do the same; so fond are they of an old custom, be it ever so absurd, who have been long habituated to it.” Viaggi, Tom. i. let. 17. [It is the left nostril that is bored and ornamented with rings and jewels. More than one hundred drawings from life of Eastern ladies lie now before me; and scarcely one is without the nose-jewel: both the arms and wrists are covered with bracelets, arm-circles, &c. as also their legs and feet—the soles of their feet and palms of their hands coloured beautifully red with kenna; and their hair plaited and ornamented superly. These beautiful drawings are a fine comment on this Chapter.]

[Verse 23. The glasses—The conjunction וְ, and,—and the glasses, is added here by forty-three of Kennicott's and thirty-four of De Rossi's MSS., and one of my own, ancient, as well as by many Editions.]

Verse 23. And the veils—(The transparent garments—) Ἡ δαφνη Daiphnia. Sept. A kind of silken dress, transparent, like gauze; worn only by the most delicate women, and such as dressed themselves “elegantius, quam necesse esset probis.” [Such garments are worn to the present day; garments that not only shew the shape of every part of the body, but the very colour of the skin. This is evidently the case in some scores of drawings of Asiatic females now before me.] This sort of garments was afterwards in use among the Greeks. Prodicus, in his celebrated fable (Xenoph. Memorab. Socr. lib. ii.) exhibits the personage of Sloth in his dress: εὐθρα δὲ, εἰς ἧς ἀνελκίσθη ὡρα διαλευμένη.

Through the clear texture every tender limb,
Height'ning the charms it only seem'd to shade;
And as it fell it shew'd so loose and thin,
Her stature shew'd more tall, more snowy, white her skin.”

They were called multita and coa, (scil. vestimenta) by the Romans, from their being invented, or rather introduced into Greece, by one Pamphila of the island of Coa. This, like other Grecian fashions, was received at Rome, when luxury began to prevail under the emperors. It was sometimes worn even by the men: but looked upon as a mark of extreme effeminacy. See Juvenal, Sat. ii. 65, &c. Publius Syrus, who lived when the fashion was first introduced, has given a humorous satirical description of it in two lines, which by chance have been preserved:

Fulco proctere nudam in nubila limus?”

Verse 24. Instead of sweet smell—(perfume)] A principal part of the delicacy of the Asiatic ladies consists in the use of baths, and of the richest oils and perfumes: an attention to which is, in some degree, necessary in those hot countries. Frequent mention is made of the rich ointments of the spouse in the Song of Solomon, Cant. iv. 10, 11.

“How beautiful are thy breasts, my sister, my spouse!
How much more excellent than wine!
And the odour of thine ointments than all perfumes!
Thy lips drop as the honeycomb, my spouse!
Honey and milk are under thy tongue:
And the odour of thy garments is as the odour of Lebanon.”

The preparation for Rether's being introduced to king Ahasuerus was a course of bathing and perfuming for a whole year; “six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours.” Eath. ii. 12. A diseased and loathsome habit of body, instead of a beautiful skin, softened and made agreeable with all that art could devise, and all that nature, so prodigal in those countries of the richest perfumes, could supply, must have been a punishment the most severe, and the most mortifying to the delicacy of these haughty daughters of Sion.

Burning instead of beauty—(A sunburnt skin) Gasper Sanctius thinks the words כִּי תִכַּח ki tachach an interpolation, because the Vulgate has omitted them. The clause כִּי תִכַּח ki tachach yiph seems to me rather to be imperfect at the end. Not to mention that כִּי ki, taken as a noun, for adustus, burning, is without example, and very improbable. The passage ends abruptly, and seems to want a fuller conclusion.

In agreement with which opinion, of the defect of the Hebrew text in this place, the Septuaginta, according to MSS. Pachom. and 1 D. ii. and Marchal, which are of the best authority, express it with the same evident marks of imperfection at the end of the sentence; thus, τὰς ὀσφύς αὐτῆς καλλωπισμένην—The two latter add σε. This chasm in the Text, from the loss probably of three or four words, seems therefore to be of long standing.

25 Thy men shall fall by the sword, and thy mighty in the war.

26 And her gates shall lament and mourn; and she being desolate shall sit upon the ground.

CHAPTER IV.

The have occasioned by war, and those other calamities which the prophet had been describing in the preceding Chapter, are represented as so terribly great, that several women should be left to one man. 1. Great blessedness of the remnant that shall be accounted worthy to escape these judgments. 2-4. The privileges of the gospel set forth by allusion to the glory and pomp of the Mosiac dispensation, &c.

AND in that day seven women shall take hold of one man, say-

Taking y ki, in its usual sense, as a particle, and supplying lec, from one of the Septuagint, it might possibly have been originally somewhat in this form:—

כי חרות ימי רחמי לך דעת מרה mereah radth lec teheyeh yiphi tachath ki

"Yes, instead of beauty, thou shalt have an ill-favoured countenance."

כי חרות ימי רחמי לך דעת מרה yachath, "for beauty shall be destroyed." Syr. חרותי chathath, or חרות nachath. Dr. DUBOIS.

"May it not be כהי cohey, 'wrinkles instead of beauty?' as from מה yaphah, is formed ימי yiphi; from מרה marah, מרי meri, &c. so from חרות cahath, to be wrinkled, כהי cohey." Dr. JUSA. [The כי ki, is wanting in one MSS. and has been omitted by several of the ancients.]

Verse 25. Thy mighty men] For גבורתי geburataca, an ancient MS. has גבורתי gebureca. The true reading from the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, and Chaldee, seems to be גבורתי geburica.

Verse 26. Sit upon the ground.] Sitting upon the ground was a posture that denoted mourning and deep distress. The prophet Jeremiah, Lam. ii. 8, has given it the first place among many indications of sorrow in the following elegant description of the same state of distress of his country:—

"The sisters of the daughter of Sion sit on the ground, they are silent: They have cast up dust on their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth; The virgins of Jerusalem have bowed down their heads to the ground."

"We find Judea," says Mr. Addison, (On Medals, Dial. II.) "on several coins of Vespasian and Titus, in a posture that denotes sorrow and captivity. I need not mention her sitting on the ground, because we have already spoken of the aptness of such a posture to represent an extreme affliction. I fancy the Romans might have an eye on the customs of the Jewish nation, as well as those of their country, in the several marks of sorrow they have set on this figure. The Psalmist describes the Jews lamenting their captivity in the same pensive posture. 'By the waters of Babylon we sat down and wept, when we remembered thee, O Sion.' But what is more remarkable, we find Judea represented as a woman in sorrow sitting on the ground, in a passage of the prophet, that foretells the very captivity recorded on this medal." Mr. Addison, I presume, refers to this place of Isaiah; and therefore must have understood it as foretelling the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation by the Romans; whereas it seems plainly to relate, in its first and more immediate view at least, to the destruction of the city by Nebuchadnezzar, and the dissolution of the Jewish state under the captivity at Babylon.

On the reverse a tall palm tree, emblem of the land of Palestine, the Emperor standing on the left, close to the tree, with a trophy behind him; on the right Judea under the figure of a female captive sitting on the ground, with her head resting on her hand, the elbow on her knee, weeping. Around is this legend, Judea Capta. Senatus consulto. However this prediction may refer proximately to the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, I am fully of opinion that it ultimately refers to the final ruin of the Jewish state by the Romans. And so it has been understood by the general run of the best and most learned interpreters and critics.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. And seven women] The division of the Chapter has interrupted the prophet's discourse, and broken it ing, We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel: only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach.

2 In that day shall the branch of the Lord be beautiful and glorious, and the fruit of the earth shall be excellent and comely for them that are escaped of Israel.

3 And it shall come to pass that he that is left in Zion, and he that remaineth in Jerusalem, shall be called holy, even every one that is written among the living in Jerusalem.

4 When the Lord shall have washed away off almost in the midst of the sentence. "The numbers slain in battle shall be so great, that seven women shall be left to one man." The prophet has described the greatness of this distress by images and adjuncts the most expressive and forcible. The young women, contrary to their natural modesty, shall become suitors to the men: they will take hold of them, and use the most pressing importunity to be married. In spite of the natural suggestions of jealousy, they will be content with a share only of the rights of marriage in common with several others; and that on hard conditions, renouncing the legal demands of the wife on the husband, see Exod. xxi. 10, and begging only the name and credit of wedlock, and to be freed from the reproach of celibacy. See chap. liv. 4, 5. Like Marcia, on a different occasion, and in other circumstances:—

Comeniti: Noni tamulo scriptum, Catois Marcia. Lucan. l. 302.

["This happened (says Kimchi) in the days of Ahaz, when Pekah the son of Remaliah slew in Judah one hundred and twenty thousand men in one day, see 2 Chron. xviii. 6. The widows which were left were so numerous, that the prophet said, 'They are multiplied beyond the sand of the sea,' Jer. xv. 8."]

In that day] These words are omitted in the Septuagint, and MSS.

Verse 2. The Branch of the Lord—(The Branch of JERUVAH) The Messiah of JERUVAH, says the Chaldee. [And Kimchi says, The Messiah, the Son of David.] The Branch is an appropriated title of the Messiah; and the fruit of the land means the great Person to spring from the house of Judah; and is only a parallel expression signifying the same; or perhaps the blessings consequent upon the redemption procured by him. Compare chap. xiv. 8, where the same great event is set forth in similar images, and see the Note there.

Them that are escaped of Israel—(The escaped of the house of Israel) A MS. has בתי ישראֵל beith yisra'el.

Verse 3. Written among the living] That is, whose name stands in the enrolment or register of the people; or every man living, who is a citizen of Jerusalem. See Ezek. xiii. 9, where "they shall not be written in the writing of the house of Israel," is the same with what immediately goes before, "they shall not be in the assembly of my people." Compare Psa. lxxix. 23; lxxxvii. 6; Exod. xxxii. 32. To number and register the people was agreeable to the law of Moses, and probably was always practised; being, in sound policy, useful, and even necessary. David's design of numbering the people was of another kind; it was to enrol them for his army, Michaeis, Mosaisches Recht, Part iii. p. 227. See also his Dissert. de Censibus Hebraeorum.

Verse 4. The spirit of burning] Means the fire of God's wrath, by which He will prove and purify His people; gathering them into His furnace, in order to separate the dross from the silver, the bad from the good. The severity of God's judgments, the fiery trial of His servants, Ezekiel (chap. xxii. 18—22), has set forth at large, after His manner, with great boldness of imagery and force of expression. God threatens to gather them into the midst of Jerusalem, as into the furnace; to blow the fire upon them, and to melt them. Malachi, chap. iii. 2, 3, treats the same subject, and represents the same event, under the like images:

"But who may abide the day of His coming? And who shall stand when He appeareth? For He is like the fire of the refiner, And like the soap of the fuller. And He shall sit refining and purifying the silver; And He shall purify the sons of Levi; And cleanse them like gold, and like silver; That they may be JERUVAH'S ministers, Presenting unto Him an offering in righteousness."

[This is in allusion to a chemist purifying metals. He first judges of the state of the ore or adulterated metal. Secondly, he kindles the proper degree of fire, and applies the filth of the daughters of Zion, and shall have purged the blood of Jerusalem from the midst thereof by the spirit of judgment, and by the spirit of burning.

5 And the Lord will create upon every dwelling place of mount Zion and upon her assemblies, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night: for upon all the glory shall be a defence.

6 And there shall be a tabernacle for a shadow in the day time from the heat, and for a place of refuge, and for a covert from storm and from rain.

r Exod. 13. 21.—s Zech. 2. 5.—t Or, above.

the requisite test, and thus separates the precious from the vile.

Verse 5. And the Lord will create—One MS. the Septuagint, and the Arabic, have יביא yabia, He shall bring—The cloud already exists—The Lord will bring it over. This is a blessed promise of the presence of God in all the assemblies of His people.]

Every dwelling place—(The station)] The Hebrew Text has, every station: but four MSS. (one ancient) omit לו col, all; very rightly, as it should seem: for the station was mount Zion itself, and no other. See Exod. xv. 17. And the Septuagint, Arabic, and MSS. add the same word לו col, before מִקְרָאֵי mikra'ah, probably right: the word has only changed its place by mistake. קִרְיֹתֵי mikrayoth, "the place where they were gathered together in their holy assemblies," says Sal. ben Melec. [But twenty-five of Kennicott's MSS. and twenty-two of De Rossi's, fifty-three Editions, besides the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, have the word in the plural number.]

A cloud and smoke by day] This is a manifest allusion to the pillar of a cloud and of fire, which attended the Israelites in their passage out of Egypt, and to the glory that rested on the tabernacle, Exod. xiii. 21; xl. 38. The prophet Zechariah, chap. ii. 5, applies the same image to the same purpose:

"And I will be unto her a wall of fire round about; And a glory will I be in the midst of her."

That is, the visible presence of God shall protect her. Which explains the conclusion of this verse of Isaiah; where the makkaph between לו col, and כִּבְיֹתֵי cabor, connecting the two words in construction, which ought not to be connected, has thrown an obscurity upon the sentence, and misled most of the Translators.

[For upon all the glory shall be a defence.—Whatever God creates He must uphold, or it will fail. Every degree of grace brings with it a degree of power to maintain itself in the soul.]

Verse 6. A tabernacle] In countries subject to violent tempests, as well as to intolerable heat, a portable tent is a necessary part of a traveller's baggage, for defence and shelter. [And to such tents the words of the Text make evident allusion. They are to be met with in every part of Arabia and Egypt, and in various other places in the East.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

This Chapter likewise stands single and alone, unconnected with the preceding or following. The subject of it is nearly the same with that of the first chapter. It is a general reproof of the Jews for their wickedness: but it exceeds that chapter in force, in severity, in variety, and elegance; and it adds a more express declaration of vengeance by the Babylonian invasion.

Verse 1. Now will I sing to my well-beloved a song of my beloved—(Let me sing now a song, &c.) A MS., respectable for its antiquity, adds the word שִׁיר shir, a song, after נָא na; which gives so elegant a turn to the sentence by the repetition of it in the next member, and by distinguishing the members so exactly in the style and manner of the Hebrew poetical composition, that I am much inclined to think it genuine.

A song of my beloved—(A song of loves)] דֹּדַי dodey, for דֹּדֵי dodim; status constructus pro absoluto, as the grammarians say, as Mic. vi. 16; Lam. iii. 14, 66, so Archbishop Secker. Or rather, in all these and the like cases, a mistake of the Transcribers, by not observing a small stroke, which in many MSS. is made to supply the 's mem, of the plural, thus דֹּדֵי dodi. שִׁירַת shirath dodim, is the same with שִׁירֵי shir yedideth, Psal. xlv. 1. In this way of understanding it, we avoid the great impropriety of making the author of the song, and the person to whom it is addressed, to be the same.

In a very fruitful hill—(On a high and fruitful hill)] Heb. בְּקֶרֶן בֵּן שָׁמֶן be-keren ben shamen, "on a horn the son

CHAPTER V.

This Chapter begins with representing, in a beautiful parable, the tender care of God for His people, and their contrary returns to His goodness, 1-7. The parable, as allegory, is then dropped; and the prophet, in plain terms, reproves and threatens them for their wickedness; particularly for their covetousness, 8-10; intemperance, 11; an insatiation in the warnings of Providence, 12. Then follows an enumeration of their iniquities, as they are aggravated, 13-17. The prophet then appears with all their horrors, 13. Hebra, or the Grave, like a ravensome monster, opens wide its jaws, and swallows down its victims, 14. Disaster lays hold on all ranks, 15; and God is gloried in the execution of His judgments, 16; till the whole place is left desolate, a place for the flocks to range in, 17. The prophet then passes; and again resumes his subject, reproving them for several other sins, and threatening them with woes and vengeance, 18-24; after which he sums up the whole of his awful denunciation in a very lofty and spiritual epiphonema, or conclusion. The God of armies having hitherto exerted to no purpose, is represented with infinite majesty, as only giving the list, and a swarm of nations hasten to His standard, 25-27. Upon a guilty race, unvisited by heaven or by earth, they execute their vengeance, and leave the land desolate and dark, without one ray of comfort to cheer the hardy gloom, 28-30.

NOW will I sing to my well-beloved a song of my beloved touching of oil." The expression is highly descriptive and poetical. "He calls the land of Israel a horn, because it is higher than all lands; as the horn is higher than the whole body: and the son of oil, because it is said to be a land flowing with milk and honey."—Kimchi on the place. The parts of animals are, by an easy metaphor, applied to parts of the earth, both in common and poetical language. A promontory is called a cape, or head; the Turks call it a nose. "Dorsum immane mari sumus." Virgil, a back, or ridge of rocks.

"Hanc latius angustam sem se cogente in arctum Hesperia tenuem proderit in equora linguam, Adriacous maris claudii qua curvatus undas."

Lucan. ii. 612, of Brundisium, i. e. Bovesio, which, in the ancient language of that country, signifies stag's head, says Strabo. A horn is a proper and obvious image for a mountain, or mountainous country. Solinus, cap. viii. says, "Italiam, ubi longius processerit, in cornua duo scindi;" that is, the high ridge of the Alps, which runs through the whole length of it, divides at last into two ridges, one going through Calabria, the other through the country of the Brutii. "Cornwall is called by the inhabitants in the British tongue Kernaw, as lessening by degrees like a horn, running out into promontories like so many horns. For the Britains call a horn corn, in the plural kern." Camden. "And Sammes is of opinion, that the country had this name originally from the Phœnicians, who traded hither for tin; keren, in their language, being a horn."—Gibson.

Here the precise idea seems to be that of a high mountain standing by itself; "vertex montis, aut pars montis ab aliis divisa;" which signification, says I. H. Michaelis, Bibl. Hallens. Not. in loc. the word has in Arabic.

Judea was in general a mountainous country; whence Moses sometimes calls it the Mountain, "Thou shalt plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance." Exod. xv. 17. "I pray thee let me go over, and see the good land that is beyond Jordan; that goodly mountain, and Lebanon." Deut. iii. 25. And in a political and religious view it was detached and separated from all the nations round it. Whoever has considered the descriptions given of mount Tabor, (see Reland, Palestina. Eugene Roger, Terre Sainte, p. 64,) and the views of it, which are to be seen in books of Travels, (Maunderell, p. 114. Egmont and Heyman, Vol. II. p. 25. Thevenot, Vol. I. p. 429,) its regular conic form, rising singly in a plain to a great height, from a base small in proportion, its beauty and fertility to the very top, will have a good idea of "a horn the son of oil;" and will perhaps be induced to think, that the prophet took his image from that mountain.

And gathered out the stones—(And he cleared it from the stones)] This was agreeable to the ancient husbandry: "Saxa, summa parte terre, et vites et arbores cadunt; ima parte, refrigerant." Columell. de Arb. iii. "Saxorum facile est expedire lectione lapidum." Id. ii. 2. "Lapides, qui supersunt, [al. insuper sunt] hieme rigent, aestate fervecunt; idcirco satis, arbutus, et vitibus nocent." Pallad. i. 6. A piece of ground thus cleared of the stones Persius, in his hard way of metaphor, calls "exosatus ager." Sat. vi. 52.

The choicest vine—(Sorek)] Many of the ancient interpreters, the Septuagint, Aquila, and Theod. have retained this word as a proper name; I think very rightly. Sorek was a valley lying between Acalon and Gaza, and running far up eastward in the tribe of Judah. Both Acalon and Gaza were anciently famous for wine; the former is mentioned as such by Alexander Trallianus; the latter by several authors (quoted by Reland, Palestina. p. 569, and 936.) And it seems that the upper part of the valley of Sorek, and that of Eschol, where the spies gathered the single cluster of grapes, which they were obliged to bear between two upon a staff, being both near to Hebron, were in the same neighbourhood; and that all this part of the country abounded with rich vineyards. Compare Numb.

2 And he fenced it, and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest wine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also made a winepress therein: and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes.

See likewise De Lisle's posthumous map of the Holy Land. Paris, 1763. See Bochart, Hieroz. ii. col. 725. Thevenot, i. p. 406. Michaelis, (note on Judg. xvi. 4. German translation,) thinks it probable, from some circumstances of the history there given, that Sorek was in the tribe of Judah, not in the country of the Philistines.

The vine of Sorek was known to the Israelites, being mentioned by Moses, Gen. xlix. 11, before their coming out of Egypt. Egypt was not a wine country. "Throughout this country there are no wines." Sandys, p. 101. At least in very ancient times they had none.—Herodotus, ii. 77, says, it had no vines, and therefore used an artificial wine made of barley. This is not strictly true; for the vines of Egypt are spoken of in Scripture, Psa. lxxviii. 47; cv. 33; and see Gen. xl. 11, by which it should seem, that they drank only the fresh juice pressed from the grape, which was called οἶνος ἀμπελίνος. Herodot. ii. 37: but they had no large vineyards, nor was the country proper for them, being little more than one large plain, annually overflowed by the Nile. The Marcotic in later times is, I think, the only celebrated Egyptian wine, which we meet with in history. The vine was formerly, as Hasselquist tells us it is now, "cultivated in Egypt for the sake of eating the grapes, not for wine; which is brought from Candia, &c." "They were supplied with wine from Greece, and likewise from Phœnicia." Herodot. iii. 6. The vine and the wine of Sorek therefore, which lay near at hand for importation into Egypt, must in all probability have been well known to the Israelites, when they sojourned there. There is something remarkable in the manner in which Moses, Gen. xlix. 11, makes mention of it, which, for want of considering this matter, has not been attended to; it is in Jacob's prophecy of the future prosperity of the tribe of Judah:

"Planting his foal to the vine,
And his ass's colt to his own sorek;
He washeth his raiment in wine,
And his cloaks in the blood of grapes."

I take the liberty of rendering שֹׂרֵק sorekah, for שֹׂרֵק soreka, his sorek, as the Masoretes do of pointing שֹׂרֵק sira, for שֹׂרֵק sira, his foal. שֹׂרֵק sira might naturally enough appear in the feminine form: but it is not at all probable that שֹׂרֵק sorek, ever should. By naming particularly the vine of Sorek, and as the vine belonging to Judah, the prophecy intimates the very part of the country, which was to fall to the lot of that tribe. Sir John Chardin says, "that at Casbin, a city of Persia, they turn their cattle into the vineyards, after the vintage, to browse on the vines." He speaks also of vines in that country so large that he could hardly compass the trunks of them with his arms. Voyages, tom. iii. p. 12. 12mo. This shews, that the ass might be securely bound to the vine, and without danger of damaging the tree by browsing on it.

And built a tower in the midst of it] Our Saviour, who has taken the general idea of one of his parables, Matt. xxi. 33; Mark xii. 1, from this of Isaiah, has likewise inserted this circumstance of building a tower; which is generally explained by commentators as designed for the keeper of the vineyard to watch and defend the fruits. But for this purpose it was usual to make a little temporary hut, (Isa. i. 8,) which might serve for the short season while the fruit was ripening, and which was removed afterwards. The tower therefore should rather mean a building of a more permanent nature and use; the farm, as we may call it, of the vineyard, containing all the offices and implements, and the whole apparatus necessary for the culture of the vineyard, and the making of the wine. To which image in the allegory, the situation, the manner of building, the use, and the whole service of the temple, exactly answered. And so the Chaldee paraphrast very rightly expounds it: "Et statui eos (Israelitas) ut plantam vineæ selectæ, et ædificavi Sanctuarium meum in medio illorum. [And I have appointed the Israelites as a plant of a chosen vine, and I have built my sanctuary in the midst of them.]" So also Hieron. in loc. Edificavit quoque turrim in medio ejus; templum videlicet in media civitate. ["He built also a tower in the midst of it, viz. his own temple, in the midst of the city.]" That they have still such towers or buildings for use or pleasure in their gardens in the East, see Harmer's Observations, II. p. 241.

And also made a wine press therein.—(And hewed out a lake therein.)) This image also our Saviour has preserved in his parable. οἶκος yekeb; the Septuagint render it here ἀμπελῖον, and in four other places ἀμπελῖον, Isa. xvi. 10; Joel iii. 13; Hag. ii. 17; Zech. xiv. 10; I think more properly; and this latter word St. Mark uses. It means, not the wine-press itself, or calcatorium, which is called ῥαγάθ, or ῥαβὸς porah: but what the Romans called lacus, the lake; the large open place or vessel, which by a conduit or spout received the must from the wine-press. In very hot countries it was perhaps necessary, or at least very convenient, to have the lake under ground, or in a cave hewed out of the side of the rock for coolness, and the heat might not cause too great a fermentation, and sour the must. Vini confectio instituitur in cella, vel intima domus camera quadam a ventorum ingressu remota. Kempfer, of Shiras wine. Amœn Esot. p. 376. For the wind, to which that country is subject, would injure the wine. 'The wine-presses in Persia,' says Sir John Chardin, 'are formed by making hollow places in the ground, lined with mason's work.' Harmer's Observat. I. p. 392. See a print of one in Kempfer, p. 377. Nonnus describes at large Bacchus hollowing the inside of a rock, and hewing out a place for the wine-press, or rather the lake:

Καὶ σκοπέλους ἐλαγχνῆ πεδοκαφεὸς ἐοῖσθρον
Θηγάλας γλοχίσι μυχὸν κοίληστο πέτρης
Δεινὰς δὲ μάτωπα βαθυβυνομένων πετεινοῦν
Ἀφρον [ἐ. ἀφρον] ἐθροφάλοιο τυτὸν ποίηστρο λαφρον.
DIONYSIAC. lib. xii. l. 331.

"He pierc'd the rock: and with the sharp tool
Of steel well-temp'rd scoop'd his isomous ditch:
Thou smooth'd the front, and form'd the dark recess
In just dimension for the foaming lake."

And he looked—(And he expected)] Jeremiah, chap. ii. 21, uses the same image, and applies it to the same purpose, in an elegant paraphrase of this part of Isaiah's parable, in his flowing and plaintive manner:

"But I planted thee a sorek, a sion perfectly genuine:
How then art thou changed, and become to me the degenerate shoots of the strange vine!"

Wild grapes—(Poisonous berries)] שֹׂרֵקִים beushim, not merely useless unprofitable grapes, such as wild grapes; but grapes offensive to the smell, noxious, poisonous. By the force and the intent of the allegory, to good grapes ought to be opposed fruit of a dangerous and pernicious quality; as in the explication of it, to judgment is opposed tyranny, and to righteousness oppression. יֵשׁ גֶּפְתֵן the vine, is a common name or genus, including several species under it; and Moses, to distinguish the true vine, or that from which wine is made, from the rest, calls it, Numb. vi. 4, יֵשׁ יֵשׁ גֶּפְתֵן hayayin, the wine-vine. Some of the other sorts were of a poisonous quality, as appears from the story related among the miraculous acts of Elisha, 2 Kings iv. 39—41. "And one went out into the field to gather potherbs; and he found a field-vine, and he gathered from it wild fruit, his lap-full; and he went and shred them into the pot of pottage, for they knew them not. And they poured it out for the men to eat: and it came to pass as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out and said, There is death in the pot, O man of God: and they could not eat of it. And he said, Bring meal; (legg. ῥῖπ kechu, nine MSS. one edition,) and he threw it into the pot. And he said, Pour out for the people, that they may eat. And there was nothing hurtful in the pot."

From some such sorts of poisonous fruits of the grape kind Moses has taken those strong and highly poetical images, with which he has set forth the future corruption and extreme degeneracy of the Israelites, in an allegory which has a near relation, both in its subject and imagery, to this of Isaiah—Deut. xxxii. 32, 33.

"Their vine is from the vine of Sodom,
And from the fields of Gomorrah:
Their grapes are grapes of gall;
Their clusters are bitter:
Their wine is the poison of dragons,
And the cruel venom of asps."

"I am inclined to believe," says Hasselquist, "that the prophet here, Isa. v. 2, 4, means the hoary nightshade, solanum incanum; because it is common in Egypt, Palestine, and the East; and the Arabian name agrees well with it. The Arabs call it aneb el dib, i. e. wolf-grapes. [The שֹׂרֵקִים beushim, says Rab. Chai, is a well known species of the vine, and the worst of all sorts.] The Prophet could not have found a plant more opposite to the vine than this; for it grows much in the vineyards, and is very pernicious to them, wherefore they root it out: it likewise resembles a vine by its shrubby stalk." Travels,

3 And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, ' judge, I pray you, betwixt me and my vineyard.

4 What could have been done more to my s vineyard, that I have not done in it? wherefore, when I looked that it should bring forth grapes, brought it forth wild grapes?

5 And now go to; I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: ' I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down ' the wall thereof, and it shall be ' trodden down:

6 And I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned nor digged; but there shall come up briars and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.

7 For the vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah ' his pleasant plant: and he looked for judgment, but behold ' oppression; for righteousness, but behold a cry.

8 Woe unto them that join ' house to house, that lay field to field, till there be no place, that ' they may be placed alone in the midst of the earth!

9 ' In ' mine ears, said the LORD of hosts, ' Of a truth many houses shall be desolate, even great and fair, without inhabitant.

10 Yea, ten acres of vineyard shall yield one ' bath, and the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah.

11 ' Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine ' inflame the met!

12 And ' the harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine, are in their feasts; but ' they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands.

13 ' Therefore my people are gone into captivity, ' because they have no knowledge: and ' their honourable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst.

14 Therefore hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure: and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth, shall descend into it.

15 And ' the mean man shall be brought down, and the mighty man shall be humbled, and the eyes of the lofty shall be humbled:

16 But the Lord of hosts shall be exalted in judgment, and ' God ' that is holy shall be sanctified in righteousness.

17 Then shall the lambs feed after their manner, and the waste places of ' the fat ones shall strangers eat.

18 Woe unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart rope:

Verse 3. Inhabitants יושבי yoshebey, in the plural number; three MSS. (two ancient;) and so likewise the Septuagint and Vulgata.

Verse 6. There shall come up briars and thorns—(The thorn shall spring up in it) One MSS. has בשמיר beshmir. The true reading seems to be שמיר שמי do shemir, which is confirmed by the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgata.

Verse 7. And he looked for judgment! The paronomasia, or play on the words, in this place is very remarkable; mishpat, mishpach; tzedekah, tseakah. There are many examples of it in the other Prophets; but Isaiah seems peculiarly fond of it. See chap. xliii. 6; xxiv. 17; xxvii. 7; xxxiii. 1; lvii. 6; lxi. 3; lxxv. 11, 12. [Rabbi David Kimchi has noticed the paronomasia here: he expected משפט mishpat, judgment, but behold משפח mishpach, oppression; he expected צדקה tzedekah, righteousness, but behold צעקה tseakah, a cry.] The Rabbins esteem it a great beauty;—their term for it is לשון חן tsochoon ha-lehohn, elegance of language.

Oppression—(Tyranny) שפח משפח, from שפח shaphach, servum fecit, Arab. Houbigant: שפח shaphach, is serva, a handmaid, or female slave. משפח mishpach, eighteen MSS.

Verse 8. Woe unto them that—lay field to field—(You who lay field unto field) Read קריב תקרבו, in the second person; to answer to the verb following. So Vulgata.

Verse 9. In mine ears—(To mine ear) The sentence in the Hebrew Text seems to be imperfect in this place; as likewise in chap. xxii. 14, where the very same sense seems to be required as here. See the note there; and compare 1 Sam. ix. 15. In this place the Septuagint supply the word ακουωσθαι, and the Syriac אשמע אשמע, auditus est Jehovah in auribus meis, i. e. הנהיגה נהיגה, as in chap. xxii. 14.

Many houses! This has reference to what was said in the preceding verse:—"In vain are ye so intent upon joining house to house, and field to field: your houses shall be left uninhabited, and your fields shall become desolate and barren; so that a vineyard of ten acres shall produce but one bath (not eight gallons) of wine, and the husbandman shall reap but a tenth part of the seed which he has sown." [Kimchi says this means such an extent of vineyard as would require ten yoke of oxen to plow in one day.]

Verse 11. Follars strong drink! Theodoret and Chrysostom on this place, both Syrians, and unexceptionable witnesses in what belongs to their own country, informs us that שכר siker, (auspa in the Greek of both Testaments, rendered by us by the general term strong drink;) meant properly palm wine, or date wine, which was and is still much in use in the eastern countries. Judea was famous for the abundance and excellence of its palm trees; and consequently had plenty of this wine. "Ficus (vina) et pomis: primumque de palmis, quo Parthi et Indii utuntur, et oriens lotus: maturarum modio in aqua confitis tribus macerato espressoque." Plin. lib. xiv. 19. "Ab his cariotis [palmas] maxime celebrantur; et cibo quidem, sed et succo, uberrime. Ex quibus precipua vina orienti; iniqua capiti, unde pomo nomen." Id. xiii. 9. Kapes signifies stupefaction: and in Hebrew likewise the wine has its name from its remarkable inebriating quality.

Verse 11. Woe unto them that rise up early! There is a likeness between this and the following passage of the prophet Amos, chap. vi. 3-6, who probably wrote before Isaiah. If the latter be the copier, he seems hardly to have equalled the elegance of the original:—

"Ye that put far away the evil day,
And affect the seat of violence;
Who lie upon beds of ivory,
And stretch yourselves upon your couches;
And say the lambs from the flock,
And calves from the midst of the stall;
Who chant to the sound of the viol,
And like David invent for yourselves instruments of music;
Who quaff wine in large bowls,
And are anointed with the choicest ointments:
But are not grieved for the affliction of Joseph."

[Kimchi says, They consider not the heavens, nor their hosts:—they pray not the morning nor the evening prayer unto the Lord.]

Verse 13. And their honourable men—(And the nobles) These verses have likewise a reference to the two preceding. They that indulge in feasting and drinking, shall perish with hunger and thirst; and Hades shall indulge his appetite as much as they had done, and devour them all. The image is strong and expressive in the highest degree. Habakkuk, chap. ii. 5, uses the same image with great force:—the ambitious and avaricious conqueror

"Enlarge his appetite like Hades;
And he is like Death, and will never be satisfied."

But, in Isaiah, Hades is introduced to much greater advantage, in person; and placed before our eyes in the form of a ravenous monster, opening wide his unmeasurable jaws, and swallowing them altogether. [Therefore Sheol hath dilated her soul, she hath opened her mouth beyond limit.—Destruction expects more than a common meal, when God visits Jerusalem for her iniquities. This seems to refer to the ruin brought on the Jews by the Romans. Our blessed Lord repeats this parable, and applies it to this very transaction, Matt. xxi. 33.]

Verse 17. The lambs—(And the kids) גרים gerim, strangers. The Septuagint read, more agreeably to the design of the prophet, גרים, gerim, apes, the lambs: גרים gerim, the kids, Dr. Durell; norer to the present reading; and so Abp. Secker. The meaning is, their luxurious habitations shall be so entirely destroyed as to become a pasture for flocks.

After their manner—(Without restraint) קדברת kedabarim, secundum ductum eorum; i. e. suo ipsorum ductu; as their own will shall lead them.

Verse 18. With a cart rope—(As a long cable) The Septuagint, Aquila Sym. and Theod. for כחלי bechebeli, read כחלי kechebeli, ως ομοιοτης, or ομοιοτης; and the Septuagint, instead of ως ομοιοτης, read some other word signifying long; ως ομοιοτης μακρος; and so likewise the Syriac, 19 ° That say, Let him make speed, and hasten his work, that we may see it: and let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and come, that we may know it!

20 Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!

21 Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight!

22 Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink:

23 Which justify the wicked for reward, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him!

24 Therefore as the fire devoureth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff, so their root shall be as rottenness, and their bloss-som shall go up as dust: because they have cast away the law of the Lord of hosts, and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel.

25 ° Therefore is the anger of the Lord kindled against his people, and he hath stretched forth his hand against them, and hath smitten them: and the hills did tremble, and their carcases were torn in the midst of the streets. For all this his anger is not turned away but his hand is stretched out still.

26 ° And he will lift up an ensign to the nations from far, and will hiss unto them from the end of the earth: and, behold, they shall come with speed swiftly:

27 None shall be weary nor stumble among them; none shall slumber nor sleep; neither shall the girdle of their loins be loosed, nor the latchet of their shoes be broken:

ארכא arecha. Houbigant conjectures that the word which the Septuagint had in their copies was שרש sherush, which is used Lev. xxi. 18; xxii. 23, for something in an animal body superfluous, lengthened beyond its natural measure. And he explains it of sin added to sin, and one sin drawing on another, till the whole comes to an enormous length and magnitude; compared to the work of a rope-maker still increasing and lengthening his rope, with the continued addition of new materials. "Eos propheta similes facit homini restiario, qui funem torquet, cannabe addita et contorta, eadem iterans, donec funem in longum duserit, neque eum liceat protrahi longius." "An evil inclination," says Kimchi on this place, from the ancient Rabbins, "is at the beginning like a fine hair-string, but at the finishing like a thick cart-rope." By a long progression in iniquity, and a continued accumulation of sin, men arrive at length to the highest degree of wickedness; bidding open defiance to God, and scoffing at His threatened judgments, as it is finely expressed in the next verse. The Chaldee paraphrast explains it in the same manner, of wickedness increasing from small beginnings, till it arrives to a great magnitude.

[I believe neither the Rabbins nor Bishop Lowth have hit on the true meaning of this place: the prophet seems to refer to idol sacrifices. The victims they offered were splendidly decked out for the sacrifice. Their horns and hoofs were often gilded, and their heads dressed out with fillets and garlands. The cords of vanity may refer to the silken strings by which they were led to the altar, some of which were unusually thick. The offering for iniquity was adorned with fillets and garlands; the sin-offering with silken cords, like unto cart-ropes. Pride, in their acts of humiliation, had the upper-hand.]

Verse 19. Let the counsel of the Holy One—Tryphiodorus has an expression something like this:—

επει Διως ηλυθε βελην. Tryph. II. Eucid. 230.

Because the counsel of Jupiter was come.

This expression, ηλυθε βελην, is I believe something uncommon: but it is exactly paralleled and explained by a passage in Isaiah, chap. v. 19. The Septuagint has expressed it in the very same words with Tryphiodorus, και ελυθε η βελην το αυτου Ισραηλ, ινα γνωσμεν. Merrick's note, ad loc.

[Verse 22. Mighty to drink wine—They shew not, says Kimchi, their strength in combating their enemies, but in drunkenness and debauchery.]

Verse 23. The righteous. צדיק tsedik, singular, Sept. Vulg. and two Editions.

Verse 24. The flame—(The tongue of fire) "The flame, because it is in the shape of a tongue; and so it is called metaphorically." Sal. ben Melec. The metaphor is so exceedingly obvious, as well as beautiful, that one may wonder that it has not been more frequently used. Virgil very elegantly intimates, rather than expresses, the image:

"Eos levis summo de vertice visus Iulii Flundera (armis) apert; tractatus innoxia molli Turbine fumosum comas, et circum tempora passci." Æn. II. 682. Strange to relate! from young Iulio's head A lambent flame arose, which gently spread Around his brows, and on his temples led.

And more boldly of Ætna darting out flames from its top:

"Interdumque atram prorumpit ad ostera fumum, Turbine fumosum picco, et candens Jovella Atollitque globos fumosorum, et sidera lambit." Æn. III. 574. By turns a plucky cloud she rolls on high, By turns hot smokes from her entrails fly, And balms of mountain flames, that lick the sky.

The disparped tongues, as it were, of fire, Acts ii. 3, which appeared at the descent of the Holy Spirit on the apostles, gives the same idea; that is, of flames shooting diversely into pyramidal forms, or points, like tongues. It may be farther observed that the prophet, in this place, has given the metaphor its full force, in applying it to the action of fire in eating up and devouring whatever comes in its way, like a ravenous animal whose tongue is principally employed in taking in his food or prey; which image Moses has strongly exhibited in an expressive comparison:—"And Moab said to the elders of Midian, Now shall this collection of people lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass of the field." Numb. xxii. 4. See also 1 Kings xviii. 38.

[Their root shall be as rottenness—כסא ka-mak, like mak,—whence probably our word muck, dung, was derived.]

Verse 25. The hills did tremble—(And the mountains trembled). Probably referring to the great earthquakes in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, in, or not long before, the time of the prophet himself; recorded as a remarkable era in the title of the prophecies of Amos, chap. i. 1, and by Zechariah, chap. xiv. 5.

Verse 26. He will hiss—(He will hiss) ["The metaphor is taken from the practice of those that keep bees; who draw them out of their hives into the fields, and lead them back again, σφρισασι, by a hiss, or a whistle." Cyril, on this place; and to the same purpose Theodoret, ib. In chap. vii. 13, the metaphor is more apparent, by being carried farther; where the hostile armies are expressed by the fly and the bee:

"JEROVAH shall hiss the fly, That is in the utmost parts of Egypt; And the bee that is in the land of Assyria."

On which place see Deut. i. 44; Psa. cviii. 12; and God calls the locusts his great army, Joel ii. 25; Exod. xxiii. 23. See Huet. Quest. Ainet. ii. 12. [פוש sharak, or shrak, he shall whistle for them, call loud and shrill; he shall shriek, and they (their enemies) shall come at Hiscall.]"

With speed] This refers to the nineteenth verse. As the scoffers had challenged God to make speed, and to hasten his work of vengeance; so now God assures them that with speed and swiftly it shall come.

Verse 27. None—among them] Kimchi has well illustrated this continued exaggeration, or hyperbole, as he rightly calls it, to the following effect: "Through the greatness of their courage, they shall not be fatigued with their march; nor shall they stumble, though they march with the utmost speed: they shall not slumber by day, nor sleep by night; neither shall they ungird their armour, or put off their sandals to take their rest. Their arms shall be always in readiness, their arms sharpened, and their bows bent. The hoofs of their horses are hard as a rock. They shall not fail, or need to be shod with iron: the wheels of their carriages shall move as rapidly as a whirlwind."

Neither shall the girdle] The Eastern people, wearing long and loose garments, were unfit for action, or business of any kind, without girding their clothes about them. When their business was finished, they took off their girdles. A girdle, therefore, denotes strength and activity; and to unloose the girdle is to deprive of strength, to render unfit for action. God promises to unloose the loins of kings before Cyrus, chap. xlv. 1. The girdle is so essential a part of a soldier's accoutrement, being the last that he puts on to make himself ready for action, that to be girded, ζωννσθαι, with the Greeks, means to be completely armed, and ready for battle:

Αρπιδιος ε εβουσαι, ιδη ζωννσθαι ανωνεν Αρπιδιος. Iliad. xi. 15.

To be undressed, τα εβλη ακαλυτοι οι παλαιοι ζωννσθαι. Pausan.

CHAPTER VI.

28 * Whose arrows are sharp, and all their bows bent, their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their wheels like a whirlwind:

29 Their roaring shall be like a lion, they shall roar like young lions: yea, they shall roar, and lay hold of the prey, and shall carry it away safe, and none shall deliver it.

30 And in that day they shall roar against them like the roaring of the sea: and if one look unto the land, behold darkness and sorrow, and the light is darkened in the heavens thereof.

This Chapter, by a particular designation of Isaiah to the prophetic office, 1-4, introduces with great solemnity, a declaration of the whole course of God's Divine conduct in reference to His people, who, on account of their unbelief and impenitence, should for a very long period be given up to a judicial blindness and hardness of heart, 9, 10; and visited with such calamities as would bring in the total desolation of their country and their general dispersion, 11, 12. The prophet adds, however, that under their repeated dispersion, (by the Chaldeans, Moabites, &c.) a small remnant would be preserved as a seed from which will be raised a people, in whom will be fulfilled all the Divine promises, 18.

IN the year that king Uzziah died, I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple.

Verses 28, 29. Their horses' hoofs shall be counted like flint.—(The hoofs of their horses shall be counted as adamant) The shoeing of horses with iron plates nailed to the hoof is quite a modern practice, and was unknown to the ancients, as appears from the silence of the Greek and Roman writers, especially those that treat of horse-medicine; who could not have passed over a matter so obvious, and of such importance, that now the whole science takes its name from it, being called by us farriery. The horse-shoes of leather and iron, which are mentioned; the silver and the gold shoes, with which Nero and Poppaea shod their mules, used occasionally to preserve the hoofs of delicate cattle, or for vanity, were of a very different kind; they enclosed the whole hoof as in a case, or as a shoe does a man's foot, and were bound or tied on. For this reason the strength, firmness, and solidity of a horse's hoof was of much greater importance with them than with us; and was esteemed: one of the first praises of a fine horse. Xenophon says, that a good horse's hoof is hard, hollow, and sounds upon the ground like a cymbal. Hence the χαλκωδεις; κεινοι of Homer, and Virgil's "solido graviter sonat angula cornu." And Xenophon gives directions for hardening the horse's hoofs, by making the pavement on which he stands in the stable, with round-headed stones. For want of this artificial defence to the foot which our horses have, Amos, ch. vi. 12, speaks of it as a thing as much impracticable to make horses run upon a hard rock, as to plow up the same rock with oxen:

* Shall horses run upon a rock? Shall one plow it up with oxen?

These circumstances must be taken into consideration in order to give us a full notion of the propriety and force of the image by which the prophet sets forth the strength and excellence of the Babylonish cavalry, which made a great part of the strength of the Assyrian army. Xen. Cyrop. l. ii. Like a whirlwind's noise ka-suphah, like the stormy blast. Here sense and sound are well connected.

Verses 30. If one look unto the land, &c.—(And these shall look to the heaven upward, and down to the earth.) φως εαν venabal te-aerde. Και εβλεψονται εις την γην. So the Septuagint, according to the Vatican and Alexandrian copies: but the Complutensian and Aldine editions have it more fully, thus,—Και εβλεψονται εις τον ουρανον ανα, και κατα— and the Arabic from the Septuagint, as if it had stood thus:—και εβλεψονται εις τον ουρανον, και εις την γην κατα, both of which are plainly defective; the words εις την γην, unto the earth, being wanted in the former, and the word ανα, above, in the latter. But an ancient Coptic Version from the Septuagint, supposed to be of the second century, some fragments of which are preserved in the library of St. Germain des Prez at Paris, completes the sentence; for, according to this Version, it stood thus in the Septuagint,—Και εβλεψονται εις τον ουρανον ανα, και εις την γην κατα, [and they shall look unto the heaven above and unto the earth beneath,] and so it stands in the Septuagint, MSS. Pachom. and 1. D. II. according to which they must have read in their Hebrew Text in this manner: נבטו פתח ריבבא סבבא ערן. This is probably the true reading, with which I have made the translation agree. Compare chap. viii. 22, where the same sense is expressed in regard to both particulars, which are here equally and highly proper, the looking upwards, as well as down to the earth: but the form of expression is varied. I believe the Hebrew Text is that place to be right, though not so full as I suppose it was originally here; and that of the Septuagint there to be redundant, being as full as the Coptic Version and MSS. Pachom. and 1. D. II. represent it in this place, from which I suppose it has been interpolated.

Darkness.—(The gloomy vapour) The Syriac and Vulgate seem to have read ריבבא בערפאלאח: but Jerachi explains the present reading as signifying darkness; and so possibly the Syriac and Vulgate may have understood it in the same manner.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VI.

As this vision seems to contain a solemn designation of Isaiah to the prophetic office, it is by most interpreters thought to be the first in order of his prophecies. But this perhaps may not be so; for Isaiah is said, in the general title of his prophecies, to have prophesied in the time of Uzziah, whose acts first and last he wrote, 2 Chron. xxvii. 22, which is usually done by a contemporary prophet; and the phrase, in the year when Uzziah died, probably means after the death of Uzziah; as the same phrase, chap. xiv. 23, means after the death of Ahaz. Not that Isaiah's prophecies are placed in exact order of time. Chapters ii. iii. iv. v. seem by internal marks to be antecedent to chap. i.; they suit the time of Uzziah, or the former part of Jotham's reign; whereas chap. i. can hardly be earlier than the last years of Jotham. See note on chap. i. 7, and ii. 1. This might be a new designation to introduce more solemnly a general declaration of the whole course of God's dispensations in regard to His people and the fates of the nation; which are even now still depending, and will not be fully accomplished till the final restoration of Israel.

In this vision the ideas are taken in general from royal majesty, as displayed by the monarchs of the East; for the prophet could not represent the ineffable presence of God by any other than sensible and earthly images. The particular scenery of it is taken from the temple. God is represented as seated on His throne above the ark in the most holy place, where the glory appeared above the cherubim, surrounded by his attendant ministers. This is called by God Himself "the place of His throne, and the place of the soles of His feet," Ezek. xliii. 7. "A glorious throne, exalted of old, is the place of our sanctuary," saith the prophet Jeremiah, chap. xvii. 12. The very posture of sitting is a mark of state and solemnity: Sed et ipsum verbum sedere regni significat potestatem, saith Jerom, Comment. in Eph. i. 20. See note on chap. liii. 2. St. John, who has taken many sublime images from the prophets of the Old Testament, and in particular from Isaiah, hath exhibited the same scenery, drawn out into a greater number of particulars, Rev. iv.

The veil, separating the most holy place from the holy, or outermost part of the temple, is here supposed to be taken away; for the prophet, to whom the whole is exhibited, is manifestly placed by the altar of burnt-offering, at the entrance of the temple, (compare Ezek. xliii. 5, 6,) which was filled with the train of the robe, the spreading and overflowing of the Divine glory. The Lord upon the throne, according to St. John, chap. xii. 41, was Christ; and the vision related to His future kingdom, when the veil of separation was to be removed, and the whole earth was to be filled with the glory of God, revealed to all mankind: which is likewise implied in the hymn of the seraphim; the design of which is, saith Jerom on the place, at mysterium Trinitatis in una Divinitate demonstrant; et nunquam templum Judaicum, sicut prius, sed omnem terram, illius gloria plenam esse testentur, ["That they may point out the mystery of the Trinity in one Godhead; and that the Jewish temple alone should not be, as formerly, the place of the Divine glory, for the whole earth should be filled with it."] It relates indeed primarily to the prophet's own time, and the obduration of the Jews of that age, and their punishment by the Babylonish captivity: but extends in its full latitude to the age of Messiah, and the blindness of the Jews to the Gospel, (see Matt. xiii. 14; John xii. 40; Acts xviii. 26; Rom. xi. 8.) the desolation of their country by the Romans, and their being rejected by God. That nevertheless a holy seed, a remnant, should be preserved; and that the nation should sprout out and flourish again from the old stock.

2 Above it stood the seraphims: each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly.

3 And each one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory.

4 And the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke.

5 Then said I, Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts.

6 Then flew one of the seraphims unto me,

MSS. [of Kennicott, and many of De Rossi,] and one edition, for אדוני adonai, "the Lord," read יהוה, "Jehovah," which is probably the true reading; (compare verse 6th,) as in many other places, in which the superstition of the Jews has substituted יהוה adonai, for יהוה yehovah. [One of my own MSS., a very ancient and large folio, to which the points and the masora have been added by a later hand, has יהוה yehovah, in the 1st and 8th verses in the teeth of the masora, which orders it in both places to be read אדוני adonai.]

Verse 2. Above it stood the seraphim.—ושרפים seraphim, from שרף seraph, to burn. He saw, says Kimchi, the angels as flames of fire that the depravity of that generation might be exhibited, which was worthy of being totally burnt up.]

He covered his feet.—(He covereth his feet)] By the feet the Hebrews mean all the lower parts of the body. But the people of the East generally wearing long robes reaching to the ground, and covering the lower parts of the body down to the feet, it may hence have been thought want of respect and decency to appear in public, and on solemn occasions, with even the feet themselves uncovered. Kempter, speaking of the king of Persia giving audience, says, Rex in medio supremi atrii cruribus more patrio inflexis sedebat: corpus tunica involtebatur flavo, ad suras cum starot prolatus; discumbentibus vero pedes disalcentos pro urbanitate patrii operiens. Amos Exod. p. 227.—["The king sat on the floor cross-legged, as is the custom of the country. He was covered with a yellow garment, which reached down to the feet when standing, but covered the feet for decency when sitting with his slippers off."] Sir John Chardin's MS. note on this place of Isaiah is as follows:—Grande marque de respect en orient de se cacher les pieds, quand on est assis, et de baisser le visage. Quand le souverain se montre en Chine et à Japon, chacun se jette le visage contre la terre, et il n'est pas permis de regarder le roi, ["It is a great mark of respect in the East to cover the feet, and to bow down the head in the presence of the king."]

Verse 3. Holy, holy, holy] This hymn performed by the seraphim, divided into two choirs, the one singing responsively to the other; which Gregory Nazian. Carm. 18, very elegantly calls Σερραφων, αριφων, αγγελων σταςιν, is formed upon the practice of alternate singing, which prevailed in the Jewish church from the time of Moses, whose Ode at the Red Sea was thus performed, (see Exod. xv. 21, 21,) to that of Ezra, under whom the priests and Levites sung alternately,

"O praise JEHOVAH, for He is gracious, For His mercy endureth for ever."

Ezra iii. 11. See De Sac. Poes. Hebr. Prml. xix. at the beginning.

[Verse 5. Woe is me! for I am undone.—והייתי נדמיתי, I am become dumb. There is something exceedingly affecting in this complaint. I am a man of unclean lips—I cannot say Holy! holy! holy! which the seraphs exclaim. They are holy, I am not so; they see God, and live; I have seen Him and must die, because I am unholly. Only the pure in heart shall see God; and they only can live in His presence for ever. Reader, lay this to heart, and instead of boasting of thy excellence, and trusting in thy might, or comforting thyself in thy comparative innocence, thou wilt also be dumb before Him, because thou hast still a man of unclean lips, and because thou hast still an unclean heart.]

I am undone.—(I am struck dumb)] ונדמיתי נדמיתי, twenty-eight MSS. (See ancient) and three editions.—I understand it as from נדמ, or נדמא, damam, stercr, "to be silent;" and so it is rendered by the Syriac, Vulgate, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar.

7 And he laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged.

8 Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me.

9 And he said, Go, and tell this people, Hear ye, indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not.

He immediately gives the reason, why he was struck dumb; because he was a man of polluted lips and dwelt among a people of polluted lips; and was unworthy either to join the seraphim in singing praises to God, or to be the messenger of God to His people. Compare Exod. iv. 10; vi. 12; Jer. i. 6.

[Verse 6. A live coal.—The word of prophecy, which was put in the mouth of the prophet.]

From off the altar] That is, from the altar of burnt-offerings, before the door of the temple; on which the fire that came down at first from heaven, Lev. ix. 24; 2 Chron. vii. 1, was perpetually kept burning. It was never to be extinguished, Lev. vi. 12, 13.

[Verse 9. And he said.—y li, to me, two MSS. and the Syriac.] Thirteen MSS. have נדמא, in the regular form.

Verse 10. Make the heart of this people fat.—(Gross)] The prophet speaks of the event, the fact as it would actually happen; not of God's purpose and act by His ministry. The prophets are in other places said to perform the thing, which they only foretell:

"Lo! I have given thee a charge this day Over the nations and over the kingdoms; To shock up, and to pull down; To destroy, and to demolish; To build, and to plant."

Jer. i. 10.

And Ezekiel says, "When I came to destroy the city;" that is, as it is rendered in the margin of our version, "when I came to prophesy that the city should be destroyed." Chap. xliii. 3. To hear and not understand; to see, and not perceive; is a common saying in many languages. Demosthenes uses it, and expressly calls it a proverb: εως το της παροιμιας εβουρας ην ορας, και ακουωρας ην ακουεις. Contra Aristogit. l. sub. fin. The prophet, by the bold figure in the sentiment above-mentioned, and the elegant form and construction of the sentence, has raised it from a common proverb into a beautiful maxim, and given it the sublime air of poetry.

[Or the words may be understood thus, according to the Hebrew idiom: Ye certainly hear, but do not understand; ye certainly see, but do not acknowledge. Seeing this is the case, make the heart of this people fat—declare it to be stupid and senseless; and remove from them the means of salvation, which they have so long abused.]

There is a saying precisely like this in Eschylus:

βλεποντες εβλεπον ματην, Κλοντες η ηκουον. Esch. Prom. Vinc. 456.

"Seeing, they saw in vain; and hearing, they did not understand."

And shut.—(Close up)] שרף hashah. This word Sal. b. Melec explains to this sense, in which it is hardly used elsewhere, on the authority of Onkelos. He says it means closing up the eyes, so that one cannot see; that the root is שרף shava, by which word the Targum has rendered the word נדמא tach, Lev. xiv. 42. נדמא נדמא tach et tach, "and shall plaster the house." And the word נדמא tach, is used in the same sense, Isa. xlv. 18. So that it signifies to close up the eyes by some matter spread upon the lids. Mr. Harmer very ingeniously applies to this passage a practice of sealing up the eyes as a ceremony, or as a kind of punishment used in the East, from which the image may possibly be taken. Observations II. 278.

With their heart.—(With their hearts)] וכלבבי ubelabby, fifteen MSS. (of Kennicott's and fourteen of De Rossi's) and two editions, [with the Septuagint, Syriac, Chaldean, and Vulgate.]

And be healed.—(And I should heal)] ושמעו ושמעו, Septuagint, Vulgate. So likewise Matt. xiii. 14; John xii. 40; Acts xxvii. 27.

11 Then said I, Lord, how long? And he answered, 'Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate, 12 'And the Lord have removed men far away, and there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land.

13 But yet in it shall be a tenth, ' and it shall return, and shall be eaten: as a teil tree, and as an oak, whose substance is in them, when they cast their leaves: so ' the holy seed shall be the substance thereof.

CHAPTER VII.

The king of Judah and the royal family being in the utmost consternation on receiving accounts of the invasion of the kings of Syria and Israel, the prophet is sent to assure them that God would make good His promises to David and his house; so that, although they might be corrected, they could not be destroyed, while these prophecies remained yet to be accomplished. [—The Lord gives Ahaz a sign that the confederacy against Judah shall be broken, which sign strikingly points out the infatuated conceits of the Hebraists, who was to spring from the tribe of Judah, 10-16. Verse 13. A tenth] This passage, though somewhat obscure, and variously explained by various interpreters, yet, I think, has been made so clear by the accomplishment of the prophecy, that there remains little room to doubt of the sense of it. When Nebuchadnezzar had carried away the greater and better part of the people into captivity, there was yet a tenth remaining in the land, the poorer sort left to be vinedressers and husbandmen, under Gedaliah, 2 Kings xxv. 12, 22, and the dispersed Jews gathered themselves together, and returned to him, Jer. xl. 12, yet even these, fleeing into Egypt after the death of Gedaliah, contrary to the warning of God given by the prophet Jeremiah, miserably perished there. Again, in the subsequent and more remarkable completion of the prophecy in the destruction of Jerusalem and the dissolution of the commonwealth by the Romans, when the Jews, after the loss of above a million of men, had increased from the scanty residue that was left of them, and had become very numerous again in their country; Hadrian, provoked by their rebellious behaviour, slew above half a million more of them, and a second time almost extirpated the nation. Yet after these signal and almost universal destructions of that nation, and after so many other repeated exterminations and massacres of them in different times and on various occasions since, we yet see, with astonishment, that the stock still remains, from which God, according to His promise frequently given by His prophets, will cause His people to shoot forth again, and to flourish.

[A tenth, wruy setriyah. The meaning, says Kimchi, of this word is, there shall yet be in the land ten kings from the time of declaring this prophecy. The names of the ten kings are Jotham, Ahaz, Hazakiah, Manasseh, Amon, Josiah, Jehoahaz, Jehoichin, Jehoiakim, and Zedekiah: then there shall be a general consumption; the people shall be carried into captivity, and Jerusalem shall be destroyed.]

For ru bem, in them, above seventy MSS. eleven of Kennicott, and thirty-four of De Rossi, read ru bah, in it; and so the Septuagint.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

The confederacy of Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah king of Israel, against the kingdom of Judah, was formed in the time of Jotham; and perhaps the effects of it were felt in the latter part of his reign, see 2 Kings xv. 37, and Note on chap. i. 7-9. However, in the very beginning of the reign of Ahaz, they jointly invaded Judah with a powerful army, and threatened to destroy, or to dethrone the house of David. The king and royal family being in the utmost consternation on receiving advices of their designs, Isaiah is sent to them to support and comfort them in their present distress, by assuring them, that God would make good His promises to David and his house. This makes the subject of this, and the following, and the beginning of the ninth Chapters; in which there are many and great difficulties.

heart was moved, and the heart of his people, as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind.

3 Then said the Lord unto Isaiah, Go forth now to meet Ahaz, thou, ' and ' Shearjashub thy son, at the end of the ' conduit of the upper pool in the ' highway of the fuller's field;

4 And say unto him, Take heed and be quiet; fear not, ' neither be faint-hearted for the two tails of these smoking firebrands, for the fierce anger of Rezin with Syria, and of the son of Remaliah.

5 Because Syria, Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, have taken evil counsel against thee, saying,

6 Let us go up against Judah, and vex it, and let us make a breach therein for us, and set a king in the midst of it, even the son of Tabeal;

7 Thus saith the Lord God, ' It shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass.

8 ' For the head of Syria is Damascus, and the head of Damascus is Rezin: and within threescore and five years shall Ephraim be broken, ' that it be not a people.

9 And the head of Ephraim is Samaria, and the head of Samaria is Remaliah's son. ' If ' ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established.

10 ' Moreover the Lord spake again unto Ahaz, saying,

Chap. vii. begins with a historical account of the occasion of this prophecy; and then follows, ver. 4-16, a prediction of the ill success of the designs of the Israelites and Syrians against Judah; and, from thence to the end of the Chapter, a denunciation of the calamities to be brought upon the king and people of Judah by the Assyrians, whom they had now hired to assist them. Chap. viii. has a pretty close connexion with the foregoing: it contains a confirmation of the prophecy before given of the approaching destruction of the kingdoms of Israel and Syria by the Assyrians; of the denunciation of the invasion of Judah by the same Assyrians. Ver. 9, 10, give a repeated general assurance, that all the designs of the enemies of God's people shall be in the end disappointed, and brought to nought; ver. 11, &c. admonitions and threatenings, (I do not attempt a more particular explanation of this very difficult part,) concluding with an illustrious prophecy, chap. ix. 1-6, of the manifestation of Messiah, the transcendent dignity of His character, and the universality and eternal duration of His kingdom.

[Verse 3. Note—ru na, is omitted by two MSS., the Septuagint, Syriac, Arabic, and Vulgate.]

Verse 4. The Syriac omits wru vearam; the Vulgate reads wru ru melek aram; one or the other seems to be the true reading. I prefer the former: or, instead of wru ru vearam when, read ru ru ru, vepalach ben, MS.

[Verse 5. Because—Remaliah] All these words are omitted by one MS. and the Syriac; a part of them also by the Septuagint.]

Veres 8, 9. For the head of Syria, &c.

" Though the head of Syria be Damascus, And the head of Damascus Rezin; Yet within threescore and five years Ephraim shall be broken, that it be no more a people: And the head of Ephraim be Samaria; And the head of Samaria Remaliah's son."

" Here are six lines, or three distichs, the order of which seems to have been disturbed by a transposition, occasioned by three of the lines beginning with the same word wru ve-rosh, and the head, which three lines ought not to have been separated by any other line intervening: but a copyist, having written the first of them, and casting his eye on the third, might easily proceed to write after the first line beginning with wru ve-rosh, that which ought to have followed the third line beginning with wru ve-rosh. Then finding his mistake, to preserve the beauty of his copy, added at the end the distich, which should have been in the middle; making that the second distich, which ought to have been the third. For the order as it now stands is preposterous: the destruction of Ephraim is denounced, and then their grandeur is set forth; whereas naturally the representation of the grandeur of Ephraim should precede that of their destruction. And the destruction of Ephraim has no coherence with the grandeur of Syria, simply as such, which it now follows: but it naturally and properly follows the grandeur of Ephraim, joined to that of Syria their ally.

11 Ask thee a sign of the Lord thy God; ask it either in the depth or in the height above.

12 But Ahaz said, I will not ask, neither will I tempt the Lord.

13 And he said, Hear ye now, O house of David, Is it a small thing for you to weary men, but will ye weary my God also?

2 July 6 26, 66. Mast. 13 22.—Or, make thy petition deep.—Mast. 1. 22. Luke 1. 21. 22.—Ch. 1. 4

"The arrangement then of the whole sentence seems originally to have been thus:

Through the head of Syria in Damascus;
And the head of Damascus Edessa;
And the head of Ephraim in Samaria;
And the head of Samaria Samaria's son;
For withing strangers and for years
Ephraim shall be broken that he be no more a people." Dr. J. A. H.

Threescore and five years) It was sixty-five years from the beginning of the reign of Ahaz, when this prophecy was delivered, to the total depopulation of the kingdom of Israel by Easarhaddon, who carried away the remains of the ten tribes which had been left by Tiglath Pileser, and Shalmaneser, and who planted the country with new inhabitants. That the country was not wholly stripped of its inhabitants by Shalmaneser appears from many passages of the history of Josiah; where Israelites are mentioned as still remaining there, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 6, 7, 33; xxxv. 18. 2 Kings xxiii. 19, 20. This seems to be the best explanation of the chronological difficulty in this place, which has much embarrassed the commentators; see Vesivrit Annal. V. T. ad an. 3327, and Sir I. Newton, Chronol. p. 283.

"That the last deportation of Israel by Easarhaddon was in the sixty-fifth year after the second of Ahaz is probable, for the following reasons. The Jews, in Seder Olam Rabbo, and the Talmudists, in D. Kimchi on Ezek. iv. say, that Manasseh king of Judah was carried to Babylon by the king of Assyria's captains, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11, in the twenty-second year of his reign; that is, before Christ 676, according to Dr. Blair's tables. And they are probably right in this. It could not be much earlier; as the king of Assyria was not king of Babylon till 690, ibid. As Easarhaddon was then in the neighbourhood of Samaria, it is highly probable, that he did then carry away the last remains of Israel; and brought those strangers thither, who mention him as their founder, Ezra iv. 2. But this year is just the sixty-fifth from the second of Ahaz, which was 740 before Christ. Now the carrying away the remains of Israel, (who, till then, though their kingdom was destroyed forty-five years before, and though small in number, yet might keep up some form of being a people, by living according to their own laws,) entirely put an end to the people of Israel, as a people separate from all others: for from this time they never returned to their own country in a body, but were confounded with the people of Judah in the Captivity; and the whole people, the ten tribes included, were called Jews." Dr. Juss. [Two MSS. have twenty-five instead of sixty-five; and two others omit the word five, reading only sixty.]

If ye will not believe—(If ye believe not) "This clause is very much illustrated, by considering the captivity of Manasseh as happening at the same time with this predicted final ruin of Ephraim as a people. The near connexion of the two facts makes the prediction of the one naturally to cohere with the prediction of the other. And the words are well suited to this event in the history of the people of Judah. 'If ye believe not, ye shall not be established: that is, unless ye believe this prophecy of the destruction of Israel, ye Jews also, as well as the people of Israel, shall not remain established as a kingdom and people; ye also shall be visited with punishment at the same time. As our Saviour told the Jews in His time, 'Unless ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish;' intimating their destruction by the Romans; to which also as well as to the captivity of Manasseh, and to the Babylonish captivity, the views of the prophet might here extend. The close connexion of this threat to the Jews, with the prophecy of the destruction of Israel, is another strong proof, that the order of the preceding lines above proposed is right." Dr. Juss.

(If ye believe not in me) The exhortation of Jehoshaphat, 2 Chron. xx. 20, to his people, when God had promised to them, by the prophet Jehaziel, victory over the Moabites and Ammonites, is very like this both in sense and expression, and seems to be delivered in verse:—

"Hear me, O Judah; and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem;
Believe in JEHOUAH your God, and ye shall be established;
Believe His promises, and ye shall prosper."

Where both the sense and construction render very probable a conjecture of Archbishop Secker on this place; that 14 Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Emmanuel.

15 Butter and honey shall he eat, that he may now to refuse the evil, and choose the good.

b Or, thou, O Virgin, shalt call; See Gen. 4. 1. 26. & 16. 11. & 22. 24. & 28. 4. 2. 1 Sam. 1. 21.—c Ch. 2. 8.

instead of ν ki, we should read ν bi. "If ye will not believe in me, ye shall not be established." So likewise Dr. Durell. The Chaldee has, "If ye will not believe in the words of the prophet;" which seems to be a paraphrase of the reading here proposed. In favour of which it may be farther observed, that in one MS. ν ki, is upon a rasure; and another for the last ν lo, reads ν va vele, which would properly follow ν bi, but could not follow ν ki.

[Some translate thus, and paraphrase thus: If ye will not believe, surely ye shall not be established. Or, If ye do not give credit, it is because ye are unfaithful. Ye have not been faithful to the grace already given: therefore ye are now incapable of crediting my promises.]

Verse 11. In the depth—(Go deep to the grave)] See Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, and Vulgate.

Verse 14. The LOM—(JUBOVAN)] For ν va adonai, twenty-five of Kennicott's MSS. (since ancient) and fourteen of De Rossi's, read ν va yehovah. And so ver. 20, eighteen MSS.

Verse 15. That he may know—(When he shall know)] "Though so much has been written on this important passage, there is an obscurity and in consequence which still attends it, in the general run of all the interpretations given to it by the most learned. And this obscure incoherence is given to it by the false rendering of a Hebrew particle, viz. ν la, in ν va ν va ledadto. This has been generally rendered, either 'that he may know,' or 'till he know.' It is capable of either version, without doubt. But either of these versions makes ver. 15, incoherent and inconsistent with ver. 16. For ver. 16, plainly means to give a reason for the assertion in ver. 15; because it is subjoined to it by the particle ν ki, for. But it is no reason why a child should eat butter and honey till he was at an age to distinguish, that before that time the land of his nativity should be free from its enemies. This latter supposition indeed implies what is inconsistent with the preceding assertion. For it implies, that in part of that time of the infancy spoken of, the land should not be free from enemies, and consequently these species of delicate food could not be attainable, as they are in times of peace. The other version 'that he may know,' has no meaning at all; for what sense is there in asserting, that a child shall eat butter and honey that he may know to refuse evil and choose good? Is there any such effect in this food? Surely no. Besides, the child is thus represented to eat those things, which only a state of peace produces, during its whole infancy, inconsistently with ver. 16, which promises a relief from enemies only before the end of this infancy: implying plainly, that part of it would be passed in distressful times of war and siege, which was the state of things when the prophecy was delivered.

"But all these objections are cut off, and a clear coherent sense is given to this passage, by giving another sense to the particle ν la, which never occurred to me till I saw it in Harmer's Observat. Vol. I. p. 299. See how coherent the words of the prophet run, with how natural a connexion one clause follows another, by properly rendering this one particle. 'Behold this Virgin shall conceive and bear a Son, and thou shalt call his name Emmanuel; but butter and honey shall he eat, when he shall know to refuse evil, and choose good. For, before this child shall know to refuse evil and choose good, the land shall be desolate, by whose two kings thou art distressed.' Thus ver. 16, subjoins a plain reason why the child should eat butter and honey, the food of plentiful times, when he came to a distinguishing age; viz. because before that time the country of the two kings, who now distressed Judah, should be desolated; and so Judah should recover that plenty which attends peace. That this rendering, which gives perspicuity and rational connexion to the passage, is according to the use of the Hebrew particle is certain. Thus ν va ν va lepanoth baker, 'at the appearing of morning, or when morning appeared' Exod. xv. 27. ν va ν va le et haacal, 'at meal-time, or, when it was time to eat,' Ruth ii. 14. In the same manner, ν va ν va le dadto, 'at his knowing, that is, when he knows.'

"Harmer [ibid.] has clearly shewn, that these articles of food are delicacies in the East; and as such denote a 16 "For before the child shall know to refuse the evil and choose the good, the land that thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her kings.

nature of plenty. See also Josh. v. 6. They therefore naturally express the plenty of the country, as a mark of peace restored to it. Indeed, ver. 22, it expresses a plenty arising from the thinness of the people: but that it signifies, ver. 15, a plenty arising from deliverance from war then present is evident, because otherwise there is no expression of this deliverance. And that a deliverance was intended to be here expressed is plain, from calling the child which should be born, Immanuel, God with us. It is plain also, because it is before given to the prophet in charge to make a declaration of the deliverance, ver. 3-7; and it is there made; and this prophecy must undoubtedly be conformable to that in this matter." Dr. Jubb.

The circumstance of the child's eating butter and honey is explained by Jarochi, as denoting a state of plenty. "Butter and honey shall this child eat, because our land shall be full of all good." With honey, milk, and wine, their infant years." Pope.

Τῆρας, ἄριστος ἐπιπέτης: "This is a description of delicate food," says Eustathius on the place.

Agreeably to the observations communicated by the learned person above-mentioned, which perfectly well explain the historical sense of this much-disputed passage, not excluding a higher secondary sense, the obvious and literal meaning of the prophecy is this: 'that within the time that a young woman, now a virgin, should conceive and bring forth a child, and that child should arrive at such an age as to distinguish between good and evil, that is, within a few years, (compare chap. viii. 4,) the enemies of Judah should be destroyed.' But the prophecy is introduced in so solemn a manner; the sign is so marked, as a sign selected and given by God himself, after Ahaz had rejected the offer of any sign of his own choosing out of the whole compass of nature; the terms of the prophecy are so peculiar, and the name of the child so expressive, containing in them much more than the circumstances of the birth of a common child required, or even admitted; that we may easily suppose that, in minds prepared by the general expectation of a great Deliverer to spring from the house of David, they raised hopes far beyond what the present occasion suggested; especially when it was found, that in the subsequent prophecy, delivered immediately afterward, this child, called Immanuel, is treated as the Lord and Prince of the land of Judah. Who could this be, other than the Heir of the throne of David? under which character a great and even a Divine person had been promised. No one of that age answered to this character except Hezekiah: but he was certainly born nine or ten years before the delivery of this prophecy. That this was so understood at that time is collected, I think, with great probability, from a passage of Micah, a prophet contemporary with Isaiah, but who began to prophesy after him; and who, as I have already observed, imitated him, and sometimes used his expressions. Micah, having delivered that remarkable prophecy, which determines the place of the birth of Messiah, "the Ruler of God's people, whose goings forth have been of old, from everlasting;" that it should be Bethlehem Ephrathah; adds immediately, that nevertheless, in the mean time, God would deliver His people into the hands of their enemies; "He will give them up, till she, who is to bear a child, shall bring forth." Mic. v. 2. This obviously and plainly refers to some known prophecy concerning a woman to bring forth a child; and seems much more properly applicable to this passage of Isaiah than to any others of the same prophet, to which some interpreters have applied it. St. Matthew therefore, in applying this prophecy to the birth of Christ, does it not merely in the way of accommodating the words of the prophet to a suitable case not in the prophet's view; but takes it in its strictest, clearest, and most important sense; and applies it according to the original design and principal intention of the prophet.

[After all this learned criticism, I think something is still wanting to diffuse the proper light over this important prophecy. On Matt. i. 24, I have given what I judge to be the true meaning and right application of the whole passage, as there quoted by the evangelist, the substance of which it will be necessary to repeat here:

At the time referred to, the kingdom of Judah, under the government of Ahaz, was reduced very low. Pekah, king of Israel, had slain in Judea one hundred and twenty thousand persons in one day; and carried away captives two hundred thousand, including women and children, together with much spoil. To add to their distress, Rezin, king of Syria, being confederate with Pekah, had taken Elath, a fortified city of Judah, and carried the inhabitants away captive to Damascus. In this critical conjuncture, need we wonder that Ahaz was afraid that the enemies who were now united against him must prevail, destroy Jerusalem, and the kingdom of Judah, and annihilate the family of David? To meet and remove this fear, apparently well grounded, Isaiah is sent from the Lord to Ahaz, swallowed up now both by sorrow and by unbelief, in order to assure him that the counsels of his enemies should not stand; and that they should be utterly discomfited. To encourage Ahaz, he commands him to ask a sign or miracle, which should be a pledge in hand, that God should, in due time, fulfil the predictions of his servant, as related in the context. On Ahaz humbly refusing to ask any sign, it is immediately added, Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; Behold, a virgin shall conceive and bear a son; and shall call his name Immanuel. Butter and honey shall he eat, &c. Both the divine and human nature of our Lord, as well as the miraculous conception, appear to be pointed out in the prophecy quoted here by the Evangelist:—He shall be called ΙΜΜΑΝΟΥΗΛ; literally, THE STRONG GOD WITH US: similar to those words in the New Testament—The word which was God—was made flesh, and dwelt among us, full of grace and truth; John i. 1, 14. And God was manifested in the flesh, 1 Tim. iii. 16. So that we are to understand God with us to imply, God incarnated—God in human nature. This seems farther evident from the words of the prophet, ver. 15, Butter and honey shall he eat—he shall be truly man, grow up and be nourished in a human natural way; which refers to His being WITH US, i. e. incarnated. To which the prophet adds, That he may know to refuse the evil and choose the good:—or rather, According to his knowledge, ἰσχυρὸν ἑδοκίμησεν τὸν κακὸν καὶ ἐξελέξατο τὸν ἀγαθόν; reprobating the evil and choosing the good:—this refers to Him as God; and is the same idea, given by this prophet, chap. liii. 11, By (or in) his knowledge (the knowledge of Christ crucified, ἰσχυρὸν ἐδοκίμησεν τὸν κακὸν καὶ ἐξελέξατο τὸν ἀγαθόν) shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their offences. Now this union of the divine and human nature is termed a sign or miracle, ἰσχυρὸν ἑδοκίμησεν, i. e. something which exceeds the power of nature to produce. And this miraculous union was to be brought about in a miraculous way: Behold a virgin shall conceive: the word is very emphatic, ἡ παρθένος, THE virgin; the only one that ever was, or ever shall be, a mother in this way. But the Jews, and some called Christians, who have espoused their desperate cause, assert, that "the word ἡ παρθένος does not signify a virgin only; for it is applied Prov. xxx. 19, to signify a young married woman." I answer, that this latter text is no proof of the contrary doctrine: the words ἡ παρθένος ἡνὶ ἄνδρὸς deroc geber de-almah, the way of a man with a maid, cannot be proved to mean that for which it is produced. Besides, one of De Rossi's MSS. reads ἡ παρθένος de-almah, the way of a strong, or stout man (ἡνὶ ἄνδρὸς) in his youth; and in this reading the Syrians, Septuagint, Vulgate, and Arabic agree; which are followed by the first Version in the English language, as it stands in a MS. in my own possession—the wife of a man in his marrying youth: so that this place, the only one that can with any probability of success, be produced, were the interpretation contended for correct, which I am by no means disposed to admit, proves nothing. Besides, the consent of so many Versions in the opposite meaning deprives it of much of its influence in this question.

The word ἡ παρθένος de-almah, comes from ἄνδρ ἄλῃμ, to lie hid, be concealed: and we are told, that "virgins were so called because they were concealed or closely kept up in their fathers' houses till the time of their marriage." This is not correct: see the case of Rebecca, Gen. xxiv. 43, and my note there; that of Rachel, Gen. xxix. 6, 9, and the note there also; and see the case of Miriam, the sister of Moses, Exod. ii. 8, and also the Chaldee paraphrase on Lam. i. 4, where the virgins are represented as going out in the dance. And see also the whole history of Bath. This being concealed, or kept at home, on which so much stress is laid, is purely fanciful; for we find that young unmarried women drew water, kept sheep, gleaned publicly in the fields, &c. &c. and the same words they perform among the Turcomans to the present day. This reason, therefore, does not account for the radical meaning of the word; and we must seek it elsewhere. Another well known and often used root in the Hebrew tongue will cast light on this subject. This is גלה galah, which signifies to reveal, make manifest, or uncover; and is often applied to matrimonial connexions in different parts of the Mosaic law: וברא אלמא, therefore, may be considered as implying the concealment of the virgin, as such, till lawful marriage had taken place. A virgin was not called וברא אלמא, because she was concealed by being kept at home in her father's house, which is not true, but literally and physically, because as a woman she had not been uncovered—she had not known man. This fully applies to the blessed virgin, see Luke i. 34. "How can this be, seeing I know no man?" And this text throws much light on the subject before us. This also is in perfect agreement with the ancient prophecy, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the head of the serpent," Gen. iii. 15, for the person who was to destroy the work of the devil was to be the Progeny of the woman, without any concurrence of the man. And hence the text in Genesis speaks as fully of the virgin state of the person from whom Christ, according to the flesh, should come, as that in the Prophet, or this in the Evangelist. According to the original promise there was to be a seed, a human being, who should destroy sin: but this seed, or human being, must come from the woman ALONE; and no woman ALONE could produce such a human being without being a virgin. Hence, A virgin shall bear a son, is the very spirit and meaning of the original text, independently of the illustration given by the Prophet; and the fact recorded by the Evangelist is the proof of the whole. But how could that be a sign to Ahaz, which was to take place so many hundreds of years after? I answer, the meaning of the prophet is plain: not only Rezin and Pekah should be unsuccessful against Jerusalem at that time, which was the fact; but Jerusalem, Judea, and the house of David, should be both preserved, notwithstanding their depressed state, and the multitude of their adversaries, till the time should come when a virgin should bear a son. This is a most remarkable circumstance—the house of David could never fail, till a virgin should conceive and bear a son—nor did it: but when that incredible and miraculous fact did take place, the kingdom and house of David became extinct! This is an irrefragable confutation of every argument a Jew can offer in vindication of his opposition to the Gospel of Christ. Either the prophecy in Isaiah has been fulfilled, or the kingdom and house of David are yet standing. But the kingdom of David, we know, is destroyed: and where is the man, Jew or Gentile, that can shew us a single descendant of David on the face of the earth? The prophecy could not fail—the kingdom and house of David have failed—the virgin, therefore, must have brought forth her son—and this Son is Jesus, the Christ. Thus Moses, Isaiah, and Matthew, concur; and facts the most unequivocal have confirmed the whole! Behold the wisdom and providence of God!

18 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall hiss for the fly that is in the uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt, and for the bee that is in the land of Assyria.

19 And they shall come, and shall rest all of them in the desolate valleys, and in the holes of the rocks, and upon all thorns, and upon all bushes.

Notwithstanding what has been said above, it may be asked, In what sense could this name Immanuel be applied to Jesus Christ, if he be not truly and properly GOD? Could the Spirit of truth ever design that Christians should receive Him as an angel or a mere man; and yet in the very beginning of the Gospel History, apply a character to Him which belongs only to the Most High God? Surely no. In what sense then is Christ God with us? Jesus is called Immanuel, or God with us, in His incarnation—God united to our nature—God with man—God in man—God with us, by His continual protection—God with us, by the influence of His Holy Spirit—in the Holy Sacrament, in the preaching of His word—in private prayer. And God with us, through every action of our life, that we begin, continue, and end, in His name. He is God with us, to comfort, enlighten,

Even the king of Assyria] Houbigant supposes these words to have been a marginal gloss, brought into the text by mistake; and so likewise Archbishop Secker. Besides their having no force or effect here, they do not join well in construction with the words preceding, as may be seen by the strange manner in which the ancient interpreters have taken them; and they very inelegantly forestal the mention of the king of Assyria, which comes in with great propriety in the 20th verse. I have therefore taken the liberty of omitting them in the translation.

Shall the Lord shave with a razor that is hired—(JEHOVAH shall shave by the hired razor) To shave with the hired razor the head, the feet, and the beard, is an expression highly parabolical, to denote the utter devastation of the country from one end to the other; and the plundering of the people, from the highest to the lowest, by the Assyrians, whom God employed as His instrument to punish the Jews. Ahaz himself, in the first place, hired the king of Assyria to come to help him against the Syrians, by a present made to him of all the treasures of the temple, as well as his own. And God Himself considered the great nations, whom He thus employed, as His mercenaries; and paid them their wages. Thus He paid Nebuchadnezzar for his services against Tyre, by the conquest of Egypt, Ezek. xxix. 18—20. The hairs of the head are those of the highest order in the state: those of the feet, or the lower parts, are the common people; the beard is the king, the high priest, the very supreme in dignity and majesty. The Eastern people have always held the beard in the highest veneration, and have been extremely jealous of its honour. To pluck a man's beard is an instance of the greatest indignity that can be offered. See Isa. l. 6. The king of the Ammonites, to shew the utmost contempt of David, 'cut off half the beards of his servants, and the men were greatly ashamed; and David bade them tarry at Jericho till their beards were grown.' 2 Sam. x. 4, 5. Niebuhr, Arabie, p. 275, gives a modern instance of the very same kind of insult. "The Turks," says Thevenot, "greatly esteem a man who has a fine beard; it is a very great affront to take a man by his beard, unless it be to kiss it; they swear by the beard." Voyages, l. p. 57. D'Arvieux gives a remarkable instance of an Arab, who, having received a wound in his jaw, chose to hazard his life, rather than suffer his surgeon to take off his beard. Memoires, Tom. III. p. 214. See also Niebuhr, Arabie, p. 61.

The remaining verses of this chapter, 21—25, contain an elegant and very expressive description of a country depopulated, and left to run wild, from its adjuncts and circumstances: the vineyards and corn-fields, before well cultivated, now overrun with briars and thorns; much grass, so that the few cattle that are left, a young cow and two sheep, have their full range, and abundant pasture, so as to yield milk in plenty to the scanty family of the owner; the thinly scattered people living not on corn, wine, and oil, the produce of cultivation; but on milk and honey, the gifts of nature, and the whole land given up to the wild beasts, so that the miserable inhabitants are forced to go out armed with bows and arrows, either to defend themselves against the wild beasts, or to supply themselves with necessary food by hunting.

[A very judicious friend has sent me the following observations on the preceding prophecy, which I think worthy of being laid before the Reader; though they are in some respects different from my own view of the subject.]

"To establish the primary and literal meaning of a passage of Scripture is evidently laying the true foundation for any subsequent views or improvements from it.

"The kingdom of Judah under the government of Ahaz was reduced very low. Pekah, king of Israel, had slain in Judea one hundred and twenty thousand in one day; and carried away captive two hundred thousand, including women and children, with much spoil. To add to this distress, Rezin, king of Syria, being confederate with Pekah, had taken Elath, a fortified city of Judah, and carried the inhabitants to Damascus. I think it may also be gathered from the sixth verse of chap. viii. that the kings of Syria and Israel had a considerable party in the Land of Judea, who, regardless of the Divine appointment and promises, were disposed to favour the elevation of Tabeal (a stranger,) to the throne of David. In this critical conjuncture of affairs, Isaiah was sent with a message of mercy, and a promise of deliverance, to Ahaz. He was commanded to take with him Shearjashub, his son, whose name contained a promise respecting the captives lately made by Pekah, whose return from Samaria, effected by the expostulation of the prophet Oded and the concurrence of the princes of Ephraim, was now promised as a pledge of the Divine interposition offered to Ahaz in favour of the house of David. And as a farther token of this preservation, (notwithstanding the incredulity of Ahaz, Isaiah was directed to predict the birth of another son which should be born to him within the space of a year, and to be named Emmanuel, signifying thereby the protection of God to the land of Judah and family of David at this present conjuncture, with reference to the promise of the Messiah who was to spring from that family, and be born in that land. Compare chap. viii. 8. Hence Isaiah testifies, chap. viii. 18, 'Behold I and the children whom the Lord hath given me are for signs and for types in Israel.' Compare Zech. iii. 8.—'Thy companions are men of sign and type:' see Dr. Lovell on this verse. The message of Divine displeasure against Israel is in like manner expressed by the names the prophet Hosea was directed to give his children, see Hos. i. and ii.

"Concerning this child, who was to be named Emmanuel, the prophet was commissioned to declare, that notwithstanding the present scarcity prevailing in the land from its being harassed by war, yet within the space of time wherein this child should be of age to discern good and evil, both these hostile kings, (viz. of Israel and Syria,) should be cut off; and the country enjoy such plenty that butter and honey, food accounted of peculiar delicacy, should be a common repast. See Harmer's Observations, Vol. i. p. 299.

"To this it may be objected, that Isaiah's son was not named Emmanuel, but Maher-shalal-hash-baz; the signification of which bore a threatening aspect, instead of a consolatory one. To this I think a satisfactory answer may be given. Ahaz, by his unbelief and disregard of the message of mercy sent to him from God, (for instead of depending upon it he sent and made a treaty with the king of Assyria,) drew upon himself the Divine displeasure, which was expressed by the change of the child's name, and the declaration that though Damascus and Samaria should, according to the former prediction, fall before the king of Assyria, yet that this very power, (i. e. Assyria) in whom Ahaz trusted for deliverance, see 2 Kings xvi. 7, &c. should afterwards come against Judah, and 'fill the breadth of the land,' which was accomplished in the following reign, when Jerusalem was so endangered as to be delivered only by miracle. The sixth and seventh verses of chap. viii. I think indicate, as I before observed, that the kings of Syria and Israel had many adherents in Judah, who are said to refuse the peaceful waters of Shiloh or Siloam (Him that is to be sent, who ought to have been their confidence, typified by the fountain at the foot of Mount Zion, whose stream watered the city of Jerusalem,) and therefore since the splendour of victory, rather than the blessings of peace, was the object of their admiration (compared to a swelling river which overflowed its banks)

25 And on all hills that shall be digged with the mattock, there shall not come thither the fear of briars and thorns: but it shall be for the sending forth of oxen, and for the treading of lesser cattle.

p Jer. 50. 14.

God threatens to chastise them by the victorious armies of Ashur. The prophet at the same time addresses words of consolation to such of the people who yet feared and trusted in Jehovah, whom he instructs and comforts with the assurance (verse 10,) that they shall prove the fulfilment of the promise contained in the name Emmanuel.

"But it may still be objected, that according to this interpretation of the fourteenth verse of chap. vii. nothing miraculous occurs, which is readily admitted: but the objection rests upon the supposition that something miraculous was intended; whereas the word sign, does by no means generally imply a miracle, but most commonly an emblematic representation, (see Ezek. iv. 3—12; xi. xx. 20; Zech. vi. 14,) either by actions or names, or some future event either promised or threatened. Exod. iii. 12; 1 Sam. ii. 34; 2 Kings xix. 29; Jer. xlv. 29, 30, are all examples of a future event given as a sign or a token of something else which is also future. The birth of Isaiah's son was indeed typical of Him whose name he was (at first) appointed to bear, viz. Immanuel, (even as Oshea the son of Nun had his name changed to Jehoshua, the same with Jesus, of whom he was an eminent type.) Hence the prophet, in the ninth chapter, breaks forth into a strain of exultation,—'To us a child is born;' after which follows denunciations against Rezin and the kingdom of Israel, which are succeeded by declarations that when Assyria had completed the appointed chastisement upon Judah and Jerusalem, that empire should be destroyed. The whole of the tenth chapter is a very remarkable prophecy, and probably delivered about the time of Sennacherib's invasion.

"But still it will be urged that St. Matthew, when relating the miraculous conception of our Lord, says, 'Now all this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet,' &c. To this it may readily be answered, that what was spoken by the prophet was indeed now fulfilled in a higher, more important, and also in a more literal sense, than the primary fulfilment could afford, which derived all its value from its connexion with this event, to which it ultimately referred.

"In like manner, the prophecy of Isaiah contained in the second Chapter, received a complete fulfilment in our Saviour's honouring Capernaum with His residence, and preaching throughout Galilee; though there appears reason to interpret the passage as having a primary respect to the reformation wrought by Hezekiah, and which at the eve of the dissolution of the kingdom of Israel by the captivity of the ten tribes, extended to the tribes of Asher and Zebulun, and many of the inhabitants of Ephraim and Manasseh, who were hereby stirred up to destroy idolatry in their country. See 2 Chron. xxxi. 1. And without doubt the great deliverance wrought afterwards for Judah by the miraculous destruction of Sennacherib's army, and the recovery of Hezekiah in so critical a conjuncture from a sickness which had been declared to be unto death, contributed not a little to revive the fear of God in that part of Israel which, through their defection from the house of David, had grievously departed from the temple and worship of the true God; and as Galilee lay contiguous to countries inhabited by Gentiles, they had probably sunk deeper into idolatry than the southern part of Israel.

"In several passages of St. Matthew's Gospel our translation conveys the idea of things being done in order to fulfil certain prophecies: but I apprehend that if the words in order to were rendered as simply denoting the event, so that, and thus was fulfilled, the sense would be much clearer. For it is obvious that our Lord did not speak in parables or ride into Jerusalem previous to his last pass-over, simply for the purpose of fulfilling the predictions recorded, but also from other motives: and in chap. ii. the Evangelist only remarks that the circumstance of our Lord's return from Egypt corresponded with the prophet Hosea's relation of that part of the history of the Israelites. So in the twenty-third verse, Joseph dwelt in Nazareth because he was directed so to do by God Himself; and the sacred historian having respect to the effect afterwards produced, (see John vii. 41, 42, 52,) remarks that this abode in Nazareth was a means of fulfilling those predictions of the prophets which indicate the contempt and neglect with which by many the Messiah should be treated. Galilee was considered by the inhabitants of Judea as a degraded place, chiefly from its vicinity to the

[To my Correspondent, as well as to many learned men, there appears some difficulty in the text: but I really think this is quite done away by that mode of interpretation which I have already adopted; and as far as the miraculous conception is concerned, the whole is set in the clearest and strongest light, and the objections and cavils of the Jews entirely destroyed.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER VIII.

The prophecy of the foregoing Chapter relates directly to the kingdom of Judah only: the first part of it promises them deliverance from the united invasion of the Israelites and Syrians; the latter part from ver. 17, denounces the desolation to be brought upon the kingdom of Judah by the Assyrians. The sixth, seventh, and eighth verses of this Chapter seem to take in both the kingdoms of Israel and Judah.—This people, that refuseth the waters of Siloah, may be meant of both: the Israelites despised the kingdom of Judah, which they had deserted, and now attempted to destroy; the people of Judah, from a consideration of their own weakness, and a distrust of God's promises, being reduced to despair, applied to the Assyrians for assistance against the two confederate kings. But how could it be said of Judah, that they rejoiced in Retain and the son of Remaliah, the enemies confederated against them? If some of the people were inclined to revolt to the enemy, which however does not clearly appear from any part of the history or the prophecy, yet there was nothing like a tendency to a general defection. This therefore must be understood of Israel. The prophet denounces the Assyrian invasion, which should overwhelm the whole kingdom of Israel under Tiglath-Pileser, and Salmanneser; and the subsequent invasion of Judah by the same power under Sennacherib, which would bring them into the most imminent danger, like a flood reaching to the neck, in which a man can but just keep his head above water. The two next verses (9 and 10), are addressed by the prophet, as a subject of the kingdom of Judah, to the Israelites and Syrians, and perhaps to all the enemies of God's people; assuring them that their attempts against that kingdom shall be fruitless; for that the promised Immanuel, to whom he alludes, by using his name to express the signification of it, for God is with us, shall be the defence of the house of David, and deliver the kingdom of Judah out of their hands. He then proceeds to warn the people of Judah against idolatry, divination, and the like forbidden practices; to which they were much inclined, and which would soon bring down God's judgments upon Israel. The prophecy concludes, at the sixth verse of chap. ix. with promises of blessings in future times, by the coming of the great Deliverer already pointed out by the name of Immanuel, whose person and character is set forth in terms the most ample and magnificent.

And here it may be observed that it is almost the constant practice of the prophet to connect in like manner deliverances temporal with spiritual. Thus the eleventh chapter, setting forth the kingdom of Messiah, is closely connected with the tenth, which foretells the destruction of Sennacherib. So likewise the destruction of nations enemies to God, in the thirty-fourth chapter, introduces the flourishing state of the kingdom of Christ in the thirty-fifth. And thus the chapters from xl. to xlix. inclusive, plainly relating to the deliverance from the captivity of Babylon, do in some parts plainly relate to the greater deliverance by Christ.

נק נקח נקח נקח elion from נקח alah, &c. the yod supplying the place of the radical ה he. גלגל galah signifies to show, to reveal; properly, as Schroöderus says, (De Vestitu Mulier. Hebr. p. 294.) to render clear and bright by rubbing; to polish. גלגל golygon, therefore, according to this derivation, is not a roll or volume: but may very well signify a polished tablet of metal, such as was anciently used for a mirror. The Chaldee paraphrast renders it by גלגל luach, a tablet; and the same word, though somewhat differently pointed, the Chaldee paraphrast and the Rabbins render a mirror; chap. iii. 23. The mirrors of the Israelitish women were made of brass finely polished, Exod. xxxviii. 8, from which place it likewise appears, that what they used were little hand-mirrors which they carried with them even when they assembled at the door of the tabernacle. I have a metalline mirror found in Herculeaneum, which is not above three inches square. The prophet is commanded to take a mirror, or brazen polished tablet, not like these little hand-mirrors, but a large one; large enough for him to engrave upon it in deep and lasting characters, גלגל ברזל becharat enosh, with a workman's graving tool, the prophecy which he was to deliver. גלגל becharat in this place certainly signifies an instrument to write or engrave with: but גלגל becharat, the same word, only differing a little in the form, means something belonging to a lady's dress, chap. iii. 22, (where however five MSS. leave out the yod, whereby only it differs from the word in this place;) either a crimping-pin, which might be not unlike a graving tool, as some will have it, or a purse as others infer from 2 Kings v. 23. It may therefore be called here גלגל becharat enosh, a workman's instrument, to distinguish it from גלגל becharat ishah, an instrument of the same name, used by the women. In this manner he was to record the prophecy of the destruction of Damascus and Samaria by the Assyrians; the subject and sum of which prophecy is here expressed with great brevity in four words, מהר שלל חזק מהר מהר שאל חזק; i. e. to hasten the spoil, to take quickly the prey; which are afterwards applied as the name of the prophet's son, who was made a sign of the speedy completion of it; Maher-shalal Hash-baz; Hasto-to-the-spoil, Quick-to-the-prey. And that it might be done with the greater solemnity, and to preclude all doubt of the real delivery of the prophecy before the event, he calls witnesses to attest the recording of it.

[The prophet is commanded to take a great roll, and yet four words only are to be written in it. מהר שלל חזק מהר מהר שאל חזק Maher-shalal-hash-baz, Make haste to the spoil; Fall upon the prey. The great volume points out the Land of Judea; and the few words the small number of inhabitants, after the ten tribes were carried into captivity.

The words were to be written with a man's pen; i. e. though the prophecy be given in the visions of God, yet the writing must be real; the words must be transcribed on the great roll, that they may be read and publicly consulted. Or שאל חזק מהר מהר charat enosh, the pen, or graver of the weak miserable man, may refer to the already condemned Assyrians, who, though they should be the instruments of chastening Damascus and Samaria, they themselves should shortly be overthrown. The four words may be considered as the commission given to the Assyrians to destroy and spoil the cities.—Make haste to the spoil; Fall upon the prey! &c.]

Verse 4. For before the child.—[For my father and my mother one MS. and the Vulgate have his father and his mother.] The prophecy was accordingly accomplished within three years; when Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria, went up against Damascus and took it, and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and slew Retain, and also took the Reubenites and the Gadites, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, and carried them captive to Assyria, 2 Kings xv. 29; xvi. 9; 1 Chron. v. 26.

Verse 6. Forasmuch as this people refuseth—(Because this people have rejected) The gentle waters of Shiloah, a small fountain and brook just without Jerusalem, which supplied a pool within the city for the use of the inhabitants, is an apt emblem of the state of the kingdom and house of David, much reduced in its apparent strength, yet supported by the blessing of God; and is finely contrasted with the waters of the Euphrates, great, rapid, and impetuous; the image of the Babylonian empire, which God threatens to bring down like a mighty flood upon all these apostates of both kingdoms, as a punishment for their manifold iniquities, and their contemptuous disregard of His promises. The brook and the river are put for the kingdoms to which they belong, and the different states of which respectively they most aptly represent. Juvenal, inveighing against the corruption of Rome by the importation of Asiatic manners, says, with great elegance, that "the Orontes has been long discharging itself into the Tiber!"

Jempridem Syrus in Tiberim defussit Orontes.

And Virgil, to express the submission of some of the Eastern countries to the Roman arms, says,— Euphrates hinc jam mollior undis. Æn. vii. 705.

"The waters of the Euphrates now flowed more humbly and gently."

But the happy contrast between the brook and the river gives a peculiar beauty to this passage of the prophet, with which the simple figure in the Roman poets, however beautiful, yet uncontrasted, cannot contend.

Verse 8. He shall reach even to the neck—He compares Jerusalem, says Kimchi, to the head in the human body. As when the waters come up to a man's neck, he is very near drowning; for a little increase of them would go over his head: so the king of Assyria coming up to Jerusalem was like a flood reaching to the neck; the whole country was overflowed, and the capital was in imminent danger. Accordingly the Chaldæes renders reaching to the neck by reaching to Jerusalem.

Verse 9. Associate yourselves—(Know ye this) God, by His prophet, plainly declares to the confederate adversaries of Judah, and bids them regard and attend to His declaration, that all their efforts shall be in vain. The present reading, ye re'u, is subject to many difficulties: I follow that of the Septuagint, ye de'u, ye ye. Archbishop Secker approves this reading. ye re'u, know ye this, is parallel and synonymous to ye re'u, know ye this, in the next line. The Septuagint have likewise very well paraphrased the conclusion of this verse: "When ye have strengthened yourselves, ye shall be broken; and though ye again strengthen yourselves, again shall ye be broken;" taking ye chalu as meaning the same with ye neshabern, ye shall be broken.

Verse 11. With a strong hand—(As taking me by the hand) Eleven MSS. (two ancient) [of Kennicott's, and thirty-four of De Rossi's, and seven Editions], read ye chazakath; and so Symmachus, the Syriac, and Vulgate. [Or rather, with a strong hand, that is, with a strong and powerful influence of the prophetic Spirit.]

Verse 12. Say ye not, A confederacy—(Say ye not, It is holy) ye kasher. Both the reading and the sense of this word are doubtful. The Septuagint manifestly read ye kaahah; for they render it by καληρον, hard. The Syriac and Chaldæes render it mered, and merod, rebellion. How they came by this sense of the word, or what they read in their copies, is not so clear. But the worst of it is, that neither of these readings or renderings gives any clear sense in this place. For why should God forbid His faithful servants to say with the unbelieving Jews, It is hard; or, There is a rebellion; or, as our translators render it, a confederacy? And how can this be called "walking in the way of this people?" ver. 11, which usually means, following their example; joining with them in religious worship. Or what confederacy do they mean? The union of the kingdoms of Syria and Israel against Judah? That was properly a league between two independent states; not an unlawful conspiracy of one part against another in the same state; this is the meaning of the word ye kasher. For want of any satisfactory interpretation of this place that I can meet with, I adopt a conjecture of Archbishop Secker, which he proposes with great diffidence; and even seems immediately to give up, as being destitute of any authority to support it. I will give it in his own words:—"Videri potest ex cap. v. 16, et hujus cap. 13; 14, 19, legendum ye kadesh vel ye kedosh, eadem sententia, qua erunt elohaim, Hos. xiv. 3. Sed nihil necesse est. Vide enim Jer. xi. 9; Ezek. xxii. 25. Optime tamen sic responderent hinc versiculo versiculi 13, 14." The passages of Jeremiah and Ezekiel above referred to, seem to me not at all to clear up the sense of the word ye kasher in this place. But the context greatly favours the conjecture here given, and makes it highly probable: "Walk not in the way of this people; call not their idols holy, nor fear ye the object of their fear;" (that is, the estabara, or gods of the idolaters; for so fear here signifies, to wit, the thing feared. So God is called "The fear of Isaac," Gen. xxxi. 42, 53.) "but look up to Jehovah as your Holy One; and let Him be your fear, and let Him be your dread; and He shall be a holy Refuge unto you." Here there is a harmony and consistency running through the whole sentence; and the latter part naturally arises out of the former, and answers to it. Observe that the difference between ye kasher and ye kadosh, is chiefly in the transposition of the two last letters; for the letters resh and daleth are hardly distinguishable in some copies, printed as well as MS.; so that the mistake, in respect of the letters themselves, is a very easy and a very common one.

Verse 14. And he shall be for a sanctuary—(And he shall be unto you a sanctuary) The word lece'm, unto you, absolutely necessary as I conceive to the sense, is lost in this place: it is preserved by the Vulgate, "et erit vobis in sanctificationem." The Septuagint have it in the singular number: coram eos eis dytaapov, it shall be to thee. Or else instead of קדש mikdash, a sanctuary, we must read קשקש mokeah, a snare, which would then be repeated without any propriety or elegance, at the end of the verse. The Chaldæes reads instead of it מיהפט miahpat, judgment; for he renders it by פוראן poran, which word frequently answers to מיהפט miahpat in his paraphrase. One MS. has instead of קדש קדש mikedesh ve-laben, להבם lahem le-aben; which clears the sense and construction. But the reading of the Vulgate is I think the best remedy to this difficulty; and is in some degree authorized by ye lahem, the reading of the MS. above mentioned.

Verse 16. Among my disciples—בלימודי be-limodai. "The Septuagint render it rov un madun. Bishop Chandler, Defence of Christianity, p. 308, thinks they read סוסי soosi melamed, that it be not understood; and approves this reading." Abp. Secker.

8 The Lord sent a word into Jacob, and it hath lighted upon Israel.

9 And all the people shall know, even Ephraim and the inhabitants of Samaria, that say in the pride and stoutness of heart,

10 The bricks are fallen down, but we will build with hewn stones: the sycamores are cut down, but we will change them into cedars.

11 Therefore the LORD shall set up the adversaries of Rezin against him, and shall join his enemies together;

12 The Syrians before and the Philistines behind; and they shall devour Israel with open mouth. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

13 For the people turneth not unto him that smiteth them, neither do they seek the LORD of hosts.

14 Therefore the LORD will cut off from Israel head and tail, branch and rush, in one day.

15 The ancient and honourable, he is the head; and the prophet that teacheth lies, he is the tail.

"After this clause (chap. ix. 4.) is interposed the space of one line in Cod. 2 and 3. The same is likewise observed in Cod. 245, in which no space exists at the end of chap. ix."

Verse 8. Lord.—(JEHOVAH.) For אדוני adonai, thirty MSS. of Kennicott, and many of De Rossi's, and three editions, read יהוה yehovah.

Verse 9. Pride and stoutness of heart.—(Carry themselves haughtily) וַיִּשְׁבְּחֻּם va-yashb'chem, and they shall know: so ours and the Versions in general. But what is it that they shall know? The verb stands destitute of its object; and the sense is imperfect. The Chaldee is the only one, as far as I can find, that expresses it otherwise. He renders the verb in this place by שִׁבְחָבְרָם va-shbrabru, they exalt themselves, or carry themselves haughtily; the same word by which he renders נִבְחָהּ nabahu, chap. iii. 16. He seems therefore in this place to have read וַיִּשְׁבְּחֻּם va-yashb'chem; which agrees perfectly well with what follows, and clears up the difficulty. Archbishop Secker conjectured וַיִּדְבְּרוּ va-yedabaru, referring it to לִמְדוֹת lemodot in the next verse; which shews, that he was not satisfied with the present reading. Houbigant reads וַיִּשְׁבְּרוּ va-yashbru, et praefaciunt, they are become wicked, which is found in a MS.: but I prefer the reading of the Chaldee, which suits much better with the context.

[Houbigant approves of this reading; but it is utterly unsupported by any evidence from antiquity: it is a mere mistake of resh for daleth, and I am surprised that it should be favoured by Houbigant.]

Verse 10. The bricks.—"The eastern bricks," says Sir John Chardin, see Harmer, Observ. I, p. 176, "are only clay well moistened with water, and mixed with straw, and dried in the sun." So that their walls are commonly no better than our mud walls; see Maundrell, p. 124. That straw was a necessary part in the composition of this sort of bricks, to make the parts of the clay adhere together, appears from Exod. chap. v. These bricks are properly opposed to hewn stone, so greatly superior in beauty and durability. The sycamores, which as Jerom on the place says, are timber of little worth, with equal propriety are opposed to the cedars. "As the grain and texture of the sycamore is remarkably coarse and spongy, it could therefore stand in no competition at all (as it is observed, Isa. ix. 10,) with the cedar, for beauty and ornament." Shaw, Supplement to Travels, p. 96. We meet with the same opposition of cedars to sycamores, 1 Kings x. 27, where Solomon is said to have made silver as the stones, and cedars as the sycamores in the vale for abundance. By this mashal, or figurative and sententious speech, they boast, that they shall easily be able to repair their present losses, suffered perhaps by the first Assyrian invasion under Tiglath Pileser; and to bring their affairs to a more flourishing condition than ever.

Verse 11. The adversaries of Rezin against him.—(The princes of Retain against him) For ירי tarey, enemies, Houbigant by conjecture reads שרי sarey, princes; which is confirmed by thirty of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. (two ancient,) [one of my own, ancient;] and 18 For wickedness is borneth as the fire: it shall devour the briers and thorns, and shall kindle in the thickets of the forest, and they shall mount up like the lifting up of smoke.

19 Through the wrath of the LORD of hosts is the land darkened, and the people shall be as the fuel of the fire: no man shall spare his brother.

20 And he shall snatch on the right hand, and be hungry; and he shall eat on the left hand, and they shall not be satisfied: they shall eat every man the flesh of his own arm:

wine more have a lead, upon a rasure, and therefore had probably at first a sassy. The princes of Retain, the late ally of Israel; that is, the Syrians, expressly named in the next verse, shall now be excited against Israel.

The Septuagint in this place gives us another variation; for ῥοις Retain, they read ῥοις ἁερ τριων, opes Zion, mount Zion; of which this may be the sense: but JEHOVAH shall set up the adversaries of mount Zion against him, (i. e. against Israel) and will strengthen his enemies together: the Syrians—the Philistines—who are called the adversaries of mount Zion. See Simons, Lex. in voce סוּר סוּר sacat.

Verse 12. With open mouth.—(On every side) הכול בכל becol beh, in every corner; in every part of their country, pursuing them to the remotest extremities, and the most retired parts. So the Chaldee אמר בכל becol atar, in every place.

Verse 14. In one day] Thirteen MSS. of Kennicott and De Rossi read ביום beyom; and another has a rasure in the place of the letter ב beth.

Verse 17. The Lord.—(JEHOVAH) For אדוני adonai, a great number of MSS. read יהוה yehovah.

Verse 18. For wickedness] Wickedness rageth like a fire, destroying and laying waste the nation; but it shall be its own destruction, by bringing down the fire of God's wrath, which shall burn up the briers and the thorns; that is, the wicked themselves. Briers and thorns are an image frequently applied in Scripture, when set on fire, to the rage of the wicked; violent, yet impotent, and of no long continuance. "They are extinct as the fire of thorns," Psa. cxviii. 12. To the wicked themselves, as useless and unprofitable, proper objects of God's wrath, to be burned up, or driven away by the wind. "As thorns cut up they shall be consumed in the fire," Isa. xxxiii. 12. Both these ideas seem to be joined in Psa. lviii. 9.

"Before your pots shall feel the thorn, As well the green as the dry, the trumpet shall hear them away."

The green and the dry is a proverbial expression, meaning all sorts of them, good and bad, great and small, &c. So Ezekiel: "Behold, I will kindle a fire, and it shall devour every green tree, and every dry tree," chap. xx. 47. D'Herbelot quotes a Persian poet describing a pestilence under the image of a conflagration: "This was a lightning that, falling upon a forest, consumed there the green wood with the dry." See Harmer's Observations, Vol. ii. p. 187.

Verse 20. The flesh of his own arm.—(The flesh of his neighbour) "Του βραχίονος τὸ ἀδελφὸν αὐτοῦ, the Septuagint, Alexand. Duplex versio, quarum altera legit ῥι ρθ, quae vox extat, Jer. vi. 21. Nam ῥι ρθ, ἀδελφος, Gen. xliiii. 33. Recte, ni fallor." SECKER. I add to this excellent remark, that the Chaldee manifestly reads רי רב, not ורי zerdo; for he renders it by יריבוי keribiah, his neighbour. And Jeremiah has the very same expression: ויריבוי ויריבוי ויריבוי veysh baser r'cho yokeru. "And every one shall eat the flesh of his neighbour," chap. xix. 9. This observation, I think, gives the true reading and sense of this place: and the context strongly confirms it by explaining the general idea by particular instances in the following verse.—"Every man shall devour the flesh of his neighbour;" that is, they shall harass and destroy one another. "Manasseh shall destroy Ephraim, and Ephraim, Manasseh; which two tribes were most closely con-

CHAPTER X.

God's judgments against oppressive rulers, 1-4. The prophet foretells the invasion of Sennacherib, and the destruction of his army. That mighty monarch is represented as a rod in the hand of God to correct His people for their sins; and his ambitious purposes, contrary to his own intentions, are made subservient to the great designs of Providence, 5-11. Having accomplished this work, the Almighty takes account of his impious vanities, 12-14; and threatens utter destruction to the small and great of his army, represented by the thorns, and the glory of the forest, 15-18. This leads the prophet to comfort his countrymen with the promise of the signal interposition of God in their favour, 20-27. Brief description of the march of Sennacherib towards Jerusalem, and of the alarm and terror which he spread every where as he advanced, 28-32. The spirit and rapidity of the description is admirably suited to the subject. The afflicted people are seen fleeing, and the eager invader pursuing. The cries of one city are heard by those of another, and great wailings succeed to groans, till at length the rod is lifted over the last remnant of the army, however, the promise of a Divine interposition is essentially renewed. The scene instantly changes; the upstart arm of the mighty conqueror is at once arrested and laid low by the hand of heaven; the forest of Lebanon, in figure by which the immense Assyrian host is elegantly pointed out, is hewn down by the axe of the Divine vengeance; and the moral is equally pleased with the equity of judgment, and the beauty and imagery of the description, 33, 34.

4 Without me they shall bow down under the prisoners, and they shall fall under the slain. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

5 O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is mine indignation.

6 I will send him against an hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge, to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets.

7 Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither does his heart think so; but it is in his heart to destroy and cut off nations not a few.

nected both in blood and situation as brothers and neighbours; "and both of them in the midst of their own dissensions shall agree in preying upon Judah." The common reading, "shall devour the flesh of his own arm," in connexion with what follows, seems to make either an inconsistency, or an anticlimax; whereas by this correction the following verse becomes an elegant illustration of the foregoing.

NOTES ON CHAPTER X.

[Verse 2. My people—Instead of voy ammi, my people, many MSS. and one of my own, ancient, read voy ammo, his people. But this is manifestly a corruption.]

[Verse 4. Without me] That is, without my aid: they shall be taken captive even by the captives, and shall be subdued even by the vanquished. "The voyd in voyd belli, is a pronoun, as in Ho. xiii. 4." Kimchi on the place. [One MS. has voyd belli.]

[As the people had hitherto lived without God in worship and obedience; so they should now be without His help, and should perish in their transgressions.]

[Verse 5. O Assyrian—(Ho to the Assyrian)] Here begins a new and distinct prophecy; continued to the end of the twelfth Chapter: and it appears from ver. 9—11, of this chapter, that this prophecy was delivered after the taking of Samaria by Shalmaneser; which was in the sixth year of the reign of Hezekiah: and as the former part of it foretells the invasion of Sennacherib, and the destruction of his army, which makes the whole subject of this Chapter, it must have been delivered before the fourteenth of the same reign.

[The staff in their hand—(The staff in whose hand)] The word voy hu, the staff itself, in this place seems to embarrass the sentence. I omit it on the authority of the Alexandrine copy of the Septuagint: nine MSS. (two ancient), [and one of my own, ancient], for voy mittah hu, read voy mittah, his staff. Archbishop Secker was not satisfied with the present reading. He proposes another method of clearing up the sense, by reading voy beyom, instead of voy beyadem: "And he is a staff in the day of mine indignation."

[Verse 12. The Lord—(Jehovah)] For voy adonai, fourteen MSS., and three editions, read voy yehovah.

[The fruit—(The effect)] voy peri, f. voy tebi. vid. xiii. 19, and confer Prov. i. 31; xxxi. 16, 31. Secker. The Chaldee renders the word voy peri, by voyd ubeti, works; which seems to be the true sense; and I have followed it.

8 For he saith, Are not my princes altogether kings?

9 Is not Calno as Carchemish? is not Hamath as Arpad? is not Samaria as Damascus?

10 As my hand hath found the kingdoms of the idols, and whose graven images did excel them of Jerusalem and of Samaria;

11 Shall I not, as I have done unto Samaria and her idols, so do to Jerusalem and her idols?

12 Wherefore it shall come to pass, that when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon mount Zion, and on Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks.

13 For he saith, By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom; for I am prudent: and I have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treasures, and I have put down the inhabitants like a valiant man.

14 And my hand hath found as a nest the riches of the people: and as one gathereth eggs that are left, have I gathered all the earth; and there was none that moved the wing, or opened the mouth, or peeped.

15 Shall the axe boast itself against him that heweth therewith? or shall the saw magnify itself against him that shaketh it? as if the rod should shake itself against them that lift it up, or as if the staff should lift up itself, as if it were no wood.

16 Therefore shall the Lord, the Lord of hosts, send among his fat ones leanness; and under his glory he shall kindle a burning like the burning of a fire.

17 And the light of Israel shall be for a fire, and his Holy One for a flame: and it shall burn and devour his thorns and his briers in one day;

Verse 13. Like a valiant man—(Strongly seated)] Twelve MSS. agree with the Keri in reading voyd kebit, without the voyd alph. And Sal. ben Melec and Kimchi thus explain it:—"them who dwelled in a great and strong place I have brought down to the ground."

Verse 15. No wood—(Its master)] I have here given the meaning, without attempting to keep to the expression of the original, voy lo etz, the no-wood; that which is not wood like itself, but of a quite different and superior nature. The Hebrews have a peculiar way of joining the negative particle voy lo, to a noun, to signify in a strong manner a total negation of the thing expressed by the noun.

"How hast thou given help (voy lo lo coach) to the no-strength?

And saved the arm (voy lo lo dz) of the no-power? How hast thou given counsel (voy lo lo choemah) to the no-wisdom?" Job xxvi. 2, 3.

That is, to the man totally deprived of strength, power, and wisdom.

"Ye that rejoice (voy lo lo debar) in no-thing." Amos vi. 13.

That is, in your fancied strength, which is none at all, a mere nonentity.

"For I am God, (voy lo lo ish) and no-man; The Holy One in the midst of thee, yet do not frequent cities." Hos. xi. 9.

"And the Assyrian shall fall by a sword (voy lo lo ish) of no-man;

And a sword of (voy lo lo adam) no-mortal, shall devour him." Isaiah xxxi. 8.

"Wherefore do ye weigh out your silver (voy lo lo be-lo lechem) for the no-bread." Isa. lv. 2.

So here voy lo lo etz, means him who is far from being an inert piece of wood, but is an animated and active being; not an instrument, but an agent.

Verse 16. The Lord—(Jehovah)] For voy adonai, fifty-two MSS., eleven Editions, [and two of my own, ancient], read voy yehovah, as in other cases.

And under his glory] That is, all that he could boast of as great and strong in his army. (Sal. ben Melec. in loc.) expressed afterwards, ver. 18, by the glory of his forest, and of his fruitful field.

Verse 17. And it shall burn and devour his thorns—

29 They are gone over the passage: they have taken up their lodging at Geba: Ramah is afraid; Gibeah of Saul is fled.

30 Lift up thy voice, O daughter of Gallim: cause it to be heard unto Laish, O poor Anathoth.

31 Madmenah is removed; the inhabitants of Gebim gather themselves to flee.

32 As yet shall he remain at Nob that day: he shall shake his hand against the mount of the daughter of Zion, the hill of Jerusalem.

33 Behold, the Lord, the Lord of hosts, shall lop the bough with terror: and the high ones of stature shall be hewn down, and the haughty shall be humbled.

34 And he shall cut down the thickets of the forest with iron, and Lebanon shall fall by a mighty one.

CHAPTER XI.

The Messiah represented as a slender twig shooting up from the root of an old withered stem, which tender plant, so extremely weak in its first appearance, should nevertheless become fruitful and mighty, &c. Great equity of Messiah's government, &c. Beautiful assemblages of images by which the great power and dominion of His Kingdom are set forth, &c. The extent of His dominion shall be ultimately that of the whole habitable globe, &c. The Prophet, borrowing his imagery from the Exodus from Egypt, speaks, with great majesty of language, the future restoration of the outcasts of Israel, and the dispersal of Judah, (viz. the whole of the twelve tribes of Israel,) from their several dependencies, and also that blessed period when both Jews and Gentiles shall assemble under the banner of Jesus, and mutually unite in extending the limits of His kingdom, 10-16.

AND there shall come forth a rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a branch shall grow out of his roots:

perhaps by Joppa and Lydda; or still more north, through the plain of Esdraelon.

Verse 29. They are gone over the passage—(They have passed the strait)] The strait here mentioned is that of Michmas, a very narrow passage between two sharp hills or rocks, see 1 Sam. xiv. 4, 5, where a great army might have been opposed with advantage by a very inferior force. The author of the Book of Judith might perhaps mean this pass, at least among others: "Charging them to keep the passages of the hill country; for by them there was an entrance into Judæa; and it was easy to stop them that would come up; because the passage was strait for two men at the most," Judith iv. 7. The enemies having passed the strait without opposition, shews that all thoughts of making a stand in the open country were given up, and that their only resource was in the strength of the city.

Their lodging] The sense seems necessarily to require, that we read לו lamo, instead of לו lanu. These two words are in other places mistaken one for the other. Thus Isa. xlv. 7, for לו lamo, read לו lanu, with the Chaldee; and in the same manner, Psa. lxiv. 6, with the Syriac, and Psa. lxxx. 7, on the authority of the Septuagint and Syriac, exceeds the necessity of the sense.

Verse 30. Cause it to be heard unto Laish, O poor Anathoth—(Hearken unto her, O Laish; answer her, O Anathoth)] I follow in this the Syriac Version. The prophet plainly alludes to the name of the place, and with a peculiar propriety, if it had its name from its remarkable echo. "אנאחא anathoth, responsiones: eadem ratio nominis, quæ in בני beith anath, locus ecclis; nam hodie-nam ejus radera ostenduntur in vallis, scilicet in medio montium, ut referunt Robertus in Itiner. p. 70, et Monconystus, p. 301." Simonis Onomasticæ Vet. Test. [Anathoth—Answers, replies: for the same reason that Bethany, בני beith anath, had its name, the house of echo;—the remains of which are still shewn in the valley, i. e. among the mountains.]

[Verse 33. Shall lop the bough with terror—פארה pharah, but פארה phorah, wine-press, is the reading of twenty-six of Kennicott's and twenty-three of De Rosset's MSS. four ancient editions, with Symmachus, Theodotion, and the Chaldee.

Verse 34. Lebanon shall fall by a mighty hand—באדיר be-adir, the angel of the Lord, who smote them. Kimchi. And so Vitringa understands it. Others translate, "The high cedars of Lebanon shall fall:" but the king of Assyria is the person who shall be overthrown.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XI.

The prophet had described the destruction of the Assyrian army under the image of a mighty forest, consisting of flourishing trees, growing thick together, and of a great height; of Lebanon itself crowned with lofty cedars, but cut down and laid level with the ground by the axe wielded by the hand of some powerful and illustrious agent. In opposition to this image he represents the great Person, who makes the subject of this Chapter, as a slender twig, shooting out from the trunk of an old tree, cut down, lopped to the very root, and decayed: which tender plant, so weak in appearance, should nevertheless become fruitful and prosper. This contrast shews plainly the connexion between this and the preceding chapter; which is moreover expressed by the connecting particle: and we have here a remarkable instance of that method so common with the prophets, and particularly with Isaiah, of taking occasion, from the mention of some great temporal deliverance, to launch out into the display of the spiritual deliverance of God's people by the Messiah: for that this prophecy relates to the Messiah, we have the express authority of St. Paul, Rom. xv. 12. "He joins this paragraph, which respects the days of the Messiah, with the fidelity that was in the days of Hezekiah." Kimchi, in ver. 1. Thus in the latter part of Isaiah's prophecies the subject of the great redemption, and of the glories of the Messiah's kingdom, arises out of the restoration of Judah by the deliverance from the captivity of Babylon, and is all along connected and intermixed with it.

2 And the spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; 3 And shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord: and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither approve after the hearing of his ears:

4 But with righteousness shall he judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth: and he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.

5 And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

6 The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the sucking together; and a little child shall lead them.

7 And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

8 And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the oockatrice den.

9 They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

Verse 4. With the rod of his mouth—(By the blast of his mouth)] For שבעו bishebt, by the rod, Houbigant reads בשבט beshebat, by the blast of his mouth, from שבט nashab, to blow. The conjecture is ingenious and probable; and seems to be confirmed by the Septuagint and Chaldee, who render it by the word of his mouth, which answers much better to the correction than to the present reading. Add to this, that the blast of his mouth is perfectly parallel to the breath of his lips in the next line.

Verse 5. The girdle—(The cincture)] All the ancient Versions, except that of Symmachus, have two different words for girdle in the two hemistichs. It is not probable that Isaiah would have repeated אזור azor, when a synonymous word so obvious as חגור chagor occurred. The tautology seems to have arisen from the mistake of some transcriber. The meaning of this verse is, that a zeal for justice and truth shall make him active and strong in executing the great work which he shall undertake. See Note on chap. v. 27.

Verse 6. The wolf also shall, &c.—(Then shall the wolf, &c.]) The idea of the renewal of the golden age, as it is called, is much the same in the Oriental writers, with that of the Greeks and Romans:—the wild beasts grow tame; serpents and poisonous herbs become harmless; all is peace and harmony, plenty and happiness:—

Occidet et asperum, et fallax herba veneni Virg. Eclog. iv. 94. Occidet.

The serpent's brood shall die. The meek ground shall weeds and noxious plants refuse to bear.

—Nec magnos moleant armenta leones. Virg. Eclog. iv. 92. Nor shall the lions fear the great lions.

10 • And in that day there shall be a foot of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek; and his rest shall be glorious.

11 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.

12 And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.

13 The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim.

14 But they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines toward the west; they shall spoil them of the east together: they shall lay their hand upon Edom and Moab; and the children of Amithon shall obey them.

15 And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dryshod.

16 And there shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.

[There shall be a time when the ravenous wolf shall see the kid lying at ease, and shall not desire to do it an injury.]

I have laid before the Reader these common passages from the most elegant of the ancient poets, that he may see how greatly the prophet on the same subject has the advantage upon the comparison; how much the former fall short of that beauty and elegance, and variety of imagery, with which Isaiah has set forth the very same ideas. The wolf and the leopard not only forbear to destroy the lamb and the kid, but even take their abode and lie down together with them. The calf, and the young lion, and the fating, not only come together, but are led quietly in the same band, and that by a little child. The heifer and the she-bear not only feed together, but even lodge their young ones, for whom they used to be most jealously fearful, in the same place. All the serpent kind is so perfectly harmless, that the sucking infant and the newly weaned child puts his hand on the basilisk's den, and plays upon the hole of the asp. The lion not only abstains from preying on the weaker animals, but becomes tame and domestic, and feeds on straw like the ox. These are all beautiful circumstances, not one of which has been touched upon by the ancient poets. The Arabian and Persian poets elegantly apply the same ideas to shew the effects of justice impartially administered, and firmly supported, by a great and good king:—

"Mahmoud the powerful king, the ruler of the world, Shall first to taste the wolf and the lamb come together to drink." Persius.

"Thou the innocence of righteousness, the blemish wolf Becomes mild, though in the presence of the white kid." The Ovids. Jones, Poet. Arist. Comment. p. 398.

The application is extremely ingenious and beautiful: but the exquisite imagery of Isaiah is not equalled.

Verse 7. (Together) Here a word is omitted in the text, יחד yachad, together; which ought to be repeated in the second hemistich, being quite necessary to the sense. It is accordingly twice expressed by the Septuagint and Syriac.

[Verse 8. The cockatrice den—This is supposed, both by the Targum and by Kimchi, to mean the pupil of this serpent's eye. When, says Kimchi, he is in the mouth of his den in an obscure place, then his eyes sparkle exceedingly: the child, seeing this, and supposing it to be a piece of crystal, or precious stone, puts forth his hand to take it. What would be very dangerous at another time, shall be safe in the days of the Messiah; for, the serpent will not hurt the child.]

Verse 10. A root of Jesse, which shall stand, &c.—(The root of Jesse, which standeth, &c.) St. John hath taken this expression from Isaiah, Rev. v. 5, and xxii. 16, where Christ had twice applied it to Himself. Seven MSS. have ימשיך אדם, the present participle. Radix Isai dicitur jam stare, et aliquantum stetit, in signum populorum. VITRINGA. "The root of Jesse is said to stand, and for some time to have stood, for an ensign to the people." Which rightly explains either of the two readings. [The one hundred and tenth Psalm is a good comment on this verse. See the Notes there.]

Verse 11. And it shall come to pass in that day] This part of the chapter contains a prophecy which certainly remains yet to be accomplished.

The Lord—(Jehovah)] For יראי אדמוסי, thirty-three MSS. of Kennicott, and many of De Rossi's, and two Editions, read יראי יהוה.

[The islands of the sea. The Roman and Turkish empires, says Kimchi.]

Verse 13. The adversaries of Judah—(And the enmity of Judah)] ירימי תעורר. Postulat pars posterior versus, ut intelligantur inimicium Jude in Ephraim: et potest ירימי תעורר) inimicitiam volare, ut (סורא nechamim) penitentiam, Ho. xi. 8. SACCSA.

Verse 15. The Lord shall smite it in the seven streams. (Smite with a drought)] The Chaldee reads חדרים haderim; and so perhaps the Septuagint, who have ερημωσει, the word by which they commonly render it. Vulg. desolabit; "shall desolate." The Septuagint, Vulgate, and Chaldee read חדרים haderich, "shall make it passable," adding the pronoun, which is necessary: [but this reading is not confirmed by any MS.]

Here is a plain allusion to the passage of the Red Sea. And the Lord's shaking His hand over the river with his vehement wind, referring to a particular circumstance of the same miracle:—for he caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all that night, and made the sea dry land, Exod. xiv. 21. The tongue; a very apposite and descriptive expression for a bay such as that of the Red Sea. It is used in the same sense, Josh. xv. 2, 5; xviii. 19. The Latins gave the same name to a narrow strip of land running into the sea: tenuem proci in aquora linguam LUCAN, ii. 613. [He shall smite the river in its seven streams—This has been supposed to refer to the Nile, because it falls into the Mediterranean Sea by seven mouths; but R. Kimchi understands it of the Euphrates, which is the opinion of some good judges. See the Targum. See below.]

Herodotus, lib. i. 189, tells a story of his Cyrus (a very different character from that of the Cyrus of the Scriptures and Xenophon,) which may somewhat illustrate this passage, in which it is said that God would inflict a kind of punishment and judgment on the Euphrates; and render it fordable by dividing it into seven streams. "Cyrus being impeded in his march to Babylon by the Gyndes, a deep and rapid river which falls into the Tigris; and having lost one of his sacred white horses that attempted to pass it, was so enraged against the river that he threatened to reduce it, and make it so shallow that it should be easily fordable even by women, who should not be up to their knees in passing it. Accordingly he set his whole army to work; and cutting three hundred and sixty trenches, from both sides of the river, turned the waters into them, and drained them off."

NOTES ON CHAPTER XII.

This hymn seems, by its whole tenor, and by many expressions in it, much better calculated for the use of the Christian church, than for the Jewish in any circumstances, or at any time that can be assigned. The Jews themselves seem to have applied it to the times of Messiah. On the last day of the feast of tabernacles they fetched water in a golden pitcher from the fountain of Siloah, springing at the foot of Mount Zion without the city: they brought it through the water-gate into the Temple, and poured it, mixed with wine, on the sacrifice as it lay upon the altar, with great rejoicing. They seem to have taken up this custom, for it is not ordained in the Law of Moses, as an emblem of future blessings, in allusion to this passage of Isaiah, Ye shall draw waters with joy from the fountains of salvation, expressions that can hardly be understood of any benefits afforded by the Mosaic dispensation. Our Saviour applied the ceremony, and the intention of it, to Himself, and the effusion of the Holy Spirit, promised, and to be given, by Him. The sense of the Jews in this matter is plainly shewn by the following passage of the Jerusalem Talmud:—"Why is it called the place, or house, of drawing?" (for that was the term for this ceremony, or for the place where the water was taken up;) "because from thence they draw the Holy Spirit; as it is written, And ye shall draw water with joy from the fountains of salvation." See Wolf. Curse Philol. in N. T. on John vii. 37, 39. [The water is Divine knowledge, says Kimchi; and the wells the teachers of righteousness. The Targum renders this in a very remarkable manner:—"Ye shall receive with joy, (וּבְרִיחַ וּבְשִׂמְחָה) a new doctrine, from the chosen among the righteous." Does not this mean the Gospel, the New Covenant? And did not the Targumist speak as a prophet?]

Verse 1. Though thou wast angry—(For though thou hast been angry) The Hebrew phrase, to which the Septuagint and Vulgate have too closely adhered, is exactly the same with that of St. Paul, Rom. iv. 17, "But thanks be to God, that ye were the slaves of sin; but have obeyed from the heart—" that is, "that, whereas, or though, ye were the slaves of sin; yet ye have now obeyed from the heart the doctrine, on the model of which ye were formed."

Verse 2. My song The pronoun is here necessary; and it is added by the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Syriac, who read זמירתי zimratî, as it is in a MS. Two MSS. omit יי yah, see Houbigant, not. in loc. Another MS. has it in one word, זמירתי zimratîyah. Seven others omit יי yah. See Exod. xv. 2, with Var. Lect. Kennicott.

[The Lord JEHOVAH—The word יי yah, read here is probably a mistake; and arose originally from the custom of the Jewish scribes, who, when they found a line too short for the word, wrote as many letters as filled it, and then began the next line with the whole word. In writing the word יי yah, the line might terminate with יי the two first letters; and then at the beginning of the next line the whole word, יי yah, would be written. This might give rise to יי yah Jehovah. The yah is wanting here in two of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., in one ancient MS. of my own, and in the Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic. See Houbigant and De Rossi.

Verse 4. Call upon his name] קרא בשמי kareu bishmo, invoke his name. Make Him your Mediator; or, call the people in His name. Preach Him who is the Root of Jesse, and who stands as an ensign for the nations. Call on the people to believe in Him; as in Him alone salvation is to be found.

Verse 6. Thou inhabitant of Zion] Not only the Jewish people, to whom His word of salvation was to be sent first; but also, all members of the Church of Christ: as in them, and in His church, the Holy One of Israel dwells. St. Paul, speaking of the mystery which had been proclaimed among the Gentiles, sums it up in these words, "which is Christ in you, the hope of glory; whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom, that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." Col. i. 27, 28. Well, therefore, may the inhabitant of Zion cry out and shout.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIII.

This and the following Chapter, (striking off the five last verses of the latter, which belong to a quite different subject,) contain one entire prophecy, foretelling the destruction of Babylon by the Medes and Persians; delivered probably in the reign of Ahaz, (see Vitringa, i. 380,) about two hundred years before the completion of it. The captivity itself of the Jews at Babylon (which the prophet does not expressly foretell, but supposes, in the spirit of prophecy, as what was actually to be effected,) did not fully take place till about one hundred and thirty years after the delivery of this prophecy: and the Medes, who are expressly mentioned chap. xiii. 17, as the principal agents in the overthrow of the Babylonian monarchy, by which the Jews were released from that captivity, were at this time an inconsiderable people; having been in a state of anarchy ever since the fall of the great Assyrian empire, of which they had made a part, under Sardanapalus; and did not become a kingdom under Deioces till about the seventieth of Hezekiah.

The former part of this prophecy is one of the most beautiful examples that can be given of elegance of composition, variety of imagery, and sublimity of sentiment and diction, in the prophetic style; and the latter part consists of an ode of supreme and singular excellence.

The prophecy opens with the command of God to gather together the forces which he had destined to this service, ver. 2, 3. Upon which the prophet immediately hears the tumultuous noise of the different nations crowding together to his standard; he sees them advancing, prepared to execute the Divine wrath, ver. 4, 5. He proceeds to describe the dreadful consequences of this visitation; the consternation which will seize those that are objects of it; and transferring unawares the speech from himself to God, ver. 11, sets forth under a variety of the most striking images, the dreadful destruction of the inhabitants of Babylon, which will follow, ver. 11—16; and the everlasting desolation to which that great city is doomed, ver. 17—22.

The deliverance of Judah from captivity, the immediate consequence of this great revolution, is then set forth, without being much enlarged upon, or greatly amplified, chap. xiv. 1, 2. This introduces, with the greatest ease and the utmost propriety, the triumphant song on that subject, ver. 4—23. The beauties of which, the various images, scenes, persons introduced, and the elegant transition from one to another, I shall here endeavour to point out in their order, leaving a few remarks upon particular passages of these two Chapters to be given after these general observations on the whole.

A chorus of Jews is introduced, expressing their surprise and astonishment at the sudden downfall of Babylon; and the great reverse of fortune that had befallen the tyrant, who, like his predecessors, had oppressed his own, and harassed the neighbouring kingdoms. These oppressed kingdoms, or their rulers, are represented under the image of the fir trees and the cedars of Libanus, frequently used to express any thing in the political or religious world that is supereminently great and majestic: the whole earth shouteth for joy; the cedars of Libanus utter a severe taunt over the fallen tyrant, and boast their security now he is no more.

The scene is immediately changed, and a new set of persons is introduced. The regions of the dead are laid open, and Hades is represented as rousing up the shades of the departed monarchs: they rise from their thrones to meet the king of Babylon at his coming; and insult him on his being reduced to the same low estate of impotence and dissolution with themselves. This is one of the boldest propopœias that ever was attempted in poetry; and is executed with astonishing brevity and perspicuity, and with that peculiar force, which in a great subject naturally results from both. The image of the state of the dead, or the infernum poeticum of the Hebrews, is taken from their custom of burying, those at least of the higher rank, in large sepulchral vaults hewn in the rock. Of this kind of sepulchres there are remains at Jerusalem now extant; and some that are said to be the sepulchres of the kings of Judah. See Maundrell, p. 76. You are to form to yourself an idea of an immense subterranean vault, a vast gloomy cavern, all round the sides of which there are cells to receive the dead bodies: here the deceased monarchs lie in a distinguished sort of state, suitable to their former rank, each on his own couch, with his arms beside him, his sword at his head, and the bodies of his chiefs and companions round about him. See Ezek. xxxii. 27. On which place Sir John Chardin's MS. note is as follows: "En Mingrelie ils dorment tous avec leur épées sous leurs têtes, et leurs autres armes à leur côté; et on les enterre de même, leurs armes posées de cette façon." [In Mingrelia they always sleep with their swords under their heads, and their other arms by their sides; and they bury their dead with their arms placed in the same manner.] These illustrious shades rise at once from their couches, as from their thrones; and advance to the entrance of the cavern to meet the king of Babylon, and to receive him with insults on his fall.

The Jews now resume the speech; they address the king of Babylon as the morning-star fallen from heaven, as the first in splendour and dignity in the political world, fallen from his high state: they introduce him as uttering the most extravagant vaunts of his power and ambitious designs in his former glory. These are strongly contrasted in the close with his present low and abject condition.

Immediately follows a different scene, and a most happy image, to diversify the same subject, to give it a new turn, and an additional force. Certain persons are introduced who light upon the corpse of the king of Babylon, cast out and lying naked on the bare ground, among the common slain, just after the taking of the city; covered with wounds, and so disfigured, that it is some time before they know him. They accost him with the severest taunts; and bitterly reproach him with his destructive ambition, and his cruel usage of the conquered; which have deservedly brought him this ignominious treatment, so different from that which those of his rank usually meet with, and which shall cover his posterity with disgrace.

To complete the whole, God is introduced, declaring the fate of Babylon, the utter extirpation of the royal family, and the total desolation of the city; the deliverance of His people, and the destruction of their enemies; confirming the irreversible decree by the awful sanction of His oath.

I believe it may with truth be affirmed, that there is no poem of its kind extant in any language, in which the subject is so well laid out, and so happily conducted, with such a richness of invention, with such variety of images, persons, and distinct actions, with such rapidity and ease of transition, in so small a compass, as in this ode of Isaiah. For beauty of disposition, strength of colouring, greatness of sentiment, brevity, perspicuity, and force of expression, it stands among all the monuments of antiquity unrivalled.

[Verse 1. The burden of Babylon—The prophecy that foretells its destruction by the Medes and Persians: see the preceding observations.]

Verse 2. Exalt the voice] The word לָבַחֵם, to them, which is of no use, and rather weakens the sentence, is omitted by an ancient MS. and the Vulgate.

[Verse 3. I have commanded my sanctified ones—קָדְשֵׁי מְקֻדָּשָׁי, the persons consecrated to this very purpose.

9 Behold, ^p the day of the LORD cometh, cruel both with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land desolate: and he shall destroy ^q the sinners thereof out of it.

Nothing can be plainer than, that the verb וְקָדַשׁ, to make holy, signifies also to consecrate or appoint to a particular purpose. Bishop Lowth translates, my enrolled warriors.—This is the sense.]

Verse 4. Of the battle.—(For the battle.)] The Bodley MS. has לְמִלְחָמָה, lemilchamah. Cyrus' army was made up of many different nations. Jeremiah calls it "an assembly of great nations from the north country," chap. l. 9. And afterwards mentions the kingdoms of "Ararat, Minni, and Ashchenaz, (i. e. Armenia, Corduene, Pontus or Phrygia, Vitring.) with the kings of the Medes," chap. li. 27, 28. See Xenophon. Cyrop.

[Verse 5. They come from a far country—The word מְעַרְבֵי, me'arabi, is wanting in one MS. and in the Syriac. They come from afar.

From the end of heaven—Kimchi says Media, the end of heaven, in Scripture phrase means, the EAST.]

Verse 8. And they shall be afraid—(And they shall be terrified) I join this verb נִבְחָלוּ, ve-nebhelu, to the preceding verse, with the Syriac and Vulgate.

Pangs and sorrows shall take hold of them—(Pangs shall seize them) The Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee, read עֲחָזוֹם, ye-echazom, instead of עֲחָזוֹן, ye-echazon, which does not express the pronoun them, necessary to the sense.

Verse 10. For the stars of heaven—(Yea, the stars of heaven) The Hebrew poets, to express happiness, prosperity, the instauration and advancement of states, kingdoms, and potentates, make use of images taken from the most striking parts of nature, from the heavenly bodies, from the sun, moon, and stars: which they describe as shining with increased splendour, and never setting. The moon becomes like the meridian sun, and the sun's light is augmented sevenfold, see Isa. xxx. 26, new heavens and a new earth are created, and a brighter age commences. On the contrary, the overthrow and destruction of kingdoms is represented by opposite images. The stars are obscured, the moon withdraws her light, and the sun shines no more! The earth quakes, and the heavens tremble; and all things seem tending to their original chaos. See Joel ii. 10; iii. 15, 16. Amos viii. 9. Matt. xxiv. 29, and De S. Poëa. Hebr. Præl. VI. et IX.

[And the moon shall not cause her light to shine—This in its farther reference, may belong to the Jewish polity both in church and state, which should be totally eclipsed, and perhaps shine no more, in its distinct state, for ever.]

Verse 11. I will punish the world—(I will visit the world) That is, the Babylonish empire: as εὐρώπην, for the Roman empire, or for Judea, Luke ii. 1; Act. xi. 28. So, universus orbis Romanus, for the Roman empire; Salvian, lib. v. Minos calls Crete his world: "Creten, quæ meus est orbis." Ovid. Metamorph. viii. 99.

[Verse 12. I will make a man more precious than fine gold—wedge of Ophir.—The Medes and Persians will not be satisfied with the spoils of the Babylonians. They seek either to destroy or enslave them; and they will accept no ransom for any man—either for עֲנוֹשׁ, the poor man; or for אָדָם, the more honourable person. All must fall by the sword, or go into captivity together: for the Medes, ver 17, regard not silver, and delight not in gold.]

Verse 14. (And the remnant)—Here is plainly a defect in this sentence, as it stands in the Hebrew text; the sub-15 Every one that is found shall be thrust through; and every one that is joined unto them shall fall by the sword.

16 Their children also shall be dashed to pieces before their eyes; their houses shall be spoiled, and their wives ravished.

17 Behold I will stir up the Medes against them which shall not regard silver; and as for gold, they shall not delight in it.

18 Their bows also shall dash the young men to pieces; and they shall have no pity on the fruit of the womb; their eye shall not spare children.

19 And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah.

20 It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall the shepherds make their fold there.

ject of the proposition is lost. What is it that shall be like a roe chased? The Septuagint happily supply it; οὐ καταλειμμένοι, non shaar, the remnant. A MS. here supplies the word yosheb, the inhabitant; which makes a tolerable good sense: but I much prefer the reading of the Septuagint.

They shall—turn—(They shall look) That is, the forces of the king of Babylon, destitute of their leader, and all his auxiliaries, collected from Asia Minor, and other distant countries, shall disperse and flee to their respective homes.

Verse 15. Every one that is found—(Every one that is overtaken) That is, none shall escape from the slaughter: neither they who flee singly, dispersed and in confusion; nor they who endeavour to make their retreat in a more regular manner, by forming compact bodies: they shall all be equally cut off by the sword of the enemy. The Septuagint have understood it in this sense; which they have well expressed:—

“Ὅς γὰρ ἐὰν ἕλθῃ ἠττηθῆσθαι, καὶ οἰκίους συνήρηεντοι πεποιῶνται μάχαιρα.”

[Whoever is caught shall be overthrown, And all that are collected together shall fall by the sword.]

Where for ἠττηθῆσθαι, MS. Pachom. has ἐκκενθηθῆσθαι; et ex Γ Cod. Marchal. in margine, et MS. l. D. II. ἐκκενθηθῆσθαι: which seems to be right, being properly expressive of the Hebrew.

Verse 17. Which shall not regard silver—(Who shall hold silver of no account) That is, who shall not be induced by large offers of gold and silver for ransom, to spare the lives of those whom they have subdued in battle: their rage and cruelty will get the better of all such motives. We have many examples in the Iliad and in the Æneid of addresses of the vanquished to the pity and avarice of the vanquishers, to induce them to spare their lives.

Est domus alta: fecerit penitus defossa, talenta
Ordo argenti: auti auti pondora facti
Infecitque milli: non hic victorie iusurum
Fertur: qui cunctos uno debet discrimina tanta.
Diserat: Æneas contra cui talia reddidit:

Æn. X. 586.

“High in my dome are silver talents roll'd,
With piles of labour'd and unlabour'd gold.
Thou, to procure my ransom, I resign;
The war depends not on a life like mine:
One, one poor life can so much difference yield,
Nor turn the mighty balance of the field.
Thy talents, (said the prince,) thy treasured store,
Keep for thy use.”

It is remarkable, that Xenophon makes Cyrus open a speech to his army, and in particular to the Medes who made the principal part of it, with praising them for their disregard of riches. Ἀνδρες Μῆδοι, καὶ παντός ἐσθεσ, εἰς τὴν οὐδὴν οὐδὲν ἔσθε, ὅτι οὐτε χρημάτων ὀκνηοὶ οὐν εἰς εὐχέρη—“Ye Medes, and others who now hear me, I well know, that you have not accompanied me in this expedition with a view of acquiring wealth.” Cyrop. lib. v.

Verse 18. Their bows also shall dash—(Their bows shall dash.) Both Herodotus, i. 61, and Xenophon, Anab. iii. mention, that the Persians used large bows; τρεῖς μέγαρα; and the latter says particularly, that their bows were three cubits long, Anab. iv. They were celebrated for their archers, see chap. xxii. 6; Jer. xlix. 35. Probably their neighbours and allies, the Medes, dealt much in the same sort of arms. In Ps. xviii. 35; and Job xx. 24, mention is made of a bow of brass: if the Persian bows were of metal, we may easily conceive, that with a metalline bow of three cubits length, and proportionably strong, the soldiers might dash and slay the young men, the weaker and unresisting part of the inhabitants (for they are joined with the fruit of the womb and the children,) in the general carnage on taking the city. [ἠττηθῆσθαι terattashenah, shall be broken or shivered to pieces. This seems to refer, not to τρῦψ νεδρίμ, young men, but to ἠττηθῆσθαι, their bows. The bows of the young men shall be broken to pieces.]

On the fruit, &c.—(And on the fruit, &c.) A MS. of Dr. Kennicott, reads ἠττηθῆσθαι peri, and on the fruit. And nine MSS. (three ancient) and two editions, with the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Syriac, add likewise the conjunction vau, and, to ἠττηθῆσθαι, afterwards.

Verse 19. And Babylon] The great city of Babylon was at this time rising to its height of glory, while the prophet Isaiah was repeatedly denouncing its utter destruction. From the first of Hezekiah to the first of Nebuchadnezzar, under whom it was brought to the highest degree of strength and splendour, are about one hundred and twenty years. I will here very briefly mention some particulars of the greatness of the place, and note the several steps by which this remarkable prophecy was at length accomplished in the total ruin of it.

It was, according to the lowest account given of it by ancient historians, a regular square, forty-five miles in compass, inclosed by a wall two hundred feet high, fifty broad; in which there were a hundred gates of brass. Its principal ornaments were the temple of Belus, in the middle of which was a tower of eight stories of building, upon a base of a quarter of a mile square; a most magnificent palace; and the famous hanging gardens; which were an artificial mountain, raised upon arches, and planted with trees of the largest as well as the most beautiful sorts.

Cyrus took the city, by diverting the waters of the Euphrates, which ran through the midst of it, and entering the place at night by the dry channel. The river being never restored afterward to its proper course, overflowed the whole country, and made it little better than a great morass: this and the great slaughter of the inhabitants, with other bad consequences of the taking of the city, was the first step to the ruin of the place. The Persian monarchs ever regarded it with a jealous eye: they kept it under, and took care to prevent its recovering its former greatness. Darius Hytaspis not long afterward most severely punished it for a revolt, greatly depopulated the place, lowered the walls, and demolished the gates. Xerxes destroyed the temples; and with the rest the great temple of Belus, Herod. ii. 159; Arrian. Exp. Alexandri, lib. vii. The building of Seleucia on the Tigris exhausted Babylon by its neighbourhood, as well as by the immediate loss of inhabitants taken away by Seleucus to people his new city, Strabo, lib. xvi. A king of the Parthians soon after carried away into slavery a great number of the inhabitants, and burned and destroyed the most beautiful parts of the city, Valent. Excerpt. Diodori, p. 377. Strabo (ibid.) says, that in his time great part of it was a mere desert: that the Persians had partly destroyed it; and that time, and the neglect of the Macedonians, while they were masters of it, had nearly completed its destruction. Jerom (in loc.) says, that in his time it was quite in ruins, and that the walls served only for the inclosure of a park or forest for the king's hunting. Modern travellers, who have endeavoured to find the remains of it, have given but a very unsatisfactory account of their success. What Benjamin of Tudela and Pietro della Valle supposed to have been some of its ruins, Tavernier thinks are the remains of some late Arabian building. Upon the whole, Babylon is so utterly annihilated, that even the place, where this wonder of the world stood, cannot now be determined with any certainty! See also note on chap. xliii. 14.

We are astonished at the accounts which ancient historians of the best credit give of the immense extent, height, and thickness of the walls of Nineveh and Babylon: nor are we less astonished, when we are assured, by the concurrent testimony of modern travellers, that no remains, not the least traces, of these prodigious works are now to be found. Our wonder will, I think, be moderated in both respects, if we consider the fabric of these celebrated walls, and the nature of the materials of which they consisted. Buildings in the East have always been, and are to this day, made of earth or clay mixed or beat up, with straw to make the parts cohere, and dried only in the sun. This is their method of making bricks. See note on chap. ix. 9. The walls of the city were built of earth digged out on the spot, and dried upon the place; by which means both the ditch and the wall were at once formed; the former furnishing materials for the latter. That the walls of Babylon were of this kind is well known; and Berosus expressly says, (apud Joseph. Antiq. x. 11), that Nebuchadnezzar added three new walls both to the old and new city, partly of brick and bitumen, and partly of brick alone. A wall of this sort must have a great thickness in proportion to its height, otherwise it cannot stand. The thickness of the walls of Babylon is said to have been one fourth of their height; which seems to have been no more than was absolutely necessary. Maudrel, speaking of the garden walls of Damascus: "They are," says he, "of a very singular structure. They are built of great pieces of earth, made in the fashion of brick, and hardened in the sun. In their dimensions they are two yards long each, and somewhat more than one broad, and half a yard thick." And afterwards, speaking of the walls of the houses; "From this dirty way of building they have this among other inconveniences, that upon any violent rain the whole city becomes, by the washing of the houses, as it were a quagmire," p. 124. And see note on chap. xxx. 13. When a wall of this sort comes to be out of repair, and is neglected, it is easy to conceive the necessary consequences; namely, that in no long course of ages it must be totally destroyed by the heavy rains; and at length washed away, and reduced to its original earth.

Verse 22. In their pleasant palaces—[In their palaces] באמנותא beal-menotais; a plain mistake, I presume, for במנוחא bear-menotais. It is so corrected in [two MSS. the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate.]

Ποιλοῦσθε δ' ἐν ἐμοὶ θαλάσας, φοκαίτε μελαιναί, Οἰκία ποιροῦνται ἀπὸ αἵμα, χηρῆν ἰλαῶν.

[Hom. Hymn in Apul. 71.]

Of which the following passage of Millon may be taken for a translation, though not so designed:—

"And in their palaces,
Where luxury late reign'd, see monsters whelp'd,
And stabl'd." Par. Lost, xi. 750.

[This image of desolation is handled with great propriety and force by some of the Persian poets:—

بندۀ داري ميگند در قصر ذبیر عنكبوت
قومي نوبت ميگند بر کنبند از اسباب

"The spider hol's the we in the palace of Cœsar;
The owl stands ostial on the watchtower of Afrasab."

On this quotation Sir W. Jones observes, noubet نوبت is an Arabic word, signifying, a turn, a change, a watch; hence noubet نوبت zudun, in Persian, signifies, to relieve the guards by the sounds of drums and trumpets. Their office is given by the poet to the owl; as that of دار dar, purdeh dar, or chamberlain, is elegantly assigned to the spider.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIV.

Verse 1. And will yet choose Israel. That is, will still regard Israel as His chosen people; however He may seem to desert them, by giving them up to their enemies, and scattering them among the nations. Judah is sometimes called Israel, see Ezek. xiii. 16; Mal. i. 1; ii. 11: but the name of Jacob, and of Israel, used apparently with design in this place; each of which names includes the twelve tribes; and the other circumstances mentioned in this and the next verse, which did not in any complete sense accompany the return from the captivity of Babylon;

3 And it shall come to pass in the day that the Lord shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage wherein thou wast made to serve,

4 That thou shalt take up this proverb against the king of Babylon, and say, How hath the oppressor ceased! the golden city ceased!

5 The Lord hath broken the staff of the wicked, and the sceptre of the rulers.

6 He who smote the people in wrath with a continual stroke, he that ruled the nations in anger, is persecuted, and none hindereth.

7 The whole earth is at rest, and is quiet: they break forth into singing.

8 Yea, the fir trees rejoice at thee, and the cedars of Lebanon, saying, Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us.

9 Hell is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming: it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth; it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations.

seem to intimate that this whole prophecy extends its views beyond that event.

[Verse 2. For servants and handmaids—For thralls and thrallesses. Old Bible.]

Verse 3. In the day—[In that day] ביום ביהוה bayom hahu, The word day hahu, is added in two MSS. [of Kennicot's,] and was in the copies from which the Septuagint and Vulgate translated: εν τη ημερα αυτων, in die illa, (h awanawoi, MS. Pachom. adding 3.) This is a matter of no great consequence: however it restores the Text to the common form, almost constantly used on such occasions; and is one among many instances of a word apparently lost out of the printed copies.

Verse 4. This proverb—[This parable] Mashal משל I take this to be the general name for poetic style among the Hebrews, including every sort of it, as ranging under one, or other, or all, of the characters, of sententious, figurative, and sublime; which are all contained in the original notion, or in the use and application of the word mashal. Parables, or proverbs, such as those of Solomon, are always expressed in short pointed sentences; frequently figurative, being formed on some comparison; generally forcible, and authoritative, both in the matter and the form. And such in general is the style of the Hebrew poetry. The verb mashal signifies to rule; to exercise authority; to make equal; to compare one thing with another; to utter parables, or acute, weighty, and powerful speeches, in the form and manner of parables, though not properly such. Thus Balaam's first prophecy, Numb. xxiii. 7-10, is called his mashal; though it has hardly any thing figurative in it: but it is beautifully sententious; and, from the very form and manner of it, has great spirit, force, and energy. Thus Job's last speeches, in answer to the three friends, chap. xxvii.—xxxii., are called mashals; from no one particular character, which discriminates them from the rest of the poem; but from the sublime, the figurative, the sententious manner, which equally prevails through the whole poem, and makes it one of the first and most eminent examples extant of the truly great and beautiful, in poetic style. [See the Note on Prov. i. 1.]

The Septuagint in this place render the word by θρῆνος, a lamentation. They plainly consider the speech here introduced as a piece of poetry; and of that species of poetry which we call the elegiac: either from the subject, it being a poem on the fall and death of the king of Babylon; or from the form of the composition, which is of the longer sort of Hebrew verse, in which the Lamentations of Jeremiah, called by the Septuagint θρῆνος, are written.

[The golden city ceased—מדהבה madedebah, which is here translated golden city, is a Chaldee word. Probably it means that golden coin or ingot which was given to the Babylonians by way of tribute. So the word is understood by the Vulgate, where it is rendered tributum; and by Montanus, who translates it auræ pensio, the golden pension. Kimchi seems to have understood the word in the same sense. De Rossi translates it auri discus, rich in gold; or auri exactrix, the exactor of gold—the same as the exactor of tribute.

Verse 9. Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee—That is, Nebuchadnezzar. "H (hell) hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the earth;—the ghosts (rephaim) of all the mighty ones, or goats (ruy Atudey), of the earth—all the oppressors of mankind. What a most terrible idea is here! Tyrannical kings, who have oppressed and spoiled mankind, are here represented as enthroned in hell;—and as taking a Satanic pleasure in seeing others of the same description enter these abodes of misery.]

Verse 11. Cover thee—(Thy covering) Twenty-eight MSS. (ten ancient) [of Kennicott's, thirty-nine of De Rossi's, twelve editions,] with the Septuagint and Vulgate, read כסוּךְ u-mecassa, in the singular number.

[Verse 12. O Lucifer, son of the morning—The Versions in general agree in this translation; and render לְלוּכִיִּם heilel, as signifying Lucifer, Φωσφορος, the morning star, whether Jupiter or Venus; as these are both bringers of the morning light, or morning stars, annually in their turn. And although the context speaks explicitly concerning Nebuchadnezzar; yet this has been, I know not why, applied to the chief of the fallen angels, who is most incongruously denominated Lucifer, (the bringer of light!) an epithet as common to him as those of Satan and Devil. That the Holy Spirit by His prophets should call this arch-enemy to God and man the Light-bringer, would be strange indeed. But the truth is, the Text speaks nothing at all concerning Satan, nor his fall, nor the occasion of that fall, which many divines have with great confidence deduced from this Text. O how necessary it is to understand the literal meaning of Scripture, that preposterous Comments may be prevented. Besides, I doubt much whether our translation be correct. לְלוּכִיִּם heilel, which we translate Lucifer, comes from לָלַץ yalah, yell, howl, or shriek: and should be translated, "Howl, son of the morning"—and so the Syriac has understood it: and for this meaning Michaelis contends, see his reasons in Parkhurst, under לָלַץ hallal.

Verse 13. I will ascend into heaven—I will get the empire of the whole world. I will exalt my throne above the stars of God—above the Israelites, who are here termed the stars of God. So the Targum of Jonathan; and R. D. Kimchi. This Chapter speaks not of the ambition and fall of Satan: but of the pride, arrogance, and fall, of Nebuchadnezzar.]

The mount of the congregation—(The mount of the Divine presence) It appears plainly from Exod. xxv. 22; and x. ix. 42, 43, where God appoints the place of meeting with Moses, and promises to meet with him before the ark, to commune with him, and to speak unto him; and to meet the children of Israel at the door of the tabernacle; that the tabernacle, and afterwards the door of the temple, and mount Sion, (or Moriah, which is reckoned a part of Mount Sion.) whereon it stood, was called the tabernacle, and the mount of convention or of appointment; not from the people's assembling there to perform the services of their religion, (which is what our translation expresses by calling it the tabernacle of the congregation,) but because God appointed that for the place where He Himself would meet with Moses and commune with him, and would meet with the people. Therefore הַר סִיוֵן har moled, or מִלְּמֹלֶה ohal moled, means the place appointed by God, where He would present Himself: agreeably to which I have rendered it in this place, the mount of the Divine presence.

Verse 19. Like an abominable branch—(Like the tree abominated) That is, as an object of abomination and detestation; such as the tree is, on which a malefactor has been hanged. "It is written," saith St. Paul, Gal. iii. 23, "Cursed is every man that hangeth on a tree," from Deut. xxi. 23. The Jews therefore held also as accursed and polluted the tree itself on which a malefactor had been executed, or on which he had been hanged after having been put to death by stoning. Non suspendunt super arbore, quæ radicibus solo adhaerent; sed super ligno eradicato, ut ne sit excisio molesta: nam lignum, super quo fuit aliquis suspensus, cum suspendio sepelitur; ne maneat illi malum nomen, et dicant homines, Istud est lignum, in quo suspensus est ille, & deus. Sic lapis, quo aliquis fuit lapidatus; et gladius, quo fuit occisus is qui est occisus; et sudarium sive manille, quo fuit aliquis strangulatus; omnia hæc cum eis, qui perierunt, sepeliuntur." Maimonides, apud Cosaub. in Baron. Exercit. xvi. An. 34, Num. 134. "Cum itaque homo suspensus maxime esset abominationi,—Judæi quoque præ cæteris abominabantur lignum quo fuerat suspensus, ita ut illud quoque terra legerent, tanquam rem abominabilem. Unde interpres Chaldaeus hæc verba transtulit כְּעֵץ עָלֵי חַיִּים cahat tamir, sicut virgultum abeconditum, sive sepultum." Kalinski, Vaticinia Observationibus Illustrata, p. 342.

[The Jews never hang any malefactor upon a tree that is growing in the earth, but upon a post fixed in the ground, that it might never be said, "that is the tree on which such a one was hanged;" for custom required that the tree should be buried with the malefactor. In like manner, the stones by which a criminal was stoned to death, or the sword by which he was beheaded, or the napkin or handkerchief by which he was strangled, should be buried with him in the same grave. For as the hanged man was considered the greatest abomination, so the very post or wood on which he was hanged was deemed a most abominable thing, and therefore buried under the earth.]

Agreeably to which Theodoret. Hist. Ecclesiast. i. 17, 18, in his account of the finding of the cross by Helena, says, "That the three crosses were buried in the earth near the place of our Lord's sepulchre." [And this circumstance seems to confirm the relation of the discovery of the cross of Christ. The crosses were found where custom required that they should be buried.]

Verse 19. The raiment of those that are slain—(Clothed with the slain) Thirty-five MSS. (ten ancient,) and three editions, have the word fully written, לְבוּשׁ leboosh. It is not a noun, but a participle passive; thrown out among the common slain, and covered with the dead bodies. So ver. 11, the earth worm is said to be his bed covering. [This reading is confirmed by two ancient MSS. in my own collection.]

Verse 20. Because thou hast destroyed thy land, &c.—(Because thou hast destroyed thy country; thou hast slain thy people.) Xenophon gives an instance of this king's wanton cruelty in killing the son of Gobrias, on no other provocation than that, in hunting, he struck a boar and a lion which the king had missed. Cyrop. iv. p. 309.

Verse 23. I will sweep it with the beam of destruction—(I will plunge it in the miry gulf of destruction) I have here very nearly followed the Version of the Septuagint;

24 The Lord of hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought so shall it come to pass; and as I have purposed, so shall it stand:

25 That I will break the Assyrian in my land, and upon my mountains tread him under foot: then shall his yoke depart from off them, and his burden depart from off their shoulders.

26 This is the purpose that is purposed upon the whole earth: and this is the hand that is stretched out upon all the nations.

27 For the Lord of hosts hath purposed, and who shall disannul it? and his hand is stretched out, and who shall turn it back?

28 In the year that king Ahaz died was this burden.

29 Rejoice not thou, whole Palestina, because the rod of him that smote thee is broken: for out of the serpent's root shall come forth a cockatrice, and his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent.

30 And the first born of the poor shall feed, and the needy shall lie down in safety: and I will kill thy root with famine, and he shall slay thy remnant.

31 Howl, O gate; cry, O city; thou, whole Palestina, art dissolved: for there shall come from the north a smoke, and none shall be alone in his appointed times.

32 What shall one then answer the messengers of the nation? that the Lord hath founded Zion, and the poor of his people shall trust in it.

the reasons for which see in the last note on De Poesi Hebr. Prælect. xxviii.

[The besom of destruction, as our Version renders it, מַסְכָּוֹת be-matath.—This, says Kimchi, is a Chaldean word:—and it is worthy of remark, that the Prophet, writing to the Chaldeans, uses several words peculiar to their own language, to point out the nature of the Divine judgments, and the causes of them. See the note on Jer. x. 11. Sixteen of Kennicott's MSS. and seventeen of De Rossi's, and one ancient of my own, have the word מַסְכָּוֹת be-matath, in the plural—I will sweep her with the besoms of destruction.]

Verse 25. I will break the Assyrian—upon my mountains—(To crush the Assyrian—on my mountains)] The Assyrians and Babylonians are the same people, Herod. i. 199, 200. Babylon is reckoned the principal city in Assyria, ibid. 178. Strabo says the same thing, lib. xvii. sub init. The circumstance of this judgment's being to be executed on God's mountains is of importance: it may mean the destruction of Sennacherib's army near Jerusalem; and have a still farther view, compare Ezek. xxxix. 4, and see Lowth on this place of Isaiah.

Verse 28. In the year that king Ahaz died was this burden.] Uzziah had subdued the Philistines, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6, 7; but taking advantage of the weak reign of Ahaz, they invaded Judea, and took and held in possession some cities in the southern part of the kingdom. On the death of Ahaz, Isaiah delivers this prophecy, threatening them with the destruction that Hezekiah his son, and great-grandson of Uzziah, should bring upon them: which he effected; for "he smote the Philistines, even unto Gaza, and the borders thereof," 2 Kings xviii. 8. Uzziah therefore must be meant by the rod that smote them, and by the serpent, from whom should spring the flying fiery serpent, ver. 29; that is, Hezekiah, a much more terrible enemy, than even Uzziah had been.

[The Targum renders the twenty-ninth verse in a singular way. For, from the sons of Jesse shall come forth the Messiah. And his works among you shall be as the flying serpent.]

Verse 30. And the first born of the poor, &c.—The Targum goes on applying all to the Messiah.—And the poor of the people shall he feed, and the humble shall dwell securely in his days: and he shall kill thy children with famine, and the remnant of thy people shall he slay.]

I will kill—(He will slay)] The Septuagint reads τὸν ἡμίτην, in the third person, ἀνελεί; and so the Chaldee. The Vulgate remedies the confusion of persons in the present Text, by reading both the verbs in the first person.

Verse 31. There shall come from the north a smoke—(From the north cometh a smoke)] That is, a cloud of dust raised by the march of Hezekiah's army against Philistia; which lay to the south-west from Jerusalem. A great dust raised, has, at a distance, the appearance of smoke, "fumantes pulveres campi." Virg. Æn. xi. 908. [The fields smoking with dust.]

Verse 32. The messengers of the nations—(The ambassadors of the nations)] The Septuagint read τῶν γογγύων, ἄνωγ, plural; and so the Chaldee, and one MS. The ambassadors of the neighbouring nations, that send to congratulate Hezekiah, on his success; which in his answer he will ascribe to the protection of God. See 2 Chron.

xxxiii. 23. Or, if we go, singular, the reading of the Text, be preferred, the ambassadors sent by the Philistines to demand peace.

[The Lord hath founded Zion—Kimchi refers this to the state of Zion under Hezekiah, when the rest of the cities of Judea had been taken, and this only was left for a hope to the poor of God's people: and God defended it so, that Rabahakeh could not prevail against it.]

The true church of God is a place of safety: for as all its members are devoted to God, and walk in His testimonies, so they are continually defended and supported by Him. In the congregations of His people, God dispenses His light and salvation; hence His poor or humble ones expect in his ordinances the blessings they need.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XV.

This and the following Chapter, taken together, make one entire prophecy, very improperly divided into two parts. The time of the delivery, and consequently of the completion of it, which was to be in three years from that time, is uncertain: the former not being marked in the prophecy itself, nor the latter recorded in history. But the most probable account is, that it was delivered soon after the foregoing, in the first year of Hezekiah; and that it was accomplished in his fourth year, when Shalmaneser invaded the kingdom of Israel. He might probably march through Moab; and, to secure every thing behind him, possess himself of the whole country, by taking their principal strong places, Ar and Kirharez. [The Authorized Version, which we have followed in the Margin, places the prophecy in this Chapter fourteen years earlier than that contained in the two preceding.]

Jeremiah has happily introduced much of this prophecy of Isaiah into his own larger prophecy against the same people in his forty-eighth chapter, denouncing God's judgments on Moab, subsequent to the calamity here foretold, and to be executed by Nebuchadnezzar: by which means several mistakes [of transcribers] in the present Text of both prophets may be rectified.

Verse 1. Because in the night] בַּלַּיִל beleil. That both these cities should be taken in the night is a circumstance somewhat unusual; and not so material, as to deserve to be so strongly insisted upon. Vitringa, by his remark on this word, shews, that he was dissatisfied with it in its plain and obvious meaning; and is forced to have recourse to a very hard metaphorical interpretation of it. Noctu vel nocturno impetu; vel metaphorice, repente, subito, insperata destructione: placet posterius. Camet conjectures, and I think it probable, that the true reading is כַּלֵּיל ke-leil, as the night. There are many mistakes in the Hebrew Text, arising from the very great similitude of the letters בּ beth and כּ caph, which, in many MSS. and some printed Editions, are hardly distinguishable. Admitting this reading, the translation will be,—

"Because Ar is utterly destroyed, Moab is undone!
Because Kir is utterly destroyed, Moab is undone!"

[Verse 2. He is gone to Bajith and to Dibon—עָלָה הַבַּיִת הַגָּבֹהּ ḥalah ha-beith, should be rendered, he is gone to the house, i. e. to their chief temple, where they practised idolatry. Dibon was the name of a tower, where also was an idolatrous temple—thither they went to weep and pray before their idols, that they might interpose and save them from their calamities. So R. D. Kimchi. He is gone to Bajith of the plentiful field; and in the vineyards there shall be no stinging, neither shall there be shouting: the treaders shall tread out no wine in their presses; I have made their vintage-shouting to cease.

11 Wherefore my bowels shall sound like a harp for Moab, and mine inward parts for Kir-hareah.

12 And it shall come to pass, when it is seen that Moab is weary on the high place, that he shall come to his sanctuary to pray; but he shall not prevail.

13 This is the word that the Lord hath spoken concerning Moab since that time.

14 But now the Lord hath spoken, saying, Within three years, as the years of an hireling, and the glory of Moab shall be contemned, with all that great multitude; and the remnant shall be very small and feeble.

CHAPTER XVII.

Judgments of God upon Damascus, 1-5. And upon Israel, 4-6. (Good effects of the same judgments represented in other but stronger terms, and computed to Israel, and signs of God, 9-11. The remaining verses are a distinct prophecy, a beautiful detached piece, written up with the greatest elegance, simplicity, and brevity; and forming a noble description of the formidable invasion and sudden overthrow of Samaria, exactly suitable to the event, 12-14.

quit to the shouting)] The Septuagint read נצורו hishbeth, passive, and in the third person; rightly: for God is not the Speaker in this place. The rendering of the Septuagint is ἐπίταξις γὰρ κληρονομία, [the cry ceased]; which last word, necessary to the rendering of the Hebrew and to the sense, is supplied by MSS. Pachom, and 1. D. 11. having been lost out of the other copies.

Verse 12. When it is seen that Moab, &c.—[When Moab shall see, &c.]] For נצורו nearoh, a MS. reads נצורו roah, and so the Syriac and Chaldee. "Perhaps נצורו is כי אהרם is only a various reading of נצורו כי כי neelah." SNOOKER. A very probable conjecture.

[Verse 14. Within three years—עשׂים beahlish, עשׂים keahleah, according, or in or about three years, is the reading of nine of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and two ancient editions.

But the present reading may well stand: Now, the Lord hath spoken, saying, within three years, as the years of an hireling.—It seems as if this prophecy had been delivered before, without any time specified for its fulfilment: but now the time is determined—in three years, as the years of an hireling—for, as a hireling counts even to a single day, and will not abide with his employer an hour beyond the time agreed on; so, in three years, even to a day, from the delivery of this Prophecy, shall destruction come upon Moab. This is the import of the present Text: but if we take עשׂים ke-shaloh, as in three years, or in about three years' time, the prophecy is not so definite.

These three years, says Calmet, are mentioned from the death of Ahaz, (see chap. xiv. 28,) and end the third year of Hezekiah, three years before the taking of Samaria by Sennacherib. This conqueror did not ruin Moab so completely as not to leave a man in the land; the final desolation of Moab was reserved for Nebuchadnezzar, five years after the taking of Jerusalem.

Feeble.—[And without strength.] An ancient MS., with the Septuagint, read, וְכִי יִלְכּוּ אֲדָמָה נֹת.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVII.

This prophecy by its title should relate only to Damascus: but it full as much concerns, and more largely treats of, the kingdom of Samaria and the Israelites, confederated with Damascus and the Syrians against the kingdom of Judah. It was delivered probably soon after the prophecies of the seventh and eighth chapters, in the beginning of the reign of Ahaz; and was fulfilled by Tiglath Pileser's taking Damascus, and carrying the people captives to Kir, (2 Kings xvi. 9,) and overrunning great part of the kingdom of Israel, and carrying a great number of the Israelites also captives to Assyria; and still more fully to regard to Israel, by the conquest of the kingdom, and the captivity of the people, effected a few years after by Sennacherib.

[Verse 1. The burden of Damascus.—According to the common Version, The cities of Arzer are forsaken.—It has already been observed by the learned prelate, that the prophecy, as it relates to Damascus, was executed in the 9 The cities of Arzer are forsaken; they shall be for flocks, which shall lie down, and none shall make them afraid.

3 = The fortress also shall cease from Ephraim, and the kingdom from Damascus, and the remnant of Syria: they shall be as the glory of the children of Israel, saith the Lord of hosts.

4 And in that day it shall come to pass, that the glory of Jacob shall be made thin, and the fatness of his flesh shall wax lean.

5 And it shall be as when the harvestman gathereth the corn, and repenteth the ears with his arm; and it shall be as he that gathereth ears in the valley of Rephaim.

6 Yet gleanings grapes shall be left in it, as the shaking of an olive tree, two or three berries in the top of the uppermost bough, four or five in the outmost fruitful branches thereof; saith the Lord God of Israel.

7 At that day shall a man look to his Maker; and his eyes shall have respect to the Holy One of Israel.

8 And he shall not look to the altars, the work of his hands, neither shall respect that which his fingers have made, either the groves, or the images.

9 In that day shall his strong cities be as a forsaken bough, and an uppermost branch, which

1 Jan. 7. 33.—Ch. 7. 16. & 8. 4.—Ch. 10. 16.—Jer. 51. 38.—p. Ch. 24. 12.—q. Mic. 7. 7.—Or, sunimag.

beginning of the reign of Ahaz, probably about the third year. If we credit Midrash, the Damascenes were the most estimatees and flagrant of all idolaters. "There were in Damascus three hundred and sixty-five streets, in each of these was an idol, and each idol had his peculiar day of worship; so that the whole were worshipped in the course of the year."—This, or any thing like this, was a sufficient reason for this city's destruction.]

A ruinous heap.] For נצורו me, a ruinous heap, the Septuagint read ἰλλο-εἶ, for a ruin, the Vulgate ἰλλο-εἶ, as a ruin. I follow the former.

Verse 2. The cities of Arzer are forsaken.—[The cities are deserted for ever.] What has Arzer on the river Arnon to do with Damascus? and if there be another Arzer on the northern border of the tribe of Gad, (as Reland seems to think there might be,) this is not much more to the purpose. Besides, the cities of Arzer, if Arzer itself is a city, makes no good sense. The Septuagint, for ארזר ארזר, read ἰλλο-εἶ ἰλλο-εἶ, ἰλλο-εἶ ἰλλο-εἶ, for ever, or for a long duration. The Chaldee takes the word for a verb from ארזר ארזר, translating it ארזר cherebu, devastabuntur, (they shall be wasted.) The Syriac reads ארזר ארזר. So that the reading is very doubtful. I follow the Septuagint as making the plainest sense.

Verse 3. The remnant of Syria.—[The pride of Syria.] For נצורו shaar, remnant, Hieronymus reads נצורו sheath, the pride, answering, as the sentence seems evidently to require, to נצורו kebood, the glory of Israel. The conjecture is so very probable, that I venture to follow it.

[As the glory—נצורו kebood, in the glory is the reading of eight MSS., and ten Editions.

Verse 4. In that day.—That is, says Kimchi, the time when the ten tribes of Israel, which were the glory of Jacob, should be carried into captivity.]

Verse 5. As when the harvestman gathereth.—[As when one gathereth.] That is, the king of Assyria shall sweep away the whole body of the people; as the reaper strippeth off the whole crop of corn; and the remnant shall be no more in proportion, than the scattered ears left to the gleaner. The valley of Rephaim near Jerusalem, was celebrated for its plentiful harvest; it is here used poeticaly for any fruitful country. [One MS. and one ancient Edition, has נצורו beasaph, in gathering; instead of נצורו keasaph, as the gathering.]

Verse 8. The altars, the work of his hands.—[The altars dedicated to the work of his hands.] The construction of the words, and the meaning of the sentence, in this place, are not obvious: all the ancient Versions and most of the modern, have mistaken it. The word נצורו measch, the work, stands in regimine with נצורו mizbechoth, altars, not in opposition with it: it means the altars of the work of their hand; that is, of the idols; which are the work of their hands. Thus Kimchi has explained it, and Le Clerc has followed him.

Verse 9. As a forsaken bough, and an uppermost branch.—[the Hivites and the Amorites.] נצורו ארזר ha-they left because of the children of Israel: and there shall be desolation.

10 Because thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the rock of thy strength, therefore shalt thou plant pleasant plants, and shalt set it with strange slips.

11 In the day shalt thou make thy plant to grow, and in the morning shalt thou make thy seed to flourish: but the harvest shall be a heap in the day of grief and of desperate sorrow.

12 Woe to the multitude of many people, which make a noise like the noise of the seas; and to the rushing of nations, that make a rushing like the rushing of mighty waters!

13 The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters: but God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the wind, and like a rolling thing before the whirlwind.

14 And behold at evening-tide trouble; and before the morning he is not. This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us.

CHAPTER XVIII.

This Chapter contains a very obscure prophecy; possibly designed to give the Jews, and perhaps the Egyptians, whose country is supposed to be meant, 1, 2; and with whom many Jews resided, an intimation of God's interposition in favour of Sennacherib, whose vast army, just as he thought his projects ripe, and ready to be crowned with success, 5; should become a prey to the hosts of the field, and to the fowls of heaven, 6; and that Egypt should be grateful to God for the deliverance vouchsafed her, 7.

choreah vehasmir. No one has ever yet been able to make any tolerable sense of these words. The translation of the Septuagint has happily preserved what seems to be the true reading of the Text, as it stood in the copies of their time; though the words are now transposed, either in the Text or in their Version; or Απεπατοι και οι Εβαιτοι, the Amorites and the Hivites. It is remarkable that many commentators, who never thought of admitting the reading of the Septuagint, yet understand the passage as referring to that very event, which their Version expresses: so that it is plain that nothing can be more suitable to the context. My father saw the necessity of admitting this variation at a time when it was not usual to make so free with the Hebrew Text. [Mr. Parkhurst is not satisfied with the prelate's adoption of the reading of the Septuagint, the Hivites and the Amorites. He thinks the difficult words should be thus rendered: he takes the whole verse.—And his fortified cities shall be like the leaving, or what is left, נטוהו כאסבא, of, or in a ploughed field (נטוהו ha-chareah) or on a branch which they leave (coram) before the children of Israel. Which he considers a plain reference to the Mosaic laws relative to the not gleaming of their ploughed fields, vineyards and olive-yards: but leaving נטוהו אצב, somewhat of the fruits for the poor of the land, Lev. ix. 9, 10. Deut. xxiv. 19—21, in the Hebrew. I fear that the Text is taken by storm on both interpretations. One MS. has נטוהו כל ארי, all the cities; and instead of נטוהו החאלמה, of the branch, six MSS. have נטוהו החודשה, of the month. But this is probably a mistake.]

Verse 10. Strange Hps.—(Shoots from a foreign soil) The pleasant plants, and shoots from a foreign soil, are allegorical expressions for strange and idolatrous worship; vicious and abominable practices connected with it; reliance on human aid, and on alliances entered into with the neighbouring nations, especially Egypt: to all which the Israelites were greatly addicted; and in their expectations from which they should be grievously disappointed.

Verse 12. Woe to the multitude] The three last verses of this Chapter seem to have no relation to the foregoing prophecy, to which they are joined. It is a beautiful piece, standing singly and by itself; for neither has it any connexion with what follows: whether it stands in its right place, or not, I cannot say. It is a noble description of the formidable invasion, and of the sudden overthrow, of Sennacherib; which is intimated in the strongest terms, and the most expressive images; exactly suitable to the event.

Like the rushing of mighty waters.] Five words, three at the end of the twelfth verse, and two at the beginning of the thirteenth, are omitted in eight MSS. with the Syriac; that is, in effect, the repetition contained in the first line of ver. 13, in this translation, is not made. After having observed that it is equally easy to account for the omission of these words by a transcriber, if they are genuine, or their insertion, if they are not genuine; and occasioned by his carrying his eye backwards to the word נטוהו le-ummin, or forwards to נטוהו yeshoon; I shall leave it to the Reader's judgment to determine whether they are genuine or not. [Instead of נטוהו kehamoth, as the roaring, five MSS. and the Vulgate have נטוהו kehamun, as the multitude.]

Verse 14. He is not.—(He is no more) For נטוהו einennu ten MSS. of Dr. Kennicott, (three ancient) ten of De Rossi, and two Editions, and the Septuagint, Syriac, Chaldee, Vulgate, and Arabic, have נטוהו ve-imeno. This particle, authenticated by so many good vouchers, restores the sentence to the true poetical form, implying a repetition of some part of the parallel line preceding, thus:—

"At the season of evening, behold terror! Before the morning, and [behold] he is no more!"

[That spoil us.—For נטוהו abosenu, them that spoil us, fifteen MSS. one Edition, and the Syriac have נטוהו abosano, him that spoileth us. And for נטוהו lobozzimu, those that rob us, six MSS. and the Syriac have נטוהו lebazzeno, him that robbeth us: and these readings make the place answer better to Sennacherib, according to Lowth's conjecture. Though God may permit the wicked to prevail for a time against His people, yet in the end those shall be overthrown, and the glory of the Lord shall shine brightly on them that fear Him: for the earth shall be subdued, and the universe filled with His glory. Amen, and Amen!]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVIII.

This is one of the most obscure prophecies in the whole Book of Isaiah. The subject of it, the end and design of it, the people to whom it is addressed, the history to which it belongs, the person who sends the messengers, and the nation to whom the messengers are sent, are all obscure and doubtful.

[Verse 1. Woe to the land—נטוהו Hoi arets! This interjection should be translated ho! for it is properly a particle of calling. Hoi Land! Attend,—give ear.]

Shadowing with wings.—(The winged cymbal) נטוהו טיללל canaphayim. I adopt this as the most probable of the many interpretations that have been given of these words. It is Bochart's: see Phaleg, iv. 2. The Egyptian sistrum is expressed by a periphrasis; the Hebrews had no name for it in their language, not having in use the instrument itself. The cymbal they had; an instrument in its use and sound not much unlike to the sistrum; and to distinguish it from the sistrum, they called it the cymbal with wings. The cymbal was a round hollow piece of metal, which being struck against another, gave a ringing sound: the sistrum was a round instrument consisting of a broad rim of metal, through which from side to side ran several loose laminae, or small rods of metal, which being shaken, gave a like sound. These, projecting on each side, had somewhat of the appearance of wings; or might be very properly expressed by the same word which the Hebrews used for wings, or for the extremity, or a part of any thing projecting. The sistrum is given in a medal of Adrian, as the proper attribute of Egypt. See Addison on Medals, Series iii. No. 4, where the figure of it may be seen. [The frame of the sistrum was in shape rather like the ancient tyre; it was not round.]

If we translate shadowing with wings, it may allude to the multitude of its vessels, whose sails may be represented under the notion of wings. The second verse seems to support this interpretation. Vessels of bulrushes, נטוהו gome, or rather the flag papyrus, so much celebrated as the substance on which people wrote in ancient times, and from which our paper is denominated. The sails might have been made of this flag: but whole canoes were constructed from it. Mat sails are used to the present day in China. The Vulgate fully understood the meaning of the word; and has accordingly translated in vasis papyri, "in vessels of papyrus." בעשף בעשפים. Old MS. Bb. This interpretation does not please Bp. Lowth, and for his dissent he gives the following reasons:—

In opposition to other interpretations of these words, which have prevailed, it may be briefly observed that נטוהו טיללל is never used to signify shadow, nor נטוהו canaph applied to the sails of ships.

If, therefore, the words are rightly interpreted the winged cymbal, meaning the sistrum, Egypt must be the country to which the prophecy is addressed. And upon this hypothesis the version and explanation must proceed. I further suppose, that the prophecy was delivered before Sennacherib's return from his Egyptian expedition, which took up three years; and that it was designed to give to the Jews,

3 That sendeth ambassadors by the sea, even in vessels of bulrushes upon the waters, saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden down, whose land the rivers have spoiled!

3 All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an and perhaps likewise to the Egyptians, in intimation of God's counsels in regard to the destruction of their great and powerful enemy.

Which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia.—(Which borders on the rivers of Cush.) What are the rivers of Cush, whether the eastern branches of the lower Nile, the boundary of Egypt towards Arabia, or the parts of the upper Nile towards Ethiopia, it is not easy to determine. The word Wyp weeber, signifies either on this side, or on the farther side: I have made use of the same kind of ambiguous expression in the translation.

Verse 2. In vessels of bulrushes.—(In vessels of papyrus.) This circumstance agrees perfectly well with Egypt. It is well known that the Egyptians commonly used on the Nile a light sort of ships, or boats, made of the reed papyrus. Es ipsa quidem papyro navigia terunt. PLIN. xiii. 11.

Go, ye swift messengers] To this nation before mentioned, who, by the Nile, and by their numerous canals, have the means of spreading the report in the most expeditious manner through the whole country: go, ye swift messengers, and carry this notice of God's designs in regard to them. By the swift messengers are meant not any particular persons specially appointed to this office, but any the usual conveyers of news whatsoever, travellers, merchants, and the like, the instruments and agents of common fame. These are ordered to publish this declaration made by the prophet throughout Egypt, and to all the world; and to excite their attention to the promised visible interposition of God.

Scattered.—(Stretched out in length) Egypt, that is, the fruitful part of it, exclusive of the deserts on each side, is one long vale, through the middle of which runs the Nile, bounded on each side to the east and west by a chain of mountains seven hundred and fifty miles in length; in breadth from one to two or three days' journey: even at the widest part of the Delta, from Pelusium to Alexandria, not above two hundred and fifty miles broad. Egmont and Hayman, and Pocock's Travels.

Peeled.—(Smoothed) Either relating to the practice of the Egyptian priests, who made their bodies smooth by shaving off their hair, (see Herod. ii. 37.) or rather to the country's being made smooth, perfectly plain and level, by the overflowing of the Nile.

Meted out.—(Meted out by line) It is generally referred to the frequent necessity of having recourse to mensuration in Egypt, in order to determine the boundaries after the inundations of the Nile; to which even the origin of the science of geometry is by some ascribed. Strabo, lib. xvii. sub init.

Trodden down] Supposed to allude to a peculiar method of tillage in use among the Egyptians. Both Herodotus (lib. ii.) and Diodorus, (lib. i.) say that when the Nile had retired within its banks, and the ground became somewhat dry, they sowed their land, and then sent in their cattle (their hogs, says the former,) to tread in the seed; and without any farther care expected the harvest.

The rivers have spoiled.—(The rivers have nourished) The word Waz bazeu is generally taken to be an irregular form for Waz bazazu, "have spoiled," as four MSS. have it in this place; and so most of the Versions, both ancient and modern, understand it. On which Schultens, Gram. Heb. p. 491, has the following remark:—"Ne minimam quidem speciem veritatis habet Waz bazeu. Esai. xxiii. 2. elatum pro Waz *bazazu, diripiunt. signifies uber, "a dug," mamma, "a breast;" agreeably to which the verb might signify to nourish. This would perfectly well suit with the Nile: whereas nothing can be more discordant than the idea of spoiling and plundering; for to the inundation of the Nile, Egypt owed every thing; the fertility of the soil, and the very soil itself. Besides, the overflowing of the Nile came on by gentle degrees, covering without laying waste the country. Mira aequa natura fluminis, quod cum caeteris omnes abhiant terras et evirescent, Nilus tanto caeteris major adeo nihil excedit, nec obrucit, ut contra adjiciat vires; minimusque in eo sit, quod solum temperet. Illud enim limo arenas saturat ac jungit; debeque illi Aegyptus non tantum fertilitatem terrarum, sed ipsas. Seneca, Nat. Quaes. iv. 2. I take the liberty, therefore, which Schultens seems to think allowable in this place, of hazarding a conjectural interpretation.

Verse 3. When he lifteth up an ensign.—(When the standard is lifted up) I take God to be the Agent in this verse; and that by the standard and the trumpet are meant the meteors, the thunder, the lightning, the storm, earthquake, and tempest, by which Sennacherib's army shall be destroyed, or by which at least the destruction of it shall be accompanied; as it is described in chap. xxix. 6, and xxx. 30, 31, and x. 16, 17. See also Psa. lxxvi. and the title of it according to the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Ethiopic. They are called, by a bold metaphor, the standard lifted up, and the trumpet sounded. The latter is used by Homer, I think, with great force, in his introduction to the battle of the gods; though I find it has disgusted some of the minor critics:—

Βραχὲ δ' εὐρεία χθονί, Ἀπὸ δὲ ἀσπιδίφρονος ἤρας οὐρανοῦ. II. xxi. 383. "Heaven in loud thunders bids the trumpet sound, And wide beneath them throngs the rearing ground." Pope.

Verse 4. For so the LORD said unto me.—(For thus hath JEHOVAH said unto me) The subject of the remaining part of this Chapter is, that God would comfort and support His own people, though threatened with immediate destruction by the Assyrians; that Sennacherib's great designs and mighty efforts against them should be frustrated; and that his vast expectations should be rendered abortive when he thought them mature, and just ready to be crowned with success; that the chief part of his army should be made a prey for the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, (for this is the meaning of the allegory continued through the 5th and 6th verses;) and that Egypt, being delivered from his oppression, and avenged by the hand of God of the wrongs which she had suffered, should return thanks for the wonderful deliverance, both of herself and of the Jews, from this most powerful adversary.

Like a clear heat.—(Like the clear heat) The same images are employed by an Arabian poet:

Solis more fervens, dum frigus; quiescent arida Stridit, dum vero frigus ipse et umbra.

Which is illustrated in the note by a like passage from another Arabian poet:—

Calor est hyeme, refrigerium aestate.

Excerpta ex Hamaas; published by Schultens, at the end of Erpenius's Arabic Grammar, p. 425.

Upon herbs.—(After rain) " Waz or, here signifies rain, according to what is said, Job xxxvi. 11. The cloud scatters his rain." Kimchi. In which place of Job the Chaldees paraphrast does indeed explain Waz oro by Waz materialis; and so again ver. 21. and chap. xxxvi. 30. This meaning of the word seems to make the best sense in this place; it is to be wished that it were better supported.

In the heat of harvest.—(In the day of harvest) For Waz bechom, in the heat, fourteen MSS. (several ancient,) the Septuagint, Syriac, Arabic, and Vulgate, read Waz beyoum, in the day. The mistake seems to have arisen from Waz kechom, in the line above.

Verse 5. The flower.—(The blossom) Heb. her blossom; Waz Uleah, that is, the blossom of the vine, Waz gephan, vine, understood, which is of the common gender.

21 And the Lord shall be known to Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know the Lord in that day, and shall do sacrifice and oblation; yea, they shall vow a vow unto the Lord, and perform it.

22 And the Lord shall smite Egypt: he shall smite and heal it: and they shall return even to the Lord, and he shall be intreated of them, and shall heal them.

23 In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians.

24 In that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land:

25 Whom the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria, the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance.

Verse 25. Blessed be Egypt—Assyria—and Israel—All these countries shall be converted to the Lord. Concerning Egypt, it was said, chap. xviii. 7, that it should bring gifts to the Lord at Jerusalem. Here it is predicted, ver. 19, that there shall be an altar to the Lord in Egypt itself;—and that they, with the Assyrians, shall become the people of God with the Israelites. This remains partly to be fulfilled. These countries shall be all, and perhaps at no very distant time from this, converted to the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XX.

Tharthan besieged Ashdod, or Azotus, which probably belonged at this time to Hezekiah's dominions, see 2 Kings xviii. 8. The people expected to be relieved by the Cushites of Arabia, and by the Egyptians. Isaiah was ordered to go uncovered, that is, without his upper garment, the rough mantle commonly worn by the prophets, (see Zech. xiii. 4,) probably three days, to shew that within three years the town should be taken, after the defeat of the Cushites and Egyptians by the king of Assyria, which event should make their case desperate, and induce them to surrender. Azotus was a strong place: it afterwards held out twenty-nine years against Peammitichus king of Egypt, Herod. ii. 157. Tharthan was one of Sennacherib's generals, 2 Kings, xviii. 17, and Tirhakah king of the Cushites was in alliance with the king of Egypt against Sennacherib. These circumstances make it probable, that by Sargon is meant Sennacherib. It might be one of the seven names by which Jerom, on this place, says he was called. He is called Sacherdonus and Sacherdan in the book of Tobit. The taking of Azotus must have happened before Sennacherib's attempt on Jerusalem; when he boasted of his late conquests, chap. xxxvii. 25. And the warning of the prophet had a principal respect to the Jews also, who were too much inclined to depend upon the assistance of Egypt. As to the rest, history and chronology affording us no light, it may be impossible to clear either this or any other hypothesis, (which takes Sargon to be Shalmaneser, or Assarhaddon, &c.) from all difficulties. [Kimchi says, this happened in the fourteenth year of Hezekiah.]

5 And they shall be afraid and ashamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt their glory.

Verse 2. Walking naked and barefoot] It is not probable that the prophet walked uncovered and barefoot for three years: his appearing in that manner was a sign that within three years the Egyptians and Cushites should be in the same condition, being conquered and made captives by the king of Assyria. The time was denoted, as well as the event: but his appearing in that manner for three whole years could give no premonition of the time at all. It is probable, therefore, that the prophet was ordered to walk so for three days to denote the accomplishment of the event in three years; a day for a year, according to the prophetic rule, Numb. xiv. 34; Ezek. iv. 6. The words וישלח ימים, shalosh yamim, three days, may possibly have been lost out of the Text, at the end of the second verse, after וישלח ימים, barefoot; or after the same word in the third verse, where in the Alexandrine and Vatican copies of the Septuagint, and in MSS. Pachom, and L. D. n. the words τρία ετη, three years, are twice expressed. Perhaps instead of וישלח ימים, shalosh yamim, three days, the Greek translator might read וישלח ימים, shalosh shanim, three years, by his own mistake, or by that of his copy, after וישלח ימים in the third verse, for which stands the first τρία ετη, three years in the Alexandrine and Vatican Septuagint, and in the two MSS. above mentioned. [It is most probable that Isaiah's walking naked and barefoot was done in a vision; as was probably that of the prophet Hosea, taking a wife of whoredoms. None of these things can well be taken literally.

From thy foot—רגלי רעהלע, thy feet, is the reading of thirty-four of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. four ancient Editions, with the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and Arabic.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXI.

The first ten verses of this Chapter contain a prediction of the taking of Babylon by the Medes and Persians. It is a passage singular in its kind for its brevity and force, for the variety and rapidity of the movements, and for the strength and energy of colouring with which the action and event are painted. It opens with the prophet's seeing at a distance the dreadful storm that is gathering, and ready to burst upon Babylon. The event is intimated in general terms, and God's orders are issued to the Persians and Medes to set forth upon the expedition which He has given them in charge. Upon this the prophet enters into the midst of the action; and in the person of Babylon expresses in the strongest terms the astonishment and horror that seizes her on the sudden surprise of the city at the very season dedicated to pleasure and festivity, ver. 3, 4. Then in his own person describes the situation of things there; the security of the Babylonians, and in the midst of their feasting the sudden alarm of war, ver. 5. The event is then declared in a very singular manner. God 11 ⁴ The burden of Dumah. He saith to me out of Seir, Watchman, what of the night? Watchman, what of the night?

12 The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night: if ye will enquire, enquire ye: return, come.

13 ⁴ The burden upon Arabia. In the forest in Arabia shall ye lodge, O ye travelling companies of Dedanim.

14 The inhabitants of the land of Tema brought water to him that was thirsty, they prevented with their bread him that fled.

15 For they fled ⁴ from the swords, from the drawn sword, and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war.

16 For thus hath the Lord said unto me, d 1 Chron. 1. 23. Jer. 49. 7, 8. Ezech. 35. 2. Obad. 1.—1 Jer. 49. 23.—1 Chron. 1. 8, 23.

to call the effect, the object, the adjunct, any thing that belongs in almost any way to another, the son of it. "O my threshing." The prophet abruptly breaks off the speech of God; and instead of continuing it in the forms in which he had begun, and in the person of God, "This I declare unto you by my prophet;" he changes the form of address, and adds, in his own person, "This I declare unto you from God."

Verse 11. The burden of Dumah—(The oracle concerning Dumah) ["Pro ¹דומא Dumah, Codex R. Meiri habet ¹דומא edom; and so the Septuagint. Vid. Kimchi ad h. l." Biblia Michaelis, Hale, 1720, not ad l. [See also De Rossi. Bishop Lovell translates the prophecy thus:

11. THE ORACLE CONCERNING DUMAH.

A voice crieth to me from Seir: Watchman, what from the night? Watchman, what from the night?

12. The watchman replieth:—

The morning cometh, and also the night. If ye will inquire, inquire ye: come again.

This differs very little from our common Version. One of Kennicott's MSS. and one of my own, omit the repetition, Watchman, what from the night?

This prophecy, from the uncertainty of the occasion on which it was uttered, and from the brevity of the expression, is extremely obscure. The Edomites as well as Jews were subdued by the Babylonians. They enquire of the prophet, how long their subjection is to last; he intimates that the Jews should be delivered from their captivity; not so the Edomites. Thus far the interpretation seems to carry with it some degree of probability. What the meaning of the last line may be I cannot pretend to divine. In this difficulty the Hebrew MSS. give no assistance. The MSS. of the Septuagint, and the fragments of the other Greek Versions, give some variations, but no light. This being the case, I thought it best to give an exact literal translation of the whole two verses; which may serve to enable the English Reader to judge in some measure of the foundation of the various interpretations that have been given of them.

[The burden of Dumah. R. D. Kimchi says, "His father understood this of the destruction of Dumah, (one of the cities of the Ishmaelites) by the inhabitants of Seir; and that they enquired of the prophet to know the particular time in which God had given them a commission against it. The prophet answered—The morning, the time of success to you, cometh, is just at hand: and the night, the time of utter destruction to the inhabitants of Dumah, is also ready."

I have heard the words applied in the way of general exhortation. 1. Every minister of God is a watchman. He is continually watching for the safety and interests of his people; and looking for the counsel of God, that he may be properly qualified to warn, and to comfort.—2. Such are often called to denounce heavy judgments: they have the burden of the word of the Lord to denounce against the impenitent—the backslider—the lukewarm, and the careless.—3. When the watchman threatens judgments, some are awakened, and some mock.—Watchman, what of the night? "What are the judgments thou threatenest, and when are they to take place?"—4. To this question, whether seriously or tauntingly proposed, the watchman answers: The morning cometh—there is a time of repentance granted—a morning of God's long suffering kindness now appears.—If you will enquire seriously how you are to escape God's judgments—enquire ye; continue to pray for mercy—return from your iniquities—come to God, through Christ, that ye may obtain salvation.]

Verse 13. The burden upon Arabia—(The oracle concerning Arabia) This title is of doubtful authority. In the first place, because it is not in many of the MSS. of the Septuagint; it is in MSS. Pachelm. and 1. D. 21. only,

Within a year, ⁴ according to the years of an hiring, and all the glory of Kedar shall fall: 17 And the residue of the number of archers, the mighty men of the children of Kedar, shall be diminished: for the Lord God of Israel hath spoken it.

CHAPTER XXII.

Prophecy concerning Jerusalem, 1—14. Sentences against Sabeans, who were over the Samaritans, 15—18. Prophecy concerning Eliphaz, the son of Hittah, 19—37. From Eliphaz, Isaiah, (agreeably to the mode universally adopted in the prophetic writings of marking the things then present, or which were shortly to be accomplished, by one or more representations of things to be fulfilled upon a larger scale in distant (future,) times a transition to the Messiah, of whom Eliphaz was a type, of whom the words will best apply, and to whom these passages in the prophecy must be solely restrained, 22—24. The sentence against Sabeans again confirmed, 25.

as far as I can find with certainty. Secondly, from the singularity of the phraseology; for מַסַּע מַסַּע, is generally prefixed to its object without a preposition, as מַסַּע מַסַּע massa babel; and never but in this place with the preposition בְּ beth. Besides, as the word מַסַּע be-areb, occurs at the very beginning of the prophecy itself, the first word but one, it is much to be suspected that some one, taking it for a proper name and the object of the prophecy, might note it as such by the words מַסַּע מַסַּע massa be-areb written in the margin, from whence they might easily get into the text. The Septuagint did not take it for a proper name: but render it [εἰς τὴν ὄψιν] towards, [in the forest, in the evening;] and so the Chaldee whom I follow: for, otherwise, the forest in Arabia, is so indeterminate and vague a description, that in effect it means nothing at all. This observation might have been of good use in clearing up the foregoing very obscure prophecy, if any light had arisen from joining the two together by removing the separating title: but I see no connexion between them. [The Arabic version has, The prophecy concerning the Arabians, and the children of Kedar.]

This prophecy was to have been fulfilled within a year of the time of its delivery, see ver. 16; and it was probably delivered about the same time with the rest in this part of the book, that is, soon before or after the 14th of Hezekiah, the year of Sennacherib's invasion. In his first march into Judea, or in his return from the Egyptian expedition, he might perhaps overrun these several clans of Arabians: their distress on some such occasion is the subject of this prophecy.

Verse 14. The land of Tema—(The southern country) Θαυμαρ, Sept.; Austri, Vulg. they read תרתי teimam, which seems to be right. For probably the inhabitants of Tema might be involved in the same calamity with their brethren and neighbours of Kedar; and not in a condition to give them assistance, and to relieve them, in their flight before the enemy, with bread and water. To bring forth bread and water is an instance of common humanity in such cases of distress; especially in these desert countries, in which the common necessities of life, more particularly water, are not easily to be met with or procured. Moses forbids the Ammonite and Moabite to be admitted into the congregation of the Lord to the tenth generation. One reason which he gives for this reprobation is their omission of the common offices of humanity towards the Israelites; "because they met them not with bread and water in the way, when they came forth out of Egypt." Deut. xxiii. 4.

Verse 17. The archers, the mighty men of the children of Kedar—(The mighty bowmen of the sons of Kedar) Sagittariorum fortium, Vulg. transposing the two words, and reading נשׁוּב נשׁוּב גֹבֹרֵי קֶשֶׁת; which seems to be right.

For the Lord hath spoken it—(For JEREMIAH hath spoken it) The prophetic Carmina of Marcion, foretelling the battle of Cannæ, lib. xxv. 12, conclude with the same kind of solemn form; Nam mihi ita Jupiter Jactus est [Thus hath Jupiter spoken to me.] Observe, that the word נָא: naam, to pronounce, to declare, is the solemn word appropriated to the delivering of prophecies: "Behold, I am against the prophets, saith (נָא: naam) JEREMIAH, who use their tongues, נָא: נְבִיאִים: vairyinams naam, and solemnly pronounce, He hath pronounced it." Jer. xxiii. 31. [What God says shall most assuredly come to pass—He cannot be deceived.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXII.

This prophecy, ending with the fourteenth verse of this chapter, is intitled, "The oracle concerning the Valley of Vision," by which is meant Jerusalem, because, says Sal. ben Melech, it was the place of prophecy. Jerusalem, according to Josephus, was built upon two opposite hills, Zion and Aca, separated by a valley in the midst. He 8 Then that art full of stir, a tumultuous city, a joyous city: thy slain men are not slain with the sword, nor dead in battle.

9 All thy rulers are fled together, they are bound by the archers: all that are found in thee, are bound together, which have fled from far.

4 Therefore, said I, Look away from me; I will weep bitterly, labour not to comfort me, because of the spoiling of the daughter of my people.

5 For it is a day of trouble, and of treading down, and of perplexity by the Lord God of hosts in the valley of vision, breaking down the walls, and of crying to the mountains.

6 And Elam bare the quiver with chariots of men and horsemen, and Kir uncovered the shield.

7 And it shall come to pass, that thy choicest valleys shall be full of chariots, and the horsemen shall set themselves in array at the gate.

8 And he discovered the covering of Judah, and thou didst look in that day to the armour of the house of the forest.

9 Ye have seen also the breaches of the city of David, that they are many: and ye gathered together the waters of the lower pool.

10 And ye have numbered the houses of Jerusalem; and the houses have ye broken down to fortify the wall.

11 Ye made also a ditch between the two walls for the water of the old pool: but ye have not looked unto the maker thereof, neither had respect unto him that fashioned it long ago.

12 And in that day did the Lord God of hosts call to weeping, and to mourning, and to baldness, and to girding with sackcloth:

13 And behold joy and gladness, slaying oxen, and killing sheep, eating flesh and drinking wine: let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we shall die.

speaks of another broad valley between Acra and Moriah, Bell. Jud. v. 13; vi. 6. It was the seat of Divine revelation; the place where chiefly prophetic vision was given, and where God manifested Himself visibly in the holy place. The prophecy foretells the invasion of Jerusalem by the Assyrians under Sennacherib; or by the Chaldeans under Nebuchadnezzar. Vitringa is of opinion that the prophet has both in view; that of the Chaldeans in the first part, ver. 1-5, (which he thinks relates to the flight of Zedekiah, 2 Kings xxv. 4, 5,) and that of the Assyrians in the latter part; which agrees with the circumstances of that time, and particularly describes the preparations made by Hezekiah for the defence of the city, ver. 8-11. Compare 2 Chron. xxxii. 2-5.

Verse 1. Are-gone up to the house-tops-(Are gone up to the house-tops) The houses in the East were in ancient times, as they are still generally, built in one and the same uniform manner. The roof or top of the house is always flat, covered with broad stones, or a strong plaster of terrace, and guarded on every side with a low parapet wall, see Deut. xxii. 8. The terrace is frequented as much as any part of the house. On this, as the season favours, they walk, they eat, they sleep, they transact business, (1 Sam. ix. 26; see also the Septuagint in that place,) they perform their devotions, Acts x. 9. The house is built with a court within, into which chiefly the windows open; those that open to the street are so obstructed with lattice work, that no one, either without or within, can see through them. Whenever therefore any thing is to be seen or heard in the streets, any public spectacle, any alarm of a public nature; every one immediately goes up to the house-top to satisfy his curiosity. In the same manner, when any one had occasion to make any thing public, the readiest and most effectual way of doing it was to proclaim it from the house-tops to the people in the streets. "What ye hear in the ear, that publish ye on the house-top," saith our Saviour, Matt. x. 27. The people's running all to the tops of their houses, gives a lively image of a sudden general alarm. Sir John Chardin's MS. note on this place is as follows: Dans les fêtes pour voir passer quelque chose, et dans les maladies pour les annoncer aux voisins en allumant des lumieres, le peuple monte sur les terrasses.-[In festivals, in order to see what is going forward, and in times of sickness, in order to indicate them to neighbours by lighting of candles, the people go up to the house-top.]

Verse 3. All thy rulers-are bound by the archers-(All thy leaders-are fled from the bow) There seems to be somewhat of an inconsistency in the sense, according to the present reading. If the leaders were bound, ארבו ארבו, how could they flee away? for their being bound, according to the obvious construction and course of the sentence, is a circumstance prior to their flight. I therefore follow Houbigant, who reads ארבו ארבו, remoti sunt, "they are gone off." ארבו ארבו, transmigraverunt, Chald. which seems to confirm this emendation.

Verse 6. Chariots of men-(The Syrian) It is not easy to say what ארבו ארבו reheb adam, a chariot of men, can mean. It seems by the form of the sentence, which consists of three members, the first and the third mentioning a particular people, that the second should do so likewise. Thus ארבו ארבו ארבו ארבו reheb adam u-perashim, with chariots the Syrian, and with horsemen: the similitude of the letters re daleth, and resh, is so great, and the mistakes arising from it so frequent, that I readily adopt the correction of Houbigant, ארבו ארבו aram, Syria, instead of ארבו ארבו adam, man; which seems to me extremely probable. The conjunction vau, and, prefixed to ארבו ארבו perashim horsemen, seems necessary, in whatever way the sentence may be taken; and it is confirmed by five MSS. (one ancient,) [four of De Rossi's, and two ancient of my own; one by correction of Dr. Kennicot's], and three Editions. Kir was a city belonging to the Medes. The Medes were subject to the Assyrians in Hezekiah's time, see 2 Kings xvi. 9, and xvii. 6, and so perhaps might Elam (the Persians) likewise be, or auxiliaries to them.

Verse 8. The armour-(The arsenal) Built by Solomon within the city, and called the house of the forest of Lebanon; probably from the great quantity of cedar from Lebanon which was employed in the building. See 1 Kings vii. 2, 3.

Verse 9. Ye gathered together the waters-(And ye shall collect the waters) There were two pools in or near Jerusalem, supplied by springs: the upper pool, or the old pool, supplied by the spring called Gihon, 2 Chron. xxxii. 30, towards the higher part of the city, near Zion, or the city of David; and the lower pool, probably supplied by Siloam, towards the lower part. When Hezekiah was threatened with a siege by Sennacherib, he stopped up all the waters of the fountains without the city; and brought them into the city by a conduit, or subterraneous passage cut through the rock; those of the old pool, to the place where he had a double wall, so that the pool was between the two walls. This he did in order to distress the enemy, and to supply the city during the siege. This was so great a work, that not only the historians have made particular mention of it, 2 Kings xx. 20; 2 Chron. xxxii. 3, 5, 30; but the son of Sirach also has celebrated it in his encomium on Hezekiah. "Hezekiah fortified his city, and brought in water into the midst thereof: he digged the hard rock with iron, and made wells for water," Ecclesi. xlviii.

Verse 11. Unto the maker thereof-(To him that hath disposed this) That is, to God the Author and Disposer of this visitation, the invasion with which he now threatens you. The very same expressions are applied to God, and upon the same occasion, chap. xxxvii. 26.

"Hast thou not heard, of old, that I have disposed it; And, of ancient times, that I have formed it?"

[Verse 13. Let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we shall die.-This has been the language of all those who have sought their portion in this life, since the foundation of the world.-So the poet.

Hinc, hoc nos miser! quam totus homuncio nil est! Et quicquid cunctis postquam nos auferat orbes, Ergo vivamus dum licet esse, bene.

Also, alas! what miserable creatures are we, only the semblances of men.-And so shall we be all when we cease to die. Therefore, let us live joyfully while we may.

Domitian had an image of death hung up in his dining room, to shew his guests that as life was uncertain, they should make the best of it by indulging themselves:—On this Martial, to flatter the emperor, whom he styles god, wrote the following epigram:—

Francee thorus, pete cina, tingere nardo. Ipsi jubet mortis se munuscula Deus.

Sit down to table.—drink heartily.—anoint thyself with spikenard; for God himself commands thee to remember death.

So the adage:—

Ede, bibo, ludo: post mortem nulla voluptas. Est, drink, and play, while here we may: No remedy after your dying day.

14 And it was revealed in mine ears by the Lord of hosts, Surely this iniquity shall not be purged from you till ye die, saith the Lord God of hosts.

15 Thus saith the Lord God of hosts, Go, get thee unto this treasurer, even unto Shebna, which is over the house, and say, 16 What hast thou here? and whom hast thou here, that thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that heweth him out a sepulchre on high, and that graveth an habitation for himself in a rock?

17 Behold, the Lord will carry thee away with a mighty captivity, and will surely cover thee.

18 He will surely violently turn and toss thee like a ball into a large country: there shalt thou die, and there the chariots of thy glory shall be the shame of thy lord's house.

19 And I will drive thee from thy station, and from thy state shall he pull thee down.

20 And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will call my servant Eliakim the son of Hilkiah:

21 And I will clothe him with thy robe, and strengthen him with thy girdle, and I will commit thy government into his hand: and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah.

22 And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder; so he shall open and none shall shut: and he shall shut, and none shall open.

Verse 14. It was revealed in mine ears—(The voice of JEROBAB) The Vulgate has vox Domini; as if in his copy he had read כּוֹל לִקְוֹל יְהוֹשָׁפָא: and, in truth, without the word לִקְוֹל, voice, it is not easy to make out the sense of the passage; as it appears from the strange versions, which the rest of the ancients (except the Chaldees) and many of the moderns, have given of it; as if the matter were revealed in, or to, the ears of JEROBAB, ὠ τῆς; see Kyprios, in the ears of the Lord, Septuagint. Vitringia translates it, revelatus est in auribus meis JEROBAB, ["JEROBAB hath revealed it in mine ears;"] and refers to 1 Sam. ii. 27; iii. 21: but the construction in those places is different, and there is no speech of God added; which here seems to want something more than the verb ῥῆμα ῥηγῆλοθ, to introduce it. Compare chap. v. 9, where the text is still more imperfect.

[The Lord God of hosts—אֲדֹנָי יְהוִה אֲדֹנָי, yehovah, tebaath. But אֲדֹנָי אֲדֹנָי, Lord, is omitted by two of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. and by two of my own; by three Editions, and the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic.]

Verse 15. Go—unto Shebna) The following prophecy concerning Shebna seems to have very little relation to the foregoing; except that it might have been delivered about the same time, and Shebna might be a principal person among those whose luxury and profaneness are severely reprehended by the prophet in the conclusion of that prophecy, ver. 11—14.

Shebna the scribe, mentioned in the history of Hezekiah, chap. xxxvi. seems to have been a different person from this Shebna, the treasurer, or steward of the household, to whom the prophecy relates. The Eliakim here mentioned was probably the person who, at the time of Sennacherib's invasion, was actually treasurer, the son of Hilkiah.—If so, this prophecy was delivered, as the preceding (which makes the former part of the Chapter) plainly was, some time before the invasion of Sennacherib. As to the rest, history affords us no information.

(And say unto him) Here are two words lost out of the Text, which are supplied by two of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., one ancient, which read ἄνθρωπος ve-amarta elai, and thou shalt say to him; by the Septuagint, καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ, and in the same manner by all the ancient Versions. It is to be observed that this passage is merely historical; and does not admit of that sort of ellipsis by which, in the poetical parts, a person is frequently introduced speaking, without the usual notice that what follows was delivered by him.

Verse 16. A sepulchre on high—in a rock) It has been observed before on chap. xiv. that persons of high rank in Judea, and in most parts of the East, were generally buried in large sepulchral vaults hewn out in the rock for the use of themselves and their families. The vanity of Shebna is set forth by his being so studious and careful to have his sepulchre on high; in a lofty vault, and that probably in a high situation, that it might be more conspicuous. Hezekiah was buried, ῥηγοῦ ἰεμαθλα, ὠ ἀναβασι, Sept.; in the chiefest, says our translation; rather, in the highest part of the sepulchres of the sons of David, to do him the more honour, 2 Chron. xxxii. 33. There are some monuments still remaining in Persia of great antiquity, called Nakas Rustam, which give one a clear idea of Shebna's pompous design for his sepulchre. They consist of several sepulchres, each of them hewn in a high rock near the top; the front of the rock to the valley below is adorned with carved work in relieve, being the outside of the sepulchre. Some of these sepulchres are about thirty feet in the perpendicular from the valley; which is itself perhaps raised above half as much by the accumulation of the earth since they were made. See the description of them in Chardin, Pietro della Valle, Thevenot and Kempfer. Diodorus Siculus, lib. xvii. mentions these ancient monuments, and calls them the sepulchres of the kings of Persia.

Verse 17. Cover thee.] That is, thy face. This was the condition of mourners in general, and particularly of condemned persons, see Esther vi. 12; vii. 8.

Verse 19. I will drive thee] ἄρῃς cheresseca, in the first person, Syr. Vul.

Verse 22. And the key of the house of David will I lay upon his shoulder] As the robe and the baldric, mentioned in the preceding verse, were the ensigns of power and authority; so likewise was the key the mark of office, either sacred or civil. The priestess of Juno is said to be the key-bearer of the goddess, κλειδοῦχος Ἥρας. Eschyl. Suppl. 299. A female high in office under a great queen has the same title:

Ἐκλήθειον κλειδοῦχος Ὀλυμπιαδὸς Βασίλειης.

["Callithoe was the keybearer of the Olympian queen."]

Auctor Phoronidis ap. Clem. Alex. p. 418, edit. Potter. This mark of office was likewise among the Greeks, as here in Isaiah, borne on the shoulder; the priestess of Ceres, καρῳαδίαυ εχε κλειδα, [had the key on her shoulder.] Callim. Ceres, ver. 45. To comprehend how the key could be borne on the shoulder, it will be necessary to say somewhat of the form of it: but without entering into a long disquisition, and a great deal of obscure learning, concerning the locks and keys of the ancients, it will be sufficient to observe, that one sort of keys, and that probably the most ancient, was of considerable magnitude, and as to the shape very much bent and crooked. Aratus, to give his reader an idea of the form of the constellation Cassiopeia, compares it to a key. It must be owned that the passage is very obscure: but the learned Huetius has bestowed a great deal of pains in explaining it, Animadvers. in Maniliu, lib. i. 366; and I think has succeeded very well in it, Homer. Odyss. xxi. 6, describes the key of Ulysses' storehouse, as ἑκαμπίης, of a large curvature; which Rustathius explains by saying it was ὀρθανόσπης, in shape like a scap-hook. Huetius says, the constellation Cassiopeia answers to this description; the stars to the north making the curve part, that is, the principal part of the key; the southern stars, the handle. The curve part was introduced into the key-hole; and, being properly directed by the handle, took hold of the bolts within, and moved them from their places. We may easily collect from this account, that such a key would lie very well upon the shoulder; that it must be of some considerable size and weight, and could hardly be commodiously carried otherwise. Ulysses' key was of brass, and the handle of ivory: but this was a royal key. The more common ones were probably of wood. In Egypt they have no other than wooden locks and keys to this day; even the gates of Cairo have no better. Basmagarian, Peregr. i. 18. Thevenot, Part ii. ch. 10.

CHAPTER XXIII.

23 And I will fasten him as a nail in a sure place; and he shall be for a glorious throne to his father's house.

24 And they shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house, the offspring and the issue, all vessels of small quantity, from the vessels of cups, even to all the vessels of flagons.

25 In that day, saith the LORD of hosts, shall the nail that is fastened in the sure place be removed, and be cut down, and fall; and the burden that was upon it shall be cut off: for the LORD hath spoken it.

f Ezra 2. 6.—Or, Instruments of war.—h Ver. 23.

In allusion to the image of the key as the ensign of power, the unlimited extent of that power is expressed with great clearness as well as force by the sole and exclusive authority to open and shut. Our Saviour therefore has upon a similar occasion made use of a like manner of expression, Matt. xvi. 19, and in Rev. iii. 7, has applied to Himself the very words of the prophet.

Verse 23. A nail] In ancient times, and in the eastern countries, as the way of life, so the houses were much more simple than ours at present. They had not that quantity and variety of furniture, nor those accommodations of all sorts, with which we abound. It was convenient and even necessary for them, and it made an essential part in the building of a house, to furnish the inside of the several apartments with sets of spikes, nails, or large pegs, upon which to dispose of and hang up the several moveables and utensils in common use and proper to the apartment. These spikes they worked into the walls at the first erection of them, the walls being of such materials that they could not bear their being driven in afterwards; and they were contrived so as to strengthen the walls by binding the parts together, as well as to serve for convenience. Sir John Chardin's account of this matter is this:—"They do not drive with a hammer the nails that are put into the Eastern walls. The walls are too hard, being of brick; or if they are of clay, too mouldering:—but they fix them in the brick-work as they are building. They are large nails with square heads like dice, well made, the ends being bent so as to make them cramp-irons. They commonly place them at the windows and doors, in order to hang upon them, when they like, veils and curtains." Harmer's Observ. I. p. 191. And we may add, that they were put in other places too, in order to hang up other things of various kinds; as it appears from this place of Isaiah, and from Ezek. xv. 3, who speaks of a pin, or nail, "to hang any vessel thereon." The word used here for a nail of this sort is the same by which they express that instrument, the stake, or large pin of iron, with which they fastened down to the ground the cords of their tents. We see, therefore, that these nails were of necessary and common use, and of no small importance in all their apartments; conspicuous, and much exposed to observation: and if they seem to us mean and insignificant, it is because we are not acquainted with the thing itself, and have no name to express it by but what conveys to us a low and contemptible idea. "Grace hath been shewed from the Lord our God," saith Ezra ix. 8, "to leave us a remnant to escape, and to give us a nail in his holy place:" that is, as the margin of our Bible explains it, "a constant and sure abode."

h He that doth lodge near her (Wisdom's) house, shall also fasten a pin in her wall." Eccles. xiv. 9.

The dignity and propriety of the metaphor appears from the prophet Zechariah's use of it:—

From him shall be the structure-stone, from him the nail, From him the bulwark, From him every ruler together." Zeach. x. 4.

And Mohammed, using the same word, calls Pharaoh the lord, or master, of the nails, that is, well attended by nobles and officers capable of administering his affairs. Koran, Sur. xxxviii. 11, and lxxxix. 9. So some understand this passage of the Koran. Mr. Sale seems to prefer another interpretation.

Taylor, in his Concordance, thinks וַיִּתֵּן, means the pillar or post that stands in the middle, and supports the tent, in which such pegs are fixed to hang their arms, &c. upon; referring to Stow's Travels, p. 267. But וַיִּתֵּן, is never used, as far as appears to me, in that sense. It was indeed necessary that the pillar of the tent should have such pegs on it for that purpose: but the hanging of such things in this manner upon this pillar does not prove that וַיִּתֵּן was the pillar itself.

A glorious throne—(A glorious seat)] That is, his father's house and all his own family shall be gloriously seated, shall flourish in honour and prosperity; and shall depend upon him, and be supported by him.

Prophecy denouncing the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, delivered upwards of one hundred and twenty years before its accomplishment, at a period when the Tyrians were in great prosperity, and the Babylonians in subject subjection to the Assyrian empire; and, consequently, when an event of so great magnitude was improbable in the highest degree, 1.—14. Tyre shall recover its splendor at the termination of seventy years, the days of one king, (or kingdom,) by which must be meant the time allotted for the duration of the Babylonish empire, as otherwise the prophecy cannot be accommodated to the event, 15.—17. Supposed reference to the early conversion of Tyre to Christianity, 18.

THE burden of Tyre. Howl, ye ships of Tarshish; for it is laid waste, so that there is no house, no entering in: from the land of Chittim it is revealed to them.

a Jer. 25. 22. & 47. 4. Ezech. 26. & 27. & 28. Amos 1. 9. Zeach. 9. 2, 4.—b Ver. 12.

Verse 24. All the glory] One considerable part of the magnificence of the Eastern princes consisted in the great quantity of gold and silver vessels which they had for various uses. "Solomon's drinking vessels were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold: none were of silver; it was nothing accounted in Solomon's days." 1 Kings x. 21. "The vessels in the house of the forest of Lebanon" (the armoury of Jerusalem so called) "were two hundred targets, and three hundred shields of beaten gold." Ibid. ver. 16, 17. These were ranged in order upon the walls of the armoury, (see Cant. iv. 4,) upon pins worked into the walls on purpose, as above mentioned. Eliakim is considered as a principal stake of this sort, immovably fastened in the wall for the support of all vessels destined for common or sacred uses; that is, as the principal support of the whole civil and ecclesiastical polity. And the consequence of his continued power will be the promotion and flourishing condition of his family and dependants, from the highest to the lowest.

Vessels of flagons—(Meaner vessels)] נְבִלִים nebelim, seems to mean earthen vessels of common use, brittle, and of little value; (see Lam. iv. 2; Jer. xviii. 12,) in opposition to אֲגָוֹת agavoth, goblets of gold and silver used in sacrifices. Exod. xxiv. 6.

Verse 25. The nail that is fastened] This must be understood of Shebna, as a reputation and confirmation of the sentence above denounced against him.

[What is said of Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, ver. 20—24, is very remarkable; and the literal meaning is not easy to be understood. From chap. ix. 6, and from Rev. iii. 7, it seems to belong to our Lord alone. The removal of Shebna from being over the treasure of the Lord's house, ver. 19, and the investiture of Eliakim, with his robe, girdle, office, and government, ver. 20, &c. probably point out the change of the Jewish priesthood, and the proclaiming of the unchangeable priesthood of Christ. See Psa. cx. 4. Eliakim signifies the resurrection of the Lord; or, my God, he shall arise. Hilkiah signifies The Lord my portion, or lot. The key of David, shutting and opening, &c. may intend the way of salvation through Christ alone. For the hope of salvation and eternal life comes only through Eliakim, the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead.

It is said, ver. 24, They shall hang upon him all the glory of his father's house—for, in Jesus Christ dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily: and the offspring and the issue, בְּנֵי מִן ha-beneim, from מִן min, to go out,—the suckers from the root; the side-shoots, the apostles and primitive ministers of His word. The issue, יִשְׁרָאֵל ha-isephidh, probably means the issue's issue: so the Targum. The grandchildren,—all those who believe on the Lord Jesus through their word.

The nail that is fastened in a sure place shall be removed, ver. 25. Kimchi refers not to Eliakim, but to Shebna, ver. 17—19. By, they shall hang upon him all vessels of small quantity and large quantity, has been understood the dependance of all souls, of all capacities, from the lowest in intellect, to the most exalted, on the Lord Jesus, as the only Saviour of all lost human spirits.

As the literal interpretation of this prophecy has not been found out, we are justified from parallel texts to consider the whole as referring to Jesus Christ, and the government of the Church, and the redemption of the world by Him. Nor are there many prophecies which relate to Him clearer than this, taken in the above sense.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIII.

[Verse 1. The burden of Tyre—Tyre, a city on the coast of Syria, about lat. 32° N. was built two thousand seven hundred and sixty years before Christ. There were two cities of this name; one on the continent, and the other on an island, about half a mile from the shore: the city on the island was about four miles in circumference. Old Tyre resisted Nebuchadnezzar for thirteen years: then the inhabitants carried, so to speak, the city to the forementioned island, ver. 4. This new city held out

2 Be still, ye inhabitants of the isle; thou whom the merchants of Zidon, that pass over the sea, have replenished.

3 And by great waters the seed of Sihor, the harvest of the river, is her revenue; and she is a mart of nations.

4 Be thou ashamed, O Zidon: for the sea hath spoken, even the strength of the sea, saying, I travail not, nor bring forth children, neither do I nourish up young men, nor bring up virgins.

5 As at the report concerning Egypt, so shall they be sorely pained at the report of Tyre.

6 Pass ye over to Tarshish; howl, ye inhabitants of the isle.

7 Is this your joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days? her own feet shall carry her afar off to sojourn.

8 Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth?

9 The Lord of hosts hath purposed it, to stain the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honourable of the earth.

10 Pass through thy land as a river, O daughter of Tarshish: there is no more strength.

11 He stretched out his hand over the sea, he shook the kingdoms: the Lord hath given a commandment against the merchant city, to destroy the strong holds thereof.

12 And he said, Thou shalt no more rejoice, O thou oppressed virgin, daughter of Zidon: arise, pass over to Chittim; there also shalt thou have no rest.

against Alexander the Great (butcher) for seven months; who, in order to take it, was obliged to fill up the channel which separated it from the main land. In A. D. 1259 it was totally destroyed by the sultan of Egypt; and now contains only a few huts in which about fifty or sixty wretched families exist. This desolation was foretold by this prophet, and by Ezekiel one thousand nine hundred years before it took place!

Howl, ye ships of Tarshish! This prophecy denounces the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar. It opens with an address to the Tyrian negotiators and sailors at Tarshish, (Tartessus, in Spain) a place which, in the course of their trade, they greatly frequented. The news of the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar is said to be brought to them from Chittim, the islands and coasts of the Mediterranean: "for the Tyrians," says Jerom on ver. 6, "when they saw they had no other means of escaping, fled in their ships, and took refuge in Carthage and in the islands of the Ionian and Egean sea." From whence the news would spread and reach Tarshish: so also Jarchi on the same place. This seems to be the most probable interpretation of this verse.

Verse 2. Be still.—(Be silent)] Silence is a mark of grief and consternation. See ch. xlvii. 5. Jeremiah has finely expressed this image:—

"The silence of the daughters of Zion sit on the ground, they are silent: they have cast up dust on their heads, they have girded themselves with sackcloth. The virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground." Lam. II. 10.

Verse 3. The seed of Sihor.—(The seed of the Nile)] The Nile is called here Shichor, as it is in Jer. ii. 18, and 1 Chron. xiii. 5. It had this name from the blackness of its waters, charged with the mud, which it brings down from Ethiopia when it overflows.—Et videmus Egyptum nigra fecundat arena; as it was called by the Greeks Melas, and by the Latins Melo, for the same reason. See Servius on the above line of Virgil, Georg. iv. 291. It was called Siris by the Ethiopians; by some supposed to be the same with Shichor. Egypt by its extraordinary fertility, caused by the overflowing of the Nile, supplied the neighbouring nations with corn, by which branch of trade the Tyrians gained great wealth.

Verse 4. Be thou ashamed, O Zidon] Tyre is called, ver. 12, the daughter of Sidon. "The Sidonians," says Justin, xviii. 3, "when their city was taken by the king of Ascalon, betook themselves to their ships; and landed, and built Tyre." Sidon, as the mother city, is supposed to be deeply affected with the calamity of her daughter.

Nor bring up virgins.—(Nor educated virgins) נְרוֹמָמֵסִי se-romamesti; so an ancient MS. [of Dr. Kennicott's] prefixing the נ, which refers to the negative preceding, and is equivalent to וְאֵין vau. See Deut. xxxiii. 6; Prov. xxx. 3. [Two of my own MSS. have וְאֵין in the margin.]

Verse 7. Whose antiquity is of ancient days.—(Whose antiquity is of the earliest date)] Justin, in the passage above quoted, had dated the building of Tyre at a certain number of years before the taking of Troy: but the number is lost in the present copies. Tyre, though not so old as Sidon, yet was of very high antiquity: it was a strong city even in the time of Joshua. It is called צָרְתַּר צָרְתַּר אִירְמִיבֵטָר תּוֹר, the city of the fortress of Sor, Josh. xii. 29. Interpreters raise difficulties in regard to this passage; and will not allow it to have been so ancient: with what good reason I do not see; for it is called by the same name, "the fortress of Sor," in the history of David, 2 Sam. xxiv. 7, and the circumstances of the history determine the place to be the very same. See on verse 1.

[Whose antiquity is of ancient days, may refer to Palætyrus, or Old Tyre.

Her own feet shall carry her afar off to sojourn.—This may belong to the new or insular Tyre:—her own feet, that is, her own inhabitants, shall carry her, shall transport the city from the continent to the island. "But the text says, it shall be carried far off; and the new city was founded only half a mile distant from the other."—I answer מֵרַחֵק merachok, does not always signify a great distance, but distance, or interval, in general: for in Josh. iii. 4, מֵרַחֵק rachok, is used to express the space between the camp and the ark; which we know to have been only two thousand cubits. Some refer the sojourning afar off, to the extent of the commercial voyages undertaken by the Tyrians, and their foreign connexions.]

Verse 10. O daughter of Tarshish] Tyre is called the daughter of Tarshish; perhaps because Tyre being ruined, Tarshish was become the superior city, and might be considered as the metropolis of the Tyrian people: or rather because of the close connexion and perpetual intercourse between them, according to that latitude of signification in which the Hebrews use the words son and daughter to express any sort of conjunction and dependance whatever. מֵצַח girdeh, a girdeh, which collects, binds, and keeps together the loose raiment, when applied to a river, may mean a mound, mole, or artificial dam, which contains the waters, and prevents them from spreading abroad. A city taken by siege and destroyed; whose walls are demolished; whose policy is dissolved; whose wealth is dissipated; whose people is scattered over the wide country; is compared to a river whose banks are broken down and its waters let loose, and overflowing all the neighbouring plains, are wasted and lost. This may possibly be the meaning of this very obscure verse; of which I can find no other interpretation that is at all satisfactory.

Verse 13. Behold the land of the Chaldeans] This verse is extremely obscure: the obscurity arises from the ambiguity of the agents, which belong to the verbs, and of the objects, expressed by the pronouns; from the change of number in the verbs, and of gender in the pronouns. The MSS. give us no assistance; and the ancient Versions very little. The Chaldee and Vulgate read מֵרַחֵק merachok, in the plural number. I have followed the interpretation, which, among many different ones, seemed to me most probable, that of Perizonius and Viringa.

The Chaldeans, Chasdim, are supposed to have had their origin, and to have taken their name, from Chased the son of Nachor, the brother of Abraham. They were known by that name in the time of Moses, who calls Ur in Mesopotamia from whence Abraham came, to distinguish it from other places of the same name, Ur of the Chaldeans. And Jeremiah calls them an ancient nation. This is not inconsistent with what Isaiah here says of them: "This people was not," that is, they were of no account; (see Deut. xxxii. 21,) they were not reckoned among the great and potent nations of the world till of later times: they were a rude, uncivilized, barbarous people, without laws, without settled habitations; wandering in a wide desert country, (מֵרַחֵק iriyim,) and addicted to rapine like the wild Arabians. Such they are represented to have been in the time of Job, (chap. i. 17,) and such they continued to be till Assur, some powerful king of Assyria, gathered them together, and settled them in Babylon and the neighbouring country. This probably was Ninus, whom I suppose to have lived in the time of the Judges. In this, with many eminent chronologers, I follow the authority of Herodotus, who says that the Assyrian monarchy lasted but five hundred and twenty years. Ninus got possession of Babylon from the Cuthean Arabians; the successors of Nimrod in that empire, collected the Chaldeans, and settled a colony them that dwell in the wilderness: they set up the towers thereof, they raised up the palaces thereof; and he brought it to ruin.

14 Howl, ye ships of Tarshish: for your strength is laid waste.

15 And it shall come to pass in that day, that Tyre shall be forgotten seventy years, according to the days of one king: after the end of seventy years shall Tyre sing as an harlot.

16 Take an harp, go about the city, thou harlot that hast been forgotten; make sweet melody, sing many songs, that thou mayest be remembered.

17 And it shall come to pass after the end of seventy years, that the Lord will visit Tyre, and she shall turn to her hire, and shall commit fornication with all the kingdoms of the world upon the face of the earth.

18 And her merchandise and her hire shall be holiness to the Lord; it shall not be treasured nor laid up; for her merchandise shall be for them that dwell before the Lord, to eat sufficiently, and for durable clothing.

q. Num. 22. 9.—Ver. 1. Ezek. 27. 25, 26.—Hieb. It shall be unto Tyre as the song of an harlot.—Rev. 18. 2.—Zech. 14. 21, 22.—Hieb. 64.

of them there to secure the possession of the city, which he and his successors greatly enlarged and ornamented. They had perhaps been useful to him in his wars, and might be likely to be farther useful in keeping under the old inhabitants of that city, and of the country belonging to it: according to the policy of the Assyrian kings, who generally brought new people into the conquered countries. See Isa. xxxvi. 17; 2 Kings xvii. 6, 24. The testimony of Diocærchus, a Greek historian contemporary with Alexander, (apud Steph. de Urbibus, in voc. Χαλδαίος,) in regard to the fact is remarkable, though he is mistaken in the name of the king he speaks of. He says,—“That a certain king of Assyria, the fourteenth in succession from Ninus,” (as he might be, if Ninus is placed, as in the common chronology, eight hundred years higher than we have above set him,) “named, as it is said, Chaldeus, having gathered together and united all the people called Chaldeans, built the famous city, Babylon, upon the Euphrates.”

Verse 14. Howl, ye ships] The prophet Ezekiel hath enlarged upon this part of the same subject with great force and elegance:—

“Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH concerning Tyre: At the sound of the fall, at the cry of the wounded, At the great slaughter in the midst of thee, shall not the islands tremble? And shall not all the prisoners of the sea desecrate from thy shores, And lay aside their robes, and strip off their embroidered garments? They shall clothe themselves with treading, they shall sit on the ground; They shall trouble every moment, they shall be astonished at thee. And they shall utter a lamentation over thee, and shall say unto thee: How art thou lost, thou that wast inhabited from the sea! The renowned city, that was strong in the sea, she and her inhabitants! That struck with terror all her neighbours! Now shall the coasts tremble in the day of thy fall, And the isles that are in the sea shall be troubled at thy departure.” Ezek. xvi. 15—18.

Verse 15. According to the days of one king] That is, of one kingdom. See Dan. vii. 17; viii. 20. Nebuchadnezzar began his conquest in the first year of his reign; from thence to the taking of Babylon by Cyrus are seventy years; at which time the nations conquered by Nebuchadnezzar were to be restored to liberty. These seventy years limit the duration of the Babylonish monarchy. Tyre was taken by him towards the middle of that period; so did not serve the king of Babylon during the whole period, but only for the remaining part of it. This seems to be the meaning of Isaiah: the days allotted to the one king, or kingdom, are seventy years; Tyre, with the rest of the conquered nations, shall continue in a state of subjection and desolation to the end of that period. Not from the beginning and through the whole of the period; for, by being one of the latest conquests, the duration of that state of subjection in regard to her, was not much more than half of it. “All these nations,” saith Jeremiah, xxv. 11, “shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years.” Some of them were conquered sooner, some later: but the end of this period was the common term for the deliverance of them all.

There is another way of computing the seventy years, from the year in which Tyre was actually taken to the nineteenth of Darius Hystaspis; whom the Phœnicians, or Tyrians, assisted against the Ionians, and probably on that account might then be restored to their former liberties and privileges. But I think the former the more probable interpretation.

Dreadful judgments impending over the people of God, 1—4. Particular enumeration of the heinous impieties which provoked the Divine vengeance, 5, 6. Great political wretchedness of the transgressors, 7—12. The calamities shall be so great that only a small remnant shall be left in the land, as it were the gleanings of the vintage, 13. The rest scattered over the different countries, spread there the knowledge of God, 14—16. Strong figures by which the great distress and long captivity of the transgressors are set forth, 17—22. Gracious promise of a redemption from captivity; and of an extension of the kingdom of God in the latter days, attended with such glorious circumstances as totally to eclipse the light and splendor of the previous dispensation, 23.

BEHOLD, the Lord maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof.

2 And it shall be, as with the people, so with the priest; as with the servant, so with his master; as with the maid, so with her mistress; as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the lender, so with the borrower; as with the taker of usury, so with the giver of usury to him.

3 The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled: for the Lord hath spoken this word.

4 The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away, the haughty people of the earth do languish.

[“The old prostitutes do nothing but sing, while the young ones dance; and animate them both by vocal and instrumental music.”]

Verse 17. After the end of seventy years] Tyre, after its destruction by Nebuchadnezzar, recovered, as it is here foretold, its ancient trade, wealth, and grandeur; as it did likewise after a second destruction by Alexander. It became Christian early with the rest of the neighbouring countries. St. Paul himself found many Christians there, Acts xxi. 4. It suffered much in the Dioclesian persecution. It was an archbishopric under the patriarchate of Jerusalem, with fourteen bishoprics under its jurisdiction. It continued Christian till it was taken by the Saracens in 639; was recovered by the Christians in 1124. But in 1290 was conquered by the Mamelukes, and afterwards taken from them by the Turks in 1517. Since that time it has sunk into utter decay; is now a mere ruin, a bare rock, “a place to spread nets upon,” as the prophet Ezekiel foretold it should be, chap. xxvi. 14. See Sandys’ Travels; Vitrings on the place; Bp. Newton on the Prophecies, Dissert. xi.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIV.

From the thirteenth chapter to the twenty-third inclusive, the fate of several cities and nations is denounced: of Babylon, of the Philistines, Moab, Damascus, Egypt, Tyre. After having foretold the destruction of the foreign nations, enemies of Judah, the prophet declares the judgments impending on the people of God themselves for their wickedness and apostasy, and the desolation that shall be brought on their whole country.

The twenty-fourth and the three following chapters, seem to have been delivered about the same time: before the destruction of Moab by Shalmaneser; (see chap. xxv. 10), consequently, before the destruction of Samaria; probably in the beginning of Hezekiah’s reign. But concerning the particular subject of the twenty-fourth chapter interpreters are not all agreed: some refer it to the desolation caused by the invasion of Shalmaneser; others to the invasion of Nebuchadnezzar; and others to the destruction of the city and nation by the Romans. Vitrings is singular in his opinion, who applies it to the persecution of Antiochus Epiphaneus. Perhaps it may have a view to all of the three great desolations of the country, by Shalmaneser, by Nebuchadnezzar, and by the Romans; especially the last, to which some parts of it may seem more peculiarly applicable. However, the prophet chiefly employs general images; such as set forth the greatness and universality of the ruin and desolation that is to be brought upon the country by these great revolutions, involving all orders and degrees of men, changing entirely the face of things, and destroying the whole polity both religious and civil; without entering into minute circumstances, or necessarily restraining it by particular marks to one great event, exclusive of others of the same kind.

Verse 4. The world languisheth] The world is the same with the land; that is, the kingdoms of Judah and Israel; orbis Israeliticus. See Note on chap. xiii. 11.

19 The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is incardissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly.

20 The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and not rise again.

21 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth.

22 And they shall be gathered together, as prisoners are gathered in the pit, and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited.

23 Then the moon shall be confounded, and the sun ashamed, when the Lord of hosts shall reign in mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously.

CHAPTER XXV.

The short verses which the Prophet gave at the promised restoration of the people of God and the Messiah's kingdom in the close of the preceding chapter make him break out into a rapturous song of praise in this, where although he alludes to temporal afflictions, such as the destruction of the cities which had been so war with them, the ruin of Moab, and other signal interpositions of Divine providence in behalf of the Jews; yet he is evidently impressed with a more lively sense of future and much higher blessings under the gospel dispensation in the plenitude of its revelation, of which the temporal deliverances vouchsafed at various times to the primitive Kingdoms of Israel and Judah were the prototypes, 1-8. These blessings are described under the figure of a feast made for all nations; 9, the removing of a veil from their faces; 7; the total extinction of the empire of death by the resurrection from the dead, the execution of all scores, and the final overthrow of all the enemies of the people of God; 9-11.

Verse 21. On high--upon the earth That is, the ecclesiastical and civil polity of the Jews; which shall be destroyed. The nation shall continue in a state of depression and dereliction for a long time. The image seems to be taken from the practice of the great monarchs of that time; who, when they had thrown their wretched captives into a dungeon, never gave themselves the trouble of enquiring about them; but let them lie a long time in that miserable condition, wholly destitute of relief, and disregarded. God shall at length revisit and restore His people in the last age: and then the kingdom of God shall be established in such perfection, as wholly to obscure and eclipse the glory of the temporary, typical, preparative kingdom now subsisting.

The figurative language of the prophets is taken from the analogy between the world natural, and an empire or kingdom considered as a world politic. Accordingly the whole world natural, consisting of heaven and earth, signifies the whole world politic, consisting of thrones and people; or so much of it as is considered in prophecy: and the things in that world signify the analogous things in this. For the heavens and the things therein signify thrones and dignities, and those who enjoy them; and the earth, with the things thereon, the inferior people; and the lowest parts of the earth, called hades, or hell, the lowest or most miserable part of them.--Great earthquakes, and the shaking of heaven and earth, are put for the shaking of kingdoms, so as to distract and overthrow them; the creating a new heaven and earth, and the passing of an old one, or the beginning and end of a world, for the rise and ruin of a body politic signified thereby.--The sun for the whole species and race of kings, in the kingdoms of the world politic; the moon, for the body of the common people, considered as the king's wife; the stars, for subordinate princes and great men; or for bishops and rulers of the people of God, when the sun is Christ: setting of the sun, moon, and stars; darkening the sun, turning the moon into blood, and falling of the stars, for the ceasing of a kingdom." Sir L. Newton's Observations on the Prophecies, Part I. chap. 2.

[These Observations are of great consequence and use, in explaining the phraseology of the prophets.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXV.

It does not appear to me that this Chapter has any close and particular connexion with the chapter immediately preceding, taken separately, and by itself. The subject of that was the desolation of the land of Israel and Judah, by for thou hast done wonderful things; thy counsels of old are faithfulness and truth.

2 For thou hast made of a city an heap; of a defenced city a ruin: a palace of strangers to be no city: it shall never be built.

3 Therefore shall the strong people glorify thee, the city of the terrible nations shall fear thee.

4 For thou hast been a strength to the poor, a strength to the needy in his distress, a refuge from the storm, a shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall.

5 Thou shalt bring down the noise of strangers, as the heat in a dry place; even the heat with the shadow of a cloud: the branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low.

6 And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined.

7 And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations.

8 He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it.

the just judgment of God, for the wickedness and disobedience of the people: which, taken by itself, seems not with any propriety to introduce a hymn of thanksgiving to God for His mercies to his people in delivering them from their enemies. But taking the whole course of prophecies, from the thirteenth to the twenty-fourth chapter inclusive, in which the prophet foretells the destruction of several cities and nations, enemies to the Jews, and of the land of Judah itself, yet with intimations of a remnant to be saved, and a restoration to be at length effected by a glorious establishment of the kingdom of God: with a view to this extensive scene of God's providence in all its parts, and in all its consequences, the prophet may well be supposed to break out into this song of praise; in which his mind seems to be more possessed with the prospect of future mercies than with the recollection of the past.

Verse 2. A city--(The city) Nineweh, Babylon, Ar, Moab, or any other strong fortress possessed by the enemies of the people of God.

For the first me-âr, the Syriac and Vulgate read ha-âr; the Septuagint and Chaldee read, in the plural, arim, transposing the letters. After the second me-âr, a MS. adds ליל la-gol.

A palace of strangers--(The palace of the proud ones) For zirim, strangers, MS. Bodd. and another read zedim, the proud: so likewise the Septuagint; for they render it σωφω here, and in ver. 5, as they do in some other places: see Deut. xviii. 20, 22. Another MS. reads zirim, adversaries; which also makes a good sense. But zirim, and zedim, are often confounded by the great similitude of the letters ד dalet and ר resh. See Mal. iii. 15; iv. 1. Psa. xix. 14, in the Septuagint; and Psa. liv. 5, (where the Chaldee reads zirim zedim) compared with Psa. lxxxvi. 16.

Verse 4. As a storm against the wall--(Like a winter-storm) For kir, read kor: or as kir-âr, from kir-âr, so kir-kir from karar. Capellus.

Verse 5. Of strangers--(Of the proud) The same mistake here as in ver. 2: see the Note there. Here zedim, the proud, is parallel to zirim-âritsim, the formidable: as in Psa. liv. 5, and lxxxvi. 14.

The heat with the shadow of a cloud--(As the heat by a thick cloud) For hared, read ke-hared; which is a repetition of the beginning of the foregoing parallel line; and the verse taken out of the parallel form, and more fully expressed, would run thus: "As a thick cloud interposing tempers the heat of the sun on the burnt soil; so shalt thou, by the interposition of Thy power, bring low and abate the tumult of the proud, and the triumph of the formidable."

[Verse 6. In this mountain--Zion--at Jerusalem--in His church.]

9 And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.

10 For in this mountain shall the hand of the Lord rest, and Moab shall be trodden down under him, even as straw is trodden down for the dunghill.

p. Gen. 49. 15. Th. 2. 13.—q. Ps. 20. 5.

Shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast [Salvation by Jesus Christ.] A feast is a proper and usual expression of joy in consequence of victory, or any other great occasion. The feast here spoken of is to be celebrated on mount Zion; and all the peoples, without distinction, are to be invited to it. This can be no other than the celebration of the establishment of Christ's kingdom, which is frequently represented in the gospel under the image of a feast; "whom many shall come from the East and West, and shall sit down at table with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven." Matt. viii. 11. See also Luke xiv. 16; xxii. 29, 30. This sense is fully confirmed by the concomitants of this feast expressed in the next verse; the removing of the veil from the face of the nations, and the abolition of death: the first of which is obviously and clearly explained of the preaching of the gospel; and the second must mean the blessing of immortality procured for us by Christ, "who hath abolished death, and through death hath destroyed him that had the power of death."

Of wines on the lees—(Of old wines) Heb. lees; that is, of wines kept long on the lees. The word used to express the lees in the original, signifies the preservers; because they preserve the strength and flavour of the wine. "All recent wines after the fermentation has ceased, ought to be kept on their lees for a certain time, which greatly contributes to increase their strength and flavour. Whenever this first fermentation has been deficient, they will retain a more rich and sweet taste than is natural to them in a recent true vinous state; and unless farther fermentation is promoted by their lying longer on their own lees, they will never attain their genuine strength and flavour, but run into repeated and ineffectual fermentations, and soon degenerate into a liquor of an acetous kind. All wines of a light and austere kind, by a fermentation too great, or too long continued, certainly degenerate into a weak sort of vinegar; while the stronger not only require but will safely bear a stronger, and often repeated fermentation; and are more apt to degenerate from a defect than excess of fermentation into a vapid, ropy, and at length into a putrescent state." Sir Edward Barry, Observations on the Wines of the Ancients, p. 9, 10.

Thevenot observes, particularly of the Shiras wine, that, after it is refined from the lees, it is apt to grow sour. "Il a beaucoup de lie; c'est pourquoi il donne puissamment dans la tête; et pour le rendre plus traitable on le passe par un chausse d'hypocras; après quoi il est fort clair, et moins fumeux. Ils mettent ce vin dans des grandes jarres de terres qui tiennent dix ou douze jusqu'à quatorze carabas; mais quand l'on a entamé une jarre, il faut la vider au plutôt, et mettre le vin qu'on en tire dans des bouteilles ou carabas; car si l'on y manque en le laissant quelque tems après que la jarre est entamée il se gâte et s'aigrit." Voyages, Tom. ii. p. 245.—"It has much sediment, and therefore is intoxicating. In order to make it more mellow, they strain it through a hypocrites' sleeve, after which it is very clear and less heady. They lay up this wine in great earthen jars, which hold from ten to fourteen carabas; but when a jar is unstopped, it is necessary to empty it immediately, and put the wine into bottles or carabas; for if it be left thus in the jar, it will spoil and become acid."

The caraba, or girba, is a goat's skin drawn off from the animal, having no apertures but those occasioned by the tail, the feet, and the neck. One opening is left, to pour in and draw off the liquor. This skin goes through a sort of tanning process, and is often beautifully ornamented, as is the case with one of these girbas now lying before me.]

This clearly explains the very elegant comparison, or rather allegory, of Jeremiah, chap. xlviii. 11; where the reader will find a remarkable example of the mixture of the proper with the allegorical, not uncommon in the Hebrew poets:

"Moab hath been at ease from his youth, And he hath settled upon his lees; Nor hath he been drawn off from vessel to vessel, Neither hath he gone into captivity; Wherefore his taste remaineth in him, And his flavour is not changed."

Sir John Chardin's MS. note on this place of Jeremiah

11 And he shall spread forth his hands in the midst of them, as he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim: and he shall bring down their pride together with the spoils of their hands.

12 And the fortress of the high fort of thy walls shall he bring down, lay low, and bring to the ground, even to the dust.

r. Or, stretched.—o. stretched in Madinet.—Ch. 26. 5.

is as follows: "On change ainsi le vin de coupe en coupe en orient; et quand on en entame une, il faut la vider en petites coupes ou bouteilles, sans quoi il s'aigrit." ["They change the wine from vessel to vessel in the East; and when they unstop a large one, it is necessary to empty it into small vessels, as otherwise it will grow sour."]

Verse 7. The face of the covering cast over all people—(The covering that covered the face of all the peoples) MS. Bodl. reads יָסַף וְשָׁפַף אֶת פְּנֵי כָל בְּשָׂרִים. The word וְשָׁפַף, face, has been removed from its right place into the line above, where it makes no sense; as Houbigant conjectured. [The face of the covering, &c. He will unveil all the Moaic ritual; and shew by His apostles that it referred to, and was accomplished in the sacrificial offering of Jesus Christ.]

Verse 8. He will swallow up death] He, by the grace of God, will taste death for every man. Heb. ii. 9. Probably, swallow up death, and taste death, in both these verses, refer to the same thing—Jesus dying instead of a guilty world. These forms of speech may refer to the punishment of certain criminals;—they were obliged to drink a cup of poison. That cup which every criminal in the world must have drunk, Jesus Christ drank for them; and thus he swallowed up death: but as He rose again from the dead, complete victory was gained.

From these three verses we learn,— I. That the gospel is a pleasurable provision:—"I will make a feast for all people."

II. That it is a source of light and salvation:—"I will destroy the veil.—I will abolish death, and bring life and immortality to light."

III. That it is a source of comfort and happiness:—"I will wipe away all tears from off all faces."

As in the Arabic countries a covering was put over the face of him who was condemned to suffer death, it is probable that the words in ver. 7. may refer to this.—The whole world was condemned to death, and about to be led out to execution, when the gracious Lord interposed, and, by a glorious sacrifice, procured a general pardon.]

Verse 9. It shall be said—(Shall they say) So the Septuagint, and Vulgate in the plural number. They read וְשָׁפַף וְשָׁפַף וְשָׁפַף, the Syriac reads וְשָׁפַף וְשָׁפַף וְשָׁפַף, These shall say. [They shall say—i. e. The Jews and the Gentiles—Lo! this, Jesus Christ, is our God: we have waited for Him, according to the predictions of the prophets. We have expected Him—and we have not been disappointed; therefore will we be glad, and rejoice in His salvation.]

Verse 10. Shall the hand of the Lord rest—(The hand of Jeshovan shall give rest) "Heb. מַן תִּנְחַם, quiescat. Annon מַן תִּנְחַם, quiescat dabit, ut Graeci, cessante dicit, et Copt. "Mr. Woods. That is, "shall give peace and quiet to Zion, by destroying the enemy;" as it follows.

As straw is trodden down—(As the straw is threshed) Hoc juxta ritum loquitur Palaestinae et multarum Orientis provinciarum, qua ob praetorium et feni penuriam palaeas preparant anni animantium. Sicut autem carpente ferrata rotis per modicum in serrarum modum se volventibus, qua stipulam conterunt; et comminunt in palaeas. Quomodo igitur pluvietis ferratis palaeas conterantur, sic conteretur Moab sub eo; sive sub Dei potentia, sive in semetipso, ut nihil in eo integri remaneat. [This is spoken in reference to the mode of threshing in Palestine, and various other Asiatic provinces. Because of the scarcity of meadow land and hay, they make chopped straw for the cattle. They have large wheels, studded over with iron teeth or nails, by which, on the out of doors threshing floors, they pound and reduce the straw into chaff. As, therefore, the straw is reduced to chaff by bringing the iron shod wheel over it; so shall Moab be bruised by the power of God, that nothing whole shall remain.] Hieron. in loc. See Note on chap. xxviii. 27. For the dunghill—(Under the wheels of the car) For מַדְמָנָה madmanah, the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate, read מַדְמָנָה mē-recabah; which I have followed. See Joshua xv. 31, compared with xix. 5, where there is a mistake very nearly the same. The ker, מַדְמָנָה, is confirmed by twenty-eight MSS. (seven ancient), and three Editions.

Verse 11. As he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his

CHAPTER XXVI.

This Chapter, like the foregoing, is a song of praise, in which thanksgivings for temporal and spiritual mercies are beautifully mingled, though the latter still predominate. Even the sublime and evangelical doctrine of the resurrection seems here to be hinted at, and made to typify the deliverance of the people of God from a state of the lowest misery: the captivity, the general dispersion, or both. This hymn too, like the preceding, is beautifully diversified by the frequent change of speakers. It opens with a chorus of the church celebrating the promotion vouchsafed by God to his people; and the happiness of the righteous, whom He guards, contrasted with the misery of the wicked whom he punishes, &c. To this succeeds their own pious professions of staying, trusting, and depending on God, &c. Here the Prophet breaks in, in his own person, eagerly catching the last words of the chorus, which were perfectly in unison to the feelings of his own soul, and which he beautifully repeats, as one musical instrument reverberates the sound of another on the same key with it. He makes likewise a suitable response to what had been said on the judgements of God, and observes their different effects on the good and the bad;—improving the one, and hardening the other, 9—11. After this a chorus of Jews express their gratitude to God for past deliverances, make confession of their sins, and supplicate His power, which they had been long expecting, 12—15. To this God makes a gracious reply, promising deliverance that should be as life from the dead, 16. And the Prophet (apparently alluding to the command of Moses to the Israelites, when the destroying angel was to go through the land of Egypt,) concludes with exhorting this people to patience and resignations, till God send the deliverance He has promised, 16, 21.

CL. XVII. 1. IN a that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah; We have a strong city; b salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks.

2 c Open ye the gates that the righteous nation which keepeth the d truth may enter in.

3 Thou wilt keep him e in perfect peace; whose f mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee.

4 Trust ye in the Lord for ever: g for in the Lord JEHOVAH is h everlasting strength.

5 For he bringeth down them that dwell on high; i the lofty city, he layeth it low; he layeth it low, even to the ground; he bringeth it even to the dust.

6 The foot shall tread it down, even the feet of the poor, and the steps of the needy.

7 The way of the just is uprightness; k thou must upright, dost weigh the path of the just.

8 Yea, l in the way of thy judgments, O Lord, have we waited for thee; the desire of our soul is to thy name and to the remembrance of thee.

11 LORD, when thy hand is lifted up, q they will not see: but they shall see, and be ashamed for their envy r at the people; yea, the fire of thine enemies shall devour them.

14 They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise; therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish.

15 Thou hast increased the nation, O LORD, thou hast increased the nation: thou art glorified: thou hast removed it far unto all the ends of the earth.

16 LORD, u in trouble have they visited thee, they poured out a v prayer when thy chastening was upon them.

17 Like as a w woman with child that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain, and crieth out in her pangs; so have we been in thy sight, O LORD.

hands to swim—(As he that sinketh stretcheth out his hands to swim) There is great obscurity in this place: some understand God as the Agent; others Moab. I have chosen the latter sense, as I cannot conceive that the stretching out of the hands of a swimmer in swimming can be any illustration of the action of God stretching out His hands over Moab to destroy it. I take הושיעך hoshachah, altering the point on the ו sin, on the authority of the Septuagint, to be the participle of שחך shachah, the same with שחך shach, and שחך shachach, to bow down, to be depressed; and that the prophet designed a paronomasia here, a figure which he frequently uses, between the similar words שחך shachah, and שחך shachoth. As שחך tachath, in his place, or on the spot, as we say, in the preceding verse, gives us an idea of the sudden and complete destruction of Moab; so בקרבו be-kerebo, in the midst of him, means that this destruction shall be open, and exposed to the view of all: the neighbouring nations shall plainly see him struggling against it, as a man in the midst of the deep waters exerts all his efforts, by swimming, to save himself from drowning.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVI.

Verse 1. We have a strong city] In opposition to the city of the enemy, which God had destroyed, chap. xxv. 2, see the Note there.

[Salvation—for walls and bulwarks—למגדן חומה ודitch, walls and redoubts, or the walls and the ditch. הן chen, properly signifies the ditch or trench, without the wall, see Kimchi. The same Rabbin says, This song refers to the time of salvation, i. e. the days of the Messiah.

Verse 2. The righteous nation] The converted Gentiles shall have the gates opened—a full entrance into all the glories and privileges of the gospel; being fellow-heirs with the converted Jews. The Jewish peculiarity is destroyed, for the middle wall of partition is broken down.

The truth—the gospel itself—as the fulfilment of all the ancient types, shadows, and ceremonies; and therefore termed the truth, in opposition to all those shadowy rites and ceremonies. The law was given by Moses: but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ, John i. 17, and see the Note there.

Verse 3. In perfect peace] שלום שלום shalom, shalom, peace, peace, i. e. peace upon peace—all kinds of prosperity—happiness in this world, and in the world to come.]

Because he trusteth in thee—(Because they have trusted Vol. II.—76 in thee]) See the Chaldee בַּתְּחַנּוּ batethchnu. The Syriac and Vulgate read בַּתְּחַנּוּ batethchnu, we have trusted. Schroeder, Gram. Heb. p. 360, explains the present reading בַּתְּחַנּוּ batethchnu impersonally, confitimus est.

Verse 4. In the LORD JEHOVAH—(In JEHOVAH) In JAH JEHOVAH, Heb.: but see Houbigant, and the Note on chap. xii. 2.

Everlasting strength] עוֹלָם וָעוֹם olam v'etm lamim, The rock of ages; or, according to Rab. Marimon—the eternal Fountain, Source, or Spring. Does not this refer to the lasting streams from the rock in the desert? And that rock was Christ. ge haen papet in the Eloh' sco the everlasting words. Old MS. Bible.]

Verse 8. Have we waited for thee—(We have placed our confidence in thy name) The Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee, read קָוִינוּ kavinu, without the pronoun annexed.

Verse 9. Have I desired thee] Forty-one MSS. of Dr. Kennicott's and many of De Rossi's, (nine ancient), and five Editions read יְיָוִיעָה yevivica. It is proper to note this: because the second yod, being omitted in the Text, the Vulgate and many others have rendered it in the third person.

[When thy judgments, &c.—It would be better to read, when thy judgments were in the earth, the inhabitants of the world have learned (לָמְדוּ lamedu) righteousness. Men seldom seek God in prosperity; they are apt to rest in an earthly portion: but God in mercy embitters this by adversity; then there is a general cry after Himself as our chief, solid, and only, permanent good.

Verse 12. Thou also hast wrought all our works in us—(Whatever vicissitudes of things happened unto us, whether good or evil, thou hast wrought it all: nothing comes by chance.) Kimchi.]

Verse 16. LORD, in trouble have they visited thee—(O JEHOVAH, in affliction we have sought thee) So the Septuagint, and two MSS. have קָוִינוּ pekudnuca, in the first person plural. And so perhaps it should be קָוִינוּ teakenu, in the first person: but how the Septuagint read this word is not clear; and this last member of the verse is extremely obscure.

For לָמְדוּ lamedu, the Septuagint read לָמְדוּ lamedu, in the first person likewise: a frequent mistake; see Note on chap. x. 29.

Verse 18. We have—brought forth wind] The learned professor Michaelis explains this image in the following

["The empenumatosis, or windy inflation of the womb, is a disorder to which females are liable. Some have had this in such wise, for a long time together, that they have appeared to themselves, and even to very skilful medical men, to be pregnant; and after having endured much pain, and even the throes of apparent childbearing, they have been eased and restored to health, by the emission of a great quantity of wind from the uterus. This disorder is well known to medical men."] The Syriac translator seems to have understood it in this manner: Enizi sumus, ut illa, quæ ventosæ pariunt. ["We have brought forth as they who bring forth wind."]

In the earth—(In the land) ארץ be-arets: so a MS., the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate.

Verse 19. My dead body—(My deceased) All the ancient Versions render it in the plural; they read נבולותי nibeloti, my dead bodies. The Syriac and Chaldees read נבולותיהם nabolotheyhem, their dead bodies.

The dew of herbs—(The dew of the dawn) Lucis, according to the Vulgate; so also the Syriac and Chaldees.

The deliverance of the people of God from a state of the lowest depression is explained by images plainly taken from the resurrection of the dead. In the same manner the prophet Ezekiel represents the restoration of the Jewish nation from a state of utter dissolution by the restoring of the dry bones to life, exhibited to him in a vision, chap. xxxvii. which is directly thus applied and explained, ver. 11-13. And this deliverance is expressed with a manifest opposition to what is here said above, ver. 14, of the great lords and tyrants, under whom they had groaned:—

"They are dead, they shall not live; They are deceased tyrants, they shall not rise."

That they should be destroyed utterly, and should never be restored to their former power and glory. It appears from hence, that the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was at that time a popular and common doctrine; for an image which is assumed in order to express or represent any thing in the way of allegory or metaphor, whether poetical or prophetic, must be an image commonly known and understood; otherwise it will not answer the purpose for which it is assumed.

[Kimchi refers these words to the days of the Messiah, and says, "Then many of the saints shall rise from the dead." And quotes Dan. xii. 2. Do not these words speak of the resurrection of our blessed Lord; and to that resurrection of the bodies of men, which shall be the consequence of his body being raised from the dead?]

Thy dead men shall live,—with my dead body shall they arise.—This seems very express.]

Verse 20. Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers] An exhortation to patience and resignation under oppression, with a confident expectation of deliverance, by the power of God manifestly to be exerted in the destruction of the oppressor. It seems to be an allusion to the command of Moses to the Israelites, when the destroying angel was to go through the land of Egypt, "not to go out at the door of their houses until the morning," Exod. xii. 22. And before the passage of the Red Sea: "Fear ye not, stand still, and see the salvation of Jehovah.—Jehovah shall fight for you, and ye shall hold your peace." Exod. xiv. 13, 14.

[Verse 21. The earth also shall disclose her blood—Crimes of cruelty and oppression which have passed away from the eyes of men, God will bring into judgment, and exact punishment for them. O what a reckoning will the kingdoms of the earth have with God, for the

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVII.

The subject of this Chapter seems to be the nature, the measure, and the design, of God's dealings with His people: ver. 1, His judgments inflicted on their great and powerful enemies: ver. 2, His constant care and protection of His favourite vineyard, in the form of a dialogue: ver. 7, the moderation and lenity, with which the severity of His judgments have been tempered: ver. 9, the end and design of them, to recover them from idolatry: and ver. 12, the recalling of them, on their repentance, from their several dispersions. The first verse seems connected with the two last verses of the preceding chapter.

Verse 1. Leviathan] The animals here mentioned seem to be: the crocodile, rigid, by the stiffness of the backbone, so that he cannot readily turn himself when he pursues his prey; hence the easiest way of escaping from him is by making frequent and short turnings; the serpent or dragon, flexible and winding; which coils himself up in a circular form: the sea-monster or the whale. These are used allegorically, without doubt, for great potentates, enemies and persecutors of the people of God: but to specify the particular persons or states designed by the prophet under these images, is a matter of great difficulty, and comes not necessarily within the design of these Notes. [R. D. Kimchi says, leviathan is a parable concerning the kings of the Gentiles: it is the largest fish in the sea, called also pan tannin, the dragon, or rather the whale. By these names the Grecian, Turkish, and Roman empires are intended. The dragon of the sea seems to mean some nation having a strong naval force, and extensive commerce. See Kimchi on the place.

Verse 2. Sing ye unto her] נר נר אנו לה. Bishop Louth translates this, Sing ye a responsive song: and says, that my anah, to answer, signifies occasionally to sing responsively; and that this mode of singing was frequently practised among the ancient Hebrews. See De Poes. Sac. Heb. Præl. xix. at the beginning.

This, indeed, was the ancient method of singing in various nations. The song was divided into distinct portions, and the singers sung alternately. There is a fine specimen of this in the song of Deborah and Barak; and also in the Idyls of Theocritus, and the Eclogues of Virgil.

This kind of singing was properly a dialogue in verse, sung to a particular tune; or in the mode which is now termed recitativo. I have seen it often practised on funeral occasions among the descendants of the aboriginal Irish. The Poems of Ossian are of this kind.

The learned Bishop distinguishes the parts of this Dialogue thus:—

- 3. Jehovah. It is I, JEROVAH, that preserve her; I will water her every moment; I will take care of her by night; And by day I will keep guard over her.
- 4. Vineyard. I have no wall for my defence: O that I had a fence of the thorn and briar! Jehovah. Against them should I march in battle, I should burn them up together. Ah! let her rather take hold of my protection.
- 5. Vineyard. Let him make peace with me! Please let him make with me!
- 6. Jehovah. They that come from the root of Jacob shall flourish, Israel shall bud forth; And they shall fill the face of the world with fruit.

A vineyard with red wine]—The redder the wine, the more it was valued, says Kimchi.

Bishop Louth translates, To the beloved vineyard. For נר נר chemed, red, a multitude of MSS. and Editions, have נר נר chemed, desirable. This is supported by the Septuagint and Chaldees.]

Verse 3. Lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day—(I will take care of her by night; and by day I will keep guard over her)] For נר נר pen yiphkod, lest any visit it; the Syriac read נר נר ve-ephkod, and I will

4 Fury is not in me; who would set the briers and thorns against me in battle? I would go through them, I would burn them together.

5 Or let him take hold of my strength, that he may make peace with me; and he shall make peace with me.

6 He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root: Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit.

7 Hath he smitten him, as he smote those that smote him? or is he slain according to the slaughter of them that are slain by him?

8 In measure, when it shooteth forth, thou wilt debate with it: he stayeth his rough wind in the day of the east wind.

9 By this therefore shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged; and this is all the fruit to take away his sin; when he maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk-stones that are beaten in sunder, the groves and images shall not stand up.

10 Yet the defenced city shall be desolate, and the habitation forsaken, and left like a wilderness: there shall the calf feed, and there shall he lie down, and consume the branches thereof.

11 When the boughs thereof are withered, they shall be broken off: the women come, and set them on fire: for it is a people of no understanding: therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will shew them no favour.

12 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall beat off from the channel of the river unto the stream of Egypt, and ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel.

13 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the great trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall worship the Lord in the holy mount at Jerusalem.

visit it. [Twenty MSS. of Kennicott, fourteen of De Rossi, and two of my own,] and six Editions, read אָפְקוּר ephok, I will visit, in the first person.

Verse 4. Fury is not in me—(I have no wall) For אָפְקוּר chemah, anger, the Septuagint and Syriac read אָפְקוּר chemah, wall. An ancient MS. has אָפְקוּר chemah. For אָפְקוּר, in her, two MSS. read אָפְקוּר, in them, plural. The vineyard wishes for a wall, and a fence of thorns: human strength and protection; (as the Jews were too apt to apply to their powerful neighbours for assistance, and to trust to the shadow of Egypt:) JEHOVAH replies, that this would not avail her, nor defend her against His wrath. He counsels her therefore to betake herself to His protection. On which she entreats Him to make peace with her.

[From the above Note it appears that the Bishop reads אָפְקוּר chemah, wall, for אָפְקוּר chemah, anger or fury, in accordance with the Syriac and Septuagint. The latter אָפְקוּר, makes the only difference, which letter is frequently absent from many words where its place is supplied by the point אָפְקוּר: it might have been so here, formerly; and in process of time both אָפְקוּר and אָפְקוּר might have been lost. The Syriac supports the learned Bishop's criticism; as the word אָפְקוּר shora is there used; which word in the plural is found, Heb. xi. 30. By faith the walls of Jericho. The Bishop thinks the Septuagint is on his side: to me it seems neither for nor against the criticism. The words in the Vatican copy are εἰς πόλιν οχυρὰ, I am a fortified city: which the Arabic follows; but instead of οχυρὰ the Codex Alexandrinus has εἰς πόλιν, I am a strong city.

The word אָפְקוּר chemah, wall, is not found in any MS. in the Collections of Kennicott and De Rossi, nor in any of my own MSS.

However, one of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. has אָפְקוּר chemah: but probably that word now appears to be אָפְקוּר, was formerly a אָפְקוּר, and now partially obliterated.

This Song receives much light from being collated with that in chap. v.; and perhaps the Bishop's criticism will find its best support from such a collation. In ver. 5, of that Chapter, God threatens to take away the wall of His vineyard: this was done; and here the vineyard complains, I have no wall; and wishes for any kind of defence rather than be thus naked. This is the only natural support of the above criticism.]

About Tripoli there are abundance of vineyards and gardens, enclosed for the most part with hedges, which chiefly consist of the rhamnus, paliurus, oxycantha, &c." Rawolf, p. 21, 22. A fence of thorns is esteemed equal to a wall for strength, being commonly represented as impenetrable. See Mic. vii. 4; Hos. ii. 6.

Who would set the briers and thorns against me—(O that I had a fence of the thorn and brier) Seven MSS. (two ancient,) and one Edition, with the Syriac, Vulgate, and Aquila, read אָפְקוּר verith, with the conjunction אָפְקוּר prefixed. [Who would set the briers and thorns. אָפְקוּר אָפְקוּר mi yiteneni shamir shait, Who shall give me the brier and thorn, i. e. for a defence: but hear Kimchi.—"who (the vineyard) hath given me (Jehovah) the brier and the thorn instead of good grapes."]

Verse 5. Or—(Ah) For אָפְקוּר, I read אָפְקוּר, as it was at first in a MS. The אָפְקוּר was easily lost, being followed by another אָפְקוּר.

Verse 6. To take root—(From the root) For אָפְקוּר yishresh, I read with the Syriac, אָפְקוּר mi-shoresh. And for אָפְקוּר אָפְקוּר yashit uparah, אָפְקוּר אָפְקוּר yashit uparah, joining the אָפְקוּר to the first word, and taking that into construction with the first part of the sentence, Israel shall bud forth. I suppose the dialogue to be continued in this verse, which pursues the same image of the allegory, but in the way of metaphor.

Verse 9. The groves—(And if the groves) אָפְקוּר va-lo. Four MSS. (two ancient,) [of Kennicott, and one (ancient,) of my own, with the Septuagint: this makes a fuller sense.

Verse 10. There shall the calf feed] That is, the king of Egypt, says Kimchi.]

Verse 11. The boughs thereof—(Her boughs) אָפְקוּר kiteiriah, MS. and Vulg.; that is, the boughs of the vineyard, referring still to the subject of the dialogue above.

The scarcity of fuel, especially wood, in most parts of the East is so great, that they supply it with every thing capable of burning; cow-dung dried, roots, parings of fruit, withered stalks of herbs and flowers: see Matt. chap. vi. 21—30. Vine-twigs are particularly mentioned as used for fuel in dressing their food, by D'Arvieux; La Roque, Palestine, p. 198. Ezekiel says, in his parable of the vine, used figuratively for the people of God, as the vineyard is here,—"Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? or will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon? Behold, it is cast into the fire for fuel." Chap. xv. 3, 4. "If a man abide not in me," saith our Lord, "he is cast forth as a branch [of the vine] and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the fire, and they are burned." John xv. 6. They employed women and children to gather these things; and they laid them up in store for use. The dressing and pruning of their vines afforded a good supply of the last sort of fuel: but the prophet says that the vines themselves of the beloved vineyard shall be blasted, withered, and broken; and the women shall come and gather them up; and carry away the whole of them to make their fires for domestic uses. See Harmer's Observations, Vol. I. p. 254, &c.

[Verse 12. The channel of the river—The river Sabbath, beyond which the Israelites were carried captive. Kimchi.]

Verse 13. The great trumpet shall be blown—Does not this refer to the time spoken of by our Lord, Matt. xxiv. 31. He shall send forth his angels,—the preachers of His Gospel;—with a great sound of a trumpet,—the earnest invitation to be saved by Jesus Christ;—and shall gather his elect,—the Jews, his ancient chosen people;—from the four winds,—from all parts of the habitable globe in which they have been dispersed.

In this Prophet there are several predictions relative to the conversion of Egypt to the true faith, which have not yet been fulfilled; and which must be fulfilled, for the truth of God cannot fail. Should Egypt ever succeed in casting off the Ottoman yoke, and fully establish its independence, it is most likely that the gospel of Christ would have a speedy entrance into it; and, according to these prophecies, a wide and permanent diffusion. At present, the Mohammedan power is a genuine antichrist. This also the Lord will remove in due time.]

CHAPTER XXVIII.

This Chapter begins with a denunciation of the approaching ruin of the Israelites by Shalmaneser, whose power is compared to a tempest of food, and his knowings the exaltation which are (Judah and Benjamin) who were to continue a kingdom after the final captivity of their brethren; and gives first a favourable prognostication of their affairs under Hezekiah, 9, 10, but soon changes to reproofs and threatenings for their impudence, and their profaneness, 7, 8. They are introduced as not only scornfully rejecting, but also mocking and violating the instructions of the prophet, 9, 10. To this God immediately returns in terms alluding to their own mocking, but differently applied, 11-13. The Prophet then addresses the scoffers, 14, who considered themselves as perfectly secure from every evil; 15; and answers them that there was no method safer than one, by which they could be saved, 16; that every other vain resource should fail in the day of visitation, 17, 18. He then further adds, that the blasphemies of God were particularly levied against them; and that all sin remains to which they trowed for saving them self should be in vain, 19, 20, as the Almighty, who, on account of His patience and long-suffering, is usually described as unrepentant with punishing, and nevertheless determined to punish them, 20, 22. The Prophet then concludes with a benediction pointing to explanation and defence of God's dealing with His people, 23-25.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVIII.

Verse 1. Woe to the crown of pride—[By the crown of pride, &c. Samaria is primarily understood.] "Sebaste, the ancient Samaria, is situated on a long mount of an oval figure; having first a fruitful valley, and then a ring of hills running round about it." Maunderall, p. 68. E regions horum ruderum mans est peramensis, planitie admodum frugifera circumseptus, super quem olim Samaria urbs condita fuit. Fureri Itinerarium, p. 93. The city, beautifully situated on the top of a round hill, and surrounded immediately with a rich valley and a circle of other hills beyond it, suggested the idea of a chaplet, or wreath of flowers worn upon their heads on occasions of festivity; expressed by the proud crown, and the fading flower of the drunkards. That this custom of wearing chaplets in their banquets prevailed among the Jews, as well as among the Greeks and Romans, appears from the following passage of the book of Wisdom:—

"Let us fill ourselves with costly wine and dainties, And let us bower of the spring pass by us; Let us crown ourselves with rose-buds, before they are withered." Wisd. 8. 7, 8.

Verse 2. Behold, the Lord hath a mighty and strong one—(Behold the mighty one, the exceedingly strong one) אמרי ארץ emits ladonai, fortis Domino, i. e. fortissimus, a Hebraism. For אמרי ladonai, to the Lord, thirty-eight MSS. [of Dr. Kennicott's and many of De Rossi's, with some of my own] and two Editions, read אמרי layehovah, to JEHOVAH.

Verse 3. The crown of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim—(The proud crowns of the drunkards of Ephraim) I read אמרי ayiroth, crowns, plural, to agree with the verb אמרי teramasenah, shall be trodden down.

Verse 4. The hasty fruit before the summer—(The early fruit before the summer) "No sooner doth the baccora (the early fig) draw near to perfection in the middle or latter end of June, than the kermez, or summer fig, begins to be formed, though it rarely ripens before August; about which time the same tree frequently throws out a third crop, or the winter fig, as we may call it. This is usually of a much longer shape and darker complexion than the kermez, hanging and ripening upon the tree even after the leaves are shed: and provided the winter proves mild and temperate, is gathered as a delicious morsel in the spring." Shaw, Travels, p. 370, fol. The image was very obvious to the inhabitants of Judea and the neighbouring countries, and is frequently applied by the prophets to express a desirable object; by none more elegantly than by Hosea, chap. ix. 10.

"Like grapes in the wilderness, I found Israel; Like the first ripe fig in her prime, I saw your fathers."

Which when he that looketh upon it seeth—(which whose seeth, he plucketh it immediately) For אמרי ayiroth, which, with אמרי haroek makes a miserable tautology, read, by a transposition of a letter, אמרי yaerah; a happy conjecture of Houbigant. The image expresses in the strongest manner the great ease with which the Assyrians shall take the city and the whole kingdom, and the avidity with which they shall seize the rich prey without resistance.

Verse 5. In that day] Thus far the prophecy relates to the Israelites, and manifestly denounces their approaching

4 And * the glorious beauty, which is on the head of the fat valley, shall be a fading flower, and as the hasty fruit before the summer; which when he that looketh upon it seeth, while it is yet in his hand he ^h eateth it up.

6 And for a spirit of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment, and for strength to them that turn the battle to the gate.

7 But they also ^h have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way: * the priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink, they are swallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in vision, they stumble in judgment.

8 For all tables are full of vomit and filthiness, so that there is no place clean.

destruction by Shalmaneser. Here it turns to the two tribes of Judah and Benjamin, the remnant of God's people who were to continue a kingdom after the final captivity of the Israelites. It begins with a favourable prognostication of their affairs under Hezekiah: but soon changes to reproofs and threatenings, for their intemperance, disobedience, and profaneness.

[Jonathan's Targum on this verse is worthy of notice:—"In that time Messiah, the Lord of hosts, משיחא דאי meschicha dayai tseboth, shall be a crown of joy and a diadem of praise to the residue of his people." Kimchi says, the Rabbins in general are of this opinion. Here, then, the Rabbins, and their most celebrated Targum, give the incommunicable name, אמרי yehovah tseboth, the Lord of hosts, to our ever blessed Redeemer, Jesus Christ.]

Verse 6. The battle to the gate—(The war to the gate of the enemy) That is, who pursue the fleeing enemy even to the very gates of their own city:—"But we were upon them even unto the entering of the gate," 2 Sam. xi. 23, that is, we drove the enemy back to their own gates. See also 1 Sam. xvii. 52. [The Targum says, The Messiah shall give the victory to those who go out to battle, that He may bring them back to their own houses in peace.]

Verse 9. Whom shall he teach knowledge—(Whom, say they, would he teach knowledge) The scoffers mentioned below, ver. 14, are here introduced as uttering their sententious speeches: they treat God's method of dealing with them, and warning them by His prophets, with contempt and derision. What, say they, doth he treat us as mere infants just weaned? doth he teach us like little children, perpetually inculcating the same elementary lessons, the mere rudiments of knowledge; precept after precept, line after line, here and there, by little and little? imitating at the same time, and ridiculing, in ver. 10, the concise prophetic manner. God, by His prophet, retorts upon them with great severity, their own contemptuous mockery, turning it to a sense quite different from what they intended. Yes, saith he, it shall be in fact as you say; ye shall be taught by a strange tongue and a stammering lip; in a strange country; ye shall be carried into captivity by a people whose language shall be unintelligible to you, and which ye shall be forced to learn like children. And my dealing with you shall be according to your own words: it shall be command upon command for your punishment; it shall be line upon line, stretched over you to mark your destruction; (compare 2 Kings xxi. 13,) it shall come upon you at different times, and by different degrees; till the judgments, with which from time to time I have threatened you, shall have their full accomplishment.

Jerom seems to have rightly understood the general design of this passage, as expressing the manner in which the scoffers, by their sententious speeches, turned into ridicule the warnings of God by His prophets, though he has not so well explained the meaning of the repetition of their speech in ver. 13. His words are on ver. 9. Solebant hoc ex personâ prophetarum ludentes dicere—and on ver. 14, Quod supra diximus, cum irrisione scilicet principes Judæorum prophetis dicere, manda, remanda, 24 Doth the ploughman plough all day to sow? doth he open and break the clods of his ground?

25 When he hath made plain the face thereof, doth he not cast abroad the fitches, and scatter the cummin, and cast in the principal wheat and the appointed barley and the v̄rie in their place?

26 * For v̄ his God doth instruct him to discretion, and doth teach him.

27 For the fitches are not threshed with a threshing instrument, neither is a cart wheel turned about upon the cummin; but the fitches are beaten out with a staff, and the cummin with a rod.

28 Bread corn is bruised; because he will not ever be threshing it, nor break it with the wheel of his cart, nor bruise it with his horsemen.

u Or, the wheat in the principal place, and barley in the appointed place.—v Or, speak v̄ his God doth teach him.

29 This also cometh forth from the LORD of hosts, which is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIX.

The subject of this and the four following chapters is the invasion of Sennacherib; the great distress of the Jews while it continued; their sudden and unexpected deliverance by God's immediate interposition in their favour; the subsequent prosperous state of the kingdom under Hezekiah; interspersed with severe reproofs, and threats of punishment, for their hypocrisy, stupidity, infidelity, their want of trust in God, and their vain reliance on the assistance of Egypt; and with promises of better times, both immediately to succeed, and to be expected in the future age. The whole making not one continued discourse, but rather a collection of different discourses upon the same subject; which is treated with great elegance and variety. Though the matter is various, and the transitions sudden, yet the prophet seldom goes far from his subject. It is properly enough divided by the chapters in the common Translation.

Verse 1. Ariel.] That Jerusalem is here called by this name is very certain: but the reason of this name, and the meaning of it as applied to Jerusalem, is very obscure and doubtful. Some, with the Chaldee, suppose it to be taken from the hearth of the great altar of burnt-offerings, which Ezekiel plainly calls by the same name; and that Jerusalem is here considered as the seat of the fire of God, אֱרִיֵּל ur el, which should issue from thence to consume His enemies: compare chap. xxxi. 9. Some, according to the common derivation of the word, אֱרִיֵּל ari el, the lion of God, or the strong lion; suppose it to signify the strength of the place, by which it was enabled to resist and overcome all its enemies. Τῆς δὲ φωνῆς τῆν κοινὴν ὄνομα εἰρησθεῖσαι, δια Θεοῦ, λικόντος διηνε καταρατῆς τοῦς ἀγαθόντας. Prop. in loc. There are other explanations of this name given: but none that seems to be perfectly satisfactory.

[From Ezek. xliii. 15, we learn that Ari-el was the name of the altar of burnt-offerings, put here for the city itself in which that altar was. In the second verse it is said, I will distress Ari-el, and it shall be unto me as Ari-el. The first Ari-el here seems to mean Jerusalem, which should be distressed by the Assyrians: the second Ari-el seems to mean the altar of burnt-offerings. But why is it said, "Ari-el shall be unto me as Ari-el?" As the altar of burnt-offerings was surrounded daily by the victims which were offered; so the walls of Jerusalem shall be surrounded by the dead bodies of those who had rebelled against the Lord, and who should be victims to His justice. The translation of Bishop Lowth appears to embrace both meanings—I will bring distress upon Ari-el; and it shall be to me as the hearth of the great altar.]

Add ye year to year] Ironically. Go on year after year; keep your solemn feasts: yet know, that God will punish you for your hypocritical worship, consisting of mere form destitute of true piety. Probably delivered at the time of some great feast, when they were thus employed.

Verse 2. There shall be heaviness and sorrow—(There shall be continual mourning and sorrow)] Instead of your present joy and festivity.

And it shall be unto me as Ariel—(And it shall be unto me as the hearth of the great altar)] That is, it shall be the seat of the fire of God; which shall issue from thence to consume His enemies. See note on ver. 1. Or, perhaps, all on flame; as it was when taken by the Chaldeans; or covered with carcasses and blood, as when taken by the Romans: an intimation of which more distant events, though impending on the Jews for their vices, and their profane contempt of God's warnings by His messengers, the prophet concludes with an explanation and defence of God's method of dealing with His people in an elegant parable or allegory; in which he employs a variety of images, all taken from the science of agriculture. As the husbandman uses various methods in preparing his land, and adapting it to the several kinds of seeds to be sown, with a due observation of times and seasons; and when he hath gathered in his harvest, employs methods as various in separating the corn from the straw and the chaff, by different instruments, according to the nature of the different sorts of grain: so God, with unerring wisdom, and with strict justice, instructs, admonishes, and corrects His people; chastises and punishes them in various ways, as the exigence of the case requires; now more moderately, now more severely; always tempering justice with mercy; in order to reclaim the wicked, to improve the good; and, finally, to separate the one from the other.

Verse 26. For his God doth instruct him] All nations have agreed in attributing agriculture, the most useful and the most necessary of all sciences, to the invention and to the suggestions of their deities. "The Most High hath ordained husbandry," saith the son of Sirach, Ecclesi. vii. 15.

Nisquam Ceres fertur fruges, Liberque liquoris Vitigent laticam mortalibus instituisse. Lucretius, v. 14.

["Ceres has taught mortals how to produce fruits; and Bacchus has taught them how to cultivate the vine."]

Ὁ δ' ἄπιος ἀνθρωποιος Δείξα σημαίνει, λαοὺς δ' ἐπὶ ἔργων εὐσεβείας Μίμητικὸν βίωτοιο· λέγει δ' ὅτι βέλως ἀριστή Βουνοί τε καὶ μακλήρη· λέγει δ' ὅτι δείξεται ὕψαι Καὶ φῶτα γυρωσαί, καὶ σπέρματα παντὰ βαλεῖσθαι.

Aratus, Phaenon. v.

He (Jupiter) to the human race Indulgent, prompts to necessary toil Man provident of life; with kindly signs The seasons mark, when best to turn the globe With spade and plough, to nurse the tender plant, And cast o'er fostering earth the seeds abroad."

Verses 27, 28. Four methods of threshing are here mentioned, by different instruments, the flail, the drag, the wain, and the treading of the cattle. The staff, or flail, was used for the infirmiora semina, says Jerom, the grain that was too tender to be treated in the other methods. The drag consisted of a sort of strong planks, made rough at the bottom with hard stones or iron: it was drawn by horses or oxen over the corn sheaves spread on the floor, the driver sitting upon it. Kemper has given a print representing the manner of using this instrument, Amoen. Ezot. p. 632, fig. 3. The wain was much like the former: but had wheels with iron teeth, or edges like a saw.—Ferratula carpentia rotis per medium in serrarum modum se volventibus. Hieron. in loc. by which it should seem that the axle was armed with iron teeth, or serrated wheels, throughout. See a description and print of such a machine used at present in Egypt for the same purpose; it moves upon three rollers armed with iron teeth or wheels, to cut the straw: in Niebuhr's Voyage en Arabie, Tab. xvii. p. 123. In Syria they make use of the drag, constructed in the very same manner as above described; Niebuhr, Description de l'Arabie, p. 140. This not only forced out the grain, but cut the straw in pieces for fodder for the cattle; for in the eastern countries they have no hay. See Harmer's Observ. I. p. 425. The last method is well known from the law of Moses, which "forbids the ox to be muzzled, when he treadeth out the corn." Deut. xxv. 4.

Verse 28. The bread-corn] I read אֱרִיֵּל v̄elahem, on the authority of the Vulgate and Symmachus: the former expresses the conjunction v̄ vau, omitted in the text, by autem; the latter by &c.

3 And I will camp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount, and I will raise forts against thee.

4 And thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit, 'out of the ground, and thy speech shall whisper out of the dust.

5 Moreover the multitude of thy strangers shall be like small dust, and the multitude of the terrible ones shall be as chaff that passeth away: yea, it shall be at an instant suddenly.

6 Thou shalt be visited of the LORD of hosts with thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire.

7 And the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, even all that fight against her and her munition, and that distress her, shall be as a dream of a night vision.

8 It shall even be as when a hungry man dreameth, and behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetite: so shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against mount Zion.

9 Stay yourselves and wonder; cry ye out, and cry: they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink.

not immediate subjects of the prophecy, may perhaps be given in this obscure passage.

Verse 3. And I will camp against thee round about— (And I will encamp against thee like David) For כדור kadur, some kind of military engine, כדור ke-david, like David, is the reading of the Septuagint, two MSS. of Kennicott, if not two more: [but though Biahop Lowth adopts this reading, I think it harsh and unnecessary.]

Forts—(Towers) For מרתם mitureth, read מרתם mitudoth: so the Septuagint and five MSS. [of Dr. Kennicott,] one of them ancient, [and four of De Rossi.]

Verse 4. And thy speech shall be low out of the dust— (And from out of the dust thou shalt utter a feeble speech) That the souls of the dead utter a feeble stridulous sound, very different from the natural human voice, was a popular notion among the heathens as well as among the Jews. This appears from several passages of their poets; Homer, Virgil, Horace. The pretenders to the art of necromancy, who were chiefly women, had an art of speaking with a feigned voice; so as to deceive those who applied to them, by making them believe, that it was the voice of the ghost. They had a way of uttering sounds, as if they were formed, not by the organs of speech, but deep in the chest, or in the belly; and were thence called εγγαστριμύθοι, ventriloqui: they could make the voice seem to come from beneath the ground, from a distant part, in another direction, and not from themselves; the better to impose on those who consulted them. Εγγαστριμύθοι το γένος τούτου τον ἀνδρον ἤχον ἐπιτρέπονται, ἢα δια την ἀσάβητον της φωνης του του ψεύδους ἀποδιδράσκουσιν ἐλεγχον. Pseullus De Demonibus, apud Bochart, i. p. 731. "These people studiously acquire, and affect on purpose, this sort of obscure sound; and by the uncertainty of the voice they may the better escape being detected in the cheat." From these arts of the necromancers the popular notion seems to have arisen, that the ghost's voice was a weak, stridulous, almost inarticulate sort of sound very different from the speech of the living.

Verse 5. The multitude of thy strangers— (The multitude of the proud) For זרעיה zereya, thy strangers, read זרם zerim, the proud, according to the Septuagint; parallel and synonymous to ἄβυσσος abysos, the terrible, in the next line: the resh was at first r dalth in a MS. See note on chap. xxv. 2.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh verses contain an admirable description of the destruction of Sennacherib's army, with a beautiful variety of the most expressive and sublime images: perhaps more adapted to shew the greatness, the suddenness, and horror of the event, than the means and manner by which it was effected. Compare chap. xxx. 30—33.

Verse 7. As a dream This is the beginning of the comparison, which is pursued and applied in the next verse. Sennacherib and his mighty army are not compared to a dream, because of their sudden disappearance: but the disappointment of their eager hopes is compared to what happens to a hungry and thirsty man, when he awakes from a dream, in which fancy had presented to him meat and drink in abundance; and finds it nothing but a vain illusion. The comparison is elegant and beautiful in the highest degree, well wrought up, and perfectly suited to the end proposed.

The image is extremely natural, but not obvious: it appeals to our inward feelings, not to our outward senses; and is applied to an event in its concomitant circumstances exactly similar, but in its nature totally different. See De S. Poes. Hebr. Prælect. xii. For beauty and ingenuity it may fairly come in competition with one of the most elegant of Virgil, (greatly improved from Homer, Iliad. xxii. 193.) where he has applied to a different purpose, but not so happily, the same image of the ineffectual working of the imagination in a dream:

Ac veluti in somnia, oculos ubi languida pressit Noctæ quiete, nectipiscum avidos extenderet curvas Velle videmus, et in mediis conatibus agri Succidimus; non lingua salis, non corpore nota Sufficiens visus, nec vox, aut verba sequuntur. Etn. vi. 100.

"And as, when slumber seals the closing night, The sick wild fancy labours in the night; Some dreadful visionary goal we strain With airy strides, but strive in vain to run; In vain our baffled limbs their powers essay; We faint, we struggle, sink, and fall away; Drain'd of our strength, we neither fight nor fly, And on the tongue the struggling accents die." Pia.

Lucretius expresses the very same image with Isaiah:

Ac veluti in somnia sitiens quæm rugit, et humor Non datur, ardorem in membris qui stinguere possit; Sed lacrimam simulacraque palli, frustroque laborat, In medioque siti torrensit Jussisse potans. lv. 100.

[Bishop Stock's translation of the prophet's text, is both elegant and just.

"As when a hungry man dreameth; and, lo! he is eating: And he awaketh; and his appetite is unsatisfied. And as a thirsty man dreameth; and, lo! he is drinking: And he awaketh; and, lo! he is faint, And his appetite craveth."

Lucretius almost copies the original.]

Verse 13. The Lord— (Jehovah) For אדוני adonai, sixty-three MSS. [of Kennicott, and many of De Rossi,] and four editions, read יהוה יהוה, and five MSS. add יהוה yehovah.

[Kimchi makes some just observations on this verse. The vision, meaning the Divine Revelation of all the prophets, is a book or letter that is sealed, is not easily understood. This is delivered to one that is learned, instructed in the law. Read this; and he saith, I cannot, for it is sealed, a full proof that he does not wish to know the contents, else he would apply to the Prophet to get it explained. See Kimchi on the place.]

Verse 17. And Lebanon shall be turned into a fruitful field—[Ere Lebanon become like Carmel] A maahal, or proverbial saying, expressing any great revolution of things; and, when respecting two subjects, an entire reciprocal change: explained here by some interpreters, I think with great probability, as having its principal view beyond the revolutions then near at hand; to the rejection of the Jews, and the calling of the Gentiles. The first were the vineyard of God, כרם carem el, (if the prophet, who loves an allusion to words of like sounds, may be supposed to have intended one here,) cultivated and watered by him in vain, to be given up, and to become a wilderness: compare chap. v. 1—7. The last had been hitherto barren; but were, by the grace of God, to be rendered fruitful. See Matt. xxi. 43; Rom. xi. 30, 31. Carmel stands here opposed to Lebanon, and therefore is to be taken as a proper name.

Verse 21. Him that reproveth in the gate—(Him that pleaded in the gate) "They are heard by the treasurer, master of the horse, and other principal officers of the regency [of Algiers] who sit constantly in the gate of the palace for that purpose;" [that is, the distribution of justice.] Shaw's Travels, p. 315, fol. He adds, in the note, "That we read of the elders in the gate, Deut. xxii. 15. and xxv. 7. and Isa. xxix. 21, Amos v. 10, of him that reproveth and rebuketh in the gate. The Ottoman court likewise seems to have been called the Port, from the distribution of justice, and the dispatch of public business, that is carried on in the gates of it."

[Verse 22. Who redeemed Abraham—As God redeemed Abraham from among idolaters, and workers of iniquity; so will He redeem those who hear the words of the Book, and are humbled before him, ver. 18, 19.]

Concerning the house of Jacob—(The God of the house of Jacob) I read לאל, as a noun, not a preposition: the parallel line favours this sense; and there is no address to the house of Jacob, to justify the other.

Neither shall his face now wax pale—(His face shall no more be covered with confusion) "עֲיָבוֹר יִשְׁכַּח, Chald. ut o [parabaticus] Theod. εὑρανονοισται, Syr. ܘܝܫܘܥܢܥܦܪܘ, videtur legendum עֲיָבוֹר יִשְׁכַּפְּהוֹ: hic enim solum legitur verbum עֲיָבוֹר, nec in linguâ affinitibus habet pudoris significationem." SECKER.

[Here alone is the verb עֲיָבוֹר read: nor has it in the cognate languages, the signification of shame.]

Verse 23. But when he seeth his children, the work of mine hands—(For when his children shall see the work 24 They also that erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine.

CHAPTER XXX.

The Jews reproved for their reliance on Egypt, 1—7. Threatened for their obstinate adherence to this alliance, 8—17. Images, the most elegant and lofty, by which the lastness of the reign of Manah's reign at the period when all Israel shall be added to the church, a beautifully set forth, 18—25. Dreadful fall of Sennacherib's army, an event once manifestly typical of the terrible and sudden overthrow of Antichrist; so, unless this typical reference be admitted, no possible connexion can be imagined between the stupendous events which took place in Hezekiah's reign, and the very remote and inconceivably more glorious displays of Divine vengeance and mercy in the days of the Messiah, 27—32.

WOE to the rebellious children, saith the Lord, that take counsel, but not of me; and that cover with a covering, but not of my spirit, that they may add sin to sin.

of my hands] For בְּרַחֲמַי berat, I read בְּרַחֲמַי berat, with the Septuagint and Syriac.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXX.

Verse 1. And that cover with a covering—(Who ratify covenants) Heb. "Who pour out a libation." Sacrifices and libation were ceremonies constantly used, in ancient times, by most nations, in the ratifying of covenants: a libation therefore is used for a covenant, as in Greek the word σπονδή, for the same reason, stands for both. This seems to be the most easy explication of the Hebrew phrase; and it has the authority of the Septuagint, εὐνοίας σπονδῆς.

Verse 4. Hanes] Six MSS. [of Kennicott], and perhaps six others, with [four of De Rossi], read חַנַּאן chanan, in vain, for חַנַּאן Hanes; and so also the Septuagint, who read likewise γῆ yagū, laboured, for יַגִּיעוּ yagiēu, arrived at.

Verse 5. Were ashamed] Eight MSS. (one ancient), [of Kennicott and ten of De Rossi] read חֲבִישׁ habish, without מ aleph. So the Chaldee and Vulgate.

But a shame—(But proved even a shame) Four MSS. (three ancient) after כי ki, add מִן im, unless, which seems wanted to complete the phrase in its usual form.

Verse 6. The burden] מַשָּׂא masha, seems here to be taken in its proper sense; the load, not the oracle. The same subject is continued; and there seems to be no place here for a new title to a distinct prophecy.

[Does not burden of the beasts of the South in this place relate to the presents sent by Hohaek king of Israel, to the South, to Egypt, which lay south of Judea, to engage the Egyptians to succour him against the king of Assyria?]

Into the land of trouble and anguish—(Through a land of distress and difficulty) The same deserts are here spoken of, which the Israelites passed through, when they came out of Egypt, which Moses describes, Deut. viii. 15, as "that great and terrible wilderness, wherein were fiery serpents, and scorpions, and drought; where there was no water." And which was designed to be a kind of barrier between them and Egypt, of which the Lord had said, "Ye shall henceforth return no more that way." Deut. xvii. 16.

Shall not profit them] A MS. adds in the margin the word לֹא lamo, them, which seems to have been lost out of the text; it is authorized by the Septuagint and Vulgate.

Verse 7. Their strength is to sit still—(Rahab the In-

8 Now go, ^a write it before them in a table, and note it in a book, that it may be for ^c the time to come for ever and ever:

11 Get you out of the way, turn aside out of the path, cause the Holy One of Israel to cease from before us.

12 Wherefore thus saith the Holy One of Israel, Because ye despise this word, and trust in ^g oppression and perverseness, and stay thereon:

13 Therefore this iniquity shall be to you ^h as a breach ready to fall, swelling out in a high wall, whose breaking ⁱ cometh suddenly at an instant.

14 And ^j he shall break it as the breaking of ^k the potter's vessel that is broken in pieces; he shall not spare: so that there shall not be found in the bursting of it a shred to take fire from the hearth, or to take water ^l without of the pit.

15 For thus saith the Lord God, the Holy One of Israel; ^m In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength: ⁿ and ye would not.

19 For the people ^r shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem: thou shalt weep no more: he will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry; when he shall hear it, he will answer thee.

20 And ^s though the LORD give you ^t the bread of adversity, and the water of ^u affliction, yet shall not thy ^v teachers be removed into a corner any more, but thine eyes shall see thy teachers:

21 And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye ^w turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left.

22 ^x Ye shall defile also the covering of ^y thy graven images of silver, and the ornament of thy molten images of gold: thou shalt ^z cast them away as a menstruous cloth; ^{aa} thou shalt say unto it, Get thee hence.

23 ^{ab} Then shall he give the rain of thy seed, that thou shalt sow the ground withal; and bread of the increase of the earth, and it shall be fat and plenteous: in that day shall thy cattle feed in large pastures.

24 The oxen likewise, and the young asses that ear the ground shall eat ^{ac} clean ^{ad} provender, which hath been winnowed with the shovel and with the fan.

25 And there shall be ^{ae} upon every high mountain, and upon every ^{af} high hill, rivers and streams of waters in the day of the great slaughter, when the towers fall.

active) The two last words, שבת ארם hem shabeth, joined into one, make the participle pihel דשבת hemshabeth. I find that the learned professor Doederlein, in his version of Isaiah, and notes on this place, has given the same conjecture; which he speaks of as having been formerly published by him. A concurrence of different persons in the same conjecture adds to it a greater degree of probability.

Verse 8. For ever and ever.—(For a testimony for ever) לעד ledd. So the Syriac, Chaldee, Vulgate, and Septuagint, in MSS. Pachom. and 1. D. 11. eis pappropius, which two words have been lost out of the other copies of the Septuagint.

Verse 12. In oppression.—(In obliquity) בקשקש be-akesh, transposing the two last letters of בקשקש be-eshek, in oppression, which seems not to belong to this place: a very probable conjecture of Houbigant.

Verse 13. Swelling out in a high wall.—(A swelling in a high wall) It has been observed before, that the buildings of Asia generally consist of little better than what we call mud-walls. "All the houses at Ispahan," says Thevenot, (vol. II. p. 159,) "are built of bricks made of clay and straw, and dried in the sun: and covered with a plaster made of a fine white stone. In other places in Persia, the houses are built with nothing else but such bricks, made with tempered clay and chopped straw, well mingled together, and dried in the sun, and then used; but the least rain dissolves them." Sir John Chardin's MS. remark on this place of Isaiah is very apposite: Murs en Asie étant faits de terre se fendent ainsi par milieux et de haut en bas—[The walls in Asia being made of earth often cleave from top to bottom.] This shews clearly how obvious and expressive the image is. The Psalmist has in the same manner made use of it, to express sudden and utter destruction:

^a Ye shall be slain all of you; [Ye shall be like an inclosing wall, like a shattered fence].—Ps. lxxi. 4.

Verse 14. He shall not spare.—(And spareth it not) Five MSS. add the conjunction vau to the negative; ואלו ve-lo.

Verse 17. At the rebukes of five shall ye flee.—(At the rebuke of five, ten thousand of you shall flee) In the second line of this verse a word is manifestly omitted, which should answer to one thousand in the first: the Septuagint supply παισθησιν, rebibim. But the true word is ריבה ribbah; as, I am persuaded, any one will be convinced, who will compare the following passages with this place:

- "How should one chase a thousand; And two put ten thousand [רַבְרַב] to flight?" Deut. xxxii. 30.
- "And five of you shall chase a hundred; And a hundred of you shall chase [רַבְרַב] ten thousand." Levit. xxvi. 8.

Verse 18. And therefore will he be exalted.—(Even for this shall he expect in silence) For ירום yiom, he shall be exalted, which belongs not to this place, Houbigant reads ירום yedom, he shall be silent: and so it seems to be in a MS. Another MS. instead of it reads ישוב yashub, he shall return. The mistakes occasioned by the similitude of the letters v daleth and v resh are very frequent, as the reader may have already observed.

Verse 19. For the people shall dwell in Zion.—(When a holy people shall dwell in Zion) Ασος άγιος, Septuagint; עם קדוש am kedosh. The word קדוש kedosh, lost out of the text, but happily supplied by the Septuagint, clears up the sense, otherwise extremely obscure. [When the rest of the cities of the land were taken by the king of Assyria, Zion was preserved, and all that were in it.]

Thou shalt weep no more.—(Thou shalt implore him with weeping) The negative particle lo, is not acknowledged by the Septuagint. It may perhaps have been written by mistake for li lo, to him, of which there are many examples.

Verse 20. Though the LORD.—(Though יהוה) For אדוני adonai, sixteen MSS. and three editions have יהוה yehovah; [many of De Rossi's have the same reading; all my own have יהוה yehovah.]

Verse 21. When ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left.—(Turn not aside, to the right or to the left) The Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, translate as if, instead of ל-ימי ki-re-ki, they read ל-ימי lo-re-lo.

Verse 22. Ye shall defile.—(Ye shall treat as defiled) The very prohibition of Moses, Deut. vii. 25, only thrown out of the prose into the poetical form. "The graven images of their gods ye shall burn with fire: thou shalt not desire the silver or the gold that is on them; nor take it unto thee, lest thou be snared therein; for it is an abomination to יהוה thy God."

Verse 25. When the towers fall.—(When the mighty

26 Moreover the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be sevenfold, as the light of seven days, in the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of his people, and healeth the stroke of their wound.

27 Behold the name of the Lord cometh from far, burning with his anger, and the burden thereof is heavy: his lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire:

28 And his breath, as an overflowing stream, shall reach to the midst of the neck, to sift the nations with the sieve of vanity: and there shall be a bridle in the jaws of the people, causing them to err.

29 Ye shall have a song, as in the night when a holy solemnity is kept; and gladness of heart, as when one goeth with a pipe to come into the mountain of the Lord, to the mighty One of Israel.

30 And the Lord shall cause his glorious voice to be heard, and shall shew the lighting down of his arm, with the indignation of his anger, and with the flame of a devouring fire, with scattering, and tempest, and hailstones.

31 For through the voice of the Lord shall the Assyrian be beaten down, which smote with a rod.

32 And in every place where the grounded staff shall pass, which the Lord shall lay upon him, it shall be with tabrets and harps: and in battles of shaking will he fight with it.

33 For Tophet is ordained of old; yea, for the king it is prepared; he hath made it deep and large: the pile thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the Lord, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it.

CHAPTER XXXI.

The Jews again reproved for their conduct in Egypt, finally contrasted with their neglect of the power and protection of God, 1-3. Deliverance and protection are, notwithstanding, promised, expressed by two similes, the first remarkably lofty and poetical, the latter singularly beautiful and tender, 4, 5. Exhortation to repentance, joined with the prediction of a more reformed period, 6, 7. This Chapter concludes, like the preceding, with prophesying the fall of Sennacherib, 8, 9.

Woe to them that go down to Egypt for help; and stay on horses, and trust in chariots, because they are many; and in horsemen, because they are very strong; but they look not unto the Holy One of Israel, neither seek the Lord!

2 Yet he also is wise, and will bring evil, and fall) מגדולים megadolim, μεγαλῶν, Sym. μεγαλοφωνους, Aquila, רב רבין rabrebin, Chal. [All signifying mighty ones.]

Verse 26. Shall be sevenfold) The text adds שבעת הימים ke-or shib'ath hayamim, "as the light of seven days," a manifest gloss, taken in from the margin: it is not in most of the copies of the Septuagint. It interrupts the rhetorical construction, and obscures the sense by a false, or at least an unnecessary interpretation.

[By moon, sun, light, are to be understood the abundance of spiritual and temporal felicity with which God should bless them in the days of the Messiah, which should be sevenfold, i. e. vastly exceed all that they had ever before possessed.]

Verse 27. And the burden thereof is heavy—(And the flame rageth violently) שמשו mesah; this word seems to be rightly rendered in our translation, the flame, Judg. xx. 38, 40, &c. a sign of fire, Jer. vi. 1, called properly שמשו mishah, an elevation, from its tending upwards.

Verse 28. To sift the nations with the sieve of vanity—(To toss the nations with the van of perdition) The word להנחיל lahanaphah, is in its form very irregular. Kimchi says it is from להנחיל lehaniph. Houbigant supposes it to be a mistake, and shews the cause of it; the joining it to the ה he, which should begin the following word. The true reading is להנחיל lehaniph ha-goyim, to sift the nations.

The Vulgate seems to be the only one of the ancient interpreters who has explained rightly the sense: but he has dropped the image; ad perdendas gentes in nihilum. Kimchi's explanation is to the following effect,—"נחיל naphah, is a van with which they winnow corn; and its use is to cleanse the corn from the chaff and straw; but the van with which God will winnow the nations, will be the van of emptiness or perdition; for nothing useful shall remain behind, but all shall come to nothing, and perish. In like manner, a bridle is designed to guide the horse in the right way: but the bridle which God will put in the jaws of the people, shall not direct them aright, but shall make them err, and lead them into destruction." This latter image the prophet has applied to the same subject afterward, chap. xxxiii. 29.

"I will put my bridle in thy jaws, And turn thee back by the way in which thou comest."

And as to the former it is to be observed, that the van of the ancients was a large instrument, somewhat like a shovel, with a long handle, with which they tossed the corn mixed with the chaff and chopped straw into the air, that the wind might separate them. See Hammond on Matt. iii. 12.

[There shall be a bridle in the jaws—A metaphor taken from a headstrong unruly horse: the bridle checks, restrains, and directs him. What the true God does in restraining sinners, has been also attributed to the false gods of the heathen. Thus Eschylus, Prom. Vincit. 691.

ἀλλ' ἐπηγάγες νιν Διὸς χαλινὸς πρὸς βίαν πρῶσειν ταῖς.

"But the bridle of Jupiter violently constrained him to do these things."

For מץ ats, swift, which is the common reading, forty-two of Kennicott's, forty-three of De Rossi, and two of my own, have מץ aph, wrath or fury. The former reading מץ ats, is not found in any Bible previously to that of Van der Hooght, in 1705. And there it seems to be a typographical mistake.

Verse 31. Which smote with a rod—(He that was ready to smite with his staff) "Post אשור ashur, forte excidit אשור ashur." SECKER. [After אשור ashur, probably אשור ashur, which, has been omitted.]

Verse 32. The grounded staff—(The rod of his correction) For מוסדהו mosudah, the grounded staff, of which no one yet has been able to make any tolerable sense, Le Clerc conjectured מוסדהו moserah, of correction; see Prov. xxii. 15, and so it is in two MSS. (one of them ancient,) and seems to be so in the Bodley MS. The Syriac has מושבהו deshubbetha, virga domans, vel subjectionis,—"the taming rod, or rod of subjection."

With tabrets and harps) With every demonstration of joy and thanksgiving for the destruction of the enemy in so wonderful a manner: with hymns of praise, accompanied with musical instruments. See ver. 29.

With it—(Against them) For נח בה, against her, fifty-two MSS. and five editions read נח בה, against them.

Verse 33. For Tophet is ordained) Tophet is a valley very near to Jerusalem, to the south-east, called also the valley of Hinnom or Gehenna; where the Canaanites, and afterwards the Israelites, sacrificed their children, by making them pass through the fire; that is, by burning them in the fire, to Moloch, [as some suppose.] It is therefore used for a place of punishment by fire; and by our blessed Saviour in the gospel, for hell-fire: as the Jews themselves had applied it. See Chald. on Isaiah, xxxiii. 14, where עלת מוקדו mokdey olam, is rendered "the Gehenna of everlasting fire." Here the place where the Assyrian army was destroyed is called Tophet by a metonymy; for the Assyrian army was destroyed probably at a greater distance from Jerusalem, and quite on the opposite side of it: for Nob is mentioned as the last station, from which the king of Assyria should threaten Jerusalem, chap. x. 32, where the prophet seems to have given a very exact chorographical description of his march in order to attack the city.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXI.

Verse 5. Passing over—(Leaping forward)] The generality of interpreters observe in this place an allusion to the deliverance, which God vouchsafed to His people, when He destroyed the first-born of the Egyptians, and exempted those of the Israelites sojourning among them, by a peculiar interposition. The same word is made use of here, which is used upon that occasion; and which gave the name to the feast, which was instituted in commemoration of that deliverance; פסח pasach. But the difficulty is, to reconcile the commonly received meaning of that word with the circumstances of the similitude here used to illustrate the deliverance represented as parallel to the deliverance in Egypt.

* As the mother-bird hovering over her young; So shall JEHOVAH God of hosts protect Jerusalem. Protecting and delivering, passing over, and rescuing her."

This difficulty is, I think, well solved by Vitringa; whose remark is the more worthy of observation, as it leads to the true meaning of an important word, which hitherto seems greatly to have been misunderstood; though Vitringa himself, as it appears to me, has not exactly enough defined the precise meaning of it. He says, "פסח pasach signifies to cover, to protect by covering; σκεπασσ θκας, Septuagint. JEHOVAH obteget ostium;" [The Lord will cover or protect the door;] whereas it means that particular action or motion, by which God at that time placed Himself in such a situation as to protect the house of the Israelite against the destroying angel: to spring forward, to throw one's self in the way, in order to cover and protect. Cocceius comes nearer to the true meaning than Vitringa, by rendering it, gradum facere, to march, to step forward. Lexicon in voc. The common meaning of the word פסח pasach upon other occasions is to halt, to be lame, to leap as in a rude manner of dancing, (as the prophets of Baal did, 1 Kings xviii. 26,) all which agrees very well together; for the motion of a lame person is a perpetual springing forward, by throwing himself from the weaker upon the stronger leg. The common notion of God's passage over the houses of the Israelites is, that in going through the land of Egypt to smite the first-born, seeing the blood on the doors of the houses of the Israelites, he passed over, or skipped those houses, and forbore to smite them. But that this is not the true notion of the 6 Turn ye unto him from whom the children of Israel have deeply revolted.

7 For in that day every man shall cast away his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, which your own hands have made unto you for a sin.

8 Then shall the Assyrian fall with the sword not of a mighty man; and the sword not of a mean man shall devour him: but he shall flee from the sword, and his young men shall be discomfited.

9 And he shall pass over to his strong hold for fear, and his princes shall be afraid of the ensign, saith the LORD, whose fire is in Zion, and his furnace in Jerusalem.

thing, will be plain from considering the words of the sacred historian; where he describes very explicitly the action: "For JEHOVAH will pass through to smite the Egyptians: and when he seeth the blood on the lintels and on the two side posts, JEHOVAH will spring forward over (or before) the door, וַיַּבֵּן בַּיַּמִּין וְיָפֶּעַח yehovah al ha-pelach, and will not suffer the destroyer to come into your houses to smite you; Exod. xii. 23. Here are manifestly two distinct agents, with which the notion of passing over is not consistent; for that supposes but one agent. The two agents are the destroying angel passing through to smite every house; and JEHOVAH the Protector, keeping pace with him; and who, seeing the door of the Israelite marked with the blood, the token prescribed, leaps forward, throws himself with a sudden motion in the way, opposes the destroying angel; and covers and protects that house against the destroying angel, nor suffers him to smite it. In this way of considering the action, the beautiful similitude of the bird protecting her young, answers exactly to the application by the allusion to the deliverance in Egypt. As the mother bird spreads her wings to cover her young, throws herself before them, and opposes the rapacious bird that assaults them; so shall JEHOVAH protect, as with a shield, Jerusalem from the enemy, protecting and delivering, springing forward and rescuing her: περιβαίνων, as the three other Greek interpreters, Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, render it. The Septuagint, περιποιήσεται; instead of which MS. Pachom. has περιθνήσεται, circumveundo proteget, "in going about he shall protect," which I think is the true reading. Homer, (Il. viii. 329,) expresses the very same image by this word:

Ἄϊας δ' οὐκ ἀμείλιτος κατιγνητοῖσ πεσσόντοσ,
Ἄλλα θεῶν περίη, καὶ οἱ σάκος ἀμφεκαλύψε:
—' But Ajax his broad shield display'd,
And screen'd his brother with a mighty shade."

—'Ος Χρυσὴν ἀμφιέθνηκας. Π. i. 37.

Which the Scholiast explains by περιέθνηκας, περιεραχίς, i. e. "Thou who strictly guardest Chryses." [On this verse Kimchi says, The angel of the Lord which destroyed the Assyrians, is compared to a lion, ver. 4, for his strength; and here, (ver. 5,) to flying birds, for his swiftness.]

Verse 6. Have deeply revolted—(Have so deeply engaged in revolt)] All the ancient Versions read יַעֲמִיקוּ teemiku, in the second person, [instead of יַעֲמִיקוּ heemiku, they have deeply revolted, &c.]

Verse 7. (Which your own hands have made unto you for a sin.—The sin which their own hands have made)] The construction of the word מִן חַמָּת, sin, in this place is not easy. The Septuagint has omitted it: MSS. Pachom. and 1. D. 11. and Cod. Marchal. in margin, supply the omission by the word ἁμαρτίας, sin, or ἁμαρτήμα, said to be from Aquila's version, which I have followed. The learned professor Schroeder, Institut. Ling. Hebr. p. 293, makes it to be in regimini with יָדַי yadeycem, as an epithet; your sinful hands. The Septuagint render the pronoun in the third person, at χείροσ αὐτοσ, their hands; and an ancient MS. has, agreeably to that rendering, ὄντ λαhem, to them, for ὄντ λα, to you; which word they have likewise omitted, as not necessary to complete the sense.

[Verse 8. Then shall the Assyrian fall, &c.] Because he was to be discomfited by the angel of the Lord, destroying in his camp, in one night, upwards of one hundred and eighty thousand men—and Sennacherib himself fell by the hands of the princes, his own sons. Not mighty men, for they were not soldiers; not mean men, for they were princes.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXII.

[Verse 1. Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness] If king Hezekiah were a type of Christ, then this prophecy may refer to his time: but otherwise it seems to have Hezekiah primarily in view. It is evident, however, that in the fullest sense, these words cannot be applied to any man:—God alone can do all that is promised here.]

And princes. וְשָׂרִים ve-sarim, without ל lamed, lo; so the ancient Versions. An ancient MS. has וְשָׂרֵי vesariv, and his princes.

Verse 2. As the shadow of a great rock] The shadow of a great projecting rock is the most refreshing that is possible in a hot country, not only as most perfectly excluding the rays of the sun; but also having in itself a natural coolness, which it reflects and communicates to every thing about it.

Speluncasque tegant, et aëtem procedit umbra. Virg. Georg. lib. 115. "Let the cool cave and shady rock protect them."

Ἐπει κεφαλῶν καὶ γούνατα Σειρήνος ἀείει, Αὐαλαὸς δὲ τε χροῦς ἀπο καυμάτων' ἀλλὰ τὸν ἦδη Ἐπὶ πετραίῃ τε σκίῃ, καὶ Βίβλιος οἶκος. Hesiod. ii. 206.

"When Sirius rages, and thine aching head, Parch'd skin, and feeble knees, refreshment need; Then to the rock's projected shade retire, With Biblia wine resort thy wasted powers."

Verse 3. And the eyes of them that see shall not be dim—(And him the eyes of those, that see, shall regard)] For וְלֵי ve-lo, and not, Le Clerc reads וְלֵי ve-lo, and to him, of which mistake the Masoretes acknowledge there are fifteen instances: and many more are reckoned by its true. The removal of the negative restores to the verb its true and usual sense.

[Verse 5. The vile person shall be no more called liberal—The different epithets here require minute explication.

The vile person—בָּל bal, the pampered, fattened, brainless fellow, who eats to live; and lives to eat. Who will scarcely part with any thing; and that which he does give, he gives with an evil eye and grudging heart.

Liberal—נָדִיב nadib, the generous open-hearted, princely man, who writes on all his possessions For myself and mankind; and lives only to get and to do good.

The churl—כֵּילַי kilai, the avaricious man; he who starves himself amidst his plenty; and will not take the necessities of life for fear of lessening his stock.

Thus he differs from בָּל bal, who feeds himself to the full, and regards no one else; like the rich man in the gospel. The avaricious man is called כֵּילַי kilai, from כִּי ki for, and לֵי li, myself—or contracted from כָּל col, all, and לֵי li, to myself—all is mine;—all I have is my own;—and all I can get is for myself;—and yet this man enjoys nothing.—He withholds

From back and belly too their proper fare:— O curse! lust of gold, when for thy sake This wretch throws up his interest in both worlds, First starved in this, then damn'd in that to come!

Bountiful—עֹשֶׂה שְׂחֹה, he who is abundantly rich;—who rejoices in his plenty, and deals out to the distressed with a liberal hand.]

Verse 6. The vile person will speak villany—(The fool will still utter folly)] A sort of proverbial saying; which Euripides (Bacchæ, 369,) has expressed in the very same manner and words: μωρα γὰρ μωρος λεγει, The fool speaks folly. Of this kind of simple and unadorned proverb or parable, see De S. Poes. Hebr. Prælect. xxiv.

Against the Lord—(Against JEHOVAH)] For לַי לַי two MSS. read by ἄλ, more properly: [but both are of nearly the same meaning.]

Verse 7. The instruments of the churl are evil—(As for the niggard, his instruments are evil)] His machinations, his designs. The paranomasia, which the prophet frequently deals in, suggested this expression וְלֵי כֵיילַי ve-kelai kelai. The first word is expressed with some variety in the MSS. Seven MSS. read וְלֵי vekeli, one וְלֵי ve-col, another וְלֵי ve-coli.

To destroy the poor with lying words—(To defeat the assertions of the poor in judgment)] A word seems to have been lost here, and two others to have suffered a small alteration; which has made the sentence very obscure. The Septuagint have happily retained the rendering of the lost word, and restored the sentence in all its parts: καὶ διασπείρει λέγοντος ταπεινῶν ἐν ἐπισημῶν ἡσυχῆς καὶ ἀβῆν ἄβῆν ulchaper dibroy ebion bemishpat, [and disperses the words of the poor in judgment.] They frequently render the verb ἡσυχῆ ulchaper, with διασπείρει. A MS. reads ἡσυχῆ u-ledaber, which gives authority for the preposition ἡσυχῆ, necessary to the sense; and the Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldeæ, read ἡσυχῆ be-mishpat, in judgment.

Verse 8. Liberal things—(Generous purposes)] "Of the four sorts of persons mentioned ver. 5, three are described, ver. 6, 7, and 8, but not the fourth." ΣΟΚΡΑΤΗΣ. Perhaps for ἡσυχῆ ve-hu, and he, we ought to read ἡσυχῆ, the bountiful.

[Verse 9. Rise up, ye women—ye provinces—ye careless daughters—ye cities. Targum.

From this verse to the end of the fourteenth, the desolation of Judea by the Chaldeans appears to be foretold.]

Verse 11. Gird sackcloth] כָּבַשׂ sak, sackcloth, a word necessary to the sense is here lost; but preserved by the Septuagint, MSS. Alex. and Pachom. and i. D. II. and edit. Ald. and Comp. and the Arabic and Syriac.

Tremble—be troubled—strip you] וְשָׂרֵי peshetah, נָרַר regazah, &c. These are infinitives, with a paragogic ה he, according to Schulzens Institut. Ling. Hebr. p. 453, and are to be taken in an imperative sense.

Verse 12. They shall lament—for the pleasant fields—(Mourn ye for the pleasant field)] The Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate, read שָׂרֵי saphedu, mourn ye, imperative: twelve MSS. (five ancient,) two Editions, the Septuagint, Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, Syriac, and Vulgate, all read שָׂרֵי sadesh, a field; not שָׂרֵי sedy, breasts.

Verse 13. Shall come up thorns and briers—(The thorn and the brier shall come up)] All the ancient Versions read וְשָׂרֵי ve-shamir, with the conjunction. And an ancient MS. has וְשָׂרֵי taaleh bo, shall come up in it, which seems to be right; or rather הָבַח bah; and there is a rasure in the place of בֵּי bo in another ancient MS.

Yea, upon all the houses of joy] For כִּי ki, the ancient Versions, except the Vulgate, seem to have read וְשָׂרֵי ki, which may perhaps be a mistake for בֵּי bo, or הָבַח bah, in it, above mentioned. It is not necessary in this place.

The description of impending distress which begins at ver. 13, belongs to other times than that of Sennacherib's

14 Because the palaces shall be forsaken; the multitude of the city shall be left; and the towers shall be for dens for ever, a joy of wild asses, a pasture of flocks;

15 Until the spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be counted for a forest.

16 Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field.

17 And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance for ever.

18 And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places;

19 When it shall hail, coming down on the forest; and the city shall be low in a low place.

20 Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters, that send forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass.

The effect of righteousness.—נְדָרָה אֲבָדָת, the culture. Righteousness, cultivated by peace, produces tranquillity of mind and permanent security. Reader, hast thou the principle? If so, dost thou cultivate it? If thou dost, thou hast peace of conscience,—joy in the Holy Ghost,—and a sure and certain hope of everlasting life.]

Verse 19. The city shall be low in a low place.—(The city shall be laid level with the plain) For אֲבָשָׁלָה ubashephelah, the Syriac reads אֲבָשָׁלָה ukeshaphelah. The city,—probably Nineveh or Babylon: but this verse is very obscure. "Sallus; Assyriorum regnum: civitas; magnifica Assyriorum castra." Ephraim. Syr. in loc. For אֲבָשָׁלָה uabored, a MS. has אֲבָשָׁלָה vayered, and so conjectured Abp. Secker, referring to Zech. xi. 2.

Verse 20. That sow beside all waters.—(Who sow your seed in every well-watered place) Sir John Chardin's note on this place is:—"This exactly answers the manner of planting rice, for they sow it upon the water; and before sowing, while the earth is covered with water, they cause the ground to be trodden by oxen, horses, and asses, who go mid-leg deep; and this is the way of preparing the ground for sowing. As they sow the rice on the water, they transplant it in the water." Harmer's Observ. Vol. i. p. 230. "Rice is the food of two-thirds of mankind." Dr. Arbuthnot. "It is cultivated in most of the eastern countries." Miller. "It is good for all, and at all times." Sir J. Chardin, ib. "Le ris, qui est leur principal aliment et leur froment (i. e. des Siamois) n'est jamais assez arrosé; il croit au milieu de l'eau, et les campagnes ou on le cultive ressemblent plutôt à de marais que non pas à des terres qu'on laboure avec la charrue. Le ris a bien cette force, que quoy qu'il y ait six ou sept pieds d'eau sur lui, il pousse toujours sa tige au dessus, et il tuya qui le porte s'élève et croit à proportion de la hauteur de l'eau qui noye son champ." Voyage de l'Evêque de Beryte, p. 144. Paris, 1666. ["Rice, which is the principal grain and aliment of the Siamese, can never be too much watered. It grows in the water, and the fields where it is sown resemble marshes rather than fields cultivated by ploughing. Rice has that property that although it be covered with water six or seven feet deep, yet it raises its stalk above it; and this grows long in proportion to the depth of the water by which the field is inundated."]

In ver. 1, the prophet addresses himself to Sennacherib, briefly, but strongly and elegantly, expressing the injustice of his ambitious designs, and the sudden disappointments of them.

In verse 2, the Jews are introduced offering up their earnest supplications to God in their present distressful condition; with expressions of their trust and confidence in His protection.

In ver 3 and 4, the prophet, in the name of God, or rather God Himself, is introduced addressing Himself to Sennacherib, and threatening him, that notwithstanding the terror which he had occasioned in the invaded countries, yet he should fall, and become an easy prey to those whom he had intended to subdue.

In ver. 5 and 6, a chorus of Jews is introduced, acknowledging the mercy and power of God, who had undertaken to protect them; extolling it with direct opposition to the boasted power of their enemies, and celebrating the wisdom and piety of their king Hezekiah, who had placed his confidence in the favour of God.

Then follows, in verses 7, 8, and 9, a description of the distress and despair of the Jews, upon the king of Assyria's marching against Jerusalem, and sending his summons to them to surrender, after the treaty he had made with Hezekiah on the conditions of his paying, as he actually did pay to him, three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold. 2 Kings xviii. 14-16.

In ver. 10, God Himself is again introduced, declaring that He will interpose in this critical situation of affairs, and disappoint the vain designs of the enemies of His people, by discomfiting and utterly consuming them.

Then follows ver. 11-22, still in the person of God, (which, however, falls at last into that of the prophet,) a description of the dreadful apprehensions of the wicked in those times of distress and imminent danger; finely contrasted with the confidence and security of the righteous, and their trust in the promises of God that He will be their never-failing Strength and Protector.

The whole concludes, in the person of the prophet, with a description of the security of the Jews under the protection of God, and of the wretched state of Sennacherib and his army, wholly discomfited and exposed to be plundered even by the weakest of the enemy.

Much of the beauty of this passage depends on the explanation above given of ver. 3 and 4, as addressed by the prophet, or by God Himself to Sennacherib; not as it is usually taken, as addressed by the Jews to God, ver. 3, and then, ver. 4, as addressed to the Assyrians. To set this in a clear light, it may be of use to compare it with the passage of the prophet Joel; where, speaking of the destruction caused by the locusts, he sets in the same strong light of opposition as Isaiah does here, the power of the enemy, and the power of JEHOVAH, who would destroy that enemy. Thus Isaiah to Sennacherib:

"When thou shalt raise thyself up, the nations were dispersed.—" Ver. 3. "But now will I arise, saith JEHOVAH; Now will I be exalted." Ver. 10.

And thus Joel, chap. ii. 20, 21.

"His stink shall come up, and his ill savour shall ascend; Though he hath done great things, Fear not, O land, be glad and rejoice; For JEHOVAH will do great things."

Verse 1. And dealeth treacherously.—(Thou plunderer) See note on chap. xxi. 2.

The plan of the prophecy continued in this Chapter, and which is manifestly distinct from the foregoing, is peculiarly elegant. To set it in a proper light, it will be necessary to mark the transitions from one part of it to another.

wanted for thee: be thou their arm every morning, our salvation also in the time of trouble.

3 At the noise of the tumult the people fled; at the lifting up of thyself, the nations were scattered.

4 And your spoil shall be gathered like the gathering of the caterpillar: as the running to and fro of locusts shall he run upon them.

5 The Lord is exalted; for he dwelleth on high: he hath filled Zion with judgment and righteousness.

6 And wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times, and strength of salvation: the fear of the Lord is his treasure.

7 Behold, their valiant ones shall cry without: the ambassadors of peace shall weep bitterly.

8 The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth: he hath broken the covenant, he hath despised the cities, he regardeth no man.

9 The earth mourneth and languisheth: Lebanon is ashamed and hewn down: Sharon is like a wilderness; and Bashan and Carmel shake off their fruits.

10 Now will I rise, saith the Lord; now will I be exalted; now will I lift up myself.

11 Ye shall conceive chaff, ye shall bring forth stubble: your breath, as fire, shall devour you.

12 And the people shall be as the burnings of lime: as thorns cut up shall they be burned in the fire.

13 Hear, ye that are far off, what I have done; and, ye that are near, acknowledge my might.

14 The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprised the hypocrites. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

15 He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions, that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil;

16 He shall dwell on high: his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks: bread shall be given him; his waters shall be sure.

17 Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty: they shall behold the land that is very far off.

18 Thine heart shall meditate terror. Where is the scribe? where is the receiver? where is he that counted the towers?

19 Thou shalt not see a fierce people, a people of deeper speech than thou canst perceive; of a stammering tongue, that thou canst not understand.

20 Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities: thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken.

21 But there the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and streams; wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby.

22 For the Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver, the Lord is our King; he will save us.

our strength every morning] For עַרְוֹת zero'ot, their arm, the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate read עַרְוֹת zero'ot, our arm, in the first person of the pronoun, not the third: the edition of Felix Pratensis has עַרְוֹת zero'ot in the margin.

[The prophet is here praying against the enemies of God's people; and yet this part of the prayer seems to be in their behalf: but from the above authorities it appears that our arm is the true reading, though I do not find it confirmed by any of Kennicot's, De Rossi's, or my own MSS. My old MS. Bible has,—Be thou our arm fit etc.]

Verse 3. At the noise of the tumult—(From thy terrible voice)] For סוּחַ hamon, multitude, the Septuagint and Syriac read סוּחַ amica, terrible, whom I follow.

Verse 6. His treasure—(Thy treasure)] O θησαυρος σου, Sym. He had in his copy עֲסָרִית etsarica, thy treasure, not עֲסָרִית etsaro, his treasure.

Verse 7. Their valiant ones shall cry without—(The mighty men raise a grievous cry)] Three MSS. read עֲרֵמִים erelim, that is, lions of God, or strong lions. So they called valiant men heroes; which appellation the Arabians and Persians still use. See Bochart. Hieroz. Part I. lib. iii. cap. 1. "Mahomet ayant reconnu Hamzeh son oncle pour homme de courage et de valeur, lui donne le titre ou surnom d'Assad Allah, qui signifie le lion de Dieu." D'Herbelot, p. 427. And for חַטְּסָח chatsah, the Syriac and Chaldee read קַשְׁחַח kashah, whom I follow. The Chaldee, Syriac, Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, read עֲרֵחַ lahem, or יֵרֵחַ yereh, with what meaning is not clear.

[The word עֲרֵמִים erelim, which we translate valiant ones, is very difficult: no man knows what it means. Kimchi supposes that it is the name of the angel that smote the Assyrian camp! The Vulgate, and my old MS. translate it seers; and most of the Versions understand it in this way. None of the MSS. give us any help, but as we see above in Louth.]

Verse 9. Bashan and Carmel shake off their fruits—(Bashan and Carmel are stripped of their beauty)] Φανερα εσται, made manifest. Sept. They read עֲנָה עֲנָה enah enah.

Verse 11. And your breath—(And my spirit)] "For רִי רִי ruchoem, your spirit, read רִי רִי ruchi kemo." Secker. Which reading is confirmed by the Chaldee, where מִימִי mymi, my word, answers to רִי רִי ruchi, my spirit.

[Verse 14. The sinners in Zion are afraid—Zion has been generally considered as a type of the Church of God.

Now all the members of God's church should be holy, and given to good works: sinners in Zion, therefore, are portentous beings! but, alas! where are they not? The Targum on this verse is worthy of notice:—"The sinners in Zion are broken down; fear hath seized the ungodly, who are suffering for their ways. They say, Who among us shall dwell in Zion, where the splendour of the Divine Majesty is like a consuming fire? Who of us shall dwell in Jerusalem, where the ungodly are judged and delivered into hell for an eternal burning?" Ezerburynge brennngg, Old MS. Bible.]

Verse 15. That stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood—(Who stoppeth his ears to the proposal of bloodshed)] A MS. reads בְּדַמִּים bedamim, in blood.

[Verse 18. Where is the scribe—The person appointed by the king of Assyria to estimate their number and property in reference to their being heavily taxed.

Where is the receiver—Or he who was to have collected this tribute.]

Where is he that counted the towers] That is, the commander of the enemy's forces, who surveyed the fortifications of the city, and took an account of the height, strength, and situation of the walls and towers, that he might know where to make the assault with the greatest advantage: as Capaneus before Thebes is represented in a passage of the Phenissæ of Euripides, which Grotius has applied as an illustration of this place:—

Εκείνοι ἔντρα προσβάσεις τετραπέτραι Πύργων, ἀνω τε καὶ κάτω τετραχέτρων. Ver. 187.

"[To these seven turrets each approach he marks; The walls from their proud summit to their base Measuring with eager eye."

He that counted the towers—Those who were ordered to review the fortified places in Judea, that they might be manned and provisioned for the king of Assyria. So sure was he of gaining Jerusalem and subduing the whole of Judea, that he had already formed all these arrangements. Dodd's notes.]

Verse 20. Look upon Zion—(Thou shalt see Zion)] For עֲרֵחַ chazeh, see, read עֲרֵחַ techazeh, thou shalt see, with the Chaldee. Houbigant. [At the end of this verse we find in the Masoretic Bibles this note, עֲרֵחַ חֲסֵפֶה chazeh chaspeh, the middle of the book; that is, the middle of the book of Isaiah.]

Verse 21. The glorious Lord—(The glorious name of JEHOVAH)] I take עֲשֵׂה ehem for a noun, with the Septuagint and Syriac. See Psa. xx. 1; Prov. xviii. 10.

23 Thy tacklings are loosed ; they could not well strengthen their mast, they could not spread the sail : then is the prey of a great spoil divided ; the lame take the prey.

24 And the inhabitant shall not say, I am sick : the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

The Prophet earnestly exhorts all nations to attend to the communication which he has received from Jehovah, as the matter is of the highest importance, and of universal concern. 1. The wrath of God denounced against all the nations that had provoked to anger the Defender of the cause of Zion, &c. Great crowd of images by which the final overthrow and utter extermination of every thing which opposes the spread of true religion in the earth are forcibly and melodiously set forth, though so very bold and expressive as to render it impossible, without doing great violence to symbolical language, to restrain their import to the calamities which befel the Edomites in the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, or in that of any other potentate, or even to the calamities which the enemies of the church have yet suffered since the delivery of the prophecy. Edom must therefore be a type of Antichrist, the last grand adversary of the people of God ; and consequently this most awful prophecy, in its ultimate signification, remains to be accomplished, 4-15. The churches of God, at the period of the consummation, commanded to consult the book of Jehovah, and note the exact fulfilment of those terrible predictions in their minutest details. Not one jot or tittle relative even to the circumstances shadowed forth by the impure animals shall be found to fail ; for what the mouth of the Lord has declared necessarily to satisfy the Divine justice, His spirit will accomplish, 16, 17.

COME "near ye nations, to hear ; and hearken, ye people : let the [Verse 23. Thy tacklings are loosed—Here the Assyrians are represented under the figure of a ship, wrecked by a violent storm ; and the people on the beach,—young, old, feeble, and diseased,—gathering the spoil without any to hinder them. Kimchi, who understands the whole of this Chapter of Hezekiah and the king of Assyria, says,—“There are others of our Rabbins who apply it all to the days of the Messiah.”]

Their mast—(Thy mast) For מַסְמָרֵי תֵרֵמֶנֶם, their mast, the Syriac reads מַסְמָרֵי תֵרֵמֶנֶה, thy mast ; the Septuagint and Vulgate, מַסְמָרֵי תֵרֵמֶנֶה, & ἄντρος οὐν ἐλάσιν, thy mast is fallen aside. Septuagint. They seem to have read מַסְמָרֵי נָטָה, or (מַסְמָרֵי נָטָה) teremca ; or rather, לֹא-צֶמַח, is not firm, the negative having been omitted in the present Text by mistake. However, I have followed their sense, which seems very probable ; as the present reading is to me extremely obscure.

Verse 24. And the inhabitant shall not say] This verse is somewhat obscure. The meaning of it seems to be, that the army of Sennacherib shall by the stroke of God be reduced to so shattered and so weak a condition, that the Jews shall fall upon the remains of them and plunder them without resistance : that the most infirm and disabled of the people of Jerusalem shall come in for their share of the spoil ; the lame shall seize the prey ; even the sick and the diseased shall throw aside their infirmities, and recover strength enough to hasten to the general plunder. See above.

The last line of the verse is parallel to the first, and expresses the same sense in other words. Sickness being considered as a visitation from God, and a punishment of sin ; the forgiveness of sin is equivalent to the removal of a disease. Thus the Psalmist :

“Who forgiveth all thine iniquities ;
And healeth all thine infirmities.” Ps. ciii. 3.

Where the latter line only varies the expression of the former. And our blessed Saviour reasons with the Jews on the same principle :—“Whether is it easier to say to the sick of the palsy, Thy sins are forgiven thee ; or to say, Arise, and take up thy bed, and walk ?” Mark ii. 9. See also Matt. viii. 17 ; Isa. liii. 4. “Qui locus Isaias, 1 Pet. ii. 24, refertur ad remissionem peccatorum : hic vero ad sanationem morborum, quia ejusdem potentia et bonitatis est utrumque prestare ; et, quia peccatis remissis, et morbi, qui fructus sunt peccatorum, pelluntur.”—[Which passage of Isaiah has reference in 1 Pet. ii. 24, to the remission of sins, and here to the healing of diseases, because both are effects of the same power and goodness ; and because with the remission of sins was associated the removal of disorders, the fruits of sins.] Welstein on Matt. viii. 17.

That this prophecy was exactly fulfilled I think we may gather from the history of this great event given by the prophet himself. It is plain, that Hezekiah, by his treaty with Sennacherib, by which he agreed to pay him three hundred talents of silver, and thirty talents of gold, had stripped himself of his whole treasure. He not only gave him all the silver and gold that was in his own treasury, and in that of the temple ; but was even forced to cut off the gold from the doors of the temple and from the pillars, with which he had himself overlaid them, to satisfy the demands of the king of Assyria : but after the destruction of the Assyrian army we find, that he “had exceeding much riches, and that he made himself treasures for sil-

3 Their slain also shall be cast out, and their stink shall come up out of their carcases, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood.

4 And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll : and all their host shall fall down as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig tree.

5 For my sword shall be bathed in heaven : behold it shall come upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment.

6 The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams : for the Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea.

ver, and for gold, and for precious stones, &c.” 2 Chron. xxxii. 27. He was so rich, that, out of pride and vanity, he displayed his wealth to the ambassadors from Babylon. This cannot be otherwise accounted for, than by the prodigious spoil that was taken on the destruction of the Assyrian army. [And thus, in the providence of God, he had the wealth which was exacted from him, restored.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXIV.

This and the following chapter make one distinct prophecy ; an entire, regular and beautiful poem, consisting of two parts : the first containing a denunciation of Divine vengeance against the enemies of the people, or church of God ; the second describing the flourishing state of the church of God consequent upon the execution of those judgments. The event foretold is represented as of the highest importance, and of universal concern : ALL NATIONS are called upon to attend to the declaration of it ; and the wrath of God is denounced against all the nations ; that is, all those that had provoked to anger the Defender of the cause of Zion. Among those, Edom is particularly specified. The principal provocation of Edom was their insulting the Jews in their distress, and joining against them with their enemies the Chaldeans : see Amos i. 11 ; Ezek. xxv. 12 ; xxxv. 15. Ps. cxxxvii. 7. Accordingly the Edomites were, together with the rest of the neighbouring nations, ravaged and laid waste by Nebuchadnezzar : see Jer. xxv. 15-26 ; Mal. i. 3, 4, and see Marham. Can. Chron. Sæc. xviii. who calls this the age of the destruction of cities. The general devastation spread through all these countries by Nebuchadnezzar, may be the event which the prophet has primarily in view in the thirty-fourth chapter : but this event, as far as we have any account of it in history, seems by no means to come up to the terms of the prophecy, or to justify so high-wrought and so terrible a description. And it is not easy to discover what connexion the extremely flourishing state of the church or people of God, described in the next Chapter, could have with those events, and how the former could be the consequence of the latter, as it is there represented to be. By a figure, very common in the prophetic writings, any city, or people, remarkably distinguished as enemies of the people and kingdom of God, is put for those enemies in general. This seems here to be the case with Edom and Borsra. It seems therefore reasonable to suppose, with many learned expositors, that this prophecy has a farther view to events still future ; to some great revolutions to be effected in later times, antecedent to that more perfect state of the kingdom of God upon earth, and serving to introduce it, which the holy Scriptures warrant us to expect.

That the thirty-fifth Chapter has a view beyond any thing that could be the immediate consequence of those events is plain from every part, especially from the middle of it, ver. 5, 6, where the miraculous works wrought by our blessed Saviour are so clearly specified, that we cannot avoid making the application : and our Saviour Himself has moreover plainly referred to this very passage as speaking of Him and His works, Matt. xi. 4, 5. He bids the disciples of John to go and report to their Master the things which they heard and saw ; that the blind received their sight, the lame walked, and the deaf heard : and leaves it to him to draw the conclusion in answer to his inquiry, whether he who performed the very works which the prophet foretold should be performed by the Messiah,

7 And the 'unicorns shall come down with them, and the bullocks with the bulls; and their land shall be soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness.

8 For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion.

9 And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch.

10 It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up for ever: from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever.

11 But the cormorant and the bittern shall possess it; the owl also and the raven shall dwell in it: and he shall stretch out upon it the line of confusion, and the stones of emptiness.

12 They shall call the nobles thereof to the kingdom, but none shall be there, and all her princes shall be nothing.

13 And thorns shall come up in her palaces, nettles and brambles in the fortresses thereof; and it shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls.

14 The wild beasts of the desert shall also meet with the wild beasts of the island, and the satyr shall cry to his fellow; the screech owl also shall rest there, and find for herself a place of rest.

15 There shall the great owl make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather under her shadow: there shall the vultures also be gathered, every one with her mate.

was not indeed the Messiah Himself. And where are these works so distinctly marked by any of the prophets, as in this place? and how could they be marked more distinctly? To these the strictly literal interpretation of the prophet's words directs us. According to the allegorical interpretation they may have a farther view: this part of the prophecy may run parallel with the former, and relate to the future advent of Christ; to the conversion of the Jews, and their restitution to their land; to the extension and purification of the Christian faith; events predicted in the holy Scriptures, as preparatory to it. [Kimchi says, "This Chapter points out the future destruction of Rome, which is here called Borsra: for Borsra was a great city of the Edomites. Now, the major part of the Romans are Edomites who profess the law of Jesus. The Emperor Cæsar (qy. Constantine) was an Edomite; and so were all the Emperors after him. The destruction of the Turkish empire is also comprehended in this prophecy."]

Verse 1. Hearken—(Attend unto me) A MS. adds in this line the word אל אל, unto me, after למען laummim; which seems to be genuine.

Verse 4. And all the host of heaven) See Note on chap. xxiv. 21, and De Sacra Poesi Hebraeorum, Præl. ix.

Verse 5. For my sword shall be bathed in heaven—(For my sword is made bare in the heavens) There seems to be some impropriety in this, according to the present reading: "my sword is made drunken, or is bathed in the heavens;" which forestalls, and expresses not in its proper place, what belongs to the next verse: for the sword of JEHOVAH was not to be bathed or glutted with blood in the heavens; but in Botsra and the land of Edom. In the heavens it was only prepared for slaughter. To remedy this Archbishop Secker proposes to read, for בשרים bashamayim, בדם bedamim; referring to Jer. xvi. 10. But even this is premature, and not in its proper place. The Chaldee, for רעלה, has רעלה tegalah, shall be revealed, or disclosed: perhaps he read רעלה terah, or רעלה gerateh. Whatever reading, different I presume from the present, he might find in his copy, I follow the sense which he has given of it.

Verse 6. The Lord hath a sacrifice—(For JEHOVAH celebrateth a sacrifice) Ezekiel (chap. xxxix. 16, 17), has manifestly imitated this place of Isaiah. He hath set forth the great leaders and princes of the adverse powers under the same emblems of goats, bulls, rams, fatlings, &c. and has added to the boldness of the imagery, by introducing God as summoning all the fowls of the air, and all the beasts of the field; and bidding them to the feast, which He has prepared for them by the slaughter of the enemies of His people:—

"And thou, son of man, Thus saith the Lord JEHOVAH: Say to the bird of every wing, And to every beast of the field, Assemble yourselves, and come; Gather together from every side, To the sacrifice which I make for you. A great slaughter on the mountains of Israel. And ye shall eat flesh and drink blood: The flesh of the mighty shall ye eat, And the blood of the lofty of the earth shall ye drink; Of rams, of lambs, and of goats, Of bullocks, all of them the fat ones of Beasts: And ye shall eat fat till ye are cloyed, And drink blood, till ye are drunken: Of my slaughter, which I have slain for you."

The sublime author of the Revelation (chap. xix. 17, 18), has taken this image from Ezekiel, rather than from Isaiah.

[Verse 7. The unicorns shall come down—רעמים reemim, translated wild goats by Bishop Louth. The רעם reem, Bochart thinks to be a species of wild goat in the deserts of Arabia.]

With blood—(With their blood) מדמם medamem: so two ancient MSS. of Kennicott, the Syriac, and Chaldee.

Verse 8. The year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion—(The year of recompense to the defender of the cause of Zion) As from דין din, a judge; so from ריב rub, ריב ריב, an advocate, or defender: Judici Sionis: Syriac.

[Verse 11. The cormorant—קאן kaath, the pelican, from the root קאן kava, to vomit, because it is said she swallows shellfish, and when the heat of her stomach has killed the fish, she vomits the shells, takes out the dead fish, and eats them.

The bittern—קפוד kiphod; the hedgehog, or porcupine. The owl—נשופ נשופ, the bittern, from נשף nashaph, to blow, because of the blowing noise it makes, almost like the lowing of an ox. My old MS. Bible renders the words thus:—The fowl in face like an ass, and the greynoun, and the snipe.]

The line of confusion, and the stones of emptiness—(The plummet of emptiness over her scorched plains) The word cheriah, joined to the 12th verse, embarrasses it, and makes it inexplicable. At least I do not know that any one has yet made out the construction, or given any tolerable explication of it. I join it to the 11th verse, and supply a letter or two, which seem to have been lost. Fifteen MSS. (five ancient) and two Editions, read cheriah. The first printed edition of 1486 I think nearer to the truth, chor cheriah. I read becheriah, or choriah, על choriah, see Jer. xvii. 6. A MS. has chodiah, and the Syriac reads chadhush gaudium, joining it to the two preceding words; which he likewise reads differently, but without improving the sense. However, his authority is clear for dividing the verses, as they are here divided. I read שם shem, as a noun. They shall boast יקרא yekadeu; see Prov. xx. 6.

Verse 13. And thorns shall come up in her palaces] ואלו כלו בראשיתיהוה valdu kelo b'raishit yehovah; so read all the ancient Versions.

[A court for owls—קורא qura, the ostrich, from קרא anah, to cry, because of the noise it makes. "They roar," says Dr. Shaw, "sometimes like a lion—sometimes like a bull. I have often heard them groan as in the utmost distress."

Verse 14. The wild beasts of the desert—צאים tsaim, the mountain cats. Bochart.

Wild beasts of the island—איים ayim, the jackals.

The satyr—שער shair, the hairy one, probably the he-goat.

The screech owl—לילה lillah, the night-bird, the night-raven, nyctycorax, from ליל layal, or לילה layalah, the night.

Verse 15. The great owl—קפוד kiphox, the screech, or dart, a serpent so called, because of its suddenly leaping up or darting on its prey—probably the mongox or ichneumon, may be intended.

The vultures—דאיוגות daisyoth, the black vultures. My old MS. Bible renders these names curiously. And agypti cumen scilicet depylis: the beste, party of an ass, and party of a man: and the wodomose, the tother scilicet cetera to the tother. Etere scilicet hyn lampa, that is, thirase, or a beste babyngne the body lific a woman, and hove feet. Eter padue depylis, the yeproun, and nurshide out littit chittis. Etere ben garced hiltis, the tap to the tap. What language!]

Every one with her mate) A MS. adds, אל אל, after רעם reem, which seems necessary to the construction; and so the Syriac and Vulgate. Another MS. adds in the same place רעם ath, which is equivalent.

16 Seek ye out of the book of the LORD and read; no one of these shall fail, none shall want her mate, for my mouth it hath commanded, and his spirit it hath gathered them.

17 And he hath cast the lot for them, and his hand hath divided it unto them by line: they shall possess it for ever, from generation to generation shall they dwell therein.

CHAPTER XXXV.

Flourishing state of the church of God consequent to the awful judgments predicted in the preceding Chapter. The images employed in the description are as very consolatory and sublime as to oblige us to extend their fulfillment to that period of the Gospel dispensation when Messiah shall take unto Himself His great power and reign. The 17th and 18th verses were literally accomplished by our Saviour and His apostles; but that the miracles wrought in the first century were not the only aspect of the language used by the Prophet is evidently plain from the context. They, therefore, have a further view; and are contemporary with, or rather a consequence of, the judgments of God upon the enemies of the church in the latter days; and so relate to the greater influence and extension of the Christian faith, the conversion of the Jews, their restoration to their own land, and the second advent of Christ. Much of the imagery of this Chapter seems to have been borrowed from the Exodus from Egypt; but it is greatly softened by the life, sentiments, and passions, ascribed to fragments of olden, all nature being represented as rejoicing with the people of God in their deliverance, and administering, in such an unusual manner, to their relief and comfort, as to induce some commentators to extend the meaning of the prophecy to the blessedness of the saints in heaven, 1-10.

THE wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. 2 It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon, they shall see the glory of the LORD, and the excellency of our God.

3 Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees.

4 Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not: behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you.

5 Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped.

6 Then shall the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert.

7 And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes.

8 And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called, The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the way-faring men, though fools, shall not err therein.

9 No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous

Verse 16. My mouth—(For the mouth of JEHOVAH) For another five MSS. (three ancient), read ye yehovah, and another is so corrected: so likewise the Septuagint. Two Editions have in israhel; and so the Septuagint, Vulgate, [and Arabic, with the Edition of 1486,] and a MS. has kebatsem, with the masculine pronoun instead of the feminine: and so in the next verses it is lahem, instead of lahen, in fourteen MSS., six of them ancient. [To see the importance of these various readings, the Hebrew Bible must be consulted.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXV.

[The various miracles which our Lord wrought are the best comment on this Chapter, which predicts those wondrous works and the glorious state of the Christian church. See the parallel texts in the margin.]

On this Chapter Bishop Lowth has offered some important emendations. I shall introduce his translation, as the best yet given of this singular prophecy:—

- 1. The desert, and the waste, shall be glad; And the wilderness shall rejoice, and flourish; 2. Like the rose shall it beautifully flourish; And the well-watered plain of Jordan shall also rejoice: The glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, The beauty of Carmel and of Sharon; These shall behold the glory of JEHOVAH, The majesty of our God; 3. Strengthen ye the feeble hands, And confirm ye the tottering knees. 4. Say ye to the faint-hearted, Be ye strong; Fear ye not; behold your God! Vengeance will come, the retribution of God! He Himself will come, and will deliver you; 5. Then shall be unclosed the eyes of the blind; And the ears of the deaf shall be opened; 6. Then shall the lame bound like the hart, And the tongue of the dumb shall sing: For in the wilderness shall burst forth waters, And torrents in the desert; 7. And the glowing sand shall become a pool, And the thirsty soil budding springs: And in the haunt of dragons shall spring forth The grass, with the reed, and the bulrush. 8. And a highway shall be there, And it shall be called The way of holiness; No unclean person shall pass through it; But He Himself shall be with them, walking in the way, And the foolish shall not err therein; 9. No lion shall be there; Nor shall the tyrant of the beasts come up thither; Neither shall he be found there; But the ravenous shall walk in it. 10. Ye, on the remnant of JEHOVAH shall return; They shall come to Zion with triumph; And perpetual gladness shall crown their heads, Joy and gladness shall they obtain; And sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

Verse 1. Shall be glad. ישעו yeesuam; in one MS. the a mem, seems to have been added; and שמ sum, is upon a rasure in another. None of the ancient Versions acknowledge it: it seems to have been a mistake, arising from the next word beginning with the same letter. Seventeen MSS. have ישעו yeesuam, [both vau expressed;] and five MSS. ישעו yeesam, [without the vau. Probably the true reading is, The wilderness and the dry place shall be glad.—Not for them.]

Verse 2. Rejoice even with joy and singing—(The well-watered plain of Jordan shall also rejoice) For ירן veranan, the Septuagint read ירן yarden, ra epnna roa Iepdava, "the deserts of Jordan." Four MSS. read גלגלath galath; see Joah. xv. 19: irrigua Jordani. Houbigant read גידוith gidooth, רפא Jordani; "the banks of Jordan." Kennicott. See De S. Poca Hebr. Prælect. xx. note.

Unto it] For לו lah, to it, nine MSS. [of Kennicott and Jour of De Rossi] read לו leca, to thee. See ibid.

Verse 7. The parched ground—(The glowing sand) שרב sharab; this word is Arabic سراب as well as Hebrew, expressing in both languages the same thing; the glowing sandy plain, which, in the hot countries at a distance, has the appearance of water. It occurs in the Koran, chap. xxiv. "But as to the unbelievers, their works are like a vapour in a plain, which the thirsty traveller thinketh to be water, until, when he cometh thereto, he findeth it to be nothing." Mr. Sale's note on this place is:—"The Arabic word serab signifies that false appearance, which in the eastern countries is often seen on sandy plains about noon, resembling a large lake of water in motion, and is occasioned by the reverberation of the sunbeams: [by the quivering undulating motion of that quick succession of vapours and exhalations which are extracted by the powerful influence of the sun.] Shaw, Trav. p. 378. It sometimes tempts thirsty travellers out of their way: but deceives them when they come near, either going forward, (for it always appears at the same distance,) or quite vanishes." Q. Curtius has mentioned it: Arenas vapor aestivi solis accendit—camporum non alia, quam vasti et profundi æquoris species est." Lib. vii. c. 5. Dr. Hyde gives us the precise meaning and derivation of the word. Dictum nomen [Barca] הברקה habarekah, splendorum, seu splendentem regionem notat; cum ea regio radiis solaribus tam copiose colliugetur, ut reflexum ab arenis lumen adeo intense fulgens, a longinquo spectantibus ad instar corporis solaris, æquorum speciem referat; et hinc arenarum splendor et radiatio (ex linguâ Persicâ petito nomine) dicitur سراب serab, i. e. aque superficies, seu superficialis æquorum species. Annot. in Peritso. cap. ii. (Shall spring forth) ה ה, in Heb. rebilseh, seems to have been at first a mem, in MS. Bodl., whence Dr. Kennicott concludes it should be רבבים rebilshim. But instead of this word the Syriac, Vulgate, and Chaldee, read some word signifying to grow, spring up, or abound. Perhaps פרטח peratoh, or פרטח peratsh; or פרטח חזויר paratsh hachater, as Houbigant reads.

Verse 8. And a highway] The word דרך de-dorec, is by mistake added to the first member of the sentence from the beginning of the following member. Sixteen MSS. of Dr. Kennicott, (seven ancient) and two of De Rossi, have it but once: so likewise the Syriac, [Septuagint, and Arabic.]

Err therein] A MS. of Dr. Kennicott adds בו in, in it, which seems necessary to the sense: and so the Vulgate, per eam, "by it." [One of De Rossi's has שמ sham, there.] But it shall be for those—(But he himself shall be with them, walking in the way) That is, God; see ver. 4.—"Who shall dwell among them, and set them an example, that they should follow his steps." Our old English Versions translated the place to this purpose: our last translators were misled by the authority of the Jews, who have absurdly made a division of the verses in the midst of the sentence, thereby destroying the construction and the sense.

Verse 9. It shall not be found there—(Neither shall he beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there:

10 And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

Sennacherib, king of Assyria, comes against Judah and takes all the fenced cities, 1. He afterwards sends a great host against Jerusalem; and his general Rabshakeh delivers an insulting and blasphemous message to Hezekiah, 2-20. Hezekiah and his people are greatly afflicted at the words of Rabshakeh, 21, 22.

1 NOW it came to pass in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah, that Sennacherib, king of Assyria, came up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them.

2 And the king of Assyria sent Rabshakeh from Lachish to Jerusalem unto king Hezekiah with a great army. And he stood by the conduit of the upper pool in the highway of the fuller's field.

3 Then came forth unto him Eliakim, Hilkiah's son, which was over the house, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah, Asaph's son, the recorder.

4 And Rabshakeh said unto them, Say ye now to Hezekiah, Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

5 I say, sayest thou, (but they are but vain words) I have counsel and strength for war: now on whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest against me?

6 Lo, thou trustest in the staff of this broken reed, on Egypt; whereon if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh king of Egypt to all that trust in him.

7 But if thou say to me, We trust in the Lord our God: is it not he, whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and said to Judah and to Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar?

8 Now therefore give pledges, I pray thee, to my master the king of Assyria, and I will give thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

9 How then wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of the least of my master's servants, and put thy trust on Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?

10 And am I now come up without the Lord against this land to destroy it? the Lord said unto me, Go up against this land and destroy it.

11 Then said Eliakim and Shebna and Joah unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, unto thy servants in the Syrian language: for we understand it: and speak not unto us in the Jews' language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

12 But Rabshakeh said, Hath my master sent me to thy master and to thee to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men that sit upon the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piss with you?

13 Then Rabshakeh stood, and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and said, Hear ye the words of the great king, the king of Assyria.

be found there)] Three MSS. read ad re-lo, adding the conjunction; and so likewise the Septuagint and Vulgate. And four MSS. (one ancient,) read yimatsa, the verb, as it certainly ought to be, in the masculine form.

[The redeemed shall walk there—geulim. Those whose forfeited inheritances are bought back by the kinsman, goel, the nearest of kin to the family. This has been considered by all orthodox divines as referring to the incarnation of our Lord, and His sacrificial offering. After geulim, one of De Rossi's MSS. adds ad er yitit ad olam, for ever. The redeemed shall walk there for ever.

Verse 10. The ransomed—peduyey, from par padah, to redeem by paying a price. Those for whom a price was paid down to redeem them from bondage and death.

Sighing shall flee away—anachah. Never was a sorrowful accent better expressed than in this strong guttural word an-ach-ah; nearly the same with the Irish in their funeral wailings, -och-och-on. The whole nation express all their mournful accents by these three monosyllables.

This Chapter contains the following parts:—

- 1. We have here blessed promises of the latter-day glory.
- 2. The prophet may be considered as addressing the teachers of the Gospel, to shew them that it was their business to encourage and direct the people in their expectation of redemption.
- 3. A promise of the manifestation of God among men is given.
- 4. The miracles which Christ should work are explicitly mentioned.
- 5. The privileges of Christianity are specified; there shall be,—1. Thorough teaching. 2. Holy walking.
- 6. Perfect safety.
- 7. Complete happiness. And,—
- 8. Final glory.

The Chapter shews also, that no impurity should be tolerated in the Church of God: for as that is the mystical body of Christ, it should be like Himself, without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVI.

The history of the invasion of Sennacherib, and of the miraculous destruction of his army, which makes the subject of so many of Isaiah's prophecies, is very properly inserted here as affording the best light to many parts of those prophecies; and as almost necessary to introduce the prophecy in the thirty-seventh chapter, being the answer of God to Hezekiah's prayer, which could not be properly understood without it. We find the same narrative in the Second Book of Kings, chapters xviii. xix.

xx.; and these chapters of Isaiah, xxxvi. xxxvii. xxxviii. xxxix. for much the most part, (the account of the sickness of Hezekiah only excepted,) are but a different copy of that narration. The difference of the two copies is little more than what has manifestly arisen from the mistakes of transcribers: they mutually correct each other, and most of the mistakes may be perfectly rectified by a collation of the two copies, with the assistance of the ancient Versions. Some few sentences, or members of sentences, are omitted in this copy of Isaiah, which are found in the other copy in the Book of Kings. Whether these omissions were made by design or by mistake, may be doubted.

Verse 3. Then came forth unto him] Before these words, the other copy, 2 Kings xviii. 18, adds, vayikreu el hamelec, and they demanded audience of the king.

Verse 5. I say—(Thou hast said)] Fourteen MSS. (three ancient,) of Kennicott and of De Rossi have it in the second person, amarta; and so the other copy, 2 Kings xviii. 20.

[But they are but vain words] debar sepatayim, a word of the lips. Thou dost talk about counsels, but thou hast none;—about strength, but there is none with thee.

Verse 6.—The staff of this broken reed; a weakened faithless ally.]

On Egypt] The Bodl. MS. adds melec, the king of Egypt; and so perhaps the Chaldees might read.

[It will go into his hand, and pierce it—will take subsidy after subsidy, and do nothing for it.]

Verse 7. But if thou say—(But if ye say)] Two ancient MSS. have tomer, in the plural number: so likewise the Septuagint, Chaldees, and the other copy, 2 Kings chap. xviii. ver. 22.

Ye shall worship before this altar—(To worship only before this altar)] See 2 Chronicles xxxii. 12.

[Verse 10. Am I now come up without the Lord—Probably some apostate Israelitish priest might have encouraged the king of Assyria, by telling him that JESOVAA had given him a commission against Jerusalem.]

Verse 12. That they may eat their own dung—(Destined to eat their own dung)] le-ecol, that they may eat, as our translation literally renders it. But the Syriac reads meacal, that they may not eat, perhaps rightly, and afterward umsheth, or vesheth, to the same purpose. [See Comment of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., ten of De Rossi's, and two of my own, read meimay, the water; mine have meimay meimey shaneghem, and write in the margin meimay meimey regaleyhem, the water of their feet, a modest way of expressing urine.

14 Thus saith the king, Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you. 15 Neither let Hezekiah make you trust in the Lord, saying, The Lord will surely deliver us: this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

16 Hearken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, "Make 'an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me: and eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig tree; and drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern:

17 Until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards.

18 Beware lest Hezekiah persuade you, saying, The Lord will deliver us. Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria?

19 Where are the gods of Hamath and Arphad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim? and have they delivered Samaria out of my hand?

20 Who are they among all the gods of these lands, that have delivered their land out of my hand, that the Lord should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand?

21 But they held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

22 Then came Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah, that was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rabshakeh.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Hezekiah is greatly distressed, and sends to Isaiah the prophet to pray for him, 1-4. Isaiah returns a comfortable answer, and predicts the destruction of the king of Assyria and his army, 5-7. Sennacherib, hearing that his kingdom was invaded by the Ethiopians, sends a terrible letter to Hezekiah to induce him to surrender, 8-12. Hezekiah goes to the Temple, spreads the letter before the Lord, and makes a most affecting prayer, 14-19. Isaiah is sent to him to assure him that his prayer is heard; that Jerusalem shall be delivered; and that the Assyrians shall be destroyed, 21-35. That very night a messenger of God slays one hundred and eighty-five thousand Assyrians, 36. Sennacherib returns to Nineveh, and is slain by his own sons, 37, 38.

OL XVII. 3. AND it came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth, and went into the house of the LORD.

z Or, Make my favour by a present.—y Heb. Make with me a blessing.—a Zech. 2. 10.

Verse 15. This city shall not be delivered—יִבֶּלֶ וְלֹא יִבֶּלֶ אֶת־עִירִי. Ten of Kennicott's MSS. and nine of De Rossi's, with one (ancient) of my own, add the conjunction.

Verse 16. Make an agreement—בְּרַחֵם בֵּרַחֵם, make a blessing with me, i. e. Give me a ransom for the city, and I will not destroy it: give me the yearly tribute thou hast promised.]

Verse 17. And vineyards] The other copy, 2 Kings xviii. 32, adds here:—"a land of oil-olive, and of honey; that ye may live, and not die: and hearken not unto Hezekiah when he seduceth you."

[Verse 19. Where are the gods—Many MSS. add the conjunction here also—And, or But where are the gods, &c.

For other matters relative to this Chapter, see the Notes on 2 Kings, chap. xviii. ver. 13, &c.]

Of Sepharvaim] The other copy, 2 Kings xviii. 34, adds, of "Henah and Ivah."

Have they delivered] וְהִלְכִי. The copulative is not expressed here by the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and three MSS.; nor is it in the other copy. Ib. Houbigant reads וְהִלְכִי haci, with the interrogative particle: a probable conjecture, which the ancient Versions above quoted seem to favour.

Verse 21. But they held their peace—(But the people held their peace.) The word שָׁמְרוּ ha-shm, the people, is supplied from the other copy, and is authorized by a MS. which inserts it after ut olo.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVII.

[Verse 6. Thus shall ye say—כֹּה תֹאמַרְנָה לֵבֶן־יִשְׂרָאֵל, "thus shall ye (explicitly, earnestly, and positively) say." The paragogic nun deepens and increases the sense.]

Verse 7. I will send a blast—(I will infuse a spirit into him)] וְנָתַתִּי רוּחִי בְּכִי nelon bo ruach never signifies any thing but putting a spirit into a person; and this was νεψυχη δαιμον, the spirit of deceit." Seeck. [I will send a blast—I do not think that Abp. Seeck has hit the true

2 And he sent Eliakim, who was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests, covered with sackcloth, unto Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz.

3 And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and of blasphemy: for the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.

4 It may be the Lord thy God will hear the words of Rabshakeh, whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God, and will reprove the words which the Lord thy God hath heard: wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is left.

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say unto your master, Thus saith the Lord, Be not afraid of the words that thou hast heard, wherewith the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 So Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah; for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

9 And he heard say concerning Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, He is come forth to make war with thee. And when he heard it, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, Let not thy God, in whom thou trustest, deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be given into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold, thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands by destroying them utterly; and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed, as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezep, and the children of Eden, which were in Telassar?

a 2 Kings 19. 1, &c.—b Or, provocation.—c Heb. found.—d Or, put a spirit into him.

meaning of these words. I believe רוּחַ ruach means here a pestilential wind, such as the Arabs call smum, that instantly suffocates both man and beast; and is what is termed the angel of the Lord, God's messenger of death to the Assyrians, ver. 36.

Verse 8. Rabshakeh returned—From chap. xxxvi. 2, we learn that the king of Assyria had sent Rabshakeh from Lachish to Jerusalem: now it is likely that Rabshakeh had besieged that place, and that the king of Assyria had taken his station before this city, and despatched Rabshakeh against Jerusalem. But, as in the verse above it is said, he had departed from Lachish, probably he had been obliged to raise the siege, and had sat down before Libnah, which promised an easier conquest.

Verse 9. He heard say concerning Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia—When he heard that Tirhakah king of Ethiopia had come out against him, then he sent that blasphemous manifesto which is contained in ver. 10-13, to terrify Hezekiah into submission. How much was this like, in words and spirit, to the manifesto sent to the Parisians by the late Duke of Brunswick, from the plains of Champagne, in 1792, which was the forerunner of the mighty torrents of human blood which was shed in the French revolution! And what a blast of God fell upon him and his army—nearly like that which had fallen on the army of Sennacherib!]

He sent messengers—(He sent messengers again)] The word וַיִּשְׁלַח vayishlah, and he heard, which occurs the second time in this verse, is repeated by mistake from the beginning of the verse. It is omitted in an ancient MS. It is a mere tautology, and embarrasses the sense. The true reading instead of it is, וַיָּשֹׁב vayashab, and he returned, which the Septuagint read in this place, απερσεψε, and which is preserved in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 9. "He returned and sent,"—that is, according to the Hebrew idiom, "he sent again."

[Verse 12. As Gozan and Haran—חַרָּן Charan: but חַרָּן Haran is the reading of four of Kennicott's MSS. and one of De Rossi's.]

13 Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arphad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, Henaah, and Ivah?

14 And Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up unto the house of the Lord, and spread it before the Lord.

15 And Hezekiah prayed unto the Lord, saying,

16 O Lord of hosts, God of Israel, that dwellest between the cherubims, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth: thou hast made heaven and earth.

17 Incline thine ear, O Lord, and hear: open thine eyes, O Lord, and see: and hear all the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent to reproach the living God.

18 Of a truth, Lord, the kings of Assyria have laid waste all the nations, and their countries, 19 And have cast their gods into the fire: for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone: therefore they have destroyed them.

20 Now therefore, O Lord our God, save us from his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the Lord, even thou only.

21 Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent unto Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria:

22 This is the word which the Lord hath spoken concerning him; The virgin, the daughter of Zion, hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee.

23 Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed; and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against the Holy One of Israel.

24 By thy servants hast thou reproached the Lord, and hast said, By the multitude of my chariots am I come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon; and I will cut down the tall cedars thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof; and I will enter into the height of his border, and the forest of his Carmel.

25 I have digged, and drunk water; and with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of the besieged places.

26 Hast thou not heard long ago, how I have done it; and of ancient times, that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps.

27 Therefore the inhabitants were of small power, they were dismayed and confounded: they were as the grass of the field, and as the green herb, as the grass on the housetops, and as corn blasted before it be grown up.

28 But I know thy abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me.

29 Because thy rage against me, and thy tumult, is come up into mine ears, therefore will I put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.

9 Jer. 49. 23.—1 Dan. 9. 13.— Heb. lands.— Heb. given.— Heb. By the hand of thy servants.— Heb. the tallness of the cedars thereof, and the choice of the fir trees thereof.— Or, and the forest and his fruitful field.— Or, fenced and closed.

a Or, Hast thou not heard how I have made it long ago, and formed it of ancient times? should I now bring it to be laid waste, and defenced cities to be ruinous heaps? m 2 Kings 19. 25.— Heb. short of hand.— Or, sitting.— q Ch. 30. 32. Ezek. 31. 4.

Verse 14. And read it—(And read them) וקראו va-yikraem. So MS. Bodl. in this place; and so the other copy: instead of וקראו va-yekrahu, and read it.

And spread it—(And spread them) ופזרו va-yiph-rishu. hu is upon a rasure in a MS., which probably was at first mem. The same mistake as in the foregoing note.

Verse 15. Unto the Lord—(Before Jehovah) That is, in the sanctuary. For el, the Syriac, Chaldaee, and the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 15, read לפני lipeny, before the face.

Verse 18. The nations] הארצות ha-eritsoth, the lands: instead of this word, which destroys the sense, ten [of Kennicott's and five of De Rossi's] MSS. (one ancient), have here גוים goyim, nations; which is undoubtedly the true reading, being preserved also in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 17. Another MS. suggests another method of rectifying the sense in this place, by reading מלכיהם melechem, their king, instead of ארציהם aretsem, their land: but it ought to be מלכותיהם malceyhem, all the countries and their kings.

Verse 20. Save us—(Save us, we beseech thee) The supplicating particle na na, is supplied here from eighteen MSS. (three ancient,) [of Dr. Kennicott, and ten of De Rossi,] and from the other copy.

That thou art the Lord, even thou only—(That thou Jehovah art the only God) The word אלהים elohim, God, is lost here in the Hebrew Text, but preserved in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 19. The Syriac and Septuagint seem here to have had in their copies אלהים elohim, instead of יהוה yehovah.

Verse 21. Then Isaiah—sent unto Hezekiah] The Syriac and Septuagint understand and render the verb passively,—was sent.

Whereas thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib—(Thy prayer unto me concerning Sennacherib—I have heard) שמעתי shamati: this word, necessary to the sense, is lost in this place out of the Hebrew text. One MS. [of Dr. Kennicott and one of De Rossi] have it written above the line in a later hand. The Septuagint and Syriac found it in their copies; and it is preserved in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 20.

Verse 23. Against the Holy One of Israel] For אל el, to, the other copy has על el, against,—rather more properly.

Verse 24. By thy servants—(By thy messengers) The text has עבדך abdeyca, thy servants: but the true reading seems to be מלכיהם malceyca, thy messengers, as in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 23: and as the Septuagint and Syriac found it in their copies in this place.

[Reproached the Lord—adonai: but one of my MSS. has יהוה yehovah adonai, Jehovah the Lord. This reading is not found, I think, in any other MS.; but several have יהוה yehovah, for יהוה adonai.]

I will enter into the height of his border—(I will penetrate into his extreme retreats) The Text has מרום marom, the height, which seems to have been taken by mistake from the line but one above. Two MSS. have here קרן kern, the lodge, or retreat; which is the word in the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 23: and I think is the true reading.

[The forest of his Carmel—The forest and his fruitful field;—that is, I will possess myself of the whole country.]

Verse 25. Water—(Strange waters) The word זרזר zerim, strange, lost out of the Hebrew Text in this place, is supplied from the other copy. A MS. supplies the word רבתי rabbim, many, instead of it.

[With the sole of my feet—With my infantry.]

All the rivers of the bestrenged places—(All the canals of fenced places) The principal cities of Egypt, the scene of his late exploits, were chiefly defended by deep moats, canals, or large lakes, made by labour and art, with which they were surrounded. See Harmer's Observ. ii. p. 304. Claudian introduces Alaric, boasting of his conquests, in the same extravagant manner:—

"Subsidere nostris / Sub pedibus montes; arceare viciniam amnes.— / Prægi Alpes, galeisque Padum victricibus hausit." De Bello Gotic. 685.

"The mountains have passed away under our feet; we have seen the rivers dried up. I have broken the Alps, and laden out the Po with our victorious helmets."

Verse 26. Lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps—(Lay waste warlike nations, strong fenced cities) גלים גלים galim nelsim. It is not easy to give a satisfactory account of these two words; which have greatly embarrassed all the interpreters, ancient and modern. For גלים galim, I read גוים goyim, as the Septuagint do in this place, εθνη. The word גוים nelsim, the Vulgate renders in this place compugnantium; in the parallel place, 2 Kings xix. 25, pugnantium; and the Septuagint πολεμους, fighting, warlike. This rendering is as well authorized as any other that I know of; and, with the reading of the Septuagint, perfectly clears up the construction.

Verse 27. Corn blasted] שדמה shedemah, parched: it does not appear, that there is any good authority for this word. The true reading seems to be שדפה shedephah, blasted, as it is in six MSS. (two ancient) here, and in the other copy.

Verse 29. Will I put my hook in thy nose] "Et frenum meum: Jonathan vocem חוץ mithag, interpretatus est חוץ xamim, i. e. annulum, sive unicum, eumque ferreum, 30 And this shall be a sign unto thee, Ye shall eat this year such as groweth of itself; and the second year that which springeth of the same: and in the third year sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruit thereof.

31 And the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall again take root downward, and bear fruit upward:

32 For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and they that escape out of mount Zion: the zeal of the Lord of hosts shall do this.

33 Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning the king of Assyria, He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shields, nor cast a bank against it.

34 By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the Lord.

35 For I will defend this city to save it for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

36 Then the angel of the Lord went forth, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred and fourscore and five thousand: and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

37 So Sennacherib king of Assyria departed and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

38 And it came to pass as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god, that Adramme-lech and Sharezer his sons smote him with the sword; and they escaped into the land of Armenia: and Esar-haddon his son reigned in his stead.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Account of Hezekiah's dangerous sickness and miraculous recovery, 1-9. Tender and beautiful songs of thanksgiving, in which this pious king breathed out the sentiments of a grateful heart, when his life was, as it were, restored. This ode may be adapted to other cases; and will always afford profit and pleasure to them who are not void of feeling, and void of piety, 10-32.

IN those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz came unto him, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Set thine house in order: for thou shalt die, and not live.

2 Then Hezekiah turned his face toward the wall, and prayed unto the Lord,

3 And said, Remember now, O Lord, I beseech thee, how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept sore.

4 Then came the word of the Lord to Isaiah, saying,

5 Go, and say to Hezekiah, Thus saith the Lord, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have seen thy tears: behold I will add unto thy days fifteen years.

6 And I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria: and I will defend this city.

quem insignitum naribus camela: eoque trahitur, quoniam illa feris motibus agitur: et hoc est, quod discimus in Talmude; et camela cum annulo narium: scilicet, egreditur die sabbathi." [And my bridle: Jonathan interprets the word miltheg, by zamim, a ring, or that iron hook which they put in the nostrils of a camel to lead her about, check her in her restiveness, &c. And this is what we mean in the Talmud when we say, And the camel with the ring of her nostrils, shall go out on the Sabbath day.] Jarchi in 2 Reg. xix. 28, Ponam circulum in naribus tuis. [I will put a ring in thy nostrils.] Jerom. Just as at this day they put a ring into the nose of the bear, the buffalo, and other wild beasts, to lead them, and to govern them when they are unruly. [Bulls are often ringed thus in several parts of England.]

Verse 36. Then the angel] Before "the angel," the other copy, 2 Kings xix. 35, adds, "it came to pass the same night that"—

The prophet Hosea, chap. i. 7, has given a plain prediction of this miraculous deliverance of the kingdom of Judah:

"And to the house of Judah I will be tenderly merciful: And I will save them by JEHOVAH their God. And I will not save them by the bow; Nor by sword, nor by battle; By horses, nor by harness."

[Verse 38. His sons smote him—What an awful punishment of his blasphemy! Who can harden his neck against God, and be successful! God does not lightly pass by blasphemy against Himself—His government—His word—His Son—or His people. Let the profligate take care!]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVIII.

[Verse 1. In those days—The reader is requested to consult the Notes on 2 Kings, chap. xx. in reference to the principal parts of this Chapter.]

Verse 2. Then Hezekiah turned his face toward the wall] The furniture of an eastern divan, or chamber, either for the reception of company, or for private use, consists chiefly of carpets spread on the floor in the middle; and of sofas, or couches, ranged on one or more sides of the room, on a part raised somewhat above the floor. On these they repose themselves in the day, and sleep at night. It is to be observed, that the corner of the room is the place of honour. Dr. Pococke, when he was introduced to the Sheikh of Fursouth, found him sitting in the corner of his room. He describes another Arab Sheikh "as sitting in a corner of a large green tent, pitched in the middle of an encampment of Arabs; and the Bey of Girge as placed on a sofa in a corner to the right as one entered the room." Harmer's Observ. ii. p. 60. Lady Mary W. Montague, giving an account of a visit which she made to the Kahya's lady at Adrianople, says, "She ordered cushions to be given me; and took care to place me in the corner, which is the place of honour." Letter xxxiii. The reason of this seems to be, that the person so placed is distinguished, and in a manner separated from the rest of the company, and as it were guarded by the wall on each side. We are to suppose Hezekiah's couch placed in the same situation; in which, turning on either side, he must turn his face to the wall; by which he would withdraw himself from those who were attending upon him in his apartment, in order to address his private prayer to God.

Ver. 3. And he said, I beseech thee, O JEHOVAH, remember now how I have endeavoured to walk before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart; and have done that which is good in thine eyes. And Hezekiah wept, and lamented grievously.

Ver. 4. Now [before Isaiah was gone out into the middle court,] the word of JEHOVAH came unto him, saying, Go [back,] and say unto Hezekiah, Thus saith JEHOVAH, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy supplication; I have seen thy tears. Behold [I will heal thee; and on the third day thou shalt go up into the house of JEHOVAH.]

Ver. 5. And] I will add unto thy days fifteen years. And I will deliver thee, and this city, from the hand of the king of Assyria; and I will protect this city. And [Hezekiah said, By what sign shall I know that I shall go up into the house of JEHOVAH?]

Ver. 7. And Isaiah said,] This shall be the sign unto thee from JEHOVAH, that JEHOVAH will bring to effect this word, which he hath spoken.

The words in the translation included within crotchets are supplied from the parallel place, 2 Kings xx. 4, 5, to make the narration more perfect. I have also taken the liberty, with Houbigant, of bringing forward the two last verses of this chapter, and inserting them in their proper places of the narration with the same mark. Kimchi's note on these two verses is as follows: "This and the following verse belong not to the writing of Hezekiah; and I see no reason why they are written here after the writing; for their right place is above, after And I will protect this city, ver. 6. And so they stand in the book of Kings." 2 Kings xx. 7, 8. The narration of this chapter seems to be in some parts an abridgment of that of 2 Kings xx. The abridger, having finished his extract here with the eleventh verse, seems to have observed, that the seventh and eighth verses of 2 Kings xx. were wanted to complete the narration: he therefore added them at the end of the chapter, after he had inserted the song of Hezekiah, probably with marks for their insertion in their proper places; which marks were afterwards neglected by transcribers. Or a transcriber might omit them by mistake, and add them at the end of the chapter with such marks. Many transpositions are, with great probability, to be accounted for in the same way.

Verse 6. I will defend this city] The other copy, 2 Kings xx. 6. adds: "for mine own sake, and for the sake of David my servant;" and the sentence seems somewhat abrupt without it.

7 And this shall be a sign unto thee from the LORD, that the LORD will do this thing that he hath spoken;

8 Behold, I will bring again the shadow of the degrees, which is gone down in the sun dial of Ahaz, ten degrees backward. So the sun returned ten degrees, by which degrees it was gone down.

9 The writing of Hezekiah king of Judah, when he had been sick, and was recovered of his sickness:

10 I said in the cutting off of my days, I shall go the gates of the grave: I am deprived of the residue of my years.

11 I said, I shall not see the LORD, even the LORD, in the land of the living: I shall behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world.

12 Mine age is departed, and is removed from me as a shepherd's tent: I have cut off like a weaver my life: he will cut me off with pining sickness: from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

13 I reckoned till morning, that, as a lion, so will he break all my bones: from day even to night wilt thou make an end of me.

14 Like a crane or a swallow, so did I chatter: I did mourn as a dove: mine eyes fail

g Heb. thou hast loved my soul from the pit.— Ps. 65 & 29. 9 & 98. 11 & 112. 17. Ecclesiastes 9. 10.— Deut. 4. 9. & 7. Ps. 76. 3, 4.— 2 Kings 20. 7. 2 Kings 20. 8.

Verse 8. Which is gone down—(By which the sun is gone down) For בשמש behemesh, the Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee, read שמש hashemesh. Houbigant. In the history of this miracle in the book of Kings, (2 Kings xx. 9—11,) there is no mention at all made of the sun, but only of the going backward of the shadow: which might be effected by a supernatural refraction. The first δ ήλιος, the sun, in this verse is omitted in the Septuagint, MS. Pachom.

Verse 9. The writing of Hezekiah] Here the book of Kings deserts us, the song of Hezekiah not being inserted in it. Another copy of this very obscure passage (obscure not only from the concise poetical style, but because it is probably very incorrect,) would have been of great service. The MSS. and ancient Versions, especially the latter, will help us to get through some of the many difficulties which we meet with in it.

Verse 11. The LORD—(JEHOVAH) יהי jah יה jah, seems to be יהוה jehovah, in MS. Bodl. and it was so at first written in another. So the Syriac. See Houbigant. [I believe יהוה jehovah, was the original reading. See the note on chap. xii. 2.]

Verse 12. Mine age—is removed from me as a shepherd's tent] רעי רעי, is put for רעי roeh, say the Rabbins; Sal. b. Melec on the place; but much more probably is written imperfectly for רעי roem. See note on chap. v. 1.

[I shall be removed from this state to another, as a shepherd removes his tent from one place to another for the sake of his flock. Is not this a strong intimation of his belief in a future state?]

I have cut off like a weaver my life—(My life is cut off as by the weaver) קטפתי kepatdi. This verb is rendered passively, and in the third person, by the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate.

Verse 13. The last line of the foregoing verse, מימי מותי מימי מותי miyom ad laiyelah teshelimeni, "In the course of the day thou will finish my web;" or, as the Common Version has it, "From day even to night wilt thou make an end of me," is not repeated at the end of this verse in the Syriac version; and a MS. omits it. It seems to have been inserted a second time in the Hebrew text by mistake.

I reckoned till morning, &c.—(I roared until the morning like the lion) For נהמתי shiviti, the Chaldee has נהמתי nehamith: he read שחתי shaagti, the proper term for the roaring of a lion; often applied to the deep groaning of men in sickness. See Psalm xxii; xxxiii. 3; xxxviii. 9; Job iii. 24. The Masoretes divide the sentence, as I have done; taking כמי ke-ari, like a lion, into the first member; and so likewise the Septuagint.

Verse 14. Like—a swallow—(Like the swallow) כמי ke-sia; so read two MSS. Theodot. and Hieron.

Mine eyes fail] For דלי דלalu, the Septuagint read כלו klu, εζηλιωσεν. Compare Psa. lxx. 4; cxix. 82, 123; Lam. ii. 11; iv. 17, in the Hebrew and in the Septuagint.

O LORD—(O Lord) For יהוה jehovah, thirty MSS. and eight editions read אדוני adonai.

Undertake for me—(Contend for me) נשקח shakchek, with ו shin, Jarchi: this sense of the word is established with looking upward: O LORD, I am oppressed; undertake for me.

15 What shall I say? he hath both spoken unto me, and himself hath done it: I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul.

16 O LORD, by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit: so wilt thou recover me, and make me to live.

17 Behold for peace I had great bitterness: but thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption: for thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.

18 For the grave cannot praise thee, death can not celebrate thee: they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth.

19 The living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day: the father to the children shall make known thy truth.

20 The LORD was ready to save me: therefore we will sing my songs to the stringed instruments all the days of our life in the house of the LORD.

21 For Isaiah had said, Let them take a lump of figs, and lay it for a plaister upon the boil, and he shall recover.

22 Hezekiah also had said, What is the sign that I shall go up to the house of the LORD?

g Heb. thou hast loved my soul from the pit.— Ps. 65 & 29. 9 & 98. 11 & 112. 17. Ecclesiastes 9. 10.— Deut. 4. 9. & 7. Ps. 76. 3, 4.— 2 Kings 20. 7. 2 Kings 20. 8.

by Gen. xxvi. 20. "He called the name of the well, פוץ זעק, because they strove with him:" פוץ זעקו hithzeaku, equivalent to יריבו yeribu, at the beginning of the verse.

Verse 15. I shall go softly all my years in the bitterness of my soul—(Through the rest of my years will I reflect on this bitterness of my soul) אדעדה ededeh; recogitabo, Vulg. reputabo, Hieron. in loc.

Verse 16. By these things men live—(For this cause shall it be declared) Περὶ αὐτῶν γὰρ ἀπηγγέλη σοι, καὶ ἐξηγήσατο σου τὴν ψυχὴν, Sept. They read in their copies, רמי רמי לך רמי לך לעיני ימי not very different from the present text, from which all the ancient Versions vary. They entirely omit two words, וכלל כלל ulecol bahen; as to which there is some variation in the MSS. A MS. has וכלל ulecol, and in all; two others וכל ulecol, and all, and ten MSS. have וכל bahem, in them, in the masculine gender.

[Taking this as in the common Version, we may observe, it is not an unfrequent case, that afflictions, and especially such as tend to a speedy death, become the means not only of saving the soul, but also of lengthening the life.]

Make me to live—(Hast prolonged my life) A MS. and the Babylonish Talmud read ויעלחאיני ועלחאיני, and so the ancient Versions. It must necessarily be in the second person.

Verse 17. For peace I had great bitterness—(My anguish is changed into ease) מר לי mar li mar, mutata mihi est amaritudo. Paronomasia; a figure, which the prophet frequently admits. I do not always note it, because it cannot ever be preserved in the translation, and the sense seldom depends upon it. But here it perfectly clears up the great obscurity of the passage. See Lowth on the place.

Thou hast rescued] חשכת chashakta, with כ caph, instead of ק kaph; so the Septuagint and Vulgate, Houbigant. See Chappelov on Job xxxiii. 18.

From perdition] בלי mishachath beli, בלא μη αποληται, Sept. ut non periret, "that it may not perish." Vulg. Perhaps inverting the order of the words. See Houbigant.

[Thou hast in love to my soul—חשכת chashakta, thou hast lovingly embraced or kissed my soul out of the pit of corruption.]

Verse 19. Thy truth] אל אמת el amiteca. A MS. omits אל el; and instead of אמת el, an ancient MS. and one edition read אמת el. The same mistake as in Psa. ii. 7.

Verse 21. Let them take a lump of figs, &c.] God in effecting this miraculous cure, was pleased to order the use of means not improper for that end. "Folia, et quæ non maturuere, fici, strumis illinuntur, omnibusque quæ emollienda sunt discutienda." PLIN. Nat. Hist. xxiii. 7. "Ad discutienda ea, quæ in corporis parte aliqua coe-runt, maxime possunt—ficus arida," &c. CELSUS, v. 11. See the note on 2 Kings xx. 7. [Philemon Holland translates the passage as a medical man:—"The milke, or white juice that the figge tree yieldeth, is of the same nature that vinegre; and therefore it will cruddle milke as well as rennet, or rendles. The right season of gathering this milkie substance is before that the figs be ripe upon the

CHAPTER XXXIX.

The Babylonish monarch sends letters of congratulation, and a present, to Hezekiah, on account of his recovery from his late dangerous illness. 1. The king of Judah shews the messengers of Merodach-baladan all the treasures of his house and kingdom. 2. The Prophet takes occasion from this ostentatious display of the king to predict the captivity of the royal family, and of the people, by the Babylonians, 3-5.

OL XVII. 1.

At that time Merodach-baladan, the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present to Hezekiah: for he had heard that he had been sick, and was recovered.

2 And Hezekiah was glad of them, and shewed them the house of his precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his armour, and all that was found in his treasures: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah shewed them not.

3 Then came Isaiah the prophet unto King Hezekiah, and said unto him, What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from a far country unto me, even from Babylon.

4 Then said he, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, All that is in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them.

5 Then said Isaiah to Hezekiah, Hear the word of the Lord of hosts:

6 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have tree; and then it must be dried in the shadow: thus prepared, it is good to break impostumes, and keeps ulcers open. 11]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXIX.

Hitherto the copy of this history in the second book of Kings has been much the most correct: in this chapter that in Isaiah has the advantage. In the two first verses two mistakes in the other copy are to be corrected from this: for חזקיהו hezekiah, read חזקיהו va-yehazek, and was recovered; and for שמעו va-yeshma, he heard, read שמעו va-yשמע, he rejoiced.

[Verse 1. At that time Merodach-baladan—This name is variously written in the MSS. Berodach, Medorach, Medarach, and Medurach.]

(And ambassadors) The Septuagint add here καὶ ἀπεσβηται; that is, u-malaciam, and ambassadors; which word seems to be necessary to the sense, though omitted in the Hebrew text both here and in the other copy, 2 Kings xx. 12. For the subsequent narration refers to them all along, "these men, whence came they?" &c. plainly supposing them to have been personally mentioned before. See Houbigant.

Verse 6. To Babylon בבלו babelah, so two MSS. (one ancient); rightly without doubt, as the other copy, 2 Kings xx. 17, has it. [This prediction was fulfilled about one hundred and fifty years after it was spoken: see Dan. i. 2, 3-7. What a proof of the Divine omniscience!]

Verse 8. Then Hezekiah said] The nature of Hezekiah's crime, and his humiliation on the measure of God to him by the prophet, is more expressly declared by the author of the book of Chronicles: "But Hezekiah rendered not again, according to the benefit done unto him; for his heart was lifted up; therefore there was wrath upon him, and upon Judah and Jerusalem. Notwithstanding, Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart, (both he and the inhabitants of Jerusalem,) so that the wrath of the Lord came not upon them in the days of Hezekiah.—And Hezekiah prospered in all his works. Howbeit, in the business of the ambassadors of the princes of Babylon, who sent unto him to inquire of the wonder that was done in the land, God left him, to try him, that he might know all that was in his heart." 2 Chron. xxxii. 25, 26, 30, 31.

[There shall be peace and truth in my days—] I rather think these words should be understood as an humble enquiry of the king, addressed to the prophet. "Shall there be prosperity, שְׁלוֹם shalom, and truth in my days?—Shall I escape the evil which thou predictest? Understood otherwise, they manifest a pitiful unconcern both for his own family and for the nation. "So I be well, I care not how it may go with others." This is the view I have taken of the passage in 2 Kings xxi. 19. Let the reader judge whether this, or the former, should be preferred.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XL.

The course of prophecies, which follow from hence to the end of the book, and which taken together constitute laid up in store until this day, shall be carried to Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the Lord.

7 And of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away: and they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

8 Then said Hezekiah to Isaiah, Good is the word of the Lord which thou hast spoken. He said moreover, For there shall be peace and truth in my days.

CHAPTER XL.

In this Chapter the Prophet opens the subject respecting the restoration of the Church with great force and elegance: declaring God's counsel to His messengers the Prophets to comfort His people in their captivity, and to impart to them the glad tidings that the time of favour and deliverance was at hand. 1, 2. Immediately a harbinge is introduced giving notice, as usual in the march of Eastern monarchs, to remove every obstacle, and to prepare the way for their return to their own land, 3-5. The same work, however, the New Testament Scriptures authorize us to refer to the opening of the Gospel dispensation. Accordingly, this subject coming once in view, is principally attended to in the sequel. Of this the Prophet gives us sufficient notice by intruding a voice commanding another proclamation, which calls off our attention from all temporary fading things in the spiritual and eternal things of the Gospel, 6-11. And to remove every obstacle in the way of the prophecy in either sense, or perhaps to give a further display of the character of the Hebraic, he enlarges on the power and wisdom of God, as the Creator and Disposer of all things. It is impossible to read this description of God, the most sublime that ever was penned, without being struck with 1000 possible reverence and self-abasement. The contrast between the great Jehovah, and every thing reputed great in this world, how admirably imagined, how exquisitely finished! What stuns and insensates they are all before Him who siteth on the circle of the immense heavens, and view the minutest of the earth in the light of glass-hoppers, those poor insects that wander over the barren heath for sustenance, spend the day in evanescent chirrupings, and take up their humble lodging at night on a blade of grass! 12-26. The Prophet concludes with a most comfortable application of the whole by shewing that all his infinite power, without being struck with unconquerable and everlastingly engaged in strengthening, comforting, and saving His people, 27-28.

COMFORT ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God.

the most elegant part of the sacred writings of the Old Testament; interspersed also with many passages of the highest sublimity; was probably delivered in the latter part of the reign of Hezekiah. The prophet in the foregoing chapter had delivered a very explicit declaration of the impending dissolution of the kingdom, and of the captivity of the royal house of David, and of the people, under the kings of Babylon. As the subject of his subsequent prophecies was to be chiefly of the consolatory kind, he opens them with giving a promise of the restoration of the kingdom, and the return of the people from that captivity, by the merciful interposition of God in their favour. But the views of the prophet are not confined to this event: as the restoration of the royal family, and of the tribe of Judah, which would otherwise have soon become undistinguished, and have been irrecoverably lost, was necessary, in the design and order of Providence, for the fulfilling of God's promises of establishing a more glorious and an everlasting kingdom, under the Messiah to be born of the tribe of Judah, and of the family of David; the prophet connects these two events together, and hardly ever treats of the former without throwing in some intimations of the latter; and sometimes is so fully possessed with the glories of the future more remote kingdom, that he seems to leave the more immediate subject of his commission almost out of the question.

Indeed this evangelical sense of the prophecy is so apparent, and stands forth in so strong a light, that some interpreters cannot see that it has any other; and will not allow the prophecy to have any relation at all to the return from the captivity of Babylon. It may be useful therefore to examine more attentively the train of the prophet's ideas, and to consider carefully the images under which he displays his subject. He hears a crier giving orders, by solemn proclamation, to prepare the way of the Lord in the wilderness; to remove all obstructions before JEHOVAN marching through the desert; through the wild, uninhabited, unpassable country. The deliverance of God's people from the Babylonish captivity is considered by him as parallel to the former deliverance of them from the Egyptian bondage. God was then represented as their King, leading them in Person through the vast deserts which lay in their way, to the promised land of Canaan. It is not merely for JEHOVAN Himself, that in both cases the way was to be prepared, and all obstructions to be removed; but for JEHOVAN marching in Person at the head of His people. Let us first see, how this idea is pursued by the sacred poets who treat of the Exodus, which is a favourite subject with them, and affords great choice of examples:

"When Israel came out of Egypt; The house of Jacob, from the barbarous people; Judah was his sanctuary, Israel his dominion." Ps. cxiv. 1, 2.

"JEHOVAH his God is with him; And in a short of a king is among them: God brought them out of Egypt." Num. xlviii. 21, 22.

2 Speak ye ^d comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her ^e warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: ^f for she hath

"Make a highway for him that rideth through the deserts:
O God, when thou wastest forth before Thy people;
When thou marchest through the wilderness,

Psa. lxxviii. 4, 7.

Let us now see how Isaiah treats the subject of the return of the people from Babylon. They were to march through the wilderness with JEHOVAH at their head, who was to lead them, to smooth the way before them, and to supply them with water in the thirsty desert; with perpetual allusion to the Exodus:

"Come ye forth from Babylon, see ye from the land of the Chaldeans with the voice of joy:
Publish ye this, and make it heard; utter it forth even to the end of the earth;
Say ye, JEHOVAH hath redeemed his servant Jacob:
They strayed not in the deserts, through which He made them go;
Waters from the rock He caused to flow for them;
Yea, He clave the rock, and forth gushed the waters." Chap. xlviii. 20, 21.

"Remember not the former things;
And the things of ancient times regard not."

(That is, the deliverance from Egypt:)

"Behold, I make a new thing;
Even now shall it spring forth; will ye not regard it?
Yea, I will make in the wilderness a way;
In the desert streams of water." Chap. xliii. 18, 19.

"But he that trusteth in me shall inherit the land,
And shall possess my holy mountain.
Then will I say: Cast up, cast up the causeway; make clear the way;
Remove every obstruction from the road of my people." Chap. lvi. 13, 14.

"How beautiful appear on the mountains
The feet of the joyful messenger, of him that announceeth peace;
Of the joyful messenger of good tidings, of him that announceeth salvation;
Of him that saith to Sion, Thy God reigneth!
All thy watchmen lift up their voice, they shout together;
For eyes to face shall they see, when JEHOVAH returneth to Sion.
Verily not in haste shall ye go forth;
And not by flight shall ye march along;
For JEHOVAH shall march in your front;
And the God of Israel shall bring up your rear." Chap. lli. 7, 8, 12.

Babylon was separated from Judea by an immense tract of country, which was one continued desert; that large part of Arabia called very properly Deserts. It is mentioned in history as a remarkable occurrence, that Nebuchadnezzar, having received the news of the death of his father, in order to make the utmost expedition in his journey to Babylon from Egypt and Phœnicia, set out with a few attendants, and passed through this desert. Berosus, apud Joseph., Antiq. x. 11. This was the nearest way homewards for the Jews; and whether they actually returned by this way or not, the first thing that would occur on the proposal or thought of their return, would be the difficulty of this almost impracticable passage. Accordingly the proclamation for the preparation of the way is the most natural idea, and the most obvious circumstance, by which the prophet could have opened his subject.

These things considered, I have not the least doubt that the return of the Jews from the captivity of Babylon is the first, though not the principal, thing in the prophet's view. The redemption from Babylon is clearly foretold; and at the same time is employed as an image to shadow out a redemption of an infinitely higher and more important nature. I should not have thought it necessary to employ so many words in endeavouring to establish what is called the literal sense of this prophecy, which I think cannot be rightly understood without it, had I not observed, that many interpreters of the first authority, in particular the very learned Vitringa, have excluded it entirely.

Yet obvious and plain as I think this literal sense is, we have nevertheless the irrefragable authority of John the Baptist, and of our blessed Saviour Himself, as recorded by all the Evangelists, for explaining this exordium of the prophecy of the opening of the gospel by the preaching of John, and of the introducing of the kingdom of Messiah; who was to effect a much greater deliverance of the people of God, Gentiles as well as Jews, from the captivity of sin and the dominion of death. And this we shall find to be the case in many subsequent parts also of this prophecy, where passages manifestly relating to the deliverance of the Jewish nation, effected by Cyrus, are with good reason, and upon undoubted authority, to be understood of the redemption wrought for mankind by Christ.

If the literal sense of this prophecy, as above explained, cannot be questioned, much less surely can the spiritual; which, I think, is allowed on all hands, even by Grotius himself. If both are to be admitted, here is a plain example of the mystical allegory, or double sense, as it is commonly called, of prophecy; which the sacred writers of the New Testament clearly suppose, and according to which they frequently frame their interpretation of passages of the Old Testament. Of the foundation and properties of this sort of allegory, see De S. Poës. Hebr. Prælect. xi.

Verse 2. Double for all her sins—(Blessings double to the punishment)] It does not seem reconcilable to our notions of the Divine justice, which always punishes less than our iniquities deserve, to suppose, that God had punished the sins of the Jews in double proportion: and it is more agreeable to the tenor of this consolatory message to understand it as a promise of ample recompense for the effects of past displeasure, on the reconciliation of God to His returning people. To express this sense of the passage, which the words of the original will very well bear, it was necessary to add a word or two in the version to supply the elliptical expression of the Hebrew. Compare chap. lxi. 7; Job xlii. 10; Zech. ix. 12; חַתָּח chatah, signifies punishment for sin, Lam. iii. 39; Zech. xiv. 19. [But Kimchi says, "Double here, means the two captivities and emigrations suffered by the Israelites. The first, the Babylonian captivity; the second, that which they now endure."]]

Verse 3. The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness—(A voice crieth: In the wilderness)] The idea is taken from the practice of Eastern monarchs, who, whenever they entered upon an expedition, or took a journey, especially through desert and unpractised countries, sent harbingers before them to prepare all things for their passage, and pioneers to open the passes, to level the ways, and to remove all impediments. The officers appointed to superintend such preparations the Latins call stratores. Ipsæ (Johannes Baptistæ) et stratorum vocat Messias, cujus esset alla et clara voca homines in desertis locis habitantes ad itinera et vias Regi mox venturo sternendas et reficiendas hortari. Mosheim, Instituti. Majora, p. 96. [He (John the Baptist) calls himself the pioneer of the Messiah, whose business it was with a loud voice to call upon the people, dwelling in the deserts, to level and prepare the roads by which the King was about to march.]]

*Diodorus' account of Semiramis' marches into Media and Persia, will give us a clear notion of the preparation of the way for a royal expedition: "In her march to Ecobatana she came to the Zarcen mountain; which extending many furlongs, and being full of craggy precipices and deep hollows, could not be passed without taking a great compass about. Being therefore desirous of leaving an everlasting memorial of herself, as well as of shortening the way, she ordered the precipices to be digged down, and the hollows to be filled up; and at a great expense she made a shorter and more expeditious road, which to this day is called, from her, the road of Semiramis. Afterward she went into Persia, and all the other countries of Asia subject to her dominion; and wherever she went, she ordered the mountains and precipices to be levelled, raised causeways in the plain country, and at a great expense made the ways passable." *Diod. Sic. lib. ii.

The writer of the apocryphal book called Baruch, expresses the same subject by the same images; either taking them from this place of Isaiah, or from the common notions of his countrymen. "For God hath appointed, that every high hill, and banks of long continuance, should be cast down, and vallies filled up, to make even the ground, that Israel may go safely in the glory of God." Chap. v. 7.

The Jewish church, to which John was sent to announce the coming of Messiah, was at that time in a barren and desert condition, unfit without reformation for the reception of her King. It was in this desert country, destitute at that time of all religious cultivation; in true piety and good works unfruitful, that John was sent to prepare the way of the Lord by preaching repentance. I have distinguished the parts of the sentence according to the punctuation of the Masoretes, which agrees best both with the literal and the spiritual sense; which the construction and parallelism of the distich in the Hebrew plainly favours; and of which the Greek of the Septuagint and of the Evangelists is equally susceptible.

John was born in the desert of Judea; and passed his whole life in it, till the time of his being manifested to Israel. He preached in the same desert: it was a mountainous country: however not entirely and properly a desert; for, though less cultivated than other parts of Judea, yet it was not uninhabited. Joshua (chap. xv. 61, 62.) reckons six cities in it. We are so prepossessed with the idea of John's living and preaching in the desert, that we are apt to consider this particular scene of his preaching as a very important and essential part of history; whereas I apprehend this circumstance to be no otherwise important, than as giving us a strong idea of the rough character of the man, which was answerable to the place of his education; and as affording a proper emblem of the rude state of the Jewish church at that time; which was the true wilderness meant by the prophet, in which John was to prepare the way for the coming of the Messiah.

Verse 4. Crooked. The word ḥayyāh, is very generally rendered crooked; but this sense of the word seems not to be supported by any good authority. Ludolphus, Comment. ad Hist. Æthiop. p. 206, says, "that in the Æthiopic language it signifies clivus, locus editus;" and so the Syriac Version renders it in this place, ḥayyā drama: Hebrew חַיִּי אֲרָמָה, tumulus, acervus. Thus the parallelism would be more perfect: "the hilly country shall be made level, and the precipices a smooth plain."

Verse 5. (The salvation of our God) These words are added here by the Septuagint: ῥο σωτηριος του θεου, ἡμεῖς ἠμεῖς ἡμεῖς εἰς ἡμεῖς εὐαγγελισθημεν, as it is in the parallel place, chap. lii. 10. The sentence is abrupt without it, the verb wanting its object; and I think it is genuine. Our English translation has supplied the word it, which is equivalent to this addition from the Septuagint.

This omission in the Hebrew text is ancient, being prior to the Chaldee, Syriac, and Vulgate versions: but the words stand in all the copies of the Septuagint; and they are acknowledged by Luke iii. 6. [The whole of this verse is wanting in one of my oldest MSS.]

Verse 6. The voice said, Cry—(A voice saith, Proclaim) To understand rightly this passage is a matter of importance; for it seems designed to give us the true key to the remaining part of Isaiah's prophecies; the general subject of which is the restoration of the people and church of God. The prophet opens the subject with great clearness and elegance: he declares at once God's command to His messengers, (His prophets, as the Chaldee rightly explains it,) to comfort His people in captivity, to impart to them the joyful tidings that their punishment has now satisfied the Divine justice, and the time of reconciliation and favour is at hand. He then introduces a harbinger giving orders to prepare the way for God, leading His people from Babylon, as He did formerly from Egypt, through the wilderness; to remove all obstacles, and to clear the way for their passage. Thus far nothing more appears to be intended than a return from the Babylonish captivity: but the next words seem to intimate something much greater,—

"And the glory of JERUSALEM shall be revealed;
 And all flesh shall see together the salvation of our God."

He then introduces a voice commanding him to make a solemn proclamation. And what is the import of it? that the people, the flesh, is of a vain temporary nature; that all its glory fadeth, and is soon gone: but that the word of God endureth for ever. What is this, but a plain opposition of the flesh to the spirit; of the carnal Israel to the spiritual; of the temporary Mosaic economy to the eternal Christian dispensation? You may be ready to conclude, (the prophet may be supposed to say,) by this introduction to my discourse, that my commission is only to comfort you with a promise of the restoration of our religion and polity, of Jerusalem, of the temple, and its services and worship in all its ancient splendour. These are earthly, temporary, shadowy, fading things, which shall soon pass away, and be destroyed for ever; these are not worthy to engage your attention in comparison of the greater blessings, the spiritual redemption, the eternal inheritance, covered under the veil of the former, which I have it in charge to unfold unto you. The law has only a shadow of good things; the substance is the gospel. I promise you a restoration of the former, which, however, is only for a time, and shall be done away, according to God's original appointment: but under that image I give you a view of the latter; which shall never be done away, but shall endure for ever. This I take to be agreeable to St. Peter's interpretation of this passage of the prophet, quoted by him, 1 Pet. i. 24, 25. "All flesh is as grass, and all the glory of man as the flower of grass. The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away: but the word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you." This is the same word of the Lord of which Isaiah speaks, which hath now been preached unto you by the gospel. The law and the gospel are frequently opposed to one another by St. Paul, under the images of flesh and spirit: "Having begun in the spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh?" Gal. iii. 3. All the goodness thereof—(All its glory) For ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς, read ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς; the Septuagint and Vulgate, and 1 Pet. i. 24. [Verse 7. The grass withereth—The whole of this verse is wanting in three of Kennicot's, and five of De Rossi's MSS., and in a very correct and ancient MS. of my own; and also in the Septuagint and Arabic.]

Surely the people—(Verily this people.) So the Syriac, who perhaps read ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς.

Because the Spirit of the Lord—(When the wind of JERUSALEM) ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς, a wind of JERUSALEM, is a Hebraism, meaning no more than a strong wind. It is well known that a hot wind in the East destroys at once every green thing. Compare Ps. ciii. 16. Two MSS. omit the word ἡμεῖς ἡμεῖς, Jehovah.

Verse 9. O Zion, that bringest good tidings—(O daughter that bringest glad tidings to Zion) That the true construction of the sentence is this, which makes Zion the receiver, not the publisher, of the glad tidings, (which latter has been the most prevailing interpretation,) will, I think, very clearly appear, if we rightly consider the image itself, and the custom and common practice from which it is taken. I have added the word daughter to express the feminine gender of the Hebrew participle, which I know not how to do otherwise in our language: and this is absolutely necessary in order to ascertain the image. For the office of announcing and celebrating such glad tidings, as are here spoken of, belonged peculiarly to the women. On occasion of any great public success, a signal victory, or any other joyful event, it was usual for the women to gather together, and with music, dances, and songs, to publish and celebrate the happy news. Thus after the passage of the Red Sea, Miriam, and all the women, with timbrels in their hands, formed a chorus, and joined the men in their triumphant song, dancing, and throwing in alternately the refrain or burden of the song:—

"Sing ye to JERUSALEM, for He is greatly exalted;
 The horns and his rider hath He cast into the sea." Ezod. xv. 20, 21.

So Jephthah's daughter collected a chorus of virgins; and with dances and songs came out to meet her father, and to celebrate his victory, Judg. xi. 34. After David's conquest of Goliath, "all the women came out of the cities of Israel singing and dancing to meet Saul, with tabrets, with joy, and with instruments of music;" and forming themselves into two choruses, they sung alternately,—

"Saul has slain his thousands;
 And David his true thousands," 1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7.

And this gives us the true sense of a passage in the sixty-eighth Psalm, which has frequently been misunderstood:

"JEHOVAH gave the word; (that is, the joyful news)
 The women who published the glad tidings, were a great company;
 The kings of mighty armies did flee, did flee;
 And even the emperor who sat at home, shared the spoil."

The word signifying the publishers of glad tidings is the same, and expressed in the same form by the feminine participle, as in this place; and the last distich is the song which they sung. So in this place, JERUSALEM having given the word by His prophet, the joyful tidings of the restoration of Zion, and of God's returning to Jerusalem, (see chap. lii. 8,) the women are exhorted by the prophet to publish the joyful news with a loud voice from eminences, whencethey might best be heard all over the country; and the matter and burden of their song was to be, "Behold your God!"

him—(His reward is with him, and the recompense of his work before him) That is, the reward and the recompense which He bestows, and which He will pay to His faithful servants: this He has ready at hand with Him, and holds it out before Him, to encourage those who trust in Him, and wait for Him.

Verse 11. Shall gently lead those that are with young—(The nursing ewes shall he gently lead) A beautiful image, expressing, with the utmost propriety as well as elegance, the tender attention of the shepherd to his flock. That the greatest care in driving the cattle in regard to the dams and their young was necessary, appears clearly from Jacob's apology to his brother Esau, Gen. xxxiii. 13. "The flocks and the herds giving suck to their young are with me; and if they should be overdriven, all the flock will die." Which is set in a still stronger light by the following remark of Sir John Chardin: "Their flocks," says he, speaking of those who now live in the east after the patriarchal manner, "feed down the places of their encampments so quick, by the great numbers that they have, that they are obliged to remove them too often; which is very destructive to their flocks on account of the young ones, who have not strength enough to follow." Harmer's Observ. i. p. 126.

Verse 16. And Lebanon is not sufficient The image is beautiful and uncommon. It has been imitated by an apocryphal writer, who, however, comes far short of the original:

"For all sacrifice is too little for a sweet savour unto thee: And all the fat is not sufficient for thy burnt-offering." Judith, xvi. 16.

[Does not the prophet mean here, that all the burnt-offerings and sacrifices that could be offered were insufficient to atone for sin? That the nations were as nothing before Him, not merely because of His immensity, but because of their insufficiency to make any atonement by their oblations for the iniquities which they had committed? Therefore, the Redeemer was to come to Zion, &c.]

Verse 19. And casteth silver chains—(And forgeth for it chains of silver) For תַּשְׁרֵף tesraph, the participle, twenty-seven MSS. (five ancient), and three editions, read תַּשְׁרֵף tesraph, pret. third person.

[Verse 20. Chooseth a tree that will not rot—For what? To make a god out of it! The rich, we find, made theirs of gold and silver: the poor man was obliged to put up with a wooden god! From the words, "he that hath no oblation chooseth a tree," we may learn, that the gold and silver necessary to make the graven image was first dedicated, and then formed into a god! How stupid is idolatry? Strange that these people did not perceive that there could be no help in these molten and wooden idols!]

has a very interesting comment, an extract of which I subjoin. "The whole world may be considered as a house built up; heaven its roof; the stars its lamps; and the fruits of the earth its table spread. The Master of the house is God, blessed for ever; and man is the steward into whose hand all the business of the house is given. If he always consider in his heart, that the Master of the house is continually over him, and that He keeps His eye upon his work; and if, in consequence, he act wisely, he shall find favour in the eyes of the Master of the house. But if He find wickedness in the house, then will He remove him מִן pakidato, from his stewardship. The foolish steward does not think of this: for, as his eyes do not see the Master of the house, he saith in his heart: 'I will eat and drink what I find in this house, and will take my pleasure in it; nor shall I be careful whether there be a master over this house or not.'—When the Lord of the house marks this, He comes and expels him from the house speedily, and with great anger; therefore is it said, ver. 23, He bringeth the princes to nothing." It seems that this parable had been long in use among the Jews, as our blessed Lord alludes to it in His parable of the unjust steward. Or did the Rabbins, finding it to his purpose, steal the parable from the Gospel? In both places it has great and peculiar beauties.]

Have ye not understood from the foundations of the earth—(Have ye not understood it from the foundations of the earth) The true reading seems to be מִסּוּסֵי מִיְמוֹסֵדוֹת, to answer to מִיְרוֹשׁ mi-rosh, in the foregoing line. It follows a word ending with mem: and out of three mems concurring, it was an easy mistake to drop the middle one.

Verse 22. As a curtain—(As a thin veil) "It is usual in the summer season, and upon all occasions, when a large company is to be received, to have the court sheltered from heat, or inclemency of the weather, by a velum, umbrella, or veil, as I shall call it; which, being expanded on ropes from one side of the parapet wall to the other, may be folded or unfolded at pleasure. The Psalmist seems to allude to some covering of this kind in that beautiful expression of spreading out the heavens like a curtain." Shaw's Travels, p. 274.

Verse 24. And he shall also blow upon them—(And if he but blow upon them) The Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgata, and MS. Bodl. and another, have גַּם gam, without the conjunction vau.

[Verse 26. Lift up your eyes on high—The Rabbins say, He who is capable of meditating on the revolutions of the heavenly bodies, and does not meditate on them, is not worthy to have his name mentioned among men.]

Verse 28. There is no searching of his understanding—(And that his understanding is unsearchable) Twenty-four 9 Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, Thou art my servant; I have chosen thee, and not cast thee away.

10 Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness.

11 Behold, all they that were incensed against thee shall be ashamed and confounded: they shall be as nothing; and they that strive with thee shall perish.

12 Thou shalt seek them, and shalt not find them, even them that contended with thee: they that war against thee shall be as nothing, and as a thing of nought.

13 For I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee.

14 Fear not, thou worm Jacob, and ye men of Israel; I will help thee, saith the Lord, and thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel.

15 Behold, I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument having teeth: thou shalt thresh the mountains, and beat them small, and shall make the hills as chaff.

16 Thou shalt fan them, and the wind shall carry them away, and the whirlwind shall scatter them: and thou shalt rejoice in the Lord, and shalt glory in the Holy One of Israel.

17 When the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faileth for thirst, I the Lord will hear them, I the God of Israel will not forsake them.

18 I will open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys: I will make the wilderness a pool of water, and the dry land springs of water.

19 I will plant in the wilderness the cedar, the shittah tree, and the myrtle, and the oil tree; I will set in the desert the fir tree, and the pine, and the box tree together:

20 That they may see, and know, and consider, and understand together, that the hand of the Lord hath done this, and the Holy One of Israel hath created it.

21 Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob.

22 Let them bring them forth, and shew us what shall happen: let them shew the former things, what they be, that we may consider them, and know the latter end of them; or declare us things for to come.

23 Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods; yea, do good, or do evil, that we may be dismayed, and behold it together.

24 Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of nought: an abomination is he that chooseth you.

25 I have raised up one from the north, and he shall come: from the rising of the sun shall he call upon my name: and he shall come upon princes as upon mortar, and as the potter treadeth clay.

26 Who hath declared from the beginning, that we may know? and beforetime, that we may say, He is righteous? yea, there is none that sheweth, yea, there is none that declareth, yea, there is none that heareth your words.

Verse 9. And called thee from the chief men thereof—(And called from the extremities thereof) מֵעֵלֵי אֵתֵי מִיִּטְעָלַיִךְ, signifies the arm, axilla, ala; and is used like אֵץ canaph, the wing, for any thing extended from the extremity of another, or joined on to it. It is here parallel and synonymous to מִקְצוֹת מִיִּטְעָלוֹת, from the ends, in the preceding member.

[Verse 10. Be not dismayed—בְּרִיָּא וְלֹא תִיֶשֶׁת, AND BE NOT DISMAYED. The וָאֵן is added by twenty-one of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., thirty of De Rossi's, and one of my own, and three editions. It makes the sense more complete.

Verse 14. Fear not, thou worm Jacob—In the Rabbinical commentary on the five books of Moses, Yelamedenu, it is asked, Why are the Israelites called a worm? To signify, that as the worm does not smite, that is, gnaw the cedars, but with its mouth, which is very tender, yet it nevertheless destroys the hard wood; so all the strength of the Israelites is in prayer, by which they smite the wicked of this world, though strong like the cedars, to which they are compared, Ezek. xxxi. 3.]

Verse 15. A new sharp threshing instrument having teeth—(A threshing wain; a new corn-drag armed with pointed teeth) See note on chap. xxviii. 27, 28.

[Thou shalt thresh the mountains] Mountains and hills are here used metaphorically for the kings and princes of the Gentiles. Kimchi.]

Verse 19. I will plant in the wilderness the cedar] The two preceding verses express God's mercy to them in their passage through the dry deserts, in supplying them with abundant water, when distressed with thirst, in allusion to the Exodus. This verse expresses the relief afforded to them, fainting with heat in their journey through that hot country, destitute of shelter, by causing shady trees, and those of the tallest and most beautiful kinds, to spring up for their defence. The apocryphal Baruch, speaking of the return from Babylon, expresses God's protection of his people by the same image. "Even the woods and every sweet-smelling tree shall overshadow Israel by the commandment of God." Chap. v. 8.

[The oil tree—This, Kimchi says, is not to be understood of the olive tree, for the olive is distinguished, Neh. viii. 15: but it means the pine or fir, from which pitch is extracted.]

Verse 20. And consider] The verb יָצִימוּ, without לָךְ added, cannot signify to apply the heart, or to attend to a thing, as Houbigant has observed; he therefore reads יָצִימוּ יְשֻׁעָמוּ, they shall wonder. The conjecture is ingenious: but it is much more probable that the word לָךְ is lost out of the text; for all the ancient Versions render the phrase to the same sense, as if it were fully expressed יָצִימוּ לָךְ yasimu lab; and the Chaldees renders it paraphrastically, yet still retaining the very words in his paraphrase, יִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה עַל לִבְךָ וַיֵּאחָזֵב יִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה עַל לִבְךָ וַיֵּאחָזֵב, that they may put my fear in their heart. See also ver. 22, where the same phrase is used.

Verse 21. Bring forth your strong reasons—(Produce these your mighty powers) "Let your idols come forward which you consider to be so very strong." Hieron. in loc. I prefer this to all other interpretations of this place; and to Jerom's own translation of it, which he adds immediately after, Afferte, si quid forte habetis.—"Bring it forward, if haply ye have any thing!" The false gods are called upon to come forth, and appear in person; and to give evident demonstration of their foreknowledge and power by foretelling future events, and exerting their power in doing good or evil.

Verse 23. That we may be dismayed, and behold it together—(Then shall we be struck at once with admiration and terror) The word וְעָנֹה, is written imperfectly in the Hebrew Text: the Masoretes supply וָהָא, at the end; and so it is read in twenty-two MSS., and four Editions; that is, וְעָנֹה וְעָנֹה, and we shall see. But the true reading seems to be וְעָנֹה וְעָנֹה, and we shall fear, with yod supplied, from וָיָרָא.

Verse 24. Your work of nought—(Your operation is less than nought) For וְעָנֹה, read וְעָנֹה וְעָנֹה; so the Chaldees and Vulgate. A manifest error of the text; compare chap. xl. 17. The Rabbin's acknowledge no such error: but say, that the former word signifies the same with the latter, by a change of the two letters וְ עָנֹה, and וְ עָנֹה. Sal. ben Melech in loc.

[Verse 25. I have raised up one from the north] "That is, says Kimchi, the Mesiah. The king of Assyria placed the ten tribes in Chalach, and Chabar, by the river Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes, 2 Kings xvii. 6, which lands lie northerly and easterly."]

He shall come upon princes—(He shall trample on princes) For וְעָנֹה, Le Clerc reads וְעָנֹה, from the Chaldees, who seems to read both words. "Fors legend. וְעָנֹה וְעָנֹה וְעָנֹה וְעָנֹה: sequitur וְעָנֹה." ["This should perhaps be read וְעָנֹה וְעָנֹה, or וְעָנֹה וְעָנֹה: a וְ עָנֹה follows."] Secker. See Nah. iii. 14.

[Verse 26. Your words—וְעָנֹה וְעָנֹה: but, instead of this, one of my most ancient MSS. has וְעָנֹה וְעָנֹה]

27 * The first shall say to Zion, Behold, behold them : and I will give to Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings.

28 * For I beheld, and there was no man ; even among them, and there was no counsellor, that, when I asked of them, could answer a word.

29 * Behold, they are all vanity, their works are nothing : their molten images are wind and confusion.

CHAPTER XLII.

The Prophet sets forth the meekness of the Messiah's character, and the extent and blessing of His kingdom, particularly among the Gentiles, 1-3. In consequence of this he calls on the whole creation to join him in one song of praise to God, 10-12. After which he seems again to glance at the deliverance from the captivity ; although the words may fall as well apply to the deliverance communicated to the church ; to the overthrow of her most powerful enemies ; and to the prevalence of true religion over idolatry and error, 13-17. The Prophet then reproves the Jews for their blindness and infidelity in rejecting the Messiah, and gives intimations of those judgments which their guilt would draw on them, 18-23.

Behold, my servant, whom I uphold ; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth ; I have put my spirit upon him : he shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.

2 He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street.

3 A bruised reed shall he not break, and the de-barecyim. The meaning is nearly the same : but in this reading this MS. is singular.]

Verse 27. The first shall say to Zion, Behold, behold them—(I first to Zion gave the word, Behold they are here)] This verse is somewhat obscure by the transposition of the parts of the sentence, and the peculiar manner in which it is divided into two parallel lines. The verb at the end of the sentence belongs to both parts ; and the phrase, Behold they are here ! is parallel to the messenger of glad tidings ; and stands like it, as the accumative case to the verb. The following paraphrase will explain the form and the sense of it : " I first, by my prophets, give notice of these events, saying, Behold, they are at hand ! and I give to Jerusalem a messenger of glad tidings."

Verse 28. Among them—(Among the idols) For אֱלֹהֵי אֲמֹלֵת, I read אֱלֹהֵי אֲמֹלֵת, with the Septuagint, αἱ εἰδωλῶν. See Exod. xv. 11 ; Isa. lvii. 5.

[R. D. Kimchi has many good observations on this Chapter. Bishop Lowth follows him in applying it to Abraham, and not to Cyrus ; the whole being spoken in the past tense, which is not used, or rarely, in such a case for the future. Almost the whole of the Rabbins understand it of Abraham. On Kimchi's plan, the following is a paraphrase.

The righteous man—Abram—from the East—The land of his nativity, called the land of the children of the East, Gen. xxix. 1.

Brought him to his feet—Whithersoever his feet went, he preached righteousness and truth, as it is written, "There he proclaimed in the name of JEHOVAH." Gen. xxi. 31. And he called it צְדָקָה צַדִיקָתוֹ—that is, p̄ts t̄sedek, righteousness, to his feet, enabled him to hold it forth where- ever he went.

He called the nations—To leave their idols, and worship Him, who made the universe. He taught them the way of righteousness, truth, and faith. Was there ever a prodigy like this ! A man who had been an idolater, rising up against all the nations of the earth, reproving their faith, and not fearing before them nor their kings ! Who stirred up his heart to do this ? Was it not the Lord ?

Gave the nations before him—And made him rule over kings—Chederlaomer, and the kings which were with him : whom the Lord gave as dust to his sword, and stubble to his bow.

He pursued them—He and his three hundred and eighteen servants.

He passed safely—שָׁלוֹם shalom, for בְּשָׁלוֹם be-shalom, in safety ; so said, because he lost not one of his men in this expedition. See Kimchi.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLII.

The prophet, having opened his subject with the preparation for the return from captivity at Babylon, and intimated that a much greater deliverance was covered under the veil of that event proceeded to vindicate the power of God, as Creator and Disposer of all things ; and His infinite knowledge, from His prediction of future events, and in particular of that deliverance. He went still farther, and pointed out the instrument by which He should effect the redemption of His people the Jews from slavery ; namely, a great conqueror, whom he would call forth from the North and the East to execute His orders. In this Chapter he proceeds to the greater deliverance ; and at once brings forth into full view, without throwing any veil of allegory over the subject, the Messiah. "Behold, my servant, Messiah," says the Chaldee. St. Matthew has applied it directly to Christ ; nor can it, with any justice or propriety, be applied to any other person or character whatever.

[Verse 1. Behold my servant, whom I uphold—וְיָרֵם אֶתְמַח־בּוֹ, on whom I lean. Alluding to the custom of kings leaning on the arm of their most beloved and faithful servant. All, both Jews and Christians, agree, that the seven first verses of this Chapter belong to Christ :—Now, as they are evidently a continuation of the prophecy in the preceding Chapter, that prophecy cannot belong to Cyrus, but to Christ.]

He shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles—(He shall publish judgment to the nations)] Four MSS. (two ancient), add the conjunction, וְשִׁפְטֵם ve-mishpat. See Matt. xii. 18.

The word מִשְׁפָּט mishpat, judgment, like צְדָקָה t̄sedekah, righteousness, is taken in a great latitude of signification. It means rule, form, order, model, plan ; rule of right, or of religion ; an ordinance, institution ; judicial process, cause, trial, sentence, condemnation, acquittal, deliverance, mercy, &c. It certainly means in this place the law to be published by Messiah ; the institution of the gospel.

Verse 4. He shall not fail nor be discouraged—(His force shall not be abated nor broken)] Rabbi Meir cita italic locum istum, ut post פָּרַץ yaruts, addat מְרֹץ coacho, robur ejus, quod hodie non comparat in textu Hebræo, sed addendum videtur, ut sensus fiat plenior. ["Rabbi Meir cites this passage so as to add after פָּרַץ yaruts מְרֹץ coacho, his force, which word is not found in the present Hebrew Text, but seems to be added to make the sense more distinct."] Capell. Crit. Sac. p. 382. For which reason I had added it in the translation, before I observed this remark of Capellus.

Verse 6. A covenant of the people—(A covenant to the people)] For בְּ אֱמִ, two MSS. [of Dr. Kennicott's, and one of my own] read בְּאֵי דָאם, the covenant of the age to come, or the everlasting covenant ; which seems to give a clearer and better sense.

[The word בְּרִית berith, here, should not be translated covenant, but covenant-sacrifice, which meaning it often has ; and undoubtedly in this place. This gives a stronger and clearer sense.]

Verse 7. To open the blind eyes] In this verse the prophet seems to set forth the spiritual redemption, under images borrowed from the temporal deliverance.

Out of the prison-house—(And from the dungeon)] The Septuagint, Syriac, and four MSS. (one ancient), add the conjunction וְעַד, וְעַד u-mibeith, and from the house.

[Verse 8. I am the Lord—אֲנִי יְהוָה anani yehovah—This is the famous tetragrammaton, or name of four letters, which we write Jehovah, Yehovah, Yehveh, Yevch, Jhah, Javah, &c. The letters are Y H U H. The Jews never pronounce it ; and the true pronunciation is utterly unknown.]

That is my name—A name peculiar to myself.]

10 *Sing unto the LORD a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth, y^e that go down to the sea, and *all that is therein: the isles, and the inhabitants thereof.

11 Let the wilderness and the cities thereof lift up their voice, the villages that Kedar doth inhabit: let the inhabitants of the rock sing, let them shout from the top of the mountains.

12 Let them give glory unto the LORD, and declare his praise in the islands.

13 The LORD shall go forth as a mighty man, he shall stir up jealousy like a man of war: he shall cry, yea, roar; he shall prevail against his enemies.

14 I have long time holden my peace; I have been still, and refrained myself: now will I cry like a travelling woman; I will destroy and devour at once.

15 I will make waste mountains and hills, and dry up all their herbs; and I will make the rivers islands, and I will dry up the pools.

16 And I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto them, and not forsake them.

17 They shall be turned back, they shall be greatly ashamed, that trust in graven images, that say to the molten images, Ye are our gods.

Verse 10. Ye that go down to the sea] This seems not to belong to this place: it does not well consist with what follows; "and the fulness thereof." They that go down upon the sea means navigators, sailors, traders, such as do business in great waters: an idea much too confined for the prophet, who means the sea in general; as it is used by the Hebrews, for the distant nations, the islands, the dwellers on the sea-coasts all over the world. I suspect that some transcriber had the 23d verse of Psalm cvii. running in his head, יָרִידוֹת בְּנַחֲמֵי יָרִידוֹת yoreday hayam ben-anioth; and wrote in this place יָרִידוֹת yoreday hayam, instead of יָרִידוֹת yeraam hayam, or יָרִידוֹת yerayim, or יָרִידוֹת garan; "let the sea roar, or shout, or exult." But as this is so different in appearance from the present reading, I do not take the liberty of introducing it into the translation. Conjeceram legendum יָרִידוֹת yegidu, ut ver. 12: sed non favent Versiones. ["I would propose to read יָרִידוֹת yegidu, as in verse 12: but this is not supported by the Versions."] Secker.

Verse 11. Let the wilderness] The most uncultivated countries, and the most rude and uncivilized people, shall confess and celebrate, with thanksgiving, the blessing of the knowledge of God, graciously imparted to them. By the desert is meant Arabia Deserta; by the rocky country, Arabia Petraea; by the mountains, probably those celebrated ones Paran, Horeb, Sinai, in the same country; to which also belonged Kedar, a clan of Arabians, dwelling for the most part in tents: but there were others of them, who inhabited or frequented cities and villages, as may be collected from this place of the prophet. Pietro della Valle, speaking of the people of Arabia Deserta, says, "there is a sort of Arabs of that country called Maçdi, who with their herds, of buffaloes for the most part, sometimes live in the deserts, and sometimes in cities; from whence they have their name, which signifies wandering; going from place to place. They have no professed houses: nor are they probably Bedawi, or Beduii, that is, Deserticoli, who are the most noble among them, and never abide within walls, but always go wandering through the open country with their black tents; nor are they properly Ehadesi, as they call those who dwell in cities, and lands with fixed houses. These, by the latter, are esteemed ignoble and base: but both are considered as of low condition." Viaggi, Parte III. lett. ii.

[The villages that Kedar doth inhabit—The Arabs, according to the Targum.

The inhabitants of the rock—They who dwell in fortified places. The Vulgate has habitatores Petrae, "The inhabitants of Arabia Petraea." Those who make the rock, Jesus Christ; the inhabitants of the rock, true believers in Him; the singing, rejoicing for the salvation they have received; abuse and disgrace the passage, and the pulpit. I have heard a clergyman,—a magistrate,—a justice of the quorum, spend an hour in shewing from these words, 1. That they meant Jesus Christ, and none other.—2. That He might be fully compared to a rock, as the foundation on which His church was built, and on which all true believers rested for their salvation.—3. A rock, because of His strength and might in destroying His enemies, and supporting His friends.—4. A refreshing rock—like that in the wilderness, and that Rock was Christ.—5. A perspective rock, from which true believers could discover their heavenly inheritance—"When my heart is overwhelmed, lead me to the rock that is higher than I, &c." Now all this is true in itself: but false in respect to the words on which it was professedly built, for they have no such meaning.]

Verse 14. I have been still—(Shall I keep silence for ever) After מְדַמָּה medlam, in the copy, which the Septuagint had before them, followed the word הֶלְקֵלְקֵל ha-ledlam, ἠσπασσεν αὐτὸν αἶμα; ἢ καὶ αὐτὸν αἶμα; according to MSS. Pachom, and I. D. II. and Edit. Complut.; which word הֶלְקֵלְקֵל ha-ledlam has been omitted in the text by an easy mistake of a transcriber, because of the similitude of the word proceeding.

Verse 15. I will make the rivers islands—(I will make the rivers dry deserts) Instead of אֵימ ayim, islands, read אֵימ ayim; a very probable conjecture of Houbigant.

Verse 16. In paths The Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and nine MSS. (two ancient,) read וּבְנִחְבֵּי ubenotiboth. Will I do unto them אֵיטֵם aitem. This word, so written as it is in the text, means, "thou wilt do," in the second person. The Masoretes have indeed pointed it for the first person; but the yod in the last syllable is absolutely necessary to distinguish the first person; and so it is written in forty MSS. אֵיטֵם aitem.

Jarchi, Kimchi, Sal. ben Melech, &c. agree that the past time is here put for the future, אֵיטֵם aitem, for אֵיטֵם aitem; and indeed the context necessarily requires that interpretation. Further it is to be observed, that אֵיטֵם aitem, is for אֵיטֵם aitem lahem, I have done them, for, I have done for them; as אֵיטֵם aitem, is for אֵיטֵם aitem li, I have made myself, for, I have made for myself, Ezek. xxix. 2, and in the celebrated passage of Jephthah's vow, Judges xi. 31, וְהֵלִיתִי לִי בַחֲרֵי ve-halithu bah, וְהֵלִיתִי לִי בַחֲרֵי ve-halithu bah, I will offer him a burnt-offering, for, I will offer unto him (that is, unto JEOVAH,) a burnt-offering; by an ellipsis of the preposition, of which Buxtorf gives many other examples, Thess. Grammat. lib. ii. 17. See also Note on chap. lxxv. 5. A late happy application of this grammatical remark to that much disputed passage has perfectly cleared up a difficulty, which for two thousand years had puzzled all the translators and expositors, had given occasion to dissertations without number, and caused endless disputes among the learned, on the question, whether Jephthah sacrificed his daughter, or not; in which both parties have been equally ignorant of the meaning of the place, of the state of the fact, and of the very terms of the vow: which now at last has been cleared up beyond all doubt by my learned friend Dr. Randolph, Margaret Professor of Divinity, in the University of Oxford, in his Sermon on Jephthah's Vow, Oxford, 1766.

Verse 19. As my messenger that I sent—(As he to whom I have sent my messengers) כְּמַלְאכֵי ke-malakey ehalach, ut ad quem nuncios meos misi. The Vulgate and Chaldee are almost the only interpreters who render it rightly, in consistency with the rest of the sentence, and in perfect agreement with the Hebrew idiom; according to which the ellipsis is to be thus supplied, אֵיטֵם aitem כְּמַלְאכֵי ke-malakey malakey ehalach.

As he that is perfect—(As he who is perfectly instructed) See Note on chap. xlv. 2.

And blind as the LORD's servant—(And deaf, as the servant of JEOVAH) For וְעֵרְוָה ve-ivver, and blind, we must read וְעֵרְוָה ve-chareah, and deaf; καυρος, Symmachus, and so a MS. The mistake is palpable, and the correction self-evident; and admissible, though there had been no authority for it.

Verse 20. Seeing many things—(Thou hast seen indeed) The Text has רַבִּית רַבִּית raith rabith, which the Masoretes in the marginal Keri have corrected to רַבִּית רַבִּית raith raboth; as indeed one hundred and seven MSS. and five Editions now have it in the text. This was probably the reading of most of the MSS. in their time;

21 The LORD is well pleased for his righteousness' sake; he will magnify the law, and make it honourable.

22 But this is a people robbed and spoiled; they are all of them snared in holes, and they are hid in prison-houses: they are for a prey, and none delivereth; for a spoil, and none saith, Restore.

23 Who among you will give ear to this? who will hearken, and hear for the time to come?

24 Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? did not the LORD, he against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law.

25 Therefore he hath poured upon him the fury of his anger, and the strength of battle: and it hath set him on fire round about, yet he knew not; and it burned him, yet he laid it not to heart.

CHAPTER XLIII.

Prediction of that blessed period when God should gather the posterity of Abraham, with tender care, from their several dispersions in every quarter under heaven, and bring them safely to their own land, 1-7. Struck with astonishment at so clear a display of an event so very remote, the Prophet again challenges all the blinded nations and their idols to produce an instance of such foresight, 8; and intimates that the Jews should remain (as at this day) a singular monument to witness the truth of the prediction, till it should at length be fulfilled by the irresistible power of God, 10-13. He then returns to the master deliverance, that from the captivity of Babylon, 14; with which, however, he immediately connects another deliverance described by allusions to that from Egypt, but represented as much more wonderful than that; a character which will not at all apply to the deliverance from Babylon, and must therefore be understood of the restoration from the mystical Babylon, 16-18. On this occasion the Prophet, with peculiar elegance, and by a very strong poetic figure, represents the tender care of God in comforting and refreshing His people on their way through the desert, to be so great, as to make even the wild beasts hennant those parched places so sensible of the blessing of those waters, 19; then provided by Him, as to join their hissing and howling notes with one consent to praise God, 19-21. This leads to a beautiful contrast of the ingratitude of the Jews, and a vindication of God's dealings with regard to them, 22-25.

that formed thee, O Israel, Fear not: for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine.

2 When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee.

3 For I am the LORD thy God, the Holy One of Israel, thy Saviour: I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee.

4 Since thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable, and I have loved thee: therefore will I give men for thee, and people for thy life.

5 Fear not: for I am with thee: I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west;

6 I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth;

7 Even every one that is called by my name: for I have created him for my glory, I have formed him; yea, I have made him.

8 Bring forth the blind people that have eyes, and the deaf that have ears.

9 Let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled: who among them can declare this, and shew us former things? let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified: or let them hear, and say, it is truth.

which, though they approved of it, out of some superstition, they would not admit into their standard Text. But these wretched critics, though they perceived there was some fault, yet did not know where the fault lay, nor consequently, how to amend it; and yet it was open enough to a judicious eye: "raboth, sic veteres; et tamen forte legendum, reoth: vide cap. vi. 9." Secker. That is, reoth reoth reoth, seeing, thou shalt see. I believe no one will doubt of admitting this as the true reading.

But he heareth not—(Yet thou wilt not hear!) For yishmâ, read yowh tishmâ, in the second person: so all the ancient Versions and forty MSS. [of Kennicott] (four of them ancient) [and seventeen of De Rossi] and perhaps five more. Two others have yowh tishmêu, second person plural.

Verse 21. He will magnify the law—(He hath exalted his own praise!) For torah, the law, the Septuagint read todah, praise.

Verse 22. They are all of them snared in holes—(All their chosen youths are taken in the toils!) For hapach, read hupachu, in the plural number, Hophal; as hachabai, which answers to it in the following member of the sentence. Le Clerc, Houbigant. hapach, Secker.

Verse 24. We have sinned—(They have sinned!) For chatanu, first person, the Septuagint and Chaldee read wachateu, in the third person.

Verse 25. The fury of his anger—(The heat of his wrath!) For chamath, the Bodl. MS. has chamath, in regimine, more regularly.

[It hath set him on fire round about—So thoroughly hardened are the Jewish people, that they are represented as being in a house on fire, and even scorched with the flames, without perceiving their danger, or feeling that they are hurt! What a picture of mental induration: and this is their state to the present day. But by whom shall Jacob arise! for in this sense, he is small indeed. Many efforts have been made to Christianize them, but without effect: and is this to be wondered at? While we tell them how great they are, how learned, how wise, how much we owe to them, that they are still the peculiar people of God, &c. &c. If all this be true, what can they gain by becoming Christians! But a more stupid, proud, hardened, ignorant people, are scarcely to be found in the civilized world; and most grossly ignorant of their own Scriptures.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLIII.

[Verse 1. I have called thee by thy name—קראתי kariti beshemeka. "So all the Versions. But it seems from the seventh verse, and from the thing itself, that we should read קראתי karitica bishemi, I have called thee by my name: for this form of speech often occurs,—the other never. For chap. xlv. 24, concerning Cyrus, is another matter: but when God calls Jacob Israel, He calls him by the name of God. See Exodus xxxi. 2." Secker.]

Verse 3. I gave Egypt for thy ransom] This is commonly supposed to refer to the time of Sennacherib's invasion; who, when he was just ready to fall upon Jerusalem, soon after his entering Judea, was providentially diverted from that design, and turned his arms against the Egyptians, and their allies the Cushan Arabians, with their neighbours the Sabeans probably joined with them, under Tirhakah. See chap. xx. and chap. xxxvii. 9. Or, as there are some reasonable objections to this opinion, perhaps it may mean more generally, that God had often saved His people at the expense of other nations, whom He had, as it were in their stead, given up to destruction. Vitringa explains this of Shalmaneser's designs upon the kingdom of Judea, after he had destroyed that of Samaria, from which he was diverted by carrying the war against the Egyptians, Cushans, and Sabeans: but of this I think he has no clear proof in history. It is not to be wondered at that many things of this kind should remain very obscure for want of the light of history, which in regard to these times is extremely deficient.

"Did not Cyrus overcome these nations? and might they not be given him for releasing the Jews? It seems to have been so from chap. xlv. 14." Secker.

[Kimchi refers all this to the deliverance of Jerusalem from the invasion of Sennacherib. Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia, had come out to war against the king of Assyria, who was thereupon obliged to raise the siege of Jerusalem. Thus the Ethiopians, Egyptians, and Sabeans, were delivered into the hands of the Assyrians as a ransom for Israel. Kimchi. I cannot help thinking this to be a very rational solution of the Text.

Verse 7. Every one that is called by my name—All who worship the true God, and are obedient to His laws.

I have created him—בראתי beratav. I have produced him out of nothing.]

For my glory] Ten MSS., (three ancient) and the Syriac and Vulgate, read לעבודי lecabodi, without the conjunction vau, and.

[Bring forth the people, blind, although they have eyes] I understand this of the Gentiles, as the verse following, not of the Jews. Their natural faculties, if they had made a proper use of them, must have led them to the knowledge of the being and attributes of the one true God; "for His eternal power and Godhead, if well attended to, are clearly seen in His works," Rom. i. 20, and would have preserved them from running into the folly and absurdity of worshipping idols. They are here challenged to produce the evidence of the power and foreknowledge of their idol gods; and the Jews are just afterwards, verse 10, appealed to as witnesses for God in this cause; therefore these latter cannot here be meant by the people blind with eyes, and deaf with ears.

Verse 9. Who among them Seven MSS. (three ancient), and the first Edition, 1486, with the Syriac and Vulgata, read acc bekem, who among you. The present reading is preferable.

[Verse 10. Ye (the Israelites) are my witnesses—and my servant (the prophet) whom I have chosen, that whatever has been said before concerning Sennacherib has been literally fulfilled. The prophet had predicted it,—the Israelites saw it accomplished.

Before me there was no God formed, neither shall there be after me—This is a most difficult place. Was there a time when God was not? No! Yet He says before me. Will there be a time in which God will not exist? No! Yet He says, after me. Are not all these words to be referred to His creation? Before me—no god created any thing,—nor was there any thing pre-existent but myself. And after me, i. e. after my creation, such as now exists, there shall be no other class of beings formed. This mode of interpretation frees the passage from all embarrassment, and the context perfectly agrees with it. The words my servant, in this verse, the Targum understands of the Messiah.

Verse 12. I have declared, and have saved—My prophets have always predicted your deliverances before they took place; and I have fulfilled their words to the uttermost.]

Verse 14. The Chaldeans—whose cry is in the ships—(The Chaldeans exulting in their ships) Babylon was very advantageously situated both in respect to commerce, and as a naval power. It was open to the Persian Gulf by the Euphrates, which was navigable by large vessels; and being joined to the Tigris above Babylon by the canal called Naharmalca, or The Royal River, supplied the city with the produce of the whole country to the north of it, as far as the Euxine and Caspian seas, Herod. i. 194. Semiramis was the foundress of this part also of the Babylonian greatness. She improved the navigation of the Euphrates, Herod. i. 194; Strabo, lib. xvi; and is said to have had a fleet of three thousand gallees, Huet, Hist. du Commerce, chap. xi. We are not to wonder that in later times we hear little of the commerce and naval power of Babylon; for, after the taking of the city by Cyrus, the Euphrates was not only rendered less fit for navigation by being on that occasion diverted from its course, and left to spread over the whole country; but the Persian monarchs, residing in their own country, to prevent an invasion by sea on that part of their empire, purposely obstructed the navigation of both the rivers by making cataraets in them, Strabo, ib. that is, by raising dams across the channel, and making artificial falls in them, that no vessel of any size or force could possibly come up. Alexander began to restore the navigation of the rivers by demolishing the cataraets upon the Tigris as far up as Seleucia, Arrian. lib. vii; but he did not live to finish his great designs: those upon the Euphrates still continued. Ammanius, xxiv. 1, mentions them as subsisting in his time.

The prophet therefore might very justly speak of the Chaldeans as glorying in their naval power in his time; though afterward they had no foundation for making any such boast.

Verse 15. The Creator For בורא borá, Creator, six MSS. (two ancient) have אלוהי elohi, God.

[Verse 19. Behold, I will do a new thing—At ver. 16, the prophet had referred to the deliverance from Egypt and the passage through the Red sea; here he promises that the same Power shall be employed in their redemption and return from the Babylonian Captivity. This was to be a new prodigy.]

Verse 20. The beast of the field shall honour me—(The wild beast of the field shall glorify me) The image is elegant and highly poetical. God will give such an abundant miraculous supply of water to His people traversing the dry desert in their return to their country, that even the wild beasts, the serpents, the ostriches, and other animals that haunt those adust regions, shall be sensible of the blessing, and shall break forth into thanksgiving and praises to Him for the unusual refreshment, which they receive from His so plentifully watering the sandy wastes of Arabia Deserta, for the benefit of His people passing through them.

Verse 22. But thou hast not called upon me] The connexion is:—But thou, Israel, whom I have chosen, whom I have formed for myself to be my witness against the false gods of the nations; even thou hast revolted from me, hast neglected my worship, and hast been perpetually running after strange gods. The emphasis of this and the following parts of the sentence, on which the sense depends, seems to lie on the words me, on MY ACCOUNT, &c. The Jews were diligent in performing the external services of religion; in offering prayers, incense, sacrifices, oblations: but their prayers were not offered with faith; and their oblations were made more frequently to their idols than to the God of their fathers. The Hebrew idiom excludes with a general negative, in a comparative sense, one of two objects opposed to one another: thus, "I will have mercy, and not sacrifice," Hos. vi. 6. "For I spoke not to your fathers, nor commanded them,—concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices: but this thing I commanded them, saying, Obey my voice," Jer. vii. 22, 23. And the meaning of this place of Isaiah seems to be much the same with that of Amos; who however has explained at large both parts of the comparison, and specified the false service opposed to the true:—

"Have ye offered unto me sacrifices and offerings, In the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel. Nay, but you have borne the tabernacles of your Moloch, And Chanaan, your images; The star of your god, which you made to yourselves." Amos v. 25, 26.

25 I, even I, am he that blot out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins.

26 Put me in remembrance: let us plead together: declare thou, that thou mayest be justified.

27 Thy first father hath sinned, and thy teachers have transgressed against me.

28 Therefore I have profaned the princes of the sanctuary, and have given Jacob to the curse, and Israel to reproaches.

CHAPTER XLIV.

This Chapter, besides promises of redemption, of the effusion of the Spirit, and essence of the gospel, 1-5, sets forth in a very sublime manner, the supreme power and sovereignty, and the absolute eternity, of the One true God; and exposes the folly and absurdity of idolatry with admirable force and eloquence, 6-35. And to shew that the knowledge of future events belonged only to Jehovah, whom all creation is again called to adore for the deliverance and reconciliation granted to His people, 36-43, the Prophet concludes with sitting in a very strong point of view the absolute impotence of every thing considered good and innumerable in the sight of man, when standing in the way of the Divine counsel; and mentions the figure of the founder of the Jewish nation expressly by name, nearly two hundred years before his birth, 44-48.

YET now hear, O Jacob my servant; and Israel whom I have chosen.

2 Thus saith the LORD that made thee, and formed thee from the womb, which will help thee; Fear not, O Jacob my servant; and thou, Jeaurun, whom I have chosen.

[Verse 25. I, even I, am he.] The original is extremely abrupt. אֲנִי אֲנִי אֲנִי anoki anoki hu, "I, I, He." Is there any mystery in this form? Does it refer to a plurality of Persons in the Godhead?

To reproaches.—(To reproach.) עָרַב legadephaph, in the singular number: so an ancient MS. and the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate. [And, alas! what a curse do they still bear, and what reproach do they still suffer! No national crimes have ever equalled those of the Jewish nation, for no nation ever had such privileges to neglect,—despise,—sin against. When shall this severity of God towards this people have an end? Ansis. Whenever the people, with one heart, turn to Him, and receive the doctrine of the Lord Jesus: and not till then.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLIV.

Verse 2. Jeaurun] Jeshurun means Israel. This name was given to that people by Moses, Deut. xxxii. 15; xxxiii. 5, 26. The most probable account of it seems to be that in which the Jewish commentators agree; namely, that it is derived from עָרַב yasher, and signifies upright. In the same manner, Israel, as a people, is called עֲשָׂהוּ meshalameh, perfect, chap. xiii. 19. They were taught of God, and abundantly furnished with the means of rectitude and perfection in His service and worship. [Grotius thinks that עָרַב yeshurun, is a diminutive of עָרַב yishrael, Israel; expressing peculiar fondness and affection; יֵשׁוּעֵהוֹן, O little Israel.]

Verse 4. They shall spring up as among the grass.—(They shall spring up as the grass among the waters) עָרַב כִּבְבֵּן bebeyn chatzir. "They shall spring up in the midst of, or rather, in among, the grass." This cannot be right: eleven MSS. and thirteen Editions, have כִּבְבֵּן kebeyn, or כִּבְבֵּן keben. Twenty-four MSS. read it without the וְ, כִּבְבֵּן, beben, in the son of the grass; and so reads the Chaldee; [כִּבְבֵּן be ben, in the son of the grass. Twenty-four MSS. of Dr. Kennicott's, thirty-three of De Roes's, and one of my own, with six Editions, have this reading.] The Syriac, כִּבְבֵּן mebeyn. The true reading is in all probability עָרַב bebeyn; and the word עָרַב mayim, which should have followed it, is lost out of the Text: but it is happily supplied by the Septuagint; ὡς ἀνά μεσσοῦ ὕδατος, as among the water. "In every place where there is water, there is always grass: for water makes every thing grow in the East." Sir John Chardin's Note on 1 Kings xviii. 5, Harmer's Observations, i. 45.

Verse 5. Shall call himself.—(Shall be called)] Passive, עָרַב yekare; ἀνασπείρει, Symmachus.

Another shall subscribe with his hand unto the LORD.—(This shall inscribe his hand to JEHOVAH) Καὶ ἕτερος ἐπιγράψει χεῖρα (χεῖρα, Ag. Sym.) αὐτοῦ, Τοῦ Θεοῦ ἐμοῦ: "And another shall write upon his hand, I belong to God." Sept. They seem to have read here, as before, עָרַב לַיהוָה ani, I belong to JEHOVAH. But the repetition of the same phrase, without any variation, is not elegant. However, they seem to have understood it rightly, as an allusion to the marks, which were made by punctures rendered indelible by fire, or by staining, upon the hand, or some other part of the body, signifying the state or character of the person, and to whom he belonged. The slave was marked with the name of his master; the soldier, of his commander; the idolater, with the name or ensign of his god: ἐπιγράματα ἐπιγράφοντα, δια τῶν σφραγισμένων ἐν ταῖς χεῖρσιν. ["Punctual inscriptions made by the soldiers on their hands."] Actius apud Turnebon Advers. xxiv. 12. Victories in cute punctis militis scripti et matriculis inserti jurare solent. ["The soldiers having indelible inscriptions on their skin, and inserted in the muster-rolls, are accustomed to make oath."] Vegetius, ii. 5. And the Christians seem to have imitated this practice by what Procopius says on this place of Isaiah: Τοῦ δὲ Τῆ ΧΕΙΡΙ, δια τοῦ εὐχίειν ἰσως πολλοὺς ἐκὶ καρπῶν, ἢ βραχίωνων, ἢ τῶν σταυρῶν τοῦ εὐχίειν, ἢ τῶν Χριστοῦ κροσσογυρίων. "Because many marked their wrists, or their arms, with the sign of the cross, or with the name of Christ." See Rev. xx. 4. Spencer, De Leg. Hebr. lib. ii. cap. 20.

Verse 7. Let them shew unto them.—(Let them declare unto us) For עָרַב lamo, unto them, the Chaldee reads עָרַב lanu, unto us. The Septuagint read εὐβ λαιμ, unto you; which is preferable to the reading of the Text. But עָרַב lamo, and עָרַב lanu, are frequently mistaken one for the other, see chap. x. 29; Ps. lxxx. 7; lxiv. 6.

Verse 8. Fear ye not] עָרַב t'rebh, never occurs. Perhaps it should be עָרַב t'reu, fear ye. Two MSS. read עָרַב t'rehu, [and one of mine t'rehu.]

Verse 9, 10. That they may be ashamed. Who hath formed a god.—(That every one may be ashamed, that he hath formed a god) The Bodleian MS., one of the first extant for its antiquity and authority, instead of עָרַב mi, at the beginning of the tenth verse, has עָרַב ki, which greatly clears up the construction of a very obscure passage. [Doderlein approves of this reading.] The Septuagint likewise closely connect in construction the end of ver. 9, with the beginning of ver. 10; and wholly omit the interrogative עָרַב mi, which embarrasses the sentence: εὐβροχῶνται δὲ πλασσόντες Θεοῦ, καὶ γὰρ ἄσχετοντες πεντέε ἀναπέλην.—["But they shall be confounded that make a god; and they who 10 Who hath formed a god, or molten a graven image, that is profitable for nothing?

11 Behold, all his fellows shall be ashamed: and the workmen, they are of men: let them all be gathered together, let them stand up: yet they shall fear, and they shall be ashamed together.

12 The smith with the tongs both worketh in the coals, and fashioneth it with hammers, and worketh it with the strength of his arms: yea, he is hungry, and his strength faileth: he drinketh no water, and is faint.

13 The carpenter stretcheth out his rule; he marketh it out with a line; he fitteth it with planes, and he marketh it out with the compass, and maketh it after the figure of a man, according to the beauty of a man: that it may remain in the house.

14 He heweth him down cedars, and taketh the cypress and the oak, which he strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest: he planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it.

15 Then shall it be for a man to burn: for he will take thereof and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread; yea, he maketh a god, and worshippeth it; he maketh it a graven image, and falleth down thereto.

16 He burneth part thereof in the fire; with part thereof he eateth flesh; he roasteth roast, and is satisfied: yea, he warmeth himself, and saith, Aha, I am warm, I have seen the fire:

17 And the residue thereof he maketh a god, even his graven image: he falleth down unto it, and worshippeth it, and prayeth unto it, and saith, Deliver me; for thou art my god.

18 They have not known nor understood:

for he hath shut their eyes, that they cannot see; and their hearts, that they cannot understand.

19 And none considereth in his heart, neither is there knowledge nor understanding to say, I have burned part of it in the fire: yea, also I have baked bread on the coals thereof; I have roasted flesh, and eaten it: and shall I make the residue thereof an abomination? shall I fall down to the stock of a tree?

20 He feedeth on ashes: a deceived heart hath turned him aside, that he cannot deliver his soul, nor say, Is there not a lie in my right hand?

21 Remember these, O Jacob and Israel; for thou art my servant: I have formed thee; thou art my servant: O Israel, thou shalt not be forgotten of me.

22 I have blotted out as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins: return unto me; for I have redeemed thee.

23 Sing, O ye heavens; for the Lord hath done it: shout, ye lower parts of the earth: break forth into singing, ye mountains, O forest, and every tree therein: for the Lord hath redeemed Jacob, and glorified himself in Israel.

24 Thus saith the Lord, thy Redeemer, and he that formed thee from the womb, I am the Lord that maketh all things; that stretcheth forth the heavens alone: that spreadeth abroad the earth by myself:

25 That frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish;

[Verse 11. His fellows—עֲבָדָיו chaberav: but עֲבָדָיו abedav, his servants or worshippers, is the reading of one of De Rossi's MSS. and of the Chaldee.]

And the workmen they are of men—[Even the workmen themselves shall blush] I do not know, that any one has ever yet interpreted these words to any tolerably good sense: אֲדָמָה הֵמָּה מְעַדָּמָה vechareshim hemah meadam. The Vulgate, and our translators, have rendered them very fairly, as they are written and pointed in the Text:—Fabri enim sunt ex hominibus: "And the workmen they are of men." Out of which the commentators have not been able to extract any thing worthy of the prophet. I have given another explanation of the place; agreeable enough to the context, if it can be deduced from the words themselves. I presume, אֲדָמָה adam, rubuit, may signify erubuit, to be red through shame, as well as from any other cause; though I cannot produce any example of it in that particular sense; and the word in the text I would point אֲדָמָה meadam; or if any one should object to the irregularity of the number, I would read אֲדָמָתִים meadamim. But I rather think, that the irregularity of the construction has been the cause of the obscurity, and has given occasion to the mistaken punctuation. The singular is sometimes put for the plural, see Psa. lxxviii. 31; and the participle for the future tense, see Isa. xl. 11.

Verse 12. The smith with the tongs, &c.—[The smith cutteth off a portion of iron] מִדְּבַר מִדְּבַר medebat, Participle Pihel of דָּבַר to cut; still used in that sense in the Arabic. See Simonia, Lex. Heb. The Septuagint and Syriac take the word in this form: but they render it, sharpeneth the iron. See Castell. Lex. in voce.

The Sacred Writers are generally large and eloquent upon the subject of idolatry: they treat it with great severity, and set forth the absurdity of it in the strongest light. But this passage of Isaiah, ver. 12—20, far exceeds any thing that ever was written upon the subject, in force of argument, energy of expression, and elegance of composition. One or two of the apocryphal writers have attempted to imitate the prophet, but with very ill success: Wisd. xiii. 11—19; xv. 7, &c.; Baruch, ch. vi., especially the latter; who, injudiciously dilating his matter, and introducing a number of minute circumstances, has very much weakened the force and effect of his invective. On the contrary, a Heathen author, in the ludicrous way, has, in a line or two, given idolatry one of the severest strokes it ever received:—

From the tenth to the seventeenth verse, a most beautiful strain of irony is carried on against idolatry. And we may naturally think that every idolater, who either read or heard it, must have been for ever ashamed of his own devices.]

Verse 14. He heweth him down—[He heweth down], For יִלְכֹד lekarat, the Septuagint and Vulgate read כָּרַת keret or יִלְכֹד yekeret.

Verse 16. With part—[And with part] Twenty-three MSS., the Septuagint, and Vulgate, add the conjunction וְ et, וְעִי et-ee.

[Verse 17. He falleth down unto it.—There were four forms of adoration used among the Hebrews:—1. הִשְׁתַּחֲוֶה HISTACHAVEH, The prostration of the whole body.—2. קִרְעַת KARET, The bowing of the head.—3. כָּרַע KARA, The bending of the upper part of the body down to the knees.—4. בָּרַךְ BARAK, bowing the knee, or kneeling. See on ch. xlix. 23.]

Verse 18. He hath shut their eyes—[Their eyes are closed up] The Septuagint, Chaldee, and Vulgate, for שָׁחַת shach, read יָשַׁח yach. See note on chap. vi. 10.

Verse 20. He feedeth on ashes [He feedeth on that which affordeth no nourishment: a proverbial expression for using ineffectual means, and bestowing labour to no purpose. In the same sense Hosea says, "Ephraim feedeth on wind." Chap. xii. 1.

Verse 22. I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins—[I have made thy transgressions vanish away like a cloud, and thy sins like a vapour] Longinus admired the sublimity of the sentiment, as well as the harmony of the numbers, in the following sentence of Demosthenes: Τούτο το ψήφισμα τον ποτε εν τη περιουστρια κωδωνος παρεδενεν εως του νεφους. "This decree made the danger then hanging over the city pass away like a cloud." [Probably Isaiah alludes here to the smoke rising up from the sin-offering, dispersed speedily by the wind, and rendered invisible. He who offered his sacrifice aright was as sure that the sin for which he offered it was blotted out, as that the smoke of the sacrifice was dispersed by the wind, and was no longer discernible.]

Verse 24. By myself] Thirteen MSS., (six ancient,) confirm the reading of the Keri, בְּיָמַי meitai.

26 That confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built, and I will raise up the decayed places thereof:

28 That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure: even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid.

CHAPTER XLV.

Prophecy concerning Cyrus, the first king of the Persians. Every obstruction shall be removed out of his way, and the treasures taken from his countries shall be restored, 1-25. To whom, and on what account, Cyrus was selected for his wonderful success, 4-6. The Prophet relates the absurd opinion of the Persians that there were two supreme beings, an evil and a good one, represented by light and darkness, here declared to be only the operation of the One true God, 7. And makes a transition to the still greater work of God displayed in the disposition of the good, 8. Great impiety of those who call in question the mysterious providence of God to reward His children, 9-12. The remaining part of this Chapter, interspersed with strictures on the absurdity of idolatry and some allusions to the dark lying courses of the Heathens, may partly refer to the deliverance begun by Cyrus, but chiefly to that salvation by Messiah, which, it is declared, shall be of universal extent and everlasting duration, 13-25.

Verse 27. That saith to the deep, Be dry.—(Who saith to the deep, Be thou wasted!) Cyrus took Babylon by laying the bed of the Euphrates dry, and leading his army into the city by night through the empty channel of the river. This remarkable circumstance, in which the event so exactly corresponded with the prophecy, was also noted by Jeremiah, (Jer. 1. 38; li. 36)

"A drought shall be upon her waters, and they shall be dried up.—I will lay her sea dry; And I will scorch up her springs."

It is proper here to give some account of the means and method by which this stratagem of Cyrus was effected.

The Euphrates in the middle of the summer, from the melting of the snows on the mountains of Armenia, like the Nile, overflows the country. In order to diminish the inundation, and to carry off the waters, two canals were made by Nebuchadnezzar a hundred miles above the city; the first on the eastern side called Naharmalca, or the Royal River, by which the Euphrates was let into the Tigris; the other on the western side, called Pallacopas, or Naharaga, (נַהַר אֲגַם nahar agam, The River of the Pool), by which the redundant waters were carried into a vast lake, forty miles square, contrived not only to lessen the inundation, but for a reservoir, with sluices, to water the barren country on the Arabian side. Cyrus, by turning the whole river into the lake by the Pallacopas, laid the channel, where it ran through the city, almost dry; so that his army entered it, both above and below, by the bed of the river, the water not reaching above the middle of the thigh. By the great quantity of water let into the lake, the sluices and dams were destroyed; and being never repaired afterward, the waters spread over the whole country below, and reduced it to a morass, in which the river is lost. Ingens modo et navigabilis, inde tenuis rivus, despectus emoritur; et nusquam manifestò exitu effluit, ut alii omnes, sed deficit.—"And thus a navigable river has been totally lost, it having no exit from this morass. No wonder then that the geographical face of this country is completely changed." MELA, iii. 8. HEROD. i. 186, 190. XENOPHON, Cyrop. vii. ABBIAN. vii.

Verse 28. That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd.—(Who saith to Cyrus, Thou art my shepherd!) Pastor meus es. Vulg. The true reading seems to be רוֹעֵי אֲתָּה roei atah; the word ruo atah, has probably been dropped out of the Text. The same word is lost out of the Text, Psa. cxix. 57. It is supplied in the Septuagint by the word ox, thou art.

Saith to Jerusalem] For יְרוּשָׁלַיִם Jerolomer, the Septuagint, and Vulgate, read יְרוּשָׁלַיִם haomer.

And to the temple] וְלַבַּיִת לְיְרוּשָׁלַיִם uhlitel, as יְרוּשָׁלַיִם leyerushalem, before; the preposition is necessary; and the Vulgate seems to read so.—Houbigant.

[That saith of Cyrus, He is, or (Thou art) my shepherd.—Saying to JERUSALEM, Thou shalt be built;—And to the TEMPLE, Thy foundation shall be laid. There is a remarkable beauty and propriety in this verse.

1. Cyrus is called God's shepherd. Shepherd was an epithet which Cyrus took to himself; and what he gave to all good kings.

2. This Cyrus should say to the Temple—Thy foundation shall be laid. Not, thou shalt be built. The fact is,

I have holden to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two-leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut;

2 I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight: I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron:

3 And I will give thee the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, that thou mayest know that I, the Lord, which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel.

4 For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, I have even called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, though thou hast not known me.

5 I am the Lord, and there is none else, there is no God beside me: I girded thee, though thou hast not known me:

6 That they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none beside me. I am the Lord, and there is none else.

7 I form the light, and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things.

only the foundation was laid in the days of Cyrus, the Ammonites having prevented the building; nor was it resumed till the second year of Darius, one of his successors. There is often a precision in the expressions of the prophets, which is as honourable to truth, as it is unnoticed by careless readers.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLV.

Verse 1. Loose the loins of kings.—(Ungird the loins of kings) See Note on chap. v. 27. Xenophon gives the following list of the nations conquered by Cyrus: the Syrians, Assyrians, Arabians, Cappadocians, both the Phrygians, Lydians, Carians, Phœnicians, Babylonians. He moreover reigned over the Bactrians, Indians, Cilicians, the Saccæ, Paphlagonæ, and Mariandyri. Cyrop. lib. i. p. 4. Edit. Hutchinsonson, Quarto. All these kingdoms he acknowledges, in his decree for the restoration of the Jews, to have been given to him by JEHOVAH, the God of heaven. Ezra i. 2.

To open before him the two-leaved gates, &c.—(That I may open before him the valves; and the gates shall not be shut) The gates of Babylon within the city, leading from the streets to the river, were providentially left open, when Cyrus' forces entered the city in the night through the channel of the river, in the general disorder occasioned by the great feast which was then celebrated; otherwise, says Herodotus, i. 191, the Persians would have been shut up in the bed of the river, and taken as in a net, and all destroyed. And the gates of the palace were opened imprudently by the king's orders, to enquire what was the cause of the tumult without; when the two parties under Gobrias and Gadatas rushed in, got possession of the palace, and slew the king. XENOPH. Cyrop. vii. p. 528.

Verse 2. The crooked places.—(The mountains) For הַרְרֵי אֲדָרִים hadarim, crooked places, a word not easily accounted for in this place, the Septuagint read הַרְרֵי חַרְרִים hararim, i. e. sps, the mountains. Two MSS. have הַרְרֵי אֲדָרִים hadarim, without the וּבָא, which is hardly distinguishable from the reading of the Septuagint. The Divine protection that attended Cyrus, and rendered his expedition against Babylon easy and prosperous, is finely expressed by God's going before him, and making the mountains level. The image is highly poetical:

Atque, quæ venter, humilis sublevis montes, Et facies curvæ vallibus ante vici. Ovid, Amor. 8. 16.

[“Let the lofty mountains fall down, and make level paths in the crooked valleys.”]

The gates of brass.—(The valves of brass) Abydenus, apud Euseb. Præp. Evang. ix. 41, says, that the wall of Babylon had brazen gates. And Herodotus, i. 179, more particularly: “In the wall all round there are a hundred gates, all of brass; and so in like manner are the sides and the lintels.” The gates likewise within the city, opening to the river from the several streets, were of brass; as were those also of the temple of Belus. Herod. i. 180, 181.

Verse 3. I will give thee the treasures of darkness] Sardes and Babylon, when taken by Cyrus, were the wealthiest cities in the world. Croesus, celebrated beyond all the kings of that age for his riches, gave up his treasures to Cyrus, with an exact account in writing of the whole, containing the particulars with which each wagon was loaded when they were carried away; and they were delivered to Cyrus at the palace of Babylon. Xenophon, Cyrop. lib. vii. p. 503, 515, 540.

Pliny gives the following account of the wealth taken by Cyrus in Asia. Jam Cyrus, devictâ Asiâ, pondo xxxiv. millia [auri] inteneral; præter vasa aurea, aurumque factum, et in eo folia, ac platinum, viemque. Quâ victoriâ argenti quingenta millia talentorum reportavit; et craterem Semiramidis, cuius pondus quindecim talenta coligebat. Talentum autem Ægyptium pondo lxxx patere [l. capere] Varro tradit. Nat. Hist. xxxiii. 15. ["When Cyrus conquered Asia, he found thirty-four thousand pounds' weight of gold, besides golden vessels and articles in gold; and leaves, (folia, perhaps solia, bathing vessels, Hol.) a plane, and vine-tree, (of gold.) By which victory he carried away fifty thousand talents of silver; and the cup of Semiramis, the weight of which was fifteen talents. The Egyptian talent, according to Varro, was eighty pounds."]

The gold and silver, estimated by weight in this account, being converted into pounds sterling, amount to one hundred and twenty-six millions two hundred and twenty-four thousand pounds. Brerewood, De Ponderibus, cap. x.

Verse 7. I form the light, and create darkness) It was the great principle of the Magian religion, which prevailed in Persia at the time of Cyrus, and in which probably he was educated, that there are two supreme, co-eternal, and independent causes, always acting in opposition one to the other; one the author of all good, the other of all evil. The good being, they called LIGHT; the evil being, DARKNESS. That when LIGHT had the ascendant, then good and happiness prevailed among men; when DARKNESS had the superiority, then evil and misery abounded. An opinion that contradicts the clearest evidence of our reason, which plainly leads us to the acknowledgment of one only Supreme Being, infinitely good as well as powerful. With reference to this absurd opinion, held by the person to whom this prophecy is addressed, God by His prophet, in the most significant terms, asserts His omnipotence and absolute supremacy:

* I am JEHOVAH, and none else; Forming light and creating darkness; Making peace and creating evil; I JEHOVAH am the Author of all these things."

Declaring that those powers whom the Persians held to be the original authors of good and evil to mankind, representing them by light and darkness, as their proper emblems, are no other than creatures of God, the instruments which He employs in His government of the world, ordained or permitted by Him in order to execute His wise and just decrees; and that there is no power, either of good or evil, independent of the one Supreme God, infinite in power and in goodness.

There were, however, some among the Persians whose sentiments were more moderate as to this matter; who held the evil principle to be in some measure subordinate to the good; and that the former would at length be wholly subdued by the latter. See Hyde, De R. Vet. Pers. cap. xxii.

That this opinion prevailed among the Persians as early as the time of Cyrus we may, I think, infer, not only from this passage of Isaiah, which has a manifest reference to it, but likewise from a passage in Xenophon's Cyropædia, where the same doctrine is applied to the human mind. Araspes, a noble young Persian, had fallen in love with the fair captive Panthea, committed to his charge by Cyrus. After all his boasting, that he was superior to the assaults of that passion, he yielded so far to it as even to threaten violence if she would not comply with his desires. Averted by the reproof of Cyrus, fearing his displeasure, and having by cool reflection recovered his reason; in his discourse with him on this subject, he says, "O Cyrus, I have certainly two souls; and this piece of philosophy I have learned from that wicked sophist, Love. For if I had but one soul, it would not be at the same time good and evil; it would not at the same time approve of honourable and base actions; and at once desire to do, and refuse to do, the very same things. But it is plain that I am animated by two souls; and when the good soul prevails, I do what is virtuous; and when the evil one prevails, I attempt what is vicious. But now the good soul prevails, having gotten you for her assistant, and has clearly gained the superiority." Lib. vi. p. 424.

[I make peace, and create evil—Evil is here evidently put for war and its attendant miseries. I will procure peace for the Israelites, and destroy Babylon by war. I form light, and create darkness. Now, as darkness is only the privation of light,—so the evil of war is the privation of peace.]

Verse 8. Drop down, ye heavens) The eighty-fifth Psalm is a very elegant ode on the same subject with this part of Isaiah's prophecies,—the restoration of Judah from captivity; and is, in the most beautiful part of it, a manifest imitation of this passage of the prophet:—

"Verily his salvation is nigh unto them that fear him, That glory may dwell in our land. Mercy and truth have met together; Righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth shall spring from the earth. And righteousness shall look down from heaven. Even JEHOVAH will give that which is good, And our land shall yield her produce. Righteousness shall go before him. And shall direct his footsteps in the way."

Psa. lxxxv. 10—14.

[See the Notes on these verses.]

These images of the dew and the rain descending from heaven, and making the earth fruitful, employed by the prophet, and some of those nearly of the same kind which are used by the Psalmist, may perhaps be primarily understood as designed to set forth in a splendid manner the happy state of God's people restored to their country, and flourishing in peace and plenty, in piety and virtue: but justice and salvation, mercy and truth, righteousness and peace, and glory dwelling in the land, cannot with any sort of propriety, in the one or the other, be interpreted as the consequences of that event; they must mean the blessings of the great redemption by Messiah.

[Let the earth open, &c.—Jonathan, in his Targum, refers this to the resurrection of the dead;—the earth shall be opened, ויפתח ארץ ויחיו המתים, and the dead shall revive. A plain proof that the ancient Jews believed in a future state, and acknowledged the resurrection of the dead.]

Let them bring forth salvation) (Let salvation produce her fruit) For וציפורה, the Septuagint, Vulgate, and Syriac, read וציפורה; and one MS. has a rasure close after the latter וצו, which probably was וצו, at first.

Verse 9. Woe unto him that striveth with his Maker— (Woe unto him that contendeth with the power that formed him) The prophet answers or prevents the objections and cavils of the unbelieving Jews, disposed to murmur against God, and to arraign the wisdom and justice of His dispensations in regard to them; in permitting them to be oppressed by their enemies, and in promising them deliverance instead of preventing their captivity. St. Paul has borrowed the image, and has applied it to the like purpose with equal force and elegance: "Nay, but, O man! who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, out of the same lump to make one vessel to honour, and another to dishonour?" Rom. ix. 20, 21. [This is spoken, says Kimchi, against the King of Babylon, who insulted the Most High, bringing forth the sacred vessels, drinking out of them, and magnifying himself against God.]

Or thy work, He hath no hands) (And to the workman, Thou hast no hands) The Syriac renders, as if he had read, ויך יתן סעל יתן וילא הויתו פעל yadeycs, neither am I the work of thy hands; the Septuagint, as if they had read, וילא הויתו פעל וילא פעלתו ויך יתן ידוים ילעא, neither hast thou made me; and thou hast no hands. But the fault seems to be in the transposition of the two pronouns: for ויך יתן upadlec, read ויך יתן upadlec; and for וילא, read וילא ילעא. So Houbigant corrects it; reading also ויך יתן upadlec; which last correction seems not altogether necessary. The Septuagint, in MSS, Pachom, and 1. D. u. have it thus.—καὶ τὸ ἀργύριον, οὐκ ἐποίησέν μοι, which favours the reading here proposed.

Verse 11. Ask me of things to come) (And he that formeth the things which are to come) I read וציפורה, without the וצו suffixed; from the Septuagint, who join it in construction with the following word, ἡ σωτηρία τοῦ σωτηροῦ.

(Do ye question me) "והשאלתי teshaluni, Chald. recte: præcedit ה תאז; et sic forte logarithmum reliquit Init." Secker.—[The Chaldee has more properly והשאלתי teshaluni, 22 *Look unto me, and be ye saved, * all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else.

23 *I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, That unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear.

24 *Surely, shall one say, In the LORD have I righteousness * and strength: even to him shall men come: and * all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed.

25 * In the LORD shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and * shall glory.

CHAPTER XLVI.

The idols of Babylon represented as so far from being able to bear the burden of their votaries, that they themselves are borne by beasts of burden into captivity, 1, 2. This beautifully contrasted with the tender care of God in bearing His people from first to last in His arms, and delivering them from their distresses, 3, 4. The Prophet then, with his usual force and elegance, goes on to stave the folly of idolatry, and the utter inability of idols, 5-7. From which he passes with great ease to the contemplation of the attributes and perfections of the true God, 8-10. Particularly that prudence which foretold the deliverance of the Jews from the Babylonian captivity, with all its leading circumstances; and also that very remote event of which it is the type in the days of the Messiah, 11-13.

OL. XVII. L. BEL boweth down, Nebo stoopeth, their idols were upon the beasts, and upon the cattle: your carriages were heavy loaden; * they are a burden to the weary beast.

together] For וַיָּבֹאוּ יוֹדֵי אוֹתָם, let them consult, the Septuagint read יוֹדֵי יְדֵי, let them know: but an ancient MS. has וַיָּבֹאוּ יוֹדֵי, let them come together by appointment; which may probably be the true reading.

[Verse 22. Look unto me, and be ye saved, &c.—This verse and the following contain a plain prediction of the universal spread of the knowledge of God through Christ, and so the Targum appears to have understood it, see Rom. xiv. 11; Phil. ii. 10. The reading of the Targum is remarkable, viz. לְמַעַן יִשְׁמְרוּ אֶת־פְּתוּחֵי לֵב־מַעַיְמֵרִי, look to my Word, & Aays, the Lord Jesus.

Verse 23. I have sworn by myself—בְּמַעַיְמֵרִי be-meymri, by my Word: and the word פִּתְגָּם pithgam, or saying, to distinguish it from the personal substantial Word meymra, mentioned before. See the Targum.]

The word is gone out of my mouth—(Truth is gone forth from my mouth; the word) So the Septuagint distinguish the members of the sentence; preserving the elegance of the construction, and the clearness of the sense.

Verse 24. Surely, shall one say, In the LORD have I righteousness and strength—(Saying, Only to JEHOVAH belongeth salvation and power) A MS. omits וְ לִי, unto me; and instead of וְ לִי אָמַר, he said, or shall say, unto me, the Septuagint read, in the copy which they used, לוֹמֵר lomer, saying. For וְ לִי יָבֹאוּ, he shall come, in the singular, twelve MSS. (three ancient,) read וְ לִי יָבֹאוּ, plural; and a letter is erased at the end of the word in two others: and so the Alexandrine copy of the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate read it. For מְרַבִּים tsidkoth, plural, two MSS. read מְרַבִּי tsidketh, singular; and so the Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee.

[Probably these are the words of Cyrus, who acknowledged that all his success came from Jehovah. And this sentiment is in effect contained in his decree or proclamation, Ezra i. 2. Thus saith Cyrus, king of Persia, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth, &c.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLVI.

Verse 1. Their carriages were heavy laden—(Their burdens are heavy) For נֶשְׂאוֹתָם neshatoteyem, your burdens, the Septuagint had in their copy נֶשְׂאוֹתָם neshatoteyhem, their burdens.

Verse 2. They could not deliver the burden—(They could not deliver their own charge) That is, their worshippers; who ought to have been borne by them. See the two next verses. The Chaldee and Syriac versions render it in effect to the same purpose, those that bear them, meaning their worshippers: but how they can render נֶשְׂאוֹתָם neshatoteyem in an active sense, I do not understand.

[For וְ לֹא־נֹת, וְ לֹא־נֹת, and they could not, is the reading of twenty-four of Kennicott's, sixteen of De Rossi's, and two of my own MSS. The added וְ נֹת, gives more elegance to the passage.]

But themselves—(Even they themselves) For נֶשְׂאוֹתָם neshatoteyem, an ancient MS. has נֶשְׂאוֹתָם ki naphsham, with more force.

Verse 3. Which are borne by me from the belly—(Ye that have been borne by me from the birth) The prophet very ingeniously, and with great force, contrasts the power

2 They stoop, they bow down together; they could not deliver the burden, * but * themselves are gone into captivity.

3 Harken unto me, O house of Jacob, and all the remnant of the house of Israel, * which are borne by me from the belly, which are carried from the womb:

4 And even to your old age * I am he; and even to hoar hairs * will I carry you: I have made, and I will bear; even I will carry, and will deliver you.

5 * To whom will ye liken me, and make me equal, and compare me, that we may be like?

6 * They lavish gold out of the bag, and weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith; and he maketh it a god: they fall down, yea, they worship.

7 * They bear him upon the shoulder, they carry him, and set him in his place, and he standeth; from his place shall he not remove: yea, * one shall cry unto him, yet can he not answer, nor save him out of his trouble.

8 Remember this, and shew yourselves men: * bring it again to mind, O ye transgressors.

of God, and His tender goodness effectually exerted towards his people, with the inability of the false gods of the heathen. He like an indulgent father had carried His people in His arms, "as a man carrieth his son," Deut. i. 31. He had protected them, and delivered them from their distresses: whereas the idols of the heathen are forced to be carried about themselves, and removed from place to place, with great labour and fatigue, by their worshippers; nor can they answer, or deliver their votaries, when they cry unto them.

Moses, expostulating with God on the weight of the charge laid upon him as a leader of His people, expresses that charge (under the same image of a parent's carrying his children) in very strong terms: "Have I conceived all this people? have I begotten them? that thou shouldst say unto me, Carry them in thy bosom, as a nursing father beareth the sucking child, unto the land which thou swarest unto their fathers." Numb. xi. 12.

Pindar has treated with a just and very elegant ridicule the work of the statuary even in comparison with his own poetry, from this circumstance of its being fixed to a certain station. "The friends of Pythias," says the Scholiast, "came to the poet, desiring him to write an ode on his victory. Pindar demanded three drachms (mina, I suppose it should be,) for the ode. No, say they, we can have a brazen statue for that money, which will be better than a poem. However, changing their minds afterwards, they came and offered him what he had demanded." This gave him the hint of the following ingenious exordium of his ode:—

Οὐκ ἀδριαντοῖσιν εἶπ' Ἄστ' εὐνοῦσσαντα μ' ἐργάζεσθαι ἀγάλματ' ἐν' ἀγορᾷ βασιδὸς Ἑλλάδος. Ἄλλ' ἐνὶ πασῶν Ὀλκᾶδος ἐν τ' ἀκατῶν, γλυκεῖ' αἰδέα, Στεῖχ' ἀτ' Αἰγίνας διαγγελοῦσ' ὅτι Λαρκωνὸς βίος Πυθίαις εὐροσθένης Νύκτ' Νεμεῖοις παγκρατίων στέφανον.

Thus elegantly translated by Mr. Francis in a note to Hor. Carm. iv. 2. 19.

"It is not mine with forming hand To bid a lifeless image stand For ever on its base; But fly, my verses, and proclaim To distant realms, with deathless fame, That Pythias conquer'd in the rapid race."

Jeremiah, chap. x. 3-5, seems to be indebted to Isaiah for most of the following passage:

"The practices of the people are altogether vanity: For they cut down a tree from the forest; The work of the artificer's hand with the axe: With silver and with gold it is adorned; With nails and with hammers it is fastened, that it may not totter. Like the palm-tree they stand stiff, and cannot speak; They are carried about, for they cannot go: Fear them not, for they cannot do harm; Neither is it in them to do good."

Verse 8. Shew yourselves men] וְנִשְׂאוֹתָם hithashkethu. This word is rather of doubtful derivation and signification. It occurs only in this place; and some of the ancient interpreters seem to have had something different in their 13 I bring near my righteousness ; it shall not be far off, and my salvation shall not tarry : and I will place salvation in Zion for Israel my glory.

CHAPTER XLVII.

The destruction of Babylon is denounced by a beautiful selection of circumstances, in which the city is contrasted with her deplorable condition, as represented as a tender and delicate female reduced to the work and abject condition of a slave, and bereaved of every consolation, &c. And that on account of her cruelty, (particularly to God's people,) her pride, voluptuousness, sorceries, and incantations, &c. It is worthy of observation that almost all the imagery of this Chapter is applied in the book of the Revelation (in nearly the same words) to the antitype of the illustrious capital of the Chaldean empire, viz. Babylon the Great.

OL. XVII. 1. C O M E down, and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon ; sit on the ground : there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans : for thou shalt no more be called tender and delicate.

2 Take the millstones, and grind meal : uncover thy locks, make bare the leg, uncover the thigh, pass over the rivers.

3 Thy nakedness shall be uncovered, yea, thy shame shall be seen : I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man.

4 As for our Redeemer, the LORD of hosts is his name, the Holy One of Israel.

5 Sit thou silent, and get thee into darkness, O daughter of the Chaldeans : for thou shalt no more be called, The lady of kingdoms.

6 I was wroth with my people, I have polluted mine inheritance, and given them into thine hand : thou didst shew them no mercy : upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke.

7 And thou saidst, I shall be a lady for ever : so that thou didst not lay these things to thy heart, neither didst remember the latter end of it.

8 Therefore hear now this, thou that art given to pleasures, that dwellest carelessly, that sayest in thine heart, I am, and none else beside me ; I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children.

9 But these two things shall come to thee in a moment in one day, the loss of children and widowhood : they shall come upon thee in their perfection for the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments.

10 For thou hast trusted in thy wickedness : thou hast said, None seeth me. Thy wisdom and thy knowledge, it hath perverted thee ; and thou hast said in thine heart, I am, and none else beside me.

11 I will not meet thee as a man—(Neither will I suffer man to intercede with me) [The verb should be pointed, or written, אפגיא aphgia, in Hiphil.]

Verse 4. Our Redeemer—(Our Avenger) Here a chorus breaks in upon the midst of the subject; with a change of construction, as well as sentiment, from the longer to the shorter kind of verse, for one distich only : after which the former subject and style are resumed. See Note on chap. xiv. 16.

Verse 6. I was wroth with my people God, in the course of His providence, makes use of great conquerors and tyrants, as His instruments to execute His judgments in the earth : He employs one wicked nation to scourge another. The inflicter of the punishment may perhaps be as culpable as the sufferer ; and may add to his guilt by indulging his cruelty in executing God's justice. When he has fulfilled the work to which the Divine vengeance has ordained him, he will become himself the object of it. See chap. x. 5—12. God charges the Babylonians, though employed by Himself to chastise His people, with cruelty in regard to them. They exceeded the bounds of justice and humanity in oppressing and destroying them ; and though they were really executing the righteous decree of God, yet, as far as it regarded themselves, they were only indulging their own ambition and violence. The prophet Zechariah sets this matter in the same light : "I was but a little angry, and they helped forward the affliction." Chap. i. 15.

Verse 7. So that thou didst not—(Because thou didst not) For אד, read by א; so two MSS. and one Edition. And for אחריתא acharithah, "the latter end of it," read אחריתא acharithca, "thy latter end;" so thirteen MSS. and two Editions, and Vulgate. [Both the sixth and seventh verses are wanting in one of my oldest MSS.]

[Verse 9. These two things shall come to thee in a moment—That is, suddenly. Belshazzar was slain : thus the city became metaphorically a widow, the husband, the governor of it, being slain. In the time in which the king was slain, the Medes and Persians took the city, and slew many of its inhabitants, see Dan. v. 30, 31. When Darius took the city, he is said to have crucified three thousand of its principal inhabitants.]

In their perfection—(On a sudden) Instead of בתמם betummam, in their perfection, as our Translation renders it, the Septuagint and Syriac read in the copies, from which they translated, פתום pitom, suddenly ; parallel to פת rega, in a moment, in the preceding alternate member of the sentence. The concurrent testimony of the Septuagint and Syriac, favoured by the context, may be safely opposed to the authority of the present Text.

copies. The Vulgate read היתבשהו hitbosheshu, take shame to yourselves ; the Syriac read היתבשהו hitboshenu, consider with yourselves ; the Septuagint, στυφαίρε ; perhaps στυφαίρα hitbaleu, groan, or mourn, within yourselves. [Several MSS. read היתבשהו hitbosheshu, but without any help to the sense.]

Verse 11. Calling a ravenous bird from the east—(Calling from the east the eagle) A very proper emblem for Cyrus, as in other respects, so particularly because the ensign of Cyrus was a golden eagle, ΑΕΤΟΣ χρυσεόν, the very word used here, which the prophet uses here, expressed as near as may be in Greek letters. ΧΕΝΟΡΑ, Cyrop. lib. vii. eub inii. [Kimchi says his father understood this not of Cyrus, but of the Messiah.]

From a far country—(From a land far distant) Two MSS. add the conjunction ו שאו, ו שאו umaretsi ; and so the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate.

[Verse 12. Hearken unto me, ye stout-hearted—This is an address to the Babylonians, stubbornly bent on the practice of injustice towards the Israelites.]

Verse 2. Take the millstones, and grind meal—(Take the mill, and grind the corn) It was the work of slaves to grind the corn. They used hand-mills : water-mills were not invented till a little before the time of Augustus ; (see the Greek epigram of Antipater, which seems to celebrate it as a new invention, Anthol. Cephalæ, 653,) wind-mills long after. It was not only the work of slaves, but the hardest work ; and often inflicted upon them as a severe punishment.

To grind in the mill—to be scourged—to be put in the stocks—were punishments for slaves. Hence a delinquent was said to be a man worthy of the mill. The treadmill now in use in England, is a revival of this ancient usage. But in the East grinding was the work of the female slaves. See Exod. xi. 5. xii. 29, (in the version of the Septuagint) Matt. xxiv. 41. Homer, Odys. xx. 105—108. And it is the same to this day. "Women alone are employed to grind their corn." Shaw's Algiers and Tunis, p. 297. "They are the female slaves, that are generally employed in the East at those hand-mills [for grinding corn] ; it is extremely laborious, and esteemed the lowest employment in the house." Sir J. how would my name be blasphemed) The word 'shemi, my name, is dropped out of the Text: it is supplied by a MS. which has 'shemi; and by the Septuagint, 'ὅτι το σπον ονομα βεβλησονται. The Syriac and Vulgate get over the difficulty, by making the verb in the first person; that I may not be blasphemed.

Verse 12. O Jacob—(O Jacob, my servant) After יַעֲקֹב yacob, a MS. [of Kennicott, two of De Rossi,] and the two old Editions of 1486 and 1488, add the word עַבְדִּי 'abdi, my servant, which is lost out of the present Text: and there is a rasure in its place in another ancient MS. The Jerusalem Talmud has the same word.

I also am the last—(I am the last) For אֲנִי אֲחֵרִי aph ani, even I, two ancient MSS., and the ancient Versions, read, 'ami ve-ani, and I; more properly.

Verse 14. Which among them hath declared these things—(Who among you hath predicted these things) For בְּמִי בִּהְיוֹת, "among them," twenty-one MSS. (nine ancient) and two Editions, (one of them that of the year 1488,) [fourteen of De Rossi's, and one ancient of my own,] have בְּבִי bacem, "among you;" and so the Syriac.

The Lord hath loved him: he will do his pleasure on Babylon—(He whom יהונוח had loved, will execute his will on Babylon) That is, Cyrus; so Symmachus has well rendered it; 'Ὁν ὁ Κύριος ἠγάπησεν, ποιήσει το θελημα αυτου, ["He whom the Lord hath loved will perform his will."]

On the Chaldeans The proposition is lost; it is supplied in the Edition of 1488, which has כַּסְיָדִים be-casadim, and so the Chaldee and Vulgate.

Verse 16. Come ye near unto me) After the word קִרְבִּי kerebu, draw near, a MS. adds גֵּוִיִּם goyim, O ye nations; which, as this and the two preceding verses are plainly addressed to the idolatrous nations, reproaching their gods, as unable to predict future events, is probably genuine.

Hear ye this—(And hear ye this) A MS. adds the conjunction וְשִׁמְעוּ va-shamdu; and so the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate.

I have not spoken in secret) The Alexandrine copy of the Septuagint adds here, οὐκ ἐν τοσπ γης εκρυπτο, nor in a dark place of the earth, as in chap. xlv. 19. That it stands rightly, or at least stood very early, in this place of the Version of the Septuagint, is highly probable; because it is acknowledged by the Arabic Version, and by the Coptic MS. St. Germain de Prez, Paris, translated likewise from the Septuagint. But whether it should be inserted, as of right belonging to the Hebrew Text, may be doubted; for a transcriber of the Greek Version might easily add it by memory from the parallel place; and it is not necessary to the sense.

From the time that it was—(Before the time when it began to exist) An ancient MS. has אֲרִיבֵי hayotham, "they began to exist;" and so another had it at first. [From the time that the expedition of Cyrus was planned, there was God managing the whole by the economy of his providence.]

Verse 16. There am I—(I had decreed it) I take av sham, for a verb, not an adverb.

And now the Lord God, and His Spirit, hath sent me—(And now the Lord יהונוח hath sent me, and His Spirit) 'Tis said ב עו תו הלאו לטון; Και νου Κυριου απεστειλε με και το Πνευμα αυτου εν ω, ἀρρηθλον ουτος του ρητου, ποτερον ὁ Πατηρ και το 'Αγιον Πνευμα απεστειλαν τον Ιησου, η ὁ Πατηρ αποστειλαν τον Χριστον και το 'Αγιον Πνευμα' το δευτερον εστιν αληθες. "Who is it, that saith in Isaiah, And now the Lord hath sent me and His Spirit? in which, as the expression is ambiguous, is it the Father and the Holy Spirit who have sent Jesus; or the Father, who hath sent both Christ and the Holy Spirit? The latter is the true interpretation." Origen cont. Cels. lib. i. I have kept to the order of the words of the Original, on purpose that the ambiguity, which Origen remarks in the Version of the Septuagint, and which is the same in the Hebrew, might still remain; and the sense, which he gives to it, be offered to the Reader's judgment; which is wholly excluded in our vulgar Translation.

Verse 18. As a river—(Like the river) That is, the Euphrates.

Verse 19. Like the gravel thereof—(Like that of the bowels thereof) אֲרִיבֵי אֲרִיבֵי מִי מִי אֲרִיבֵי beletsai mli chayam nehah hadagim. "As the issue of the bowels of the sea; that is, the fishes." Salom. ben Meloc. And so likewise Aben Ezra, Jarchi, Kimchi, &c.

His name—(Thy name) For שְׁמוֹ shemo, "his name," the Septuagint had in the copy from which they translated שְׁמֵמָה shemema, "thy name."

Verse 20. Tell this—(Make it heard) Twenty-seven MSS. [of Kennicott, (ten ancient,) many of De Rossi's, and two ancient, of my own, with the Septuagint, Syriac, Chaldee, and Arabic,] and one Edition, prefix to the verb the conjunction וְשִׁמְעוּ va-shamdu.

Verse 21. They thirsted not—through the deserts) Kimchi has a surprising observation upon this place:—"If the prophecy," says he, "relates to the return from the Babylonish captivity, as it seems to do, it is to be wondered, how it comes to pass, that in the Book of Ezra, in which he gives an account of their return, no mention is made, that such miracles were wrought for them; as, for instance, that God clave the rock for them in the desert." It is really much to be wondered, that one of the most learned and judicious of the Jewish expositors of the Old Testament, having advanced so far in a large Comment on Isaiah, should appear to be totally ignorant of the Prophet's manner of writing; of the parabolic style, which prevails in the writings of all the prophets, and more particularly in the prophecy of Isaiah; which abounds throughout in parabolical images from the beginning to the end; from "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth," to "the worm and the fire" in the last verse. And how came he to keep his wonderment to himself so long? Why did he not expect, that the historian should have related, how, as they passed through the desert, cedars, pines, and olive-trees shot up at once on the side of the way to shade them; and that instead of briars and brambles the acacia and the myrtle sprung up under their feet, according to God's promises, chap. xli. 19, and lv. 13? These and a multitude of the like parabolical or poetical images, were never intended to be understood literally. All that the prophet designed in this place, and which he has executed in the most elegant manner, was an amplification and illustration of the gracious care and protection of God, vouchsafed to His people in their return from Babylon, by an allusion to the miraculous Exodus from Egypt. See De S. Poesi, Hebr. Prml. ix.

CHAPTER XLIX.

In this Chapter the Messiah is introduced, declaring the full extent of His commission, which is not only to be Saviour to the Jews, but also to the Gentiles. The power and efficacy of His word is represented by apt images; the ill success of His ministry among the Jews is hinted, and the great success of the gospel among the Gentiles, 1-12. But the prophet, casting then his eye on the happy, though distant, period of Israel's restoration, makes a beautiful apostrophe to the whole creation to do for the praise of God on the prospect of His remarkable favour, 13. The tender mercies of God to His people, with the prosperity of the church in general, and the final overthrow of all its enemies, make the subject of the remaining verses, 14-49.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLIX.

Verse 1. Listen, O isles, unto me—(Hearken unto me, O ye distant lands) Hitherto the subject of the prophecy has been chiefly confined to the redemption from the captivity of Babylon; with strong intimations of a more important deliverance sometimes thrown in; to the refutation of idolatry; and the demonstration of the infinite power, wisdom, and foreknowledge of God. The character and office of the Messiah was exhibited in general terms at the beginning of chap. xlii: but here He is introduced in Person, declaring the full extent of His commission; which is not only to restore the Israelites, and reconcile them to their Lord and Father, from whom they had so often revolted; but to be a light to lighten the Gentiles, to call them to the knowledge and obedience of the true God, and to bring them to be one church together with the Israelites, and to partake with them of the same common salvation procured for all by the great Redeemer and Reconciler of man to God.

Verse 2. And he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword—(And he hath made my mouth a sharp sword) The servant of God, who speaks in the former part of this Chapter, must be the Messiah. If any part of this character can, in any sense, belong to the prophet; yet in some parts it must belong exclusively to Christ; and in all parts, to him in a much fuller and more proper sense. Isaiah's mission was to the Jews; not to the distant nations, to whom the speaker in this place addresses himself. "He hath made my mouth a sharp sword;" "to reprove the wicked and to denounce unto them punishment," says Jarchi, understanding it of Isaiah. But how much better does it suit Him, who is represented as having "a sharp two-edged sword going out of his mouth." Rev. i. 16, who is Himself the Word of God; which "Word is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and a Discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Heb. iv. 12. This mighty Agent and Instrument of God, "long laid up in store with Him and sealed up among His treasures," is at last revealed and produced by His power, and under his protection, to execute His great and holy purposes. He is compared to a polished shaft stored in His quiver for use in His due time. The polished shaft denotes the same efficacious Word, which is before represented by the sharp sword. The doctrine of the gospel pierced the hearts of its hearers, "bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." The metaphor of the sword and the arrow, applied to powerful speech, is bold, yet just. It has been employed by the most ingenious Heathen writers, if with equal elegance, not with equal force. It is said of Pericles by Aristophanes, (see Cicero Epist. ad Atticum, xii. 6.)

Ουτως εφησι, και ημεν τωι κρηττονωι
Το κερρον εγκυκαλειται τωις ακροατοισι.

7 Thus saith the LORD, the Redeemer of Israel, and his Holy One, "to "him whom man despiseth, to him whom the nation abhorreth, to a servant of rulers, " kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship, because of the LORD that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel, and he shall choose thee.

Pindar is particularly fond of this metaphor, and frequently applies it to his own poetry:

νως ευκαλες οιστρος

Went.

See also ver. 149, of the same ode, and Olymp. ix. 17, on the former of which places the Scholiast says, ρητικος; & λογος; βελη δε τωις λογωσι ειναι, δια το οζν και κρινον τωι εγκωμιοιων. "He calls his verses shafts, by a metaphor, signifying the acuteness and the apposite application of his panegyric."

This person who is, ver. 3, called Israel, cannot in any sense be Isaiah. That name, in its original design and full import, can only belong to Him, who contended powerfully with God in behalf of mankind, and prevailed, Gen. xxxii. 28. [After all that Vitringa, Bp. Lowth, and others, have said in proof of this Chapter speaking of the Messiah, and of Him alone; I have my doubts whether sometimes Isaiah, sometimes Cyrus, and sometimes the Messiah, be not intended; the former shadowing out the latter; of whom, in certain respects, they may be considered the types. The literal sense should be sought out first; this is of the utmost importance both in reading and interpreting the oracles of God.]

Verse 5. And now, saith the LORD—(And now thus saith Jehovah) The word נב צח, before נבמ אמר, is dropped out of the text: it is supplied by eight MSS. (two ancient,) [of Dr. Kennicott, two of De Rossi] and the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate.

Though Israel be not gathered—(And that Israel unto him might be gathered) Five MSS. (two ancient,) confirm the Keri, or marginal correction of the Masoretes, וְ לֹ, unto him, instead of וְ לֹ, not, in the text; and so read Aquila; and the Chaldee, Septuagint, and Arabic omit the negative. But the Septuagint, MSS. Pachom, and i. D. ii. express also the Keri וְ לֹ, by κρος αυτου, to him.

Verse 6. And to restore the preserved of Israel—(And to restore the branches of Israel) נשתי נשתי; or נשתי נשתי, as the Masoretes correct it in the marginal reading. This word has been matter of great doubt with interpreters: the Syriac renders it the branch, taking it for the same with נשתי nether, chap. xi. 1. See Michaelis Epim. in Prælect. xix.

Verse 7. The Redeemer of Israel, and his Holy One—(The Redeemer of Israel, His Holy One) "Perhaps we should read לקדשו lekadosho," SECKER: that is, to His Holy One. The preceding word ends with a 5 lamed, which might occasion that letter's being lost here. The Talmud of Babylon has וקדשו vekadosho, and His Holy One.

To him whom man despiseth—(To him whose person is despised) "Perhaps we should read נבזי nebazeh," SECKER; or נבזי bezoi, Le Clerc; that is, instead of the active, the passive form, which seems here to be required.

9 That thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Shew yourselves. They shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places.

10 They shall not hunger nor thirst; neither shall the heat nor sun smite them: for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them.

11 And I will make all my mountains a way, and my highways shall be exalted.

12 Behold, these shall come from far: and lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim.

13 Sing, O heavens; and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains: for the Lord hath comforted his people, and will have mercy upon his afflicted.

14 For Zion said, The Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me.

15 Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee.

16 Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me.

17 Thy children shall make haste; thy destroyers and they that made thee waste shall go forth of thee.

18 Lift up thine eyes round about, and behold: all these gather themselves together, and come to thee. As I live, saith the Lord, thou shalt surely clothe thee with them all, as with an ornament, and bind them on thee, as a bride doeth.

19 For thy waste and thy desolate places, and the land of thy destruction, shall even now be too narrow by reason of the inhabitants, and they that swallowed thee up shall be far away.

20 The children which thou shalt have, after thou hast lost the other, shall say again in thine ears, The place is too strait for me: give place to me that I may dwell.

21 Then shalt thou say in thine heart, Who hath begotten me these, seeing I have lost my children, and am desolate, a captive, and removing to and fro? and who hath brought up these? Behold, I was left alone; these, where had they been?

22 Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the people: and they shall bring thy sons in their arms, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders.

Verse 9. To them that are in darkness—(And to those that are in darkness) Fifteen MSS. (five ancient) [of Dr. Kennicott's, eleven of De Rossi, and one ancient of my own], and the two old editions of 1486 and 1483, and three others, add the conjunction וְ, at the beginning of this member. Another MS. had it so at first; and two others have a rasure at the place: and it is expressed by the Septuagint, Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate.

Verse 12. Behold, these shall come from afar] "Babylon was far, and east, מִמְצָרִים mitzerach; (non sic Vell.) Sinim, Pelusians, to the south." SECKER.

The land of Sinim] Prof. Doederlein thought of Syene, the southern limit of Egypt: but does not abide by it. Michaelis thinks it is right; and promises to give his reasons for so thinking in the second part of his Spicilegium Geographis Hebræorum Extersa. See Biblioth. Oriental. Part xi. p. 176.

וְסִין signifies a bush, and סִימִים sinim bushes, woods, &c. Probably this means that the land where several of the lost Jews dwell is a woodland. The ten tribes are gone, no one knows whither. On the slave coast in Africa, some Jewish rites appear among the people; and all the males are circumcised. The whole of this land, as it appears from the coast, may be emphatically called סִימִים אֶרֶץ אֲרֵצֵי סִינִימִים, the land of bushes, as it is all covered with woods, as far as the eye can reach. Many of the Indians in North America, which is also a woodland, have a great profusion of rites, apparently in their basis Jewish. Is it not possible that the descendants of the ten lost tribes are among those in America, or among those in Africa, whom European nations think they have a right to enslave? It is of those lost tribes that the twenty-first verse speaks: "And these, where had they been?"

Verse 13. Break forth into singing, O mountains—(Ye mountains, burst forth into song) Three ancient MSS. are without either the וְ, or the conjunction וְ, before the verb: and so the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate.

[Verse 14. The Lord (Jehovah, יהוה) hath forsaken me, and my Lord (Adonai, אֲדֹנָי), hath forgotten me—But a multitude of MSS. and several ancient editions read יהוה יהוה, in both places.]

Verse 16. Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands—(Behold, on the palms of my hands have I delineated thee) This is certainly an illusion to some practice, common among the Jews at that time, of making marks on their hands or arms by punctures on the skin, with some sort of sign or representation of the city or temple, to shew their affection and zeal for it. They had a method of making such punctures indelible by fire, or by staining. See note on chap. xlv. 5. It is well known, that the pilgrims at the holy sepulchre get themselves marked in this manner with what are called the ensigns of Jerusalem. Maundrell, p. 75, where he tells us how it is performed: and this art is practised by travelling Jews all over the world at this day.

Verse 17. Thy children shall make haste—(They, that destroyed thee, shall soon become thy builders) "Auctor Vulgate pro בניך banaic, videtur legisse בניך bonaic, unde vertit, structores tui; cui et Septuaginta fere consentiunt, qui veterunt בניך banaic, edificata es, prout in Plantinianâ editione habetur; in Vaticanâ sive Romanâ legitur, οικοδομησθησ, edificaberis. [The author of the Vulgate appears to have read בניך bonaic, for בניך banaic, as he translates it by structores tui, "thy builders." The Septuagint is almost the same with the Vulgate, having οικοδομησθησ, art built, as in the Plantina edition; but the Vatican or Roman copy reads οικοδομησθησ, thou shalt be built. To these readings the Targum of Jonathan has some sort of correspondence, translating et edificabunt, "and they shall build." See chap. liv. 13; on which place the Rabbins also remark, in the Talmudic tract Berachot, c. 9. that we should not read בניך banaic, thy sons; but בניך bonaic, thy builders. See the note in Prec. Jud. Part ii. p. 226, and also D. Wagenseil Sol. p. 253, n. 9.] Breithaupt, not. ad Jarchi in loc. See also note on this place in De Sac. Poet. Hebr. Praelect. xxxi. [Instead of בניך boneic, or בניך banaic, thy builders, several MSS. read בניך beneica, thy sons. So also the Syriac: see the above Note.]

Shall go forth of thee—(Shall become thine offspring) וְיָצְאוּ מִמֶּנּוּ מִמֶּנּוּ מִמֶּנּוּ, shall proceed, spring, issue, from thee; as thy children. The phrase is frequently used in this sense; see chap. xi. 1; Micah v. 2; Nahum i. 11. The accession of the Gentiles to the church of God is considered as an addition made to the number of the family and children of Zion: see ver. 21, 22, and chap. lx. 4. The common rendering, "shall go forth of thee, or depart from thee," is very flat, after their zeal had been expressed by "shall become thy builders;" and as the opposition is kept up in one part of the sentence, one has reason to expect it in the other, which should be parallel to it.

Verse 18. Bind them on thee as a bride doeth—(Bind them about thee, as a bride her jewels) The end of the sentence is manifestly imperfect. Does a bride bind her children, or her new subjects, about her? Zion clothes herself with her children, as a bride clothes herself—with what? some other thing certainly. The Septuagint help us out in this difficulty, and supply the lost word: ὡς σκεπασσεν ἑαυτὴν ὡς νύμφη, as a bride her ornaments. כְּבִלְיָהּ כְּבִלְיָהּ כְּבִלְיָהּ, or כְּבִלְיָהּ כְּבִלְיָהּ כְּבִלְיָהּ hekiliah hekeleyah. The great similitude of the two words has occasioned the omission of one of them. See ch. lxi. 10.

Verse 21. These, where had they been—(These then, where were they) The conjunction is added before אֵלֶּה, that is אֵלֶּה וְ-elleh, in thirty-two MSS. (nine ancient) [of Kennicott's, and fifty-four of De Rossi's] and so the Septuagint, Chaldee, and Vulgate. See on ver. 12.

[Verse 22. Thus saith the Lord God—יהוה אֲדֹנָי adonai yehovah. Adonai is wanting in one MS. in the Alexandrine copy of the Septuagint, and in the Arabic.]

23 And kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and their queens thy nursing mothers: they shall bow down to thee with their face toward the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet; and thou shalt know that I am the LORD: for they shall not be ashamed that wait for me.

24 Shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or the lawful captive delivered?

25 But thus saith the LORD, Even the captives of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered: for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will save thy children.

26 And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; and they shall be drunken with their own blood, as with sweet wine: and all flesh shall know that I the LORD am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob.

CHAPTER L.

In this Chapter God vindicates His dealings with His people, whose alienation is owing to themselves, I. And, by allusions to the temporal deliverance connected with the drying up of the Red Sea and the Egyptians, asserts His power to save, 2, 3; namely, by the obedience and sufferings of Messiah, 4-6; who was at length to prove victorious over all His enemies, 7-8. The two last verses allude to faith and trust in God in the most disadvantageous circumstances; with a denunciation of vengeance on those who should trust to their own devices, 10, 11.

Verse 23. With their face toward the earth]—(With their faces to the earth) It is well known, that expressions of submission, homage, and reverence, always have been, and are still, carried to a great degree of extravagance in the eastern countries. When Joseph's brethren were introduced to him, "they bowed down themselves before him with their faces to the earth," Gen. xlii. 6. The kings of Persia never admitted any one to their presence without exacting this act of adoration; for that was the proper term for it. Necessae est, says the Persian courier to Conon, si in conspectum veneris, venerari te regem; quod proceribus illi vocant. ["It is necessary, if thou shouldst come into sight, to venerate thee as king; which they call worshipping."] Nepos in Conone. Alexander intoxicated with success, affected this piece of oriental pride: Rapue moro Persarum Macedonas venerabundos ipse salutaris, prosternentes humi corpora.—"The Macedonians, after the manner of the Persians, saluted the monarch with the ceremony of prostration." Cuvrus, lib. viii. The insolence of eastern monarchs to conquered princes, and the submission of the latter, is astonishing. Mr. Harmer, Observ. ii. 43, gives the following instance of it from D'Herbelot: "This prince threw himself one day on the ground, and kissed the prints that his victorious enemy's horse had made there; reciting some verses in Persian, which he had composed, to this effect:—

'The mark that the foot of your horse has left upon the dust, serves me now for a crown.

'The ring which I wear as the badge of my slavery, is become my richest ornament.

'While I shall have the happiness to kiss the dust of your feet, I shall think that fortune favours me with its tenderest caresses, and its sweetest kisses.'

These expressions therefore of the prophet are only general poetical images, taken from the manners of the country, to denote great respect and reverence: and such splendid poetical images, which frequently occur in the poetical writings, were intended only as general amplifications of the subject, not as predictions to be understood and fulfilled precisely according to the letter. [For the different kinds of adoration in the East, see the Note on chap. xiv. 17.]

Verse 24. Shall the prey be taken from the mighty—(Shall the prey seized by the terrible be rescued) For פּרַי טַדִּיק, read פּרַי אִרִּיס. A palpable mistake, like that in chap. xlii. 19. The correction is self-evident from the very terms of the sentence; from the necessity of the strict correspondence in the expressions between the question and the answer made to it;—and it is apparent to the blindest and most prejudiced eye. However, if authority is also necessary, there is that of the Syriac and Vulgate for it; who plainly read פּרַי אִרִּיס, in ver. 24, as well as in ver. 25, rendering it in the former place by the same word as in the latter.

[These two last verses contain a glorious promise of deliverance to the persecuted church of Christ from the terrible one, Satan, and all his representatives and vicegerents,—persecuting antichristian rulers. They shall at last cease from destroying the church of God, and destroy one another.]

ment, whom I have put away? or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgressions is your mother put away.

2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? when I called, was there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea, I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst.

3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

4 The Lord God hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary: he wakeneth morning by morning, he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned.

5 The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back.

6 I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting.

NOTES ON CHAPTER L.

[Verse 1. Thus saith the LORD—This Chapter has been understood of the prophet himself: but it certainly speaks more clearly about Jesus of Nazareth than of Isaiah, the son of Amoz.]

Where is the bill—(Where is this bill) Husbands, through moroseness or levity of temper, often sent bills of divorce to their wives on slight occasions, as they were permitted to do by the law of Moses, Deut. xxiv. 1. And fathers, being oppressed with debt, often sold their children, which they might do, for a time, till the year of release, xxi. 7. That this was frequently practised appears from many passages of Scripture; and that the persons and the liberty of the children were answerable for the debts of the father. The widow, 2 Kings iv. 1, complains, "that the creditor is come to take unto him her two sons to be bondmen." And in the parable, Matt. xviii. 25, "the lord, forasmuch as his servant had not to pay, commands him to be sold, and his wife and children, and all that he had, and payment to be made." Sir John Chardin's MS. note on this place of Isaiah is as follows:—En Orient on paye ses dettes avec ses esclaves, car ils sont des principaux meubles; et en plusieurs lieux on le paye aussi de ses enfans. ["In the East they pay their debts by giving up their slaves, for these are their chief property of a disposable kind; and in many places they give their children to their creditors."] But this, saith God, cannot be my case: I am not governed by any such motives; neither am I urged by any such necessity. Your captivity therefore and your afflictions are to be imputed to yourselves, and to your own folly and wickedness.

Verse 2. Their fish stinketh—(Their fish is dried up) For תִּבְשָׁו תִּבְשָׁו, stinketh, read תִּבְשָׁו תִּבְשָׁו, is dried up: so it stands in the Bodl. MS.; and it is confirmed by the Septuagint, ἠρσάνθησαν, they shall be dried up.

Verse 5. Neither turned away back—(Neither did I withdraw myself backward) Eleven MSS. and the oldest Edition prefix the conjunction vau; and so also the Septuagint and Syriac.

Verse 6. And my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair] The greatest indignity that could possibly be offered. See the Note on chap. vii. 20.

I hid not my face from shame and spitting.] Another instance of the utmost contempt and detestation. It was ordered by the law of Moses as a severe punishment, carrying with it a lasting disgrace, Deut. xxv. 9. Among the Medes it was highly offensive to spit in any one's presence, Her. i. 99; and so likewise among the Persians, Xen. Cyr. Lib. i. p. 18.

"They abhor me; they see far from me; They forbear not to spit in my face." Job xlii. 10.

"And JERONAM said unto Moses, If her father had but spit in her face, should she not be ashamed seven days?" Numb. xii. 14. On which place Sir John Chardin remarks, that "spitting before any one, or spitting upon the ground in speaking of any one's actions, is through the East an expression of extreme detestation." Harmer's Observ. ii. 509. See also, of the same notions of the Arabs in this respect, Niebuhr, Description de l'Arabie, p. 26. It so evidently appears, that in those countries spitting 7 For the Lord God will help me; therefore shall I not be confounded: therefore have I set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed.

8 He is near that justifieth me; who will contend with me? let us stand together: who is mine adversary? let him come near to me.

9 Behold, the Lord God will help me; who is he that shall condemn me? lo, they all shall wax old as a garment; the moth shall eat them up.

10 Who is among you that feareth the LORD, that obeyeth the voice of his servant, that walketh in darkness, and hath no light? let him trust in the name of the LORD, and stay upon his God.

11 Behold, all ye that kindle a fire, that compass yourselves about with sparks; walk in the light of your fire, and in the sparks that ye have kindled. This shall ye have of mine hand; ye shall lie down in sorrow.

has ever been an expression of the utmost detestation, that the learned doubt, whether in the passages of Scripture above quoted any thing more is meant than spitting (not in the face, which perhaps the words do not necessarily imply,) but only in the presence of the person affronted. But in this place it certainly means spitting in the face: so it is understood in St. Luke, where our Lord plainly refers to this prophecy:—"All things that are written by the prophets concerning the Son of Man shall be accomplished; for He shall be delivered to the Gentiles, and shall be mocked and spitefully entreated, and spitted on, εμπροσθονερα;" xviii. 31, 32, which was in fact fulfilled; και ηρξατο ρινην εμπροσθονερα, and some began to spit on him, Mark xiv. 65; xv. 19. If spitting in a person's presence was such an indignity,—how much more spitting in his face?

Verse 7. Therefore have I set my face like a flint] The prophet Ezekiel (chap. iii. 8, 9), has expressed this with great force, in his bold and vehement manner:—

"Behold, I have made thy face strong against their faces, And thy forehead strong against their foreheads; As an adamant harder than a rock, have I made thy forehead; Fear them not, neither be dismayed at their looks, Though they be a rebellious house."

Verse 8. Who will contend with me] The Bodleian MS. and another add the word מי חו mi hu yarib, as in the like phrase in the next verse: and in the very same phrase, Job xiii. 19, and so likewise in many other places, Job xvii. 3, xli. 1. Sometimes, on the like occasions, it is מי מי zeh, and מי מי mi hu zeh, Who is this one? The word has been probably lost out of the present text, and the reading of the MSS. above mentioned seems to be genuine.

[Verse 10. Who is among you that feareth the LORD—I believe this passage has been generally, if not dangerously, misunderstood. It has been quoted, and preached upon, to prove that "a man might conscientiously fear God, and be obedient to the words of the Law and the Prophets; obey the voice of His servant,—of Jesus Christ Himself,—that is, be sincerely and regularly obedient to the moral law and the commands of our blessed Lord,—and yet walk in darkness and have no light,—no sense of God's approbation,—and no evidence of the safety of his state." This is utterly impossible; for Jesus hath said, He that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life. If there be some religious persons who, under the influence of morbid melancholy, are continually writing bitter things against themselves, the word of God should not be bent down to their state. There are other modes of spiritual and scriptural comfort.—But does not the Text speak of such a case? And are not the words precise in reference to it? I think not: and Bishop Lowth's translation has set the whole in the clearest light,—though he does not appear to have been apprehensive that the bad use I mention had been made of the Text as it stands in our common Version. The Text contains two questions,—to each of which a particular answer is given;—

Q. 1. "Who is there among you that feareth JEHOVAH? Ans. Let him hearken unto the voice of his servant.

Q. 2. Who that walketh in darkness and hath no light? Ans. Let him trust in the name of JEHOVAH; And lean himself (prop himself) upon his God."

Now, a man awakened to a sense of his sin and misery, may have a dread of JEHOVAH, and tremble at his word: and what should such a person do? Why, he should hear what God's Servant saith,—Come unto me, all ye who labour and are heavy laden; and I will give you rest.

CHAPTER LI.

The prophet exhorts the children of Abraham to trust in the Lord; and briefly, but beautifully, describes the great blessedness which should be the consequence, 1.—3. Then, turning to the Gentiles, encourages them to look for a portion in the same salvation, 4.—5; the everlasting duration of which is more fully described, 6. And as it is everlasting, so it is to the righteous, notwithstanding all the machinations of their enemies, 7, 8. The faithful, then, with exultation and joy, lift their voices, reminding (not of His wondrous works of old, which encourage them to look now for the like glorious accomplishment of these promises, 9.—11. In answer to this the Divinity is introduced comforting them under their trials, and telling them that the Deliverer was already on His way to save and to establish them, 12.—16. On this the Prophet turns to Jerusalem to comfort and congratulate her on so joyful a prospect. She is represented, by a bold image, as a person lying on the streets, under the intoxicating effects of the cup of the Divine wrath, without a single person from among her own people appointed to give her consolation, and trodden under the feet of her enemies; but, in the time allotted by the Divine Providence, the cup of trembling shall be taken out of her hand, and put into that of her oppressors; and she shall drink it no more again for ever, 17.—22.

HEarken to me, ye that follow the LORD: look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged,

2 Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bare you: for I called him alone, and blessed him, and increased him.

3 For the LORD shall comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the gar-

There may be a sincere penitent, walking in darkness, having no light of salvation,—for this is the case of all when they first begin to turn to God. What should such do? They should trust, believe on the Lord Jesus who died for them; and lean upon His all-sufficient merits for the light of salvation which God has promised. Thus acting, they will soon have a sure trust and confidence that God for Christ's sake has forgiven them their sin; and thus they shall have the light of life.]

Verse 10. That obeyeth the voice of his servant]—(Let him hearken unto the voice of his servant)] For yw shomed, pointed as the participle, the Septuagint and Syriac read yw yishmd, future or imperative. This gives a much more elegant turn and distribution to the sentence.

Verse 11. Ye that kindle a fire] The fire of their own kindling, by the light of which they walk with security and satisfaction, is an image designed to express, in general, human devices and mere worldly policy, exclusive of faith and trust in God; which, though they flatter them for a while with pleasing expectations and some appearance of success, shall in the end turn to the confusion of the authors. Or, more particularly, as Vitringa explains it, it may mean the designs of the turbulent and factious Jews in the times succeeding those of Christ; who, in pursuit of their own desperate schemes, stirred up the war against the Romans, and kindled a fire which consumed their city and nation.

That compass yourselves about with sparks]—(Who heap the fuel round about)] megozeli, accendentes, Syr. forte legerunt [pro] mazeri mairi; nam sequitur aor. Secker. Lud. Capellus, in his critical notes on this place, thinks it should be mazeri, from the Septuagint, κωρυμωρες.

[There are others who are widely different from those already described. Without faith, repentance, or a holy life, they are bold in their professed confidence in God,—presumptive in their trust in the mercy of God: and while destitute of all preparation for, and right to, the kingdom of heaven, would think it criminal to doubt of their final salvation! Living in this way, what can they have at the hand of God but an endless bed of sorrow! Ye shall lie down in sorrow.

But there is a general sense, and accordant to the design of the prophecy, in which these words may be understood and paraphrased:—Behold, all ye that kindle a fire,—provoke war and contention;—compass yourselves about with sparks,—stirring up seditious and rebellions. Walk in the light of your fire;—go on in your lust of power and restless ambition. Ye shall lie down in sorrow;—it will turn to your own perdition. See the Targum. This seems to refer to the restless spirit of the Jews; always stirring up confusion and strife; rebelling against and provoking the Romans, till at last their city was taken, their temple burnt to the ground, and upwards of a million of themselves destroyed, and the rest led into captivity.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER LI.

[Verse 1. Ye that follow after righteousness]—The people who, feeling the want of salvation, seek the Lord in order to be justified.

The rock—Abraham.

The hole of the pit—Sarah; as explained in ver. 2.

Verse 2. I called him alone—As I have made out of one a great nation; so, although ye are brought low and diminished, yet I can restore you to happiness, and greatly multiply your number.]

den of the LORD : joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody.

4 Harken unto me, my people ; and give ear unto me, O my nation : for a law shall proceed from me, and I will make my judgment to rest for a light of the people.

5 My righteousness is near : my salvation is gone forth, and mine arms shall judge the people ; and the isles shall wait upon me, and on mine arm shall they trust.

6 Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath : for the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein shall die in like manner : but my salvation shall be for ever, and my righteousness shall not be abolished.

7 Harken unto me, ye that know righteousness, the people in whose heart is my law ; fear ye not the reproach of men, neither be ye afraid of their revilings.

8 For the moth shall eat them up like a garment, and the worm shall eat them like wool : but my righteousness shall be for ever, and my salvation from generation to generation.

9 Awake, awake, put on strength, O arm of the LORD ; awake, as in the ancient days, in the generations of old. Art thou not it that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the dragon ?

10 Art thou not it which hath dried the sea, the waters of the great deep ; that hath made the depths of the sea a way for the ransomed to pass over ?

11 Therefore the redeemed of the LORD shall return, and come with singing unto Zion ; and everlasting joy shall be upon their head : they shall obtain gladness and joy ; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away.

12 I, even I, am he that comforteth you : who art thou, that thou shouldst be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man which shall be made as grass ;

13 And forgettest the LORD thy Maker that hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth : and hast feared continually every day because of the fury of the oppressor, as if he were ready to destroy ? and where is the fury of the oppressor ?

14 The captive exile hasteneth that he may be loosed, and that he should not die in the pit, nor that his bread should fail.

15 But I am the LORD thy God, that divided the sea, whose waves roared : The LORD of hosts is his name.

16 And I have put my words in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people.

17 Awake, awake, stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the LORD the cup of his fury ; thou hast drunken the dregs of the cup of trembling, and wrung them out.

18 There is none to guide her among all the sons whom she hath brought forth ; neither is there any that taketh her by the hand of all the sons that she hath brought up.

19 These two things are come unto thee ; who shall be sorry for thee ? desolation, and destruction, and the famine, and the sword : by whom shall I comfort thee ?

Verse 4. My people—O my nation—(O ye peoples—O ye nations) For my ammi, my people, the Bodley MS. and another read my ammin, ye peoples ; and for leumi, my nation, the Bodley MS. and eight others, (two of them ancient,) [and four of De Rossi] read leumim, ye nations ; and so the Syriac in both words. The difference is very material : for in this case the address is made not to the Jews, but to the Gentiles, as in all reason it ought to be ; for this and the two following verses express the call of the Gentiles, the islands, or the distant lands on the coasts of the Mediterranean and other seas. It is also to be observed, that God in no other place calls His people leumi, my nation. It has been before remarked, that transcribers frequently omitted the final v mem of nouns plural ; and supplied it, for brevity's sake, and sometimes for want of room at the end of a line, by a small stroke thus vay ; which mark, being effaced or overlooked, has been the occasion of many mistakes of this kind.

[A law shall proceed from me—The new Law, the Gospel of our Lord Jesus. Kimchi says, "After the war with Gog and Magog the King Messiah will teach the people to walk in the ways of the Lord."]

Verse 5. My righteousness is near] The word tsedek, righteousness, is used in such a great latitude of signification, for justice, truth, faithfulness, goodness, mercy, deliverance, salvation, &c. that it is not easy sometimes to give the precise meaning of it without much circumlocution ; it means here the faithful completion of God's promises to deliver His people.

[Verse 6. My salvation shall be for ever—Aben Ezra says, From this verse divines have learnt the immortality of the soul. Men shall perish as the earth does, because they are formed from it : but they who are filled with the salvation of God shall remain for ever. See Kimchi.]

Verse 11. They shall obtain gladness and joy ; and sorrow and mourning shall flee away] Nineteen MSS. and the two oldest Editions have vay yasigu ; and forty-six MSS. [of Kennicott and ten of De Rossi] and the same two Editions, and agreeably to them the Chaldee and Syriac, have vay vinasu : and so both words are expressed chap. xxxv. 10, of which place this is a repetition. And from comparing both together it appears that the vau in this place is become by mistake in the present text the final nun of the preceding word.

Verse 13. Of the oppressor, as if he, &c.] "The v caph in keasher seems clearly to have changed its situation from the end of the preceding word to the beginning of this ; or rather, to have been omitted by mistake there, because it was here. That it was there, the Septuagint shew by rendering ha metsiaak, thalassas os, of him that oppressed thee. And so they render this word in both its places in this verse. The Vulgate also has the pronoun in the first instance : furoris ejus qui et tribulabat." Dr. Jubb. The correction seems well founded : I have not conformed the translation to it because it makes little difference in the sense.

Verse 14. The captive exile hasteneth that he may be loosed—(He marcheth on with speed, who cometh to set free the captive) Cyrus, if understood of the temporal redemption from the captivity of Babylon ; in the spiritual sense, the Messiah.

Verse 16. That I may plant the heavens—(To stretch out the heavens) In the present Text it is lenetoh, "to plant the heavens ;" the phrase is certainly very obscure ; and in all probability is a mistake for lenetoh. This latter is the word used in ver. 13, just before, in the very same sentence ; and this phrase occurs very frequently in Isaiah, chap. xl. 22 ; xlii. 5 ; xlv. 24 ; xlv. 12 ; the former in no other place. It is also very remarkable, that in the Samaritan Text, Numb. xxiv. 6. these two words are twice changed, by mistake, one for the other in the same verse.

[Verse 17. The cup of trembling—cos hatar-elah, "the cup of mortal poison," veneni mortiferi. MONTAN. This may also allude to the ancient custom of taking off criminals by a cup of poison. Socrates is well known to have been sentenced by the Areopagus to drink a cup of the juice of hemlock, which occasioned his death. See the Note on Heb. ii. 9 ; and see also Bishop Lowth's Note on ver. 21.

Verse 19. These two things—desolation, and destruction, and the famine, and the sword] That is, desolation by famine, and destruction by the sword ; taking the terms alternately : of which form of construction see other examples, De S. Poesi, Heb. Præl. xix. and Prelim. Dissert. p. xxx. The Chaldee paraphrast, not rightly understanding this, has had recourse to the following expedient : "Two afflictions are come upon thee, and when four shall come upon thee, degradation, and destruction, and the famine, and the sword—" Five MSS. have heradib, without the conjunction vau ; and so the Septuagint and Syriac. By whom shall I comfort thee—(Who shall comfort thee) A MS., the Septuagint, Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, have it in the third person, yenachmak, which is evidently right.

20 Thy sons have fainted, they lie at the head of all the streets, as a wild bull in a net: they are full of the fury of the Lord, the rebuke of thy God.

21 Therefore hear now this, thou afflicted and drunken, but not with wine,

22 Thus saith thy Lord the Lord, and thy God that pleadeth the cause of his people, Behold I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury: thou shalt no more drink it again:

23 But I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee; who have said to thy soul, Bow down, that we may go over: and thou hast laid thy body as the ground, and as the street, to them that went over.

CHAPTER LII.

Jerusalem, in manifest allusion to the strong figure employed in the close of the preceding Chapter, is represented as fallen asleep in the dust, and in that helpless state bound by her enemies. The Prophet, with all the ardour natural to one who had such joyful news to communicate, bids her awake, arise, put on her best attire, (holiness to the Lord,) and ascend her lofty seat; and then he delivers the message he had in charge, a very consolatory part of which was, that "no more should enter into her the uncircumcised and the unclean." ... Awaking from her stupor, Jerusalem sees the messenger of such joyful tidings on the entrance from which he spied the coming deliverance. She expresses, in beautiful terms, her joy at the news, repeating with peculiar elegance the words of the orator, 7. The capacious intelligence that Jehovah was returning to resume His residence on His holy mountain immediately spreads to others on the wall, who all join in the glad exultation, 9; and, in the ardour of their joy, they call to the very rulers of Jerusalem to sing along with them, because Jehovah maketh bare His holy arms in the sight of all the nations, and all the ends of the earth are about to see the avenging of Israel's God, 9, 10. To complete the deliverance, they are encouraged to march in triumph out of Babylon, earnestly exhorted to have nothing to do with any of her abominations, and assured that Jehovah will guide them in all their way, 11, 12. The Prophet then passes to the procuring cause of this great blessing to the house of Israel in particular, and to the world in general, viz. the purification, suffering, death, burial, resurrection, and ascension, of Jesus Christ; a very celebrated and clear prophecy, which takes up the remainder of this and the whole of the following Chapter.

Verse 21. Drunken, but not with wine] Eschylus has the same expression:

Αινοῖσις ἐμπαρῆσι θυραμοῖσι. Eschyl. 363. Intoxicated with passion, not with wine.

Schultens thinks, that this circumlocution, as he calls it, gradum adfert incomparabilitate majorem; and that it means not simply without wine, but much more than with wine. Gram. Heb. p. 192. See his Note on Job xxx. 38.

The bold image of the cup of God's wrath, often employed by the Sacred Writers, (See Note on chap. i. 22,) is no where handled with greater force and sublimity than in this passage of Isaiah, ver. 17—23. Jerusalem is represented in person as staggering under the effects of it, destitute of that assistance which she might expect from her children; not one of them being able to support or to lead her. They, abject and amazed, lie at the head of every street, overwhelmed with the greatness of their distress; like the oryx entangled in a net, in vain struggling to rend it, and extricate himself. This is poetry of the first order, sublimity of the highest proof.

Plato had an idea something like this: "Suppose," says he, "God had given to men a medicating potion inducing fear; so that the more any one should drink of it, so much the more miserable he should find himself at every draught, and become fearful of every thing both present and future; and at last, though the most courageous of men, should be totally possessed by fear: and afterwards having slept off the effects of it, should become himself again." De Leg. i. near the end. He pursues at large this hypothesis, applying it to his own purpose, which has no relation to the present subject. Homer places two vessels at the threshold of Jupiter, one of good, the other of evil. He gives to some a potion mixed of both, to others from the evil vessel only: these are completely miserable. Iliad. xxiv. 527—533.

Which have said to thy soul, Bow down—(Who say to thee, Bow down thy body) A very strong and most expressive description of the insolent pride of Eastern conquerors; which though it may seem greatly exaggerated, yet hardly exceeds the strict truth. An example has already been given of it in Note to chap. xlix. 23. I will here add one or two more. "Joshua called for all the men of Israel; and said unto the captains of the men of war that went with him, Come near, put your feet upon the necks of these kings," Josh. x. 24. "Adonibezek said, Threescore and ten kings, having their thumbs and their great toes cut off, gathered their meat under my table: as I have done, so hath God requited me," Judg. i. 7. The emperor Valerianus being through treachery taken prisoner by Sapor king of Persia, was treated by him as the basest and most abject slave: for the Persian monarch commanded the unhappy Roman to bow himself down, and offer him his back, on which he set his foot, in order to mount his chariot or his horse, whenever he had occasion. NOTES ON CHAPTER LII.

[Verse 1. There shall no more come unto thee—For מר יאבו, shall come, מלב לכו, to come, is the reading of five of Kennicot's, and two of De Rossi's MSS. This is the better reading, כי לא יאבו לכו 'ki lo yosiph lebo, There shall not add to come.

The uncircumcised and the unclean] Christians have turned many passages of the Prophets against the Jews: and it is not to be wondered at, that in support of their obstinate and hopeless cause, they should press a prophecy into their service, and make it speak against the Christians. This Kimchi does in this place; for he says, by the uncircumcised, the Christians are meant;—and by the unclean, the Turks. The Christians are uncircumcised;—and the Turks, though circumcised, and using many ablutions, are unclean in their works.]

Verse 2. Sit down, O Jerusalem—(Ascend thy lofty seat, O Jerusalem) The literal rendering here is, according to our English translation, "arise, sit;" on which a very learned person remarks: "So the old Versions. But sitting is an expression of mourning in Scripture and the ancients; and doth not well agree with the rising just before." It doth not indeed agree, according to our ideas: but, considered in an oriental light, it is perfectly consistent. The common manner of sitting in the eastern countries is upon the ground, or floor, with the legs crossed. The people of better condition have the floors of their chambers, or divans, covered with carpets for this purpose; and round [Verse 13. My servant shall deal prudently—יָשָׁרִי yashkil, shall prosper, or act prosperously.] The subject of Isaiah's prophecy, from the fortieth chapter inclusive, has hitherto been, in general, the deliverance of the people of God. This includes in it three distinct parts; which, however, have a close connexion with one another: that is, 1. The deliverance of the Jews from the captivity of Babylon; 2. The deliverance of the Gentiles from their miserable state of ignorance and idolatry; and, 3. The deliverance of mankind from the captivity of sin and death. These three subjects are subordinate to one another; and the two latter are shadowed out under the image of the former. They are covered by it as by a veil; which however is transparent, and suffers them to appear through it. Cyrus is expressly named as the immediate agent of God in effecting the first deliverance. A greater person is spoken of as the Agent, who is to effect the two latter deliverances; called the Servant, the Elect of God, in whom His soul delighteth; Israel, in whom God will be glorified. Now these three subjects have a very near relation to one another; for, as the Agent, who was to effect the two latter deliverances, that is, the Messiah, was to be born a Jew, with particular limitations of time, family, and other circumstances; the first deliverance was necessary in the order of providence, and according to the determinate counsel of God, to the accomplishment of the two latter deliverances; and the second deliverance was necessary to the third, or rather, was involved in it, and made an essential part of it. This being the case, Isaiah has not treated the three subjects as quite distinct and separate in a methodical and orderly manner, like a philosopher or a logician, but has taken them in their connective view. He has handled them as a prophet and a poet; he hath allegorized the former, and under the image of it has shadowed out the two latter; he has thrown them all together, has mixed one with another, has passed from this to that with rapid transitions, and has painted the whole with the strongest and boldest imagery. The restoration of the Jews from captivity, the call of the Gentiles, the redemption by Messiah, have hitherto been handled interchangeably and alternately. Babylon has hitherto been kept pretty much in sight; at the same time, that strong intimations of something much greater have frequently been thrown in. But here Babylon is at once dropped; and I think hardly ever comes in sight again: unless perhaps in chap. lv. 12. and lvii. 14. The prophet's views are almost wholly engrossed by the superior part of his subject. He introduces the Messiah as appearing at first in the lowest state of humiliation, which he had just touched upon before, (chap. l. 5, 6,) and obviates the offences which would be occasioned by it, by declaring the important and necessary cause of it, and foreshewing the glory which should follow it.

This seems to me to be the nature and the true design of this part of Isaiah's prophecies; and this view of them seems to afford the best method of resolving difficulties, in which expositors are frequently engaged, being much divided between what is called the literal and the mystical sense, not very properly; for the mystical and spiritual sense is very often the most literal sense of all.

Abarbanel seems to have had an idea of this kind, as he is quoted by Vitringa on chap. xlix. 1, who thus represents his sentiments: "Censet Abarbanel prophetam hic transitum facere a liberatione ex exilio Babylonicæ ad liberationem ex exilio Romano; et, quod hic animadversu dignum est, observat liberationem ex exilio Babylonicæ esse non nisi oth. vereciv, signum et argumentum liberationis futuræ; atque adeo orationem prophetæ de duabus hæc liberationibus in superioribus conacionibus sæpe inter se permisceri. Verba ejus: 'Et propterea verba, sive res, in prophetiâ superiore inter se permixta occurrunt; modo de liberatione Babylonicâ, modo de liberatione extremâ accipiendâ, ut orationis necessitas exigit.' Nullum hic vitium, nisi quod redemptionem veram et spiritualem a Messia vero Jæsu adductam, non agnoscat." ["Abarbanel supposes that the prophet here makes a transition from the deliverance from the Babylonish captivity to the deliverance from the Roman captivity; and (which is worthy of particular note) he observes, that the deliverance from the Babylonish captivity is a sign and pledge of the future redemption; and that on this account it is we find, in the preceding prophecies, the circumstances of the two captivities intimately blended together. His words are the following:—'And, therefore, the words, or subjects, in the foregoing prophecy are very much intermixed; in one passage the redemption from the Babylonish captivity being treated of, in another the redemption from the general dispersion, as may be collected from the obvious import of the words.' No fault can be found with the above remark, except that the true and spiritual redemption procured by Jesus the Messiah is not acknowledged.]"

Verse 14. As many were astonished at thee—(As many were astonished at him)] For יָשָׁרִי yashkil, read יָשָׁרִי yashkil, So the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate in a MS.; and so likewise two ancient MSS.

[His visage was so marred more than any man—Most interpreters understand this of the indignities offered to our blessed Lord: but Kimchi gives it another turn, and says,— "It means the Jewish people who are considered by most nations as having an appearance different from all the people of the earth." Poor Jews: they have, in general, a very disagreeable look, partly affected, and partly through neglect of neatness and cleanliness. Most Christians think they carry the impress of their reprobation on every feature of their face. However this may be, it should never be forgotten, that the greatest men that ever flourished as kings, judges, magistrates, lawgivers, heroes, and poets, were of Jewish extraction. Isaiah was a Jew; so was Paul, and so was Jesus of Nazareth.]

Verse 15. So shall he sprinkle many nations] I retain the common rendering, though I am by no means satisfied with it. יָשָׁרִי yashkil, frequently in the law, means only to sprinkle: but the water sprinkled is the accusative case: the thing, on which, has על על, or על el. θανασουραι, θ, makes the best apodosis. יָשָׁרִי yashkil, would do. יָשָׁרִי yashkil, is used ii. 2; Jer. xxxi. 12; chap. li. 14; but is unlike. Kings shall shut, &c. is good: but seems to want a first part." SECKER. Munster translates it, faciet loqui (de se;) and in his note thus explains it: יָשָׁרִי yashkil, proprie significat spargere et stillas disseminare; hic vero capitur pro loqui, et verbum disseminare. ["יָשָׁרִי yashkil, properly signifies to sprinkle, and to scatter about drops: but it here means to speak, and to disseminate the word." This is pretty much as the Rabbins, Kimchi, and Salomo ben Melech, explain it, referring to the expression of "dropping the word." But the same objection lies to this as to the common rendering; it ought to be יָשָׁרִי yashkil (debar) al goyim. Bishop Chandler, Defence, p. 148, says, "that to sprinkle, is used for to surprise and astonish, as people are that have much water thrown upon them. And this sense is followed by the Septuagint." This is ingenious, but rather too refined. Dr. Durell conjectures, that the true reading may be יָשָׁרִי yechezzu, they shall regard, which comes near to the θανασουραι of the Septuagint, who seem to give the best sense of any to this place.

"I find in my papers the same conjecture, which Dr. Durell made from θανασουραι in the Septuagint. And it may be added, that חָזַח chazah, is used to express 'looking on any thing with admiration,' Psa. xi. 7, and xvii. 15, and xxvii. 4, and lxiii. 2; Cant. vi. 13. It is particularly applied to 'looking on God,' Exod. xxiv. 11, and Job xix. 26. Gisbert Cuiper, in Observ. lib. ii. l, though treating on another subject, has some observations which shew how nearly θραω and θαναω are allied, which (with the peculiar sense of the verb חָזַח chazah, above noted) add to the probability of θανασουραι being the version of יָשָׁרִי yechazo, in the text: θι δε εν λαοι θαναω εν ανων θραω. Hesiod. id est, cum veneratione quadam admirantur. Hinc θραω et θαναω Juncti Themistius Or. i. Ειτα πανταυσι δι ανθρωποι προς σε μονον θραωτες, και σε μονον θαναωζοντες. [Does not sprinkling the nations, refer to the conversion and baptism of the Gentiles?]

CHAPTER LIII.

This Chapter foretells the sufferings of the Messiah, the End for which He was to die, and the advantages resulting to mankind from these illustrious events. It begins with a complaint of the infidelity of the Jews, 1. The offence they took at His mean and humble appearance, 2. And the contempt with which they treated Him, 3. The Prophet then shows that Messiah was to suffer for sins not His own; but that our iniquities were laid on him, and the punishment of them exacted of Him, which is the meritorious cause of our obtaining pardon and salvation, 4-6. He shows the meekness and placid submission with which He suffered a violent and unjust death, with the circumstances of His dying with the wicked, and being buried with the great, 7-9; and then in consequence of His atonement, death, resurrection, and ascension, He should procure pardon and salvation to the multitudes, ensure increasing prosperity to His church, and ultimately triumph over all his foes, 10, 11. This Chapter contains a beautiful summary of the most peculiar and distinguishing doctrines of Christianity.

NOTES ON CHAPTER LIII.

[That this Chapter speaks of none but JESUS, must be evident to every unprejudiced reader who has ever heard the history of His sufferings and death. The Jews have endeavoured to apply it to their sufferings in captivity: but, alas! for their cause, they can make nothing out in this way. Allowing that it belongs to our blessed Lord, and the best men and the best scholars agree in this, then who can read verses 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, without being convinced that His death was a vicarious sacrifice for the sins of mankind? On the first and second verses of this Chapter, I have received the following remarks from an unknown hand.

“Verse 1. Who hath believed our report—The report of the prophets, of John the Baptist, and Christ’s own report of Himself. The Jews did not receive the report, and for this reason, He was not manifested to them as the promised Messiah. ‘He came unto His own, but His own received Him not.’ Before the FATHER he grew up as a tender plant: but to the Jews, He was as a root out of a dry ground. He hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see Him there is no beauty that we should desire Him.

“Verse 2. For he shall grow up—Supposes something to have preceded; as it might be asked, what or who shall ‘grow up before him,’ &c. As the translation now stands no correct answer can be given to this question. The translation then is wrong, the connexion is broken, and the sense obscured. yw zerd, translated the arm, from the root yw zard. 1. To sow, or plant; also seed, &c. 2. The limb which reaches from the shoulder to the hand called the arm; or more properly beginning at the shoulder, and ending at the elbow. The translator has given the wrong sense of the word. It would be very improper to say that the arm of the Lord should grow up before him: but, by taking the word in its former sense, the connexion and metaphor would be restored, and the true sense given to the text. yw zerd, signifies not only the seed of herbs, but also children, offspring, or posterity. The same word we find Gen. iii. 15, where CHAET is the Seed promised. See also Gen. xxii. 17, 18; xxvi. 4; xxviii. 14. Hence the SEED of the woman, the SEED promised to the patriarchs, is, according to Isaiah, the Seed of the Lord, the Child born, and the Son given; and, according to St. John, ‘the Son of God, the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth.’ yw zerd, then in this place should be understood to mean JESUS CHAET, and Him alone. To speak here of the manifestation of the arm or power of God would be irregular: but to suppose the text to speak of the manifestation of Jesus Christ, would be

CHAPTER LIV.

Some suppose this Chapter to have been addressed to the Gentiles, some to the Jewish church, and some to the Christian, in its first stage. On comparing the different parts of it, particularly the seventh and eighth verses, with the remainder, the most obvious import of the prophecy will be that which refers it to the future conversion of the Jews, and to the increase and prosperity of that nation, when reconciled to God after their long rejection, when their glory and security will far surpass what they were formerly in their most favoured state, 1-17.

The tomb therefore might with great propriety be called the high place. The Hebrews might also call such a tomb bamoth, from the situation; for they generally chose to erect them on eminences. The sepulchre of Joseph of Arimathea, in which the body of Christ was laid, was upon a hill, Mount Calvary. See chap. xxii. 16, and the note there.

"It should be observed that the word bamoth is not formed from bamah, the plural of bamah, the feminine noun; but from bamotim, the plural of a masculine noun, bamoth. This is noted because these two nouns have been negligently confounded with one another, and absurdly reduced to one by very learned men. So Buxtorf, Lex. in voc. bamah, represents bamoth, though plainly without any pronoun suffixed, as it governs the word arets following it, as only another form of bamoth: whereas the truth is, that bamoth and bamotim are different words, and have through the whole Bible very different significations; bamah, whether occurring in the singular or plural number, always signifying 'a place, or places, of worship;' and bamotim always signifying 'heights.' Thus in Deut. xxxii. 13; Isa. lviii. 14; Amos iv. 13, and Mic. i. 3, arets bamotey arets signifies 'the heights of the earth.' Isa. xiv. 14, bamotey db, 'the heights of the clouds;' and in Job ix. 8, bamotey yam, 'the heights of the sea, i. e. the high waves of the sea, as Virgil calls a wave praruptus aquæ mons ['a broken mountain of water.'] These being all the places where this word occurs without a suffix, the sense of it seems nearly determined by them. It occurs in other instances with a pronoun suffixed, which confirm this signification. Unluckily, our English Bible has not distinguished the feminine noun bamah, from the masculine singular noun bamoth; and has consequently always given the signification of the latter to the former, always rendering it 'a high place': whereas the true sense of the word appears plainly to be, in the very numerous passages in which it occurs, 'a place of worship,' or 'a sacred court,' or 'a sacred inclosure;' whether appropriated to the worship of idols, or to that of the true God; for it is used of both, passim. Now as the Jewish graves are shown from 2 Chron. xxxii. 33, Isa. xxii. 16, to have been in high situations, to which may be added the custom of another Eastern nation from Ouseck's Travels, who says, vol. i. p. 339, 'The Chinese graves are made on the side of hills: 'his heights' becomes a very easy metaphor to express, 'his sepulchre.'" Dr. JUBB.

The exact completion of this prophecy will be fully shewn by adding here the several circumstances of the burial of Jesus, collected from the accounts of the Evangelists:—

"There was a rich man of Arimathea, named Joseph, a member of the Sanhedrim, and of a respectable character, who had not consented to their counsel and act: he went to Pilate, and begged the body of Jesus; and he laid it in his own new tomb, which had been hewn out of the rock, near to the place where Jesus was crucified; having first wound it in fine linen with spices, as the manner of the Jews was to bury the rich and great."

[It has been supposed that kibero kibero, his grave, and bamoth bamotav, in his death, may have been transposed; as also the prefix b to be originally placed before reshayim, the wicked. Thus—

יָרוּן בְּרֵשַׁיִם אֵת מִתּוֹ mediv et de-reshayim yayilten יָרוּן עֲשֵׂי קִבְרוֹ kibro aair vo-el

Yes, his death was appointed among the wicked; And with a rich man, his tomb,

By these alterations it is supposed the Text would be freed from all embarrassment. But see the preceding notes of Bishop Louth, and the various readings of De Rossi, in loc.]

Verse 10. To grief—(With affliction) For hecheli, the verb, the construction of which seems to be hard and inelegant in this place, the Vulgate reads beheli, in infirmitate, "with infirmity."

When thou shalt make his soul—(If his soul shall make) For tashim, a MS. has tashem, which may be taken passively. "If his soul shall be made—"agreeably to some copies of the Septuagint, which have deusa. So likewise the Syriac.

When thou shalt make his soul an offering.—The word nephesh, soul, is frequently used in Hebrew to signify life. Throughout the New Testament, the salvation of men is uniformly attributed to the death of Christ.

He shall see his seed—True converts—genuine Christians.

He shall prolong his days—or this spiritual progeny shall prolong their days, i. e. Christianity shall endure to the end of time.

And the pleasure of the Lord—To have all men saved and brought to the knowledge of the truth.

Shall prosper in his hand—Shall go on in a state of progressive prosperity: and so completely has this been thus far accomplished, that every succeeding century has witnessed more Christianity in the world than the preceding, or any former one.]

Verse 11. Shall be satisfied—(And be satisfied) The Septuagint, Vulgate, Syriac, and a MS., add the conjunction to the verb; yayisba.

Shall my righteous servant justify—(Shall my servant justify) Three MSS. (two of them ancient), omit the word tsadik; it seems to be only an imperfect repetition by mistake, of the preceding word. It makes a solecism in this place: for, according to the constant usage of the Hebrew language, the adjective, in a phrase of this kind, ought to follow the substantive; and tsadik abai, in Hebrew, would be as absurd as "shall my servant righteous justify," in English. Add to this, that it makes the hemistich too long.

[Verse 12. He bare the sin of many] rabbim, the multitudes—the many that were made sinners by the offences of one; i. e. the whole human race: for all have sinned—all have fallen; and for all that have sinned, and for all that have fallen, Jesus Christ died. The rabbim, of the Prophet answers to the ε πολλοι of the apostle, Rom. v. 15, 19. As the πολλοι of the apostle means all that have sinned: so the rabbim of the prophet means, those for whom Christ died; i. e. all that have sinned.]

And made intercession for the transgressors] For yaphgi, in the future, a MS. has yaphgi preterit; rather better, as agreeable with the other verbs immediately preceding in the sentence.

[He made intercession for the transgressors—was literally fulfilled at His death—Father, forgive them; they know not what they do! Luke xxiii. 34. And to make intercession for transgressors is one part of His mediatorial office. Heb. vii. 25, and ix. 24.

In this Chapter, the incarnation, preaching, humiliation, rejection, sufferings, death, atonement, resurrection, and mediation, of Jesus Christ, are all predicted; together with the prevalence of His gospel, and the extension of His kingdom through all ages.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER LIV.

Verse 1. Sing, O barren, thou that didst not bear—(Shout for joy, O thou barren, that didst not bear) The church of God, under the Old Testament, confined within the narrow bounds of the Jewish nation, and still more so in respect of the very small number of true believers, and 2 Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations; spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes;

3 For thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited.

4 Fear not; for thou shalt not be ashamed; neither be thou confounded; for thou shalt not be put to shame: for thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth, and shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more.

5 For thy Maker is thine Husband; the LORD of hosts is his name; and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel; The God of the whole earth shall he be called.

6 For the LORD hath called thee as a woman forsaken and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth, when thou wast refused, saith thy God.

7 For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee.

8 In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment; but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the LORD thy Redeemer.

9 For this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee.

10 For as the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed: but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the LORD that hath mercy on thee.

11 O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thy stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires.

12 And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones.

13 And all thy children shall be taught of the LORD; and great shall be the peace of thy children.

14 In righteousness shalt thou be established: thou shalt be far from oppression; for thou shalt not fear: and from terror; for it shall not come near thee.

15 Behold, they shall surely gather together, but not by me: whosoever shall gather together against thee shall fall for thy sake.

16 Behold, I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy.

17 No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the LORD, and their righteousness is of me, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER LV.

This Chapter first displays the fulness, freedom, excellency, and everlasting nature of the blessedness of the gospel, and foretells again the enlargement of Messiah's kingdom, 1-5. This view leads the Prophet to exhort all to seize the precious opportunity of sharing in such blessings, which were not, however, to be expected without repentance and reformation, 6, 7. And as the things now and formerly predicted were so great as to appear incredible, the Prophet points to the omnipotence of God, who would infallibly accomplish His word, and bring about those glorious deliverances which he had promised; the happy effects of which are again set forth by images beautiful and poetical in the highest degree, 8-12.

HO, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk, without money and without price.

2 Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread! and your labour for that which sometimes seemed to be deserted of God her Husband; is the barren woman that did not bear, and was desolate. She is exhorted to rejoice, and to express her joy in the strongest manner, on the reconciliation of her husband, see ver. 6, and on the accession of the Gentiles to her family. The converted Gentiles are all along considered by the Prophet as a new accession of adopted children, admitted into the original church of God, and united with it. See chap. xlix. 20, 21.

Verse 4. For thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth] "i. a.—The bondage of Egypt: widowhood, the captivity of Babylon." Secker.

Verse 7. For a small moment—(In a little anger)] So the Chaldee and Syriac, either reading ragaz, for regâ, or understanding the latter word as meaning the same with the former, which they both make use of. See Psa. xxx. 5; xxxv. 20, in the Septuagint, where they render regâ, by, opyn anger.

Verse 8. I hid my face from thee for a moment] The word regâ, is omitted by the Septuagint, Syriac, and two MSS. of Kennicott, and two of De Rossi's. It seems to embarrass rather than to help the sentence. Forte reponi debet pro shetseph, quod potest a qep ketseph, errore scribæ originem duxisse.—[Perhaps it ought to be substituted for shetseph, an error probably made by some scribe from its similarity to qep ketseph."] Secker.

[Thy Redeemer—goelce: but for this word, three of De Rossi's MSS. have merachme, thy commiserator.]

Verse 9. For this is as the waters of Noah unto me—(The same will I do now, as in the days of Noah)] keyemey, in one word, in a MS. and some Editions; and so the Syriac, Chaldee, Vulgate, Symmachus, Theodotion, Abarbanel, Salomo ben Melec, and Kimchi, acknowledge, that their copies vary in this place.

[It is certain that these two words ki mey, were written formerly as one. Taken as two ki mey, they signify for as the waters—when as one, keyemey, they signify as the days. This latter reading is found in about four of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. In one of my own it appears to have been intended as one word: but he who added the points, which are by a much later hand than the MS. itself, has pointed the letters so as to make the two words which are commonly found in the Text. For, the waters,—Symmachus, Theodotion, the Syriac, Vulgate, and Arabic, have days instead of waters. The former seems to make the best sense; and the ancient Versions, except the Septuagint, support it.]

Verse 11. Behold, I will lay thy stones—(Behold, I lay thy stones)] These seem to be general images to express beauty, magnificence, purity, strength, and solidity, agreeably to the ideas of the eastern nations; and to have never been intended to be strictly scrutinized, or minutely and particularly explained, as if they had each of them some precise, moral, or spiritual meaning. Tobit, in his prophecy of the final restoration of Israel, describes the New Jerusalem in the same oriental manner: "For Jerusalem shall be built up with sapphires, and emeralds, and precious stones; thy walls, and towers, and battlements, with pure gold. And the streets of Jerusalem shall be paved with beryl, and carbuncle, and stones of ophir." Tob. xiii. 16, 17. Compare also Rev. xxi. 18—21.

Verse 15. Shall fall for thy sake—(Shall come over to thy side)] For yipal, twenty-eight MSS. (eight ancient), have yipal, in its more common form. For the meaning of the word in this place, see Jer. xxxvii. 13.

NOTES ON CHAPTER LV.

[Verse 1. Ho, every one that thirsteth—"Water," says Kimchi, "is a metaphor for the law and wisdom: as the world cannot subsist without water; so it is impossible that it can subsist without wisdom. The law also is compared to wine and milk:—to wine because wine rejoiceth the heart, as it is written, The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart, Psa. xix. 8. It is compared also to milk, because milk is the subsistence of the child; so are the words of the law the nourishment of his soul who walks in the Divine teaching, and grows up under it."

Come, buy wine and milk—In ancient times, our forefathers used what is now called the old third person singular, ending in eth, for the imperative mood. We have a fine example of this in the first verses of this chapter. I shall present them as they stand in my old MS. Bible.—Alle gee thiststinge cummeth to waters: and gee that han not sylber, goth forth and bieth, and etth. Cummeth, bieth without sylber, and without eny chaunging, toyn and myc.—Beethth gee, beeing me and etth gode thinge, and belten schal in fattnesse pour soule. Beethth in your ete and cummeth to mee, beethth and liden schal pour soule. And th schal smyten with god, eberlastyng cohenant, the fastfuld mercies of Davit.

Verse 2. Wherefore do ye spend—Why should ye be which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness.

3 Incline your ear, and come unto me: hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David.

4 Behold, I have given him for a witness to the people, a leader and commander to the people.

5 Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not, and nations that knew not thee shall run unto thee because of the Lord thy God, and for the Holy One of Israel; for he hath glorified thee.

6 Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near:

7 Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.

8 For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord.

9 For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.

10 For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater:

11 So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.

12 For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace: the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands.

13 Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.

CHAPTER LXI.

Whoever would partake of the blessings of the gospel, is required to be holy in all manner of life and conversation. And he that will be so is declared to be accepted according to his gracious dispensation, the blessings of which are larger as the human race, without any respect of persons or to nations, 1-2. At the sixth verse begins a different subject, or new section of prophecy. It opens with calling on the enemies of the Jews (the Chaldeans, or perhaps the Romans,) as enemies of prey against them, for the sake of their rulers, teachers, and other profane people among them, whose guilt drew down judgments on the nation, 3-12.

THUS saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment, and do justice: for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed.

2 Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil.

3 Neither let the son of the stranger, that hath joined himself to the Lord, speak, saying, The Lord hath utterly separated me from his people: neither let the eunuch say, Behold, I am a dry tree.

4 For thus saith the Lord unto the eunuchs that keep my sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and take hold of my covenant;

5 Even unto them will I give in mine house and within my walls a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off.

6 Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant; so zealously attached to a doctrine from which your souls derive neither comfort nor nourishment?

Verse 3. I will make an everlasting covenant—Heb. וְעָשִׂיתִי עִבְדֶיךָ לְבֵרִית עוֹלָם ekreath lacem berith olam, I will cut the old or everlasting covenant sacrifice with you. That covenant sacrifice which was pointed out of old from the very beginning; and which is to last to the consummation of ages.

The sure mercies of David—That is, says Kimchi, "The Messiah, called here David; as it is written, 'David my Servant shall be a Prince over you.'"

Verse 6. Seek ye the Lord while he may be found—Rab. David Kimchi gives the true sense of this passage: "Seek ye the Lord, because he may be found: call upon Him, because He is near. Repent before ye die, for after death there is no conversion of the soul."

Verse 9. For as the heavens are higher I am persuaded, that o eaph, the particle of comparison, is lost in this place, from the likeness of the particle כִּי ki, immediately preceding it. So Houbigant, and Secker. And their remark is confirmed by all the ancient Versions, which express it; and by the following passage of Psalm ciii. 11, which is almost the same:

כִּי נֹבֵה שָׁמַיִם עַל הָאָרֶץ ki haarets al shamim kigebah ki נֹבֵה חֲסוּדוֹ עַל יִרְאָהוּ yeroaiv al chasdo gabar

* For as the heavens are high above the earth, so high is his goodness over them that fear Him."

Where, by the nature of the sentence, the verb in the second line ought to be the same with that in the first; נֹבֵה kigebah, not נֹבֵה gabar: so Archbishop Secker conjectured; referring however to Psa. cxvii. 2.

Verse 12. The mountains and the hills] These are highly poetical images, to express a happy state attended with joy and exultation.

Ipse lætetur voce ad altera factus
Internal mores; ipse jam carmina rapto,
Ipse etiam caritatis. Virg. Ecl. v. 61.
* The mountain tops ushers, the rocks rejoice;
The lofty shrubs parades of human voice." Dryden.

Verse 13. Instead of the thorn—(Instead of the thorny bushes) These likewise (see note on the preceding verse, and on chap. liv. 11,) are general poetical images, expressing a great and happy change for the better. The wilderness turned into a paradise, Lebanon into Carmel: the desert of the Gentiles watered with the heavenly snow and rain, which fail not to have their due effect, and becoming fruitful in piety and righteousness: or as the Chaldees gives the moral sense of the emblem, "instead of the wicked, shall arise the just; and instead of sinners, such as fear to sin." Compare chap. xxxv. 1, 2; xli. 19.

And instead of] The conjunction וְאוּ, is added, from vatachath, in forty-five MSS. [of Kennicott, several of De Rossi's,] and five Editions; and it is acknowledged by all the ancient Versions. The Masoretes therefore might have safely received it into the text, and not have referred us for it to the margin. But this is no uncommon case with them. Even in our own Version the best reading is very often found in the margin.

NOTES ON CHAPTER LXI.

[Verse 2. That keepeth the sabbath from polluting it] Kimchi has an excellent Note here. "The sabbath is sanctified, when it is distinguished in dignity; and separated from other days;—1st, As to the body; in meat, drink, and clean clothing. 2dly, As to the soul, that it be empty of worldly occupations, and be busily employed in the words of the law and wisdom, and in meditation of the works of the Lord." The Rabbins say, "Jerusalem had never been destroyed, had not the sabbaths been profaned in it."

Verse 5. I will give them an everlasting name] For לוֹ lo, him, in the singular, it is evident that we ought to read לוֹי lamo, them, in the plural: so read the Septuagint, Syriac, Chaldees, and Vulgate.

[Verse 6. The sons of the stranger—The Gentiles. That join themselves to the Lord] Who shall enter into the Christian covenant by baptism and faith in Christ, as the Jews and proselytes did by circumcision.

To serve him] To live according to the gospel, and ever do that which is right in the sight of the Lord.

To love the name of the Lord] The name of Jesus, the Christ, the Saviour of sinners, the Anointed of God, and the Giver of the Holy Spirit to His followers.

To be his servants] To worship no other God, but JAHVAH, and to trust in none for salvation but His CHRIST. That keepeth the sabbath] That observes that as a type of the rest that remains for the people of God.

And taketh hold of my covenant] וְבָרַתוּ be-berith,

7 Even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: their burnt-offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called a house of prayer for all people.

8 The Lord God which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, 'Yet will I gather others to him, beside those that are gathered unto him.

9 All ye beasts of the field come to devour, yea, all ye beasts in the forest.

10 His watchmen are blind: they are all ignorant, they are all dumb dogs, they cannot bark; sleeping, lying down, loving to slumber.

11 Yea, they are greedy dogs which can never have enough, and they are shepherds that cannot understand: they all look to their own way, every one for his gain, from his quarter.

Verse 7. Shall be accepted] A word is here lost out of the Text: it is supplied from the Septuagint, ὡς γένηται, accipietur, "they shall be." Houbigant.

Verse 9. All ye beasts of the field] Here manifestly begins a new section. The Prophet, in the foregoing chapters, having comforted the faithful Jews with many great promises of God's favour to be extended to them, in the restoration of their ruined state, and of the enlargement of His church by the admission of the Gentiles; here, on a sudden, makes a transition to the more disagreeable part of the prospect; and to a sharp reproof of the wicked and unbelievers, and especially of the negligent and faithless governors and teachers, of the idolaters and hypocrites, who would still draw down His judgments upon the nation. Probably having in view the destruction of their city and polity by the Chaldeans, and perhaps by the Romans. The same subject is continued in the next Chapter; in which the charge of corruption and apostasy becomes more general against the whole Jewish church. Some expositors have made great difficulties in the 9th verse of this Chapter, where there seems to be none. It is perfectly well explained by Jeremiah, chap. xii. 7, 9. where, having introduced God declaring His purpose of punishing His people, by giving them up as a prey to their enemies the Chaldeans, a charge to these His agents is given in words very nearly the same with those of Isaiah in this place;—

"I have forsaken my house; I have deserted my heritage; I have given up the beloved of my soul into the hands of her enemies.— Come away, ye gathered together, all ye beasts of the field; Come away to devour."

All ye beasts in the forest—(All ye beasts of the forest)] Instead of בְּיַרְדֵּן be-yârdîn, three MSS. have בְּיַרְדֵּן yârd, without the preposition; which seems to be right, and is confirmed by all the ancient Versions.

[Verse 10. His watchmen are blind—Kimchi observes, "The flock is intrusted to the care of these watchmen. The wild beasts come. These dogs bark not! and the wild beasts devour the flock. Thus they do not profit the flock. Yea, they injure it; for the owner trusts in them, that they will watch and be faithful; but they are not. These are the false teachers, and careless shepherds."]

Dumb dogs, they cannot bark] See below Note on chap. lxiii. 6.

Slumbering—(Dreamers)] חֲזוֹנִים hozim, ὄρασι orazoi, Septuagint. This seems to be the best authority for the meaning of this word, which occurs only in this place: but it is to be observed, that eleven MSS. [of Kennicott, and De Rossi,] and four Editions, have חֲזוֹנִים chazim; "seers," or, "those who see;" and so the Vulgate seems to have read; videntes vana, "seeing vain things."

[Loving to slumber—וְלֹא יָנוּחַ lanu]: but six of Kennicott's and seven of De Rossi's MSS. read וְלֹא יָנוּחַ lanus, to fly, "to change their residence:" but what connexion such reading can have with the sense of the passage, I cannot discern. What is taken for o camech here is, I have no doubt, a narrow formed final o mem, which has been mistaken for the above. Many instances occur in my own MSS. where the final o mem is similar to the camech; and yet no such change was intended by the scribe.

Verse 11. Greedy dogs—Insatiably feeding themselves

12 Come ye, say they, I will stretch my hand; and we will fill ourselves with strong drink; and tomorrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant.

CHAPTER LVII.

After mentioning the removal of righteous persons as an awful grouton of the approach of Divine judgments, 1, 2; the Prophet goes on to charge the nation in general with idolatry, and with securing the unprofitable alliance of idolatrous kings, p. 12. In opposition to such vain confidence the Prophet enjoins trust in God, with whom the penitent and humble are sure to find acceptance, and from whom they should obtain temporal and spiritual deliverance, 13—19. Awful condition of the wicked and finally impenitent, 20, 21.

THE righteous perisheth, and no man layeth it to heart: and merciful men are taken away, none considering that the righteous is taken away from the evil to come.

2 He shall enter into peace: they shall rest in their beds, each one walking in his uprightness.

with the fat, and clothing themselves with the wool, while the flock is scattered, ravaged, and starved! O what an abundance of these dumb dogs and greedy dogs are there found hanging on, and prowling about, the flock of Christ. How can any careless, avaricious, hireling minister read this without agitation and dismay!

Verse 12. I will fetch wine—(Let us provide wine)] For נָחַם nekacheh, first person singular, an ancient MS. has נָחַם nekacheh, first person plural; and another ancient MS. has נָחַם ak upon a rasure. So the Syriac, Chaldean, and Vulgate, render it. [The spirit of this epicurean sentiment is this: Let us indulge ourselves in the present time to the utmost, and instead of any gloomy forebodings of the future, let us expect nothing but increasing hilarity for every day we shall live. Thus they,—

"Counting on long years of pleasure here, Are quite unprovided for the world to come."

NOTES ON CHAPTER LVII.

[I shall give Bishop Louth's translation of the two first verses, and give the substance of his criticisms with additional evidence.

- Ver. 1. The righteous man perisheth, and no one considereth; And pious men are taken away, and no one understandeth, That the righteous man is taken away, because of the evil. 2. He shall go in peace: he shall rest in his bed; Even the perfect man: he that walketh in the straight path.

Verse 1. The righteous perisheth—אֲדָמָה ka-tadik abad. There is an emphasis here which seems intended to point out a particular person. See below. Perisheth—As the root אָבַד abad, signifies the straying of cattle, their passing away from one pasture to another, I feel inclined to follow the grammatical meaning of the word "perish," perca. So the Vulgate, justus perit, from per, by or through, and eo, to go. In his death the righteous man may be said to have passed through life, and to have passed by men, i. e. gone past or before them into the eternal world. A similar mode of speech is used by our Saxon ancestors to express death: geforon rihte, he went out of sight; and geforon, he went away; and ponðpanen, to fare forth, to die.

There are very few places in Isaiah where Jesus Christ is not intended; and I am inclined to think that He is intended here, THAT Just One; and perhaps Stephen had this place in view, when he thus charged the Jews, "Ye denied τὸν ἄγιον καὶ δεικνόν, THAT HOLY and Just One," Acts iii. 14. That his death was not laid to heart by the wicked Jewish people, needs no proof.

Merciful men—If the first refer to Christ, this may well refer to the apostles, and to others of the primitive Christians, who were taken away, some by death and martyrdom, and others by a providential escape from a city that they knew was devoted to destruction.

The evil to come—That destruction which was to come upon this disobedient people by the Romans.]

Verse 2. He shall enter into peace—(He shall go in peace)] שָׁלוֹם yabo shalom; the expression is elliptical, such as the prophet frequently uses. The same sense is expressed at large and in full terms, Gen. xv. 15, וְשָׁלוֹם va-shalom, and thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace.

They shall rest in their beds, each one walking in his uprightness—(He shall rest in his bed; even the perfect man)] This obscure sentence is reduced to a perfectly good sense, and easy construction, by an ingenious remark

4 Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? are ye not children of transgression, a seed of falsehood,

5 Inflaming yourselves with idols, under every green tree, slaying the children in the valleys under the cliffs of the rocks?

6 Among the smooth stones of the stream is thy portion; they, they are thy lot: even to them hast thou poured a drink offering, thou hast offered a meat offering. Should I receive comfort in these?

of Dr. Durell. He reads תָּרַח עַל כִּסְּבֵי יָמֶיךָ yanuach al mishkebo tam, "the perfect man shall rest in his bed." Two MSS. (one of them ancient), have תָּרַח עַל יָנֹאֲכִי, singular; and so the Vulgate renders it, requiescat, "he shall rest." The verb was probably altered to make it plural, and so consistent with what follows, after the mistake had been made in the following words, by uniting תָּרַח עַל יָנֹאֲכִי mishkebo and תָּרַח עַל יָנֹאֲכִי, into one word. See Merrick's Annotations on the Psalms, Addenda; where the reader will find, that J. S. Moerlius by the same sort of correction, and by rescuing the adjective תָּרַח tam, which had been swallowed up in another word in the same manner, has restored to a clear sense a passage before absolutely unintelligible:

כִּי אִין חֲרֵבְתָּ לֵט
lemo charstuccoth ein ki
תָּרַח עַל יָנֹאֲכִי ulam ubaria them

"For no distresses happen to them; Perfect and firm is their strength,"

Ps. lxxiii. 4.

[To follow on my application of this to our Lord:—He the Just One, shall enter into peace; the peaceable prosperous possession of the glorious mediatorial kingdom. They shall rest upon their beds; the hand of wrong and oppression can reach these persecuted followers of Christ no more, (but see below.) The perfect man walking in his uprightness—This may be considered as a general declaration. The separated spirit though disunited from its body, walking in conscious existence in the Paradise of God, reaping the fruit of righteousness. The word which we render their beds, תָּרַח עַל יָנֹאֲכִי mishkebotham, the learned Bishop supposes to be two words; and to be compounded of תָּרַח mishkebo, his bed, and תָּרַח tam, the upright, or perfect man. This is the reading both of the Syriac and Vulgate, and it is favoured by the Chaldee; and one of De Rossi's MSS. has תָּרַח mishkebo, his bed, without the word תָּרַח tam, which has been added by a later hand. Bishop Louth, as we have seen, adopts this separation of the word; and for תָּרַח yanuchu, they shall rest, reads תָּרַח yanuach, he shall rest, which is supported by two of Dr. Kennicott's MSS., and by the Vulgate, Septuagint, and Arabic. The word תָּרַח tam, taken from תָּרַח mishkebo-tam mishkebo, should begin the latter clause of the verse; and then the interpolated words each one, which our translators supplied, may be very well spared. The verse may be then read and paraphrased thus:

He shall enter into peace: he shall rest upon his bed;
The perfect man walking in his uprightness.

The bed must signify the grave; the walking in uprightness after death, the conscious existence of the happy spirit, and its eternal progression in happiness and perfection: תָּרַח nekocho, straight before him; proceeding into the unlimited extent of eternal glory, increasing in happiness, and increasing in perfection.

My Old MS. Bible translates very nervously:

The righteous man perisith,
And there is not that he thinkt in his herte
And men of mercie ben gedult,
For there is not that understonde:
From the face forsoth of malice,
Gedult is the rightwase.
Cumt pesse: reste ft in his bed
That gedet in his rigt rebolinge.

It has been often remarked that, previously to the execution of God's judgments upon a wicked place, He has removed good men from it, that they might not suffer with the wicked. When great and good men are removed by death, or otherwise, from any place, the remaining inhabitants have much cause to tremble.]

Verse 6. Among the smooth stones of the stream—(Among the smooth stones of the valley). The Jews were extremely addicted to the practice of many superstitious and idolatrous rites, which the Prophet here inveighs against with great vehemence. Of the worship of rude stones, consecrated, there are many testimonies of the ancients. They were called Βασιλειαι and Βασιλεια; probably from the stone which Jacob erected at Bethel, pouring oil upon the top of it. The practice was very common in different ages and places. Arnobius, lib. i. gives an account of his own practice in this respect, before he became a Christian: Si quando consecreram lubricatum lapidem, et ex olivi unguine sordidatum; tanquam inesset vis præsens, adulabar, affabar, et beneficia poseebam nihil sentiente de trunco.—"When I have met with a smooth stone, smeared with oil, supposing a spiritual power to be connected with it, I worshipped it, paid my addresses to it, and requested blessings, &c." Clemens Alex. Strom. lib. vii. speaks of a worshipper of every smooth stone in a proverbial way, to denote one given up to superstition. And accordingly Theophrastus has marked this as one strong feature in the character of the superstitious man: Και τῶν λιπαρῶν λίθων τῶν ἐν ταῖς τριόδουσιν παριῶν, ἐκ τῆς ἀληθοῦς ἐλαίου καταχειρῆ, καὶ ἐκ γονατῶν πῶνον καὶ προσκυνήσας ἀγαλλασσέσθαι. "Passing by the anointed stones in the streets, he takes out his phial of oil, and pours it on them; and having fallen on his knees, and made his adorations, he departs." [Kimchi says: "When they found a beautiful polished stone in a brook or river, they paid divine adoration to it." This idolatry is still prevalent among the Hindoos. The stone which is the object of their adoration is called salgram. They are found about eighty miles from the source of the river Sown, in the vicerealty of Bahar, on the coast of Bengal. Ayin Akbery, Vol. ii. p. 29.]

Verse 8. Behind the doors also and the posts hast thou set up thy remembrance—(Behind the door, and the door-posts, hast thou set up thy memorial). That is, the image of their tutelary gods, or something dedicated to them; in direct opposition to the law of God, which commanded them to write upon the door-posts of their house, and upon their gates, the words of God's law. Deut. vi. 9; xi. 20. If they chose for them such a situation as more private, it was in defiance of a particular curse denounced in the law against the man, who should make a graven or a molten image, and put it in a secret place. Deut. xxvii. 15. An ancient MS., with another, has תָּרַח achar, without the conjunction vau, and.

Verse 9. And thou wentest to the king with ointment—(And thou hast visited the king with a present of oil). That is, the king of Assyria, or Egypt. Hosea, chap. xii. 1, reproaches the Israelites for the same practice:

"They make a covenant with Assyria,
And oil is carried to Egypt."

It is well known, that in all parts of the East, whoever visits a great person must carry him a present. "It is counted uncivil," says Maunderell, p. 26, "to visit in this country without an offering in hand. All great men expect it as a tribute due to their character and authority; and look upon themselves as affronted, and indeed defrauded, when the compliment is omitted." Hence תָּרַח shur, to visit a person, is equivalent to making him a present; and תָּרַח teshureh, signifies a present made on such occasions; as our translators have rightly rendered it, 1 Sam. ix. 7, on which Jarchi says, Menachem exponit תָּרַח teshureh, quod significat oblationem sive munus, ut aliquis aspiciat faciam regis, aut alicujus magnatis. ["Menachem expounds תָּרַח teshureh, of an offering or gift which is presented in order to be admitted into the presence of the king or some great man."]

Verse 10. Yet saidst thou not, There is no hope—(Thou hast said, There is no hope). In one of the MSS. at Koningsberg, collated by Lillienthal, the words אֵין לוֹ-אִמָּרָה lo-amara, are left in the text unpointed, as suspected; and in the margin the corrector has written תָּרַח יְעֹלָמָרִי velomari. Now if we compare Jer. ii. 25, and xviii. 12, we shall find, that the subject is in both places quite the same with this of Isaiah; and the sentiment expressed, that of a desperate resolution to continue at all hazard in their idolatrous way; ¹ yet saidst thou not, There is no hope: thou hast found the ² life of thine hand; therefore thou wast not grieved.

11 And ³ of whom hast thou been afraid or feared, that thou hast lied, and hast not remembered me, nor laid ⁴ it to thy heart? ⁵ have not I held my peace even of old, and thou fearest me not?

12 I will declare thy righteousness, and thy works; for they shall not profit thee.

13 When thou criest, let thy companies deliver thee; but the wind shall carry them all away; vanity shall take ⁶ them: but he that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land, and shall inherit my holy mountain;

14 And shall say, ⁷ Cast ye up, cast ye up, prepare the way, take up the stumbling block out of the way of my people.

15 For thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, ⁸ whose name is Holy; ⁹ I dwell in the high and holy place, ¹⁰ with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, ¹¹ to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones.

16 ¹² For I will not contend for ever, neither will I be always wroth: for the spirit should fail before me, and the souls ¹³ which I have made.

17 For the iniquity of ¹⁴ his covetousness was I wroth, and smote him: ¹⁵ I hid me, and was wroth, ¹⁶ and he went on ¹⁷ frowardly in the way of his heart.

18 I have seen his ways, and ¹⁸ will heal him: I will lead him also, and restore comforts unto him, and to ¹⁹ his mourners.

19 I create ²⁰ the fruit of the lips; Peace, peace ²¹ to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the Lord; and I will heal him.

20 ²² But the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt.

21 ²³ There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked.

CHAPTER LVIII.

This elegant Chapter contains a severe reproof of the Jews on account of their vices, particularly their hypocrisy in practicing and relying on outward ceremonies, such as fasting and bodily humiliation without true repentance, 1-5. It then lays down a clear and comprehensive summary of the duties they owed to their fellow creatures, 6, 7. Large promises of happiness and prosperity are likewise annexed to the performance of these duties in a variety of the most beautiful and striking images, 8-14. Great temporal and spiritual blessings of those who keep holy the sabbath-day, 15, 16.

CRY aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and shew my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins.

2 Yet they seek me daily, and delight to know my ways, as a nation that did righteousness, and forsook not the ordinance of their God: they ask of me the ordinances of justice; they take delight in approaching to God.

practices; the very thing that in all reason we might expect here. Probably, therefore, the latter is the true reading in this place.

Verse 11. Nor laid it to thy heart—(Nor revolved it in thy mind) Eight MSS. (four ancient,) and the two oldest editions, with another, add the conjunction vau, וְאֵלֵי vau: which is confirmed by all the ancient Versions.

Even of old—(And winked) For עָלְמָדָם umeldam, which makes no good sense or construction in this place, twenty-three MSS. (seven ancient,) and three editions, have עָלְמָה (to be thus pointed עָלְמָה maelim;) Παρομοι, Septuagint; quasi non videns, “as if not seeing,” Vulgate. See Psa. x. l. The truth of this reading, so confirmed, admits of no doubt. [In one of my own MSS. the vau has been written, but afterwards struck out. Is it not because I was silent, and winked.]

Verse 12. Thy righteousness—(My righteousness) For צְדִיקָתְךָ tsedikateka, thy righteousness, the Syriac, Septuagint, MSS. Alex. and Puchom. and i. D. II. and Marchal. and in G. and the Arabic, read צְדִיקִי tsedeki, my righteousness.

Verse 13. Let thy companies deliver thee—(Let thine associates deliver thee) Thirty-nine MSS. (ten ancient) [of Dr. Kennicott, and two of my own,] and the two oldest editions, have יְצִילֶנּוּ yetsilenu, plural.

Verse 14. And shall say—(Then will I say) אָמַר amar, to be pointed as the first person future. They are the words of God, as it is plain from the conclusion of the verse; my people, אָמֵי ami.

Verse 15. For thus saith the high and lofty One—(For thus saith JEHOVAH, the high and the lofty) A MS. adds יְהוָה yehovah, after אָמַר amar, and edition Prag. 1518. So the Septuagint, Alex. and Arabic. An ancient MS. adds מִיָּהוָה.

With him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit Twelve MSS. have מִיָּהוָה, without the conjunction vau, “Pro mi velti, forte legendum יְהוָה יְצִירָה: confer Psa. cxliii. 5, et cxxxviii. 6.” SECKER. “We should perhaps read יְצִירָה yetsirah, instead of מִיָּהוָה mi yehovah. See Psa. cxliii. 5, and cxxxviii. 6.”

Verse 16. For I will not contend for ever The learned have taken a great deal of pains to little purpose on the latter part of this verse, which they suppose to be very obscure. After all their labours upon it, I think the best and easiest explication of it is given in the two following elegant passages of the Psalms, which I presume are exactly parallel to it, and very clearly express the same sentiment.

“But He in His tender mercy will forgive their sin,
And will not destroy them:
Yea, offences will He turn away His wrath,
And will not rouse up His indignation:
For He remembers that they are but flesh,
A breath that passeth, and returneth not.” Psa. lxxviii. 38, 39.
“He will not always contend,
Neither will He for ever hold His wrath:
As a father yearneth toward his children,
So is JEHOVAH tenderly compassionate toward them that fear Him:
For He knoweth our frame:
He remembers that we are but dust.” Psa. ciii. 9, 10, 14.

In the former of these two passages the second line seems to be defective both in measure and sense. I suppose the word otham, them, is lost at the end; which seems to be acknowledged by the Chaldee and Vulgate, who render as if they had read, וְאֵלֵי יְהוָה vau yishchith otham.

[For the spirit—רוּחַ נְשָׁמָה, the animal life. And the souls—נְשָׁמוֹת נִשְׁמָוֹת, the immortal spirits. The Targum understands this of the resurrection. I will restore the souls of the dead, i. e. to their bodies.]

Verse 17. For the iniquity of his covetousness was I wroth—(Because of his iniquity for a short time was I wroth) For בָּצַק batsaq, I read בָּצַק batsaq, a little while, from בָּצַק batsaq, he cut off; as the Septuagint read and render it, βαρυς ra, “a certain short space.” Propter iniquitatem avaritiæ ejus, “because of the iniquity of his avarice,” the rendering of the Vulgate, which our translators, and I believe all others follow, is surely quite beside the purpose.

[Verse 18. I have seen his ways—Probably these verses refer to the restoration of the Jews from captivity.]

Verse 19. I create the fruit of the lips “The sacrifice of praise,” saith St. Paul, Heb. xiii. 15, “is the fruit of the lips.” God creates this fruit of the lips, by giving new subject and cause of thanksgiving by His mercies conferred on those among His people, who acknowledge and bewail their transgressions, and return to Him. The great subject of thanksgiving is peace; reconciliation and pardon offered to them that are nigh, and to them that are afar off; not only to the Jew, but also to the Gentile, as St. Paul more than once applies those terms, Eph. ii. 13, 17; see also Acts ii. 39.

[Peace to him that is far off—“That is, to the penitent; and to him that is near, i. e. the righteous.” Kimchi.]

Verse 22. There is no peace, saith my God For אֵין שְׁלוֹמֵי elohai, twenty-two MSS. (five ancient) [of Kennicott, thirty of De Rossi, and one ancient of my own,] read אֵין יְהוָה yehovah; the Vulgate, Septuagint, Alex. and Arabic, and three MSS., have both. This verse has reference to the nineteenth. The perseveringly wicked and impenitent are excluded from all share in that peace above mentioned; that reconciliation and pardon, which is promised to the penitent only. The forty-eighth chapter ends with the same declaration; to express the exclusion of the unbelievers and impenitent from the benefit of the foregoing promises.

NOTES ON CHAPTER LVIII.

[Verse 1. Cry aloud, spare not—Never was a louder cry against the hypocrisy, nor a more cutting reproof of the wickedness of a people professing a national established religion, having all the forms of godliness without a particle of its power. This Chapter has been often appointed to be read on political fast days for the success of wars carried on for—God knows what purposes; and originating in—God knows what motives. Politically speaking, was ever any thing more injudicious.]

14 'Then shalt thou delight thyself in the LORD; and I will cause thee to ride upon the high places of the earth, and feed thee with the heritage of Jacob thy father: for the mouth of the LORD hath spoken it.

CHAPTER LIX.

This Chapter contains a more general reproof of the wickedness of the Jews, 1-8. After this they are represented confounding their sins, and deploring the unpopularity consequent on them, 9-15. On the act of humiliation God, ever ready to pardon the penitent, promises that he will have mercy on them; that the Redeemer will come, subdue to save; and that He will deliver His people, subdue His enemies, and establish a new and everlasting covenant, 16-24.

Olymp. XVII. l. or. ana. Nans. Rom. R. Rom. 4. BEHOLD, the LORD's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that it cannot hear.

4 None calleth for justice, nor any pleadeth for truth: they trust in vanity, and speak lies; they conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity.

5 They hatch cockatrice' eggs, and weave the spider's web: he that eateth of their eggs dieth, and that which is crushed breaketh out into a viper.

6 Their webs shall not become garments, neither shall they cover themselves with their works: their works are works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands.

words) It is necessary to add some epithet to make out the sense: the Septuagint say angry words; the Chaldee, words of violence. If any such epithet is lost here, the safest way is to supply it by the prophet's own expression, ver. 9, און און ודאבר אען, ossia words; that is, profane, impious, injurious, &c.

The additional epithet seems unnecessary; the Vulgate and Syriac have it not; and the sense is good without it: two ways, first by taking און ודאבר for a noun, and און דאבר for the participle pabul, and rendering,-

*From pursuing thy pleasure and the thing resolved on.

Or, secondly, by supposing the force of the preposition מ mem, to have been continued from the verb און ודאבר mem-malco to the verb און ודאבר immediately following, and rendering,-

*From enjoying thy pleasure, and from speaking words concerning it.

But the first seems the easier rendering." Dr. Juss.

[Verse 14. Then shalt thou delight thyself-If all fasts and religious observations be carried on in the spirit and manner recommended above, God's blessing will attend every ordinance. But in public fasts, prescribed not in the Book of God, but by the rulers of nations, (in general very unft persons,) care should be taken that the cause is good, and that God's blessing may be safely implored in it.

France has lately fasted and prayed that they might be able to subjugate Spain,—restore and establish the horrible inquisition,—and utterly destroy all the liberties of the people! Is this such a fast as God hath chosen?—A. D. 1823.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER LIX.

The foregoing elegant Chapter contained a severe reproof of the Jews, in particular for their hypocrisy in pretending to make themselves accepted with God by fasting and outward humiliation without true repentance; while they still continued to oppress the poor, and indulge their own passions and vices: with great promises, however, of God's favour, on condition of their reformation. This Chapter contains a more general reproof of their wickedness, bloodshed, violence, falsehood, injustice. At ver. 9. they are introduced as making, themselves, an ample confession of their sins, and deploring their wretched state in consequence of them. On this act of humiliation a promise is given that God, in His mercy and zeal for His people, will rescue them from this miserable condition; that the Redeemer will come like a mighty Hero to deliver them: He will destroy His enemies, convert both Jews and Gentiles to Himself, and give them a new covenant, and a law which shall never be abolished.

As this Chapter is remarkable for the beauty, strength, and variety, of the images with which it abounds; so is it peculiarly distinguished by the elegance of the composition, and the exact construction of the sentences. From the first verse to the two last it falls regularly into stanzas haste to shed innocent blood: their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and destruction are in their paths.

8 The way of peace they know not; and there is no judgment in their goings: they have made them crooked paths: whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace.

9 Therefore is judgment far from us, neither doth justice overtake us: we wait for light, but behold obscurity; for brightness, but we walk in darkness.

10 We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes: we stumble at noon day as in the night; we are in desolate places as dead men.

11 We roar all like bears, and mourn sore like doves: we look for judgment, but there is none; for salvation, but it is far off from us.

12 For our transgressions are multiplied before thee, and our sins testify against us: for our transgressions are with us; and as for our iniquities, we know them;

13 In transgressing and lying against the LORD, and departing away from our God, speaking oppression and revolt, conceiving and uttering from the heart words of falsehood.

14 And judgment is turned away backward, and justice standeth afar off: for truth is fallen in the street, and equity cannot enter.

15 Yea, truth faileth; and he that departeth from evil maketh himself a prey: and the LORD of four lines, (see Prelim. Dissert. p. xxi,) which I have endeavoured to express, as nearly as possible, in the form of the original.

Verse 2. His face] For פניו panim, faces, I read פניו panaviv, his face. So the Syriac, Alexandrian, Arabic, and Vulgate. פניו panu, MS. Forte legendum פניו panu, nam n mem, sequitur, et loquitur Deus; confer cap. lviii.

14. ["We should perhaps read פניו panu; for n mem follows, and God is the Speaker."] שוכחא. I rather think that the speech of God was closed with the last Chapter, and that this Chapter is delivered in the person of the prophet.

Verse 3. Your tongue-(And your tongue) An ancient MS. and the Septuagint and Vulgate, add the conjunction.

[Verse 4. They conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity-There is a curious propriety in this mode of expression:-a thought or purpose is compared to conception;-a word, or act, which is the consequence of it, to the birth of a child. From the third to the fifteenth verse inclusive, may be considered a true statement of the then moral state of the Jewish people; and that they were, in the most proper sense of the word, guilty of the iniquities with which they are charged.]

Verse 8. Whosoever goeth therein shall not know peace-(Whoever goeth in them knoweth not peace) For הוה bah, singular, read הוה bam, plural, with the Septuagint, Syriac, Vulgate, and Chaldee. The ה he, is upon a rasure in one MS. Or, for נתיבותם natibotehem, plural, we must read נתיבותם natibotam, singular, as it is in an ancient MS., to preserve the grammatical concord.

Verse 10. We stumble at noonday as in the night-(We stumble at midday, as in the twilight) I adopt here an emendation of Houbigant, רעוה נעוהגאגח, instead of the second, נעוה נעוהגאגח, the repetition of which has a poverty and inelegance extremely unworthy of the prophet, and unlike his manner. The mistake is of long standing, being prior to all the ancient Versions. It was a very easy and obvious mistake, and I have little doubt of our having recovered the true reading in this ingenious correction.

Verse 11. But it is far off from us-(And it is far distant from us) The conjunction ו vacu, must necessarily be prefixed to the verb, as the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, found it in their copies; און ודאבר verachakah, and far off.

[Verse 14. Justice standeth afar off-און ודאבר tadekah, righteousness,-put here, says Kimchi, for alms to the poor. This casts some light on Matt. vi. 1. Take heed that you do not your alms אלהאון ודאבר but the best copies have אלהאון ודאבר, righteousness; the former having been inserted in the Text at first merely as the explanation of the genuine and original word.]

Verse 15. And the LORD saw it-(And יהוה saw it)-] This third line of the stanza appears manifestly my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed, saith the LORD, from henceforth and for ever.

CHAPTER LX.

The glorious prospect displayed in this Chapter seems to have elevated the Prophet even above his usual majesty. The subject is the very flourishing condition of the church of Jesus Christ at that period of the Gospel dispensation when both Jews and Gentiles shall become one fold under one shepherd. The imagery employed is of the most consoling and magnificent description. This blessed state of the world shall follow a time of gross darkness, &c. The universal diffusion of vital godliness beautifully set forth by a great variety of images, &c. The everlasting duration and spotless purity of the kingdom of Christ, &c. A time appointed in the councils of Jehovah for the commencement of this happy period; and when this time arrives, the particulars of the prophecy shall have a speedy accomplishment, &c. Or. XVII. l.

ARISE, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the LORD is risen upon thee.

2 For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the LORD shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee.

And my words which I have put in thy mouth—Whatever Jesus spoke, was the word and mind of God Himself; and must, as such, be implicitly received.

Nor out of the mouth of thy seed—The same doctrines which Jesus preached, all His faithful ministers preach;—and His seed,—genuine Christians, who are all born of God, believe; and they shall continue, and the doctrines remain in the seed's seed through all generations for ever and ever. This is God's covenant, ordered in all things, and sure.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER LX.

The subject of this Chapter is the great increase and flourishing state of the church of God by the conversion and accession of the Heathen nations to it; which is set forth in such ample and exalted terms, as plainly shew that the full completion of this prophecy is reserved for future times. This subject is displayed in the most splendid colours under a great variety of images highly poetical, designed to give a general idea of the glories of that perfect state of the church of God which we are taught to expect in the latter times; when the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in, and the Jews shall be converted and gathered from their dispersions; and the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of His Christ.

Of the use in prophecy of general or common poetical images, in setting forth the greatness and importance of a future event universally, without descending to particulars, or too minutely explaining circumstances, I have already pretty largely treated in the twentieth prelection on the Hebrew poetry; and have more than once observed in these Notes, that such images are not always to be applied particularly to persons and things, and were never intended to be minutely explained. I shall add here the opinion of a very learned and judicious person upon this subject:—"It is, I think, a mark of right understanding in the language of prophecy, and in the design of prophecy too, to keep to what appears the design and meaning of the prophecy in general, and what the whole of it, laid together, points out to us; and not to suffer a warm imagination to mislead us from the real intention of the spirit of the prophecy, by following uncertain applications of the parts of it." Lowman on the Revelation, Note on chap. xix. 21. [To this testimony I must add my own. This is one of the most glorious chapters in the whole of the Old Testament. The splendour, glory, and excellence of the Church of Christ are here pointed out in a language which the Spirit of God alone is capable of using. But when shall this state of blessedness take place? Lord, thou only knowest.

Verse 1. Arise—Call upon God, through Christ, for His salvation,—and Shine—ori, be illuminated—for till thou arise and call upon God, thou wilt never receive true light.

For thy light is come—י כי בא אור, ki ba orec, for thy light cometh. The Messiah is at the door: who, while He is a light to lighten the Gentiles, will be the glory, the fulfilment, of His people Israel.

Verse 2. Darkness shall cover the earth—This is the state of the Gentile people.

Verse 3. And the Gentiles shall come—This has been in some sort already fulfilled. The Gentiles have received the light of the gospel from the land of Judea, and the Gentile kings have embraced that gospel; so that many nations of the earth are full of the doctrine of Christ.]

Verse 4. Shall be nursed at thy side—(Shall be carried at the side.) For תאמנאח, teamanah, shall be nursed, the Septuagint and Chaldee read תאמנאח tenashanah, shall 5 Then thou shalt see, and flow together, and thine heart shall fear, and be enlarged; because the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, the forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee.

6 The multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah, all they from Sheba shall come: they shall bring gold and incense; and they shall shew forth the praises of the LORD.

7 All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee, the rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee: they shall come with up with be carried. A MS. has בכתף תאמנאח al cataph tenashanah, shall be carried on the shoulder, instead of נר לך תאמנאח tsad teamenah, shall be nursed on the side. Another MS. has both בכתף cataph and נר tsad. Another MS. has it thus: תאמנאח תאמנאח: teamenah: teamenah, with a line drawn over the first word. Sir John Chardin says that it is the general custom in the East to carry their children astride upon the hip, with the arm round their body. His MS. note on this place is as follows: Coutume en Orient de porter les enfans sur le coeste à califourchon sur la hanche: cette façon est generale aux Indes; les enfans se tiennent comme cela, et la personne qui les porte les embrasse et serre par le corps; parceque sont [ni] emmailletés, ni en robes qui les embrassent. ["In the East it is the custom to carry the children on the haunch, with the legs astride. This is the general custom in India. The children support themselves in this way, and the arm of the nurse goes round the body and presses the child close to the side; and this they can easily do, as the children are not swathed, nor encumbered with clothes."] Non brachiis occidentalium more, sed humeris, divaricatis tibiis, impositos circumferunt. ["They carry them about not in their arms after the manner of the western nations, but on their shoulders; the children being placed astride."] Colonic. Iter. Syr. cap. xiv. This last quotation seems to favour the reading נר לך בכתף al cataph, on the shoulder, as the Septuagint likewise do: but upon the whole I think that תאמנאח בכתף tsad tenashanah is the true reading, which the Chaldee favours; and I have accordingly followed it. See chap. lxxi. 12.

Verse 5. Then thou shalt see—(Then shalt thou fear) For תראי terai, thou shalt see, as ours and much the greater number of the translators, ancient and modern, render it, forty MSS. (ten ancient,) [of Kennicott, and twenty-eight of De Rossi, with one ancient of my own,] and the old Edition of 1498, have תראי תראי, thou shalt fear; the true reading, confirmed by the perfect parallelism of the sentences: the heart ruffled and dilated in the second line answering to the fear and joy expressed in the first. The prophet Jeremiah, chap. xxxiii. 9, has the same natural and elegant sentiment:—

"And [this city] shall become to me a name of joy; A praise and an honour for all the nations of the earth; Which shall hear all the good that I do unto thee: And they shall fear, and they shall tremble, at all the goodness, And at all the prosperity, that I procure unto her."

And David:

"I will praise thee, for I am fearfully and wonderfully made."

His Sibi me rebus quodam divinis coelestibus Percipit alique horror." Lucret. iii. 28.

Recenti mens trepidant metu, Plenoque Bacchi pectore turbidum Latatur. Hor. Carm. li. 19. l. 8.

Verse 6. The praises of the LORD—(And the praise of Jehovah.) Thirty-three MSS. and three Editions have תרועות utchilut, in the singular number; and so read the ancient Versions [and one of my own MSS.]

Verse 7. The rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee] Vitringa (on the place) understands their ministering, and ascending, or going up, on the altar, as offering themselves voluntarily: ipsi se, non expectato sacerdote alio, gloria ac sanctificationi Divini nominis ulro ac libenter obtuluri. ["They, waiting for no priest, go and freely offer themselves to the glory and sanctification of the sacred name."] This gives a very elegant and poetical turn to the image. It was a general notion that prevailed with sacrificers among the Heathen, that the victim's being brought without reluctance to the altar was a good omen; acceptance on mine altar, and I will glorify the house of my glory.

8 Who are these that fly as a cloud, and as the doves to their windows?

9 Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them, unto the name of the Lord thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee.

10 And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee: for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favour have I had mercy on thee.

11 Therefore thy gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the forces of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought.

12 For the nation and kingdom that will not serve thee shall perish; yea, those nations shall be utterly wasted.

13 The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir tree, the pine tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary; and I will make the place of my feet glorious.

14 The sons also of them that afflicted thee shall come bending unto thee; and all they that despised thee shall bow themselves down at the soles of thy feet; and they shall call thee, The city of the Lord, The Zion of the Holy One of Israel.

15 Whereas thou hast been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations.

16 Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles, and shalt suck the breast of kings: and thou shalt know that I the Lord am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the Mighty One of Jacob.

17 For brass I will bring gold, and for iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron: I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exactors righteousness.

18 Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders; but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise.

19 The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting light, and thy God thy glory.

20 Thy sun shall no more go down; neither shall thy moon withdraw itself: for the LoRD shall be thine everlasting light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended.

21 Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified.

22 A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in his time.

CHAPTER LXI.

The subject of the preceding Chapter is continued in this; and to give it the greater solemnity, the Messiah is introduced describing His character and office, and confirming the large promise made before, 1-2. In consequence of this the Jewish church is introduced praising God for the honour done her by her restoration in favour, and by the accession of the Gentiles, which is beautifully described by allusions to the rich poetical dress of the high priest; a happy allusion to express the ornaments of a restored nation and of a renewed mind. Certainty of the prophecy illustrated by a figure drawn from the vegetable kingdom, 11.

THE Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound;

2 To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn;

Verse 3. And as the doves to their windows—(And like doves upon the wing) Instead of ימ אל, to, forty-two MSS. [of Kennicott, and one of mine] have על אל, upon. For אבריהם arabateyhem, their windows, read אבריהם arabateyhem, their wings, transposing a letter. Houbigant. The Septuagint render it εν νεωτοις, with their young; they read αφαρδιημ apharchiηem,—nearer to the latter than to the present reading.

Verse 9. The ships of Tarsish first—(The ships of Tarshish among the first) For ברישון berishonah, twenty-five MSS. and the Syriac read כברישון keberishonah, as at the first. [The ships of Tarsish as at the first; that is, as they brought gold and silver in the days of Solomon.]

Verse 13. And I will make the place of my feet glorious—(And that I may glorify the place whereon I rest my feet) The temple of Jerusalem was called the house of God, and the place of His rest, or residence. The visible symbolical appearance of God, called by the Jews the Shechinah, was in the most holy place, between the wings of the cherubim, above the ark. This is considered as the throne of God, presiding as king over the Jewish state; and as a footstool is a necessary appendage of a throne, (see Note on chap. lii. 2) the ark is considered as the footstool of God, and is so called, Psa. xcix. 5; 1 Chron. xxviii. 2.

The glory of Lebanon] That is, the cedar.

Verse 19. Neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee—(Nor by night shall the brightness of the moon enlighten thee) This line, as it stands in the present text, seems to be defective. The Septuagint and Chaldee both express the night, which is almost necessary to answer to day in the preceding line, as well as to perfect the sense here. I therefore think that we ought, upon the authority of the Septuagint and Chaldee, to read either וְלַיְלָאִה velaylah, and by night, instead of וְלַיְלָאִה וְלַיְלָאִה ulenogah, and for brightness; or וְלַיְלָאִה וְלַיְלָאִה ulenogah balaylah, adding the word וְלַיְלָאִה balaylah, by night.

Verse 21. Of my planting] γρη μιλι, so with the Keri read forty-four MSS. (seven ancient), and six Editions; with which agree the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate.

[Verse 22. I the Lord will hasten it in his time—There is a time set for the fulfilment of this prophecy: that time must come before it begins to take place;—but when it does begin, the whole will be performed in a short space. It is not, therefore, the time determined for the event that shall be hastened,—but all the circumstances of the event; all the parts of the prediction shall be speedily completed. ¶ The Verse in this time suddenly shall have this. Old MS. Bible. And, because it is the Lord, therefore it will be done: for although it be difficult, He is almighty.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER LXI.

Verse 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me—(The Spirit of Jehovah is upon me) The Septuagint, Vulgate, and St. Luke (chap. iv. 18,) and a MS., and two old Editions, omit the word וְיָאֵהוּהוּ adonai, the Lord, which was probably added to the Text through the superstition of the Jews, to prevent the pronunciation of the word רַחֵם yehovah, following. See Kennicott on the State of the Printed Hebrew Text, Vol. i. p. 510.

[In most of Isaiah's prophecies there is a primary and secondary sense; or a remote subject illustrated by one that is near. The deliverance of the Jews from their captivity in Babylon is constantly used to shadow forth the salvation of men by Jesus Christ. Even the prophet himself is a typical person; and is sometimes intended to represent the great Saviour. It is evident from Luke iv. 18, that this is a prophecy of our blessed Lord and His preaching; and yet it is as evident that it primarily refers to Isaiah preaching the glad tidings of deliverance to the Jews.]

The opening of the prison—(Perfect liberty) מַפְּקַח פַּקַּח pakach coach. Ten MSS. [of Kennicott, several of De Rossi, and one of my own, with the Complutensian,] have מַפְּקַח פַּקַּח coach, in one word; and so the Septuagint and Vulgate appear to have taken it: [not merely opening of prisons, but every kind of liberty;—complete redemption.]

The proclaiming of perfect liberty to the bound, and the year of acceptance with Jehovah, is a manifest allusion to the proclaiming of the year of jubilee by sound of trumpet.

CHAPTER LXII.

The Prophet opens this chapter with ardent prayers that the happy period of reconciliation just now promised, and here again foretold, may be hastened, 1-5. He then calls upon the faithful, particularly the priests and Levites, to join him, urging the promises, and even the oath, of Jehovah as the foundation of their request, 6-8. And, relying on this oath, he goes on to speak of the general restoration promised, as already performing; and calls to the people to march forth, and to the various nations among whom they are dispersed to prepare the way for them, as God had caused the order for their return to be universally proclaimed, 10-12.

[Verse 1. For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace—These are the words of JEHOVAH declaring His purpose relative to the events predicted in the preceding Chapter.

Thou shalt be called by a new name.—Viz. CHRISTIAN—or, as in the fourth verse, חַפְצֵי-בַּהַר chaphetsi bah, "my delight is in her"—because she has now received that command, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; HEAR HIM."

Verse 4. Thy land Beulah—בְּעוּלָה bēulah, married. In the prophets, a desolate land is represented under the notion of a widow;—an inhabited land, under that of a married woman, who has both a husband and children.]

Verse 5. For as a young man—so—The particles of comparison are not at present in the Hebrew Text: but the Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee, seem to have read in their copies כַּפֵּחַ prefixed to the verb, כִּי כִיכֵל ki keykhal, which seems to have been omitted by mistake of a transcriber, occasioned by the repetition of the same two letters. And before the verb in the second line a MS. adds כֵּן ki ken, so; which the Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee, seem also to have had in their copies. In the third line of this verse the same MS. has in like manner רִכְשָׁם rekemasos, and two MSS. and the Babylonish Talmud, כִּשְׁמָם kemasos, adding the כַּפֵּחַ; and in the fourth line, the Babylonish Talmud likewise adds כֵּן ki ken, so, before the verb.

Sir John Chardin, in his Note on this place, tells us, "that it is the custom in the East for youths, that were never married, always to marry virgins; and widowers, however young, to marry widows." HARMER, Observ. ii. p. 482.

[So shall thy sons marry thee.—For בָּנֵי בָנִים, thy sons, Bishop Lowth reads, restorer, or builder—as he does not consider the word as the plural of בֵּן ben, a son: but the participle benoni of the verb בָּנָה banah, he built. I do not see that we gain much by this translation. Thy sons shall dwell in thee, Vulgate; and so the Septuagint and Chaldee.]

Verse 6. Ye that make mention of the LORD, keep not silence] The faithful, and in particular the priests and Levites, are exhorted by the Prophet to beseech God with unremitting importunity, (compare Luke xviii. 1, &c.) to hasten the redemption of Sion. The image in this place is taken from the temple service; in which there was appointed a constant watch, day and night, by the Levites: and among them this seems to have belonged particularly to the singers, see 1 Chron. ix. 33. Now the watches in the East, even to this day, are performed by a loud cry from time to time of the watchmen, to mark the time, and that very frequently, and in order to shew that they themselves are constantly attentive to their duty. Hence the watchmen are said by the Prophet, chap. lii. 8, to lift up their voice; and here they are commanded, not to keep silence; and the greatest reproach to them is, that they are dumb dogs; they cannot bark; dreamers, sluggards, loving to slumber, chap. lvi. 10. "The watchmen in the camp of the caravans go their rounds crying one after another, 'God is One, He is merciful;' and often add, 'Take heed to yourselves.'" TAVERNIER, Voyage de

5 For as a young man marieth a virgin so shall thy sons marry thee: and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.

6 I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that make mention of the LORD, keep not silence,

7 And give him no rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth.

8 The LORD hath sworn by his right hand, and by the arm of his strength, Surely I will no more give thy corn to be meat for thine enemies; and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast laboured:

9 But they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the LORD; and they that have brought it together shall drink it in the courts of my holiness.

10 Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the highway; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people.

Perse, Liv. i. chap. x. The hundred and thirty-fourth Psalm gives us an example of the temple watch. The whole Psalm is nothing more than the alternate cry of two different divisions of the watch. The first watch addresses the second, reminding them of their duty: the second answers by a solemn blessing. The address and the answer seem both to be a set form, which each division proclaimed, or sung aloud, at stated intervals, to notify the time of the night:—

First Chorus.

"Come on now, bless ye JEHOVAH, all ye servants of JEHOVAH; Ye that stand in the house of JEHOVAH in the night: Lift up your hands towards the sanctuary, And bless ye JEHOVAH."

Second Chorus.

"JEHOVAH bless thee out of Zion; He that made heaven and earth."

["Ye who stand in the place of the watch, in the house of the sanctuary of the Lord; and ye praise through the nights:"]—says the Chaldee paraphrase on the second line. And this explains what is here particularly meant by proclaiming, or making remembrance of, the name of JEHOVAH: the form, which the watch made use of on these occasions, was always a short sentence, expressing some pious sentiment, of which JEHOVAH was the subject; and it is remarkable, that the custom in the East in this respect also still continues the very same; as it appears by the example above given from Tavernier.

And this observation leads to the explanation of an obscure passage in the prophet Malachi, chap. ii. 12.

"JEHOVAH will cut off the man that doeth this: The watchman and the answerer, from the tabernacles of Jacob; And him that presenteth an offering to JEHOVAH God of hosts."

רִבְנָה אֶרְוֵאנָה, the master and the scholar, says our translation after the Vulgate: the son and the grandson, says the Syriac and Chaldee as little to the purpose: Arias Montanus has given it, vigilantem et respondentem, "the watchman and the answerer;" that is, the Levite: and "him that presenteth an offering to JEHOVAH;" that is, the priest. [Ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence.—Is not this clause an address to the ministers of Christ, to continue in supplication for the conversion of the Jewish people? Kimchi seems to think that the watchmen are the interceding angels!]

Verse 9. But they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the LORD] This and the following line have reference to the law of Moses: "Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thy oil;—but thou must eat them before the Lord thy God, in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose," Deut. xii. 17, 18. "And when ye shall come into the land, and shall have planted all manner of trees for food, then ye shall count the fruit thereof as uncircumcised: three years it shall be as uncircumcised unto you; it shall not be eaten of. But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy to praise the Lord withal. And in the fifth year ye shall eat the fruit thereof," Lev. xix. 23—25. This clearly explains the force of the expressions, "shall praise JEHOVAH," and "shall drink it in my sacred courts."

Five MSS. (one ancient) have יַשְׁתְּנוּ yeakaluhu, they shall eat it, fully expressed: and so likewise יַשְׁתְּנוּ יַשְׁתְּנוּ yishituhu, they shall drink it, is found in nineteen MSS., three of them ancient.

Verse 10. Of the people—(For the people)] Before the 11 Behold, the Lord hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, ' Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him.

CHAPTER LXIII.

The Prophet, (or rather the church he represents) sees the great Deliverer, long promised and expected, making His appearance, after having crushed His enemies, like grapes in the wine-vat. The comparison suggests a lively idea of the wrath of Omnipotence, which His unhappy objects can no more resist than the grapes can resist the treader. In deed there is so much pathos, energy, and sublimity, in this remarkable passage, as hardly any thing can be conceived to exceed. The period to which it refers must be the same as that predicted in the nineteenth chapter of the Revelation, some parts of which are expressed in the same terms with this, and plainly enough refer to the very sad and fatal overthrow of Antichrist, and of all his adherents and auxiliaries, of which the destruction of Babylon, the capital of Chaldaea, and of Bozrah, the chief city of the Edomites, was the prototype, [—6. At the seventh verse commences a penitential confession and supplication of the Jews, as uttered in their present dispersion, 7—18.]

word אֲנִי הָאָם, the people, two MSS. insert אֲנִי יהוה, Jehovah; one MS. adds the same word אֲנִי; and eight MSS. (three ancient,) instead of אֲנִי האָם, have אֲנִי יהוה, and so likewise one Edition. But though it makes a good sense either way, I believe it to be an interpolation, as the ancient Versions do not favour it. The Septuagint indeed read אֲנִי אַמִּי, my people.

[Verse 11. Unto the end of the world—אֶל קֵץ הָאָרֶץ al ketsah haarets.—Instead of אֶל al, to, יד עד, unto, is the reading of two of Kennicott's MSS.; and one of mine has אֶרֶץ mikketsah, "FROM the end of the earth."]

Behold, thy salvation cometh—(Lo, thy Saviour cometh)] So all the ancient Versions render the word אֲנִי אֱלֹהִים.

Behold, his reward] See note on chap. xl. 10, 11. [This reward He carries, as it were, in His hand. His work is before Him—He perfectly knows what is to be done: and is perfectly able to do it. He will do what God should do, and what man cannot do; and men should be workers with Him. Let no man fear that the promise shall not be fulfilled on account of its difficulty, its greatness, the hindrances in the way, or the unworthiness of the person to whom it is made. It is God's work; He is able to do it, and as willing as He is able.]

Verse 12. They shall call them—These characteristics seem to be put in their inverted order.—1. God will not forsake them. 2. They shall be sought out. 3. They shall be redeemed. And, 4. Be in consequence a holy people. 1. When God calls, it is a proof that He has not forsaken. 2. When He seeks, it is a proof He is waiting to be gracious. 3. When the atonement is exhibited, all things are then ready. 4. And when that is received, holiness of heart and life is then to be kept continually in view, as this is the genuine work of God's spirit; and without holiness none shall see the Lord.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER LXIII.

The very remarkable passage with which this Chapter begins, seems to me to be in a manner detached from the rest, and to stand singly by itself; having no immediate connexion with what goes before, or with what follows; otherwise than as it may pursue the general design, and stand in its proper place in the order of prophecy. It is by many learned interpreters supposed that Judas Maccabeus and his victories make the subject of it. What claim Judas can have to so great an honour will, I think, be very difficult to make out; or how the attributes of the great person introduced can possibly suit him. Could Judas call himself the announcer of righteousness, mighty to save? Could he talk of the day of vengeance being in his heart, and the year of his redeemed being come? or that his own arm wrought salvation for him? Besides, what were the great exploits of Judas in regard to the Idumeans? he overcame them in battle and slew twenty thousand of them. And John Hyrcanus, his brother Simon's son and successor, who is called in to help out the accomplishment of the prophecy, gave them another defeat some time afterward, and compelled them by force to become proselytes to the Jewish religion, and to submit to circumcision: after which they were incorporated with the Jews, and became one people with them. Are these events adequate to the prophet's lofty prediction? Was it so great an action to win a battle with considerable slaughter of the enemy; or to force a whole nation, by dint of the sword, into Judaism? or was the conversion of the Idumeans, however effected, and their admission into the church of God, equivalent to a most grievous judgment and destruction threatened in the severest terms? But here is another very material cir-

Bozrah? this that is 'glorious in his apparel, travelling in the greatness of his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save.

2 Wherefore 'art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the winefat?

3 I have trodden the winepress alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment.

4 For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come.

5 ' And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore mine own arm brought salvation unto me; and my fury, it upheld me.

cumstance to be considered, which, I presume, entirely excludes Judas Maccabeus, and even the Idumeans properly so called. For the Idumea of the prophet's time was quite a different country from that which Judas conquered. For during the Babylonish captivity the Nabatheans had driven the Edomites out of their country; who upon that took possession of the southern parts of Judea, and settled themselves there; that is, in the country of the whole tribe of Simeon, and in half of that of Judah. See Prideaux, ad An. 740, and 165. And the metropolis of the Edomites, and of the country thence called Idumea, which Judas took, was Hebron, 1 Macc. v. 65, not Botara.

I conclude, therefore, that this prophecy has not the least relation to Judas Maccabeus. It may be asked, to whom, and to what event does it relate? I can only answer, that I know of no event in history to which, from its importance and circumstances, it can be applied: unless, perhaps, to the destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish polity; which, in the gospel, is called the coming of Christ, and the days of vengeance, Matt. xvi. 28; Luke xxi. 22. But, though this prophecy must have its accomplishment, there is no necessity of supposing that it has been already accomplished. There are prophecies, which intimate a great slaughter of the enemies of God and His people, which remain to be fulfilled; these in Ezekiel, chap. xxxviii. and in the Revelation of St. John, chap. xx. are called Gog and Magog. This prophecy of Isaiah may possibly refer to the same or the like event. We need not be at a loss to determine the Person who is here introduced, as stained with treading the wine-press, if we consider how St. John, in the Revelation, has applied this image of the prophet, Rev. xix. 13, 15, 16. Compare chap. xxxiv.

[Verse 1. Who is this that cometh from Edom—Probably both Edom and Bozrah are only figurative expressions to point out the place in which God should discomfit His enemies. Edom signifies red; and Bozrah, a vintage. Kimchi interprets the whole, of the destruction of Rome.]

I that speak in righteousness—(I who publish righteousness)] A MS. has אֲנִי הַמְדַבֵּר ha-medaber, with the demonstrative article added, with greater force and emphasis; The announcer of righteousness. A MS. has אֲנִי תֵדַעkah, without כ be, prefixed; and so the Septuagint and Vulgate. And thirty-eight MS. (seven ancient,) [of Dr. Kennicott, and many of De Rossi, and one of my own,] add the conjunction ו sau to כ be, and mighty; which the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate, confirm.

Verse 2. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel] For אֲנִי אֱלֹהִים alibusheca, twenty-nine MSS. (nine ancient) [of Kennicott, and thirty of De Rossi,] and one edition, have אֲנִי אֱלֹהִים alibusheyca, in the plural: so the Septuagint and Syriac. And all the ancient Versions read it with מ mem, instead of the first ל lamed. But the true reading is probably אֲנִי אֱלֹהִים alibusheca, in the singular, as in ver. 3.

[Verse 3. And of the people there was none with me— I was wholly abandoned by them: but a good meaning is, No man has had any part in making the atonement; it is entirely the work of the Messiah alone. No created being could have any part in a sacrifice that was to be of infinite merit.]

And I will stain—(And I have stained)] For אֲנִי אֱלֹהִים egalati, a verb of very irregular formation, compounded, as they say, of the two forms of the preterit and future, a MS. has אֲנִי אֱלֹהִים egalehu, the regular future with a pleonastic pronoun added to it, according to the Hebrew idiom. "And all my raiment, I have stained it." The necessity of the verb's being in the past time seems to have given occasion to the alteration made in the end of the word.

6 And I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury, and I will bring down their strength to the earth.

7 I will mention the loving-kindnesses of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord, according to all that the Lord hath bestowed on us, and the great goodness toward the house of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his loving-kindnesses.

8 For he said, Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was their Saviour.

9 In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the angel of his presence saved them: in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old.

10 But they rebelled, and vexed his holy Spirit: therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against them.

11 Then he remembered the days of old, Moses, and his people, saying, Where is he that brought them up out of the sea with the shepherd of his flock? where is he that put his holy Spirit within him?

12 That led them by the right hand of Moses, with his glorious arm, dividing the water before them, to make himself an everlasting name?

13 That led them through the deep as a horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble?

14 As a beast goeth down into the valley, the Spirit of the Lord caused him to rest: so didst

The conversive וְ, at the beginning of the sentence, affects the verb, though not joined to it; of which there are many examples:

וְשָׁמַעְתָּ רִמְסֵי אֲרִימֹתַי ānīnī remīm amikerney

"And thou wilt hear me, (or hear thou me) from among the horns of the unicorns." Psa. xxx. 31.

[Instead of אֶל עַל בגדיי אל begadai, upon my garments, one of my ancient MSS. has אֶל עַל לְאֵרֵי בגדיי laarei begadai, to the earth: but this word is partly effaced, and אֶל written in the margin by a later hand.]

Verse 5. And my fury.—(And mine indignation) For יַחֲמוֹתֵיךְ pachamoti, nineteen MSS. (three ancient) [of Kennicott, nine of De Rossi, and one of mine], and four editions, have יְשׁוּדֵיךְ yeshudekati, and my righteousness; from chap. lix. 16, which, I suppose, the transcriber retained in his memory. [It is true that the Versions are in favour of the common reading: but that noticed above seems to stand on good authority, and is a reading both pleasing and impressive. Opposite in the margin, my MS. has the common reading by a later hand.]

Verse 6. And make them drunk in my fury.—(And I crushed them in mine indignation) For אֶשְׁכַּרְםֶם veeeshkrem, and I made them drunken, twenty-seven MSS. (three ancient) [twelve of De Rossi] and the old edition of 1483, have אֶשְׁחַבְרֵם veeeshabarem, and I crushed them: and so the Syriac and Chaldee. The Septuagint have omitted this whole line.

[Verse 7. I will mention the loving-kindnesses of the Lord.—The prophet connects the preceding mercies of God to the Jews with the present prospect he has of their redemption by the Messiah; thus making a circle in which eternal goodness revolves.] The remaining part of this Chapter, with the whole Chapter following, contains a penitential confession and supplication of the Israelites in their present state of dispersion, in which they have so long marvellously subsisted, and still continue to subsist, as a people; cast out of their country; without any proper form of civil polity, or religious worship; their temple destroyed, their city desolated and lost to them; and their whole nation scattered over the face of the earth; apparently deserted and cast off by the God of their fathers, as no longer His peculiar people.

They begin with acknowledging God's great mercies and favours to their nation; and the ungrateful returns made to them on their part; that by their disobedience they had forfeited the protection of God, and had caused Him to become their Adversary. And now the prophet represents them, induced by the memory of the great things that God had done for them, as addressing their humble supplication for the renewal of His mercies. They beseech Him to regard them in consideration of His former loving-kindness; they acknowledge Him for their Father and Creator; they confess their wickedness and hardness of heart; they entreat His forgiveness; and deplore their present miserable condition under which they have so long suffered. It seems designed as a formulary of humiliation for the Israelites, in order to their conversion.

The whole passage is in the elegiac form, pathetic and elegant: but it has suffered much in our present copy by the mistakes of transcribers.

The praises of the Lord.—(The praise of יהוה) For תְּהִלָּתוֹ תְהִלּוֹת, plural, twenty-nine MSS. (three ancient) and two editions, have תְהִלָּתוֹ תְהִלָּתוֹ, in the singular number: and so the Vulgate renders it; and one of the Greek versions, in the margin of Cod. Marchal. and in the text of MSS. Pachom. and 1. D. II. תְהִלָּתוֹ אֱלֹהֵינוּ קְרִיב, "the praise of the Lord."

Verse 8, 9. So he was their Saviour. In all their affliction.—(And he became their Saviour in all their distress) I have followed the translation of the Septuagint in the latter part of the eighth, and the former part of the ninth verse; which agrees with the present text, a little differently divided, as to the members of the sentence. They read כָּל מִיּוֹל, out of all, instead of כָּל בְּעוֹל, in all, which makes no difference in the sense; and וְיִלֵּן, they understand as וְיִלֵּן. Καὶ ἐγένετο αὐτοῖς εἰς σωτηρίαν ἐκ πάντων θλίψεων αὐτῶν ὁ ἄγγελος, οὐκ ἄγγελος. "And he was salvation to them in all their tribulation; neither an ambassador nor an angel, but Himself, saved them." An angel of His presence means an angel of superior order, in immediate attendance upon God. So the angel of the Lord says to Zacharias, "I am Gabriel, that stand in the presence of God," Luke i. 19. The presence of יהוה, Exod. xxxiii. 14, 15, and the Angel, Exod. xxxiii. 20, 21, is יהוה Himself: here an angel of His presence is opposed to יהוה Himself; as an angel is in the following passages of the same book of Exodus. After their idolatrous worshipping of the golden calf, "when God had said to Moses, I will send an angel before thee—I will not go up in the midst of thee—the people mourned," Exod. xxxiii. 2—4. God afterwards comforts Moses, by saying, "My presence," (that is, I Myself in Person, and not by an angel,) "will go with thee," ver. 14. Ἄνθρωπος προπορεύσεται σοι, "I Myself will go before thee," as the Septuagint render it.

The MSS. and editions are much divided between the two readings of the text and margin in the common copies, אֵל לו, not, and לו, to him. All the ancient Versions express the chetiv, reading אֵל לו, not.

And he bare them and carried them all the days of old.—(And he took them up, and he bore them, all the days of old) See the note on chap. xlv. 3.

Verse 10. And he fought against them] Twenty-six MSS. (ten ancient), and the first edition, with another, add the conjunction וְ, vau, וְיָחַם, vahu, and he.

Verse 11. Moses, and his people.—(Moses his servant) For מֹשֶׁה אֱמֹמוֹ, his people, two MSS. (one of them ancient) [and one of my own ancient, and one of De Rossi], and the old edition of 1483, and the Syriac, read מֹשֶׁה אֲבֵדוֹ, his servant. These two words have been mistaken one for the other in other places: Psa. lxxviii. 71, and lxxx. 5. for מֹשֶׁה אֱמֹמוֹ, "his people," and מֹשֶׁה אֲמֵמֵכָה, "thy people," the Septuagint read מֹשֶׁה אֲבֵדוֹ, "his servant," and מֹשֶׁה אֲבֵדֵכָה, "thy servant."

Where is he that brought them up out of the sea with the shepherd of his flock? where, &c.—(How he brought them up from the sea, with the shepherd of his flock; how, &c.) For הֲוֵי eih, how, interrogative, twice, the Syriac version reads הֲוֵי eih, how, without interrogation; as that particle is used in the Syriac language, and sometimes in the Hebrew. See Ruth iii. 19; Eccles. ii. 16.

The shepherd of his flock] That is, Moses. The MSS. and editions vary in this word: some have רֹעֵי רֹעֵי, in the singular number; so the Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee. Others רֹעֵי roey, plural, the shepherds.

[Verses 13, 14. That led them through the deep—as a beast goeth down into the valley.—In both these verses there is an allusion to the Israelites going through the Red Sea, in the bottom of which they found no more inconvenience than a horse would in running in the desert, where there was neither stone nor mud; nor a beast in the valley, where all was plain and smooth.]

Verse 14. The Spirit of the Lord caused him to rest.—(The Spirit of יהוה conducted them) For תְּנִיחֵנוּ tenichenu, caused him to rest, the Septuagint have ὡνάτοισιν avers, conducted them, they read trun tenechem. The Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate, read trun tenechino, conducted him. Two MSS. have the word without the yod in the middle.

Verse 15. And thy strength—(And thy mighty power) For gebureleyca, plural, thirty-two MSS. (seven ancient) [and twenty-one of De Rossi], and seven editions, have geburica, singular.

Are they restrained from us] For ali, from, (or in regard to,) me, the Septuagint and Syriac read alinu, from us.

Verse 16. Our Redeemer; thy name is from everlasting—(O deliver us for the sake of thy name) The present text reads, as our translation has rendered it, "Our Redeemer, thy name is from everlasting." But instead of meblam, from everlasting, an ancient MS. has lemlan, for the sake of, which gives a much better sense. To shew the impropriety of the present reading, it is sufficient to observe, that the Septuagint and Syriac translators thought it necessary to add aleynu, upon us, to make out the sense; that is, "Thy name is upon us, or we are called by thy name, from of old." And the Septuagint have rendered goalens, in the imperative mood, puoi hac, "deliver us."

[Verse 17. Why hast thou made us to err—A mere Hebraism, for, why hast thou permitted us to err. So, lead us into temptation: do not suffer us to fall into that to which we are tempted.]

Verse 18. The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while—(It is little that they have taken possession of thy holy mountain) The difficulty of the construction in this place is acknowledged on all hands. Vitringa prefers that sense as the least exceptionable, which our translation has expressed: in which, however, there seems to me to be a great defect; that is, the want of what in the speaker's view must have been the principal part of the proposition, the object of the verb, the land, or it, as our translators supply it; which surely ought to have been expressed, and not to have been left to be supplied by the reader. In a word, I believe, there is some mistake in the text; and here the Septuagint help us out; they had in their copy har, mountain, instead of am, people, ros opes ros ayies cov, The mountain of thy Holy One. "Not only our enemies have taken possession of mount Zion, and trodden down Thy sanctuary; even far worse than this has befallen us: Thou hast long since utterly cast us off; and dost not consider us as Thy peculiar people."

NOTES ON CHAPTER LXIV.

[Verse 1. O that thou wouldst rend the heavens—This seems to allude to the wonderful manifestation of God upon Mount Sinai.]

Verse 2. As when the melting fire burneth—(As the fire kindleth the dry fuel) hamasim. "It means dry stubble, and the root is hamas," says Rabbi Jona- han, apud Sal. ben Melec in loc. Which is approved by Schultens, Orig. Hebr. p. 30.

"The fire kindling the stubble does not seem like enough to the melting of the mountains to be brought as a simile to it. What if thua?

^a That the mountains might flow down at thy presence! As the fire of thine smelted, burneth, As the fire smelteth the waters to boil—

There is no doubt of the Hebrew words of the second line bearing that version." DR. JUBB.

CHAPTER LXIV.

The whole of this Chapter, which is very highly poetical and tender, may be considered as a formula of prayer and humiliation intended for the Jews in order to their conversion, 1-12.

O H that thou wouldst ^a rend the heavens, that the ^b mountains might flow down at thy presence,

2 As when ^a the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil, to make thy name known to thine adversaries, that the nations may tremble at thy presence!

I submit these different interpretations to the Reader's judgment. For my own part, I am inclined to think, that the Text is much corrupted in this place. The ancient Versions have not the least traces of either of the above interpretations. The Septuagint and Syriac agree exactly together in rendering this line by, "As the wax melteth before the fire," which can by no means be reconciled with the present Text. The Vulgate, for hamasim, read yemasu, that the nations.]

That the nations] For goyim, the nations, four MSS. (one of them ancient), have harim, the mountains.

Verse 4. For since the beginning of the world men have not heard—(For never have men heard) St. Paul is generally supposed to have quoted this passage of Isaiah, 1 Cor. ii. 9; and Clemens Romanus in his First Epistle has made the same quotation, very nearly in the same words with the apostle. But the citation is so very different both from the Hebrew Text and the version of the Septuagint, that it seems very difficult, if not impossible, to reconcile them by any literal emendation, without going beyond the bounds of temperate criticism. One clause, "neither hath it entered into the heart of man," (which, by the way, is a phrase purely Hebrew, alah al leb, and should seem to belong to the prophet,) is wholly left out; and another is repeated without force or propriety; viz. "nor perceived by the ear," after, "never have heard;" and the sense and expression of the apostle is far preferable to that of the Hebrew text. Under these difficulties I am at a loss what to do better, than to offer to the Reader this, perhaps disagreeable, alternative: either to consider the Hebrew text and Septuagint in this place as wilfully disguised and corrupted by the Jews; or of which practice, in regard to other quotations in the New Testament from the Old, they lie under strong suspicions; see Dr. Owen on the Version of the Septuagint, sec. vi-ix; or to look upon St. Paul's quotation as not made from Isaiah, but from one or other of the two apocryphal books, intitled The Ascension of Esai- ah, and the Apocalypse of Elias, in both of which this passage was found; and the apostle is by some supposed in other places to have quoted such apocryphal writings. As the first of these conclusions will perhaps not easily be admitted by many; so I must fairly warn my Readers, that the second is treated by Jerom as little better than heresy. See his Comment on this place of Isaiah.

[I would read the whole verse thus:—"Yea, from the time of old they have not heard, they have not hearkened to, an eye hath not seen a God besides thee. He shall work for that one that waiteth for Him." This, I really think on the whole, to be the best translation of the original.]

The variations on this place are as follows:—for shim'u, they have heard, a MS. and the Septuagint read shimenu, we have heard: for the second lo, not, sixty-nine MSS. and four Editions have velo, and not; and the Syriac, Chaldee, and Vulgate. And so vein, and eye, Septuagint and Syriac. hu et, the, (emphatic) is added before elohim, God, in MS. Bodl. lemichakey, to them that wait, plural, two MSS. and all the ancient Versions.

Verse 5. Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness—(Thou meetest with joy those who work righteousness) The Syriac reads—pagd atah shech baasht, as above.

In those is continuance, and we shall be saved—(Because of our deeds; for we have been rebellious) ba hem dum ve-nushed. I am fully persuaded that these in thy ways: behold, thou art wrath; for we have sinned: in those is continuance, and we shall be saved.

6 But we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags; and we all do fade as a leaf; and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away.

7 And there is none that calleth upon thy name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of thee: for thou hast hid thy face from us, and hast consumed us, because of our iniquities.

8 But now, O Lord, thou art our Father; we are the clay, and thou our potter; and we are all the work of thy hand.

9 Be not wroth very sore, O Lord, neither remember iniquity for ever: behold, see, we beseech thee, we are all thy people.

10 Thy holy cities are a wilderness, Zion is a wilderness, Jerusalem a desolation.

11 Our holy and our beautiful house, where our fathers praised thee, is burned up with fire: and all our pleasant things are laid waste.

12 Will thou refrain thyself for these things, O Lord? wilt thou hold thy peace, and afflict us very sore?

We have here a vindication of God's dealings with the Jews, 1, 2. To this end the Prophet points out their great hypocrisy, and gives a particular enumeration of their divers iniquities, many of which were committed under the specious guise of sanctity, 3-5. For their horrid impieties (recorded in writing before Jehovah) the wrath of God shall certainly come upon them to the uttermost; a prediction which was exactly fulfilled in the first and second centuries in the reigns of the Roman Emperor respectively, Trajan, and Hadrian, when the whole Jewish polity was dissolved, and the people dispersed all over the world; 6, 7. Though God had rejected the Jews, and called the Gentiles, who sought him not, (Rom. ix. 24-25) yet a remnant from among the former shall be preserved to whom He will in due time manifest all His promises, 8-10. The devastation of Divine retributive justice on those idolaters who set in order a table for God, and fill out a libation to Meri, ancient idolatries, which, from the context, and from the chronological order of the events predicted, have a plain reference to the idolatry practised by Antichrist under the guise of Christianity, 11, 12. Dreadful fate which awaits those gross idolaters conspicuously contrasted with the great blessings reserved for the righteous, 12-16. Future restoration of the posterity of Jacob, and the happy state of the world in general from that glorious epoch, represented by the strong figure of the creation of new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwell the righteous, and no evil which as distress shall be permitted to enter, 17-19. In the new state of things the terms of human life shall be greatly protracted, and shall possess none of that uncertainty which attaches to it in "the heavens and the earth which are now." This is elegantly illustrated by the longevity of a tree; manifestly alluding to the oak or cedar of Lebanon, some individuals of which are known to have lived from seven to ten centuries, 20-23. Beautiful figures shadowing forth the profound peace and harmony of the church of Jesus Christ, which shall immediately follow the total overthrow of Antichrist; with a most gracious promise that the great chain of Omnipotence shall be put upon every adversary, so that none will be able any longer to hurt and destroy in all God's holy mountain, 24, 25.

I AM sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not: I said, Behold me, behold me, unto a nation that was not called by my name.

words, as they stand in the present Hebrew Text, are utterly unintelligible; there is no doubt of the meaning of each word separately; but put together they make no sense at all. I conclude, therefore, that the copy has suffered by mistakes of transcribers in this place. The corruption is of long standing; for the ancient interpreters were as much at a loss for the meaning as the moderns, and give nothing satisfactory. The Septuagint render these words by dia rovra eblavthnetai, therefore we have erred: they seem to have read עָוָה עָוָה אֱלֹהִים אֱלֹהִים aleyhem nepheshd, without helping the sense. In this difficulty what remains, but to have recourse to conjecture? Archbishop Secker was dissatisfied with the present reading; he proposed הִבֵּט אֱלֹהִים וְנִשְׁחָהּ hebet alin venoshd; "look upon us, and we shall, or that we may, be saved;" which gives a very good sense, but seems to have no sufficient foundation. Besides, the word venoshd, which is attended with great difficulties, seems to be corrupted, as well as the two preceding; and the true reading of it is, I think, given by the Septuagint, עָוָה עֲנֵפֶשֶׁתָּהּ, eblavthnetai, we have erred, (so they render the verb עָוָה peashd, chap. xli. 8, and Ezek. xxiii. 12,) parallel to עָוָה venachata, haproper, we have sinned. For עָוָה bahem lam, which mean nothing, I would propose עָוָה אֱלֹהִים hamaaleiyem, because of our deeds; which I presume was first altered to בְּמַעֲלֵינוּ bemedeleyhem, an easy and common mistake of the third person plural of the pronoun for the first; (see Note on ch. xxxiii. 2,) and then with some farther alteration to עָוָה אֱלֹהִים bahem lam. The עָוָה dkhem, which the Septuagint probably found in their copy, seems to be a remnant of בְּמַעֲלֵינוּ bemedeleyhem.

This, it may be said, is imposing your sense upon the Prophet. It may be so; for perhaps these may not be the very words of the Prophet: but however it is better than to impose upon him what makes no sense at all; as they generally do, who pretend to render such corrupted passages. For instance, our own translators: "in those is continuance, and we shall be saved;" in those—in whom, or what? There is no antecedent to the relative. In the ways of God, say some: with our fathers, says Viringa, joining it in construction with the verb עָוָה katsaphath, "thou hast been angry with them, our fathers;" and putting עָוָה venachata, for we have sinned, in a parenthesis. But there has not been any mention of our fathers; and the whole sentence, thus disposed, is utterly discordant from the Hebrew idiom and construction. In those is continuance: עָוָה lam, means a destined, but hidden and unknown, portion of time; but cannot mean continuation of time, or continuance, as it is here rendered. Such forced interpretations are equally conjectural with the boldest critical emendation; and generally have this farther disadvantage, that they are altogether unworthy of the Sacred Writers.

[Coverdale renders the passage thus:—But lo, thou art angry, for we offend, and have been ever in synnre; and there is not one upole. This is, I am afraid, making a sense.

After all that this very learned prelate has done to reduce these words to sense and meaning, I am afraid we are still far from the Prophet's mind. Probably עָוָה bahem, in them, refers to עָוָה darkeyca, thy ways, above. עָוָה lam, may be rendered of old, or during the whole of the Jewish economy; and עָוָה venoshd, "and shall we be saved?"

Thus—Thou art worth, for we have sinned in them (thy ways) of old; and can we be saved? For, we are all as an unclean thing, &c.

Verse 6. As filthy rags—עָוָה iddim. Rab. Moesch ben Maimon interpretatur עָוָה iddim, vestes quibus mulier se abstergit post congressum cum marito suo. Alii pannus menstruatus. Alii panni mulieris parentis.—And we be made as unclean alle we: and as the cloth of the woman rooten blode flowing, all our righteousnesses. Old MS. Bible. If preachers knew properly the meaning of this word, would they make such a liberal use of it in their public ministry?—And why should any use a word, the meaning of which he does not understand? How many in the congregation blush for the incautious man and his "filthy rags."]

Verse 7. There is none] Twelve MSS. have עָוָה ein, without the conjunction vau prefixed; and so read the Chaldee and Vulgate.

And hast consumed us because of our iniquities—(And hast delivered us up into the hands of our iniquities)] For עָוָה vetemgenu, had dissolved us, the Septuagint, Syriac, and Chaldee, had in their copies עָוָה vetemgenu, had delivered us up. Houbigant. Secker.

Verse 8. But now, O Lord, thou art our Father—(But thou, O Jehovah, thou art our Father)] For עָוָה veattah, and now, five MSS. (one of them ancient), and the two oldest Editions 1496 and 1483, have עָוָה veattah, and thou: and so the Chaldee seems to have read. The repetition has great force. The other word may be well spared. [But now, O Lord, thou art our Father—How very affectionate is the complaint in this and the following verses? But how does the distress increase, when they recollect the desolations of the temple, and ruin of public worship, ver. 11, Our holy and beautiful house where our fathers praised thee, is burnt up with fire, &c.]

We all are the work of thy hand] Three MSS. (two of them ancient,) and the Septuagint, read עָוָה measeh, the work, without the conjunction vau prefixed. And for עָוָה yadca, thy hand, the Bodleian, and two other MSS., the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate, read עָוָה yadeyca, thy hands, in the plural number.

Verse 9. Neither remember iniquity—For עָוָה leat tizcor, one of my MSS. has עָוָה leat tiktzoph, "be not angry"—as in the preceding clause. This has been partially obliterated, and עָוָה tizcor, written in the margin by a later hand: but this MS. abounds with words of this kind all altered by later hands.]

NOTES ON CHAPTER LXV.

This Chapter contains a defence of God's proceedings in regard to the Jews, with reference to their complaint in the Chapter preceding. God is introduced declaring, that He had called the Gentiles, though they had not sought Him; and had rejected His own people, for their refusal to attend to His repeated call; for their obstinate disobedience, their idolatrous practices, and detestable hypocrisy. That nevertheless he would not destroy them all; but would preserve a remnant, to whom He would make good His ancient promises. Severe punishments are threatened to the apostates; and great rewards are promised to the obedient in a future flourishing state of the church.

2 I have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walketh in a way that was not good, after their own thoughts;
 3 A people that provoketh me to anger continually to my face; that sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense upon altars of brick;

 4 Which remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments, which eat swine's flesh, and broth of abominable things is in their vessels;

Verse 1. I am sought of them that asked not for me—(I am made known to those that asked not for me)] נדרשתי נדרשתי, nedraashti, εφρανης εφρανης, the Septuagint, Alexandrian, and St. Paul, Rom. x. 20; who has however inverted the order of the phrases, εφρανης εφρανης, I was made manifest, and εφρανης, I was found, from that which they have in the Septuagint. נדרשתי nedraashti means, "I am sought so as to be found." Vitringa. If this be the true meaning of the word, then שאלו שאלו, that asked, which follows, should seem defective, the verb wanting its object: but two MSS. (one of them ancient), have שאלוני שאלוני, "asked me;" and another MS. שאלו שאלוני, "asked for me;" one or other of which seems to be right. But Cocceius, in Lex. and Vitringa in his translation, render נדרשתי nedraashti, by "I have answered;" and so the verb is rendered by all the ancient Versions in Ezek. xx. 3. 31. If this be right, the translation will be, "I have answered those that asked not." I leave this to the Reader's judgment: but have followed in my translation the Septuagint and St. Paul, and the MSS. above-mentioned. בקשתי bekesheni, is written regularly and fully in above a hundred MSS. and in the oldest Edition בקשתי bekeshuni.

Verse 3. That sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense upon altars of brick—(Sacrificing in the gardens, and burning incense on the tiles) These are instances of heathenish superstition and idolatrous practices, to which the Jews were immoderately addicted before the Babylonish captivity. The Heathen worshipped their idols in groves; whereas God, in opposition to this species of idolatry, commanded His people, when they should come into the Promised Land, to destroy all the places wherein the Canaanites had served their gods, and in particular to burn their groves with fire, Deut. xii. 2. 3. These apostate Jews sacrificed upon altars built of bricks; in opposition to the command of God in regard to His altar, which was to be of unhewn stone, Exod. xx. 25.—Et pro uno altari, quod impolitibus lapidibus Dei erat lege constructum, octos lateres et agrorum cespites hostiarum sanguine cruentabant. ["And instead of one altar which, according to the law of God, was to be constructed of unhewn stones, they stained the bricks and turfs of the fields with the blood of their victims."] Hieron. in loc. Or it means, perhaps, that they sacrificed upon the roofs of their houses, which were always flat, and paved with brick, or tile, or plaster of terrace. An instance of this idolatrous practice we find in 2 Kings xxiii. 12, where it is said that Josiah "beat down the altars that were on the top of the upper chamber of Ahaz, which the kings of Judah had made." See also Zeph. i. 5. Sir John Chardin's MS. Note on this place of Isaiah is as follows:—"Ainsi font tous les Gentiles, sur les lieux elevés, et sur les terrasses, appellez lateres, parceque sont faits de briques."—"Who dwell in the sepulchres, and lodge in the caverns," for the purposes of necromancy and divination; to obtain dreams and revelations. Another instance of Heathenish superstition:

*Hæc dona sacerdos
 Cava tulit, et cænarum ovium sub nocte silenti
 Pallibus incubit stratis, romo quoque petenti;
 Nulla modo simulacra videt volentia miræ,
 Et veris audit voces, frivolisque decorum
 Colloquio, atque imis Acherontæ affatur Averna.*

Virg. Æn. vii. 88.

"Here in distress th' Italian nations come,
 Anxious, to clear their doubts, and learn their doom.
 First, on the floors of the slaughter'd sheep;
 By night the sacred priest dissolves in sleep;
 When, in a train, before his slumbering eye,
 Thin airy forms, and wonderous visions fly.
 He calls the powers, who guard th' infernal floods,
 And talks inspired, familiar with the gods."

Pitt.

There was a practice exactly like this which prevailed among the Highlanders of Scotland: an authentic account of this is given by Sir Walter Scott, in a note on his Poem called The Lady of the Lake. It is as follows:

"The Highlanders, like all rude people, had various superstitious modes of enquiring into futurity. One of the most noted was the Taghairm, mentioned in the Text. A person was wrapped up in the skin of a newly-slain bullock; and deposited beside a water-fall, or at the bottom of a precipice, or in some other strange, wild, and unusual situation, where the scenery around him suggested nothing but objects of horror. In this situation he revolved in his mind the question proposed; and whatever was impressed upon him by his exalted imagination passed for the inspiration of the disembodied spirits, who haunt these desolate recesses. In some of the Hebrides, they attributed the same oracular power to a large black stone by the sea-shore, which they approached with certain solemnities; and considered the first fancy which came into their own minds, after they did so, to be the undoubted dictate of the tutelary deity of the stone; and as such to be, if possible, punctually complied with. Martin has recorded the following curious modes of Highland augury, in which the Taghairm, and its effects upon the person who was subjected to it, may serve to illustrate the text.

"It was an ordinary thing among the over-curious to consult an invisible oracle, concerning the fate of families and battles, &c. This was performed three different ways: the first was by a company of men, one of whom being detached by lot, was afterwards carried to a river, which was the boundary between two villages. Four of the company laid hold on him; and, having shut his eyes, they took him by the legs and arms, and then, tossing him to and again, struck his hips with force against the bank. One of them cried out, What is it you have got here? Another answers, A log of birch-wood. The other cries again, Let his invisible friends appear from all quarters, and let them relieve him by giving an answer to our present demands; and in a few minutes after, a number of little creatures came from the sea, who answered the question, and disappeared suddenly. The man was then set at liberty; and they all returned home to take their measures according to the prediction of their false prophets: but the poor deluded fools were abused; for the answer was still ambiguous. This was always practised in the night, and may literally be called the works of darkness.

"I had an account from the most intelligent and judicious men in the Isle of Skie, that, about sixty-two years ago, the oracle was thus consulted only once, and that was in the parish of Kilmartin, on the east side, by a wicked and mischievous race of people, who are now extinguished, both root and branch.

"The second way of consulting the oracle was by a party of men, who first retired to solitary places, remote from any house; and there they singled out one of their number, and wrapt him in a big cow's hide, which they folded about him. His whole body was covered with it, except his head, and so left in this posture all night, until his invisible friends relieved him, by giving a proper answer to the question in hand; which he received, as he fancied, from several persons that he found about him all that time. His consorts returned to him at the break of day, and then he communicated his news to them; which often proved fatal to those concerned in such unwarrantable enquiries.

"There was a third way of consulting, which was a confirmation of the second above mentioned. The same company who put the man into the hide took a live cat, and put him on a spit. One of the number was employed to turn the spit; and one of his consorts enquired of him, What are you doing? He answered, I roast this cat, until his friends answer the question; which must be the same that was proposed by the man shut up in the hide. And afterwards, a very big cat (in allusion to the story of 'the King of the Cats,' in Lord Lyttleton's Letters, and well known in the Highlands as a nursery tale,) comes, attended by a number of lesser cats, desiring to relieve the cat turned upon the spit, and then answers the question. If this answer proved the same that was given to the man in the hide, then it was taken as a confirmation of the other, which, in this case, was believed infallible.

"Mr. Alexander Cooper, present minister of North-Vist, told me that one John Erach, in the Isle of Lewis, assured him, it was his fate to have been led by his curiosity with some who consulted this oracle, and that he was a night within the hide, as above-mentioned; during which time he felt and heard such terrible things, that he could not express them. The impression it made on him was such as could never go off; and he said for a thousand worlds he would never again be concerned in the like performance, for this had disordered him to a high degree. He confessed it ingenuously, and with an air of great remorse; and seemed to be very penitent under a just sense of so great a crime. He declared this about five years since, and is still living in the Lewis for any thing I know."—Description of the Western Isles, p. 110. See also PENNANT'S Scottish Tour, Vol. ii. p. 361.

5 Which say, Stand by thyself, come not near to me; for I am holier than thou. These are a smoke in my nose, a fire that burneth all the day.

6 Behold, it is written before me: I will not keep silence, but will recompense, even recompense into their bosom.

7 Your iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers together, saith the LORD, which have burned incense upon the mountains, and blasphemed me upon the hills: therefore will I measure their former work into their bosom.

8 Thus saith the LORD, As the new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not; for a blessing is in it: so will I do for my servants' sakes, that I may not destroy them all.

9 And I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains: and mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there.

10 And Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, and the valley of Achor a place for the herds to lie down in, for my people that have sought me.

11 But ye are they that forsake the LORD, that forget my holy mountain, that prepare a table for that troop, and that furnish the drink offering unto that number.

12 Therefore will I number you to the sword, and ye shall all bow down to the slaughter: because when I called, ye did not answer; when I spake, ye did not hear; but did evil before mine eyes, and did choose that wherein I delighted not.

that demons might appear to them; for demons do appear in such places,—to those who do believe in them." Kimchi.]

In the monuments—(In the caverns)] בַּעֲטֻרִים baeturim, a word of doubtful signification. An ancient MS. has בַּעֲטֻרִים baeturim, another בַּעֲטֻרִים baeturim, in the rocks: and Le Clerc thinks the Septuagint had it so in their copy. They render it by εἰς τοὺς σπηλαιούς, "in the caves."

"Who eat swine's flesh"—which was expressly forbidden by the law, Lev. xi. 7, but among the heathen was in principal request in their sacrifices and feasts. Antiochus Epiphaneus compelled the Jews to eat swine's flesh, as a full proof of their renouncing their religion. 2 Mac. vi. 18, and vii. 1. "And the broth of abominable meats,"—for kustrations, magical arts, and other superstitious and abominable practices.

In their vessels] For בַּעֲטֻרִים baeturim, a MS. had at first בַּעֲטֻרִים baeturim. So the Vulgate and Chaldee, and the preposition seems necessary to the sense.

Verse 5. For I am holier than thou] So the Chaldee renders it. קִדְּשִׁיתִי kedashtiki, is the same with כִּדְּשִׁיתִי kedashti mimeca. In the same manner חֲזַקְתִּי chazektani, Jer. xx. 7, is used for חֲזַקְתִּי chazacta mimeni, thou art stronger than I.

[Verse 6. Behold, it is written before me—Their sin is registered in heaven, calling aloud for the punishment due to it.

I will—recompense into their bosom—The bosom is the place where the Asiatics have their pockets, and not in their skirts like the inhabitants of the West. Their loose flowing garments have scarcely any thing analogous to skirts.]

Into their bosom] For by al, ten MSS. and five editions have לִּמְאֵל. So again at the end of this verse, seventeen MSS. and four editions have לִּמְאֵל.

Verse 7. Your iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers—(Their iniquities, and the iniquities of their fathers) For the pronoun affixed of the second person נָכַמְךָ, your, twice, read נָכַמְתִּי, their, in the third person; with the Septuagint, and Houbigant.

[Verse 8. A blessing is in it—The Hebrews call all things which serve for food בְּרָכָה beracah, a blessing. On this verse Kimchi remarks: "As the cluster of grapes contains, besides the juice, the bark and the kernels, so the Israelites have, besides the just, sinners among them. Now as the cluster must not be destroyed because there is a blessing, a nutritive part in it; so Israel shall not be destroyed, because there are righteous persons in it. But as the bark and kernels are thrown away, when the wine is pressed out, so shall the sinners be purged away from among the just, and on their return from exile, shall not be permitted to enter into the land of Israel. Ezek. xx. 38."]

For my servants' sakes—(For the sake of my servant)] It is to be observed, that one of the Koningsburg MSS. collated by Lilienthal points the word עַבְדִּי abdi, singular; that is, my servant, meaning the Messiah; and so read the Septuagint, which gives a very good sense. [In two of my old MSS. it is pointed עַבְדִּי abadai, and עַבְדִּי abdi, my servant: this confirms the above reading.]

Verse 9. An inheritor of my mountains—(An inheritor of my mountain)] הָרִי hari, in the singular number; so the Septuagint and Syriac, that is, of mount Sion. See ver. 11, and chap. lvi. 7. to which Sion, the pronoun feminine singular, added to the verb in the next line, refers; מַשְׁכַּן yerushuah, shall inherit her.

Verse 10. Sharon—and the valley of Achor] Two of the most fertile parts of Judea; famous for their rich pastures; the former to the west, not far from Joppa; the latter north of Jericho, near Gilgal.

Verse 11. That prepare a table for that troop—(Who set in order a table for Gad)] The disquisitions and conjectures of the learned concerning Gad and Meni, are infinite and uncertain: perhaps the most probable may be, that Gad means good fortune, and Meni the moon. "But why should we be solicitous about it?" says Schmidius. "It appears sufficiently, from the circumstances, that they were false gods; either stars, or some natural object; or a mere fiction. The holy Scriptures did not deign to explain more clearly what these objects of idolatrous worship were; but chose rather, that the memory of the knowledge of them should be utterly abolished. And God be praised, that they are so totally abolished, that we are now quite at a loss to know what and what sort of things they were." Schmidius on the place, and on Jud. ii. 13, Bibl. Hallensia.

Jerom, on the place, gives an account of this idolatrous practice of the apostate Jews, of making a feast, or a lecti-ternum, as the Romans called it, for these pretended deities. Est in cunctis urbibus, et maximè in Ægypto, et in Alexandria, idololatriæ vetus consuetudo, ut ultimo die anni, et mensis ejus qui extremus est, ponant mensam refertam variis generis epulis, et poculum mulso mixtum; vel præteritii anni vel futuri fertilitatem auspicantes. Hoc autem faciebant et Israelitæ, omnium simulachrorum portenta venerantes; et nequaquam altari victimas, sed hujusmodi mensæ liba fundebant.—"In all cities, and especially in Egypt and Alexandria, it was an ancient idolatrous custom on the last day of the year, to spread a table covered with various kinds of viands, and a goblet mixed with new wine, referring to the fertility either of the past or coming year. The Israelites did the same, worshipping all kinds of images, and pouring out libations on such tables, &c." See also Le Clerc on the place; and on lxxi. 17, and Dav. Millii Dissert. v.

The allusion to Meni, which signifies number, is obvious. If there had been the like allusion to Gad, which might have been expected, it might perhaps have helped to let us into the meaning of that word. It appears from Jerom's version of this place, that the words τὸ δαιμόνιον, to a demon, (or, δαίμων, as some copies have it), and τὸ ἄστυ, to fortune, stood in his time in the Greek version in an inverted order from that which they have in the present copies; the latter then answering to τὸ γὰρ, the former to τὸν μέν: by which some difficulty would be avoided; for it is commonly supposed, that τὸ γὰρ signifies τὸ ἄστυ, fortune. See Gen. xxx. 11, apud Sept. This matter is so far well cleared up by MSS. Pachom. and I. D. 11, which agree in placing these two words in that order, which Jerom's version supposes.

[My Old MS. Bible translates:—That patten the borde of fortune; and offerden libours upon it; and so the Vulgate.

Ετοιμαζοντες τὰ δαιμόνια τραπέζας, και πληρουντες τὴν ἄστυ κερασα. "Preparing a table for the demon, and pouring out, or filling up, a libation to fortune." Septuagint.

Ye have set up an altar unto Fortune And given rich drink offerings unto Treasures. Concordia.

Verse 12. Therefore will I number you—Referring to Meni, which signifies number. "Rabbi Eliezar said to his disciples, Turn to God one day before you die. His disciples said, How can a man know the day of his death? He answered, Therefore it is necessary that you should turn to God to-day, for possibly ye may die to-morrow."

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, my servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry: behold, my servants shall drink, but ye shall be thirsty: behold, my servants shall rejoice, but ye shall be ashamed:

14 Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart, but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit.

15 And ye shall leave your name for a curse unto my chosen: for the Lord God shall slay thee, and call his servants by another name:

16 That he who blesseth himself in the earth shall bless himself in the God of truth; and he that sweareth in the earth shall swear by the God of truth: because the former troubles are forgotten, and because they are hid from mine eyes.

17 For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind.

18 But ye be glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy.

19 And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying.

20 There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall die an hundred years old: but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed.

21 And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them.

22 They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands.

23 They shall not labour in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them.

24 And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.

25 The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord.

Verse 13. My servants shall eat, but ye shall be hungry—Rabbi Joachan ben Zachai said in a parable: There was a king who invited his servants, but set them no time to come to the feast. The prudent and wary who were among them adorned themselves; and, standing at the gate of the king's house, said, Is there any thing lacking in the king's house? i. e. Is there any work to be done in it? But the foolish which were among them went, and mocking said, When shall the feast be, in which there is no labour? Suddenly, the king sought out his servants: they who were adorned entered in, and they who were still polluted entered in also. The king was glad when he met the prudent: but he was angry when he met the foolish. Therefore he said, Let those sit down, and let them eat: but let these stand and look on.

This parable is very like that of the wise and the foolish virgins, Matt. xxv. and that of the marriage of the king's son, Matt. xxii.

Verse 15. Shall slay thee—(Shall slay you) For חסיתו vehemiticus, shall slay thee, the Septuagint and Chaldee read חסיתם vehemiticem, shall slay you, plural.

[Verse 17. I create new heavens and a new earth—This has been variously understood. Some Jews and some Christians understand it literally. God shall change the state of the atmosphere, and render the earth more fruitful. Some refer it to what they call the Millennium; others to a glorious state of religion; others to the re-creation of the earth after it shall have been destroyed by fire. I think it refers to the full conversion of the Jews ultimately; and primarily to the deliverance from the Babylonish captivity.]

Verse 18. Rejoice for ever in that which I create—(Exult in the age to come which I create) So in chap. ix. 5, טר אבי אד, παρηρ τον μελλοντος αιωσος, "the father of the age to come," Sept. See Bishop Chandler, Defence of Christianity, p. 136.

[Verse 19. "The voice of weeping, &c.—Because of untimely deaths, shall no more be heard in thee; for natural death shall not happen till men be full of days; as it is written, ver. 20, There shall be no more thence an infant of days, i. e. the people shall live to three or five hundred years of age, as in the days of the patriarchs; and if one die at one hundred years, it is because of his sin; and even at that age he shall be reputed an infant; and they shall say of him, An infant is dead. These things shall happen to Israel in the days of the Messiah." Kimchi.]

Verse 20. Thence—(There) For שם misham, thence, the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate, read שם sham, there.

Verse 22. They shall not build, and another inhabit] The reverse of the curse denounced on the disobedient, Deut. xxviii. 30, "Thou shalt build a house, and thou shalt not dwell therein; thou shalt plant a vineyard, and shalt not gather the grapes thereof."

[For as the days of a tree] It is commonly supposed that the oak, one of the most long-lived of the trees, lasts about a thousand years; being five hundred years growing to full perfection, and as many days of generation: which seems to be a moderate and probable computation. See Evelyn, Sylva B. iii. chap. iii. The present emperor of China, in his very ingenious and sensible poem, intitled Eloge de Moukden, a translation of which in French was published at Paris, 1770, speaks of a tree in his country, which lives more than a hundred ages; and of another, which after fourscore ages is only in its prime, p. 37, 38. But his imperial majesty's commentators, in their note on the place, carry the matter much farther; and quote authority, which affirms, that the tree last mentioned by the emperor, the immortal tree, after having lived ten thousand years, is still only in its prime. I suspect that the Chinese enlarge somewhat in their national chronology as well as in that of their trees. See Chou King, Preface, by Mons. de Guignes. The prophet's idea seems to be, that they shall live to the age of the antediluvians; which seems to be very justly expressed by the days of a tree, according to our notions. [The Rabbins have said that this refers to the tree of life, which endures five hundred years.]

Verse 23. They shall not labour in vain—(My chosen shall not labour in vain) I remove בעריה bechirai, my elect, from the end of the twenty-second to the beginning of the twenty-third verse, on the authority of the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate, and a MS.; contrary to the division in the Masoretic text. [The Septuagint is beautiful:—My chosen shall not labour in vain, neither shall they beget children for the curse; for the seed is blessed of the Lord, and their posterity with them.]

Nor bring forth for trouble—(Neither shall they generate a short-lived race) לבהלה, in festinationem, "what shall soon hasten away." Εἰς κταραπ, for a curse, Sept. They seem to have read לאלה le-aleh. Grotius. But Psal. lxxviii. 33, both justifies and explains the word here:—

יכל בהבל יצא
yemeyhem behebel yayceal ושנתם כבהלה dabbhelelech veshenotham

"And he consumed their days in vanity,
And their years in haste."

μνησ σπουδης, say the Septuagint. Jerom on this place of Isaiah explains it to the same purpose: "εις ανραπειαν, hoc est, ut esse desistant."

[Verse 24. Before they call I will answer—I will give them all they crave for, and more than they can desire.

Verse 25. The wolf and the lamb, &c.—The glorious salvation which Jesus Christ procures is for men, and for men only: fallen spirits must still abide under the curse. He took not on him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham.]

Shall feed together] For כחדו ke-chad, as one, an ancient MS. has יחדו yachdav, together, the usual word, to the same sense, but very different in the letters. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate, seem to agree with the MS.

CHAPTER XLVI.

This Chapter treats of the same subject with the foregoing. God, by his Prophet, tells the Jews, who value themselves much on their Temple and pompous worship, that the Most High will not in temples make his abode; and that no outward rites of worship, while the worshippers are idolatrous and impure, can please Him who looketh at the heart, 1-3. This leads to a threatening of vengeance for their guilt, alluding to their making void the law of God by their abominable traditions, their rejection of Christ, persecution of his followers, and consequent destruction by the Romans. But as the Jewish ritual and people show forth the system of Christianity and its professors; as, in the prophetic writings, the idolatries of the Jews are frequently put for the idolatries afterwards practised by those leaving the Christian name. Consequently, if we would have the plenitude of meaning in this section of prophecy, which the very context requires, we must look through the type into the antitype, viz. the very gross idolatries practised by the members of Antichrist, the pompous heap of human inventions and traditions with which they have encumbered the Christian system, their most furious persecution of Christ's spiritual and true worshippers, and the awful judgments which shall overtake them in the great and terrible day of the Lord, 4-6. The mighty and sudden increase of the church of Jesus Christ at the period of Antichrist's fall represented by the very strong figure of Sion being delivered of a manchild before the time of her travail, the meaning of which symbol the Prophet imine lately subjoins in a series of interrogations for the sake of greater force an I emphases, 7-9. Wonderful prosperity and unspeakable blessings of the world when the posterity of Jacob, with the fulness of the Gentiles, shall be assembled to Messiah's standard, 10-14. All the wicked of the earth shall be gathered together to the battle of that great day of God Almighty, and the slain of Jehovah shall be many, 15-18. Manner of the future restoration of the Israelites from their several dispersations throughout the habitable globe, 19-21. Perpetuity of this new economy of grace to the house of Israel, 22. Righteousness shall be universally diffused in the earth; and the memory of those who have transgressed against the Lord shall be had in continued abhorrence, 23-24. Thus this great Prophet, after tracing the principal events of time, seems at length to have terminated his views in eternity, where all revolutions cease, where the blessedness of the righteous shall be unchangeable as the new heavens, and the misery of the wicked as the fire that shall not be quenched.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLVI.

This Chapter is a continuation of the subject of the foregoing. The Jews valued themselves much upon their Temple, and the pompous system of services performed in it, which they supposed to be of perpetual duration; and they assumed great confidence and merit to themselves for their strict observance of all the externals of their religion. And at the very time, when the judgments, denounced in ver. 6 and 12 of the preceding Chapter, were hanging over their heads, they were rebuilding, by Herod's munificence, the Temple in a most magnificent manner. God admonishes them, that "the Most High dwelleth not in temples made with hands;" and that a mere external worship, how diligently soever attended, when accompanied with wicked and idolatrous practices in the worshippers, would never be accepted by Him. This their hypocrisy is set forth in strong colours: which brings the prophet again to the subject of the former Chapter; and he pursues it in a different manner, with more express declaration of the new economy, and of the flourishing state of the church under it. The increase of the church is to be sudden and astonishing. They that escape of the Jews, that is, that become converts to the Christian faith, are to be employed in the Divine mission to the Gentiles, and are to act as priests in presenting the Gentiles as an offering to God, see Rom. xv. 16. And both, now collected into one body, shall be witnesses of the final perdition of the obstinate and irreclaimable.

These two Chapters manifestly relate to the calling of the Gentiles, the establishment of the Christian dispensation, and the reprobation of the apostate Jews, and their destruction executed by the Romans.

Verse 2. And all those things have been—(And all these things are mine) A word absolutely necessary to the sense is here lost out of the text: ^b li, mine. It is preserved by the Septuagint and Syriac.

Verse 3. He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man—(He that slayeth an ox, killeth a man) These are instances of wickedness joined with hypocrisy; of the most flagitious crimes committed by those, who at the same time affected great strictness in the performance of all the external services of religion. God, by the prophet Ezekiel, upbraids the Jews with the same practices. "When they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it," chap. xxiii. 30. Of the same kind was the hypocrisy of the Pharisees in our Saviour's time; "who devoured widows' houses, and for a pretence made long prayers," Matt. xxiii. 14.

The generality of interpreters, by departing from the literal rendering of the Text, have totally lost the true sense of it; and have substituted in its place what makes no good sense at all: for it is not easy to shew, how in any circumstances sacrifice and murder, the presenting of legal 3 He that killeth an ox is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation as if he offered swine's blood; he that burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol. Yea, they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations.

4 I also will choose their delusions, and will bring their fears upon them; because when I called none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear: but they did evil before mine eyes, and chose that in which I delighted not.

5 Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word; Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified: but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed.

6 A voice of noise from the city, a voice from the temple, a voice of the Lord that rendereth recompense to his enemies.

7 Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man child.

8 Who hath heard such a thing? who hath seen such things? shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? or shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed, she brought forth her children.

9 Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth? saith the Lord: shall I cause to bring forth, and shut the womb? saith thy God.

offerings and idolatrous worship, can possibly be of the same account in the sight of God.

He that offereth an oblation as if he offered swine's blood—(That maketh an oblation offereth swine's blood) A word here likewise, necessary to complete the sense, is perhaps irrecoverably lost out of the Text. The Vulgate and Chaldee add the word offereth, to make out the sense; not, as I imagine, from any different reading, (for the word wanted seems to have been lost before the time of the oldest of them, as the Septuagint had it not in their copy;) but from mere necessity.

Le Clerc thinks, that מללה melleh, is to be repeated from the beginning of this member: but that is not the case in the parallel members, which have another and a different verb in the second place. ודאם, sic Versions: putarem tamen legendum participium aliquod, et quidem non zabach, cum sequatur ח cheth, nisi jam processerant." SECKER. Houbigant supplies אכל acah, eateth. After all, I think the most probable word is that which the Chaldee and Vulgate seem to have designed to represent; that is, מקריב mekriv.

[Verse 3. In their abominations—וּבְשִׁקְצֵיהֶם u-be-she-kutseyhem, and in their abominations; two copies of the Machazor, and one of Kennicott's MSS. have וּבְשִׁקְצֵיהֶם u-be-giloleyhem, and in their idols. So the Vulgate and Syriac.]

Verse 5. Your brethren that hated you—said—(Say ye to your brethren that hate you) The Syriac reads אַמְרֵי לְאִמְרֵי אַמְרֵי amru loacheycem; and so the Septuagint, Edit. Comp. εἰπτε ἀδελφοῖς ἡμῶν and MS. Marchal. has ἀδελφοῖς and so Cyrill and Procopius read and explain it. It is not easy to make sense of the reading of the Septuagint in the other Editions: εἰπτε ἀδελφοῖς ἡμῶν τοῖς μισοῦσιν ὑμᾶς—but for ἡμῶν, our, MS. 1. D. II. also has ἡμῶν, your.

[Verse 6. A voice of noise from the city, a voice from the temple, a voice from the Lord—It is very remarkable that similar words were spoken by Jesus, son of Ananias, previously to the destruction of Jerusalem. See his very affecting history related by Josephus, WAR, B. vi. chap. 5.]

Verse 8. Who hath seen—(And who hath seen) Twenty MSS. (four ancient) [of Kennicott's, and twenty-nine of De Rossi's, and two ancient of my own,] and the two oldest Editions, with two others, have וְיֵאמְרוּ u-mi, adding the conjunction וְ, and; so read all the ancient Versions. And who hath seen?

[Verse 9. Shall I bring to the birth—וְהֵאֵשְׁבִיר הַאֵם haani ashebbir, num ego matricem frangam, MONTANUS. The word means that which immediately precedes the appearance of the fetus—the breaking forth of the liquor amnii. This also is an expression that should be studiously avoided in prayers and preachings.]

10 Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her: rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her:

11 That ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the abundance of her glory.

12 For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river, and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream; then shall ye suck, ye shall be borne upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees.

13 As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.

14 And when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb: and the hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

15 For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire.

16 For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many.

17 They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens behind one tree in the midst, eating swine's flesh, and the abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the Lord.

18 For I know their works and their thoughts: it shall come that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come and see my glory.

19 And I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to Tubal, and Javan, to the isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles.

Verse 11. With the abundance of her glory—(From her abundant stores) For מִזֵּיזִים, from the splendour, two MSS. and the old Edition of 1489, have מִזֵּיזֵיזֵי; and the latter זֵיזֵיזֵי, is upon a rasure in three other MSS. It is remarkable that Kimchi and Sal. ben Melech, not being able to make any thing of the word as it stands in the Text, say it means the same with מִזֵּיזֵיזֵי; that is, in effect, they admit of a various reading, or an error in the Text. But as Vitringa observes, what sense is there in sucking nourishment from the splendour of her glory? He therefore endeavours to deduce another sense of the word מִזֵּיזֵיזֵי: but, as far as it appears to me, without any authority. I am more inclined to accede to the opinion of those learned Rabbins, and to think that there is some mistake in the word; for that in truth is their opinion, though they disguise it by saying, that the corrupted word means the very same with that which they believe to be genuine. So in chap. xli. 24, they say that אֶפְרַיִם אֶפְרַיִם, a viper, means the same with אֶפְרַיִם אֶפְרַיִם, nothing; instead of acknowledging that one is written by mistake instead of the other. I would propose to read in this place מִזֵּיזֵיזֵי, or מִזֵּיזֵיזֵי, [which is the reading of one of De Rossi's MSS.] (instead of מִזֵּיזֵיזֵי), from the stores, from מִן זֵיזֵיזֵי, to nourish, to feed, see Gen. xlv. 23; 2 Chron. xi. 23; Psa. cxliv. 13. And this perhaps may be meant by Aquila, who renders the word by ἀνο τροφῶν: with which that of the Vulgate, ab omnimoda gloria, and of Symmachus and Theodotion, nearly agree. The Chaldee follows a different reading, without improving the sense; מֵיזֵיזֵיזֵי, from the wine.

Verse 12. Like a river, and—like a flowing stream—(Like the great river, and like the overflowing stream) That is, the Euphrates; (it ought to have been pointed כְּנָהָר כְּנָהָר, ut fluvius ille, "as the river:") and the Nile.

Then shall ye suck—(And ye shall suck at the breast) These two words שָׁד לֵב אֵל שָׁד, at the breast, seem to have been omitted in the present text, from their likeness to the two words following; שָׁד לֵב אֵל שָׁד, at the side. A very probable conjecture of Houbigant. The Chaldee and Vulgate have omitted the two latter words instead of the two former. See Note on chap. lx. 4.

Verse 15. The Lord will come with fire—(JEHOVAH shall come as a fire) כָּאֵשׁ כָּאֵשׁ, as a fire; כָּאֵשׁ כָּאֵשׁ, as a fire; כָּאֵשׁ כָּאֵשׁ.

To render his anger with fury—(To breathe forth his anger in a burning heat) Instead of לֶהֱשִׁיב לֶהֱשִׁיב, as pointed by the Masoretes, to render, I understand it as לֶהֱשִׁיב לֶהֱשִׁיב, to breathe, from נָשָׁב נָשָׁב.

Verse 17. Behind one tree—(After the rites of Achad) The Syrians worshipped a god called Adad. Plin. Nat. Hist. xxxvii. 11; Macrobi. Sat. i. 23. They held him to be the highest and greatest of the gods, and to be the same with Jupiter and the sun: and the name Adad, says Macrobius, signifies one; as likewise does the word Achad in Isaiah. Many learned men therefore have supposed, and with some probability, that the Prophet means the same pretended deity. אַחַד אַחַד, in the Syrian and Chaldean dialects is אַחַד אַחַד; and perhaps by reduplication of the last letter, to express perfect unity, it may have become אַחַד אַחַד, not improperly expressed in Latin by Macrobius Adad, without the aspirate. It was also pronounced by the Syrians themselves, with a weaker aspirate אַחַד אַחַד; as in Behadad, Hadadezer, names of their king, which were certainly taken from their chief object of worship. This seems to me to be a probable account of this name.

But the Masoretes correct the Text in this place. Their marginal reading is אַחַד אַחַד, which is the same word only in the feminine form: and so read thirty MSS. (six ancient,) and the two oldest Editions. This Le Clerc approves, and supposes it to mean Hecata, or the moon; and he supports his hypothesis by arguments not at all improbable. See his Note on the place.

Whatever the particular mode of idolatry, which the Prophet refers to, might be, the general sense of the place is perfectly clear. But the Chaldee and Syriac, and after them Symmachus and Theodotion, cut off at once all these difficulties, by taking the word אַחַד אַחַד in its common meaning, not as a proper name; the two latter rendering the sentence thus: οὐρανὸν ἀλλήλων ἐν μέσῳ ἐσθίωντων τὸ κρέας τοῦ χοιρῆτος one after another, in the midst of those that eat swine's flesh. I suppose, they all read in their copies אַחַד אַחַד אַחַד אַחַד, one by one, or perhaps אַחַד אַחַד אַחַד אַחַד אַחַד אַחַד, one after another. See a large dissertation on this subject in Davidis Milii Dissertationes Selectæ, Dissert. VI.

[I know not what to make of this place; it is certain that our translation makes no sense,—and that of the learned prelate seems to me too refined. Kimchi interprets this of the Turks, who are remarkable for ablutions.—"Behind one in the midst" he understands of a large fishpond placed in the middle of their gardens. Others make אַחַד אַחַד, a deity, as above;—and a deity of various names it is supposed to be; for it is Achad, and Chad, and Hadad, and Achath, and Hecata, an Assyrian idol. Βεβητύς the first tree or the gate withine forth. Old MS. Bible.]

Verse 18. For I know their works [A word is here lost out of the present Text, leaving the Text quite imperfect. The word is יָדָעָה, knowing, supplied from the Syriac. The Chaldee had the same word in the copy before him, which he paraphrases by קִדְמֵי גֵלוֹן kedemi gelon, their deeds are manifest before me; and the Aldine and Complutensian Editions of the Septuagint acknowledge the same word εἰσπραγαί; which is verified by MSS. Pachom, and the Arabic Version. I think there can be little doubt of its being genuine. [The concluding verses of this Chapter refer to the complete restoration of the Jews, and to the destruction of all the enemies of the gospel of Christ, so that the earth shall be filled with the knowledge and glory of the Lord. Talia sæcla currite! Lord, hasten the time!]

It shall come—(And I come) For באַח באַח, which will not accord with any thing in the sentence, I read באַח באַח, with a MS.; the participle answering to יָדָעָה, with which agree the Septuagint, Syriac, and Vulgate. Perhaps it ought to be רָאָה רָאָה, Syr. when I shall come: and so the Septuagint, according to Edit. Ald. and Complut. and Cod. Marchal.

Verse 19. That draw the bow [I much suspect that the words קָשָׁה קָשָׁה mishekeh kasheth, who draw the bow, are a corruption of the word קָשָׁה meshek, Moschi, the name of a nation situated between the Euxine and Caspian seas; and properly joined with תּוֹבַל תּוֹבַל, the Titarani. See Bochart. Phaleg. iii. 12. The Septuagint have ὄπισθεν, without any thing of the drawers of the bow; the word

20 And they shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord out of all nations, upon horses, and in chariots, and in litters, and upon mules, and upon swift beasts, to my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the Lord, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the Lord.

being once taken for a partake, the bow was added to make sense of it. נשׁב כאהת, the bow, is omitted in a MS. [and by the Septuagint.]

That have not heard my fame—(Who never heard my name) For נשׁב shamei, my fame, I read, with the Septuagint and Syriac, נשׁב shemi, my name.

Verse 20. And in chariots—(And in couches). There is a sort of vehicle much used in the East, consisting of a pair of hampers, or cradles, thrown across a camel's back, one on each side; in each of which a person is carried. They have a covering to defend them from the rain and the sun. Thevenot calls them couches, i. p. 356. Maillet describes them as covered cages hanging on both sides of a camel. "At Aleppo," says Dr. Russel, "women of inferior condition in longer journeys are commonly stowed, one on each side of a mule, in a sort of covered cradles." Nat. Hist. of Aleppo, p. 89. These seem to be what the Prophet means by the word נשׁב tebbim. Harmer's Observations, i. page 445.

Verse 21. And for Levites] For נשׁב lelevim, fifty-nine MSS. (eight ancient,) have נשׁב u-lelevim, adding the conjunction ו, as the sense seems necessarily to require: and so read all the ancient Versions. See Josh. iii. 3, and the various readings on that place in Kennicott's Bible.

Verse 24. For their worm shall not die] These words of the Prophet are applied by our blessed Saviour, Mark ix. 44, to express the everlasting punishment of the wicked in Gehenna, or in hell. Gehenna, or the valley of Hinnom, was very near to Jerusalem to the south-east: it was the place where the idolatrous Jews celebrated that horrible rite of making their children pass through the fire, that is, of burning them in sacrifice to Moloch. To put a stop to this abominable practice, Josiah defiled, or desecrated, the place, by filling it with human bones, 2 Kings xxiii. 10, 14; and probably it was the custom afterwards to throw out the carcases of animals there; and it became the common burying-place for the poorer people of Jerusalem. Our Saviour expressed the state of the blessed by sensible images; such as paradise, Abraham's bosom, or, which is the same thing, a place to recline next to Abraham at table in the kingdom of heaven. See Matt. viii. 11. ("Canab Nerva cum paucis. Venio proximum, atque etiam in sinu recumbat.")—"The emperor Nerva supped with few. Venio was the first in his estimation, and even reclined in his bosom." Plin. Epist. iv. 22. Compare John xiii. 23, for we could not possibly have any conception of it, but by analogy from worldly objects. In like manner He expressed the place of torment under the image of Gehenna; and the punishment of the wicked, by the worm which there preyed on the carcases, and the fire which consumed the wretched victims. Marking however, in the strongest manner, the difference between Gehenna and the invisible place of torment; namely, that in the former the suffering is transient: the worm itself, that preys on the body, dies; and the fire which totally consumes it, is soon extinguished; whereas in the figurative Gehenna the instruments of punishment shall be everlasting, and the suffering without end. "For there the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched."

These emblematical images, expressing heaven and hell, were in use among the Jews before our Saviour's time; and in using them He complied with their notions. "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God," says the Jew to our Saviour, Luke xiv. 15. And in regard to Gehenna, the Chaldee paraphrast, as I observed before on chap. xxx. 33, renders everlasting, or continual burnings, by "the Gehenna of everlasting fire." And before his time the Son of Sirach, chap. vii. 17, had said, "The vengeance of the ungodly is fire and worms." So likewise the author of the Book of Judith, chap. xvi. 17:—"Wo to the nations rising up against my kindred: the Lord Almighty will take vengeance of them in the day of judgment, in putting fire and worms in their flesh;" manifestly referring to the same emblem.

me, saith the LORD, so shall your seed and your name remain.

23 And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the LORD.

24 And they shall go forth, and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

[Kimchi's conclusion of his notes on this Book is remarkable:—

"Blessed be God who hath created the mountains and the hills, And hath endued me with strength to finish the Book of Salvation: He shall rejoice as with good tidings and reports. He shall show as a token for good.— And the end of his miracles he shall cause to approach me."

Several of the Versions have a peculiarity in their terminations:

And they shall be to a society of eight to all flesh. Veig.
And the spirit ben into tylling of eight to all flesh. OF MSS. Bala.
And they shall be for a witness to all flesh. Syriac.
And the wicked shall be punished in hell till the righteous shall say,—It is enough. Chalde.
They shall be an astonishment to all flesh; So that they shall be a spectacle to all beings. Syriac.
The end of the prophecy of Isaiah the prophet.—Praise to God who is truly praiseworthy. Arabic.

One of my old Hebrew MSS. after the twenty-fifth verse repeats the twenty-third:—"And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord."

MASORETIC NOTES.

Number of verses in this Book, 1295. Middle verse,—Chap. xxxiii. 21. Masoretic sections, 26. pwn chazek, Be strong.

In the course of these Notes the Reader will have often observed two MSS. of the Septuagint referred to by Bp. Lowth, and marked L. B. II. 1. D. II. They are both in the British Museum. The former contains the Prophets, and was written about the tenth or eleventh century; and because it once belonged to Pachomius, patriarch of Constantinople, in the beginning of the sixteenth century, the Bishop quotes often by the title MS. Pachom. The other contains many of the historical books, beginning with Ruth and ending with Ezra; and has also the Prophet Isaiah. This MS. consists of two parts,—one apparently written in the eleventh or twelfth century,—the other in the beginning of the fourteenth. Dr. Grabe and Dr. Woide, as well as Bp. Lowth, considered these MSS. of great value and authority.

It may be necessary to say something of the Hebrew MSS. which I have also frequently quoted. The Collections of Kennicott and De Rossi have long been before the public; and to describe them would be useless. The collections of the latter, Bp. Lowth had never seen; else he could have strengthened his authorities; these, for the first time, I have in the preceding Notes incorporated with Bishop Lowth's references, and thus added double strength to the learned prelate's authorities. But of my own I should say something, as they form no part of the above collections;—and yet are among the oldest MSS. known to exist. Independently of rolls, which contain only the Magillah Esther, they are ten in number, and formerly belonged to the Rev. Cornelius Schulting, a Protestant minister of Amsterdam. After his death in 1726, they were sold by public auction, and came into the possession of the Rev. John Van der Hagen, a reformed minister of the same place.

In 1733, Jo. Christ. Wolf described these MSS. in the fourth volume of his Bibliotheca Hebraea, p. 79. A few years ago I had the singular good fortune to purchase the whole of these at Utrecht:—a collection of MSS. of which Dr. Kennicott complains that he could not by any entreaties obtain the privilege of collating. These are his own words,—"Wolfius (Bib. Heb. iv. 79—82) memorat codices 10. olim penes Schultingium; quorum plurimi postea erant penes Rev. Joh. Van der Hagen. Usum Cod. Hagenianorum obtinere nulla potuit à me precatio." Dissert. Gener. p. 78. sub Cod. 84. Dr. Kennicott supposed that three of those MSS. had been collated for him: but in this I believe he was mistaken; as he was also in supposing that only the greater part of the ten MSS. of Schulting had fallen into the hands of Mr. Van der Hagen; for the fact is, the whole ten were purchased by Van der Hagen, and the same ten are now in my library, being precisely those described by Wolfius, as above. I have collated the Prophet Isaiah throughout, in two of the most ancient of these MSS.; and have added their testimony in many places to the various readings collected by Kennicott and De Rossi. The very bad state of my health, and particularly of my eyes, prevented a more extensive collation of these very ancient and invaluable MSS. Some of the oldest are without any date. They are marked with the ten first letters of the alphabet. Cod. C. was written A. D. 1076,—D. in 1286,—G. in 1215,—H. in 1309,—I. in 1136. In the most of these there is an ample harvest of important various readings.

Bishop Lowth, in giving an account of his labours on this Prophet, takes a general view of the difficulties and helps he met with in his work. This being of considerable importance, I shall lay an abstract of it before the Reader, as a proper supplement to the preceding sheets. He observes,]—The Masoretic punctuation, by which the pronunciation of the language is given, the forms of the several parts of speech,—the construction of the words,—the distribution and limits of the sentences,—and the connexion of the several members, are fixed,—is in effect an interpretation of the Hebrew Text made by the Jews of late ages, probably not earlier than the eighth century; and may be considered as their translation of the Old Testament. Where the words unpointed are capable of various meanings, according as they may be variously pronounced and constructed, the Jews by their pointing have determined them to one meaning and construction; and the sense which they thus give, is their sense of the passage: just as the rendering of a translator into another language is his sense. The points have been considered as part of the Hebrew text, and as giving the meaning of it on no less than Divine authority. Accordingly our public translations in the modern tongues for the use of the church among Protestants, and so likewise the modern Latin translations, are for the most part close copies of the Hebrew pointed text, and are in reality only versions at second hand translations of the Jews' interpretation of the Old Testament.

To what a length an opinion lightly taken up, and embraced with a full assent without due examination, may be carried, we may see in another example of much the same kind. The learned of the Church of Rome, who have taken the liberty of giving translations of Scripture in the modern languages, have for the most part subjected and devoted themselves to a prejudice equally groundless and absurd. The council of Trent declare the Latin translation of the Scriptures, called the Vulgate, which had been for many ages in use in their church, to be authentic;—a very ambiguous term, which ought to have been more precisely defined than the fathers of this Council chose to define it. Upon this ground many contended that the Vulgate version was dictated by the Holy Spirit;—at least was providentially guarded against all error,—was consequently of Divine authority, and more to be regarded than even the original Hebrew and Greek texts.

But a very fruitful source of error proceeded from the Jewish copyists consulting more the fair appearance of their copy than the correctness of it, by willfully leaving mistakes uncorrected, lest by erasing they should diminish the beauty and the value of the transcript; (for instance, when they had written a word or part of a word, wrong, and immediately saw their mistake, they left the mistake uncorrected, and wrote the word anew after it,) their scrupulous regard to the evenness and fullness of their lines, which induced them to cut off from the ends of lines a letter or letters for which there was not sufficient room, (for they never divided a word so that the parts of it should belong to two lines,) and to add to the ends of lines letters wholly insignificant, by way of expletives to fill up a vacant space: their custom of writing part of a word at the end of a line, where there was not room for the whole, and then giving the whole word at the beginning of the next line.

These circumstances considered, it would be the most astonishing of all miracles, if the Hebrew writings of the Old Testament had come down to us through their hands absolutely pure, and free from all mistakes whatsoever.

The ancient Versions, as the principal sources of emendation, and highly useful in rectifying as well as in explaining, the Hebrew text, are contained in the London Polyglott.

The Greek Version, commonly called the Septuagint, or of the seventy interpreters, probably made by different hands, (the number of them uncertain,) and at different times, as the exigence of the Jewish church at Alexandria and in other parts of Egypt required, is of the first authority, and of the greatest use in correcting the Hebrew text, as being the most ancient of all, and as the copy from which it was translated appears to have been free from many errors which afterwards by degrees got into the text. But the Greek version of Isaiah is not so old as that of the Pentateuch by a hundred years and more, having been made in all probability after the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, when the reading of the prophets in the Jewish synagogues began to be practised; and even after the building of Onias' temple, to favour which there seems to have been some artifice employed in a certain passage of Isaiah, (chap. xix. 18,) in this version. And it unfortunately happens that Isaiah has had the hard fate to meet with a Greek translator very unworthy of him, there being hardly any book of the Old Testament so ill rendered in that version as this of Isaiah.

The Arabic version is sometimes referred to as verifying the reading of the Septuagint, being, for the most part at least, taken from that version.

The Chaldee paraphrase of Jonathan ben Uzziel, made about or before the time of our Saviour, though it often wanders from the text in a wordy allegorical explanation, yet very frequently adheres to it closely, and gives a verbal rendering of it; and accordingly is sometimes of great use in ascertaining the true reading of the Hebrew text.

The Syriac version stands next in order of time: but is superior to the Chaldee in usefulness and authority, as well in ascertaining as in explaining the Hebrew text. It is a close translation of the Hebrew into a language of near affinity to it. It is supposed to have been made as early as the first century.

The fragments of the three Greek versions of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion, all made in the second century, which are collected in the Hexapla of Mountfaucou, are of considerable use for the same purpose.

The Vulgate, being for the most part the translation of Jerome, made in the fourth century, is of service in the same way, in proportion to its antiquity.

In referring to Dr. Kennicott's and De Rossi's Collections, I have given the whole number of manuscripts or editions which concur in any particular reading: what proportion that number bears to the whole number of collated copies which contain the Book of Isaiah, may be seen by comparing it with the catalogue of copies collated, which is given at the end of that book in the Doctor's edition of the Hebrew Bible.

Among the manuscripts which have been collated I consider those of the tenth, eleventh and twelfth centuries as ancient, comparatively and in respect of the rest. Therefore in quoting a number of manuscripts, where the variation is of some importance, I have added, that so many of that number are ancient, that is, are of the centuries above mentioned.

The design of the Notes is to give the reasons and authorities on which the translation is founded; to rectify or to explain the words of the text; to illustrate the ideas, the images, and the allusions, of the prophet, by referring to objects, notions, and customs which peculiarly belong to his age and his country; and to point out the beauties of particular passages. If the Reader would go deeper into the mystical sense, into theological, historical and chronological disquisitions, there are many learned expositors to whom he may have recourse, who have written full commentaries on this prophet, to which title the present work has no pretensions. The sublime and spiritual use to be made of this peculiarly evangelical prophet, must be all founded on a faithful representation of the literal sense which his words contains. This is what I have endeavoured closely and exactly to express.

[In conclusion, it may be necessary to give some account of what I have ventured to superadd to the labours of this very learned prelate. After consulting the various commentators, who have spent much time and labour in their endeavours to illustrate this Prophet, I found their interpretations of many of the most important prophecies strangely different, and often at variance. The former commentators have taken especial care to bring forth in the most prominent point of view all those passages which have been generally understood to refer to our blessed Lord, and the Christian dispensation. Later critics, especially those on the continent, have adopted the Jewish plan of interpretation, referring the parts belonging to the Messiah in his sufferings, &c. to the prophet himself, or to the children of the captivity in their state of suffering;—and those passages which speak of the redemption of the world, and the glorious state of the Christian Church, they apply to the deliverance of the Israelites from the Babylonian captivity. It is really painful to see what labour and learning these critics spend to rob the prophet of his title of evangelical; and to shew that even the sacred writers of the New Testament, in their application of select passages to our Lord, only followed the popular custom of accommodating passages of the Sacred Writings to occurrences and events to which their leading circumstances bore some kind of resemblance, the application being only intended to convey the idea of similitude, and not of identity.

While I have cautiously handled those passages, the application of which was dubious, I have taken care to give my opinion with firmness on those which seem to have no other meaning than what they derive from their application to the great work of redemption by Jesus Christ, and the glory that should follow the outpouring of His Spirit. Many readers will no doubt suppose that I should have dwelt more on the spiritual parts of this inimitable book — but to this there would be scarcely any end. Who could exhaust the stores of this prophet! and if any thing were left unsaid some would still be unsatisfied, to say nothing of the volume being thereby swollen beyond all reasonable bounds. I have marked enough for the readers meditation; and have thrown out a sufficient number of hints to be improved by ministers of the word of God. To another class it may appear too critical; but this chiefly applies to the learned Bishop, whose plan, as by far the best in my judgment, I have followed; — and whose collection of various readings, I felt it my duty to complete, a thing that none of his Editors have attempted before.

In representing the Hebrew words by Roman letters, I perceive that there are some inaccuracies in reference to the vowel points; but as due care has been taken to represent the consonants, this will be of no consequence in the sight of any scholar. I may add, that a continual state of bad health, both while preparing the Notes and while passing the work through the press, has prevented me from giving it that farther degree of comparative perfection which I ardently desired, and which in other circumstances might have taken place. Such as it is, I recommend it to the Almighty's blessing, and the Reader's candour.

END OF THE NOTES ON THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET ISAIAH.

INTRODUCTION

TO THE BOOK OF

THE PROPHET JEREMIAH.

THE Prophet Jeremiah, son of Hilkiah, was of the sacerdotal race; and a native of Anathoth, a village in the tribe of Benjamin, within a few miles of Jerusalem, which had been appointed for the use of the priests, the descendants of Aaron, Josh. xxi. 18. He was called to the prophetic office when very young; probably when he was fourteen years of age; and in the thirteenth of the reign of Josiah, A. M. 3375, B. C. 629. He continued to prophesy till after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans, which took place A. M. 3416; and it is supposed that about two years after he died in Egypt. Thus it appears that he discharged the arduous duties of the prophetic office for upwards of forty years.

Being very young when called to the prophetic office, he endeavoured to excuse himself on account of his youth and incapacity for the work: but, being overruled by the Divine authority, he undertook the task, and performed it with matchless zeal and fidelity in the midst of a most crooked and perverse people, by whom he was continually persecuted; and whom he boldly reproved, often at the hazard of his life.

His attachment to his country was strong and fervent;—he foresaw by the light of prophecy the ruin that was coming upon it. He might have made terms with the enemy; and not only saved his life, but have gained ease and plenty: but he chose rather to continue with his people, and take his part in all the disasters that befell them.

After the destruction of Jerusalem, Nebuchadnezzar having made Gedaliah governor of Judæa, the fractious Jews rose up against him, and put him to death; they then escaped to Takpanes in Egypt, carrying Jeremiah with them; who, continuing to testify against their wickedness and idolatry, they filled up the measure of their iniquity, as tradition reports, by stoning the Prophet to death. God marked this murderous outrage by His peculiar displeasure; for in a few years after they were almost all miserably destroyed by the Chaldean armies which had invaded Egypt; and even this destruction had been foretold by the prophet himself, chap. xlii. They were consumed by the sword and by the famine until there was an end of them, a small remnant only escaping, ver. 14, 27, 28.

The pitch of desperate wickedness to which the Jews had arrived previously to their captivity was truly astonishing. They had exhausted all the means that infinite mercy, associated with infinite justice, should employ for the salvation of sinners; and they became in consequence desperately wicked: no wonder, therefore, that wrath fell upon them to the uttermost. It seems that their hardness and darkness had proceeded to such lengths that they abandoned themselves to all the abominations of idolatry to avenge themselves on God, because he would not bear with their continual profligacy. Were ever people more highly favoured,—more desperately ungrateful,—or more signally punished! What a lesson is their history to the nations of the earth, and especially to those who have been favoured with the light of Revelation!

I should have entered into a particular discussion relative to the history of those times mentioned in this Prophet, had they not passed already in review in the Books of Kings and Chronicles; in which much of the historical parts of this Prophet has been anticipated; and to which, in order to avoid repetition, I must refer my Readers. What is farther necessary to be added will be found in the following Notes.

As a writer, the character of Jeremiah has been well drawn by Bishop Louth. On comparing him with Isaiah, the learned prelate says:—"Jeremiah is by no means wanting either in elegance or sublimity; although, generally speaking, inferior to Isaiah in both. St. Jerom has objected to him a certain rusticity in his diction; of which, I must confess, I do not discover the smallest trace. His thoughts, indeed, are somewhat less elevated, and he is commonly more large and diffuse in his sentences: but the reason of this may be, that he is mostly taken up with the gentler passions of grief and pity, for the expressing of which he has a peculiar talent. This is most evident in the Lamentations, where those passions altogether predominate: but it is often visible also in his Prophecies; in the former part of the Book more especially, which is principally poetical. The middle parts are for the most part historical: but the last part, consisting of six Chapters, is entirely poetical; and contains several oracles distinctly marked, in which this Prophet falls very little short of the loftiest style of Isaiah."

It has often been remarked, that although several of the prophecies in this Book have their dates distinctly noted, and most of the rest may be ascertained from collateral evidence; yet there is a strange disorder in the arrangement. "There is," says Dr. Blayney, "a preposterous jumbling together of the prophecies of the reigns of Jehoiachim and Zedekiah in the seventeen Chapters which follow the twentieth, according to the Hebrew copies; so that, without any apparent reason, many of the latter reign precede those of the former; and in the same reign, the last delivered are put first, and the first, last." In order to prevent the confusion arising from this, Dr. Blayney has transposed the Chapters where he thought it needful, without altering the numerals as they stand in our common Bibles.

This defect has been noticed, and attempts made to remedy it by others. Dr. John George Dahler, Professor of Theology in the Protestant seminary of Strasbourg, has just now published the first volume of a work, intitled—JEREMIAS, traduit sur le Texte original, accompagné de Notes Explicatives, Historiques, et Critiques, &c. (antedated) Strasbourg, 1826. After a Preface, and very judicious historical Introduction, consisting, the first of twenty-two, the second of thirty-six pages, the Text and notes follow. The poetical parts of the Text are translated in the Hebraic manner, as the original appears in the best copies; and the whole is divided into Sections; each of which is introduced with judicious observations relative to time, place, circumstances, and the matter contained in that section. The Discourses, or Prophecies, delivered under a particular reign, are all produced under that reign in their chronological order. A Table of this arrangement I shall here introduce, and refer to the use of it afterwards:—

INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET JEREMIAH.

The kings under whom Jeremiah prophesied succeeded each other in the following order :

1. Josiah;—2. Jehoahaz;—3. Jehoiachin, or Jeconiah;—4. Jehoiachim;—5. Zedekiah.

To render the transpositions evident which have taken place in these prophetic Discourses, we have only to look at those which bear the date of their delivery.

Taking into consideration the order of the reigns, a child may perceive that the above prophecies are not in the order of the times of their delivery; and that the sheets or skins on which the text of that MS. was written, from which the present copies have derived their origin, have been pitifully interchanged, huddled, and tacked together, without connexion or arrangement.

To remedy this defect, Dr. Blayney has arranged the chapters in the following order, which he terms a new arrangement of the Chapters in Jeremiah, from chap. xx. to chap. xli. inclusive;—xx., xxii., xxiii., xxv., xxvi., xxxv., xxxvi., xlv., xxiv., xxix., xxx., xxxi., xxxii., xxxvii., xxxviii., xxx., xxxiv., xxxv., xxxvi., xxxvii., xxxviii., xxxix., xl., xli., xlii., xliii., xlv., xli., &c.

The preceding and subsequent Chapters Dr. Blayney thought sufficiently correct for all the general purposes of chronology; and it is according to this order that he prints the Text in his edition and translation of this Prophet.

Dr. Dahler, as we have seen, is more circumstantial. Where he has dates, as are shown in the preceding Table, he produces the Text in that order; where there are not positive dates, he ascertains several by circumstantial intimations, which bear great evidence of accuracy; but there is a numerous class of Discourses which he is obliged to insert in his work by critical conjecture. In such a case as this, when the arrangement of the common Text is so evidently defective, and in many respects absurd, this procedure is quite allowable; for, although the present Text as to its arrangement has the sanction of antiquity; yet, when a remedy is found, it would be absurd, if not sinful, to follow an order which we may rest satisfied never did proceed from the inspired Writer.

I hope none will suppose that these observations detract any thing from the Divine Inspiration of the Book. The Prophet delivered his discourses at particular times, in select portions, during forty or forty-three years: these were afterwards gathered together and stitched up without any attention to chronological arrangement. Though the Spirit of the Lord directed the Prophet, yet it would be absurd to suppose that it guided the hand of every collector or scribe into whose custody these several parcels might come. Suppose a man buy a copy of the Bible in sheets, and not knowing how to collate them, stitches the whole confusedly together, so that in many places the sense cannot be made out from a preceding to a following sheet,—would it not be singularly foolish for any person to say,—“As God is the Fountain of wisdom, and Author of reason, such incongruities cannot proceed from Him, therefore this Book was not given by Divine Revelation.”—A child in a printer’s office might reply,—“Cut the stitching asunder, that is man’s work; collate the sheets and put them in their proper order; and you will soon see that every paragraph is in harmony with the rest, and contains the words of Divine Wisdom.”

Many an ancient MS., which appeared mutilated and imperfect, I have restored to order and perfection by cutting the binding asunder, and restoring the sheets and leaves to those places from which the ignorance and unskilfulness of the binder had detached them. May we not be allowed to treat the dislocations in the writings of a Prophet in the same way, when it is evident that in the lapse of time his work has suffered by the hand of the careless and ignorant?

But it may be asked, “after all the evidence I have, and the concessions I have made, why I have not transposed those disjointed Chapters, and produced them in the order in which I think they should be read?” I answer, were I to give a new Translation with Notes of this Prophet by himself, as Dr. Blayney and Dahler have done, I should feel it my duty to do what the objection states: but as my province as a general Commentator requires me to take up all the Books of the Sacred Volume in the order in which I find them in the present Authorized Version, though convinced that this arrangement is neither correct nor convenient; so I take up the parts of each, however transposed, in the same manner, directing the Reader by Tables and Notes to regulate his use of the Work so as to produce general edification with as little embarrassment as possible.

For general purposes, Dr. Blayney’s Chronological Arrangement may be sufficient: but for greater accuracy Table I. may be preferred. These may at least be considered in the light of helps to a better understanding of these several Prophecies: but no man is bound to follow either, farther than he is convinced that it follows what is specifically set down by the Prophet himself, or fairly deducible from strong circumstantial evidence.

In my Notes on this Prophet, I have availed myself, as far as my plan would permit, of the best helps within my reach. The various readings of Kennicott and De Rossi I have carefully consulted; and occasionally strengthened the evidence in behalf of those readings, more particularly recommended by collations from my own MSS. I regret that I have not been able (for the reasons mentioned at the conclusion of the Notes on Isaiah) to produce all the various readings of importance found in these ancient MSS., and especially in the Book of Lamentations, which is contained in five of them: but, like the woman in the Gospels, I have done what I could; and must leave the rest to those who, with better abilities, may possess the greater advantages of youth and strength, with unimpaired sight.

Reader! God designs thee a blessing by every portion of His word: in thy reading seek for this; and if these Notes be helpful to thee, give Him the glory.

THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET JEREMIAH.

Chronological Notes relative to the commencement of Jeremiah's prophesying.

Year from the Creation, according to Archbishop Usher, 3218.—Year from the Deluge, according to the generally received Hebrew Text, conferred with Acts vi. 4, 1718.—Fourth year of the thirty-seventh Olympiad.—Year from the building of Rome, according to the Varroian account, 135.—Year before the vulgar era of Christ's nativity, 623.—Twelfth year of Anco Marcius, the fourth king of the Romans: this was the one hundred and twentieth year before the expulsion of the Tarquins.—Nineteenth year of Pharasmanes, the second king of Media.—Twenty-third year of Arochismenes, king of Lacedæmon, of the family of the Proclides.—Sixteenth year of Euryorates II. king of Macedonia, of the family of the Eurybœtidæ.—Third year of Sicyonius, king of Lycia, which was the eighty-seventh year before the conquest of this kingdom by Cyrus.—Twelfth year of Philip, the sixth king of Macedonia, or the two hundred and ninety-third before the commencement of the reign of Alexander the Great.—Thirtieth year of Josiah king of Judah.—Epoch of the building of Cyrene by Battus, according to some Chronologers.

CHAPTER I.

General title to the whole Book, 1-5. Jeremiah receives a commission to prophesy concerning nations and kingdoms, a work to which, in the Divine purpose, he had been appointed before his birth, 4-10. The vision of the rod of an almond-tree and of the scolding-pot, with their signification, 11-16. Promises of Divine protection to Jeremiah in the discharge of the arduous duties of his prophetic office, 17-18.

NOTES ON CHAPTER I.

Verse 1-3. The words of Jeremiah] These three verses are the title of the Book; and were probably added by Ezra when he collected and arranged the Sacred Books, and put them in that order in which they are found in Hebrew Bibles in general. For particulars relative to this Prophet, the times of his prophesying, and the arrangement of his discourses, see the Introduction.

Eleventh year of Zedekiah] That is, the last year of his reign; for he was made prisoner by the Chaldeans in the fourth month of that year, and the carrying away of the inhabitants of Jerusalem was in the fifth month of the same year.

Verse 4. The word of the Lord came unto me] Then I first felt the inspiring influence of the Divine Spirit; not only revealing to me the subjects which He would have me to declare to the people, but also the words which I should use in these declarations.

Verse 5. Before I formed thee] I had destined thee to the prophetic office before thou wert born: I had formed my plan, and appointed thee to be my envoy to this people. St. Paul speaks of his own call to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles in similar terms, Gal. i. 15, 16.

Verse 6. I cannot speak] Being very young, and wholly inexperienced, I am utterly incapable of conceiving aright, or of clothing these Divine subjects in suitable language. Those who are really called of God to the sacred ministry are such as have been brought to a deep acquaintance with themselves, feel their own ignorance, and know their own weakness. They know also the awful responsibility that attaches to the work; and nothing but the authority of God can induce such to undertake it. They whom God never called run, because of worldly honour and emolument: the others hear the call with fear and trembling, and can go only in the strength of Jehovah.

How ready is the man to go,
Whom God hath never sent!
How firm 'twill stand, and slow,
God's chosen instrument!

Verse 7. Whatever I command thee] It is my words and message, not thine own, that thou shalt deliver. I forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations.

6 Then said I, Ah, Lord God! behold, I cannot speak: for I am a child.

7 But the Lord said unto me, Say not, I am a child: for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak.

8 Be not afraid of their faces: for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith the Lord.

9 Then the Lord put forth his hand, and touched my mouth. And the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth.

10 See, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, and to destroy, and to throw down, to build, and to plant.

11 Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Jeremiah, what seest thou? And I said, I see a rod of an almond tree.

12 Then said the Lord unto me, Thou hast well seen: for I will hasten my word to perform it.

shall teach thee; therefore, thy youth and inexperience can be no hindrance.

Verse 8. Be not afraid of their faces] That is, the Jews, whom he knew would persecute him because of the message which he brought. To be fore-warned is to be half-armed. He knew what he was to expect from the disobedient and the rebellious; and must now be prepared to meet it.

Verse 10. I have set thee over the nations] God represents His messengers the prophets as doing, what He commanded them to declare should be done. In this sense they rooted up, pulled down, and destroyed;—declared God's judgments:—they built up, and planted;—declared the promises of His mercy. Thus God says to Isaiah, (ch. vi. 10.) Make the heart of this people fat—and shut their eyes. Shew them that they are stupid and blind; and that, because they have shut their eyes and hardened their hearts, God will in His judgments leave them to their hardness and darkness.

Verse 11. A rod of an almond-tree] קֶרֶן shaked, from קֶרֶן shakad,—to be ready, to hasten, to watch for an opportunity to do a thing, to awake; because the almond-tree is the first to flower and bring forth fruit. Pliny says, Floret prima omnium amygdala mense Januario; Martio vero pomum maturat. It blossoms in January, when other trees are locked up in their winter's repose; and it bears fruit in March, just at the commencement of spring, when other trees only begin to bud. It was here the symbol of that promptitude with which God was about to fulfil his promises and threatenings. As a rod, says Dahler, is an instrument of punishment, the rod of the almond may be intended here as the symbol of that punishment which the prophet was about to announce.

Verse 12. I will hasten my word] Here is a paranomasia. What dost thou see? I see, קֶרֶן shaked, an almond, the hastening tree; that which first awakes. Thou hast well seen, for (קֶרֶן shaked) I will hasten my word. I will awake, or watch over my word for the first opportunity to inflict the judgments which I threaten. The judgment shall come speedily; it shall soon flourish, and come to maturity.

CHAPTER II.

13 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying, What seest thou? And I said, I see a seething pot; and the face thereof is toward the north.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, Out of the north an evil shall break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land.

15 For, lo, I will call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the LORD; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof round about, and against all the cities of Judah.

16 And I will utter my judgments against them touching all their wickedness, who have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, and worshipped the works of their own hands.

17 Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, and speak unto them all that I command thee: be not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them.

18 For, behold, I have made thee this day, a defenced city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls against the whole land, against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land.

19 And they shall fight against thee; but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the LORD, to deliver thee.

* Ezek. 11. 3, 7. & 34. 3.—1 Heb. from the face of the north.—Ch. 4. 6. & 6. 1. * Heb. shall be opened.—Ch. 5. 15. & 4. 22. & 16. 22. & 25. 2.—Ch. 28. 2. & 43. 10.—Deut. 28. 51. Ch. 17. 13.—2 Kings 18. 46. 2 Kings 4. 29. & 9. 1. Job 38. 2. Luke 12. 30. 1 Pet. 1. 18.—4 Exod. 2. 12. Ver. 8. Ezek. 2. 6.—5 Or, break to pieces.

Verse 13. A seething pot—toward the north.] We find from Ezekiel xxiv. 3, &c. that a boiling pot was an emblem of war, and the desolations it produces. Some have thought that by the seething-pot Judea is intended, agitated by the invasion of the Chaldeans, whose land lay north of Judea. But Dr. Blayney contends that תבואת צפון mipeney tsephonah should be translated, From the face of the north, as it is in the margin; for, from the next verse, it appears that the evil was to come from the north; and therefore the steam, which was designed as an emblem of that evil, must have arisen from that quarter also. The pot denotes the empire of the Babylonians and Chaldeans lying to the north of Judea, and pouring forth its multitudes like a thick vapour, to overspread the land. Either of these interpretations will suit the Text.

Verse 14. Shall break forth] תפתח tippatach, shall be opened. The door shall be thrown abroad, that these calamities may pass out freely.

Verse 15. Shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates] As the gates of the cities were the ordinary places where justice was administered,—so the enemies of Jerusalem are here represented as conquering the whole land, assuming the reins of government, and laying the whole country under their own laws; so that the Jews should no longer possess any political power: they should be wholly subjugated by their enemies.

Verse 16. I will utter my judgments] God denounced His judgments: the conquest of their cities, and the destruction of the realm, were the facts to which these judgments referred; and these facts prove that the threatening was fulfilled.

Worshipped the works of their own hands.] Idolatry was the source of all their wickedness, and was the cause of their desolations. For תבואת le-maasey, the works, more than a hundred MSS. of Kennicott, De Rossi, with many editions, have תבואת le-maaseh, the work. Idolatry was their one great woak,—the business of their life,—their trade.

Verse 17. Gird up thy loins] Take courage, and be ready, lest I confound thee; take courage and be resolute, in pen, lest by their opposition thou be terrified and confounded. God is often represented as doing, or causing to be done, what He only permits or suffers to be done. Or, do not fear them, I will not suffer thee to be confounded. So Dahler, Ne crains pas que je te confonde a leurs yeux, "Do not fear that I shall confound thee before them." It is well known that the phrase, gird up thy reins, is a metaphor taken from the long robes of the Asiatics; which, on going a journey or performing their ordinary work, they were obliged to tuss up under their girdles, that the motions of the body might not be impeded.

Verse 18. I have made thee this day a defenced city,

God expresses His continued regard for His people long since chosen, 1-3. He then expostulates with them on their ungrateful and worse than heathen return to His regard, 4-11; at which even the inanimate creation must be astonished, 12, 13. After this their guilt is declared to be the sole cause of the calamities which their enemies had power to inflict on them, 14-17. They are upbraided for their alliance with idolatrous countries, 18, 19; and for their own propensity to idolatry, notwithstanding all the care and tender mercy of God, 20-28. Even the chastenings of the Almighty have produced in this people no repentance, 30. The Chapter concludes with conscientiously remonstrating against their folly and ingratitude in revolting so deeply from God, and with warning them of the fearful consequences, 31-37.

MOREOVER the word of the LORD came to me, saying,

2 Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the LORD; I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, when thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown.

3 Israel was holiness unto the LORD, and the first-fruits of his increase: all that devour him shall offend; evil shall come upon them, saith the LORD.

4 Hear ye the word of the LORD, O house of Jacob, and all the families of the house of Israel: 5 Thus saith the LORD, What iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity, and are become vain?

6 Neither said they, Where is the LORD that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, that led us through the wilderness, through a land of deserts and of pits, through a land of drought, and of the shadow of death, through a land that no man passed through, and where no man dwelt?

7 And an iron pillar, and brazen wall] Though thou shalt be exposed to persecutions and various indignities, they shall not prevail against thee. To their attacks thou shalt be as an impregnable city; as unshaken as an iron pillar; and as imperishable as a wall of brass. None, therefore, can have less cause to apprehend danger than thou hast. The issue proved the truth of this promise: he outlived all their insults; and saw Jerusalem destroyed, and his enemies, and the enemies of his Lord, carried into captivity. Instead of iron chomoth, walls, many MSS. and editions read נחן chomath, a wall, which corresponds with the singular nouns preceding.

NOTES ON CHAPTER II.

Verse 2. I remember thee] The youth here refers to their infant political state when they came out of Egypt; they just then began to be a people. Their espousals refer to their receiving the Law at Mount Sinai, which they solemnly accepted, Exod. xxiv. 6-8, and which acceptance was compared to a betrothing or espousal. Previously to this they were no people, for they had no constitution nor form of government. When they received the Law, and an establishment in the Promised Land, then they became a people and a nation.

Wentest after me] Received my Law, and wert obedient to it; confiding thyself wholly to my guidance, and being conscientiously attached to my worship. The kindness was that which God shewed them by taking them to be His people, not their kindness to Him.

Verse 3. Israel was holiness unto the LORD] Fully consecrated to His service.

The first-fruits of his increase] They were as wholly the Lord's as the first-fruits were the property of the priests according to the Law, Numb. xviii. 13. These the priests alone had a right to devote to their own use.

All that devour him shall offend] As they were betrothed to the Lord, they were considered His especial property; they therefore who injured them, were considered as laying violent hands on the property of God. They who persecute God's children have a grievous burden to bear; an awful account to give.

Verse 5. What iniquity have your fathers found in me] Have they ever discovered any thing cruel, unjust, or oppressive, in my laws? Any thing unkind or tyrannical in my government? Why then have they become idolaters?

Verse 6. Through the wilderness] Egypt was the house of their bondage: the desert through which they should be rendered natar or natron, a substance totally different from our nitre. It comes from the root ^v natar, to dissolve, loosen; because a solution of it in water is abster-sive, taking out spots, &c. from clothes. It is still used in the East for the purpose of washing. If vinegar be poured on it, Dr. Shaw says, a strong effervescence is the immediate consequence; which illustrates Prov. xxv. 20, "The singing of songs to a heavy heart is like vinegar upon natron;" that is, there is no affinity between them; opposition and strife are occasioned by any attempt to unite them.

23 ^v How canst thou say, I am not polluted, I have not gone after Baalim? see thy way ^v in the valley, know what thou hast done: ^v thou art a swift dromedary traversing her ways;

Thine iniquity is marked before me] No washing will take out thy spots; the marks of thy idolatry and corruption are too deeply rooted to be extracted by any human means.

Verse 23. [See thy way in the valley] The valley of Hinnom, where they offered their own children to Moloch, an idol of the Ammonites.

A swift dromedary traversing her ways] Dr. Blayney translates, "A fleet dromedary that hath taken to company with her."

Dr. Dahler rather paraphrases, viz.—

Rempliable a une dromedaire en chaleur,
Qui court d'une cote a l'autre.
"I, like to a dromedary in her desire for the male,
Which runs hither and thither."

This is an energetic comparison; and shews the unbridled attachment of those bad people to idolatry, and the abominable practices by which it was usually accompanied.

Verse 24. A wild ass used to the wilderness] Another comparison to express the same thing.

Snuffeth up the wind] In a high fever from the inward heat felt at such times, these animals open their mouths and nostrils as wide as possible, to take in large draughts of fresh air, in order to cool them.

In her month they shall find her.] The meaning is, that although such animals are exceedingly fierce and dangerous when they are in this state; yet, as soon as they have found the male, the desire is satisfied, and they become quiet and governable as before. But it was not so with this idolatrous people: their desires were ever fierce and furious; they were never satiated, one indulgence always leading to another. The brute beasts had only a short season in which this appetite prevailed: but they acted without restraint or limit.

Verse 25. Withhold thy foot from being unshod] When it was said to them, "Cease from discovering thy feet; prostitute thyself no more to thy idols."

And thy throat from thirst] Drink no more of their libations, nor use those potions which tend only to increase thy appetite for pollution. Thou didst say, There is no hope: it is useless to advise me thus; I am determined; I have loved these strange gods, and to them will I cleave.

Verse 26. As the thief is ashamed] As the pilferer is confounded when he is caught in the fact: so shalt thou, thy kings, princes, priests, and prophets, be confounded, when God shall arrest thee in thy idolatries, and deliver thee into the hands of thine enemies.

Verse 27. Thou art my father] By thee we have been produced, and by thee we are sustained. This was the property of the true God; for He is the Author and Supporter of being. How deeply fallen and brutishly ignorant must they be, when they could attribute this to the stock of a tree!

Verse 28. According to the number of thy cities are thy gods] Among heathen nations every city had its tutelary deity. Judah, far sunk in idolatry, had adopted this custom. The Church of Rome has refined it a little: every city has its tutelary saint, and this saint has a procession and worship peculiar to himself. So here; not much of the old idolatry is lost.

Verse 31. Have I been a wilderness unto Israel?] Have I ever withheld from you any of the blessings necessary for your support.

A land of darkness] Have you since you passed through the wilderness, and came out of the darkness of Egypt, ever been brought into similar circumstances? You have had food and all the necessities of life for your bodies; and my ordinances and word to enlighten and cheer your souls. I have neither been a wilderness, nor a land of darkness to you.

We are lords] We wish to be our own masters; we will neither brook religious nor civil restraint; we will regard no laws human or divine. It was this disposition that caused them to fall in so fully with the whole system of idolatry.

Verse 32. Can a maid forget her ornaments] This people has not so much attachment to me as young females have to their dress and ornaments. They never forget them; and even when arrived at old age, look with pleasure on the dress and ornaments which they have worn in their youth.

Days without number.] That is, for many years; during the whole reign of Manasseh, which was fifty-five years, the land was deluged with idolatry, from which the reform by good king Josiah his grandson had not yet purified it.

Verse 33. Why trimmest thou thy way] Ye have used a multitude of artifices to gain alliances with the neighbouring idolatrous nations.

Thou also taught the wicked ones thy ways.] Ye have made even those idolaters worse than they were before. Dr. Blayney translates, "Therefore have I taught calamity thy ways." A prosopopoeia: "I have instructed Calamity where to find thee." Thou shalt not escape punishment.

Verse 34. The blood of the souls of the poor innocents] We find from the Sacred History, that Manasseh had filled Jerusalem with innocent blood. See 2 Kings xxi. 16, and Ezekiel xxiv. 10.

I have not found it by secret search, but upon all these.] Such deeds of darkness and profligacy are found only in Israel. Dr. Blayney translates, "I have not found it in a digged hole, but upon every oak." Others cover the blood that it may not appear; but ye have shed it openly, and sprinkled it upon your consecrated oaks, and gloried in it.

Verse 35. Because I am innocent] They continued to assert their innocence, and therefore expected that God's judgments would be speedily removed!

I will plead with thee] I will maintain my process, follow it up to conviction, and inflict the deserved punishment.

36 * Why gaddest thou about so much to change thy way ? ' thou also shalt be ashamed of Egypt, ' as thou wast ashamed of Assyria.

37 Yea, thou shalt go forth from him, and ' thine hands upon thine head : for the Lord hath rejected thy confidences, and thou shalt not prosper in them.

CHAPTER III.

The first five verses of this Chapter allude to the subject of the last ; and contain earnest exhortations to repentance, with gracious promises of pardon, notwithstanding every aggravation of guilt, 1-5. At the sixth verse a new section of prophecy commences, opening with a complaint against Judah for having exceeded in guilt her sister Israel, already cast off for her idolatry, 6-11. She is cast off, but not for ever ; for to this same Israel, whose place of captivity (Assyria) lay to the north of Judah, pardon is promised on her repentance, together with a restoration to the church of God, along with her sister Judah, in the latter days, 12-20. The Prophet foretells the sorrow and repentance of the children of Israel under the Gospel dispensation, 21. God renews His gracious promises, 22 ; and they again confess their sin. In the confession their not desiring to name the idol Baal, the source of their contaminations, but calling him in the abstract idol, or a thing of stone, is a nice touch of the pencil, extremely beautiful and natural, 23-25.

OL XXXVII. 4 THEY say, If a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, shall he return unto her again ? shall not that I land be greatly polluted ? but thou hast played the harlot with many lovers ; yet return again to me, saith the Lord.

2 Lift up thine eyes unto the high places, and see where thou hast not been lien with. In the ways hast thou sat for them, as the Arabian in the wilderness ; and thou hast polluted the land with thy whoredoms and with thy wickedness.

3 Therefore the showers have been withholden, and there hath been no latter rain ; and thou hadst a whore's forehead, thou refusedst to be ashamed.

4 Wilt thou not from this time cry unto me, My father, thou art the guide of my youth ?

Verse 36. Why gaddest thou about? When they had departed from the Lord, they sought foreign alliances for support. 1. The Assyrians, 2 Chron. xxvii. 10-21 : but they injured, instead of helping them. 2. The Egyptians : -but in this they were utterly disappointed, and were ashamed of their confidence. See chap. xxxvii. 7, 8, for the fulfilment of this prediction.

Verse 37. Thou shalt go forth from him, and thine hands upon thine head! Thou shalt find all thy confidence vain, -thy hope disappointed, -and thy state reduced to desperation. The hand being placed on the head was the evidence of deep sorrow, occasioned by utter desolation. See the case of Tamar, when ruined and abandoned by her brother Amnon, 2 Sam. xiii. 19.

Thou shalt not prosper in them. They shall all turn to thy disadvantage : and this, as we shall see in the history of this people, was literally fulfilled. O what a grievous and bitter thing it is to sin against the Lord, and have Him for an Enemy!

NOTES ON CHAPTER III.

Verse 1. If a man put away his wife] It was ever understood by the law and practice of the country, that if a woman were divorced by her husband, and became the wife of another man, the first husband could never take her again. Now Israel had been married unto the Lord ; joined in solemn covenant to Him, to worship and serve Him only. Israel turned from following Him, and became idolatrous. On this ground, considering idolatry as a spiritual whoredom, and the precept and practice of the law to illustrate this case, Israel could never more be restored to the Divine favour : but God, this first Husband, in the plenitude of His mercy is willing to receive this adulterous spouse, if she will abandon her idolatries and return unto Him. And this and the following Chapters are spent in affectionate remonstrances and loving exhortations addressed to these sinful people, to make them sensible of their own sin and God's tender mercy in offering to receive them again into favour.

Verse 2. As the Arabian in the wilderness] They were as fully intent on the practice of their idolatry as the Arab in the desert is in lying in wait to plunder the caravans. Where they have not cover to lie in ambush, they scatter themselves about, and run hither and thither, raising themselves up in their saddles to see if they can discover, by smoke, dust, or other token, the approach of any travellers.

Verse 3. There hath been no latter rain] The former rain, which prepared the earth for tillage, fell in the beginning of November, or a little sooner ; and the latter

5 * Will he reserve his anger for ever ? will he keep it to the end ? Behold, thou hast sinned and done evil things as thou couldest.

6 The Lord said also unto me in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done ? she is gone up upon every high mountain and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot.

7 * And I said after she had done all these things, Turn thou unto me. But she returned not. And her treacherous sister Judah saw it.

8 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery I had put her away, and given her a bill of divorce ; yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also.

9 And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks.

10 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but feignedly, saith the Lord.

11 And the Lord said unto me, The backsliding Israel hath justified herself more than treacherous Judah.

12 Go and proclaim these words toward the north, and say, Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord ; and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you : for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger for ever.

13 Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers rain fell in the middle of April, after which there was scarcely any rain during the summer.

Verse 4. Wilt thou not-cry unto me, My father] Wilt thou not allow me to be thy Creator and Preserver, and cease thus to acknowledge idols ? See on chap. ii. 27.

Verse 5. Will he reserve his anger for ever ? Why should not wrath be continued against thee, as thou continuest transgression against the Lord ?

Verse 6. The Lord said unto me in the days of Josiah the king] This is a new discourse, and is supposed to have been delivered after the eighteenth year of the reign of Josiah. Here the prophet shews the people of Judah the transgressions, idolatry, obstinacy, and punishment, of their brethren, the ten tribes, whom he calls to return to the Lord ; with the most gracious promises of restoration to their own country, their reunion with their brethren of Judah, and every degree of prosperity in consequence. He takes occasion also to shew the Jews how much more culpable they were than the Israelites, because they practised the same iniquities while they had the punishment and ruin of the others before their eyes. He therefore exhorts them to return to God with all their hearts, that they might not fall into the same condemnation. See the following verses.

Verse 7. And I said] By the prophets Elijah, Elisha, Hosea, Amos, &c. for all these prophesied to that rebellious people, and exhorted them to return to the Lord.

Verse 8. I had put her away] Given them up into the hands of the Assyrians.

Verse 9. The lightness of her whoredom] The grossness of her idolatry : -worshipping objects the most degrading, with rites the most impure.

Verse 11. Backsliding Israel hath justified herself more] She was less offensive in my eyes, and more excusable, than treacherous Judah. So it is said, Luke xviii. 14. the humbled Publican went down to his house justified rather than the boasting Pharisee. The one was more to be pitied than the other, and more likely to receive the mercy of God.

Verse 12. Proclaim these words toward the north] The countries where the ten tribes were then in captivity, Mesopotamia, Assyria, Media, &c. see 2 Kings xvii. 6 : these lay north of Judea. How tender and compassionate are the exhortations in this and the following verses ! Could these people believe that God had sent the prophet ; and yet prefer the land of their bondage to the blessings of freedom in their own country, and the approbation of their God ?

under every green tree, and ye have not obeyed my voice, saith the Lord.

14 Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you: and I will take you one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion:

15 And I will give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding.

16 And it shall come to pass, when ye be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, saith the Lord, they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord: neither shall it come to mind: neither shall they remember it; neither shall they visit it; neither shall that be done any more.

17 At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord: and all the nations shall be gathered unto it, to the name of the Lord, to Jerusalem: neither shall they walk any more after the imagination of their evil heart.

18 In those days the house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel, and they shall come together out of the land of the north to the land that I have given for an inheritance unto your fathers.

19 But I said, How shall I put thee among the children, and give thee a pleasant land, a goodly heritage of the hosts of nations? and I said, Thou shalt call me, My father; and thou shalt not turn away from me.

20 Surely as a wife treacherously departeth from her husband, so have ye dealt treacherously with me, O house of Israel, saith the Lord.

21 A voice was heard upon the high places, weeping and supplications of the children of Israel: for they have perverted their way, and they have forgotten the Lord their God.

22 Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings. Behold, we come unto thee; for thou art the Lord our God.

23 Truly in vain is salvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of mountains: truly in the Lord our God is the salvation of Israel.

24 For shame hath devoured the labour of our fathers from our youth; their flocks and their herds, their sons, and their daughters.

25 We lie down in our shame, and our confusion covereth us: for we have sinned against the Lord our God, we and our fathers, from our youth even unto this day, and have not obeyed the voice of the Lord our God.

CHAPTER IV.

Second of the exhortations and promises addressed to Israel in the preceding Chapter, 1, 2. The Prophet then addresses the people of Judah and Jerusalem, exhorting to repentance and reformation that the dreadful visitation with which they were threatened might be averted, 3, 4. He then sounds the alarm of war, 5, 6. Nebuchadnezzar, like a fierce lion, is, from the certainty of the prophecy, represented to be on his march; and the disastrous event to have been already declared, 7-9. And as the living prophets had flattered the people with the hopes of personal safety, they are now introduced (when their predictions are fulfilled by the event) accusing themselves; and, with matchless eloquence, laying the blame of the deception upon God, (And they said, &c., as the text is corrected by Kennicott,) 10. The Prophet unjustly renounces his subject; such, in the presence of God, does not excuse the sad catastrophe of Jerusalem by such a beautiful assemblage of the most striking and afflictive circumstances as form a picture of a last "awful with the beson of destruction." The earth seems ready to return to its original chaos; every ray of light is extinguished, and succeeded by a fearful gloom; the mountains tremble, and the hills shake under the dreadful apprehension of the wrath of Jehovah; all is one awful solitude, where not a vestige of the human race is to be seen. Even the fowls of heaven, fleeing no longer whereon to alight, are compelled to migrate; the most fruitful places are become a dark and dreary desert, and every city is a ruinous heap. To complete the whole, the dolorous shrieks of Jerusalem, as of a woman in peculiar agony, break through the frightful gloom; and the appalled Prophet pauses, leaving the Reader to reflect on the dreadful effects of apostasy and idolatry, 25-27.

If thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the Lord, return unto me: and Verse 14. I will take you one of a city, and two of a family] If there should be but one of a city left, or one willing to return, and two only of a whole tribe, yet will I receive these, and bring them back from captivity into their own land. I have heard these words most sinfully applied to shew the nature of a fancied eternal decree of election, that has appointed in several cases one only out of a whole city, and two out of a whole family, to be eternally saved, leaving the rest, according to the decree of reprobation, to perish everlastingly! And yet these persons who spoke thus of the Fountain of eternal goodness and mercy, professed to believe in Him who, by the grace of God, tasted death for every man!

Verse 15. I will give you pastors according to mine heart] The pastor means either the king or the prophet; and the pastors here promised may be either kings or prophets, or both. These shall be according to God's own heart,—they shall be of His own choosing,—and shall be qualified by Himself: and in consequence they shall feed the people with knowledge, דָּבָר, that Divine truth concerning the true God and the best interests of man, which was essentially necessary to their salvation;—and understanding, חִשְׁבֵי, hiskil, the full interpretation of every point, that, in receiving the truth, they might become wise, holy, and happy.

Verse 16. The ark of the covenant of the Lord] This symbol of the Divine Presence, given to the Jews as a token and pledge of God's dwelling among them, shall be no longer necessary, and shall no longer exist; for, in the days of the Messiah, to which this promise seems to relate, God's worship shall not be confined either to one place or to one people. The temple of God shall be among men; and every where God be adored through Christ Jesus.

Neither shall that be done any more.] The ark shall be no more established, or carried from place to place; nor shall men go to visit it. All its ceremonies and importance shall cease; and, if lost, shall never be rebuilt.

Verse 17. They shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord] The new Jerusalem, the universal church of Christ, shall be God's throne: and wherever He is acknowledged as the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world, there God sits on His throne, and holds His court.

Verse 18. The house of Judah shall walk with the house of Israel] That is, in those days in which the Jews shall be brought in with the fullness of the Gentiles.

Out of the land of the north] From Chaldea. This prophecy has two aspects:—one refers to the return from the Babylonian captivity; the other, to the glorious days of Christianity. But the words may refer to that gathering together of the Jews, not only from Chaldea, but from the countries of their dispersion over the face of the whole earth, and uniting them in the Christian church.

Verse 19. How shall I put thee among the children] As if he had said, How can ye be accounted a holy seed, who are polluted? How can ye be united to the people of God, who walk in the path of sinners? How can ye be taken to heaven, who are unholly within, and unrighteous without?

And I said, thou shalt call me, My father] This is the answer to the above question. They could not be put among the children unless they became legal members of the heavenly family: and they could not become members of this family unless they abandoned idolatry, and took the Lord for their Portion. Nor could they be continued in the privileges of the heavenly family, unless they no more turned away from their heavenly Father.

Verse 21. A voice was heard upon the high places] Here the Israelites are represented as assembled together to bewail their idolatry and to implore mercy. While thus engaged, they hear the gracious call of Jehovah.

Verse 22. Return, ye backsliding children] This they gladly receive, and with one voice make their confession to Him. Behold, we come unto thee, for thou art Jehovah our God;—and thence to the end of the chapter, shew the reasons why they return unto God. 1. Because He is the true God. 2. Because the idols did not profit them: they could give no help in time of trouble. 3. Because it is the prerogative of God alone to give salvation. 4. Because they had no kind of prosperity since they had abandoned the worship of their Maker. And this was not only their case, but it was the case of their forefathers, who all suffered in consequence of their idolatry, and disobedience. 5. The reasons are concluded with a hearty confession of sin, at the thought of which they are confounded; for the remembrance of their sin was grievous to them, and the burthen was intolerable. This confession ended, God appears in the next Chapter with gracious promises, and proper directions how they are to return, and how to conduct themselves in future.

Verse 24. For shame hath devoured] The word shame, here and in chap. xi. 13. Hos. ix. 10, is supposed to signify Baal, the idol which they worshipped. That thing or shame which has brought you into contempt, confusion and ruin. Sooner or later every sinner must be ashamed of his conduct; next, confounded; and, lastly, ruined by it.

if thou wilt put away thine abominations out of my sight, then shalt thou not remove.

2 ^b And thou shalt swear, The LORD liveth, ^c in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness; ^d and the nations shall bless themselves in him, and in him shall they ^e glory.

3 For thus saith the LORD to the men of Judah and Jerusalem, ^f Break up your fallow ground, and ^g sow not among thorns.

4 ^h Circumcise yourselves to the LORD, and take away the foreskins of your heart, ye men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem: lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

5 Declare ye in Judah, and publish in Jerusalem; and say, Blow ye the trumpet in the land; cry, gather together, and say, ⁱ Assemble yourselves, and let us go into the defenced cities.

6 Set up the standard toward Zion: ^k retire, stay not: for I will bring evil from the ^l north, and a great ^m destruction.

7 ⁿ The lion is come up from his thicket, and ^o the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way; he is gone forth from his place ^p to make thy land desolate; and thy cities shall be laid waste, without an inhabitant.

8 For this ^q gird you with sackcloth, lament and howl: for the fierce anger of the LORD is not turned back from us.

9 And it shall come to pass at that day, saith the LORD, that the heart of the king shall perish, and the heart of the princes; and the priests shall be astonished, and the prophets shall wonder.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IV.

Verse 1. Shalt thou not remove.] This was spoken before the Babylonian captivity; and here is a promise that if they will return from their idolatry, they shall not be led into captivity. So, even that positively threatened judgment would have been averted had they returned to the Lord.

Verse 2. Thou shalt swear, The Lord liveth] Thou shalt not bind thyself by any false god; thou shalt acknowledge me as the Supreme. Bind thyself by me, and to me; and do this in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness.

The nations shall bless themselves in him] They shall be so fully convinced of the power and goodness of Jehovah in seeing the change wrought on thee, and the mercies heaped upon thee, that their usual mode of benediction shall be,—May the God of Israel bless thee!

Verse 3. Break up your fallow ground] Fallow ground is either that which, having been once tilled, has lain long uncultivated; or, ground slightly plowed, in order to be plowed again previously to its being sown. Ye have been long uncultivated in righteousness; let true repentance break up your fruitless and hardened hearts; and when the seed of the word of life is sown in them, take heed that worldly cares and concerns do not arise, and like thorns, choke the good seed.

Verse 4. Circumcise yourselves] Put away every thing that has a tendency to grieve the Spirit of God, or to render your present holy resolutions unfruitful.

Verse 5. Blow ye the trumpet] Give full information to all parts of the land, that the people may assemble together and defend themselves against their invaders.

Verse 6. I will bring evil from the north] From the land of Chaldea.

Verse 7. The lion is come up] Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. "The king (Nebuchadnezzar) is come up from his tower." Targum.

The destroyer of the Gentiles] Of the nations: of all the people who resisted his authority. He destroyed them all.

Verse 8. Lament and howl] הללו היללו. The aboriginal Irish had a funeral song called the Caoinian, still continued among their descendants, one part of which is termed the ulaloo: this is sung responsively, or alternately, and is accompanied with a full chorus of sighs and groans. It has been thought that Ireland was originally peopled by the Phœnicians: if so, this will account for the similarity of many words and customs among both these people.

Verse 9. The heart of the king shall perish] Shall lose all courage.

10 Then said I, Ah, Lord God! surely thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall have peace; whereas the sword reacheth unto the soul.

11 At that time shall it be said to this people and to Jerusalem, ^a A dry wind of the high places in the wilderness toward the daughter of my people, not to fan, nor to cleanse, 12 Even ^b a full wind from those places shall come unto me: now also ^c will I ^d give sentence against them.

13 Behold, he shall come up as clouds, and ^e his chariots shall be as a whirlwind: ^f his horses are swifter than eagles. Woe unto us! for we are spoiled.

14 O Jerusalem, ^g wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved. How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?

15 For a voice declareth ^h from Dan, and publisheth affliction from mount Ephraim.

16 Make ye mention to the nations; behold, publish against Jerusalem, that watchers come ⁱ from a far country, and give out their voice against the cities of Judah.

17 ^j As keepers of a field, are they against her round about; because she hath been rebellious against me, saith the LORD.

18 ^k Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee; this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter, because it reacheth unto thine heart.

19 My ^l bowels, my bowels! I am pained at ^m my very heart; my heart maketh a noise in me; I cannot hold my peace, because thou hast

Verse 10. Ah, Lord God! surely thou hast greatly deceived this people] The Targum paraphrases this verse thus: "And I said, Receive my supplication, O Lord God; for, behold, the false prophets deceive this people and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall have peace." The prophet could not reconcile this devastation of the country with the promises already made; and he appears to ask the question, How Thou not then deceived this people in saying there shall be peace, &c. prosperity?—

Whereas the sword reacheth unto the soul.] That is, the life; the people being generally destroyed.

Verse 11—13. A dry wind—a full wind—as clouds—as a whirlwind] All these expressions appear to refer to the pestilential winds, suffocating vapours, and clouds and pillars of sand collected by whirlwinds, which are so common and destructive in the East, see on Isa. xxi. 1. and these images are employed here to shew the overwhelming effect of the Chaldeans' invasion of the land.

Verse 13. Woe unto us!] The people, deeply affected with these threatened judgments, interrupt the prophet with the lamentation—Woe unto us, for we are spoiled! The prophet then resumes:—

Verse 14. O Jerusalem, wash thine heart] Why do ye not put away your wickedness that ye may be saved from these tremendous judgments! How long shall thy vain thoughts of safety and prosperity lodge within thee. Whilst thou continuest a rebel against God, and provokest Him daily by thy abominations!

Verse 15. For a voice declareth from Dan] Dan was a city in the tribe of Dan, north of Jerusalem; the first city in Palestine which occurs in the way from Babylon to Jerusalem.

Affliction from mount Ephraim.] Between Dan and Jerusalem are the mountains of Ephraim. These would be the first places attacked by the Chaldeans; and the rumour from thence would shew that the land was invaded.

Verse 16. Watchers come from a far country] Persons to besiege fortified places.

Verse 17. As keepers of a field] In the Eastern countries grain is often sown in the open country; and, when nearly ripe, guards are placed at different distances round about it to preserve it from being plundered. Jerusalem was watched, like one of these fields, by guards all round about it; so that none could enter to give assistance, and none who wished to escape were permitted to go out.

Verse 19. My bowels] From this to the twenty-ninth verse the prophet describes the ruin of Jerusalem and the desolation of Judea by the Chaldeans, in language and imagery scarcely paralleled in the whole Bible. At the heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war.

20 Destruction upon destruction is cried; for the whole land is spoiled: suddenly are my tents spoiled, and my curtains in a moment.

21 How long shall I see the standard, and hear the sound of the trumpet?

22 For my people is foolish, they have not known me: they are sottish children, and they have none understanding: they are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge.

23 I beheld the earth, and lo, it was without form and void; and the heavens, and they had no light.

24 I beheld the mountains, and lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly.

25 I beheld, and, lo, there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled.

26 I beheld, and, lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at the presence of the Lord, and by his fierce anger.

27 For thus hath the Lord said, The whole land shall be desolate; yet will I not make a full end.

28 For this shall the earth mourn, and the heavens above be black: because I have spoken it, I have purposed it, and will not repent, neither will I turn back from it.

29 The whole city shall flee for the noise of the horsemen and bowmen; they shall go into thickets, and climb up upon the rocks: every city shall be forsaken, and not a man dwell therein.

30 And when thou art spoiled, what wilt thou do? Though thou clovest thyself with crimson, though thou deckest thee with ornaments of gold, though thou rentest thy face with painting, in vain shalt thou make thyself fair; thy lovers will despise thee, they will seek thy life.

31 For I have heard a voice as of a woman in travail, and the anguish as of her that bringeth forth her first child, the voice of the daughter of Zion, that bewaileth herself, that spreadeth her hands, saying, Woe is me now! for my soul is wearied because of murderers.

sight of misery the bowels are first affected; pain is next felt by a sort of stricture in the pericardium; and then the heart becoming strongly affected by irregular palpitations, a gush of tears, accompanied with wallings, is the issue.—My bowels, my bowels! I am pained at my very heart; (the walls of my heart) my heart maketh a noise in me; I cannot hold my peace. Here is nature and fact also.

Verse 20. Destruction upon destruction] Cities burnt, and their inhabitants destroyed.

My tents spoiled] Even the solitary dwellings in the fields and open country do not escape.

Verse 23. I beheld the earth, (the land) and lo, it was without form and void] תהו ובהו tohu va-bohu: the very words used in Genesis to denote the formless state of the chaotic mass before God had brought it into order.

Verse 24. The mountains—hills] Princes, rulers, &c. were astonished and fled.

Verse 25. The birds of the heavens were fled] The land was so desolated that even the fowls of heaven could not find meat, and therefore fled away to another region. How powerfully energetic is this description! See Zeph. i. 3.

Verse 30. Though thou rentest thy face with painting] This probably refers to the custom of introducing stibium, a preparation of antimony, between the eye and the lids, in order to produce a fine lustre, which occasions a distension of the eyelid in the time of the operation. In order to heighten the effect from this, some may have introduced a more than ordinary quantity, so as nearly to rend the eyelid itself. Though thou make use of every means of address, of cunning, and of solicitation, to get assistance from neighbouring states, it will be all in vain. Reference is here particularly made to the practice of harlots to allure men.

Verse 31. Bringeth forth her first child] In such a case, the fear, danger, and pain, were naturally the greatest.

Spreadeth her hands] The gesture indicated by nature to signify distress, and implore help. We have met with this figure in other parts; and among the classic writers it is frequent.

CHAPTER V.

The Prophet, having described the judgments impending over his countrymen, enlarges on the corruption which prevailed among them. Their profusion of religion was all false and hypocritical, 1, 2. Though corrected, they were not amended, but persisted in their guilt, 3. This was not the case with the low and ignorant only, 4; but more especially so with those of the higher order, from whose knowledge and opportunities better things might have been expected, 5. God therefore threatens them with the most cruel enemies, 6; and appeals to themselves if they should be permitted to practise such sin unpunished, 7—9. His then commands their enemies to raze the walls of Jerusalem, 10; that devoted city, whose inhabitants sinned to all their other sins the highest contempt of God's word and prophets, 11—13. Wherefore His word, in the mouth of His prophet, shall be as fire to consume them, 14; the Chaldean forces shall cruelly afflict them, 15—17; and farther, their enemies to raze the walls of Jerusalem, 18; that devoted city, whose inhabitants sinned to all their other sins the highest contempt of God's word and prophets, 11—13. The chapter closes with a most melancholy picture of the moral condition of the Jewish people at that period which immediately preceded the Babylonian captivity, 20—31.

RUN ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if ye can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth; and I will pardon it.

2 And though they say, The Lord liveth; surely they swear falsely.

3 O Lord, are not thine eyes upon the truth? thou hast stricken them, but they have not grieved; thou hast consumed them, but they have refused to receive correction: they have made their faces harder than a rock; they have refused to return.

4 Therefore I said, Surely these are poor; they are foolish: for they know not the way of the Lord, nor the judgment of their God.

5 I will get me unto the great men, and will speak unto them; for they have known the way of the Lord, and the judgment of their God: but these have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds.

6 Wherefore a lion out of the forest shall slay them, and a wolf of the evenings shall spoil them, a leopard shall watch over their cities: every one that goeth out thence shall be torn in pieces: because their transgressions are many, and their backslidings are increased.

7 How shall I pardon thee for this? thy children have forsaken me, & sworn by them: that are no gods: when I had fed them to the full, they then committed adultery, and assembled themselves by troops in the harlots' houses.

NOTES ON CHAPTER V.

Verse 1. Broad places] Market places, and those where there was most public resort.

If ye can find a man] A certain philosopher went through the streets of Athens with a lighted lamp in his hand; and being asked what he sought, answered, I am seeking to find a man. So, in Jerusalem none was found, on the most diligent search, who acted worthy the character of a rational being.

I will pardon it.] I will spare the city for the sake of one righteous person. So, at the intercession of Abraham, God would have spared Sodom if there had been ten righteous persons found in it, Gen. xviii. 26.

Verse 2. The Lord liveth] Though they profess to bind themselves by Jehovah, as if they acknowledged Him as their God and only Lord; yet they swore falsely; for not believing in Him, they took a false oath; one by which they did not believe themselves bound, not acknowledging Him as their Lord. See on chap. iv. 2.

Verse 4. These are poor] They are ignorant; they have no education; they know no better.

Verse 5. I will get me unto the great men] Those whose circumstances and rank in life gave them opportunities of information which the others could not have, for the reasons already given.

These have altogether broken the yoke] These have cast aside all restraint, have acted above law, and have trampled all moral obligations under their feet; and into their vortex the lower classes of the people have been swept away. Solon said,—“The laws are like cobwebs; they entangle the small fry; but the great ones go through them, and carry all away with them.”

Verse 6. Wherefore a lion] Nebuchadnezzar, according to the general opinion: who is called here a lion for his courage and violence; a bear for his rapaciousness; and a leopard for his activity. Dahler supposes the Scythians to be intended, both here and in chap. iv. 7.

Verse 7. In the harlot's houses] In places consecrated to idolatry. In the language of the prophets, adultery generally designs idolatry. This we have often seen.

8 * They were as fed horses in the morning: every one * neighed after his neighbour's wife.
 9 † Shall I not visit for these things? saith the LORD: † and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

10 † Go ye up upon her walls and destroy; * but make not a full end: take away her battlements; for they are not the LORD's.

11 For † the house of Israel and the house of Judah have dealt very treacherously against me, saith the LORD.

12 † They have belied the LORD, and said, † It is not he; neither shall evil come upon us; * neither shall we see sword nor famine:

13 And the prophets shall become wind, and the word is not in them: thus shall it be done unto them.

14 Wherefore thus saith the LORD God of hosts, Because ye speak this word, † behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them.

15 Lo, I will bring a † nation upon you † from far, O house of Israel, saith the LORD; it is a mighty nation, it is an ancient nation, a nation whose language thou knowest not, neither understandest what they say.

16 Their quiver is as an open sepulchre, they are all mighty men.

17 And they shall eat up thine † harvest, and thy bread, which thy sons and thy daughters should eat: they shall eat up thy flocks and thine herds: they shall eat up thy vines and thy fig trees: they shall impoverish thy fenced cities, wherein thou trustedst, with the sword.

18 Nevertheless in those days, saith the LORD, I † will not make a full end with you.

19 And it shall come to pass, when ye shall say, † Wherefore doeth the LORD our God all these things unto us? then shalt thou answer them, Like as ye have † forsaken me, and served strange gods in your land, so † shall ye serve strangers in a land that is not yours.

20 Declare this in the house of Jacob, and publish it in Judah, saying,

21 Hear now this, O † foolish people, and without † understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not:

22 † Fear ye not me? saith the LORD: will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the † bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it: and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it?

23 But this people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone.

24 Neither say they in their heart, Let us now fear the LORD our God, † that giveth rain, both the † former and the latter, in his season: † he reserveth unto us the appointed weeks of the harvest.

25 † Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withholden good things from you.

26 For among my people are found wicked men: † they † lay wait, as he that setteth snares; they set a trap, they catch men.

27 As a † cage is full of birds, so are their houses full of deceit: therefore they are become great, and waxen rich:

28 They are waxen † fat, they shine: yea, they overpass the deeds of the wicked: they judge

Verse 8. After his neighbour's wife.] This may have been literally true, as the abominations of idolatry, in which they were so deeply practised, would necessarily produce such a state of things as that here mentioned.

Verse 10. Go ye up upon her walls.] This is the permission and authority given to the Chaldeans to pillage Jerusalem.

Take away her battlements] Some translate נשמה netishoth, branches; others, vines. The metaphor is probably taken from a tree. Destroy the branches, cut down the stem: but do not damage the root. Leave so many of the people that the state may be regenerated. The Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic read, leave her foundations, for they are the LORD's: and this agrees with Destroy, but make not a full end.

Verse 12. They have belied the LORD] כחשו kichashu. They have denied or disavowed the LORD.

It is not he] כחש לו hu, he is not; there is no such being; therefore this evil shall not come upon us. On their premises, their conclusion was just. There is no judge; therefore, there shall be no judgment. Thus they denied the LORD. They were atheists at heart.

Verse 13. And the prophets shall become wind] What are the prophets? Empty persons. Their words are wind; we hear the sound of their threatenings, but of the matter of the threatenings we shall hear no more.

And the word is not in them] There is no inspirer:—but may their own predictions fall on their own heads! This seems the natural sense of this passage.

Verse 14. Because ye speak this word] Because ye thus treat my message, I will make my words in thy mouth fire. They have said, they are but air: but I will make them fire, and a fire too that shall devour them. And how this was to be done, and by whom, is mentioned in the next verse.

Verse 15. I will bring a nation] The Scythians, says Dahler; the Babylonians, whose antiquity was great; that empire being founded by Nimrod.

Whose language thou knowest not] The Chaldee, which, though a dialect of the Hebrew, is so very different in its words and construction, that in hearing it spoken they could not possibly collect the meaning of what was said.

Verse 16. Their quiver is as an open sepulchre] They are such exact archers, as never to miss their mark; every arrow is sure to slay one man.

Verse 18. I will not make a full end] There are more evils in store for you. You shall not only be spoiled, and all your property destroyed: but ye shall be carried into captivity; and ye shall serve strangers in a land that is not yours, ver. 19.

Verse 22. Which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea] What can I not do? who confine the sea, that enormous mass of waters, and prevent it from overflowing the earth; not by immense mountains and rocks, but by the sand; no particle of which is in cohesion with another. Yet the most tremendous waves cannot displace, nor pass over, this simple barrier.

Verse 23. They are revolted and gone.] They have abandoned me, and are gone farther and farther into transgression. They are gone entirely away from truth and righteousness.

Verse 24. Giveth rain, both the former and the latter] See the note on chap. iii. 3.

The appointed week of the harvest.] As the early rains fell in the northern parts of Judea about the end of September, in the civil year of the Hebrews; so the latter rains fell before harvest in the months of March and April: so the appointed weeks of the harvest were those which fell between the Pass-over and Pentecost. In the southern parts the harvest was earlier than in the northern. Dr. Blayney translates,—“A sufficiency of the appointed things of harvest He secureth to us.”

If the word שכבש shebush, weeks, be read with a w sin, instead of a w shin, it will signify fulness or sufficiency; and thus the Septuagint and Vulgate have read it. I think the present reading is much to be preferred. God appoints a harvest time, and in His good providence He generally gives harvest weather.

Verse 25. Your iniquities have turned away these things] When these appointed weeks of harvest do not come,—should we not examine and see whether this be not in God's judgment? Have not our iniquities turned away these good things from us?

Verse 26. They lay wait, as he that setteth snares] A metaphor taken from fowlers, who, having fixed their nets, lie down and keep out of sight, that when birds come, they may be ready to draw and entangle them.

Verse 27. As a cage is full of birds] There is no doubt that the reference here is to a decoy or trap-cage, as Dr. Blayney has rendered it: in these the fowlers put several tame birds, which, when the wild ones see, they come and light on the cage, and fall into the snare.

Verse 28. They judge not the cause,—yet they prosper] not ^a the cause, the cause of the fatherless, ^b yet they prosper; and the right of the needy do they not judge.

29 ^c Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

30 ^d A wonderful and ^e horrible thing is committed in the land;

31 The prophets prophesy ^f falsely, and the priests ^g bear rule by their means; and my people ^h love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof?

CHAPTER VI.

Jeremiah, in the spirit of prophecy, seeing the Chaldeans on their march, bids his people set up the usual signals of distress, and spread the general alarm to beset themselves in fight, 1. Then, by a beautiful allusion to the custom of shepherds moving their flocks to the richest pastures, Jerusalem is singled out as a place deeming to be eaten up or trodden down, by the armies of the Chaldeans, who are called up against her, and whose anger and impetuosity is so great that the soldiers, when they arrive in the evening, regret they have no more day, and desire to begin the attack without waiting for the light of the morning, 2-5. God is then represented as animating and directing the banners against this guilty city, which aimed as innocently as a fountain flows, 6, 7; although warned of the fatal consequence, 8. He intimates also (by the glassing of the grapes) that our invasion should carry away the remnant of wood, all their disobedience, hypocrisy, and other sins, should end in their total overthrow, 9-15. And to show that God is clear when He judgeth, he mentions His having in vain admonished and warned them; and calls upon the whole world to witness the equity of His proceedings, 16-19, in punishing this perverse and hypocritical people, 19, 20, by the ministry of the cruel Chaldeans, 21-23. Upon this a chorus of Jews is introduced expressing their fears and alarm, 24, 25; in which the Prophet echoes a response full of sympathy and understanding, 26. The concluding verses, by metaphors taken from the process of refining gold and silver, represent all the methods hitherto used to amend them as wholly ineffectual, 27-30.

Perhaps we might be justified in translating, And shall they prosper?

Verse 30. A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land. Dahler translates: "Strange crimes and horrible trespasses have been committed in the land." These have been already detailed; but this may refer to what follows.

Verse 31. The prophets prophesy falsely] The false prophets predict favourable things, that they may please both the princes and the people.

The priests bear rule by their means] The false prophets affording them all that their influence and power can procure, to enable them to keep their places, and feed on the riches of the Lord's house.

And my people love to have it so] Are perfectly satisfied with this state of things, because they are permitted to continue in their sins without reproof or restraint. The prophets and the priests united to deceive and ruin the people. The prophets gave out false predictions; by their means the priests got the government of the people into their own hands; and so infatuated were the people that they willingly abandoned themselves to those blind guides, and would not hearken to the voice of any reformer. In my Old Bible, the words stand thus:—Stonings and mer-ballsen ben made in the erthe, prophets propheredden leasing; and prestis flappeniden with joye with ther bondes, and my people lovden sicke things. False prophets and worldly priests have been in all ages the bane of religion, and the ruin of many souls. When profligate people stand up in behalf of profligate priests, corruption must then be at its height.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VI.

Verse 1. O ye children of Benjamin, gather yourselves to flee] As the invading armies are fast approaching, the prophet calls on the inhabitants of Jerusalem to sound an alarm, and collect all the people to arm themselves and go against the invaders. They are called the children of Benjamin, because Jerusalem was in the tribe of Benjamin.

Teokoa] Was a city about twelve miles to the south of Jerusalem.

Beth-haccerem] Was the name of a small village situated on an eminence between Jerusalem and Teokoa. On this they were ordered to set up a beacon, or kindle a large

From the north] From Babylon. The Scythians.—Dahler.

Verse 3. The shepherds with their flocks] The chiefs and their battalions. The invading army is about to spoil and waste all the fertile fields round about the city, while engaged in the siege.

Verse 4. Prepare ye war against her] The words of the invaders exciting each other to the assault; and impatient lest any time should be lost; lest the besieged should have time to strengthen themselves, or get in supplies.

Verse 5. Arise, and let us go by night] Since we have lost the day, let us not lose the night: but, taking the advantage of the darkness, let us make a powerful assault while they are under the impression of terror.

Verse 6. Hew ye down trees] To form machines. And cast a mount] That may overlook the city, on which to place our engines.

This is the city to be visited] We are sure of success, for their God will deliver it into our hands: for it is full of oppression; and He has consigned it to destruction.

Verse 7. As a fountain casteth out her waters] The inhabitants are incessant in their acts of iniquity; they do nothing but sin.

Verse 8. Be thou instructed] Still there is respite: if they would even now return unto the Lord with all their heart, the advancing Chaldeans would be arrested on their march, and turned back.

Verse 9. They shall thoroughly glean the remnant of Israel as a vine: turn back thine hand] The Chaldeans are here exhorted to turn back and glean up the remnant of the inhabitants that were left after the capture of Jerusalem; for even that remnant did not profit by the Divine judgments that fell on the inhabitants at large.

Verse 10. The word of the Lord is unto them a reproach] It is an object of derision; they despise it.

Verse 11. I am full of the fury of the Lord] God has given me a dreadful revelation of the judgments He intends to inflict: my soul is burthened with this prophecy.—I have endeavoured to suppress it; but I must pour it forth upon the children, on the young people, on husbands and 16 Thus saith the LORD, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the ^f old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find ^g rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein.

17 Also I set ^a watchmen over you, saying, Harken to the sound of the trumpet. But they said, We will not hearken.

18 Therefore hear, ye nations, and know, O congregation, what is among them.

19 ^h Hear, O earth: behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even ⁱ the fruit of their thoughts, because they have not hearkened unto my words, nor to my law, but rejected it.

20 ^j To what purpose cometh there to me incense ^k from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country? ^l your burnt offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto me.

21 Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will lay stumbling blocks before this people, and the fathers and the sons together shall fall upon them; the neighbour and his friend shall perish.

22 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, a people cometh from the ^m north country, and a great nation shall be raised from the sides of the earth.

23 They shall lay hold on bow and spear; they are cruel, and have no mercy; their voice ⁿ roar-eth like the sea; and they ride upon horses, set in array as men for war against thee, O daughter of Zion.

24 We have heard the fame thereof: our hands wax feeble: ^o anguish hath taken hold of us, and pain, as of a woman in travail.

25 Go not forth into the field, nor walk by the way; for the sword of the enemy and fear is on every side.

26 O daughter of my people, ^p gird thee with sackcloth, ^q and wallow thyself in ashes; ^r make thee mourning as for an only son, most bitter lamentation: for the spoiler shall suddenly come upon us.

27 I have set thee for a tower, and ^s a fortress among my people, that thou mayest know and try their way.

28 ^t They are all grievous revolvers, ^u walking with slanders: they are ^v brass and iron; they are all corrupters.

29 The bellows are burned, the lead is consumed of the fire; and the founder melteth in vain: for the wicked are not plucked away.

30 ^w Reprobate ^x silver shall men call them, because the LORD hath rejected them.

CHAPTER VII.

Here begins another section of prophecy, ending with the ninth Chapter. It opens with exhorting to amendment of life, without which the confidence of the Jews to their temple is declared vain, 1-11. God tells them that warning from the fate of their brethren the Israelites, who had been carried away captive on account of their sin without any regard to that sacred place (Shiloh) where the ark of God once resided, 13-15. The iniquities of Judah are so great in the sight of God that the Prophet is commanded not to intercede for the people, 16; the more especially as they persisted in provoking God by their idolatrous practices, 17-20. The Jewish sacrifices, if not accompanied with obedience to the moral law, are of no avail, 21-24. Notwithstanding the numerous messages of mercy from the time of the Exodus, the people revolted more and more; and have added to their other sins this horrible evil, the setting up of their abominations in the Temple, which shadowed forth the glorious truths of Christianity, with an heterogeneous admixture of the idolatrous, impure, and cruel rites of Hebraism; consequently, the whole land shall be utterly desolated, 25-34.

wives,—on the old, and the supernannated. All must partake in these judgments.

Verse 14. They have healed also the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly] Of the daughter is not in the Text, and is here improperly added; it is, however, in some MSS.

Peace, peace] Ye shall have prosperity—when there was none; and when God had determined that there should be none. Here the prophets prophesied falsely; and the people continued in sin, being deceived by the priests and the prophets.

Verse 16. Thus saith the LORD, Stand ye in the ways, and see] Let us observe the metaphor. A traveller is going to a particular city:—he comes to a place where the road divides into several paths,—he is afraid of going astray,—he stops short,—endeavours to find out the right path,—he cannot fix his choice. At last he sees another traveller;—he inquires of him,—gets proper directions,—proceeds on his journey,—arrives at the desired place,—and reposes after his fatigue. There is an excellent sermon on these words in the Works of our first poet, Geoffrey Chaucer: it is among the Canterbury Tales, and is called Chaucer's Tale.—The Text I find was read by him as it appears in my old MS. Bible: Standeth upon twofold and seeth, and asketh of the elue pathes: What is the good weye? and goth in it, and get schal synnen refrechynge to goure soules. The soul needs rest;—it can only find this by walking in the good way. The good way is that which has been trodden by the saints from the beginning: it is the old way,—the way of faith and holiness. BELIEVE, LOVE, OBEY;—be holy, and be happy. This is the way; let us inquire for it, and walk in it: but these bad people said, We will not walk in it. Then they took another way, walked over the precipice, and fell into the bottomless pit; where, instead of rest, they find,

^a a fiery deluge, fed With ever-burning sulphur, unconsumed.

Verse 17. I set watchmen] I have sent prophets to warn you.

Verse 20. Incense from Sheba] Sheba was in Arabia, famous for the best incense. It was situated towards the southern extremity of the peninsula of Arabia; and was, in respect of Judea, a far country.

And the sweet cane from a far country] The calamus Vol. II.—87 aromatic, which, when dried and pulverized, yields a very fine aromatic smell, seen on Isa. xlii. 24. This was employed in making the holy anointing oil, see Exod. xxx. 23.

Verse 23. They shall lay hold on bow and spear] Still pointing out the Chaldeans; or, according to Dahler, the Scythians, who had through their invasion of Palestine overrun many parts of Asia, and had spread consternation wherever their name was heard.

Verse 27. I have set thee for a tower and a fortress] Dr. Blayney translates, I have appointed thee to make an assay among my people. The words refer to the office of an assayer of silver and gold; and the manner of assaying here is intended by the cupel. To separate the alloy from the silver they add a portion of lead; and when all is fused together, and brought into a state of ebullition, the cupel absorbs the lead, and with it the dross or alloy; and the silver is left pure and motionless on the top of the cupel. The people are here represented under the notion of alloyed silver. They are full of impurities; and they are put in the hands of the prophet, the assayer, to be purified. The bellows are placed, the fire is lighted up, but all to no purpose; so intensely commixed is the alloy with the silver, that it cannot be separated. The nozzle of the bellows is even melted with the intensity of the fire used to effect the refinement; and the lead is carried off by the action of the heat; and the assayer melteth in vain, for the alloy still continues in union with the metal. The assayer gives up the process,—will not institute one more expensive or tedious,—pronounces the mass unfit to be coined, and denominates it reprobate silver, ver. 30. Thus, the evil habits and dispositions of the Israelites were so ingrained that they would not yield to either the ordinary or extraordinary means of salvation. God pronounces them reprobate silver,—not sterling,—full of alloy:—having neither the image nor the superscription of the Great King either on their hearts or on their conduct. Thus He gave them up as incorrigible, and their adversaries prevailed against them. This should be a warning to other nations, and indeed to the Christian Church; for if God did not spare the natural branches, neither will he spare these.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VII.

Verse 1. The word that came to Jeremiah] This prophecy is supposed to have been delivered in the first year 689

Judah, that enter in at these gates to worship the Lord.

3 Thus saith the Lord of hosts the God of Israel, ^bAmend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place.

4 ^cTrust ye not in lying words, saying, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, are these.

5 For if ye thoroughly amend your ways and your doings; if ye thoroughly ^dexecute judgment between a man and his neighbour;

6 ^eIf ye oppress not the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in this place, ^fneither walk after other gods to your hurt:

7 ^gThen will I cause you to dwell in this place, in ^hthe land that I gave to your fathers for ever and ever.

8 Behold, ⁱye trust in ^jlying words, that cannot profit.

9 ^kWill ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, and ^lwalk after other gods whom ye know not;

10 ^mAnd come and stand before me in this house, ⁿwhich ^ois called by my name, and say, We are delivered to do all these abominations?

11 Is ^pthis house, which is called by my name, become a ^qden of robbers in your eyes? Behold, even I have seen it, saith the Lord.

12 But go ye now unto ^rmy place which was in Shiloh, ^swhere I set my name at the first, and see ^twhat I did to it for the wickedness of my people Israel.

13 And now, because ye have done all these works, saith the Lord, and I spake unto you, ^urising up early and speaking, but ye heard not; and I ^vcalled you, but ye answered not;

14 Therefore will I do unto ^wthis house, which is called by my name, wherein ye trust, and unto the place which I gave to you and to your fathers, as I have done to ^xShiloh.

15 And I will cast you out of my sight, ^yas I have cast out all your brethren, ^zeven the whole seed of Ephraim.

16 Therefore ^{aa}pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: ^{ab}for I will not hear thee.

17 Seest thou not what they do in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem?

18 ^{ac}The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough, to make cakes to the ^{ad}queen of heaven, and to ^{ae}pour out drink offerings unto other gods, that they may provoke me to anger.

19 ^{af}Do they provoke me to anger? saith the Lord: ^{ag}do they not provoke themselves to the confusion of their own faces?

20 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the tree of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground; and it shall burn, and shall not be quenched.

21 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; ^{ah}Put your burnt offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh.

22 ^{ai}For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, ^{aj}concerning burnt offerings or sacrifices.

23 But this thing commanded I them, saying, ^{ak}Obey my voice, and ^{al}I will be your God, and ye shall be my people: and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you.

of the reign of Jeholaktim, son of Josiah, who, far from following the example of his pious father, restored idolatry, maintained bad priests and worse prophets, and filled Jerusalem with abominations of all kinds.

Verse 2. Stand in the gate of the Lord's house] There was a show of public worship kept up. The Temple was considered God's residence; the usual ceremonies of religion restored by Josiah were still observed; and the people were led to consider the Temple and its services as sacred things, which would be preservatives to them in case of the threatened invasion.

Verse 4. The temple of the Lord] In the Chaldee the passage stands thus:—"Do not trust in the words of lying prophets, which say, Before the Temple of the Lord ye shall worship; before the Temple of the Lord ye shall sacrifice; before the Temple of the Lord ye shall adore; thrice in the year ye shall appear before it." This the Targumist supposes to have been the reason why the words are here triple repeated. They rather seem to express the conviction which the people had, that they should be safe while their temple service continued; for they supposed that God would not give it up into profane hands. But sacred places and sacred symbols are nothing in the sight of God when the heart is not right with Him.

Verse 5. If ye thoroughly amend your ways] Literally, If in making good ye fully make good your ways. God will no longer admit of half-hearted work. Semblances of piety cannot deceive Him; He will not accept partial reformation; there must be a thorough amendment.

Verse 9. Will ye steal, murder? Will you continue to commit such abominations, and pretend to worship me; and thus defile the place that is called by my name; and so make my house a den of robbers? I have seen this,—and can you expect to escape condign punishment? Ye shall not escape.

Verse 12. But go ye now unto my place which was in Shiloh] See what I did to my tabernacle and ark formerly:—after a long residence at Shiloh, for the iniquity of the priests and the people, I suffered it to fall into the hands of the Philistines, and to be carried captive into their land, and to be set up in the house of their idols. And because of your iniquities I will deal with you and this temple in the same way: for, as I spared not Shiloh, though my ark was there, but made it a victim of my wrath; so will I do to Jerusalem and her temple.

Verse 15. The whole seed of Ephraim.] Taken here for all the ten tribes, that of Ephraim being the principal.

Verse 16. Therefore pray not thou for this people] They have filled up the measure of their iniquity, and they must become examples of my justice. How terrible must the state of that place be where God refuses to pour out the spirit of supplication on His ministers and people in its behalf!

Verse 18. The children gather wood] Here is a description of a whole family gathered together, and acting unitedly in idolatrous worship. 1. The children go and collect wood, and bring it to the place of sacrifice. 2. The fathers lay it in order, and kindle a fire. 3. The mother and her maids knead dough; make their batch; and out of it form cakes, and bake them for the honour of the queen of heaven; most probably the moon, though perhaps not exclusively of the sun and planets, generally called the host of heaven. Family worship is a most amiable and becoming thing when performed according to truth. What a pity that so few families shew such zeal for the worship of God as those apostate Israelites did for that of their idols!

Verse 21. Put your burnt-offerings unto your sacrifices, and eat flesh.] I will receive neither sacrifice nor oblation from you; therefore you may take the beasts intended for sacrifice, and slay and eat them for your common nourishment. See on ver. 29.

Verse 23. This thing commanded I them,—Obey my voice] It was not sacrifices and oblations which I required of your fathers in the wilderness, but obedience; it was to walk in that way of righteousness which I have commanded, then I should have acknowledged them for my people, and I should have been their God; and then it would have been well with them. But to my commands,—1. They hearkened not;—paid no regard to my word. 2. They inclined not the ear;—shewed no disposition to attend to my counsels. 3. They walked in the imaginations of their evil hearts;—followed its irregular and impure motions, rather than the holy dictates of my Spirit. 4. They went backward, and not forward;—instead of becoming more wise, obedient, and holy, they grew more corrupt; so that they became more profligate than their fathers.

24 But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in the counsels and in the imagination of their evil heart, and went backward, and not forward.

25 Since the day that your fathers came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day I have even sent unto you all my servants the prophets, daily rising up early and sending them:

26 Yet they hearkened not unto me, nor inclined their ear, but hardened their neck: they did worse than their fathers.

27 Therefore thou shalt speak all these words unto them; but they will not hearken to thee: thou shalt also call unto them; but they will not answer thee.

28 But thou shalt say unto them, This is a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the Lord their God, nor receiveth correction: truth is perished, and is cut off from their mouth.

29 Cut off thine hair, O Jerusalem, and cast it away, and take up a lamentation on high places; for the Lord hath rejected and forsaken the generation of his wrath.

30 For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the Lord: they have set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to pollute it.

31 And they have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart.

32 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of the son of Hinnom, but The valley of Slaughter: for they shall bury in Tophet till there be no place.

33 And the carcasses of this people shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth; and none shall fray them away.

34 Then will I cause to cease from the cities of Judah, and from the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride: for the land shall be desolate.

CHAPTER VIII.

The judgments threatened in the last Chapter are here declared to extend to the very devil, whose tents should be apesed, and the carcasses treated with every mark of indignity, 1-3. From this the Prophet returns to reprove them for their perseverance in transgression, 4-6; and for their thoughtless supidity, which even the instinct of the brute creation, by a beautiful contrast, is made to upbraid, 7-9. This leads to farther threatenings, expressed in a variety of striking terms, 10-13. Upon which a chorus of Jews is introduced, expressing their terror on the news of the invasion, 14, 15; which is greatly heightened in the next verse by the Prophet's hearing the snoring of Nebuchadnezzar's horses even from Dan, and then seeing the devastation made by his army, 16, whose cruelties God Himself declares no creature will soften, 17. On this declaration the Prophet laments most bitterly the fate of the daughter of his people, changing the scene unawares to the place of her captivity, where she is introduced answering, in mournful responses, to the Prophet's dirge, 18-24. The variety of images and figures used to diversify the same subject, is equally pleasing and astonishing. The dress is generally new, always elegant.

At that time, saith the Lord, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves:

2 And they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: they shall not be gathered nor be buried; they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth.

3 And death shall be chosen rather than life by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the Lord of hosts.

4 Moreover thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord; Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return?

Verse 23. Nor receiveth correction] They have profited neither by mercies nor by judgments: blessings and corrections have been equally lost upon them.

Verse 29. Cut off thine hair] גזזו gazzu nazarim, shear thy nazaria. The Nazarite was one who took upon him a particular vow, and separated himself from all worldly connexions for a certain time, that he might devote himself, without interruption, to the service of God; and during all this time no razor was to pass on his head, for none of his hair was to be taken off. After the vow was over, he shaved his head and beard, and returned to society. See Numb. vi. 2, &c., and the Notes there. Jerusalem is here considered under the notion of a Nazarite, by profession devoted to the service of God: but that profession was empty; it was not accompanied with any suitable practice. God tells them here to cut off their hair; to make no vain pretensions to holiness or religion; to throw off the mask, and attempt no longer to impose upon themselves and others by their hypocritical pretensions. On the same ground he orders them, ver. 21, to devote to common use the animals destined for sacrifice; and to make no more vain shews of religion while their hearts were not right with Him. Dr. Blayney thinks the address is to the prophet, who was a Nazarite by virtue of his office, and who was called to cut off his hair as a token of mourning for the desolations which were coming upon his people. I think the other the more natural construction. That cutting off the hair was a sign of distress and mourning may be seen, Ezra ix. 3; Isa. xv. 2; Jer. xli. 5, &c.

On high places] That the lamentation may be heard to the greater distance.

The generation of his wrath.] Persons exposed to punishment: used here as children of wrath, Eph. ii. 3.

Verse 31. Tophet—in the valley of the son of Hinnom] Tophet was the place in that valley where the continual fires were kept up, in and through which they consecrated their children to Moloch.

Verse 32. The valley of slaughter] The place where the slaughtered thousands of this rebellious people shall be cast, in order to their being burnt, or becoming food for the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air, ver. 33. These words are repeated, and their meaning more particularly explained, chap. xix. 6—15.

Verse 34. Then will I cause to cease—the voice of mirth] There shall no longer be in Jerusalem any cause of joy;—they shall neither marry nor be given in marriage, for the land shall be totally desolated. Such horrible sins required such a horrible punishment. And they must be horrible, when they move God to destroy the work of His own hands.

NOTES ON CHAPTER VIII.

Verse 1. They shall bring out the bones] This and the two following verses are a continuation of the preceding prophecy, and should not have been separated from the foregoing Chapter.

In order to pour the utmost contempt upon the land, the victorious enemies dragged out of their graves, caves, and sepulchres, the bones of kings, princes, prophets, priests, and the principal inhabitants, and exposed them in the open air; so that they became, in the order of God's judgments, a reproach to them in the vain confidence they had in the sun, moon, and the host of heaven, all the planets and stars, whose worship they had set up in opposition to that of Jehovah. This custom of raising the bodies of the dead, and scattering their bones about, seems to have been general. It was the highest expression of hatred and contempt. Horace refers to it—

Barbarus, hoc, cineres insulset victor, et urbem Equos sonante verberabit ungula: Quoque carent vultus et solibus ossa Quiritis, (Nefas videtur) despectabit involens.

Epid. xvi. 11.

"Barbarians fill all wanton with success, Scatter the city's flaming ruins wide; Or through her streets in vengeful triumph ride, And her great founder's hallow'd ashes spare, That slept uninjured in the sacred air."

Francis.

See this judgment referred to, Baruch ii. 24, 25.

Verse 4. Moreover thou shalt say] Dr. Blayney very properly observes,—“In that part of the prophecy which follows next, the difference of speakers requires to be attended to; the transition being quick and sudden, but full of life and energy. The prophet at first, in the name of God, reproves the people's incorrigibility; he charges their wise ones with folly, and threatens them with grievous calamities, ver. 4—13. In the three next verses he seems to apostrophize his countrymen in his own person, and as one of the people that dwell in the open towns, advising those that were in the like situation to retire with him into some of the fortified cities, and there wait the event with patience, since there was nothing but terror abroad, and the noise of the enemy, who had already begun to ravage the country, ver. 14—16. God speaks, ver. 17, and threatens to bring foes against them that should be irresistible. The prophet appears again in his own person, commiserating the daughter of his people, who is heard bewailing her forlorn case in a distant land; whilst the voice of God, like that of conscience, breaks in upon her complaints, and shews her that all this ruin is brought upon her by her own infidelities, ver. 18—20. The prophet once more resumes his discourse; he regrets that no remedy can be found to close up the wounds of his country, and pathetically weeps over the number of her slain, ver. 21—ch. ix. 1."

Shall they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return? That is, it is as possible for sinners to return from their sin to God, for His grace is ever at hand to assist, as it is for God, who is pouring out His judgments, to return to them on their return to Him. But these held fast deceit, and refused to return;—they would not be undeceived.

Verse 6. As the horse rusheth into the battle.] This strongly marks the unthinking, careless, desperation of their conduct.

Verse 7. The stork in the heaven.] The birds of passage know the times of their going and return, and punctually observe them; they obey the dictates of nature, but my people do not obey my law.

Verse 8. The pen of the scribes is in vain.] The deceitful pen of the scribes. They have written falsely, though they had the truth before them. It is too bold an assertion to say that "the Jews have never falsified the Sacred Oracles:" they have done it again and again. They have written falsities when they knew they were such.

Verse 10. Therefore will I give their wives.] From this to the end of ver. 15, is repeated from chap. vi. 13—15.

Verse 16. The snorting of his horses was heard from Dan.] Dan lay in the way from Babylon to Jerusalem; and it was by this city, after the battle of Karchemish, that Nebuchadnezzar, in pursuing the Egyptians, entered Palestine.

The whole land trembled at the sound of the neighing of his strong ones.] Of his war horses. This is a fine image:—so terrible was the united neighing of the cavalry of the Babylonians that the reverberation of the air caused the ground to tremble. This is better, and more majestic, than the celebrated line of Virgil—

Quadrupes dantis pul-trum sonit-ibus quat-tungulo-carpentum.

It would be much easier to shake the ground with the prancings of many horses, than to cause an earthquake by the sound of the neighing of the troops of cavalry.

Verse 17. I will send serpents.] These were symbols of the enemies that were coming against them;—a foe that would rather slay them, and destroy the land than get booty and ransom.

Verse 20. The harvest is past.] The siege of Jerusalem lasted two years; for Nebuchadnezzar came against it in the ninth year of Zedekiah, and the city was taken in the eleventh, see 2 Kings xxv. 1—3. This seems to have been a proverb:—We expected deliverance the first year; none came.—We hoped for it the second year; we are disappointed; we are not saved,—no deliverance is come.

Verse 22. Is there no balm in Gilead? Yes, the most excellent in the world. Is there no physician there? Yes, persons well skilled to apply it. Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered? Because ye have not applied to the physician, nor used the balm. Ye die, because ye will not use the remedy. But to apply this metaphor:—The Israelites are represented as a man dying through disease; and a disease for the cure of which the balm of Gilead was well known to be a specific, when judiciously applied by a physician. But though there be balm and a physician the people are not cured; neither their spiritual nor political evils are removed. But what may all this spiritually mean? The people are morally diseased: they have sinned against God, and provoked Him to destroy them. They are warned by the prophet to repent and turn to God: they refuse and sin on. Destruction is come upon them.—Might they not have avoided it? Yes. Was it the fault of God? No. Did He not send His prophets with the richest offers of mercy? Did He not give them time, the best instructions, and the most effectual means of returning to Him? Has not mercy, the heavenly balm, been ever at hand? And has not God, the great Physician, been ever ready to apply it? Yes. Why then are they not converted and healed? Because they would not apply to the Divine Physician, nor receive the only Remedy by which they could be spiritually healed. They, then, that

CHAPTER IX.

The Prophet bitterly laments the terrible judgments about to be inflicted upon his countrymen, and points out some of the evils which have provoked the Divine Majesty, 1-8. Judah shall be utterly desolated, and the inhabitants transplanted into Hebræan countries, 10-17. In allusion to an ancient custom, a band of mourning women is called to lament over the ruins of Jerusalem, 17, 18; and even the funeral dirge is given in terms full of beauty, elegance, and pathos, 18-32. God is the Fountain of all good: man, merely an instrument by which a portion of this good is distributed in the earth; therefore, none should glory in his wisdom, might, or riches, 33, 34. The judgments of God shall fall not upon the land of Judæa only, but also upon many Hebræan nations, 35, 36.

Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!

Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men: that I might leave my people, and go from them! for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men.

And they bend their tongues like their bow for lies: but they are not valiant for the truth upon the earth; for they proceed from evil to evil, and they know not me, saith the Lord.

Take ye heed every one of his neighbour, and trust ye not in any brother: for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbour will walk with slanders.

And they will deceive every one his neighbour, and will not speak the truth: they have taught their tongue to speak lies, and weary themselves to commit iniquity.

Thine habitation is in the midst of deceit; through deceit they refuse to know me, saith the Lord.

Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will melt them, and try them; for how shall I do for the daughter of my people?

Their tongue is as an arrow shot out; it speaketh deceit: one speaketh peaceably to sin against the only Remedy must perish, because they might have had it, but would not. It is not because there is a deficiency of grace, nor of the means of grace, that men are not saved; but because they either make no use, or a bad use, of them. Jesus Christ, by the grace of God, has tasted death for every man: but few are saved, because they will not come unto him that they may have life.

In my old MS. Bible the Text is rendered thus:—
Whether gumm is not in Salsad? Or a lèche is not there? Whi than the bid wounde of the daughter of my peple is not alle helth?

How shall they escape who neglect so great a salvation! Reader, lay this to heart. And while there is time apply heartily to the great Physician for thy cure.

NOTES ON CHAPTER IX.

Verse 1. Oh that my head were waters] מַיִם יְרוּ אֵי מִי יִיטֵן רוּחִי, who will give to my head waters. My mourning for the sins and desolations of my people has already exhausted the source of tears: I wish to have a fountain opened there, that I may weep day and night for the slain of my people. This has been the sorrowful language of many a pastor who has preached long to a hardened, rebellious, people, to little or no effect. This verse belongs to the preceding Chapter.

Verse 2. Oh that I had in the wilderness] In the Eastern countries there are no such inns or houses of entertainment as those in Europe. There are in different places public buildings called caravanserais, where travellers may lodge: but they are without furniture of any kind, and without food. Indeed they are often without a roof, being mere walls, for a protection against the wild beasts of the desert. I wish to hide myself any where, in the most uncomfortable circumstances, that I may not be obliged any longer to witness the abominations of this people, which are shortly to be visited with the most grievous punishments. Several interpreters suppose this to be the speech of God; I cannot receive this. I believe this verse to be spoken by the prophet; and that God proceeds with the next verse, and so on to the ninth inclusive.

Verse 3. They bend their tongues like their bow for lies] And their lies are such that they as fully take away life as the keenest arrow from the best strung bow. The false prophets told the people that there was no desolation at hand: the people believed them, made no preparation his neighbour with his mouth, but in heart he layeth his wait.

Shall I not visit them for these things? saith the Lord: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

For the mountains will I take up a weeping and wailing; and for the habitations of the wilderness a lamentation, because they are burned up, so that none can pass through them; neither can men hear the voice of the cattle; both the fowl of the heavens and the beast are fled; they are gone.

And I will make Jerusalem heaps, and a den of dragons; and I will make the cities of Judah desolate, without an inhabitant.

Who is the wise man, that may understand this? and who is he to whom the mouth of the Lord hath spoken, that he may declare it, for what the land perisheth and is burned up like a wilderness, that none passeth through?

And the Lord saith, Because they have forsaken my law which I set before them, and have not obeyed my voice, neither walked therein;

But have walked after the imagination of their own heart, and after Baalim, which their fathers taught them.

Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will feed them, even this people, with wormwood, and give them water of gall to drink.

I will scatter them also among the heathen, whom neither they nor their fathers have known: and I will send a sword after them, till I have consumed them.

Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Consider ye, and call for the mourning women, that they may come; and send for cunning women that they may come:

i Or, pastures.—j Or, desolate.—k Heb. from the fount even to, &c.—r Ch. 4. 25. w Isa. 18. 2.—y Isa. 18. 22. & 34. 13. Ch. 10. 22.—z Heb. desolation.—a Ps. 107. 43. for their defence; did not return to the Lord; and the sword came and destroyed them.

They are not valiant for the truth] They are bold in sin, and courageous to support their lies; but the truth they neither patronize nor support.

Verse 5. And weary themselves to commit iniquity.] O! what a drudgery is sin! and how much labour must a man take in order to get to hell! The tenth part of it, in working together with God, would bring him to the gate of glory.

Verse 7. Behold, I will melt them] I will put them in the furnaces of affliction, and see if this will be a means of purging away their dross. See on chap. vi. 27.

Verse 10. Both the fowl of the heavens and the beast are fled] The land shall be so utterly devastated, that neither beast nor bird shall be able to live in it.

Verse 11. A den of dragons] עַרְוֵי תַנִּים, is supposed to mean here jackals; a beast fennim in the East; an attendant on the lion, the refuse of whose prey he devours. It is an animal that seems to have been bred originally between the wolf and the dog. The original is sometimes interpreted dragons, whales, &c.

Verse 12. Who is the wise man] To whom has God revealed these things? He is the truly wise man; but it is to His prophet alone, that God has revealed these things; and the speedy fulfilment of the predictions will shew that the prophet has not spoken of himself.

Verse 15. I will feed them—with wormwood] They shall have the deepest sorrows and heaviest affliction. They shall have poison instead of meat and drink.

Verse 17. Call for the mourning women] Those whose office it was to make lamentations at funerals, and to bewail the dead; for which they received pay. This custom continues to the present in Asiatic countries. In Ireland, this custom also prevails, which no doubt their ancestors brought from the East. I have given a specimen of this elsewhere. See the Note on Matt. ix. 23. The first lamentations for the dead consisted only in the sudden bursts of inexpressible grief, like that of David over his son Absalom, 2 Sam. xix. 4. But as men grew refined, it was not deemed sufficient for the surviving relatives to vent their sorrows in these natural artless expressions of woe, but they endeavoured to join others as partners in their sorrows. This gave rise to the custom of hiring persons to weep at funerals, which the Phrygians and Greeks borrowed from the Hebrews. Women were generally 18 And let them make haste, and take up a wailing for us, that our eyes may run down with tears, and our eyelids gush out with waters.

19 For a voice of wailing is heard out of Zion, How are we spoiled! we are greatly confounded, because we have forsaken the land, because our dwellings have cast us out.

20 Yet hear the word of the LORD, O ye women, and let your ear receive the word of his mouth, and teach your daughters wailing, and every one her neighbour lamentation.

21 For death is come up into our windows, and is entered into our palaces, to cut off the children from without, and the young men from the streets.

22 Speak, Thus saith the LORD, even the carcasses of men shall fall as dung upon the open field, and as the handful after the harvest-man, and none shall gather them.

23 Thus saith the LORD, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches:

24 But let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the LORD which exercise loving kindness, employed on these occasions, because the tender passions being predominant in this sex, they succeeded better in their parts; and there were never wanting persons who would let out their services to hire on such occasions. Their lamentations were sung to the pipe, as we learn from Matt. ix. 23. See the funeral ceremonies practised at the burial of Hector, as described by Homer:—

Οἱ δ' ἐκ τειλαγῶν κλονε δαμάτα, τὸν μὲν κείρα Τρηοῖς ἐν ληξασσι θέσαν, παρα δ' εἶσαν αἰδοῦν ὀρθρῶν ἐφαρχοῦς, διτε σομοσσαν αἰδοῦν Ὅτι μὲν ἀρ' ἀβρῶων, ἐκὶ δὲ σῆναχοῦν γυναικες. Il. lib. xxiv. ver. 718.

* Arrived within the royal house, they stretched The breathless Hector on a sumptuous bed, And singly placed beside him, who stoical chafed The strain fusered; they with many a groan The dirge began; and still at every close The funeral train with many a groan repaid."

Οἶκρον.

St. Jerom tells us that even to his time this custom continued in Judea; that women at funerals, with dishevelled hair and naked breasts, endeavoured in a modulated voice to invite others to lament with them. The Poem before us, from the seventeenth to the twenty-second verse, is both an illustration and confirmation of what has been delivered on this subject; and worthy of the Reader's frequent perusal, on account of its affecting pathos, moral sentiments, and fine images; particularly in the twenty-first verse, where Death is described in as animated a prosopopœia as can be conceived. See Louth's twenty-second Prelection, and Dodd. The nineteenth verse is supposed to be the funeral song of the women.

"How are we spoiled! We are greatly confounded! For we have forsaken the land; Because they have destroyed our dwellings."

Verse 20. Teach your daughters] This is not a common dirge that shall last only till the body is consigned to the earth; it must last long: teach it to your children, that it may be continued through every generation, till God turn again your captivity.

Verse 21. For death is come up into our windows] Here, DEATH is personified, and represented as scaling their wall; and after having slain the playful children without, and the vigorous youth employed in the labours of the field, he is now come into the private houses to destroy the aged and infirm, and into the palaces to destroy the king and the princes.

Verse 22. And as the handful after the harvest-man] The reapers after having cut enough to fill their hand, threw it down: and the binders following after, collected those handfuls, and bound them in sheaves. Death is represented as having cut down the inhabitants of the land, as the reapers do the corn: but so general was the slaughter, that there was none to bury the dead, to gather up these handfuls; so that they lay in a state of putrescence as dung upon the open field.

Verse 23. Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom] Because God is the Fountain of all good, neither wisdom, nor might, nor riches, nor prosperity, can come, but from or through Him. Nothing can be more rational, than judgment, and righteousness in the earth: for in these things I delight, saith the LORD.

25 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will punish all them which are circumcised with the uncircumcised;

26 Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, and the children of Ammon, and Moab, and all that are in the utmost corners, that dwell in the wilderness: for all these nations are uncircumcised, and all the house of Israel are uncircumcised in the heart.

CHAPTER X.

The Jews about to be carried into captivity, are here warned against the superstition and idolatry of that country to which they were going. Chaldæa was generally addicted to astrology; and therefore, the Prophet begins with warning them against it, 1, 2. He then exposes the absurdity of idolatry in short but elegant satire; in the midst of which he turns, in a beautiful apostrophe, to the One true God, whose adorable attributes repeatedly strike in view, as he goes along, and lead him to contrast His infinite perfections with those despicable vanities which the blinded nations fear, 3—16. The Prophet again denounces the divine judgments, 17, 18; upon which Jerusalem laments her fate, and supplicates the Divine compassion in her favour, 19—25.

HEAR ye the word which the LORD speaketh unto you, O house of Israel:

A. M. cir. 3394. B. C. cir. 610. Ch. X. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25.

2 Thus saith the LORD, Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; for the heathen are dismayed at them.

that the Source of all our blessings should be acknowledged. Riches cannot deliver in the day of death; strength cannot avail against Him; and as a shield against Him, our wisdom is foolishness.

Verse 24. But let him that glorieth] To glory in a thing, is to depend on it as the means or cause of procuring happiness. But there can be no happiness but in being experimentally acquainted with that God who exercises loving-kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth. He who has God's mercy for his portion, may well exult; for he need not fear the power of any adversary.

Sometimes the ancient heathen poets uttered sentiments of morality far beyond their dispensation. Witness Phœcyides on this subject:—

Μη γαρὸν σοφίη, μετ' ἀλκή, μετ' ἐνὶ πλοῦτῳ Εἰς Θεοῦ ἐστὶ σοφῆς, δυνατῆς θ' ἀμῶ, καὶ πολλοῦ βῆος.

"If wisdom, strength, or riches, be thy lot, Forget not; but rather think thou hast them not. ONE GOD alone, from whom these gifts proceed, Is wise, is mighty, and is rich indeed."

Verse 25. I will punish all them which are circumcised with the uncircumcised] Do not imagine that you, because of your crimes, are the only objects of my displeasure; the circumcised and the uncircumcised, the Jew and the Gentile, shall equally feel the stroke of my justice; their transgressions being alike, after their advantages and disadvantages are duly compared. In like manner, other nations also were delivered into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar; these he immediately enumerates—Egypt and Edom, and the Moabites and the Ammonites, and the Arabians of the desert. All these nations were uncircumcised in that way, which God required that rite to be practised as a sign of His covenant; and the Israelites, that did practice it as a sign of that covenant, did not attend to its spiritual meaning; for they were all uncircumcised in heart. And it may be remarked, that these people were in general confederated against the Chaldeans.

Verse 26. All that are in the utmost corners] ἄσπερ ἵσταν καὶ κολιχταῦσι πεῖθ. These words have been variously understood. The Vulgate translates:—Omnes qui a-tonsi sunt in comam—"All who have their hair cut short." The Targum, Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic, have understood it nearly in the same way, and so our margin. Others think, that the insular or peninsular situation of the people is referred to. Dr. Blayney thinks the Arabians meant, who dwell in the great desert, between Mesopotamia and Palestine. I really think our marginal reading should be preferred as expressing the sense of all the ancient Versions.

NOTES ON CHAPTER X.

Verse 1. Hear ye the word which the LORD speaketh unto you] Dr. Dahler supposes this discourse to have been delivered in the fourth year of the reign of Jehoiakim. It contains an invective against idolatry; shewing its absurdity, and how the Creator alone should be worshipped by all mankind.

Verse 2. Learn not the way of the heathen] These words are more particularly addressed to the ten tribes scattered among the heathen by the Assyrians, who carried

3 For the customs of the people are vain: for one cutteth a tree out of the forest, the work of the hands of the workmen, with the ax.

4 They deck it with silver and with gold; they fasten it with nails and with hammers, that it move not.

5 They are upright as the palm tree, but speak not: they must needs be borne, because they cannot go. Be not afraid of them; for they cannot do evil, neither also is it in them to do good.

6 Forasmuch as there is none like unto thee, O Lord; thou art great, and thy name is great in might.

7 Who would not fear thee, O King of nations? for to thee doth it appertain: forasmuch as among all the wise men of the nations, and in all their kingdoms, there is none like unto thee.

8 But they are altogether brutish and foolish: the stock is a doctrine of vanities.

9 Silver spread into plates is brought from Tarshish, and gold from Uphaz, the work of the workman, and of the hands of the founder:

them away captive: they may also regard those in the land of Israel, who still had the customs of the former Heathen settlers before their eyes.

Be not dismayed at the signs of heaven; for the heathen are dismayed. The Chaldeans and Egyptians were notoriously addicted to astrology; and the Israelites here are cautioned against it. The signs of the heavens may mean, either the sun, moon, planets, and particular stars or constellations; or the figures or characters by which they represented these heavenly bodies.

Verse 3. The customs of the people are vain] חוקי חכמה; the statutes and principles of the science are vain, empty, and illusory. They are founded in nonsense, ignorance, idolatry, and folly.

One cutteth a tree out of the forest] See the notes on Isa. xl. 19, and xlv. 9, &c. which are all parallel places, and where this conduct is strongly ridiculed.

Verse 5. They are upright as the palm-tree.] As straight and as stiff as the trees out of which they are hewn.

Verse 7. Who would not fear thee] Who would not worship Thee as the Author and Giver of all good. The fear of God is often taken for the whole of true religion.

Among all the wise men of the nations] Not even the wisest and most cultivated of the nations have ever found out any one equal to Thee: but so exalted and holy art Thou, that in all their wisdom and research they have never been able to find out the True God.

Verse 8. The stock is a doctrine of vanities.] Dr. Blayney translates,—"The wood itself is a rebuker of vanities." The very tree out of which the god is hewn demonstrates the vanity and folly of the idolaters;—for, can all the art of man make out of a log of wood an animate and intelligent Being?

Verse 9. Brought from Tarshish.] Some suppose this to be Tartessus in Spain, from which the Phœnicians brought much silver. Uphaz, Calmet thinks to be the river Pison; some think Ophir is intended.

Blue and purple is their clothing.] These were the most precious dyes; very rare, and of high price.

Verse 10. But the Lord.] The original word should be preserved, however we agree to pronounce it: Jehovah rrr is the true God. He is without beginning, and without end. This is true of no being else.

He is the living God.] His Being is underived; and He gives life to all. He is the very Fountain whence all life is derived.

And an everlasting King.] As He has made, so He governs, all things. His sway is felt both in the heavens and in the earth.

At his wrath the earth shall tremble.] All storms, tempests, tornadoes, and earthquakes, are the effects of his power; and when the nations are destroyed, or turned upside down, it is the effect of His displeasure.

Verse 11. Thus shall ye say unto them.] This is the message you shall deliver to the Chaldeans.

The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish.] Both they and their worshippers shall be destroyed; and idolatry shall finally be destroyed from the earth; and the heavens shall look no more on so great an abomination. It is suffered for a while; but in the end shall be destroyed. This verse is written in a sort blue and purple is their clothing: they are all the work of cunning men.

10 But the LORD is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting King: at his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation.

11 Thus shall ye say unto them, The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish from the earth and from under these heavens.

12 He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his discretion.

13 When he uttereth his voice, there is a multitude of waters in the heavens, and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth; he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the wind out of his treasures.

14 Every man is brutish in his knowledge: every founder is confounded by the graven image: for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them.

of Hebrew—Syriac—Chaldee; such a dialect, as I suppose, was spoken at that time in Babylon, or during the captivity. As it is a message to the Babylonians; therefore, it is given in their own language. The Chaldee makes it the beginning of the copy of the epistle which the prophet Jeremiah sent to the rest of the elders of the captivity who were in Babylon. All the ancient Versions acknowledge this verse; and it is found in all MSS. hitherto collated, except one of Dr. Kennicott's, numbered 526: and he has included it between lines, as doubting its authenticity. Dr. Blayney supposes that some public teacher, during the captivity, deducing it by direct inference from the prophet's words, had it inserted in the margin, and perhaps usually read together with this section, in the assemblies of the people, in order that they might have their answer always ready, whenever they were molested on the point of religion, or importuned to join the idolatrous worship of the Chaldeans.

Dahler has left it entirely out of the Text, and introduces it in a note thus:—"After ver. 10, the Hebrew Text is interrupted by a verse written in the Chaldean or Babylonish tongue. It is thus expressed:—

Ye shall say unto them, Let the gods perish! Who have not made the heavens and the earth. Let them be banished from the earth, and from under the heavens.

This verse can be considered only as a foreign insertion, not only on account of the difference of the language, but also because it interrupts the natural course of the ideas, and of the connexion of the tenth and twelfth verses."

As a curiosity I shall insert it in Hebrew, which the reader may compare with the Chaldee Text, which I also subjoin.

כחז חסדו להם האלהים אשר לא עשו השמים והארץ ויבדלו כן kallina teamerun lehon; eloheia di shemaiya ve-arka lo' abedu, yabedu meardā u-min tachoth shemaiya elleh.

The Hebrew is the translation of Leusden: the Chaldee is that of the common Text. Had not all the ancient Versions acknowledged it, I also, principally on account of the strangeness of the language, as being neither Chaldee nor Syriac, would have doubted its authenticity.

Verse 13. When he uttereth his voice there is a multitude of waters.] This is a plain allusion to a storm of thunder and lightning, and the abundance of rain which is the consequence. Water is composed of two gases, hydrogen and oxygen: the electric or galvanic spark decomposes them, and they become air; when recomposed they form water. The lightning acts upon the hydrogen and oxygen, which are found in the atmospheric air: they are decomposed, and water or rain is the consequence; which, being heavier than the air, falls down in the form of rain.

This verse and the three following are the same in substance, and nearly in words, as chap. li. 16, and following.

Verse 14. Every man is brutish in his knowledge.] אדם נביאר, a boor; acts as a brute,—who may suppose that a stock of a tree, formed like a man, may be an intellectual being; and therefore shuns the form, as though it had life. See Isa.

15 They are vanity, and the work of errors: in the time of their visitation they shall perish.

16 The Portion of Jacob is not like them: for he is the former of all things; and Israel is the rod of his inheritance: The Lord of hosts is his name.

17 Gather up thy wares out of the land, O fortress of the fortress.

18 For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will sling out the inhabitants of the land at this once, and will distress them, that they may find it so.

19 Woe is me for my hurt! my wound is grievous: but I said, Truly this is a grief, and I must bear it.

20 My tabernacle is spoiled, and all my cords are broken: my children are gone forth of me, and they are not: there is none to stretch forth my tent any more, and to set up my curtains.

21 For the pastors are become brutish, and have not sought the Lord: therefore they shall not prosper, and all their flocks shall be scattered.

22 Behold, the noise of the bruit is come, and a great commotion out of the north country, to make the cities of Judah desolate, and a den of dragons.

23 O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself: it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps.

24 O Lord, correct me, but with judgment; not in thine anger, lest thou bring me to nothing.

25 Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy name: for they have eaten up Jacob, and devoured him, and consumed him, and have made his habitation desolate.

CHAPTER XI.

The prophet proclaims the terrors of God's covenant with the Jews of old, 1-6; and then approves them for their fidelity, declaring He will show them no pity, 11-15; forbidding Jeremiah to intercede, 16; rejecting their sacrifices, 17; and, in a word, condemning this fair but unfruitful tree to the fire, 18, 17. In what remains of the Chapter the Prophet predicts evil to his neighbours of Amethoth, who had conspired against him, 18-25. "Let us," said they, "destroy this tree, with the fruit thereof," &c. alluding to what Jeremiah had said in the sixteenth verse.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying,

2 Hear ye the words of this covenant, and speak unto the men of Judah and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem:

3 And say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel; Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant,

4 Which I commanded your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, from the iron furnace, saying, Obey my voice, and do them, according to all which I command you: so shall ye be my people, and I will be your God:

5 That I may perform the oath which I have sworn unto your fathers, to give them a land flowing with milk and honey, as it is this day. Then answered I, and said, So be it, O Lord.

xliv. 10, 11. Of which verses, by the way, Dr. Blayney gives the following version to correct that of Bishop Lush:

Ver. 10. Who hath formed a god? Or set up a graven image that profiteth not? Ver. 11. Behold! all that are connected with it shall be ashamed, And the artificer, they above all men! They shall assemble all of them: they shall stand forth; They shall fear; they shall be ashamed at the same time.

"That is, while they stand before the image they have set up, and worship it with a religious dread, the glaring absurdity of their conduct shall lead to their shame and disgrace." With due deference to this learned man, I think this interpretation too refined.

Verse 16. The Portion of Jacob is not like them] Every nation had its tutelary god; this was its portion; in reference to this, God says, Deut. iv. 19, He has divided the sun, moon, and stars, to all the nations under the heaven. And the Lord had taken the Israelites to be His Portion: for the Lord's portion is His people, Deut. xxxii. 9; and David says, The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance, Psa. xvi. 5; cxix. 57. And hence Isaiah terms the smooth stones of the brook, to which Divine honours were paid, the portion of those idolaters, chap. lviii. 6. But in the text he says, The Portion, i. e. the God of Jacob is not like them; for he is the former of all things, and they are formed by their foolish worshippers.

Verse 17. Gather up thy wares] Pack up your goods, or what necessaries of life your enemies will permit you to carry away, for,—

Verse 18. I will sling out the inhabitants of the land] I will send you all into captivity. This discourse, from ver. 17, is supposed to have been delivered in the eleventh year of Jehoiakim.

Verse 19. This is a grief, and I must bear it.] Oppressive as it is, I have deserved it, and worse; and even in this judgment, God remembers mercy.

Verse 20. My tabernacle is spoiled] The city is taken, and all our villages ruined and desolated.

Verse 21. The pastors are become brutish] The king and his counsellors, who, by refusing to pay the promised tribute to Nebuchadnezzar, had kindled a new war.

Verse 22. The noise of the bruit is come] How this silly French word bruit, which signifies noise, got in here I cannot imagine. The simple translation is this,—"The voice of the report! behold it is come! yea, great commotion from the land of the north! (Chaldea) to make the cities of Judea a desolation, a habitation of wild beasts." That is, the report we had heard of the projected invasion of Judea by Nebuchadnezzar is confirmed. He has entered the land;—the Chaldeans are at the doors, and the total desolation of Judea is their sole object.

Verse 23. O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himself] I will not pretend to dispute with Thee; Thou dost every thing wisely and justly;—we have sinned, and Thou hast a right to punish, and to choose that sort of punishment Thou thinkest will best answer the ends of justice. We cannot choose;—Thou hast appointed us to captivity;—we must not repine;—but—

Verse 24. Correct me, but with judgment] Let not the punishment be to the uttermost of the merit of the offence; else we shall be brought to nothing, totally and irrecoverably ruined.

Verse 25. Pour out thy fury upon the heathen] Even those who are now the executors of Thy justice upon us will, in their turn, feel its scourge: for if judgment begins at us, who have been called thy house and thy people,—shall they who have not acknowledged thee escape? It is impossible. The families and tribes which invoke Thee not shall have Thy fury poured out upon them; and especially they who have eaten up Jacob and consumed him, and have made his habitation desolate. This was fulfilled in the Chaldeans;—Nebuchadnezzar was punished with madness, his son was slain in his revels, and the city was taken and sacked by Cyrus; and the Babylonish empire was finally destroyed! This verse has been often quoted against those ungodly families who set not up the worship of God in their houses. These are spiritual Chaldeans; worse indeed than the Chaldeans ever were: they acknowledge God and His Christ,—and yet neither worship nor serve Him. How can that family expect the blessing of God, where the worship of God is not daily performed? No wonder their servants are wicked, their children profligate, and their goods cursed! What an awful reckoning shall such heads of families have with the Judge in the great day, who have refused to petition for that mercy which they might have had for the asking!

NOTES ON CHAPTER XI.

Verse 1. The word that came to Jeremiah] This discourse is supposed to have been delivered in the first year of the reign of Zedekiah. See Dahler.

Verse 2. Hear ye the words of this covenant] It is possible that the prophet caused the words of the covenant made with their fathers in the desert, (Exod. xxiv. 4-8,) to be read to them on this occasion; or, at least the blessings and the cursings which Moses caused to be pronounced to the people as soon as they had set foot in Canaan, Deut. xxvii. xxviii.

Verse 3. Cursed be the man that obeyeth not] After the reading, the prophet appears to sum up the things contained in what was read to them; as if he had said,—"Ye hear what the Lord saith unto you: remember, the sum of it is this,—the man is cursed who obeyeth not; and he is blessed who obeys. From these declarations God will not depart."

Verse 5. So be it, O Lord] Let thy promises be fulfilled; and let the inconvertible beware of Thy threatening.

6 Then the LORD said unto me, Proclaim all these words in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, saying, Hear ye the words of this covenant, and do them.

7 For I earnestly protested unto your fathers in the day that I brought them up out of the land of Egypt even unto this day, saying, Obey my voice.

8 Yet they obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the imagination of their evil heart: therefore I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant, which I commanded them to do; but they did them not.

9 And the LORD said unto me, A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

10 They are turned back to the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words; and they went after other gods to serve them: the house of Israel and the house of Judah have broken my covenant which I made with their fathers.

11 Therefore thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape; and though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them.

12 Then shall the cities of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem go, and cry unto the gods unto whom they offer incense: but they shall not save them at all in the time of their trouble.

13 For according to the number of thy cities were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to that shameful thing, even altars to burn incense unto Baal.

14 Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up a cry or prayer for them: for I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their trouble.

15 What hath my beloved to do in mine house, seeing she hath wrought lewdness with many, and the holy flesh is passed from thee? when thou doest evil, then thou rejoicest.

16 The LORD called thy name, A green olive tree, fair, and of goodly fruit: with the noise of a great tumult he hath kindled fire upon it, and the branches of it are broken.

17 For the LORD of hosts, that planted thee, hath pronounced evil against thee, for the evil of the house of Israel and of the house of Judah, which they have done against themselves to provoke me to anger in offering incense unto Baal.

18 And the LORD hath given me knowledge of it, and I know it: then thou shewedst me their doings.

19 But I was like a lamb or an ox that is brought to the slaughter; and I knew not that they had devised devices against me, saying, Let us destroy the tree with the fruit thereof, and let us cut him off from the land of the living, that his name may be no more remembered.

20 But, O LORD of hosts, that judgest righteously, that triest the reins and the heart, let me see thy vengeance on them: for unto thee have I revealed my cause.

21 Therefore thus saith the LORD of the men of Anathoth, that seek thy life, saying, Prophecy not in the name of the LORD, that thou die not by our hand:

22 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, I will punish them: the young men shall die by the sword; their sons and their daughters shall die by famine:

23 And there shall be no remnant of them: for I will bring evil upon the men of Anathoth, even the year of their visitation.

Verse 6. Proclaim all these words] Let the same covenant, with the blessings and cursings, be read in every city of Judah, and in all the streets of Jerusalem, that all the people may know their duty, their privileges, and their danger.

Verse 9. A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah] They were all fratres conjurati, sworn brothers, determined to cast off the Divine yoke, and no longer to have God to reign over them.

Verse 10. They are turned back to the iniquities of their forefathers] A great reformation had taken place under the reign of Josiah, and the public worship of idols had been abolished, and most of the high places destroyed; but, under the reign of his son and his successors, they had turned back again to idolatry, and were become worse than ever. It required a captivity to cure them of this propensity, and God sent one: after that, there was no idolatry among the Jews.

Verse 12. Go, and cry unto the gods] See chap. ii. 28.

Verse 14. Therefore pray not thou for this people] I am determined to give them up into the hands of their enemies: I will neither hear thy intercession, nor regard thy prayers. Their measure is full.

Verse 15. What hath my beloved to do in mine house] This has been supposed to refer to Abraham, Moses, or such eminent servants of God, whose intercession was very powerful. Were even they to appear as intercessors, their prayer should not be regarded. Others think that this is an endearing expression which properly belonged to the Israelites when God took them into covenant with Himself. They were espoused to Him, and therefore His beloved: but now that they have forsaken Him, and joined themselves to another, what have they to do with His house or its ordinances, which they wish now to frequent with noise and sacrifices, when they see the evil fast coming upon them. This is probably the sense of this very obscure passage. Dr. Blayney translates,—“What hath my beloved to do in my house whilst she practiseth wickedness? Shall vows and holy flesh (sacrifices) be allowed to come from thee? When thou art malignant, shalt thou rejoice?”

Verse 16. The Lord called thy name, A green olive tree] That is, He made thee like a green olive,—fair, flourishing, and fruitful: but thou art degenerated, and God hath given the Chaldeans permission to burn thee up.

Verse 18. The Lord hath given me knowledge of it] The men of Anathoth had conspired against his life because he reproved them for their sins, and denounced the judgments of God against them. Of this God had given him a secret warning, that he might be on his guard.

Verse 19. I was like a lamb or an ox] Dahler translates,—“I was like a fattened lamb that is led to the slaughter.” Blayney,—“I was like a tame lamb that is led to slaughter.” The word אֲלֻפִּים aluph, which we translate ox, is taken by both as an adjective, qualifying the noun כִּבְּבָא kibbes, a lamb. It may probably signify a lamb brought up in the house;—fed at home, (אֲלֻפִּים aluph) instructed, or nourished, at home;—perfectly innocent and unsuspecting, while leading to the slaughter. This meaning the word will bear in Arabic, for أَلْفٌ alaf signifies accustomed, familiar, (to or with any person or thing) a companion, a comrade, an intimate friend:—I therefore think that כִּבְּבָא אֲלֻפִּים ko-kebes aluph signifies, like the familiar lamb,—the lamb bred up in the house, in a state of friendship with the family. The people of Anathoth were Jeremiah's townsmen; he was born and bred among them, they were his familiar friends; and now they lay wait for his life! All the Versions understood אֲלֻפִּים alaf as an epithet of כִּבְּבָא kebes, a chosen, simple, innocent lamb.

Let us destroy the tree with the fruit] Let us slay the prophet, and his prophecies will come to an end. The Targum has,—Let us put mortal poison in his food; and all the Versions understand it something in the same way.

Verse 20. Let me see thy vengeance on them] Rather, I shall see (שמע ערב) thy punishment inflicted on them.

Verse 22. Behold, I will punish them] And the punishment is,—their young men shall die by the sword of the Chaldeans; and their sons and daughters shall die by the famine that shall come on the land through the desolations occasioned by the Chaldean army.

Verse 23. The year of their visitation.] This punishment shall come in that year in which I shall visit their iniquities upon them.

14 Thus saith the LORD against all mine evil neighbours, that touch the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit; Behold, I will pluck them out of their land, and pluck out the house of Judah from among them.

15 And it shall come to pass, after that I have plucked them out I will return, and have compassion on them, and will bring them again every man to his heritage, and every man to his land.

16 And it shall come to pass, if they will diligently learn the ways of my people, to swear by my name, The LORD liveth; (as they taught my people to swear by Baal;) then shall they be built in the midst of my people.

17 But if they will not obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER XIII.

This Chapter contains an entire prophecy. The symbol of the linen girdle, left to rot for a considerable time, was a type of the manner in which the glory of the Jews should be marred during the course of their long captivity. The scene of hiding the girdle being laid near the Euphrates, intimated that the scene of the nation's distress should be Chaldea, which that river waters. The next three verses by another emblem frequently used to represent the judgments of God, are designed to show that the calamities threatened should be extended to every rank and denomination, 12-14. This leads the prophet in a most affectionate exhortation to repentance, 15-17. But God, knowing that this happy consequence would not ensue, sends him with an awful message to the royal family particularly, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem in general, declaring the approaching judgments in plain terms, 18-27. The ardent desire for the reformation of Jerusalem, with which the Chapter concludes, beautifully displays the compassion and tender mercy of God.

Rom. cir. an. 15.

THUS saith the LORD unto me, Go and get thee a linen girdle, and put it upon thy loins, and put it not in water.

2 So I got a girdle according to the word of the LORD, and put it on my loins.

3 And the word of the LORD came unto me the second time, saying,

4 Take the girdle that thou hast got, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock.

5 So I went, and hid it by Euphrates, as the LORD commanded me.

6 And it came to pass after many days, that the LORD said unto me, Arise, go to Euphrates, and take the girdle from thence which I commanded thee to hide there.

7 Then I went to Euphrates, and digged, and took the girdle from the place where I had hid it; and, behold, the girdle was marred, it was profitable for nothing.

8 Then the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

9 Thus saith the LORD, After this manner will I mar the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem.

10 This evil people, which refuse to hear my words, which walk in the imagination of their heart, and walk after other gods, to serve them, and to worship them, shall even be as this girdle, which is good for nothing.

11 For as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have I caused to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel and the whole house of Judah, saith the LORD; that they might be unto me for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory; but they would not hear.

12 Therefore thou shalt speak unto them this word; Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Every bottle shall be filled with wine; and they shall say unto thee, Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine?

13 Then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will fill all the inhabitants of this land, even the kings that sit upon David's throne, and the priests, and the prophets, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, with drunkenness.

14 And I will dash them one against another, even the fathers and the sons together, saith the LORD: I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy them.

15 Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud: for the LORD hath spoken.

16 Give glory to the LORD your God, before he cause darkness, and before your feet stumble

Put it not in water] After having worn it, let it not be washed, that it may more properly represent the uncleanness of the Israelites; for they were represented by the girdle; for as the girdle cleaveth to the loins of a man, so have I caused to cleave unto me the whole house of Israel, and the whole house of Judah. And as a girdle is as well for ornament as use; God took them for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory, ver. 11.

Verse 4. Go to Euphrates, and hide it there] Intending to point out, by this distant place, the country into which they were to be carried away captive.

Verse 7. And behold the girdle was marred; it was profitable for nothing.] This symbolically represented the state of the Jews: they were corrupt and abominable; and God by sending them into captivity marred the pride of Judah, and the great pride of Jerusalem, ver. 9.

Verse 12. Every bottle shall be filled with wine] The bottles were made for the purpose of being filled with wine; and it is likely, from the promising appearance of the season and the grapes; that there was a great likelihood of a copious vintage; and this made them say,—“Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine? Have we not every prospect that it will be so? Do we need a revelation to inform us of this?”

Verse 13. Behold, I will fill all the inhabitants of this land—with drunkenness.] You pretend to take this literally, but it is a symbol. You, and your kings, and priests, and prophets, are represented by these bottles. The wine is God's wrath against you, which shall first be shewn by confounding your deliberations, filling you with foolish plans of defence, causing you from your divided counsels to fall out among yourselves, so that like so many drunken men you shall reel about and jostle each other; defend yourselves without plan, and fight without order, till ye all fall an easy prey into the hands of your enemies. The ancient adage is here fulfilled:—

Quæ Deus vult perdere, prius dæmonstret.
“Those whom God determines to destroy, he first renders foolish.”

Verse 16. Give glory to—God] Confess your sins and turn to Him, that these sore evils may be averted.

While ye look for light] While ye expect prosperity, He turned it into the shadow of death; sent you adversity of the most distressing and ruinous kind.

Verse 14. Against all mine evil neighbours] All the neighbouring nations who have united in desolating Judea shall be desolated in their turn: they also are wicked, and they shall be punished. If I make them executors of my justice, it is to them no proof of my approbation. God often uses one wicked nation to scourge another; and afterwards scourges the scourger by some other scourger. In some places a felon, who was condemned to be hanged, is made the common hangman for the county; he himself being still under the sentence of death,—

Will some trusty brother of the trade
Should do for him what he has done to others.

Verse 15. I will return, and have compassion on them] This is a promise of restoration from the captivity, and an intimation also that some of their enemies would turn to the true God with them; learn the ways of his people, that is, would abjure idols, and take Jehovah for their God:—and be built in the midst of his people, that is, Jew and Gentile forming one church of the Most High.

Verse 17. I will—destroy that nation] Several of them did not obey, and are destroyed. Of the Moabites, Ammonites, and Chaldeans, not one vestige remains. The sixteenth verse is supposed to be a promise of the conversion of the Gentiles. See Eph. ii. 13—22.

From the thirteenth verse to the end is a different discourse, and the Dahler supposes it to have been delivered in the seventh or eighth year of the reign of Jehoiakim.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIII.

Verse 1. Thus saith the LORD unto me] This discourse is supposed to have been delivered under the reign of Jehoiakim, the son and successor of Jehoiakim, who came to the throne in the eighteenth year of his age; when the Chaldean generals had encamped near to Jerusalem, but did not besiege it in form till Nebuchadnezzar came up with the great body of the army. In these circumstances the prophet predicts the captivity; and, by a symbolical representation of a rotten girdle, shews the people their totally corrupt state; and by another of bottles filled with wine, shews the destruction and madness of their counsel, and the confusion that must ensue.

Go and get thee a linen girdle] This was either a vision; or, God simply describes the thing, in order that the prophet might use it in the way of illustration.

upon the dark mountains, and, while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness.

17 But if ye will not hear it, my soul shall weep in secret places for your pride; and mine eye shall weep sore, and run down with tears, because the Lord's flock is carried away captive.

18 Say unto the king and to the queen, Humble yourselves, sit down: for your principalities shall come down, even the crown of your glory.

19 The cities of the south shall be shut up, and none shall open them: Judah shall be carried away captive all of it, it shall be wholly carried away captive.

20 Lift up your eyes and behold them that come from the north: where is the flock that was given thee, thy beautiful flock?

21 What wilt thou say when he shall punish thee? for thou hast taught them to be captains; and as chief over thee: shall not sorrows take thee, as a woman in travail?

22 And if thou say in thine heart, Wherefore come these things upon me? For the greatness of thine iniquity are thy skirts discovered, and thy heels made bare.

23 Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil.

24 Therefore will I scatter them as the stubble that passeth away by the wind of the wilderness.

25 This is thy lot, the portion of thy measure from me, saith the Lord; because thou hast forgotten me, and trusted in falsehood.

26 Therefore will I discover thy skirts upon thy face, that thy shame may appear.

27 I have seen thine adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills in the fields. Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be?

CHAPTER XIV.

This Chapter begins with foretelling a drought that should greatly distress the land of Judah, the effects of which are described in a most pathetic manner, 1-8. The Prophet then, in the people's name, makes a confession of sins, and supplications for pardon, 7-9. But God declares His purpose to punish, forbidding Jeremiah to pray for the people, 10-12. False prophets are then complained of, and threatened with destruction, as are also those who attend to them, 13-18. The Prophet, therefore, bewails their misery, 17, 18; and though he had been just now forbidden to intercede for them; yet, like a tender pastor, who could not cease to be concerned for their welfare, he falls on the happy expedient of introducing themselves as supplicants in their own name that mercy which he was not allowed to ask in his, 19-23.

THE word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah concerning the dearth.

2 Judah mourneth, and the gates thereof languish; they are black unto the ground; and the cry of Jerusalem is gone up.

3 And their nobles have sent their little ones to the waters: they came to the pits, and found no water; they returned with their vessels empty; they were ashamed and confounded, and covered their heads.

4 Because the ground is chapt, for there was no rain in the earth, the plowmen were ashamed, they covered their heads.

5 Yea, the hind also calved in the field, and forsook it, because there was no grass.

Stumble upon the dark mountains] Before you meet with those great obstacles, which having no light, no proper understanding in the matter, ye shall be utterly unable to surmount.

Verse 17. My soul shall weep in secret places] If you will not hearken to the Lord, there is no remedy: destruction must come; and there is nothing left for me, but to go in secret, and mourn and bewail your wretched lot.

Verse 18. Say unto the king and queen] Probably Jeconiah and his mother, under whose tutelage, being young when he began to reign, he was left, as is very likely.

Sit down] Shew that ye have humbled yourselves; for your state will be destroyed, and your glorious crown taken from your heads.

Verse 19. The cities of the south shall be shut up] Not only the cities of the north, the quarter at which the Chaldeans entered, but the cities of the south also: for he shall proceed from one extremity of the land to the other, spreading devastation every where, and carrying off the inhabitants.

Verse 20. Where is the flock—thy beautiful flock] Jerusalem is addressed. Where are the prosperous multitudes of men, women, and children? Alas! are they not driven before the Babylonians, who have taken them captive?

Verse 21. Thou hast taught them to be captains, and as chief over thee] This is said of their enemies, whether Assyrians or Chaldeans: for ever since Ahaz submitted himself to the king of Assyria, the kings of Judah never regained their independence. Their enemies were thus taught to be their lords and masters.

Verse 22. Are thy skirts discovered] Thy defenceless state is every where known; thou art not only weak, but ignominiously so. It is thy scandal to be in so depressed a state; thou art lower than the basest of thy adversaries, and thou art so because of thy sin.

Verse 23. Can the Ethiopian change his skin] Can a black, at his own pleasure, change the colour of his skin? Can the leopard at will, change the variety of his spots. These things are natural to them, and they cannot be altered; so sin, and especially your attachment to idolatry, is become a second nature; and we may as well expect the Ethiopian to change his skin, and the leopard her spots, as you to do good, who have been accustomed to do evil. It is a matter of the utmost difficulty to get a sinner, deeply rooted in vicious habits, brought to the knowledge of himself and God. But the expression does not imply that the thing is as impossible in a moral, as it is in a natural sense: it only shews that it is extremely difficult, and not to be often expected; and a thousand matters of fact prove the truth of this. But still what is impossible to man, is possible to God. See on ver. 27.

Verse 24. The wind of the wilderness.] Some strong tempestuous wind, proverbially severe, coming from the desert to the south of Judea.

Verse 25. Trusted in falsehood.] In idols, and in lying prophets.

Verse 26. Therefore will I discover thy skirts upon thy face] It was the custom to punish lewd women by stripping them naked, and exposing them to public view; or by throwing their clothes over their heads, as here intimated. Was this the way to correct the evil?

Verse 27. I have seen thine adulteries] Thy idolatries of different kinds, practised in various ways; no doubt often accompanied with gross debauchery.

Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean?] We see from this, that though the thing was difficult, yet it was not impossible, for these Ethiopians to change their skin; for these leopards to change their spots. It was only their obstinate refusal of the grace of God, that rendered it impossible. Man cannot change himself; but he may pray to God to do it, and come to Him through Christ that he may do it. To enable him to pray and believe, the power is still at hand. If he will not use it, he must perish.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIV.

Verse 1. The word—that came—concerning the dearth] This discourse is supposed to have been delivered after the fourth year of Jehoiakim. Concerning the dearth—We have no historic record of any dearth that may fall in with the time of this prophecy; and perhaps it does not refer to any particular dearth: but this was a calamity to which Judea was very liable. They had ordinarily very dry summers; for scarcely any rain fell from April to the middle of October; and during much of this time, the rivers were generally either very low, or entirely dry. They kept the rain of the winter in tanks and reservoirs; and if little fell in winter, a dearth was unavoidable. See an account of a dearth in the time of Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 5, through which almost all the cattle were lost.

Verse 2. The gates thereof languish] The gates being the places of public resort, they are put here for the people. They are black unto the ground] Covered from head to foot with a black garment, the emblem of sorrow and calamity.

Verse 3. Their nobles have sent their little ones] So general was this calamity, that the servants no longer attended to their lords, but every one was interested alone for himself; and the nobles of the land were obliged to employ their own children to scour the land, to see if any water

6 And ^a the wild asses did stand in the high places, they snuffed up the wind like dragons; their eyes did fail, because there was no grass.

7 O LORD, though our iniquities testify against us, do thou ^b for thy name's sake: for our backslidings are many; we have sinned against thee.

8 ^c O the hope of Israel, the Saviour thereof in time of trouble, why shouldst thou be as a stranger in the land, and as a wayfaring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night?

9 Why shouldst thou be as a man astonished, as a mighty man ^d that cannot save? yet thou, O LORD, ^e art in the midst of us, and ^f we are called by thy name; leave us not.

10 Thus saith the LORD unto this people, ^g Thus have they loved to wander, they have not refrained their feet, therefore the LORD doth not accept them; ^h he will now remember their iniquity, and visit their sins.

11 Then said the LORD unto me, ⁱ Pray not for this people for their good.

12 ^j When they fast, I will not hear their cry; and ^k when they offer burnt offering and an oblation, I will not accept them; but ^l I will consume them by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence.

13 ^m Then said I, Ah, Lord GOD! behold, the prophets say unto them, Ye shall not see the sword, neither shall ye have famine; but I will give you ⁿ assured peace in this place.

14 Then the LORD said unto me, ^o The prophets prophesy lies in my name: ^p I sent them not, neither have I commanded them, neither spake unto them: they prophesy unto you a false vision and divination, and a thing of nought, and the deceit of their heart.

15 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning the prophets that prophesy in my name, and I sent them not, yet they say, Sword and famine shall not be in this land; By sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed.

16 And the people to whom they prophesy shall be cast out in the streets of Jerusalem because of the famine and the sword; ^q and they shall have none to bury them; them, their wives, nor their sons, nor their daughters: for I will pour their wickedness upon them.

17 Therefore thou shalt say this word unto them; ^r Let mine eyes run down with tears night and day, and let them not cease: ^s for the virgin daughter of my people is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous blow.

18 If I go forth into ^t the field, then behold the slain with the sword! and if I enter into the city, then behold them that are sick with famine! yea, both the prophet and the priest ^u go about into a land that they know not.

19 ^v Hast thou utterly rejected Judah? hath thy soul loathed Zion? why hast thou smitten us, and ^w there is no healing for us? ^x we looked for peace, and there is no good; and for the time of healing, and behold trouble!

20 We acknowledge, O LORD, our wickedness, and the iniquity of our fathers: for ^y we have sinned against thee.

21 Do not abhor us, for thy name's sake, do not disgrace the throne of thy glory: ^z remember, break not thy covenant with us.

could be found in the tanks or the pits. In the dearth in the time of Elijah, Ahab the king, and Obadiah his counsellor, were obliged to traverse the land themselves, in order to find out water to keep their cattle alive. This and the three following verses give a lively but distressing picture of this dearth and its effects.

Verse 6. Snuffed up the wind like dragons] pur tanim; probably here the hippopotamus, who, after feeding under the water, is obliged to come to the surface in order to take in fresh draughts of air: or, it may mean the wild asses.

Verse 7. O Lord, though our iniquities testify against us] We deeply acknowledge that we have sinned and deserve nothing but death. Yet act for thy name's sake; work in our behalf, that we perish not.

Verse 8. O the hope of Israel] O thou who art the alone Object of the hope of this people.

The Saviour thereof in time of trouble] Who hast never yet abandoned them that seek Thee.

Why shouldst thou be as a stranger in the land] As one who has no interest in the prosperity and safety of the country.

And as a wayfaring man] A traveller on his journey.

That turneth aside to tarry for a night] Who stays the shortest time he can; and takes up his lodging in a tent or caravanerai, for the dead of the night, that he may pursue his journey by break of day. Instead of dwelling among us, thou hast scarcely paid the most transient visit to thy land. O come once more and dwell among us.

Verse 9. Yet thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us] Thy ark, temple, and sacred rites, are all here; and Thou Thyself, who art every where present, art here also: but, alas! Thou dost not reveal Thyself as the Father of mercies, who forgiveth iniquity, transgression, and sin.

We are called by thy name: leave us not] Let us call Thee our Father, and say Thou to us, Ye are my sons and daughters! O leave us not!

Verse 10. Thus have they loved to wander] And the measure of your iniquity being now full, ye must be punished.

Verse 11. Pray not for this people] They are ripe for destruction, intercede not for them. O! how dreadful is the state of that people in reference to whom the Lord says to His ministers Pray not for them: or, what amounts nearly to a prohibition, the withholding from His ministers the spirit of prayer and intercession in behalf of the people.

Verse 13. Ah Lord God, behold the prophets say unto them] True, Lord, they are exceedingly wicked: but the false prophets have deceived them; this is some mitigation of their offence. This plea God does not admit; and why? the people believed them, without having any proof of their Divine mission.

Verse 14. The prophets prophesy lies] They say they have visions, but they have them by divination, and they are false. The people should know their character, and avoid them: but they love to have it so; and will not be undeceived.

Verse 15. By sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed] Jeremiah had told Jehoiakim, that if he rebelled against Nebuchadnezzar, he should be overthrown, and the land wasted by sword and famine: the false prophets said there should be neither sword nor famine, but peace and prosperity. The king believed them, and withheld the tribute. Nebuchadnezzar incensed, invaded and destroyed the land: the false prophets fell in these calamities. See 2 Kings xxv. 3; Lam. ii. 11—19.

Verse 16. And the people—shall be cast out] They shall be destroyed, because they preferred their lying words to my Truth, proclaimed by thee.

Verse 17. For the virgin daughter of my people is broken] First, the land was sadly distressed by Pharaoh-Necho, king of Egypt. Secondly, It was laid under a heavy tribute by Nebuchadnezzar. And, Thirdly, It was nearly desolated by a famine afterwards. In a few years all these calamities fell upon them; these might be well called a great breach, a very grievous blow.

Verse 18. If I go forth into the field, then behold the slain with the sword] Every place presents frightful spectacles; the wounded, the dying, the starved, and the slain; none to bury the dead, none to commiserate the dying, none to bring either relief or consolation. Even the prophets and the priests are obliged to leave the cities, and wander about in unfrequented and unknown places, seeking for the necessaries of life. Dr. Blayney thinks that the going about of the prophets and priests in the land, is to be understood thus:—"They went trafficking about with their false doctrines and lying predictions, as pedlars do with their wares, seeking their own gain." I think the other sense preferable.

Verse 19. We looked for peace] We expected prosperity when Josiah purged the land of idolatry.

And there is no good] For we have relapsed into our former ways.

Verse 20. We acknowledge, O Lord, our wickedness] This the prophet did in behalf of the people: but, alas! they did not join with him.

Verse 21. Do not disgrace the throne of thy glory] The Temple. Let not this sacred place be profaned by impious and sacrilegious hands.

22 * Are there any among the * vanities of the Gentiles that can cause rain? or can the heavens give showers? * art not thou he, O Lord our God? therefore we will wait upon thee: for thou hast made all these things.

CHAPTER XV.

God declares to Jeremiah that not even Moses and Samuel, whose prayers had been so prevalent, could divert Him from His purpose of punishing so wicked a people, 1. Accordingly their captivity is again announced in a variety of images so full of terror, 2-4, that the Prophet complains of his own hard fate in being obliged to deliver such unwelcome messages, 16, for which too he is reproved, 11-14. Immediately he appeals to God for His slowness, and supplicates pardon, 15-18; and God tempers His reproof with promising again to protect him in the faithful discharge of his duty, 19-21.

CL XLIII. 4. THEN said the LORD unto me, * Though ^b Moses and ^c Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be toward this people: cast them out of my sight, and let them go forth.

2 And it shall come to pass, if they say unto thee, Whither shall we go forth? then thou shalt tell them, Thus saith the LORD; ^d Such as are for death, to death; and such as are for the sword, to the sword; and such as are for the famine, to the famine; and such as are for the captivity, to the captivity.

3 And I will * appoint over them four ^e kinds, saith the LORD: the sword to slay, and the dogs to tear, and ^f the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the earth, to devour and destroy.

4 And ^b I will cause them to be removed into all kingdoms of the earth, because of ^a Manasseh the son of Hezekiah king of Judah, for that which he did in Jerusalem.

5 For ^g I who shall have pity upon thee, O Jerusalem? or who shall bemoan thee? or who shall go aside ^h to ask how thou doest?

6 * Thou hast forsaken me, saith the LORD,

Break not thy covenant] See Exod. xxiv. 7, 8; xix. 5. They had already broken the covenant, and they wish God to fulfil His part. They ceased to be His people, for they abandoned themselves to idolatry; and yet they wished Jehovah to be their Lord; to defend, support, and fill them with all good things! But when the conditions of a covenant are broken by one of the contracting parties, the other party is not bound; and the covenant is necessarily annulled.

Verse 22. Are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles] Probably the death was now coming, as there had been a long want of rain. It was the prerogative of the true God to give rain and send showers at the prayers of His people.

Therefore we will wait upon thee] If thou do not undertake for us, we must be utterly ruined.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XV.

Verse 1. Though Moses and Samuel] Moses had often supplicated for the people; and in consequence they were spared. See Exod. xxxii. 11, and following verses, Numb. xiv. 13. Samuel also had prayed for the people, and God heard him, 1 Sam. vii. 9: but if these or the most holy men were now to supplicate for this people, He would not spare them.

Cast them out of my sight, and let them go forth.] Do not bring them into my presence by your prayers; let them go forth into captivity.

Verse 2. Whither shall we go forth?—Such as are for death, to death] Some shall be destroyed by the pestilence, here termed death. See chap. xviii. 21. Others shall be slain by the sword in battle, and in the sackage of cities. Others shall perish by famine, shall be starved to death through the mere want of the necessaries of life; and the rest shall go into captivity. There shall be different sorts of punishments inflicted on them according to the nature of their transgressions. Some shall be punished in one way, and some in another.

Verse 3. I will appoint over them four kinds] There shall appear four instruments of my justice. 1. The sword to slay. 2. The dogs to tear what is slain. 3. The fowls of the heaven to feed on the dead carcasses. And, 4. The wild beasts to destroy all that the fowls have left.

Verse 4. I will cause them to be removed into all kingdoms of the earth] This seems to have respect to the succeeding state of the Jews in their different generations: and never was there a prophecy more literally fulfilled; and it is still a standing monument of Divine truth. Let infidelity cast its eyes on the scattered Jews whom it may meet with in every civilized nation of the world; and then let it deny the truth of this prophecy, if it can. The Jews are scattered through every nation, and yet are not a nation; nor do they form even a colony on any part of the face of the earth. Behold the truth and the justice of God.

Verse 5. Who shall go aside to ask how thou doest?] Perhaps there is not a more despised nor a more degraded people under the sun. Scarcely any one thinks himself called upon to do a kind office for a Jew. Their character is bad in society, and they are not at all solicitous to redeem it.

Verse 6. I am weary with repenting.] With repeatedly changing my purpose. I have often, after purposing to punish, shewed them mercy. I will do it no longer: it is useless. I took them often at their promise, and in every instance they have failed.

Verse 7. I will fan them with a fan] There is no pure grain; all are chaff.

In the gates of the land] The places of public justice: and there it shall be seen that the judgments that have fallen upon them have been highly merited. And from these places of fanning they shall go out into their captivity.

Verse 8. The mother of the young men] The metropolis, or mother city,—Jerusalem.

Verse 9. She that hath borne seven] She that hath had a numerous offspring:—Jerusalem, the parent of so many cities, villages, and families, in the land. Seven signifies a complete, or full number.

Verse 10. A man of contention to the whole earth!] To the whole LAND,—to all his countrymen; though he had done nothing to merit their displeasure.

Verse 11. I will cause the enemy to treat thee well in the time of evil!] This was literally fulfilled, see chap. xxxix. 11, &c. Nebuchadnezzar had given strict charge to Nebuzar-adan, commander in chief, to look well to Jeremiah, to do him no harm, and to grant him all the privileges he was pleased to ask.

Verse 12. Shall iron break the northern iron and the steel?] Shall our weak forces be able to oppose and overcome the powers of the Chaldeans? נְחוֹשֶׁת nechoseheth, which we here translate steel, properly signifies brass, or copper, united with tin, which gives it much hardness, and enables it to bear a good edge.

Verse 13. Thy substance—will I give to the spoil without price] Invaluable property shall be given up to thy adversaries. Or, without price;—thou shalt have nothing for it in return.

15 O LORD, ^bthou knowest: remember me, and visit me, and ^crevenge me of my persecutors; take me not away in thy long-suffering: know that ^dfor thy sake I have suffered rebuke.

16 Thy words were found and I did ^eeat them; and ^fthy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart: for ^gI am called by thy name, O LORD God of hosts.

17 ^hI sat not in the assembly of the mockers, nor rejoiced: I sat alone because of thy hand: for thou hast filled me with indignation.

18 Why is my ⁱpain perpetual, and my wound incurable, which ^jrefuseth to be healed? wilt thou be altogether unto me ^kas a liar, and ^las waters that ^mfail?

19 Therefore thou saith the LORD, ⁿIf thou return, then will I bring thee again, and thou shalt ^ostand before me: and if thou ^ptake forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth: let them return unto thee; but return not thou unto them.

20 And I will make thee unto this people a fenced brazen ^qwall: and they shall fight against thee, but ^rthey shall not prevail against thee: for I ^sam with thee to save thee and to deliver thee, saith the LORD.

21 And I will deliver thee out of the hand of the wicked, and I will redeem thee out of the hand of the terrible.

CHAPTER XVI.

On account of the evils which threatened his country, the Prophet is forbidden to encounter himself with a wife and family, or to bear any share in the little joys and sorrows of his neighbours, which were to be forgotten and absorbed in those public calamities, 1-8, which their sins should draw on them, 10-13. A future restoration, however, is intimated, 14, 15, after those calamities should be endured, 16-19; and the conversion of the Gentiles is foretold, 19-21.

THE word of the LORD came also unto me, saying,

2 Thou shalt ^tnot take thee a wife, neither shalt thou have sons or daughters in this place.

3 For thus saith the LORD concerning the sons and concerning the daughters that are born in this place, and concerning their mothers that bare them, and concerning their fathers that begat them in this land;

4 They shall die of ^vgrievous deaths; they shall not be ^wlamented; neither shall they be buried: ^xbut they shall be ^yas dung upon the face of the earth; and they shall be consumed by the sword, and by famine; and their ^zcarcasses shall be meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

5 For thus saith the LORD, ^aEnter not into the house of ^bmourning, neither go to lament nor bemoan them: for I have taken away my peace from this people, saith the LORD, ^ceven loving-kindness and mercies.

6 Both the great and the small shall die in this land: they shall not be buried, ^dneither shall ^emen lament for them, nor ^fcut themselves, nor ^gmake themselves bald for them:

7 Neither shall ^hmen ⁱtear themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead; neither shall ^jmen give them the cup of consolation to ^kdrink for their father or for their mother.

8 Thou shalt not also go into the house of feasting, to sit with them to eat and to drink.

9 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, ^lI will cause to cease out of this place in your eyes, and in your days, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride.

10 And it shall come to pass, when thou shalt shew this people all these words, and they shall say unto thee, ^mWherefore hath the LORD pronounced all this great evil against us? or what ⁿis our iniquity? or what ^ois our sin that we have committed against the LORD our God?

11 Then shalt thou say unto them, ^pBecause your fathers have forsaken me, saith the LORD, and have walked after other gods, and have served them, and have worshipped them, and have forsaken me, and have not kept my law;

Verse 15. O LORD—remember me, and visit me] Let me not be carried away into captivity;—and it does not appear that he had ever been taken to Babylon. After the capture of the city he went into Egypt; and either died there, or was put to death by his countrymen.

Verse 16. Thy word was—the joy and rejoicing of mine heart] When I did receive the prophetic message, I did rejoice in the honour Thou hadst done me; and I faithfully testified Thy will to them. They have become mine enemies; not because there was any evil in me, but because I was faithful to Thee.

Verse 18. Will thou be altogether unto me as—waters that fail?] Meaning either springs, which in the height of summer grow dry; or, like that phenomenon in the sandy desert, where by a peculiar action of the air on the rising vapours, the resemblance of water is produced, so that the traveller, deceived, rejoices that he is come in the sandy desert to the verge of a beautiful lake:—but the farther he travels, it is still at the same distance, and at last vanishes; and he finds the whole was an illusion, for the waters have failed.

Verse 19. If thou return] By repentance unto me,—Then will I bring thee again] Restore thee to thy own country. But some think the words are spoken to the prophet in reference to his ministry. He had greatly repined because of the persecutions which he endured. The Lord reprehends him, and is about to take from him the prophetic gift: but exhorts him first to take the precious from the vile,—not to attend to the deceitful words of the people, but boldly declare the message He had given him; not to return unto the people, but let the people return unto him. And then he should be as God's mouth; his words should appear to be what they were, the genuine words of God; and the people should be obliged to acknowledge them as such.

Verse 20. I will make thee—a fenced brazen wall] While thou art faithful to me, none of them shall be able to prevail against thee.

Verse 21. I will deliver thee out of the hand of the wicked] From the power of this evil people:—

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVI.

Verse 1. The word of the LORD came also unto me] This discourse Dahler supposes to have been delivered some time in the reign of Jehoiakim.

Verse 2. Thou shalt not take thee a wife] As it would be very inconvenient to have a family when the threatened desolations should come on the place. The reason is given in the following verses.

Verse 4. They shall die of grievous deaths] All prematurely, see chap. xiv. 16.

As dung upon the face of the earth] See chap. viii. 2.

Be meat for the fowls] See chap. vii. 33.

Verse 5. Enter not into the house of mourning] The public calamities are too great to permit individual losses to attend on consideration.

Verse 6. Nor cut themselves] A custom of the Heathen, forbidden to the Jews, Lev. xix. 28; Deut. xiv. 1, and which appears now to have prevailed among them; because, having become idolaters, they conformed to all the customs of the Heathen. They tore their hair, rent their garments, cut their hands, arms, and faces. These were not only signs of sorrow, but were even supposed to give ease to the dead, and appease the angry deities.

Verse 8. Thou shalt not also go into the house of feasting] Funeral banquets were made to commemorate the dead, and comfort the surviving relatives:—and the cup of consolation—strong mingled wine—was given to those who were deepest in distress, to divert their minds, and to soothe their sorrows. These kinds of ceremonies were common among almost all the nations of the world on funeral occasions. The Canaanites, the Jews, the Persians, Arabians, New Zealanders, Huns, &c. &c.

Verse 12. And ye have done worse than your fathers] The sins of the fathers would not have been visited on the children had they not followed their example, and become even worse than they.

thers; for, behold, I ye walk every one after the imagination of his evil heart, that they may not hearken unto me:

13 Therefore will I cast you out of this land into a land that ye shall know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods day and night; where I will not show you favour.

14 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that it shall no more be said, The LORD liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

15 But, the LORD liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers.

16 Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the LORD, and they shall fish them; and after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks.

17 For mine eyes are upon all their ways: they are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes.

18 And first I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double; because they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the carcases of their detestable and abominable things.

19 O LORD, my strength and my fortress, and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit.

20 Shall a man make gods unto himself, and they are no gods?

21 Therefore, behold, I will this once cause them to know, I will cause them to know mine hand and my might; and they shall know that my name is the LORD.

Verse 13. Will I cast you out of this land] See chap. vii. 15, and ix. 15.

Verse 14. The LORD liveth, that brought up] See Isa. xliii. 18.

Verse 15. The land of the north] Chaldea: and their deliverance thence will be as remarkable as the deliverance of their fathers from the land of Egypt.

Verse 16. I will send for many fishers—for many hunters] I shall raise up enemies against them, some of whom shall destroy them by wiles, and others shall ruin them by violence. This seems to be the meaning of these symbolical fishers and hunters.

Verse 18. The carcases of their detestable—things.] Either meaning the idols themselves, which were only carcases without life; or the sacrifices which were made to them.

Verse 19. The Gentiles shall come] Even the days shall come when the Gentiles themselves, ashamed of their confidence, shall renounce their idols, and acknowledge that their fathers had believed lies, and worshipped vanities. This may be a prediction of the calling of the Gentiles by the gospel of Christ: if so, it is a light amidst much darkness. In such dismal accounts there is need of some gracious promise relative to an amended state of the world.

Verse 20. Shall a man make gods unto himself?] Can any be so silly, and so preposterously absurd? Yes, fallen man is capable of any thing that is base, mean, vile, and wicked, till influenced and converted by the grace of Christ.

Verse 22. Therefore, behold, I will this once] I will not now change my purpose. They shall be visited and carried into captivity; nothing shall prevent this: and they shall know that my name is JEHOVAH. Since they would not receive the abundance of my mercies, they shall know what the true God can do in the way of judgment.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVII.

Verse 1. The sin of Judah] Idolatry:— Is written with a pen of iron] It is deeply and indelibly written in their heart, and shall be as indelibly written in their punishment. Writing with the point of a diamond must refer to glass, or some vitrified substance, as it is

CHAPTER XVII.

This Chapter begins with setting forth the very strong bias which the people of Judah had to idolatry, with the fatal consequences, 1—7. The happiness of the man that trusteth in Jehovah is then beautifully contrasted with the opposite character, 8—10. God alone knows the deceitfulness and wretchedness of the heart of man, 9, 10. The comparison of a bird's hatching the eggs of another of a different species, which will soon forsake her, is highly expressive of the vanity of idol-worshipping riches, which often disappoint the owner, 11. The Prophet continues the same subject in his own person, appeals to God for his sincerity, and prays that the evil invaded him by his enemies may revert on their own heads, 12—18. The remaining part of the Chapter is a distinct prophecy relating to the due observance of the Sabbath, enforced both by promises and threatenings, 19—27.

THE sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond: it is graven upon the table of their heart, and upon the horns of your altars; Whilst their children remember their altars and their groves by the green trees upon the high hills.

O my mountain in the field, I will give thy substance and all thy treasures to the spoil, and thy high places for sin, throughout all thy borders.

And thou, even thyself, shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee; and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies in the land which thou knowest not: for ye have kindled a fire in mine anger, which shall burn for ever.

Thus saith the LORD; I Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the LORD.

For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a salt land and not inhabited.

Blessed is the man that trusteth in the LORD, and whose hope the LORD is.

For he shall be as a tree planted by the waters, and that spreadeth out her roots by the river, and shall not see when heat cometh, but her leaf shall be green; and shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall cease from yielding fruit.

distinguished here from an engraving with a steel burine, or graver. Their altars shew what the deities are which they worship. There may be reference here to the different methods of recording events in these days.—1. A pen, or stile of iron, for engraving on lead or wood. 2. A point of a diamond, for writing on vitreous substances. 3. Writing on tables of brass, or copper. 4. Writing on the horns of the altars the names of the deities worshipped there. This is probable.

Verse 2. Whilst their children remember] Even the rising generation have their imagination stocked with idol images, and their memories by the frantic rites and ceremonies which they saw their parents observe in this abominable worship.

Verse 3. O my mountain in the field] The prophet here addresses the land of Judea, which was a mountainous country, Deut. iii. 25: but Jerusalem itself may be meant, which is partly built upon hills which, like itself, are elevated above the rest of the country.

Verse 5. Cursed be the man that trusteth in man] This reprehends their vain confidence in trusting in Egypt, which was too feeble itself to help; and had it been otherwise, too ill disposed toward them, to help them heartily. An arm of flesh is put here for a weak and ineffectual support. And he who, in reference to the salvation of his soul, trusts in an arm of flesh, in himself, or others, or in any thing he has done or suffered, will inherit a curse instead of a blessing.

Verse 6. He shall be like the heath in the desert] קוצים ke-ârâr; or, like a blasted tree, without moisture, parched and withered.

Shall not see when good cometh] Shall not be sensible of it: the previous drought having rendered it incapable of absorbing any more vegetable juices.

A salt land] Barren; and, therefore, unfit to be inhabited.

Verse 8. As a tree planted by the waters] Which is sufficiently supplied with moisture, though the heat be intense, and there be no rain; for the roots being spread out by the river, they absorb from it all the moisture requisite for the flourishing vegetation of the tree.

Shall not see when heat cometh] Shall not feel any damage by drought; for the reason already assigned. It 9 The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?

10 I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings.

11 As the partridge sitteth on eggs and hatcheth them not; so he that getteth riches, and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool.

12 A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary.

13 O Lord, the hope of Israel, all that forsake thee shall be ashamed, and they that depart from me shall be written in the earth, because they have forsaken the Lord, the Fountain of living waters.

14 Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved: for thou art my praise.

15 Behold, they say unto me, Where is the word of the Lord? let it come now.

16 As for me, I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee: neither have I desired the woeful day; thou knowest: that which came out of my lips was right before thee.

17 Be not a terror unto me: thou art my hope in the day of evil.

18 Let them be confounded that persecute me, but let not me be confounded: let them be dismayed, but let not me be dismayed: bring upon them the day of evil, and destroy them with double destruction.

19 Thus said the Lord unto me; Go and stand in the gate of the children of the people, whereby the kings of Judah come in, and by which they go out, and in all the gates of Jerusalem;

20 And say unto them, Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye kings of Judah, and all Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, that enter in by these gates:

21 Thus saith the Lord; Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden on the sabbath day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem;

22 Neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on the sabbath day, neither do ye any work, but hallow ye the sabbath day, as I commanded your fathers.

23 But they obeyed not, neither inclined their ear, but made their neck stiff, that they might not hear, nor receive instruction.

24 And it shall come to pass, if ye diligently hearken unto me, saith the Lord, to bring in no burden through the gates of this city on the sabbath day, but hallow the sabbath day, to do no work therein;

25 Then shall there enter into the gates of this city kings and princes sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, they, and their princes, the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem: and this city shall remain for ever.

26 And they shall come from the cities of Judah, and from the places about Jerusalem, and shall be strong and vigorous, its leaf always green, and shall produce plenty of fruit in its season.

Verse 9. The heart is deceitful] לֵב אִישׁ כְּסֶבֶת הַלֵּב, the heart is supplanting—torvious—full of windings—insidious—lying ever at the catch; striving to avail itself of every favouring circumstance to gratify its propensities to pride, ambition, evil desire, and corruption of all kinds.

And desperately wicked] מֵרַע וּמֵרַע וּמֵרַע אֵל, and is wretched, or feeble; distressed beyond all things, in consequence of the wickedness that is in it. I am quite of Mr. Parkhurst's opinion, that this word is here badly translated, as מֵרַע is never used in Scripture to denote wickedness of any kind. My old MS. Bible translates thus:—Subjected to the bite of a man; and unscrupulous: who shall knowen it?

Who can know it?] It even hides itself from itself; so that its owner does not know it. A corrupt heart is the worst enemy the fallen creature can have: it is full of evil devices,—of deceit, of folly, and abomination; and its owner knows not what is in him till it boils over, and is often past remedy before the evil is perceived. Therefore, trust not in man, whose purposes are continually changing, and who is actuated only by motives of self-interest.

Verse 10. I the Lord search the heart] The Lord is called by His apostles, Acts i. 24, Καθίστηντες, the Knower of the heart. To Him alone can this epithet be applied; and it is from Him alone that we can derive that instruction by which we can in any measure know ourselves.

Verse 11. As the partridge] כַּרְפָּד הַקֹּרֶף. It is very likely that this was a bird different from our partridge. The Text Dr. Haney translates thus:—

(The) he who hatcheth what it doth not lay, (the) he who gathereth riches, and not according to right.

The covetous man, says Dahler, who hoaps up riches by unjust ways, is compared to a bird which hatches the eggs of other fowls. And as the young when hatched, and able at all to shift for themselves, abandon her who is not their mother, and leave her nothing to compensate her trouble; so the covetous man loses those unjustly gotten treasures, and the fruit of his labour.

And at his end shall be a fool.] Shall be reputed as such. He was a fool all the way through: he lost his soul to get wealth, and this wealth he never enjoyed. To him also are applicable these strong words of the poet:—

"O cursed lust of gold! when for thy sake The wretch throws up his interest in both worlds: First starved in this, then damned in that to come." Blair.

Verse 12. A glorious high throne] As he is cursed who trusts in man, so he is blessed who trusts in God. He is here represented as on a throne in His temple: to Him in the means of grace all should resort. He is the Support, and a glorious Support of all them that trust in Him.

Verse 13. Written in the earth] They shall never come to true honour. Their names shall be written in the dust; and the first wind that blows over it shall mar every letter, and render it illegible.

Verse 14. Heal me,—and I shall be healed] That is, I shall be thoroughly healed, and effectually saved, if Thou undertake for me.

Thou art my praise.] The whole glory of the work of salvation belongs to Thee alone.

Verse 15. Where is the word of the Lord?] Where is the accomplishment of His threatnings? Thou hast said that the city and the Temple should both be destroyed. No such events have yet taken place. But they did take place, and every title of the menace was strictly fulfilled.

Verse 16. I have not hastened from being a pastor] Dr. Blaney translates thus:—"But I have not been in haste to outrun thy guidance." I was obliged to utter Thy prediction: but I have not hastened the evil day. For the credit of my prophecy I have not desired the calamity to come speedily; I have rather pleaded for respite. I have followed Thy steps, and proclaimed Thy truth. I did not desire to be a prophet:—but Thou hast commanded, and I obeyed.

Verse 17. Be not a terror unto me] Do not command me to predict miseries, and abandon me to them and to my enemies.

Verse 18. Let them be confounded] They shall be confounded. These words are to be understood as simple predictions, rather than prayers.

Verse 19. The gate of the children of the people] I suppose the most public gate is meant; that through which there was the greatest thoroughfare.

Verse 20. Ye kings of Judah, and all Judah] This last clause is wanting in eight of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., in the Arabic, and some copies of the Septuagint.

Verse 21. Take heed to yourselves, and bear no burden] From this and the following verses we find the ruin of the Jews attributed to the breach of the sabbath:—as this led to a neglect of sacrifices, the ordinances of religion, and all public worship; so it necessarily brought with it all immorality. The breach of the sabbath was that which led-in upon them all the waters of God's wrath.

Verse 24. If ye diligently hearken unto me] So we find that though their destruction was positively threatened, yet still there was an unexpressed proviso that if they did return to the Lord, the calamities should be averted, and a succession of princes would have been continued on the throne of David, ver. 26, 26.

from the land of Benjamin, and from the plain, and from the mountains, and from the south, bringing burnt offerings, and sacrifices, and meat offerings, and incense, and bringing sacrifices of praise, unto the house of the Lord.

27 But if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the sabbath day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched.

CHAPTER XVII.

The type of the potter's vessel, and its significance, 1-10. The inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem exhorted to repentance, 11; but on their refusal, (which is represented to be as unnatural as if a man should prefer the stony Lebanon or barren rock to a fruitful plain, or other waters to the cool stream of the fountain,) their destruction is predicted, 12-17. In consequence of these plain reproofs and warnings of Jeremiah, a conspiracy is formed against him, 18. This leads him to appeal to God for his integrity, 19, 20; who puts a most dreadful curse in the mouth of His Prophet strongly indicative of the terrible fate of his enemies, 21-22.

A. M. cir. 3396. B. C. cir. 608. THE word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2 Arise, and go down to the potter's house, and there I will cause thee to hear my words.

3 Then I went down to the potter's house, and behold, he wrought a work on the wheels.

4 And the vessel which he made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter: so he made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it.

5 Then the word of the Lord came to me, saying,

6 O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in my hand, O house of Israel.

7 At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it;

8 If that nation, against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them.

9 And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to build and to plant it;

10 If it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good, wherewith I said I would benefit them.

11 Now therefore go to, speak to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you: return ye now, every one from his evil way, and make your ways and your doings good.

12 And they said, There is no hope: but we will walk after our own devices, and we will every one do the imagination of his evil heart.

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Ask ye now among the heathen, who hath heard such things: the virgin of Israel hath done a very horrible thing, 14 Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon, which cometh from the rock of the field? or shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken?

Verse 27. But if ye will not hearken.] Then their sin lay at their own door. How fully were they warned! and how basely did they reject the counsel of God against themselves!

NOTES ON CHAPTER XVIII.

Verse 1. The word which came to Jeremiah.] This discourse is supposed to have been delivered some time in the reign of Jehoiakim; probably within the first three years.

Verse 2. Go down to the potter's house.] By this similitude God shews the absolute state of dependence on Himself in which He has placed mankind. They are as clay in the hands of the potter; and, in reference to every thing here below, He can shape their destinies as He pleases. Again, though while under the providential care of God they may go morally astray, and pervert themselves, yet they can be reclaimed by the almighty and all-wise Operator, and become such vessels as seemeth good for him to make. In considering this parable, we must take heed that in running parallels we do not destroy the free agency of man, nor disgrace the goodness and supremacy of God.

Verse 3. He wrought a work on the wheels.] אבן אבנין by אל ha-abenim, upon the stones; the potter's wheel being usually made of such; the spindle of the moving stone being placed on a stone below, on which it turned, and supported the stone above, on which the vessel was manufactured, and which alone had a rotatory motion. The potter's wheel, in the present day, seems to differ very little from that which was in use between two and three thousand years ago.

Verse 4. The vessel—was marred in the hands of the potter.] It did not stand in the working: it got out of shape; or some gravel or small stone having been incorporated with the mass of clay, made a breach in that part where it was found; so that the potter was obliged to knead up the clay afresh, place it on the wheel, and form it anew; and then it was such a vessel as seemed good to the potter to make it.

Verse 6. Cannot I do with you as this potter?] Have I not a right to do with a people whom I have created, as reason and justice may require? If they do not answer my intentions,—may I not reject and destroy them? And act as this potter,—make a new vessel out of that which at first did not succeed in his hands.

It is generally supposed that St. Paul has made a very different use of this similitude from that mentioned above. See Rom. ix. 20, &c. His words are, Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honour, and another unto dishonour?—To this every sensible and pious man will answer, Undoubtedly he has. But, would any potter make an exceedingly fair and good vessel, on purpose to dash it to pieces when he had done?

Surely, no! And would, or could, the God of infinite perfection and love make millions of immortal souls on purpose for eternal perdition, as the horrible decree of reprobation states? No! This is a lie against all the attributes of God. But does not the Text state that He can, out of the same lump, the same mass of human nature, make one vessel to honour, and another to dishonour? Yes. But the Text does not say what the horrible decree says, that he makes one part, and indeed the greater, for eternal perdition. But what then is the meaning of the Text? Why, evidently this: As out of the same mass of clay a potter may make a flagon for the table, and a certain utensil for the chamber; the one for a more honourable, the other for a less honourable, use; though both equally necessary to the owner: so God, out of the same flesh and blood, may make the tiller of the field, and the prophet of the Most High; the one in a more honourable, the other in a less honourable employ; yet both equally necessary in the world, and equally capable of bringing glory to God in their respective places. But if the vessel be marred in His hand, under His providential and gracious dealings, He may reject it as He did the Jews, and make another vessel such as He is pleased with of the Gentiles; yet even these marred vessels, the reprobate Jews, are not finally rejected; for all Israel shall be saved in (through) the Lord, i. e. Jesus Christ. And should the Gentiles act as the Jews have done, then they also shall be cut off; and God will call His Church by another name. See on Rom. ix. 21, and below.

Verse 7-10. At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, &c.—[If that nation against whom, &c.—And at what instant, &c.—[If that nation do evil, &c.]] These verses contain what may be called God's decrees, by which the whole of His conduct towards man is regulated. If He purpose destruction against an offending person, if that person repent and turn to God, he shall live, and not die. If He purpose peace and salvation to him that walketh uprightly, if he turn from God to the world and sin, he shall die, and not live.

Verse 12. There is no hope.] See chap. ii. 25.

Verse 13. The virgin of Israel.] Instead of Israel, several MSS. of Kennicott's and De Ross's MSS., with the Alexandrian copy of the Septuagint, have very yerusalems, Jerusalem.

Verse 14. Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon.] Lebanon was the highest mountain in Judea. Would any man in his senses abandon a farm that was always watered by the melted snows of Lebanon, and take a barren rock in its place? How stupid therefore and absurd are my people, who abandon the everlasting God for the worship of idols.

15 Because my people hath forgotten me, they have burned incense to vanity, and they have caused them to stumble in their ways from the ancient paths, to walk in paths, in a way not cast up;

16 To make their land desolate, and a perpetual hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and wag his head.

17 I will scatter them as with an east wind before the enemy; I will shew them the back, and not the face, in the day of their calamity.

18 Then said they, Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah; for the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor the word from the prophet. Come, and let us smite him with the tongue, and let us not give heed to any of his words.

19 Give heed to me, O Lord, and hearken to the voice of them that contend with me.

20 Shall evil be recompensed for good? for they have digged a pit for my soul. Remember that I stood before thee to speak good for them, and to turn away thy wrath from them.

21 Therefore deliver up their children to the famine, and pour out their blood by the force of the sword; and let their wives be bereaved of their children, and be widows; and let their men be put to death; let their young men be slain by the sword in battle.

22 Let a cry be heard from their houses, when thou shalt bring a troop suddenly upon them: for they have digged a pit to take me, and hid snares for my feet.

23 Yet, Lord, thou knowest all their counsel against me, to slay me: forgive not their iniquity, neither blot out their sin from thy sight, but let them be overthrown before thee; deal thus with them in the time of thine anger.

CHAPTER XIX.

By the significant type of breaking the potter's vessel, Jeremiah is directed to predict the near destruction of Judah and Jerusalem, 1-15. The Prophets taught frequently by symbolic actions as well as by words.

Let us smite him with the tongue] On the tongue;—so it should be rendered. Lying and false testimony are punished in the Eastern countries, to the present day, by smiting the person on the mouth with a strong piece of leather like the sole of a shoe. Sometimes a bodkin is run through the tongue.

If we consider them in their grammatical meaning, then they are not directions to us, to whom our Lawgiver has said, Love your enemies.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XIX.

Verse 1. Go, and get a potter's earthen bottle] This Discourse was also delivered sometime in the reign of Je-

3 And say, Hear ye the word of the Lord, O kings of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem; Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, the which whosoever heareth, his ears shall tingle.

4 Because they have forsaken me, and have estranged this place, and have burned incense in it unto other gods, whom neither they nor their fathers have known, nor the kings of Judah, and have filled this place with the blood of innocents;

5 They have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt offerings unto Baal, which I commanded not, nor spake it, neither came it into my mind;

6 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor The valley of the son of Hinnom, but The valley of Slaughter.

7 And I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives: and their carcasses will I give to be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

8 And I will make this city desolate, and an hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss because of all the plagues thereof.

9 And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend in the siege and straitness, wherewith their enemies, and they that seek their lives, shall straiten them.

10 Then shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men that go with thee,

11 And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Even so will I break this people and this city, as one breaketh a potter's vessel, that cannot be made whole again: and they shall bury them in Tophet, till there be no place to bury.

12 Thus will I do unto this place, saith the Lord, and to the inhabitants thereof, and even make this city as Tophet:

Verse 7. I will make void the counsel of Judah] Probably this refers to some determination made to proclaim themselves independent, and pay no more tribute to the Chaldeans.

To be meat for the fowls] See on ch. vii. 33.

Verse 9. I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons] This was literally fulfilled when Jerusalem was besieged by the Romans. This also the prophet might have had in view.

Verse 11. Even so will I break this people and this city] The breaking of the bottle was the symbolical representation of the destruction of the city and of the state.

That cannot be made whole again] This seems to refer rather to the final destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, than to what was done by the Chaldeans. Jerusalem was healed after seventy years: but nearly eighteen hundred years have elapsed since Jerusalem was taken and destroyed by the Romans; and it was then so broken, that it could not be made whole again.

Verse 12. And even make this city as Tophet] A place of slaughter and destruction.

upon whose roofs they have burned incense unto all the host of heaven, and have poured out drink offerings unto other gods.

14 Then came Jeremiah from Tophet, whither the LORD had sent him to prophesy; and he stood in the court of the LORD's house, and said to all the people, 15 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring upon this city and upon all her towns all the evil that I have pronounced against it, because they have hardened their necks, that they might not hear my words.

CHAPTER XX.

Jeremiah, on account of his prophesying evil concerning Judah and Jerusalem, is taken and imprisoned by Pashur, chief governor of the Temple, 1, 2. On the following day the prophet is released, who denounces the awful judgments of God which should fall upon the governor and all his house, as well as upon the whole land of Judah, as the approaching Babylonian captivity, 3-5. Jeremiah hath bitterly complained of the reproaches continually heaped upon him by his enemies; and in his haste, resolves to speak no more in the name of Jehovah: but the word of the LORD is in his heart as a burning flame, so that he is not able to forbear, 7-10. The Prophet professes his trust in God, whom he prays for his late delinquency, 11-13. The remaining verses, which appear to be out of their place, contain Jeremiah's regret that he ever was born to a life of so much sorrow and trouble, 14-15. This complaint resembles that of Job; only it is milder and more delicate. This explains our pity, but our horror. Both are highly poetical, and embellished with every circumstance that can heighten the colouring. But such circumstances are not always to be too literally understood or explained. We must often make allowances for the strong figures of eastern poetry.

16 NOW Pashur the son of Immer the priest, who was also chief governor in the house of the LORD, heard that Jeremiah prophesied these things.

2 Then Pashur smote Jeremiah the prophet, and put him in the stocks that were in the high gate of Benjamin, which was by the house of the LORD.

3 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Pashur brought forth Jeremiah out of the stocks. Then said Jeremiah unto him, The LORD hath not called thy name Pashur, but Magor-missabib.

4 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will make thee a terror to thyself, and to all thy friends: and they shall fall by the sword of their enemies, and thine eyes shall behold it: and I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall carry them captive into Babylon, and shall slay them with the sword.

5 Moreover I will deliver all the strength of this city, and all the labours thereof, and all the precious things thereof, and all the treasures of the kings of Judah will I give into the hands of their enemies, which shall spoil them, and take them, and carry them to Babylon.

6 And thou, Pashur, and all that dwell in thine house shall go into captivity: and thou shalt come to Babylon, and there thou shalt die, and shalt be buried there, thou, and all thy friends, to whom thou hast prophesied lies.

7 O LORD, thou hast deceived me, and I was deceived: thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed; I am in derision daily, every one mocketh me.

8 For since I spake, I cried out, I cried violence and spoil; because the word of the LORD was made a reproach unto me, and a derision, daily.

9 Then I said, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name. But his word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay.

10 For I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side. Report, say they, and we will report it. All my familiars watched for my halting, saying, Peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him, and we shall take our revenge on him.

11 But the LORD is with me as a mighty terrible one: therefore my persecutors shall stumble, and they shall not prevail: they shall be greatly ashamed; for they shall not prosper: their everlasting confusion shall never be forgotten.

12 But, O LORD of hosts, that triest the righteous, and seest the reins and the heart, let me see thy vengeance on them: for unto thee have I opened my cause.

13 Sing unto the LORD, praise ye the LORD: he hath delivered the soul of the poor from the hand of evil doers.

14 Cursed be the day wherein I was born: let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed.

Verse 14. Then came Jeremiah from Tophet] He had probably gone to the valley of Hinnot, and there repeated the Discourse which he had a little before delivered to the chief priests and elders.

Verse 15. Because they have hardened their necks] A metaphor taken from unruly and unbroken oxen, who resist the yoke, break and run away with their gears. So this people had broken and destroyed the yoke of the law.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XX.

Verse 1. Pashur—chief governor] Pashur was probably one of the chief priests of the twenty-four classes.

Verse 2. Put him in the stocks] Probably such a place near the gate as we term the lock up, the coal hole; or, it may mean a sort of dungeon.

Verse 3. The LORD hath not called thy name—Pashur] (Security on all sides.) This name thou hast had: but not by Divine appointment.

But Magor-missabib] (Fear on every side.) This name hath God given thee; because, in the course of His providence, thou shalt be placed in the circumstances signified by it; thou shalt be a terror to thyself.

Verse 6. And thou, Pashur—shall go into captivity] Thou shalt suffer for the false prophecies which thou hast delivered, and for thy insult to my prophet.

Verse 7. O LORD, thou hast deceived me] Thou hast promised me protection; and lo! I am now delivered into the hands of my enemies. These words were probably spoken when Pashur smote him, and put him in prison.

I think our translation of this passage is very exceptionable. My Old Bible reads—Thou hast liddist me as the LORD; and I was lidd as the LORD. The original word is lidditi; thou hast pursued me; i. e. to go and prophesy to this people. I went, faithfully declared thy message; and now I am likely to perish by their cruelty. As the root lidd signifies to persuade and allure, as well as to deceive, the above must be its meaning in this place. Taken as in our version, it is highly irrelevant. It is used in the same sense here as in Gen. ix. 27, God shall enlarge (persuade, margin), Japhet; and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem.

Verse 8. I cried violence and spoil] This was the burden of the message Thou didst give me.

Verse 9. I will not make mention of him] I will renounce the prophetic office, and return to my house.

As a burning fire shut up in my bones] He felt stings of conscience for the hasty and disobedient resolution he had formed; he felt ashamed of his own weakness, that did not confide in the promise and strength of God; and God's word was in him as a strongly raging fire, and he was obliged to deliver it in order to get rid of the tortures which he felt from suppressing the solemn message which God had given. It is as dangerous to refuse to go when called, as it is to run without a call.

Verse 10. Report—and we will report it] Let us spread calumnies against him every where; or let us spread reports of dangers coming upon him that we may intimidate him, and cause him to desist.

Verse 11. But the LORD is with me as a mighty terrible one] Thus was he by his strong confidence in the strong God, delivered from all his fears, and was enabled to go on comfortably with his work.

Verse 13. Sing unto the LORD] He was so completely delivered from all fear, that although he remained in the same circumstances, yet he exults in the Divine protection, and does not fear the face of any adversary.

Verse 14. Cursed be the day wherein I was born] If we take these words literally, and suppose them to be in their proper place, they are utterly inconsistent with that state of confidence in which he exulted a few minutes before. If they are the language of Jeremiah, they must have been spoken on a prior occasion, when probably he had given way to a passionate heatiness. They might well comfort with the state he was in ver. 9. I really believe these verses have got out of their proper place, which I conjecture to 15 Cursed be the man that brought tidings to my father, saying, A man child is born unto thee; making him very glad.

16 And let that man be as the cities which the LORD overthrew, and repented not: and let him hear the cry in the morning, and the shouting at noontide;

17 Because he slew me not from the womb; or that my mother might have been my grave, and her womb to be always great with me.

18 Wherefore came I forth out of the womb to see labour and sorrow, that my days should be consumed with shame?

CHAPTER XXI.

Nebuchadnezzar being come up against Jerusalem, Zedekiah sends Pashur and Zephaniah to the Prophet, to request him to intercede with God in behalf of His people. 1. But He is declared to be against Jerusalem, and the whole land of Judah; and the only mitigation of their punishment is that procured from their surrendering to the King of Babylon, 2-10. Prophecy concerning the house of the King of Judah, 11, 12. Notwithstanding the amazing fortifications round about Jerusalem, in which the people vainly trust, the Lord will most assuredly visit them for their iniquities; the city shall be taken by the Chaldeans, 13, 14.

2 Enquire, I pray thee, of the LORD for us; (for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon maketh war against us); if so be that the LORD will deal with us according to all his wondrous works, that he may go up from us.

3 Then said Jeremiah unto them, Thus shall ye say to Zedekiah:

4 Thus saith the LORD God of Israel; Behold, I will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hands, wherewith ye fight against the king of Babylon, and against the Chaldeans, which besiege you without the walls, and I will assemble them into the midst of this city.

5 And I myself will fight against you with an outstretched hand and with a strong arm, even in anger, and in fury, and in great wrath.

be the eighth and ninth verses. When they will come in very properly; and might have been a part of his complaint in those moments when he had purposed to flee from God as did Jonah, and prophesy no more in His name. Transpositions in this prophet are frequent; therefore place these six verses after the eighth, and let the Chapter end with the thirteenth, and the whole will form a piece of exquisite poetry. Where the state of despair, and the hasty resolutions he had formed while under its influence, and the state of confidence to which he was raised by the succouring influence of God, will appear to be both illustrative of each other, and are touched with a delicacy and fervour, which even a cold heart must admire. See Job iii. and the notes there. Both the passages are very similar.

Verse 15. A man-child is born] Borun [is to thee a snare] (Heb.—Old MS. Bible. This is the Old English word for man or servant; and is so used by Wiclif, Rev. xii. 5.

Verse 16. And let him hear the cry] Let him be in continual alarm.

Verse 18. Wherefore came I forth] It would have been well had I never been born, as I have neither comfort in my life nor comfort in my work.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXI.

Verse 1. The word which came unto Jeremiah] The Chapters in the remaining parts of this prophecy seem strangely interchanged. This subject has been mentioned in the Introduction, and some Tables given; and to these the critical reader is entreated to refer. The Discourse here was delivered about the ninth year of the reign of Zedekiah. This Chapter, observes Dr. Blayney, contains the first of those prophecies which were delivered by Jeremiah, subsequent to the revolt of Zedekiah, and the breaking out of the war thereupon; and which are continued on to the taking of Jerusalem, related in chap. xxix. in the following order:—chap. xxi; xxxiv; xxxvii; xxxii; xxxiii; xxxvii; xxxix.

Pashur the son of Melchiah] There can be little doubt that this Pashur was a different person from him who was called the son of Immer, in the preceding Chapter.

Verse 2. Enquire, I pray thee] See whether God intends to deliver us into, or out of, the hand of the Chaldeans.

both man and beast; they shall die of a great pestilence.

7 And afterward, saith the LORD, 'I will deliver Zedekiah king of Judah, and his servants, and the people, and such as are left in this city from the pestilence, from the sword, and from the famine, into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of those that seek their life: and he shall smite them with the edge of the sword; he shall not spare them, neither have pity nor have mercy.

8 And unto this people thou shalt say, Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I set before you the way of life, and the way of death.

9 He that abideth in this city shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth out, and falleth to the Chaldeans that besiege you, he shall live, and his life shall be unto him for a prey.

10 For I have set my face against this city for evil, and not for good, saith the LORD: it shall be given into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire.

11 And touching the house of the king of Judah, say, Hear ye the word of the LORD;

12 O house of David, thus saith the LORD; Execute judgment in the morning, and deliver him that is spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor, lest my fury go out like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

13 Behold, I am against thee, O inhabitant of the valley, and rock of the plain, saith the LORD; which say, Who shall come down against us? or who shall enter into our habitations?

14 But I will punish you according to the fruit of your doings, saith the LORD: and I will kindle a fire in the forest thereof, and it shall devour all things round about it.

Verse 4. I will turn back the weapons] Every attempt you make to repel the Chaldeans shall be unsuccessful.

I will assemble them into the midst of this city.] I will deliver the city into their hands.

Verse 6. They shall die of a great pestilence.] The sword may appear to be that of man, though I have given the Chaldeans their commission: but the pestilence shall appear to be the immediate act of God.

Verse 7. Nebuchadrezzar] This name is spelt as above in twenty-six places of this book; and in ten places it is spelt Nebuchadnezzar, which is the common orthography. The difference is only a resh, for a zuz: but the MSS. are various on this point. It is the same person who is intended by both names; and here all the Versions (except the Arabic, which omits the name,) have it in the usual form.

Verse 8. Behold, I set before you the way of life, and the way of death.] Meaning escape or destruction, in the present instance. This is explained in the next verse.

Verse 10. He shall burn it with fire.] What a heavy message to all; and especially to them who had any fear of God, or reverence for the Temple and its sacred services!

Verse 12. Execute judgment in the morning] Probably the time for dispensing judgment was the morning, when the people were going to their work: but the words may mean, do justice promptly, do not delay. Let justice be administered as soon as required.

Verse 13. O inhabitant of the valley, and rock of the plain. Dr. Blayney translates—O thou inhabitant of the levelled hollow of a rock. With all his explanation I cannot see the good sense of this translation. Jerusalem itself, though partly on two hills, was also extended in the valley; and Sion, the city of David, was properly a rock, strongly fortified both by nature and art; and by its ancient possessors, the Jebusites, was deemed impregnable.

Who shall come down against us?] Probably the words of those courtiers who had persuaded Zedekiah to rebel against the king of Babylon.

Verse 14. I will kindle a fire in the forest thereof] I shall send destruction into its centre, that shall spread to every part of the circumference, and so consume the whole. The beginning of the thirty-fourth Chapter should follow here. See the arrangement on ver. 1.

CHAPTER XXII.

This section of prophecy, extending to the end of the eighth verse of the next Chapter, is addressed to the king of Judah and his people. It enjoins on them the practice of justice and equity, as they would hope to prosper, 1-4; but threatens them, in case of disobedience, with utter destruction, 5-8. The captivity of Shallum, the son of Josiah, is declared to be irrevocable, 10-12; and the miserable and unattended end of Jeconiah, contemptuously called Coniah, is foretold, 13-18. His family is threatened with the like captivity, and his seed declared to be for ever excluded from the throne, 20-22.

A. M. Ctr. 3406. B. C. Ctr. 598. Cf. cir. XLV. 3. The. Præci, Reg. Rom. cir. 58.

THUS saith the LORD; Go down to the house of the king of Judah, and speak there this word,

2 And say, Hear the word of the LORD, O king of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David, thou, and thy servants, and thy people that enter in by these gates.

3 Thus saith the LORD; Execute ye judgment, and righteousness, and deliver the spoiled out of the hand of the oppressor: and do no wrong, do no violence to the stranger, the fatherless, nor the widow, neither shed innocent blood in this place.

4 For if ye do this thing indeed, then shall there enter in by the gates of this house kings sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, he, and his servants, and his people.

5 But if ye will not hear these words, I swear by myself, saith the LORD, that this house shall become a desolation.

6 For thus saith the LORD unto the king's house of Judah; Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon: yet surely I will make thee a wilderness, and cities which are not inhabited.

7 And I will prepare destroyers against thee, every one with his weapons: and they shall cut down thy choice cedars, and cast them into the fire.

8 And many nations shall pass by this city, and they shall say every man to his neighbour, Wherefore hath the LORD done thus unto this great city?

9 Then they shall answer, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the LORD their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them.

10 Weep ye not for the dead, neither bemoan him: but weep sore for him that goeth away: for he shall return no more, nor see his native country.

11 For thus saith the LORD touching Shallum the son of Josiah king of Judah, which reigned instead of Josiah his father, which went forth out of this place; He shall not return thither any more:

12 But he shall die in the place whither they have led him captive, and shall see this land no more.

13 Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work;

14 That saith, I will build me a wide house and large chambers, and cutteth him out windows; and it is ceiled with cedar, and painted with vermilion.

15 Shalt thou reign, because thou clovest thyself in cedar? did not thy father eat and drink, and do judgment and justice, and then it was well with him?

16 He judged the cause of the poor and needy; then it was well with him: was not this to know me? saith the LORD.

17 But thine eyes and thine heart are not but for thy covetousness, and for to shed innocent blood, and for oppression, and for violence, to do it.

18 Therefore thus saith the LORD concerning Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah; They shall not lament for him, saying, Ah my brother! or, Ah sister! they shall not lament for him, saying, Ah lord! or, Ah his glory.

19 He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem.

20 Go up to Lebanon, and cry; and lift up thy voice in Bashan, and cry from the passages: for all thy lovers are destroyed.

21 I spake unto thee in thy prosperity; but thou saidst, I will not hear. This hath been thy manner from thy youth, that thou obeyedst not my voice.

22 The wind shall eat up all thy pastors, and

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXII.

Verse 1. Go down to the house of the king of Judah, and speak there this word] This is supposed by Dahler to have been published in the first year of the reign of Zedekiah.

Verse 2. O king of Judah, thou and thy servants] His ministers are here addressed, as chiefly governing the nation; and who had counselled Zedekiah to rebel.

Verse 6. Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Lebanon] Perhaps in allusion, says Dahler, to the oaks of Gilead, and the cedars of mount Lebanon, of which the palace was constructed. Lebanon was the highest mountain in Israel, and Gilead the richest and most fertile part of the country; and were, therefore, proper emblems of the reigning family. Though thou art the richest and most powerful, I, who raised thee up, can bring thee down and make thee a wilderness.

Verse 7. They shall cut down thy choice cedars] The destruction of the country is expressed under the symbol of the destruction of a fine forest.—a multitude of fellers come against it, each with his axe; and there being no resistance, every tree is soon felled to the earth. These destroyers, God says, I have prepared, (אשרתי kadashti,) I have sanctified;—consecrated them to this work. They have their commission from me.

Verse 8. Many nations shall pass] These words seem borrowed from Deut. xxix. 22, &c.

Verse 10. Weep ye not for the dead] Josiah, dead in consequence of the wounds he had received at Megiddo, in a battle with Pharaoh-Necho, king of Egypt: but he died in peace with God.

But weep sore for him that goeth away] Namely, Jehohaz, the son of Josiah, called below Shallum; whom Pharaoh-Necho had carried captive into Egypt, from which it was prophesied he should never return, 2 Kings xxii. 30-34. He was called Shallum before he ascended the throne, and Jehohaz afterwards: so his brother Eliakim changed his name to Jehoiakim, and Mattaniah to Zedekiah.

Verse 13. Woe unto him that buildeth his house] These evils, charged against Jehoiakim, are no where else circumstantially related. We learn from 2 Kings xxiii. 35-37, that he taxed his subjects heavily, to give to Pharaoh-Necho, king of Egypt:—he exacted the silver and gold of the people of the land, and did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord. The mode of taxation is here intimated: he took the wages of the hireling, and caused the people to work without wages in his own buildings, &c.

Verse 15. Shall thou reign, &c.] Dost thou think thou art a great king, because thou dwellest in a splendid palace!

Verse 18. They shall not lament for him, saying, Ah my brother!] These words were, no doubt, the commencement of some funeral dirge. Alas! a brother, who was our lord or governor, is gone. Alas, our sister!—his queen, who has lost her glory in losing her husband. הוהה hodah is feminine, and must refer to the glory of the queen.

Verse 19. With the burial of an ass] Cast out, and left unburied; or buried without any funeral solemnities.

Verse 20. Go up to Lebanon] Probably Antilibanus, which, together with Bashan and Abarim, which we here translate passages, were on the way by which the captives should be led out of their own country.

Verse 21. I spake unto thee in thy prosperity] In all states and circumstances I warned thee by my prophets; and thou wilt only be ashamed of thy conduct when thou shalt be stripped of all thy excellencies, and reduced to poverty and disgrace, ver. 22.

Verse 22. The wind shall eat up all thy pastors] A blast from God's mouth shall carry off thy kings, princes, prophets, and priests.

thy lovers shall go into captivity: surely then shalt thou be ashamed and confounded for all thy wickedness.

23 O inhabitant of Lebanon, that maketh thy nest in the cedars, how gracious shalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, the pain as of a woman in travail!

24 As I live, saith the Lord, though Coniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah were the signet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence;

25 And I will give thee into the hand of them that seek thy life, and into the hand of them whose face thou fearest, even into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 And I will cast thee out, and thy mother that bare thee, into another country, where ye were not born; and there shall ye die.

27 But to the land wherunto they desire to return, thither shall they not return.

28 Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol? is he a vessel wherein is no pleasure? wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed, and are cast into a land which they know not?

29 O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord.

30 Thus saith the Lord, Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah.

Verse 23. How gracious shalt thou be] A strong irony. Verse 24. Though Coniah] Called Jeconiah, probably on ascending the throne. See on ver. 10.

The signet upon my right hand] The most precious seal, ring, or armet. Though dearer to me than the most splendid gem to its possessor.

Verse 26. I will cast thee out, and thy mother] See all this fulfilled, 2 Kings xxiv. 12, 13. All were carried by Nebuchadnezzar into captivity together.

Verse 28. Is this man Coniah a despised broken idol? These are probably the exclamations of the people, when they heard those solemn denunciations against their king and their country.

Verse 29. O earth] These are the words of the prophet in reply:—O land! unhappy land! desolated land! Hear the judgment of the Lord!

Verse 30. Write ye this man childless] Though he had seven sons, 1 Chron. iii. 17; yet, having no successor, he is to be entered on the genealogical tables as one without children: for none of his posterity ever sat on the throne of David.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIII.

Verse 1. Woe be unto the pastors] There shall a curse fall on the kings, princes, priests, and prophets; who, by their vicious conduct and example, have brought desolation upon the people.

Verse 2. Ye have scattered my flock] The bad government both in church and state was a principal cause of the people's profligacy.

Verse 5. I will raise unto David a righteous Branch] As there has been no age, from the Babylonish captivity to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, in which such a state of prosperity existed, and no king or governor who could answer at all to the character here given, the passage has been understood to refer to our blessed Lord, Jesus Christ, who was a branch out of the stem of Jesse—a righteous King—by the power of His Spirit and influence of His religion reigning, prospering, and executing judgment and justice in the earth.

Verse 6. In his days Judah shall be saved] The real Jew is not one who has his circumcision in the flesh, but in the spirit. The real Israel are true believers in Christ Jesus; and the genuine Jerusalem is the church of the First-born, and made free, with all her children, from the bondage of sin, Satan, death, and hell. All these exist only in the days of the Messiah. All that went before were the types, or signifiers, of these glorious gospel excellencies.

And this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTOUSNESS.] I shall give the Hebrew Text of this important passage: יהוה שמו אשר יקראוהו יהוה צדקתנו

CHAPTER XXIII.

Serial of the Discourse which commenced in the preceding Chapter. The Prophet denounces vengeance against the pastors of Israel, who have scattered and destroyed the flock of the Lord, i. e. He concludes with gracious promises of deliverance from the Babylonish captivity, and of better times under the Messiah, when the converts to Christianity, who are the true Israel of God, shadowed forth by the old dispensation, shall be delivered, by the glorious light of the gospel, from worse than Chaldean bondage, from the captivity of sin and death. But this prophecy will not have its fullest accomplishment till that period arrives which is fixed in the Divine counsel for the restoration of Israel and Judah from their various dispersions, of which their deliverance from the Chaldean domination was a type: when Jesus the Christ, the righteous Branch, the Root and the offspring of David, and the only legitimate Heir to the throne, shall take unto Himself His great power, and reign gloriously over the whole house of Jacob, 3-8. At the midst were a new Dispensation commenced. Jeremiah expresses his horror at the great wickedness of the priests and prophets of Judah, and declares that the Divine vengeance is hanging over them. He exhorts the people not to listen to their false promises, 9-23; and predicts the utter ruin that shall fall upon all pretenders to inspiration, 23-35, as well as upon all scoffers at true prophecy, 35-40.

WOE be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture! saith the Lord.

2 Therefore thus saith the Lord God of Israel against the pastors that feed my people; Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited them: a behold, I will visit upon you the evil of your doings, saith the Lord.

3 And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds: and they shall be fruitful and increase.

4 And I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them: and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the Lord.

5 Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth.

6 In his days Judah shall be saved, and Is-ve-zeh shemo asher yikre'u yehovah tsdkenu, which the Septuagint translate as follows,—Kai ovro to onoma avrou o kalouci avrou Kyrios, Iowden, And this is his name which the Lord shall call him, Josedeek.

Dahler translates the Text thus:— Et voici le nom dont on l'appellera: L'Eternel, Auteur de notre salut.

“And this is the name by which He shall be called; The Lord, the Author of our happiness.”

Dr. Blayney seems to follow the Septuagint: he translates thus,—“And this is the name by which Jehovah shall call him, OUR RIGHTOUSNESS.”

In my old MS. Bible, the first English translation ever made, it is thus:—AND THIS IS THE NAME THAT THEY SHALL CALL HIM: OUR RIGHTOUS LORD.

Coverdale's, the first English translation of the Scriptures ever printed, (1535) has translated thus:—AND THIS IS THE NAME THAT THEY SHALL CALL HIM: even the Lord our righteous Saviour.

Matheus, (1549) and Becke, (1549) follow Coverdale literally: but our present translation of the clause is borrowed from Cardmarden, (Rouen 1566)—even the Lord our righteousness.

Dr. Blayney thus accounts for his translation:—“Literally, according to the Hebrew idiom,—And this is his name by which Jehovah shall call, our Righteousness; a phrase exactly the same as, ‘And Jehovah shall call him so;’ which implies that God would make Him such as He called Him, that is, our Righteousness, or the Author and Means of our salvation and acceptance. So that by the same metonymy Christ is said to ‘have been made of God into us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption,’ 1 Cor. i. 30.”

“I doubt not that some persons will be offended with me for depriving them by this translation of a favourite argument for proving the Divinity of our Saviour from the Old Testament. But I cannot help it: I have done it with no ill design: but purely because I think, and am morally sure, that the Text, as it stands, will not properly admit of any other construction. The Septuagint have so translated before me in an age when there could not possibly be any bias or prejudice either for or against the forementioned doctrine,—a doctrine which draws its decisive proofs from the New Testament only.”

Dahler paraphrases.—“This Prince shall be surnamed by His people, The Lord, the Author of our happiness. The people shall feel themselves happy under him; and shall express their gratitude to Him.”

I am satisfied that both the translation from Cardmarden downwards, and the meaning put on these words, are incorrect. I prefer the translation of Blayney to all others;

rael shall dwell safely; and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

7 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that they shall no more say, The LORD liveth, which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

8 But, The LORD liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north country, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land.

9 Mine heart within me is broken, because of the prophets; all my bones shake; I am like a drunken man, and like a man whom wine hath overcome, because of the LORD, and because of the words of his holiness.

10 For the land is full of adulterers; for because of swearing the land mourneth; the pleasant places of the wilderness are dried up, and their course is evil, and their force is not right.

11 For both prophet and priest are profane; yea, in my house have I found their wickedness, saith the LORD.

12 Wherefore their way shall be unto them as slippery ways in the darkness: they shall be driven on, and fall therein: for I will bring evil upon them, even the year of their visitation, saith the LORD.

13 And I have seen folly in the prophets of Samaria; they prophesied in Baal, and caused my people Israel to err.

14 I have seen also in the prophets of Jerusalem an horrible thing: they commit adultery, and walk in lies: they strengthen also the hands of evildoers, that none doth return from his wickedness: they are all of them unto me as Sodom, and the inhabitants thereof as Gomorrah.

15 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts concerning the prophets: Behold, I will feed them with wormwood, and make them drink the water of gall: for from the prophets of Jerusalem is profaneness gone forth into all the land.

16 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Hearken not unto the words of the prophets that prophesy unto you: they make you vain: they speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the LORD.

17 They say still unto them that despise me, The LORD hath said, Ye shall have peace; and they say unto every one that walketh after the imagination of his own heart, No evil shall come upon you.

18 For who hath stood in the counsel of the LORD, and hath perceived and heard his word? who hath marked his word, and heard it?

19 Behold, a whirlwind of the LORD is gone forth in fury, even a grievous whirlwind: it shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked.

20 The anger of the LORD shall not return, until he have executed, and till he have performed the thoughts of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it perfectly.

21 I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran: I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied.

22 But if they had stood in my counsel, and had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings.

23 Am I a God at hand, saith the LORD, and not a God afar off?

24 Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the LORD. Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the LORD.

25 I have heard what the prophets said, that prophecy lies in my name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed.

26 How long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophesy lies? yea, they are prophets of the deceit of their own heart;

27 Which think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams which they tell every man to his neighbour, as their fathers have forgotten my name for Baal.

and that it speaks any thing about the imputed righteousness of Christ, cannot possibly be proved by any man who understands the original Text. As to those who put the sense of their creed upon the words, they must be content to stand out of the list of Hebrew critics. I believe Jesus to be Jehovah: but I doubt much whether this Text calls Him so. No doctrine so vitally important should be rested on an interpretation so dubious and unsupported by the Text. That all our righteousness, holiness, and goodness, as well as the whole of our salvation, come by Him, from Him, and through Him, is fully evident from the Scriptures: but this is not one of the passages that support this most important truth.

Verse 7. The Lord liveth, which brought up] See on chap. xvi. 14, 15.

Verse 9. Mine heart within me is broken because of the prophets] The first word of this clause is לִבִּי נִבְרַח le-nebiim, which we incorporate with the whole clause, and translate, -Because of the prophets. But as a new prophecy begins here, it is evident that the word is the title to this prophecy; and is thus distinguished both by Blayney and Dahler. -CONCERNING THE PROPHETS. This Discourse was delivered probably in the reign of Jehoiakim.

All my bones shake] He was terrified even by his own message, and shocked at the profanity of the false prophets.

Verse 10. The land is full of adulterers] Of idolaters. Of persons who break their faith to me; as an impure wife does to her husband.

The pleasant places of the wilderness are dried up.] He speaks here, most probably, in reference to death. Profane oaths, false swearing, evil courses, violence, &c. had provoked God to send this among other judgments, see ver. 19.

Verse 11. In my house] They had even introduced idolatry into the temple of God!

Verse 13. I have seen folly in the prophets of Samaria] This was not to be wondered at, for their religion was a system of corruption.

Verse 14. I have seen also in the prophets of Jerusalem]

That is, the prophets of Jerusalem, while professing a pure faith, have followed the ways, and become as corrupt, as the prophets of Samaria.

They are all of them unto me as Sodom] Incorrigible, brutish, sinners; who will as surely be destroyed as Sodom and Gomorrah were.

Verse 16. Hearken not unto the words of the prophets] That is, of those who promise you safety, without requiring you to forsake your sins, and turn unto the Lord, see ver. 17.

Verse 18. Who hath stood in the counsel of the Lord] Who of them has ever received a word of prophecy from me? My word is not in them.

Verse 19. Behold, a whirlwind] The storm: the hot pestilential wind blowing from the South, frequently mentioned or referred to in the Sacred Writings, see ver. 10.

Verse 20. In the latter days ye shall consider it] I give you warning: and this punishment which I now threaten shall surely take place;—a short time will determine it,—ye shall not escape.

Verse 21. I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran] Not to save souls,—but to profit themselves.

I have not spoken the word at my mouth; yet they went, publishing their own deceits, and pretending them to be revelations from God. The churches which have legal emotions are ever in danger of being overrun and ruined by worldly and self-interested priests.

Verse 23. Am I a God at hand,—and not a God afar off?] You act as if you thought I could not see you! Am I not omnipresent! Do I not fill the heavens and the earth? ver. 24.

Verse 27. By their dreams] Dreams were anciently reputed as a species of inspiration, see Numb. xii. 6; 1 Sam. xxviii. 6; Joel iii. 1; Dan. vii. 1. In the Book of Genesis we find many examples; and although many mistake the workings of their own vain imaginations in sleep for revelations from God; yet He has often revealed Himself in this way: but such dreams were easily distinguished 28 The prophet * that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord.

29 Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?

30 Therefore, behold, * I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that steal my words every one from his neighbour.

31 Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, * that use their tongues, and say, He saith.

32 Behold, I am against them that prophecy false dreams, saith the Lord, and do tell them, and cause my people to err by their lies, and by * their lightness; yet I sent them not, nor commanded them: therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the Lord.

33 And when this people, or the prophet, or a priest, shall ask thee, saying, What is * the burden of the Lord? thou shalt then say unto them, What burden? * I will even forsake you, saith the Lord.

34 And as for the prophet, and the priest, and the people, that shall say, The burden of the Lord; I will even * punish that man and his house.

35 Thus shall ye say every one to his neighbour, and every one to his brother, What hath the Lord answered? and, What hath the Lord spoken?

36 And the burden of the Lord shall ye mention no more: for every man's word shall be his burden; for ye have perverted the words of the living God, of the Lord of hosts our God.

37 Thus shalt thou say to the prophet, What hath the Lord answered thee? and, What hath the Lord spoken?

38 But since ye say, The burden of the Lord; therefore thus saith the Lord; Because ye say this word, The burden of the Lord, and I have sent unto you, saying, Ye shall not say, The burden of the Lord;

39 Therefore, behold, I, even I, will * utterly forget you, and * I will forsake you, and the city that I gave you and your fathers, and cast you out of my presence:

40 And I will bring * an everlasting reproach upon you, and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Under the emblem of the good and bad figs is represented the fate of the Jews already gone into captivity with Zedekiah, and of those that remained still in their own country with Shallum. It is likewise intimated that God would deal kindly with the former, but that His wrath would still pursue the latter, 1-13.

THE * LORD shewed me, and, behold, ^{A. M. 3608. B. C. 598. Ch. XLV. 3. An. Tac. Fried. Reg. Rom. 18.} two baskets of figs were set before the temple of the Lord, after that Nebuchadrezzar ^a king of Babylon had from the others. They were always such as had no connexion with the gratification of the flesh; they were such as contained warnings against sin, and excitements to holiness; they were always consecutive,—well connected: with a proper beginning and ending,—such as possessed the intellect more than the imagination. Of such dreams the Lord says, (ver. 23.) The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream,—permit him to shew what he has thus received from the Lord: but let him tell it as a dream; and speak my word faithfully, lest he may have been deceived.

Verse 23. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord.] Do not mingle these equivocal matters with positive revelations. Do not consider a dream, even from a prophet, as that positive inspiration which my prophets receive when their reason, judgment, and spiritual feelings, are all in full and in regular exercise. Mix none of your own devices with my doctrines.

Verse 29. Is not my word like as a fire? It enlightens, warms, and penetrates, every part. When it is communicated to the true prophet, it is like a fire shut up in his bones; he cannot retain it,—he must publish it: and when published, it is like a hammer that breaks the rock in pieces, it is ever accompanied by a Divine power, that causes both sinner and saint to feel its weight and importance.

In the original words there is something singular: חַלְוֵי כַסֵּף כֹּהֵן הַלֵּל חֹדֶר דְּבָרֵי קָאֵה, Is not thus my word like fire? I suspect, with Dr. Blayney, that כֹּהֵן, thus, was formerly written כֹּחַ coach, strength, or power; and so it was understood by the Targumist: Are not all my words strong like fire? and probably the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews read it thus, and had it in view when he wrote—For the word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, Heb. iv. 12. This admitted, the Text would read, Is not my word powerful, like fire? or, Is not the power of my word like fire? But however we understand the words, let us take heed lest we think, as some have thought and affirmed, that the Sacred Writings are quite sufficient of themselves to enlighten, convince, and convert the soul, and there is no need of the Holy Spirit. Fire itself must be applied by an agent, in order to produce its effects:—and surely the hammer cannot break the rock in pieces unless wielded by an able workman. And it is God's Spirit alone that can thus apply it: for we find it frequently read, and frequently spoken, without producing any salutary effects. And by this very thing the true preachers of the word of God may be distinguished from the false, non-commissioned ones,—those who run, though they are not sent, ver. 21. The word of him who has his commission from heaven, shall be as a fire, and as a hammer;—sinners shall be convinced and converted to God by it. But the others, though they steal the word from their neighbour,—borrow, or pilfer, a good sermon; yet they do not profit the people at all, because God did not send them, ver. 32; for the power of God does not in their ministry accompany the word.

There may be an allusion to the practice in some mining Vol. II.—90 countries, of roasting stones containing ore, before they are subjected to the hammer, in order to pulverize them. In Cornwall I have seen them roast the tin stones in the fire before they place them under the action of the hammers in the stamp mill. The fire separated the arsenic from the ore, and then they were easily reduced to powder by the hammers of the mill; afterwards, washing the mass with water, the grains of tin sunk to the bottom, while the lighter parts went off with the water, and thus the metal was procured clean and pure. If this be the allusion, it is very appropriate.

Verse 30. I am against the prophets.] Three cases are mentioned here which excited God's disapprobation. 1. The prophets who stole the word from their neighbour; who, associated with the true prophets, got some intelligence from them; and then went and published it as a revelation which themselves had received, ver. 30. 2. The prophets who used their tongues, חַלְוֵי כַסֵּף הַלֵּל חֹדֶר דְּבָרֵי קָאֵה, who lick, or smooth with their tongues; gave their own counsels as Divine revelations, flattering them in their sins, and promising peace, when God had not spoken; and professed them, Thus saith the Lord, ver. 31. 3. The prophets who made up false stories, which they termed prophecies, revealed to them in dreams; and thus caused the people to err, ver. 32.

Verse 33. What is the burden of the Lord? The word מַשָּׂא מַסָּה, here used, signifies burden, oracle, prophetic discourse; and is used by almost every prophet. But the persons in the Text appear to have been mockers. "Where is this burden of the Lord?"—"What is the burden now?" To this insolent question the prophet answers in the following verses.

I will even forsake you.] I will punish the prophet, the priest, and the people, that speak thus, ver. 34. Here are burdens.

Verse 36. Every man's word shall be his burden.] Ye say that all God's messages are burdens, and to you they shall be such: whereas, had you used them as you ought, they would have been blessings to you.

For ye have perverted the words of the living God.] And thus have sinned against your own souls.

Verse 39. I will utterly forget you, and I will forsake you, and the city.] Dr. Blayney translates:—I will both take you up altogether, and will cast you off together with the city. Ye are a burden to me; but I will take you up, and then cast you off. I will do with you as a man who weary with his burden, will cast it off his shoulders, and hear it no more.

Verse 40. I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you.] And this reproach of having rebelled against so good a God, and rejected so powerful a Saviour, follows them to this day through all their dispersions, in every part of the habitable earth. The word of the Lord cannot fail.

carried away captive ° Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, with the carpenters and smiths from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon.

2 One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe; and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, ° they were so bad.

3 Then said the LORD unto me, What seest thou, Jeremiah? And I said, Figs; the good figs, very good; and the evil, very evil, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

4 Again the word of the LORD came unto me, saying,

5 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; Like these good figs, so will I acknowledge ° them that are carried away captive of Judah, whom I have sent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans for their good.

6 For I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and ° I will bring them again to this land: and ° I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up.

7 And I will give them ° a heart to know me, that I am the LORD: and they shall be ° my people, and I will be their God: for they shall return unto me ° with their whole heart.

8 And as the evil figs, which cannot be eaten, they are so evil; surely thus saith the LORD, So will I give Zedekiah the king of Judah, and his princes, and the residue of Jerusalem, that remain in this land, and ° them that dwell in the land of Egypt:

9 And I will deliver them ° to ° be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, ° to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt ° and a curse, in all places whither I shall drive them.

10 And I will send the sword, the famine, and the pestilence among them, till they be consumed from off the land that I gave unto them and to their fathers.

this Book, there is not unfrequently a transposition of verses, and parts of verses. Of this we have an instance in the verse before us; and the first clause of which should be the last. Thus:—

“After that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jeconiah, the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, with the carpenters and smiths from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon, the Lord shewed me, and, behold, two baskets of figs were set before the Temple of the Lord.

Verse 2. One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe; and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, they were so bad.”

This arrangement requires these verses to better sense, by restoring the natural connexion.

This prophecy was undoubtedly delivered in the first year of the reign of Zedekiah.

Under the type of good and bad figs, God represents the state of the persons who had already been carried captives into Babylon, with their king Jeconiah, compared with the state of those who should be carried away with Zedekiah. Those already carried away, being the choice of the people, are represented by the good figs: those now remaining, and soon to be carried into captivity, are represented by the bad figs, that were good for nothing. The state also of the former in their captivity was vastly preferable to the state of those which were now about to be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon. The latter would be treated as doubtly rebels; the former, being the most respectable of the inhabitants, were treated well; and even in captivity, a marked distinction would be made between them; God ordering it so. But the prophet sufficiently explains his own meaning.

Verse 1. Set before the Temple] As an offering of the first fruits of that kind.

Verse 2. Very good figs] Or, figs of the early sort. The fig trees in Palestine, says Dr. Shaw, produced fruit thrice each year. The first sort called baccora, (those here mentioned,) come to perfection about the middle or end of June. The second sort, called kermex, or summer fig, is seldom ripe before August. And the third, which is called the winter fig, which is larger, and of a darker complexion than the preceding, hangs all the winter on the tree, ripen-

CHAPTER XXV.

This Chapter contains a summary of the judgments denounced by Jeremiah against Je-rah, Babylon, and many other nations. It begins with reproving the Jews for disobeying the calls of God to repentance, 1-7; on which account their captivity, with that of other neighbouring nations, during seventy years, is foretold, 8-11. At the expiration of that period, (computing from the invasion of Nebuchadnezzar in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, to the lowest extent of the first year of Cyrus,) an end was to be put to the Babylonish empire, 12-14. All this is again declared by the emblem of that cup of wrath which the Prophet, as it should seem in a vision, tendered to all the nations which he enumerates, 15-29. And, for further confirmation, it is a third time repeated in a very beautiful and elevated strain of poetry, 30-38. The talent of diversifying the ideas, images, and language, even when the subject in the main, or nearly so, appears no where in such perfection as among the sacred poets.

THE word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the people of Judah in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, that was the first year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon;

2 The which Jeremiah the prophet spake unto all the people of Judah, and to all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying,

3 ° From the thirteenth year of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, even unto this day, that is the three and twentieth year, the word of the LORD hath come unto me, and I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; ° but ye have not hearkened.

4 And the LORD hath sent unto you all his servants the prophets, ° rising early and sending them; but ye have not hearkened, nor inclined your ear to hear.

5 They said, ° Turn ye again now every one from his evil way, and from the evil of your doings, and dwell in the land that the LORD hath given unto you and to your fathers for ever and ever:

6 And go not after other gods to serve them, and to worship them, and provoke me not to anger with the works of your hands; and I will do you no hurt.

7 Yet ye have not hearkened unto me, saith the LORD; that ye might ° provoke me to anger with the works of your hands to your own hurt.

8 Therefore thus saith the LORD of hosts; Because ye have not heard my words, Verse 5. Like these good figs, so will I acknowledge] Those already carried away into captivity, I esteem as far more excellent than those who still remain in the land. They have not sinned so deeply, and they are now penitent; and, therefore, I will set mine eyes upon them for good, ver. 6. I will watch over them by an especial Providence, and they shall be restored to their own land.

Verse 7. They shall be my people] I shall renew my covenant with them, for they will return to me with their whole heart.

Verse 8. So will I give Zedekiah] I will treat these as they deserve. They shall be carried into captivity, and scattered through all nations. Multitudes of those never returned to Judea; the others returned at the end of seventy years.

Verse 10. I will send the sword] Many of them fell by sword and famine in the war with the Chaldeans; and many more by such means, afterwards. The first received their captivity as a correction, and turned to God: the latter still hardened their hearts more and more; and probably very few of them ever returned, and perhaps are amalgamated with Heathen nations at present. Lord, how long I

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXV.

Verse 1. The word that came to Jeremiah—in the fourth year] This prophecy, we see, was delivered the fourth year of Jehoiakim; and the Chapter that contains it is utterly out of its place. It should be between the xxxvth and xxxviith.

The defeat of the Egyptians by Nebuchadnezzar at Carchemish, and the subsequent taking of Jerusalem, took place in this year, viz. the fourth year of Jehoiakim.

The first year of Nebuchadnezzar] This king was associated with his father two years before the death of the latter. The Jews reckon his reign from this time; and this was the first of those two years: but the Chaldeans date the commencement of his reign two years later, viz. at the death of his father.

Verse 7. That ye might provoke] Ye would not hearken; but chose to provoke me to anger.

9 Behold, I will send and take all the families of the north, saith the Lord, and Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will bring them against this land, and against the inhabitants thereof, and against all these nations round about, and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and an hissing, and perpetual desolations.

10 Moreover I will take from them the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the sound of the millstones, and the light of the candle.

11 And this whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years.

12 And it shall come to pass, when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations.

13 And I will bring upon that land all my words which I have pronounced against it, even all that is written in this book, which Jeremiah hath prophesied against all the nations.

14 For many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of them also; and I will recompense them according to their deeds, and according to the works of their own hands.

15 For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me; Take the wine cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations, to whom I send thee, to drink it.

16 And they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them.

17 Then took I the cup at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink, unto whom the Lord had sent me:

18 To wit, Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, and the kings thereof, and the princes thereof, to make them a desolation, an astonishment, an hissing, and a curse; as it is this day;

19 Pharaoh king of Egypt, and his servants, and his princes, and all his people;

20 And all the mingled people, and all the kings of the land of Uz, and all the kings of the land of the Philistines, and Ashkelon, and Azzah, and Ekron, and the remnant of Ashdod, 21 Edom, and Moab, and the children of Ammon,

22 And all the kings of Tyrus, and all the kings of Zidon, and the kings of the isles which are beyond the sea,

23 Dedan, and Tema, and Buz, and all that are in the utmost corners,

24 And all the kings of Arabia, and all the kings of the mingled people that dwell in the desert,

25 And all the kings of Zimri, and all the kings of Elam, and all the kings of the Medes, 26 And all the kings of the north, far and near, one with another, and all the kingdoms of the world, which are upon the face of the earth: and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them.

27 Therefore thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the sword which I will send among you.

28 And it shall be, if they refuse to take the cup at thine hand to drink, then shalt thou say

Verse 9. Behold, I will send] At this time Nebuchadrezzar had not invaded the land, according to this Version: but the Hebrew may be translated, Behold, I am sending, and have taken all the families; that is, all the allies of the king of Babylon.

Instead of נבוכדנצר, and to Nebuchadrezzar, as in the common Hebrew Bible, seven MSS. of Kennicott and De Rossi, and one of my own, have נבוכדנצר, and Nebuchadrezzar, which is undoubtedly the true reading.

Verse 10. I will take from them] See chap. vii. 34, and xvi. 9.

The sound of the millstones, and the light of the candle.] These two are conjoined, because they generally ground the corn before day, by the light of the candle. Sir J. Chardin has remarked, that every where in the morning may be heard the noise of the mills; for they generally grind every day just as much as is necessary for the day's consumption. Where then the noise of the mill is not heard, nor the light of the candle seen, there must be desolation; because these things are heard and seen in every inhabited country.

Verse 11. Shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years.] As this prophecy was delivered in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, and in the first of Nebuchadrezzar, and began to be accomplished in the same year; for then Nebuchadrezzar invaded Judea, and took Jerusalem; seventy years from this time will reach down to the first year of Cyrus, when he made his proclamation for the restoration of the Jews, and the rebuilding of Jerusalem. See the Note on Isa. xiii. 19, where the subject is farther considered in relation to the reign of Nebuchadrezzar, and the city of Babylon.

Verse 12. And that nation] נהרן נהרן ha-goi ha-hua. Dr. Blayney contends that this should be translated, his nation; and that נהרן ha-hua, is the substantive pronoun used in the genitive case. It is certainly more clear and definite to read, I will punish the king of Babylon, and his nation.

Will make it perpetual desolations.] See the Note on Isa. xiii. 19, where the fulfilment of this prophecy is distinctly marked.

Verse 14. Many nations and great kings] The Medes and the Persians, under Cyrus, and several princes his vassals or allies.

Verse 15. Take the wine-cup of this fury] For an ample illustration of this passage and simile, see the note on Isa. li. 21.

Verse 17. Then took I the cup—and made all the nations to drink.] This cup of God's wrath is merely symbolical; and simply means, that the prophet should declare to all these people that they shall fall under the Chaldean yoke, and that this is a punishment inflicted on them by God, for their iniquities.—Then I took the cup; I declared publicly the tribulation that God was about to bring on Jerusalem, the cities of Judah, and all the nations.

Verse 19. Pharaoh, king of Egypt] This was Pharaoh-Necho, who was the principal cause of instigating the neighbouring nations to form a league against the Chaldeans.

Verse 20. All the mingled people] The strangers and foreigners; Abyssenians and others who had settled in Egypt. Land of Uz] A part of Arabia near to Idumea. See on Job 1. 1.

Verse 22. Tyrus and—Zidon] The most ancient of all the cities of the Phœnicians.

Kings of the isles which are beyond the sea] As the Mediterranean sea is most probably meant, and the Phœnicians had numerous colonies on its coasts, I prefer the marginal reading, the kings of the region by the seaside.

Verse 23. Dedan] Was son of Abraham, by Keturah, Gen. xxv. 3.

Tema] Was one of the sons of Ishmael, in the north of Arabia, Gen. v. 15.

Buz] Brother of Uz, descendants of Nahor, brother of Abraham, settled in Arabia Deserta, Gen. xxiii. 21.

Verse 24. The mingled people] Probably the Scenitic Arabians.

Verse 25. Zimri] Descendants of Abraham, by Keturah, Gen. xxv. 2, 6.

Elam] Called Elymais by the Greeks, was on the south frontier of Media, to the north of Susiana, not far from Babylon.

Verse 26. The kings of the north far and near] The first may mean Syria; the latter, the Hyrcanians and Bactrians.

And the king of Sheshach shall drink after them.] Sheshach was an ancient king of Babylon, who was deified after his death. Here it means either Babylon, or Nebuchadrezzar the king of it. After it has been the occasion of ruin to so many other nations, Babylon itself shall be destroyed by the Medo-Persians.

Verse 27. Be drunken and spue] Why did we not use the word vomit, less offensive than the other, and yet of the same signification.

unto them, Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Ye shall certainly drink.

29 For, lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished: for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the LORD of hosts.

30 Therefore prophecy thou against them all these words, and say unto them, The LORD shall roar from on high, and utter his voice from his holy habitation; he shall mightily roar upon his habitation; he shall give a shout, as they that tread the grapes, against all the inhabitants of the earth.

31 A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth; for the LORD hath a controversy with the nations, he will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the LORD.

32 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, Behold, evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth.

33 And the slain of the LORD shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; they shall not be lamented, neither gathered, nor buried; they shall be dung upon the ground.

34 Howl, ye shepherds, and cry; and wallow yourselves in the ashes, ye principal of the flock: for the days of your slaughter and of your dispersions are accomplished; and ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel.

35 And the shepherds shall have no way to flee, nor the principal of the flock to escape.

36 A voice of the cry of the shepherds, and an howling of the principal of the flock, shall be heard: for the LORD hath spoiled their pasture.

37 And the peaceable habitations are cut down because of the fierce anger of the LORD.

38 He hath forsaken his covert, as the lion; for their land is desolate because of the fierceness of the oppressor, and because of his fierce anger.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Jeremiah, by the command of God, goes into the court of the Lord's house; and foretells the destruction of the Temple and city, if not prevented by the speedy repentance of the people, 1-7. By this unerring prophecy his life was in great danger; although saved by the influence of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, who makes a masterly defence for the Prophet, 8-18. Urijah is condemn'd, but escapes to Egypt; whence he is brought back by Jehoiakim, and slain, 20-23. Ahikam befriends Jeremiah, 24.

R. Rom. 7.

IN the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah, king of Judah, came this word from the LORD, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD; Stand in the court of the LORD's house, and speak unto all the cities of Judah, which come to worship in the LORD's house, all the words that I command thee to speak unto them; and diminish not a word:

Verse 29. The city which is called by my name] Jerusalem,—which should be first given up to destruction.

Verse 32. Evil shall go forth from nation to nation] One nation after another shall fall before the Chaldeans.

Verse 33. From one end of the earth] From one end of the land to the other. All Palestins shall be desolated by it.

Verse 34. Howl, ye shepherds] Ye kings and chiefs of the people.

Ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel.] As a fall will break and utterly ruin a precious vessel of crystal, agate, &c. so your overthrow will be to you irreparable ruin.

Verse 38. As the lion] Leaving the banks of Jordan when overflowed, and coming with ravaging fierceness to the champaign country.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVI.

Verse 1. In the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim] As this prophecy must have been delivered in the first or second year of the reign of Jehoiakim, it is totally out of its place here. Dr. Blayney puts it before the xxxvith; and Dr. Dahler immediately after chap. ix. and before chap. xlvii.

3 If so be they will hearken, and turn every man from his evil way, that I may repent me of the evil which I purpose to do unto them, because of the evil of their doings.

4 And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the LORD; If ye will not hearken to me to walk in my law which I have set before you,

5 To hearken to the words of my servants the prophets, whom I sent unto you, both rising up early, and sending them, but ye have not hearkened;

6 Then will I make this house like Shiloh, and will make this city a curse to all the nations of the earth.

7 So the priests and the prophets and all the people heard Jeremiah speaking these words in the house of the LORD.

8 Now it came to pass, when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking all that the LORD had commanded him to speak unto all the people, that the priests and the prophets and all the people took him, saying, Thou shalt surely die.

9 Why hast thou prophesied in the name of the LORD, saying, This house shall be like Shiloh, and this city shall be desolate without an inhabitant? And all the people were gathered against Jeremiah in the house of the LORD.

10 When the princes of Judah heard these things, then they came up from the king's house unto the house of the LORD, and sat down, in the entry of the new gate of the LORD's house.

11 Then spake the priests and the prophets unto the princes and to all the people, saying, This man is worthy to die; for he hath prophesied against this city, as ye have heard with your ears.

12 Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes and to all the people, saying, The LORD sent me to prophesy against this house and against this city all the words that ye have heard.

13 Therefore now amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the LORD your God; and the LORD will repent him of the evil that he hath pronounced against you.

14 As for me, behold, I am in your hand: do with me as seemeth good and meet unto you.

15 But know ye for certain, that if ye put me to death, ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves; and upon this city, and upon the inhabitants thereof: for of a truth the LORD hath sent me unto you to speak all these words in your ears.

16 Then said the princes and all the people unto the priests and to the prophets; This man is not worthy to die: for he hath spoken to us in the name of the LORD our God.

17 Then rose up certain of the elders of the land, and spake to all the assembly of the people, saying,

Verse 4. If ye will not hearken] This and several of the following verses are nearly the same with those in chap. vii. ver. 13. &c. where see the Notes.

Verse 8. And all the people] That were in company with the priests and the prophets.

Verse 10. The princes of Judah] The king's court; his cabinet counsellors.

Verse 12. The LORD sent me to prophesy] My commission is from Him; and my words are His own. I sought not this painful office. I did not run before I was sent.

Verse 13. Therefore now amend your ways] If ye wish to escape the judgment which I have predicted, turn to God, and iniquity shall not be your ruin.

Verse 14. As for me, behold, I am in your hand] I am the messenger of God; ye may do with me what you please: but if ye slay me, ye will bring innocent blood upon you.

Verse 16. This man is not worthy to die] The whole court acquitted him.

Verse 17. Certain of the elders] This is really a fine defence, and the argument was perfectly conclusive. Some 18 * Micah the Morasthite prophesied in the days of Hezekiah, king of Judah, and spake to all the people of Judah, saying, Thus saith the LORD of hosts: * Zion shall be ploughed like a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of a forest.

19 Did Hezekiah king of Judah, and all Judah put him at all to death? * did he not fear the LORD, and besought * the LORD, and the LORD * repented him of the evil which he had pronounced against them? * Thus might we procure great evil against our souls.

20 And there was also a man that prophesied in the name of the LORD, Urijah the son of She-maiah of Kirjath-jearim, who prophesied against this city and against this land according to all the words of Jeremiah:

21 And when Jehoiakim the king, with all his mighty men and all the princes, heard his words, the king sought to put him to death: but when Urijah heard it, he was afraid, and fled, and went into Egypt;

22 And Jehoiakim the king sent men into Egypt, namely, Elnathan the son of Achbor, and certain men with him into Egypt.

23 And they fetched forth Urijah out of Egypt, and brought him unto Jehoiakim the king; who slew him with the sword, and cast his dead body into the graves of the * common people.

24 Nevertheless * the hand of Ahikam the son of Shaphan was with Jeremiah, that they should not give him into the hand of the people to put him to death.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Ambassadors being come from several neighbouring nations to solicit the king of Judah to join in a confederacy against the king of Babylon, Jeremiah is commanded to put bands and yokes upon his neck, (the emblem of subjection and slavery) and to tell them afterwards by those ambassadors to their respective princes: interesting, by this significant type, that God had decreed their subjection to the Babylonian empire, and that it was their wisdom to submit. It is further declared that all the * conquered nations should remain in subjection to the Chaldeans during the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, and those of his son and grandson, even till the arrival of that period in which the Babylonians should have filled up the measure of their iniquities; and that then the mighty Chaldean monarchy itself, for a certain period the paramount power of the habitable globe, shall be visited with a dreadful storm of Divine wrath, through the violence of which it shall be dissolved in pieces like a potter's vessel, the fragments falling into the hands of many nations and great kings. —1. Zedekiah, particularly, is admonish'd not to join in the revolt against Nebuchadnezzar, and warned against trusting to the suggestions of false prophets, 11—18. The Chapter concludes with foretelling that what still remains) of the * Israelite remnant of the people should be carried to Babylon, and not restored till after the destruction of the Chaldean empire, 19—22.

A. M. 3399. B. C. 595. IN the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah * king of Judah, came this word unto Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

1 Mic. 1. 1.— Mic. 2. 12.— 2 Chron. 32. 21.— Heb. the face of the LORD. a Exod. 32. 14. 4 Acts 5. 39.— Heb. sons of the people.— 2 Kings 23. 14, 14. Ch. 23. 14.— See ver. 2, 12, 19, 20. Ch. 23. 11.— Or, hath the LORD said. g Ch. 23. 10, 12. Do Eccl. 4. 1. & 12. 3. & 24. 3. &c.— Ur, concerning their masters.

think that it was Ahikam who undertook the prophet's defence.

Verse 18. Micah the Morasthite] The same as stands among the prophets. Now all these prophesied as hard things against the land as Jeremiah has done; yet they were not put to death, for the people saw that they were sent of God.

Verse 20. Urijah—who prophesied] The process against Jeremiah is finished at the nineteenth verse, and the case of Urijah is next brought on, for he was also to be tried for his life: but hearing of it he fled to Egypt. He was however condemned in his absence; and the king sent to Egypt, and brought him thence and slew him, and caused him to have an ignominious burial, ver. 21—23.

Verse 24. The hand of Ahikam—was with Jeremiah] And it was probably by his influence, that Jeremiah did not share the same fate with Urijah. Ahikam mentioned here, was probably the same as was father of Gedaliah, who, after the capture of Jerusalem, was appointed governor of the country by Nebuchadnezzar, chap. xl. 5. Of the prophet Urijah, whether he was true or false, we know nothing but what we learn from this place.

That they should not give him into the hand of the people] Though acquitted in the supreme court, he was not out of danger: there was a popular prejudice against him; and it is likely that Ahikam was obliged to conceal him, that they might not put him to death. The genuine ministers of God have no favour to expect from those who are His enemies.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVII.

Verse 1. In the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim] It is most evident that this prophecy was delivered about the fourth year of ZEDEKIAH, and not Jehoiakim, as in the Text. See chap. xxviii. 1. Three of Kennicott's MSS.

2 Thus * saith the LORD to me; Make thee bonds and yokes, * and put them upon thy neck, -

3 And send them to the king of Edom, and to the king of Moab, and to the king of the Ammonites, and to the king of Tyrus, and to the king of Zidon, by the hand of the messengers which come to Jerusalem unto Zedekiah king of Judah;

4 And command them * to say unto their masters, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Thus shall ye say unto your masters;

5 * I have made the earth, the man and the beast that are upon the ground, by my great power and by my outstretched arm, and * have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me.

6 * And now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, * my servant: and * the beasts of the field have I given him also to serve him.

7 * And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, * until the very time of his land come: * and then many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of him.

8 And it shall come to pass; that the nation and kingdom which will not serve the same Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, and that will not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, that nation will I punish, saith the LORD, with the sword, and with the famine, and with the pestilence, until I have consumed them by his hand.

9 Therefore hearken not ye to your prophets, nor to your diviners, nor to your * dreamers, nor to your enchanters, nor to your soercers, which speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon:

10 * For they prophesy a lie unto you to * remove you far from your land; and that I should drive you out, and ye should perish.

11 But the nations that bring their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him, those will I let remain still in their own land, saith the LORD; and they shall till it, and dwell therein.

12 I spake also to * Zedekiah king of Judah according to all these words, saying, Bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him and his people and live.

(one in the text, a second in the margin, and the third upon a rasure,) have Zedekiah; so likewise have the Syriac and the Arabic. Houbigant, Lowth, Blayney, Dahler, and others, declare for this reading, against that in the present Text. And it is clear from the third and twelfth verses, where Zedekiah is expressly mentioned, that this is the true reading.

Verse 2. Make thee bonds and yokes] Probably yokes with straps, by which they were attached to the neck. This was a symbolical action, to shew that the several kings mentioned above should be brought under the dominion of the Chaldeans.

Verse 5. I have made the earth] I am the Creator and Governor of all things; and I dispose of the several kingdoms of the world as seemeth best to me.

Verse 6. And now have I given] These kingdoms are at my sovereign disposal; and at present, for the punishment of their rulers and people, I shall give them into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon.

Verse 7. And all nations shall serve him, (Nebuchadnezzar) and his son, (Evil-merodach, chap. lii. 31,) and his son's son, (Belshazzar, Dan. v. 11.)] All which was literally fulfilled.

Verse 9. Therefore hearken not ye to your prophets] Who pretend to have a revelation from heaven.

Nor to your diviners] כוֹסְמַיִם kosemeycem, from כּוֹס kosem, to presage, or prognosticate. Persons who guessed at futurity by certain signs in animate or inanimate creation.

Nor to your dreamers] חֲלָמַיִם chalameycem, from חָלַם chalam, to break in pieces; hence, חֲלָמַיִם chalam, a dream, because it consists of broken fragments. Dream-interpretors; who, from these broken straws, patch up a meaning by their own interpolations.

13 * Why will ye die, thou and thy people, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, as the LORD hath spoken against the nation that will not serve the king of Babylon?

14 Therefore hearken not unto the words of the prophets that speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon: for they prophecy a lie unto you.

15 For I have not sent them, saith the LORD, yet they prophecy a lie in my name; that I may drive you out, and that ye might perish, ye, and the prophets that prophecy unto you.

16 Also I spake to the priests and to all this people, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Hearken not to the words of your prophets that prophecy unto you, saying, Behold, the vessels of the LORD's house shall now shortly be brought again from Babylon: for they prophecy a lie unto you.

17 Hearken not unto them; serve the king of Babylon, and live: wherefore should this city be laid waste?

18 But if they be prophets, and if the word of the LORD be with them, let them now make intercession to the LORD of hosts, that the vessels which are left in the house of the LORD, and in the house of the king of Judah, and of Jerusalem, go not to Babylon.

19 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, concerning the pillars, and concerning the sea, and concerning the bases, and concerning the residue of the vessels that remain in this city,

20 Which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took not, when he carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah from Jerusalem to Babylon, and all the nobles of Judah and Jerusalem;

21 Yea, thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, concerning the vessels that remain in the house of the LORD, and in the house of the king of Judah and of Jerusalem;

22 They shall be carried to Babylon, and there shall they be until the day that I visit them, saith the LORD; then will I bring them up, and restore them to this place.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

One of those pretended Prophets spoken of in the preceding Chapter, having contradicted and opposed Jeremiah, receives an awful declaration that, as a proof to the people of his having spoken without commission, he should die in the third month year, which accordingly came to pass in the seventh month, 1-17.

AND it came to pass the same year, in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah king of Judah, in the fourth year, and in the fifth month, that Hananiah the son of Azur the prophet, which was of Gibeon, spake unto me in the house of the LORD, in the presence of the priests and of all the people, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon.

3 Within two full years will I bring again into this place all the vessels of the LORD's house, that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took away from this place, and carried them to Babylon:

4 And I will bring again to this place Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, with all the captives of Judah, that went into Babylon, saith the LORD: for I will break the yoke of the king of Babylon.

5 Then the prophet Jeremiah said unto the prophet Hananiah in the presence of the priests, and in the presence of all the people that stood in the house of the LORD,

6 Even the prophet Jeremiah said, Amen: the LORD do so; the LORD perform thy words which thou hast prophesied, to bring again the vessels of the LORD's house, and all that is carried away captive, from Babylon into this place.

7 Nevertheless hear thou now this word that I speak in thine ears, and in the ears of all the people;

8 The prophets that have been before me and before thee of old prophesied both against many countries, and against great kingdoms, of war, and of evil, and of pestilence.

9 The prophet which prophesieth of peace, when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, then shall the prophet be known, that the LORD hath truly sent him.

Nor to your sorcerers] מְשִׁימֵי keshapheycem, from קָשַׁף kushaph, to discover;—the discoverers, the finders out of hidden things, stolen goods, &c. Persons also who use incantations; and either by spells or drugs pretend to find out mysteries, or produce supernatural effects. Every nation in the world had persons who pretended to find out hidden things, or foretell future events; and such were gladly encouraged by the ignorant multitude: and many of them were mere apes of the prophets of God. Man knows that he is short-sighted,—feels pain at the uncertainty of futurity, and wishes to have his doubts resolved by such persons as the above, to put an end to his uncertainty.

Verse 13. Why will ye die] If ye resist the king of Babylon, to whom I have given a commission against you, ye shall be destroyed by the sword and by famine: but if ye submit, ye shall escape all these evils.

Verse 16. The vessels of the LORD's house] Which had been carried away by Nebuchadnezzar under the reigns of Jehoiakim and Jeconiah, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 7—10.

Shall now shortly be brought again] This is a lie. They shall not be restored till I bring them up, ver. 22, which was after the captivity; when they were sent back by Cyrus, the Lord inclining his heart to do it, Ezra i. 7, and vii. 19.

Verse 19. Concerning the pillars] Two brazen columns placed by Solomon in the pronæos, or portico of the Temple, eighteen cubits high, and twelve in circumference, 1 Kings vii. 15—22; Jer. lii. 11.

The sea] The brazen sea, ten cubits in diameter, and thirty in circumference. It contained water for different washings in the Divine worship, and was supported on twelve brazen oxen. Perhaps these are what are called the bases here. See the parallel places in the margin, and the Notes on them.

Verse 22. They shall be carried to Babylon] Far from those already taken being brought back, those which now remain shall be carried thither, unless ye submit to the Chaldeans. They did not submit, and the prophecy was literally fulfilled, see chap. lii. 17—23; 2 Kings xxv. 13, and the other places in the margin.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXVIII.

Verse 1. And it came to pass the same year—the fifth month] Which commenced with the first new moon of August, according to our calendar. This verse gives the precise date of the prophecy in the preceding Chapter; and proves that Zedekiah, not Jehoiakim, is the name that should be read in the first verse of that Chapter.

Hananiah the son of Azur the prophet] One who called himself a prophet;—who pretended to be in commerce with the Lord, and receive revelations from Him. He was probably a priest; for he was of Gibeon, a sacerdotal city in the tribe of Benjamin.

Verse 2. Thus speaketh the LORD] What awful impudence! when he knew in his conscience that God had given him no such commission.

Verse 3. Within two full years] Time sufficient for the Chaldeans to destroy the city, and carry away the rest of the sacred vessels: but he did not live to see the end of this short period.

Verse 6. Amen: the LORD do so] O that it might be according to thy word! May the people find this to be true!

Verse 8. The prophets that have been before me] Namely, Joel, Amos, Hosea, Micah, Zephaniah, Nahum, Habakkuk, and others, all of whom denounced similar evils against a corrupt people.

Verse 9. When the word of that prophet shall come to pass] Here is the criterion. He is a true prophet who specifies things that he says shall happen, and also fixes the time of the event;—and the things do happen, and in that time.

You say that Nebuchadnezzar shall not overthrow this city; and that in two years from this time, not only the sacred vessels already taken away shall be restored, but also that Jeconiah and all the Jewish captives shall be restored, and the Babylonish yoke broken, see verses 2, 3, 4. Now I say that Nebuchadnezzar will come this 10 Then Hananiah the prophet took the yoke from off the prophet Jeremiah's neck, and brake it.

11 And Hananiah spake in the presence of all the people, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Even so will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon from the neck of all nations within the space of two full years. And the prophet Jeremiah went his way.

12 Then the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah the prophet, (after that Hananiah the prophet had broken the yoke from off the neck of the prophet Jeremiah,) saying, 13 Go and tell Hananiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Thou hast broken the yokes of wood; but thou shalt make for them yokes of iron.

14 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; I have put a yoke of iron upon the neck of all these nations, that they may serve Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and they shall serve him: and I have given him the beasts of the field also.

15 Then said the prophet Jeremiah unto Hananiah the prophet, Hear now, Hananiah; The LORD hath not sent thee; but thou makest this people to trust in a lie.

16 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth: this year thou shalt die, because thou hast taught rebellion against the LORD.

17 So Hananiah the prophet died the same year in the seventh month.

CHAPTER XXIX.

This Chapter contains the substance of two letters sent by the Prophet to the captives in Babylon. In the first he recommends to them patience and composure under their present circumstances, which were to endure for seventy years, 1-14; in which, however, they should fare better than their brethren who remained behind, 15-19. But, finding little credit given to this message, on account of the suggestions of the false prophets, Ahiah, the son of Koliniah, and Zedekiah, the son of Maaiah, who deluded them with the hopes of a speedy and to their captivity, he sends a second, in which he denounces heavy judgments against those false prophets that deceived them, 20-23; as he did afterwards against Shenniah the Nehelamite, who had sent a letter of complaint against Jeremiah, in consequence of his message, 24-28.

NOW these are the words of the letter that Jeremiah the prophet sent from Jerusalem unto the residue of the elders which were carried away captives, and to the priests, and to the prophets, and to all the people whom Nebuchadnezzar had carried away captive from Jerusalem to Babylon;

2 (After that Jeconiah the king, and the queen, and the eunuchs, the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, and the carpenters, and the smiths, were departed from Jerusalem;)

3 By the hand of Elasah the son of Shaphan, and Gemariah the son of Hilkiah, (whom Zedekiah king of Judah sent unto Babylon to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon) saying,

4 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, unto all that are carried away captives, whom I have caused to be carried away from Jerusalem unto Babylon;

5 Build ye houses, and dwell in them, and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them;

6 Take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; that ye may be increased there, and not diminished.

7 And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captives, and pray unto the LORD for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace.

8 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Let not your prophets and your diviners, that be in the midst of you, deceive you, neither hearken to your dreams which ye cause to be dreamed.

9 For they prophesy falsely unto you in my name: I have not sent them, saith the LORD.

10 For thus saith the LORD, That after seventy years be accomplished at Babylon I will visit you, and perform my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place.

11 For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the LORD, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end.

12 Then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you.

year, and destroy the city, and lead away the rest of the people into captivity, and the rest of the sacred vessels; and that there will be no restoration of any kind till seventy years from this time.

Verse 10. Then Hananiah—look the yoke—and brake it.] He endeavoured by this symbolical act to persuade them of the truth of his prediction.

Verse 13. Yokes of iron.] Instead of Nebuchadnezzar's yoke being broken, this captivity shall be more severe than the preceding. All these nations shall have a yoke of iron on their neck. He shall subdue them, and take all their property,—even the beasts of the field.

Verse 15. Hear now, Hananiah; The LORD hath not sent thee.] This was a bold speech in the presence of those priests and people who were prejudiced in favour of this false prophet, who prophesied to them smooth things. In such cases men wish to be deceived.

Verse 16. This year thou shalt die.] By this shall the people know who is the true prophet. Thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord, and God will cut thee off: and this shall take place not within seventy years, or two years, but in this very year, and within two months from this time.

Verse 17. So Hananiah—died the same year in the seventh month.] The prophecy was delivered in the fifth month, (ver. 1,) and Hananiah died in the seventh month. And thus God, in mercy, gave him about two months, in which he might prepare to meet his God. Here then the true prophet was demonstrated, and the false prophet detected. The death of Hananiah, thus predicted, was God's seal to the words of His prophet; and must have gained his other predictions great credit among the people.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXIX.

Verse 1. Now these are the words of the letter.] This transaction took place in the first or second year of Zedekiah. It appears that the prophet had been informed that the Jews, who had already been carried into captivity, had, through the instigations of false prophets been led to believe that they were to be brought out of their captivity speedily. Jeremiah, fearing that this delusion might induce them to take some hasty steps, ill comporting with their present state, wrote a letter to them, which he entrusted to an embassy which Zedekiah had sent on some political concerns to Nebuchadnezzar. The letter was directed to the elders, priests, prophets, and people, who had been carried away captives to Babylon.

Verse 4. Thus saith the LORD of hosts.] This was the commencement of the letter.

Verse 5. Build ye houses.] Prepare for a long continuance in your present captivity. Provide yourselves with the necessaries of life, and multiply in the land, that ye may become a powerful people.

Verse 7. Seek the peace of the city.] Endeavour to promote, as far as you can, the prosperity of the places in which ye sojourn. Let no disaffection appear in word or act. Nothing can be more reasonable than this. Wherever a man lives, and has his nourishment and support, that is his country as long as he resides in it. If things go well with that country, his interest is promoted by the general prosperity,—he lives at comparative ease, and has the necessaries of life cheaper; and unless he is in a state of cruel servitude, which does not appear to have been the case with those Israelites to whom the prophet writes, (those of the first captivity,) they must be nearly, if not altogether, in as good a state as if they had been in the country that gave them birth. And in this case they were much better off than their brethren now in Judea, who had to contend with famine and war, and scarcely any thing before them but God's curse, and extermination.

Verse 8. Neither hearken to your dreams.] Rather dreamers: for it appears there was a class of such persons, who not only had acquired a facility of dreaming themselves, but who undertook to interpret the dreams of others.

Verse 10. For thus saith the LORD.] It has been supposed that a very serious transposition of verses has taken place here; and it has been proposed to read after ver. 9, the sixteenth to the nineteenth inclusive; then the tenth, and on to the fourteenth inclusive; then the twentieth, the fifteenth, the twenty-first, and the rest, regularly to the end.

13 And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart.

14 And I will be found of you, saith the Lord: and I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the Lord; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive.

15 Because ye have said, The Lord hath raised us up prophets in Babylon;

16 Know that thus saith the Lord of the king that sitteth upon the throne of David, and of all the people that dwelleth in this city, and of your brethren that are not gone forth with you into captivity;

17 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Behold, I will send upon them the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, and will make them like vile figs, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

18 And I will persecute them with the sword, with the famine, and with the pestilence, and will deliver them to be removed to all the kingdoms of the earth, to be a curse, and an astonishment, and an hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations whither I have driven them:

19 Because they have not hearkened to my words, saith the Lord, which I sent unto them by my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them; but ye would not hear, saith the Lord.

20 Hear ye therefore the word of the Lord, all ye of the captivity, whom I have sent from Jerusalem to Babylon:

21 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, of Ahab the son of Kolaiah, and of Zedekiah the son of Maaseiah, which prophesy a lie unto you in my name; Behold, I will deliver them into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon; and he shall slay them before your eyes;

22 And of them shall be taken up a curse by all the captivity of Judah which are in Babylon, saying, The Lord make thee like Zedekiah and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire;

23 Because they have committed villany in Israel, and have committed adultery with their neighbour's wives, and have spoken lying words in my name which I have not commanded them; even I know, and am a Witness, saith the Lord.

24 Thus shalt thou also speak to Shemaiah the Nehelamite, saying,

25 Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, Because thou hast sent letters in thy name unto all the people that are at Jerusalem, and to Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, and to all the priests, saying,

26 The Lord hath made thee priest in the stead of Jehoiada the priest, that ye should be officers in the house of the Lord, for every man that is mad, and maketh himself a prophet, that thou shouldst put him in prison, and in the stocks.

27 Now therefore why hast thou not reproved Jeremiah of Anathoth, which maketh himself a prophet to you?

28 For therefore he sent unto us in Babylon, saying, This captivity is long: build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them.

29 And Zephaniah the priest read this letter in the ears of Jeremiah the prophet.

30 Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying,

31 Send to all them of the captivity, saying, Thus saith the Lord concerning Shemaiah the Nehelamite; Because that Shemaiah hath prophesied unto you, and I sent him not, and he caused you to trust in a lie:

32 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will punish Shemaiah the Nehelamite, and his seed: he shall not have a man to dwell among this people; neither shall he behold the good that I will do for my people, saith the Lord; because he hath taught rebellion against the Lord.

That after seventy years be accomplished] לבי מלחמ לבי לבי מלחמ, at the mouth of the accomplishment, or, fill to the month. Seventy years is the measure which must be filled—fill this to the brim,—complete this measure, and then you shall be visited and released. The whole seventy must be completed;—expect no enlargement before that time.

Verse 11. Thoughts of peace] Here God gives them to understand,—1. That his love was moved towards them. 2. That He would perform His good word, His promise often repeated, to them. 3. That for the fulfilment of which they must pray, seek, and search. 4. That he would hearken, and they should find Him: provided,—5. They sought Him with their whole heart, ver. 10—13.

Verse 14. I will gather you from all the nations] A quotation from Deut. xxx. 3; and see also Deut. iv. 7.

Verse 15. Because ye have said] The Septuagint very properly insert this verse between the twentieth and the twenty-first, and thus the connexion here is not disturbed, and the connexion below completed.

Verse 17. Behold, I will send upon them the sword] Do not envy the state of Zedekiah who sits on the throne of David, nor that of the people who are now in the land whence ye have been carried captive, (ver. 16), for I will send the sword, the pestilence, and the famine upon them; and afterwards, shall cause them to be carried into a miserable captivity in all nations; (ver. 18.) but ye see the worst of your own case, and you have God's promise of enlargement when the proper time is come. The Reader will not forget that the prophet is addressing the captives in Babylon.

Verse 20. Hear ye therefore the word] Dr. Blayney thinks there were two letters written by the prophet to the captives in Babylon, and that the first ends with this verse. That having heard, on the return of the embassy, (Eliash and Gemariah, whom Zedekiah had sent to Babylon, and to whom the prophet entrusted the above letter, ver. 3,) that the captives had not received his advices favourably, because they were deceived by false prophets among them, who promised them speedy deliverance, he therefore wrote a second letter, beginning with the fifteenth verse, and going on with the twenty-first, &c. in which he denounces God's judgments on three of the chief of those, Ahab, Zedekiah, and Shemaiah.

Verse 21. He shall slay them before your eyes.] Nebuchadnezzar would be led by political reasons to punish these pretended prophets, as their predictions tended to make his Israelitish subjects uneasy and disaffected; and might excite them to rebellion. He therefore slew them: two of them it appears he burnt alive, viz. Ahab and Zedekiah, who are supposed by the Rabbins to be the two elders who endeavoured to seduce Susanna, see ver. 23. Burning alive was a Chaldean punishment, Dan. iii. 6, and Amos ii. 1. From them other nations borrowed it.

Verse 23. Have committed adultery with their neighbour's wives] This is supposed to refer to the case of Susanna. See above.

Verse 24. Speak to Shemaiah] Zephaniah was the second priest, sagan, or chief priest's deputy; and Seraiah, high-priest, when Jerusalem was taken. See chap. lii. 24. Shemaiah directs his letter to the former, and tells him that God had appointed him to supply the place of the high-priest, who was probably then absent. His name was either Azariah, or Seraiah his son: but called Jehoiada from the remarkable zeal and courage of that pontiff. See the passages in the margin.—Dodd. After the taking of Jerusalem, Zephaniah was put to death by Nebuchadnezzar at Riblah, see chap. xxxvii. 3. The history of Jehoiada may be seen 2 Kings xi. 3, &c.

Verse 26. For every man that is mad, and maketh himself a prophet] Mad, yvo meshugga, in ecstatic rapture; such as appeared in the prophets, whether true or false, when under the influence,—the one of God,—the other of a demon. See 2 Kings ix. 11; Hos. ix. 7.

Verse 32. I will punish Shemaiah] 1. He shall have no posterity to succeed him. 2. His family, i. e. relations, &c. shall not be found among those whom I shall bring back from captivity. 3. Nor shall he himself see the good that I shall do for my people. And all this shall come upon him and his because he hath taught rebellion against 18 Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and I have mercy on his dwelling-places; and the city shall be builded upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof.

19 And out of them shall proceed thanksgiving and the voice of them that make merry: and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small.

20 Their children also shall be as aforesaid, and their congregation shall be established before me, and I will punish all that oppress them.

21 And their nobles shall be of themselves, and their governors shall proceed from the midst of them: and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto me: for who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto me? saith the Lord.

22 And ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

23 Behold, the whirlwind of the Lord goeth forth with fury, a continuing whirlwind: it shall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked.

24 The fierce anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have done it, and until he have performed the intents of his heart: in the latter days ye shall consider it.

CHAPTER XXXI.

This Chapter contains the subject of the preceding in a beautiful vision represented at a distant period. God is introduced expressing His constant regard for Jerusalem, and promising to restore them to their land and liberty, 1-5. Immediately heralds appear, proclaiming on mount Ephraim the arrival of the year of jubilee, and summoning the people to gather unto Zion, 6. Upon which God resumes the speech; and makes such gracious promises both of leading them tenderly by the way, and making them happy in their own land, that all the nations of the world are called upon to consider with deep attention the great salvation, 7-14. The scene is then diversified by a very happy invention. Rachel, the mother of Joseph and Benjamin, is represented as risen from her tomb, in a city of Benjamin near Jerusalem, looking about for her children, and bitterly lamenting their fate, as none of them are to be seen in the land of their fathers, 15. But she is consoled with the assurance that they are not lost, and that they shall in due time be restored, 16, 17. To this another tender and beautiful scene immediately succeeds. Ephraim, (often put for the ten tribes) comes in view. He laments his past errors, and expresses the most earnest desires of reconciliation; upon which God, as a tender parent, immediately forgives him, 18-20. The virgin of Israel is then directed to prepare for returning home, 21, 22; and the vision closes with a promise of abundant peace and security to Israel, 23, 24. The blessed condition of Israel under the Messiah's reign is then beautifully contrasted with their afflictive state during the general dispersion, 27, 28. In the remaining part of the Chapter the promises to the posterity of Jacob of a civil administration of justice, increasing peace and prosperity, the universal diffusion of righteousness, and solidity in their own land after a general restoration in Gospel times, are repeated, enlarged on, and illustrated by a variety of beautiful figures, 29-40.

At the same time, saith the Lord, I will be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people.

Verse 18. The city shall be builded upon her own heap] Be re-edified from its own ruins. See the Book of Nehemiah, passim.

And the palace shall remain] Meaning, the king's house shall be restored; or, more probably, the Temple shall be rebuilt; which was true, for after the Babylonish captivity it was rebuilt by Nehemiah, &c. By the tents, distinguished from the dwelling-places of Jacob, we may understand all the minor dispersions of the Jews, as well as those numerous synagogues found in large cities.

Verse 19. I will multiply them] They shall be very numerous; even where at present they have but tents.

I will also glorify them] I will put honour upon them every where, so that they shall be no longer contemptible. This will be a very great change, for they are now despised all over the earth.

Verse 20. Their children also] They shall have the education of their own children as formerly.

And their congregation] Their religious assemblies—Shall be established] Being, in the latter days, incorporated with those "who serve the Lord their God, and worship the Messiah, the Son of David."

Verse 21. Their nobles shall be of themselves] Strangers shall not rule over them, and—

Their governors shall proceed from the midst of them] Both Nehemiah and Zerubbabel, their nobles and governors when their return from Babylon, were Jews.

Verse 22. Ye shall be my people] The old covenant shall be renewed.

Verse 23. The whirlwind of the Lord] A grievous tempest of desolation,— Shall fall with pain upon the head of the wicked.] On Nebuchadnezzar and the Chaldeans.

Verse 24. In the latter days ye shall consider it.] By the latter days the gospel dispensation is generally meant; and that restoration which is the principal topic in this and the succeeding Chapter refers to this time. Had the Jews properly considered this subject, they would long ere this have been brought into the liberty of the gospel, and saved from the maledictions under which they now groan. Why do not the Jews read their own prophets more conscientiously?

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXI.

Dr. Blayney has introduced this and the preceding Chapter with the following excellent observations:—

"There are many prophecies," says he, "in various parts of the Old Testament, which announce the future restoration of Israel to their own land, and the complete re-establishment of both their civil and religious constitution in the latter days, meaning the times of the gospel dispensation. These two Chapters contain a prophecy of this kind; which must necessarily be referred to these times, because it points out circumstances which certainly were not fulfilled at the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity, nor have hitherto had their completion. For the people which returned from Babylon were the people of Judah only, who had been carried away captive by Nebuchadnezzar; but here it is foretold, that not the captivity of Judah only should be restored, but the captivity of Israel also, meaning those ten tribes which were carried away before, by Salmenezer king of Assyria; and who still remain in their several dispersions, having never returned, in a national capacity at least, to their own land, whatever some few individuals have done. But the terms of the prophecy entitle us to expect not an obscure and partial, but a complete and universal, restoration; when God will manifest Himself, as formerly, the God and Patron of all the families of Israel, and not of a few only. Again it is promised that, after this restoration, they should no more fall under the dominion of foreigners, but be governed by princes and magistrates of their own nation, independently of any but God, and David their King. But this was not the case with the Jews who returned from Babylon. They then indeed had a leader, Zerubbabel, one of their own nation, and also of the family of David: but both the nation and their leader continued still in a state of vassalage, and the most servile dependence upon the Persian monarchy. And when the Grecian monarchy succeeded, they changed their masters only, but not their condition; till at length under the Asmonean princes they had for a while an independent government of their own, but without any title to the name of David. At last they fell under the Roman yoke; since which time their situation has been such, as not to afford the least ground to pretend that the promised restoration has yet taken place. It remains therefore to be brought about in future under the reign of the Messiah, emphatically distinguished by the name of David; when every particular circumstance predicted concerning it, will no doubt be verified by a distinct and unequivocal accomplishment. There is no particular date annexed to this prophecy, whereby to ascertain the precise time of its delivery. But it may not unreasonably be presumed to have followed immediately after the preceding one, in which the restoration of the people from their Babylonish captivity is in direct terms foretold. From hence the transition is natural and easy to the more glorious and general restoration which was to take place in a more distant period, and was designed for the ultimate object of the national hopes and expectations. Both events are frequently thus connected together in the prophetic writings; and perhaps with this design, that when that which was nearest at hand should be accomplished, it might afford the clearest and strongest, and most satisfactory kind of evidence that the latter, how remote soever its period, would in like manner be brought about by the interposition of Providence in its due season. But though this prophecy relates wholly to one single subject, it seems naturally to divide itself into three distinct parts. The first part, after a short preface, in which the prophet is required to commit to writing the matters revealed to him, commences with representing, in a style of awe and energy, the consternation and distress which, in some future day of visitation, should fall upon all nations, preparatory to the scene of Jacob's deliverance, ver. 5-9. Israel is encouraged to confide in the Divine assurance of restoration and protection, ver. 10, 11. He is prepared previously to expect a severe chastisement for the multitude of his sins; but consoled with the prospect of a happy termination, ver. 12-17. This is followed by an enumeration at large of the blessings and privileges to which the Jews should be restored upon their re-admission into God's favour, ver. 18-22. Again, however, it is declared that the anger of Jehovah would not subside, till

2 Thus saith the Lord, The people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, when I went to cause him to rest.

3 The Lord hath appeared of old unto me, saying, Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love: therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee.

4 Again, I will build thee, and thou shalt be built, O virgin of Israel: thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry.

5 Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria: the planters shall plant, and shall eat them as common things.

6 For there shall be a day, that the watchmen upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God.

7 For thus saith the Lord; Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel.

8 Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travaileth with child together: a great company shall return thither.

His purposed vengeance against the wicked should have been fully executed; and then, but not till then, an entire reconciliation would take place between him and all the families of Israel, ver. 23; chap. xxxi. 1. The second part of this prophecy begins chap. xxxi. 2; and is marked by a sudden transition to a distant period of time, represented in a vision, and embellished with a variety of beautiful scenes and images. God announces the renewal of His ancient love for Israel; and promises, in consequence thereof, a speedy restoration of their former privileges and happiness, ver. 2—5. Already the heralds have proclaimed on mount Ephraim the arrival of the joyful day: they summon the people to re-assemble once more in Zion; and promulge by special command the glad tidings of salvation which God had accomplished for them. God Himself declares His readiness to conduct home the remnant of Israel from all parts of their dispersion, to compassionate and relieve their infirmities, and to provide them with all necessary accommodations by the way, ver. 6—9. The news is carried into distant lands; and the nations are summoned to attend to the display of God's power and goodness in rescuing His people from their stronger enemies, and in supplying them after their return with all manner of good things to the full extent of their wants and desires, ver. 10—14. Here the scene changes; and two new personages are successively introduced, in order to diversify the same subject, and to impress it more strongly. Rachel first; who is represented as just risen from the grave, and bitterly bewailing the loss of her children; for whom she looks about her in vain, but none are to be seen. Her tears are dried up; and she is consoled with the assurance, that they are not lost for ever, but shall in time be brought back to their ancient borders, ver. 15—17. Ephraim comes next. He laments his past unprofitableness with great contrition and penitence, and professes an earnest desire of amendment. These symptoms of returning duty are no sooner discerned in him, than God acknowledges him once more as a darling child, and resolves with mercy to receive him, ver. 18—20. The virgin of Israel is then earnestly exhorted to hasten the preparations for her return; and encouraged with having the prospect of a signal miracle wrought in her favour, ver. 21, 22. And the vision closes at last with a promise, that the Divine blessing should again rest upon the land of Judah; and that the men of Judah should once more dwell there, cultivating it according to the simplicity of ancient institutions, and fully discharged from every want, ver. 23—25. In the third part, by way of appendix to the vision, the following gracious promises are specifically annexed:—That God would in time to come supply all the deficiencies of Israel and Judah; and would be as diligent to restore, as He had ever been to destroy, them; and would not any more visit the offences of the fathers upon the children, ver. 27—30. That he would make with them a better covenant than He had made with their forefathers, ver. 31—34. That they should continue His people by an ordinance as firm and as lasting as that of the heavens, ver. 35—37. And that Jerusalem should again be built, enlarged in its extent, and secure from future desolation, ver. 38—40.

Verse 1. At the same time] This Discourse was delivered at the same time with the former; and with that, constitute the Book, which God ordered the prophet to write. Will I be the God of all the families of Israel] I shall bring back the ten tribes, as well as their brethren the Jews. The restoration of the Israelites is the principal subject of this Chapter.

Verse 2. The people which were left of the sword] Those of the ten tribes that had escaped death by the sword of the Assyrians.

Found grace in the wilderness] The place of their exile; a wilderness compared to their own land.—Dahler. See Isa. xl. 3.

Verse 3. I have loved thee with an everlasting love] אהבתי לך עולם עולם ו-אבות אהבתי אהבתי, and with the old love I have loved thee.—“Also, with a love of long standing have I loved thee.”—Blayney. “But I love thee always.”—Dahler. I still bear to the Jewish people that love which I shewed to their fathers in Egypt, in the wilderness, and in the Promised Land. Can it be supposed by any person seriously considering the context, that these words are spoken of God's decree of election in behalf of the Jews? Those who make it such, act most injudiciously on their own principle;—for, how few of the Jews have ever given evidence that they were the children of God, from their restoration from Babylon to the present day! The words refer simply to their state as a people, most wondrously preserved by the providence and mercy of God, as a standing proof of the Divine authority of the Scriptures, and as an evidence of God's displeasure against sin.

Therefore with loving-kindness have I drawn thee.] “Therefore have I lengthened out mercy to thee.”—Blayney.

O est pourquoi je t'ai conservee ma grace.—Dahler.
“Therefore I have preserved my grace to thee.”

The exiles, who had not for a long time received any proofs of the Divine protection, are represented as deploring their state: but God answers, that though this may seem to be the case, He has always loved them; and this continued love He will shew by bringing them out of their captivity. However creeds may fare, this is the sense of the passage; all the context proves this.

Verse 4. O virgin of Israel] Israelites in general; now called virgin, because restored to their ancient purity. With thy tabrets] Women in general played on these; they are used in times of rejoicing, and accompanied with dancing. To these customs, still preserved, the prophet alludes.

Verse 5. Thou shalt yet plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria] This was the regal city of the Israelites, as Jerusalem was of the Jews.

Shall eat them as common things.] By the law of Moses, no man was permitted to eat of the fruit of his vineyard till the fifth year after planting. For the first three years, it was considered uncircumcised, unclean, not fit to be eaten; in the fourth year it was holy to the Lord, the fruit belonged to Him; in the fifth year he might use it for himself, Lev. xix. 23—25. But in the time here mentioned the fruit should be considered common, lawful at all times to be eaten.

Verse 6. For there shall be a day] Literally, for this is the day; or, the day is come.—The watchmen—the prophets.

Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion] Let both Israelites and Jews join together in the worship of the Lord.

Verse 7. The chief of the nations] The same as Jacob or Israel;—for most certainly this people was once the most honourable on the face of the earth.

O Lord, save thy people] Let the Jews earnestly intercede in behalf of their Israelitish brethren; or, let them rejoice and praise the Lord, who hath saved the remnant of Israel. So Dr. Blayney thinks the clause should be understood.

Verse 8. I will bring them from the north country] From Babylon.

From the coasts of the earth] The ten tribes were carried away partly into Assyria, by Tiglath-pileser; and partly into Mesopotamia and Media, by Salmanser, 2 Kings xv. 29; xvii. 6. Assyria and Media, being very distant from Palestine, might have been called, in prophetic language, the coasts of the earth.

The blind and the lame] I will so effectually remove all difficulties out of the way; so provide for them on the journey; so supernaturally support their bodies and minds;

9 They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a father to Israel, and Ephraim is my first-born.

10 Hear the word of the Lord, O ye nations, and declare it in the isles afar off, and say, He that scattered Israel will gather him, and keep him, as a shepherd doth his flock.

11 For the Lord hath redeemed Jacob, and ransomed him from the hand of him that was stronger than he.

12 Therefore they shall come and sing in the height of Zion, and shall flow together to the goodness of the Lord, for wheat, and for wine, and for oil, and for the young of the flock and of the herd; and their soul shall be as a watered garden; and they shall not sorrow any more at all.

13 Then shall the virgin rejoice in the dance, both young men and old together: for I will turn their mourning into joy, and will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow.

14 And I will satiate the soul of the priests with fatness, and my people shall be satisfied with my goodness, saith the Lord.

15 Thus saith the Lord; A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping; Rachel weeping for her children, refused to be comforted for her children, because they were not.

16 Thus saith the Lord; Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears: for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy.

17 And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border.

18 I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself thus; Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke: turn thou me, and I shall be turned; for thou art the Lord my God.

19 Surely after that I was turned, I repented; and after that I was instructed, I smote upon my thigh: I was ashamed, yea, even confounded, because I did bear the reproach of my youth.

20 Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still: therefore my bowels are troubled for him; I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord.

21 Set thee up waymarks, make thee high heaps: set thine heart toward the highway, even the way which thou wentest: turn again, O virgin of Israel, turn again to these thy cities.

that the veriest invalids shall safely proceed to, and happily arrive at, the end of their journey.

Verse 9. They shall come with weeping] Duly penetrated with a sense of their sins, they shall deeply deplore them; and, while weeping for them, earnestly supplicate God to have mercy upon them.

By the rivers of waters] I will so guide and provide for them in the arid deserts, that they shall find streams of water whenever necessary. Every one knows of how much consequence water is to travellers in the Eastern deserts.

Ephraim is my first-born] Ephraim, being the most considerable, is often put for the whole of the ten tribes.

Verse 12. And shall flow together] Perhaps this may refer to their assembling at the three great national feasts, the Pass-over, Pentecost, and Tabernacles.

Their soul shall be as a watered garden] Full of the light, life, and power of God; so that they shall rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, and give thanks in every thing.

Verse 14. And I will satiate the soul of the priests] The worship of God being restored, they shall have their proper share of the victims brought to the Temple.

Verse 15. A voice was heard in Ramah] The Ramah mentioned here, for there were several towns of this name, was situated in the tribe of Benjamin, about six or seven miles from Jerusalem. Near this place Rachel was buried; who is here, in a beautiful figure of poetry, represented as come out of her grave, and lamenting bitterly for the loss of her children, none of whom presented themselves to her view, all being slain or gone into exile. St. Matthew, who is ever fond of accommodation, applies these words, ch. ii. 17, 18, to the massacre of the children at Bethlehem. That is, they were suitable to that occasion, and therefore he so applied them: but they are not a prediction of that event.

Verse 16. They shall come again from the land of the enemy.] This could not be said of the murdered innocents at Bethlehem,—they never came again: but the Jews who had gone into captivity, did come again from the land of their enemy to their own border.

Verse 18. I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself.] The exiled Israelites are in a state of deep repentance.

Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised] I was at first like an unbroken and untoward steer,—the more I was chastised, the more I rebelled: but now I have benefited by thy correction.

Turn thou me] I am now willing to take Thy yoke upon me, but I have no power. I can only will and pray. Take the matter into Thy own hand, and fully convert my soul.

Verse 19. After that I was turned] Converted from my sin, folly, and idolatry.

I repented] To conviction of sin, I now felt contrition for sin. Conviction, in this sense of the word, must precede contrition or repentance. As soon as a man sees himself lost and undone, he is convicted of sin; when convicted, he begins to mourn. Thus contrition follows conviction.

I smote upon my thigh] My sorrow grew deeper and deeper; I smote upon my thigh through the extremity of my distress. This was a usual sign of deep affliction. See Ezek. xxi. 12. It was the same among the ancient Greeks. So Homer:

Ως εφάρ' αυταρ Αρης βαλερω πεπληγυτο μωροσ Χαριος καταπρηνοσ', δλοφρομοσ δε προσηυδα. II. 13. st. 113.

"She spoke; and with expanded arms, his thighs smiting, thus sorrowful, the god exclaimed." Cooper.

— αυταρ Αχιλλεωσ Μωρω πληγμενοσ Πατροκληα προσειπεν. II. 13. st. 116.

"Achilles saw it, smote his thigh, and said——" Cooper.

I have often seen persons, in deep grief, do this.

Verse 20. Is Ephraim my dear son? It is impossible to conceive any thing more tenderly affectionate than this. Let us consider the whole account. The ten tribes, called here Ephraim for the reason before alleged, are represented as acknowledging their sins. I have heard Ephraim bemoaning himself; and in his lamentations he says,— 1. Thou hast chastised me. 2. Though he at first rebelled against the chastisement, yet at last he submitted and acknowledged his offences. 3. He turned from all his offences; he was converted. 4. After his conversion (שוב שבתי) he repented; after conviction came contrition, as before stated. 5. Being in a state of godly sorrow, he was instructed, ודעתי היסודי, he got a thorough knowledge of the desperate wickedness of his heart and life. 6. Having received this instruction, he was filled with excessive grief; which is signified here by smiting on his thigh.—See above. 7. He finds that from his youth up he had been sinning against God; and although his youthful sins had long passed from his memory, yet the light of God brought them back, and he was ashamed and confounded at the sight of them. 8. In this state of confusion and distress, God sees him; and commiserating his state, thus speaks:—

1. Is Ephraim my dear son? Bad as he is in his own sight, and in the sight of my justice, he is now a penitent, and to me is precious. 2. How loathsome and disfigured he may be with sin and sorrow, he is to me a pleasant child—a child of delights; one in whose conversion I delight, and my angels rejoice. 3. I did speak against him; I did rebuke him; כי מרי רבתי לו, for from the abundances of my speaking in him; accusing, threatening, promising, exhorting, encouraging; I do still earnestly remember him. God has taken much pains with him, and is unwilling to give him up: but now that he repents, he has not received the grace of God utterly in vain. 4. God feels a yearning desire toward him; ויניחני חמתי לו, "my bowels are agitated for him."—I feel nothing towards him but pity and love. When a sinner turns to God, God ceases to be angry with him. 5. God expresses His determination to save him; ורחמי רחמי רחמי racham arachamani, "I will be affectionately merciful to him, with tender mercy, saith the Lord." He shall find that I treat him as a father does a returning prodigal son; so every penitent is sure to find mercy at the hand of God.

Verse 21. Set thee up way-marks] Alluding to stones, or heaps of stones, which travellers in the desert set up to ascertain the way, that they may know how to return. Mark the way to Babylon, thither ye shall certainly go; but from it ye shall as certainly return.

22 How long wilt thou go about, O thou backsliding daughter? for the LORD hath created a new thing in the earth, A woman shall compass a man.

23 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; As yet they shall use this speech in the land of Judah and in the cities thereof, when I shall bring again their captivity; O LORD bless thee, O habitation of justice, and mountain of holiness.

24 And there shall dwell in Judah itself, and in all the cities thereof together, husbandmen, and they that go forth with flocks.

25 For I have satiated the weary soul, and I have replenished every sorrowful soul.

26 Upon this I awaked, and beheld; and my sleep was sweet unto me.

27 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will sow the house of Israel and the house of Judah, with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast.

28 And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch them, to build, and to plant, saith the LORD.

29 In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge.

30 But every one shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge.

31 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah:

32 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand, to bring them out of the land of Egypt; (which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the LORD.)

33 But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the LORD, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people.

34 And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the LORD: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the LORD: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

35 Thus saith the LORD, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar; The LORD of hosts is his name:

36 If those ordinances depart from before me, saith the LORD, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever.

37 Thus saith the LORD; If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel for all that they have done, saith the LORD.

38 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that the city shall be built to the LORD from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner.

39 And the measuring line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath.

Verse 22. A woman shall compass a man נקבה תסבב נקבה nekebah tesobeb gaber, "A weak woman shall compass or circumvent a strong man." This place has given much trouble to biblical critics. By many Christian writers it is considered a prophecy of the miraculous conception of the holy virgin: but as I am sure no such meaning is in the words, nor in the context, so I am satisfied no such meaning can be fairly brought out of them. Houbigant thinks there is a small error in the text, i. e. תסבב נקבה, shall return, and not נקבה תסבב, shall compass. This reading is found in two of Kennicott's MSS.; and he contends that the passage should be read, The wife shall return to her husband; alluding to the conversion of the Jewish people, called above a backsliding daughter. This makes a good sense: but I do not see why this should be called a new thing in the earth. After all, I think it likely that the Jews in their present distressed circumstances are represented under the similitude of a weak defenceless female, נקבה nekebah, and the Chaldeans under that of a fierce strong man, גבר gaber, who had prevailed over and oppressed this weak woman. But notwithstanding the disparity between them, God would cause the woman, the weak defenceless Jews, to compass, to overcome, the strong man, the powerful Babylonians. And this the prophet says would be a new thing in the land; for, in such a case, the lame would take the prey. The context favours both these meanings. Dr. Blayney gives a sense very near to this:—"A weak woman shall repulse a strong or mighty man." It is most likely a proverbial expression.

Verse 23. The Lord bless thee, O habitation of justice After their return they shall be remarkably prosperous. Piety and industry shall go hand in hand; they shall have their husbandmen, their shepherds, and their herds, ver. 24. And Jerusalem shall become a righteous city, and the Temple a place of holiness; so the weary there shall have rest, and the sorrowful shall be abundantly comforted, ver. 24, 25.

Verse 26. Upon this I awaked It appears that the prophecy commencing with chap. xxx. ver. 2, and ending with ver. 25, of this Chapter, was delivered to the prophet in a dream. Dahler supposes it to be a wish; that the prophet, though he could not hope to live to that time, might be permitted to awake up from his tomb; and, having seen this prosperity, would be content to return to his grave.

Verse 27. I will sow—with the seed of man and with the seed of beast. I will multiply both men and cattle.

Verse 29. The fathers have eaten a sour grape A proverbial expression for—"The children suffer for the offences of their parents." This is explained in the next verse,—"Every one shall die for his own iniquity." No child shall suffer Divine punishment for the sin of his father; only so far as he acts in the same way, can he be said to bear the sins of his parents.

Verse 31. A new covenant The Christian dispensation.

Verse 33. After those days When vision and prophecy shall be sealed up, and Jesus have assumed that body which was prepared for him; and have laid down His life for the redemption of a lost world; and having ascended on high, shall have obtained the gift of the Holy Spirit, to purify the heart. Then God's law shall, by it, be put in their inward parts, and written on their hearts; so that all within and all without shall be holiness to the Lord. Then God will be truly their God, received and acknowledged as their Portion, and the sole Object of their devotion; and they shall be his people, filled with holiness, and so made partakers of the Divine nature, so that they shall perfectly love Him, and worthily magnify His name.

Verse 34. And they shall teach no more It shall be a time of universal light and knowledge: all shall know God in Christ from the least to the greatest; the children shall be taught to read the New Covenant, and to understand the terms of their salvation.

I will forgive their iniquity It shall be a time of GENERAL PARDON: multitudes shall be daily in the Christian Church receiving the witness of God's Spirit, and in their life and conversation witnessing a good confession. How wonderfully is this prophecy fulfilled in the age of Bibles, Sunday Schools, and village preaching!

Verse 36. If those ordinances As sure as the sun shall give light to the day, and the moon to the night; so surely shall the Jews continue to be a distinct people. The same thing is expressed in other words in the next verse. Hitherto this prophecy has been literally fulfilled; the Jews are still a distinct people from all the dwellers upon earth. Every attempt that has been made in any country to naturalize and unite them with the people of that country, has proved abortive. And why? Because of God's purpose expressed in chap. xxxi. ver. 35-37, of the Book of the Prophet JEREMIAH.

Verse 38. The city shall be built to the Lord This cannot mean the city built after the return from Babylon, for two reasons:—1. This city is to be much greater in extent. 2. It is to be permanent, never to be thrown down, ver. 40. It must therefore mean, if taken literally at all, the city that is to be built by them when they are brought in with the fulness of the Gentiles.

The tower of Hananeel This stood in the northeast part of the city; from thence the wall proceeded to the corner gate, probably the same as the old gate, thus named from its running out into an angle in that part.

Verse 39. Upon the hill Gareb Gareb and Goath are 40 And the whole valley of the dead bodies and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse-gate toward the east, shall be holy unto the Lord; it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down any more for ever.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Jeremiah, now confined for his faithful admonitions, foretells the fate of the king and city, 1-3. According to the direction of God, he lays of his cousin Hananiah a field in Anathoth; the contract, or deed of sale, being subscribed, sealed and witnessed, and delivered to Baruch, together with a duplicate not sealed, who is commanded to put them into an earthen vessel that they may remain there for many days, 5-14. This transaction of the Prophet, which is witnessed and subscribed in the public register, God constitutes a sign, or pledge, of the Jews' return from the Babylonian captivity, and of their again possessing houses, fields, and vineyards, in their own land, and by their own right, according to their laws and customs, 15. Jeremiah's prayer, in which he recounts God's marvellous acts towards the children of Israel, and deeply deprecates the lamentable state of the country, and the numerous provocations which have led to it, 16-23. After which God is introduced declaring His purpose of giving up His people into the hands of their enemies, 24-27; promising, however, to restore them in the time to their ancient possessions, and to make with them an everlasting covenant, 28-44.

A. M. 3415. B. C. 589. Ch. XLVII. 1. An. Tac. 17880. Reg. Rom. 35. THE word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord in the tenth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, which was the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar.

2 For then the king of Babylon's army besieged Jerusalem: and Jeremiah the prophet was shut up in the court of the prison, which was in the king of Judah's house.

3 For Zedekiah king of Judah had shut him up, saying, Wherefore dost thou prophesy, and say, Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall take it;

4 And Zedekiah king of Judah shall not escape out of the hands of the Chaldeans, but shall surely be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and shall speak with him mouth to mouth, and his eyes shall behold his eyes;

5 And he shall lead Zedekiah to Babylon, and there shall he be until I visit him, saith the LORD: though ye fight with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper.

6 And Jeremiah said, The word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

7 Behold, Hanameel the son of Shallum thine uncle shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee my field that is in Anathoth: for the right of redemption is thine to buy it.

8 So Hanameel mine uncle's son came to me in the court of the prison according to the word of the Lord, and said unto me, Buy my field, I pray thee, that is in Anathoth, which is in the country of Benjamin: for the right of inheritance is thine, and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself. Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord.

9 And I bought the field of Hanameel my uncle's son, that was in Anathoth, and I weighed him the money, even seventeen shekels of silver.

10 And I subscribed the evidence, and sealed it, and took witnesses, and weighed him the money in the balances.

11 So I took the evidence of the purchase, both that which was sealed according to the law and custom, and that which was open:

12 And I gave the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, in the sight of Hanameel mine uncle's son, and in the presence of the witnesses that subscribed the book of the purchase, before all the Jews that sat in the court of the prison.

13 And I charged Baruch before them, saying, out of the limits of this city. The latter is supposed to be Golgotha; that is, the heap of Gatha, which, being the place where our Lord was crucified, was without the city. These hills were a little to the northwest of the old city walls: but are destined to be within the new city. See Dr. Blayney on all these valleys.

14 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Take these evidences, this evidence of the purchase, both which is sealed, and this evidence which is open; and put them in an earthen vessel, that they may continue many days.

Verse 40. The whole valley of the dead bodies] The valley of the son of Hinnom.

And all the fields unto the brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse-gate toward the east] All these places, the Fuller's field, &c. shall be consecrated to the Lord, and become a part of this new city; so that this will appear to be a city much more extensive than the city of Jerusalem ever was; and to be suited to that time, when the people shall have the law written in their hearts, and God shall have filled the land with the seed of man, and with the seed of beast. Talia secula currite!

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXII.

Verse 1. The word that came] This prophecy bears its own date: it was delivered in the tenth year of Zedekiah, which answered to the eighteenth of Nebuchadnezzar. It appears from 2 Kings xxv. 8, that the eleventh year of Zedekiah was the nineteenth of Nebuchadnezzar; and, consequently, that the eighteenth of that monarch must have been the tenth of the Jewish king.

Verse 2. Then the king of Babylon's army besieged Jerusalem] The siege had commenced the year before, and continued a year after, ending in the fifth month of the following year; consequently, the siege must have lasted about eighteen months and twenty-seven days. See 2 Kings xxv. 18.

Verse 4. And shall speak with him mouth to mouth] He shall be reduced to a state of the most abject servitude. The slave was obliged to fix his eyes on every motion of the master whilst giving his orders, who often condescended to give them only by dumb signs.

Verse 7. The right of redemption is thine] The law had established that the estates of a family should never be alienated. If, therefore, a man through poverty was obliged to sell his patrimony, the nearest relative had a right to purchase it before all others, and even to redeem it, if it had been sold to another. This is what is called the right of goel, or kinsman, Lev. xxv. 25. And in the year of jubilee the whole returned to its ancient master, Lev. xxv. 13.

Verse 8. This was the word of the Lord.] It was by His appointment that I was to make this purchase. The whole was designed as a symbolical act, to shew the people that there would be a return from Babylon, that each family should re-enter on its former possessions, and that a man might safely purchase on the certainty of this event.

Verse 9. Weighed him the money] It does not appear that there was any coined or stamped money among the Jews before the captivity; the Scripture, therefore, never speaks of counting money, but of weighing it.

Seventeen shekels of silver.] The shekel at this time must have been a nominal coin; it was a thing of a certain weight, or a certain worth. Seventeen shekels was the weight of the silver paid: but it might have been in one ingot or piece. The shekel has been valued at from two shillings and threepence to two shillings and sixpence, and even at three shillings;—taking the purchase money at a medium of the value of the shekel, it would amount only to about two pounds two shillings and sixpence. But as estates bore value only in proportion to the number of years before the jubilee, and the field in question was then in the hands of the Chaldeans, and this cousin of Jeremiah was not likely to come back to enjoy it after seventy years, (nor could he then have it, as a jubilee would intervene and restore it to the original family,) and money must now be very scarce and high in its value, the seventeen shekels might have been a sufficient sum for a field in those circumstances, and one probably not large in its dimensions.

Verse 10. I subscribed the evidence] We have here all the circumstances of this legal act:—1. An offer is made of the reversion of the ground, till the jubilee, to him who would then of right come into possession. 2. The price is agreed on, and the silver weighed in the balances. 3. A contract, or deed of sale, is drawn up; to which, both parties agreeing,—4. Witnesses are brought forward to see it signed and sealed; for the contract was both subscribed and sealed. 5. A duplicate of the deed was drawn, which was not to be sealed; but to lie open for the inspection of those concerned, in some public place where it might be safe, and always to be seen. 6. The original, which was sealed up, was put in an earthen pitcher, in order to be preserved from accidents. 7. This was delivered by the purchaser into the hands of a third party, to be preserved for the use of the purchaser,—and witnesses were called to attest this delivery. 8. They subscribed the book of the purchase,—perhaps a town book, or register, where such purchases were entered. Baruch was a scribe by profession; and the deeds were delivered into his hands, before witnesses, to be preserved as above. Perhaps the law, in this case, required that the instrument should be thus lodged. But, in the present case, both the deeds, the original and the duplicate, were put into the earthen pitcher, because the city was about to be burnt; and, if lodged as usual, must be destroyed in the general conflagration. See ver. 14.

15 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Houses and fields and vineyards shall be possessed again in this land.

16 Now when I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, I prayed unto the Lord, saying,

17 Ah Lord God! behold, thou hast made the heaven and the earth by thy great power and stretched out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee:

18 Thou shewest loving-kindness unto thousands, and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers into the bosom of their children after them: the Great, the Mighty God, the Lord of hosts, is his name,

19 Great in counsel, and mighty in work: for thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men: to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings:

20 Which hast set signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day, and in Israel, and among other men; and hast made thee a name, as at this day;

21 And hast brought forth thy people Israel out of the land of Egypt with signs, and with wonders, and with a strong hand, and with a stretched out arm, and with great terror;

22 And hast given them this land, which thou didst swear to their fathers to give them, a land flowing with milk and honey;

23 And they came in, and possessed it; but they obeyed not thy voice, neither walked in thy law; they have done nothing of all that thou commandedst them to do: therefore thou hast caused all this evil to come upon them:

24 Behold the mounts, they are come unto the city to take it; and the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans, that fight against it, because of the sword, and of the famine, and of the pestilence: and what thou hast spoken is come to pass; and, behold, thou seest it.

25 And thou hast said unto me, O Lord God, Buy thee the field for money, and take witnesses; for the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying,

27 Behold, I am the Lord, the God of all flesh: is there any thing too hard for me?

28 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the Chaldeans, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he shall take it:

29 And the Chaldeans, that fight against this

Verse 15. Houses and fields—shall be possessed again] That is, this is an evidence that the captivity shall not last long: houses, &c. shall here be possessed again, either by their present owners or immediate descendants. The young might return; at least all under ten years of age: there was no natural impossibility that they should not live till they should be fourscore.

Verse 16. I prayed unto the Lord] And what a prayer! for weight of matter, sublimity of expression, profound veneration, just conception, Divine unction, powerful pleading, and strength of faith. Historical, without flatness;—condensed, without obscurity;—confessing the greatest of crimes against the most righteous of Beings, without despairing of His mercy, or presuming on His goodness: a confession that in fact acknowledges that God's justice should smite and destroy, had not His infinite goodness said,—I will pardon and spare.

Verse 19. Thine eyes are open upon all the ways of men] Thou are omniscient, and knowest all things: Thou art omnipresent, and seest all things.

Verse 24. Behold the mounts] The huge terraces raised up to plant their engines on, that they might throw darts, stones, &c. into the city.

Because of the sword, and of the famine, and of the pestilence] The city was now reduced to extreme necessity; and, from the siege continuing nearly a year longer, we may conclude that the besieged made a noble defence.

Verse 29. With the houses, upon whose roofs] As it is city, shall come and set fire on this city, and burn it with the houses, upon whose roofs they have offered incense unto Baal, and poured out drink offerings unto other gods, to provoke me to anger.

30 For the children of Israel and the children of Judah have only done evil before me from their youth: for the children of Israel have only provoked me to anger with the work of their hands, saith the Lord.

31 For this city hath been to me as a provocation of mine anger and of my fury from the day that they built it even unto this day; that I should remove it from before my face.

32 Because of all the evil of the children of Israel and of the children of Judah, which they have done to provoke me to anger, they, their kings, their princes, their priests, and their prophets, and the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

33 And they have turned unto me the back, and not the face: though I taught them rising up early and teaching them, yet they have not hearkened to receive instruction.

34 But they set their abominations in the house, which is called by my name, to defile it.

35 And they built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire unto Molech; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my mind, that they should do this abomination, to cause Judah to sin.

36 And now therefore thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, concerning this city, whereof ye say, It shall be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence;

37 Behold, I will gather them out of all countries, whither I have driven them in mine anger, and in my fury, and in great wrath; and I will bring them again unto this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely:

38 And they shall be my people, and I will be their God:

39 And I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me for ever, for the good of them, and of their children after them:

40 And I will make an everlasting covenant with them, that I will not turn away from them, to do them good; but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me.

41 Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart, and with my whole soul.

most probable that Baal was the sun, they might have chosen the tops of the houses, which were always flat with battlements around, to offer incense and sacrifice to him at his rising, and while he was in sight above the horizon.

Verse 30. For the children of Israel and the children of Judah have only done evil] They have all been transgressors from their earliest history.

For the children of Israel] The ten tribes—Have only provoked me to anger with the work of their hands] They have been sinners beyond all others, being excessive idolaters. Their hands have formed the objects of their worship.

Verse 33. Though I taught them rising up early and teaching them] From the frequent reference to this we may naturally conclude that morning preaching prevailed much in Judea.

Verse 37. Behold, I will gather them out of all countries] A promise often repeated. See chap. xxix. 14, and the Notes on chap. xxxi. 8, &c.

Verse 39. I will give them one heart] And that a clean one; And one way] And that a holy and safe one: and to have this clean heart, and to walk in this good way, will be for the good of them and their children after them. God's blessing is a profitable inheritance. They shall have but one Object of worship, and one way of salvation; and, being saved from sin, idolatry, and destruction, must necessarily be happy within, and happy without.

Verse 41. Yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good]

42 For thus saith the LORD; Like as I have brought all this great evil upon this people, so will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised them.

43 And fields shall be bought in this land, whereof ye say, It is desolate without man or beast; it is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

44 Men shall buy fields for money, and subscribe evidences, and seal them, and take witnesses in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, and in the cities of the mountains, and in the cities of the valley, and in the cities of the south: for I will cause their captivity to return, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

In this Chapter the prophet predicts a restoration of Israel and Judah to the favour of God, attended with such glorious circumstances as shall astonish all the world, 1-8. Their prosperity from that period is then described by a beautiful enumeration of circumstances, 10-12. This leads to the promise of the Messiah, the grand Subject of the prophetic writings, and the happiness and stability which the children of Israel shall enjoy under His government; promises which, in so far as they respect the great body of the Jews, remain still to be fulfilled, 14-28.

MOREOVER the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah the second time, (while he was yet shut up in the court of the prison,) saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, the Maker thereof, the LORD that formed it, to establish it; the LORD is his name;

3 Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things which thou knowest not.

4 For thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, concerning the houses of this city, and concerning the houses of the kings of Judah, which are thrown down by the mounts, and by the sword;

5 They come to fight with the Chaldeans, but it is to fill them with the dead bodies of men, whom I have slain in mine anger and in my fury, and for all whose wickedness I have hid my face from this city.

6 Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and I will cure them, and will reveal unto them the abundance of peace and truth.

Nothing can please God better than our coming to Him to receive the good which, with his whole heart and his whole soul, He is ready to impart. How exceedingly condescending are these words of God!

Verse 42. Will I bring upon them all the good that I have promised? God's word cannot fail. The Jews have never yet received the good that God has promised. Nothing like the fulfilment of these promises took place after their return from Babylon; therefore, there remaineth yet a rest for these ancient people of God; and it is under the Christian dispensation that they are to have it.

Verse 44. Men shall buy fields for money. This is a reference to the symbolical purchase mentioned at the beginning of the Chapter; that may be considered by them as a sure sign of their restoration, not only to the same land, but to their respective inheritances in that land. This, the power of God could alone perform.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXIII.

Verse 1. Moreover the word of the Lord. This was in the eleventh year of the reign of Zedekiah, Jeremiah being still shut up in prison: but he was now in the court of the prison, where the elders, and the king's officers, &c. might consult him with the greater ease; for they continued to enquire, foolishly thinking that if he would but prophesy good things, that these must come; or that he had sufficient power with God to induce Him to alter His mind,—destroy the Chaldeans, and deliver the city.

Verse 2. Thus saith the Lord, the Maker thereof. I say, the Doer of it. That is, He who is to perform that which He is now about to promise. Thus translated by Dabier: Voici ce que dit l'Éternel, qui fait ce qu'il a dit.—"Thus saith the Lord, who doeth that which He hath said."

Verse 3. Call unto me, and I will answer thee. To me alone it belongs to reveal what is future; and the stupendous things which are now coming are known only to myself. These idolaters go to their gods to get information relative to the issue of the present commotions;—but there is no light in them. Ask thou, O Jeremiah, and I will

7 And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them, as at the first.

8 And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me.

9 And it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise and an honour before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them: and they shall fear and tremble for all the goodness and for all the prosperity that I procure unto it.

10 Thus saith the LORD; Again there shall be heard in this place, which ye say shall be desolate without man and without beast, even in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, that are desolate, without man, and without inhabitant, and without beast,

11 The voice of joy, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the voice of them that shall say, Praise the LORD of hosts: for the LORD is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: and of them that shall bring the sacrifice of praise into the house of the LORD. For I will cause to return the captivity of the land, as at the first, saith the LORD.

12 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Again in this place, which is desolate without man and without beast, and in all the cities thereof, shall be a habitation of shepherds causing their flocks to lie down.

13 In the cities of the mountains, in the cities of the vale, and in the cities of the south, and in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, shall the flocks pass again under the hands of him that telleth them, saith the LORD.

14 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that I will perform that good thing which I have promised unto the house of Israel and to the house of Judah.

tell thee the great and mighty things which even thou knowest not.

Verse 4. Thus saith the Lord. This is a new confirmation of what has already been said, viz. The city shall fall—a number of the inhabitants shall perish,—the rest shall be carried into captivity:—but the nation shall be preserved, and the people return from their captivity.

Verse 6. Behold, I will bring it health and cure. From arucah, an extensive plaster; or, as we phrase it, a plaster as large as the sore. I will repair the losses of families by numerous births, and bless the land with fertility.

Verse 7. The captivity of Judah, and the captivity of Israel. This must respect the latter times, for the ten tribes did not return with the Jews at the termination of the seventy years.

Verse 8. I will cleanse them. These promises of pardon and holiness must be referred to their state under the Gospel, when they shall have received Jesus as the promised Messiah.

Verse 9. They shall fear and tremble. The surrounding nations shall be persuaded that it is the hand of the Almighty that has wrought this change in your behalf; and shall fear to molest you, and tremble lest they should incur the displeasure of your God by doing you any kind of evil.

Verse 11. The voice of them that shall say, Praise the Lord of hosts. That is, the voice of the Levites in the sacred service: intimating that the Temple should be rebuilt, and the public service restored.

Verse 12. A habitation of shepherds. See on ch. xxxi. 12.

Verse 14. Behold, the days come. See chap. xxiii. 5, and xxxi. 31.

That good thing which I have promised. By my prophets: for those who have predicted the captivity have also foretold its conclusion, though not in such express terms as Jeremiah did. See Hos. i. 10, &c; ii. 15, &c; vi. 11, &c; Amos ix. 14, &c; and Jer. iii. 12, &c. The end of the captivity has been foretold by Micah, chap. vii. 9, &c; Zephaniah, iii. 10, &c; and by Jeremiah, chap. xvi. 15; xxiii. 3; xxix. 10; xxxii. 37. The Targum explains verses 14, 15, and 16, of the Messiah.

15 In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land.

16 In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely; and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness.

17 For thus saith the Lord; David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel;

18 Neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before me to offer burnt offerings, and to kindle meat offerings, and to do sacrifice continually.

19 And the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, saying,

20 Thus saith the Lord; If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season;

21 Then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers.

22 As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured: so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me.

23 Moreover the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying,

24 Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them.

25 Thus saith the Lord; If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth;

26 Then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

This Chapter contains two prophecies: the first, delivered during the siege of Jerusalem, predicts to Zedekiah the taking and burning of the city, with his own peaceful death, and honourable burial, 1-7. The second was delivered when the Chaldeans had, for some time, broken up the siege. It reproves the Jews for their conduct towards their brethren of the poorer part, whom they retained, by a solemn covenant, from bondage, in the extremity of their danger; but compelled to return to it when they thought that danger over, 8-11. For this God threatens them with the sword, pestilence, and famine; and with the return of the Chaldeans, who should take the city, destroy it and the other cities by fire, and make an utter desolation of the whole land of Judah, 12-22.

THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, when Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and all his army, and all the kingdoms of the earth of his dominion, and all the people, fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities thereof, saying, Verse 16. And this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness. See what has been said on chap. xiii. 6, which is generally supposed to be a strictly parallel passage: but they are very different, and I doubt whether they mean exactly the same thing. As to our translation here, it is ignorant, and almost impious: it says that Jerusalem, for that is the antecedent, shall be called the Lord our Righteousness. The pronoun הָאֵלֹהִים, which is translated her, is the masculine affix, in the Chaldee form, which frequently occurs: and Dr. Blayney translates, "And this is He whom Jehovah shall call Our Righteousness," or Justification. Perhaps there is a sense which these words will bear far more congenial to the scope of the place. I will give the original, as before: - וְכִי יִקְרָא אֶת-יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵינוּ יְהוָה צְדִיקֵנוּ. "And this one who shall call to her is the Lord our Justification;" that is, the salvation of the Jews shall take place when Jesus Christ is proclaimed to them as their Justifier, and they receive Him as such.

Instead of הָאֵלֹהִים, her, or him, Chaldaeæ, the Vulgate, Chaldee, and Syriac, have read, הָאֵלֹהִים, him, less ambiguously; and this reading is supported by one or two MSS. This emendation renders the passage here more conformable to that in chap. xxiii. 6: but, if the translation above be admitted, all embarrassment is gone. One of my own MSS. has הָאֵלֹהִים, with the masculine points, and no mappik on the ה; and for צְדִיקֵנוּ has צְדִיקֵנוּ, the contracted plural form, our righteousness: - but this may be a mistake. The passages in this and the twenty-third Chapter were not, I am satisfied, intended to express the same thing. I suppose that above refers to the preaching or proclaiming Christ crucified to the Jews, when the time shall arrive in which they shall be incorporated with the Gentile church. Dahler translates this as he did that in ch. xxiii. which is a perfect oversight: but paraphrastic renderings are too often introduced by this learned foreigner.

Verse 18. Neither shall the priests the Levites want a man. This is a repetition of the promise made to Phineas, Numb. xxv. 13.

Verse 20. If ye can break my covenant of the day. See the note on chap. xxxi. 36.

Verse 22. So will I multiply the seed of David. This must be understood of the spiritual David, Jesus Christ; and His progeny, genuine Christians. The two families which God chose for the priesthood, that of Aaron and Phineas, or on its being taken away from him, that of Ithamar, 1 Sam. ii. 35, are both extinct. Nor has the office of highpriest, or priest of any kind offering sacrifice, been exercised among the Jews for nearly eighteen hundred years: therefore, what is said here of the priesthood, must refer to the spiritual priesthood, at the head of which is Jesus Christ.

Verse 24. The two families which the Lord hath chosen. Some think these refer to the two kingdoms of Israel and Judah: but they never can be considered as two distinct families, being of one and the same race. Others think that the families of Jacob and David are intended; but neither were these distinct. If the two families which had the priesthood be not meant, then the regal family of David, and the sacerdotal family of Jacob through Levi, may be designed. See ver. 26. Following the spiritual interpretation, neither the regal nor sacerdotal family has failed; for Jesus is a King and a Priest; and all true believers in Him are kings and priests unto God and the Lamb. And the highest king that ever reigned is He who is the Seed of David, King of kings, and Lord of lords, who has all power in heaven and in earth.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXIV.

Verse 1. The word which came unto Jeremiah. This Discourse was delivered in the tenth year of the reign of Zedekiah. The Chapter contains two Discourses; one ver. 1-7, which concerns the taking of the city, and Zedekiah's captivity and death; the other ver. 8-22, which is an invective against the inhabitants of Jerusalem for having Hebrew male and female slaves. These having been manumitted at the instance of the prophet, were afterwards brought back by their old masters, and put in the same thralldom; for which God threatens them with severe judgments.

Nebuchadnezzar - and all his army, and all the kingdoms of the earth of his dominion. That is, his army was composed of soldiers gathered out of Babylon, and out of all his tributary dominions.

Verse 2. He shall burn it with fire. This was a newly added circumstance. Among many ancient nations they burnt the bodies of the more illustrious dead. Odours were used in the burning: they then gathered the ashes, and put them into an urn or pitcher, sometimes in a strong vessel, and buried them. Many of these have been dug up in different parts of England, where the Romans had stations.

Verse 3. Thou shalt not escape. This however he had attempted, but was taken in his flight. See chap. xxxix. 4, and lii. 7, &c.

were before thee, so shall they burn odours for thee; and they will lament thee, saying, Ah lord! for I have pronounced the word, saith the LORD.

6 Then Jeremiah the prophet spake all these words unto Zedekiah king of Judah in Jerusalem,

7 When the king of Babylon's army fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities of Judah that were left, against Lachish, and against Azekah: for these defenced cities remained of the cities of Judah.

8 This is the word that came unto Jeremiah from the LORD, after that the king Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people which were at Jerusalem, to proclaim liberty unto them;

9 That every man should let his man-servant, and every man his maid-servant, being an Hebrew or an Hebrewess, go free; that none should serve himself of them, to wit, of a Jew his brother.

10 Now when all the princes, and all the people, which had entered into the covenant, heard that every one should let his man-servant, and every one his maid-servant go free, that none should serve themselves of them any more, then they obeyed, and let them go.

11 But afterward they turned, and caused the servants and the handmaids, whom they had let go free, to return, and brought them into subjection for servants and for handmaids.

12 Therefore the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah from the LORD, saying,

13 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel; I made a covenant with your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying,

14 At the end of seven years let ye go every man his brother an Hebrew, which hath been sold unto thee; and when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee: but your fathers hearkened not unto me, neither inclined their ear.

15 And ye were now turned, and had done right in my sight, in proclaiming liberty every man to his neighbour; and ye had made a covenant before me in the house which is called by my name:

16 But ye turned and polluted my name, and caused every man his servant, and every man his handmaid, whom he had set at liberty at their pleasure, to return, and brought them into subjection, to be unto you for servants and for handmaids.

17 Therefore thus saith the LORD; Ye have not hearkened unto me in proclaiming liberty, every one to his brother, and every man to his neighbour: behold, I proclaim a liberty for you, saith the LORD, to the sword, to the pestilence, and to the famine; and I will make you to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth.

18 And I will give the men that have transgressed my covenant, which have not performed the words of the covenant which they had made before me, when they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof,

19 The princes of Judah, and the princes of Jerusalem, the eunuchs, and the priests, and all the people of the land, which passed between the parts of the calf;

20 I will even give them into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life: and their dead bodies shall be for meat unto the fowls of the heaven, and to the beasts of the earth.

21 And Zedekiah king of Judah, and his princes, will I give into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life, and into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which are gone up from you.

22 Behold, I will command, saith the LORD, and cause them to return to this city; and they shall fight against it, and take it, and burn it with fire: and I will make the cities of Judah a desolation without an inhabitant.

Verse 5. Thou shalt die in peace] Thou shalt not die a violent death; and at thy death thou shalt have all those funeral solemnities which were usual at the demise of kings. See 2 Chron. xvi. 14.

And they will lament thee, saying, Ah, lord!] They will recite the funeral dirge that begins with those words. See the note on ch. xxii. 18.

Verse 6. Spake all these words unto Zedekiah] He delivered this message at the hazard of his life. Jeremiah feared God, and had no other fear.

Verse 7. Against Lachish, and against Azekah] These were two cities of Judah of considerable importance: they had been strongly fortified by Rehoboam, 2 Chron. ii. 9—11; 2 Chron. xxxii. 9.

Verse 8. The word that came unto Jeremiah] Here the second Discourse begins, which was delivered probably a short time, even a few days, after the former.

Zedekiah had made a covenant] We find no account elsewhere of this covenant. Every man should let his man-servant and his maid-servant go free; i. e. as we learn from ver. 14, on the sabbatical year; for the seventh year was the year of release. See Deut. xv. 12.

Verse 11. But afterward they turned] They had agreed to manumit them at the end of the seventh year: but, when the seventh year was ended, they recalled their engagement, and detained their servants. This, I believe, is what is here meant.

Verse 16. Ye—polluted my name] Had made the covenant in my name, calling me to witness it; now ye have dishonoured my name by breaking that covenant, and acting contrary to my law.

Verse 17. I proclaim a liberty for you] Ye proclaimed liberty to your slaves, and afterwards resumed your authority over them; and I had in consequence restrained the sword from cutting you off: but now I give liberty to the sword, to the pestilence, and to the famine, and to the captivity, to destroy and consume you, and enslave you: for ye shall be removed to all the kingdoms of the earth. The prophet loves to express the conformity between the crime and its punishment. You promised to give liberty to your enslaved brethren; I was pleased, and bound the sword in its sheath. You broke your promise, and brought them again into bondage; I gave liberty to the sword, pestilence, and famine, to destroy multitudes of you, and captivity to take the rest. Thus you are punished according to your crimes, and in the punishment you may see the crime. Sword, pestilence, and famine, are frequently joined together, as being often the effects of each other. The sword, or war, produces famine;—famine, the pestilence.

Verse 18. When they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof] This was the ancient and most solemn way of making a covenant. 1. A calf as sacrifice was offered to God to secure His approbation and support. 2. The victim was then exactly divided from the nose to the rump; the spinal marrow being divided longitudinally, in the most careful manner, that the half of it might remain on each side. 3. These divided parts were laid opposite to each other, a passage being left between them. 4. The contracting parties entered this passage at each end, met in the middle, and there took the covenant oath; adjudging themselves to death should they break this covenant. 5. Then they both feasted on the victim. In reference to this last circumstance, God says He will give their bodies for meat to the fowls of heaven, and to the beasts. This is a farther conformity between the crime and the punishment. See my notes on Gen. xv. 9—17.

Verse 21. The king of Babylon's army, which are gone up from you.] Nebuchadnezzar, hearing that there was an Egyptian army coming to the relief of Jerusalem, raised the siege; and went, met, and defeated the Egyptians. It was in the interim this prophecy was delivered.

Verse 22. I will—cause them to return] They did return; re-invested the city; and after an obstinate defence took it, plundered it, and burnt it to the ground, taking captives Zedekiah and his princes.

CHAPTER XXXV.

Jeremiah is commanded to go to the Rechabites, who, on the approach of the Chaldean army, took refuge in Jerusalem; and to try their obedience to the command of Jonadab, (or, Jehonadab, 2 Kings x. 15, 16,) their great progenitor, who lived in the reign of Jehu, king of Israel, upwards of two hundred and fifty years before this time, offers them wine to drink, which they refuse, 1-11. Hence occasion is taken to upbraid the Jews with their disobedience to God, their heavenly Father, 12-17; and a blessing is pronounced on the Rechabites, 18, 19.

THE word which came unto Jeremiah from the LORD in the days of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying,

2 Go unto the house of the Rechabites, and speak unto them, and bring them into the house of the LORD, into one of the chambers, and give them wine to drink.

3 Then I took Jazaniah, the son of Jeremiah, the son of Habaziniah, and his brethren, and all his sons, and the whole house of the Rechabites;

4 And I brought them into the house of the LORD, into the chamber of the sons of Hanan, the son of Igdaliah, a man of God, which was by the chamber of the princes, which was above the chamber of Maaseiah the son of Shallum, the keeper of the door:

5 And I set before the sons of the house of the Rechabites pots full of wine, and cups, and I said unto them, Drink ye wine.

6 But they said, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab our father commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, neither ye, nor your sons for ever:

7 Neither shall ye build house, nor sow seed, nor plant vineyard, nor have any: but all your days ye shall dwell in tents; that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers.

8 Thus have we obeyed the voice of Jonadab the son of Rechab our father in all that he hath charged us, to drink no wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, nor our daughters;

9 Nor to build houses for us to dwell in: neither have we vineyard, nor field, nor seed:

10 But we have dwelt in tents, and have obeyed, and done according to all that Jonadab our father commanded us.

11 But it came to pass, when Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came up into the land, that we said, Come, and let us go to Jerusalem for fear of the army of the Chaldeans, and for fear of the army of the Syrians: so we dwell at Jerusalem.

12 Then came the word of the LORD unto Jeremiah, saying,

13 Thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel; Go and tell the men of Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Will ye not receive instruction to hearken to my words? saith the LORD.

14 The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father's commandment: notwithstanding I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye hearkened not unto me:

15 I have sent also unto you all my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them, saying, Return ye now every man from his evil way, and amend your doings, and go not after other gods to serve them, and ye shall dwell in the land which I have given to you and to your

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXV.

Verse 1. The word which came—in the days of Jehoiakim] What strange confusion in the placing of these Chapters! Who could have expected to hear of Jehoiakim again, whom we have long ago buried; and we have now arrived, in the history, at the very last year of the last Jewish king.

This Discourse was probably delivered in the fourth or fifth year of Jehoiakim's reign.

Verse 2. The house of the Rechabites.] The Rechabites were not descendants of Jacob: they were Kenites, 1 Chron. ii. 55, a people originally settled in that part of Arabia Petraea, called the land of Midian; and most probably the descendants of Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses. Compare Numb. x. 29-32, with Judg. i. 16; iv. 11. Those mentioned here seem to have been a tribe of Nomades or Scenite Arabs, who fed their flocks in the deserts of Judea; they preserved the simple manners of their ancestors, considering the life of the inhabitants of cities and large towns as the death of liberty; believing that they would dishonour themselves by using that sort of food that would oblige them to live a sedentary life. Jonadab, one of their ancestors, had required his children and descendants to abide faithful to the customs of their forefathers; to continue to live in tents, and to nourish themselves on the produce of their flocks; to abstain from the cultivation of the ground, and from that particularly of the vine and its produce. His descendants religiously observed this rule, till the time when the armies of the Chaldeans had entered Judea; when, to preserve their lives, they retired within the walls of Jerusalem. But even there we find, from the account in this Chapter, they did not quit their frugal manner of life: but most scrupulously observed the law of Jonadab their ancestor, and probably of this family.

When the children of Hobab, or Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, were invited by him to accompany them in their journeying to the Promised Land; it is very likely that they continued their ancient usages, and lived a patriarchal life. Their property consisted in nothing but their cattle and tents, was easily removable from place to place; and their manner of living was not likely to excite the envy or jealousy of those who had learnt to relish the luxuries of life; and therefore we may naturally conclude, that as they were enemies to none, so they had no enemies themselves. Nature has few wants. Most of those which we feel are fictitious; and howsoever what we call civilization may furnish us with the conveniences and comforts of life, let us not deceive ourselves by supposing, that these very things do not create the very wants which they are called in to supply; and most certainly do not contribute to the comfort of life, when the term of life is considerably abridged by their use. But it is time to return to the case of the Rechabites before us.

Verse 3. The whole house of the Rechabites] i. e. The family,—the chiefs of which are here specified.

Verse 4. Igdaliah, a man of God] A prophet or holy man, having some office in the Temple.

Verse 5. Pots full of wine, and cups] The cups were to draw the wine out of the pots, in order to drink it.

Verse 6. We will drink no wine] The reason is given above. Their whole religious and political institution consisted in obedience to three simple precepts, each of which has an appropriate spiritual meaning:—

1. Ye shall drink no wine.—Ye shall preserve your bodies in temperance; shall use nothing that would deprive you of the exercise of your sober reason at any time; lest in such a time ye should do what might be prejudicial to yourselves, injurious to your neighbour, or dishonourable to your God.

2. Neither shall ye build house.—Ye shall not become residents in any place; ye shall not court earthly possessions; ye shall live free from ambition and from envy, that ye may be free from contention and strife.

3. But ye shall dwell in tents.—Ye shall imitate your forefathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and the rest of the patriarchs, who dwell in tents, being strangers and pilgrims upon earth; looking for a heavenly country, and being determined to have nothing here that would indispose their minds towards that place of endless rest, or prevent them from passing through temporal things, so as not to lose those that are eternal.

There must necessarily be more in these injunctions than meets the eye in the letter of this account.

Verse 8. Thus have we obeyed the voice] We have considered these precepts so very reasonable, so very useful, so conducive to the health of both body and mind, and sanctioned by such a respectable antiquity, that we scrupulously and religiously observe them.

Verse 11. But—when Nebuchadrezzar—came up] If at present we appear to be acting contrary in any respect to our institutions, in being found in the city, necessity alone has induced us to take this temporary step. We have sought the shelter of the city for the preservation of our lives; so now we dwell at Jerusalem.

Verse 14. The words of Jonadab—are performed—but ye hearkened not unto me.] The Lord, knowing the fidelity of this people, chose to try them in this way, that He might, by their conscientious obedience to the precepts of their forefathers, shew the Jews, to their confusion, their ingratitude to Him, and their neglect of His precepts, which, if a man do, he shall live by them.

fathers: but ye have not inclined your ear, nor hearkened unto me.

16 Because the sons of Jonadab the son of Rechab have performed the commandment of their father, which he commanded them; but this people hath not hearkened unto me:

17 Therefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring upon Judah and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem all the evil that I have pronounced against them; because I have spoken unto them, but they have not heard; and I have called unto them, but they have not answered.

18 And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Because ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts, and done according unto all that he hath commanded you:

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me for ever.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

God commends Jeremiah to write down in one roll, or volume, all the predictions he had uttered against Israel and Judah, and all the surrounding nations, from the day of his coming to the prophetic office, that the house of Judah might have abundant warning of the dreadful calamities with which their country was about to be visited, if not prevented by a timely repentance, 1-3. The Prophet employs Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah, to write from his mouth all the words of the Lord, and then to read these publicly upon a fast day in the Lord's house, 4-8. A general fast is proclaimed in the following year, viz. the fifth year of the reign of Jehoiakim; upon which occasion Baruch, in obedience to the Prophet's command, reads the words of Jeremiah to all the people at the entry of the new gate of the Temple, 9, 10. The princes, hearing of this, send for Baruch, who reads the roll to them; at the contents of which they are greatly alarmed, and solemnly resolve to give information to the king, at the same time advising both the Prophet and his scribe to hide themselves, 11-15. Jehoiakim likewise having sent for the roll, Jehoiakim reads to him a part; and then the king, though advised to the contrary by some of his princes, having cut the leaves, throws the whole into the fire, 30-35; and orders Jeremiaah and Baruch to be seized; but they could not be found, because a special providence of God had concealed them, 36. Jeremiaah is commended to rewrite his prophecies, and to denounce the judgments of God against the king who had destroyed the first roll, 37-41. Baruch accordingly writes from the mouth of Jeremiaah a new copy, with numerous additions, 32.

A. M. 3397. B. C. 607. AND it came to pass in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, the son of Josiah king of Judah, that this word came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, saying,

2 Take thee a roll of a book, and write therein all the words that I have spoken unto thee against Israel, and against Judah, and against all the nations, from the day I spake unto thee, from the days of Josiah, even unto this day.

3 It may be that the house of Judah will hear all the evil which I purpose to do unto them; that they may return every man from his evil way; that I may forgive their iniquity and their sin.

r Prov. 1. 24. Isa. 65. 12 & 66. 4. Ch. 7. 13.— Heb. There shall not a man be cut off from Jonadab the son of Rechab to stand, &c.—t Ch. 16. 13.—a Isa. 8. 1. Ezek. 2. 9. Zach. 5. 1.—v Ch. 30. 2.

Verse 17. I will bring upon Judah and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem all the evil! Having by the conduct of the Rechabites clearly and fully convicted them of ingratitude and rebellion, He now proceeds to pronounce sentence against them.

Verse 19. Thus saith the Lord—Jonadab—shall not want a man to stand before me for ever. His name shall ever be honourable, and his posterity shall enjoy my continual protection; and there shall never be found a time in which men of his spirit shall be wanting as patterns of genuine simplicity, filial obedience, purity of manners, and deadness to the world. True Christians may be considered as the genuine successors of these ancient Rechabites: and some suppose that the Essenes, in our Lord's time, were literally their descendants; and that these were they who followed our Lord particularly, and became the first converts to the gospel. And if so, the prophecy is literally fulfilled: they shall never want a man to stand before God, to proclaim His salvation, and minister to the edification and salvation of others, as long as the earth shall endure.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVI.

Verse 1. And it came to pass in the fourth year [About the end of this year, see ver. 9. This discourse also bears its own date; and was probably delivered at a time when the people enjoyed peace, and were about to celebrate one of their annual fasts.

Verse 2. Take thee a roll of a book [Take a sufficient quantity of parchment; cut and stitch it together, that it may make a roll on which to write the words that I have already spoken, that they may serve for a testimony to future generations. The Jewish rolls, several of which 4 Then Jeremiah called Baruch the son of Neriah: and Baruch wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the Lord, which he had spoken unto him, upon a roll of a book.

5 And Jeremiah commanded Baruch, saying, I am shut up; I cannot go into the house of the Lord:

6 Therefore go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of the Lord in the ears of the people in the Lord's house upon the fasting day: and also thou shalt read them in the ears of all Judah that come out of their cities.

7 It may be they will present their supplication before the Lord, and will return every one from his evil way: for great is the anger and the fury that the Lord hath pronounced against this people.

8 And Baruch the son of Neriah did according to all that Jeremiah the prophet commanded him, reading in the book the words of the Lord in the Lord's house.

9 And it came to pass in the fifth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, in the ninth month, that they proclaimed a fast before the Lord to all the people in Jerusalem, and to all the people that came from the cities of Judah unto Jerusalem.

10 Then read Baruch in the book the words of Jeremiah in the house of the Lord, in the chamber of Gemariah the son of Shaphan the scribe, in the higher court, at the entry of the new gate of the Lord's house, in the ears of all the people.

11 When Michaiah the son of Gemariah, the son of Shaphan, had heard out of the book all the words of the Lord, 12 Then he went down into the king's house, into the scribe's chamber: and lo, all the princes sat there, even Elishama the scribe, and Delaiah the son of Shemaiah, and Elnathan the son of Achbor, and Gemariah the son of Shaphan, and Zedekiah the son of Hananiah, and all the princes.

13 Then Michaiah declared unto them all the words that he had heard, when Baruch read the book in the ears of the people.

14 Therefore all the princes sent Jehudi the son of Nethaniah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Cushi, unto Baruch, saying, Take in thine now lie before me, were made of vellum, or of sheep skins dressed in the half-tanned, or Basil manner. These were cut into certain lengths; and those parts were all stitched together and rolled upon a roller. The matter was written on these skins, in columns or pages. Sometimes two rollers are used, that as the matter is read from the roll in the left hand, the reader may coil it on the roller in his right. In this form the Pentateuch is written, which is read in the synagogues.

Verse 3. It may be that the house of Judah will hear! It was yet possible to avert the judgments which had been so often denounced against them. But, in order to this, they must, 1. Hear what God has spoken. 2. Every man, turn from his evil way. 3. If they do so, God graciously promises to forgive their iniquity and their sin.

Verse 4. Then Jeremiah called Baruch! This man so useful to the prophet, and so faithfully attached to him, was by office a scribe; which signifies not only a writer, but also a man in office; a chancellor, secretary, &c., a learned man; one acquainted with laws and customs.

Verse 6. Upon the fasting day! A day when multitudes of people would be gathered together from all parts to implore the mercy of God. This was a favourable time to read these tremendous prophecies.

Verse 7. Present their supplication! "Let their supplication fall," that they may fall down before God, and deplore their sins.

Verse 9. In the ninth month! Answering to a part of our December.

Verse 10. In the chamber of Gemariah! He was one of the princes of Judah. See ver. 12.

hand the roll wherein thou hast read in the ears of the people, and come. So Baruch the son of Neriah took the roll in his hand, and came unto them.

15 And they said unto him, Sit down now, and read it in our ears. So Baruch read it in their ears.

16 Now it came to pass, when they had heard all the words, they were afraid both one and other, and said unto Baruch, We will surely tell the king of all these words.

17 And they asked Baruch, saying, Tell us now, How didst thou write all these words at his mouth?

18 Then Baruch answered them, He pronounced all these words unto me with his mouth, and I wrote them with ink in the book.

19 Then said the princes unto Baruch, Go, hide thee, thou and Jeremiah; and let no man know where ye be.

20 And they went in to the king into the court, but they laid up the roll in the chamber of Elishama the scribe, and told all the words in the ears of the king.

21 So the king sent Jehudi to fetch the roll: and he took it out of Elishama the scribe's chamber. And Jehudi read it in the ears of the king, and in the ears of all the princes which stood beside the king.

22 Now the king sat in the winterhouse in the ninth month: and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him.

23 And it came to pass, that when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, he cut it with the penknife, and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until all the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth.

24 Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the king, nor any of his servants that heard all these words.

25 Nevertheless Elnathan and Delaiah and Gemariah had made intercession to the king that he would not burn the roll: but he would not hear them.

26 But the king commanded Jerahmeel the son of Hammelech, and Seraiah the son of Azriel, and Shelemiah the son of Abdeel, to take Baruch the scribe and Jeremiah the prophet: but the Lord hid them.

27 Then the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, after that the king had burned the roll, and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah, saying, 28 Take thee again another roll, and write in it all the former words that were in the first roll, which Jehoiakim the king of Judah hath burned.

29 And thou shalt say to Jehoiakim king of Judah, Thus saith the Lord; Thou hast burned this roll, saying, Why hast thou written therein, saying, The king of Babylon shall certainly come and destroy this land, and shall cause to cease from thence man and beast?

30 Therefore thus saith the Lord of Jehoiakim king of Judah; He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David: and his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost.

31 And I will punish him and his seed and his servants for their iniquity; and I will bring upon them, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and upon the men of Judah, all the evil that I have pronounced against them; but they hearkened not.

32 Then took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah; who wrote therein from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the book which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burned in the fire: and there were added besides unto them many like words.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

Zedekiah succeeds Coniah, the son of Jehoiakim, in the Jewish throne, and does that which he evil in the sight of the Lord, 1, 2. The king sends a message to Jeremiah, 3-5. God suggests an answer; and foretells the return of the Chaldean army, who should most assuredly take and burn the city, 6-10. Jeremiah, in attempting to leave this devoted city, and retire to his possession in the country, is seized as a desert, and cast into a dungeon, 11-15. The king, after a conference with him, abates the rigour of his confinement, 16-21.

AND King Zedekiah the son of Josiah reigned instead of Coniah the son of Jehoiakim, whom Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon made king in the land of Judah.

2 But neither he, nor his servants, nor the people of the land, did hearken unto the words of the Lord, which he spake by the prophet Jeremiah.

3 And Zedekiah the king sent Jehucal the son of Shelemiah and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest to the prophet Jeremiah, saying, Pray now unto the Lord our God for us.

Verse 17. How didst thou write all these words? - At his mouth? So the text should be pointed. They wished to know whether he had not copied them, or whether he wrote as Jeremiah prophesied.

Verse 19. Go, hide thee, thou and Jeremiah] They saw that the king would be displeased, and most probably seek their lives; and as they believed the prophecy was from God, they wished to save both the prophet and his scribe; but they were obliged to inform the king of what they had heard.

Verse 22. Winterhouse] A warm apartment suited to the season of the year, (December,) when in Palestine there is often snow upon the ground, though it does not last long. A fire on the hearth, a pan, or brazier of burning coals. This is the case to the present day.

Verse 23. When Jehudi had read three or four leaves] Rather columns; for the law, and the sacred Hebrew books, are written in columns of a certain breadth. דלתות delatoth, signifies gates or openings between column and column, or between section and section.

He cut it with the penknife] חסר חסר חסר chaspher, the knife of the scribe; properly enough pen knife.

And cast it into the fire] To shew his contempt for God's words.

Verse 25. Elnathan and Delaiah and Gemariah] Three of the princes wished to save the roll, and entreated the king that it might not be burnt. They would have saved it out of the fire: but the king would not permit it to be done.

Verse 26. But the Lord hid them.] They had, at the counsel of some of the princes, hidden themselves, ver. 19. And now, though a diligent search was made, the Lord did not permit them to be found.

Verse 28. Take thee again another roll] There was no duplicate of the former preserved; and now God inspired the prophet with the same matter that He had given him before: and there is to be added the heavy judgment that is to fall on Jehoiakim and his courtiers.

Verse 30. He shall have none to sit upon the thrones of David] He shall have no successor; and himself shall have an untimely end, and shall not even be buried, but his body be exposed to the open air, both night and day. He who wishes to hide his crimes, or take away the evidence which is against him, adds thereby to his iniquities, and is sure in consequence to double his punishment. See the threatening against Jehoiakim, chap. xxii. 19, and the Note there.

Verse 32. There were added - many like words.] All the first roll, with many other threatenings, and perhaps more minute declarations which were merely of a temporary importance and local application; and the Holy Spirit did not think proper to record them.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVII.

Verse 1. And king Zedekiah the son of Josiah] Of the siege and taking of Jerusalem referred to here, and the making of Zedekiah king instead of Jeconiah, see 2 Kings xxiv. 1, &c. and the Note there.

Verse 3. Zedekiah - to the prophet Jeremiah] He was

6 Then came the word of the LORD unto the prophet Jeremiah, saying,

7 Thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel: Thus shall ye say to the king of Judah, that sent you unto me to enquire of me; Behold, Pharaoh's army, which is come forth to help you, shall return to Egypt into their own land.

8 And the Chaldeans shall come again, and fight against this city, and take it, and burn it with fire.

9 Thus saith the LORD; Deceive not yourselves, saying, the Chaldeans shall surely depart from us: for they shall not depart.

10 For though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but wounded men among them, yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire.

11 And it came to pass, that when the army of the Chaldeans was broken up from Jerusalem for fear of Pharaoh's army, 12 Then Jeremiah went forth out of Jerusalem to go into the land of Benjamin, to separate himself thence in the midst of the people.

13 And when he was in the gate of Benjamin, a captain of the ward was there, whose name was Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah; and he took Jeremiah the prophet, saying, Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans.

14 Then said Jeremiah, It is false; I fall not away to the Chaldeans. But he hearkened not to him: so Irijah took Jeremiah, and brought him to the princes.

15 Wherefore the princes were wroth with Jeremiah, and smote him, and put him in prison in the house of Jonathan the scribe: for they had made that the prison.

16 When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the cabins, and Jeremiah had remained there many days;

17 Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took him out: and the king asked him secretly in his house, and said, Is there any word from the LORD? And Jeremiah said, There is: for, said he, thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon.

18 Moreover Jeremiah said unto king Zedekiah, What have I offended against thee, or against thy servants, and against this people, that ye have put me in prison?

19 Where are now your prophets which prophesied unto you, saying, The king of Babylon shall not come against you, nor against this land?

20 Therefore hear now, I pray thee, O my lord the king: let my supplication, I pray thee, be accepted before thee; that thou cause me not to return to the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest I die there.

21 Then Zedekiah the king commanded that they should commit Jeremiah into the court of the prison, and that they should give him daily a piece of bread out of the bakers' street, until all the bread of the city were spent. Thus Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

The princes of Judah, taking offence at Jeremiah on account of his predicting the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple by the Chaldeans, cause him to be cast into a deep and airy dungeon, 1-6. Ebed-nesech an Ethiopian gets the king's permission to take him out, 7-13. Jeremiah advises the king, who counted him privately to surrender to the Chaldeans, 14-23. The king promises the Prophet that he will not put him to death, and requires him not to reveal what had passed to the princes: to whom he accordingly gives an evasive answer, telling them only so much of the conference as related to his request for his life, 24-28.

THEN Shephatiah the son of Mat-tan, and Gedaliah the son of Pashur, and Jucal the son of Shelemiah, and Pashur the son of Malchiah, heard the words that Jeremiah had spoken unto all the people, saying,

2 Thus saith the LORD, He that remaineth in this city shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth forth to the Chaldeans shall live; for he shall have his life for a prey and shall live.

3 Thus saith the LORD, This city shall surely willing to hear a message from the Lord, provided it were according to his own mind. He did not fully trust in his own prophets.

Verse 4. Now Jeremiah came in and went out] After the siege was raised, he had a measure of liberty; he was not closely confined, as he afterwards was. See ver. 16.

Verse 5. Then Pharaoh's army] This was Pharaoh-Hophra or Apries, who then reigned in Egypt in place of his father Necho. See Ezek. xxix. 6, &c. Nebuchadnezzar hearing that the Egyptian army, on which the Jews so much depended, was on their march to relieve the city, suddenly raised the siege, and went to meet them. In the interim Zedekiah sent to Jeremiah to inquire of the Lord to know whether they might consider themselves in safety.

Verse 7. Pharaoh's army—shall return to Egypt] They were defeated by the Chaldeans; and, not being hearty in the cause, returned immediately to Egypt, leaving Nebuchadnezzar unmolested to recommence the siege.

Verse 10. For though he had smitten the whole army] Strong words: but they shew how fully God was determined to give up this city to fire and sword; and how fully He had instructed His prophet on this point.

Verse 12. Jeremiah went forth] At the time that Nebuchadnezzar had raised the siege, and gone to meet the Egyptian army.

Go into the land of Benjamin] To Anathoth, his native city.

To separate himself thence] "To receive a portion thereof among the people;"—Blayney: who supposes that Jeremiah went to receive a portion of the proceeds of his patrimony at Anathoth, which had, previously to the siege, been in the hands of the Chaldeans. The siege being now raised, he thought of looking thus after his own affairs. The Chaldee is to the same sense.—"He went that he might divide the inheritance which he had there among the people."

Dahler translates,—"He went to withdraw himself from the siege, as many others of the inhabitants." I believe he went to withdraw himself from a city devoted to destruction, and in which he could no longer do any good.

Verse 13. Thou fallest away to the Chaldeans.] Thou art a deserter, and a traitor to thy country. As he had always declared that the Chaldeans should take the city, &c. his enemies took occasion from this to say, he was in the interest of the Chaldeans, and that he wished now to go to them, and betray the place.

Verse 15. And smote him] Without any proof of the alleged treachery, without any form of justice.

In prison in the house of Jonathan] In Asiatic countries there is an apartment in the houses of the officers of the law, to confine all the accused that are brought before them. Jonathan was a scribe or secretary, and had a prison of this kind in his house.

Verse 16. Entered into the dungeon, and into the cabins] The dungeon was probably a deep pit; and the cabins or cells, niches in the sides, where different malefactors were confined.—See Blayney.

Verse 17. Is there any word from the Lord?] Is there any further revelation?

There is:—thou shalt be delivered] What bold faithfulness! And to a king, in whose hands his life now lay.

Verse 19. Where are now your prophets] They told you that the Chaldeans should not come; I told you they would. According to my word the Chaldeans are come, and are departed only for a short time.

Verse 20. Cause me not to return to the house of Jonathan] He had been ill used in this man's custody, so as to endanger his life, the place being cold, and probably unhealthy.

Verse 21. Then Zedekiah—the court of the prison] Was contiguous to the king's house, where the prisoners could readily see their friends.

Give him daily a piece of bread out of the bakers' street] From the public stores; which he received till all the provisions were spent.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Verse 1. Then Shephatiah] This was the faction, what Dahler terms the Antitheocratic faction, who were enemies to Jeremiah, and sought his life.

Verse 3. This city shall surely be given] This was a testimony that he could not constantly bore: he had the authority of be given into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which shall take it.

4 Therefore the princes said unto the king, We beseech thee, let this man be put to death: for thus he weakeneth the hands of the men of war that remain in this city, and the hands of all the people, in speaking such words unto them: for this man seeketh not the welfare of this people, but the hurt.

5 Then Zedekiah the king said, Behold, he is in your hand: for the king is not he that can do any thing against you.

6 Then took they Jeremiah, and cast him into the dungeon of Malchiah the son of Hammelech, that was in the court of the prison; and they let down Jeremiah with cords. And in the dungeon there was no water, but mire: so Jeremiah sunk in the mire.

7 Now when Ebed-melech, the Æthiopian, one of the eunuchs which was in the king's house, heard that they had put Jeremiah in the dungeon; (the king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin;)

8 Ebed-melech went forth out of the king's house, and spake to the king, saying,

9 My lord the king, these men have done evil in all that they have done to Jeremiah the prophet, whom they have cast into the dungeon; and he is like to die for hunger in the place where he is: for there is no more bread in the city.

10 Then the king commanded Ebed-melech the Æthiopian, saying, Take from hence thirty men with thee, and take up Jeremiah the prophet out of the dungeon before he die.

11 So Ebed-melech took the men with him, and went into the house of the king under the treasury, and took thence old cast clouts, and old rotten rags, and let them down by cords into the dungeon to Jeremiah.

12 And Ebed-melech the Æthiopian said unto Jeremiah, Put now these old cast clouts and rotten rags under thine armholes under the cords. And Jeremiah did so.

13 So they drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon: and Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

14 Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took Jer-miah the prophet unto him into the third entry that is in the house of the Lord: and the king said unto Jeremiah, I will ask thee a thing; hide nothing from me.

15 Then Jeremiah said unto Zedekiah, If I declare it unto thee, wilt thou not surely put me to death? and if I give thee counsel, wilt thou not hearken unto me?

16 So Zedekiah the king sware secretly unto Jeremiah, saying, As the Lord liveth, that made us this soul, I will not put thee to death, neither will I give thee into the hand of these men that seek thy life.

17 Then said Jeremiah unto Zedekiah, Thus saith the Lord, the God of hosts, the God of Israel; If thou wilt assuredly go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burned with fire; and thou shalt live and thine house:

18 But if thou wilt not go forth to the king of Babylon's princes, then shall this city be given into the hand of the Chaldeans, and they shall burn it with fire, and thou shalt not escape out of their hand.

19 And Zedekiah the king said unto Jeremiah, I am afraid of the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they mock me.

20 But Jeremiah said, They shall not deliver thee. Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the Lord, which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well unto thee, and thy soul shall live.

21 But if thou refuse to go forth, this is the word that the Lord hath shewed me:

22 And, behold, all the women that are left in the king of Judah's house shall be brought forth to the king of Babylon's princes, and those women shall say, Thy friends have set thee on, and have prevailed against thee: thy feet have sunk in the mire, and they are turned away back.

23 So they shall bring out all thy wives and thy children to the Chaldeans: and thou shalt not escape out of their hand, but shalt be taken by the hand of the king of Babylon: and thou shalt cause this city to be burned with fire.

24 Then said Zedekiah unto Jeremiah, Let no

God for it. He knew it was true, and he never wavered nor equivocated.

Verse 4. Let this man be put to death] And they gave their reasons plain enough: but the proof was wanting.

Verse 5. He is in your hand] Ye have power to do as ye please; I must act by your counsel. Poor weak prince! you respect the prophet, you fear the cabal, and you sacrifice an innocent man to your own weakness and their malice.

Verse 6. So Jeremiah sunk in the mire] Their obvious design was, that he might be stifled in that place.

Verse 7. Ebed-melech] The servant of the king, one of the eunuchs who belonged to the palace. Perhaps it should be read, Now, a servant of the king, a Cushite, one of the eunuchs, &c.

The king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin] To give audience, and to administer justice. We have often seen that the gates of cities were the places of public judicature.

Verse 9. My lord the king, these men have done evil] He must have been much in the king's confidence, and a humane and noble spirited man, thus to have raised his voice against the powerful cabal already mentioned.

There is no more bread in the city.] They had defended it to the last extremity; and it appears that bread had been afforded to the prophet according to the king's commandment, as long as there was any remaining. See chapter xxxvi. 21.

Verse 10. Take from hence thirty men] The king was determined that he should be rescued by force, if the princes opposed.

Verse 11. Went into the house of the king—and took thence] The Eastern kings had their wardrobes always well furnished; as garments were a usual present to ambassadors, &c. I cannot think that, in the proper acceptation of the words, these were in any part of the king's house.

Old cast clouts, and old rotten rags] The fact seems to be this;—there were several garments that had been used, and would not be used again; and there were others which, through continuing long there, had by insects, &c. been rendered useless. These he took, tied to the cord, let down to the prophet, that he might roll them round the ropes, and place them under his arm-pits, so that in being hauled up he might not suffer injury from the ropes, which in this case must sustain the whole weight of his body.

Verse 14. Into the third entry] A place, to enter which, two others must be passed through.

Verse 16. As the Lord liveth, that made us this soul] He is the living God, and He is Author of that life which each of us possesses; and as sure as He lives, and we live by Him, I will not put thee to death, nor give thee into the hands of those men who seek thy life. A very solemn oath; and the first instance on record of the profane custom of swearing by the soul.

Verse 17. Wilt assuredly go] On the king's obedience to the advice of the prophet, the safety of the city depended. Unto the king of Babylon's princes] The generals of the army then returning to the siege from the defeat of the Egyptians:—for Nebuchadnezzar himself was then at Riblah, in Syria, chap. xxxix. 5, 6.

Verse 19. They mock me.] Insult me, and exhibit me in triumph.

Verse 22. All the women—brought forth] I think this place speaks of a kind of defection among the women of the Harem; many of whom had already gone forth privately to the principal officers of the Chaldean army, and made the report mentioned in the end of this verse. These were the concubines, or women of the second rank.

Verse 23. They shall bring out all thy wives and thy children] These were the women of the first rank, by whom the king had children. These had no temptation to go out to the Chaldeans, nor would they have been made welcome: but the others being young, and without children, would be well received by the Chaldean princes.

man know of these words, and thou shalt not die.

25 But if the princes hear that I have talked with thee, and they come unto thee, and say unto thee, Declare unto us now what thou hast said unto the king, hide it not from us, and we will not put thee to death; and also what the king said unto thee:

26 Then thou shalt say unto them, I presented my supplication before the king, that he would not cause me to return to Jonathan's house, to die there.

27 Then came all the princes unto Jeremiah, and asked him: and he told them according to all these words that the king had commanded. So they left off speaking with him; for the matter was not perceived.

28 So Jeremiah abode in the court of the prison until the day that Jerusalem was taken: and he was there when Jerusalem was taken.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

This Chapter gives an account of the siege and taking of Jerusalem; the flight, capture, and punishment, of Zedekiah; the burning of the city; and the carrying away of the people (a few of the prominent exceptions) to Babylon, 1-10; also of the release of Jeremiah, and the special orders of Nebuchadnezzar concerning him, 11-14. The remaining verses relate to the subject of the preceding Chapter; and contain promises of personal safety to Ebed-netho the Ethiopian, amidst the public calamities, on account of the piety, and his intimacy to the Prophet, 15-18.

2 And in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, in the fourth month, the ninth day of the month, the city was broken up.

3 And all the princes of the king of Babylon came in, and sat in the middle gate, even Nergal-sharezer, Samgar-nebo, Sarsechim, Rab-saris, Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, with all the residue of the princes of the king of Babylon.

4 And it came to pass, that when Zedekiah the king of Judah saw them, and all the men of war, then they fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the king's garden, by the gate betwixt the two walls: and he went out the way of the plain.

5 But the Chaldeans' army pursued after them, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho: and when they had taken him, they brought him up to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon to Riblah in the land of Hamath, where he gave judgment upon him.

6 Then the king of Babylon slew the sons of Zedekiah in Riblah before his eyes: also the king of Babylon slew all the nobles of Judah.

7 Moreover he put out Zedekiah's eyes, and bound him, with chains, to carry him to Babylon.

8 And the Chaldeans burned the king's house, and the houses of the people, with fire, and brake down the walls of Jerusalem.

9 Then Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive into Babylon the remnant of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to him, with the rest of the people that remained.

10 But Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard left of the poor of the people, which had nothing, in the land of Judah, and gave them vineyards and fields at the same time.

11 Now Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon gave charge concerning Jeremiah to Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard, saying, 12 Take him, and look well to him, and do him no harm; but do unto him even as he shall say unto thee.

13 So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard sent, and Nebushasban, Rab-saris, and Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, and all the king of Babylon's princes;

14 Even they sent, and took Jeremiah out of the court of the prison, and committed him unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, that he should carry him home: so he dwelt among the people.

15 Now the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, while he was shut up in the court of the prison, saying,

Verse 26. I presented my supplication] This was telling the truth, and nothing but the truth; but not the whole truth. The king did not wish him to defile his conscience, nor did he propose any thing that was not consistent with the truth.

Verse 27. The matter was not perceived.] They did not question him farther; and the king's commandment to remove him from the house of Jonathan being well known, they took for granted that they had all the information that they sought. And he was most certainly not obliged to relate any thing that might embroil this weak king with his factious, but powerful princes; or affect his own life. He related simply what was necessary, and no more.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XXXIX.

Verse 1. In the ninth year of Zedekiah—in the tenth month] This month is called Tebeth in Esther ii. 16. It began with the first new moon of our January; and it was on the tenth day of this month that Nebuchadnezzar invested the city.

Verse 2. The eleventh year—in the fourth month] This month in the Hebrew calendar is called Thammuz, and commences with the first new moon of our July. The siege had lasted just eighteen months.

The city was broken up.] A breach was made in the wall by which the Chaldeans entered.

Verse 3. Sat in the middle gate] The city of Jerusalem stood upon two hills, Sion to the south, and Acra to the north, with a deep valley between them. The gate of the centre, as the term seems plainly to import, was a gate of communication in the middle of the valley, between the two parts of the city, sometimes called the higher and the lower city. The Chaldeans entered the city on the north side by a breach in the walls; and rushing forward and posting themselves in this gate, in the very heart or centre of the city, became thereby masters at will of the whole. Zedekiah with his troop, perceiving this, fled out of the opposite gate on the south side. See Blayney. This is likely: but we know nothing positively on this subject.

Nergal-sharezer] These were the principal commanders: but Dr. Blayney thinks that, instead of six persons, we have in reality but three, as the name that follows each is a title of office. Thus, Nergal-sharezer, who was Samgar; Nebu-sarsechim, who was Rab-saris; and Nergal-sharezer, who was Rab-mag. As Nergal-sharezer occurs twice here, and we know that Nebuzar-adan was general-in-chief, the first Nergal-sharezer is probably a mistake for Nebuzar-adan, or some other of the commanders. But these things are as uncertain as they are unimportant.

Verse 4. Went forth out of the city by night] Probably there was a private passage under ground, leading without the walls, by which Zedekiah and his followers might escape unperceived till they had got some way from the city.

The way of the plain] There were two roads from Jerusalem to Jericho. One passed over the mount of Olives: but, as this might have retarded his flight, he chose the way of the plain; and was overtaken near Jericho, perhaps about sixteen or eighteen miles from Jerusalem. He had probably intended to have passed the Jordan, in order to escape to Egypt; as the Egyptians were then his professed allies.

Verse 5. To Riblah] This city was situated on the northern frontier of Palestine; and Hamath was a large city belonging also to Syria. See Gen. x. 18.

Verse 7. Bound him with chains] Margin,—two brazen chains; one for his hands, and the other for his feet.

Verse 9. Those that fell away] That deserted to the Chaldeans during the siege.

Verse 10. Left of the poor of the people] The very refuse of the inhabitants, who were not worthy of being carried away; and among them he divided the fields and vineyards of those whom he took away.

Verse 12. Take him—look well to him] Nebuchadnezzar had heard that this prophet had foretold his capture of the city, and had frequently used all his influence to induce Zedekiah to pay the tribute, and not rebel against him; and on this account would be inclined to shew the prophet especial favour.

16 Go and speak to Ebed-melech the Æthiopian, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring my words upon this city for evil, and not for good; and they shall be accomplished in that day before thee.

17 But I will deliver thee in that day, saith the Lord: and thou shalt not be given into the hand of the men of whom thou art afraid.

18 For I will surely deliver thee, and thou shalt not fall by the sword, but thy life shall be for a prey unto thee: because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the Lord.

CHAPTER XL.

This and the four following Chapters contain a distinct account of what passed in the land of Judah from the taking of Jerusalem to the retreat of the remnant of the people to Egypt; together with the prophecies of Jeremiah concerning them in that place, whether he himself accompanied them. In this Chapter we have an account of the enlargement of Jeremiah by Nebuzar-adan, the captain of the guard, who advises him to put himself under the jurisdiction of Gedaliah, the son of Ahikam, whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the land of Judah, 1-5. The Prophet and many of the dispersed Jews repair to Gedaliah, 6-12. Johanan acquaints the governor of a conspiracy against him, but is not believed, 13-18.

ON XLVIII. 1. THE word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, after that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had let him go from Ramah, when he had taken him being bound in chains among all that were carried away captive of Jerusalem and Judah, which were carried away captive unto Babylon.

2 And the captain of the guard took Jeremiah, and said unto him, The Lord thy God hath pronounced this evil upon this place.

3 Now the Lord hath brought it, and done according as he hath said: because ye have sinned against the Lord, and have not obeyed his voice, therefore this thing is come upon you.

4 And now, behold, I loose thee this day from the chains which were upon thine hand. If it seem good unto thee to come with me into Babylon, come; and I will look well unto thee: but if it seem ill unto thee to come with me into Babylon, forbear; behold, all the land is before thee: whether it seemeth good and convenient for thee to go, thither go.

5 Now while he was not yet gone back, he said, Go back also to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, whom the king of Babylon hath made governor over the cities of Judah, and dwell with him among the people: or go wheresoever it seemeth convenient unto thee to go. So the captain of the guard gave him victuals and a reward, and let him go.

6 Then went Jeremiah unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to Mizpah; and dwelt with him among the people that were left in the land.

7 Now when all the captains of the forces which were in the fields, even they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam governor in the land, and had committed unto him men, and women, and children, and of the poor of the land, of them that were not carried away captive to Babylon;

8 Then they came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth, and the sons of Ephai the Netophathite, and Jezaniah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men.

9 And Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan swore unto them and to their men, saying, Fear not to serve the Chaldeans: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and it shall be well with you.

10 As for me, behold, I will dwell at Mizpah, to serve the Chaldeans, which will come unto us: but ye, gather ye wine, and summer fruits, and oil, and put them in your vessels, and dwell in your cities that ye have taken.

11 Likewise when all the Jews that were in Moab, and among the Ammonites, and in Edom, and that were in all the countries, heard that the king of Babylon had left a remnant of Judah, and that he had set over them Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan;

12 Even all the Jews returned out of all places whither they were driven, and came to the land of Judah, to Gedaliah, unto Mizpah, and gathered wine and summer fruits very much.

13 Moreover Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were in the fields, came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, 14 And said unto him, Dost thou certainly know that Baalis the king of the Ammonites hath sent Ishmael the son of Nethaniah to slay thee? But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam believed them not.

15 Then Johanan the son of Kareah spake to Gedaliah in Mizpah secretly, saying, Let me go, I pray thee, and I will slay Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and no man shall know it: wheresoever should he slay thee, that all the Jews which are gathered unto thee should be scattered, and the remnant in Judah perish?

16 But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam said unto Johanan the son of Kareah, Thou shalt not do this thing: for thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.

Verse 16. Go and speak to Ebed-melech] The king's servant,—the Cushite.

Verse 18. I will surely deliver thee] Thou hast feared the Lord, and not the king, nor his princes; and thou hast taken the part of the prophet, and become his intercessor. Thou shalt not be slain. Thou hast put thy trust in me; thou shalt therefore be safe whithersoever thou goest. They that fear God, need fear nothing besides.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XL.

Verse 1. The word that came to Jeremiah] This and the four following Chapters contain a particular account of what passed in the land of Judah from the taking of the city to the retreat of the people into Egypt; and the prophecies of Jeremiah concerning them there.

Had let him go from Ramah] This has embarrassed most of the Commentators. Dr. Blayney has thrown much light upon it by his translation and note:—

"The word that came to Jeremiah from Jehovah, after that Nebuzar-adan captain of the guards had taken him, and let him go from Ramah: for he had been bound with chains among all the captives of Jerusalem and Judah, who were carried away captive to Babylon."

"HAD TAKEN HIM, AND LET HIM GO. Most interpreters have understood נָשַׁבּוּ be-kachulo olo of Nebuchadnezzar's having first taken Jeremiah as a captive unto Ramah. But, if the order of the sentence be well observed, as well as the more common use of the verb נָשַׁבּוּ lakaach, it will, I think, rather appear that those words relate to his taking, or having him brought to him, in order to give him his discharge."

Verse 2. The Lord thy God hath pronounced] I know that thou art a true prophet, for what thou hast predicted from thy God is come to pass.

Verse 4. Come; and I will look well unto thee] Thou art now at full liberty to do as thou pleasest; either to come to Babylon, or to stay in thy own land.

Verse 5. Go back also to Gedaliah.] If thou wilt stay in thy own land, thou hast best put thyself under the protection of thy countryman, Gedaliah, whom the king of Babylon has made governor of the land.

Verse 8. Ishmael the son of Nethaniah] This is he who afterwards murdered Gedaliah. He had been employed to do this by Baalis, king of the Ammonites, with whom he appears to have taken refuge during the siege. See ver. 14.

Verse 14. But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam believed them not] The account given of this man proves him to have been a person of uncommon greatness of soul. Conscious of his own integrity and benevolence, he took the portrait of others from his own mind; and therefore believed evil of no man, because he felt none towards any in his own breast. He may be reproached for being too credulous and confident: but any thing of this kind that may be justly charged against him serves only to shew the greatness of his mind. A little soul is ever suspicious, and ready to believe the worst of every person and thing. A great mind acts always on the contrary.

Verse 16. Thou shalt not do this thing] He cannot be so base.

Thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.] He thought it

CHAPTER XLI.

Ishmael executed his conspiracy against Gedaliah the governor and his companions, and attempts to carry away the Jews who were with him captive to the Ammonites, 1-10; but Johanan recovers them, and purposes to flee into Egypt, 11-13. OL XLVIII. 1. An. Tar. Priest, Reg. Rom. 28.

NOW it came to pass in the seventh month, ^a that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, and the princes of the king, even ten men with him, came unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to Mizpah; and there they did eat bread together in Mizpah.

2 Then arose Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and the ten men that were with him, and smote Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan with the sword, and slew him, whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the land.

3 Ishmael also slew all the Jews that were with him, even with Gedaliah, at Mizpah, and the Chaldeans that were found there, and the men of war.

4 And it came to pass the second day after he had slain Gedaliah, and no man knew it,

5 That there came certain from Shechem, from Shiloh, and from Samaria, even fourscore men, ^a having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut themselves, with offerings and incense in their hand, to bring them to the house of the Lord.

6 And Ishmael the son of Nethaniah went forth from Mizpah to meet them, ^a weeping all along as he went: and it came to pass, as he met them, he said unto them, Come to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam.

7 And it was so, when they came into the midst of the city, that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah slew them, and cast them into the midst of the pit, he, and the men that were with him.

8 But ten men were found among them that said unto Ishmael, Slay us not: for we have treasures in the field, of wheat, and of barley, and of oil, and of honey. So he forbore, and slew them not among their brethren.

9 Now the pit wherein Ishmael had cast all the dead bodies of the men, whom he had slain ^a because ^a of Gedaliah, was it ^a which Asa the king had made for fear of Baasha king of Israel: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah filled it with them that were slain.

10 Then Ishmael carried away captive all the residue of the people that were in Mizpah, ^a even the king's daughters, and all the people that remained in Mizpah, ^a whom Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had committed to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah carried them away captive, and departed to go over to the Ammonites.

11 But when Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, heard of all the evil that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had done, 12 Then they took all the men, and went to fight with Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and found him by the great waters that are in Gibeon.

13 Now it came to pass that when all the people which were with Ishmael saw Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, then they were glad.

14 So all the people that Ishmael had carried away captive from Mizpah cast about and returned, and went unto Johanan the son of Kareah.

15 But Ishmael the son of Nethaniah escaped from Johanan with eight men, and went to the Ammonites.

16 Then took Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, all the remnant of the people whom he had recovered from Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, from Mizpah, after that he had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, even mighty men of war, and the women, and the children, and the eunuchs, whom he had brought again from Gibeon:

17 And they departed, and dwelt in the habitation of Chimham, which is by Beth-lehem, to go to enter into Egypt, 18 Because of the Chaldeans: for they were afraid of them, because Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, whom the king of Babylon made governor in the land.

CHAPTER XLII.

Johanan and the remnant of the people desire Jeremiah to seek counsel of God what they should do, 1-3. The Prophet assures them of safety in Judah, but destruction in Egypt, 4-15; and reproves their hypocrisy in asking a counsel with which they had no intention to comply, 16-22.

THEN all the captains of the forces, ^a and Johanan the son of Kareah, and Jezeiah the son of Hoshaiah, and all the people from the least even unto the greatest, came near,

2 And said unto Jeremiah the prophet, ^a Let, we beseech thee, our supplication be accepted before thee, and pray for us unto the Lord thy quite possible that the man who was capable of becoming an assassin was capable of telling a lie; and therefore he would not credit what he said. Had he been a little more distrustful, he would have saved his own life. The next Chapter shews that Johanan's information was too true. So noble Gedaliah lost his life by not believing that evil of others, of which he found himself incapable.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLI.

Verse 1. Now—in the seventh month] Answering to the first new moon in our month of October.

There they did eat bread together] This was the same as making a solemn covenant; for he who ate bread with another was ever reputed a friend.

Verse 2. Smote Gedaliah] See preceding Chapter, ver. 14.

Verse 5. Having their beards shaven] All these were signs of deep mourning; probably on account of the destruction of the city.

Verse 6. Weeping all along as he went] This felonious hypocrite pretended that he also was deeply afflicted, and wished to bear them company in their sorrow.

Come to Gedaliah] He will appoint you vineyards and fields.

Verse 7. Slew them] He kept the murder of Gedaliah secret, and no doubt had a band of his assassins lodged in Mizpah; and he decoyed these fourscore men thither that he might have strength to slay them. He kept ten alive because they told him they had treasures hidden in a field, which they would shew him. Whether he kept his word with them is not recorded. He could do nothing good or great;—and it is likely that, when he had possessed himself of those treasures, he served them as he had served their companions. Grain is preserved to the present day in subterranean pits, called mattarnores, in different parts of the East.

Verse 9. Now the pit—was it which Asa the king had made for fear of Baasha] See 1 Kings xv. 22. Asa made this cistern as a reservoir for water for the supply of the place; for he built and fortified Mizpah at the time that he was at war with Baasha, king of Israel.

Verse 10. Carried away captive] He took all these that he might sell them for slaves among the Ammonites.

Verse 14. Went unto Johanan] They were weary of the tyranny of Ishmael, and were glad of an opportunity to abandon him.

Verse 16. The women,—children, and the eunuchs] These were all, most probably, persons who belonged to the palace and harem of Zedekiah: some of them his own concubines, and their children.

Verse 17. Dwelt in the habitation of Chimham] The estate that David gave to Chimham, the son of Barzillai. See 2 Sam. xix. 37, &c. He took this merely as a resting place; as he designed to carry all into Egypt, fearing the Chaldeans, who would endeavour to revenge the death of Gedaliah.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLII.

Verse 1. The captains of the forces] The different leaders of the small bands or companies, collected from different parts of the land. The principal are those here named.

God, even for all this remnant; (for we are left but a few of many, as thine eyes do behold us):

3 That the Lord thy God may shew us the way wherein we may walk, and the thing that we may do.

4 Then Jeremiah the prophet said unto them, I have heard you; behold, I will pray unto the Lord your God according to your words; and it shall come to pass, that whatsoever thing the Lord shall answer you, I will declare it unto you; I will keep nothing back from you.

5 Then they said to Jeremiah, The Lord be a true and faithful Witness between us, if we do not even according to all things for the which the Lord thy God shall send thee to us.

6 Whether it be good, or whether it be evil, we will obey the voice of the Lord our God, to whom we send thee; that it may be well with us, when we obey the voice of the Lord our God.

7 And it came to pass after ten days, that the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah.

8 Then called he Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces which were with him, and all the people from the least even to the greatest,

9 And said unto them, Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, unto whom ye sent me to present your supplication before him;

10 If ye will still abide in this land, then will I build you, and not pull you down; and I will plant you, and not pluck you up: for I repent me of the evil that I have done unto you.

11 Be not afraid of the king of Babylon, of whom ye are afraid; be not afraid of him, saith the Lord: for I am with you to save you, and to deliver you from his hand.

12 And I will shew mercies unto you, that he may have mercy upon you, and cause you to return to your own land.

13 But if ye say, We will not dwell in this land, neither obey the voice of the Lord your God,

14 Saying, No; but we will go into the land of Egypt, where we shall see no war, nor hear the sound of the trumpet, nor have hunger of bread; and there will we dwell:

15 And now therefore hear the word of the Lord, ye remnant of Judah, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; if ye wholly set your faces to enter into Egypt, and go to sojourn there;

16 Then it shall come to pass, that the sword, which ye feared, shall overtake you there in the land of Egypt, and the famine, whereof ye were afraid, shall follow close after you there in Egypt; and there ye shall die.

17 So shall it be with all the men that set their faces to go into Egypt to sojourn there; they shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: and none of them shall remain or escape from the evil that I will bring upon them.

18 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; As mine anger and my fury hath been poured forth upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem; so shall my fury be poured forth upon you, when ye shall enter into Egypt: and ye shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach; and ye shall see this place no more.

19 The Lord hath said concerning you, O ye remnant of Judah; Go ye not into Egypt: know certainly that I have admonished you this day.

20 For ye dissembled in your hearts, when ye sent me unto the Lord your God, saying, Pray for us unto the Lord our God: and according unto all that the Lord our God shall say, so declare unto us, and we will do it.

21 And now I have this day declared it to you; but ye have not obeyed the voice of the Lord your God, nor any thing for the which he hath sent me unto you.

22 Now therefore know certainly that ye shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, in the place whither ye desire to go and to sojourn.

CHAPTER XLIII.

The leading men, describing Jeremiah's prophecy, carry the people into Egypt, 1-7. Jeremiah, by a type, foretells the conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadnezzar, 8-18. This mode of conveying instruction by actions was very expressive, and frequently practised by the prophets. The image of Nebuchadnezzar straying himself with Egypt, as a shepherd puts on his garment, is very noble. Egypt at this time consisted with Babylon for the empire of the East; yet this mighty kingdom, when God appoints the revolution, shifts its owner with as much ease as a shepherd removes his coat or garment, which the new proprietor uses only to spread over himself, see 12.

OL XLVIII. An. Tyr. Princl. Reg. Rom. 22

AND it came to pass, that when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking unto all the people all the words of the Lord their God, for which the Lord their God had sent him to them, even all these words,

2 Then spake Azariah the son of Hoshaiah,

Verse 3. That the Lord thy God may shew us] They all thought there was no safety in Jerusalem or in Judah, and therefore determined to leave the land: but they did not know which might be the safest direction to take; for though they inclined to Egypt, yet they wished to know the mind of God on that point.

Verse 5. The Lord be a true and faithful Witness] The Lord is such; and as ye have bound yourselves to obey His voice, He will register the covenant, and bless or curse according as ye shall conduct yourselves in this matter.

Verse 7. After ten days] All this time he was waiting upon God; for it is evident the prophets could not prophesy when they pleased, any more than the disciples of our Lord could work miracles when they wished. The gift of prophecy and the gift of miracles were both dependant on the will of the Most High, and each of them was given only for the moment; and when the necessity was over, the influence ceased.

Verse 10. For I repent me of the evil] The meaning is,—as I have punished you only because you continued to be rebellious, I will arrest this punishment as soon as you become obedient to my word. You need not fear the king of Babylon if you have me for your Helper; and I will so shew mercy to you that he shall see it, and cease from afflicting you, as he shall see that I am on your side.

Verse 15. If ye—set your faces to enter into Egypt, &c.] Every evil that ye dreaded by staying in your own land, shall come upon you in Egypt.

Verse 16. The sword—and the famine—shall follow close after you] Shall be at your heels; overtake and destroy you; for there ye shall die.

Verse 19. Go ye not into Egypt] Why? Because God know, such was their miserable propensity to idolatry, that they would there adopt the worship of the country, and serve idols.

Verse 20. For ye dissemble in your hearts] What a most miserable and incorrigible people! Ingratitude, hypocrisy, rebellion, and cruelty, seem to have been enthroned in their hearts! And what are they still? Just what their fathers were, except in the mere article of idolatry; and that they practise not, because they are indifferent to their own religion, and that of all others. Examine their devotions and their lives; and see whether Charity itself can say they believe in the God of Abraham!

Verse 21. Ye have not obeyed the voice] Though ye have requested to have this particular revelation of the Divine will, and promised obedience; yet have ye not done one thing for which ye sent me to inquire of the Lord.

Verse 22. Now therefore know certainly] As ye have determined to disobey, God has determined to punish. Ye may now follow the full bent of your wicked devices; and I will follow the requisitions of my justice. Ye shall die by the sword, by the pestilence, and by the famine, in the place whither ye desire to go to sojourn. Thus was their doom sealed.

With such dispositions and with such rebellion of heart, it is strange that they should put themselves to any trouble to enquire of the Lord, relative to their future operations. They did not intend to obey: but, as a matter of curiosity, they would inquire to hear what the prophet might say; and if according to their own inclination, they would obey.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLIII. Verse 2. Thou speakest falsely] They had no other colour for their rebellion than falsely to deny that God had spoken what the prophet related.

and Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the proud men, saying unto Jeremiah, Thou speakest falsely: the Lord our God hath not sent thee to say, Go not into Egypt to sojourn there:

3 But Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on against us, for to deliver us into the hand of the Chaldeans, that they might put us to death, and carry us away captives into Babylon.

4 So Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people, obeyed not the voice of the Lord, to dwell in the land of Judah.

5 But Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, took all the remnant of Judah, that were returned from all nations, whither they had been driven to dwell in the land of Judah;

6 Even men, and women, and children, and the king's daughters, and every person that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had left with Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah.

7 So they came into the land of Egypt; for they obeyed not the voice of the Lord: thus came they even to Tahpanhes.

8 Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah in Tahpanhes, saying,

9 Take great stones in thine hand, and hide them in the clay in the brick-kiln, which is at the entry of Pharaoh's house in Tahpanhes, in the sight of the men of Judah;

10 And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will send and take Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will set his throne upon these stones that I have hid; and he shall spread his royal pavilion over them.

11 And when he cometh, he shall smite the

Ch. 2. 2. Mech. and women, and children, and the king's daughters] See the Note on chap. xlii. 10. It is truly surprising that the Chaldeans should have left behind any of the royal family of Judah! But,—1. Perhaps they knew not there were any. 2. If they did know, they might think, being children of concubines, they could not inherit. Or, 3. That being females, they were not eligible. And they had taken care to seize all Zedekiah's sons, and slay them before his eyes.

Verse 7. Came they even to Tahpanhes] This city was called Daphne by the Greeks; and was situated at the extremity of Lower Egypt, near to Heliopolis. It was called Daphne Pelusiaca. They halted at this place, most probably for the purpose of obtaining the king's permission to penetrate farther into Egypt. It was at this place, that, according to St. Jerom, tradition says the faithful Jeremiah was stoned to death by those rebellious wretches; for whose welfare he had watched, prayed, gone through many indignities, and suffered every kind of hardship. And now he sealed the truth of his Divine mission with his blood.

Verse 9. Take great stones] This Discourse seems to have been delivered about a year after the destruction of Jerusalem. They pretended that they dared not stay in Judea for fear of the Chaldeans. The prophet here assures them that Nebuchadrezzar shall come to Egypt, extend his conquests in that kingdom, and place his tent over the very place where these stones were laid up;—and destroy them. How these prophecies were fulfilled, see at the end of chap. xlii.

Verse 11. Such as are for death to death] See the Note on chap. xv. 2.

Verse 12. He shall burn them, and carry them away captives] Some of these gods, such as were of wood, he will burn; those of metal he will carry away. Some of them were of gold. See below.

Shall array himself with the land of Egypt] Shall take all its wealth, and all its grandeur; shall take all its spoils.

As a shepherd putteth on his garment] With as much ease, and with as little opposition; and with as full a confidence that it is now his own.

He shall go forth from thence in peace.] He shall suffer no interruption, nor endure any disaster in his return land of Egypt, and deliver such as are for death to death; and such as are for captivity to captivity; and such as are for the sword to the sword.

12 And I will kindle a fire in the houses of the gods of Egypt; and he shall burn them and carry them away captives; and he shall array himself with the land of Egypt, as a shepherd putteth on his garment; and he shall go forth from thence in peace.

13 He shall break also the images of Bethshemesh, that is in the land of Egypt; and the houses of the gods of the Egyptians shall be burn with fire.

CHAPTER XLIV.

Jeremiah reproves the Jews in Egypt for continuing in idolatry after the exemplary judgments inflicted by God on their nation for their sin, 1—14; and, upon their refusing to reform, denounces destruction to them, and to that kingdom wherein they sought protection, 15—20.

THE word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the Jews which dwell in the land of Egypt, which dwell at Migdol, and at Tahpanhes, and at Noph, and in the country of Pathros, saying,

2 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah; and, behold, this day they are a desolation, and no man dwelleth therein,

3 Because of their wickedness which they have committed to provoke me to anger, in that they went to burn incense, and to serve other gods, whom they knew not, neither they, ye, nor your fathers.

4 Howbeit, I sent unto you all my servants the prophets, rising early and sending them, saying, Oh, do not this abominable thing that I hate.

5 But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear to turn from their wickedness, to burn no incense unto other gods.

from his Egyptian expedition. See the proof of all this in the Notes at the end of chap. xlii.

Verse 13. He shall break also the images of Bethshemesh] בֵּית שֶׁמֶשׁ Beth-shemesh is, literally, the house, or temple, of the sun: which was worshipped here, and whose images are said to have been of solid gold. These Nebuchadrezzar was to break and carry away; and the houses of the gods,—all the temples of Egypt, he was to burn with fire. Beth-shemesh is the same as Heliopolis.

NOTES ON CHAPTER XLIV.

Verse 1. The word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the Jews] Dahler supposes this Discourse to have been delivered in the seventeenth or eighteenth year after the taking of Jerusalem.

Which dwell at Migdol] A city of Lower Egypt, not far from Pelusium.

Tahpanhes] Daphne Pelusiaca, the place to which the emigrant Jews first went.

Noph] oob Maphes, Targum. Memphis, a celebrated city of Middle Egypt, and the capital of its district.

The country of Pathros] A district of Upper Egypt, known by the name of the Thebais. See Bochart, Lib. Phaleg, lib. iv. c. 22. Thus we find that the Jews were scattered over the principal parts of Egypt.

Verse 2. No man dwelleth therein] The desolation of the land of Judea must have been exceedingly great when this, in almost any sense, could be spoken of it.
