We then, as fellow-workers, beseech you also, that ye receive not this grace of God in vain, giving no offence in any thing, that this ministry be not blamed. This change of the place of the second verse, which every one allows must, if it stand here, be read in a parenthesis, preserves the whole connexion of the apostle's discourse; and certainly sets his argument before us in a stronger light. Let us review the whole: 1. God was in Christ, reconciling the world to himself, chap. v. 18. 2. He appointed the apostles to proclaim to mankind the doctrine of reconciliation, ch. v. 19. 3. The apostles, in consequence, proclaim this doctrine, and show that Christ was a sacrifice for sin: and that, through him, we may be perfectly saved, chap. v. 20, 21. 4. They show also, that all this was agreeable to the declaration of God by the prophet Isaiah, chap. xlix. 8. where he predicts the days of the Messiah, and the grace then to be communicated, chap. vi. 2. 5. The apostle then, speaking in person of all his fellow-labourers, who had this ministry of reconciliation entrusted to them, exhorts them not to receive such a benefit of God in vain, chap. vi. 1. 6. He exhorts those who had embraced the Gospel not to put a stumblingblock in the way of others, by acting irreligiously, lest this ministry of reconciliation should be reproached on their account, chap. vi. 3. 7. He shows what conscientious and scrupulous care he and his fellow-apostles took to preach and walk so, that this ministry might have its full effect, chap. vi. 4, &c.

This view of the subject, if I mistake not, shows a beautiful consistency throughout the whole.

Verse 3. Giving no offence] The word προσ-ονη, read προσκομιμα, Rom. xiv. 13. signifies a stumblingblock, in general; or any thing over which a man stumbles or falls; and here means any transgression or scandal that might take place among the ministers, or the Christians themselves, whereby either Jews or Gentiles might take occasion of offence, and vilify the Gospel of Christ.

Verse 4. But in all things approving ourselves] The apostle now proceeds to show how conscientiously himself and his fellow-labourers acted, in order to render the ministry of reconciliation effectual to the salvation of men. They not only gave no offence in any thing, but they laboured to manifest themselves to be the genuine ministers of God, in much patience, bearing calmly up under the most painful and oppressive afflictions.

In afflictions] Εν θλῆσει. This may signify the series of persecutions and distresses in general; the state of cruel suffering in which the church of God and the apostles then existed.

In necessities] Εν αναγκαις, straits and difficulties; including all that want and affliction, which arose from the impoverished state of the church.

In distresses] Εν στερησει, such straits and difficulties as were absolutely unavoidable and insurmountable. The word implies, being reduced to a narrow place, driven to a corner, hemmed in on every side; as the Israelites were at the Red Sea: the sea before them; Pharaoh and his host behind them; and Egyptian fortresses on either hand: God alone could bring them out of such difficulties, when their enemies themselves saw that the wilderness had shut them in. So was it often with the apostles; all human help failed; and their deliverance came from God alone.

Verse 5. In stripes, in imprisonments] Of these, the history of the Acts of the Apostles gives ample testimony: and there were doubtless many instances of persecution in various forms, which are not on record.

In tumults] Αναταραχαις, insurrections raised against them because of the Gospel: it is more natural to understand the word thus, than of agitations, or tossings to and fro, in consequence of their unsettled state of life; or because of persecution, which obliged them to flee from place to place.

In labours] Both with our own hands to provide for ourselves the necessaries of life, that we might not be chargeable to others: and in labours, to spread the Gospel of God through all countries where his providence opened our way.

In watchings] Passing many nights without sleep or rest.

In fastings] Partly constrained through want of food; and partly voluntary, as a means of obtaining an increase of grace, both for ourselves and for the churches.

Verse 6. By pureness] Εν εγνωσει: in simplicity of intention, and purity of affection; together with that chastity and holiness of life which the Gospel enjoins.

By knowledge] Of the divine mysteries.
By long-suffering] Under all provocations.
By kindness] To our most virulent persecutors, and to all men.

By the Holy Ghost] There are doubts among learned men, whether the apostle here means that SPIRIT who is called the third person of the Holy TRINITY; or some grace, disposition, or quality of the soul, which was thus denominated, as implying a spirit wholly purified, and fitted to be a habitation of God.

Schoelgen quotes a passage from Rabbi Bechai, in which it appears to him to have this latter meaning. Rab. Pinchas, the son of Jair, said, Reflection leads to sedulity; sedulity to innocence; innocence to abstinence; abstinence to cleanness; cleanness to sanctity; sanctity to the fear of sin; fear of sin to humility; humility to piety; and piety to the Holy Spirit. Of these ten virtues five are external, or belong to the body; and five internal, or belonging to the soul; but all men prefer the tenth, which is רוח הקודש ruach hakkodesh, the Holy Spirit.⁷ Even allowing Rabbi Pinchas to be a person on whose judgment we could rely, and whose authority were decisive, there does not appear to me any reason why we should depart from the usual meaning of the term, from any thing that is said here. It appears to me plain enough that the rabbi means the constant indwelling of the Holy Spirit; and St. Paul, in this place, may have the same thing in view; and with it, the various gifts of the Holy Spirit, by which he was enabled to work miracles.

By love unfeigned] Εν αγαπη ανωκευρητη, love without hypocrisis; such as disposed us at all times to lay down our life for the brethren; and to spend and be spent for the glory of God, and the good of mankind.

Verse 7. By the word of truth] The doctrine of truth, received immediately from God, and faithfully and affectionately preached to men.

By the power of God] Confirming this doctrine, not only by the miracles which we were enabled to work, but also by the application of that truth to the souls of the people, by the energy of God.

By the armour of righteousness] Such as that described by the apostle, Eph. vi. 13—17. which he calls there the whole armour of God, consisting of the following pieces; the girdle of truth, the breastplate of righteousness, the shoes of the Gospel of peace, the shield of faith, the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit.

On the right hand and on the left] Particularly the shield and the sword: the former on the left arm, the latter in the right hand. We have the report and good report: as doctrine of truth, and the power of God, as an armour to protect us on all sides, every where, and on all occasions.

It seems far fetched to understand the right hand as signifying prosperity; and the left as signifying adversity; as if the apostle had said, we have this armour to defend us both in prosperity and adversity. By the doctrine of the Gospel, and by the power of God, the apostles were furnished with offensive and defensive weapons; they could ever defend themselves and discomfit their foes.

Verse 8. By honour and dishonour] By going through both; sometimes respected, sometimes despised.

By evil report and good report] Sometimes praised; at other times calumniated.

As deceivers] Said to carry about a false doctrine for our secular emolument.

And yet true] Demonstrated by the nature of the doctrine, as well as by our life and conversation, that we are true men; having nothing in view but God's glory, and the salvation of the world.

Verse 9. As unknown] Persons who are to be suspected as harbouring dark designs; persons of neither birth, parentage, nor respectable connexions in life.

And yet well known] Proved by our whole conduct to have no such designs; and demonstrated to be holy, upright, and useful, by the whole train of our peregrinations, through which we can be readily traced from place to place; having preached openly, and done nothing in a corner.

As dying] Through continual dangers, fatigues, and persecutions.

And behold we live] We are preserved by the mighty power of God in the greatest dangers and deaths.

As chastened] As though we were disobedient children:

Yet not killed] Though we continue in the very same line of conduct that is supposed to bring on us those chastisements; and which, if it were criminal, would justly expose us to death for incorrigible obstinacy; but our preservation is a proof that we please God.

Verse 10. As sorrowful] Considerate men, supposing from our persecuted state and laborious occupation, (often destitute of the necessaries of life, seldom enjoying its conveniences, and scarcely ever its comforts,) that we must be the most miserable of all men.

Yet always rejoicing] Having the consolations of God's Spirit at all times; and a glorious prospect of a blessed immortality.

As poor] Destitute of all worldly good and secular interest.

Yet making many rich] By dispensing to them the treasures of salvation; making them rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom.

The Gospel, when faithfully preached, and fully received, better the condition of the poor. It makes them sober; so they save what before they profusely and riotously spent: it makes them diligent, and thus they employ time to useful purposes, which they before squandered away. They, therefore, both save and gain by religion; and these must lead to an increase of property. Therefore, they are made rich; at least, in comparison with that sinful, profligate state, in which they were before they received the truth of the Gospel.

And yet possessing all things] That are really necessary to the preservation of our lives. For the wants under which we labour for a time, are supplied again by a bountiful Providence. The man who possesses a contented spirit, possesses all things; for he is satisfied with every dispensation of the Providence of God; and "a contented mind, is a continual feast."

Verse 11. O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you] I speak to you with the utmost freedom and fluency, because of my affection for you.

Our heart is enlarged] It is expanded to take you and all your interests in; and to keep you in the most affectionate remembrance.

The preceding verses contain a very fine specimen of a very powerful and commanding eloquence.

Verse 12. Ye are not straitened in us] That is, ye have not a narrow place in our affections: the metaphor here is taken from the case of a person pent up in a small or narrow place, where there is scarcely room to breathe.

Ye are straitened in your own bowels.] I have not the same place in your affections, which you have in mine. The bowels are used in Scripture to denote the most tender affections. See the note on Matt. ix. 26.

Verse 13. Now for a recompense in the same] That you may, in some sort, repay me for my affection toward you. I speak to you as unto my children, whom I have a right to command: be ye also enlarged, love me as I love you.

Verse 14. Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers] This is a military term; keep in your own ranks; do not leave the Christian community to join in that of the heathens. The verb συνεζυγισθητε, signifies to leave one's own rank, place, or order, and go into another: and here it must signify not only that they should not associate with the Gentiles in their idolatrous feasts; but that they should not apostatize from Christianity: and the questions which follow, show that there was a sort of fellowship that some of the Christians had formed with the heathens, which was both wicked and absurd; and if not speedily checked, would infallibly lead to final apostasy.

Some apply this exhortation to pious persons marrying with those who are not decidedly religious, and converted to God. That the exhortation may be thus applied, I grant; but it is certainly not the meaning of the apostle in this place.

For what fellowship, &c.] As righteousness cannot have communion with unrighteousness; and light cannot dwell with darkness; so Christ can have no concord with Belial; nor can he that believeth, have any with an infidel. All these points were self-evident: how then could they keep up the profession of Christianity, or pretend to be under its influence, while they associated with the unrighteous, had communion with darkness, concord with Belial, and partook with infidels?

Verse 16. What agreement hath the temple of God with idols?] Nothing could appear more abominable to a Jew, than an idol in the temple of God: here, then, could be no agreement; the worship of the two is wholly incompatible. An idolater never worships the true God: a Christian never worships an idol. If ye join in idolatrous rites, it is impossible that ye should be Christians.

Ye are the temple of the living God] God intends to make the heart of every believer his own house.

I will dwell in them, and walk in them] The words are very emphatic, σκηνωσω εν υμιν; I will inhabit in them. I will not be as a way-faring man, who turns aside to tarry as for a night; but I will take up my constant residence with them: I will dwell in and among them

Isai. 52. 11. Ch. 7. 1. Rev. 18. 4.

I will be their God] They shall have no other God; they shall have none besides me: and if they take me for their God, I will be to them all that an infinite, eternal, and self-sufficient Being can be to his intelligent offspring.

They shall be my people] If they take me for their God, their supreme and eternal Good: I will take them for my people, and instruct, enlighten, defend, provide for, support, and bless them, as if I had none else to care for in the creation.

Verse 17. Wherefore come out from among them] Is it not plain from this, and the following verse, that God would be their God, only on the ground of their taking him for such: and that this depended on their being separated from the works and workers of iniquity; for God could not inhabit in them, if they had concord with Belial, a portion with infidels, &c. Those who will have the promise of God fulfilled to them, must come under the conditions of these promises: if they are not separate—if they touch the unclean thing, God will not receive them; and, therefore, will not be their God; nor shall they be his people.

Verse 18. Will be a Father unto you] I will act towards you as the most affectionate father can act towards his most tender, and best beloved child.

And ye shall be my sons and daughters] Ye shall all be of the household of God; the family of heaven; ye shall be holy, happy, and continually safe.

Jer. 31. 1, 9. Rev. 21. 7.

Earthly fathers, however loving and affectionate, may fail to provide for their children, because every thing is not at their disposal; they may frequently lack both the power and the means, though to will may be present with them: but the Lord who made, and who governs all things, can never lack will, power, nor means. The promise is sure to the children; and the children are those who take the Almighty for their God. For the promise belongs to no soul that is not separate from sinful ways, works, and men: those who touch the unclean thing, i. e. who do what God forbids, and hold communion with unrighteousness, can never stand in the endearing relation of children to God Almighty: and this is most forcibly stated by God himself in these verses, and in the beginning of the following chapter; the first verse of which should conclude this.

To the Jews the promises were originally made: they would not have God for their God; but would work iniquity. What was the consequence? God cast them off: and those who were joined to iniquity were separated from Him. "Then, said God, call his name Loammi: for ye are not my people, and I will not be your God." Hos. i. 9. The Jews were therefore cast off, and the Gentiles taken in their place; but even these, under the new covenant, are taken in expressly under the same conditions, as the apostle here most fully states. Those who apply these words in any other way, pervert their meaning, and sin against their souls.

CHAPTER VII.

The apostle's inference from the preceding exhortation, 1. He presses them to receive him with affection, because of his great love towards them, 2—4. He tells them what distress he felt on their account at Macedonia, till he had met with Titus, and heard of their prosperity, 5—7. He rejoices that his first epistle was made the means of their reformation, 8, 9. States how they were affected by his letter, and the process of their reformation, 10, 11. Shows why he had written to them, 12. Rejoices that his boasting of them to Titus, is found to be a truth; and takes occasion to mention the great affection of Titus for them; and his own confidence in them, 13—16.

NOTES ON CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. Having therefore these promises] The promises mentioned in the three last verses of the preceding chapter; to which this verse should certainly be joined.

Let us cleanse ourselves] Let us apply to him for the requisite grace of purification; and avoid every thing in spirit and practice which is opposite to the doctrine of God; and which has a tendency to pollute the soul.

Filthiness of the flesh] The apostle undoubtedly means drunkenness, fornication, adultery, and all such sins as are done immediately against the body: and by filthiness of the spirit, all im pure desires, unholy thoughts, and polluting imaginations. If we avoid and abhor evil inclinations, and turn away our eyes from beholding vanity, incentives to evil being thus lessened, for the eye affects the heart, there will be the less danger of our falling into outward sin. And if we avoid all outward occasions of sinning, evil propensities will certainly be lessened. All this is our work under the common aids of the grace of God. We may turn away our eyes and ears from evil; or we may indulge both in what will infallibly beget evil desires and tempers in the soul; and under the same influence we may avoid every act of iniquity; for even Satan himself cannot, by any power he has, constrain us to commit uncleanness, robbery, drunkenness, murder, &c. These are things in which both body and soul must consent. But still, withholding the eye, the ear, the hand, and the body in general, from sights, reports, and acts of evil, will not purify a fallen spirit: it is the grace and Spirit of Christ alone, powerfully applied for this very purpose, that can purify the conscience and the heart from all dead works. But if we do not withhold the food by which the man of sin is nourished and supported, we cannot expect God to purify our hearts. While we are striving against sin, we may expect the Spirit of God to purify us by his inspiration from all unrighteousness, that we may perfectly love and magnify our Maker. How can those expect God to purify their hearts, who are continually indulging their eyes, ears, and hands in what is forbidden; and in what tends to increase and bring into action all the evil propensities of the soul?

Perfecting holiness] Getting the whole mind of Christ brought into the soul. This is the grand object of a genuine Christian's pursuit. The means of accomplishing this are, 1. Resisting and avoiding sin, in all its inviting and seducing forms. 2. Setting the fear of God before our eyes, that we may dread his displeasure, and abhor whatever might excite it; and whatever might provoke him to withhold his manna from our mouth. We see, therefore, that there is a strong and orthodox sense in which we may cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and of the spirit; and thus perfect holiness in the fear of God.

Verse 2. Receive us] Χαρισματα ημεας. This address is variously understood. Receive us into your affections; love us as we love you; receive us as your apostles and teachers; we have given you full proof that God hath both sent and owned us. Receive, comprehend what we now say to you, and carefully mark it.

We have wronged no man] We have never acted contrary to the strictest justice.

We have corrupted no man] With any false doctrine or pernicious opinion.

for ^b I have said before, that ye are in our hearts to die and live with you.

We have defrauded no man] Of any part of his property. But what have your false teachers done? They have beguiled you from the simplicity of the truth, and thus corrupted your minds. Chap. xi. 3. They have brought you into bondage; they have taken of you; devoured you; exalted themselves against you; and ye have patiently suffered all this, chap. xi. 20. It is plain that he refers here to the false apostle, or teacher, which they had among them.

Verse 3. I speak not this to condemn you] I do not speak to reproach, but to correct you. I wish you to open your eyes, and see how you are corrupted, spoiled and impoverished by those whom ye have incautiously preferred to the true apostles of Jesus Christ.

I have said before, that ye are in our hearts] He has in effect and substance said this, chap. i. 6—8. ii. 4, 12. iii. 2. and ver. 13. where see the passages at length, and the notes.

To die and live with you] An expression which points out the strongest affection, as in cases where love blinds us to the faults of those whom we love; and causes us to prefer them to all others, like that in Horace:

Quanquam sidere pulchrior
Ille est, tu levior cortice, et improbo Iracundior Adria:
Tecum vivere amem, tecum obcam libens.
Odar. lib. iii. Od. ix. ver. 21.

“ Though he exceed in beauty far
The rising lustre of a star;
Though light as cork thy fancy strays,
Thy passions wild as angry seas
When vex'd with storms; yet gladly I With thee would live, with thee would die.”
FRANCIS.

From all appearance, there never was a church less worthy of an apostle's affection than this church was at this time; and yet no one ever more beloved. The above quotation applies to this case in full force.

Verse 4. Great is my boldness of speech] He seems to refer to the manner in which he spoke of them to others.

Great is my glorying of you] They had probably been very loving and affectionate, previously to the time in which they were perverted by their false apostle. He therefore had boasted of them in all the churches.

I am filled with comfort] My affection for you has still the most powerful ascendancy in my soul. Here we may see the affection of the most tender father to his children.

I am exceeding joyful] ὑπερπερισσομαι: I superabound in joy. I have a joy beyond expression. This is an extremely rare verb. I have not met with it in any Greek author; and it occurs nowhere in the New Testament but here and in Rom. v. 20.

glorying of you: * I am filled with comfort, I am exceeding joyful in all our tribulation.

5 For ^b when we were come into Macedonia, our flesh had no rest, but ^c we were troubled on every side; ^d without were fightings, within were fears.

6 Nevertheless, ^e God, that comforteth those that are cast down, comforted us by ^f the coming of Titus;

7 And not by his coming only, but by the consolation wherewith he was comforted in you, when he told us your earnest desire, your mourning, your fervent mind towards me; so that I rejoiced the more.

In all our tribulation] Perhaps et, here should be rendered under instead of in, as it signifies, Mark ii. 26. Luke iii. 2. Acts xi. 28. Under all our tribulations, I feel inexpressible joy on your account.

Verse 5. When we were come into Macedonia] St. Paul having left Ephesus, came to Troas, where he stopped some time: afterward he came to Macedonia; whence he wrote this epistle.

Our flesh had no rest] So exceedingly anxious was he to know the success of his first epistle to them.

Without were fightings] The oppositions of Pagans, Jews, and false brethren.

Within were fears] Uncertain conjectures relative to the success of his epistle; fears lest the severity of it should alienate their affections utterly from him; fears lest the party of the incestuous person should have prevailed; fears lest the teaching of the false apostle should have perverted their minds from the simplicity of the truth; all was uncertainty; all apprehension; and the Spirit of God did not think proper to remove the causes of these apprehensions in any extraordinary way.

Verse 6. Comforted us by the coming of Titus] Who brought him a most satisfactory account of the success of his epistle; and the good state of the Corinthian church.

Verse 7. He told us your earnest desire] To see me, and correct what was amiss among yourselves.

Your mourning] Because you had sinned.

Your fervent mind] The zeal you felt to testify your affectionate regard for me.

Verse 8. I do not repent, though I did repent] Though I had many doubts in my mind, concerning the success of my letter; and though I grieved, that I was obliged to write with so much severity, the case absolutely requiring it; yet now I am not sorry that I have written that 9 Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance: for ye were made sorry ^h after a godly manner, that ye might receive damage by us in nothing.

10 For ⁱ godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation, not to be repented of: ^k but the sorrow of the world worketh death.

11 For behold this selfsame thing, that ye sorrowed after a godly sort, what carefulness it wrought in you; yea, what clearing of yourselves; yea, what indignation; yea, what fear; yea, letter, because I find it has completely answered the end for which it was sent.

Verse 9. Ye sorrowed to repentance] Ye had such a sorrow as produced a complete change of mind and conduct. We see that a man may sorrow, and yet not repent.

Made sorry, after a godly manner] It was not a sorrow because ye were found out, and thus solemnly reprehended; but a sorrow because ye had sinned against God, and which consideration caused you to grieve more, than the apprehension of any punishment.

Damage by us in nothing.] Your repentance prevented that exercise of my apostolic duty, which would have consigned your bodies to destruction, that your souls might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

Verse 10. For godly sorrow] That which has the breach of God's holy law for its object.

Worketh repentance] A thorough change of mind unto salvation; because the person who feels it, cannot rest till he find pardon through the mercy of God.

But the sorrow of the world worketh death] Sorrow for lost goods, lost friends, death of relatives, &c. when it is poignant and deep, produces diseases, increases those that already exist, and often leads men to lay desperate hands on themselves. This sorrow leads to destruction: the other leads to salvation; the one leads to heaven, the other to hell.

Verse 11. What carefulness it wrought in you] Carefulness of obeying my directions, ver. 15. yea, what clearing of yourselves from guilt, by inflicting censures on the guilty person; and putting away evil from among you, 1 Cor. xv. 18. yea, what indignation against him who had dishonoured his profession, and defiled the church; yea, what fear of my displeasure, and the rod which I threatened, 1 Cor. iv. 21. yea, what vehement desire to rectify what was amiss in this matter, ver. 7. yea, what zeal for me;

12 Wherefore, though I wrote unto you, I did it not for his cause that had done the wrong, nor for his cause that suffered wrong; ^a but that our care for you in the sight of God might appear unto you.

13 Therefore we were comforted in your comfort: yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, yea, what revenge in punishing the delinquent See Whitby.

In all things, &c.] In the whole of your conduct in this affair, since ye have received my letter, ye have approved yourselves to be clear, ἄγροις; not only to be clear of contumacy and obstinate persistence in your former conduct; but to have done all in the compass of your power to rectify the abuses which had crept in among you. The Corinthians were not clear, i. e. innocent, or void of blame in the fact: but they were clear of all blame in their endeavours to remove the evil.

Verse 12. Not for his cause that had done the wrong] viz. the incestuous person.

Nor for his cause that suffered wrong] Some think the apostle means himself; others, that he means the church at Corinth, the singular being put for the plural; others, the family of the incestuous person; and others, the father of the incestuous person: if this latter opinion be adopted, it would seem to intimate that the father of this person was yet alive; which would make the transgression more flagrant; but these words might be spoken in reference to the father, if dead; whose cause should be vindicated, as his injured honour might be considered like Abel's blood, to be crying from the earth.

But that our care for you—might appear] It was not to get the delinquent punished, nor merely to do justice to those who had suffered in this business, that the apostle wrote his epistle to them: but that they might have the fullest proof of his fatherly affection for them, and his concern for the honour of God: and that they might thereby see how unnatural their opposition to him was: and what cause they had to prefer him who was ready to give up his life in their service, to that false apostle or teacher, who was corrupting their minds, leading them from the simplicity of the truth, and making a gain of them.

Verse 13. For the joy of Titus] Titus, who had now met St. Paul at Macedonia, gave him the most flattering accounts of the improved state of the Corinthian church: and indeed their kind usage of Titus was a full proof of their affection for St. Paul.

because his spirit ^b was refreshed by you all.

14 For if I have boasted any thing to him of you, I am not ashamed; but as we spake all things to you in truth, even so our boasting, which I made before Titus, is found a truth.

15 And his ^c inward affection is more abundant towards you, whilst he remembereth ^d the obedience of you all, how with fear and trembling ye received him.

16 I rejoice therefore that ^e I have confidence in you, in all things.

^d Ch. 2. 9. Phil. 2. 12. — ^e 2 Thess. 3. 4. Philem. 8, 21.

Verse 14. For if I have boasted] The apostle had given Titus a very high character of this church; and of their attachment to himself: and doubtless this was the case previously to the evil teacher getting among them; who had succeeded in changing their conduct, and changing in a great measure their character also; but now they return to themselves, resume their lost ground, so that the good character which the apostle gave them before, and which they had for a time forfeited, is now as applicable to them as ever. Therefore his boasting of them is still found a truth.

Verse 15. And his inward affection] Τα σπλαγχνία αὐτοῦ; those bowels of his; his most tender affection. For the meaning of this word, see the note on Matt. ix. 36.

Whilst he remembereth the obedience of you all] This is a very natural picture: he represents Titus as overjoyed, even while he is delivering his account of the Corinthian church. He expatiated on it with extreme delight, and thereby showed at once, both his love for St. Paul, and his love for them. He loved them because they so loved the apostle: and he loved them because they had shown such kindness to himself; and he loved them because he found so many excellent and rare gifts joined to so much humility, producing such an exemplary and holy life.

With fear and trembling ye received him.] Ye revered his authority; ye were obedient to his directions; and ye dreaded lest any thing should be undone or ill done which he had delivered to you in the name of God.

Verse 16. I have confidence in you in all things.] It appears that the apostle was now fully persuaded, from the accounts given by Titus, that every scandal had been put away from this church; and that the faction, which had long distracted and divided them, was nearly broken; that all was on the eve of being restored to its primitive purity and excellence; that their character was now so firmly fixed, that there was no reason to apprehend that they should be again tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine.

1. Thus a happy termination is put to an affair that seemed likely to ruin the Corinthian church, not only at Corinth, but through all Greece: for, if this bad man, who had been chief in opposing the apostle's authority, bringing in licentious doctrines, and denying the resurrection of the dead, had ultimately succeeded at Corinth, his doctrine and influence would soon have extended over Greece and Asia Minor: and the great work of God which had been wrought in those parts would have been totally destroyed. This one consideration is sufficient to account for the apostle's great anxiety and distress, on account of the divisions and heresies at Corinth. He knew it was a most pernicious leaven, and, unless destroyed, must destroy the work of God. The loss of the affections of the church at Corinth, however much it might affect the tender fatherly heart of the apostle, cannot account for the awful apprehensions, poignant distress, and deep anguish, which he, in different parts of these epistles, so feelingly describes; and which he describes as having been invariably his portion from the time that he heard of their perversion, till he was assured of their restoration, by the account brought by Titus.

2. A scandal or heresy in the church of God is ruinous at all times; but particularly so when the cause is in its infancy: and therefore the messengers of God cannot be too careful to lay the foundation well in doctrine, to establish the strictest discipline; and to be very cautious who they admit and accredit as members of the church of Christ. It is certain that the door should be opened wide to admit penitent sinners; but the watchman should ever stand by, to see that no improper person enter in. Christian prudence should ever be connected with Christian zeal. It is a great work to bring sinners to Christ; it is a greater work to preserve them in the faith: and it requires much grace and much wisdom to keep the church of Christ pure; not only by not permitting the unholy to enter; but by casting out those who apostatize or work iniquity. Slackness in discipline generally precedes corruption of doctrine; the former generating the latter.

CHAPTER VIII.

The apostle stirs them up to make a collection for the poor Christians at Jerusalem, by the very liberal contributions of the people of Macedonia, for the same purpose; who were comparatively a poor people, 1—5. He tells them that he had desired Titus to finish this good work among them, which he had begun: hoping that as they abounded in many excellent gifts and graces, they would abound in this also, 6—8. He exhorts them to this by the example of Jesus Christ; who, though rich, subjected himself to voluntary poverty, that they might be enriched, 9. He shows them that this contribution, which had been long ago begun, should have been long since finished, 10. And that they should do every thing with a ready and willing mind, according to the ability which God had given them; that abundance should not prevail on one hand, while pinching poverty ruled on the other: but that there should be an equality, 11—14. He shows, from the distribution of the manna in the wilderness, that the design of God was, that every member of his spiritual household, should have the necessaries of life, 15. He tells them that he had now sent Titus and another with him, to Corinth, to complete this great work, 16—22. NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. Moreover, brethren, we do you to wit] In all our dignified version very few ill constructed sentences can be found: however here is one, and the worst in the book. We do you to wit, is in the original γρηγοροῦμεν ὑμῖν, we make known unto you. This is plain and intelligible; the other is not so: and the form is now obsolete.

The grace of God bestowed] Dr. Whitby has made it fully evident that the χάρις Θεοῦ, signifies the charitable contribution made by the churches in Macedonia, to which they were excited by the grace or influence of God upon their hearts: and, that δέδωκεν ὑμῖν, cannot signify bestowed on, but given in. That χάρις means liberality, appears from verse 6. we desired Titus that as he had begun, so he would finish, τὴν χάριν ταύτην, this charitable contribution. And ver. 7. that ye abound ἐν ταύτῃ τῇ χάριτι, in this liberal contribution. And ver. 19. who was chosen of the church to travel with us, οὗ τῇ χάριτι ταύτῃ, with this charitable contribution, which is administered, which is to be dispensed by us. So chap. ix. 8. God is able to make, περισσεύειν, all liberality to abound towards you. And 1 Cor. xiii. 3. to bring, τὴν χάριν, your liberality to the poor saints. Hence χάρις, is by Hesychius and Phavorinus, interpreted a gift, as it is here by the apostle, Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift, chap. ix. 14, 15. This charity is styled the grace of God, either from its exceeding greatness, as the cedars of God, and mountains of God, signify great cedars, and great mountains; Psal. xxxi. 7. lxxx. 11. Or rather it is called so, as proceeding from God, who is

9 For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, that, though he was

The churches of Macedonia] These were Philippi, Thessalonica, Berea, &c.

Verse 2. In a great trial of affliction] The sense of this verse is the following: The Macedonians, though both poor and persecuted, rejoiced exceedingly, that an opportunity was afforded them of doing good to their more impoverished and more persecuted brethren. We can scarcely ever speak of poverty and affliction in an absolute sense: they are only comparative. Even the poor are called to relieve those who are poorer than themselves; and the afflicted to comfort those who are more afflicted than they are. The poor and afflicted churches of Macedonia felt this duty; and therefore came forward to the uttermost of their power to relieve their more impoverished and afflicted brethren in Judea.

Verse 3. For to their power, &c.] In their liberality they had no rule but their ability; they believed they were bound to contribute all they could; and even this rule they transgressed: for they went beyond their power; they deprived themselves for a time of the necessities of life, in order to give to others who were destitute even of necessities.

Verse 4. Praying us with much entreaty] We had not to solicit them to this great act of kindness; they even entreated us to accept their bounty; and to take on ourselves the administration or application of it to the wants of the poor in Judea.

Verse 5. Not as we hoped] They far exceeded our expectations; for they consecrated themselves entirely to the work of God: giving themselves and all they possessed first unto the Lord: and then as they saw that it was the will of God that they should come especially forward in this charitable work, they gave themselves to us, to assist to the uttermost, in providing relief for the suffering Christians in Judea.

Verse 6. That we desired Titus] Titus had probably laid the plan of this contribution when he was before at Corinth, according to the direction given by the apostle, 1 Cor. xvi. 1, &c.

Verse 7. As ye abound in every thing] See the note on 1 Cor. i. 5. In faith, crediting the whole testimony of God: in utterance, λογος; in doctrine, knowing what to teach; knowledge of God's will, and prudence to direct you in teaching and doing it; in diligence, to amend all that is wrong among you, and to do what is right; and in love to us, whom now ye prize as the apostles of the Lord, and your pastors in him.

Abound in this grace also] Be as eminent for your charitable disposition, as ye are for your faith, doctrine, knowledge, diligence, and love.

Verse 8. I speak not by commandment] I do not positively order this: I assume no right or authority over your property; what you devote of your substance to charitable purposes must be your own work, and a free-will offering.

The forwardness of others] Viz. the churches of Macedonia, which had already exerted themselves so very much in this good work. And the apostle here intimates that he takes this opportunity to apprise them of the zeal of the Macedonians, lest those at Corinth, who excelled in every other gift, should be out-done in this. Their own honour, if better motives were absent, would induce them to exert themselves, that they might not be out-done by others. And then as they had professed great love for the apostle, and this was a service that lay near his heart, they would prove the sincerity of that professed love, by a liberal contribution for the afflicted and destitute Jewish Christians.

Verse 9. For ye know the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ] This was the strongest argument of all; and it is urged home by the apostle with admirable address.

Ye know] Ye are acquainted with God's endless love in sending Jesus Christ into the world; and ye know the grace, the infinite benevolence of Christ himself.

That, though he was rich] The Possessor, as he was the Creator of the heavens and the earth: For your sakes he became poor; he emptied himself, and made himself of no reputation; and took upon himself the form of a servant; and humbled himself unto death, even the death of the cross; that ye, through his poverty, through his humiliation and death, might be

A. M. 4061.
A. D. 57.
A. U. C. 810.
An. Imp. Nerois Cæs. 4.

rich, yet for your sakes he became poor, that ye through his poverty might be rich.

10 And herein ^a I give my advice: for ^b this is expedient for you, who have begun before, not only to do, but also to be ^c forward ^d a year ago.

11 Now therefore perform the doing of it; that as there was a readiness to will, so there may be a performance also out of that which ye have.

12 For ^e if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that rich; might regain your forfeited inheritance, and be enriched with every grace of his Holy Spirit, and brought at last to his eternal glory.

If Jesus Christ, as some contend, were only a mere man, in what sense could he be said to be rich? His family was poor in Bethlehem; his parents were very poor also; he himself never possessed any property among men from the stable to the cross; nor had he any thing to bequeath at his death but his peace. And in what way could the poverty of one man make a multitude rich? These are questions, which on the Socinian scheme can never be satisfactorily answered.

Verse 10. Herein I give my advice] For I speak not by way of commandment, ver. 8.

For this is expedient for you] It is necessary you should do this to preserve a consistency of conduct; for ye began this work a year ago, and it is necessary that ye should complete it as soon as possible.

Not only to do, but also to be forward] Το πρῶτον—καὶ τὸ θῆλον, literally to do and to will; but as the will must be before the deed, θῆλον must be taken here in the sense of delight, as it frequently means in the Old and New Testaments. See several examples in Whitby.

Some MSS. transpose the words; allowing this, there is no difficulty.

A year ago] Ἄπο πρῶτον. It was about a year before this, that the apostle, in his first epistle, ch. xvi. 2. had exhorted them to make this contribution: and there is no doubt that they, in obedience to his directions, had begun to lay up in store for this charitable purpose: he, therefore, wishes them to complete this good work, and thus show that they were not led to it by the example of the Macedonians, seeing they themselves had been first movers in this business.

Verse 11. A readiness to will, so there may be a performance] Ye have willed and purposed this; now, perform it.

Out of that which ye have] Give, as God has enabled you; and give as God has disposed you. He requires each man to do as he can; and accepts the will where the means are wanting to perform the deed.

Verse 12. According to that a man hath] According to his real property; not taking that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not.

13 For I mean not that other men be eased, and ye burdened:

14 But by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want; that their abundance also may be a supply for your want: that there may be equality:

15 As it is written, ^f He that had gathered much, had nothing over; and he that had gathered little, had no lack.

which belongs to his own family, and is indispensably necessary for their support; and not taking that which belongs to others; viz. what he owes to any man.

Verse 13. That other men be eased] I do not design that you should impoverish yourselves, in order that others may live affluently.

Verse 14. But by an equality] That you may do to those who are distressed now; as, on a change of circumstances, you would wish them to do to you. And I only wish that, of your abundance, you would now minister to their wants: and it may be, that their abundance may yet supply your wants; for, so liable are all human affairs to change, that it is possible that you, rich Corinthians, should need the charitable help of others: as it is, that those Jews who once had need of nothing, should now be dependent on your bounty.

That there may be equality] That ye may exert yourselves so, in behalf of those poor people, that there may be, between you, an equality in the necessaries of life: your abundance supplying them with that of which they are utterly destitute.

Verse 15. He that had gathered much, had nothing over] On the passage to which the apostle alludes, Exod. xvi. 18. I have stated that, probably every man gathered as much manna as he could, and when he brought it home and measured it by the omer, (for this was the measure for each man's eating,) if he had a surplus, it went to the supply of some other family, that had not been able to collect enough; the family being large, and the time in which the manna might be gathered, before the heat of the day, not being sufficient to collect a supply for so numerous a household; several of whom might be so confined as not to be able to collect for themselves. Thus there was an equality among the Israelites in reference to this thing: and in this light, these words of St. Paul lead us to view the passage. To apply this to the present case: the Corinthians, in the course of God's providence, had gathered more than was absolutely necessary for their own support; by giving the surplus to the persecuted and impoverished Christian Jews, there would be an equality. Both would then possess the necessaries of life, though still the one might have more property than the other.

A. M. 4061. 16 But thanks be to God, which put the same earnest care into the heart of Titus for you.

17 For indeed he accepted ^a the exhortation; but being more forward, of his own accord he went unto you.

18 And we have sent with him ^b the brother, whose praise is in the Gospel throughout all the churches;

19 And not that only, but who was also ^c chosen of the churches to travel with us with this ^d grace, which is administered by us ^e to the glory of the same Lord, and declaration of your ready mind :

20 Avoiding this, that no man should blame us in this abundance which is administered by us :

^a Ver. 6.—^b Ch. 12. 18.—^c 1 Cor. 16. 3, 4.—^d Or, gift.
^e Ver. 4. 6, 7. Ch. 9. 8.—Ch. 4. 15.

Verse 16. But thanks be to God] He thanks God who had already disposed the heart of Titus to attend to this business; and, with his usual address, considers all this as done in the behalf of the Corinthian church; and that though the poor Christians in Judea are to have the immediate benefit, yet God put honour upon them, in making them his instruments in supplying the wants of others. He who is an almoner to God Almighty, is highly honoured indeed.

Verse 17. He accepted the exhortation] I advised him to visit you, and excite you to this good work; and I found that he was already disposed in his heart to do it: God put this earnest care in the heart of Titus for you, ver. 16.

Verse 18. The brother, whose praise is in the Gospel] Who this brother was, we cannot tell: some suppose it was St. Luke, who wrote a Gospel, and who was the companion of St. Paul in several of his travels; others think it was Silas; others, Barnabas; others, Mark; and others, Apollos. Neither ancients nor moderns agree in either: but Luke, John, and Mark, seem to have the most probable opinions in their favour. Whoever the person was, he was sufficiently known to the Corinthians, as we learn by what the apostle says of him in this place.

Verse 19. Chosen of the churches to travel with us] Χηροτονησας, appointed by a show of hands, from χερς, the hand, and τενω, to extend. This appointment, by the suffrage of the churches, seems to refer more to St. Luka than any one else; unless we suppose he refers to the transaction, Acts xv. 40, 41. and then it would appear that Silas is the person intended.

the reading of almost all the best MSS. and all the Versions. This is doubtless the true reading.

Verse 20. Avoiding this, that no man should blame us] Taking this prudent caution, to have witnesses of our conduct; and such as were chosen by the churches themselves; that we might not be suspected of having either embezzled or misapplied their bounty.—See the note on 1 Cor. xvi. 4.

Verse 21. Providing for honest things] Taking care to act so, as not only to be clear in the sight of God, but also to be clear in the sight of all men; avoiding even the appearance of evil. I wish the reader to refer to the excellent note on 1 Cor. xvi. 4. which I have extracted from Dr. Paley.

Verse 22. We have sent with them] Titus, and probably Luke; our brother, probably Apollos.

Now much more diligent] Finding that I have the fullest confidence in your complete reformation, and love to me, he engages in this business with alacrity; and exceeds even his former diligence.

Verse 23. Whether any do inquire of Titus] Should it be asked who is this Titus? I answer, he is my companion, and my fellow-labourer in reference to you.—2 Cor. ii. 13. vii. 6, 7. Should any inquire who are these brethren, Luke and Apollos? I answer, they are Αποστολοι, apostles of the churches, and intensely bent on promoting the glory of Christ.

Verse 24. Wherefore show ye to them, and before the churches, &c.] Seeing they are persons every way worthy in themselves; and coming to you on such an important occasion, and so highly recommended, receive them affectionately; and let them thus see, that the very high character I have given of you is not exaggerated; and that you are as ready, in every work of charity, as I have stated you to be. Act in this for your own honour.

1. The whole of this chapter, and the following, is occupied in exciting the richer followers of Christ to be liberal to the poorer: the obligation of each to be so: the reasons on which that obligation is founded; the arguments to enforce the obligation from those reasons; are all clearly stated, and most dexterously and forcibly managed. These two chapters afford a perfect model for a Christian minister, who is pleading the cause of the poor.

2. In the management of charities a man ought carefully to avoid the least suspicion of avarice, self-interest, and unfaithfulness. How few persons are entirely free from the upbraidings of their own consciences, in the matter of alms? But who will be able to hear the upbraidings of Christ at the time of death and judgment? No man can waste without injustice; or neglect, without sin, those things of which he is only the dispenser and steward.

3. God has not settled an equality among men by their birth, to the end that this equality might be the work of his grace. He has put the temporal portion of the poor into the hands of the rich; and the spiritual portion of the rich into the hands of the poor, on purpose to keep up a good understanding betwixt the members of the same body, by a mutual dependence on one another. He who withholds the part belonging to the poor, steals more from himself than from them. Let every one answer this admirable design of God, and labour to re-establish equality: the poor in praying much for the rich, and the rich in giving much to the poor.—See Quemel.

St Paul intimates, that so ready were the Corinthians to make this charitable contribution, that it was scarcely necessary for him to write, 1, 2. But lest they should not be ready when he came, he had sent the brethren Titus, &c. beforehand; lest, if any of the Macedonians should come with him, they should find them not prepared, though he had boasted so much of their ready mind, 3—5. He gives them directions how they shall contribute; and the advantage to be gained by it, in the fulfilment of the promises of God, 6—11. He shows them that, by this means, the poor shall be relieved, God glorified, their Christian temper manifested, and the prayers of many engaged in their behalf, 12—14. And concludes, with giving thanks to God, for his unspeakable gift, 15.

2 For I know ^b the forwardness of your mind, ^c for which I boast of you to them of Macedonia, that ^d Achaia was ready a year ago; and your zeal hath provoked very many.

3 ^e Yet have I sent the brethren, lest our boasting of you should be in vain in this behalf; that, as I said, ye may be ready:

4 Lest haply if they of Macedonia come with me, and find you unprepared, we (that we say not, ye) should be ashamed in this same confident boasting.

5 Therefore I thought it necessary to exhort the brethren, that they would go before unto you, and make up beforehand your ^f bounty, ^g whereof ye had notice before, that the same might be ready, as a matter of bounty, and not as of covetousness.

NOTES ON CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. It is superfluous for me to write to you] I need not enlarge, having already said enough.—See the preceding chapter.

Verse 2. I know the forwardness of your mind] You have already firmly purposed to contribute to the support of the poor and suffering saints.

That Achaia was ready a year ago] The whole of the Morea was anciently called Achaia, the capital of which was Corinth. The apostle means not only Corinth, but other churches in different parts about Corinth: we know there was a church at Cenchrea, one of the ports on the Corinthian Isthmus.

Your zeal hath provoked very many.] Hearing that the Corinthians were so intent on the relief of the sufferers in Palestine, other churches, and especially they of Macedonia, came forward the more promptly and liberally.

Verse 3. Yet have I sent the brethren] Titus and his companions, mentioned in the preceding chapter.

That, as I said, ye may be ready] And he wished them to be ready, that they might preserve the good character he had given them: this was for their honour, and if they did not take care to do so, he might be reputed a liar; and thus, both they and himself, be ashamed before the Macedonians; should any of them, at this time, accompany him to Corinth.

Verse 5. Whereof ye had notice before] Instead of προσηγγελασθη, spoken of before, BCDEFG. several others; with the Coptic, Vulgate, Itala, and several of the Fathers, have προσηγγελασθη, what was promised before. The sense is not very different: probably the latter reading was intended to explain the former.—See the Margin.

Bounty, and not as of covetousness.] Had they been backward, strangers might have attributed this to a covetous principle; as it would appear, that they were loth to give up their money; and that they parted with it only, when they could not, for shame, keep it any longer. This is the property of a covetous heart; whereas, readiness to give is the characteristic of a liberal mind. This makes a sufficiently plain sense; and we need not look, as some have done, for any new sense of πλουξία, covetousness, as if it were here to be understood as implying a small gift.

Verse 6. He which soweth sparingly] This is a plain maxim: no man can expect to reap, but in proportion as he has sowed. And here alms-giving is represented as a seed sown, which shall bring forth a crop. If the sowing be liberal, the crop shall be so too.

Sowing is used among the Jews to express alms-giving: so they understand Isai. xxxii. 20. Blessed are ye who sow beside all waters; i. e. who are ready to help every one that is in need. And Hos. x. 12. they interpret, Sow to yourselves alms-giving, and ye shall reap in mercy. If you show mercy to the poor, God will show mercy to you.

Verse 7. Not grudgingly, or of necessity] The Jews had in the temple two chests for alms; the one was ל צדקה of what was necessary; i. e. what the law required: the other was ל צדקה of the free-will-offerings. To escape perdition, some would grudgingly give what necessity obliged them. Others would give cheerfully, for the love of God, and through pity to the poor. Of the first, nothing is said: they simply did what the law required. Of the second, much is said; God loves them. The benefit of alms-giving is lost to the giver, when he does it with a grumbling heart. And, as he does not do the duty in the spirit of the duty, even the performance of the letter of the law, is an abomination in the sight of God.

To these two sorts of alms in the temple, the apostle most evidently alludes. See Schoetgen.

Verse 8. God is able to make all grace abound] We have already seen, chap. viii. 1. that the word grace, χαρις, in the connexion in which the apostle uses it in these chapters, signifies a charitable gift; here it certainly has the same meaning—"God is able to give you, in his mercy, abundance of temporal good; that lavgrace abound towards you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work:

9 (As it is written, ^e He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor: his righteousness remaineth for ever.

10 Now he that ^f ministereth seed to the sower, both minister bread for

Rom. 12. 8. Ch. 9. 12.—d Prov. 11. 24, 25. & 28. 27. Phil. 4. 19.—e Psal. 112. 9.—f Isai. 55. 10.

ing a sufficiency, ye may abound in every good work;" This refers to the sowing plenteously; those who do so shall reap plenteously; they shall have an abundance of God's blessings.

Verse 9. He hath dispersed abroad] Here is still the allusion to the sower. He sows much; not at home merely, or among those with whom he is acquainted, but abroad, among the strangers; whether of his own, or of another nation. The quotation is taken from Psal. cxii. 9.

He hath given to the poor] This is the interpretation of He hath scattered abroad: and therefore it is said, His righteousness remaineth for ever: his good work is had in remembrance before God. By righteousness, we have already seen that the Jews understand alms-giving. See the notes on Matt. vi. 1.

Verse 10. Now he that ministereth seed to the sower] The sower, as we have already seen, is he that gives alms of what he hath: and God, who requires him to give these alms, is here represented as providing him with the means. As in the creation, if God had not created the earth with every tree and plant, with its seed in itself; so that a harvest came, without a previous ploughing and sowing, there could have been no seed to deposit in the earth: so if God had not, in the course of his Providence, given them the property they had, it would be impossible for them to give alms. And, as even the well cultivated and sowed field would be unfruitful if God did not, by his unseen energy and blessing, cause it to bring forth, and bring to maturity; so would it have been with their property; it could not have increased, for without his blessing, riches take wings, and flee away, as an eagle towards heaven. Therefore, in every sense, it is God who ministers seed to the sower, and multiplies the seed sown. And, as all this properly comes from God, and cannot exist without him, he has a right to require that it be dispensed in that way which he judges best.

The word επιχορηγῶν, he that ministereth, is very emphatic; it signifies, he who leads up the chorus, from επι, to, and χορηγῶν, to lead the chorus; it means also, to join, to associate, to supply, or furnish one thing after another, so that there be no want, or chasm. Thus God is represented, in the course of his Providence, associating and connecting causes and effects; keeping every thing in its proper place, and state of dependence on another; and all upon himself; so that summer and winter, heat and cold, seed-time and harvest, regularly succeed each other. Thus God leads up this grand chorus of causes and effects: provides the seed to the hand of the sower; gives him skill to discern the times when the earth should be prepared for the grain; and when the grain should be sowed; blesses the earth, and causes it to bring forth and bud, so that it may again minister seed to the sower, and bread to the eater; and, by a watchful Providence, preserves every thing. The figure is beautiful; and shows us the grand system of causes and effects, all directed by and under the immediate guidance and government of God himself.

The fruits of your righteousness] Your beneficence, for so δικαιοσύνη, is here to be understood. See the note on Matt. vi. 1. already referred to.

Verse 11. Being enriched in every thing] Observe.—Why does God give riches?—That they may be applied to his glory, and the good of men. Why does he increase riches?—That those who have them may exercise all bountifulness. And if they be enriched in every thing, what will be the consequence if they do not exercise all bountifulness? Why, God will curse their blessings: the rust shall canker them, and the moth shall consume their garments. But if, on the other hand, they do thus apply them, then they cause thanksgiving to God. The 9th and 10th verses should be read in a parenthesis; for this verse connects with the eighth.

Verse 12. For the administration of this service] The poor are relieved, see the hand of God in this relief, and give God the glory of his grace.

Verse 13. By the experiment of this ministration] In this, and in the preceding, and following verses, the apostle enumerates the good effects that would be produced by their liberal alms-giving to the poor saints at Jerusalem. 1. The wants of the saints would be supplied. 2. Many thanksgivings would thereby be rendered unto God. 3. The Corinthians would thereby give proof of their subjection to the Gospel. And, 4. The prayers of those relieved will ascend up to God in the behalf of their benefactors.

Verse 14. The exceeding grace of God in you.] By the ὑπερβαλλούσαν χάριν, superabounding, or transcending grace of God, which was in them, the apostle most evidently means the merciful and charitable disposition which they had towards the suffering saints.

The whole connexion, indeed the whole chapter, proves this; and the apostle attributes this to its right source, the grace or goodness of 13 Whiles by the experiment of this ministration they glorify God for your professed subjection unto the Gospel of Christ, and for your liberal ^e distribution unto them, and unto all men;

14 And by their prayer for you, which long after you for the exceeding ^b grace of God in you.

15 Thanks be unto God ^f for his unspeakable gift.

God. They had the means of charity; but God had given these means: they had a feeling and charitable heart; but God was the author of it. Their charity was superabundant; and God had furnished both the disposition, the occasion, and the means, by which that disposition was to be made manifest.

Verse 15. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.] Some contend that Christ only is here intended; others, that the alms-giving is meant.

After all the difference of commentators and preachers, it is most evident that the ἀνυπόκριτος δῶμα, unspeakable gift, is precisely the same with the ὑπερβαλλούσαν χάριν, superabounding grace, or benefit, of the preceding verse. If, therefore, Jesus Christ, the gift of God's endless love to man, be the meaning of the unspeakable gift in this verse; he is also intended by the superabounding grace, in the preceding. But it is most evident, that it is the work of Christ in them, and not Christ himself, which is intended in the 14th verse, and consequently that it is the same work, not the operator, which is referred to in this last verse.

A few further observations may be necessary on the conclusion of this chapter.

1. JESUS CHRIST, the gift of God's love to mankind, is an unspeakable blessing; no man can conceive, much less declare, how great this gift is; for these things the angels desire to look into. Therefore, he may be well called the unspeakable gift, as he is the highest God ever gave, or can give to man; though this is not the meaning of this last verse.

2. The conversion of a soul from darkness to light; from sin to holiness; from Satan to God: is not less inconceivable. It is called a new creation; and creative energy cannot be comprehended. To have the grace of God to rule the heart, subduing all things to itself, and filling the soul with the Divine nature, is an unspeakable blessing; and the energy that produced it is an unspeakable gift. I conclude, therefore, that it is the work of Christ in the soul, and not Christ himself, that the apostle terms the superabounding, or exceeding great grace, and the unspeakable gift; and Dr. Whitby's paraphrase may be safely admitted as giving the true sense of the passage. Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift: i. e. "this admirable charity," (proceeding from the work of Christ in the soul.) "by which God is so much glorified; the Gospel receives such credit; others are so much benefited; and you will be, by God, so plentifully rewarded." This is the sober sense of the passage: and no other meaning can comport with it. The passage itself is a grand proof that every good disposition in the soul of man, comes from God; and it explodes the notion of natural good: i. e. good which God does not work; which is absurd; for no effect can exist without a cause. And God, being the fountain of good, all that can be called good, must come immediately from himself. See James, chap. i. 17.

3. Most men can see the hand of God in the dispensations of his justice; and yet these very seldom appear. How is it that they cannot equally see his hand in the dispensations of his mercy, which are great, striking, and unremitting? Our afflictions, we scarcely ever forget; our mercies, we scarcely ever remember! Our hearts are alive to complaint, but dead to gratitude. We have had ten thousand mercies for one judgment, and yet our complaints to our thanksgivings have been ten thousand to one! How is it that God endures this, and bears with us? Ask his own eternal clemency; and ask the Mediator before the throne. The mystery of our preservation and salvation can be there alone explained.

CHAPTER X.

The apostle vindicates himself against the aspersions cast on his person, by the false apostle; and takes occasion to mention his spiritual might and authority, 1—6. He shows them the impropriety of judging after the outward appearance, 7. Again refers to his apostolical authority, and informs them that, when he again comes among them, he will show himself in his deeds as powerful as his letters intimated, 8—11. He shows that these false teachers sat down in other men's labours, having neither authority nor influence from God, to break up new ground; while he, and the apostles in general, had the regions assigned to them through which they were to sow the seed of life; and that he never entered into any place where the work was made ready to his hand by others, 12—16. He concludes with intimating that the glorying of those false apostles was bad; that they had nothing but self-commendation; and that they who glory, should glory in the Lord, 17, 18.

NOTES ON CHAP. X.

Verse 1. I Paul myself beseech you by the meekness] Having now finished his directions and advices relative to the collection for the poor, he resumes his argument relative to the false apostle, who had gained considerable influence, by representing St. Paul as despicable in his person, his ministry, and his influence. Under this obloquy, the apostle was supported by the meekness and gentleness of Christ: and, through the same heavenly disposition, he delayed inflicting that punishment which, in virtue of his apostolical authority, he might have inflicted on him who had disturbed, and laboured to corrupt the Christian church.

Who in presence am base among you, but being absent am bold towards you] He seems to quote these as the words of his calumniator—as if he had said, "This apostle of yours is a mere braggadocio; when he is among you, you know how base and contemptible he is: when absent, see how he brags and boasts." The word raurice, which we render base, signifies lowly; and, as some think, short of stature. The insinuation is, that when there was danger or opposition at hand; St. Paul acted with great obsequiousness, fearing for his person and authority, lest he should lose his secular influence. See the following verse.

Verse 2. Some, 'which think of us as if we walked according to the flesh] As it is customary for cowards and overbearing men to threaten the weak and the timid when present; to bluster when absent; and to be very obsequious in the presence of the strong and courageous. This conduct they appear to have charged against the apostle, which he calls here walking after the flesh; acting as a man who had worldly ends in view; and would use any means in order to accomplish them.

Verse 3. Though we walk in the flesh] That is, although I am in the common condition of human nature, and must live as a human being, yet I do not war after the flesh; I do not act the coward or the poltron, as they insinuate. I have a good cause, a good captain, strength at will, and courage at hand. I neither fear them nor their master.

Verse 4. The weapons of our warfare] The apostle often uses the metaphor of a warfare, to

Are not carnal] Here he refers to the means used by the false apostle, in order to secure his party; he calumniated St. Paul; traduced the truth; preached false and licentious doctrines; and supported these with sophistical reasonings.

But mighty through God] Our doctrines are true and pure: they come from God, and lead to him; and he accompanies them with his mighty power to the hearts of those who hear them: and the strong holds, the apparently solid and cogent reasoning of the philosophers, we, by these doctrines, pull down; and thus the fortifications of heathenism are destroyed; and the cause of Christ triumphs wherever we come; and we put to flight the armies of the aliens.

Verse 5. Casting down imaginations] λογισμοις, reasonings or opinions. The Greek philosophers valued themselves especially on their ethic systems, in which their reasonings appeared to be very profound and conclusive; but they were obliged to assume principles, which were either such as did not exist, or were false in themselves; as the whole of their mythologic system most evidently was: truly, from what remains of them, we see that their metaphysics were generally bombast; and, as to their philosophy, it was in general good for nothing. When the apostles came against their gods many, and their lords many, with the ONE SUPREME and ETERNAL BEING; they were confounded, scattered, annihilated:—when they came against their various modes of purifying the mind, their sacrificial and mediatorial system, with the LORD JESUS CHRIST; his agony and bloody sweat; his cross and passion; his death and burial; and his glorious resurrection and ascension, they sunk before them; and appeared to be what they really were, as dust upon the balance; and lighter than vanity.

Every high thing] Even the pretendedly sublime doctrines for instance of Plato, Aristotle, and the Stoics in general, fell before the simple preaching of Christ crucified.

The knowledge of God] The doctrine of the unity and eternity of the Divine Nature; which was opposed by the plurality of their idols; and the generation of their gods, and their men-made deities. It is amazing how feeble a resistance heathenism made, by argument or reasoning, against the doctrine of the Gospel! It instantly shrunk from the Divine light, and called on the secular power to contend for it! Popery sunk before Protestantism in the same way, and defended itself by the same means. The apostles destroyed heathenism wherever they came: the Protestants confuted Popery wherever their voice was permitted to be heard.

Bringing into captivity every thought] HEATHENISM could not revenge itself; in vain did its thousands of altars smoke with reiterated hecatombs; their demons were silent; and their idols were proved to be nothing in the world. POPERY could never, by any power of self-reviviscence, restore itself after its defeat by the reformation: it had no Scripture consecutively understood: no reason, no argument; in vain were its bells rung; its candles lighted; its auto da fes exhibited: in vain did its fires blaze; and in vain were innumerable human victims immolated on its altars! The light of God penetrated its hidden works of darkness, and dragged its three-headed Cerberus into open day: the monster sickened, vomited his hebenane, and fled for refuge to his native shades.

The obedience of Christ] Subjection to idols was annihilated by the progress of the Gospel among the heathens; and they soon had but one Lord, and his name one. In like manner the doctrines of the reformation, mighty through God pulled down; demolished, and brought into captivity, the whole Papal system: and instead of obedience to the pope, the pretended vicar of God upon earth, obedience to Christ, as the sole, almighty head of the church, was established particularly in Britain, where it continues to prevail. Hallelujah! the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.

Verse 6. And having in a readiness to revenge all disobedience] I am ready, through this mighty armour of God, to punish those opposers of the doctrine of Christ; and the disobedience which has been produced by them.

When your obedience is fulfilled] When you have, in the fullest manner, discountenanced those men, and separated yourselves from their communion. The apostle was not in haste to pull up the tares, lest he should pull up the wheat also.

All the terms in these two verses are military. Allusion is made to a strongly fortified city, where the enemy had made his last stand; entrenching himself about the walls; strengthening all his redoubts and ramparts; raising castles, towers, and various engines of defence and offence upon the walls; and neglecting nothing that might tend to render his strong hold impregnable. The army of God comes against the place, and attacks it; the strong holds, οχυρωματα, all the fortified places, are carried. The imaginations, λογισμοι, engines, and whatever the imagination or skill of man could raise, are speedily taken and destroyed. Every high thing, παν υψηλα, all the castles and towers are sapped, thrown down, and demolished; the walls are battered into breaches; and the besieging army, carrying every thing at the point of the sword, enter the city, storm and take the citadel. Every where defeated, the conquered submit, and are brought into captivity, αιχμαλωτισθησιν, are led away captives; and thus the whole government is destroyed.

him acknowledge that even so, we are Christ's ministers; and that I have, by my preaching, and the miracles which I have wrought, given the fullest proof that I am especially commissioned by Him.

Verse 8. For though I should boast, &c.] I have a greater authority, and spiritual power, than I have yet shown; both to edify and to punish: but I employ this for your edification in righteousness; and not for the destruction of any delinquent. "This," says Calmet, "is the rule which the pastors of the church ever propose to themselves in the exercise of their authority; whether to enjoin or forbid; to dispense or to oblige; to bind or to loose. They should use the power only as Jesus Christ used it, for the salvation, and not for the destruction, of souls."

Verse 9. That I may not seem, &c.] This is an elliptical sentence, and may be supplied thus:
"I have not used this authority; nor will I add any more concerning this part of the subject, lest I should seem, as my adversary has insinuated, to wish to terrify you by letters."

Verse 10. For his letters, say they, are weighty and powerful] He boasts of high powers, and that he can do great things. See on ver. 1, 2.

But his bodily presence is weak] When you behold the man, you find him a feeble, contemptible mortal; and when you hear him speak, his speech ὀ λόγος, probably his doctrine, ἡ σοφία, is good for nothing; his person, matter, and manner, are altogether uninteresting, unimpressive, and too contemptible to be valued by the wise and the learned. This seems to be the spirit and design of this slander.

Many, both among the ancients and moderns, have endeavoured to find out the ground there was for any part of this calumny: as to the moral conduct of the apostle, that was invulnerable; his motives, it is true, were suspected and denounced by this false apostle and his partizans;
but they could never find any thing in his conduct which could support their insinuations. What they could not attach to his character, they disingenuously attached to his person and his elocution.

If we can credit some ancient writers, such as Nicephorus, we shall find the apostle thus described—*Παυλος μικρος η̄ και στυγαλιμος, το του σωματος μεγαθος. Και ασπιρ ακυκλοι αυτο κειταμενος.
Σμιγκρι δι, και κεικυφος. Τη εψη λιγκος, και το προσωπον προφρηος, ψιλος των κεφαλων, &c.*—Nicephor.
lib. ii. cap. 17. Paul was a little man, crooked and almost bent like a bow; with a pale countenance, long and wrinkled; a bald head; his eyes full of fire and benevolence; his beard long, thick, and interspersed with gray hairs, as was his head, &c. I quote from Calmet, not having Nicephorus at hand.

An old Greek writer, says the same author, whose works are found among those of Chrysostom, Tom. vi. Hom. 30. page 265. represents him thus—Παυλος ὁ τριπεχλος ανθρωπος, και των ουγκων απταμενος; "Paul was a man of about three cubits in height, (four feet six,) and yet nevertheless, touched the heavens." Others say, that "he was a little man, had a bald head, and a large nose." See the above, and several other authorities, in Calmet. Perhaps there is not one of these statements correct: as to Nicephorus, he is a writer of the xvth century, weak and credulous, and worthy of no regard. And the writer found in the works of Chrysostom, in making the apostle a little more than a pigmy, has rendered his account incredible.

That St. Paul could be no such diminutive person, we may fairly presume from the office he filled under the high-priest, in the persecution of the church of Christ; and that he had not an impediment in his speech, but was a graceful orator, we may learn from his whole history; and especially from the account we have, Acts xiv. 12. where the Lycaonians took him for Mercury, the god of eloquence, induced thereto by his powerful and persuasive elocution. In short, there does not appear to be any substantial evidence of the apostle's deformity, pigmy stature, bald head, pale and wrinkle d face, large nose, stammering speech, &c. &c.

^a Ch. 3. 1. & 5. 12.—^b Or, understand it not.—^c Ver. 15. ^d Or, line.

These are probably all figments of unbridled fancy, and foolish surmises.

Verse 11. Such as we are in word] A threatening of this kind would, doubtless, alarm the false apostle; and it is very likely, that he did not await the apostle's coming, as he would not be willing to try the fate of Elymas.

Verse 12. We dare not make ourselves, &c.] As if he had said, I dare neither associate with, nor compare myself to those who are full of self-commendation. Some think this to be an ironical speech.

But they measuring themselves by themselves] They are not sent of God; they are not inspired by his Spirit; therefore they have no rule to think or act by. They are also full of pride and self-conceit; they look within themselves for accomplishments which their self-love will soon find out; for, to it, real and fictitious are the same. As they dare not compare themselves with the true apostles of Christ, they compare themselves with each other; and, as they have no perfect standard, they can have no excellence; nor can they ever attain true wisdom, which is not to be had from looking at what we are, but to what we should be: and, if without a directory, what we should be, will never appear: and, consequently, our ignorance must continue. This was the case with the self-conceited false apostles: but, οὐκ οἴσταν, are not wise, Mr. Wakefield contends, is an elegant Græcism, signifying they are not aware that they are measuring themselves by themselves, &c.

Verse 13. Things without our measure] There is a great deal of difficulty in this and the three following verses: and there is a great diversity among the MSS. and which is the true reading can scarcely be determined. Our version is, perhaps, the plainest that can be made of the text. By the measure mentioned here, it seems as if the apostle meant the commission he received from God to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles: a measure or district that extended through all Asia Minor and Greece, down to Achaia, where Corinth was situated, a measure to reach even unto you. But the expressions in these verses are all agonistical, and taken from the stadium or race-course in the Olympic and Isthmian games. The μετρίον, hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you.

14 For we stretch not ourselves beyond our measure, as though we reached not unto you: ^e for we are come as far as to you also in preaching the Gospel of Christ.

15 Not boasting of things without our measure, that is, ^f of other men's labours; but having hope, when your faith is increased, that we shall be ^g enlarged by you according to our rule abundantly.

^e 1 Cor. 3. 5, 10. & 4. 15. & 9. 1.—^f Rom. 15. 20.—^g Or, magnified in you.

or measure, was the length of the σπυρος, or course; and the καὶ, rule or line, ver. 15 and 16, was probably the same with the γραμμά, or white line, which marked out the boundaries of the stadium: and the verbs reach unto, stretch out, &c. are all references to the exertions made to win the race. As this subject is so frequently alluded to in these epistles, I have thought it of importance to consider it particularly in the different places where it occurs.

Verse 14. For we stretch not ourselves beyond] We have not proceeded straight from Macedonia, through Thessaly, and across the Adriatic gulf into Italy, which would have led us beyond you westward; but [knowing the mind of our God, we left this direct path, and came southward through Greece, down into Achaia; and there we planted the Gospel. The false apostle has therefore got into our province, and entered into our labours; and there boasts as if the conversion of the heathen Achaians had been his own work. As there is an allusion here to the stadium, and to the Olympic games in general; we may consider the apostle as laying to the charge of the disturber at Corinth, that he had got his name surreptitiously inserted on the military list; that he was not striving lawfully: had no right to the stadium, and none to the crown. See the observations at the end of 1 Cor. ch. ix. and the note on ver. 13. of this chapter.

Verse 15. Not boasting of things without our measure] We speak only of the work which God has done by us; for, we have never attempted to enter into other men's labours, and we study to convert those regions assigned to us by the Holy Spirit. We enter the course lawfully; and run according to rule. See above.

When your faith is increased] When you receive more of the life and power of godliness; and when you can better spare me to go to other places.

We shall be enlarged by you.] Μεγαλυνθῆναι probably signifies here, to be praised or commended; and the sense would be this:—We hope that shortly, on your gaining an increase of true religion, after your long distractions and divisions, you will plainly see that we are the true messengers of God to you: and that in all your intercourse with your neighbours, or to foreign parts, you will speak of this Gospel preached by us, as a glorious system of saving truth, and that in consequence, the heathen countries around you will be the better prepared to receive our message; and thus, our rule or district will be abundantly extended. This interpretation agrees well with the following verse.

Verse 16. To preach the Gospel in the regions beyond you] He probably refers to those parts of the Morea, such as Sparta, &c.; what lay southward of them; and to Italy which lay on the west: for it does not appear that he considered his measure or province to extend to Lybia, or any part of Africa. See the introduction, sect. xii.

Not to boast in another man's line] So very scrupulous was the apostle not to build on another man's foundation; that he would not even go to those places where other apostles were labouring. He appears to think that every apostle had a particular district or province of the heathen world allotted to him; and which God commissioned him to convert to the Christian faith. No doubt every apostle was influenced in the same way: and this was a wise order of God; for by these means the Gospel was more quickly spread through the heathen provinces, than it otherwise would have been. The apostles had deacons or ministers with them, whose business it was to water the seed sown: but the apostles alone under Christ, sowed and planted.

Verse 17. He that glorieth let him glory in the Lord.] Instead of boasting or exulting, even in your own success in preaching the Gospel, as none can be successful without the especial blessing of God, let God who gave the blessing, have the glory. Even the genuine apostle, who has his commission immediately from God himself, takes no praise to himself from the prosperity of his work; but gives it all to God. How little cause then have your uncommissioned men to boast, to whom God has assigned no province; and who only boast in another man's line of things made ready to their hands!

Verse 18. Not he that commendeth himself] Not the person who makes a parade of his own attainments; who preaches himself, and not Christ Jesus the Lord; and far from being your servant for Christ's sake, affects to be your ruler: not such a one shall be approved of God, by an especial blessing on his labours; but he whom the Lord commendeth, by giving him the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit; and converting the heathen by his ministry. These were qualifications, to which the false apostle at Corinth could not pretend. He had language, and eloquence, and show, and parade; but he had neither the gifts of an apostle, nor an apostle's success.

1. Dr. Whitby observes, that the apostle, in the 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th verses, endeavours to advance himself above the false apostles in the three following particulars.

(1.) That whereas they could show no commission to preach to the Corinthians, no measure by which God had distributed the Corinthians to them as their province, he could do so. We have a measure to reach even to you, ver. 13.

(2.) That whereas they went out of their line, leaping from one church to another, he went on orderly, in the conversion of the heathens, from Judea through all the interjacent provinces, till he came to Corinth.

(3.) Whereas they only came in and perverted the churches, where the faith had already been preached; and so could only boast of things made ready to their hands, ver. 16. he had laboured to preach the Gospel where Christ had not been named, lest he should build on another man's foundation, Rom. xv. 20.

2. We find that from the beginning, God appointed to every man his province; and to every man his labour: and would not suffer even one apostle to interfere with another. This was a very wise appointment: for by this the Gospel was not only more speedily diffused over the heathen nations, as we have already remarked, but the churches were better attended to, the Christian doctrine preserved in its purity, and the Christian discipline properly enforced. What is any man's work is no man's in particular: and thus the work is neglected. In every church of God, there should be some one who has the care of it; who may be properly called its pastor; and who is accountable for its purity in the faith, and its godly discipline.

3. Every man who ministers in holy things, should be well assured of his call to the work; without this, he can labour neither with confidence nor comfort. And he should be careful to watch over the flock, that no destroying wolf be permitted to enter the sacred fold: and that the fences of a holy discipline be kept in proper repair.

4. It is base, abominable, and deeply sinful for a man to thrust himself into other men's labours, and by sowing doubtful disputations among a Christian people, distract and divide them, that he may get a party to himself. Such persons generally act as the false apostle at Corinth, preach a relaxed morality: place great stress upon certain doctrines which flatter and sooth self-love; calumniate the person, system of doctrines, and mode of discipline of the pastor who perhaps planted that church; or who, in the order of God's providence, has the oversight of it. This is an evil that has prevailed much in all ages of the church; there is at present much of it in the Christian world; and Christianity is disgraced by it.

CHAPTER XI.

The apostle apologizes for expressing his jealousy relative to the true state of the Corinthians; still fearing lest their minds should have been drawn aside from the simplicity of the Gospel, 1—3. From this he takes occasion to extol his own ministry, which had been without charge to them, having been supported by the churches of Macedonia while he preached the Gospel at Corinth, 4—11. Gives the character of the false apostles, 12—15. Shows what reasons he has to boast of secular advantages of birth, education, divine call to the ministry, labours in that ministry, grievous persecutions, great sufferings, and extraordinary hazards, 16—33.

NOTES ON CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. Would to God ye could bear with me] Θηλον ουχως μου μικρον as the word God is not mentioned here, it would have been much better to have translated the passage literally thus: I wish you could bear a little with me. The too frequent use of this sacred name, produces a familiarity with it that is not at all conducive to reverence and godly fear.

In my folly] In my seeming folly; for being obliged to vindicate his ministry, it was necessary that he should speak much of himself, his sufferings, and his success. And as this would appear like boasting; and boasting is always the effect of an empty, foolish mind, those who were not acquainted with the necessity that lay upon him to make this defence, might be led to impute it to vanity. As if he had said—Suppose you allow this to be folly, have the goodness to bear with me: for though I glory, I should not be a fool, ch. xii. 6. And let no man think me a fool for my boasting, ch. xi. 15.

Verse 2. I am jealous over you, &c.] The apostle evidently alludes either to the שוחבנימ shoshabinim or paranympis among the Hebrews, whose office is largely explained in the notes on John iii. 29. and the observations at the end of that chapter; or to the harmosyni, a sort of magistrate among the Lacedemonians, who had care of virgins, and whose business it was to see them well educated, kept pure, and properly prepared for married life.

That I may present you as a chaste virgin] The allusion is still kept up; and there seems to be a reference to Lev. xxi. 14. that the high-priest must not marry any one that was not a pure virgin. Here, then, Christ is the high-priest, the spouse or husband: the Corinthian church the pure virgin to be espoused: the apostle and his helpers the shoshabinim, or harmosyni, who had educated and prepared this virgin for her husband, and espoused her to him.

See the observations already referred to, at the end of the third chapter of John.

Verse 3. As the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtilty] This is a strong reflection on the false apostle and his teaching: he was subtle, παρουσγος, and by his subtilty, παρουσγια, from παρ, all, and ουρα, work, his versatility of character and conduct, his capability of doing all work; and accommodating himself to the caprices, prejudices, and evil propensities of those to whom he ministered: he was enabled to corrupt the minds of the people from the simplicity of the Gospel of Christ; or, to follow the metaphor, he had seduced the pure, chaste, well educated virgin, from her duty, affection, and allegiance to her one and only true husband, the High-priest, Jesus Christ. And here he seems to intimate that the serpent had seduced the mind of Eve from her affections and allegiance to Adam, her true husband; and certainly from God, her creator and governor. See at the end of the chapter.

Verse 4. For, if he that cometh] The false apostle, who came after St. Paul had left Corinth.

Preacheth another Jesus] Who can save more fully, and more powerfully, than that Jesus whom I have preached.

Or ye receive another spirit] And if in consequence of believing in this new Saviour, ye receive another spirit, the gifts, graces, and consolations of which are greater than those which ye have received from the Holy Ghost, which has been given to you, on your believing on the Christ whom we preached.

Or another Gospel] Containing more privileges, spiritual advantages, and stronger excitements to holiness, than that which we have preached, and which ye have accepted, ye might well bear with him. This would be a sufficient reason why you should not only bear with him, but prefer him to me.

Others think that the last clause should be rendered ye might well bear with me; notwithstanding he brought you another Jesus, Spirit, and Gospel, ye might bear with me, who have already ministered so long to, and done so much for you. But the former sense seems best.

Verse 5. I was not—behind the very chiefest apostles] That is, the most eminent of the apostles have not preached Christ, ministered the Spirit, explained and enforced the doctrines of the Gospel in a more powerful and effectual manner than I have done.

Verse 6. But though I be rude in speech] Ἰδιωτικῶς ἢ κοινῶς; though I speak like a common, unlettered man; in plain unadorned phrase, studying none of the graces of eloquence; yet I am not unskilled in the most profound knowledge of God, of spiritual and eternal things, of the nature of the human soul; and the sound truths of the Gospel system; ye yourselves are witnesses of this, as in all these things, I have been thoroughly manifested among you.

Inspired men received all their doctrines immediately from God; and often the very words in which those doctrines should be delivered to the world: but, in general, the Holy Spirit appears to have left them to their own language, preventing them from using any expression that might be equivocal, or convey a contrary sense to that which God intended.

That St. Paul wrote a strong, nervous, and sufficiently pure language, his own writings sufficiently testify; but the graces of the Greek tongue he appears not to have studied; or at least he did not think it proper to use them: for perhaps there is no tongue in the world that is so apt to seduce the understanding by its sounds and harmony, as the Greek. It is not an unusual thing for Greek scholars, to the present day, to be in raptures with the harmony of a Greek verse, the sense of which is but little regarded, and perhaps is little worth! I should suppose that God would prevent the inspired writers from either speaking or writing thus; that sound might not carry the hearer away from the sense: and that the persuasive force of truth might alone prevail; and the excellence of the power appear to be of God, and not of man. Taking up the subject in this point of view, I see no reason to have recourse to the supposition, or fable rather, that the apostle had an impo-

Verse 7. Have I committed an offence in abasing myself?] Have I transgressed in labouring with my hands, that I might not be chargeable to you? and getting my deficiencies supplied by contributions from other churches, while I was employed in labouring for your salvation? Does your false apostle insinuate that I have disgraced the apostolic office by thus descending to servile labour for my support? Well, I have done this, that you might be exalted; that you might receive the pure doctrines of the Gospel, and be exalted to the highest pitch of intellectual light and blessedness. And will you complain that I preached the Gospel gratis to you! Surely not. The whole passage is strongly ironical.

Verse 8. I robbed other churches] This part of the sentence is explained by the latter; taking wages to do you service. The word κέρματα, signifies the pay of money and provisions, given daily to a Roman soldier. As if he had said, I received food and raiment, the bare necessaries of life, from other churches, while labouring for your salvation. Will you esteem this a crime?

Verse 9. And when I was present with you] The particle καί, which we translate and, should be rendered for in this place; For, when I was with you, and was in want, I was chargeable to no man. I preferred to be, for a time, even without the necessaries of life, rather than be a burden to you. To whom was this a reproach? to me, or to you?

The brethren which came from Macedonia] He probably refers to the supplies which he received from the church at Philippi, which was in Macedonia: of which he says, that in the beginning of the Gospel, no church communicated with me, as concerning giving and receiving, but you only: for even at Thessalonica ye sent once and again to my necessity, Phil. iv. 15, 16. See the Introduction, sect. vi.

Verse 10. As the truth of Christ is in me] Ἐστὶν ἀληθῆς Χριστὸς ἐν ἐμοί; The truth of Christ is in me. That is, I speak as becomes a Christian man; and as influenced by the Gospel of Christ. It is a solemn form of asseveration: if not to be considered in the sense of an oath.

Verse 12. But what I do, &c.] I act thus that I may cut off occasion of glorying, boasting, or calumniating, from them, the false apostle and his partizans; who seek occasion; who would be glad that I should become chargeable to you, that it might in some sort vindicate them, who exact much from you; for they bring you into bondage, and devour you, ver. 20.

Nothing could mortify these persons more than to find that the apostle did take nothing, and was resolved to take nothing; while they were fleeing the people. It is certain that the passage is not to be understood, as though the false apostles took nothing from the people, to whatever disinterestedness they might pretend:
for the apostle is positive on the contrary; and he was determined to act so that his example should not authorize these deceivers, who had nothing but their self-interest in view, from exacting contribution from the people; so that if they continued to boast, they must be bound even as the apostle, taking nothing for their labours; which could never comport with their views of gain and secular profit.

Verse 13. For such are false apostles] Persons who pretend to be apostles, but have no mission from Christ.

Deceitful workers] They do preach and labour, but they have nothing but their own emolument in view.

Transforming themselves] Assuming as far as they possibly can, consistently with their sinister views, the habit, manner, and doctrine of the apostles of Christ.

Verse 14. And no marvel] Και ω θαυμαστον, and no wonder; it need not surprise you what the disciples do, when you consider the character of the master.

Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light.] As in verse 3. the apostle had the history of the temptation and fall of man, particularly in view, it is very likely that here he refers to the same thing. In whatever form Satan appeared to our first mother, his pretensions and professions gave him the appearance of a good angel; and by pretending that Eve should get a great increase of light, that is wisdom and under- standing, he deceived her, and led her to transgress. It is generally said that Satan has three forms under which he tempts men:—1.
The subtle serpent. 2. The roaring lion. 3.
The angel of light. He often, as the angel of light, persuades men to do things under the name of religion, which are subversive of it.
Hence all the persecutions, faggots, and fires of a certain church, under the pretence of keeping heresy out of the church: and hence, all the horrors and infernalities of the inquisition.
2. In the form of heathen persecution, like a lion he has ravaged the heritage of the Lord, Aid, 3. By means of our senses and passions, as the subtle serpent, he is frequently deceiving us, so that often the workings of corrupt nature are mistaken for the operations of the Spirit of God.

Verse 15. Whose end shall be according to their works] A bad way leads to a bad end.
The way of sin is the way to hell.

Verse 16. Let no man think me a fool] See the note on ver. 1. As the apostle was now going to enter into a particular detail of his qualifications, natural, acquired, and spiritual;
and particularly of his labours and sufferings, he thinks it necessary to introduce the discourse once more, as he did ver. 1.

Verse 17. I speak it not after the Lord.
Were it not for the necessity under which I am laid to vindicate my apostleship, my present glorying would be inconsistent with my Christian profession of humility, and knowing no one after the flesh.

Verse 18. Seeing that many glory after the flesh] Boast of external and secular things.

Verse 19. Ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise] A very fine irony. Ye are so profoundly wise, as to be able to discern that I am a fool.—Well, it would be dishonourable to you as wise men, to fall out with a fool: you will therefore gladly bear with his impertinence and foolishness, because of your own profound wisdom.

Verse 20. For ye suffer] As you are so meek and gentle, as to submit to be brought into bondage, to have your property devoured, your goods taken away, yourselves laid in the dust, so that others may exalt themselves over you; yea, and will bear from those the most degrading indignity; then, of course, you will bear with one, who has never insulted, defrauded, devoured, taken of you, exalted himself against you, or offered you any kind of indignity; and who only wishes you to bear his confident boasting, concerning matters which he can substantiate.

The expressions in this verse, are some evidence that the false apostle was a judaizing teacher. You suffer, says the apostle, if a man, καταλωθῆς, bring you into bondage, probably meaning to the Jewish rites and ceremonies, Gal. iv. 9. ver. 1. If he devour you—as the Pharisees did the patrimony of the widows; and for a pretence made long prayers; if a man takes of you—exact different contributions; pretendedly for the temple at Jerusalem, &c. If he exalt himself—pretending to be of the seed of Abraham; infinitely higher in honour and dignity, than all the families of the Gentiles: if he smite you on the face—treat you with indignity, as the Jews did the Gentiles: considering them only as dogs, and not fit to be ranked with any of the descendants of Jacob.

Verse 21. I speak as concerning reproach] Dr. Whitby thus paraphrases this verse:—“That which I said of smiting upon the face, I speak as concerning the reproach they cast upon you as profane and uncircumcised, whereas they all profess to be a holy nation; as though we had been weak, inferior to them in these things, not able to ascribe to ourselves those advantages as well as they.” Howbeit, whereinsoever any is bold, and can justly value himself on these advantages, I am bold also, and can claim the same distinctions, though I speak foolishly in setting any value on those things: but it is necessary that I should show that such men have not even one natural good that they can boast of beyond me.

Verse 22. Are they Hebrews?] Speaking the sacred language, and reading in the congregation from the Hebrew Scriptures; the same is my own language.

Are they Israelites? so am I. Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I.

Are they Israelites?] Regularly descended from Jacob, and not from Esau; I am also one. Are they the seed of Abraham?] Circumcised, and in the bond of the covenant? So am I. I am no proselyte, but I am a Hebrew of the Hebrews, both by father and mother; and can trace my genealogy through the tribe of Benjamin, up to the father of the faithful.

Verse 23. Are they ministers of Christ?] So, we find that these were professors of Christianity: and that they were genuine Jews, and such as endeavoured to incorporate both systems; and no doubt to oblige those who had believed, to be circumcised; and this appears to have been the bondage into which they had brought many of the believing Corinthians.

I am more] More of a minister of Christ than they are, and have given fuller proofs of it. I have suffered persecution for the cross of Christ, and of the Jews too; and had I preached up the necessity of circumcision, I should have been as free from oppositions as these are.

In labours more abundant] Far from sitting down to take my ease in a church already gathered into Christ: I travel incessantly, preach every where, and at all risks, in order to get the heathen brought from the empire of darkness, into the kingdom of God's beloved Son.

In stripes above measure] Being beaten by the heathen, who had no particular rule according to which they scourged criminals: and we find from Acts xvi. 22, 23. that they beat Paul unmercifully, with many stripes. See the note on the above passage.

In prisons more frequent] See Acts xxi. 11. and the whole of the apostle's history; and his long imprisonment, of at least two years, at Rome, Acts xxviii. It does not appear that there is any one instance of a false apostle having been imprisoned for the testimony of Christ; this was a badge of the true apostles.

In deaths oft] That is, in the most imminent dangers. See 1 Cor. xv. 31. chap. iv. 11. And see the apostle's history in the Acts.

Verse 24. Of the Jews, five times received I forty stripes save one] That is, he was five times scourged by the Jews, whose law, Deut. xxv. 3. allowed forty stripes; but they pretending to be lenient, and to act within the letter of the law, inflicted but thirty-nine.

To except one stripe from the forty, was a very ancient canon among the Jews, as we learn from Josephus, Antiq. lib. iv. ch. viii. sec. 21. who mentions the same thing πωλύας μίας λοἄνευ ἑξήκοντα, forty stripes, excepting one.

The Mishna gives this as a rule, Mishn. Maccoth. fol. 22. 10. "How often shall he, the culprit, be smitten? Ans. ארבעים חטאי חסר אחד forty stripes wanting one: i. e. with the number which is highest to forty." Frequently a man was scourged according to his ability to bear the punishment: and it is a canon in the Mishna, "that he who cannot bear forty stripes should receive only eighteen, and yet be considered as having suffered the whole punishment."

They also thought it right to stop under forty, lest the person who counted should make a mistake, and the criminal get more than forty stripes, which would be injustice; as the law required only forty.

The manner in which this punishment was inflicted is described in the Mishna, fol. 22. 2. "The two hands of the criminal are bound to a post, and then the servant of the synagogue either pulls or tears off his clothes, till he leaves his breast and shoulders bare. A stone or block is placed behind him, on which the servant stands; he holds in his hands a scourge, made of leather, divided into four tails. He who scourges lays one third on the criminal's breast, another third on his right shoulder, and another on his left. The man who receives the punishment is neither sitting nor standing, but all the while sleeping; and the man smites with all his strength, with one hand." The severity of this punishment depends on the nature of the scourge, and the strength of the executioner.

It is also observed, that the Jews did not repeat scourgings, except for enormous offences. But they had scourged the apostle five times; for with those murderers, no quarter would be given to the disciples, as none was given to the Master. See Schoetgen.

Verse 25. Thrice was I beaten with rods] This was under the Roman government, as their licitors beat criminals in this way. We hear of the apostle's being treated thus once, namely at Philippi, Acts xvi. 22. See sect. 9. of the Introduction.

Once was I stoned] Namely, at Lystra, Acts xiv. 19, &c.

A night and a day I have been in the deep] To what this refers, we cannot tell; it is generally supposed that in some shipwreck not on record, the apostle had saved himself on a plank, and was a whole day and night on the sea, tossed about at the mercy of the waves. Others think, that βαθύ, the deep, signifies a dungeon of a terrible nature at Cyzicum in the Propontis, into which Paul was cast, as he passed from Troas. But this is not likely.

Verse 26. In journeyings often] He means the particular journeys which he took to different places, for the purpose of propagating the Gospel.

In perils of waters] Exposed to great dangers, in crossing rivers; for of rivers, the original ποταμοί, must be understood.

Of robbers] Judea itself, and perhaps every other country, was grievously infested by banditti of this kind: and no doubt the apostle in his frequent peregrinations was often attacked; but being poor, and having nothing to lose, he passed unhurt, though not without great danger.

In perils by mine own countrymen] The Jews had the most rooted antipathy to him, because they considered him an apostate from the true faith; and also the means of perverting many others. There are several instances of this in the Acts; and a remarkable conspiracy against his life is related, Acts xxiii. 12, &c.

In perils by the heathen] In the heathen provinces whither he went to preach the Gospel. Several instances of these perils occur also in the Acts.

In perils in the city] The different seditions raised against him, particularly in Jerusalem, to which Ephesus and Damascus may be added.

Perils in the wilderness] Uninhabited countries through which he was obliged to pass, in order to reach from city to city. In such places it is easy to imagine many dangers from banditti, wild beasts, cold, starvation, &c.

Perils in the sea] The different voyages he took in narrow seas, such as the Mediterranean, about dangerous coasts, and without compass.

False brethren] Persons who joined themselves to the church, pretending faith in Christ, but intending to act as spies; hoping to get some matter of accusation against him. He no doubt suffered much also from apostates.

Verse 27. In weariness and painfulness] Tribulations of this kind were his constant companions. Lord Lyttleton and others have made useful reflections on this verse: "How hard was it for a man of a genteel and liberal education, as St. Paul was, to bear such rigours, and to wander about like a vagabond, hungry and almost naked; yet coming into the presence of persons of high life, and speaking in large and various assemblies, on matters of the utmost importance!" Had not St. Paul been deeply convinced of the truth and absolute certainty of the Christian religion, he could not have continued to expose himself to such hardships.

Verse 28. Besides those things that are without] Independently of all these outward things, I have innumerable troubles, and mental oppressions.

Which cometh upon me] Ἡ ἐπιρροαία; this continual press of business; this insurrection of cases to be heard, solved, and determined, relative to the doctrine, discipline, state, persecution, and supply of all the churches.

All his perils were little in comparison of what he felt relative to the peace, government, and establishment of all the churches among the Gentiles; for as he was the apostle of the Gentiles, the government of all the churches among these fell in some sort on him; whether they were of his own planting, or of the planting of others. See Col. ii. 1. None but a conscientious minister, who has at heart the salvation of souls, can enter into the apostle's feelings in this place.

Verse 29. Who is weak] What church is there under persecution, with which I do not immediately sympathize? or who, from his weakness in the faith, and scrupulousness of conscience, is likely to be stumbled, or turned out of the way, to whom I do not condescend, and whose burden I do not bear?

Who is offended] Or likely to be turned out of the way, and I burn not with zeal to restore and confirm him? This seems to be the sense of these different questions.

Verse 30. I will glory—which concern mine infirmities] I will not boast of my natural or acquired powers, neither in what God has done by me; but rather in what I have suffered for him.

Many persons have understood by infirmities what they call the indwelling sin of the apostle; and say that "he gloried in this, because the grace of Christ was the more magnified in his being preserved from ruin, notwithstanding this indwelling adversary." And to support this most unholy interpretation, they quote those other words of the apostle, ch. xii. 9. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, my indwelling corruptions, that the power of Christ in chaining the fierce lion, may rest upon me. But it would be difficult to produce a single passage in the whole New Testament, where the word ἀσθενία, which we translate infirmity, has the sense of sin or moral corruption. The verb ἀσθενω, signifies to be weak, infirm, sick, poor, despicable through poverty, &c. And in a few places, it is applied to weakness in the faith, to young converts, who are poor in religious knowledge; not yet fully instructed in the nature of the Gospel, Rom. iv. 19. xiv. 1, 2. And it is applied to the works of the law, to point out their inability to justify a sinner, Rom. viii. 3. But to inward sin and inward corruption it is never applied. I am afraid what these persons call their infirmities, may rather be called their strengths; the prevailing and frequently ruling power of pride, anger, ill-will, &c. for how few think evil tempers to be sins! The gentle term infirmity softens down the iniquity; and as St. Paul, so great and so holy a man, say they, had his infirmities, how can they expect to be without theirs? These should know that they are in a dangerous error: that St. Paul means nothing of the kind; for he speaks of his sufferings, and of these alone. One word more: would not the grace and power of Christ appear more conspicuous in slaying the lion, than in keeping him chained? in destroying sin root and branch; and filling the soul with his own holiness; with love to God and man; with the mind, all the holy heavenly tempers that were in himself; than in leaving these impure and unholy tempers, ever to live, and often to reign in the heart? The doctrine is discreditably to the Gospel; and wholly antichristian.

Verse 31. The God and Father of our Lord] Here is a very solemn asseveration; an appeal to the ever-blessed God, for the truth of what he asserts. It is something similar to his asseveration or oath in ver. 10. of this chapter; see also Rom. ix. 5. and Gal. i. 20. And from these and several other places we learn that the apostle thought it right thus to confirm his assertions on these particular occasions. But here is nothing to countenance profane swearing, or taking the name of God in vain, as many do in exclamations, when surprised, or on hearing something unexpected, &c. and as others do, who, conscious of their own falsity, endeavour to gain credit by appeals to God, for the truth of what they say. St. Paul's appeal to God is in the same spirit as his most earnest prayer. This solemn appeal the apostle makes in reference to what he mentions in the following verses. This was a fact not yet generally known.

Verse 32. In Damascus the governor under Aretas] For a description of Damascus, see the note on Acts ix. 2. And for the transaction to which the apostle refers, see Acts ix. 23. As to king Aretas, there were three of this name. The first is mentioned 2 Mac. v. 8. The second by Josephus, Antiq. l. xiii. c. 15. sec. 2. and l. xvi.

c. 1. sec. 4. The third, who is the person supposed to be referred to here, was the father-in-law of Herod Antipas, of whom see the notes Acts ix. 23, &c.

But it is a question of some importance, How could Damascus, a city of Syria, be under the government of an Arabian king? It may be accounted for thus: Herod Antipas, who married the daughter of Aretas, divorced her, in order to marry Herodias, his brother Philip's wife. Aretas, on this indignity offered to his family, made war upon Herod. Herod applied to Tiberius for help, and the emperor sent Vitellius to reduce Aretas, and to bring him alive or dead to Rome. By some means or other Vitellius delayed his operations, and in the mean time Tiberius died; and thus Aretas was snatched from ruin, Joseph. Antiq. lib. xviii. c. 5. What Aretas did in the interim is not known; but it is conjectured that he availed himself of the then favourable state of things, made an irruption into Syria, and seized on Damascus. See Rosenmüller; and see the Introduction to this epistle, sec. ii. p. iii.

The governor] Ἐθναρχος; who this ethnarch was, we cannot tell. The word ethnarch signifies the governor of a province, under a king or emperor.

Desirous to apprehend me] The enemies of the apostle might have represented him to the governor, as a dangerous spy, employed by the Romans.

Verse 33. Through a window in a basket] Probably the house was situated on the wall of the city. See the notes on this history, Acts ix. 23—25.

In ver. 2. of this chapter, the apostle most evidently alludes to the history of the temptation and fall of Adam and Eve, as related in Gen. iii. 1, &c. and which fall is there attributed to the agency of a being called ὄφις nachash; there, and in other places translated οφις, serpent. In my notes on Genesis, I have given many, and, as I judge, solid reasons, why the word cannot be understood literally, of a serpent of any kind: and that, most probably a creature of the simia or ape genus was employed by the devil on this occasion. The arguments on this subject appeared to me to be corroborated by innumerable probabilities; but I left the conjecture afloat, for I did not give it a more decisive name; and placed it in the hands of my readers to adopt, reject, or amend, as their judgments might direct them. To several this sentiment appeared a monstrous heresy! and speedily, the old serpent had a host of defenders. The very modest opinion, or conjecture, was controverted by some who were both gentlemen and scholars, and by several who were neither: by some who could not affect candour, because they had not even the appearance of it; but would affect learning, because they wished to be reputed wise. What reason and argument failed to produce, they would supply with ridicule; and, as monkey was a convenient term for this purpose, they attributed it to him, who had never used it. What is the result? They no doubt believe that they have established their system; and their arguments are to them conclusive. They have my full consent; but I think it right to state that I have neither seen nor heard of any thing that has the least tendency to weaken my conjecture, or produce the slightest wavering in my opinion. Indeed their arguments and mode of managing them, have produced a very different effect on my mind, to what they designed:—I am now more firmly persuaded of the probability of my hypothesis than ever. I shall, however, leave the subject as it is: I never proposed it as an article of faith; I press it on no man: I could fortify it with many additional arguments, if I judged it proper; for its probability appears to me as strong as the utter improbability of the common opinion, to defend which its abettors have descended to insupportable conjectures, of which infidels have availed themselves, to the discredit of the Sacred Writings. To those who choose to be wise and witty, and wish to provoke a controversy, this is my answer:—I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down; Why should the work cease, while I leave it and come down to you? Neh. vi. 3.

CHAPTER XII.

St. Paul mentions some wonderful revelations which he had received from the Lord, 1, 5. He speaks of his sufferings in connexion with these extraordinary revelations, that his character might be duly estimated, 6. That he might not be too much exalted, a messenger of Satan is sent to buffet him: his prayer for deliverance, and the Divine answer, 7—9. He exults in sufferings and reproaches, and vindicates his apostleship, 10—13. Promises to come and visit them, 14, 15. Answers some objections, 16—18. And expresses his apprehensions, that when he visits them, he shall find many evils and disorders among them, 19—21.

chapter, in reference to glorifying, is, that though to boast in any attainments, or in what God did by him, was in all possible cases to be avoided, as being contrary to the humility and simplicity of the Gospel; yet the circumstances in which he was found, in reference to the Corinthian church, and his detractors there, rendered it absolutely necessary; not for his personal vindication, but for the honour of the Gospel, the credit of which was certainly at stake.

I will come to visions] ὀρασεις, symbolical representations of spiritual and celestial things; in which matters of the deepest importance are exhibited to the eye of the mind, by a variety of emblems; the nature and properties of which serve to illustrate those spiritual things.

Revelations] ἀποκαλυψεις; a manifestation of things not before known, and such as God alone can make known; because they are a part of his own inscrutable counsels.

Verse 2. I knew a man in Christ] I knew a Christian, or a Christian man; for to such alone God now revealed himself; for vision and prophecy had been shut up from the Jews.

Fourteen years ago] On what occasion, or in what place, this transaction took place, we cannot tell: there are many conjectures among learned men concerning it, but of what utility can they be, when every thing is so palpably uncertain? Allowing this epistle to have been written some time in the year 57, fourteen years counted backward, will lead this transaction to the year 42 or 43, which was about the time that Barnabas brought Paul from Tarsus to Antioch, Acts xi. 25, 26. and when he and Paul were sent by the church of Antioch with alms to the poor Christians at Jerusalem. It is very possible, that, on this journey, or while in Jerusalem, he had this vision; which was intended to be the means of establishing him in the faith, and supporting him in the many trials and difficulties through which he was to pass. This vision the apostle had kept secret for fourteen years.

Whether in the body, I cannot tell] That the apostle was in an ecstasy or trance, something like that of Peter, Acts x. 9. there is reason to believe; but we know that, being carried literally into heaven, was possible to the Almighty. But as he could not decide himself, it would be ridiculous in us to attempt it.

Caught up to the third heaven.] He appeared to have been carried up to this place, but whether bodily, he could not tell; whether the spirit were not separated for the time, and taken up to the third heaven, he could not tell.

The third heaven—The Jews talk of seven heavens; and Mohammed has received the same from them; but these are not only fabulous, but absurd. I shall enumerate those of the Jews.

1. The VELUM, or curtain, יילון “Which in the morning is folded up; and in the evening stretched out.” Isai. xl. 22. He stretcheth out the heavens as a CURTAIN, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in.

2. The FIRMAMENT, or EXPANSE, רקק “In which the sun, moon, stars, and constellations are fixed.” Gen. i. 17. And God placed them in the FIRMAMENT of heaven.

3. The CLOUDS, or ÆTHER, עננים “Where the millstones are which grind the manna for the righteous.” Psal. lxxviii. 23, &c. Though he had commanded the CLOUDS from above, and opened the doors of heaven; and had rained down manna, &c.

4. The HABITATION, בית “where Jerusalem, and the temple, and the altar were constructed; and where Michael the great Prince stands, and offers sacrifice.” 1 Kings viii. 13. I have surely built thee a HOUSE TO DWELL IN, a settled place for thee to abide in for ever. “But where is heaven so called?” Ans. in Isai. lxiii. 15. Look down from HEAVEN, and behold from the HABITATION, בית of thy holiness.

5. The DWELLING-PLACE, מקום “where the troops of angels sing throughout the night, but are silent in the day-time, because of the glory of the Israelites.” Psal. xlii. 8. The Lord will command his loving-kindness in the day-time, and in the night his song shall be with me. “But how is it proved that this means heaven?” Answer, from Deut. xxvi. 15. Look down from thy holy habitation, מקום the DWELLING-PLACE of thy holiness; and from heaven, השמים and bless thy people Israel.

6. The FIXED RESIDENCE, מקום, “where are the treasures of snow and hail; the repository of noxious dews, of drops and whirlwinds; the grotto of exhalations,” &c. “But where are the heavens thus denominated?” Ans. in 1 Kings viii. 39, 40, &c. Then hear thou in HEAVEN thy DWELLING-PLACE, מקום כבוד thy FIXED RESIDENCE.

7. The ARABOTH, ערבות “where are justice, judgment, mercy, the treasures of life; peace and blessedness; the souls of the righteous; and the souls and spirits which are reserved for the bodies yet to be formed; and the dew by which God is to vivify the dead.” Psal. lxxxix.

14. Isai. lix. 17. Psal. xxxvi. 9. Judges vi. 24. Psal. xxiv. 4. 1 Sam. xxv. 29. Isai. lvii. 20. Psal. lxxvii. 9. “All of which are termed Araboth, Psal. lxxviii. 4. Extol him who rideth on the heavens, ערבות ba-ARABOTH, by his name Jah.

All this is sufficiently unphilosophical, and in several cases ridiculous.

In the Sacred Writings, three heavens only are mentioned. The first is the atmosphere, what appears to be intended by רקק rakiâ, the firmament or expansion, Gen. i. 6. The second, the starry heaven; where are the sun, moon, planets, and stars; but these two are often expressed under the one term שמים shamayim, the two heavens, or expansions; and in Gen. i. 17. they appear to be both expressed by רקק הרמים rakiâ hashamayim; and firmament of heaven.

And, thirdly, the place of the blessed, or the throne of the Divine glory, probably expressed by the word שָׁמַיִם שְׁמַיִם shamayim, hashamayim; the heavens of heavens. But on these subjects the Scripture affords us but little light; and on this distinction, the reader is not desired to rely.

Much more may be seen in Schoetgen, who has exhausted the subject; and who has shown, that ascending to heaven, or being caught up to heaven, is a form of speech among the Jewish writers, to express the highest degrees of inspiration. They often say of Moses, that he ascended on high, ascended on the firmament, ascended to heaven; where it is evident they mean only by it, that he was favoured with the nearest intimacy with God, and the highest revelations relative to his will, &c. If we understand St. Paul thus, it will remove much of the difficulty from this place; and perhaps the unspeakable words, ver. 4. are thus to be understood. He had the most sublime communications from God; such as would be improper to mention: though it is very likely that we have the substance of these in his epistles. Indeed, the two epistles before us, seem, in many places, to be the effect of most extraordinary revelations.

Verse 4. Caught up into paradise] The Jewish writers have no less than four paradises; as they have seven heavens. But it is needless to wade through their fables. On the word paradise, see the note on Gen. ii. 8. The Mohammedans call it جنة الفردوس jennet alferdoos, the garden of paradise; and say that God created it out of light, and that it is the habitation of the prophets and wise men.

Among Christian writers, it generally means the place of the blessed; or the state of separate spirits. Whether the third heaven and paradise be the same place, we cannot absolutely say; they probably are not: and it is likely, that St. Paul, at the time referred to, had at least two of these raptures.

Which it is not lawful for a man to utter] The Jews thought, that the Divine name, the Tetragrammaton יהוה Yehovah, should not be uttered; and that it is absolutely unlawful to pronounce it; indeed they say that the true pronunciation is utterly lost, and cannot be recovered without an express revelation. Not one of them, to the present day, ever attempts to utter it; and, when they meet with it in their reading, always supply its place with אדוני Adonai, Lord. It is probable that the apostle refers to some communication concerning the say the truth: but now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me.

7 And lest I should be exalted above measure through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a ^e thorn in the flesh, ^f the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest

Divine nature, and the Divine economy, of which he was only to make a general use in his preaching and writing. No doubt, that what he learned at this time, formed the basis of all his doctrines.

Cicero terms God, illud inexprimabile; that inexpressible Being. And Hermes calls him ἀεικλάωτος, ἀεργος, σιωπη εὐνομοτος: the ineffable! the unspeakable! and that which is to be pronounced in silence! We cannot have views too exalted of the majesty of God: and the less frequently we pronounce his name, the more reverence shall we feel for his nature. It is said of Mr. Boyle, that he never pronounced the name of God, without either taking off his hat, or making a bow. Leaving out profane swearers, blasphemers, and such like open-faced servants of Satan, it is distressing to hear many well-intentioned people making unscripturally free with this sacred name.

Verse 5. Of such an one will I glory] Through modesty he does not mention himself; though the account can be understood of no other person: for, did he mean any other, the whole account would be completely irrelevant.

Verse 6. I shall not be a fool] Who that had got such honour from God, would have been fourteen years silent on the subject?

I will say the truth] I speak nothing but truth; and the apostle seems to have intended to proceed with something else of the same kind; but finding some reason probably occurring suddenly, says, I forbear; I will say no more on this subject.

Lest any man should think of me above] The apostle spoke of these revelations for two purposes: first, lest his enemies might suppose they had cause to think meanly of him. And, secondly, having said thus much, he forbears to speak any further of them, lest his friends should think too highly of him. It is a rare gift to discern when to speak, and when to be silent; and to know when enough is said on a subject; neither too little nor too much.

Verse 7. And lest I should be exalted] There were three evils to be guarded against—1. The contempt of his gifts and call by his enemies. 2. The overweening fondness of his friends. And, 3. Self-exaltation.

A thorn in the flesh] The word σκολοφ, signifies a stake, and ἀσκολοπιζομαι, to be tyed to a stake, by way of punishment: and it is used, says Schoetgen, to signify the most oppressive afflictions. Whatever it was, it was τῆ σαρκί, in the flesh: i. e. of an outward kind. It was neither sin nor sinfulness, for this could not be given him to prevent his being exalted above measure: for sin never had, and never can have, this tendency. What this thorn in the flesh might be, has given birth to a multitude of conjectures: Tertullian thought it dolor auriculæ, the ear-ach; Chrysostom, κεφαλαλγία, the head-ach; Cyprian, carnis et corporis multa ac gravia tormenta, many and grievous bodily torments. I believe the apostle to refer simply to the distresses he had endured through the opposition he met with at Corinth; which were as painful and grievous to him as a thorn in his flesh, or his being bound to a stake; for, if he could have devoted himself to destruction, Rom. ix. 3. for his rebellious and unbelieving countrymen, what must he have suffered on account of an eminent church being perverted, and torn to pieces, by a false teacher? God permitted this to keep the apostle humble, and at last completely delivered the church out of the hands and influence of this deceiver: none, not even the incestuous person, having been turned finally out of the way, by the false doctrines there preached.

The messenger of Satan] Another mode of expressing what he calls the thorn in the flesh; and he seems most plainly to refer to the false apostle at Corinth. The apostle himself was, as he styles himself, to this church, ἀποστόλος Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, chap. i. 1. the apostle of Jesus Christ. The person in question is styled here ἀγγέλος Σαταν, the apostle or angel of Satan. It is almost impossible to mistake the apostle's meaning and reference. JESUS CHRIST sent Paul to proclaim his truth, and found a church at Corinth. SATAN, the adversary of God's truth, sent a man to preach lies at the same place; and turn the church of God into his own synagogue; and, by his teaching lies and calumnies, the apostle was severely buffeted. We need seek no other sense for these expressions. Many, however, think that the apostle had really some bodily infirmity, that rendered him contemptible, and was the means of obstructing the success of his ministry; and that the false apostle availed himself of this, to set St. Paul at nought, and to hold him out to ridicule. I have shown this elsewhere, to be very unlikely.

The best arguments in favour of this opinion, may be found in Whitby; but I forbear to transcribe them, because I think the meaning given above is more correct. No infirmity of body, or corporal sufferings, can affect and distress a minister of the Gospel, equally to the perversion or scattering of a flock, which were the fruit of innumerable labours, watchings, fastings, prayers, and tears.

Verse 8. I besought the Lord] That is, Christ, as the next verse absolutely proves; and the So-sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me.

cinians themselves confess. And if Christ be an object of prayer, in such a case as this, or indeed in any case, it is a sure proof of his Divinity; for, only an Omniscent Being can be made an object of prayer.

Thrice] Several suppose this to be a certain number for an uncertain; as if he had said, I often besought Christ to deliver me from this tormentor: or, which is perhaps more likely, the apostle may refer to three solemn, fixed, and fervent applications, made to Christ at different times; at the last of which he received the answer which he immediately subjoins. It is worthy of remark, that our Lord, in his agony, acted in the same way; at three different times he applied to God that the cup might depart from him; and, in each application, he spoke the same words, Matt. xxvi. 39—44. There is, therefore, a manifest allusion to our Lord's conduct in these words of the apostle.

Verse 9. My grace is sufficient for thee] Thou shalt not be permitted to sink under these afflictions. Thy enemies shall not be able to prevail against thee.

My strength is made perfect in weakness] The more, and the more violently thou art afflicted and tried, being upheld by my power, and prospered in all thy labours, the more eminently will my power be seen and acknowledged. For the weaker the instrument I use, the more the power of my grace shall be manifested. See at the end of this chapter.

Will I rather glory in my infirmities] Therefore his infirmities do not mean his corruptions, or sins, or sinfulness of any kind; for it would be blasphemous for any man to say, I will rather glory that God leaves my corruptions in me, than that he should take them away.

That the power of Christ may rest upon me.] Επισκηνώσῃ ἐν ἐμοί, that it may overshadow me as a tent or tabernacle; affording me shelter, protection, safety, and rest. This expression is like that, John i. 14. And the word was made flesh, καὶ ἐσκηνώσεν ἐν ἡμῖν, and made his tabernacle among us, full of grace and truth. The same eternal word promised to make his tabernacle with the apostle; and gives him a proof that he was still the same, full of grace and truth; by assuring him that his grace should be sufficient for him.—Paul knowing that the promise of grace could not fail, because of the Divine truth, says, Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my afflictions, that such a power of Christ may overshadow and defend me.

The words are also similar to those of the prophet Isaiah, iv. 5. On all thy glory shall be a defence; God gives the glory, and God gives the defence of that glory. The apostle had much glory or honour; both Satan and his apostles were very envious: in himself, the apostle, as well as all human beings, was weak, and therefore needed the power of God to defend such glory. Grace alone can preserve grace. When we get a particular blessing, we need another to preserve it; and, without this, we shall soon be shorn of our strength, and become as other men. Hence the necessity of continual watchfulness and prayer; and depending on the all-sufficient grace of Christ. See on chap. xi. 30.

10 Therefore ^a I take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: ^b for when I am weak, then am I strong.

11 I am become ^c a fool in glorying; ye have compelled me: for I ought to have been commended of you: for ^d in nothing am I behind the very chiefest apostles, though ^e I be nothing.

12 Truly the signs of an apostle were wrought among you in all patience, in signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds.

Verse 10. Therefore I take pleasure] I not only endure them patiently, but am pleased when they occur: for, I do it for Christ's sake; on his account; for, on his account I suffer. For when I am weak, most oppressed with trials and afflictions, then am I strong; God supporting my mind with his most powerful influences; causing me to rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory.

Verse 11. I am become a fool in glorying] It is not the part of a wise or gracious man to boast; but ye have compelled me: I have been obliged to do it, in order to vindicate the cause of God.

I ought to have been commended of you] You should have vindicated both myself and my ministry against the detractors that are among you.

The very chiefest apostles] See chap. xi. 1. Though I be nothing] Though I have been thus set at nought by your false apostle; and though, in consequence of what he has said, some of you have been ready to consider me as nothing. This must be the meaning of the apostle, as the following verses prove.

A kind of technical meaning has been imposed on these words, of which many good people seem very fond. I am nothing; I am all sin, defilement, and unworthiness in myself; but Jesus Christ is all in all. This latter clause is an eternal truth; the former may be very true also: the person who uses it may be all sin, defilement, &c. but let him not say that the apostle of the Gentiles was so too, because this is not true; it is false: and it is injurious to the character of the apostle, and to the grace of Christ: besides, it is not the meaning of the text; and the use commonly made of it is abominable, if not wicked.

Verse 12. The signs of an apostle were wrought among you] Though I have been reputed as nothing, I have given the fullest proof of my Divine mission, by various signs, wonders, and miracles; and by that patience which I have manifested towards you; though I had power from God to inflict punishment on the transgressors, I have in every case forborne to do it. Is the man nothing who wrought such miracles among you?

Verse 13. For what is it wherein ye were inferior] This is a fine, forcible, yet delicate stroke. It was your duty, and your interest, to have supported your apostle; other churches have done so: I did not require this from you; in this respect all other churches are superior to you. I am the cause of your inferiority, by not giving you an opportunity of ministering to my necessities: forgive me the wrong I have done you.—It is the privilege of the churches of Christ to support the ministry of his Gospel among them. Those who do not contribute their part to the support of the Gospel ministry, either care nothing for it, or derive no good from it.

Verse 14. The third time I am ready] That is, this is the third time that I am ready, have formed the resolution to visit you. He had formed this resolution twice before, but was disappointed.—See 1 Cor. xvi. 5. and 2 Cor. i. 15, 16. He now formed it a third time, having more probability of seeing them now than he had before.—See chap. xiii. 2.

I seek not yours, but you] I seek your salvation; I desire not your property: others have sought your property, but not your salvation.—See chap. xi. 20.

For the children ought not to lay up for the parents] You may have many teachers, but you have but one FATHER; for in Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the Gospel: see 1 Cor. iv. 15. Ye are my children, and I am your father. You have not contributed to my support; but I have been labouring for your life. I will act towards you as the loving father who works hard, and lays up what is necessary to enable his children to get their bread.

be spent for you] I will continue to act as a loving father, who spends all he has upon his children; and expends his own strength and life in providing for them the things necessary for their preservation and comfort.

Though the more abundantly I love you] I will even act towards you with the most affectionate tenderness, though it happen to me as it often does to loving fathers, that their disobedient children love them less, in proportion as their love to them is increased. Does it not frequently happen, that the most disobedient child in the family is that one on which the parents' tenderness is more especially placed? See the parable of the prodigal son.—It is in the order of God that it should be so; else the case of every prodigal would be utterly deplorable. The shepherd feels more for the lost sheep than for the ninety-nine that have not gone astray.

If I be asked, "Should Christian parents lay up money for their children?" I answer—It is the duty of every parent, who can, to lay up what is necessary to put every child in a condition to earn its bread. If he neglect this, he undoubtedly sins against God and nature. "But should not a man lay up, besides this, a fortune for his children, if he can honestly?" I answer, Yes, if there be no poor within his reach: no good work which he can assist; no heathen region on the earth to which he can contribute to send the Gospel of Jesus; but not otherwise. God shows, in the course of his Providence, that this laying up of fortunes for children is not right; for there is scarcely ever a case where money has been saved up to make the children independent, and gentlemen, in which God has not cursed the blessing. It was saved from the poor; from the ignorant; from the cause of God; and the canker of his displeasure consumed this ill-saved property.

Verse 16. But be it so, I did not burden you] That is, you grant that I did not burden you; that I took nothing from you, but preached to you the Gospel freely: but you say, that BEING CRAFTY, I caught you with guile; i. e. getting from you, by means of others, what I pretended to be unwilling to receive immediately from yourselves.

Many persons suppose that the words, being crafty, I caught you with guile, are the words of the apostle, and not of his slanderers; and therefore have concluded that it is lawful to use

19 * Again, think ye that we excuse ourselves unto you? ^f we speak before God in Christ: but ^g we do all things, dearly beloved, for your edifying.

20 For I fear, lest, when I come, I shall not find you such as I would; and that ^h I shall be found unto you such as ye would not: lest there be debates, envyings, wraths, strifes, backbitings, whisperings, swellings, tumults:

guile, deceit, &c. in order to serve a good and religious purpose. This doctrine is abominable; and the words are most evidently those of the apostle's detractors, against which he defends his conduct in the two following verses.

Verse 17. Did I make a gain of you] Did any person I ever sent to preach the Gospel to you, or help you in your Christian course, ever get any thing from you for me? Produce the proof if you can?

Verse 18. I desired Titus] I never sent any to you but Titus and another brother, chap. viii. 6, 18. And did Titus make a gain of you? Did he get any thing from you, either for himself or for me?—You know he did not. He was actuated by the same spirit, and he walked in the same steps?

Verse 19. Think ye that we excuse ourselves?] Απολογουμεθα; that we make an apology for our conduct: or, that I have sent Titus and that brother to you, because I was ashamed or afraid to come myself?

We speak before God in Christ] I have not done so; I speak the truth before God; He is judge whether I was actuated in this by any sinister or unworthy motive.

For your edifying.] Whatever I have done in this, or any other way, I have done for your edifying; not for any emolument to myself or friends.

Verse 20. I fear, lest, when I come] I think the present time is used here for the past; the apostle seems most evidently to be giving them the reason why he had not come to them according to his former purposes; and why he sent Titus and his companion. He was afraid to come at that time, lest he should have found them perverted from the right way, and he be obliged to make use of his apostolical rod, and punish the offenders: but, feeling towards them the heart of a tender father, he was unwilling to use the rod; and sent the first epistle to them, and the messengers above-mentioned, being reluctant to go himself till he had satisfactory evidence that their divisions were ended; and that they had repented for, and put away, the evils that they had committed; and that he should not be obliged to bewail them who had sinned so abominably, and had not repented for their crimes. If this verse be understood in this way, all difficulty will vanish; otherwise, what is here said does seem to contradict what is said, chap. vii. 6, 16, &c. as well as many things, both in the eighth and ninth chapters.

Debates, envyings] From these different expressions, which are too plain to need interpretation, we see what a distracted and divided state the church at Corinth must have been in. Brotherly love and charity seem to have been driven out of this once heavenly assembly. These debates, &c. are precisely the opposites to that love which the apostle recommends and explains by its different properties, in the 13th chapter of his first epistle.

Mr. Wakefield translates the original thus: strifes, rivalries, passions, provocations, slanders, whisperings, swellings, quarrels.

Verse 21. Lest, when I come again] And even after all that has been done for you, I fear that, when I do come, when I pay you my second visit, my God will humble me; will permit me to be affected with deep sorrow through what I may see among you; as I have been by the buffetings of the apostle of Satan, who has perverted you. Humiliation is repeatedly used for affliction; and here ταπεινωσις, has certainly that meaning.

Have sinned already] Προμαρτυρηστας, who have sinned before; who were some of the first offenders; and have not yet repented.

Of the uncleanness, &c.] There must have been a total relaxation of discipline, else such abominations could not have been tolerated in the Christian church. And although what is here spoken could only be the case of a few; yet the many were ill-disciplined, else these must have been cast out. On the whole, this church seems to have been a composition of excellencies and defects; of vices and virtues, and should not be quoted as a model for a Christian church.

1. From St. Paul, we receive two remarkable sayings of our Lord, which are of infinite value to the welfare and salvation of man; which are properly parts of the Gospel; but are not mentioned by any evangelist. The first is in Acts xx. 35. I have showed you the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, IT IS MORE BLESSED TO GIVE THAN TO RECEIVE. Every liberal heart feels this in bestowing its bounty; and every poor man, who is obliged to receive help, and whose independency of spirit is still whole in him, feels this too. To the genuine poor, it is more burdensome to receive a kindness, than it is to the generous man who gives it. The second is recorded in the ninth verse of this chapter; He said unto me, MY GRACE IS SUFFICIENT FOR THEE; FOR MY STRENGTH IS MADE PERFECT IN WEAKNESS. Of these two most blessed sayings, St. Paul is the only evangelist. This last is of general application. In all states and conditions of life, God's grace is sufficient for us. If, in any case, we miscarry, it is because we have not sought God earnestly. Let no man say that he is overcome by sin, through want of grace; God's grace was sufficient for him, but he did not apply for it as did St. Paul; and therefore he did not receive it. Men often lay the issue of their own infidelity to the charge of God; they excuse their commission of sin through their scantiness of grace; whereas the whole is owing to their carelessness, and refusal to be saved in God's own way: and in this way alone will God save any man, because it is the only effectual way.

2. The apostle must have been brought into a blessed state of subjection to God, when he could say, I take pleasure in infirmities; that is, in afflictions and sufferings of different kinds. Though this language was spoken on earth, we may justly allow with one, that he learned it in HEAVEN.

3. St. Paul preached the Gospel without being burdensome. In every case the labourer is worthy of his hire. He who labours for the cause of God should be supported by the cause of God; but woe to that man who aggrandizes himself, and grows rich by the spoils of the faithful! And to him especially who has made a fortune out of the penice of the poor. In such a man's heart, the love of money must have its throne. As to his professed spirituality, it is nothing; he is a whited sepulchre, and an abomination in the sight of the Lord. If a man will love the world, (and he does love it, who makes a fortune by the offerings of the poor,) the love of the Father is not in him.

CHAPTER XIII.

The apostle again says that it is the third time he has purposed to come and see them: and threatens that he will, by the power of Christ, punish every incorrigible sinner, 1—4. Exhorts them to examine themselves, whether they be in the faith, 5, 6. Prays that they may do no evil, 7. And shows how ardently he wished their complete restoration to unity and purity, 8, 9. Tells them for what reason he writes to them, 10. Bids them farewell, 11. Gives them some directions, and concludes with his apostolical benediction, 12—14.

The Corinthians exhorted, II. CORINTHIANS. to examine themselves.

NOTES ON CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. This is the third time I am coming to you.] These words are nearly the same with those chap. xii. 14. and probably refer to the purpose which he had twice before formed of seeing them. But the latter clause seems to attach a different meaning to the passage; at least so it has been understood by some learned men.

Schoolgen thus interprets the whole: the first coming of the apostle to Corinth, was when he personally visited them, and there founded the Christian church. By his second coming we are to understand his first epistle to them: and, by his being now ready to come to them the third time, we are to understand this second epistle, which he was then going to send them. These were the two witnesses, and the apostle the third, which he gave to the Corinthians concerning the truth of his own ministry, or the falsity of the ministry of the pretended apostle.

Calmet contends that the apostle had been twice before at Corinth, and that he now purposed to go a third time; and that these visits were the two or three witnesses to which the apostle appeals.

Dr. Lightfoot thinks that the two or three witnesses were Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus, sent to assure them of his coming. But this opinion cannot be supported.

With respect to the two or three witnesses establishing the subject, Dr. Whitby says, "Though these words seem to be cited from Deut. xix. 15. rather than from Matt. xviii. 16. It being rare to find this apostle citing any thing from the New Testament, without calling it an ordinance of the Lord; yet it is probable that he here alludes to the practice there prescribed, for the reclaiming of offenders. And then his first epistle being written with this introduction, Paul an apostle, and Sosthenes; his second thus, Paul and Timotheus, may pass for two or three witnesses: and his presence the third time in person, to exercise his censures on those offenders, before the body of the church, may bear a fair resemblance to our Lord's prescription in the above case, If thy brother offend, &c."—So far Whitby. See my notes on Matt. xviii. 16.

Verse 2. I told you before, &c.] As Calmet maintains that Paul had already been twice at Corinth, it is well to hear his reasons: "St. Paul came to Corinth the latter end of the year of our Lord 52. and remained there eighteen months, Acts xviii. 1, &c. He came there a second time in the year 55, but staid only a short time, as he had to return speedily to Ephesus, 1 Cor. xvi. 7. hence it is that St. Luke makes no mention of this second journey in the Acts. Finally, he determined to visit them a third time; as, in effect, he did, about the year 57. Of his second voyage to Corinth, which is not mentioned in the Acts, he speaks expressly in this verse."

I do not see sufficient evidence to induce me to subscribe to this opinion of Calmet. I believe the apostle had been but once before at Corinth; and this matter is set in a clear point of view by Dr. Paley.—See the Introduction, sect. xi.

I will not spare] I will inflict the proper punishment on every incorrigible offender. It does appear from all the apostle's threatenings, that he was possessed of a miraculous power, by which he could inflict punishment on offenders; that he could deliver the body to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus, 1 Cor. iv. 21. v. 5. What he says he told them before, probably relates to 1 Cor. iv. 21. Shall I come with a rod, &c.

Verse 3. Since ye seek a proof of Christ] The conversion of the Corinthians was to themselves a solid proof that Christ spoke by the apostle; and therefore he could, with great propriety, say that this power of Christ, far from being weak, was mighty among them.

Verse 4. For though he was crucified through weakness] It is true Christ was crucified, and his crucifixion appeared to be the effect of his weakness; yet even this was not so; he gave up his life; none could take it away from him; and, in his last struggle, had he even been deficient in power, he could have had more than twelve legions of angels to support him against the high-priest's mob, Matt. xxvi. 53. but how then could the Scripture be fulfilled? And had he not died, how could the human race have been saved?

Yet he liveth by the power of God] Though he appeared to be crucified through his own weakness, yet he now liveth by the power of God; exerting an almighty energy by which all things are subject to him.

We also are weak in him] Because we are on Christ's side, we appear to you as weak as he did to the Jews; but, it is not so, for we live with him; under the same influence, and partaking of the same life; manifesting, by our preaching and miracles, the power of God towards you. While I do not use the rod, I appear to you weak; I will use it, and then you shall find me to be strong.

Verse 5. Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith] ἑαυτοὺς ἑραυτήσατε, try yourselves, pierce your hearts; bore yourselves throughout; try yourselves by what I have written, and see whether ye retain the true faith of the Gospel.

Prove your own selves] ἑαυτοὺς δοκιματήσατε, put yourselves to the test; as you would try gold or silver, suspected of adulteration. No more take that for Gospel which is not so, than you would take adulterated money for sterling coin. This is a metaphor taken from testing, or assaying adulterate metals.

Know ye not your own selves] Are ye not full of wisdom and understanding? and is it not as easy to find out a spurious faith, as it is to detect a base coin? There is an assay and touch-stone for both. If base metal be mixed with the pure, you can readily detect it; and as easily may you know that you are in the faith, as you can know that base metal is mixed with the pure. Does Jesus Christ dwell in you? You have his Spirit; his power; his mind; if ye be Christians. And the Spirit of Christ bears witness with your spirit, that ye are the children of God. And this is the case except ye be reprobates; ἀδύνατοι, base, counterfeit coin; mongrel Christians. This metaphor holds excellently here. They had a Judaizing Christian among them; such, presumptively, was the false apostle: they had received his judaico-christian doctrine, and were what the prophet said of the Israelites in his time; reprobate silver, adulterated coin, shall men call them, Jer. vi. 30. And thus, when they were brought to the test, they were found reprobate; that is, adulterated with this mixture of bad doctrine. There is no other kind of reprobation mentioned here than that which refers to the trial and rejection of adulterated coin; and, by way of metaphor, to the detection of false Christianity. This reprobation came of the people themselves: they, not God, adulterated the pure metal. Man pollutes himself; then God reprobates the polluted.

Verse 6. Ye shall know that we are not reprobates] Ye have had, and ye shall have, the fullest proof that I have preached the true faith among you; and that God has confirmed it by his testimony: and thus, that I am proved, and manifested to be what I ought to be; and shown to be approved of God.

evil; not that we should appear approved, but that ye should do that which is honest, though ^d we be as reprobates.

8 For we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth.

9 For we are glad, ^e when we are weak, and ye are strong: and this

^d Ch. 6. 9. — ^e 1 Cor. 4. 10. Ch. 11. 30. & 12. 5, 9, 10.

Verse 7. I pray to God that ye do no evil] That ye do not persist in that course which will oblige me to use the power of Christ, with which I am endued, to punish you. Some apply this prayer to the apostle himself: Now I pray to God that I may do you no evil; that I may not be obliged to use my apostolic rod, and inflict evil upon you.

Not that we should appear approved] We do not wish to give this proof that we are approved of God, by inflicting this punishment on the transgressors.

But that ye should do that which is honest] That ye may do that which is right and seemly, το καλον; though we should be in consequence of that, reprobates, as persons not approved of God; because your reformation will prevent the exercise of this power, which would otherwise have given an awful proof that we are approved of God.

Verse 8. For we can do nothing against the truth, but for the truth] As we are the apostles of God, we cannot bring to you any false doctrine; and, as we profess to be under the influence of God's Spirit, we cannot do any thing that is opposed to that truth, or which might be prejudicial to it. On the contrary, what we say and do, is for that truth, to propagate and establish it. The Gospel of Jesus is truth; and my testimony concerning it is truth also. In my coming, and in my rod, you have nothing to fear, if ye retain, and abide in this truth.

Verse 9. For we are glad, when we are weak] It will give me indescribable pleasure that I should still appear to be poor, despicable, and destitute of this extraordinary power, with which God has clothed me: so that you be strong in all the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit.

And this also we wish, even your perfection] We cannot be satisfied that persons, with such eminent endowments, and who have once received the truth as it is in Jesus, should be deficient in any of the graces that constitute the mind of Christ; such as brotherly love, charity, harmony, unity, and order. I have given the above paraphrase to this verse, because of the last term καταρτισια, which we render perfection. Καταρτισιαι, from κατα, intensive, and αετιζω, to fit or adapt, signifies the reducing of a dislocated limb to its proper place; and hence, as Beza says on this passage, "The apostle's meaning is, that whereas the members of the church were all, as it were, dislocated, and out of joint, they should be joined together in love; and they should endeavour to make perfect what was amiss among them, either in faith or morals."

It is a metaphor also taken from a building ;
the several stones and timbers being all put in their proper places and situations, so that the whole building might be complete, and be a proper habitation for the owner. The same
uses, Eph. ii. 20—22.

The perfection or rejoining which the apostle wishes, is that which he refers to the state of the church, in its fellowship, unity, order, &c.
And perfection, in the soul, is the same in reference to it; as perfection in the church is to its order and unity. The perfection or rejoining of the soul implies its purification, and placing every faculty, passion, and appetite, in its proper place; so that the original order, harmony, unity, and purity of the soul may be restored: and the whole builded up to be a habitation of God through the Spirit, Eph. ii. 22.

Verse 10. Therefore I write these things] I only threaten you now by this epistle, to put you on your guard, and lead you to reformation before I visit you; that I may not then have to use sharpness αποστομια, a cutting off; employing thus my apostolical authority to inflict punishment; a power which God has given me, rather to be employed in your edification, than in your destruction.

Verse 11. Finally] Ασπρον, all that remains for me now to write, is to wish you all manner of happiness, and so to take my leave.

Farewell] A good wish from our old mother tongue, compounded of παντα to go, and πελ, fairly, properly, or πελα, with felicity; go on prosperously! This is the spirit of this good wish.

The Greek χαίρει signifies nearly the same thing. Χαίρει means, to be very joyous; χαίρει, be joyous and happy; be ever prosperous, this was among the last words which Cyrus, when dying, spoke to his friends.

Be perfect] Καταρτισθε, be compact; get into joint again; let unity and harmony be restored!
See the note on ver. 9.

Be of good comfort] Παρακαλυθε, receive admonition; for, παρακαλω, signifies to admonish, beg, entreat; and also to comfort. Receive admonition, that ye may receive comfort. If ye take my advice, ye shall have consolation;
if ye do not, ye will have nothing but misery and wo.

12 ^a Greet one another with 13 All the saints salute

you.

14 ^b The grace of the Lord Jesus communion of the Holy Ghost, be with you all. Amen.

that religion, which should be the bond of peace,
for ever subside.

Live in peace] Ἐπιρῶν; cultivate peace; or,
as he says elsewhere, follow peace, and pursue it, Heb. xii. 14. Cultivate a peaceable disposi- tion; and neither say nor do any thing which has a tendency to irritate each other.

And the God of love and peace shall be with you.] While ye are full of contentions, dissensions, and discord, peace can have no place among you; and as to love, the fulfilling of the law, that worketh no ill to its neighbour, it has necessarily taken its flight. Love cannot live, neither exist, where there are brawls, contentions, and divisions. And where neither peace nor love is to be found, there God cannot be.
And if he be not there, yourselves and the devil

Verse 12. Greet one another with a holy kiss.] Use every means by which a good understanding may be brought about. Let the spirit of friend- ship live among you; and encourage its continuance by every friendly act. See the note on Rom. xvi. 16.

Verse 13. All the saints] The Christians of Macedonia or Philippi, from which he wrote this epistle. In the primitive church, a saint and a Christian were the same thing; for the Christian religion calls every man to be holy.

Verse 14. The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ] All the favour and benevolence that come from and through the Redeemer of the world; as the Lord, the ruler and governor of all things; as Jesus, the Saviour of all men by his passion and death; as Christ, the distributor of that divine unction which enlightens, comforts, harmonizes, and purifies the mind. May this most exalted, glorious, and all-sufficient Saviour, be ever with you.

And the love of God] God, your Maker, in that infinite love which induced him to create the world, and form man in his own image, and in his own likeness, that he might be capable of knowing, loving, and enjoying him for ever;
and God in the fullest manifestation of that love which caused him to give his only-begotten Son, to the end, that they who believe on him should not perish, but have everlasting life. May this

God of love, and this love of God, be ever with you!

And the communion of the Holy Ghost] May that Holy Spirit, that divine and eternal energy which proceeds from the Father and the Son; that heavenly fire that gives light and life; that purifies and refines; sublimates and exalts; comforts and invigorates; make you all partakers with himself!

Koinonia, which we translate fellowship and communion, signifies properly participation; having things in common; partaking with each other. This points out the astonishing privileges of true believers: they have communion with God's Spirit; share in all its gifts and graces; walk in its light; through him they have the fullest confidence that they are of God; that he is their Father and friend; and has blotted out all their iniquities: this they know by the Spirit which he has given them. And is it possible that a man shall be a partaker with the Holy Ghost, and not know it! that he shall be full of light and love, and not know it! that he shall have the spirit of adoption by which he can cry Abba! Father! and yet know nothing of his relationship to God, but by inference from indirect proofs! In a word, that he shall have the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost with him, and all the while know nothing certain of the grace, as to his portion in it; feel nothing warming from the love, as to its part in him: and nothing energetic from the communion, as to his participation in the gifts and graces of this Divine energy! This is all as absurd as it is impossible. Every genuine Christian who maintains a close walk with God, may have as full an evidence of his acceptance with God, as he has of his own existence. And the doctrine that explains away this privilege, or softens it down to nothing, by making the most gracious and safe state consistent with innumerable doubts and fears, and general uncertainty, is not of God. It is a spurious Gospel, which, under the show of a voluntary humility, not only lowers, but almost annihilates, the standard of Christianity.

This text, as well as that, Matt. iii. 16, 17. and that other, Matt. xxviii. 19. strongly mark the doctrine of the Holy TRINITY. See the note on this latter text. And had not the apostle been convinced that there was a personality in this ever-blessed and undivided Trinity, he could not have expressed himself thus. And had not our Lord intended to be understood in this way, he would not have given such a commission to his apostles to baptize the nations in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. The doctrine is the teaching of God; let men make of it what they please. And the genuine church of God have ever received and understood it in this way.

Amen.] This word is wanting, as usual, in almost every MS. of authority. Amen seems to have been anciently added at the conclusion of books, exactly as we add the word finis: both merely signifying the end.

As to the Inscription, it is wanting, either in whole or in part, in almost all the ancient MSS. The principal forms in which it exists are the following:

To the Corinthians, the second.—The second to the Corinthians is completed.—The second to the Corinthians is finished.—To the Corinthians, the second, written from Philippi.—Written from Philippi by Titus.—Written from Philippi by Titus and Luke.—By Titus, Barnabas and Luke.—The second Epistle to the Corinthians was written from Philippi of Macedonia, and sent by Titus, SYRIAC.—The end of the Epistle. It was written from the city of Philippi by Titus and Luke. Praise be to God for ever, ARABIC. In the VULGATE there is no subscription; nor in the ETHIOPIIC.—Written in Philippi of Macedonia, and sent by Titus and Luke, COPTIC.—The second Epistle to the Corinthians is ended; which was written from Philippi of Macedonia, by Titus and Luke, SYR. PHILOX.

It has been often remarked that no dependence can be placed on many of the subscriptions to the sacred books, which are found in MSS. and Versions, because those subscriptions were not written by the authors of those books; but were afterward added, by the transcribers or copiers, who followed either tradition or their own judgment. It is generally allowed that this second epistle was written from Macedonia; and probably from the city of Philippi, in that province. See the Introduction and Preface to this epistle.

END OF THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE CORINTHIANS.

INTRODUCTION
TO
THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE
TO THE GALATIANS.

THE authenticity of this epistle is ably vindicated by Dr. Paley: the principal part of his arguments I shall here introduce, and doubt not that they will be considered demonstrative evidence by every candid and unprejudiced reader.

SECTION I.

The argument of this epistle in some measure proves its antiquity. It will hardly be doubted, that it was written whilst the dispute concerning the circumcision of Gentile converts was fresh in men's minds: for, even supposing it to have been a forgery, the only credible motive that can be assigned for the forgery, was to bring the name and authority of the apostle into this controversy. No design could be so insipid, or so unlikely to enter into the thoughts of any man, as to produce an epistle written earnestly and pointedly upon one side of a controversy, when the controversy itself was dead, and the question no longer interesting to any description of readers whatever. Now the controversy concerning the circumcision of the Gentile Christians was of such a nature, that, if it arose at all, it must have arisen in the beginning of Christianity. As Judea was the scene of the Christian history; as the Author and preachers of Christianity were Jews; as the religion itself acknowledged and was founded upon the Jewish religion, in contradistinction to every other religion, then professed amongst mankind; it was not to be wondered at, that some of its teachers should carry it out in the world rather as a sect and modification of Judaism, than as a separate original revelation; or that they should invite their proselytes to those observances in which they lived themselves. This was likely to happen: but if it did not happen at first; if whilst the religion was in the hands of Jewish teachers, no such claim was advanced, no such condition was attempted to be imposed, it is not probable that the doctrine would be started, much less that it should prevail, in any future period. I likewise think, that those pretensions of Judaism were much more likely to be insisted upon, whilst the Jews continued a nation, than after their fall and dispersion; whilst Jerusalem and the temple stood, than after the destruction brought upon them by the Roman arms, the fatal cessation of the sacrifice and the priesthood, the humiliating loss of their country, and, with it, of the great rites and symbols of their institution. It should seem, therefore, from the nature of the subject, and the situation of the parties, that this controversy was carried on in the interval between the preaching of Christianity to the Gentiles, and the invasion of Titus; and that our present epistle, which was undoubtedly intended to bear a part in this controversy, must be referred to the same period.

But, again; the epistle supposes that certain designing adherents of the Jewish law had crept into the churches of Galatia; and had been endeavouring, and but too successfully, to persuade the Galatic converts, that they had been taught the new religion but imperfectly, and at second hand; that the founder of their church himself possessed only an inferior and deputed commission, the seat of truth and authority being in the apostles and elders of Jerusalem; moreover, that whatever he might profess amongst them, he had himself, at other times and in other places, given way to the doctrine of circumcision. The epistle is unintelligible without supposing all this. Referring therefore to this, as to what had actually passed, we find St. Paul treating so unjust an attempt to undermine his credit, and to introduce amongst his converts a doctrine which he had uniformly reprobated, in terms of great asperity and indignation. And in order to refute the suspicious which had been raised concerning the fidelity of his teaching, as well as to assert the independency and divine original of his mission, we find him appealing to the history of his conversion, to his conduct under it, to the manner in which he had conferred with the apostles when he met with them at Jerusalem: alleging, that so far was his doctrine from being derived from them, or they from exercising any superiority over him, that they had simply assented to what he had already preached amongst the Gentiles, and which preaching was communicated not by them to him, but by himself to them; that he had maintained the liberty of the Gentile church, by opposing, upon one occasion, an apostle to the face, when the timidity of his behaviour seemed to endanger it; that from the first, that all along, to that hour, he had constantly resisted the claims of Judaism; and that the persecutions which he daily underwent, at the hands or by the instigation of the Jews, and of which he bore in his person the marks and scars, might have been avoided by him, if he had consented to employ his labours in bringing, through the medium of Christianity, converts over to the Jewish institution, for then "would the offence of the cross have ceased." Now an impostor who had forged the epistle for the purpose of producing St. Paul's authority in the dispute, which, as hath been observed, is the only credible motive that can be assigned for the forgery, might have made the apostle deliver his opinion upon the subject, in strong and decisive terms, or might have put his name to a train of reasoning and argumentation upon that side of the question which the imposture was intended to recommend. I can allow the possibility of such a scheme as that. But for a writer, with this purpose in view, to feign a series of transactions supposed to have passed amongst the Christians of Galatia, and then to counterfeit the expressions of anger and resentment excited by these transactions; to make the apostle travel back into his own history, and into a recital of various passages of his life, some indeed directly, but others obliquely, and others even obscurely bearing upon the point in question; in a word, to substitute narrative for argument, ex-postulation and complaint for dogmatic positions and controversial reasoning, in a writing properly controversial, and of which the aim and design was to support one side of a much agitated question—is a method so intricate, and so unlike the methods pursued by all other impostors, as to require the very flagrant proofs of imposition to induce us to believe it to be one.

SECTION II.

In this section I shall endeavour to prove,

1. That the Epistle to the Galatians, and the Acts of the Apostles, were written without any communication with each other.

2. That the epistle, though written without any communication with the history, by recital, implication, or reference, bears testimony to many of the facts contained in it.

1. The epistle, and the Acts of the Apostles, were written without any communication with each other.

To judge of this point, we must examine those passages in each, which describe the same transactions; for, if the author of either writing derived his information from the account which he had seen in the other, when he came to speak of the same transaction, he would follow that account. The history of St. Paul, at Damascus, as read in the Acts, and as referred to by the epistle, forms an instance of this sort. According to the Acts, Paul (after his conversion) was certain days with the "disciples which were at Damascus. And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God. But all that heard him were amazed, and said, Is not this he which destroyed them which called on this name in Jerusalem, and came hither for that intent, that he might bring them bound unto the chief priests? But Saul increased the more in strength, confounding the Jews which were at Damascus, proving that this is very Christ. And after that many days were fulfilled, the Jews took counsel to kill him. But their laying wait was known of Saul; and they watched the gates day and night to kill him. Then the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket. And when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples." Acts, chap. ix. 19—26.

According to the epistle, "When it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his own Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood; neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again to Damascus; then, after three years, I went up to Jerusalem."

Beside the difference observable in the terms and general complexion of these two accounts, "the journey into Arabia," mentioned in the epistle, and omitted in the history, affords full proof that there existed no correspondence between these writers. If the narrative in the Acts had been made up from the epistle, it is impossible that this journey should have been passed over in silence; if the epistle had been composed out of what the author had read of St. Paul's history in the Acts, it is unaccountable that it should have been inserted.*

The journey to Jerusalem related in the second chapter of the epistle ("then, fourteen years after, I went up again to Jerusalem.") supplies another example of the same kind. Either this was the journey described in the fifteenth chapter of the Acts, when Paul and Barnabas were sent from Antioch to Jerusalem, to consult the apostles and elders upon the question of the Gentile converts; or it was some journey of which the history does not take notice. If the first opinion be followed, the discrepancy in the two accounts is so considerable, that it is not without difficulty, they can be adapted to the same transaction; so that upon this supposition, there is no place for suspecting that the writers were guided or assisted by each other. If the latter opinion be preferred, we have then a journey to Jerusalem, and a conference with the principal members of the church there, circumstantially related in the epistle, and entirely omitted in the Acts; and we are at liberty to repeat the observation, which we before made, that the omission of so material a fact in the history is inexplicable, if the historian had read the epistle; and that the insertion of it in the epistle, if the writer derived his information from the history, is not less so.

* N. B. The Acts of the Apostles simply inform us that St. Paul left Damascus in order to go to Jerusalem, "after many days were fulfilled." If any one doubt whether the words "many days" could be intended to express a period which included a term of three years, he will find a complete instance of the same phrase, used with the same latitude, in the first book of Kings, chap. xi. 38, 39. "And Shimei dwelt at Jerusalem 'many days:' and it came to pass at the end of 'three years,' that two of the servants of Shimei ran away."

St. Peter's visit to Antioch, during which the dispute arose between him and St. Paul, is not mentioned in the Acts.

If we connect, with these instances, the general observation, that no scrutiny can discover the smallest trace of transcription or imitation either in things or words, we shall be fully satisfied in this part of our case; namely, that the two records, be the facts contained in them true or false, come to our hands from independent sources.

Secondly, I say, that the epistle, thus proved to have been written without any communication with the history, bears testimony to a great variety of particulars contained in the history.

1. St. Paul in the early part of his life had addicted himself to the study of the Jewish religion, and was distinguished by his zeal for the institution, and for the traditions which had been incorporated with it. Upon this part of his character the history makes St. Paul speak thus: "I am verily a man which am a Jew, born in Tarsus, a city of Cilicia, yet brought up in this city at the feet of Gamaliel, and taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers; and was zealous towards God, as ye all are this day." Acts, chap. xxii. 3.

The epistle is as follows: "I profited in the Jews' religion above many my equals in mine own nation, being more exceedingly zealous of the traditions of my fathers." Chap. i. 14.

2. St. Paul, before his conversion, had been a fierce persecutor of the new sect. "As for Saul, he made havoc of the church; entering into every house, and haling men and women, committed them to prison." Acts, chap. viii. 3.

This is the history of St. Paul, as delivered in the Acts; in the recital of his own history in the epistle, "Ye have heard," says he, "of my conversation in times past in the Jews' religion, how that beyond measure I persecuted the church of God." Chap. i. 13.

3. St. Paul was miraculously converted on his way to Damascus. "And as he journeyed he came near to Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven: and he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And he, trembling and astonished, said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Acts, chap. ix. 3—6. With these compare the epistle, chap. i. 15—17. "When it pleased God, who separated me from my mother's womb, and called me by his grace, to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen; immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood, neither went I up to Jerusalem, to them that were apostles before me; but I went into Arabia, and returned again unto Damascus."

In this quotation from the epistle, I desire it to be remarked how incidentally it appears, that the affair passed at Damascus. In what may be called the direct part of the account, no mention is made of the place of his conversion at all: a casual expression at the end, and an expression brought in for a different purpose, alone fixes it to have been at Damascus; "I returned again to Damascus." Nothing can be more like simplicity and undesignedness than this is. It also draws the agreement between the two quotations somewhat closer, to observe, that they both state St. Paul to have preached the Gospel immediately upon his call: "And straightway he preached Christ in the synagogues, that he is the Son of God." Acts, chap. ix. 20. "When it pleased God to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen, immediately I conferred not with flesh and blood." Gal. chap. i. 15.

4. The course of the apostle's travels after his conversion was this: He went from Damascus to Jerusalem, and from Jerusalem into Syria and Cilicia. "At Damascus the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket; and when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples." Acts, chap. ix. 25. Afterward "when the brethren knew the conspiracy formed against him at Jerusalem, they brought him down to Cæsarea, and sent him forth to Tarsus, a city in Cilicia." Chap. ix. 30. In the epistle, St. Paul gives the following brief account of his proceedings within the same period: "After three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days; afterward I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia." The history had told us that Paul passed from Cæsarea to Tarsus: if he took this journey by land, it would carry him through Syria into Cilicia; and he would come, after his visit at Jerusalem, "into the regions of Syria and Cilicia," in the very order in which he mentions them in the epistle. This supposition of his going from Cæsarea to Tarsus by land clears up also another point. It accounts for what St. Paul says in the same place concerning the churches of Judea: "Afterward I came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia, and was unknown by face unto the churches of Judea, which were in Christ: but they had heard only that he which persecuted us in times past, now preacheth the faith, which once he destroyed; and they glorified God in me." Upon which passage I observe, first, that what is here said of the churches of Judea, is spoken in connexion with his journey into the regions of Syria and Cilicia. Secondly, that the passage itself has little significance, and that the connexion is inexplicable, unless St. Paul went through *Judea (though probably by a hasty journey) at the time that he came into the regions of Syria and Cilicia. Suppose

* Dr. Doddridge thought that the Cæsarea here mentioned was not the celebrated city of that name upon the Mediterranean Sea, but Cæsarea Philippi, near the borders of Syria, which lies in a much more direct line from Jerusalem to Tarsus than the other. The objection to this, Dr. Benson remarks, is; that Cæsarea, without any addition, usually denotes Cæsarea Palestina.

him to have passed by land from Cæsarea to Tarsus, all this, as hath been observed, would be precisely true.

5. Barnabas was with St. Paul at Antioch. "Then departed Barnabas to Tarsus, for to seek Saul; and when he had found him, he brought him unto Antioch. And it came to pass that a whole year they assembled themselves with the church." Acts, chap. xi. 25, 26. Again, and upon another occasion, "they (Paul and Barnabas) sailed to Antioch: and there they continued a long time with the disciples." Chap. xiv. 26.

Now what says the epistle? "When Peter was come to Antioch, I withstood him to the face, because he was to be blamed; and the other Jews dissembled likewise with him; insomuch that Barnabas also was carried with their dissimulation." Chap. ii. 11, 13.

6. The stated residence of the apostles was at Jerusalem. "At that time there was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem; and they were all scattered abroad throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, except the apostles." Acts, chap. viii. 1. "They (the Christians at Antioch) determined that Paul and Barnabas should go up to Jerusalem, unto the apostles and elders, about this question." Acts, chap. xv. 2.—With these accounts agrees the declaration in the epistle: "Neither went I up to Jerusalem to them which were apostles before me," chap. i. 17. for this declaration implies, or rather assumes it to be known, that Jerusalem was the place where the apostles were to be met with.

7. There were at Jerusalem two apostles, or at the least two eminent members of the church, of the name of James. This is directly inferred from the Acts of the Apostles, which in the second verse of the twelfth chapter relates the death of James, the brother of John; and yet in the fifteenth chapter, and in a subsequent part of the history, records a speech delivered by James in the assembly of the apostles and elders. It is also strongly implied by the form of expression used in the epistle: "Other apostles saw I none, save James, the Lord's brother;" i. e. to distinguish him from James, the brother of John.

To us who have been long conversant in the Christian history, as contained in the Acts of the Apostles, these points are obvious and familiar; nor do we readily apprehend any greater difficulty in making them appear in a letter purporting to have been written by St. Paul, than there is in introducing them into a modern sermon. But to judge correctly of the argument before us, we must discharge this knowledge from our thoughts. We must propose to ourselves the situation of an author who sat down to the writing of the epistle without having seen the history; and then the concurrences we have deduced will be deemed of importance. They will, at least, be taken for separate confirmations of the several facts; and not only of these particular facts, but of the general truth of the history.

For, what is the rule with respect to corroborative testimony, which prevails in courts of justice, and which prevails only because experience has proved that it is an useful guide to truth? A principal witness in a cause delivers his account: his narrative, in certain parts of it, is confirmed by witnesses who are called afterward. The credit derived from their testimony belongs not only to the particular circumstances in which the auxiliary witnesses agree with the principal witness, but in some measure to the whole of his evidence; because it is improbable that accident or fiction should draw a line which touched upon truth in so many points.

In like manner, if two records be produced, manifestly independent, that is, manifestly written without any participation of intelligence, an agreement between them, even in few and slight circumstances (especially if from the different nature and design of the writings, few points only of agreement, and those incidental, could be expected to occur,) would add a sensible weight to the authority of both, in every part of their contents.

The same rule is applicable to history, with at least as much reason as any other species of evidence.

SECTION III.

But although the references to various particulars in the epistle, compared with the direct account of the same particulars in the history, afford a considerable proof of the truth, not only of these particulars, but of the narrative which contains them; yet they do not show, it will be said, that the epistle was written by St. Paul; for admitting (what seems to have been proved) that the writer, whoever he was, had no recourse to the Acts of the Apostles; yet many of the facts referred to, such as St. Paul's miraculous conversion, his change from a virulent persecutor to an indefatigable preacher, his labours among the Gentiles, and his zeal for the liberties of the Gentile church, were so notorious as to occur readily to the mind of any Christian, who should choose to personate his character, and counterfeit his name; it was only to write what every body knew. Now I think that this supposition—viz. that the epistle was composed upon the general information, and the general publicity of the facts alluded to, and that the author did no more than weave into his work what the common fame of the Christian church had reported to his ears—is repelled by the particularity of the recitals and references. This particularity is observable in the following instances; in perusing which, I desire the reader to reflect, whether they exhibit the language of a man who had nothing but general reputation to proceed upon, or of a man actually speaking of himself and of his own history, and consequently of things concerning which he possessed a clear, intimate, and circumstantial knowledge.

1. The history, in giving an account of St. Paul after his conversion, relates, "that, after many days," effecting, by the assistance of the disciples, his escape from Damascus, "he proceeded to Jerusalem." Acts, chap. ix. 25. The epistle, speaking of the same period, makes St. Paul say, that "he went into Arabia," that he returned again to Damascus, that after three years he went up to Jerusalem. Chap. i. 17, 18.

EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

2. The history relates that, when Saul was come from Damascus, "he was with the disciples coming in and going out." Acts, chap. ix. 28. The epistle, describing the same journey, tells us, "that he went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days." Chap. i. 18.

3. The history relates, that when Paul was come to Jerusalem, "Barnabas took him and brought him to the apostles." Acts, chap. ix. 27. The epistle, "that he saw Peter; but other of the apostles saw he none, save James, the Lord's brother." Chap. i. 19.

Now this is as it should be. The historian delivers his account in general terms, as of facts to which he was not present. The person who is the subject of that account, when he comes to speak of these facts himself, particularizes time, names, and circumstances.

4. The like notation of places, persons, and dates, is met with in the account of St. Paul's journey to Jerusalem, given in the second chapter of the epistle. It was fourteen years after his conversion; it was in company with Barnabas and Titus; it was then that he met with James, Cephas, and John; it was then also that it was agreed amongst them, that they should go to the circumcision, and he unto the Gentiles.

5. The dispute with Peter, which occupies the sequel of the second chapter, is marked with the same particularity. It was at Antioch; it was after certain came from James; it was whilst Barnabas was there, who was carried away by their dissimulation. These examples negative the insinuation, that the epistle presents nothing but indefinite allusions to public facts.

SECTION IV.

Chap. iv. 11—16. "I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain. Brethren, I beseech you, be as I am, for I am as ye are. Ye have not injured me at all. Ye know how, through infirmity of the flesh, I preached the Gospel unto you at first; and my temptation, which was in the flesh, ye despised not, nor rejected; but received me as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus. Where is then the blessedness you spake of? for I bear you record, that if it had been possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them unto me. Am I therefore become your enemy, because I tell you the truth?"

With this passage compare 2 Cor. chap. xii. 1—9: "It is not expedient for me, doubtless, to glory; I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord. I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago (whether in the body I cannot tell, or whether out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth;) such a one was caught up to the third heaven; and I knew such a man (whether in the body or out of the body I cannot tell, God knoweth,) how that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. Of such a one will I glory, yet of myself will I not glory, but in mine infirmities: for, though I would desire to glory, I shall not be a fool; for I will say the truth. But now I forbear, lest any man should think of me above that which he seeth me to be, or that he heareth of me. And lest I should be exalted above measure, through the abundance of the revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me, lest I should be exalted above measure. For this thing I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And he said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me."

There can be no doubt that "the temptation which was in the flesh," mentioned in the Epistle to the Galatians, and "the thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet him," mentioned in the Epistle to the Corinthians, were intended to denote the same thing. Either therefore it was, what we pretend it to have been, the same person in both: that is, we are reading the real letters of a real apostle; or, it was that a sophist, who had seen the circumstance in one epistle, contrived, for the sake of correspondency, to bring it into another; or, lastly, it was a circumstance in St. Paul's personal condition, supposed to be well known to those into whose hands the epistle was likely to fall; and, for that reason, introduced into a writing designed to bear his name. I have extracted the quotations at length, in order to enable the reader to judge accurately of the manner in which the mention of this particular comes in, in each; because that judgment, I think, will acquit the author of the epistle, of the charge of having studiously inserted it, either with a view of producing an apparent agreement between them, or for any other purpose whatever.

The context, by which the circumstance before us is introduced, is in the two places totally different, and without any mark of imitation: yet in both places does the circumstance rise aptly and naturally out of the context, and that context from the train of thought carried on in the epistle.

The Epistle to the Galatians, from the beginning to the end, runs in a strain of angry complaint of their defection from the apostle, and from the principles which he had taught them. It was very natural to contrast with this conduct, the zeal with which they had once received him; and it was not less so to mention, as a proof of their former disposition towards him, the indulgence which, whilst he was amongst them, they had shown to his infirmity: "My temptation which was in the flesh ye despised not, nor rejected, but received me as an angel of God, even as Christ Jesus. Where is then the blessedness you spake of, i. e. the benedictions which you bestowed upon me? for I bear you record, that, if it had been possible, you would have plucked out your own eyes, and have given them to me."

In the two Epistles to the Corinthians, especially in the second, we have the apostle contending with certain teachers in Corinth, who had formed a party in that church against him. To vindicate his personal authority, as well as the dignity and credit of his ministry amongst them, he takes occasion (but not without apologizing repeatedly for the folly, that is, for the indecorum of pronouncing his own panegyric,) to meet his adversaries in their boastings: "Whereinsoever any is bold (I speak foolishly) I am bold also. Are they Hebrews? so am I. Are they Israelites? so am I,

Are they the seed of Abraham? so am I. Are they the ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool) I am more; in labours more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft." Being led to the subject, he goes on, as was natural, to recount his trials and dangers, his incessant care and labours in the Christian mission. From the proofs which he had given of his zeal and activity in the service of Christ, he passes (and that with the same view of establishing his claim to be considered as "not a whit behind the very chiefest of apostles") to the visions and revelations which from time to time had been vouchsafed to him. And then, by a close and easy connexion, comes in the mention of his infirmity: "Lest I should be exalted," says he, "above measure, through the abundance of revelations, there was given to me a thorn in the flesh, the messenger of Satan to buffet me."

Thus then, in both epistles, the notice of his infirmity is suited to the place in which it is found. In the Epistle to the Corinthians, the train of thought draws up to the circumstance by a regular approximation. In this epistle, it is suggested by the subject and occasion of the epistle itself. Which observation we offer as an argument to prove that it is not, in either epistle, a circumstance industriously brought forward for the sake of procuring credit to an imposture.

A reader will be taught to perceive the force of this argument, who shall attempt to introduce a given circumstance into the body of a writing. To do this without abruptness, or without betraying marks of design in the transition, requires, he will find, more art than he expected to be necessary, certainly more than any one can believe to have been exercised in the composition of these epistles.

SECTION V.

Chap. iv. 29. "But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit; even so it is now."

Chap. v. 11. "And I, brethren, if I yet preach circumcision, why do I yet suffer persecution? Then is the offence of the cross ceased."

Chap. vi. 17. "From henceforth, let no man trouble me, for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus."

From these several texts, it is apparent that the persecutions which our apostle had undergone, were from the hands, or by the instigation of the Jews; that it was not for preaching Christianity in opposition to heathenism, but it was for preaching it as distinct from Judaism, that he had brought upon himself the sufferings which had attended his ministry. And this representation perfectly coincides with that which results from the detail of St. Paul's history, as delivered in the Acts. At Antioch, in Pisidia, "the word of the Lord was published throughout all the region; but the Jews stirred up the devout and honourable women and the chief men of the city, and raised persecution against Paul and Barnabas, and expelled them out of their coasts." (Acts, chap. xiii. 50.) Not long after, at Iconium, "a great multitude of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed; but the unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil affected against the brethren." (Chap. xiv. 1, 2.) "At Lystra there came certain Jews from Antioch and Iconium, who persuaded the people; and, having stoned Paul, drew him out of the city, supposing he had been dead." (Chap. xiv. 19.) The same enmity, from the same quarter, our apostle experienced in Greece: "At Thessalonica, some of them (the Jews) believed, and consorted with Paul and Silas: and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few: but the Jews which believed not, moved with envy, took unto them certain lewd fellows of the baser sort, and gathered a company, and set all the city in an uproar, and assaulted the house of Jason, and sought to bring them out to the people." (Acts, chap. xvii. 4, 5.) Their persecutors followed them to Berea: "When the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also, and stirred up the people." (Chap. xvii. 13.) And lastly at Corinth, when Gallio was deputy of Achaia, "the Jews made insurrection with one accord against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat." I think it does not appear that our apostle was ever set upon by the Gentiles, unless they were first stirred up by the Jews, except in two instances; in both which the persons who began the assault were immediately interested in his expulsion from the place. Once this happened at Philippi, after the cure of the Pythoness: "When the masters saw the hope of their gains was gone, they caught Paul and Silas, and drew them into the market-place unto the rulers." (Chap. xvi. 19.) And a second time at Ephesus, at the instance of Demetrius, a silversmith which made silver shrines for Diana, "who called together workmen of like occupation, and said, Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth; moreover ye see and hear that not only at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded away much people, saying, that they be no gods which are made with hands; so that not only this our craft is in danger to be set at nought, but also that the temple of the great goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all Asia and the world worshippeth."

SECTION VI.

I observe an agreement in a somewhat peculiar rule of Christian conduct as laid down in this epistle, and as exemplified in the Second Epistle to the Corinthians. It is not the repetition of the same general precept, which would have been a coincidence of little value; but it is the general precept in one place, and the application of that precept to an actual occurrence in the other. In the sixth chapter and first verse of this epistle, our apostle gives the following direction: "Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye, which are spiritual, restore such a one in the spirit of meekness." In 2 Cor. chap. ii. 6-8. he writes thus: "Sufficient to such a man" (the incestuous person mentioned in the first epistle) "is this punishment, which was inflicted of many; so that, contrariwise, ye ought rather to forgive him and comfort him, lest perhaps such a one should be swallowed up with overmuch sorrow."

SECTION VII.

This epistle goes further than any of St. Paul's epistles; for it avows in direct terms the supersession of the Jewish law, as an instrument of salvation, even to the Jews themselves. Not only were the Gentiles exempt from its authority, but even the Jews were no longer either to place any dependency upon it, or consider themselves as subject to it on a religious account. "Before faith came, we were kept under the law, shut up unto the faith which should afterward be revealed: wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith; but, after that faith is come, we are no longer under a schoolmaster." (Chap. iii. 23—25.) This was undoubtedly spoken of Jews, and to Jews. In like manner, chap. iv. 1—5.; "Now I say that the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all; but is under tutors and governors, until the time appointed of the father: even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world; but when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." These passages are nothing short of a declaration, that the obligation of the Jewish law, considered as a religious dispensation, the effects of which were to take place in another life, had ceased, with respect even to the Jews themselves. What then should be the conduct of a Jew (for such St. Paul was) who preached this doctrine? To be consistent with himself, either he would no longer comply, in his own person with the direction of the law; or, if he did comply, it would be for some other reason than any confidence he placed in its efficacy, as a religious institution. Now so it happens that whenever St. Paul's compliance with the Jewish law is mentioned in the history, it is mentioned in connexion with circumstances which point out the motive from which it proceeded: and this motive appears to have been always exoteric; namely, a love of order and tranquillity, or an unwillingness to give unnecessary offence. Thus, Acts, chap. xvi. 3. "Him (Timothy) would Paul have to go forth with him, and took and circumcised him because of the Jews, which were in those quarters." Again, Acts, chap. xxi. 26, when Paul consented to exhibit an example of public compliance with a Jewish rite by purifying himself in the temple, it is plainly intimated that he did this to satisfy "many thousands of Jews, who believed, and who were all zealous of the law." So far the instances related in one book, correspond with the doctrine delivered in another.

SECTION VIII.

Chap. i. 18. "Then, after three years, I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter, and abode with him fifteen days."

The shortness of St. Paul's stay at Jerusalem is what I desire the reader to remark. The direct account of the same journey, in the Acts, chap. ix. 28. determines nothing concerning the time of his continuance there: "And he was with them (the apostles) coming in, and going out, at Jerusalem; and he spake boldly in the name of the Lord Jesus, and disputed against the Grecians: but they went about to slay him; which when the brethren knew, they brought him down to Caesarea." Or rather this account, taken by itself, would lead a reader to suppose that St. Paul's abode at Jerusalem had been longer than fifteen days. But turn to the twenty-second chapter of the Acts, and you will find a reference to this visit to Jerusalem, which plainly indicates that Paul's continuance in that city had been of short duration: "And it came to pass, that when I was come again to Jerusalem, even while I prayed in the temple, I was in a trance, and saw him saying unto me, Make haste, get thee quickly out of Jerusalem, for they will not receive thy testimony concerning me." Here we have the general terms of one text so explained by a distinct text in the same book, as to bring an indeterminate expression into a close conformity with a specification delivered in another book: a species of consistency not, I think, usually found in fabulous relations.

SECTION IX.

Chap. vi. 11. "Ye see how large a letter I have written unto you with mine own hand."

These words imply that he did not always write with his own hand; which is consonant to what we find intimated in some other of the epistles. The Epistle to the Romans was written by Tertius: "I, Tertius, who wrote this epistle, salute you in the Lord." (Chap. xvi. 22.) The First Epistle to the Corinthians, the Epistle to the Colossians, and the Second to the Thessalonians, have all near the conclusion, this clause: "the salutation of me, Paul, with mine own hand;" which must be understood, and is universally understood to import, that the rest of the epistle was written by another hand. I do not think it improbable that an impostor, who had remarked this subscription in some other epistle, should invent the same in a forgery; but that it is not done here. The author of this epistle does not imitate the manner of giving St. Paul's signature; he only bids the Galatians observe how large a letter he had written to them with his own hand. He does not say this was different from his ordinary usage: that is left to implication. Now to suppose that this was an artifice to procure credit to an imposture, is to suppose that the author of the forgery, because he knew that others of St. Paul's were not written by himself, therefore made the apostle say that this was: which seems an odd turn to give to the circumstance, and to be given for a purpose which would more naturally and more directly have been answered, by sub-joining the salutation or signature in the form in which it is found in other epistles.

SECTION X.

An exact conformity appears in the manner in which a certain apostle or eminent Christian, whose name was James, is spoken of in the epistle and in the history. Both writings refer to a situation of his at Jerusalem, somewhat different from that of the other apostles; a kind of eminence or presidency in the church there, or at least a more fixed and stationary residence. Chap. ii. 12. "When Peter was at Antioch, before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles." This text plainly attributes a kind of pre-eminency to James; and, as we hear of him twice in the same epistle dwelling at Jerusalem, chap. i. 19. and ii. 9. we must apply it to the situation which he held in that church. In the Acts of the Apostles divers intimations occur, conveying the same idea of James' situation. When Peter was miraculously delivered from prison, and had surprised his friends by his appearance among them, after declaring unto them how the Lord had brought him out of prison, "Go, show," says he, "these things unto James, and to the brethren." (Acts, chap. xii. 17.) Here James is manifestly spoken of in terms of distinction. He appears again with like distinction in the twenty-first chapter and the seventeenth and eighteenth verses: "And when we (Paul and his company) were come to Jerusalem, the day following, Paul went in with us unto James, and all the elders were present." In the debate which took place upon the business of the Gentile converts, in the council at Jerusalem, this same person seems to have taken the lead. It was he who closed the debate, and proposed the resolution in which the council ultimately concurred: "Wherefore my sentence is, &c."

Upon the whole, that there exists a conformity in the expressions used concerning James, throughout the history, and in the epistle, is unquestionable. This proves that the circumstance itself is founded in truth; viz. that James was a real person, who held a situation of eminence in a real society of Christians at Jerusalem. It confirms also those parts of the narrative which are connected with this circumstance. Suppose, for instance, the truth of the account of Peter's escape from prison, was to be tried upon the testimony of a witness who, among other things, made Peter, after his deliverance, say, "Go show these things to James and to the brethren;" would it not be material, in such a trial, to make out by other independent proofs, or by a comparison of proofs, drawn from independent sources, that there was actually at that time, living at Jerusalem, such a person as James; that this person held such a situation in the society amongst whom these things were transacted, as to render the words which Peter is said to have used concerning him, proper and natural. If this would be pertinent in the discussion of oral testimony, it is still more so in appreciating the credit of remote history.

PREFACE

TO

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

GALATIANS.

GALATIA was anciently a part of Phrygia and the neighbouring countries. It had its name from the Gauls, who having, in several bodies, invaded Asia Minor, as Pausanias, (Attic. cap. iv.) relates, conquered this country, and settled in it. As these were mixed with various Grecian families, the country was also called Gallogræcia, see Justin, lib. xxiv. 4. xxv. 2. xxvii. 3. xxviii. 3. and Strabo, xiv. Under the reign of Augustus Cæsar, about the year of Rome 727, and 26 years before our Lord, it was reduced into the form of a Roman colony, and was governed by a proprætor, appointed by the emperor.

This country is bounded on the east by Cappadocia; on the west by Bithynia; on the south by Pamphylia; and on the north by the Euzine Sea. These are its limits according to Strabo, which some think too extensive; but the different provinces of Asia Minor being the subjects of continual contentions and inroad, very frequently changed their boundaries as well as their masters; and were seldom at one stay.

The Galatæ were divided into three tribes, the Tectosagi, the Trocmi, and the Tolistoboi. According to Pliny, their country was divided into 195 tetrarchies, and according to Strabo, each of the three divisions above-mentioned was subdivided into four cantons, each of which had a tetrarch; and besides these 12 tetrarchs, there was a general council of the nation, consisting of 300 senators. These tetrarchs were at last reduced in number to three, then to two, and lastly to one; the last tetrarch and king of Galatia was Amyntas, who, from being secretary to Dejotarus, the first person that possessed the whole tetrarchy, was made king of Pisidia in the year of Rome 714. And in the year 718, Mark Antony made him tetrarch of Galatia. After the death of Amyntas, Galatia was ranked by Augustus among the Roman provinces, and governed as aforesaid. The administration of the proprætors continued till the reign of Theodosius the Great, or Valens; and under the Christian emperors, it was divided into two provinces, Galatia prima, being subject to a consul; Galatia secunda, or salutaris, which was governed by a president.

The religion of the ancient Galatæ was extremely corrupt and superstitious: and they are said to have worshipped the mother of the gods under the name of Agdistis; and to have offered human sacrifices of the prisoners they took in war.

They are mentioned by historians as a tall and valiant people, who went nearly naked; and used for arms only a sword and buckler. The impetuosity of their attack is stated to have been irresistible; and this generally made them victorious.

It appears from the Acts of the Apostles, that St. Paul visited this country more than once. Two visits to this region are particularly marked in the Acts, viz. first about A. D. 53. Acts xv. 6. Now when they had gone through Phrygia and the region of Galatia, &c. the second about A. D. 56. Acts xviii. 23. he went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples.

St. Paul was probably the first who had preached the Gospel in this region, as appears pretty evident from Galat. i. ver. 6. I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that CALLED YOU INTO THE GRACE OF CHRIST; and from chap. iv. 13. Ye know how through infirmity of the flesh, I preached the Gospel unto you at the first. Others suppose that it is not unlikely that St. Peter had preached the Gospel there to the Jews or Hellenists only, as his first epistle is directed to the strangers who were scattered abroad, throughout Pontus, GALATIA, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia: and it is supposed also, that the persons converted by St. Peter probably occasioned those differences among the Galatian converts, which induced St. Paul to write this epistle, in which he takes pains to establish his own character as an apostle, which had been disputed by some, with a view of placing him below Peter; who preached generally to the Jews only, and observed the law. See Calmel, and the New Encyclopædia, article GALATIA. That St. Peter thought at first, that the Gospel should be confined to the Jews, is sufficiently evident from the Acts of the Apostles: but after his divine vision, which happened about A. D. 41, related Acts x. he saw that God had also called the Gentiles into the church; and his first epistle, which was written in A. D. 64, was probably twelve years posterior to that written by St. Paul to the Galatians.

As to the precise time in which this epistle was written, there have been various opinions among learned men. Some of the ancients believed it to be the very first written of all St. Paul's epistles. See Epiphanius, tom. i. Hæres. 42. Others have supposed that it was written after his second journey to Galatia, Acts xviii. 23, which in the chronology I have placed in A. D. 54; and others with more probability, after his first journey, see Acts xvi. 6. which in the chronology I have placed in A. D. 53. That it was written soon after one of the apostle's visits to that region seems evident from the following complaint, I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that hath called you, chap. i. 6. it has been therefore conjectured that only one or two years had elapsed from that time; and that the epistle must have been written about A. D. 52 or 53. Beausobre and L'Enfant speak very judiciously on this subject: "We do not find in the Epistle to the Galatians, any mark that can enable us to determine with certainty, at what time, or in what place, it was written. It is dated at Rome in some printed copies and MSS. but there is nothing in the epistle itself to confirm this date. Paul does not here make any mention of his bonds as he does in all his epistles written from Rome. He says, indeed, chap. vi. 17. I bear about in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus; but he had often suffered before he came to Rome. Some learned chronologers think that it was written between the third and fourth journey of St. Paul to Jerusalem; and between his first and second into Galatia; which opinion appears very probable; for since the apostle says, he wonders that they were so soon turned to another Gospel, this epistle must have been written a short time after he had preached in Galatia.

"Nor can we discern in the epistle any notice of the second journey, which St. Paul made into this country. For this reason, it is thought that the Epistle to the Galatians was written at Corinth, where the apostle made a long stay; or else in some city of Asia, particularly Ephesus, where he staid some days, on his way to Jerusalem, Acts xviii. 19—21.; therefore, in all probability, the epistle was written from Corinth, or from Ephesus, in the year 52 or 53."

Dr. Lardner confirms this opinion by the following considerations:

1. St. Paul says to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. xvi. 1. Now, concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given orders to the churches of Galatia, so do ye; which shows that at the writing of that epistle to the Corinthians, in 56. he had a good opinion of his converts in Galatia; and that he had no doubt of their respect to his directions; which probably had been sent to them from Ephesus during his long abode there.

2. And now we shall be better able to account for what appears very remarkable: when Paul left Corinth, after his long stay there, he went to Jerusalem, having a vow; in his way, he came to Ephesus, Acts xviii. 19—21. And when they desired him to tarry longer with them, he consented not, but bade them farewell; saying, I must, by all means, keep this feast that cometh, at Jerusalem; but I will return unto you again, if God will. When we read this, we might be apt to think that Paul should hasten back to Ephesus, and return thither presently, after he had been at Jerusalem; but instead of doing so after he had been at Jerusalem, he went down to Antioch; And after he had spent some time there, he departed, and went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening the disciples, ver. 22, 23. We now seem to see the reason of this course. At Corinth he heard of the defection of many in Galatia; whereupon he sent a sharp letter to them: but, considering the nature of the case, he judged it best to take the first opportunity to go to Galatia, and support the instructions of his letter; and, both together, had a good effect. Galat. iv. 19, 20. My little children, of whom I travail in birth again—I desire to be present with you, and to change my voice; for I stand in doubt of you; or I am perplexed for you. Now, then, we see the reason of the apostle's not coming directly from Jerusalem to Ephesus. However, he was not unmindful of his promise, and came thither after he had been in Galatia.

3. Upon the whole, the Epistle to the Galatians is an early epistle; and as seems to me most probable, was written at Corinth near the end of A. D. 52. or the very beginning of 53. before St. Paul set out to go to Jerusalem, by the way of Ephesus.

But, if any should rather think that it was written at Ephesus, during the apostle's short stay there, on his way from Corinth to Jerusalem, that will make but very little difference; for still, according to our computation, the epistle was written at the beginning of the year 53. See Lardner's Works, vol. vi. pag. 309.

Every thing considered, I feel no hesitation to place this epistle in the 52d or 53d year of our Lord; either the end of the former, or the beginning of the latter.

From the complexion of this epistle, it appears to have been written to the Jews who were dispersed in Galatia; see Acts ii. 9. And although in chap. iv. 8. it is said, that the persons to whom the apostle writes did not know God, and did service to them which by nature were not gods; this must be understood of those who had been proselytes to the Jewish religion, as the 9th verse sufficiently shows; for, after they had been converted to Christianity, they turned AGAIN to the weak and beggarly elements.

These Galatians were doubtless converted by St. Paul, see Acts xvi. 6. xviii. 23. but after his departure from them, some teachers had got in among them, who endeavoured to persuade them, and successfully too, that they should be circumcised, and keep the Mosaic law.—See chap. i.

TO THE GALATIANS.

6. iv. 9, 10, 21. v. 1, 2. vi. 12. And the apostle labours to bring them back from the errors of these false teachers.

The arguments which the apostle uses to prove the truth of the Christian religion, as well as the nullity of the Mosaic institutions, are the following :

1. That himself, immediately after his conversion, without having any conference with any of the apostles, preached the pure doctrines of Christianity, doctrines strictly conformable to those preached by the genuine disciples of the Lord ; and this was a proof that he had received them by immediate inspiration ; as he could have known them no other way.

2. That he was led to oppose Peter, because he had withdrawn himself from communion with the converted Gentiles ; and thereby gave occasion to some to suppose that he considered the law as still binding on those who believed ; and that the Gentiles were not to be admitted to an equality of religious privileges with the Jews.

3. That no rites or ceremonies of the Jewish law could avail any thing in the justification of a sinner ; and that faith in Christ was the only means of justification.

4. That their own works could avail nothing towards their justification : (1.) For the Spirit of God was given them in consequence of receiving the Christian doctrine, chap. iii. ver. 2—5. (2.) That the works of the law cannot justify, because Abraham was justified by faith, long before the law of Moses was given, chap. iii. 6, 7. (3.) That the curse of the law, under which every sinner lives, is not removed but by the sacrifice of Christ, chap. iii. 8, 9.

5. That it is absurd for the sons of God to become slaves to Mosaic rites and ceremonies.

The rest of the epistle is of a practical nature.—Although subjects of this kind may be gathered out of the epistle, yet it is very evident that the apostle himself has observed no technical division or arrangement of his matter ; his chief design being—1. To vindicate his own apostleship, and to show that he was not inferior to Peter himself, whom their false teachers appear to have set up in opposition to St. Paul. 2. To assert and maintain justification by faith in opposition to all Judaizing teachers. 3. To call them back to the liberty of the Gospel, from which, and its privileges, they had shamelessly apostatized ; and, 4. To admonish and exhort them to walk worthy of their vocation, by devoting themselves to the glory of God, and the benefit of their brethren. Lastly, he asserts his own determination to be faithful, and concludes with his apostolical benediction.

CHAPTER I.

St. Paul shows that he was especially called of God to be an apostle, 1. Directs his epistle to the churches, through the regions of Galatia, 2. Commends them to the grace of Christ, who gave himself for their sins, 3—5. Marvels that they had so soon turned away from the grace of the Gospel of Christ, to what falsely pretended to be another Gospel, 6, 7. Pronounces him accursed who shall preach any other doctrine than that which he had delivered to them, 8, 9. Shows his own uprightness, and that he received his doctrine from God, 10—12. Gives an account of his conversion and call to the apostleship, 13—17. How, three years after his conversion, he went up to Jerusalem, and afterward went through the regions of Syria and Cilicia, preaching the faith of Christ, to the great joy of the Christian churches in Judea, 18—24.

nor by Peter, to whom, in a particular manner, the keys of the kingdom were entrusted.

But by Jesus Christ] Having his mission immediately from Christ himself, and God the Father, who raised him from the dead, see Acts xxii. 14, 15. and commanded him to go both to the Jews and to the Gentiles, to open their eyes; to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they might obtain remission of sins, and an inheritance among them that are sanctified. See Acts ix. 1, &c. and the notes there.

Verse 2. And all the brethren which are with me] It is very likely that this refers to those who were his assistants in preaching the Gospel; and not to any private members of the church.

Churches of Galatia] Galatia was a region or province of Asia Minor; there was neither city nor town of this name.—See the Preface. But as, in this province, St. Paul had planted several churches, he directs the epistle to the whole of them; for it seems they were all pretty nearly in the same state, and needed the same instructions.

Verse 3. Grace be to you, &c.] See on Rom. i. 7.

Verse 4. Who gave himself for our sins] Who became a sin-offering to God, in behalf of mankind, that they might be saved from their sins.

Deliver us from this present evil world] These words cannot mean created nature, or the earth and its productions; nor even wicked men. The former we shall need while we live, the latter we cannot avoid; indeed they are those, who, when converted, form the church of God: and, by the successive conversion of sinners, is the church of Christ maintained: and the followers of God must live and labour among them, in order to their conversion. The apostle, therefore, must mean the Jews, and their system of carnal ordinances; statutes which were not good, and judgments by which they could not live, Ezek. xx. 25. And the whole of their ecclesiastical economy, which was a burden neither they nor their fathers were able to bear. Acts xv. 10. Schoetgen contends that the word scruples, which we translate evil, should be translated labourous, or oppressive, as it comes from scire, labour, trouble, &c. The apostle takes occasion, in the very commencement of the epistle, to inform the Galatians, that it was according to the will and counsel of God that circumcision should cease: and all the other ritual parts of the Mosaic economy; and that it was for this express purpose, that Jesus Christ gave himself a sacrifice for our sins; because the law could not make the comers thereunto perfect. It had pointed out the sinfulness of sin, in its various ordinances, washings, &c. And it had showed forth the guilt of sin, in its numerous sacrifices; but the common sense, even of its own votaries, told them that it was impossible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away sin. A higher atonement was necessary; and when God provided that, all its shadows and representations necessarily ceased. See the note on chap. iv. ver. 3.

Verse 5. To whom be glory for ever] Let him have the glory to whom alone it is due, for having delivered us from the present evil world, and from all bondage to Mosaic rites and ceremonies.

Verse 6. I marvel that ye are so soon removed] It was a matter of wonder to the apostle, that a people so soundly converted to God, should have so soon made shipwreck of their faith. But mutability itself has not a more apt subject to work upon, than the human heart; the alternate workings of different passions, are continually either changing the character, or giving it a different colouring. Reason, not passion; the word of God, not the sayings of men, should alone be consulted in the concerns of our salvation.

From him that called you] The apostle seems here to mean himself. He called them into the grace of Christ; and they not only abandoned that grace, but their hearts became greatly estranged from him; so that, though at first they would have plucked out their eyes for him, they at last counted him their enemy, chap. iv. 14—16.

Another Gospel] It is certain that, in the very earliest ages of the Christian church, there were several spurious Gospels in circulation; and it was the multitude of these false or inaccurate relations, that induced St. Luke to write his own.—See Luke i. 1. We have the names of more than seventy of these spurious narratives, still on record; and in ancient writers many fragments of them remain: these have been collected and published by Fabricius, in his account of the apocryphal books of the New Testament, 3 vols. 8vo. In some of these Gospels, the necessity of circumcision, and subjection to the Mosaic law, in unity with the Gospel, were strongly inculcated. And to one of these the apostle seems to refer.

Verse 7. Which is not another] It is called a Gospel, but it differs most essentially from the authentic narratives published by the evangelists. It is not Gospel, i. e. good tidings; for it loads you again with the burdens from which the genuine Gospel has disencumbered you. Instead of giving you peace, it troubles you; instead of being a useful supplement to the Gospel of Christ, it perverts that Gospel. You have gained nothing but loss and damage by the change.

8 But though ^a we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other Gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.

9 As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other Gospel unto you ^b than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

10 For, ^c do I now ^d persuade men, or God? or ^e do I seek to please men? for if I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ.

11 ^f But I certify you, brethren, that the Gospel which was preached of me is not after man.

Verse 8. But though we, or an angel] That Gospel which I have already preached to you, is the only true Gospel; were I to preach any other, I should incur the curse of God. If your false teachers pretend, as many in early times did, that they received their accounts by the ministry of an angel, let them be accursed; separate them from your company, and have no religious communion with them. Leave them to that God who will show his displeasure against all who corrupt, all who add to, and all who take from the word of his revelation.

Let all those, who, from the fickleness of their own minds, are ready to favour the reveries of every pretended prophet and prophetess who starts up, consider the awful words of the apostle. As in the law, the receiver of stolen goods is as bad as the thief; so the encouragers of such pretended revelations, are as bad, in the sight of God, as those impostors themselves. What says the word of God to them? Let them be accursed. Reader, lay these things to heart.

Verse 9. Let him be accursed.] Perhaps this is not designed as an imprecation, but a simple direction; for the word here may be understood as implying that such a person should have no countenance in his bad work, but let him, as Theodoret expresses it, ἀλλοτριῶς ἔγω τοῦ κοινου σωματος τῆς ἐκκλησίας, be separated from the communion of the church. This, however, would also imply that, unless the person repented, the Divine judgments would soon follow.

Verse 10. Do I now persuade men, or God?] The words πῶθεν τὸν Θεόν, may be rendered to court or solicit the favour of God; as the after clause sufficiently proves. This acceptance of πῶθεν, is very common in Greek authors. While the apostle was a persecutor of the Christians, he was the servant of men; and pleased men. When he embraced the Christian doctrine, he became the servant of God, and pleased him. He therefore intimates, that he was a widely different person now, from what he had been while a Jew.

Verse 11. But I certify you, brethren, &c.] I wish you fully to comprehend, that the Gospel which I preached to you is not after man; there is not a spark of human invention in it: nor the slightest touch of human cunning.

Verse 12. I neither received it of man] By means of any apostle; as was remarked on ver. 1. No man taught me what I have preached to you.

But by the revelation of Jesus Christ.] Being commissioned by himself alone; receiving the knowledge of it from Christ crucified.

Verse 13. Ye have heard of my conversation] τὴν ἐμὴν ἀναστροφὴν, my manner of life; the mode in which I conducted myself.

Beyond measure I persecuted the church] For proofs of this, the reader is referred to Acts ix. 1, 2. xxii. 4. and the notes there. The apostle tells them that they had heard this; because, being Jews, they were acquainted with what had taken place in Judea, relative to these important transactions.

Verse 14. And profited in the Jews' religion] The apostle does not mean that he became more exemplary in the love and practice of the pure law of God, than any of his countrymen; but that he was more profoundly skilled in the traditions of the Fathers, than most of his fellow-students were; or as the word συνηλικιωτάς, may mean, his contemporaries.

Verse 15. Who separated me from my mother's womb] Him whom I acknowledge as the God of Nature, and the God of grace; who preserved me by his providence, when I was a helpless infant; and saved by his grace when I was an adult persecutor. Jews among the Gentiles, that St. Paul was especially sent. Peter was sent more particularly to the Jews, in the land of Judea; Paul, to those in the different Greek provinces.

I conferred not with flesh and blood] I did not take counsel with men; σὰρξ καὶ αἷμα, which is a literal translation of the Hebrew בשר ודם basar vedom, flesh and blood; is a periphrasis for man, any man; a human being, or beings of any kind. Many suppose that the apostle means he did not dally, or take counsel with the erroneous suggestions, and unrenewed propensities of his own heart, or those of others; but no such thing is intended by the text. St. Paul was satisfied that his call was of God; he had therefore no occasion to consult man.

Verse 17. Neither went I up to Jerusalem] The aim of the apostle, is to show, that he had his call so immediately and pointedly from God himself, that he had no need of the concurrence even of the apostles: being appointed by the same authority, and fitted to the work by the same grace and Spirit as they were.

But I went into Arabia] That part of Arabia which was contiguous to Damascus; over which Aretas was then king. Of this journey into Arabia, we have no other account. As St. Luke was not then with him, it is not inserted in the Acts of the Apostles. See the Introduction, page v. ¶ 6. Jerusalem was the stated residence of the apostles; and when all the other believers were scattered throughout the regions of Judea and Samaria, we find the apostles still remaining unmolested, at Jerusalem! Acts viii. 1.

Verse 18. After three years I went up to Jerusalem to see Peter] These three years may be reckoned either from the departure of Paul from Jerusalem; or, from his return from Arabia to Damascus.

To see Peter—ἵσταναι Πέτρον, to become personally acquainted with Peter: for this is the proper import of the verb ἵσταναι, from which we have the word ἱστῶν, history, which signifies a relation of things from personal knowledge, and actual acquaintance. How far this is now, from the sense in which we must take the word, ninety-nine of every hundred of our histories sufficiently show. They are any thing but true relations of facts and persons.

And abode with him fifteen days.] It was not therefore to get religious knowledge from him that he paid him this visit. He knew as much, if not more, of the Jewish religion as Peter did; and, as to the Gospel, he had received that from the same source; and had preached it three years before this.

Verse 19. James, the Lord's brother.] Dr. Paley observes, There were at Jerusalem two apostles, or at least, two eminent members of the church, of the name of James. This is distinctly inferred from the Acts of the Apostles, chap. xii. ver. 2. where the historian relates the death of James, the brother of John: and yet, in the xvth chapter and in chap. xxi. 18. he records a speech delivered by James in the assembly of the apostles and elders. In this place, JAMES, the Lord's brother, is mentioned thus, to distinguish him from JAMES, the brother of John. Some think there were three of this name:—1. JAMES, our Lord's brother or cousin, as some will have it: 2. JAMES, the son of Alphaeus: and, 3. JAMES, the son of Zebedee. But the two former names belong to the same person.

Verse 20. Before God, I lie not.] This he speaks in reference to having seen only Peter and James at Jerusalem, and consequently to prove, that he had not learned the Gospel from the assembly of the apostles at Jerusalem; nor consequently received his commission from them.

Verse 21. Afterward I came into the regions of Syria, &c.] The course of the apostle's travels, after his conversion, was this: He went from Damascus to Jerusalem; and from Jerusalem into Syria and Cilicia. "At Damascus the disciples took him by night, and let him down by the wall in a basket; and when Saul was come to Jerusalem, he assayed to join himself to the disciples." Acts ix. 25. Afterward, when the brethren knew the conspiracy formed against him at Jerusalem, they brought him down to Cæsarea, and sent him forth to Tarnus, a city of Cilicia, chap. ix. 30. This account in the Acts, agrees with that in this epistle.

Verse 22. And was unknown by face] I was not personally acquainted with any of the churches of Judea; I was converted in another place, and had not preached the Gospel in any Christian congregation in that country. I knew only those at Jerusalem—

Verse 23. They had heard only] As a persecutor of the church of Christ, I was well known; and as a convert to Christ, I was not less so. The fame of both was great; even where I was personally unknown.

Verse 24. They glorified God in me] Hearing now that I preached that faith which before I had persecuted, and endeavoured to destroy; they glorified God for the grace which had wrought my conversion. I owe nothing to them, I owe all to God; and they themselves acknowledge this. I received all from God, and God has all the glory.

1. It appeared of great importance to St. Paul to defend and vindicate his Divine mission. As he had none from man, it was the more necessary that he should be able to show plainly, that he had one from God. Paul was not brought into the Christian ministry by any rite ever used in the Christian church. Neither bishop nor presbyter ever laid hands on him: and he is more anxious to prove this, because his chief honour arose from being sent immediately by God himself; his conversion and the purity of his doctrine showed whence he came. Many since his time, and in the present day, are far more anxious to show that they are legitimately appointed by man than by God; and are fond of displaying their human credentials. These are easily shown: those that come from God are out of their reach. How idle and vain is a boasted succession from the apostles, while ignorance, intolerance, pride, and vain-glory prove that those very persons have no commission from heaven! Endless cases may occur, where man sends, and yet God will not sanction. And that man has no right to preach nor administer the sacraments of the church of Christ, whom God has not sent; though the whole assembly of apostles had laid their hands on him. God never sent, and never will send, to convert others, a man who is not converted himself. He will never send him to teach meekness, gentleness, and long-suffering; who is proud, over-bearing, intolerant, and impatient. He, in whom the Spirit of Christ does not dwell, never had a commission to preach the Gospel. He may boast of his human authority, but God will laugh him to scorn. On the other hand, let none run before he is sent; and when he has got the authority of God, let him be careful to take that of the church with him also.

2. The apostle was particularly anxious that the Gospel should not be corrupted; that the church might not be perverted. Whatever corrupts the Gospel, subverts the church. The church is a spiritual building, and stands on a spiritual foundation. Its members are compared to stones in a building; but they are living stones, each instinct with the spirit of a Divine life: Jesus is not only the foundation and the headstone; but the Spirit that quickens and animates all. A church, where the members are not alive to God, and where the minister is not filled with the meekness and gentleness of Jesus, differs as much from a genuine church, as a corpse does from an active human being. False teachers at Galatia corrupted the church by introducing those Jewish ceremonies which God had abolished; and the doctrine of justification by the use of those ceremonies, which God had shown, by the death of his Son, to be of none effect. "If those," says Quænel, "are justly said to pervert the Gospel of Christ, who were for joining with it human ceremonies, which God himself instituted; what do those do, who would fondly reconcile and blend it with the pomps of the devil? The purity of the Gospel cannot admit of any mixture. Those who do not love it, are so far from building up, that they trouble and overturn all. There is no ground of trust and confidence for such workmen."

3. If he be a dangerous man in the church, who introduces Jewish or human ceremonies, which God has not appointed, how much more is he to be dreaded, who introduces any false doctrine, or who labours to undermine or lessen the influence of that which is true? And even he who does not faithfully and earnestly preach and inculcate the true doctrine, is not a true pastor. It is not sufficient that a man preach no error, he must preach the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

4. How is it that we have so many churches like that at Galatia? Is it not because, on one hand, we disturb the simplicity of the Christian worship by Jewish, heathenish, or improper rites and ceremonies; and, on the other, corrupt the purity of its doctrines, by the inventions of men? How does the apostle speak of such corrupters? Let them be accursed. How awful is this! Let every man who officiates as a Christian minister, look well to this. His own soul is at stake; and if any of the flock perish through his ignorance or neglect, their blood will God require at the watchman's hand.

5. St. Paul well knew that if he endeavoured to please man, he could not be the servant of Christ. Can any minor minister hope to succeed, where even an apostle, had he followed that line, could not? The interests of Christ and those of the world are so opposite, that it is impossible to reconcile them: and he who attempts it shows thereby, that he knows neither Christ nor the world, though so deeply immersed in the spirit of the latter.

6. God generally confounds the expectations of men-pleasing ministers; they never ultimately succeed even with men. God abhors them; and those whom they have flattered, find them to be dishonest, and cease to trust them. He who is unfaithful to his God, should not be trusted by man.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle mentions his journey to Jerusalem with Barnabas and Titus, 1. Shows that he went thither by revelation, and what he did while there, and the persons with whom he had intercourse, 2—8. How the apostles gave him the right hand of fellowship, 9, 10. How he opposed Peter at Antioch, and the reason why, 11—14. Shows that the Jews as well as the Gentiles must be justified by faith, 15, 16. They who seek this justification should act with consistency, 17, 18. Gives his own religious experience, and shows, that through the law, he was dead to the law, and crucified with Christ, 19, 20. Justification is not of the law, but by the faith of Christ, 21.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. Then, fourteen years after] There is a considerable difference among critics concerning the time specified in this verse: the apostle is however generally supposed to refer to the journey he took to Jerusalem, about the question of circumcision, mentioned in Acts xv. 4, &c. These years, says Dr. Whitby, must be reckoned from the time of his conversion mentioned here, chap. i. 18. which took place A. D. 35, (33,) his journey to Peter was A. D. 38, (36,) and then between that, and the council of Jerusalem, assembled A. D. 49, (52,) will be fourteen intervening years.

The dates in brackets are according to the chronology which I follow in the Acts of the Apostles. Dr. Whitby has some objections against this chronology, which may be seen in his notes.

Others contend that the journey, of which the apostle speaks, is that mentioned Acts xi. 27, &c. when Barnabas and Saul were sent by the church of Antioch with relief to the poor Christians in Judea; there being at that time a great dearth in that land. St. Luke's not mentioning Titus in that journey, is no valid objection against it; for he does not mention him in any part of his history; this being the first place in which his name occurs. And it does seem as if St. Paul did intend purposely to supply that defect, by his saying, I went up with Barnabas, and took Titus with me also. The former, St. Luke relates, Acts xi. 30. the latter, St. Paul supplies.

Verse 2. I went up by revelation] This either means that he went up at that time by an express revelation from God, that it was his duty to do so, made either to the church of Antioch to send these persons to Jerusalem; or to these persons to go, according to the directions of that church; or, the apostle here wishes to say, that having received the Gospel by revelation from God, to preach Christ among the Gentiles, he went up according to that revelation, and told what God had done by him among the Gentiles; or it may refer to the revelation made to certain prophets who came to Antioch, and particularly Agabus, who signified by the Spirit that there would be a dearth; in consequence of which, the disciples purposed to send relief to their poor brethren at Jerusalem. See Acts xi. 27—30.

But privately to them which were of reputation] Τοις δεικναις, to the chief men; those who were highest in reputation among the apostles. δοκουντες, according to Hesychius, is ωδιδετα, the honourable. With these the apostle intimates, that he had some private conferences.

Lest by any means] And he held these private conferences with those more eminent men, to give them information how, in consequence of his divine call, he had preached the Gospel to the Gentiles; and the great good which God had wrought by his ministry; but they, not knowing the nature and end of his call, might be led to suppose he had acted wrong, and thus laboured in vain: and that if he still continued to act thus, he should labour in vain. It was necessary, therefore, that he should give the apostolic council the fullest information, that he had acted according to the Divine mind in every respect; and had been blessed in his deed.

Verse 3. But neither Titus, who was with me] The apostle proceeds to state, that his account was so satisfactory to the apostles, that they not only did not require him to insist on the necessity of circumcision among the Gentiles; but did not even require him to have Titus, who was a Greek, circumcised; though that might have appeared expedient, especially at Jerusalem, to have prevented false brethren from making a handle of his uncircumcision, and turning it to the prejudice of the Gospel in Judea.

To spy out our liberty] The Judaizing brethren got introduced into the assembly of the apostles, in order to find out what was implied in the liberty of the Gospel, that they might know the better how to oppose St. Paul and his fellows in their preaching Christ to the Gentiles; and admitting them into the church, without obliging them to observe circumcision, and keep the law. The apostle saw, that while such men were in the assembly, it was better not to mention his mission among the Gentiles; lest, by means of those false brethren, occasion should be given to altercations and disputes; therefore, he took the opportunity by private conferences, to set the whole matter, relative to his work among the Gentiles, before the chief of the apostles.

Verse 5. To whom we gave place by subjection] So fully satisfied was he with his Divine call, and that he had, in preaching among the Gentiles, acted in strict conformity to it, that he did not submit in the least to the opinion of those Judaizing teachers; and therefore he continued to insist on the exemption of the Gentiles from the necessity of submitting to Jewish rites; that the truth of the Gospel, this grand doctrine that the Gentiles are admitted by the Gospel of Christ, to be fellow-heirs with the Jews, might continue; and thus the same doctrine is continued with you Gentiles.

Verse 6. Those who seemed to be somewhat] Τῶν δοκούντων ἡμῶς τι, those who were of acknowledged reputation;—so the words should be understood; see ver. 2. The verb δοκῶ which we translate seem, is repeatedly used by the best Greek writers, not to call the sense in question, or to lessen it, but to deepen and extend it. See the note on Luke viii. 18. Perhaps this verse had best be translated thus, connecting δοκῶ with αὐτὸν τὸν δοκῶντα; but there is no difference between those who were of acknowledged reputation and myself; God accepts no man's person; but in the conferences which I held with them, they added nothing to me; gave me no new light—did not attempt to impose on me any obligation, because they saw that God had appointed me my work, and that his counsel was with me.

Verse 7. But contrariwise] They were so far from wishing me to alter my plan, or to introduce any thing new in my doctrine to the Gentiles, that they saw plainly that my doctrine was the same as their own; coming immediately from the same source; and therefore gave to me and to Barnabas the right hand of fellowship.

The Gospel of the uncircumcision] They saw, to their utmost satisfaction, that I was as expressly sent by God to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles, as Peter was to preach to the Jews.

Verse 8. (For he that wrought effectually)] Ὁ ἐνεργῶνς Πέτρῳ, ἐνεργῶνς καὶ μοι. He who wrought powerfully with Peter, wrought powerfully also with me. He gave us both those talents which were suited to our work; and equal success in our different departments.

Verse 9. James, Cephas, and John, who seemed to be pillars] Οἱ δοκῶντες στήλαι ἡμῶς; who were known to be very eminent, and acknowledged as chief men among the apostles. See the note on Luke viii. 18. for the meaning of the verb δοκῶ, and see before on ver. 6.

Among the Jews, persons of great eminence and importance are represented as pillars and foundations of the world. So Abraham is said to be אֲמוּד הָעוֹלָם amud ha'olam, "the pillar of the universe; for by him to this day are the earth and heavens supported." Yalcut Rubeni, folio 29. "Rabbi Simeon said, Behold, we are the pillars of the world." Idra Rabba, s. 23.

"When Rabbi Johanan ben Zachai was near death, he wept with a loud voice. His disciples said unto him, O Rabbi, thou high pillar, thou light of the world, thou strong hammer, why dost thou weep?" Aboth R. Nathan, chap. 24.

So, in Sohar Genes. fol. 5. it is said, "And he saw that Rab. Eleazar went up, and stood there, and with him שֵׁשׁ עָשָׂר עַמּוּדֵי שָׁאָר shaar amudin, the rest of the pillars (eminent men) who sat there."

Ibid. folio 13. "These are the seven righteous men, who cleave to the holy blessed God with a pure heart, and they are the seven pillars of the world."

Ibid. folio 21. on the words bearing fruit, Gen. i. 11. it is said, "By this we are to understand the just one, who is the pillar of the world." "See Schoetgen, who adds: "These pillars must be distinguished from the foundation. The foundation of the church is Jesus Christ alone: the pillars are the more eminent teachers, which, without the foundation, are of no value."

The right hands of fellowship] Giving the right hand to another, was the mark of confidence, friendship, and fellowship. See Lev. vi. 2. If a soul—lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, or in fellowship, בְּיָדָא בְּתִישְׁמֵת יָדָא, "in giving the hand."

Verse 10. Only they would that we should remember the poor.] They saw plainly that God had as expressly called Barnabas and me to go to the Gentiles, as he had called them to preach to the Jews; and they did not attempt to give us any new injunctions; only wished us to remember the poor in Judea; but this was a thing to which we were previously disposed.

Verse 11. When Peter was come to Antioch] There has been a controversy whether Πέτρος, Peter, here should not be read Κεφας, Kephaz; and whether this Kephaz was not a different person from Peter the apostle. This controversy has lasted more than 1,500 years, and is not yet settled. Instead of Πέτρος, Peter, ABCH. several others of good note, with Erpen's Syriac, the Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, Armenian, latter Syriac in the margin, Vulgate, and several of the Greek fathers, read Κεφας. But whichever of their readings we adopt, the controversy is the same; for the great question is, whether this Peter or Cephaz, no matter which name we adopt, be the same with Peter the apostle?

I shall not introduce the arguments pro and con, which may be all seen in Calmet's dissertation on the subject, but just mention the side where the strength of the evidence appears to lie.

That Peter the apostle is meant, the most sober and correct writers of antiquity maintain: and though some of the Catholic writers have fixed the whole that is here reprehensible, on one Cephaz, one of the 70 disciples, yet the most learned of their writers, and of their popes, believe that St. Peter is meant. Some apparently plausible arguments support the contrary opinion, but they are of no weight when compared with those on the opposite side.

Verse 12. Before that certain came from James, he did eat with the Gentiles] Here was Peter's fault. He was convinced that God had pulled down the middle wall of partition that had so long separated the Jews and Gentiles; and he acted on this conviction; associating with the latter, and eating with them: but when certain Jews came from James, who, it appears, considered the law still to be in force, lest he should place a stumblingblock before them, he withdrew from all commerce with the converted Gentiles, and acted as if he himself believed the law to be still in force; and that the distinction between the Jews and the Gentiles should be still kept up.

Verse 13. And the other Jews dissembled likewise] That is, those who were converted to Christianity from among the Jews; and who had also been convinced that the obligation of the Jewish ritual had ceased, seeing Peter act this part; and also fearing them that were of the circumcision, they separated themselves from the converted Gentiles; and acted so as to convince the Jews, that they still believed the law to be of moral obligation; and so powerful was the torrent of such an example, that the gentle, loving-hearted Barnabas was carried away by their dissimulation; αυτος τα υποκριτου, with their hypocrisy—feigning to be what they really were not.

According to the truth of the Gospel] According to that true doctrine, which states that Christ is the end of the law for justification, to every one that believes; and that such are under no obligation to observe circumcision and the other peculiar rites and ceremonies of the law.

If thou, being a Jew, livest] This was a cutting reproof. He was a Jew, and had been circumstantially scrupulous in every thing relative to the law; and it required a miracle to convince him that the Gentiles were admitted, on their believing in Christ, to become members of the same church, and fellow heirs of the hope of eternal life; and in consequence of this, he went in with the Gentiles, and ate with them: i. e. associated with them as he would with Jews. But now, fearing them of the circumcision, he withdrew from his fellowship.

Why compellest thou the Gentiles] Thou didst once consider that they were not under such an obligation; and now thou actest as if thou didst consider the law in full force! but thou art convinced that the contrary is the case, yet actest differently! This is hypocrisy.

Verse 15. We who are Jews by nature] We who belong to the Jewish nation—who have been born, bred, and educated Jews.

And not sinners of the Gentiles]—Αμαρτωλοι, not without the knowledge of God, as they have been. Αμαρτωλος, often signifies a heathen, merely one who had no knowledge of the true God. But among the nations or Gentiles, many Jews sojourned; who, in Scripture, are known by the name of Hellenists, and these were distinguished from those who were termed εθνη αμαρτωλοι, sinners of the Gentiles—heathens, in our common sense of the word; while the others, though living among them, were worshippers of the true God; and addicted to no species of idolatry. Some have translated this passage thus, we Jews, and not Gentiles, by nature sinners; for it is supposed that ουου here, refers to that natural corruption which every man brings into the world. Now, though the doctrine be true; and the state of man, and universal experience, confirm it; yet it can neither be supported from this place; nor even from Eph. ii. 3. See the note on Rom. ii. 16. It appears from the use of this word by some of the best Greek authors, that ουου did not signify by nature, as we use the word, but expressed the natural birth, family, or nation of a man; to distinguish him from any other family or nation. I can give a few instances of this which are brought to my hand in a small elegant pamphlet, written by Dr. Münter, the present bishop of Zealand, entitled Observationum ex marmoribus græcis Sacrarum Specimen; and which has been lent to me by the Right Honourable Lord Teignmouth, to whose condescension, kindness, and learning, many of my studies have been laid under particular obligation.

16 * Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but ^b by the faith of Jesus Christ; even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for ^c by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified.

The word in question, is the xxviiith Example in the above pamphlet, the substance of which is as follows: in an inscription on a Greek marble given by Dr. Chandler, page 27, we find these words: ὁ γαρβος μου Λιον Αρτεμισίου, ὁ ἐπιλαχμενος Ιασου, σκοπι μετ Μιλεσιος, ου ου εἰ δε Ιασου. "My son-in-law, Leo, the son of Artemisius, who is called a Jasian, is of the house of Milesius, though by nature he is from Jaso." That is, Jaso being a native of Caria, this Leo is said to be ουου Ιασου; by nature a Jasian, although he sprang from the Milesian family. The following examples will place this in a clearer light. Josephus, Antiq. Jud. lib. xi. cap. vi. sec. 5. speaking of Amans, the Amalekite, says, και γαρ ου ου εἰ ταις Ιουδαϊαις ἀπηχθαντο, οτι και το γωος των Αρμαλικιται, εἰ ον ην αυτου, υπ' αυτων διαβαρη. "For he was by nature incensed against the Jews; because the nation of the Amalekites, from whom he sprang, had been destroyed by them:" that is, he had a national prejudice or hatred to the Jewish people, on the above account. The following example from Dio Chrysostom, Orat. xxxi. is also to the point—Οργη (Αθηναϊς) τον δινα μιν Ολυμπιον κληκασι, ου ου εἰ πολτην Ιαντου. "For they, (the Athenians,) called this person an Olympian, though by nature he was not their citizen:" that is, he was called an Olympian, though he was not naturally of that city: or, in other words, he was not born there. From these examples, and the scope of the place, we may argue that the words, we who are Jews by nature, mean we who were born in the land of Judea, and of Jewish parents. And hence the passage in Eph. ii. 3. which speaks most evidently of the heathens, (and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others,) may be thus understood; being Gentiles, and brought up in gross darkness, without any knowledge of God, abandoned to all sensual living, we were, from our very condition, and practical state, exposed to punishment. This sense is at least equally good with that given of the words in Rom. ii. 16. where it is proved that ουου, in several connexions, means truly, certainly, incontestably; "we were, beyond all controversy, exposed to punishment, because we had been born among idolaters, and have lived as they did." Here both senses of the word apply.

Verse 16: Knowing that a man is not justified] See the notes on Rom. i. 17. iii. 24, 27, and viii. 3. And see on Acts xiii. 38, 39. in which places the subject of this verse is largely discussed. Neither the works of the Jewish law, nor of any other law, could justify any man: and if justification or pardon could not have been attained in some other way, the world must have perished. Justification by faith in the boundless mercy of God, is as reasonable as it is scriptural and necessary.

Verse 17. But if, while we seek to be justified] If, while we acknowledge that we must be justified by faith in Christ, we ourselves are found sinners, enjoining the necessity of observing the rites and ceremonies of the law, which never could and never can justify; and yet, by submitting to circumcision, we lay ourselves under the necessity of fulfilling the law, which is impossible; we thus constitute ourselves sinners: is, therefore, Christ the minister of sin? Christ, who has taught us to renounce the law, and expect justification through his death? God forbid! that we should either act so, or think so.

Verse 18. For, if I build again the things which I destroyed] If I act like a Jew, and enjoin the observance of the law on the Gentiles, which I have repeatedly asserted and proved to be abolished by the death of Christ, then I build up what I destroyed; and thus make myself a transgressor, by not observing the law in that way, in which I appear to enjoin the observance of it upon others.

Verse 19. For, I through the law, am dead to the law] In consequence of properly considering the nature and requisitions of the law, I am dead to all hope and expectation of help or sal-take from the law; and have been obliged to take refuge in the Gospel of Christ. Or, probably the word νομος, LAW, is here put for a system of doctrine; as if he had said, I, through the Gospel, am dead to the law. The law itself is consigned to death; and another, the Gospel of Christ, is substituted in its stead. The law condemns to death; and I have embraced the Gospel, that I might be saved from death, and live unto God.

Verse 20. I am crucified with Christ] The death of Christ on the cross, has showed me that there is no hope of salvation by the law; I am therefore as truly dead to all expectation of justification by the law, as Christ was dead when he gave up the ghost upon the cross. Through him alone I live, enjoy a present life, and have a prospect of future glory.

Yet not I] It is not of my natural life I speak, nor of any spiritual things which I myself have procured; but Christ liveth in me. God made man to be a habitation of his own Spirit; the law cannot live in me, so as to give me a Divine life: it does not animate, but kill; but Christ lives in me; He is the soul of my soul; so that I now live to God: but this life I have by the faith of the Son of God; by believing on Christ, as a sacrifice for sin; for he loved me, and because he did so, he gave himself for me: made himself a sacrifice unto death, that I might be saved from the bitter pains of death eternal.

Verse 21. I do not frustrate] Omnis advena, I do not condemn, despise, or render useless, the grace of God, the doctrine of Christ crucified; which I must do, if I preach the necessity of observing the law.

For if righteousness] If justification and salvation came by an observance of the law, then Christ is dead in vain; his death is useless, if an observance of the law can save us: but no observance of the law can save us; and therefore there was an absolute necessity for the death of Christ.

1. The account of the prevarication of Peter in the preceding chapter, teaches us a most useful lesson. Let him who assuredly standeth, take heed lest he fall. No place in a state of probation is secure; a man may fall into sin every moment; and he will, if he do not walk with God. Worldly prudence, and fleshly wisdom, would have concealed this account of the prevarication of Peter; but God tells truth. He is the fountain of it; and from him we are to expect not only nothing but the truth, but also the whole truth. If the Gospel were not of God, we had never heard of the denial and prevarication of Peter; nor of the contention between Paul and Barnabas. And these accounts are recorded, not that men may justify or excuse their own delinquencies by them, but that they may avoid them: for he must be inexcusable who, with these histories before his eyes, ever denies his Master, or acts the part of a hypocrite. Had the apostles acted in concert to impose a forgery on the world, as a Divine revelation; the imposture would have come out. The falling out of the parties would have led to a discovery of the cheat. This relation, therefore, is an additional evidence of the truth of the Gospel.

2. On, I through the law am dead to the law, &c.—pious Quemel makes the following useful reflections: "The ceremonial law, which is no more than a type and shadow of Him, destroys itself, by showing us Jesus Christ, who is the truth and the substance. The moral law, by leaving us under our own inability, under sin and the curse, makes us perceive the necessity of the law of the heart; and of a Saviour to give it. The law is for the old man, as to its terrible and servile part; and it was crucified and died with Christ upon the cross, as well as the old man. The new man, and the new law, require a new sacrifice. What need has he of other sacrifices who has Jesus Christ? They in whom this sacrifice lives, do themselves live to God alone; but none can live to Him except by faith: and this life of faith consists in dying with Christ to the things of the present world; and in expecting, as co-heirs with him, the blessings of the eternal world. And who can work all this in us, but only He who lives in us! That man has arrived to a high degree of mortification, who can say Christ liveth in me, and I am crucified to the world. Such a one must have renounced not only earthly things, but his own self also."

3. Is there, or can there be, one well grounded hope of eternal life, but what comes through the Gospel? In vain has the ingenuity of man tortured itself for more than 5000 years, to find out some method of mending the human heart: none has been discovered that even promised any thing likely to be effectual. The Gospel of Christ not only mends, but completely cures, and new makes infected nature. Who is duly apprized of the infinite excellency and importance of the Gospel? What was the world before its appearance; what would it be were this light extinguished? Blessed Lord! let neither infidelity, nor false doctrine, rise up to obscure this heavenly splendour!

CHAPTER III.

The apostle inquires how they could be so foolish as to renounce the Gospel of Christ, and turn back to the law, after having heard, received, and suffered so much for the Gospel? 1—5. Asserts the doctrine of justification by faith, on the example of Abraham, 6—9. Shows that all who are under the law are under the curse, from which Christ alone redeems us; and the promise made to Abraham, comes to the Gentiles, who believe, 10—14. For the covenant is not by the works of the law, but by promise, 15—18. The law was given to show the sinfulness of sin, and to act as a schoolmaster till Christ should come, 19—23. It is by faith only that any become children of God, 26. And under the Gospel, all those distinctions which subsisted under the law, are done away; and genuine believers, whether Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, are one in Christ Jesus; and accounted the genuine children of Abraham, 27—29.

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. O foolish Galatians] O infatuated people; you make as little use of reason as those who have none; you have acted in this business as those do who are fascinated; they are led blindly and unresistingly on, to their own destruction.

That ye should not obey the truth] This clause is wanting in ABD*FG. some others: the Syriac, Erpenian, Coptic, Sahidic, Itala, Vulgate MS. and in the most important of the Greek and Latin Fathers. Of the clause Professor White says, certissimè delenda, "It should certainly be expunged."

There are several various readings on this verse; from which it appears, that the verse in the best ancient MSS. and Versions, was read thus: O foolish Galatians, who hath bewitched you? Before whose eyes Jesus Christ crucified, hath been plainly set forth.

Among you?] Ev vmi, are wanting in ABC. several others: the Syriac, Erpenian, Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Vulgate MS. one copy of the Itala, and in several of the Fathers. The words appear to disturb the sense, and have obliged commentators to have recourse to a sort of technical meaning; viz. "The doctrine of the Gospel had been so fully preached among these people, that it might be said Jesus Christ has been crucified among you; so fully have his sufferings been detailed, and the design of them pointed out."

Verse 2. Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law] This may refer to the miraculous gifts of the Spirit, which were very common in the apostolic church. Did ye receive these extraordinary gifts in consequence of your circumcision, and observing the Mosaic precepts? or was it by the hearing of the Gospel, prescribing faith in Christ crucified? It may also refer to the spirit of adoption, and consequently to their sonship.

3 Are ye so foolish? ^a having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the ^b flesh?

4 ^c Have ye suffered ^d so many things in vain? if it be yet in vain.

Verse 3. Having begun in the Spirit] Having received a spiritual religion, which refined and purified your hearts: and having received the Holy Spirit of God, by which ye were endued with various miraculous influences; and the spirit of adoption, by which ye were assured of the remission of sins, and incorporation with the family of God:

Are ye now made perfect by the flesh] Are ye seeking to complete that spiritual religion, and to perfect these spiritual gifts by the carnal rite of circumcision? It appears that by the Spirit here, not only the Holy Spirit, but his gifts are to be understood: and by the flesh, illud membrum in quo circumcisio peragitur; and by a metonymy, circumcision itself.

Verse 4. Have ye suffered so many things in vain?] Have ye received and lost so much good? The verb πασχων, as compounded with eu, well, or κακων, ill, and often without either, signifies to suffer pain or loss: or to possess and enjoy. In such a case, the man is considered as the patient; and the good or ill acts upon him. Though it is possible that the Galatians had suffered some persecution for the truth of Christ; yet it is as likely that the apostle refers to the benefits which they had received. Ye have received faith, the pardon of your sins; the gift of the Holy Spirit, and with it many extraordinary gifts and graces; and have ye suffered the loss of all these things? Have ye received all these in vain? if yet in vain; if it be credible that ye have sacrificed so many excellent benefits, for an imaginary good!

Verse 5. He therefore that ministereth to you the Spirit] The apostle means himself; he had been the means of conveying the Holy Spirit to them; and, by that Spirit, he wrought miracles among them: and he did all this, not as a Jew, for as such he had no power; but he did all as a believer in Christ. The word ἐπίστευεν, which we translate ministereth, is very emphatic, and signifies leading up the chorus; bringing up one after another; adding grace to grace, benefit to benefit: so that it appears they had not only some, but many benefits: God, by means of his apostle, having greatly enriched them with various spiritual blessings.

Verse 6. Abraham believed God] This is quoted from Gen. xv. 6. where see the note; and St. Paul produces it Rom. iv. 3—5. where also see the notes. Abraham, while even uncircumcised, believed in God, and his faith was reckoned to him for justification: and Abraham is called the father of the faithful; or of believers. If, then, he was justified without the deeds of the law, he was justified by faith; and, if he was justified by faith, long before the law was given, then the law is not necessary to salvation.

It is remarkable that the Jews themselves maintained that Abraham was saved by faith. Mehilla in Yalcut Simeoni, page 1. fol. 69. makes this assertion: "It is evident that Abraham could not obtain an inheritance either in this world or the world to come, but by faith."

Verse 8. The Scripture, foreseeing] See the notes on Rom. iv. 3—16. As God intended to justify the heathen through faith, he preached the Gospel that contains the grand display of the doctrine of salvation by faith; before, to Abraham, while he was in his heathen state; and thus he is called the father of believers; therefore it must refer to them who shall believe the same Gospel among the Gentiles; and as the door of faith was opened to all the Gentiles; consequently the promise was fulfilled, In thee shall all the nations of the earth be blessed.

Verse 9. They which be of faith] All who believe as Abraham has believed, are made partakers of Abraham's blessings.

Verse 10. As many as are of the works of the law] All that seek salvation by the performance of the works of the law, are under the curse; because it is impossible for them to come up to the spiritual meaning and intent of the law; and the law pronounces them cursed that continue not in all things which are written in the book of the law, to do them. Hence every Jew is necessarily under the curse of God's broken law: and every sinner is under the same curse, though he be not a Jew, who does not take refuge in the salvation provided for him by the Gospel. It is worthy of remark, that no printed copy of the Hebrew Bible preserves the word כָּל, ALL, in Deut. xxvii. 26. which answers to the apostle's word πᾶσι, all, here. St. Jerom says that the Jews suppressed it, lest it should appear that they were bound to perform all things that are written in the book of the law. Of the genuineness of the reading, there is no cause to doubt; it exists in six MSS. of Kennicott and De Rossi; in the Samaritan text; in several copies of the Targum; in the Septuagint; and in the quotation made here by the apostle, in which there is no variation either in the MSS. or in the Versions.

Verse 11. But, that no man is justified by the law] By the observance of the law, suppose he had even continued in all the things that are written in it, to do them, is evident; for the prophet Habakkuk, chap. ii. 4. has declared, under the direct influence of the Spirit of God, The just shall live by faith; or he who is just by faith, shall live: therefore this justification comes not by works, or the observance of the law, but by faith.

Verse 12. And the law is not of faith] It promises no forgiveness to believing; but requires obedience. It is not what do you believe? but what have you done? The man that doeth them perfectly at all times, and in all places, he shall live in them; but if, in any case he fails, he forfeits his life.—See the notes on Rom. i. 17, &c.

Verse 13. Christ hath redeemed us] Ἐξήρασα, hath bought us with a price, viz. his blood, or life.

for us, that the blessings promised to Abraham, might be given to them who believe on him, as having been made a curse; i. e. an *expiatory

The promise of the Spirit] The Spirit of adoption; sonship with God; and the Spirit of God to attest that sonship. And all this was through faith. Hence, from the beginning, God had purposed that salvation should be through faith; and never expected that any soul of man should be justified by the works of the law; and only gave that law that the exceeding sinfulness of sin might appear, and that man might be prepared to welcome the Gospel which proclaimed salvation to a lost world, through the atoning passion and death of Christ.

He saith not, And to seeds] It was one par-itual head, and all believers in him, who are possessed in his family two seeds, one natural,

16 Now, ^e to Abraham promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of viz. the members of his own household; and the other spiritual, those who were like himself because of their faith. The promises were not of a temporal nature; had they been so, they would have belonged to his natural seed; but they did not; therefore they must have belonged to the spiritual posterity. And as we know that promises of justification, &c. could not properly be made to Christ in himself, hence we must conclude, his members to be here intended, and the word Christ, is put here for Christians. It is from Christ that the grace flows which constitutes Christians. Christians are those who believe after the example of Abraham; they, therefore, are the spiritual seed.

Christ working in and by these, makes them the light and salt of the world; and through them, under and by Christ, are all the nations of the earth blessed. This appears to be the most consistent interpretation; though every thing must be understood of Christ in the first instance: and then of Christians only through him.

Verse 17. Confirmed before of God in Christ
i. e. The promise of justification, &c. made to believers in Christ Jesus, who are the spiritual seed of Christ, as they are children of Abraham, from the similitude of their faith. Abraham believed in God, and it was reckoned to him for justification: the Gentiles believed in Christ, and received justification. Probably the word Christ is to be taken both here and in the preceding verse for Christians, as has already been hinted. However it be taken, the sense is plainly the same; the promise of salvation must necessarily be to them who believe in Christ; for he is the promised seed, Gen. iii. 15. through whom every blessing is derived on mankind:—
and through his spiritual seed, the true Christians, the conquests of the cross are daily spreading over the face of the earth. The present unparalleled dispersion of the Sacred Writings in all the regular languages of the universe, is a full proof that all the nations of the earth are likely to be blessed through them; but they have nothing but what they have received from

come till 1911 years after the making of this covenant; and the law was given 430 years after the covenant with Abraham; therefore the law (which was given 1481 years before the promise to Abram could be fulfilled, for so much time elapsed between the giving of the law, and the advent of Christ,) could not possibly annul the Abrahamic covenant. This argument is absolute and conclusive. Let us review it. The promise to Abraham respects the Messiah; and cannot be fulfilled but in him. Christians say the Messiah is come: but the advent of him whom they acknowledge as the Messiah, did not take place till 1911 years after the covenant was made; therefore no intermediate transaction can affect that covenant. But the law was an intermediate transaction, taking place 430 years after the covenant with Abraham, and could neither annul, nor affect, that which was not to have its fulfilment till 1481 years after. Justification by faith is promised in the Abrahamic covenant, and attributed to that alone; therefore it is not to be expected from the law, nor can its works justify any; for the law in this respect cannot annul or affect the Abrahamic covenant. But suppose ye say that the law which was given 430 years after the covenant with Abraham, has superseded this covenant, limited and confined its blessings to the Jews: I answer, this is impossible; for the covenant most specifically refers to the Messiah, and takes in not the Jewish people only, but all nations; for it is written, In thy seed, the Messiah and his spiritual progeny, shall all the nations of the earth be blessed. This universal blessedness can never be confined by any figure of speech, or by any legal act, to the Jewish people exclusively; and as the covenant was legally made and confirmed, it cannot be annulled; it must therefore remain in reference to its object.

In opposition to us, the Jews assert, that the Messiah is not yet come; then we assert on that ground, that the promise is not yet fulfilled, for the giving of the law to one people, cannot imply the fulfilment of the Abrahamic covenant; because that extends to all nations. However, therefore, the case be argued, the Jewish cause derives no benefit from it: and the conclusion still recurs, salvation cannot be attained by the works of the law, inasmuch as the covenant is of faith, and he only, as your prophets declare, who is justified by faith, shall live, or be saved. Therefore we still conclude, that those who are only under the law, are under the curse; and as it says, he that doeth these things shall live in them, and he that sinneth shall die, there is no hope of salvation for any man from the law of Moses. And the Gospel of Jesus Christ proclaiming salvation, by faith, to a sinful and ruined world, is absolutely necessary; nor can it be superseded by any other institution, whether human or divine.

How we arrive at the sum of 430 years may be seen in the note on Exod. xii. 40.—Dr. Whitby also gives a satisfactory view of the matter. "The apostle refers to the promise made, Gen. xii. 3. since from that only, are the 430 years to be computed; for then, Abraham was 75 years old, Gen. xii. 4. from thence to the birth of Isaac, which happened when Abraham was 100 years old, Gen. xxi. 5. is 25 years: from his birth to the birth of Jacob was 60 years, for Isaac was 60 years old when Rebecca bare him, Gen. xxv. 26. From Jacob's birth to the descent into Egypt, were 130 years, as he said to Pharaoh, Gen. xlvii. 9. The abode of him and his posterity in Egypt was 215 years; so that, with their sojourning in Canaan, was 430 years," the sum given here, and in Exod. xii. 40. where see the notes.

Verse 18. For, if the inheritance be of the law] See the preceding arguments, in which this is proved.

Verse 19. Wherefore then serveth the law?] If the law does not annul the Abrahamic covenant, and cannot confer salvation on its votaries, why did God give it? This was a very natural objection, and must arise in the mind of any Jew who had paid attention to the apostle's reasoning.

It was added because of transgressions,] It was given that we might know our sinfulness, and the need we stood in of the mercy of God. The law is the right line, the straight edge that determines the obliquity of our conduct. See the notes on Rom. iv. 15. and especially on Rom. v. 20. where this subject is largely discussed, and the figure explained.

Till the seed should come] The law was to be in force till the advent of the Messiah.—After that, it was to cease.

It was ordained by angels] The ministry of angels was certainly used in giving the law. See Psal. lxxviii. 17. Acts vii. 53. and Heb. ii. 2. but they were only instruments for transmitting; Moses was the mediator between God and the people, Deut. v. 5.

Verse 20. A mediator is not a mediator of one] As a mediator, Mediator, signifies a middle person, there must necessarily be two parties, between whom he stands; and acts in reference to both; as he is supposed to have the interests of both equally at heart.

This verse is allowed to be both obscure and difficult; and it is certain, that there is little consent among learned men and critics in their opinions concerning it. Rosenmüller thinks that the opinion of Nossell is to be preferred to all others.

He first translates the words $\delta\ \delta\ \mu\epsilon\sigma\iota\tau\eta\varsigma$, $\epsilon\nu\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma$ thus, But he (viz. Moses) is not the mediator of that one race of Abraham, viz. the Christians; for $\epsilon\nu\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma$, relates to the $\sigma\pi\epsilon\pi\mu\alpha\ \delta\ \epsilon\nu\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma$, the seed that should come, ver. 19. of which he said $\alpha\upsilon\tau\ \epsilon\sigma\tau\ \epsilon\nu\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma$ as of one, ver. 16. If Paul had written $\delta\ \delta\ \mu\epsilon\sigma\iota\tau\eta\varsigma\ \tau\omicron\upsilon\ \epsilon\nu\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma$, $\epsilon\nu\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma$, he is not the mediator of one, no person would have had any doubt that $\sigma\pi\epsilon\pi\mu\alpha\tau\omicron\varsigma$, seed, ought to be supplied after $\epsilon\nu\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma$ of one, ver. 19. The same mode of speaking Paul uses, Rom. ver. 17, 18. $\delta\ \delta\ \mu\epsilon\sigma\iota\tau\eta\varsigma$ but he, $\delta\ \delta\ \alpha\nu\tau\omicron\upsilon$, Matt. xii. 3, 11, 39. $\delta\ \delta\ \alpha\nu\tau\omicron\upsilon$, but he said. Though Moses was the mediator between God and the Israelites; yet he was not the mediator between God and that one seed which was to come, viz. the Gentiles who should believe in Christ.

But God is one.] He is the one God, who is the Father of the Spirits of all flesh; the God of the Gentiles as well as the God of the Jews. That this is St. Paul's meaning is evident from his use of the same words in other places. 1 Tim. ii. 5. $\mu\epsilon\ \gamma\alpha\rho\ \epsilon\nu\alpha\varsigma$, &c. for there is one God, and one Mediator between God and man: that is, there is only one God and one Mediator, for the whole human race, Eph. iv. 5, 6. One Lord, one faith, one baptism, $\mu\epsilon\ \epsilon\nu\alpha\varsigma\ \kappa\alpha\iota\ \pi\alpha\tau\epsilon\rho\ \mu\epsilon\tau\omicron\upsilon\varsigma$, one God, and Father of ALL. The sense of the whole is, Moses was the mediator of one part of Abraham's seed, viz. the Israelites; but of the other seed, the Gentiles, he was certainly not the mediator: for the mediator of that seed, according to the promise of God, and covenant made with Abraham, is Christ.

Though Nossell has got great credit for this interpretation, it was given, in substance, long before him, by Dr. Whitby, as may be seen in the following words: "But this Mediator (Moses) was only the mediator of the Jews, and so, was only mediator of one party, to whom belonged the blessings of Abraham, ver. 8, 14. But God, who made the promise that in one should all the families of the earth be blessed, is ONE, the God of the other party, the Gentiles as well as of the Jews, $\epsilon\nu\alpha\gamma\gamma\epsilon\lambda\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma\ \mu\epsilon\ \delta\ \epsilon\nu\alpha\varsigma$, seeing he is ONE GOD, who will justify the circumcision by faith, and the uncircumcision through faith. Rom. iii. 30." This exposition is so plain, and so well supported by the different scriptures already quoted, that there can be but small, if any, doubt of its propriety.

Verse 21. Is the law then against the promises of God?] Is it possible that the intervention of the law in reference to one part of the Abrahamic seed, should annul the promise made to the other? It is impossible.

For if there had been a law, &c.] If any law or rule of life could have been found out that would have given life, saved sinners from death, and made them truly happy; then righteousness, justification, should have been by that law.

Verse 22. But the scripture hath concluded] All the writings of the prophets have uniformly declared, that men are all sinners: and the law declares the same by the continual sacrifices which it prescribes. All, therefore, have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; and being tried and found guilty, $\epsilon\nu\alpha\nu\alpha\lambda\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma\ \epsilon\gamma\gamma\alpha\theta\eta$, the Scripture hath shut them up; put them in prison, and locked them up, till the time should come in which the sentence of the law should be executed upon them. See Rom. iii. 9—20. and the notes there. And particularly Rom. xi. 32. where the apostle uses the same metaphor, and which, in the note, is particularly explained.

That the promise of justification, by faith of Jesus Christ, might be given to them that believe.

Verse 23. But before faith came] Before the Gospel was published,

We were kept under the law, shut up] $\epsilon\nu\kappa\epsilon\kappa\lambda\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma$, we were kept as in a strong hold; $\epsilon\nu\alpha\nu\alpha\lambda\iota\sigma\tau\eta\varsigma$, locked up—unto the faith, the religion of the Lord Jesus, which should afterwards be revealed. Here the same metaphor is used as above; and for its explanation I must refer the reader to the same place, Rom. xi. 32.

Verse 24. The law was our schoolmaster] $\circ\ \nu\omicron\mu\omicron\varsigma\ \pi\alpha\iota\delta\alpha\gamma\omega\gamma\omicron\varsigma\ \mu\epsilon\tau\ \chi\epsilon\iota\rho\omicron\upsilon\ \alpha\upsilon\tau\ \chi\epsilon\iota\rho\omicron\upsilon$. The law was our pedagogue unto Christ. The $\pi\alpha\iota\delta\alpha\gamma\omega\gamma\omicron\varsigma$, pedagogue, is not the schoolmaster, but the servant who had the care of the children, to lead them to, and bring them back from school; and had the care of them out of school-hours. Thus, the law did not teach us the living, saving knowledge; but by its rites and ceremonies, and especially by its sacrifices, it directed us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith. This is a beautiful metaphor, and highly illustrative of the apostle's doctrine. See the note on Rom. x. 4. where this figure is further explained.

Verse 25. But after that faith is come] When Christ was manifested in the flesh, and the Gospel was preached, we were no longer under the pedagogue; we came to Christ, learned of him, became wise unto salvation, had our fruit unto holiness, and the end eternal life.

It is worthy of remark, that as $\delta\ \nu\omicron\mu\omicron\varsigma$, the LAW, is used by St. Paul, to signify not only the law, properly so called, but the whole of the Mosaic economy; so, πιστις, the FAITH, is used by him to express not merely the act of believing in Christ; but the whole of the Gospel.

Verse 26. For ye who have believed the Gospel, are all children of God by faith in Christ Jesus] But no man is a child of God by circumcision; nor by any observance of the Mosaic law.

Verse 27. As many of you as have been baptized into Christ] All of you who have believed in Christ as the promised Messiah, and received baptism as a public proof, that ye had received Christ as your Lord and Saviour; have put on Christ; have received his Spirit, and entered into his interests, and copied his manners. To put on, or to be clothed with one, is to assume the person and character of that one; and they who do so, are bound to act his part, and to sustain the character which they have assumed. The profession of Christianity, is an assumption of the character of Christ; he has left us an example that we should follow his steps; and we should, as Christians, have that mind in us which was in him. See the notes on Rom. vi. 3 and 4. and especially those on Rom. xiii. 14. where this phrase is further explained.

Verse 28. There is neither Jew nor Greek] Ἕλλην, Greek, is put here for ἔθνος, heathen. Under the Gospel all distinctions are done away, as either helping or hindering; all are equally welcome to Christ; and all have an equal need of him; all persons, of all sects, and conditions, and sexes, who believe in him, become one family through him; they are one body, of which he is the head.

Neither male nor female] With great reason the apostle introduces this: between the privileges of men and women, there was a great disparity among the Jews. A man might shave his head and rend his clothes, in the time of mourning: a woman was not permitted to do so. A man might impose the vow of Nasirite upon his son: a woman could not do this on her daughter. A man might be shorn on account of the nasirite of his father: a woman could not. A man might betroth his daughter: a woman had no such power. A man might sell his daughter: a woman could not. In many cases they were treated more like children than adults; and to this day, are not permitted to assemble with the men in the synagogues, but are put up in galleries, where they can scarcely see, nor can they be seen. Under the blessed spirit of Christianity, they have equal rights, equal privileges, and equal blessings: and let me add, they are equally useful.

Verse 29. And if ye be Christ's] Or as several good MSS. read, if ye be one in Christ. If there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female: for ye are all ^e one in Christ Jesus.

29 And ^f if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and ^g heirs according to the promise.

ye have all received justification through his blood, and the mind that was in him, then are ye Abraham's seed; ye are that real spiritual posterity of Abraham, that other seed to whom the promises were made: and then heirs, according to that promise, being fitted for the rest that remains for the people of God; that heavenly inheritance which was typified by the earthly Canaan, even to the Jews.

1. The Galatians, it appears, had begun well, and for a time, run well; but they permitted Satan to hinder, and they stopped short of the prize. Let us beware of those teachers who would draw us away from trusting in Christ crucified. By listening to such, the Galatians lost their religion.

2. The temptation that leads us astray, may be as sudden as it is successful. We may lose in one moment, the fruit of a whole life! How frequently is this the case: and how few lay it to heart! a man may fall by the means of his understanding, as well as by means of his passions.

3. How strange is it that there should be found any backslider! that one who once felt the power of Christ should ever turn aside! but it is still stranger, that any one who has felt it, and given in his life and conversation, full proof that he has felt it, should not only let it slip, but at last deny that he ever had it, and even ridicule a work of grace in the heart! such instances have appeared among men.

4. The Jewish covenant, the sign of which was circumcision, is annulled, though the people with whom it was made are still preserved, and they preserve the rite or sign. Why then should the covenant be annulled? This question admits a two-fold answer. 1. This covenant was designed to last only for a time: and when that time came, it having waxed old, vanished away. 2. It was long before that void, through want of the performance of the conditions. The covenant did not state merely, ye shall be circumcised, and observe all the rites and ceremonies of the law; but ye shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, soul, mind, and strength, and your neighbour as yourself. This condition, which was the very soul of the covenant, was universally broken by that people. Need they wonder, therefore, that God has cast them off! Jesus alone can restore them, and him they continue to reject. To us, the new covenant says the same things—ye shall love the Lord, &c. if we do not so, we also shall be cut off. Take heed, lest he who did not spare the natural branches, spare not thee; therefore, make a profitable use of the goodness and severity of God.

CHAPTER IV.

The apostle shows, that as an heir in nonage is under tutors and guardians; so were the Galatians, while under the law: and as the heir when he comes of age, is no longer under guardians; so they, when the Gospel came, arrived at full maturity, and were redeemed from the law, 1-3. He shows further, that when the fulness of the time came, God sent forth his Son, that we might obtain the adoption of sons; and have the strongest evidence of that adoption, 4-6. Those who are children of God are heirs of heaven, 7. He compares their former and latter state, and shows the reason he had to fear that his labour on their behalf was in vain, 8-11. He mentions his trials among them, and their kindness to him, 12-16. Shows his tender affection for them, and exhorts them to return to the Gospel, 17-20. Shows the excellence of the Gospel beyond that of the law, by the allegory of Mount Sinai and Jerusalem, 21-27. Shows also, that the believing Gentiles are children of the promise, as Isaac was; and have been elected in the place of the Jews, who have been cast out, according to the Scriptures, 28-31.

Verse 1. The heir as long as he is a child] Though he be appointed by his father's will heir of all his possessions; yet, till he arrive at the legal age, he is master of nothing; and does not differ from one of the common domestics.

Verse 2. But is under tutors] Επιστολους, guardians and governors:—οικονομους, those who have the charge of the family. These words are nearly similar; but we may consider the first as executor, the last as the person who superintends the concerns of the family and estate till the heir become of age.

Until the time appointed of the father.] The time mentioned in the father's will or testament.

Verse 3. Even so we] The whole Jewish people, were in a state of nonage while under the law.

The elements of the world] A mere Jewish phrase, עולם הזה yasudey Olam hazzeh, "the principles of this world;" that is, the rudiments or principles of the Jewish religion. The apostle intimates that the law was not the science of salvation; it was only the elements or alphabet of it: and in the Gospel, this alphabet is compounded into a most glorious system of divine knowledge: but as the alphabet is nothing of itself, unless compounded into syllables, words, sentences, and discourses; so the law, taken by itself, gives no salvation: it contains, indeed, the outlines of the Gospel; but it is the Gospel alone, that fills up these outlines.

Verse 4. When the fulness of the time was come] The time which God in his infinite wisdom counted best; in which all his counsels were filled up; and the time which his Spirit, by the prophets, had specified; and the time to which he Made under the law] In subjection to it, that in him, all its designs might be fulfilled, and by his death, the whole might be abolished; the law dying when the Son of God expired upon the cross.

Verse 5. To redeem them] Εξαγορασ; to pay down a price for them, and thus buy them off from the necessity of observing circumcision, offering brute sacrifices, performing different ablutions, &c. &c.

That we might receive the adoption of sons.] Which adoption we could not obtain by the law; for it is the Gospel only that puts us among the children, and gives us a place in the heavenly family. On the nature of adoption, see the notes on Rom. viii. 15.

Verse 6. And because ye are sons] By faith in Christ Jesus, being redeemed both from the bondage and curse of the law: God, the Father, called generally the first person of the glorious TRINITY; hath sent forth the SPIRIT, the Holy Ghost, the second person of that Trinity; of his Son, Jesus Christ, the third person of the Trinity—crying Abba, Father! from the fullest, and most satisfactory evidence that God, the Father, Son, and Spirit, had become their portion. Verse 7. Thou art no more a servant] Thou who hast believed in Christ, art no longer a slave, either under the dominion of sin, or under obligation to the Mosaic ritual; but a son of God, adopted into the heavenly family.

And if a son, then an heir] Having a right to the inheritance, because one of the family, for none can inherit but the children; but this heirship is the most extraordinary of all: it is not an heirship of any tangible possession, either in heaven or earth; it is not to possess a part, or even the whole, of either: it is to possess Him who made all things—not God's works, but God himself: heirs of GOD through Christ.

Verse 8. When ye knew not God] Though it is evident, from the complexion of the whole of this epistle, that the great body of the Christians, in the churches of Galatia, were converts from among the Jews, or proselytes to Judaism: yet, from this verse, it appears that there were some who had been converted from heathenism: unless we suppose that the apostle here particularly addresses those who had been proselytes to Judaism; and thence converted to Christianity; which appears to be most likely from the following verses.

Verse 9. Now, after that ye have known God]
After having been brought to the knowledge of God, as your Saviour.

Or rather are known of God] Are approved of him, having received the adoption of sons.

To the weak and beggarly elements] After receiving all this, will ye turn again to the ineffectual rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law? Rites too weak to counteract your sinful habits; and too poor to purchase pardon and eternal life for you. If the Galatians were turning again to them, it is evident that they had been once addicted to them. And this they might have been, allowing that they had become converts from heathenism to Judaism; and from Judaism to Christianity. This makes the sense consistent between the 8th and 9th verses.

Verse 10. Ye observe days] Ye superstitiously regard the sabbaths, and particular days of your own appointment.

10 ⁱ Ye observe days,
and months, and times,
and years.

11 I am afraid of you, ^k lest I have bestowed upon you labour in vain.

I am; for I am as ye are: ^l ye have you ⁿ at the first.

And months] New moons; times; festivals, such as those of tabernacles, dedication, passover, &c.

Years] Annual atonements; sabbatical years, and jubilees.

Verse 11. I am afraid of you] I begin now to be seriously alarmed for you, and think you are so thoroughly perverted from the Gospel of Christ, that all my pains and labour in your conversion have been thrown away.

Verse 12. Be as I am] Thoroughly addicted to the Christian faith and worship; from the deepest conviction of its truth.

For I am as ye are] I was formerly a Jew, and as zealously addicted to the rites and ceremonies of Judaism as ye are; but I am saved from that mean and unprofitable dependence: “be therefore as I am now: who was once as you now are.” Others think the sense to be this: “Be as affectionate to me as I am to you; for ye were once as loving to me as I am now to you.”

Ye have not injured me at all] I do not thus earnestly entreat you to return to your Christian profession, because your perversion has been any loss to me; nor because your conversion can be to me any gain: ye have not injured me at all, ye only injure yourselves; and I entreat you, through the intense love I bear to you, as my once beloved brethren in Christ Jesus, to return to Him from whom ye have revolted.

Verse 13. Ye know how through infirmity]
The apostle seems to say, that he was much afflicted in body when he first preached the Gospel to them. And is this any strange thing, that a minister, so laborious as St. Paul was, should be sometimes overdone, and overcome by the severity of his labours!—Surely not.
This might have been only an occasional afflic-tion, while labouring in that part of Asia Minor; and not a continual and incurable infirmity, as some have too hastily conjectured.

Verse 14. And my temptation which was in my flesh] On this verse there are a great many various readings; as there are various opinions.

and several of the primitive Fathers, have, ἰμωρ, your temptation.

The word πυρασμῶν, which we translate temptation, signifies trial of any kind. The verse, therefore, may be read—"Ye despised not the trial which was in my flesh;" or, "Ye despised not your trial which was in my flesh;" i. e. what my flesh suffered on your account; the afflictions I passed through in consequence of my severe labours on your account. You did not consider me less an apostle of God, on account of my sinking for a time, under the weight of my work. Had they been disaffected towards him at that time, they would have used this to the prejudice of his apostolic mission. "What!
do you pretend to be an extraordinary messenger from God, and yet are suffered to fall into sickness, under the severity of your labour! If God sent you, would he not sustain you?" This would have been quite natural, had they not been well affected towards him. But, on the contrary, notwithstanding these afflictions, they received him as an angel of God, as a messenger from heaven, and as Jesus Christ himself. This appears to me to be the simple meaning of the apostle; and that he neither alludes to a bodily nor mental infirmity, which generally or periodically afflicted him, as some have imagined. Nor does he appear at all to speak of the same case as that mentioned 2 Cor. xii. 7. where I wish the reader to consult the notes. That St. Paul had frequent and severe afflictions, in consequence of his constant and severe exertions in the Gospel ministry, we may readily believe: and of this his own words bear sufficient testimony.
See his affecting account, 2 Cor. xi. 23—29.
and the notes there.

Verse 15. Where is then the blessedness ye spake of? Ye spake of, should be in Italics, there being no corresponding word in the Greek text. Perhaps there is not a sentence in the New Testament more variously translated than this. I shall give the original, τις οὐν ἦν ὁ μακαρισμὸς ὑμῶν; what was then your blessedness!
Or, How great was your happiness at that time!
Or, What blessings did ye then pour on me! It is worthy of remark that, instead of τις, what, ABCFG. several others; the older Syriac, the latter Syriac in the margin, the Armenian, Vulgate, one copy of the Itala, and some of the Fathers, have πῶς, where; and ἦν, was, is omitted by ACD. several others, also the Vulgate, Itala, and the Latin Fathers. According to these authorities, the text should be read thus, Where then is your blessedness? Having renounced the Gospel, you have lost your happiness. What have your false teachers given you to compensate the loss of communion with God, or that spirit of adoption, that Spirit of Christ,

by which you cried Abba, Father!

If, however, we understand the words as implying the benedictions they then heaped on the apostle, the sense will be sufficiently natural, and agree well with the concluding part of the verse; for I bear you record, that if possible, ye would have plucked out your own eyes, and given them to me. You had then the strongest affection for me: you loved God, and you loved me for God's sake; and were ready to give me the most unequivocal proof of your love.

Dearer than one's eyes, or to profess to give one's eyes for the sake of a person, appears to have been a proverbial expression, intimating the highest tokens of the strongest affection.
We find a similar form of speech in Terence, Adelphi, Act iv. scene 6. ver. 67.

Di me pater

Omnes oderint, ni magis te, quam oculos nunc ego amo meos.

"O Father, may all the gods hate me, if I do not love you now, more than my own eyes."

Verse 16. Am I therefore become your enemy?
How is it that you are so much altered towards me, that you now treat me as an enemy, who formerly loved me with the most fervent affection? Is it because I tell you the truth; that very truth for which you at first so ardently loved me?

Verse 17. They zealously affect you, but not well! It is difficult for common readers to understand the meaning of these words: perhaps it would be better to translate Ζηλοῦσι ὑμᾶς, τὸ κτλῶς—these false teachers endeavour to conciliate your esteem, but not on honest or true principles: they wish themselves into your good graces: they wish you to place all your affection upon themselves.

They would exclude you! They wish to shut you out from the affection of your apostle, that you might affect them, πᾶ αὐτοῦς ζήλοισι, that you might love them alone; bear them alone; abide by their directions only; and totally abandon him who called you into the grace of the Gospel of Christ. Some MSS. read ὑμᾶς, ἡ, instead of ὑμᾶς, you, they wish to shut us entirely out from among you, that you may receive and believe them alone. The sense is nearly the same; but the former appears to be the more authentic reading.

Verse 18. It is good to be zealously affected!
It is well to have a determined mind, and an ardent heart, in reference to things which are laudable and good.

Not only when I am present] You were thus attached to me when I was among you; but now ye have lost both your reverence and affection for me. Your false teachers pretended great concern for you, that you might put all your confidence in them: they have gained their end; they have estranged you from me, and got you to renounce the Gospel, and have brought you again into your former bondage.

Verse 19. My little children] Τετνια μου, my beloved children. As their conversion to God had been the fruit of much labour, prayers, and tears, so he felt them as his children; and peculiarly dear to him, because he had been the means of bringing them to the knowledge of the truth; therefore he represents himself as suffering the same anxiety and distress which he endured at first when he preached the Gospel to them; when their conversion to Christianity was a matter of great doubt and uncertainty. The metaphor which he uses needs no explanation.

Until Christ be formed in you] Till you once more receive the Spirit and unction of Christ in your hearts, from which you are fallen, by your rejection of the Spirit of the Gospel.

Verse 20. I desire to be present with you] I wish to accommodate my doctrine to your state; I know not whether you need stronger reprehension, or to be dealt with more leniently.

I stand in doubt of you] I have doubts concerning your state; the progress of error and conviction among you which I cannot fully know without being among you. This appears to be the apostle's meaning, and tends much to soften and render palatable the severity of his reproofs.

Verse 21. Ye that desire to be under the law] Ye who desire to incorporate the Mosaic institutions with Christianity, and thus bring yourselves into bondage to circumcision, and a great variety of oppressive rites.

Do ye not hear the law?] Do ye not understand what is written in the Pentateuch, relative to Abraham and his children. It is evident that the word law is used in two senses in this verse. It first means the Mosaic institutions; secondly, the Pentateuch, where the history is recorded, to which the apostle refers.

Verse 22. For it is written] Viz. in Gen. xvi. 15. and xxiii. 1, &c. that Abraham had two sons, Ishmael and Isaac; the one, Ishmael, by a bond-maid, Hagar; the other, Isaac, by a free-woman, Sarah.

Verse 23. Was born after the flesh] Ishmael was born according to the course of nature; his parents being both of a proper age; so that there was nothing uncommon or supernatural in his birth; this is the proper meaning of the apostle's κατα σαρκα, after or according to the flesh; and answers to the Hebrew phrase, אל דער באר al derec basar, according to the manner of the flesh; i. e. naturally, according to the common process of nature.

By promise] Both Abraham and Sarah had passed that age in which the procreation of children was possible, on natural principles. The birth, therefore, of Isaac was supernatural; it was the effect of an especial promise of God; and it was only on the ground of that promise that it was either credible or possible.

Verse 24. Which things are an allegory] They are to be understood spiritually; more being intended in the account than meets the eye.

Allegory, from αλλος, another; and αγορευω or αγορευω, to speak; signifies a thing that is a representative of another; where the literal sense is the representative of a spiritual meaning; or, as the glossary expresses it, αλληγορικη κατα μεταφρασην νοημα, και ου κατα την αναγωγην. "where the thing is to be understood differently in the interpretation, than it appears in the reading."

Allegories are frequent in all countries, and are used by all writers. In the life of Homer, the author speaking of the marriage of Jupiter and Juno, related by that poet, says, δουμ ταυτα αλληγοροεισθασι, οτι Ηρα μου θυγατης εσσι—Ζωης δε, εσσι—It appears that these things are to be understood allegorically; for Juno means the air, Jupiter the ether." Plutarch, in his treatise De Iside et Osir, says, αποτι Ελληνικη Κρονω αλληγοροεισθησιν χρονω. "As the Greeks allegorize Cronos (Saturn), into Chronos (Time)." It is well known how fond the Jews were of allegorizing: every thing in the law was with them an allegory: their Talmud is full of these; and one of their most sober and best educated writers, Philo, abounds with them—Speaking (De Migrat. Abrah. pag. 420.) of the five daughters of Zelophehad, he says, αε αλληγοροεισθησιν; αυθησιν; αυαι φαισιν; "which allegorized, we assert to be the five senses!"

It is very likely, therefore, that the allegory produced here, St. Paul had borrowed from the Jewish writings; and he brings it in to convict the Judaizing Galatians on their own principles; and neither he, nor we, have any thing further to do with this allegory, than as it applies to the subject for which it is quoted; nor does it give any license to those men of vain and superficial minds, who endeavour to find out allegories in every portion of the Sacred Writings; and by what they term spiritualizing, which is more properly carnalizing, have brought the testimonies of God into disgrace. May the spirit of silence be poured out upon all such corrupters of the word of God!

For these are the two covenants] These signify two different systems of religion; the one by Moses, the other by the Messiah.

The one from the mount Sinai] On which the law was published; which was typified by Hagar, Abraham's bondmaid.

Which gendereth to bondage] For, as the bondmaid, or slave, could only gender, bring forth her children in a state of slavery; and subject also to become slaves: so all that are born and live under those Mosaic institutions, are born and live in a state of bondage; a bondage to various rites and ceremonies; under the obligation to keep the whole law; yet, from its severity, and their frailness, obliged to live in the habitual breach of it; and, in consequence, exposed to the curse which it pronounces.

Verse 25. For this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia] Το γαγ Αγαγ, Σιναι ὄρος ἐστίν ἐν τῇ Αραβία—This is the common reading; but it is read differently in some of the most respectable MSS. Versions, and Fathers; thus, το γαγ Σιναι ὄρος ἐστίν ἐν τῇ Αραβία, for this Sinai is a mountain of Arabia; the word Αγαγ, Agar, being omitted. This reading is supported by CFG. some others, the Ethiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and one copy of the Itala; by Epiphanius, Damascenus, Ambrosiaster, Jerom, Augustin, Hilary, Sedulius, and Bede; and the word is sometimes, though not always, omitted by Cyril and Origen, which proves that in their time there were doubts concerning the common reading.

Of the word Agar, in this verse, which renders the passage very obscure and difficult, professor White says, "forsitan delendum," "probably it should be expunged." Griesbach has left it in the text with a note of doubtfulness.

Answereth to Jerusalem] Hagar the bondmaid, bringing forth children in a state of slavery, answereth to Jerusalem that now is, συσταχυ, points out, or bears a similitude to Jerusalem in her present state of subjection; which, with her children, her citizens are not only in bondage to the Romans, but in a worse bondage to the law, to its oppressive ordinances, and to the heavy curse which it has pronounced against all those who do not keep them.

Verse 26. But Jerusalem which is above] The apostle still follows the Jewish allegory, showing not only how the story of Hagar and Sarah, Ishmael and Isaac, was allegorized: but pointing out also, that even Jerusalem was the subject of allegory: for it was a maxim among the rabbins, that, "Whatsoever was in the earth, the same was also found in heaven; for there is no matter, howsoever small, in this world, that has not something similar to it in the spiritual world." On this maxim, the Jews imagine that every earthly thing has its representative in heaven; and especially whatever concerns Jerusalem, the law, and its ordinances. Rab. Kimchi, speaking of Melchisedec, king of Salem, says ירושלים על קטלו Zu Yerushalem shel medlah—"This is the Jerusalem that is from above." This phrase frequently occurs among these writers, as may be seen in Schoelegen, who has written an express dissertation upon this subject.—Hor. Hebr. vol. i. page 1205.

Is free, which is the mother of us all.] There is a spiritual Jerusalem, of which this is the type; and this Jerusalem, in which the souls of all the righteous are, is free from all bondage and sin: or by this, probably the kingdom of the Messiah was intended; and this certainly answers best to the apostle's meaning, as the subsequent verse shows. There is an earthly Jerusalem, but this earthly Jerusalem typifies a heavenly Jerusalem: the former, with all her citizens, is in bondage; the latter is a free city, and all her inhabitants are free also: and this Jerusalem is our mother; it signifies the church of Christ, the metropolis of Christianity, or rather the state of liberty into which all true believers are brought. The word παντων, of all, is omitted by almost every MS. and Version of antiquity and importance; and by the most eminent of the Fathers, who quote this place: it is undoubtedly spurious, and the text should read thus—But Jerusalem which is above, is free; which is our mother.

Verse 27. Rejoice, thou barren that bearest not] This quotation is taken from Isai. chap. liv. 1. and is certainly a promise which relates to the conversion of the Gentiles, as the following clause proves; for the desolate, the Gentile world, hath many more children, is a much larger, and more numerous church than she, Jerusalem, the Jewish state, which hath a husband; has been so long in covenant with God, living under his continual protection, and in possession of a great variety of spiritual advantages; and especially those offered to her by the

Gospel, which she has rejected; and which the Gentiles have accepted.

Verse 28. Now we] Who believe in the Lord Jesus, are the children of promise, are the spiritual offspring of the Messiah, the seed of Abraham, in whom the promise stated that all the nations of the earth should be blessed.

Verse 29. But as then he] Ishmael, who was born after the flesh; whose birth had nothing supernatural in it; but was according to the ordinary course of nature:

Persecuted him] Isaac, who was born after the Spirit; who had a supernatural birth, according to the promise, and through the efficacy of the Holy Spirit, giving effect to that promise—Sarah shall have a son, Gen. xvii. 16—31. xxi. 1, &c.

Persecuted him; the persecution here referred to, is that mentioned Gen. xxi. 9.

Even so it is now] So the Jews, in every place, persecute the Christians; and show thereby that they are rather of the posterity of Hagar than of Sarah.

Verse 30. What saith the Scripture?] (In Gen. xxi. 10.) Cast out the bond-woman and her son: and what does this imply in the present case? Why, that the present Jerusalem and her children shall be cast out of the favour of God; and shall not be heir with the son of the free-woman: shall not inherit the blessings promised to Abraham, because they believe not in the promised seed.

Verse 31. So then] We, Jews and Gentiles, who believe on the Lord Jesus, are not children of the bond-woman; are not in subjection to the Jewish law; but of the free; and, consequently, are delivered from all its bondage, obligation, and curse.

Thus the apostle, from their own Scripture, explained by their own allegory, proves that it is only by Jesus Christ that they can have redemption; and because they have not believed in him, therefore they continue to be in bondage; and that shortly God will deliver them up into a long and grievous captivity; for we may naturally suppose that the apostle has reference to what had been so often foretold by the prophets, and confirmed by Jesus Christ himself; and this was the strongest argument he could use, to show the Galatians their folly and their danger in submitting again to the bondage from which they had escaped; and exposing themselves to the most dreadful calamities of an earthly kind, as well as to the final ruin of their souls. They desired to be under the law; then they must take all the consequences; and these the apostle sets fairly before them.

Scripture? ^e Cast out the bond-woman and her son: for ^f the son of the bond-woman shall not be heir with the son of the free-woman.

31 So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond-woman, ^g but of the free.

1. We sometimes pity the Jews, who continue to reject the Gospel. Many who do so, have no pity for themselves: for, is not the state of a Jew who systematically rejects Christ, because he does not believe him to be the promised Messiah, infinitely better than his; who, believing every thing that the Scripture teaches concerning Christ, lives under the power and guilt of sin! If the Jews be in a state of nonage, because they believe not the doctrines of Christianity, he is in a worse state than that of infancy, who is not born again by the power of the Holy Ghost. Reader, whosoever thou art, lay this to heart.

2. The 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th verses of this chapter, contain the sum and marrow of Christian divinity. (1.) The determination of God to redeem the world by the incarnation of his Son. (2.) The manifestation of this Son, in the fulness of time. (3.) The circumstances in which this Son appeared; sent forth; made of a woman; made under the law; to be a sufferer; and to die as a sacrifice. (4.) The redemption of the world, by the death of Christ; he came to redeem them that were under the law; who were condemned and cursed by it. (5.) By the redemption price, he purchases sonship, or adoption for mankind. (6.) He, God the Father, sends the Spirit, God the Holy Ghost, of God the Son, into the hearts of believers, by which they, through the full confidence of their adoption, call him their Father. (7.) Being made children, they become heirs, and God is their portion throughout eternity. Thus, in a few words, the whole doctrine of grace is contained, and an astonishing display made of the unutterable mercy of God. See the notes on these verses.

3. While the Jews were rejecting the easy yoke of Christ, they were painfully observing days and months, and times, and years. Superstition has far more labour to perform than true religion has; and at last profits nothing! Most men, either from false views of religion, or through the power and prevalency of their own evil passions and habits, have ten thousand times more trouble to get to hell, than the followers of God have to get to heaven.

4. Even in the perverted Galatians the apostle finds some good; and he mentions, with great feeling, those amiable qualities which they once possessed. The only way to encourage men to seek further good, is to show them what they have got; and to make this a reason why they should seek more. He who wishes to do good to men, and is constantly dwelling on their bad qualities, and graceless state, either irritates or drives them to despair. There is, perhaps, no sinner, on this side perdition, who has not something good in him. Mention the good: it is God's work: and show what a pity it is that he should not have more; and how ready God is to supply all his wants through Christ Jesus. This plan should especially be used in addressing Christian societies, and particularly those which are in a declining state.

5. The Galatians were once the firm friends of the apostle, and loved him so well, that they would have even plucked out their eyes for him: and yet these very people cast him off, and counted and treated him as an enemy! O sad fickleness of human nature! O uncertainty of human friendships! An undesigned word, or look, or action, becomes the reason, to a fickle heart, why it should divest itself of the spirit of friendship; and he, who was as dear to them as their own souls, is neglected and forgotten! Blessed God! Hast thou not said that there is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother? Where is he? Can such a one be trusted long on this unkindly earth! He is fit for the society of angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect; and thou takest him in mercy, lest he should lose his friendly heart; or lest his own heart should be broken, in losing that of his friend. Hasten, Lord, a more perfect state, where the spirit of thy own love in thy followers shall expand without control or hindrance, throughout eternity!—Amen.

6. On allegorizing in explaining the word of God, something has already been said, under ver. 24, but on the subject of allegory in general, much might be said. The very learned and accurate critic, Dr. Loath, in his work De Sacra Poesi Hebræorum, has entered at large into the subject of allegory, as existing in the Sacred Writings; in which he has discovered three species of this rhetorical figure—1. That which rhetoricians term a continued metaphor. See Solomon's portraiture of old age, Eccles. xii. 2—6. A second kind of allegory is that which in a more proper and restricted sense may be called parable. See Matt. xiii. and the note on ver. 3. of that chapter. The third species of allegory, is that in which a double meaning is couched under the same words. These are called mystical allegories, and the two meanings are termed the literal and mystical senses. For examples of all these kinds I must refer to the learned prelate above named.

CHAPTER V.

The apostle exhorts the Galatians to stand fast in the liberty of the Gospel, and not by receiving circumcision, bring themselves into a yoke of bondage, 1—4. Shows the superior excellence of Christianity, 5, 6. Mentions their former steadiness, and warns them against the bad doctrine which was then preached among them, 7—9. Expresses his confidence that they will yet return; and shows that he who perverted them, shall bear his own punishment, 10—12. States that they are called to liberty; and that love is the fulfilling of the law, 13, 14. Warns them against dissensions, and enumerates the fruits of the flesh, which exclude those who bear them, from the kingdom of God, 15—21. Enumerates also the fruits of the Spirit, which characterize the disciples of Christ, 22—24. Exhorts them to live in the Spirit, and not provoke each other, 25, 26.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. Stand fast therefore in the liberty] This is intimately connected with the preceding chapter: the apostle having said, just before, So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond-woman, but of the free; immediately adds, Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free. Hold fast your Christian profession; it brings spiritual liberty: on the contrary, Judaism brings spiritual bondage. Among the Jews, the Messiah's reign was to be a reign of liberty, and hence the Targum on Lament. ii. 22. says, "LIBERTY shall be publicly proclaimed to thy people of the house of Israel, מִשְׁפַּחַת יְהוָה אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּיַד מֶלֶךְ מִשְׁחִיחַ, by the hand of the Messiah, such as was granted to them by Moses and Aaron, at the time of the pass-over."

Ch. 2. 4. & 4. 9.—Acts 15. 1. See Acts 16. 2.—Ch. 3. 10.

The liberty mentioned by the apostle, is freedom from Jewish rites and ceremonies; called properly here the yoke of bondage: and also liberty from the power and guilt of sin, which nothing but the grace of Christ can take away.

Verse 2. If ye be circumcised] By circumcision, you take on you the whole obligation of the Jewish law, and consequently profess to seek salvation by means of its observances; and therefore Christ can profit you nothing; for, by seeking justification by the works of the law, you renounce justification by faith in Christ.

Verse 3. He is a debtor to do the whole law] Lays himself, by receiving circumcision, under the obligation to fulfil all its precepts, ordinances, &c.

Verse 4. Christ is become of no effect unto you] It is vain for you to attempt to unite the two systems. You must have the law and no Christ, or Christ and no law, for your justification.

Ye are fallen from grace.] From the Gospel. They had been brought into the grace of the Gospel; and now, by re-adopting the Mosaic ordinances, they had apostatized from the Gospel as a system of religion; and had lost the grace communicated to their souls, by which they were preserved in a state of salvation. The peace and love of God, received by Jesus Christ, could not remain in the hearts of those who had rejected Christ. They had, therefore, in every sense of the word, fallen from grace: and whether some of them ever rose again, is more than we can tell.

Verse 5. For we, Christians, through the Spirit] Through the operation of the Holy Ghost, under this spiritual dispensation of the Gospel, wait for the hope of righteousness; expect that which is the object of our hope, on our being justified by faith in Christ. Righteousness, sanctum, may here, as in many other places of St. Paul's epistles, mean justification. And the hope of justification, or the hope excited and inspired by it, is the possession of eternal glory: for, says the apostle, Rom. v. 1, 2. Being justified by faith, we have peace with God, and rejoice in hope of the glory of God. But as this glory is necessarily future, it is to be waited for; but this waiting, in a thorough Christian, is not only a blessed expectation, but also a continual anticipation of it; and therefore the apostle says, αὐδὴχουθε, we receive out of it; from, αὐ, from, α, out of, and δὴχουθε, I receive. This is no fanciful derivation: it exists in the experience of every genuine Christian; he is continually anticipating or receiving foretastes of that glory, the fulness of which he expects after death. Thus they are receiving the end of their faith, the salvation of their souls. 1 Pet. i. 9.

That they could not have the Holy Spirit, without faith, was a doctrine also of the Jews; hence it is said, Mechilta, fol. 52. "That faith was of great consequence, with which the Israelites believed in Him, who, with one word, created the universe: and because the Israelites believed in God, the Holy Spirit dwelt in them; so that being filled with God, they sung praises to him." Cicero, De Nat. Deor. lib. ii. has said, Nemo vir magnus sine aliquo afflatu divino unquam fuit—"There never was a great man who had not some measure of the Divine influence." However true this may be, with respect to the great men of the Roman orator; we may safely assert, that there never was a true Christian, who had not the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit.

Verse 6. For, in Jesus Christ] By the dispensation of the Gospel, all legal observances, as essential to salvation, are done away: and uncircumcision, or the Gentile state, contributes as much to salvation as circumcision, or the Jewish state: they are both equally ineffectual; and nothing now avails, in the sight of God, but that faith, δὲ ἀγάπῃ ενεργουμένη, which is made active, or energetic by love. God acknowledges no faith as of the operation of His Spirit, that is not active or obedient: but the principle of all obedience to God, and beneficence to man, is love; therefore faith cannot work, unless it be associated with love. Love to God, produces obedience to his will: love to man, worketh no ill; but, on the contrary, every act of kindness. Faith, which does not work by love, is either circumcision or uncircumcision, or whatever its possessor may please to call it: it is, however, nothing that will stand him in stead, when God comes to take away his soul—It availeth nothing. This humble, holy, operative, obedient love, is the grand touchstone of all human creeds, and confessions of faith. Faith, without this, has neither soul nor operation: in the language of the apostle James, it is dead, and can perform no function of the spiritual life, no more than a dead man can perform the duties of animal or civil life.

Verse 7. Ye did run well] Ye once had the faith that worked by love; ye were genuine, active, useful Christians.

Who did hinder] Who prevented you from continuing to obey the truth? Ye could only be turned aside by your own consent. St. Paul, here, as in 1 Cor. ix. 24. compares Christianity to a race.—See the notes on the above text.

Verse 8. This persuasion] Of the necessity of your being circumcised, and obeying the law of Moses, is not of him that calleth you: I never preached such a doctrine to you: I called you out of bondage, to liberty; from a galling yoke to a cheerful service. Some translate σπορυμα, obedience or subjection. This subjection of yours to the Mosaic law, is opposed to the will of God; and never was preached by me.

Verse 9. A little leaven leaveneth the whole lump.] A proverbial expression; see 1 Cor. v. 6. very aptly applied to those who receive the smallest tincture of false doctrine relative to things essential to salvation; which soon influences the whole conduct, so that the man becomes totally perverted. They might have argued, "It is a small thing, and should not be made a subject of serious controversy, whether we be circumcised or not."—Granted, that in itself, it is a small matter; but, as every man, who is circumcised, is a debtor to do the whole law, ver. 3. then your circumcision leads necessarily to your total perversion; as the little portion of leaven, mixed with the batch, soon leavens the whole lump.

Verse 10. I have confidence in you] I now feel a persuasion from the Lord, that I shall not be permitted to expostulate with you in vain; that ye will be none otherwise minded: that ye will be aware of the danger to which ye are exposed, that ye will retreat in time, and recover the grace which ye have lost.

But he that troubleth you] The false teacher, who sowed doubtful disputations among you, and thus has troubled the repose of the whole church. Shall bear his judgment; shall meet with the punishment he deserves, for having sown his tares among God's wheat.

Verse 11. If I yet preach circumcision] It is very likely that some of the false apostles, hearing of Paul's having circumcised Timothy, Acts xvi. 3. which must have been done about this time, reported him as being an advocate for circumcision; and by this means, endeavoured to sanction their own doctrine: to this the apostle replies, Were it so that I am a friend to this measure, is it likely that I should suffer persecution from the Jews? but I am every where persecuted by them; and I am persecuted because I am known to be an enemy to circumcision: were I a friend to this doctrine, the offence of the cross, preaching salvation only through the sacrifice of Christ, would soon cease; because, to be consistent with myself, if I preached the necessity of circumcision, I must soon cease to preach Christ crucified, and then the Jews would be no longer mine enemies.

Verse 12. I would they were even cut off which trouble you.] This saying has puzzled many; and different interpretations of the place have been proposed by learned men.

At first sight, it seems as if the apostle was praying for the destruction of the false teachers, who had perverted the churches of Galatia. Mr. Wakefield thought εἰς τὴν ἀνολεθρίαν, might be translated, I wish that they were made to weep; and in his translation of the New Testament, the passage stands thus—"I wish that they who are unsettling you, may lament it." I believe the apostle never meant any such thing. As the persons who were breeding all this confusion in the churches of Galatia were members of that church, the apostle appears to me to be simply expressing his desire that they might be cut off, or excommunicated from the church. Kypke has given an abundance of examples where the word is used to signify, amputating, cutting off from society, office, &c. excluding. In opposition to the notion of excommunications, it might be asked, "Why should the apostle wish these to be excommunicated, when it was his own office to do it?" To this it may be answered; the apostle's authority was greatly weakened among that people, by the influence of the false teachers; so that in all probability he could exercise no ecclesiastical function; he could, therefore, only express his wish. And the whole passage is so parallel to that 1 Cor. v. 6, 7. that I think there can be no reasonable doubt of the apostle's meaning.—"Let those who are unsettling the church of Christ in your district, be excommunicated: this is my wish, that they should no longer have any place among you."

Verse 13. Ye have been called unto liberty] A total freedom from all the burdensome rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law. Only use not that liberty for an occasion to the flesh. By flesh, here, we may understand all the unrenewed desires and propensities of the mind; whatsoever is not under the influence and guidance of the Holy Spirit of God. Your liberty is from that which would oppress the spirit; not from that which would lay restraints on the flesh. The Gospel proclaims liberty from the ceremonial law; but binds you still faster under the moral law. To be freed from the ceremonial law, is the Gospel liberty: to pretend freedom from the moral law, is antinomianism.

By love serve one another.] Having that faith which worketh by love, serve each other to the uttermost of your power: δουλεύετε, serve each other, when necessary, as slaves serve their masters. Several excellent MSS. and Versions, instead of δια τῆς ἀγάπης, by love, have τῆ ἀγάπῃ τοῦ Πνεύματος, in the love of the Spirit, serve one another.

Verse 15. If ye bite and devour one another] These churches seem to have been in a state of great distraction; there were continual alterations among them; they had fallen from the grace of the Gospel; and as Christ no longer dwelt in their hearts by faith; pride, anger, ill-will, and all unkind and uncharitable tempers, took possession of their souls; and they were, in consequence, alternately destroying each other. Nothing is so destructive to the peace of man, and to the peace of the soul, as religious disputes: when they prevail, religion in general has little place.

Verse 16. Walk in the Spirit] Get back that Spirit of God which you have grieved and lost; take up that spiritual religion which you have abandoned.

Ye shall not fulfil the lust of the flesh.] If the Spirit of God dwell in, and rule your heart, the whole carnal mind will be destroyed; and then, not only carnal ordinances will be abandoned, but also the works and propensities of the flesh.

Verse 17. For the flesh lusteth against the Spirit] God still continues to strive with you, notwithstanding your apostacy; showing you whence you have fallen, and exciting you to return to him; but your own obstinacy renders all ineffectual: and, through the influence of these different principles, you are kept in a state of self-opposition, and self-distraction; so that you cannot do the things that ye would; you are convinced of what is right, and ye wish to do it; but, having abandoned the Gospel, and the grace of Christ, the law and its ordinances which ye have chosen in their place, afford you no power to conquer your evil propensities. It was on this ground that the apostle exhorted them, ver. 16. to walk in the Spirit, that they might not fulfil the lust of the flesh; as, without the grace of God, they could do nothing.—Who can suppose that he speaks this of adult Christians!

Verse 18. But, if ye be led of the Spirit] If ye receive again the Gospel and the grace of Christ, and permit yourselves to be influenced by the Holy Spirit, whom you are now grieving, ye are not under the law; ye will not feel those evil propensities which now disgrace and torment you. But they must prevail while you are not under the influence of the grace and Spirit of Christ.

Verse 19. Now the works of the flesh are manifest] By flesh, we are to understand the evil and fallen state of the soul, no longer under the guidance of God's Spirit, and right reason, but under the animal passions; and they are even rendered more irregular and turbulent by the influence of sin; so that man is in a worse state than the brute: and, so all commanding is this evil nature, that it leads men into all kinds of crimes; and among them the following, which are manifest, known to all, and most prevalent; and though these are most solemnly forbidden by your law; the observance of its ordinances gives no power to overcome them; and provides no pardon for the guilt and condemnation produced by them.

Adultery] Μοιχεία, illicit connexion with a married person. This word is wanting in this place, in the best MSS. Versions, and Fathers; the next term often comprehending both.

Fornication] Πορνεία, illicit connexion between single or unmarried persons; yet often signifying adultery also.

Uncleanness] Ακαθαρσία, whatever is opposite to purity; probably meaning here, as in Rom. i. 24. 2 Cor. xii. 21. unnatural practices; sodomy, bestiality.

Lasciviousness] Ασεβεία, whatever is contrary to chastity; all lewdness.

Verse 20. Idolatry] Worshipping of idols; frequenting idol festivals; all the rites of Bacchus, Venus, Priapus, &c. which were common among the Gentiles.

Witchcraft] Φαρμακεία from φαρμακόν, a drug, or poison; because in all spells and enchantments, whether true or false, drugs were employed. As a drug, φαρμακόν, might either be the means of removing an evil, or inflicting one; etymologists have derived it from φαρ ἀνάσσει, bringing ease; or φαρ ἀχθεί, bringing pain. So spells and incantations were used sometimes for the restoration of the health; at others, for the destruction of an enemy. Sometimes these φαρμακεία were used to procure love; at other times to produce hatred.

Hatred] Εχθρά, aversions and antipathies, when opposed to brotherly love and kindness.

Variance] Ερις, contentions, where the principle of hatred proceeds to open acts; hence contests, altercations, law-suits, and disputes in general.

Emulations] Ζηλοί, envies or emulations, that is, strife to excel at the expense of another; lowering others to set up oneself: unholly zeal, fervently adopting a bad cause; or supporting a good one by cruel means. Inquisitions, pretending to support true religion, by torturing

Strife] Εριβαι, disputations, janglings, logomachias, or strife about words.

Seditious] Διχοστασιαι, divisions into separate factions; parties, whether in the church or state.

Heresies] Αιμαρι, factions, parties in the church separating from communion with each other, and setting up altar against altar. The word, which is harmless in itself, is here used in a bad sense. Instead of διπρωι, the Slavonic, has εκαθλα, scandals, offences or stumbling-blocks.

Verse 21. Envyings] θου, "pain felt, and malignity conceived, at the sight of excellence or happiness." A passion the most base and the least curable of all that disgraces or degrades the fallen soul. See on Rom. xiii. 13.

Murders] θου: similarity of sound to the preceding seems to have suggested the word in this association; it is wanting in several MSS.
Murder signifies the destruction of human life;
and as he who hates his brother in his heart, is ready to take away his life, so he is called a murderer.
After all the casuistry of man, it does not appear that the right of taking away a human life on any pretence, except for the crime of murder, belongs to any but the Maker and Judge of all men.

Drunkenness] Μεθαι, taking more wine or any kind of inebriating liquor than is necessary for health; whatever unfit for public, domestic, or spiritual duties: even the cares of the world, when they intoxicate the mind.—See on Rom.
xiii. 13.

Revellings] Κουμ, lascivious feastings, with obscene songs, music, &c.—See on Rom. xiii. 13.

And such like] Και τα ομοια τωτοι; all that proceeds from the evil passions of a fallen spirit, besides those above specified; and all that the law of God specifies and condemns.

Of the which I tell you before] When I first preached the Gospel to you.

As I have also told you in time past] When I paid my second visit to you; for the apostle did visit them twice. See Acts xvi. 6. and xviii. 23.
and see Preface, pag. ii.

Shall not inherit] They are not children of God, and therefore cannot inherit the kingdom which belongs only to the children of the Divine family.

Verse 22. But the fruit of the Spirit] Both flesh, the sinful dispositions of the human heart, and spirit, the changed or purified state of the soul, by the grace and Spirit of God, are represented by the apostle as trees; one yielding good, the other bad fruit; the productions of each being according to the nature of the tree, as the tree is according to the nature of the seed from which it sprung. The bad seed produced a bad tree, yielding all manner of bad fruit: the good seed produced a good tree, bringing forth fruits of the most excellent kind. The tree of the flesh, with all its bad fruits, we have already seen: the tree of the Spirit, with its good fruits, we shall now see.

Love] Αγαρη, an intense desire to please God, and to do good to mankind: the very soul and spirit of all true religion, the fulfilling of the law, and what gives energy to faith itself. See ver. 6.

Joy] χαρη, the exultation that arises from a sense of God's mercy communicated to the soul in the pardon of its iniquities, and the prospect of that eternal glory of which it has the foretaste in the pardon of sin. See Rom. v. 2.

Peace] Ειρη, the calm, quiet, and order which take place in the justified soul; instead of the doubts, fears, alarms, and dreadful forebodings, which every true penitent less or more feels; and must feel, till the assurance of pardon brings peace and satisfaction to the mind.
Peace is the first sensible fruit of the pardon of sin. See Rom. v. 1. and the notes there.

Long-suffering] Μακροθυμια, long-mindedness, bearing with the frailties and provocations of others, from the consideration that God has borne long with ours; and that if he had not, we should have been speedily consumed: bearing up also through all the troubles and difficulties of life without murmuring or repining; submitting cheerfully to every dispensation of God's providence, and thus deriving benefit from every occurrence.

Gentleness] Χρηστευ; benignity, affability; a very rare grace, often wanting in many who have a considerable share of Christian excellence. A good education and polished manners, when brought under the influence of the grace of God, will bring out this grace with great effect.

Goodness] Αγαθωτη; the perpetual desire, and sincere study not only to abstain from every appearance of evil, but to do good to the bodies and souls of men to the utmost of our ability:
but all this must spring from a good heart; a heart purified by the Spirit of God: and then, the tree being made good, the fruit must be good also.

Faith] Πιστη, here used for fidelity; punctuality in performing promises; conscientious carefulness in preserving what is committed to our trust; in restoring it to its proper owner; in transacting the business confided to us: neither betraying the secret of our friend, nor disappointing the confidence of our employer.

* 1 Tim. 1. 2. — b Rom. 6. 6. & 13. 14. Ch. 2. 20. 1 Pet. 2. 11.

Verse 23. Meekness] Πραως; mildness; indulgence towards the weak and erring; patient suffering of injuries, without feeling a spirit of revenge; an even balance of all tempers and passions; the entire opposite to anger.

Temperance] Εγκρατια; continence, self-government or moderation, principally with regard to sensual or animal appetites. Moderation, in eating, drinking, sleeping, &c.

Several very respectable MSS. as D*EFG. with the Vulgate, most copies of the Itala, and several of the Fathers, add Αγνια, chastity. This, we are sure, cannot be separated from the genuine Christian character, though it may be included in the word εγκρατια, continence or moderation, immediately preceding.

Against such there is no law] Those, whose lives are adorned by the above virtues, cannot be condemned by any law; for the whole purpose and design of the moral law of God, is fulfilled in those who have the Spirit of God, producing in their hearts and lives the preceding fruits.

Verse 24. And they that are Christ's] All genuine Christians—have crucified the flesh—are so far from obeying its dictates, and acting under its influence, that they have crucified their sensual appetites, they have nailed them to the cross of Christ, where they have expired with him: hence, says St. Paul, Rom. vi. 6. our old man (the flesh with its affections and lusts) is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. By which we see that God has fully designed to save all who believe in Christ, from all sin, whether outward or inward; with all the affections, παθηματα, irregular passions; and lusts, επιθυμιας, disorderly wishes and desires. All that a man may feel contrary to love and purity; and all that he may desire contrary to moderation, and that self-denial peculiar to the Christian character.

Verse 25. If we live in the Spirit] If we profess to believe a spiritual religion; let us walk in the Spirit; let us show in our lives and conversation that the Spirit of God dwells in us.

26 ^e Let us not be desirous of vain-glory, provoking one another, envying one another.

* Or, passions. — d Rom. 8. 4, 5. Ver. 16. — e Phil. 2. 3.

Verse 26. Let us not be desirous of vain-glory] Κυδοξου; let us not be vain-glorious, boasting of our attainments; vaunting ourselves to be superior to others; or seeking honour from those things which do not possess moral good—in birth, riches, eloquence, &c. &c.

Provoking one another] What this may refer to we cannot tell; whether to the Judaizing teachers, endeavouring to set themselves up beyond the apostle; and their attempts to lessen him in the people's eyes, that they might secure to themselves the public confidence, and thus destroy St. Paul's influence in the Galatian churches; or whether to some other matter in the internal economy of the church, we know not. But the exhortation is necessary for every Christian, and for every Christian church. He who professes to seek the honour that comes from God, should not be desirous of vain-glory. He who desires to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, should not provoke another. He who knows that he never deserved any gift or blessing from God, should not envy another those blessings which the Divine goodness may have thought proper to bestow upon him. May not God do what he will with his own? If Christians in general would be content with the honour that comes from God; if they would take heed to give no provocations to their fellow-Christians; if they would cease from envying those on whom either God or man bestows honours or advantages; we should soon have a happier and more perfect state of the Christian church than we now see. Christianity requires us to esteem each other better than ourselves: or, in honour, to prefer one another. Had not such a disposition been necessary to the Christian character, and to the peace and perfection of the church of Christ, it would not have been so strongly recommended. But who lays this to heart; or even thinks that this is indispensably necessary to his salvation! Where this disposition lives not, there are both the seed and fruit of the flesh.

CHAPTER VI.

The apostle teaches them to be tender and affectionate towards any who through surprise, and the violence of temptation, had fallen into sin; and to bear each other's burdens, 1, 2. To think humbly of themselves, and to conclude concerning their own character rather from the evidence of their works, than from any thing else, 3—5. To minister to the support of those who instruct them in righteousness, 6. He warns them against self-deception, because whatever a man saveth, that he shall reap, 7, 8. Exhorts them not to be weary in well-doing, and to embrace every opportunity to do good, 9, 10. Intimates that his love to them led him to write this whole epistle with his own hand, 11. Points out the object that those had in view who wished them to be circumcised, 12, 13. He exults in the cross of Christ, and asserts that a new creation of the soul is essential to its salvation; and wishes peace to them who act on this plan, 14—16. States that he bears in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus, 17. And concludes with his apostolical benediction, 18.

NOTES ON CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. Brethren, if a man be overtaken] Εαν προλαβῆν; If he be surprised, seized on without warning; suddenly invaded; taken before he is aware; all these meanings the word has in con- nexions similar to this. Strabo, lib. xvi. page 1120, applies it to the rhinoceros, in its contests with the elephant: he suddenly rips up the belly of the elephant, αυ μη προλαβῆν τη προσκομιδι, that he may not be surprised with his trunk. For should the elephant seize him with his trunk first, all resistance would be afterward in vain; there- fore he endeavours to rip up the elephant's belly with the horn which is on his nose, in order to prevent this. It is used also by Arrian in Peri- pl. Mar. Eryth. page 164. and page 168. to signify a vessel being suddenly agitated and whirled by the waves, and then dashed on the rocks. See Kypke.

Ye which are spiritual] Ye who still retain the grace of the Gospel, and have wisdom and experience in Divine things;

Restore such an one] Καταρτιζετε τον ποιουτον; bring the man back into his place; it is a meta- phor taken from a dislocated limb, brought back by the hand of a skilful and tender surgeon, into its place.

In the spirit of meekness] Use no severity nor haughty carriage towards him: as the man was suddenly overtaken, he is already deeply hum- bled and distressed; and needs much encour- agement and lenient usage. There is a great difference between a man, who being suddenly assailed, falls into sin; and the man who trans- gressed in consequence of having walked in the counsel of the UNGODLY, or stood in the way of SINNERS.

Considering thyself] Σκοπον σεαυτον; looking to thyself; as he fell through a moment of un- watchfulness, look about, that thou be not sur- prised: as he fell, so may thou; thou art now warned at his expense; therefore keep a good look out.

Lest thou also be tempted.] And having had this warning, thou wilt have less to plead in ex- tenuation of thy offence. It is no wonder if a harsh and cruel censurer of a weak backsliding brother, should be taught moderation and mercy by an awful proof of his own frailty. Such a one may justly dread the most violent attacks from the arch enemy; he will disgrace him if he can; and if he can overtake him, he will have no small triumph. Consider the possibility of such a case, and show the mercy and feeling which thou wouldest then wish to receive from and so fulfil ^a the law of Christ.

another. From the consideration of what we are, what we have been, or what we may be, we should learn to be compassionate. The poet Mantuanus has set this in a fine light in his Eclogue, De honesto Amore:

Id commune malum; semel insanivimus omnes: Aut sumus, aut fuimus, aut possimus omne quod hic est.

“This is a common evil; at one time or other we have all done wrong. Either we are, or have been, or may be as bad as he whom we condemn.”

Verse 2. Bear ye one another's burdens] Have sympathy: feel for each other; and consider the case of a distressed brother as your own.

And so fulfil the law of Christ.] That law or commandment, Ye shall love one another; or that, Do unto all men as ye would they should do unto you. We should be as indulgent to the infirmities of others, as we can be consistently with truth and righteousness: our brother's in- firmity may be his burden; and if we do not choose to help him to bear it, let us not reproach him because he is obliged to carry the load.

Verse 3. If a man think himself to be some- thing] i. e. to be a proper Christian man; when he is nothing; being destitute of that charity which beareth, helpeth, and endureth all things. See 1 Cor. xiii. 1, &c. Those who suppose themselves to excel all others in piety, understanding, &c. while they are harsh, cen- sorious, and overbearing, prove, that they have not the charity that thinketh no evil; and, in the sight of God, are only as sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. There are no people more censorious or uncharitable than those among some religious people, who pretend to more light and a deeper communion with God. They are generally carried away with a sort of sub- lime high-sounding phraseology, which seems to argue a wonderful deep acquaintance with Di- vine things; stripped of this, many of them are like Samson without his hair.

Verse 4. Prove his own work] Let him ex- amine himself and his conduct by the words and example of Christ; and if he find that they bear this touchstone, then he shall have rejoicing in himself alone, feeling that he resembles his Lord and Master; and not in another; not derive his consolation from comparing himself with another, who may be weaker, or less in- structed than himself. The only rule for a Christian is the words of Christ: the only pat- tern for his imitation, is the example of Christ.

He should not compare himself with others: they are not his standard. Christ hath left us an example, that we should follow his steps.

Verse 5. Every man shall bear his own burden. All must answer for themselves, not for their neighbours. And every man must expect to be dealt with by the Divine Judge, as his character and conduct have been. The greater offences of another will not excuse thy smaller crimes. Every man must give account of himself to God.

Verse 6. Let him that is taught in the word] He who receives instructions in Christianity, by the public preaching of the word:

Communicate unto him that teacheth] Contribute to the support of the man who has dedicated himself to the work of the ministry, and who gives up his time and his life to preach the Gospel. It appears that some of the believers in Galatia could receive the Christian ministry, without contributing to its support. This is both ungrateful and base. We do not expect that a common schoolmaster will give up his time to teach our children their alphabet, without being paid for it; and can we suppose that it is just for any person to sit under the preaching of the Gospel, in order to grow wise unto salvation by it, and not contribute to the support of the spiritual teacher? It is unjust.

Verse 7. Be not deceived] Neither deceive yourselves, nor permit yourselves to be deceived by others. He seems to refer to the Judaizing teachers.

God is not mocked] Ye cannot deceive him, and he will not permit you to mock him with pretended, instead of real services.

Whatsoever a man soweth] Whatsoever kind of grain a man sows in his field, of that shall he reap: for, no other species of grain can proceed from that which is sown. Darnel will not produce wheat, nor wheat, darnel.

Verse 8. He that soweth to his flesh] In like manner, he that sows to the flesh, who indulges his sensual and animal appetites, shall have corruption as the crop: you cannot expect to lead a bad life and go to heaven at last. According as your present life is, so will be your eternal life; whether your sowing be to the flesh or to the Spirit, so will your eternal reaping be. To sow here means transacting the concerns of a man's natural life. To reap, signifies his enjoyment or punishment in another world. Probably by flesh and spirit the apostle means Judaism and Christianity. Circumcision of the flesh was the principal rite of the former: circumcision in the heart, by the Spirit, the chief rite of the latter; hence the one may have been called flesh, the other spirit. He who rejects the Gospel, and trusts only in the rites and ceremonies of the law for salvation, will reap endless disappointment and misery. He who trusts in Christ, and receives the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, shall reap life everlasting.

Verse 9. Let us not be weary] Well-doing is easier in itself than ill-doing; and the danger of growing weary in the former, arises only from the opposition to good, in our own nature; or the outward hindrances we may meet with, from a gainsaying and persecuting world.

In due season we shall reap] As the husbandman, in ploughing, sowing, and variously labouring in his fields, is supported by the hope of a plentiful harvest, which he cannot expect before the right and appointed time; so every follower of God may be persuaded that he shall not be permitted to pray, weep, deny himself, and live in a conformity to his Maker's will, without reaping the fruit of it in eternal glory. And although no man gets glory because he has prayed, &c. yet none can expect glory who do not seek it in this way; this is sowing to the Spirit; and the Spirit and the grace are furnished by Christ Jesus, and by him the kingdom of heaven is opened to all believers: but only those who believe, love, and obey, shall enter into it.

Verse 10. As we have—opportunity] While it is the time of sowing, let us sow the good seed; and let our love be, as the love of Christ is, free, manifested to all. Let us help all who need help, according to the uttermost of our power; but let the first objects of our regards be, those who are of the household of faith—the members of the church of Christ, who form one family, of which Jesus Christ is the head. Those have the first claims on our attention; but all others have their claims also; and therefore we should do good unto all.

apostle's meaning in this place. Some think he refers to the length of the epistle, others to the largeness of the letters in which this epistle is written; others, to the inadequacy of the apostle's writing. It appears plain that most of his epistles were written by an amanuensis, and simply subscribed by himself: but the whole of the epistle to the Galatians was written by his own hand. To say that the apostle was unskilled in Greek, and especially in the Greek characters, is, in my opinion, absurd. He was born in Tarsus, a city which, according to Strabo, rivalled both Athens and Alexandria in philosophy, and in arts and sciences; and therefore he could not be ignorant of a language which must have been the very means of conveying all this instruction. As to writing it, there was in his time nothing difficult, because the uncial character was that which was alone in use in those days; and this character is as easily made as the capitals of the Roman alphabet, which have been taken from it. I conclude, therefore, that what the apostle says, must be understood of the length of the epistle; in all probability the largest he had ever written with his own hand; though several, much larger, have been dictated by him, but they were written by his scribe or amanuensis.

Verse 12. A fair show in the flesh] The Jewish religion was general in the region of Galatia; and it was respectable, as it appears that the principal inhabitants were either Jews or proselytes. As it was then professed and practised among the Jews, this religion had nothing very grievous to the old man; an unrenewed nature might go through all its observances with little pain or cross-bearing. On the other hand, Christianity could not be very popular—it was too strict. A Jew made a fair show there, according to his carnal system; and it was a temptation to a weak Christian to swerve into Judaism, that he might be exempted from persecution, and be creditable among his countrymen. This is what the apostle intimates—"they constrain you to be circumcised, lest they should suffer persecution for the cross of Christ."

Verse 13. Neither they themselves who are circumcised] They receive circumcision, and profess Judaism, not from a desire to be conformed to the will of God; but Judaism was popular, and the more converts the false teachers could make, the more occasion of glorying they had; and they wished to get those Christian converts who had been before proselytes of the gate, to receive circumcision, that they might glory in their flesh. Behold my converts! Thus they gloried, or boasted, not that the people were converted to God; but that they were circumcised.

Verse 14. But God forbid that I should glory] Whatever others may do, or whatever they may exult or glory in, God forbid that I should exult, except in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ; in the grand doctrine, that justification and salvation are only through Christ crucified; he having made an atonement for the sin of the world by his passion and death. And I glory also in the disgrace and persecution which I experience, through my attachment to this crucified Christ.

By whom the world is crucified unto me] Jewish rites and Gentile vanities are equally insipid to me; I know them to be empty and worthless. If Jews and Gentiles despise me; I despise that in which they trust; through Jesus, all are crucified to me; their objects of dependence are as vile and execrable to me, as I am to them, in whose sight these things are of great account.

Verse 15. In Christ Jesus] Under the dispensation of the Gospel, of which he is head and supreme, neither circumcision: nothing that the Jew can boast of, nothing that the Gentile can call excellent, availeth any thing; can in the least contribute to the salvation of the soul.

But a new creature] ἄλλὰ κτῆνος; but a new creation, not a new creature merely, (for this might be restrained to any new power or faculty;) but a total renewal of the whole man; of all the powers and passions of the soul; and as creation could not be effected, but by the power of the Almighty, so this change cannot be effected but by the same energy; no circumcision can do this; only the power that made the man at first, can new make him. See the note on 1 Cor. vii. 19. and on 2 Cor. v. 17.

Verse 16. As many as walk according to this rule] Ἰπὸ κανόνι τούτῳ, this canon, viz. what is laid down in the preceding verses, that redemption is through the sacrifice of Christ; and that circumcision and uncircumcision are equally unavailable; and that none can be saved without being created anew. This is the grand canon or rule in Christianity.

Peace be on them] Those who act from this conviction, will have the peace and mercy of God; for it is in this way that mercy is communicated, and peace obtained.

The Israel of God.] The true Christians; called here the Israel of God, to distinguish them from Israel according to the flesh. See the notes on Rom. ii. 29. and iv. 12.

Verse 17. From henceforth let no man trouble me] Put an end to your contentions among yourselves; return to the pure doctrine of the Gospel; abandon those who are leading you astray; separate from the church those who corrupt and disturb it; and let me be grieved no longer with your defections from the truth.

I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus.] The στυγάρα, stigmata, of which the apostle speaks here, may be understood as implying either the scars of the wounds which he had received in the work of the ministry; and that he had such scars, we may well conceive, when we know that he had been scourged, stoned, and maltreated in a variety of ways. Or, the apostle may allude to the stigmata or marks with which servants and slaves were often impressed, in order to ascertain whose property they were. Do not trouble me; I bear the marks of my Lord and Master, Jesus: I am his, and will remain so. You glory in your mark of circumcision; I glory in the marks which I bear in my body for the testimony of the Lord; I am an open, professed Christian, and have given full proof of my attachment to the cause of Christianity.

The first sense appears to me the best: "I have suffered already sufficiently; I am suffering still; do not add any more to my afflictions."

Verse 18. The grace] Favour, benevolence, and continual influence of the Lord Jesus—be with your spirit: may it live in your heart, enlighten and change your souls, and be conspicuous in your life!

Amen.] So let it be, and the prayer which I offer up for you on earth, may it be registered in heaven!

Unto the Galatians, written from Rome.] This, or the major part of it, is wanting in the best and most ancient MSS. Written from Rome, is wanting in ACDEFG. and others. Claudius Antiochior. has ἠγγραμὴν ἀπὸ Ῥώμης: Written from Ephesus. Some add, by the hands of Paul: others by Titus. The SYRIAC has, The end of the Epistle to the Galatians, which was written from the city of Rome. The ÆTHIOPIC, To the Galatians.—The COPTIC, Written from Rome. The VULGATE, nothing. The ARABIC, Written from the city of Rome by Titus and Luke.

Little respect is to be paid to these subscriptions. The epistle was written by Paul himself, not Titus, Luke, nor Tychicus: and there is no evidence that it was written from Rome, but rather from Corinth or Ephesus. See the Preface, page iii.

The great similarity between the epistle to the Romans and that to the Galatians, has been remarked by many; and indeed it is so obvious, that the same mode of interpretation may be safely pursued in the elucidation of both; as not only the great subject, but the phraseology, in many respects, is the same. The design of the apostle is to show, that God has called the Gentiles to equal privileges with the Jews, pulling down the partition wall that had separated them and the Gentiles, calling all to believe in Christ Jesus; and forming out of the believers of both people, one holy and pure church, of which equally, himself was the head; none of either people having any preference to another, except what he might derive from his personal sanctity and superior usefulness. The calling of the Gentiles to this state of salvation, was the mystery which had been hidden from all ages, and concerning which the apostle has entered into such laborious discussion, in the Epistle to the Romans; justifying the reprobation as well as the election of the Jews; and vindicating both the justice and mercy of God in the election of the Gentiles. The same subjects are referred to in this epistle, but not in that detail of argumentation as in the former. In both, the national privileges of the Jews are a frequent object of consideration: and as these national privileges were intended to point out spiritual advantages, hence the terms which express them are used frequently in both these senses with no change: and it requires an attentive mind, and a proper knowledge of the analogy of faith, to discern when and where they are to be restricted exclusively to one or the other meaning; as well as where the one is intended to shadow forth the other; and where it is used as expressing what they ought to be, according to the spirit and tenor of their original calling.

Multitudes of interpreters of different sects and parties, have strangely mistaken both epistles, by not attending to these most necessary, and to the unprejudiced, most obvious distinctions and principles. Expressions which point out national privileges, have been used by them to point out those which were spiritual; and merely temporal advantages, or disadvantages, have been used in the sense of eternal blessings or miseries. Hence what has been spoken of the Jews in their national capacity, has been applied to the church of God in respect to its future destiny; and thus, out of the temporal election and reprobation of the Jews, the doctrine of the irrelative and eternal election of a small part of mankind, and the unconditional and eternal reprobation of the far greater part of the human race, have been formed. The contentions produced by these misapprehensions among Christians have been uncharitable and destructive. In snatching at the shadow of religion in a great variety of metaphors and figures, the substance of Christianity has been lost: and the man who endeavours to draw the contending parties to a consistent and rational interpretation of those expressions, by showing the grand nature and design of these epistles, becomes a prey to the zealots of both parties! Where is truth in the mean time? It is fallen in the streets; and equity is gone backwards: for, the most sinister designs, and most heterodox opinions, have been attributed to those who, regarding the words of God only, have refused to swim with either torrent; and, without even consulting their own peculiar creed, have sought to find out the meaning of the inspired writers, and with simplicity of heart, and purity of conscience, to lay that meaning before mankind.

The Israelites were denominated a peculiar treasure unto God, above all people; a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation, Exod. xix. 5, 6. A holy people whom he had chosen to be a special people unto himself, above all the people who were upon the face of the earth, Deut. vii. 6. This was their calling, this was their profession: and this was their denomination; but how far they fell practically short of this character, their history most painfully proves. Yet still they were called a holy people, because called to holiness; Levit. xi. 44. xix. 2. xx. 7. and separated from the impure and degrading idolatries of the neighbouring nations. Under the New Testament, all those who believe in Christ Jesus, are called to holiness; to have their fruit unto holiness, that their end may be eternal life; and hence they are called saints or holy persons. And the same epithets are applied to them as to the Israelites of old; they are living stones, built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God through Christ; they are also called a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, that should show forth the praises of him who had called them from darkness into his marvellous light, 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9. All this they were called to; all this was their profession; and to have all these excellencies was their indisputable privilege.

As they professed to be what God had called them to be, hence they are often denominated by their profession; and this denomination is given frequently to those who, in experience and practice, fall far short of the blessings and privileges of the Gospel. The church of Corinth, which was in many respects the most imperfect, as well as the most impure of all the apostolic churches, is nevertheless denominated the church of God, sanctified in Christ Jesus, and called to be saints, 1 Cor. i. 2. That there were many saints in the Corinthian church, and many sanctified in Christ Jesus both in it, and in the churches of Galatia, the slightest perusal of the epistles to those churches, will prove: but that there were many, and in the Galatian churches, the majority of a different character, none can doubt; yet they are all indiscriminately called the churches of God, saints, &c. And, even in those early times, saint appears to have been a general an appellation for a person professing faith in Christ Jesus, as the term Christian is at the present day, which is given to all who profess the Christian religion; and yet these terms, taken in their strict and proper sense, signify a holy person; and one who has the Spirit and mind of Christ.

In my notes on the Epistle to the Romans, I have entered at large into a discussion of the subjects to which I have referred in these observations; and, to set the subject in a clear point of view, I have made a copious extract from Dr. Taylor's key to that epistle; and I have stated, that a consistent exposition of that epistle cannot be given but upon that plan:—I am still of the same opinion; it is by attending to the above distinctions, which are most obvious to all unprejudiced persons, that we plainly see that the doctrines of eternal, unconditional reprobation and election, and the impossibility of falling finally from the grace of God, have no foundation in the epistle to the Romans. Dr. Taylor has shown that the phrases and expressions on which these doctrines are founded, refer to national privileges, and those exclusive advantages which the Jews, as God's peculiar people, enjoyed, during the time in which that peculiarly was designed to last; and that it is doing violence to the sense in which those expressions are generally used, to apply them to the support of such doctrines. In reference to this, I have quoted Dr. Taylor; and those illustrations of his which I have adopted, I have adopted on this ground; taking care never to pledge myself to any of his peculiar or heterodox opinions; and where I thought an expression might be misunderstood, I took care to guard it by a note or observation.

Now, I say that it is in this sense I understand the quotations I have made; and in this sense alone these quotations ought to be understood; and my whole work sufficiently shows that Dr. Taylor's peculiar theological system makes no part of mine; that, on the doctrine of the fall of man, or original sin; the doctrine of the eternal deity of Jesus Christ, the doctrine of justification by faith in the atoning blood, and the doctrine of the inspiration and regenerating influence of the Holy Ghost, we stand on two points of a vast circle, in diametrical opposition to each other. Yet this most distinguishing difference cannot blind me against the excellencies I find in the above work; nor can I meanly borrow from this or any other author, without acknowledging my obligation; nor could I suppress a name, however obnoxious that might be, as associated with any heterodox system, when I could mention it with deference and respect. Let this be my apology for quoting Dr. Taylor; and for the frequent use I have made of his industry and learning in my exposition of the Epistle to the Romans. If I have quoted, to illustrate the Sacred Writings, passages almost innumerable from Greek and Roman heathens; from Jewish talmulists and Rabbinical expositors; from the Korán; from Mohammelian writers, both Arabic and Persian; and from Brahminical Polytheists; and these illustrations have been well received by the Christian public; surely I may have liberty to use, in the same way, the works of a very learned man, and a most conscientious believer in the books of Divine revelation, however erroneous he may appear to be in certain doctrines which I myself deem of vital importance to the creed of an experimental Christian. Let it not be said that, by thus largely quoting his work, I tacitly recommend an Arian creed; or any part of that system of theology peculiar to him and his party; I no more do so, than the Indian matron, who, while she gives the nourishing farina of the Casava to her household, recommends them to drink the poisonous juice which she has previously expressed from it.

After this declaration, it will be as disingenuous as unchristian for either friends or foes to attribute to me opinions which I never held; or an indifference to those doctrines, which, (I speak as a fool) stand in no work of the kind, in any language, so fully explained, fortified, and demonstrated, as they do in that before the reader. On such a mode of judgment and condemnation as that to which some resort in matters of this kind, I might have long ago been reputed a Pagan or a Mohammedan, because I have quoted heathen writers, and the Korân. And, by the same mode of argumentation, St. Paul might be convicted of having abandoned his Jewish creed and Christian faith, because he had quoted the heathen poets Aratus and Cleantes. The man is entitled to my pity who refuses to take advantage of useful discoveries in the philosophical researches of Dr. Priestly, because Dr. Priestly, as a theologian was not sound in the faith.

I have made that use of Dr. Taylor which I have done of others: and have reason to thank God that his Key, passing through several wards of a lock, which appeared to me inextricable, has enabled me to bring forth and exhibit, in a fair and luminous point of view, objects and meanings in the Epistle to the Romans, which, without this assistance, I had perhaps been unable to discover.

I may add further, that I have made that use of Dr. Taylor, which himself has recommended to his readers: some of his censors will, perhaps, scarcely believe that the four following articles constitute the charge with which this learned man commences his theological lectures:—

I.—“ I do solemnly charge you, in the name of the God of truth, and of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is the way, the truth, and the life; and before whose judgment seat you must, in no long time, appear; that in all your studies and inquiries of a religious nature, present or future, you do constantly, carefully, impartially, and conscientiously attend to evidence as it lies in the Holy Scriptures, or in the nature of things, and the dictates of reason: cautiously guarding against the sallies of imagination, and the fallacy of ill-grounded conjecture.

II.—“ That you admit, embrace, or assent to no principle or sentiment by me taught or advanced, but only so far as it shall appear to you to be justified by proper evidence from revelation, or the reason of things.

III.—“ That if, at any time hereafter, any principle or sentiment by me taught or advanced, or by you admitted and embraced, shall, upon impartial and faithful examination, appear to you to be dubious or false, you either suspect, or totally reject, such principle or sentiment.

IV.—“ That you keep your mind always open to evidence; that you labour to banish from your breast all prejudice, prepossession, and party zeal; that you study to live in peace and love with all your fellow-Christians: and that you steadily assert for yourself, and freely allow to others, the unalienable rights of judgment and conscience.”

Taylor's Scheme of Scripture Divinity,

Thus I have done with Dr. Taylor's works; and thus I desire every intelligent reader to do with my own.

When I was a child, I had for a lesson, the following words: Despise not advice even of the meanest; the cackling of geese once preserved the Roman state; and, since I became a man, I have learned wisdom from that saying, Blessed are ye who sow beside ALL WATERS; that send forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass. May he who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, lead the reader into all truth, and bring him to life everlasting. Amen.

END OF THE EPISTLE TO THE GALATIANS.

INTRODUCTION

TO

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

EPHESIANS.

IN many points of view the Epistle to the Ephesians presents a variety of difficulties. A learned man calls it "the most inartificial piece of composition in the universe." This is not correct, if it be intended to convey a censure on the composition itself; for the subject, (which is a vindication of the Providence and mercy of God, in admitting the Gentiles into his church, and forming one flock of them and the converted Jews, giving them the same privileges, which his peculiar people had enjoyed almost exclusively for 2000 years,) has led the apostle to make such a variety of references to the Mosaic economy and its peculiarities, as, without this consideration, will make many parts of the epistle seem obscure to most readers; and this obscurity may be very improperly laid to the charge of inartificial composition: good judges, however, have allowed it to be one of the most sublime compositions of the kind, that ever came from the pen of man: this was the opinion of Grotius.

The subject in this, and the Epistle to the Colossians, is certainly the same: and, as it is supposed that they were written about the same time, it is natural to expect a similarity of expression. This subject, and others connected with these epistles, Dr. Paley has discussed with his usual sagacity; the substance of whose reasonings I beg leave to present to the reader.

SECTION I.

This epistle, and the Epistle to the Colossians, appear to have been transmitted to their respective churches by the same messenger: "But that ye also may know my affairs, and how I do, Tychicus, a beloved brother and faithful minister in the Lord, shall make known to you all things: whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that ye might know our affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts."—Ephes. chap. vi. 21, 22. This text, if it do not expressly declare, clearly (I think) intimates, that the letter was sent by Tychicus. The words made use of in the Epistle to the Colossians are very similar to these, and afford the same implication that Tychicus, in conjunction with Onesimus, was the bearer of the letter to that church: "All my state shall Tychicus declare unto you, who is a beloved brother, and a faithful minister, and fellow-servant in the Lord; whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate, and comfort your hearts; with Onesimus, a faithful and beloved brother, who is one of you. They shall make known unto you all things which are done here."—Colos. chap. iv. 7—9. Both epistles represent the writer as under imprisonment for the Gospel; and both treat of the same general subject. The epistle, therefore, to the Ephesians, and the Epistle to the Colossians, import to be two letters written by the same person, at, or nearly at, the same time, and upon the same subject, and to have been sent by the same messenger. Now, every thing in the sentiments, order, and diction of the two writings, corresponds with what might be expected from this circumstance of identity or cognation in their original. The leading doctrine of both epistles is the union of Jews and Gentiles under the Christian dispensation; and that doctrine in both is established by the same arguments, or, more properly speaking, illustrated by the same similitudes: "one head," "one body," "one new man," "one temple," are, in both epistles, the figures under which the society of believers in Christ, and their common relation to him as such, is represented. The ancient, and, as had been thought, the indelible distinction between Jew and Gentile, in both epistles, is declared to be "now abolished by his cross." Beside this consent in the general tenor of the two epistles, and in the run also and warmth of thought with which they are composed, we may naturally expect in letters produced under the circumstances in which these appear to have been written, a closer resemblance of style and diction, than between other letters of the same person, but of distant dates, or between letters adapted to different occasions. In particular, we may look for many of the same expressions, and sometimes for whole sentences being alike; since such expressions and sentences would be repeated in the second letter (whichever that was) as yet fresh in the author's mind, from the writing of the first. This repetition occurs in the following examples:

Ephes. ch. i. 7.—“In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins.”

Colos. ch. i. 14.—“In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins.”

Besides the sameness of the words, it is further remarkable that the sentence is, in both places, preceded by the same introductory idea. In the Epistle to the Ephesians, it is the “beloved” (ἀγαπητός); in that to the Colossians it is “his dear Son,” (ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀγάπης αὐτοῦ), the Son of his love, “in whom we have redemption.” The sentence appears to have been suggested to the mind of the writer, by the idea which had accompanied it before.

Ephes. ch. i. 10.—“All things, both which are in heaven and which are in earth, even in him.”

Colos. ch. i. 20.—“All things by him, whether they be things in earth, or things in heaven.”

This quotation is the more observable, because the connecting of things in earth with things in heaven, is a very singular sentiment, and found nowhere else but in these two epistles. The words are also introduced and followed by a train of thought nearly alike. They are introduced by describing the union which Christ had effected; and they are followed by telling the Gentile churches that they were incorporated into it.

Ephes. ch. iii. 2.—“The dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you-ward.”

Colos. ch. i. 25.—“The dispensation of God, which is given to me for you.”

Of these sentences it may likewise be observed, that the accompanying ideas are similar. In both places they are immediately preceded by the mention of his present sufferings; in both places they are immediately followed by the mention of the mystery which was the great subject of his preaching.

Ephes. ch. v. 19.—“In Psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord.”

Colos. ch. iii. 16.—“In psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.”

Ephes. ch. vi. 22.—“Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that ye might know our affairs, and that he might comfort your hearts.”

Colos. ch. iv. 8.—“Whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate, and comfort your hearts.”

In these examples we do not perceive a cento of phrases gathered from one composition, and strung together in the other; but the occasional occurrence of the same expression to a mind a second time revolving the same ideas.

2. Whoever writes two letters, or two discourses, nearly upon the same subject, and at no great distance of time, but without any express recollection of what he had written before, will find himself repeating some sentences, in the very order of the words in which he had already used them: but he will more frequently find himself employing some principal terms, with the order inadvertently changed, or with the order disturbed by the intermixture of other words and phrases expressive of ideas rising up at the time; or in many instances, repeating not single words, nor yet whole sentences, but parts and fragments of sentences. Of all these varieties, the examination of these two epistles will furnish plain examples: and I should rely upon this class of instances more than upon the last; because, although an impostor might transcribe into a forgery entire sentences and phrases; yet the dislocation of words, the partial recollection of phrases and sentences, the intermixture of new terms and new ideas with terms and ideas before used, which will appear in the examples that follow, and which are the natural properties of writings produced under the circumstances in which these epistles are represented to have been composed, would not, I think, have occurred to the invention of a forger; nor, if they had occurred, would they have been so easily executed. This studied variation was a refinement in forgery which I believe did not exist; or, if we can suppose it to have been practised in the instances adduced below, why, it may be asked, was not the same art exercised upon those which were collected in the preceding class?

Ephes. ch. i. 19. ch. ii. 5.—“Towards us who believe according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead (and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but in that which is to come. And hath put all things under his feet: and gave him to be the head over all things, to the church, which is his body, the fulness of all things, that filleth all in all;) and you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins (wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience; among whom also we had all our conversation, in times past, in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others. But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewithal he loved us,) even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ.”

Colos. ch. ii. 12, 13.—“Through the faith of the operation of God, who hath raised him from the dead, and you being dead in your sins and the uncircumcision of the flesh, hath he quickened together with him.”

Out of the long quotation from the Ephesians, take away the parentheses, and you have left a sentence almost in terms the same as the short quotation from the Colossians. The resemblance is more visible in the original than in our translation; for what is rendered in one place “the working,” and in another the “operation,” is the same Greek term, ἐργασία: in one place it is, τῶν ἐργασιῶν.

EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

ἵνα: κατα τὴν ψυχάν; in the other, διὰ τῆς πίστειος τῆς ψυχῆς. Here, therefore, we have the same sentiment, and nearly in the same words; but, in the Ephesians, twice broken or interrupted by incidental thoughts, which St. Paul, as his manner was, enlarges upon by the way, and then returns to the thread of his discourse. It is interrupted the first time by a view which breaks in upon his mind of the exaltation of Christ; and the second time by a description of heathen depravity. I have only to remark, that Griesbach, in his very accurate edition, gives the parentheses very nearly in the same manner in which they are here placed; and that without any respect to the comparison which we are proposing.

Ephes. ch. iv. 2—4.—“With all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit, in the bond of peace. There is one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling.”

Colos. ch. iii. 12—15.—“Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another and forgiving one another; if any man have a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye; and, above all these things, put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness; and let the peace of God rule in your hearts, to the which also ye are called in one body.”

In these two quotations, the words ταπεινότητα, πραῖτης, μακροθυμία, ἀνεχόμενοι ἀλλήλων, lowliness, meekness, long-suffering, forbearing one another, occur in exactly the same order; ἀγάπη, love, is also found in both, but in a different connexion; σύνδημος τῆς ἡμετέρας, the bond of peace, answers to σύνδημος τῆς τελειότητος, the bond of perfectness: ἐκλήθητε ἐν ἑνὶ σωματι, called into one spirit, to ἓν σῶμα καθὼς καὶ ἐκλήθητε ἐν μιᾷ ἐλπίδι, one body, even as ye are called into one hope; yet is this similitude found in the midst of sentences otherwise very different.

Ephes. ch. iv. 16.—“From whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body.”

Colos. ch. ii. 19.—“From which all the body by joints and bands, having nourishment ministered and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God.”

In these quotations are read ἐξ οὗ παρὰ τὸ σῶμα συμβέβηκεν, from whom the whole body fitly joined together, in both places: ἐπιχορηγούμενοι answering to ἐπιχορηγίας: διὰ τῶν ἄφρων τοῦ σώματος: αὐτῶν τῶν ἀφῶν τοῦ σώματος τοῦ σώματος τῶν ἀφῶν; and yet the sentences are considerably diversified in other parts.

Ephes. ch. iv. 32.—“And be kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God, for Christ’s sake, hath forgiven you.”

Colos. ch. iii. 13.—“Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another: if any man have a quarrel against any, even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye.”

Here we have “forgiving one another, even as God, for Christ’s sake, (ἢ Χριστοῦ) hath forgiven you,” in the first quotation, substantially repeated in the second. But in the second sentence is broken by the interposition of a new clause, “if any man have a quarrel against any;” and the latter part is a little varied; instead of “God in Christ,” it is “Christ hath forgiven you.”

Ephes. ch. iv. 22—24.—“That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, and be renewed in the spirit of your mind: and that ye put on the new man, which, after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness.”

Colos. ch. iii. 9, 10.—“Seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds, and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge, after the image of him that created him.”

In these quotations, “putting off the old man, and putting on the new,” appears in both. The idea is further explained by calling it a renewal; in the one, “renewed in the spirit of your mind,” in the other, “renewed in knowledge.” In both, the new man is said to be formed according to the same model: in the one, he is “after God created in righteousness and true holiness;” in the other, “he is renewed after the image of him who created him.” In a word it is the same person writing upon a kindred subject, with the terms and ideas which he had before employed, still floating in his memory.

In these comparisons, we often perceive the reasons, why the writer, though expressing the same idea, uses a different term: namely, because the term before used is employed in the sentence under a different form: thus, in the quotations under our eye, the new man is καινός ἀνθρώπος in the Ephesians, and τὸν καινόν in the Colossians; but then it is because τὸν καινόν is used in the next word, ἀνακαινούμενοι, being renewed.

Ephes. chap. v. 6—8.—“Because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience: be not ye therefore partakers with them; for ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light.”

Colos. ch. iii. 6—8.—“For which things’ sake the wrath of God cometh on the children of disobedience; in the which ye also walked some time, when ye lived in them. But now ye also put off all these.”

These verses afford a specimen of that partial resemblance which is only to be met with when no imitation is designed, when no studied recollection is employed; but when the mind, exercised upon the same subject, is left to the spontaneous return of such terms and phrases, as, having been used before, may happen to present themselves again. The sentiment of both passages is throughout alike: half of that sentiment, the denunciation of God’s wrath, is expressed in identical words; the other half, viz. the admonition to quit their former conversation, in words entirely different.

Ephes. ch. v. 15, 16.—“See then that ye walk circumspectly; not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time.”

Colos. ch. iv. 5.—“Walk in wisdom towards them that are without, redeeming the time.”

INTRODUCTION TO THE

This is another example of that mixture which we remarked of sameness and variety in the language of one writer. "Redeeming the time" (ἐξαγοράζομεν τοὺς καιροὺς,) is a literal repetition. "Walk not as fools, but as wise" (περιπατοῦτε μὴ ὡς ἄσοφοι ἀλλ' ὡς σοφοί,) answers exactly in sense, and nearly in terms, to "walk in wisdom," (ἡ σοφία περιπατοῦτε.) Περιπατοῦτε ἀκριβῶς, is a very different phrase, but is intended to convey precisely the same idea as περιπατοῦτε πρὸς τοὺς ἔθους. Ακριβῶς, is not well rendered "circumspectly." It means what in modern speech we should call "correctly;" and when we advise a person to behave "correctly," our advice is always given with a reference "to the opinion of others," πρὸς τοὺς ἔθους. "Walk correctly, redeeming the time," i. e. suiting yourselves to the difficulty and ticklishness of the times in which we live, "because the days are evil."

Ephes. ch. vi. 19, 20.—"And (praying) for me, that utterance may be given unto me, that I may open my mouth boldly to make known the mystery of the Gospel, for which I am an ambassador in bonds, that therein I may speak boldly, as I ought to speak."

Colos. ch. iv. 3, 4.—"Withal praying also for us that God would open unto us a door of utterance to speak the mystery of Christ, for which I am also in bonds, that I may make it manifest as I ought to speak."

In these quotations, the phrase, "as I ought to speak" (ὡς δεῖ με λαλοῦσαι, the words "utterance" (λόγος) "a mystery" (μυστήριον) "open" (ἀνοίξῃ and ἡ ἀνοίξις,) are the same. "To make known the mystery of the Gospel" (ἡ ἀνοίξις τοῦ μυστηρίου,) answers to "make it manifest" (ἵνα φαίνηται αὐτοῖς;) "for which I am an ambassador in bonds" (ὅσπερ ὁ ἀποστόλος ἐν ἀλύσει,) for "to which I am also in bonds" δι' ὃ καὶ δεδύμαι.)

Ephes. ch. v. 22.—"Wives submit yourselves to your own husbands, as unto the Lord, for the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church, and he is the Saviour of the body. Therefore, as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in every thing. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the church, and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word; that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish. So ought men to love their wives as their own bodies. He that loveth his wife, loveth himself; for no man ever yet hated his own flesh, but nourisheth and cherisheth it, even as the Lord the church; for we are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones. For this cause shall a man leave his father and his mother, and be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one flesh. This is a great mystery; but I speak concerning Christ and the church. Nevertheless, let every one of you in particular so love his wife even as himself: and the wife see that she reverence her husband. Children obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right. Honour thy father and thy mother (which is the first commandment with promise,) that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on the earth. And ye, fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ; not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart; with good-will doing service, as to the Lord, and not to men; knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth, the same shall he receive of the Lord, whether he be bond or free. And ye, masters, do the same things unto them, forbearing threatening: knowing that your Master also is in heaven, neither is there respect of persons with him."

Colos. ch. iii. 18.—"Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord. Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them. Children, obey your parents in all things, for this is well pleasing unto the Lord. Fathers, provoke not your children to anger, lest they be discouraged. Servants, obey in all things your masters according to the flesh: not with eye-service, as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart, fearing God; and whatever ye do, do it heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men, knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance; for ye serve the Lord Christ. But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done; and there is no respect of persons. Masters, give unto your servants that which is just and equal, knowing that ye also have a Master in heaven."

The passages marked by Italics in the quotation from the Ephesians, bear a strict resemblance, not only in signification but in terms, to the quotation from the Colossians. Both the words, and the order of the words, are in many clauses a duplicate of one another. In the Epistle to the Colossians, these passages are laid together; in that to the Ephesians, they are divided by intermediate matter, especially by a long digressive allusion to the mysterious union between Christ and his church; which possessing, as Mr. Locke hath well observed, the mind of the apostle, from being an incidental thought, grows up into the principal subject. The affinity between these two passages in signification, in terms, and in the order of the words, is closer than can be pointed out between any parts of any two epistles in the volume.

If the reader would see how the same subject is treated by a different hand, and how distinguishable it is from the production of the same pen, let him turn to the second and third chapters of the First Epistle of St. Peter. The duties of servants, of wives, and of husbands, are enlarged upon in that epistle, as they are in the Epistle to the Ephesians; but the subjects both occur in a different order, and the train of sentiment subjoined to each is totally unlike.

3. In two letters issuing from the same person, nearly at the same time, and upon the same general occasion, we may expect to trace the influence of association in the order in which the topics follow one another. Certain ideas universally or usually suggest others. Here the order is what we call natural, and from such an order nothing can be concluded. But when the order is arbitrary, yet alike, the concurrence indicates the effect of that principle, by which ideas, which have been once joined, commonly revisit the thoughts together. The epistles under consideration furnish the two following remarkable instances of this species of agreement.

Ephes. ch. iv. 24.—“And that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness; wherefore putting away lying, speak every man truth with his neighbour, for we are members one of another.”

Colos. ch. iii. 9.—“Lie not one to another; seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge.”

The vice of “lying,” or a correction of that vice, does not seem to bear any nearer relation to the “putting on the new man,” than a reformation in any other article of morals. Yet these two ideas we see stand in both epistles in immediate connexion.

Ephes. ch. v. 20, 21, 22.—“Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ; submitting yourselves one to another, in the fear of God. Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as unto the Lord.”

Colos. ch. iii. 17.—“Whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him. Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord.”

In both these passages, submission follows giving of thanks, without any similitude in the ideas which should account for the transition.

It is not necessary to pursue the comparison between the two epistles further. The argument which results from it stands thus: No two other epistles contain a circumstance which indicates that they were written at the same, or nearly at the same time. No two other epistles exhibit so many marks of correspondency and resemblance. If the original which we ascribe to these two epistles be the true one, that is, if they were both really written by St. Paul, and both sent to their respective destination by the same messenger, the similitude is, in all points, what should be expected to take place. If they were forgeries, then the mention of Tychicus in both epistles, and in a manner which shows that he either carried or accompanied both epistles, was inserted for the purpose of accounting for their similitude: or else the structure of the epistles was designedly adapted to the circumstance: or, lastly, the conformity between the contents of the forgeries, and what is thus directly intimated concerning their date, was only a happy accident. Not one of these three suppositions will gain credit with a reader who peruses the epistles with attention, and who reviews the several examples we have pointed out, and the observations with which they were accompanied.

SECTION II.

There is such a thing as a peculiar word or phrase cleaving, as it were, to the memory of a writer or speaker, and presenting itself to his utterance at every turn. When we observe this, we call it a cant word, or a cant phrase. It is a natural effect of habit: and would appear more frequently than it does, had not the rules of good writing taught the ear to be offended with the iteration of the same sound, and oftentimes caused us to reject, on that account, the word which offered itself first to our recollection. With a writer who, like St. Paul, either knew not these rules, or disregarded them, such words will not be avoided. The truth is, an example of this kind runs through several of his epistles, and in the epistle before us abounds; and that is in the word riches, (πλουσιαι) used metaphorically as an augmentative of the idea to which it happens to be subjoined. Thus, “the riches of his glory,” “his riches in glory,” “riches of the glory of his inheritance,” “riches of the glory of this mystery,” Rom. ch. ix. 23. Ephes. ch. iii. 16. Ephes. ch. i. 18. Colos. ch. i. 27; “riches of his grace,” twice in the Ephesians, ch. i. 7. and ch. ii. 7; “riches of the full assurance of understanding,” Colos. ch. ii. 2; “riches of his goodness,” Rom. ch. ii. 4; “riches of the wisdom of God,” Rom. ch. xi. 33; “riches of Christ,” Ephes. ch. iii. 8. In a like sense the adjective, Rom. ch. x. 12, “rich unto all that call upon him;” Ephes. ch. ii. 4. “rich in mercy;” 1 Tim. ch. vi. 18, “rich in good works.” Also the adverb, Colos. ch. iii. 16. “let the word of Christ dwell in you richly.” This figurative use of the word, though so familiar to St. Paul, does not occur in any part of the New Testament, except once in the Epistle of St. James, ch. ii. 5. “Hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith?” where it is manifestly suggested by the antithesis. I propose the frequent, yet seemingly unaffected use of this phrase, in the epistle before us, as one internal mark of its genuineness.

SECTION III.

There is another singularity in St. Paul's style, which, wherever it is found, may be deemed a badge of authenticity; because if it were noticed, it would not, I think, be imitated, inasmuch as it almost always produces embarrassment and interruption in the reasoning. This singularity is a species of digression which may probably, I think, be denominated going off at a word. It is turning aside from the subject upon the concurrence of some particular word, forsaking the train of thought then in hand, and entering upon a parenthetical sentence in which that word is the prevailing term. I shall lay before the reader some examples of this, collected from the other epistles, and then propose two examples of it which are found in the Epistle to the Ephesians. 2 Cor. ch. ii. 14, at the word savour: “Now thanks be unto God, which always causeth us to triumph in Christ, and maketh manifest the savour of his knowledge by us in every place (for we are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish; to the one we are the savour of death unto death, and to the other the savour of life unto life; and who is sufficient for these things?) For we are not as many which corrupt the word of God, but as of sincerity, but as of God; in the sight of God speak we in Christ.” Again, 2 Cor. ch. iii. 1. at the word epistle.

INTRODUCTION TO, &c.

“Need we, as some others, epistles of commendation to you, or of commendation from you? (ye are our epistle written in our hearts, known and read of all men; forasmuch as ye are manifestly declared to be the epistle of Christ, ministered by us, written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God; not in tables of stone, but in the fleshy tables of the heart.)” The position of the words in the original, shows more strongly than in the translation, that it was the occurrence of the word επιστολη which gave birth to the sentence that follows: 2 Cor. ch. iii. 1. Εἰ μὴ χροζιζμον, ἄς τινος, συστατικοῦ ἐπιστολῆς πρὸς ὑμᾶς, ἢ ἐξ ὑμῶν συστατικῆς; ἡ ἐπιστολὴ ἡμῶν ὑμῶς ἐστὶ, ὑγγογραμμένη ἢ τῆς καρδίας ἡμῶν, ἡπιστοκομῆν καὶ ἀναγινωσκομῆν ὑπο πάντων ἀνθρώπων· φατηρομένοι ὅτι ἐστὶ ἐπιστολὴ Χριστοῦ διακοινηθεῖσα ὑπ’ ἡμῶν, ὑγγογραμμένη ἢ μελλῶν, ἀλλὰ πνευματὶ Θεοῦ ζῶντος· κε ἢ πλαξὶ λίθου, ἀλλ’ ἢ πλαξὶ καρδίας σαρκῆσαι.

Again, 2 Cor. ch. iii. 12, &c. at the word veil: “Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech: and not as Moses, which put a veil over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which is abolished. But their minds were blinded; for until this day remaineth the same veil untaken away in the reading of the Old Testament, which veil is done away in Christ; but even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart: nevertheless, when it shall turn to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away (now the Lord is that Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.) But we all with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord. Therefore, seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not.”

Who sees not that this whole allegory of the veil arises entirely out of the occurrence of the word, in telling us that “Moses put a veil over his face,” and that it drew the apostle away from the proper subject of his discourse, the dignity of the office in which he was engaged? which subject he fetches up again almost in the words with which he had left it: “therefore, seeing we have this ministry, as we have received mercy, we faint not.” The sentence which he had before been going on with, and in which he had been interrupted by the veil, was, “Seeing then that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech.”

In the Epistle to the Ephesians, the reader will remark two instances in which the same habit of composition obtains; he will recognize the same pen. One he will find, chap. iv. 8—11, at the word ascended: “Wherefore he saith, When he ascended up on high, he led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. (Now that he ascended, what is it but that he also descended first unto the lower parts of the earth? He that descended is the same also that ascended up far above all heavens, that he might fill all things.) And he gave some apostles,” &c.

The other appears, chap. v. 12—15, at the word light: “For it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret: but all things that are reprovèd are made manifest by the light; (for whatsoever doth make manifest, is light; wherefore he saith, Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light;) see then that ye walk circumspectly.”

SECTION IV.

As our epistle purports to have been written during St. Paul’s imprisonment at Rome, which lies beyond the period to which the Acts of the Apostles brings up his history; and as we have seen and acknowledged that the epistle contains no reference to any transaction at Ephesus during the apostle’s residence in that city, we cannot expect that it should supply many marks of agreement with the narrative. One coincidence, however, occurs, and a coincidence of that minute and less obvious kind, which, as hath been repeatedly observed, is of all others the most to be relied upon.

Chap. vi. 19, 20. we read, “praying for me, that I may open my mouth boldly, to make known the mystery of the Gospel, for which I am an ambassador in bonds.” “In bonds,” ἢ ἄλωσι, in a chain. In the twenty-eighth chapter of the Acts we are informed, that Raul, after his arrival at Rome, was suffered to dwell by himself with a soldier that kept him. Dr. Lardner has shown that this mode of custody was in use amongst the Romans, and that whenever it was adopted, the prisoner was bound to the soldier by a single chain: in reference to which St. Paul, in the twentieth verse of this chapter, tells the Jews, whom he had assembled, “For this cause, therefore, have I called for you to see you, and speak with you, because that for the hope of Israel, I am bound with this chain,” τῆς ἄλωσις ταύτης περιμμημαι. It is in exact conformity therefore with the truth of St. Paul’s situation at the time, that he declares of himself in the epistle, πρὸς Κοινὴν ἢ ἄλωσι. And the exactness is the more remarkable, as ἄλωσι (a chain) is no where used in the singular number to express any other kind of custody. When the prisoner’s hands or feet were bound together, the word was δεσμοί (bonds) Acts xxvi. 29. When the prisoner was confined between two soldiers, as in the case of Peter, Acts, chap. xii. 6, two chains were employed: and it is said, upon his miraculous deliverance, that the “chains” (ἄλωσις, in the plural,) “fell from his hands.”

If it can be suspected that the writer of the present epistle, who in no other particular appears to have availed himself of the information concerning St. Paul delivered in the Acts, had, in this verse, borrowed the word which he read in that book, and had adapted his expression to what he found there recorded of St. Paul’s treatment at Rome: in short, that the coincidence here noted was effected by craft and design: I think it a strong reply to remark, that in the parallel passage of the Epistle to the Colossians, the same allusion is not preserved; the words there are, “praying also for us, that God would open unto us a door of utterance to speak the mystery of Christ, of which I am also in bonds,” δι’ ἡ καὶ δεσμῶμαι. After what has been shown in a preceding section, there can be little doubt that these two epistles were written by the same person.

PREFACE

TO

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

EPHESIANS.

EPHESUS was a city of Ionia, in Asia Minor, and once the metropolis of that part of the world. The ancient city was situated at the mouth of the river Cayster, on the shore of the Egean Sea, about 50 miles south of Smyrna. The Ephesus in which St. Paul founded a church, and which for a time flourished gloriously, was not the ancient Ephesus, for that was destroyed, and a new city of the same name was built by Lysimachus.

This most famous of all the Asiatic cities, is now a miserable village, composed of mean huts, formed out of the ruins of its once magnificent structures, and these huts are now the residence of about 40 or 50 Turkish families, without a single Christian among them! For other particulars see the note on Acts xviii. 19.

It is, however, a doubt with many learned men, whether this epistle was sent to the church at Ephesus. They think that the proper direction is, the epistle of St. Paul to the Laodiceans; and suppose it to be the same which the apostle mentions, Colos. iv. 16. When this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans; and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea. Dr. Paley's arguments in the affirmative are entitled to much regard.

“Although it does not appear to have ever been disputed that the epistle before us was written by St. Paul; yet it is well known that a doubt has long been entertained concerning the persons to whom it was addressed. The question is founded partly in some ambiguity in the external evidence. Marcion, a heretic of the second century, as quoted by Tertullian, a father in the beginning of the third, calls it the epistle to the Laodiceans. From what we know of Marcion, his judgment is little to be relied upon; nor is it perfectly clear that Marcion was rightly understood by Tertullian. If, however, Marcion be brought to prove that some copies in his time gave to Laodicea in the superscription, his testimony, if it be truly interpreted, is not diminished by his heresy; for, as Grotius observes, ‘cur in eâ re mentiretur nihil erat causa.’ The name of Ephesus, in Ephesus, in the first verse, upon which word singly depends the proof that the epistle was written to the Ephesians, is not read in all the manuscripts now extant. I admit, however, that the external evidence preponderates with a manifest excess on the side of the received reading. The objection therefore principally arises from the contents of the epistle itself, which, in many respects, militate with the supposition that it was written to the church of Ephesus. According to the history, St. Paul had passed two whole years at Ephesus, Acts, chap. xix. 10. And in this point, viz. of St. Paul having preached for a considerable length of time at Ephesus, the history is confirmed by the two Epistles to the Corinthians, and by the two Epistles to Timothy. ‘I will tarry at Ephesus until Pentecost,’ 1 Cor. ch. xvi. ver. 8. ‘We would not have you ignorant of our trouble which came to us in Asia,’ 2 Cor. ch. i. 8. ‘As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia,’ 1 Tim. ch. i. 3. ‘And in how many things he ministered to me at Ephesus thou knowest well,’ 2 Tim. ch. i. 18. I adduce these testimonies, because, had it been a competition of credit between the history and the epistle, I should have thought myself bound to have preferred the epistle. Now, every epistle which St. Paul wrote to churches which he himself had founded, or which he had visited, abounds with references and appeals to what had passed during the time that he was present amongst them; whereas there is not a text in the Epistle to the Ephesians, from which we can collect that he had ever been at Ephesus at all. The two Epistles to the Corinthians, the Epistle to the Galatians, the Epistle to the Philippians, and the two Epistles to the Thessalonians, are of this class; and they are full of allusions to the apostle's history, his reception, and his conduct whilst amongst them; the total want of which, in the epistle before us, is very difficult to account for, if it was in truth written to the church of Ephesus, in which city he had resided for a long time. This is the first and strongest objection. But further, the Epistle to the Colossians was addressed to a church in which St. Paul had never been. This we infer from the first verse of the second chapter: 'For I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh.' There could be no propriety in thus joining the Colossians and Laodiceans with those 'who had not seen his face in the flesh,' if they did not also belong to the same description. Now his address to the Colossians, whom he had not visited, is precisely the same as his address to the Christians, to whom he wrote in the epistle which we are now considering: 'We give thanks to God and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, praying always for you, since we heard of your faith in Christ Jesus, and of the love which ye have to all the saints,' Col. ch. i. 3. Thus he speaks to the Colossians, in the epistle before us, as follows: 'Wherefore I also, after I heard of your faith in the Lord Jesus, and love unto all the saints, cease not to give thanks for you in my prayers,' chap. i. 15. The terms of this address are observable. The words 'having heard of your faith and love,' are the very words, we see, which he uses towards strangers; and it is not probable that he should employ the same in accosting a church in which he had long exercised his ministry, and whose 'faith and love' he must have personally known. The Epistle to the Romans was written before St. Paul had been at Rome; and his address to them runs in the same strain with that just now quoted: 'I thank my God through Jesus Christ, for you all, that your faith is spoken of throughout the whole world;' Rom. ch. i. 8. Let us now see what was the form in which our apostle was accustomed to introduce his epistles, when he wrote to those with whom he was already acquainted. To the Corinthians it was this: 'I thank my God always on your behalf, for the grace of God which is given you by Christ Jesus,' 1 Cor. ch. i. 4. To the Philippians: 'I thank my God upon every remembrance of you, Phil. ch. i. 3. To the Thessalonians: 'We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers, remembering without ceasing your work of faith and labour of love,' 1 Thess. ch. i. 3. To Timothy: 'I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers with a pure conscience, that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day,' 2 Tim. ch. i. 3. In these quotations, it is usually his remembrance, and never his hearing of them which he makes the subject of his thankfulness to God.

"As great difficulties stand in the way, supposing the epistle before us to have been written to the church of Ephesus; so I think it probable that it is actually the epistle to the Laodiceans, referred to in the fourth chapter of the epistle to the Colossians. The text which contains that reference is this: 'When this epistle is read among you, cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans, and that ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea,' ch. iv. 16. The 'epistle from Laodicea' was an epistle sent by St. Paul to that church, and by them transmitted to Colosse. The two churches were mutually to communicate the epistles they had received. This is the way in which the direction is explained by the greater part of commentators, and is the most probable sense that can be given to it. It is also probable that the epistle alluded to was an epistle which had been received by the church of Laodicea *late*ly. It appears then, with a considerable degree of evidence, that there existed an epistle of St. Paul nearly of the same date with the Epistle to the Colossians, and an epistle directed to a church (for such the church of Laodicea was) in which St. Paul had never been. What has been observed concerning the epistle before us, shows that it answers perfectly to that character.

"Nor does the mistake seem very difficult to account for. Whoever inspects the map of Asia Minor will see, that a person proceeding from Rome to Laodicea, would probably land at Ephesus, as the nearest frequented sea-port in that direction. Might not Tychicus then, in passing through Ephesus, communicate to the Christians of that place the letter with which he was charged? And might not copies of that letter be multiplied and preserved at Ephesus? Might not some of the copies drop the words of designation επι της Λαοδικειας, which it was of no consequence to an Ephesian to retain? Might not copies of the letter come out into the Christian church at large from Ephesus; and might not this give occasion to a belief that the letter was written to that church? And, lastly, might not this belief produce the error which we suppose to have crept into the inscription?

"And it is remarkable that there seem to have been some ancient copies without the words of designation, either the words in Ephesus, or the words in Laodicea. St. Basil, a writer of the fourth century, speaking of the present epistle, has this very singular passage: 'And writing to the Ephesians, as truly united to him who is through knowledge, he (Paul) calleth them in a peculiar sense such who are; saying, to the saints who are and (or even) the faithful in Christ Jesus; for so those before us have transmitted it, and we have found it in ancient copies.' Dr. Mill interprets (and, notwithstanding some objections that have been made to him, in my opinion, rightly interprets) these words of Basil, as declaring that this father had seen certain copies of the epistle in which the words 'in Ephesus' were wanting. And the passage, I think, must be considered as Basil's fanciful way of explaining what was really a corrupt and defective reading; for I do not believe it possible that the author of the epistle could have originally written επι της τριτοσ, without any name of place to follow it."

It must be allowed that the arguments of Dr. Paley, the sum of which may be found in Wolstein; that this is the epistle to the Laodiceans, are both plausible and strong; and yet almost the whole of antiquity, with the exceptions which those learned men mention, is in favour of the epistle being sent originally to the church at Ephesus. Puzzled with these two considerations, some critics have pointed out a middle way. They suppose that several copies of this epistle were directed to no particular church, but were intended for all the churches in Asia Minor; and that different copies might have different directions, from this circumstance, that St. Paul in writing the first verse Παυλος αποσταλος Ιησου Χριστου—τοις αγιοις τοις ωσαυ—Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ to the saints which are—left a blank after ωσαυ, are, which was in some cases filled up with ω

TO THE EPHESIANS.

Ephes., in Ephesus: in others with Λαοδικία, in Laodicea: though there might be one copy expressly sent by him to the church of the Laodiceans, while he wished that others should be directed to the different churches through Asia Minor. That there were copies which had no place specified, we learn from St. Basil: and the arguments in favour of Laodicea are certainly the strongest; the circumstance that the apostle salutes no person, agrees well with Laodicea, where he had never been, Coloss. ii. 1. but cannot agree with Ephesus, where he was well known, and where, in preaching the Gospel, he had spent three years. See Acts xx. 31.

As this point is very dubious, and men of great abilities and learning have espoused different sides of the question, I judge myself incompetent to determine any thing: but I felt it my duty to bring the arguments for Laodicea, fairly before the reader: those in favour of Ephesus may be met with every where. The passages in the body of the epistle, alleged by critics who espouse opposite sides of this subject, I have seldom noticed in a controversial way: and the notes on those passages are constructed as though no controversy existed.

Many expositors, and particularly Dr. Chandler and Macknight, have thought that they have perceived a great number of references to the Temple of Diana at Ephesus; to the sacred mysteries among the Greeks; to the Hierophants, Mystagogues, Neocoroi, &c. in the temple of this celebrated goddess. It may appear strange, that, with these opinions before me, I have not referred to the same things; nor adduced them by way of illustration: the truth is, I have not been able to discover them; nor do I believe that any such allusions exist. I see many allusions to the Temple of God at Jerusalem, but none to the Temple of Diana at Ephesus. I find also many references to the sacred service, and sacerdotal officers in the Jewish temple; but none to Mystagogues, &c. among the heathens. I find much said about what is to be understood most literally, the mystery which had been hidden from all ages, viz. of uniting Jews and Gentiles in one church; but no reference to the Eleusinian, Bacchic, or other mysteries in the abominable worship of the Greeks, as suggesting to the mind of the apostle any parallel between their mysteries and those of the Almighty. My reasons for my dissent from these respectable authorities, I have given in the notes.

CHAPTER I.

The apostle's salutation to the church, 1, 2. He blesses God for calling the Gentiles to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ, by whose sacrificial death both they and the Jews find redemption, 3—7. He shows that it was through the great abundance of God's wisdom and goodness that the Gentiles were called into a state of salvation; and that they should receive the Holy Spirit as the earnest of their inheritance, 8—15. He praises God for their conversion, and prays that they may be further enlightened, that they may see the glory of Christ, and partake of the blessings of his passion and exaltation, 16—23.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. To the saints which are at Ephesus] As some learned men think that this epistle was written to the church of the Laodiceans; and that the words in Ephesus, were not originally in this epistle; the consideration of the subject has appeared to be more proper for the Preface; and to that the reader is referred for a particular discussion of this opinion. By the term saints, we are to understand those who in that place professed Christianity, and were members of the Christian church. Saint properly signifies a holy person, and such the Gospel of Christ requires every man to be; and

With all spiritual blessings] With the pure doctrines of the Gospel, and the abundant gifts and graces of the Holy Ghost, justifying, sanctifying, and building us up, in our most holy faith.

In heavenly places] Εν τοις ουρανοῖς, in heavenly things, such as those mentioned above ; they were not yet in heavenly places; but they had abundance of heavenly things, to prepare them for heavenly places. Some think the word should be understood as signifying blessings of the most exalted or excellent kind ; such as are spiritual in opposition to those that are earthly :
such as are eternal in opposition to those that are temporal : and all these in, through and by CHRIST. We have already seen, on Gal. iv. 26. that the heavenly Jerusalem, or Jerusalem which is from above, is used by the Jews to signify the days of the Messiah, and that state of grace and glory which should follow the Levitical worship and ceremonies : and it is possible that St.
Paul may use the word ουρανα, heavenly things, in this sense. God hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in heavenly things, or in this heavenly state ; in which life and immortality are brought to light by the Gospel. This is apparently the preferable sense.

Verse 4. According as he hath chosen us in him] As he has decreed from the beginning of the world, and has kept in view from the commencement of the religious system of the Jews, (which the phrase sometimes means,) to bring us Gentiles to the knowledge of this glorious state of salvation by Christ Jesus. The Jews considered themselves an elect or chosen people ; and wished to monopolize the whole of the Divine love and beneficence. The apostle here shows that God had the Gentiles as much in the contemplation of his mercy and goodness, as he had the Jews : and the blessings of the Gospel, now so freely dispensed to them, were the proof that God had thus chosen them ; and that His end in giving them the Gospel, was the same which he had in view by giving the law to the Jews, viz.
that they might be holy and without blame before him. And as his object was the same in respect to them both, they should consider that, as he loved them, so they should love one another ; God having provided for each the same blessings, they should therefore be αγιος, holy, fully separated from earth and sin, and consecrated to God : and αμωμος, without blame, having no spot nor imperfection ; their inward holiness agreeing with their outward consecration. The words are a metaphor taken from the perfect and immaculate sacrifices which the law required the people to bring to the altar of God.
But as love is the fulfilling of the law, and love the fountain whence their salvation flowed, therefore love must fill their hearts towards God world, that we should ^d be holy and without blame before him in love :

and each other ; and love must be the motive and end of all their words and works.

Verse 5. Having predestinated us] Προρισας, as the doctrine of eternal predestination has produced much controversy in the Christian world, it may be necessary to examine the meaning of the term, that those who do use it, may employ it according to the sense it has in the oracles of God. The verb προριζω, from προ, before, and ριζω, I define, finish, bound, or terminate, whence ορος, a boundary or limit, signifies to define beforehand, and circumscribe by certain bounds or limits, and is originally a geographical term, but applied also to any thing concluded, or determined, or demonstrated. Here, the word is used to point out God's fixed purpose or predetermination to bestow on the Gentiles the blessing of the adoption of sons, by Jesus Christ ; which adoption had been before granted to the Jewish people : and without circumcision, or any other Mosaic rite, to admit the Gentiles to all the privileges of his church and people. And the apostle marks, that all this was fore-determined by God, as He had fore-determined the bounds and precincts of the land which he gave them according to the promise made to their fathers. That the Jews had no reason to complain, for God had formed this purpose before he had given the law, or called them out of Egypt ;
for it was before the foundation of the world,
ver. 2. and that, therefore, the conduct of God, in calling the Gentiles now, bringing them into his church, and conferring on them the gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit, was in pursuance of his original design ; and if he did not do so, his eternal purposes could not be fulfilled. And that, as the Jews were taken to be his peculiar people, not because they had any goodness or merit in themselves ; so the Gentiles were called, not for any merit they had, but according to the good pleasure of his will ; that is, according to his eternal benevolence ; showing mercy, and conferring privileges in this new creation, as he had done in the original creation ; for, as in creating man, he drew every consideration from his own innate eternal benevolence : so now, in redeeming man, and sending the glad tidings of salvation both to the Jews and the Gentiles, he acted on the same principles, deriving all the reasons of his conduct from his own infinite goodness.

This argument was exceedingly conclusive, and must silence the Jews on the ground of their original, primitive, and exclusive rights, which they were ever ready to plead against all pretensions of the Gentiles. If, therefore, God, before the foundation of the Jewish economy, had determined that the Gentiles, in the fullness of time, should be called to, and admitted into, all the privileges of the Messiah's kingdom, then the exclusive salvation of the Jews was chimerical; and what God was doing now by the preaching of the apostles in the Gentile world, was in pursuance of his original design. This same argument St. Paul repeatedly produces in his Epistle to the Romans; and a proper consideration of it unlocks many difficulties in that epistle. See the notes on Rom. viii. 29, 30. and elsewhere, in the course of that epistle, where this subject is handled. But why is the word προρισται, fore-determined, limited, or circumscribed, used here? merely in reference to the settlement of the Israelites in the Promised Land. God assigned to them the portions which they were to inherit, and these portions were described, and their bearings, boundaries, vicinities to other portions, extent and length, as exactly ascertained as they could be by the most correct geographical map. As God therefore had dealt with the Jews in making them his peculiar people; and when he divided the earth among the sons of Noah, reserved to himself the twelve portions which he afterward gave to the twelve tribes, (see on Deut. xxxii. 8.) and as His dealings with them were typical of what he intended to do in the calling and salvation of the Gentiles; so he uses the terms by which their allotment and settlement were pointed out, to show that what he had thus designed and typified, he had now fulfilled according to the original predetermination: the Gentiles having now the spiritual inheritance which God had pointed out by the grant made of the Promised Land to the children of Israel. This is the grand key by which this predestination business is unlocked. See on ver. 11.

Verse 6. To the praise of the glory of his grace] δοξαι της χαριτος αυτου, the glory of his grace, for χαρις ενδοξαι, his glorious, or illustrious grace, according to the Hebrew idiom. But the grace or mercy of God is peculiarly illustrated and glorified in the plan of redemption by Christ Jesus. By the giving of the LAW, God's justice and holiness were rendered most glorious; by the giving of the GOSPEL, his grace and mercy are made equally conspicuous.

Wherein he hath made us accepted in the Beloved] This translation of εν αγαπητω υιου εν τω Ηγαπητω, is not clear; with which he has graciously favoured us through the Beloved, is at once more literal, and more intelligible. Whiby, Macknight, and Wakefield, translate the passage nearly in the same way.

the latter Syriac, the Æthiopic, Vulgate, Italia, with several of the Fathers, add υιου αυτου, his beloved Son. This is the meaning, whether the reading be received or rejected.

Verse 7. In whom we have redemption] God has glorified his grace by giving us redemption by the blood of his Son; and this redemption consists in forgiving and delivering us from our sins: so then Christ's blood was the redemption price, paid down for our salvation; and this was according to the riches of his grace; as his grace is rich or abundant in benevolence, so it was manifested in beneficence to mankind, in their redemption by the sacrifice of Christ; the measure of redeeming grace being the measure of God's own eternal goodness.

It may not be useless to remark, that instead of της χαριτος αυτου, his grace; the Codex Alexandrinus, and the Coptic version, have της χρηστερας, his goodness.

Verse 8. Wherein he hath abounded] That is, in the dispensation of mercy and goodness by Christ Jesus.

In all wisdom and prudence] Giving us apostles the most complete instructions in heavenly things, by the inspiration of his Spirit; and at the same time prudence, that we might know when and where to preach the Gospel, so that it might be effectual to the salvation of those who heard it. Nothing less than the Spirit of God could teach the apostles that wisdom by which they were to instruct a dark and sinful world; and nothing less than the same Spirit could inspire them with that prudence which was necessary to be exercised in every step of their life and ministry. Every wise man is not a prudent man; and every prudent man is not a wise man. Wisdom and prudence may be expected in an apostle who is constantly living under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost. "Wisdom," according to Sir William Temple, "is that which makes men judge what are the best ends, and what the best means to attain them; and gives a man advantage of counsel and direction." "Prudence is wisdom applied to practice; or that discreet apt suiting as well of actions as words, in their due place, time, and manner." Every minister of Christ needs these still; and if he abide not under the influence of both, not only his prayers, but his ministerial labours will be all hindered.

Verse 9. Having made known unto us the mystery] That the Gentiles should ever be received into the church of God, and have all the privileges of the Jews, without being obliged to submit to circumcision, and perform the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish law, was a mystery, a hidden thing, which had never been published before; and now revealed only to the apostles. It was God's will that it should be so, but that will he kept hidden to the present time. A mystery signifies something hidden; but it ceases to be a mystery as soon as it is revealed. See the note on Matt. xiii. 11. and particularly that on Rom. xi. 25.

Good pleasure] ἡν ὀφειλὸν, that benevolent design which he had purposed in himself, not being induced by any consideration from without.

Verse 10. In the dispensation of the fulness of times] Εἰς οἰκονομίαν τοῦ πληροματος τῶν καιρῶν. The word οἰκονομία, which is the same as our word economy, signifies, as Dr. Macknight has well observed, "the plan which the master of a family, or his steward, has established for the management of the family:" it signifies also, a plan for the management of any sort of business: and here it means the dispensation of the Gospel, that plan by which God has provided salvation for a lost world; and, according to which, he intends to gather all believers, both Jews and Gentiles, into one church, under Jesus Christ, their head and governor. See the note on Matt. xxiv. 45. where the word and the office are particularly explained.

The fulness of times—By this phrase we are to understand either the Gospel dispensation, which is the consummation of all preceding dispensations, and the last that shall be afforded to man; or, that advanced state of the world, which God saw to be the most proper for the full manifestation of those benevolent purposes which he had formed in himself, relative to the salvation of the world by Jesus Christ.

That he might gather together in one] Ἀνασυναγαγεῖσθαι, from ανα, again; and συναγαγεῖν, to reduce to one sum; to add up; to bring different sums together, and fractions of sums, so as to reduce them under one denomination; to recapitulate the principal matters contained in a discourse. Here it means the gathering together both Jews and Gentiles, who have believed in Christ, into one church and flock. See the preceding note.

All things—which are in heaven, and which are on earth] This clause is variously understood; some think, by things in heaven, the Jewish state is meant: and by things on earth, the Christian. The Jews had been long considered a divine or heavenly people; their doctrine, their government, their constitution, both civil and ecclesiastical, were all divine or heavenly; as the powers of the heavens, Matt. xxiv. 29. Luke xxi. 26. mean the Jewish rulers in church both which are in ^e heaven, and which are on earth; even in him:

and state, it is very possible that the things which are in heaven, mean the same state: and as the Gentiles were considered to have nothing divine or heavenly among them, they may be here intended by the earth, out of the corruption of which they are to be gathered by the preaching of the Gospel. But there are others who imagine, that the things in heaven mean the angelical hosts; and the things on earth, believers of all nations, who shall all be joined together at last in one assembly, to worship God throughout eternity. And some think that the things in heaven, mean the saints who died before Christ's advent, and who are not to be made perfect till the resurrection, when the full power and efficacy of Christ shall be seen in raising the bodies of believers, and uniting them with their holy souls, to reign in his presence for ever. And some think that, as the Hebrew phrase שָׁמַיִם וָאָרֶץ shamayim ve-ha-aretz, the heavens and the earth, signifies all creatures: the words in the text are to be understood as signifying all mankind, without discrimination of peoples, kindreds, or tongues; Jews, Greeks, or barbarians. All that are saved of all nations, being saved in the same way, viz. by faith in Christ Jesus, without any distinction of nation or previous condition, and all gathered into one church or assembly.

I believe that the forming one church out of both Jews and Gentiles, is that to which the apostle refers. This agrees with what is said, chap. ii. 14—17.

Verse 11. In whom] Christ Jesus; we also, we, believing Jews, have obtained an inheritance; what was promised to Abraham and his spiritual seed, viz. the adoption of sons, and the kingdom of heaven, signified by the privileges under the Mosaic dispensation, and the possession of the Promised Land: but all these privileges being forfeited by the rebellion and unbelief of the Jews, they are now about to be finally cut off; and the believing part to be re-elected, and put in possession of the blessings promised to Abraham and his spiritual seed, by faith: for, without a re-election, they cannot get possession of these spiritual privileges.

Being predestinated] God having determined to bring both Jews and Gentiles to salvation, not by works, nor by any human means or schemes, but by Jesus Christ; that salvation, being defined and determined before, in the Divine mind; and the means by which it should be brought about; all being according to His purpose, who consults not his creatures, but operates according to the counsel of his own will; that being ever wise, gracious, and good.

The original reference is still kept up here, in the word προεπιθετως, being predestinated; as in the word προλογος, ver. 5. And as the apostle speaks of obtaining the inheritance, he most evidently refers to that of which the Promised Land was the type and pledge. And as that land was assigned to the Israelites by limit and lot, both of which were appointed by God; so the salvation now sent to the Gentiles was as expressly their lot or portion, as the Promised Land was that of the people of Israel. All this shows that the Israelites were a typical people; their land, the manner of possessing it, their civil and religious code, &c. &c. all typical; and that in, by, and through them, God had fore-determined, fore-described, and fore-ascertained, a greater and more glorious people, among whom the deepest counsels of his wisdom should be manifested; and the most powerful works of his eternal mercy, grace, holiness, goodness, and truth, be fully exhibited. Thus there was nothing fortuitous in the Christian scheme; all was the result of infinite counsel and design. See on ver. 5.

Verse 12. That we] Jews, now apostles and messengers of God, to whom the first offers of salvation were made, and who were the first that believed in Christ.

Should be to the praise of his glory] By being the means of preaching Christ crucified to the Gentiles, and spreading the Gospel throughout the world.

Verse 13. In whom ye also trusted] Ye Gentiles having heard from us the word, του λεγου, the doctrine of the truth, which is the Gospel, or glad tidings of your salvation, have believed as we Jews have done; and received similar blessings to those with which God has favoured us.

In whom also; in whom, through whom, Christ Jesus; after that ye had believed, viz. that he was the only Saviour; and that through his blood, redemption might be obtained: Ye were sealed with that Holy Spirit of promise; that is, the Holy Spirit, which is promised to them who believe on Christ Jesus, was given to you, and thus you were ascertained to be the children of God; for God has no child who is not a partaker of the Holy Ghost; and he who has this Spirit has God's seal that he belongs to the heavenly family. It was customary among all nations, when a person purchased goods of any kind, to mark with his seal that which he had bought; in order that he might know it, and be able to claim it if mixed with the goods of others. To this custom the apostle may here allude; but it was also customary to set a seal upon what was dedicated to God; or what was to be offered to him in sacrifice.—See this proved in the note on

John vi. 27. The Jews themselves speak of the seal of God, which they term σφραγις, truth; and which they consider as a representation of the unoriginated and endless perfections of God. As the apostle is here speaking of the doctrine of truth, which came by the Holy Spirit, and is sealed on the souls of believers by this Spirit, he may have in view the Jewish notion, which is at once both correct and elevated. This Spirit of truth, John xiv. 17. who leads into all truth, chap. xvi. 13. and teaches all things, chap. xiv. 26. makes the impression of his own eternal purity and truth in the souls of them who believe; and thus they bear the seal of God Almighty. And they who in the day of judgment are found to bear this seal, truth, in the inward parts, having truly repented, truly believed; and having been, in consequence, truly justified, and truly sanctified; and having walked in truth and sincerity towards God and man: these are sealed to the day of redemption; for, having this seal, they are seen to have a right to eternal life.

Verse 14. Which is the earnest of our inheritance] This Holy Spirit, sealing the soul with truth and righteousness, is the earnest, foretaste, and pledge of the heavenly inheritance. And he who can produce this earnest, this witness of the Spirit, in the day of judgment, shall have an abundant entrance into the holiest. On the aggaron, or earnest, see the notes on Gen. xviii. 13, &c. and on 2 Cor. i. 22.

The redemption of the purchased possession] That is, till the time when body and soul are redeemed from all their miseries, and glorified in the kingdom of heaven.

The redemption of the purchased possession—Απολυτρωσις της περιποιησις, is variously understood: and indeed the original is variously translated. Dr. Whitby has observed that the verb περιποιω, signifies to save alive; and he refers the περιποιησις here, to the redemption of the body from corruption, and to its final glorification with the soul.

All those who believe in Christ Jesus, are considered as his peculiar people and property; and to them eternal glory is promised. The Spirit of promise which is given them, is a pledge that they shall have a resurrection from the dead, and eternal blessedness: the redemption, or bringing to life of the body, cannot take place till the day of judgment; but the Holy Spirit promises this redemption, and is now, in their hearts, an earnest or pledge of this complete restoration at the great day; which will then be in an especial manner, to the praise of his glory, viz. of Christ, who has bought them by his blood.

reception of the Christian religion ; amply proved by their love to all the saints ; to all the Christians. Perhaps love, here implies not only the kind affection so called, but also all the fruits of love, benevolence, and kind offices of every description.

The Father of glory] The author and giver of that glory which you expect at the end of of light.

Instead of τῆς διανοίας, of your understanding ;

all the Arabic, the Coptic, the Ethiopic, Armenian, Sahidic, Slavonian, Vulgate, and Itala, besides several of the Fathers. The eyes of your HEART, is undoubtedly the true reading.

The hope of his calling] That ye may clearly discern the glorious and important objects of your hope, to the enjoyment of which God has called or invited you.

The riches of the glory of his inheritance]
That you may understand what is the glorious abundance of the spiritual things to which you are entitled in consequence of being made children of God : for, if children, then heirs ; heirs of that glorious inheritance which God has provided for the saints ; for all genuine Christians, whether formerly Jews or Gentiles. On the chief subject of this verse, see the notes on Galat. iv. 6, 7.

Verse 19. The exceeding greatness of his power] As the apostle is here speaking of the glorious state of believers after death, the exceeding greatness of his power, or that power which surpasses all difficulties, being itself omnipotent, is to be understood of that might which is to be exerted in raising the body at the last day ; as it will require the same power or energy which he wrought in Christ, when he raised his body from the grave, to raise up the bodies of all mankind, the resurrection of the human nature of Christ being a proof of the resurrection of mankind in general.

According to the working of his mighty power] κατὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν τοῦ κρατοῦς τῆς ἰσχύος αὐτοῦ, according to the energy of the power of his might.
We may understand these words thus : ΜΙΓΗΡ, ἰσχυς, is the state or simple efficiency of this attribute in God : ΠΡΑΤΟΣ, is this might or efficiency in action ; ΕΝΕΡΓΙΑ, ἐνέργεια, is the quantum of force, momentum or velocity with which the power is applied. Though they appear to be synonymous terms, they may be thus understood : passive power is widely different from power in action ; and power in action will be, in its results, according to the energy or momentum with which it is applied.
The resurrection of the dead is a stupendous work of God ; it requires his might in sovereign action : and when we consider that all mankind every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come :

are to be raised and changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, then the momentum or velocity, with which the power is to be applied, must be inconceivably great. All motion is in proportion to the quantity of matter in the mover; and the velocity with which it is applied. The effect here is in proportion to the cause, and the energy he puts forth, in order to produce it. But such is the nature of God's power in action, that it is perfectly inconceivable to us: and even these astonishingly strong words of the apostle are to be understood as used in condescension to human weakness.

Verse 20. Set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places] Gave him as Mediator between God and man, the highest honours and dignities, Phil. ii. 9. in which state of exaltation he transacts all the affairs of his church, and rules the universe. The right hand is the place of friendship, honour, confidence, and authority.

Verse 21. Far above all principality] The difficulty in this verse does not arise from the words themselves, the meaning of each being easily understood, but from the sense in which the apostle uses them. Some think he has reference here to the different orders among good and evil angels: he is superior to all the former, and rules all the latter. Others think he refers to earthly governments; and αρχη, principality, the first word, signifies the most sovereign and extensive kind of dominion; and υπερου, lordship, the last word, signifies the lowest degree of authority; hence we are to understand, that to our Lord, in his human nature, are subjected the highest, the intermediate, and the lowest orders of beings in the universe.—Chandler. Others imagine that the apostle has in view, by whatsoever is named in this world, all the dignitaries of the Jewish church; and by what is named in the world to come, all the dignities that should be found in the Christian church.

Schoetgen supposes that "the apostle's αρχη, (for αρχου, the abstract for the concrete,) means the same as the נשיא נשיא among the Jews, whose chief business it was to clear and decide all contentions, which arose concerning traditions and legal controversies.

"That εξουσια, power, is the same as רבטא torba, he who possesses authority to propound, expound, persuade, convince, and refute.

"That δυναμις, might, answers to רבנות rabbinoth, signifying all the class of rabbins whose office it was to expound the law, and teach the people generally.

"And, that κυριετης, dominion, answers to mar, which signifies a person above the lower orders of men. And he observes, that Jesus Christ, after his resurrection, called fishermen, publicans, and men from the lowest orders of the people, to the work of the ministry; and made them instruments of confounding and overturning all the Jewish rulers, rabbins, and doctors. And that, in the world which is to come, the successive ages of Christianity, he should ever be exalted above all these powers and authorities which antichrist might bring into the Christian church, such as popes, cardinals, wicked archbishops, bishops, deans, and canons; and all those who, among the schoolmen, were termed seraphic doctors, angelic doctors, most illuminated, most perfect and irrefragable doctors. And although Wicklif, Hus, Luther, Melancthon, and the rest of the reformers, were men of little or no note, when compared with the rulers of the popish church, so eminently did the power of Christ work in and by them, that the pope and all his adjuncts were every where confounded; and their power and authority annihilated in several entire regions."

It is certain that the apostle means that all created power, glory, and influence, are under Christ; and hence it is added:—

Verse 22. He hath put all things under his feet] All beings and things are subject to Him, whether they be thrones, dominions, principalities, or powers, Col. i. 16—18. and ii. 10. for he, God the Father, has given him to be head, chief and supreme, over all, to the church; the church having no ruler but Jesus Christ: others may be officers in his church, but he alone is head and supreme.

Verse 23. Which is his body] As he is head over all things, he is head to the church; and this church is considered as the body of which he is especially the head; and from him, as the head, the church receives light, life, and intelligence.

And is the fulness of him] That in which he especially manifests his power, goodness, and truth: for, though he fills all the world with his presence, yet he fills all the members of his mystical body with wisdom, goodness, truth, and holiness, in an especial manner. Some understand the fulness, or πληρομα, here as signifying the thing to be filled; so the Christian church is to be filled by Him whose fulness fills all his members, with all spiritual gifts and graces,

And this corresponds with what St. John says, chap. i. 16. Out of his fulness have we all received, and grace upon grace. And with what is said, Col. ii. 9, 10. Ye are complete in him; and ye are in him, filled full; i. e. with gifts and grace.

How, in any other sense, the church can be said to be the fulness of Him who fills all in all, is difficult to say. However, as Jesus Christ is represented to be the head, and the church the body under that head, the individuals being so many members in that body; and as it requires a body and members to make a head complete, so it requires a church, or general assembly of believers, to make up the body of Christ. When, therefore, the Jews and Gentiles are brought into this church, the body may be said to be complete; and thus Christ has his visible fulness upon earth; and the church may be said to be the fulness of him, &c. See ver. 10.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. And you hath he quickened] This chapter should not have been separated from the preceding, with which it is most intimately connected. As Christ fills the whole body of Christian believers with his fulness, (chap. i. 23.) so had he dealt with the converted Ephesians; who, before, were dead in trespasses, and dead in sins. DEATH is often used by all writers, and in all nations, to express a state of extreme misery. The Ephesians, by trespassing and sinning, had brought themselves into a state of deplorable wretchedness, as had all the heathen nations: and, having thus sinned against God, they were condemned by him; and might be considered as dead in law: incapable of performing any legal act, and always liable to the punishment of death, which they had deserved, and which was ready to be inflicted upon them.

Trespasses, παραπτώματα, may signify the slightest deviation from the line and rule of moral equity, as well as any flagrant offence; for these are equally transgressions, as long as the sacred line that separates between vice and virtue is passed over.

Sin, αμαρτία, may probably mean here habitual transgression; sinning knowingly and daringly.

Verse 2. Wherein in time past ye walked] There is much force in these expressions; the Ephesians had not sinned casually, or now and then, but continually; it was their continual employment; they walked in trespasses and sins: and this was not a solitary case, all the nations of the earth acted in the same way; it was the course of this world: κατα τον αμαρτου κοσμου τωτου, according to the life, mode of living, or successive ages of this world. The word αμαρτου, the literal meaning of which is constant duration, is often applied to things which have a complete course, as the Jewish dispensation, a particular government, and the term of human life; so here, the whole of life is a tissue of sin, from the cradle to the grave; every human soul unsaved by Jesus Christ, continues to transgress. And the nominally Christian world is in the same state to the present day. Age after age passes on in this way; and the living lay it not to heart!

The prince of the power of the air] As the former clause may have particular respect to the Jewish people, who are frequently denominated הם הוה עולם olam hazzeh; this world; this latter clause may especially refer to the Gentiles, who were most manifestly under the power of the devil; as almost every object of their worship was a demon, to whom the worst of passions and practices were attributed; and whose conduct his votaries took care to copy.

Satan is termed prince of the power of the air, because the air is supposed to be a region in which malicious spirits dwell, all of whom are under the direction and influence of Satan their chief.

The spirit that now worketh] Του πνευματος; the operations of the prince of the aerial powers are not confined to that region, he has another sphere of action, viz. the wicked heart of man; and in this he works with energy. He seldom inspires indifference to religion; the subjects in whom he works are either determinate opposers of true religion, or they are systematic and energetic transgressors of God's laws.

Children of disobedience] Perhaps a Hebraism for disobedient children; but taken as it stands here, it is a strong expression in which disobedience, ἀνομία, appears to be personified; and wicked men exhibited as her children, the prince of the power of the air being their father, while disobedience is their mother. Thus they are emphatically what our Lord calls them, Matt. xiii. 38. children of the wicked one: for they

3 ^b Among whom also we all had our conversation in times past, in ^c the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling ^d the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and ^e were by nature the children of wrath, even as others.

4 But God, ^f who is rich in mercy, show themselves to be of their father the devil, because they will do his works, John viii. 44. Some think that by children of disobedience, the apostle means particularly the disobedient, unbelieving, refractory, and persecuting Jews; but I rather think he speaks this generally, and refers to the Jews in the following verse.

Verse 3. Among whom also we all had our conversation] We Jews, as well as you Gentiles, have lived in transgressions and sins: αυστηριον, this was the course of our life; we lived in sin; walked in sin; it was woven through our whole constitution; it tinged every temper, polluted every faculty, and perverted every transaction of life. The lusts, the evil, irregular, and corrupt affections of the heart, showed themselves in the perversion of the mind, as well as in our general conduct. The mind was darkened by the lusts of the flesh, and both conjoined to produce acts of unrighteousness. It was not the will of God that was done by us, but the will of the flesh and of the mind.

And were by nature the children of wrath] For the import of the phrase by nature, φύσει, see the note on Galat. ii. 15. and Rom. ii. 14. To what is said on those passages, I may add from Dr. Macknight. "Nature often signifies one's birth and education, Gal. ii. 15. We who are Jews by NATURE. Also men's natural reason and conscience: Rom. ii. 14. The Gentiles who have not the law, do by NATURE the things contained in the law, &c. Also the general sense and practice of mankind, 1 Cor. xi. 15. Doth not even NATURE itself teach you that if a man have long hair, &c. Also, the original constitution of any thing, Gal. iv. 8. Who are not gods by NATURE. Also, a disposition formed by custom and habit; thus Demetrius Phalerius said of the Lacedemonians, φύσει ἄκατασκευαστοι. Assuredly: "The Lacedemonians have naturally a concise mode of speaking." Hence our word laconic; a short speech; or much sense conveyed in a few words. The words in the text have been often quoted to prove the doctrine of original sin; but though that doctrine be an awful truth, it is not, in my opinion, intended here: it is rather found in the preceding words, the lusts of the flesh, and the desires of the flesh and of the mind. The apostle appears to speak of sinful habits; and, as we say, HABIT is a second nature; and these persons acted from their originally corrupt nature; from the lusts of the flesh and of the mind, they thus became by their vicious habits, or second nature, children of wrath; persons exposed to perdition, because of the impurity of their hearts, and the wickedness of their lives. Here we see that the fallen, apostate nature, produces the fruits of unrighteousness. The bad tree produces bad fruit.

Children of wrath is the same as son of perdition, son of death, &c. i. e. Persons exposed to God's displeasure, because of their sins.

Verse 4. But God, who is rich in mercy] As they were corrupt in their nature, and sinful in their practice, they could possess no merit; nor have any claim upon God: and it required much mercy to remove so much misery, and to pardon such transgressions.

His great love] God's infinite love is the groundwork of our salvation; in reference to us, that love assumes the form of mercy; and that mercy provides the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ. And therefore the apostle adds, ver. 5. By grace ye are saved; it is by God's free mercy in Christ that ye are brought into this state of salvation. See on ver. 8.

Verse 5. Even when we were dead in sins] Dead in our souls; dead towards God; and dead in law; and exposed to death eternal.

Hath quickened us together with Christ] God has given us as complete a resurrection from the death of sin, to a life of righteousness, as the body of Christ has had from the grave. And as this quickening, or making alive, was most gratuitous on God's part, the apostle, with great propriety, says, By grace are ye saved.

Verse 6. And hath raised us up together—in Christ] Or rather, by Christ: His resurrection being the proof that he had made the full atonement; and that we might be justified by his blood. Believing, therefore, the record which God gave of his Son, we receive this atonement, and were raised from a death of sin, to a life of righteousness; and now we sit in heavenly places: we have a right to the kingdom of God, anticipate this glory, and are indescribably happy in the possession of this salvation, and in our fellowship with Christ Jesus.

Verse 7. That in the ages to come] God has produced us an example, and one which shall be on record through all generations, that he quickens dead souls: that he forgives the sins of the most sinful when they repent, and believe in Christ Jesus. So that what God has done for the sinners at Ephesus, will serve as an encouragement to all ages of the world: and on this evidence, every preacher of the Gospel may boldly proclaim that Christ saves unto the uttermost all that come unto God through him. And thus the exceeding riches of his grace will appear in the provision he has made for the salvation of both Jews and Gentiles.

This observation of the apostle is of great use and importance; because we are authorized to state, in all the successive ages of the world, that he who saved the sinners at Ephesus, is ever ready to save all who, like them, repent of their sins, and believe in Christ Jesus.

Verse 8. For by grace are ye saved; through faith] As ye are now brought into a state of salvation, your sins being all blotted out, and you made partakers of the Holy Spirit; and having a hope full of immortality, you must not attribute this to any works or merits of yours; for when this Gospel reached you, you were all found dead in trespasses, and dead in sins; therefore it was God's free mercy to you, manifested through Christ, in whom ye were commanded to believe; and having believed by the power of the Holy Spirit, ye received, and were sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise; so that this salvation is in no sense of yourselves, but is the free gift of God, and not of any kind of works: so that no man can boast as having wrought out his own salvation, or even contributed any thing towards it. By grace ye are saved through faith in Christ. This is a true doctrine, and continues to be essential to the salvation of man to the end of the world.

But whether are we to understand faith or salvation as being the gift of God? This question is answered by the Greek text, τῆ γὰρ χάριτι ἐστὶ ἐλευθερωμένοι διὰ τῆς πίστεως: καὶ τούτοις οὐκ ἐξ ἑμῶν θεοῦ τοῦ δῶρον, οὐκ ἐξ ἔργων ἡμῶν ἵνα ματαιὸν καυχήσῃτε. "By this grace ye are saved through faith: and τῆς [τούτοις, this salvation] not of you; it is the gift of God, not of works: so that no one can boast." "The relative τούτοις, this, which is in the neuter gender, cannot stand for πίστις, faith, which is the feminine; but it has the whole sentence that goes before for its antecedent." But it may be asked, is not faith the gift of God? Yes, as to the grace by which it is produced: but the grace or power to believe, and the act of believing, are two different things. Without the grace or power to believe, no man ever did or can believe; but with that power, the act of faith is a man's own. God never believes for any man, no more than he repents for him: the penitent, through this grace enabling him, believes for himself; nor does he believe necessarily or impulsively, when he has that power: the power to believe may be present long before it is exercised, else why the solemn warnings with which we meet every where in the word of God; and threatenings against those who do not believe? Is not this a proof that such persons have the power, but do not use it: they believe not, and therefore are not established. This, therefore, is the true state of the case: God gives the power, man uses the power thus given, and brings glory to God; without the power, no man can believe: with it any man may.

Verse 10. For we are his workmanship] So far is this salvation from being our own work, or granted for our own work's sake, we are ourselves not only the creatures of God, but our new creation was produced by his power; for we are created in Christ Jesus unto good works. He has saved us so that we may show forth the virtues of Him who called us from darkness into his marvellous light. For, though we are not saved for our good works, yet we are saved that we may perform good works to the glory of God, and the benefit of man.

Which God hath before ordained] Οὐκ ἔργου τῶν ἡμῶν; for which God before prepared us, that we might walk in them. For, being saved from sin, we are made partakers of the Spirit of holiness; and it is natural to that Spirit to lead to the practice of holiness; and he who is not holy in his life is not saved by the grace of Christ. The before ordaining, or rather preparing, must refer to the time when God began the new creation in their hearts; for, from the first inspiration of God upon the soul, it begins to love holiness: and obedience to the will of God is the very element in which a holy or regenerated soul lives.

Verse 11. Wherefore remember] That ye may ever see and feel your obligations, to live a pure and holy life, and be unfeignedly thankful to God for your salvation; remember that ye were once heathens, in the flesh, without the pure doctrine, and under the influence of their corrupt nature; such as by the Jews, (who gloried, in consequence of their circumcision, to be in covenant with God,) were called uncircumcision, i. e. persons out of the Divine covenant, and having no right or title to any blessing of God.

Verse 12. That at that time ye were without Christ] Not only were not Christians, but had no knowledge of the Christ or Messiah, and no title to the blessings which were to proceed from him.

Aliens from the commonwealth of Israel] Ye were by your birth, idolatry, &c. alienated from the commonwealth of Israel; from the civil and religious privileges of the Jewish people.

Strangers from the covenants of promise] Having no part in the promise of the covenant made with Abraham, whether considered as relating to his natural or spiritual seed: and no part in that of the covenant made at Horeb with the Israelites, when a holy law was given them, and God condescended to dwell among them, and to lead them to the Promised Land.

Having no hope] Either of the pardon of sin, or of the resurrection of the body; nor indeed of the immortality of the soul. Of all these things, the Gentiles had no rational or well-grounded hope.

Without God in the world] They had gods many, and lords many; but in no Gentile nation was the true God known: nor indeed had they any correct notion of the Divine nature. Their idols were by nature, no gods; they could neither do evil nor good; and therefore they were properly without God, having no true object of worship, and no source of comfort. He who has neither God nor Christ, is in a most deplorable state; he has neither a God to worship, nor a Christ to justify him. And this is the state of every man who is living without the grace and epixit of Christ. All such, whatever they may profess, are no better than practical atheists.

Verse 13. Ye who sometimes were far off] To be far off, and to be near, are sayings much in use among the Jews; and among them, to be near, signifies, 1. To be in the approbation or favour of God; and to be far off, signifies to be under his displeasure. So a wicked Jew might be said to be far off from God when he was exposed to his displeasure; and a holy man, or a genuine penitent, might be said to be nigh to God, because such persons are in his favour. 2. Every person who offered a sacrifice to God was considered as having access to Him, by the blood of that sacrifice; hence the priests, whose office it was to offer sacrifices, were considered as being nigh to God. And all who brought gifts to the altar, were considered as approaching the Almighty. 3. Being far off, signified the state of the Gentiles as contradistinguished from the Jews, who were nigh. And these expressions were used in reference to the tabernacle, God's dwelling-place among the Israelites; and the sacrifices then offered. All those who had access to this tabernacle, or were nigh to it, or encamped about it, were said to be nigh to God; those who had no access to it, were said to be far off. Hence the latter phrase is used to distinguish the Gentiles from the Jewish people; and this appears to be the meaning of the prophet, Isai. lvii. 19. I create the fruit of the lips, peace, peace to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the Lord: i. e. I give cause of praise and rejoicing to the Gentile as well as to the Jew. And to this Scripture, and to this thing, the apostle seems here to allude. You, Gentiles, who were unacquainted with God, and were even without God in the world, are brought to an acquaintance with Him? and are now, through Christ Jesus, brought into the favour and fellowship of God. And as the Jews of old approached God by the blood of their sacrifices, so you approach Him by the blood of Christ.

Verse 14. For he is our peace] Jesus Christ has died for both Jews and Gentiles, and has become a peace-offering, שלום shalom, to reconcile both to God, and to each other.

Who hath made both one] Formed one church out of the believers of both people.

The middle wall of partition] By abolishing the law of Jewish ordinances, he has removed that which kept the two parties not only in a state of separation, but also at variance.

This expression, the middle wall, can refer only to that most marked distinction which the Jewish laws and customs made between them and all other nations whomsoever.

Some think it refers to their ancient manner of living among the Gentiles; as they always endeavoured to live in some place by themselves, and to have a river, or a wall, between them and their heathen neighbours. Indeed, wherever they went, their own rites, ordinances, and customs, were a sufficient separation between them and others: and as Jesus Christ abolished those customs, admitting all into his church, both Jews and Gentiles, by repentance and faith; he may be said to have broken down the middle wall of partition. When, at the death of Christ, the veil of the temple was rent from the top to the bottom, it was an emblem that the way to the holiest was laid open, and that the people at large, both Jews and Gentiles, were to have access to the holiest by the blood of Jesus.

Some think there is an allusion here to the wall called chel, which separated the court of Israel from the court of the Gentiles ; but this was not broken down till the temple itself was destroyed : and to this transaction the apostle cannot be supposed to allude, as it did not take place till long after the writing of this epistle.

Verse 15. Having abolished in his flesh] By his incarnation and death, he not only made an atonement for sin, but he appointed the doctrine of reconciliation to God, and of love to each other, to be preached in all nations ; and thus glory was brought to God in the highest ; and on earth peace and good will were diffused among men.

The enmity of which the apostle speaks, was reciprocal among the Jews and Gentiles. The former detested the Gentiles, and could hardly allow them the denomination of men ; the latter had the Jews in the most sovereign contempt, because of the peculiarity of their religious rites and ceremonies, which were different from all the other nations of the earth.

The law of commandments] Contained in, or rather concerning ordinances ; which law was made merely for the purpose of keeping the Jews a distinct people, and pointing out the Son of God till he should come. When, therefore, the end of its institution was answered, it was no longer necessary ; and Christ by his death abolished it.

To make in himself] To make one church out of both people, which should be considered the body of which Jesus Christ is the head. Thus he makes one new man, one new church ; and thus he makes and establishes peace. I think the apostle still alludes to the peace-offering, שְׁלֵמִים shalom, among the Jews. They have a saying, Sephra, fol. 121. Whosoever offers a peace-offering sacrifice, brings peace to the world. Such a peace-offering was the death of Christ ; and, by it, peace is restored to the earth.

Verse 16. That he might reconcile both—in one body] That the Jews and Gentiles, believing on the Lord Jesus, might lay aside all their causes of contention, and become one spiritual body, or society of men, influenced by the Spirit, and acting according to the precepts of the Gospel.

sinful nature. Dr. Macknight thinks that abolishing the enmity, is spoken of the removal of the hatred which the Jews and Gentiles mutually bore to each other, because of the difference of their respective religious worship. And that slaying the enmity, refers to the removal of evil lusts and affections from the heart of man, by the power of Divine grace. This is nearly the sense given above.

Verse 17. And came and preached peace] Proclaimed the readiness of God, to forgive and save both Jews and Gentiles. See the note on ver. 13.

Verse 18. For through him] Christ Jesus ; we both, Jews and Gentiles, have access by one Spirit, through the influence of the Holy Ghost, unto the Father, God Almighty. This text is a plain proof of the Holy Trinity. Jews and Gentiles are to be presented unto God the Father : the Spirit of God works in their hearts, and prepares them for this presentation ; and Jesus Christ himself introduces them. No soul can have access to God but by Jesus Christ ; and he introduces none but such as receive his Holy Spirit. All who receive that Spirit, are equally dear to him ; and whatever their names be among men, they are known in heaven as children of God, and heirs of eternal glory.

Verse 19. Ye are no more strangers] In this chapter, the church of God is compared to a city, which has a variety of privileges, rights, &c. founded on regular charters and grants. The Gentiles having believed in Christ, are all incorporated with the believing Jews, in this holy city. Formerly, when any of them came to Jerusalem, being Greeks, strangers, they had no kind of rights whatever ; nor could they, as mere heathens, settle among them. Again, if any of them, convinced of the errors of the Gentiles, acknowledged the God of Israel, but did not receive circumcision, he might dwell in the land, but he had no right to the blessings of the covenant ; such might be called παροικῆς, sojourners ; persons who have no property in the land ; and may only rent a house for the time being.

Fellow-citizens with the saints] Called to the enjoyment of equal privileges with the Jews themselves, who, by profession, were a holy people ; who were bound to be holy, and therefore are often called saints, or holy persons, when both their hearts and conduct were far from being right in the sight of God. But the saints, spoken of here, are the converted, or Christianized Jews.

[Of the household of God] The house of God is the temple; the temple was a type of the Christian church: this is now become God's house; all genuine believers are considered as being οικουοι, domestics, of this house; the children and servants of God Almighty, having all equal rights, privileges, and advantages; as all, through one Spirit, by the sacred Head of the family, had equal access to God: and each might receive as much grace, and as much glory, as his soul could possibly contain.

Verse 20. And are built upon the foundation] Following the same metaphor, comparing the church of Christ to a city, and to the temple; the believing Ephesians are represented as parts of that building; the living stones, out of which it is principally formed, 1 Pet. ii. 4, 5. having for foundation, (the ground-plan, specification, and principle on which it was built,) the doctrine taught by the prophets in the Old Testament, and the apostles in the New. Jesus Christ being that corner-stone, or ακρογωνιας, the chief angle, or foundation corner-stone; the connecting medium by which both Jews and Gentiles were united in the same building. Elsewhere, Jesus Christ is termed the foundation-stone. Behold, I lay in Zion a foundation-stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, Isai. xxviii. 16. but the meaning is the same in all the places where these terms foundation or corner-stone occur; for, in laying the foundation of a building, a large stone is generally placed at one of the angles or corners, which serves to form a part of the two walls which meet in that angle. When, therefore, the apostle says that Jesus Christ is the chief corner-stone, it means such a foundation-stone as that above-mentioned.

Verse 21. In whom] By which foundation corner-stone, Christ Jesus, all the building composed of converted Jews and Gentiles; fitly framed together; συναμειλοσουμεν, properly jointed and connected together; groweth unto a holy temple; is continually increasing, as new converts from Judaism or heathenism flock into it. It is not a finished building; but will continue to increase, and be more and more perfect till the day of judgment.

Verse 22. In whom ye also are builded] The apostle now applies the metaphor to the purpose for which he produced it, retaining however some of the figurative expressions. As the stones in a temple are all properly placed, so as to form a complete house, and be a habitation for the Deity that is worshipped there: so ye are all, both believing Jews and Gentiles, prepared by the doctrine of the prophets and apostles, under the influence of the Spirit of Christ, to become a habitation of God; a church in which God shall be worthily worshipped, and in which he can continually dwell.

1. Many suppose that the apostle, in the preceding chapter, alludes to the splendour of the Temple of Diana at Ephesus; which was reputed one of the wonders of the world. But, to me, this opinion does not seem sufficiently founded. I believe he has the Jewish temple continually in view; for that temple, above all in the universe, could alone be said to be a habitation of God. Both in the tabernacle, and temple, God dwelt between the cherubim; there, was the symbol of his presence, and there, was the worship performed which himself had prescribed. After the model of this was the spiritual temple, the Christian church, constructed; and God was to dwell in the one, as he had dwelt in the other. This simile, drawn from the temple at Jerusalem, was alone worthy of the apostle's design: to have alluded to the temple of Diana, would have disgraced his subject. And as many at Ephesus were Jews, and well acquainted with the temple at Jerusalem, they would both feel and venerate the apostle's simile, and be led to look for the indwelling of God, that which distinguished the Jewish temple from all others on the face of the earth.

2. The church of God is very properly said to be a most noble and wonderful work; and truly worthy of God himself. There is nothing, says one, so august as this church, seeing it is the temple of God.

Nothing so worthy of reverence, seeing God dwells in it.

Nothing so ancient, since the patriarchs and prophets laboured in building it.

Nothing so solid, since Jesus Christ is the foundation of it.

Nothing more closely united and indivisible, since he is the corner-stone.

Nothing so lofty, since it reaches as high as heaven, and to the bosom of God himself.

Nothing so regular and well proportioned, since the Holy Spirit is the architect.

Nothing more beautiful, or adorned with greater variety, since it consists of Jews and Gentiles of every age, country, sex, and condition; the mightiest potentates, the most renowned law-givers, the most profound philosophers, the most eminent scholars, besides all those of whom the world was not worthy, have formed a part of this building.

Nothing more spacious, since it is spread over the whole earth, and takes in all who have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Nothing so inviolable, since it is consecrated to Jehovah.

Nothing so divine, since it is a living building, animated and inhabited by the Holy Ghost.

Nothing so beneficent, seeing it gives shelter to the poor, the wretched, and distressed of every nation, and kindred, and tongue.

It is the place in which God does his marvellous works: the theatre of his justice, mercy, goodness, and truth—where he is to be sought, where he is to be found; and in which alone he is to be retained.

As we have one only God, and one only Saviour and Mediator between God and man, and one only inspiring Spirit; so there is but one church, in which this ineffable Jehovah performs his work of salvation. That church, however scattered and divided throughout the world, is but one building, founded on the Old and

New Testaments; having but one sacrifice, the Lord Jesus, the Lamb of God, that takes away the sin of the world.

3. Of this glorious church every Christian soul is an epitome; for, as God dwells in the church at large, so he dwells in every believer in particular: each is a habitation of God through the Spirit. In vain are all pretensions among sects and parties to the privileges of the church of Christ, if they have not the doctrine and life of Christ. Traditions and legends are not apostolic doctrines; and showy ceremonies, are not the life of God in the soul of man.

4. Religion has no need of human ornaments or trappings; it shines by its own light, and is refulgent with its own glory. Where it is not in life and power, men have endeavoured to produce a specious image, dressed and ornamented with their own hands. Into this, God never breathed, therefore it can do no good to man, and only imposes on the ignorant and credulous, by a vain show of lifeless pomp and splendour. This phantom called true religion, and the church, by its votaries, is in heaven denominated vain superstition; the speechless symbol of departed piety.

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. For this cause] Because he maintained that the Gentiles were admitted to all the privileges of the Jews, and all the blessings of the New Covenant, without being obliged to submit to circumcision, the Jews persecuted him, and caused him to be imprisoned, first at Cæsarea, where he was obliged to appeal to the Roman emperor, in consequence of which he was sent prisoner to Rome. See Acts xxi. 21—23, &c.

The prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles] For preaching the Gospel to the Gentiles, and showing that they were not bound by the law of Moses, and yet were called to be fellow-citizens with the saints; for this very cause the Jews persecuted him unto bonds, and conspired his death.

Verse 2. If ye have heard of the dispensation] The compound participle εἰ, which is commonly translated if indeed, in several places means since indeed, seeing that, and should be translated ted so in this verse, and in several other places of the New Testament, Seeing ye have heard of the dispensation of God, which is given me to you-ward: this they had amply learnt from the apostle, during his stay at Ephesus, for he had not shunned to declare unto them the whole counsel of God, Acts xx. 27. and kept nothing back that was profitable to them, ibid. v. 20. And this was certainly among those things that were most profitable, and most necessary to be known.

By the dispensation of the grace of God we may understand either the apostolic office and gifts granted to St. Paul, for the purpose of preaching the Gospel among the Gentiles; see Rom. i. 5. or the knowledge which God gave him of that gracious and divine plan which he had formed for the conversion of the Gentiles. For the meaning of the word economy, see the note chap. i. 10.

several others; both the Syriac, Coptic, Slavonic, Vulgate, and Itala; with Clemens, Cyril, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Damascenus, and others: it is doubtless the true reading.

The apostle wishes the Ephesians to understand that it was not an opinion of his own, or a doctrine which he was taught by others, or which he had gathered from the ancient prophets; but one that came to him by immediate revelation from God: as he had informed them before, in a few words, referring to what he had said, chap. 1. 9—12.

Verse 4. Whereby, when ye read] When ye refer back to them.

Ye may understand my knowledge] Ye may see what God has given me to know concerning what has been hitherto a mystery, the calling of the Gentiles, and the breaking down the middle wall between them and the Jews, so as to make both one spiritual body; and on the same conditions.

Verse 5. Which in other ages was not made known] That the calling of the Gentiles was made known by the prophets, in different ages of the Jewish church, is exceedingly clear; but it certainly was not made known in that clear and precise manner in which it was now revealed by the Spirit, unto the ministers of the New Testament: nor was it made known unto them at all, that the Gentiles should find salvation without coming under the yoke of the Mosaic law; and that the Jews themselves should be freed from that yoke of bondage. These were discoveries totally new, and now revealed for the first time by the Spirit of God.

Verse 6. That the Gentiles should be fellow-heirs] This is the substance of that mystery which had been hidden from all ages, and which was now made known to the New Testament apostles and prophets; and more particularly to St. Paul.

His promise in Christ] That the promise made to Abraham, extended to the Gentiles, the apostle has largely proved in his epistle to the Romans; and that it was to be fulfilled to them, by and through Christ, he proves there also; and particularly in his Epistle to the Galatians. See Galat. iii. 14. And that these blessings were to be announced in the preaching of the Gospel, and received on believing it, he every where declares, but more especially in this epistle.

Verse 8. Less than the least of all saints] Ἐλαχιστοτέρων πάντων ἁγίων. As the design of the apostle was to magnify the grace of Christ in the salvation of the world, he uses every precaution to prevent the eyes of the people from being turned to any thing but Christ crucified: and, although he was obliged to speak of himself as the particular instrument which God had chosen to bring the Gentile world to the knowledge of the truth; yet he does it in such a manner, as to show that the excellency of the power was of God, and not of him: and that, highly as he and his fellow-apostles were honoured, they had the heavenly treasure in earthen vessels. To lay himself as low as possible, consistently with his being in the number of divinely commissioned men, he calls himself less than the least; and is obliged to make a new word, by strangely forming a comparative degree, not from the positive, which would have been a regular grammatical procedure, but from the superlative. The adjective ελαχυς, signifies little, ελασσων, or ελαττων, less, and ελαχιστος, least. On this latter, which is the superlative of ελαχυς, little, St. Paul forms his comparative ελαχιστοτερος, less than the least; a word, of which it would be vain to attempt a better translation than that given in our own version. It most strongly marks the unparalleled humility of the apostle; and the amazing condescension of God, in favouring him who had been before a persecutor and blasphemer, with the knowledge of this glorious scheme of human redemption; and the power to preach it so successfully among the Gentiles.

The unsearchable riches of Christ] The word ἀνεξιχνίαστος, from α, privative, and ἔξιχνιαζω, to trace out, from ἵχνος, a step, is exceedingly well chosen here: it refers to the footsteps of God, the plans he had formed, the dispensations which he had published, and the innumerable providences which he had combined to prepare, mature, and bring to full effect and view, his grascious designs in the salvation of a ruined world, by the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of his Son. There were in these schemes and providences such riches, such an abundance, such a variety, as could not be comprehended even by the naturally vast, and, through the Divine inspiration, unparallelodly capacious mind of the apostle.

Yet, he was to proclaim among the Gentiles these astonishing wonders and mysteries of grace; and as he proceeds in this great and glorious work, the Holy Spirit that dwelt in him, opens to his mind more and more of those riches; leads him into those footsteps of the Almighty which could not be investigated by man nor angel; so that his preaching and epistles, taken all in their chronological order, will prove that his views brighten, and his discoveries become more numerous, and more distinct, in proportion as he advances. And had he lived, preached, and written to this present day, he had not exhausted the subject, nor fully declared to the Gentiles, the unsearchable riches of Christ; the endless depth of wisdom and knowledge treasured up in him; and the infinity of saving acts, and saving power, displayed by him.

Verse 9. And to make all men see] και φωτισαι παντας, and to illuminate all; to give information both to Jews and Gentiles; to afford them a sufficiency of light, so that they might be able distinctly to discern the great objects exhibited in this Gospel.

What is the fellowship of the mystery] The word κοινωνια, which we properly translate fellowship, was used among the Greeks, to signify their religious communities; here it may intimate the association of the Jews and Gentiles in one church or body; and their agreement in that glorious mystery which was now so fully opened relative to the salvation of both. But instead of κοινωνια, fellowship, οικονομια, dispensation, or economy, is the reading of ABCDEFG, and more than fifty others; both the Syriac, Coptic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Slavonian, Vulgate, and Itala, with the chief of the Greek Fathers. Some of the best printed editions of the Greek text have the same reading; and that in our common text has very little authority to support it. Dispensation or economy, is far more congenial to the scope of the apostle's declaration in this place; he wished to show them the economy of that mystery of bringing Jews and Gentiles to salvation by faith in Christ Jesus, which God, from the beginning of the world, had kept hidden in his own infinite mind; and did not think proper to reveal it, even when he projected the creation of the world, which had respect to the economy of human redemption. And although the world was made by Jesus Christ, the great Redeemer; yet at that period, this revelation of the power of God, the design of saving men, whose fall infinite wisdom had foreseen, was not then revealed.

Who created all things by Jesus Christ] Some very judicious critics are of opinion that this does not refer to the material creation; and that we should understand the whole as referring to the formation of all God's dispensations of grace, mercy, and truth; which have been planned, managed, and executed by Christ from the foundation of the world to the present time. But the words δια του Χριστου, by Jesus Christ, are wanting in ABCD*FG, and several others; also in the Syriac, Arabic of Erpen, Coptic, Ethiopic, Vulgate, and Itala; as also in several of the Fathers. Griesbach has thrown the words out of the text, and Professor White says, "certissimè delenda," they are indisputably spurious. The text therefore should be read, Which from the beginning of the world had been hidden in God, who created all things. No inferiority of Christ can be argued from a clause of whose spuriousness there is the strongest evidence.

Verse 10. That now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places] Who are these principalities and powers? Some think evil angels are intended, because they are thus denominated, chap. vi. 12. Others think good angels are meant; for, as these heavenly beings are curious to investigate the wondrous economy of the Gospel, though they are, not its immediate objects, see 1 Pet. i. 12. it is quite consistent with the goodness of God, to give them that satisfaction which they require. And in this discovery of the Gospel plan of salvation, which reconciles things in heaven and things in earth, both men and angels, these pure spirits are greatly interested, and their praises to the Divine Being rendered much more abundant. Others imagine the Jewish rulers and rabbins are intended, particularly those of them which were converted to Christianity, and who had now learnt from the preaching of the Gospel, what, as Jews, they could never have known. I have had several opportunities of showing, that this sort of phraseology is frequent among the Jews; and indeed not seldom used in the New Testament. Dr. Macknight, whose mode of arguing against this opinion, is not well chosen, supposes, that "the different orders of angels in heaven are intended; whose knowledge of God's dispensations must be as gradual as the dispensations themselves: consequently, their knowledge of the manifold wisdom of God must have been greatly increased by the constitution of the Christian church." Of this there can be no doubt, whether the terms in the text refer to them or not.

By the church] That is, by the Christians; and by the wonderful things done in the church; and by the apostles who were its pastors.

The manifold wisdom of God] Ἡ πολυποικιλία σοφίας, that multifarious, and greatly diversified wisdom of God; laying great and infinite plans, and accomplishing them by endless means, through the whole lapse of ages; making every occurrence subservient to the purposes of his infinite mercy and goodness. God's gracious design to save a lost world, by Jesus Christ, could not be defeated by any cunning, skill, or malice of man or devils: whatever hindrances are thrown in the way, His wisdom and power can remove; and his infinite wisdom can never want ways or means to effect its gracious designs.

Verse 11. According to the eternal purpose] Κατὰ πρόθεσιν τῶν αἰώνων, according to the purpose concerning the periods. This seems to refer to the complete round of the Jewish system, and to that of the Gospel. I have often observed that, though the proper grammatical meaning of the word is everduring, or endless duration; yet it is often applied to those systems, periods, governments, &c. which have a complete duration, taking in the whole of them, from their commencement to their termination; leaving nothing of their duration unembraced. So here, God purposed that the Jewish dispensation should commence at such a time, and terminate at such a time: that the Gospel dispensation should commence when the Jewish ended, and terminate only with time itself; and that the results of both should be endless.—This is probably what is meant by the above phrase.

Which he purposed in Christ Jesus] Ἡ ἐπινοήσ, which he made or constituted, in or for Christ Jesus. The manifestation of Christ, and the glory which should follow, were the grand objects which God kept in view, in all his dispensations.

Verse 12. In whom we have boldness] By whom we, Gentiles, have τῆν ἐλευθερίαν, this liberty of speech; so that we may say any thing by prayer and supplication; and τῆν προσέγγισιν, this introduction, into the Divine presence, by faith in Christ. It is only in his name we can pray to God; and it is only by him that we can come to God: none can give us an introduction but Christ Jesus; and it is only for his sake that God will either hear or save us. It is on the ground of such scriptures as these, that we conclude all our prayers in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Verse 13. I desire that ye faint not] In those primitive times, when there was much persecution, people were in continual danger of falling away from the faith, who were not well grounded in it. This the apostle deprecates, and advances a strong reason why they should be firm—"I suffered my present imprisonment, on account of demonstrating your privileges, of which the Jews were envious: I bear my afflictions patiently, knowing that what I have advanced is of God, and thus I give ample proof of the sincerity of my own conviction. The sufferings, therefore, of your apostle are honourable to you and to your cause; and far from being any cause why you should faint, or draw back like cowards, in the day of distress, they should be an additional argument to induce you to persevere."

Verse 14. For this cause I bow my knees] That they might not faint, but persevere, I frequently pray to God, who is our God, and the Father of our Lord Jesus. Some very ancient and excellent MSS. and Versions, omit the words τῷ Κυρίῳ ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστῷ, of our Lord Jesus Christ. And in them the passage reads, I bow my knees unto the Father. The apostle prays to God the Father, that they may not faint; and he bows his knees in this praying. What can any man think of himself, who, in his addresses to God, can either sit on his seat, or stand in the presence of the Maker and Judge of all men! Would they sit while addressing any person of ordinary respectability? If they did so, they would be reckoned very rude indeed. Would they sit in the presence of the king of their own land? They would not be permitted so to do. Is God then to be treated with less respect than a fellow-mortal? Paul kneeled in praying, Acts xx. 36. xxi. 5. Stephen kneeled when he was stoned, Acts vii. 59. And Peter kneeled when he raised Tabitha, Acts ix. 40.

Many parts of this prayer bear a strict resemblance to that offered up by Solomon, 2 Chron. vi. 1, &c. when dedicating the temple, he kneeled down upon his knees before all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands towards heaven, 2 Chron. vi. 13. The apostle was now dedicating the Christian church that then was, and that ever should be, to God; and praying for those blessings which should ever rest on, and distinguish it; and he kneels down after the example of Solomon, and invokes him to whom the first temple was dedicated; and who had made it a type of the Gospel church.

Verse 15. Of whom the whole family] Believers in the Lord Jesus Christ on earth; the spirits of just men made perfect, in a separate state; and all the holy angels in heaven, make but one family, of which God is the Father and Head. St. Paul does not say of whom the families, as if each order formed a distinct household; but he says family, because they are all one, and of one. And all this family is named, derives its origin and being, from God, as children derive their name from him who is the father of the family: holy persons in heaven and earth derive their being and their holiness from God, and therefore his name is called upon them. Christ gives the name of Christians to all the real members of his church upon earth; and to all the spirits of just men, (saved since his advent, and through his blood,) in heaven. They are all the sons and daughters of God Almighty.

Verse 16. That he would grant you] This prayer of the apostle is one of the most grand and sublime in the whole oracles of God. The riches of the grace of the Gospel, and the extent to which the soul of man may be saved here below, are most emphatically pointed out here. Every word seems to have come immediately from heaven; labouring to convey ideas of infinite importance to mankind. No paraphrase can do it justice, and few commentators seem to have entered into its spirit; perhaps deterred by its unparalleled sublimity. I shall only attempt a few observations upon the terms, to show their force and meaning; and leave all the rest to that Spirit by which these most important words were dictated.

That he would grant you—You can expect nothing from him but as a free gift through Christ Jesus: let this be a ruling sentiment of your hearts when you pray to God.

According to the riches of his glory] According to the measure of his own eternal fulness; God's infinite mercy and goodness being the measure according to which we are to be saved. In giving alms, it is a maxim that every one should act according to his ability. It would be a disgrace to a king or a nobleman, to give no more than a tradesman or a peasant. God acts up to the dignity of his infinite perfections; He gives according to the riches of his glory.

To be strengthened with might] Ye have many enemies, cunning and strong; many trials, too great for your natural strength; many temptations, which no human power is able successfully to resist; many duties to perform, which cannot be accomplished by the strength of man; therefore you need Divine strength; ye must have might; and ye must be strengthened every where, and every way fortified by that might: mightily, and most effectually strengthened.

By his Spirit] By the sovereign energy of the Holy Ghost. This fountain of spiritual energy can alone supply the spiritual strength which is necessary for this spiritual work and conflict.

In the inner man] In the soul. Every man is a compound being: he has a body and a soul. The outward man is that alone which is seen and considered by men; the inward man is that which stands particularly in reference to God and eternity. The outward man is strengthened by earthly food, &c. the inward man, by spiritual and heavenly influences. Knowledge, love, peace, and holiness are the food of the inward man; or rather Jesus Christ, that bread of life which came down from heaven: he that eateth this bread, shall live and be strengthened by it. The soul must be as truly fed, and nourished by Divine food, as the body by natural food.

Verse 17. That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith] In this, as well as in many other passages, and particularly that in chap. ii. 21. where see the note, the apostle compares the body or church of true believers to a temple, which, like that of Solomon, is built up to be a habitation of God through the Spirit. Here, as Solomon did at the dedication of the temple at Jerusalem, 2 Chron. vi. 1, &c. Paul having considered the church at Ephesus completely formed, as to every external thing, prays that God may come down and dwell in it. And as there could be no indwelling of God but by Christ, and no indwelling of Christ but by faith, he prays that they may have such faith in Christ, as shall keep them in constant possession of his love and presence. God, at the beginning, formed man to be his temple; and while in a state of purity, he inhabited this temple: when the temple became defiled, God left it. In the order of his eternal mercy, Christ, the repairer of the breach, comes to purify the temple, that it may again become a fit habitation for the blessed God. This is what the apostle points out to the believing Ephesians, in praying that Christ enrouais, might intensely, and constantly dwell in their hearts by faith; for the man's heart, which is not God's house, must be a hold of every foul and unclean spirit; as Satan and his angels will endeavour to fill what God does not.

That ye, being rooted and grounded in love] Here is a double metaphor, one taken from agriculture, the other from architecture. As trees, they are to be rooted in love; this is the soil on which their souls are to grow: into the infinite love of God, their souls, by faith, are to strike their roots; and, from this love, derive all that nourishment which is essential for their full growth, till they have the mind in them that was in Jesus; or, as it is afterward said, till they are filled with all the fulness of God. As a building, their foundation is to be laid in this love. God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, &c. Here is the ground on which alone the soul, and all its hopes and expectations, can be safely founded. This is a foundation that cannot be shaken; and it is from this alone that the doctrine of redemption flows to man; and from this alone has the soul its form and comeliness. In this, as its proper soil, it grows. On this, as its only foundation, it rests.

Verse 18. May be able to comprehend with all saints] ἵνα ἐπιγνοῦσι καταλάβουσι: these words are so exceedingly nervous, and full of meaning, that it is almost impossible to translate them. The first word ἐπιγνοῦσι, from ἐπι, intensive, and γνῶσι, to be strong, signifies that they might be thoroughly able, by having been strengthened with might, by God's power. The second word, καταλάβουσι, from κατα, intensive, and λαμβάνω, to take, catch, or seize on, may be translated, that ye may fully catch, take in, and comprehend, this wonderful mystery of God. The mind must be rendered apt, and the soul invigorated, to take in, and comprehend, these mysteries.

What is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height] Here the apostle still keeps up the metaphor, comparing the church of God to a building; and, as in order to rear a proper building, formed on scientific principles, a ground plan and specification must be previously made, according to which the building is to be constructed; the apostle refers to this, for this must be thoroughly understood, without which the building could not be formed. They were to be builded up a heavenly house, a habitation of God through the Spirit; and this must have its latitude or breadth: its longitude, or length; its altitude, or height; and its profundity, or depth.

It is supposed by some, that the apostle is here alluding to the famous temple of Diana, at Ephesus; which, as I have already had occasion to remark, was reputed one of the wonders of the world, being in length 425 feet; in breadth 220: it was supported by 107 pillars, each 60 feet high; was builded at the expense of all Asia; and was 250 years in being completed. I cannot, however, allow of this allusion, while the apostle had a nobler model at hand; and one every way more worthy of being brought into the comparison. The temple of Jerusalem was that alone which he had in view: that alone could be fitly compared here; for that was built to be a habitation of God; that was His house, and that the place of His rest: so the Christian temple, and the believing heart, are to be the constant, the endless residence of God: and how august must that edifice be, in which the eternal Trinity dwells!

But what can the apostle mean by the breadth, length, depth, and height, of the love of God? Imagination can scarcely frame any satisfactory answer to this question. It takes in the eternity of God. God is LOVE; and in that, an infinity of breadth, length, depth, and height, is included; or rather all breadth, length, depth, and height, are lost in this immensity. It comprehends all that is above, all that is below; all that is past, and all that is to come. In reference to human beings, the love of God, in its BREADTH, is a girdle that encompasses the globe; its LENGTH reaches, from the eternal purpose of the mission of Christ, to the eternity of blessedness, which is to be spent in his ineffable glories; its DEPTH reaches to the lowest fallen of the sons of Adam, and to the deepest depravity of the human heart; and its HEIGHT to the infinite dignities of the throne of Christ. He that overcometh will I give to sit down with me upon my throne, as I have overcome, and sat down with my Father upon his throne. Thus we see, that the Father, the Son, and all true believers in Him, are to be seated on the same throne! This is the height of the love of God; and the height to which that love raises the souls that believe in Christ Jesus!

Verse 19. To know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge] It is only by the love of Christ that we can know the love of God: the love of God to man induced him to give Christ for his redemption: Christ's love to man induced him to give his life's blood for his salvation. The gift of Christ to man, is the measure of God's love; the death of Christ for man, is the measure of Christ's love. God so loved the world, &c. Christ loved us, and gave himself for us.

But how can the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, be known? Many have laboured to reconcile this seeming contradiction. If we take the verb γινώσκω in a sense in which it is frequently used in the New Testament, to approve, acknowledge, or acknowledge with approbation; and γινώσκω, to signify comprehension; then the difficulty will be partly removed.—“That ye may acknowledge, approve, and publicly acknowledge, that love of God which surpasseth knowledge.” We can acknowledge, and approve, of that which surpasses our comprehension. We cannot comprehend God; yet we can know that he is; approve of, love, adore, and serve him. In like manner, though we cannot comprehend the immensity of the love of Christ, yet we know that he has loved us, and washed us from our sins, in his own blood; and we approve of, and acknowledge Him, as our only Lord and Saviour. In this sense we may be said to know the love of Christ that passeth knowledge.

But it is more likely that the word γινώσκω, which we translate knowledge, signifies here science in general, and particularly that science of which the rabbins boasted; and that in which the Greeks greatly exulted. The former professed to have the key of knowledge, the secret of all Divine mysteries; the latter, considered their philosophers, and their systems of philosophy, superior to every thing that had ever been known among men; and reputed, on this account, all other nations as barbarians. When the apostle prays that they may know the love of God which passeth knowledge, he may refer to all the boasted knowledge of the Jewish doctors; and to all the greatly extolled science of the Greek philosophers. To know the love of Christ, infinitely surpasseth all other science.—This gives a clear and satisfactory sense.

That ye might be filled with all the fulness of God.] Among all the great sayings in this prayer, this is the greatest. To be filled with God, is a great thing; to be filled with the fulness of God, is still greater; but to be filled with ALL the fulness of God, πᾶν τὸ πλῆθος τοῦ Θεοῦ, utterly bewilders the sense, and confounds the understanding.

Most people, in quoting these words, endeavour to correct or explain the apostle, by adding the word communicable; but this is as idle as it is useless and impertinent. The apostle means what he says; and would be understood in his own meaning. By the fulness of God, we are to understand all those gifts and graces which he has promised to bestow on man; and which he dispenses to the church. To be filled with all the fulness of God, is to have the whole soul filled with meekness, gentleness, goodness, love, justice, holiness, mercy, and truth. And, as what God fills, neither sin nor Satan can fill; consequently, it implies that the soul shall be emptied of sin; that sin shall neither have dominion over it, nor a being in it. It is impossible for us to understand these words in a lower sense than this. But how much more they imply, (for, more they do imply.) I cannot tell. As there is no end to the merits of Christ, no bounds to the mercy and love of God, no limits to the improveability of the human soul; so there can be no bounds set to the saving influence which God will dispense to the heart of every believer. We may ask, and we shall receive; and our joy shall be full.

Verse 20. Now unto him] Having finished his short, but most wonderfully comprehensive and energetic prayer, the apostle brings in his doxology, giving praise to Him from whom all blessings come, and to whom all thanks are due.

That is able to do exceeding abundantly] It is impossible to express the full meaning of these words. God is omnipotent, therefore, he is able to do all things; and able to do ἄνωγ' ἢ ὑπερῶν, superabundantly above the greatest abundance. And who can doubt this, who has any rational or scriptural views of his power or his love?

All that we ask or think] We can ask every good of which we have heard; every good which God has promised in his word; and we can think of, or imagine, goods and blessings beyond all that we have either seen or read. Yea, we can imagine, good things to which it is impossible for us to give a name; we can go beyond the limits of all human descriptions; we can imagine more than even God has specified in his word: and can feel no bounds to our imagination of good, but impossibility and eternity. And after power that worketh in us,

21 ^e Unto him be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

all, God is able to do more for us than we can ask or think: and his ability here is so necessarily connected with his willingness, that the one indisputably implies the other; for, of what consequence would it be to tell the church of God, that he had power to do so and so, if there were not implied an assurance that he will do what his power can, and what the soul of man needs to have done?

According to the power that worketh in us] All that he can do, and all that he has promised to do, will be done according to what he has done; by that power of the Holy Ghost, τῆς ἁγιοῦ πνεύματος, which worketh strongly in us; acts with energy in our hearts, expelling evil, purifying and refining the affections and desires, and implanting good.

Verse 21. Unto him] Thus possessed of power and goodness, be glory in the church, be unceasing praises ascribed in all the assemblies of the people of God, wherever these glad tidings are preached; and wherever this glorious doctrine shall be credited.

By Christ Jesus] Through whom, and for whom, all these miracles of mercy and power are wrought.

Throughout all ages] Εἰς πάντας τὰς γενεάς, through all succeeding generations; while the race of human beings continues to exist on the face of the earth.

World without end] Τοῦ αἰῶνος τὸν αἰῶνα, throughout eternity; in the coming world, as well as in this. The song of praise begun upon earth, and protracted through all the generations of men; shall be continued in heaven, by all that are redeemed from the earth, where eras, limits, and periods, are no more for ever.

Amen.] So be it! So let it be! and so it will be: for, all the counsels of God are faithfulness and truth: and not one jot or tittle of his promise has failed, from the foundation of the world to the present day; nor can fail, till mortality is swallowed up of life:

Therefore, to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, be glory, dominion, power, and thanksgiving; now, henceforth, and for ever.—Amen and Amen.

1. For the great importance of the matter contained in this chapter, and the sublimity of the language and conceptions, there is no portion of the New Testament equal to this. The apostle was now shut up in prison, but the word of the Lord was not bound: and the kingdom of God seems to have been opened to him in a most astonishing manner. There seems to have been exhibited to him a plan of the Divine counsels and conduct, relative to the salvation of man, before, and from the foundation of the world, to the end of time: and while, with the eye of his mind, he contemplates this plan, he describes it in language at once the most elevated that can be conceived; and every where dignified and appropriate to his subject; so that he may with safety be compared with the finest of the Grecian writers. In the notes, I have already observed how hard it is to give any literal translation of the many compound epithets which the apostle uses. Indeed his own nervous language seems to bend and tremble under the weight of the Divine ideas which it endeavours to express. This is most observable in the prayer and doxology which are contained in verses 14—21. A passage in Thucydides, lib. vii. cap. lxxxvii. in fine, where he gives an account of the total overthrow of the Athenian general Nicias, and his whole army, by the Sicilians, has been compared with this of the apostle; it is truly a grand piece, and no reader can be displeas'd with its introduction here—ζυνέει τε ἄγχι τοῦτο Ἑλληνικῶν τῶν κατὰ τον πολεμῶν τοῦδ' ἄριστος γινώσθαι—καὶ τοῖς τε κρατισταῖς λαμπροτατοῖς, καὶ τοῖς διαθαρμῶσι δυναχιστατοῖς κατὰ πάντα γὰρ πάντως ἰκνηθῆναι, καὶ οὐδὲν ὀλεθρὸν οὐδὲν κακοπαθῆσαντες, πανωλεθρία δὲ, το ληρομῶνον, καὶ πῆξος καὶ νῆξος, καὶ οὐδὲν ὅ, τε οὐκ ἀπώλετο· καὶ ὀλεθρὸν ἀπὸ πολλῶν ἐν οἴκῳ ἀνεπίσταν.—“This was the greatest discomfiture which the Greeks sustained during the whole of this war; and was as brilliant to the conquerors, as it was calamitous to the vanquished. In every respect they were totally defeated; and they suffered no small evil in every particular; the destruction was universal, both of army and navy; there was nothing that did not perish: and scarcely any, out of vast multitudes, returned to their own homes.”

The learned may compare the two passages; and while due credit is given to the splendid Greek historian, no critic will deny the palm to the inspired writer.

2. With such portions of the word of God before us, how is it that we can be said conscientiously to credit the doctrines of Christianity, and live satisfied with such slender attainments in the Divine life! Can any man that pleads for the necessary and degrading continuance of indwelling sin, believe what the apostle has written? Can we, who profess to believe it, be excusable, and live under the influence of any temper or passion that does not belong to the mind of Christ? Will it be said in answer, that “this is only a prayer of the apostle; and contains his wish from the overflowings of his heart, for the spiritual prosperity of the Ephesians.” Was the apostle inspired or not, when he penned this prayer? If he were not inspired, the prayer makes no part of Divine revelation; if he were inspired, every petition is tantamount to a positive promise: for, what God inspires the heart to pray for, that, God purposes to bestow. Then, it is his will that all these blessings should be enjoyed by his true followers; that Christ should inhabit their hearts; and that they should be filled with all the fulness of God; yea, and that God should do for them more abundantly than they can ask or think. This necessarily implies that they should be saved from all sin, inward and outward in this life: that the thoughts of their hearts should be cleansed by the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit, that they may perfectly love Him, and worthily magnify his holy Name.

As sin is the cause of the ruin of mankind, the Gospel system which is its cure, is called good news, or glad tidings: and it is good news because it proclaims Him who saves his people from their sins. It would be dishonourable to the grace of Christ, to suppose that sin had made wounds which it could not heal.

CHAPTER IV.

The apostle exhorts them to walk worthy of their vocation, and to live in peace and unity, 1—6. Shows that God has distributed a variety of gifts, and instituted a variety of offices in his church, for the building up and perfecting of the body of Christ, 7—13. Teaches them the necessity of being well instructed and steady in Divine things, 14. Teaches how the body, or church, of Christ is constituted, 15, 16. Warns them against acting like the Gentiles, of whose conduct he gives a lamentable description, 17—19. Points out how they had been changed, in consequence of their conversion to Christianity, 20, 21. Gives various exhortations relative to the purification of their minds; their conduct to each other, and to the poor, 22—28. Shows them that their conversation should be chaste and holy, that they might not grieve the Spirit of God; that they should avoid all bad tempers, be kindly affectioned one to another, and be of a forgiving spirit, 29—32.

can show forth the virtues of Him who called you into his marvellous light; I am in bondage, and can only exhort others by my writing; and show my submission to God by my patient suffering.

The vocation wherewith ye are called] The calling, κλησις, is the free invitation they have had from God, to receive the privileges of the Gospel; and become his sons and daughters without being obliged to observe Jewish rites and ceremonies. Their vocation, or calling, took in their Christian profession, with all the doctrines, precepts, privileges, duties, &c. of the Christian religion.

Among us, a man's calling signifies his trade, or occupation in life; that at which he works, and by which he gets his bread; and it is termed his calling, because it is supposed, that God, in the course of his providence, calls the person to be thus employed; and thus to acquire his livelihood. Now, as it is a very poor calling by which a man cannot live; so it is a poor religion by which a man cannot get his soul saved. If, however, a man have an honest and useful trade, and employ himself diligently in labouring at it, he will be surely able to maintain himself by it: but, without care, attention, and industry, he is not likely to get, even by this providential calling, the necessaries of life. In like manner, if a man do not walk worthy of his heavenly calling, i. e. suitable to its prescriptions, spirit and design, he is not likely to get his soul saved unto eternal life. The best trade, unpractised, will not support any man: the most pure and holy religion of the Lord Jesus, unapplied, will save no soul. Many suppose, because they have a sound faith, that all is safe and well: as well might the mechanic, who knows he has a good trade, and that he understands the principles of it well, suppose it will maintain him, though he brings none of its principles into action, by honest, assiduous, and well-directed labour.

Some suppose that the calling refers to the epithets usually given to the Christians; such as, children of Abraham, children of God, true Israel of God, heirs of God, saints, fellow citizens with the saints, &c. And that these honourable appellations must be a strong excitement to the Ephesians, to walk worthy of these exalted characters. But I do not find that the word κλησις calling, is taken in this sense any where in the New Testament; but that it has the meaning which I have given it above, is evident, from 1 Cor. vii. 20. Εκαστος εν τη κλησει η ελευθει, η ταυτη μενηται: Let every man abide in the calling to which he hath been called. The context shows that condition, employment, or business of life, is that to which the apostle refers.

4 There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling;

Verse 2. With all lowliness] It is by acting as the apostle here directs, that a man wales worthy of this high vocation: ταπεινωσιν signifies subjection, or humility of mind.

Meekness] The opposite to anger, and irritability of disposition.

Long-suffering] Μακροθυμια, long-mindedness; never permitting a trial or provocation to get to the end of your patience.

Forbearing one another] Ανιχομενι αλληλων, sustaining one another; helping to support each other in all the miseries and trials of life: or, if the word be taken in the sense of bearing with each other, it may mean that, through the love of God working in our hearts, we should bear with each other's infirmities, ignorance, &c. knowing how much others have been, or are still obliged to bear with us.

Verse 3. Endeavouring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace] There can be no doubt that the church at Ephesus was composed partly of converted Jews, as well as Gentiles. Now, from the different manner in which they had been brought up, there might be frequent causes of altercation. Indeed the Jews, though converted, might be envious, that the Gentiles were admitted to the same glorious privileges with themselves, without being initiated into them by bearing the yoke and burden of the Mosaic law. The apostle guards them against this, and shows them that they should intensely labour, for so the word σπουδαζω implies, to promote and preserve peace and unity. By the unity of the Spirit, we are to understand not only a spiritual unity, but also a unity of sentiments, desires, and affections; such as is worthy of, and springs from, the Spirit of God. By the bond of peace, we are to understand a peace or union, where the interests of all parties are concentrated, cemented and sealed: the Spirit of God being the seal upon this knot.

Verse 4. There is one body] Viz. of Christ, which is his church.

One Spirit] The Holy Ghost, who animates this body.

One hope] Of everlasting glory; to which glory ye have been called by the preaching of the Gospel; through which ye have become the body of Christ, instinct with the energy of the Holy Ghost.

Verse 5. One Lord] Jesus Christ, who is the governor of this church.

One faith] One system of religion, proposing the same objects to the faith of all.

One baptism] Administered in the name of the Holy Trinity; indicative of the influences, privileges and effects of the Christian religion.

Verse 6. One God] The fountain of all being, self-existent and eternal; and Father of all, both Jews and Gentiles; because he is the Father of the spirits of all flesh.

Who is above all] Ὁ ἐπὶ πάντων, who is over all; as the King of kings, and Lord of lords.

And through all] Pervading every thing; being present with every thing; providing for all creatures; and, by his energy, supporting all things.

And in you all.] By the energy of his Spirit, enlightening, quickening, purifying and comforting; in a word, making your hearts the temples of the Holy Ghost. Some think the mystery of the blessed Trinity is contained in this verse: God is over all as Father: through all, by the Logos or Word; and in all, by the Holy Spirit.

Verse 7. Unto every one of us is given grace] Grace may here signify a particular office: as if the apostle had said, though we are all equal in the respects already mentioned, yet we have all different offices and situations to fill up in the church and in the world: and we receive a free gift from Christ, according to the nature of the office, that we may be able to discharge it according to his own mind. So the free gift, which we receive from Christ, is according to the office or function which he has given us to fulfil;
and the office is according to that free gift, each suited to the other.

Verse 8. Wherefore he saith] The reference seems to be to Psal. lxxviii. 18. which, however it may speak of the removal of the tabernacle; appears to have been intended to point out the glorious ascension of Christ after his resurrection from the dead. The expositions of various commentators have made the place extremely difficult. I shall not trouble my reader with them;
they may be seen in Rosenmüller.

When he ascended up on high] The whole of this verse, as it stands in the Psalm, seems to refer to a military triumph. Take the following paraphrase; Thou hast ascended on high: the conqueror was placed in a very elevated chariot.
Thou hast led captivity captive: the conquered kings and generals were usually bound behind the chariot of the conqueror, to grace the triumph. Thou hast received (Paul, given) gifts to men: at such times, the conqueror was wont to throw money among the crowd. Even to the rebellious: those who had fought against him, now submit unto him, and share his munificence; for it is the property of a hero to be generous, and gave gifts unto men.

generous. That the Lord God might dwell among them: the conqueror being now come to fix his abode in the conquered provinces, and subdue the people to his laws.

All this the apostle applies to the resurrection, ascension and glory of Christ; though it has been doubted by some learned men, whether the Psalmist had this in view. I shall not dispute about this; it is enough for me that the apostle, under the inspiration of God, applied the verse in this way: and whatever David might intend, and of whatever event he might have written, we see plainly that the sense in which the apostle uses it, was the sense of the Spirit of God: for the Spirit, in the Old and New Testaments, is the same. I may venture a short criticism on a few words in the original.

Thou hast received gifts for men, לָקַחְתָּ לְאָדָם lakachta mattanoth baadam; thou hast taken gifts in man, in Adam. The gifts which Jesus Christ distributes to man, he has received in man, in and by virtue of his incarnation; and it is in consequence of his being made man, that it may be said, The Lord God dwells among them; for Jesus was called Immanuel, God with us, in consequence of his incarnation. This view of the subject is consistent with the whole economy of grace: and suits well with the apostle's application of the words of the Psalmist in this place.

Verse 9. But that he also descended] The meaning of the apostle appears to be this: the person who ascended is the Messiah; and his ascension plainly intimates his descent; that is, his incarnation, humiliation, death and resurrection.

Verse 10. He that descended] And he who descended so low, is the same who has ascended so high. He came to the lower parts of the earth; the very deepest abasement, having emptied himself, taken upon him the form of servant, and humbled himself unto death, עָצָר, the death of the cross; now he is ascended high above all heavens; higher than all height. He has a name above every name. Here his descending into the lower parts of the earth, is put in opposition to his ascending far above all heavens. His abasement was unparalleled;
so also is his exaltation.

That he might fill all things.] That he might be the fountain whence all blessings might flow; dispensing all good things to all his creatures, according to their several capacities and necessities; and particularly fill, both converted Jews and Gentiles, with all the gifts and graces of his Holy Spirit; hence it follows—

Verse 11. He gave some, apostles] He established several offices in his church; furnished these with the proper officers; and, to qualify them for their work, gave them the proper gifts. For a full illustration of this verse, the reader is requested to refer to the notes on 1 Cor. chap. xii. 6—10, and 28—30, and to the concluding observations at the end of that chapter.

Verse 12. For the perfecting of the saints] For the complete instruction, purification, and union of all who have believed in Christ Jesus, both Jews and Gentiles. For the meaning of καταρτισμος; perfecting, see the note on 2 Cor. xiii. 9.

For the work of the ministry] All these various officers, and the gifts and graces conferred upon them, were judged necessary by the great Head of the church, for its full instruction in the important doctrines of Christianity. The same officers and gifts are still necessary; and God gives them, but they do not know their places. In most Christian churches there appears to be but one office, that of preacher; and one gift, that by which he professes to preach. The apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, and teachers, are all compounded in the class preachers; and many to whom God has given nothing but the gift of exhortation, take texts to explain them; and thus lose their time, and mar their ministry.

Edifying of the body] The body of Christ is his church; see chap. ii. 20; &c. and its edification consists in its thorough instruction in Divine things, and its being filled with faith and holiness.

Verse 13. In the unity of the faith] Jews and Gentiles being all converted according to the epistle being laid down in the faith, the Christian system.

The knowledge of the Son of God] A true understanding of the mystery of the incarnation; why God was manifest in the flesh, and why this was necessary in order to human salvation.

Unto a perfect man] Εἰς ἀνδρα τέλειον, one thoroughly instructed; the whole body of the church being fully taught, justified, sanctified, and sealed.

Measure of the stature] The full measure of knowledge, love, and holiness, which the Gospel of Christ requires. Many preachers, and multitudes of professing people, are studious to the measure of the ^l stature of the fulness of Christ :

14 That we henceforth be no more ^m children, ⁿ tossed to and fro, and carried about with every ^o wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men, and cunning craftiness; ^p whereby they lie in wait to deceive ;

find out how many imperfections and infidelities, and how much inward sinfulness, is consistent with a safe state in religion: but how few, very few, are bringing out the fair Gospel standard, to try the height of the members of the church; whether they be fit for the heavenly army; whether their stature be such as qualifies them for the ranks of the church militant! The measure of the stature of the fulness, is seldom seen; the measure of the stature of littleness, dwarfishness, and emptiness, is often exhibited.

Verse 14. Be no more children] Children here are opposed to the perfect man in the preceding verse; and the state of both is well explained by the apostle's allusions. The man is grown up, strong and healthy; and has attained such a measure, or height, as qualifies him for the most respectable place in the ranks of his country.

The child is ignorant, weak, and unsteady; tossed about in the nurse's arms; or whirled round in the giddy sports or mazes of youth: this seems to be the apostle's allusion. Being tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine, refers to some kind of ancient play, but what I cannot absolutely determine; probably to something similar to a top; or to our paper kite.

By the sleight of men] The words οἱ τῶν ἀνθρώπων, refer to the arts used by gamblers, who employ false dice, that will always throw up one kind of number, which is that, by which those who play with them cannot win.

Cunning craftiness] It is difficult to give a literal translation of the original words, οἱ πανουργοὶ καὶ πρὸς τὴν μεθοδίαν τῆς ψαλῆς; "by cunning, for the purpose of using the various means of deception." Πανουργία, signifies craft and subtlety in general; cheating and imposition: μεθοδία, from which we have our term method, signifies a wile, a particular sleight, mode of tricking and deceiving; it is applied to the arts which the devil uses, to deceive and destroy souls; see chap. vi. 11. called there the works of the devil. From this, it seems that various arts were used, both by the Greek sophists and the Judaizing teachers, to render the Gospel of none effect; or to adulterate and corrupt it.

Verse 15. But, speaking the truth in love] The truth recommended by the apostle, is the whole system of Gospel doctrine; this they are to teach and preach; and this is opposed to the deceit mentioned above. This truth, as it is the doctrine of God's eternal love to mankind, must be preached in love. Scolding, and abuse from the pulpit or press, in matters of religion, are truly monstrous. He who has the truth of God, has no need of any means to defend or propagate it, but those which love to God and man provides.

Grown up into him] This is a continuance of the metaphor taken from the members of a human body, receiving nourishment equally, and growing up, each in its due proportion to their parts, and to the body in general. The truth of God should be so preached to all the members of the church of God, that they may all receive an increase of grace and life; so that each, in whatever state he may be, may get forward in the way of truth and holiness. In the church of Christ, there are persons in various states, the careless, the penitent, the lukewarm, the tempted, the diffident, the little child, the young man, and the father. He who had got a talent for the edification of only one of those classes should not stay long in a place, else the whole body cannot grow up in all things under his ministry.

Verse 16. From whom the whole body] Dr. Macknight has a just view of this passage; and I cannot express my own in more suitable terms: "The apostle's meaning is, that as the human body is formed by the union of all the members to each other, under the head, and by the fitness of each member for its own office and place in the body: so the church is formed by the union of its members under Christ, the head. Further, as the human body increases till it arrives at maturity, by the energy of every part in performing its proper function; and by the sympathy of every part with the whole: so the body or church of Christ grows to maturity by the proper exercise of the gifts and graces of individuals for the benefit of the whole."

This verse is another proof of the wisdom and learning of the apostle. Not only the general ideas here are anatomical, but the whole phraseology is the same. The articulation of the bones, the composition and action of the muscles, the circulation of the juices, carrying nourishment to every part, and depositing some in every place, the energy of the system in keeping up all the functions, being particularly introduced, and the whole terminating in the general process of nutrition; increasing the body, and supplying all the waste that had taken place in consequence of labour, &c. Let any medical man who understands the apostle's language, take up this verse, and he will be convinced that the apostle had all these things in view. I am surprised that some of those who have looked for the discoveries of the moderns among the ancients, have not brought in the apostle's word επιχορηγίας, supply, from επιχορηγῶ, to lead up, lead along, minister supply, &c. as some proof that the circulation of the blood was not unknown to St. Paul!

Verse 17. Walk not as other Gentiles walk] Ye are called to holiness by the Gospel; the other Gentiles have no such calling; walk not as they walk. In this, and the two following verses, the apostle gives a most awful account of the conduct of the heathens who were without the knowledge of the true God. I shall note the particulars.

1. They walked in the vanity of their mind, ἡ ματαιότητι τῶν νοῦν αὐτῶν; in the foolishness of their mind: want of genuine wisdom, is that to which the apostle refers; and it was through this that the Gentiles became addicted to every species of idolatry: and they fondly imagined that they could obtain help from gods which were the work of their own hands! Here their foolishness was manifested.

2. Verse 18. Having the understanding darkened] This is the second instance alleged by the apostle, in the degradation of the Gentiles. Having no means of knowledge, the heart naturally dark, became more and more so by means of habitual transgression; every thing in the Gentile system having an immediate tendency to blind the eyes, and darken the whole soul.

3. Being alienated from the life of God] The original design of God was to live in man; and the life of God, in the soul of man, was that by which God intended to make man happy; and without which, true happiness was never found by any human spirit; from this, through the ignorance that was in them, διὰ τῆν ἀγνοίαν τῆν ὑμῶν, through the substantial, or continually existing ignorance, which there was nothing to instruct, nothing to enlighten. For the most accurate writings of their best philosophers left them entirely ignorant of the real nature of God. And if they had no correct knowledge of the true God, they could have no religion; and if no religion, no morality. Their moral state became so wretched that they are represented as abhorring every thing spiritual and pure, for this is the import of the word ἀπαλλοτριωμένοι, (which we translate alienated) in some of the best Greek writers. They abhorred every thing that had a tendency to lay any restraint on their vicious passions and inclinations.

4. Blindness of their heart] Δια τὰς ἁμαρτίας ; because of the callousness of their hearts. Cal- lous signifies a thickening of the outward skin of any particular part, especially on the hands and feet, by repeated exercise or use, through which such parts are rendered insensible. This may be metaphorically applied to the conscience of a sinner, which is rendered stupid and insensible by repeated acts of iniquity.

5. Verse 19. Who being past feeling] ὄντες ἀπαλψότες. The verb ἀπαλψω, signifies—1. To throw off all sense of shame, and to be utterly devoid of pain, for committing unrighteous acts.
2. To be desperate, having neither hope nor desire of reformation ; in a word, to be without remorse ; and to be utterly regardless of conduct, character, or final blessedness. Instead of ἀπαλ- ψότες, several excellent MSS. and Versions have ἀπαισθητοί, being without hope ; that is, persons who, from their manner of life in this world, could not possibly hope for blessedness in the world to come ; and who might feel it their interest to deny the resurrection of the body, and even the immortality of the soul.

6. Have given themselves over unto lascivious- ness] Lasciviousness, ἀσχημια, is here personified ; and the Gentiles in question are represented as having delivered themselves over to her jurisdiction. This is a true picture of the Gentile world : uncleanness, lechery, and debauchery of every kind, flourished among them without limit or restraint. Almost all their gods and goddesses were of this character.

7. To work all uncleanness with greediness] This is a complete finish of the most abandoned character ; to do an unclean act, is bad ; to labour in it, is worse : to labour in all uncleanness, is worse still : but to do all this, in every case, to the utmost extent, ἢ πλεονεξία, with a de- sire exceeding time, place, opportunity, and strength, is worst of all ; and leaves nothing more profligate, or more abandoned, to be described or imagined. Such was the state of the Gentiles before they were blessed with the light of the Gospel ; and such is the state of those nations who have not yet received the Gospel ; and such is the state of multitudes of those in Christian countries, who refuse to receive the Gospel ; endeavour to decry it, and to take refuge in the falsities of infidelity, against the testimony of eternal truth.

Verse 20. But ye have not so learned Christ] Ye have received the doctrines of Christianity, and therefore are taught differently : ye have received the Spirit of Christ, and therefore are saved from such dispositions. Some would point, and translate the original thus : Ἦστε δὲ οὐχ οὕτως : ὡς ἄλλοτε τοῦ Χριστοῦ. But ye are not thus ; ye have learned Christ.

Verse 21. If so be that ye have heard him] Ἦτε, Seeing that, since indeed, ye have heard us proclaim his eternal truth ; we have delivered it to you, as we received it from Jesus.

Verse 22. That ye put off] And this has been one especial part of our teaching, that ye should abandon all these, and live a life totally opposite to what it was before.

The old man] See the note on Rom. vi. 6. and especially the notes on Rom. xiii. 13, 14.

Which is corrupt] The whole of your former life was corrupt and abominable ; ye lived in the pursuit of pleasure and happiness ; ye sought this in the gratification of the lusts of the flesh ; and were ever deceived by these lusts, and dis- appointed in your expectations.

Verse 23. And be renewed in the spirit of your mind] Their old mode of living was to be abandoned ; a new one to be assumed. The mind is to be renovated ; and not only its general complexion, but the very spirit of it, all its faculties and powers must be thoroughly, completely, and universally renewed.

Verse 24. Put on the new man] Get a new nature ; for in Christ Jesus, under the Christian dispensation, neither circumcision availed any thing, nor uncircumcision, but a new creation.
Therefore ye must be renewed in the spirit of your mind.

Which after God is created in righteousness] Here is certainly an allusion to the creation of man. Moses tells us, Gen. i. 27. That God created man in his own image : that is, God was the model according to which he was formed in the spirit of his mind. St. Paul says here, that they should put on the new man ; which, after God, is created, in righteousness and true holiness ; or, ὡς ἦν τὸ πνεῦμα τοῦ ἀληθοῦς, in the holiness of truth. Both certainly refer to the same thing ; and the one illustrates the other. From the apostle we learn what Moses meant by the Image of God ; it was righteousness and the truth of holiness.—See the note on Gen. i. 26.
It is not this or the other degree of moral good which the soul is to receive by Jesus Christ ; it is the whole image of God : and is to be formed κατὰ Θεοῦ, according to God : the likeness of the Divine Being is to be traced upon his soul; and he is to bear that as fully as his first father Adam bore it in the beginning.

Verse 25. Wherefore putting away lying] All falsity, all prevarication; because this is opposite to the truth; as it is in Jesus; ver. 21. and to the holiness of truth, ver. 24.

Speak every man truth with his neighbour] Truth was but of small account among many, of even the best heathens; for they taught that, on many occasions, a lie was to be preferred to the truth itself. Dr. Whitby collects some of their maxims on this head.

Κριττον δι ελαθει ψευδος, η αληθης κηρον. "A lie is better than a hurtful truth." Menander.

Το γαρ αγαθον κρηττον εστι της αληθειας. "Good is better than truth." Proclus.

Ενθα γαρ τι δι και ψευδος λεγασθαι, λεγασθω. "When telling a lie will be profitable, let it be told." Darius in Herodotus, lib. iii. pag. 191.

"He may lie who knows how to do it, or δεκντι καιρο, in a suitable time." Plato apud. Stob. ser. 12.

"There is nothing decorous in truth but when it is profitable; yea, sometimes και ψευδος οπισθ ανθρωπων, και τ' αληθης ελαθει, truth is hurtful, and lying is profitable to men." Maximus Tyrius, Diss. 3. pag. 29.

Having been brought up in such a loose system of morality; these converted Gentiles had need of these apostolic directions; Put away lying, speak the truth; let lying never come near you; let truth ever be present with you.

We are members one of another] Consider yourselves as one body, of which Jesus Christ is the head: and as a man's right hand would not deceive or wrong his left hand, so deal honestly with each other; for ye are members one of another.

Verse 26. Be ye angry, and sin not] Οργησθε, here is the same as η μιν οργησθε, Ιη υε be angry, do not sin. We can never suppose that the apostle delivers this as a precept, if we take the words as they stand in our version. Perhaps the sense is, Take heed that ye be not angry, lest ye sin; for it would be very difficult, even for an apostle himself, to be angry, and not sin. If we consider anger as implying displeasure simply, then there are a multitude of cases in which a man may be innocently, yea, laudably angry; for he should be displeased with every thing which is not for the glory of God, and the good of mankind. But in any other sense, I do not see how the words can be safely taken.

Let not the sun go down upon your wrath] That is, if you do get angry with any one, see that the fire be cast with the utmost speed out of your bosom. Do not go to sleep with any unkind or unbrotherly feeling: anger continued in, may produce malice and revenge. No temper of this kind can consist with peace of conscience, and the approbation of God's Spirit in the soul.

Verse 27. Neither give place to the devil.] Your adversary will strive to influence your mind, and irritate your spirit; watch and pray that he may not get any place in you, or ascendancy over you.

As the word διαβολος, is sometimes used to signify a calumniator, tale-bearer, whisperer, or backbiter; (see in the original, 1 Tim. iii. 11. 2 Tim. iii. 3. and Tit. ii. 3) here it may have the same signification. Do not open your ear to the tale-bearer, to the slanderer, who comes to you with accusations against your brethren; or with surmisings and evil-speakings. These are human devils; they may be the means of making you angry, even without any solid pretence; therefore give them no place, that you may not be angry at any time: but if, unhappily, you should be overtaken in this fault, let not the sun go down upon your wrath; go to your brother, against whom you have found your spirit irritated; tell him what you have heard, and what you fear; let your ears be open to receive his own account; carefully listen to his own explanation; and, if possible, let the matter be finally settled, that Satan may not get advantage over either.

Verse 28. Let him that stole steal no more] It is supposed that among the rabbins, stealing was not entirely discountenanced, provided a portion was given to the poor. The apostle here teaches them a different doctrine: as they should speak truth, every man with his neighbour, so they should in every respect act honestly; for nothing contrary to truth and righteousness could be tolerated under the Christian system. Let no man, under pretence of helping the poor, defraud another; but let him labour, working with his hands, to provide that which is good, that he may have to give to him who is in necessity. Stealing, over-reaching, defrauding, purloining, &c. are consistent with no kind of religion that acknowledges the true God. If Christianity do not make men honest, it does nothing for them. Those who are not saved from dishonesty, fear not God, though they may dread man.

Verse 29. Let no corrupt communication] Πας λογος σαπρος: Kypke observes, that λογος σαπρος, signifies a useless, putrid, unsavoury, and obscene word, or conversation: 1. Useless, particularly that which has been rendered so by old age and corruption: 2. Putrid, impure; so Aristophanes in Lysistrat. pag. 859. calls a bad woman, σαρξ, ισοι τῷ λουτρον ἢ σαρξ; Tune, Spurca! balneum mihi parabis? 3. Calumnious, or reproachful; whatever has a tendency to injure the name, fame, or interest of another. In short, it appears to mean any word or thing obscene, any thing that injures virtue, countenances vice, or scoffs at religion. In the parallel place, Col. iv. 6. the apostle exhorts that our speech may be seasoned with salt, to preserve it from putrefaction. See Kypke and Mucknight.

But that which is good to the use of edifying] To be good for a thing, is a Græcism as well as a Anglicism; for, to be fit, proper, suitable, &c. so Achilles, Tatius, lib. 4. pag. 231. α γ α β ε ρ ο ρ ι μ α ρ α ἰ δ ε σ τ ε, I know thee to be good, (formed) for friendship. And Appian, de Bell. Hisp. pag. 439. terms both the Scipios, α ρ ρ α ς κ ε π α ρ τ α α γ α θ ο υ ς γ α μ μ ο υ ς, men who were good, suitable for all things. And also Lucian in Torari, pag. 53. ο υ μ ο υ ς α π α τ ο ρ ο υ μ ε ν α γ α θ ο ι κ ο ν α ς Σ κ υ θ ο ι. The Scythians are not good, expert in archery only.—See Kypke, from whom I quote.

That it may minister grace] ἵνα δε χάρις. This may be understood thus: 1. Let your conversation be pure, wise, and holy, that it may be the means of conveying grace, or Divine influences, to them that hear: 2. Let it be such as to be grateful or acceptable to the hearers. This is the meaning of ἵνα δε χάρις, in some of the most correct Greek writers. Never wound modesty, truth, or religion, with your discourse; endeavour to edify those with whom you converse; and, if possible, speak so as to please them.

Verse 30. Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God] By giving way to any wrong temper, unholy word, or unrighteous action. Even those who had already a measure of the light and life of God, both of which are not only brought in by the Holy Spirit, but maintained by his constant indwelling, may give way to sin, and so grieve this Holy Spirit that it shall withdraw both its light and presence; and, in proportion as it withdraws, then hardness and darkness take place; and, what is still worse, a state of insensibility is the consequence: for the darkness prevents the fallen state from being seen; and the hardness prevents it from being felt.

Whereby ye are sealed] The Holy Spirit, in the soul of a believer, is God's seal, set on his heart to testify that he is God's property: and that he should be wholly employed in God's service. It is very likely that the apostle had in view the words of the prophet, Isai. lxiii. 10.

But they rebelled and vexed his HOLY SPIRIT; therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and fought against them. The Psalmist refers to the same fact, in nearly the same words, Psal. lxxviii. 4. How oft did they PROVOKE him in the wilderness, and GRIEVE him in the desert! Let every man, therefore, take heed that he grieve not the Spirit of God, lest God turn to be his enemy, and fight against him.

Verse 31. Let all bitterness] πασα πικρία. It is astonishing that any who profess the Christian name should indulge bitterness of spirit. Those who are censorious, who are unmerciful, to the failings of others; who have fixed a certain standard by which they measure all persons, in all circumstances; and unchristian every one that does not come up to this standard; these have the bitterness against which the apostle speaks. In the last century there was a compound medicine made up, from a variety of drastic acid drugs, and ardent spirits, which was called Hiera Piera, ἱερα πικρία, the holy bitter; this medicine was administered in a multitude of cases, where it did immense evil; and perhaps in scarcely any case did it do good. It has ever appeared to me to furnish a proper epithet for the disposition mentioned above, the holy bitter; for the religiously censorious act under the pretence of superior sanctity. I have known such persons to do much evil in Christian society; but never knew an instance of them doing any good.

And wrath] θυμὸς, is more properly anger, which may be considered the commencement of the passion.

Anger] οργή, is more properly wrath, the passion carried to its highest pitch, accompanied with injurious words, and outrageous acts, some of which are immediately specified.

And clamour] κραυγή, loud and obstreperous speaking; brawling, railing, boisterous talk, often the offspring of wrath; all of which are highly unbecoming the meek, loving, quiet, sedate mind of Christ and his followers.

And evil speaking] βλασφημία, blasphemy; that is, injurious speaking; words which tend to hurt those of whom, or against whom, they are spoken.

With all malice] κακία, all malignity: as anger produces wrath, and wrath clamour; so all together produce malice, that is, settled, sullen, fell wrath; which is always looking out for opportunities to revenge itself by the destruction of the object of its indignation. No state of society can be even tolerable where these prevail; and if eternity were out of the question, it is of the utmost consequence to have these banished from time.

Verse 32. Be ye kind one to another] Γινοσθε—χρηστοι: be kind and obliging to each other: study good breeding and gentleness of manners. A Christian cannot be a savage; and he need not be a boor. Never put any person to needless pain.

Tender-hearted] Ευπλεγχροι, compassionate; having the bowels easily moved, (as the word implies,) to commiserate the state of the wretched and distressed.

Forgiving one another] Should you receive any injury from a brother, or from any man, be as ready to forgive him on his repentance and acknowledgment, as God was, for Christ's sake, to forgive you, when you repented of your sins, and took refuge in his mercy.

1. The exhortations given in this chapter, if properly attended to, have the most direct tendency to secure the peace of the individual, the comfort of every family, and the welfare and unity of every Christian society. That God never prohibits any thing that is useful to us, is an unshaken truth. And that he never commands what has not the most pointed relation to our present and eternal welfare, is not less so. How is it, then, that we do not glory in his commandments, and rejoice in his prohibitions? If the gratification of our fleshly propensities could do us good, that gratification had never been forbidden. God plants thorns in the way, that would lead us to death and perdition.

2. From the provision which God has made for the soul's salvation, we may see the nature, and, in some sense, the extent of the salvation provided. Much on this subject has been said on the preceding chapter; and the same subject is continued here. God requires that the church shall be holy, so that it may be a proper habitation for himself; and he requires that each believer should be holy, and that he should, under the influences of His grace, arrive at the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ! ver. 13. This is astonishing; but God is able to make all grace abound towards us.

3. It is the will of God, that Christians should be well instructed; that they should become wise and intelligent; and have their understandings well cultivated and improved. Sound learning is of great worth, even in religion; the wisest and best instructed Christians are the most steady and may be the most useful. If a man be a child in knowledge, he is likely to be tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine; and often lies at the mercy of interested, designing men: the more knowledge he has, the more safe is his state. If our circumstances be such, that we have few means of improvement, we should turn them to the best account. "Partial knowledge is better than total ignorance; he who cannot get all he may wish, must take heed to acquire all that he can." If total ignorance be a bad and dangerous thing, every degree of knowledge lessens both the evil and the danger. It must never be forgotten, that the Holy Scriptures themselves are capable of making men wise unto salvation, if read and studied with faith in Christ.

4. Union among the followers of Christ, is strongly recommended. How can spiritual brethren fall out by the way! Have they not all one Father, all one Head; do they not form one body, and are they not all members of each other? Would it not be monstrous to see the nails pulling out the eyes; the hands tearing off the flesh from the body; the teeth biting out the tongue, &c. &c. And is it less so to see the members of a Christian society bite and devour each other, till they are consumed one of another? Every member of the mystical body of Christ, should labour for the comfort and edification of the whole; and the honour of the Head. He that would live a quiet life, and keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, must be as backward to take offence as to give it. Would all act on this plan, and surely it is: rational as it is Christian, we should soon have glory to God in the highest; and on earth peace and good will among men.

5. A roughness of manners is to some unavoidable; it is partly owing to the peculiar texture of their mind, and partly to their education. But there are others who glory in, and endeavour to cultivate this ungentle disposition under this is often concealed a great degree of spiritual pride, and perhaps some malignity, for they think that this roughness gives them a right to say grating, harsh, and severe things. They should be taught another lesson; and if they will not demean themselves as they ought, they should be left to themselves, and no man should associate with them. They are not Christians; and they act beneath the character of men.

CHAPTER V.

Christians should imitate their heavenly Father, and walk in love, after the example of Christ, 1, 2. They should avoid all uncleanness, impurity, covetousness, and foolish jesting and idolatry, because these things exclude from the kingdom of God, 3—7. The Ephesians were once in darkness, but being now light in the Lord, they are exhorted to walk in that light, and bring forth the fruits of the Spirit; and to have no fellowship with the workers of iniquity, whose evil deeds are manifested by the light, 8—13. All are exhorted to awake; to walk circumspectly; to redeem the time, and to learn what the will of the Lord is, 14—17. The apostle gives particular directions relative to avoiding excess of wine, 18. To singing and giving thanks, 19, 20. Submission to each other, 21. To husbands, that they should love their wives, as Christ loved the church; for, by the marriage union, the union between Christ and the church is pointed out: and wives are exhorted to reverence their husbands, 22—33.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. Be ye therefore followers of God

The beginning of this chapter is properly a continuation of the preceding, which should have ended with the second verse of this. The word μιμηται, which we translate followers, signifies such as personate others, assuming their gait, mode of speech, accent, carriage, &c. and it is from this Greek word that we have the word mimic. Though this term is often used in a ludicrous sense, yet here it is to be understood in a very solemn and proper sense. Let your whole conduct be like that of your Lord: imitate him in all your actions, words, spirit, and inclinations: imitate him as children do their beloved parents, and remember that you stand in the relation of beloved children to him. It is natural for children to imitate their parents; it is their constant aim to learn of them, and to copy them in all things: whatever they see the parent do, whatever they hear him speak, that they endeavour to copy and imitate; yea, they go further, they insensibly copy the very tempers of their parents. If ye, therefore, be children of God, show this love to your heavenly Father, and imitate all his moral perfections; and acquire the mind that was in Jesus.

Verse 2. And walk in love] Let every act of life be dictated by love to God and man.

As Christ—hath loved us] Laying down your lives for your brethren, if necessary; counting nothing too difficult to be done in order to promote their eternal salvation.

Hath given himself for us] Christ hath died for our stead, and became thereby a sacrifice for our sins.

An offering] Προσφορά, an oblation, an eucharistic offering; the same as מנחה minchah, Lev. ii. 1, &c. which is explained to be an offering made unto the Lord, of fine flour, with oil, and frankincense. It means any offering by which gratitude was expressed for temporal blessings received from the bounty of God.

A sacrifice] Θυσία, a sin-offering, a victim for sin; the same as זבח zebach, which almost universally means that sacrificial act in which the blood of an animal was poured out as an atonement for sin. These terms may be justly considered as including every kind of sacrifice, offering, and oblation made to God on any account; and both these terms are with propriety used here, because the apostle's design was to represent the sufficiency of the offering made by Christ for the sin of the world. And the passage strongly intimates, that as man is bound to be grateful to God for the good things of this life, so he should testify that gratitude by suitable offerings; but having sinned against God, he has forfeited all earthly blessings, as well as those that come from heaven: and that Jesus Christ gave himself υπαγιασθησθαι, in our stead, and on our account, as the gratitude offering, προσφορά, which we owe to our MAKER, and without which, a continuance of temporal blessings could not be expected; and also as a sacrifice for sin, θυσία, without which we could never approach God; and without which we must be punished with an everlasting destruction from the presence of God, and the glory of his power. Thus we find, that even our temporal blessings come from and by Jesus Christ, as well as all our spiritual and eternal mercies.

For a sweet-smelling savour.] ΕΙΣ ΟΣΜΗΝ ΣΩΜΑΤΟΣ, the same as is expressed in Gen. viii. 21. Lev. i. 9. iii. 16. ריח ניהוה ריח ניהוה riach nichoach layhoeah, "a sweet savour unto the Lord;" i. e. an offering of his own prescription, and one with which he was well pleased; and, by accepting of which, he showed that he accepted the person who offered it. The sweet-smelling savour refers to the burnt offerings, the fumes of which ascended from the fire, in the act of burning; and, as such odours are grateful to man, God represents himself as pleased with them when offered by an upright worshipper, according to his own appointment.

Verse 3. But fornication] It is probable that the three terms used here by the apostle, refer to different species of the same thing. The word fornication, πορνεία, may imply not only fornication, but adultery also, as it frequently does; uncleanness, ακαθαρσία, may refer to all abominable and unnatural lusts—sodomy, bestiality, &c. and covetousness, κλεμψία, to excessive indulgence in that which, moderately used, is lawful. As the covetous man never has enough of wealth, so the pleasure-taker and the libertine never have enough of the gratifications of sense; the appetite increasing in proportion to its indulgence. If, however, simple covetousness, i. e. the love of gain, be here intended, it shows from the connexion in which it stands, (for it is linked with fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness,) how degrading it is to the soul of man, and how abominable it is in the eye of God. In other places, it is ranked with idolatry; for the man who has an inordinate love of gain, makes money his god.

Let it not be once named] Let no such things ever exist among you, for ye are called to be saints.

Verse 4. Neither filthiness] Αισχροτης; any thing base or vile, in words or acts.

Foolish talking] Μαρολογία; scurrility, buffoonery, ridicule; or what tends to expose another to contempt.

Nor jesting] Ευπραγμία; artfully turned discourses or words, from ευ, well or easily, and πρᾶξις, I turn, words that can be easily turned to other meanings; double entendres, chaste words, which, from their connexion, and the manner in which they are used, convey an obscene or offensive meaning. It also means jests, puns, witty sayings, and mountebank repartees of all kinds.

Which are not convenient] Ουκ ἀνεκτα, they do not come up to the proper standard: they are utterly improper in themselves, and highly unbecoming in those who profess Christianity.

But rather giving of thanks] Ευχαριστία; decent and edifying discourse, or thanksgiving to God. Prayer or praise is the most suitable language for man: and he who is of a trifling, light disposition, is ill fitted for either. How can a man who has been talking foolishly, or jestingly, in company, go in private to magnify God for the use of his tongue, which he has abused; or his rational faculties, which he has degraded?

Verse 5. For this ye know] Ye must be convinced of the dangerous and ruinous tendency of such a spirit and conduct, when ye know that persons of this character can never inherit the kingdom of God. See on ver. 3. and see the observations on the Greek article at the end of this epistle.

Verse 6. Let no man deceive you] Suffer no man to persuade you that any of these things is innocent; or that they are unavoidable frailties of human nature; they are all sins and abominations in the sight of God; those who practise them are children of disobedience: and on account of such practices, the wrath of God, Divine punishment, must come upon them.

Verse 7. Be not ye therefore partakers with them.] Do not act as your fellow-citizens do; nor suffer their philosophy, with vain words, κενὸν λεγόντες, with empty and illusive doctrines, to lead you astray from the path of truth.

That there was much need for such directions and cautions to the people of Ephesus, has been often remarked. It appears from Athenæus, that this people were addicted to luxury, effeminacy, &c. He tells us that the famous Aspasia, who was herself of the Socratic sect, brought a vast number of beautiful women into Greece, and by their means filled the country with pros-

Is it not in reference to their teaching and laws, that the apostle says Let no man deceive you with vain words?

Verse 8. For ye were sometimes (πᾶσι formerly) darkness] While ye lived in darkness, ye lived in these crimes.

But now are ye light in the Lord] When ye were in heathenish darkness, ye served divers lusts and pleasures; but now ye have the light, the wisdom and teaching which come from God therefore, walk as children of the light: let the world see that ye are not slaves to the flesh; but free, willing, rational servants of the Most High; not brutish followers of devil gods.

Verse 9. For the fruit of the Spirit] Instead of Spirit Πνεύματος, ABD*EFG. the Syriac, Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala, together with several of the Fathers, read φῶτος, light, which is supposed by most critics to be the true reading, because there is no mention made of the Spirit in any part of the context. As light, ver. 8. not only means the Divine influence upon the soul, but also the Gospel; with great propriety it may be said, The fruit of the light, i. e. of the Gospel; is in all goodness, and righteousness, and truth. Goodness, αγαθότης, in the principle and disposition righteousness, δικαιοσύνη the exercise of that goodness, in the whole conduct of life: truth, ἀλήθεια, the director of that principle and its exercise to the glorification of God, and the good of mankind.

Verse 11. Have no fellowship] Have no religious connexion whatever with heathens or their worship.

Unfruitful works of darkness] Probably alluding to the mysteries among the heathens; and the different lustrations and rites through which the initiated went, in the caves and dark recesses where these mysteries were celebrated;
all which he denominates works of darkness, because they were destitute of true wisdom;
and unfruitful works, because they were of no use to mankind; the initiated being obliged, on pain of death, to keep secret what they had seen, heard, and done; hence they were called ἀρρητοῦ μυστηρίων, unspeakable mysteries; things that were not to be divulged. That the apostle may refer to magic and incantations is also probable;
for to these the Ephesians were greatly addicted.
See the proofs in the notes on Acts xix. 19.

Neither reprove them.] Bear a testimony against them; convince them that they are wrong; confute them in their vain reasons; reprove them for their vices, which are flagrant, while pretending to superior illumination. All these meanings has the Greek word ἐλεγχοῦ, which we generally render to convince, or reprove.

Verse 12. For it is a shame even to speak]
This, no doubt, refers to the Eleusinian and Bacchanalian mysteries, which were performed in the night and darkness; and were known to be so impure and abominable, especially the latter, that the Roman senate banished them both from Rome and Italy. How the discovery of these depths of Satan was made, and the whole proceedings in that case, may be seen in Livy, Hist. lib. xxxix. cap. 8—19. where the reader will see the force of what the apostle says here,
It is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret; the abominations being of the most stupendous kind, and of the deepest die.

Verse 13. But all things that are reprov'd]
Dr. Macknight paraphrases this verse as follows: "Now all these reprobable actions, ἐλε-γχομενα, which are practised in celebrating these mysteries, are made manifest as sinful by the Gospel; and seeing every thing which discovers the true nature of actions is light, the Gospel, which discovers the evil nature of the actions performed in these mysteries, is light."

The apostle speaks against these mysteries, as he speaks against fornication, uncleanness, and covetousness; but by no means either borrows expression, or similitude from them, to illustrate Divine truths; for, as it would be a shame, even to speak of those things; surely it would be an abomination to allude to them in the illustration of the doctrines of the Gospel.

Verse 14. Wherefore he saith] It is a matter of doubt and controversy, whence this saying is derived: some think it is taken from Isai. xxvi.
19. Thy dead-men shall live; with my dead body shall they arise; awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust, &c. Others think that it is taken from Isai. lxv. 1—3. Arise, shine; for thy light is come, &c. but these passages neither give the words nor the meaning of the apostle.
Epiphanius supposed them to be taken from an ancient prophecy of Elijah, long since lost: Syncellus and Euthalius think they were taken from an apocryphal work attributed to Jeremiah the prophet; others, that they made part of a hymn then used in the Christian church; for, that there were, in the apostle's time, hymns and spiritual songs, as well as psalms; we learn from himself, in ver. 19. and from Col. iii. 16.
The hymn is supposed to have begun thus:

Εγυραι ὁ καθυδων,
Και ανιστα εκ των νεκρων, Επιφανει σοι ὁ Χριστος.

Awake, O thou who sleepest,
And from the dead arise thou,
And Christ shall shine upon thee.

See Rosenmüller, Wolff, and others. But it seems more natural to understand the words he saith, as referring to the light, i. e. the Gospel, mentioned ver. 13. And the δοξα, should be translated Wherefore it saith, Awake thou, &c.
that is, this is the general, the strong commanding voice of the Gospel in every part: receive instruction; leave your sins, which are leading you to perdition; believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and he will enlighten and save thee.

As a man asleep neither knows nor does any thing that can be called good or useful; so the Gentiles, and all others, while without the knowledge of Christianity, had not only no proper knowledge of vice and virtue; but they had no correct notion of the true God.

As the dead can perform no function of life;
so the Gentiles, and the unconverted, were incapable of performing any thing worthy either of life or being. But, though they were asleep, in a state of complete spiritual torpor, yet they might be awake by the voice of the Gospel:
and, though dead to all goodness, and to every function of the spiritual life; yet, as their animal life was whole in them, and perception and reason were still left, they were capable of hearing the Gospel, and under that influence which always accompanies it, when faithfully preached, they could discern its excellency, and find it to be the power of God to their salvation. And they are addressed by the apostle as possessing this capacity; and on their using it properly, have the promise that Christ shall enlighten them.

Verse 15. Walk circumspectly] Our word circumspect, from the Latin circumspicio, signifies to look round-about; on all hands, to be every way watchful; wary and cautious; in order to avoid danger, discern enemies before they come too nigh, and secure a man's interest by every possible and lawful means. But the original word αἰσθεῖς, signifies correctly, accurately, consistently, or perfectly. Be ye, who have received the truth, careful of your conduct; walk by the rule which God has given you; do this as well in little as in great matters; exemplify your principles which are holy and good, by a correspondent conduct; do not only profess, but live the Gospel. As you embrace all its promises, be careful also to embrace all its precepts; and behave yourselves so, that your enemies may never be able to say, that ye are holy in your doctrines and profession, but irregular in your lives.

Not as fools, but as wise] Μη ὡς Ἀσφοῖς ἀλλ' ὡς Σοφοί. The heathens affected to be called Σοφοί, or wise men: Pythagoras was perhaps the first who corrected this vanity, by assuming the title of φιλοσοφός, a lover of wisdom; hence our term philosopher, used now in a much prouder sense, than that in which the great Pythagoras wished it to be applied. The apostle here takes the term σοφός, and applies it to the Christian; and instead of it, gives the empty Gentile philosopher the title of ασφός, without wisdom; fool.

Verse 16. Redeeming the time] Ἐξαγοράζουμι τὸν καιρὸν: buying up those moments which others seem to throw away; steadily improving every present moment, that ye may, in some measure, regain the time ye have lost. Let time be your chief commodity; deal in that alone; buy it all up, and use every portion of it yourselves. Time is that on which eternity depends; in time ye are to get a preparation for the kingdom of God; if you get not this in time, your ruin is inevitable; therefore buy up the time.

Some think there is an allusion here to the case of debtors, who, by giving some valuable consideration to their creditors, obtain further time for paying their debts. And this appears to be the sense in which it is used by the Septuagint, Dan. ii. 8. Ἐπ' ἀλλοθίας οὐδα ἕως ὅτι καί-

πορ οὐκ ἐξαγοράζετε. I know certainly that ye would gain or buy time. Ye wish to have the time prolonged, that ye may seek out for some plausible explanation of the dream. Perhaps the apostle means, in general, embrace every opportunity to glorify God, save your own souls, and do good to men.

Because the days are evil.] The present times are dangerous; they are full of trouble and temptations; and only the watchful and diligent have any reason to expect that they shall keep their garments unspotted.

Verse 17. Wherefore be ye not unwise] Μη γινώσθε ἀσσοῖς, do not become madmen. Here is a most evident allusion to the orgies of Bacchus, in which his votaries acted like madmen; running about, tossing their heads from shoulder to shoulder, appearing to be in every sense completely frantic. See the whole of the passage in Livy, to which I have referred, on ver. 12.

But understanding what the will of the Lord is.] It is the will of God that ye should be sober, chaste, holy, and pure. Get a thorough understanding of this; acquaint yourselves with God's will, that ye may know how to glorify Him.

Verse 18. Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess] This is a further allusion to the Bacchanalian mysteries; in them his votaries got drunk, and ran into all manner of excesses. Plato, though he forbade drunkenness, in general, yet allowed that the people should get drunk in the solemnities of that god who invented wine. And indeed this was their common custom, when they had offered their sacrifices, then they indulged themselves in drunkenness, and ran into all kinds of extravagance. Hence it is probable that μεθυσ, to get drunk, is derived from μετα, after, and θυα, to sacrifice; for having completed their sacrifices, they indulged themselves in wine. The word αἰσθῆσις, which we translate excess, means profligacy and debauchery of every kind; such as are the general concomitants of drunkenness; and especially among the votaries of Bacchus, in Greece and Italy.

But be filled with the Spirit] The heathen priests pretended to be filled with the influence of the god they worshipped; and it was in these circumstances that they gave out their oracles. See a remarkable instance of this quoted in the note on Luke ix. 39. where the case of a Bacchanalian is described. The apostle exhorts the Ephesians not to resemble these, but instead of being filled with wine, to be filled with the Spirit of God; in consequence of which, instead of those discoveries of the Divine will, to which in their drunken worship the votaries of Bacchus pretended, they should be wise indeed; and should understand what the will of the Lord is.

Verse 19. Speaking to yourselves in psalms] We can scarcely say what is the exact difference between these three expressions. Psalms, ψαλμοι, may probably mean those of David.

Hymns] ὕμνοι; extemporaneous effusions in praise of God, uttered under the influence of the Divine Spirit, or a sense of his especial goodness. See Acts xvi. 25.

Songs] ὕμνοι, odes; premeditated and regular poetic compositions; but in whatever form they were composed, we learn that they were all πνευματικα, spiritual, tending to magnify God, and edify men.

Singing and making melody in your heart] The heart always going with the lips. It is a shocking profanation of Divine worship, to draw nigh to God with the lips, while the heart is far from him. It is too often the case, that in public worship, men are carried off from the sense of the words by the sounds that are put to them. And how few choirs of singers are there in the universe, whose hearts ever accompany them in what they call singing the praises of God?

Verse 20. Giving thanks always] God is continually loading you with his benefits; you deserve nothing of his kindness; therefore give Him thanks for his unmerited bounties.

God and the Father] That is, God, who is your Father, and the Father of mercies. See the observations on the Greek article, at the end of this epistle.

In the name of our Lord Jesus] He is the only Mediator, and through him alone can ye approach to God; and it is for his sake only, that God will hear your prayers; or receive your praises.

Verse 21. Submitting—one to another] Let no man be so tenacious of his own will, or his opinion, in matters indifferent, as to disturb the peace of the church; in all such matters, give way to each other; and let love rule.

In the fear of God] Setting him always before your eyes; and considering that he has commanded you to love one another, and to bear each other's burdens; and that what you do in this or any other commanded case, you do as unto the Lord. most value; besides the Syriac, Coptic, Sahidic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala; Basil the Great, and Chrysostom. Neither reading makes any difference in the sense.

Verse 22. Wives, submit yourselves unto your own husbands] As the Lord, viz. Christ, is the head or governor of the church, and the head of the man: so is the man the head or governor of the woman. This is God's ordinance, and should not be transgressed. The husband should not be a tyrant; and the wife should not be the governor. Old Francis Quarles, in his homely rhymes, alluding to the superstitious notion, that the crowing of a hen bodes ill luck to the family, has said—

A cock that's silent, and a hen that crows:
I know not which live most unnatural lives,
Obeying husbands, or commanding wives.”

As unto the Lord] The word church, seems to be necessarily understood here; that is, act under the authority of your husbands, as the church acts under the authority of Christ. As the church submits to the Lord, so let wives submit to their husbands.

Verse 23. For the husband is the head of the wife] This is the reason which the apostle gives for his injunctions.—See above.

He is the saviour of the body] As Christ exercises authority over the church, so as to save and protect it; so let the husband exercise authority over his wife, by protecting, comforting, and providing her with every necessary and comfort of life, according to his power.

Verse 24. In every thing] That is, every lawful thing; for it is not intimated that they should obey their husbands in any thing criminal, or in any thing detrimental to the interests of their souls. The husband may be profligate, and may wish his wife to become such also; he may be an enemy to true religion, and use his authority to prevent his wife from those means of grace which she finds salutary to her soul; in none of these things should she obey him.

Verse 25. Husbands, love your wives] Here is a grand rule, according to which every husband is called to act. Love your wife, as Christ loved the church. But how did Christ love the church? He gave himself for it: he laid down his life for

it. So then husbands should, if necessary, lay down their lives for their wives: and there is more implied in the words than mere protection and support; for, as Christ gave himself for the church, to save it; so husbands should, by all means in their power, labour to promote the salvation of their wives, and their constant edification in righteousness. Thus we find that the authority of the man over the woman is founded on his love to her: and this love must be such as to lead him to risk his life for her. As the care of the family devolves on the wife, and the children must owe the chief direction of their minds, and formation of their manners, to the mother, she has need of all the assistance and support which her husband can give her; and if she perform her duty well, she deserves the utmost of his love and affection.

Verse 26. That he might sanctify and cleanse it] The church is represented as the spouse of Christ, as the woman is the spouse of the man; and to prepare this church for himself, he washes, cleanses, and sanctifies it. There is certainly an allusion here to the ancient method of purifying women, who were appointed to be consorts to kings; twelve months, it appears, were in some instances spent in this purification; Six months with oil of myrrh, and six months with sweet odours, and with other things for the purifying of women. See the case of Esther, chap. ii. ver. 12. See also Psal. xlv. 13, 14. Ezek. xvi. 7—14.

With the washing of water] Baptism, accompanied by the purifying influences of the Holy Spirit.

By the word] The doctrine of Christ crucified; through which baptism is administered, sin cancelled, and the soul purified from all unrighteousness; the death of Christ giving efficacy to all.

Verse 27. That he might present it to himself] It was usual to bring the royal bride to the king in the most sumptuous apparel; and is there not here an allusion to Psal. xlv. 13, 14. The king's daughter (Pharaoh's) is all glorious within, her clothing is of wrought gold; she shall be brought unto the king (Solomon) in raiment of needle work. This presentation here spoken of by the apostle, will take place on the last day. See the note on 2 Cor. xi. 2.

face; no spots upon the garment; the heart and life both holy.

Wrinkle] Ρυτίδα, no mark of superannuation or decay. The word is commonly applied to wrinkles on the face, indicative of sickness or decrepitude.

Holy and without blemish] In every sense, holy, pure, and perfect. Now it was for this purpose that Christ gave himself for the church, and for this purpose he continues the different ordinances which he has appointed; and particularly the preaching of the word, the doctrine of reconciliation through faith in his blood. And it is in this life that all this purification is to take place, for none shall be presented at the day of judgment to him, who has not here been sanctified, cleansed, washed, made glorious, having neither spot, wrinkle, blemish, nor any such thing. How vain is the pretension of multitudes to be members of the true church, while full of spots, wrinkles, blemishes, and many such things; fondly supposing that their holiness is in their Surety, because not in themselves! Reader, lay thy hand on thy conscience, and say, dost thou believe that this is St. Paul's meaning? See the notes on chap. iii. 14, &c.

Verse 28. As their own bodies] For the woman is, properly speaking, a part of the man; for God made man male and female, and the woman was taken out of his side; therefore is she flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone; and, therefore, he that loveth his wife, loveth himself, for they two are one flesh. The apostle, in all these verses, refers to the creation and original state of the first human pair.

Verse 29. No man ever yet hated his own flesh] And this is a natural reason why he should love his wife, and nourish and cherish her.

Verse 30. We are members of his body] He has partook of our nature, as we have partaken of the nature of Adam. And as he is the head of the church, and the Saviour of this body; so we, being members of the church, are members of his mystical body. That is, we are united to him by one Spirit, in the closest intimacy, even similar to that which the members have with the body.

Verse 31. Shall be joined unto his wife] Προσενωθήσεται; he shall be glued or cemented to her; and, as a well glued board will sooner break in the whole wood than in the glued joint, so death alone can part the husband and wife: and nothing but death should dissolve their affection. See the notes on Gen. ii. 21—24.

Verse 32. This is a great mystery] Το μυστήριον τούτο μυστα ἐστίν; this mystery is great. Sacramentum hoc magnum est; this sacrament is great, VULGATE. And on the evidence of this version the church of Rome has made matrimony a sacrament; which, as they use it, is no meaning of the original. By mystery, here, we may understand a natural thing by which some spiritual matter is signified; which signification the Spirit of God alone can give. So here, the creation, and union of Adam and Eve, were intended in the design of God, to point out the union of Christ and the church; a union the most important that can be conceived; and therefore the apostle calls it a great mystery. See the observations at the end of this chapter.

Verse 33. Nevertheless] Πλαν, moreover, or therefore, on the consideration of God's design in the institution of marriage, let every one of you love his wife as himself, because she is both naturally, and by a Divine ordinance, a part of himself.

That she reverence her husband] Let the wife ever consider the husband as her head; and this he is, not only by nature, but also by the ordinance of God. These are very important matters, and on them the apostle lays great stress. See the following observations.

There is one subject in the preceding verse, on which I could not enlarge sufficiently in the notes; and which I have reserved for this place; viz. what the apostle says concerning the mystery of marriage, which certainly has a deeper meaning than what is generally apprehended. Dr. Macknight has some good observations on this part of the subject, which I shall beg leave to lay before my readers.

1. "The apostle calls the formation of Eve from Adam's body his marriage with her, and the intimate union established between them by that marriage, a great mystery, because it contained an important emblematical meaning, concerning the regeneration of believers, and their union with Christ, which hitherto had been kept secret, but which he had discovered in the 30th verse. For there, in allusion to what Adam said concerning Eve, 'This now is bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh,' the apostle says concerning Christ and believers, 'We are bone of his bones, and flesh of his flesh,' that is, we are parts of his body the church; and by this application of Adam's words concerning Eve, to Christ, and to his church, he intimates. First, that the formation of Eve, of a rib taken out of Adam's body, was a figure of the regeneration of believers by the breaking of Christ's body, mentioned ver. 25. Secondly, That

Adam's love to Eve, on account of her being formed of his body, was a figure of Christ's love to believers, because they are become his body, ver. 30. Thirdly, that Adam's marriage with Eve was a figure of the eternal union of Christ with believers in heaven, mentioned ver. 27. For he left his Father to be united to his church.

2. "In giving this emblematical representation of these ancient facts, the apostle has not exceeded the bounds of probability. In the first age, neither the art of writing, nor any permanent method of conveying instruction being invented, it was necessary to make such striking actions and events as could not easily be forgotten, emblems of the instruction meant to be perpetuated. On this supposition, Adam, in whom the human race began, was a natural image of Christ, in whom the human race was to be restored; and his deep sleep, the opening of his side, and the formation of Eve of a rib taken out of his side, were fit emblems of Christ's death, of the opening of his side on the cross, and of the regeneration of believers by his death. The love which Adam expressed towards Eve, and his union with her by marriage, were lively images of Christ's love to believers, and of his eternal union with them in one society, after their resurrection: and Eve herself, who was formed of a rib taken from Adam's side, was a natural image of believers, who are regenerated both in their body and in their mind, by the breaking of Christ's side on the cross. Thus the circumstances which accompanied the formation of Eve, being fit emblems of the formation of the church, we may suppose they were brought to pass to prefigure that great event; and, by prefiguring it, to show that it was decreed of God from the very beginning.

3. "The aptness however of these images, is not the only reason for supposing that the formation of Eve, and her marriage with Adam in Paradise, were emblems of the regeneration of believers by the death of Christ, and of their eternal union with him in heaven. The singular manner in which Eve was formed, and the declaration at her marriage with Adam, 'Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh,' strongly lead to that conclusion. Eve was not formed of the dust of the earth, as all other living things were made, (not excepting Adam himself,) but of a rib taken from Adam's side, while he was in a deep sleep. Now for this diversity, what reason can be assigned, if that which the apostle hath suggested is not admitted? Further, unless some deep instruction were couched under the formation of Eve, what occasion was there for Adam, at his marriage with her, to declare, 'This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh; she shall be called

Woman, because she was taken out of man, therefore shall a man leave, &c. For, although the taking of Eve out of Adam might be a reason for Adam's affection towards her, it was no reason for the affection of his posterity towards their wives, who were not so formed. The reason of their love to their wives, is their being creatures of the same species with themselves. This Eve might have been, though like Adam, she had been formed of the dust of the earth. Wherefore Adam's declaration concerning Eve's being taken out of his body, and concerning his love to her on that account, was intended for some purpose peculiar to himself; namely, as he was a type of Him who was to restore the human race by the breaking of his body on the cross; and who, on that account, loves them, and will unite them to himself for ever. Upon the whole, the formation of Eve, and her marriage with Adam, and his love to, and union with her, because she was taken out of his side, and the declaration, that, on that account, all his posterity should love their wives, and continue united to them through life, an union which does not subsist among other animals, are events so singular, that I do not see what account can be given of them, unless, with the apostle Paul, we suppose that, agreeably to the most ancient method of instruction, God intended these things as figurative representations of the regeneration of believers by the death of Christ, and of his eternal union with them in heaven; and that Adam and Eve were taught by God himself to consider them as such.

4. "It is no small confirmation of the apostle's emblematical interpretation of the formation and marriage of Eve, that in Scripture we find a variety of images and expressions founded on that interpretation. For example—Rom. v. 14. Adam is expressly called a type of him who was to come, on which account, 1 Cor. xv. 45. Christ is called the last Adam. Next, the catholic church, consisting of believers of all nations, is called the body of Christ, and the members thereof are said to be members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones, in allusion to the formation of Eve, the emblem of the church. For, as Eve was formed of a rib taken out of Adam's body during his deep sleep; so believers are regenerated both in mind and body, and formed into one great society, and united to Christ as their head and governor, by the breaking of his body on the cross. Thirdly, to this emblematical meaning of the formation of Eve, our Lord, I think, alluded when he instituted his supper. For instead of appointing one symbol only of his death, he appointed two; and, in explaining the first of them, he expressed himself in such a manner as to show that he had his eye on what happened to Adam when Eve was formed, This is my body, which is broken for you, for your regeneration. Fourthly, the eternal union of the regenerated with Christ after the resurrection, is called a marriage, Rev. xix. 7. and the new Jerusalem, that is, the inhabitants of the new Jerusalem, the society of the redeemed, is termed the bride, the Lamb's wife; and the preparing of men for that happy union, by introducing them into the church upon earth, through faith, and by sanctifying them through the word, is called, 2 Cor. xi. 2. A fitting them for one husband, that at the resurrection they may be presented a chaste virgin to Christ, in allusion, I suppose, to the presenting of Eve to Adam, in order to her marriage with him; and to show, that in this expression, the apostle had the figurative meaning of Eve's marriage in his mind, he mentions, ver. 3. the subtlety of the devil in deceiving Eve. Finally, the union of the Jewish church with God, as the figure of the catholic church, consisting of the regenerated of all nations, is by God himself termed a marriage, Jer. iii. 14. Ezek. xvi. 8, 32. and God is called the husband of that people, Isai. liv. 5. and their union to him by the law of Moses is termed, The day of their espousals, Jer. ii. 2.—1. A truly Christian marriage has an excellence, holiness, and unity in it, that cannot be easily described: and let it be observed, that while it prefigures the union of Christ with his church; it is one means of giving children to the church, and members to the mystical body of Christ. It is an ordinance of God, and cannot be too highly honoured; endless volumes might be written on its utility to man: without marriage, by which every man is assigned his own wife, and every woman her own husband, even the multitude of spurious births which would take place, would fail to keep up the population of the earth; and natural, moral, and political wretchedness, would be the consequence of promiscuous, fortuitous, and transitory connexions. For, without that ascertainment of peculiar property which marriage gives to every man in his wife, and to every woman in her husband, the human progeny would be unnoticed, unclaimed, uneducated, and totally neglected. This would continually increase the wretchedness, and in process of time bring about the total depopulation of the world.

2. The husband is to love his wife; the wife, to obey and venerate her husband: love and protection on the one hand, affectionate subjection and fidelity on the other. The husband should provide for his wife without encouraging profuseness; watch over her conduct without giving her vexation, keep her in subjection, without making her a slave; to love her, without jealousy; oblige her, without flattery; honour her, without making her proud; and to be hers entirely, without becoming either her footman or her slave. In short, they have equal rights and equal claims: but superior strength gives the man dominion; affection and subjection entitle the woman to love and protection. Without the woman, man is but half a human being; in union with the man, the woman finds her safety and perfection.

In the above remarks there are many things solid and useful; there are others which rest more on fancy than judgment.

3. Of marriage, the church of Rome has made a sacrament; and it is one of the seven which that church acknowledges. That it is an ordinance of God is sufficiently evident; that He has not made it a sacrament is not less so. Though the minister of religion celebrates it, yet the regulation of it, in reference to inheritance, &c. is assumed by the state. This is of great moment, as, by it, many evils are prevented, and many political and domestic advantages secured.

Children to obey their parents, EPHESIANS. and servants their masters.

If a man enter hastily into this state, it is at his own risk; after he has once entered it, the seal of the legislature is imposed upon it, and with his engagements he cannot trifle. A consideration of this has prevented many hasty and disproportionate alliances. Though they might hope to trifle with the church, they dare not do it with the state.

NOTES ON CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. Children, obey your parents] This is a duty with which God will never dispense; He commands it, and one might think that gratitude, from a sense of the highest obligation, would most strongly enforce the command.

In the Lord] This clause is wanting in several reputable MSS. and in some Versions. In the Lord, may mean on account of the commandment of the Lord; or, as far as the parents' commands are according to the will and word of God. For, surely, no child is called to obey any parent, if he give unreasonable or unscriptural commands.

Verse 2. Honour thy father] See the notes on Exod. xx. 12, &c. where this subject, together with the promises and threatenings, connected with it, are particularly considered; and the reasons of the duty laid down at large.

Verse 4. Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath] Avoid all severity; this will hurt your own souls, and do them no good: on the contrary, if punished with severity or cruelty, they will be only hardened and made desperate in their sins. Cruel parents generally have bad children. He who corrects his children according to God and reason, will feel every blow on his own heart more sensibly than his child feels it on his body. Parents are called to correct, not to punish their children. Those who punish them, do it from a principle of revenge; those who correct them, do it from a principle of affectionate concern.

Bring them up, &c.] Επιτρέφει αυτα ω παιδευσει και νουθεσει Κυριου: literally, Nourish them in the discipline and instruction of the Lord. The mind is to be nourished with wholesome discipline and instruction, as the body is with proper food. Παιδεια, discipline, may refer to all that knowledge which is proper for children, including elementary principles and rules for behaviour, &c. Νουθεσια, instruction, may imply whatever is necessary to form the mind: to touch, regulate, and purify the passions; and necessarily includes the whole of religion. Both these should be administered in the Lord; according to his will and word; and in reference to his eternal glory. All the important lessons and doctrines being derived from his revelation, therefore they are called the discipline and instruction of the Lord.

Verse 5. Servants, be obedient] Though δουλος, frequently signifies a slave or bondman; yet it often implies a servant in general; or any one bound to another either for a limited time, or for life. Even a slave, if a Christian, was bound to serve him faithfully, by whose money he was bought, howsoever illegal that traffic may be considered. In heathen countries slavery was in some sort excusable: among Christians, it is an enormity and a crime for which perdition has scarcely an adequate state of punishment.

According to the flesh] Your masters in secular things; for they have no authority over your religion nor over your souls.

With fear and trembling] Because the law gives them a power to punish you for every act of disobedience.

In singleness of your heart] Not merely through fear of punishment, but from a principle of uprightness, serving them as you would serve Christ.

Verse 11. Put on the whole armour of God]
Ἐνδύσασθε τὴν πανοπλίαν τοῦ Θεοῦ. The apostle considers every Christian as having a warfare to maintain against numerous, powerful, and subtle foes; and that therefore they would need much strength, much courage, complete armour, and skill to use it. The panoply which is mentioned here, refers to the armour of the heavy troops among the Greeks; those who were to sustain the rudest attacks; who were to sap the foundations of walls, storm cities, &c.
Their ordinary armour was the shield, the games; and παισιμα was the place in which the contenders exercised. Here, it signifies warfare in general.

Against principalities] Αρχας, chief rulers; beings of the first rank and order in their own kingdom.

Powers] Εξουσιαι, authorities derived from, and consulted by the above.

The rulers of the darkness of this world] Τους κοσμοκρατορας του σκοτους του αιωτος τωτου; the rulers of the world; the emperors of the darkness of this state of things.

Spiritual wickedness] Τα πνευματικα της πονηριαις, the spiritual things of wickedness; or the spiritualities of wickedness; highly refined and sublimed evil: disguised falsehood, in the garb of truth; antinomianism, in the guise of religion.

In high places.] Εν τοις ανωρατοις, in the most sublime stations. But who are these of whom the apostle speaks? Schoetgen contends, that the rabbins, and Jewish rulers are intended. This he thinks proved, by the words του αιωτος τωτου, of this world, which are often used to designate the Old Testament, and the Jewish system: and the words τοις ανωρατοις, in heavenly places, which are not unfrequently used to signify the time of the New Testament, and the Gospel system.

By the spiritual wickedness in heavenly places, he thinks false teachers, who endeavoured to corrupt Christianity, are meant; such as those mentioned by St. John, 1st Epist. ii. 19. They went out from us, but they were not of us, &c. And he thinks the meaning may be extended to all corrupters of Christianity, in all succeeding ages. He shows also, that the Jews called their own city עיר של ישׁרׁאֵל shel blam, κοσμοκρατωτης, the ruler of the world: and proves that David's words, Psal. ii. 2. The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together, are applied by the apostles, Acts iv. 26. to the Jewish rulers, αρχοντας, who persecuted Peter and John for preaching Christ crucified. But commentators in general are not of this mind; but think that by principalities, &c. we are to understand different orders of evil spirits, who are all employed under the devil, their great head, to prevent the spread of the Gospel in the world, and to destroy the souls of mankind.

The spiritual wickednesses are supposed to be the angels which kept not their first estate; who fell from the heavenly places; but are ever longing after, and striving to regain them; and which have their station in the regions of the air. "Perhaps," says Mr. Wesley, "the principalities and powers remain mostly in the citadel of their kingdom of darkness: but there are other spirits which range abroad, to whom the provinces of the world are committed; the darkness is chiefly spiritual darkness which prevails during the present state of things. And the wicked spirits are those which continually oppose faith, love, and holiness, either by force or fraud; and labour to infuse unbelief, pride, idolatry, malice, envy, anger, and hatred." Some translate the words τοις ανωρατοις, about heavenly things; that is, we contend with these fallen spirits for the heavenly things which are promised to us; and we strive against them, that we may not be deprived of those we have.

Verse 13. Wherefore] Because ye have such enemies to contend with; take unto you, assume, as provided and prepared for you, the whole armour of God; armour, which if you put on and use, you shall be both invulnerable and immortal. The ancient heroes are fabled to have had armour sent to them by the gods; and even the great armour-maker Vulcan was reputed to be a god himself; this was fable: what Paul speaks of, is reality. See before, on ver. 11.

That ye may be able to withstand] That ye may not only stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made you free, but also discomfit all [your spiritual foes; and continuing in your ranks, maintain your ground against them; never putting off your armour, but standing always ready prepared to repel any new attack.

And having done all to stand] Και ανωρατα υπεργερασασθαι εστιναι; rather, And having conquered all, stand; this is a military phrase, and is repeatedly used in this sense by the best Greek writers. So Dionys. Hal. Ant. lib. vi. page 400. Και παρτα πολυμια η αληθ καταργασαμενοι χρησθαι,—"Having in a short time discomfited all our enemies, we returned with numerous captives, and much spoil." See many examples in Kypke. By evil day, we may understand any time of trouble, affliction, and sore temptation.

As there is here allusion to some of the most important parts of the Grecian armour, I shall give a short account of the whole. It consists properly of two sorts, 1. Defensive armour, of that which protected themselves. 2. Offensive armour, or that by which they injured their enemies.—The apostle refers to both.

1.—Defensive armour.

Πικροβαλακι, the HELMET; this was the armour for the head, and was of various forms, and embossed with a great variety of figures. Connected with the helmet was the crest, or ridge on the top of the helmet, adorned with several emblematic figures; some for ornament, some to strike terror. For crests on ancient helmets, we often see the winged lion, the griffin, chimera, &c. St. Paul seems to refer to one which had an emblematical representation of hope.

Ζαγμα, the GIRDLE; this went about the loins, and served to brace the armour tight to the body, and to support daggers, short swords, and such like weapons, which were frequently stuck in it. This kind of girdle is in general use among the Asiatic nations to the present day.

Θώραξ, the BREAST-PLATE: this consisted of two parts, called πτερυγες, or wings; one covered the whole region of the thorax, or breast, in which the principal viscera of life are contained; and the other covered the back, as far down as the front part extended.

Κρημνίς, GREAVES, or brazen boots, which covered the skin or front of the leg: a kind of solea was often used, which covered the sole, and laced about the instep, and prevented the foot from being wounded by rugged ways, thorns, stones, &c.

Χυμνίς, GAUNTLETS: a kind of gloves that served to defend the hands, and the arm up to the elbow.

Ασπίς, the clipeus, or SHIELD: it was perfectly round, and sometimes made of wood, covered with bullocks' hides; but often made of metal. The aspis, or shield of Achilles, made by Vulcan, was composed of five plates, two of brass, two of tin, and one of gold; so Homer, Il. T. v. 270.

— επι πωτι πτερυγες βλαστει Κυλλεποδιω, Τας δυο χαλκωιας, δυο δ' ασηδι κασσητοιω,
 Τη δε μιας χρυσοι.

Of shields there were several sorts:

Γερρον, or γερρα, the gerron, a small square shield, used first by the Persians.

Λασιον, LASEION; a sort of oblong shield, covered with rough hides, or skins with the hair on.

Πελας, the PELTA; a small light shield, nearly in the form of a demicrescent, with a small ornament similar to the recurved leaves of a flower de luce, on the centre of the diagonal edge, or straight line: this was the amazonian shield.

Θυρας, the scuta, or OBLONG SHIELD; this was always made of wood, and covered with hides. It was exactly in the shape of the laseion, but differed in size, being much larger; and being covered with hides, from which the hair had been taken off. It was called θυρας, from θυρα, a door, which it resembled in its oblong shape; but it was made curved, so as to embrace the whole forepart of the body. The aspis and the thureus were the shields principally in use; the former for light, the latter for heavy armed troops.

II.—Offensive armour, or weapons; the following were chief:

Εγχευς, the SPEAR; which was generally a head of brass or iron, with a long shaft of ash.

Ασπες, the LANCE; differing perhaps little from the former, but in its size and lightness; being a missile used both by infantry and cavalry, for the purpose of annoying the enemy at a distance.

Σιφος, the SWORD; these were of various sizes, and in the beginning all of brass. The swords of Homer's heroes are all of this metal.

Μαχαίρα, called also a sword, sometimes a knife; it was a short sword, used more frequently by gladiators, or in single combat. What other difference it had from the xiphos, I cannot tell.

Αξίς, from which our word ax; the common battle-ax.

Πελαυς, the BIPEN; a sort of battle-ax, with double face, one opposite to the other.

Κεγυς, an iron club, or mace, much used both among the ancient Greeks and Persians.

Τεζορ, the BOW: with its pharetra or quiver, and its stock or sheaf of arrows.

Σπινδιον, the SLING; an instrument, in the use of which most ancient nations were very expert; particularly the Hebrews and ancient Greeks.

The arms and armour mentioned above, were not always in use; they were found out and improved by degrees. The account given by Lucretius of the arms of the first inhabitants of the earth, is doubtless as correct as it is natural.

*Posterius ferri vis est, æriæque reperta:
 Sed prius æris erat quàm ferri cognitus usus:
 Quo facilius magis est natura, et copia major.
 De Rerum Nat. lib. v. ver. 1282.*

Whilst cruelty was not improved by art,
 And rage not furnished yet with sword or dart;
 With fits, or boughs, or stones, the warriors fought;

These were the only weapons Nature taught;
 But when flames burnt the trees and scorched the ground,

Then brass appeared, and iron fit to wound.
 Brass first was used, because the softer ore,
 And earth's cold veins contained a greater store.
 CÆCÆM.

I have only to observe further on this head—1. That the ancient Greeks and Romans went constantly armed. 2. That before they engaged they always ate together: and, 3. That they commenced every attack with prayer to the gods for success.

Verse 14. Stand therefore] Prepare yourselves for combat: Having your loins girt about with truth. He had told them before to take the whole armour of God, ver. 13. and to put on this whole armour. Having got all the pieces of it together, and the defensive parts put on, they were then to gird them close to their bodies with the ζαμα, or girdle; and instead of a fine ornamented belt, such as the ancient warriors used, they were to have truth. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is the truth of God: unless this be known and conscientiously believed, no man can enter the spiritual warfare with any advantage or prospect of success. By this alone we discover who our enemies are, and how they come on to attack us; and by this we know where our strength lies: and as the truth is great, and must prevail, we are to gird ourselves with this against all false religion, and the various winds of doctrine by which cunning men, and insidious devils, lie in wait to deceive. Truth may be taken here for sincerity; for if a man be not conscious to himself that his heart is right before God, and that he makes no false pretences to religion, in vain does he enter the spiritual lists. This alone can give him confidence—

—Hic murus aræneus esto
Nil conscire sibi, nulla pallescere culpa.

Let this be my brazen wall; that no man can reproach me with a crime; and that I am conscious of my own integrity.

The breast-plate of righteousness] What the breast-plate, or breast-plate, was, see before. The word righteousness, δικαιοσύνη, we have often had occasion to note, is a word of very extensive import: it signifies the principle of righteousness; it signifies the practice of righteousness, or living a holy life; it signifies God's method of justifying sinners; and it signifies justification itself. Here it may imply a consciousness of justification through the blood of the cross; the principle of righteousness, or true holiness, implanted in the heart; and a holy life; a life regulated according to the testimonies of God. As the breast-plate defends the heart and lungs, and all those vital functionaries that are contained in what is called the region of the thorax; so this righteousness, this life of God in the soul of man, defends every thing on which the man's spiritual existence depends. While he possesses this principle, and acts from it, his spiritual and eternal life is secure.

Verse 15. Your feet shod] The armour, or greaves, have been already described; they were deemed of essential importance in the ancient armour: if the feet or legs are materially wounded, a man can neither stand to resist his foe, pursue him if vanquished, nor flee from him, should he have the worst of the fight.

That the apostle has obedience to the Gospel in general, in view, there can be no doubt; but he appears to have more than this, a readiness to publish the Gospel: for, How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth! Isai. lii. 7. Rom. x. 15.

The Israelites were commanded to eat the pass-over with their feet shod, to show that they were ready for their journey. And our Lord commands his disciples to be shod with sandals, that they might be ready to go and publish the Gospel; as the Israelites were to go to possess the Promised Land. Every Christian should consider himself on his journey from a strange land, to his own country; and not only stand every moment prepared to proceed, but be every moment in actual progress towards his home.

The preparation of the Gospel] The word ετοιμασία, which we translate preparation, is variously understood; some think it means a habitual readiness in walking in the way prescribed by the Gospel: others, that firmness and solidity which the Gospel gives to them who conscientiously believe its doctrines: others, those virtues and graces which, in the first planting of Christianity, were indispensably necessary to those who published it.

Should we take the word preparation in its common acceptation, it may imply that, by a conscientious belief of the Gospel, receiving the salvation provided by its Author, and walking in the way of obedience which is pointed out by it; the soul is prepared for the kingdom of heaven.

The Gospel is termed the Gospel of peace, because it establishes peace between God and man, and proclaims peace and good will to the universe: Contentions, strife, quarrels, and all wars, being as alien from its nature and design, as they are opposed to the nature of Him who is love and compassion to man.

Verse 16. Above all (ἐν πρώτῳ, over all the rest of the armour) taking the shield of faith] In the word θυρεός, thureos, the apostle alludes to the great oblong shield, or scutum, which covers the whole body: see its description before. And as faith is the grace by which all others are preserved and rendered active, so it is properly represented here under the notion of a shield, by which the whole body is covered and protected. Faith, in this place, must mean that evidence of things unseen which every genuine believer has, that God, for Christ's sake, has blotted out his sins; and by which he is enabled to call God his Father; and feel Him to be his portion. It is such an appropriating faith as this, which can quench any dart of the devil.

The fiery darts of the wicked] Βέλος, a dart, signifies any kind of missile weapon; every thing that is projected to a distance by the hand, as a javelin, or short spear; or by a bow, as an arrow; or a stone by a sling.

The fiery darts—τὰ βέλη τῆς νεφελῆς. It is probable that the apostle alludes to the darts called salarica, which were headed with lead, in or about which some combustible stuff was placed, that took fire in the passage of the arrow through the air, and often burnt up the enemy's engines, ships, &c; they were calcula-of salvation, and ^a the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God :

18 ^b Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and ted also to stick in the shields, and set them on fire. Some think that poisoned arrows may be intended, which are called fiery, from the burning heat produced in the bodies of those who were wounded by them. To quench or extinguish such fiery darts, the shields were ordinarily covered with metal on the outside, and thus the fire was prevented from catching hold of the shield. Where they struck on a shield of another kind, and set it on fire, the soldier was obliged to cast it away, and thus became defenceless.

The fiery darts of the wicked, τῶν πονηρῶν, or devil, are evil thoughts, and strong injections, as they are termed, which in the unregenerate, inflame the passions, and excite the soul to acts of transgression. While the faith is strong in Christ, it acts as a shield to quench these. He who walks so as to feel the witness of God's Spirit that he is his child, has all evil thoughts in abhorrence; and though they pass through his mind, never fix in his passions. They are caught on this shield, blunted and extinguished.

Verse 17. Take the helmet of salvation] Or, as it is expressed, 1 Thes. v. 8. And, for a helmet, the hope of salvation. It has already been observed, in the description of the Grecian armour, that on the crest and other parts of the helmet were a great variety of emblematical figures; and that it is very likely the apostle refers to helmets which had on them an emblematical representation of hope; viz. that the person should be safe who wore it; that he should be prosperous in all his engagements, and ever escape safe from battle. So the hope of conquering every adversary, and surmounting every difficulty through the blood of the Lamb, is as a helmet that protects the head; an impenetrable one, that the blow of the battle-ax cannot cleave. The hope of continual safety and protection, built on the promises of God, to which the upright follower of Christ feels he has a Divine right, protects the understanding from being darkened, and the judgment from being confused by any temptations of Satan, or subtle arguments of the sophistical ungodly. He who carries Christ in his heart, cannot be cheated out of the hope of his heaven.

The sword of the Spirit] See what is said before on ἐπίς and μάχαρα, in the account of the Greek armour. The sword of which St. Paul speaks is, as he explains it, the word of God; that is, the revelation which God has given of himself; or what we call the Holy Scriptures. This is called the word of the Spirit, because it comes from the Holy Spirit, and receives its fulfilment in the soul through the operation of the Holy Spirit. An ability to quote this, on proper occasions, and especially in times of temptation and trial, has a wonderful tendency to cut in pieces the snares of the adversary. In God's word, a genuine Christian may have unlimited confidence; and to every purpose, to which it is applicable, it may be brought with the greatest effect. The shield, faith; and the sword, the word of God, or faith in God's unchangeable word, is the principal armour of the soul. He, in whom the word of God dwells richly, and who has that faith by which he knows that he has redemption, even the forgiveness of sins, need not fear the power of any adversary. He stands fast in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made him free. Some suppose that τῶν πνευματικῶν, of the Spirit, should be understood of our own spirit, or soul; the word of God being the proper sword of the soul; or that offensive weapon, the only one which the soul uses. But though it is true that every Christian soul has this for its sword, yet the first meaning is the most likely.

Verse 18. Praying always] The apostle does not put praying among the armour; had he done so, he would have referred it, as he has done all the rest, to some part of the Grecian armour; but, as he does not do this, therefore we conclude, that his account of the armour is ended, and that now, having equipped his spiritual soldier, he shows him the necessity of praying, that he may successfully resist those principalities, powers, the rulers of the darkness of this world, and the spiritual wickednesses in heavenly places, with whom he has to contend. The panoply, or whole armour of God, consists in—1. The girdle—2. The breast-plate—3. The greaves—4. The shield—5. The helmet—and 6. The sword. He who had these was completely armed. And as it was the custom of the Grecian armies before they engaged, to offer prayers to the gods for their success, the apostle shows that these spiritual warriors must depend on the Captain of their salvation; and pray with all prayer, i. e. incessantly, being always in the spirit of prayer, so that they should be ever ready for public, private, mental, or ejaculatory prayer; always depending on HIM who can alone save, and who alone can destroy.

When the apostle exhorts Christians to pray with all prayer, we may at once see that he neither means spiritual nor formal prayer, in exclusion of the other. Praying, προσευχόμενοι, refers to the state of the spirit as well as to the act.

With all prayer] Refers to the different kinds of prayer that is performed in public, in the family, in the closet, in business, on the way, in the heart, without a voice, and with the voice from the heart. All these are necessary to the genuine Christian: and he, whose heart is right with God, will be frequent in the whole. "Some there are," says a very pious and learned writer, "who use only mental prayer or ejaculations, and think they are in a state of grace, and use a way of worship far superior to any other; but such only fancy themselves to be above what is really above them; it requiring far more grace to be enabled to pour out a fervent and continued prayer, than to offer up mental aspirations." And supplication] There is a difference between ἰκνησμός, prayer, and δέσμις, supplication. Some think the former means prayer for the attainment of good; the latter prayer for averting evil. Supplication, however, seems to mean prayer continued in—strong and incessant pleadings, till the evil is averted, or the good communicated. There are two things that must be attended to in prayer—1. That it be ἡμετέρας χάριτος, in every time, season, or opportunity—2. That it should be ἡ Πνεύματος, in or through the Spirit; that the heart should be engaged in it, and that its infirmities should be helped by the Holy Ghost.

Watching thereunto] Being always on your guard, lest your enemies should surprise you. Watch not only against evil, but also for opportunities to do good, and for opportunities to receive good. Without watchfulness, prayer and all the spiritual armour will be ineffectual.

With all perseverance] Being always intent on your object, and never losing sight of your danger, or of your interest. The word implies stretching out the neck, and looking about, in order to discern an enemy at a distance.

For all saints.] For all Christians; for this was the character by which they were generally distinguished.

Verse 19. And for me, that utterance may be given unto me] Ἰνα μοι δοθῆναι λόγος. Kypke has proved, by many examples, that λόγος δοθῆναι signifies permission and power to defend oneself in a court of justice; and this sense of the phrase is perfectly applicable to the case of St. Paul, who was an ambassador in bonds, ver. 20. and expected to be called to a public hearing, in which he was not only to defend himself, but to prove the truth and excellency of the Christian religion. And we learn from Phil. i. 12—14. that he had his desire in this respect, For the things which happened to him fell out to the furtherance of the Gospel, so that his bonds in Christ were manifest in all the palace, and in all other places. Thus God had enabled him to make a most noble defence, by which the Gospel acquired great credit.

The mystery of the Gospel] The whole doctrine of Christ, not fully revealed previously to that time.

Verse 20. An ambassador in bonds] An ambassador being the representative of his king, his person was, in all civilized countries, held sacred. Contrary to the rights of nations, this ambassador of the King of Heaven was put in chains! He had, however, the opportunity of defending himself, and of vindicating the honour of his Master.—See above.

As I ought to speak] As becomes the dignity and the importance of the subject.

Verse 21. That ye also] As well as other churches, to whom I have communicated the dealings both of God and man to me.

May know my affairs] May be acquainted with my situation and circumstances.

And how I do] How I employ my time, and what fruit there is of my apostolical labours.

Tychicus, a beloved brother] We learn from Acts xx. 4. that Tychicus was of Asia, and that he was a useful companion of St. Paul. See the note on the above place.

This same person, and with the same character and commendation, is mentioned in the Epistle to the Colossians, chap. iv. 7. He is mentioned also in Tit. iii. 12. and in 2 Tim. iv. 12.; from all these places it is evident that he was a person in whom the apostle had the highest confidence; and that he was a very eminent minister of Christ.

Verse 22. Whom I have sent—for the same purpose] Namely, that the Ephesians might know his affairs, and those of the church at Rome. Messengers of this kind frequently passed between the churches in those ancient times.

Comfort your hearts.] By showing you how powerfully he was upheld in all his tribulations; and how God turned his bonds to the furtherance of the Gospel. This must have been great consolation to all the followers of God; and particularly to those in Ephesus, or Laodicea, or to whomsoever the epistle was directed. The question, To whom was it sent? is divided between the Ephesians and the Laodiceans. Dr. Lardner has argued strongly in favour of the former; Dr. Paley not less so in favour of the latter.

Verse 23. Peace be to the brethren] If the epistle were really sent to the Ephesians, a people with whom the apostle was so intimately acquainted, it is strange that he mentions no person by name. This objection, on which Dr. Paley lays great stress, (see the Preface to this epistle,) has not been successfully answered.

Peace] All prosperity, and continual union with God and among yourselves; and love to God and man, the principle of all obedience and union; with faith, continually increasing, and growing stronger and stronger, from God the Father, as the fountain of all our mercies; and the Lord Jesus Christ, through whose sacrifice and mediation they all come.

Verse 24. Grace be with all them] May the Divine favour, and all the benedictions flowing from it, be with all them who love our Lord Jesus Christ, who has so loved us as to give his life to redeem ours, and to save us unto life eternal.

In sincerity] Ἐν ἀσθασιᾷ, in incorruptibility. Those who show the genuineness of their love by walking before Him in holiness of life. Many profess to love our Lord Jesus who are corrupt in all their ways: on these the grace or favour of God cannot rest; they profess to know him, but in works deny him. Such can neither expect favour here, nor hereafter.

Amen.] This is wanting in ABFG. and some others. It is, however, more likely to be a genuine subscription here, than most others of its kind. The apostle might have sealed his most earnest wish by this word, which means not so much, so be it! or may it be so! but rather implies the faithfulness of Him who had given the promises; and whose prerogative it was to give effect to the prayers which his own Spirit had inspired.

The principal subscriptions to this epistle are the following:—To the Ephesians. The Epistle to the Ephesians is finished. To the Ephesians, written from Rome. To the Ephesians written from Rome by Tychicus. This is the subscription which we have followed; and it is that of the larger number of modern MSS. and Editions. The Epistle to the Ephesians, written from Rome, and sent by Tychicus—STRAC. To the Ephesians—ÆTHIOPIC. VULGATE, no subscription. The end of this epistle, which was written from Rome by Tychicus. Praise be to God for ever. Amen—ARABIC. Written at Rome, and sent by Tychicus—COPTIC. The SARIDIC is defective. The Epistle to the Ephesians is ended, which was written at Rome by Tychicus—Philoxenian, STRAC.

We have had already occasion to observe that the subscriptions to the sacred books were not written by the authors themselves, but were added in a much later age; and generally by unskilful hands. They are consequently not much to be depended on; and never should be quoted as a part of the Divine oracles.

1. It may be supposed that on the principal subject of this concluding chapter, the armour of God, I should have been much more diffuse. I answer, my constant aim is just to say enough, and no more, on any point. Whether I attain this in general, or not, I can still say, it is what I have desired. As to the Christian armour, it does not appear to me that the apostle has couched such a profusion of mystical meaning in it, as to require a huge volume to explain.

I believe the Ephesians did not understand it so; nor did the primitive church of God. Men of rich imaginations may write large volumes on such subjects; but when they come to be fairly examined, they will be found not to be explanations of the text, on which they professedly treat; but immense bodies of divinity, in which the peculiar creed of the writer, both with respect to doctrine and discipline, is amply set forth. Mr. Gurnal's Christian Armour contains a great many excellencies; but surely it does not require such a volume to explain the five verses of this chapter, in which the apostle speaks of the spiritual armour! The grand design of the apostle was to show that truth, righteousness, obedience to the Gospel, faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, a well grounded hope of salvation, a thorough knowledge of the word of God, and a continual dependence on, and application to Him by prayer, were essentially necessary to every soul who desired to walk uprightly in this life, and finally to attain everlasting blessedness. This is the obvious meaning of the apostle; in this sense it was understood by the Ephesians, and by the primitive church; we may amplify it as we please.

2. In two or three places in the preceding notes, I have referred to a piece in a very remarkable rule relative to the Greek article, to be introduced at the end. From the labours of several learned men, this subject has acquired considerable importance, and has excited no small interest among biblical critics. The late benevolent, learned, and excellent Mr. Grenville Sharp was, I believe, the first who brought this subject fairly before the public; he was followed by the Rev. Dr. Wordsworth, a learned and intelligent clergyman of the established church.

The Rev. Dr. Middleton, now bishop of Calcutta, has since presented the subject in all its force and excellence, fortified by innumerable proofs, and a great variety of critical disquisition. The principal design of these writers was to exhibit a new and substantial mode of proving the Divinity of our Lord and Saviour. Their works are before the public, and within the reach of all who are capable of judging of this mode of proof.

The piece which I now subjoin is the result of the researches of one of my literary friends, H. S. Boyd, Esq. author of Translations from Chrysostom, &c. who has read the Greek writers, both sacred and profane, with peculiar attention; and has collected a vast number of additional examples, both from prose and poetic writers, for the confirmation and illustration of the rule in question; and in support of the great doctrine of the Godhead of Christ.

Till now, this piece has existed only in MS. but the critical reader, who has entered into this subject, will be glad to see such a number of pointed examples brought within his reach; which at once serve the purpose both of philology and divinity. The learned author has transmitted them to me for the purpose of insertion in this place; but want of room has obliged me to omit several of his quotations.

I would not wish the reader to suppose that these are the only proofs of the grand doctrine of the Godhead of Christ; they are not: the Holy Scripture, in its plain obvious meaning, independently of such criticism, affords the most luminous and convincing proofs of the doctrine in question; but this is no sufficient reason that we should reject any additional light, which may come to us in the way of Divine Providence.

BRIEF REMARKS ON THE GREEK ARTICLE.

“It has been now completely proved, and irrefragably established by the labours of learned men, that, independently of the common laws of syntax, the Greek article is governed by a very remarkable rule, to which it is universally subject. The rule is this:—When two or more personal pronouns, (of the same gender, number, and case,) are coupled together by the conjunction καί, and the article is prefixed to the first, but not to the second, third, &c. those two or more nouns, whether they be substantives or adjectives, denote one and the same person. This is the case also when two participles are thus coupled together.

I have given the rule nearly as it is laid down by Mr. Sharp: it is however subject to certain limitations. Whenever we meet, in a Greek writer, with a sentence constructed according to the rule, if the substantives, adjectives, or participles, be indicative of qualities and properties which are inconsistent and contradictory; in that case, two different persons may be intended, although the article be not prefixed to the latter. The reason of this is obvious. When a Greek writer was speaking of two persons, whom he designated by terms which were opposite and irreconcilable to one another, it was not necessary that he should prefix the article to the second, although he had placed it before the first. Every reader would see at once that the same person could not be both sober and drunken, both virtuous and wicked, both handsome and ugly, &c. It is also manifest, that all proper names must, for the same reason, be excepted. Every body knows that Paul and Peter cannot be the same person; therefore the article may be placed before Paul, but omitted before Peter. But if a Greek writer was speaking of two different persons, and the substantives, &c. which he employed, were indicative of qualities and attributes which might harmonize and coalesce in one person; it then became necessary that the article, if prefixed to the first, should also be placed before the second, for otherwise the reader might be misled. It follows from hence, that whenever we meet with a passage constructed according to our rule, if the substantives, &c. indicate qualities and properties which are not contradictory, but may be united in one person, we may then be absolutely certain that one person only is intended.

Corollary. It follows from hence, that when two personal nouns are united by the conjunction καί, and those nouns are descriptive of two different persons, the article must be prefixed to both, or prefixed to the last only, or neither.

Let us apply this doctrine to the criticism of the New Testament, and see if we can arrive at any conclusion of importance.

I shall first select some passages, where different persons are plainly and obviously meant.

‘Οι τελωναι και οι αμαρτανολοι.—“The publicans and the sinners.”

‘Ο βασιλευς και ο ηγεμων.—“The king and the governor,” (viz. Agrippa and Festus,) Acts xxvi. 30.

Απο Θεου Πατρος ημων, και Κυριου Ιησου Χριστου.—“From God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ,” 2 Thess. i. 2.

Τακταβος Θεου και Ιησου Χριστου δουλος.—“James, a servant of God, and of Jesus Christ,” James i. 1.

We see that in the above instances, the article is either used twice, or is wholly omitted.

Let us now examine some passages, wherein it is evident from the context, that two nouns, coupled together by the conjunction, refer to one and the same person. And here I would observe, that the examples which I have just adduced, and am about to adduce, are not all which the New Testament contains. The catalogue might be easily increased; but my object is to be as brief and as plain as possible.

‘Ο Θεος και Πατηρ του Κυριου ημων.—“The God and Father of our Lord,” 2 Cor. i. 3. 2 Cor. xi. 31. Ephes. i. 3.

Τυ Θεου και Πατρος ημων.—“Of our God and Father,” 1 Thess. i. 3.

Τω Θεω και Πατρι του Κυριου ημων.—“To the God and Father of our Lord,” Coloss. i. 3.

Τω Θεω και Πατρι αυτου.—“To his God and Father,” Rev. i. 6.

Επιστραφητε νυν επι τον Ποιμωνα και Επισκοπον των ψυχων ημων.—“Ye have now returned to the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls,” 1 Pet. ii. 25.

Τυχικως, ο αγαπητος αδελφος και πιστος διακων.—“Tychicus, a beloved brother and faithful deacon,” Ephes. vi. 21.

‘Ο μακαριος και μωτος δυναστης, ο Βασιλευς των βασιλευωντων και Κυριος των κηρυμιστων.—“The blessed and only potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords,” 1 Tim. vi. 15.

Τον αποστολον και αρχιερευ της ομολογιας ημων Χριστου Ιησου.—“The apostle and high-priest of our profession, Christ Jesus,” Heb. iii. 1.

Τον της πιστως αρχηγον και τελειωτην Ιησων.—“Jesus, the author and perfecter of our faith,” Heb. xii. 2.

Τυ Κυριου και Σωτηριου Ιησου Χριστου.—“Of the Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ,” 2 Pet. ii. 20. iii. 18.

Εγω Ιωαννης ο και αδελφος και συγκαταπα.—“I John, your brother and companion,” Rev. i. 9.

In all the above cases, the nouns are substantives—In the following, they are adjectives.

Ωςτι του τυφλου και κωφου και κελου και βλαου.—“So that the man who was blind and dumb, both saw and spake,” Matt. xii. 22.

Ουα αδελφε οτι συ ει ο τελειωτατος, και ομωτος, και πιστωτος, και τυφλως, και κωμωτος.—“Thou knowest not that thou are wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked," Rev. iii. 17.

Φίληματι τῷ ἀγαπῶντι καὶ συνευχῶν ἡμῶν.—"To Philemon, our beloved and coadjutor," Phil. i. 1. This rule extends also to participles :—

Ὁ δὲ φίλος τῆ Νυμφῆς ὁ ἰσχυρὸς καὶ ἀκούων αὐτοῦ.—"He that loveth and purified us," Rev. i. 5.

Τῷ ἀγαπῶσαντι καὶ λυσιχάρτι ἡμᾶς.—"To Him who loved us, and purified us," Rev. i. 5.

Ἐγὼ Ἰωάννης, ὁ βλέπων ταῦτα καὶ ἀκούων.—"I John, the man seeing and hearing these things," Rev. xxii. 8.

Πᾶς ὁ φιλῶν καὶ πῖνον ψεύδους.—"Every person who loveth and maketh a lie," Rev. xii. 15.

Ὁ τρώγων μὲν τὴν σὰρκά, καὶ πίνων μὲν τὸ αἷμα.—"He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood," John vi. 54.

I have now laid before the reader examples of the phraseology which is employed, when two different persons are manifestly and obviously spoken of in the same member of a sentence; and when one person is as obviously depicted, under two different appellations. We see that in the one case the article is prefixed to both words, or to neither: we see that in the other case, the article is prefixed to the first word, but wanting to the second, whether they be substantives, or adjectives, or participles. Let us then apply it, as we do the other rules of syntax, to the explication of a passage in Ephesians, chap. v. verse 5.

Ἐν τῇ βασιλείᾳ τοῦ Χριστοῦ καὶ Θεοῦ.

"In the kingdom of the Christ and God."

This passage speaks for itself; and to make any comment upon it would be utterly superfluous. I shall only observe, that as far as certainty can be attained in this present life, as far as we can be assured of the meaning and import of human language, so far may we be certain, that the writer of the Epistle to the Ephesians, pronounces Christ to be God.

But what will the Arian say to this? He will tell us, that in this passage the apostle pronounces Jesus Christ to be a god, (mark, a god,) that is, a being of a high and exalted nature. There are one or two passages in the Old Testament where angels are called gods on account of their transcendent dignity; and Christ, whom we allow, in dignity and power, to be equal to the highest of the angels, may, therefore, be called a god. This, I believe, is the sum and substance of the Arian doctrine.

In the second chapter of the Epistle to Titus, and the thirteenth verse, we have the following glorious testimony:

Ἐπιφανῶν τῆς δόξης τοῦ μεγάλου Θεοῦ καὶ Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν, Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.

"The manifestation of the glory of the great God and Saviour of us, Jesus Christ."

In the last passage that I quoted, Christ is styled God. But here, He is called the Great God. If angels have a right to be denominated gods, we must confess that there are in heaven myriads of gods; but by the words, the Great God, one being only can be designated. Angels may be termed θεοί, but ὁ μεγάλος Θεός is the incommunicable appellation of the Lord God Jehovah!

Although we have already proved, to the satisfaction of the unprejudiced, that the rule we have laid down is inherent in the language, and that certain passages of Scripture can admit of no other interpretation than that which we have given, an objection may be started, and a question may be proposed, which claims our most serious attention. The question I mean, is this—In what sense were these passages understood by the Fathers of the Greek church? As they lived nearer to the primitive times of Christianity than we do, we must allow that they were at least as competent as ourselves to pass judgment in any subject of theological discussion; but in the case now before us, their authority must be vastly greater. In addition to the circumstance of the Greek being their native tongue, some of them were men of very extensive learning, and of distinguished skill in philological researches: they must, therefore, have had a more accurate perception, than the most learned amongst us can pretend to, of the precise application of every rule in syntax, the exact meaning of the minutest particle, and the determinate effect of the slightest inflection in the language. They are therefore the properest persons to decide if such expressions as τῷ Χριστῷ καὶ Θεοῦ, and τῷ μεγάλῳ Θεοῦ καὶ Σωτῆρος, have, according to the laws of grammar, the meaning which we affix to them. If they perceived in them the force and evidence that we do, they would of course have appealed to them in their controversies with the Arians; and happy would they have been in bringing forward such resistless testimonies to the Divinity of our Lord. And they did appeal to them! yes, the most illustrious of the Fathers, St. Chrysostom himself, appealed to them! In his fifth discourse on the incomprehensible nature of Deity, he sums up those texts of Scripture wherein Christ is called God! and he reckons amongst them the 5th verse of the 5th chapter of Ephesians, and the 13th verse of the second of Titus. For the satisfaction of the reader, I shall translate the passage; and that he may have the clearest view of the subject, I shall transcribe a considerable portion of the context.

An extract from St. Chrysostom's Fifth Homily, Περὶ ἀκατάκλυτου, Tom. VI. pag. 417, 418. Edit. Savil.

"Of the titles which are attributed to the Deity, some are common, and some particular; the common, denote the indivisibility of the Divine essence; the particular, characterize the personality of the hypostases. Thus the name of Father and of Son appertain each to its peculiar hypostasis; but the name of God, and of Lord, is common to both. Since the Scripture has applied the appellation of God to all the Persons of the Trinity, it was needful also to make use of a distinguishing appellation, that we might know of which Person it was speaking, and not run into the error of Sabellius. For, that the name God, is not greater than that of Lord, nor the name Lord inferior to that of God, is manifest from hence: in every part of the Old Testament the Father is continually styled Lord, the Lord thy God; again, there is one LORD; and again, Thou shalt worship thy

LORD thy God, and Him only shall thou serve; and again, Great is our LORD, and mighty is His power; and again, Let them know that thy name is LORD, Thou only art the highest over all the earth. Now, if the name LORD be inferior to that of God, and consequently unworthy of the Divine essence, it should not have been said, Let them know that thy name is LORD; again, if the name of God be greater, and more venerable than that of Lord, the Son, who, according to them is an inferior being, should not have been addressed by a name appropriated to the Father, and which was his own peculiar title; but far otherwise is the case, for neither is the Son of a lower nature than the Father, nor is the name of Lord inferior to that of God. Wherefore with regard to the Father and the Son, the Scripture uses, indiscriminately, the same appellations.

“Having laid before you the passages wherein the Father is called LORD, it is necessary to adduce those passages wherein the Son is styled God. Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and shall bear a Son, and they shall call his name EMMANUEL; which signifies God is with us. We now perceive, that the name of Lord is given to the Father, and that of God unto the Son: for, as in the other place it is said, Let them know that thy name is LORD; so here it saith, They shall call his name EMMANUEL. And again, A Child is born to us, and a Son is given us, and his name is called, The Angel of High Counsels, The great and mighty God. And here observe the cautious prudence, and spiritual wisdom, of the prophetic writers; for when they are speaking of the great and mighty God, lest they should seem to be speaking of the Father, they make the most particular mention of the miraculous conception. It is evident, at once, that the Father was not born of a virgin, and did not become a little child: again, another of the prophets somewhere says, This is our God. But concerning whom doth he say it? Is it of the Father? By no means; for he also alludes to the miraculous economy. Having said, This is our God, he adds, He explored the way of knowledge, and gave it to Jacob his child, and to Israel his well-beloved. After this, he was seen upon the earth, and he dwelt amongst men. Paul also writes, Of whom, as to the flesh, is Christ, who is over all, God blessed for evermore; again, No fornicator, or covetous man, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of the Christ and God; and again, The glorious appearance of the GREAT GOD and Saviour of us, Jesus Christ. John likewise calls him by the same name, for he says, In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

“But perhaps an adversary will say, Can you show me any passage where the Scripture, ranking him with the Father, calls the Father Lord? I will not only show this; but I will produce passages where the Scripture calls both the Father LORD, and the Son LORD; and where it calls both the Father God, and the Son God. Christ, one day discoursing with the Jews, said, What think ye concerning Christ? Whose Son is He? They say unto him, He is the Son of David. He saith to them, How then doth David, in Spirit, call Him LORD; saying,

The LORD said unto my LORD, Sit thou on my right hand? Mark, here are two LORDS. I will now show you where the Scripture, speaking at once of the Father and the Son, calls both the one and the other God. Hear then the words of the prophet David, and of the apostle Paul, commenting upon that prophet:—Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever: a sceptre of righteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom. Thou hast loved righteousness, and abhorrest iniquity; therefore, O God, thy God hath anointed Thee with the oil of gladness, above thy fellows. And Paul, bringing forward this testimony concerning Christ, writes thus: Of His angels he saith, Who maketh his ANGELS spirits. But of the Son He saith, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever!”

In his 5th Hom. on the Epistle to Titus, he thus comments on chap. ii. ver. 13.

Που υπη οι του Πατρος ελαττονα τον Τιον λεγοντα; του μεγαλυ, ουκ, Θεου και Σωτηρος.

“Where are they who assert that the Son is inferior to the Father? Mark, he saith, ‘of the great God and Saviour!’”—Tom. IV. p. 401. Edit. Sav.

There is, however, another passage in the writings of that learned Father, more absolute and conclusive than those which are already given. The original may be found in the 4th vol. of Sir Henry Savile's edition, page 32. It is in English as follows:

“He that is small cannot be God; for every where in the Scripture God is denominated Great. GREAT is the Lord, says David, and greatly to be praised. (Mark, he also speaks of the Son, for every where he calls him Lord.) And again: GREAT art thou, and doing wonders: ihou art God alone. And again: GREAT is our Lord, and mighty is His power.—But these things, you will say, are spoken of the Father; but the Son is small. You say this, but the Scripture asserts the contrary; for, as it speaks of the Father, so likewise does it of the Son. Listen unto Paul, who says, Expecting the blessed hope and glorious appearance of the GREAT God. Surely he could not apply the word appearance to the Father. And that he may refute you more completely, he adds, of the GREAT God. Well then, must not this have been spoken of the Father? Certainly not; for the words which follow will not admit it, The appearance of the Great God and Saviour of us, JESUS CHRIST. You perceive that the Son also is denominated Great. Away then with your idle talk about small and great! Listen also to the prophet, who calls him The ANGEL of GREAT COUNSEL. The Angel of great counsel, is he not Great? The Mighty God, is he not Great, but small? How then can these obstinate and shameless wretches assert that he is a less God? I often repeat their words, that ye may the more eschew them.”

If a reader wholly impartial could be found, I think he would confess that, as far as we can attain to certainty in any thing, we may be certified, from the above extract, that the canon laid down by Mr. Sharp is correct and genuine. Chrysostom supposes an adversary to address him thus:—

"I see that in this sentence God is spoken of; and not merely spoken of, but likewise styled The GREAT God. Surely such an expression as this must refer to the Father. No, replies our saint, that is impossible; for the phrase και Σωτηρ, which follows, shows at once that Θεος and Σωτης mean the same Person; and Σωτης, in this place, is spoken of Jesus Christ."

Such is the testimony of Chrysostom, the most eloquent, if not the most learned, of the Fathers. Basil, archbishop of Cæsarea, though inferior to Chrysostom in richness of imagination and brilliancy of rhetoric, far surpassed him, and almost all the Fathers, in the universality of his learning, and in his profound knowledge of the Sacred Writings. No authority can be higher, or more unquestionable, than his. As I have not his works at hand, I can only refer to them from memory; but I am confident, that what I am about to state, will be found, upon examination, to be correct. In his fourth book against Eunomius, speaking of the Divinity of Christ, he cites the latter of these texts: but, having done so, he is fearful lest some of his hearers should be misled by it. The expression του μεγαλου Θεου, appears to him so strong, that he is apprehensive lest it should be thence inferred, that the Son is greater than the Father!

This passage will be found in the first volume of the Benedictine edition, and at page 294—Tom. II. pag. 107. Edit. Par. 1618.

As we have proved that the best and purest of the Greek Fathers were well acquainted with the full force of the article, it may be asked, Do their own writings abound with examples to confirm it? I answer, that they abound with them in numerous instances; let a few examples suffice.

From Chrysostom.

'Ο αγιαζων αυτα και μετασπειραζων Αυτος εστι.— "It is He who sanctifies and transforms the bread and wine." Homil. 82. in Matth.

Εγκαλιον τα Σωτηρι και Ευφηγια.— "He would accend the Saviour and Benefactor." De Sacerd. lib. iv.

'Η σφοδρα παλις και ακαθαρτα, (σφατα)—"Who was most impious and impure." Orat. in Eutrop.

Συν τα ζωοποιη και παναγιω Πνευματι.— "With the life-bestowing and all-holy Spirit." De Incompreh. Hom. 2.

Που δε οι συνουντες και μυρια σκαμια λογοντες.— "Where are they who walk insolently, and utter ten thousand panegyrics?" Orat. in Eutrop.

Και τι λογονται προφηται; αυτοι αγα σοι, του του προφητου δεσποτου, του κοιπου ημου Θεου και Κυριου, του Χριστου. Αυτος γαρ φησι, οτι Παιωντα με ιδεσθαι, και εδραβηται.— "But why do I quote the prophet? I will bring against you Him who is the Master of the prophet, our common God and Lord, the Christ. For he says, 'Ye saw me hungering, and ye fed me.'" Orat. in Eliam. et in viduam.

Mark, either Chrysostom speaks of one single Person, or the sentence is ungrammatical. Now the passage in the 13th of the 2d chapter of Titus, του μεγαλου Θεου και Σωτηρος, must have the same meaning as του κοιπου Θεου και Κυριου.

From Gregory Nazianzen.

'Ο ποιμην και μαρτυς.— "Who was both a pastor and a martyr." Orat. de Mamante.

'Οι τινι στυγαι ημιν επιδιδουτε και τα πλουτου κομπαζουτε.— "Reproaching our poverty, and boasting of their own wealth." Orat. in Arianos.

Τον ηραιον οτι και τα ζην επιτηδων.— "Who were in the bloom of youth, and fitted to enjoy life." Orat. Funebr. in Patrem.

Των ισωτων και ου ιωντων.— "Beings, permanent and imperishable." Ibid.

Τον σου ιηου και ομωνυμου.— "Me, thy priest and namesake." Ibid.

From Basil.

'Οι ακτηται και ζηταιαι του Χριστου στρατιωται.— "These unconquered and noble soldiers of Christ." Orat. in quadragint. Martyr.

Τον λουστα και αναλαζοντα.— "Him who liberates us, and brings us back." Orat. in Martyr. Julitt.

But what say the heathen authors? Is this doctrine of the Greek article founded only upon the phraseology of ecclesiastical writers, or does it exist in the works of those who wrote in the utmost purity and perfection of the language? It reigns triumphant in them all. Take up whatever authority you please, whether in prose or verse: consult the poets, the philosophers, and the historians; peruse the writings of Homer and of Sophocles, of Aristotle, and of Plato, of Thucydides and Xenophon, of Isocrates or Demosthenes; in them you will meet with the most decisive testimonies to the truth of the doctrine already laid down. If you appeal to Lucian, you will find that Ulysses is called του ζωου και φιλου, "the host and friend." You may, perchance, have heard that the great Person pronounced Lucian to be a writer of small authority; and you may wish to be convinced from the example of a pure Attic writer. Was ever writer more pure than Xenophon? And he will tell you, that Cyrus was, at once, ο βασιλευς και ηγεμον.—"The king and the general."

In the Agamemnon of Æschylus, (and indeed in every tragedy of that poet,) we are presented with numerous confirmations of our rule.

'Ο χρυσαμοιβος δ' Αρης σωματες και ταλαντουχος η μαχη δαρος.

V. 432, 433.

"Mars, the exchanger of bodies; and holder of the balance in the conflict of the spear."

Πατερα Θυεις η τον μου, Αυτου η' αδελφου.

V. 1593, 1594.

"Thyestes, my father and his brother."

This last is a happy instance. Ægisthus is speaking of his father, who was brother to Atreus.

One of the passages which I have cited from the New Testament, may be thought, by some, to be liable to an objection. I mean the 5th verse of the 5th chapter of Ephesians. It may be said, that the word Χριστου is not a substantive, but an adjective; αγιω, or αδελφω, being understood; and it may be asked, Does this rule apply, when an adjective and a substantive are united by the conjunction, the article being prefixed to the first, and not to the second? I answer, by referring the objector to an example which I have given from St. Gregory Nazianzen: there μνηστω is a substantive, and ισατος an adjective; and it is manifest that Jupiter, and Jupiter only, is intended.

Least it should appear to any, that I have been too concise, and have not furnished a sufficient number of corroborating examples, I have subjoined the following: two from the New Testament, some from the Fathers, and some from heathen poets.

Αναβαίνω προς τον Πατέρα μου και Πατέρα ἡμῶν, και Θεοῦ μου και Θεοῦ ἡμῶν.—“I ascend to my Father and your Father, and my God and your God.” John xx. 17. This is an excellent example, where the Supreme Being is considered in the four distinct relations of God and Father of Christ, and God and Father of men; the article being placed before the first only.

Αναγκασθὼν δι' ἐπρωταγῆν Ἐπαφροδίτου τοῦ ἀδελφοῦ και συντροῦ δι' ἐπρωταγῆν με, ἡμῶν δι' ἀποστολῆς, και λυτρωτοῦν τῆς χρεμῆς μου, συμψαί προς ἡμᾶς.—“Yet I supposed it necessary to send to you Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier, but your messenger, and he that ministered to my wants.” Philip. ii. 25. This is a very remarkable example, where the article is placed before ἀδελφοῦ, and wanting before συντροῦ, ἐπρωταγῆν, ἀποστολῆς, and λυτρωτοῦν, because all referring to Ἐπαφροδίτου.

Οἱ σκῆπτροι τοῦ Σταυρωμένου και λεγῆτος, Ἄφρι αυ- τῶν.—“The servants of Him that was crucified, and saith, ‘Forgive them.’” Chrysostom. Orat. in Eutrop.

Πειθομένους κατ' Ἐμεῶν τοῦ καλλίστου και ἀγαθω- ταιῶν τῶν Θεῶν.—“Being persuaded by Mercury, the fairest and best of the gods.” Heliod.

Ἄμφι τοῦ ἀναρχοῦ και ἀναλῆθρου Βασιλέως.—“Around the King without beginning, and im- mortal.” Methodius.

Τὸν κεκυρωτοτάτου κατ' ἡμῶν και πρώτου τῶν ποιητῶν, Ὅμηρον.—“Homer, the most distinguish- ed among you, and first of the poets.” Justin Martyr, Cohortatio ad Græcos.

Ὁ δυστυχῆς δαιμόνι, ὁ σοὶ καὶ μοῖρα.

Sophocles Electra.

Ὁ Ἀρχιπρωταγῆς και Ποιμὴν τῶν κατ' οὐρανοῦ ὅντα πάντα πηδῶνται.—“The Great Ruler and Shep- herd of them in heaven, whom all things obey.” Methodius.

Ἰνα τὸν Βασιλέα γεραίη πάντων και Ποιητῆν.—“That he may venerate the King and Maker of all.” Ibid.

Ὁ στρατῆς ἡμῶν και ποιμὴν Ἰησοῦς, και ἀρχὸν, και ἡγούμενον.—“Jesus, our leader, and Shepherd, and governor, and bridegroom.” Ibid.

The three following instances are from the poems of Gregory Nazianzen. It will be seen that even in poetry he cannot deviate from the established rule:

Ὁ ματαιώδης και κακιστὸς ζωγράφος.

Adv. Iram. p. 234, Edit. Paris.

“The insane and most execrable painter.”

Τι λοιπὸν; ὀμίζω σε τῶν κακῶν φίλον,
Τὸν δυσμῆν ἐπιτροχῶν και προστάτην.

Ibid. p. 237.

“What remains? I adjure thee, the friend of the wicked, the malevolent advocate and patron.”

Ὁ λυσσωδῆς και βασκαῖος οἶα τῆ' Ἰωβ
Εἰς δὲ τῆν κακίαν—

“Doth the infuriate and invidious demon call me, like another Job, unto the combat.”

Most of the above writers have not yet been quoted on this subject. The examples from Me- thodius, appear to me to be the most valuable; and we may say from these, that any Greek writer whatever, will furnish sufficient exam- ples to illustrate and establish this important rule.

Τὸν Θεοῦ μόνου ἀγνισθῆ, τοῖ δισποτῆν και δημιουργ- ῶν τοῦ πάντος.—“Ye deny the only God, the Lord and Creator of all.” Chrysostomi Orat. De non anathem. vivis aut defunctis.

Τὸν πῆντα και πλουσίον, (speaking of Elias)—“The indigent and rich man.” Chrysostom. Adver. Anom. Orat. 6.

Τὸν μακαρίον και αἰδόμενον ταυτοῦ.—“This bless- ed and celebrated man.” Georg. Archiep. Alexand. De Vitâ Chrysostomi.

Ὁι ταχῆς τὰ πάντα και οὐκ ἀσφαλεῖς, οἱ ῥαδίως οἰκοδομοῦντες και καταλόντες.—“They who are swift in every thing, and not firm; who readily rear superstructures, and destroy them.” Gregor. Nazianz. Orat. Apol. de Fugâ.

Ἄφρι—ὁ τῆς χρυσοῦς Ἀφροδίτης ἀφῆς φρασεῖς και μοιχὸς ἀπεισιδέκτος.—“Mars, the ungraceful lover of the golden Venus, and the uncircum- spect adulterer.” Ibid. Orat. 1. adv. Julianum.

Μωυσης—ὁ μὲν Θεὸς Φαραῶ, και τὸ Ἰσραὴλ προεστῆς και ἡγούμενος.—“Moses, the god of Pharaoh, and governor and lawgiver of Israel.” Ibid. Orat. 4. adv. Julian.

Ὁ μὲν ἀρχὸν ἀρχόντων, και ἱερεῖς ἱερέων, (speaking of Moses)—“The ruler of rulers, and priest of priests.” Ibid.

Σὺ τε ὁ τῆς ἐμῆς φιλοσοφίας βασανιστὴς και κριτῆς.—“Thou art both the investigator and judge of my philosophy.” Ibid.

Ἐν ἡμέρᾳ ἐπιφανείας και ἀποκαλύψεως τοῦ μεγάλου Θεοῦ και Ἀρχιποιμῆτος ἡμῶν, Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ.—“In the day of the appearing and revelation of Jesus Christ, the Great God and chief Shepherd of us.” Ibid. in fine.

Τὸν τῶν γέννητων ἀπάντων Κυριῶν και Θεοῦ και Βασιλέα.—“The Lord, and God, and King of all mortals.” (De Christo loquitur.) Eusebii Pamph. Eccles. Hist. lib. i. c. 2.

Ὅσα τὰς Τηρέως
Μυτιῶδες οἰκτρᾶς ἀλοχῶ Κικηλατοῦ τ' ἀνδρός.

Æschylis Supplices, l. 62—64.

This is an excellent example. It may be necessary to inform the unlearned, that, accord- ing to Æschylus, the wife, and not the sister-in- law of Tereus, was changed into the nightingale. See the Agamemnon, v. 1146. Edit. Porson.

Ὁ μακαρίος Ἐπιφανῆς, ὁ μαρτυρῆς και ἐπισκοπῆς Λουγ- δουνου.—“The blessed Irenæus, the martyr and bishop of Lugdanum.” Justinus in Responsione ad Questionem 115 ad Orthodoxos.

Ἰουστίνου τοῦ φιλοσοφοῦ και μαρτυροῦς, και Ἐπιφανῆς τοῦ τα Κελτικὰ και ζωοζῶσαντος και φωτιστῆτος Ἰστῆν.—“Justin, the philosopher and martyr; and Ire- næus, who cultivated and illuminated the Celtic nations.” Theodoretus in Præfatione Hæreticarum Fabularum.

Ἰνα Χριστῶ Ἰησοῦ τῶ Κυριῶ ἡμῶν, και Θεοῦ, και Σωτῆρῆ, και Βασιλέα, κατὰ τὴν ἐδοκίαν τοῦ Πατρὸς τοῦ ἀπατάω, παν ἰου καμψ.—“That to Christ Jesus, our Lord, and God, and Saviour, and King, ac-ording to the good pleasure of the invisible Father, every knee may bow." Irenæus adversus Hæreses, lib. i. c. 2. p. 45. Edit. Oxon. 1702.

Τον Κτίστην και Δημιουργον.—"The Creator and Maker." Ibid. c. 4. p. 48.

Ὁ Πατήρ — ἄανθρωπος και ἀσώματος.—"The Father that cannot be fathomed by the understanding, and who is immaterial." Ibid. c. 10. page 63.

Ἄ ἐστὶ κατὰ πίστιν και ἀγάπην Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, τοῦ Θεοῦ και Σωτῆρος ἡμῶν.—"Which are according to the faith and love of Jesus Christ, our God and Saviour." Ignatii Epist. ad Romanos.

Μισοῦ ἴνα τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἴδω τοῦ Σωτῆρα μου και Θεοῦ.—"That I may know Christ only, my Saviour and God." Epistola ad Tarsenses Ignatio adscripta.

FURTHER OBSERVATIONS ON THE GREEK ARTICLE.

POSTSCRIPT,

Intended as a Supplement to the Essay on that subject.

The author of the above mentioned Essay, conceiving that he has been misunderstood, and that certain objections raised against the doctrine of the Greek Article require a more particular answer, has requested me to subjoin the following Postscript. This I do without pretending to determine any thing relative to the merits of the objections, or the answers here given.

AS they who disbelieve the Divinity of Christ, are naturally ready to assail whatever tends to confirm and to establish it; and as the lovers of disputation are often prone to the same conduct, without having the same excuse; I deem it necessary to answer the objections which have been brought against me, in conversation, and by letter. The most ingenious objection which I have yet heard, I shall notice first. It was made by a Unitarian of considerable acuteness. "You allow," said he, "that when two nouns of an opposite and contradictory meaning, are coupled by the conjunction, two different persons are intended, although the article be prefixed to the first, but not to the second. Do you not perceive, that you hereby furnish us with a reply? We have only to say that Χριστός and Θεός are opposite and irreconcilable terms. The passage in Ephesians is therefore an exception." This is the most subtle objection I have met with; but it is not unanswerable. The fallacy consists in this—our opponent takes for granted the very thing, which it is his business to prove.

Instead of making assertions, we will demonstrate, that $\chi\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ and $\Theta\epsilon\omicron\varsigma$ are not irreconcilable, but consistent, and capable of application to the same Person. In the opening of St. John's Gospel we read, that the word was God. A little after we are informed, that the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us. From hence it is evident, to the humblest capacity, that the Word means Christ. But the Word was God; therefore, $\chi\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ and $\Theta\epsilon\omicron\varsigma$ are not inconsistent, but compatible. If, however, the Gospel of St. John were not in existence, we should still be able to answer this objection, by an appeal to the passage in Titus. We there find, that $\Theta\epsilon\upsilon\ \Sigma\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\rho\varsigma$ are most providentially united by the conjunction. Now $\Theta\epsilon\omicron\varsigma$ and $\Sigma\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\rho\varsigma$ are unquestionably compatible. God may be a Saviour if he pleases, and we know that in the Scripture He is sometimes styled a Saviour. The expression $\tau\upsilon\ \mu\epsilon\gamma\alpha\lambda\eta\ \Theta\epsilon\upsilon\ \kappa\alpha\iota\ \Sigma\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\rho\varsigma$, is therefore subject to the influence of the rule, and one Person only is intended. But $\Sigma\alpha\upsilon\tau\omicron\rho\varsigma$ is spoken of Christ; therefore Christ is here styled The Great God; consequently $\chi\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ and $\Theta\epsilon\omicron\varsigma$ are perfectly consistent, perfectly compatible.

I shall next take notice of an objection, which has less strength and force than the preceding: "You admit," said the objector, "because the very numerous instances oblige you to admit it, that proper names are excepted from the influence of the rule. Do you not see, that by this confession, your whole system is completely overthrown? An Unitarian will immediately observe, that $\chi\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ and $\Theta\epsilon\omicron\varsigma$ are proper names, and consequently exceptions." In answer to this objection, I beg leave to state, first, with respect to $\Theta\epsilon\omicron\varsigma$, it is simply an appellation. Jehovah is the proper name of God; but the word God is a term, by which we designate the incomprehensible Being, the Great First Cause. Secondly, with regard to $\chi\epsilon\iota\varsigma$, it is evident, from the various places where it occurs, that it is simply a title of office, given unto that Divine Person whose name is Jesus. That the word Christ has become a proper name amongst us, I readily admit; but we must not confound English with Greek idioms. As I have no right, however, to expect, that my unsupported assertions should be admitted as an authority, I shall cite the learned professor Michaelis.

In the time of the apostles, says he, the word Christ was never used as the proper name of a person, but as an epithet expressive of the ministry of Jesus. Introduct. Vol. I. p. 337. See also these notes, on Matthew, chap. i. ver. 16.

I have now to offer my observations, on an argument, which at first sight appears plausible. It was urged against me, by the same man who made the above objection; but it had already passed through my own mind, and I had already answered it to my own satisfaction. Whether it be answered to the satisfaction of my reader, he will now determine. "In St. John, chap. xx. ver. 28. we find the following expression: $\circ\ \kappa\upsilon\tau\iota\omicron\varsigma\ \kappa\alpha\iota\ \delta\ \Theta\epsilon\omicron\varsigma\ \mu\epsilon\omega\upsilon$. All the orthodox are agreed, that Jesus is here styled both Lord and God. If, then, the rule you contend for was real and genuine, the article ought not to have been repeated before the second noun, inasmuch as one person only is intended. The same argument may be deduced from a passage in Revelation, chap. xxii. ver. 13." I answer, it is well known to every mathematician, that the converse of a proposition does not necessarily hold. Now it is the same in philology, as in science. I have maintained, and do still maintain, that when two substantives, &c. are coupled by the conjunction, the article being prefixed to the first, but not to the second, one person only is intended. It does not follow from hence, that when one person only is intended, the article must be prefixed to the first, but not to the second. It may be affixed to neither, or it may be affixed to both, as in the example above quoted, for the purpose of giving greater force and energy.

I have now to answer another objection, which I should have passed unregarded, if it had not been made by persons of considerable consequence, and of opposite creeds. We cannot admit, say they, that a doctrine of such importance should rest upon a mere form of speech, a mere rule of syntax. Now I should be glad to know, what truth is there, however sacred, what doctrine, however important, which does not rest upon some form of speech, upon some rule of syntax. A single example will suffice. How can we be certain whether the apostle, in 1 Tim. chap. i. ver. 16. meant to inform us, whether Christ came into the world to save sinners, or whether sinners came into the world to save Christ? What other answer than the following can be given? It is an universal law of syntax, that a verb in the indicative mood must be preceded by a nominative; and if there be an accusative case in the sentence, that accusative must be governed either by a verb or by a preposition. We are therefore certain, that the passage admits of one meaning only. All Divine knowledge, as well as human knowledge, is communicated through the medium of language; and were would be the certainty of language, if it were not governed by fixed unalterable rules?

I have now gone through the principal objections, which have been urged against our system. If it should appear to the enlightened reader, that I have not sufficiently refuted them; I hope, I intreat, that he will attribute this to the inability of the advocate, and not to the imperfection of the cause. When the admirable Porson was alive, he might have lulled the question into an everlasting rest. With one effort of his mind, with one glance of his eye, with one stroke of his pen, he could have poured upon the subject a flood of light, which Satan could never have extinguished, and the opposers of this doctrine could never have withstood. But, alas! his studies were not directed to subjects of sacred criticism.

I shall conclude this postscript, with a few general observations on the subject.

When the Monthly Reviewers sat down to criticise Dr. Middleton's work upon the Greek Article, the subject was but in its infancy. It had not attained the matured vigour, and perfect bloom, which it now displays. These gentlemen imagined, that they had given a death-blow to the system, by bringing forward such examples as the following: $\tau\omicron\iota\ \delta\iota\sigma\tau\omicron\upsilon\tau\omicron\iota\ \kappa\alpha\iota$ αυλασιν; the temperate, and intemperate. We now see that their arguments are most successfully turned against themselves. It is evident, from what has been said at the beginning of my Essay, that this instance is no exception to the rule. A temperate, and an intemperate person, are characters essentially different, and therefore it was unnecessary to repeat the article. Thus Æschylus, in his Agamemnon, speaking of the Trojans and the Greeks, says,

“Of the captured, and those who gained the victory;”

in which place it is manifest, that the repetition of the article would have been needless. I must not omit to mention, that in this part of the subject, I am indebted for some of my ideas to Bishop Burgess: who, in an appendix to one of his Charges, has maintained and illustrated the rule.

I have also stated, that proper names are exempted from its jurisdiction. It is clear that Peter and John are distinct persons; therefore, St. Luke, chap. ix. ver. 28. writes, παραλαβὸν τὸν Πέτρον, καὶ Ἰακώβον, καὶ Ἰακώβου; having taken Peter, and John, and James.

In Acts xxvi. 30. St. Luke informs us, that the king and the governor arose. If we examine the original, we shall find that the article is prefixed to both these nouns, ἀνστῆ ὁ βασιλεὺς, καὶ ὁ ἡγεμῶν. Why was the article here repeated? Was it to give force and energy to the expression?—No, it was for a reason more important; the evangelist intended us to understand that, when St. Paul had ceased to speak, the king Agrippa, and the governor Festus, arose. Now, the offices of a king and a governor are perfectly compatible. If, then, he had written ὁ βασιλεὺς καὶ ἡγεμῶν, he would have conveyed a very different idea from that which was intended. The reader would have supposed, that Agrippa united in his own person the offices of king and governor; that he and Bernice rose up, and that Festus was left by himself, unless, indeed, he was included among those, οἱ συγκαθήμενοι αὐτοῖς, who sat together with them. But St. Luke knew, and felt the force, the influence, and the universality of the rule which we contend for, and wrote accordingly.

In the course of my Essay, I quoted those passages of Chrysostom wherein he proves the Godhead of Christ, from Titus ii. 13. I then brought forward the testimony of Basil, and appealed to his fourth book against Eunomius. It may, however, be objected, that some critics have doubted whether that book be genuine. If we should even allow that it is spurious, and admit as a fact what is merely a matter of opinion, we shall not be thereby deprived of the testimony of St. Basil. His Homilies on the Psalms are unquestionably genuine; and in the very first of these he quotes Titus ii. 13. and applies the whole of it to Christ. As I have not my copy of his works at present with me, I am unable to specify the page. It may suffice to say, that it is in the first volume both of the Benedictine edition, and the Paris edition, of 1618. This important verse is also cited by Athanasius, by Gregory of Nyssa, and by Cyril of Alexandria.

When I look attentively at the two passages of Holy Writ which have been the especial objects of this discussion, I think that, leaving the doctrine of the Greek article out of the question, I perceive sufficient evidence to warrant our belief that one person only is intended. In the passage from Ephesians, two circumstances claim our notice: Θεῶν, is placed last in the sentence, and the article is not prefixed to it, although it had been prefixed to Χριστοῦ:—but this is abhorrent from the phraseology of St. Paul. When he speaks of God the Father, and of Jesus Christ, and connects them by the conjunction, it is his custom to mention the Father first, and to omit the article altogether. In the following texts the reader may see a few examples—Rom. i. 7. 1 Cor. i. 3. 2 Cor. i. 2. Gal. i. 3. Eph. i. 2. Phil. i. 2. The article, however, is sometimes prefixed to both: see, for instance, Col. ii. 2. This passage, by the way, is a most powerful confirmation of Mr. Sharp's rule; but with that rule we have nothing to do at present. St. John expresses himself in the same manner in the Apocalypse, xi. 15. We see, then, what is the prevailing diction of St. Paul; and we may defy any man to produce a single passage, either from him, or from any other inspired writer, where God the Father, and Christ, are manifestly spoken of, the Father placed last in the sentence, and yet unhonoured by the article, while on Christ that distinction is conferred.—We may then conclude, that if, in Ephes. v. 5. St. Paul had spoken both of the Father and of the Son, he would have said, Τὸ Θεὸν καὶ τὸν Χριστόν, or at least τὸν Χριστὸν καὶ τὸ Θεόν.

On Titus ii. 13. I have an observation to offer, which is also unconnected with Mr. Sharp's rule. If God the Father be meant in the first clause, then the Son is simply called σωτήρ ἡμῶν. But this expression, as applied to Christ, hath no parallel in the whole book of God. I wish the intelligent reader to mark this distinctly. The following are, I believe, all the passages of the New Testament where Christ is styled our Saviour, and in every one of these the article is affixed.—2 Tim. i. 10. Tit. i. 4. Tit. iii. 6. We have reason then to believe, that if St. Paul had here meant the glorious appearance of God the Father, he would have added, καὶ τὸν σωτήρ ἡμῶν. I may add, that as the three passages where Christ is styled our Saviour, all occur in the writings of this apostle, the reason of our belief is greatly strengthened.

I have reasoned boldly and confidently on the above cited passage, because I am persuaded that my reasoning can never be overturned. If, however, an example, such as ὁ βασιλεὺς καὶ ἡγεμῶν, should be brought against me; if the two nouns be perfectly compatible; and if, notwithstanding this, it be manifest that two different persons are intended; I must acknowledge that my labours have ended in uncertainty.

It is my unalterable opinion that, at all times, and on all occasions, truth should be explored; and, when discovered, exhibited to view, whatever be the consequences. I think it will be impossible for the opposers of this doctrine to produce such an example as I have been supposing: but, should any be inclined to look for such an example, I think it necessary to mention, that two things are indispensable.—In the first place, the citation must be made from an unexceptionable Greek writer; in the second place, there must be no various reading to the passage, in any extant manuscript. First, it must be from an unexceptionable Greek writer; it must be from an author whose native language was Greek, and who flourished not later than the fourth, or, at most, the fifth century after Christ. When I have established a fact, by instances taken from the best and purest of the Greek authors, I may then call to my assistance whatever writers I please, for the purpose of further corroboration: but the opponent who comes forward to dispute, and to destroy, must deduce the streams of his criticism from the fountain-head. His weapons must be taken from the armoury of Homer or Plato, of Sophocles or Pindar, of Xenophon or Demosthenes. Secondly, there must be no various reading in any MS. which is extant. If there be but one various reading, the passage will be inadmissible: in rejecting it, I shall be acting with impartial justice; for I have passed over a very important passage in my favour, because there is a various reading. By the application of Mr. Sharp's rule to 2 Peter i. 1. it might have been shown that Jesus is there styled our God. There is no doubt that του Θεου ημων και σωτηρος, is the genuine reading. If not quite as precious as the instance in Titus ii. 13. it is more valuable than that in Ephes. v. 5. and yet I passed it over, being determined to make use of nothing to which the slightest objection might be made.

If, at some future period, an exception in itself unexceptionable, shall be brought against this rule, I will acknowledge, though painful the confession, that my sweetest, because my best directed labours, have been unavailing. I shall retire from the field discomfited, but not disheartened; disappointed, but not dispirited; sorrowful, and yet rejoicing.—Yes, I shall still rejoice, because I am assured there are other and mightier proofs, of the Divinity of Jesus; proofs, which neither the subtlety of philologists, nor the rage of dæmons, can overthrow.

H. S. BORD.

If the reader be desirous of examining some more examples from the Greek Testament, we refer him to the following, which are selected from a vast, and almost countless multitude:—Matt. v. 6.; vii. 26.; xiii. 20.; xxi. 12.; xxiii. 37.; xxvii. 40. Mark xi. 15.; xii. 40.; xv. 29.; xvi. 16. Luke vi. 47, 49.; viii. 14, 21.; x. 30.; xi. 28.; xii. 21, 47.; xiii. 34.; xvi. 18.; xix. 45.; xx. 46. John i. 41.; v. 24.; vi. 33, 40, 45.; viii. 9, 50.; ix. 8.; x. 1.; xi. 2, 26, 31, 45.; xii. 29, 48.; xiv. 21.; xx. 29.; xxi. 24. Acts ii. 20.; iii. 14.; viii. 25.; x. 35.; xiv. 3.; xv. 38.; &c. &c. &c.

TO THE

PHILIPPIANS.

WE have already seen, Acts xvi. 12. that Philippi was a town of Macedonia, in the territory of the Edones, on the confines of Thrace, and very near the northern extremity of the Ægean Sea. It was a little eastward of Mount Pangeus, and about midway between Nicopolis on the east, and Thessalonica on the west. It was at first called Crenides, and afterward Datus; but Philip, king of Macedonia, and father of Alexander, having taken possession of it, and fortified it, called it Philippi, after his own name. Julius Cæsar planted a colony here, which was afterward enlarged by Augustus; and hence the inhabitants were considered as freemen of Rome. Near this town, it is thought, the famous battle was fought between Brutus and Cassius, on the one side, and Augustus and Mark Antony on the other; in which the former were defeated, and the fate of the empire decided. Others think that this battle was fought at Philippi, a town of Thebes in Thessaly.

The Gospel was preached first here by St. Paul. About the year of our Lord 53, St. Paul had a vision in the night; a man of Macedonia appeared to him, and said, Come over to Macedonia and help us. He was then at Troas in Mysia; from thence he immediately sailed to Samothracia, came the next day to Neapolis, and thence to Philippi. There he continued for some time, and converted Lydia, a seller of purple, from Thyatira; and afterward cast a demon out of a Pythonesse, for which he and Silas were persecuted, cast into prison, scourged, and put into the stocks; but the magistrates afterward finding that they were Romans, took them out of prison and treated them civilly. See the account, Acts xvi. 9, &c.

The Philippians were greatly attached to their apostle, and testified their affection by sending him supplies, even when he was labouring for other churches; and they appear to have been the only church that did so. See chap. iv. 15, 16.

There is not much controversy concerning the date of this epistle; it was probably written in the end of A. D. 62, and about a year after that to the Ephesians. Dr. Paley conjectures the date by various intimations in the epistle itself. "It purports," says he, "to have been written near the conclusion of St. Paul's imprisonment at Rome; and after a residence in that city of considerable duration. These circumstances are made out by different intimations; and the intimations upon the subject preserve among themselves a just consistency; and a consistency certainly unmeditated. First, the apostle had already been a prisoner at Rome so long, as that the reputation of his bonds, and of his constancy under them, had contributed to advance the success of the Gospel.—See chap. i. 12—14. Secondly, the account given of Epaphroditus, imports that St. Paul, when he wrote the epistle, had been in Rome a considerable time. 'He longed after you all, and was full of heaviness, because ye had heard that he had been sick,' ch. ii. 26. Epaphroditus had been with Paul at Rome; he had been sick; the Philippians had heard of his sickness; and he again had received an account how much they had been affected by the intelligence. The passing and re-passing of these advices must necessarily have occupied a large portion of time; and must have all taken place during St. Paul's residence at Rome. Thirdly, after a residence at Rome, thus proved to have been of considerable duration, he now regards the decision of his fate as nigh at hand: he contemplates either alternative, that of his deliverance, chap. ii. 23. 'Him, therefore, (Timothy), I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me; but I trust in the Lord that I also myself shall come shortly.' Ver. 24. that of his condemnation. Verse 17. Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy and rejoice with you all. This consistency is material, if the consideration of it be confined to the epistle. It is further material, as it agrees, with respect to the duration of St. Paul's first imprisonment at Rome, with the account delivered in the Acts; which, having brought the apostle to Rome, closes the history, by telling us that he dwelt there two whole years in his own hired house." Hor. Paul. p. 242.

On the agreement between the epistle and the history, as given in the Acts, Dr. Paley makes many judicious remarks, which I have not time to insert, but must refer to the work itself: and I wish all my readers to get and peruse the whole work, as an inestimable treasure of sacred criticism, on the authenticity of Paul's epistles.

The Epistle to the Philippians is written in a very pleasing and easy style; every where bearing evidence of that contented state of mind in which the apostle then was; and of his great affection for the people. It appears that there were false apostles, or Judaizing teachers, at Philippi, who had disturbed the peace of the church: against these, he warns them; exhorts them to concord; comforts them in their afflictions for the Gospel; returns them thanks for their kindness to him; tells them of his state, and shows a great willingness to be a sacrifice for the faith he had preached to them. There is a Divine unction in this epistle which every serious reader will perceive.

CHAPTER I.

Paul, in conjunction with Timothy, addresses himself to the saints at Philippi, and gives them his apostolical benediction, 1, 2. Thanks God for their conversion and union; and expresses his persuasion that God will continue his work among them, 3—6. Tells them of his strong affection for them, and prays that they may be filled with the salvation of God, 7—11. Shows them how much his persecution had contributed to the success of the Gospel, 12—14. Informs them that there were some at Rome who preached the Gospel from unworthy motives; yet he was convinced that this which was designed to injure him should turn to his advantage, 15—19. Mentions his uncertainty whether he should be liberated or martyred, and his perfect readiness to meet either; yet on the whole, expresses a hope that he should again visit them, 20—26. Exhorts them to a holy life, and comforts them under their tribulations, 27—30

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. Paul and Timotheus] That Timothy was at this time with the apostle in Rome, we learn from ch. ii. 19. and also that he was very high in the apostle's estimation. He had also accompanied the apostle on his two voyages to Philippi, see Acts xvi. xx. and was therefore deservedly dear to the church in that city. It was on these accounts that St. Paul joined his name to his own, not because he was in any part the author of this epistle; but he might have been the apostle's amanuensis, though the subscription to the epistle gives this office to Epaphroditus. Neither in this epistle, nor in those to the Thessalonians and to Philemon, does St. Paul call himself an apostle; the reason of which appears to be, that in none of these places was his apostolical authority called in question.

has been a great deal of paper wasted in the inquiry " Who is meant by bishops here, as no place could have more than one bishop?" To which it has been answered, " Philippi was a metropolitan see, and might have several bishops." This is the extravagance of trifling. I believe no such officer is meant as we now term bishop.

Verse 2. Grace be unto you] See on Rom. i. 7.

Verse 3. Upon every remembrance] As often as you recur to my mind, so often do I thank God for the great work wrought among you. Some think that the words should be translated, For all your kind remembrance; referring to their kind attention to the apostle, in supplying his wants, &c.

Verse 4. Always in every prayer] I pray often for you, and have great pleasure in doing it, seeing what God has already wrought among you.

Verse 5. For your fellowship in the Gospel] If we consider κοινωνία as implying spiritual fellowship or communion; then it signifies not only their attention to the Gospel, their readiness to continue it, and perseverance in it, but also their unity and affection among themselves. Some understand the word as expressing their liberality to the apostle, and to the Gospel in general; for the term may not only be applied to communion among themselves, but to communications to others. This sense, though followed by Chrysostom and Theophylact, does not appear to be the best, though we know it to be a fact that they were liberal in supplying the apostle's necessities; and no doubt, in ministering to the support of others.

Verse 6. Being confident] There shall be nothing lacking on God's part to support you, and to make you wise, holy, and happy; and bring you at last to his kingdom and glory.

Verse 7. It is meet for me to think this] Επισημαίνω; it is just that I should think so, because I have you in my heart; you live in my warmest love and most affectionate remembrance.

Inasmuch as both in my bonds] Because you have set your hearts upon me in my bonds,

Verse 8. For God is my record] I call God to witness that I have the strongest affection for you; and that I love you with that same kind of tender concern, with which Christ loved the world when he gave himself for it; for I am even ready to be offered on the sacrifice and service of your faith, chap. ii. 17.

Verse 9. This I pray] This is the substance of all my prayers for you, that your love to God, to one another, and to all mankind, may abound yet more and more, ετι πολλοι και πολλοι προσκομι, that it may be like a river perpetually fed with rain and fresh streams, so that it continues to swell and increase till it fills all its banks, and floods the adjacent plains.

In knowledge] Of God's nature, perfections, your own duty and interest, his work upon your souls, and his great designs in the Gospel.

And in all judgment] Και παν αυθου, in all spiritual or moral feeling; that you may at once have the clearest perception, and the fullest enjoyment, of those things which concern your salvation: that ye may not only know, but feel that you are of God, by the Spirit which he has given you: and that your feeling may become more exercised in Divine things, so that it may be increasingly sensible and refined.

Verse 10. That ye may approve things that are excellent] Επι το δοκιμαζουμεν τα διαφοτερα; to the end that ye may put to proof the things that differ; or the things that are more profitable. sincere and without offence ^a till the day of Christ;

11 Being filled with the fruits of righteousness, ^b which are by praise of God.

12 But I would ye should understand, brethren, that the things which happened unto me have fallen out rather unto the furtherance of the Gospel; received, and from the experience they had in spiritual things.

That ye may be sincere] ἵνα ἦτε ἀληγεῖς. The word ἀληγεῖς, which we translate sincerity, is compounded of ἀλλ the splendour of the sun, and γεν, I judge; a thing which may be examined in the clearest and strongest light, without the possibility of detecting a single flaw or imperfection. "A metaphor," says Mr. Leigh, "taken from the usual practice of chapmen in the view and choice of their wares, that bring them forth into the light, and hold up the cloth against the sun, to see if they can espy any default in them. Pure as the sun." Be so purified and refined in your souls by the indwelling Spirit, that even the light of God shining into your hearts shall not be able to discover a fault that the love of God has not purged away.

Our word sincerity, is from the Latin sinceritas, which is compounded of sine, without, and cerâ, wax, and is a metaphor taken from clarified honey; for the mel sincerum, pure or clarified honey, is that which is sine cerâ, without wax;
no part of the comb being left in it. Sincerity, taken in its full meaning, is a word of the most extensive import; and when applied in reference to the state of the soul, is as strong as the word perfection itself. The soul that is sincere, is the soul that is without sin.

Without offence] ἀπεροπίου; neither offending
God, nor your neighbour; neither being stumbled yourselves, nor the cause of stumbling to others.

Till the day of Christ] Till he comes to judge the world, or till the day in which you are called into the eternal world. According to this prayer, a man under the power and influence of the grace of God, may so love as never to offend his Maker, to the latest period of his life. Those who deny this, must deny that the Spirit of God either cannot or will not do it; or, that the blood of Christ cannot cleanse from all unrighteousness.
And this would be not only anti-scriptural, but also blasphemous.

Verse 11. Being filled with the fruits of righteousness] By righteousness we may understand here, the whole work of the Spirit of God in the soul of a believer; and by the fruits of righteousness, all holy tempers, holy words, and right actions. And with these they are to be filled, πληρωμένοι, filled up, filled full; the whole soul and life occupied with them; ever doing something by which glory is brought to God, or good done to man.

By Jesus Christ] That is, according to his doctrine, through the power of his grace, and by the agency of his Spirit.

Unto the glory and praise of God] God being honoured when the work of his grace thus appears to men in the fruits of righteousness: and God is praised by all the faithful when his work thus appears. Every genuine follower of God has his glory in view by all that he does, says, or intends. He loves to glorify God, and he glorifies him by showing forth in his conversion, the glorious working of the glorious power of the Lord.

Verse 12. That the things which happened unto me] St. Paul was at this time a prisoner at Rome; and it appears probable that he had already been called to make a defence for himself, and to vindicate the doctrines of the Gospel; and this he had been enabled to do in such a manner that the honour of the Gospel had been greatly promoted by it. As the Philippians loved him greatly, he felt it right to give them this information relative to his state; and how God had turned his bonds to the advantage of that cause on account of which he was bound.

Verse 13. *My bonds—*are manifest in all the palace] In consequence of the public defence which he was obliged to make, his doctrines must be fully known in the court, and throughout the whole city; as on his trial he would necessarily explain the whole. The prætorium, πραιτωριον, which we here translate palace, signifies the court where causes were heard and judged by the prætor, or civil magistrate; it sometimes signifies the general's tent, and at others, the emperor's palace. It is supposed that it is used in this latter sense here. There were, no doubt, persons belonging to the emperor's household who would bring the news of so remarkable a case to the palace; for we find that there were Christians even in Cæsar's household, ch. iv. 22.

Verse 14. Waxing confident] Finding the effect produced by the public defence which the apostle made, they were greatly encouraged, and the more boldly and openly proclaimed the doctrine of Christ crucified.

The word] The doctrine of Christ; several excellent MSS. and Versions, add, some Θεοῦ, others, Κυρίου, the word of God, or the word of the Lord. This is a respectable reading, and is probably genuine.

teachers, who insisted on the necessity of connecting the Mosaic rites with the Christian institutions; and probably denounced Paul to the Jews dwelling at Rome, as not only an enemy to the law and the prophets, but also as a very imperfect Christian, because he declared strongly against the doctrine of circumcision, &c. and no doubt endeavoured to prejudice him with the heathen Romans.

Some also of good will.] Some, through mere benevolence to the apostle, both espoused his doctrine, and vindicated his cause.

Verse 16. Preach Christ of contention] The Judaizing teachers:—they also preach Christ; they acknowledge that Jesus is the Christ, or promised Messiah, and preach him as such.

Not sincerely] Ουχ' αἰνῶς; not chastely, garbling the Gospel; not speaking the whole truth, but just what served their purpose; and at the same time they denounced the apostle as an enemy to the Divine institutions, because he spoke against circumcision.

Verse 17. The other of love] Through a sincere desire, not only to make known the way of salvation to the people; but also to vindicate and help the apostle, because they considered him as appointed by God to preach and defend the Gospel. The 16th and 17th verses are transposed by ABDEFG. and several others: the Syriac, Arabic of Erpen, Coptic, Sahidic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, Itala, and several of the fathers. On this evidence Griesbach transposes them in his edition.

Verse 18. What then?] It is a matter of little importance to me how Christ is preached, provided he be preached. I rejoice that any thing is known of him; and am truly glad that the Gospel is even made partially known, for this will lead to further inquiries, and in the end be of service to the truth.

Verse 19. This shall turn to my salvation] That is, it will be the means of my temporal safety; of my deliverance; for so the word σωτηρια, is here to be understood. The Jews had denounced the apostle as an enemy to Cæsar; but he knew that when the nature of the Gospel should be fully known, the Romans would see that he could be no enemy to Cæsar, who proclaimed a prince whose kingdom was not of this world; and who had taught in the most unequivocal manner, that all Christians were to give tribute to whom tribute was due; and while they feared God, to honour also the king; though that king was Nero.

Through your prayer] Knowing them to be genuine followers of Christ, he was satisfied that their prayers would be very available in his behalf; and under God, he places much dependence upon them.

The supply of the Spirit of Jesus Christ] The word πνευμα, which we translate supply, signifies also furnishing whatever is necessary; the Spirit of God he expected to help all his infirmities, and to furnish him with all the wisdom, prudence, strength of reason, and argument, which might be necessary for him in the different trials he had to pass through with his persecutors, and the civil powers, at whose judgment seat he stood.

Verse 20. Earnest expectation] He had the most confident expectation that God would stand by him, so that he should be enabled, with the utmost liberty of speech, ὡς ἂν παρηγορηθῶ, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God: and should he have the liberty of doing so, he was perfectly regardless what the issue might be relative to himself. Whether life or death, was to him perfectly equal, and perfectly indifferent, providing Christ were magnified; his person, nature, doctrine, &c. shown to be what they really are, most noble, most excellent, most necessary, and most glorious.

Verse 21. For to me to live is Christ] Whether I live or die, Christ is gain to me. While I live I am Christ's property and servant, and Christ is my portion: if I die, if I be called to witness the truth at the expense of my life, this will be gain; I shall be saved from the remaining troubles and difficulties in life, and be put immediately in possession of my heavenly inheritance. As, therefore, it respects myself, it is a matter of perfect indifference to me whether I be taken off by a violent death, or whether I be permitted to continue here longer: in either case I can lose nothing.

Verse 22. But if I live in the flesh] Should I be spared longer, I shall labour for Christ as I have done; and this is the fruit of my labours, that Christ shall be magnified by my longer life, ver. 20.

Yet what I shall choose I wot not] Had I the two conditions left to my own choice, whether to die now, and go to glory: or, whether to live longer in persecutions and affliction, (glorifying Christ by spreading the Gospel,) I could not tell which to prefer.

Verse 23. For I am in a strait betwixt two] Viz. the dying now, and being immediately with God; or living longer to preach and spread the Gospel, and thus glorify Christ among men.

Having a desire to depart, and be with Christ] Ἦν ἐπιθυμία ἔχειν ὡς τὸ ἀναλῦσαι:—It appears to be a metaphor, taken from the commander of a vessel, in a foreign port, who feels a strong desire, ἀναλῦσαι, to set sail, and get to his own country and family; but this desire is counterbalanced by a conviction that the general interests of the voyage may be best answered by his longer stay in the port where his vessel now rides; for, he is not in dock, he is not aground, but rides at anchor in the port, and may any hour weigh and be gone. Such was the condition of the apostle; he was not at home; but although he was abroad, it was on his Employer's business: he wishes to return, and is cleared out and ready to set sail; but he has not received his last orders from his owner; and whatever desire he may feel to be at home, he will faithfully wait till his final orders arrive.

Which is far better] Πολὺν μᾶλλον κρείσσον: nullo majus melior, VULGATE; much more better. The reader will at once see, that the words are very emphatic.

Verse 24. To abide in the flesh] It would certainly be gain to myself to die; but it will be a gain to you if I live. If I die, I shall go immediately to glory; if I live, I shall continue to minister to you, and strengthen you in the faith.

Verse 25. Having this confidence, I know that I shall abide] Convinced that it is necessary that I should live longer, for the spreading and defence of the Gospel, I am persuaded that I shall now be liberated. This was, in fact, the case; for after having been two years in bonds at Rome, he was released.

For your furtherance] In the way of righteousness.

And joy of faith] And happiness in that way. The further a man proceeds in the way of truth, the stronger his faith will be; and the stronger his faith, the greater his joy or happiness.

Verse 26. That your rejoicing may be more abundant] Men rejoice more in recovering a thing that was lost, than they do in the continual possession of what is of much greater value.

Verse 27. Let your conversation be as it becometh the Gospel] The apostle considers the church at Philippi as a free or imperial city, which possesses great honours, dignities, and privileges; and he exhorts them to act, ἀξίως, worthy or suitably to those honours and privileges. This is the idea that is expressed by the word πολιτῶν, act according to the nature of your political situation; the citizenship and privileges which you possess in consequence of your being free inhabitants of Christ's imperial city, the church. The apostle resumes the same metaphor, chap. iii. 20. ἡμεῖν — τὸ πολιτῶν ἐσμεν ὑμῶν ὑπαίκοι ὑπαίκοι; for our citizenship is in heaven; but in this last verse he puts heaven in the place of the church; and this is all right; for he who is not a member of the church of Christ on earth, can have no right to the kingdom of heaven: and he who does not walk worthy of the Gospel of Christ, cannot be counted worthy to enter through the gates into the city of the Eternal King.

Whether I come and see you] Leaving the matter still in doubt as to them, whether he should again visit them.

In one Spirit] Being all of one mind under the influence of the Holy Ghost.

Striving together] Συνεβλήθητε; wrestling together, not in contention with each other; but in union against the enemies of the Gospel faith; the doctrine of Christ crucified, and freedom from all Mosaic rites and ceremonies, as well as from sin and perdition, through his passion and sacrifice.

Verse 28. In nothing terrified by your adversaries] So it appears that the church at Philippi was then under persecution.

Which is to them] Ἡτις αὐτοῖς ἐστίν; some very judicious critics consider ἡτις, as referring to πιστις, the faith of the Gospel, which they, the heathen, considered to be a token of perdition to all them who embraced it; but, as the apostle says, it was to them, the Philippians, on the contrary, the most evident token of salvation: for, having embraced the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, they were incontestably in the way to eternal blessedness.

Verse 29. Unto you it is given in the behalf of Christ] Tan exagorab; to you it is graciously given; it is no small privilege that God has so far honoured you, as to permit you to suffer on Christ's account. It is only his most faithful servants that he thus honours. Be not therefore terrified by your enemies; they can do nothing to you, which God will not turn to your eternal advantage. We learn from this that it is as great a privilege to suffer for Christ, as to believe on him: and the former in certain cases, (as far as the latter, in all cases.) becomes the means of salvation to them who are thus exercised.

Verse 30. Having the same conflict] When Paul preached the Gospel at Philippi, he was grievously persecuted, as we learn from Acts, chap. xvi. 19—40. being stripped, scourged, thrown into prison, even into the dungeon, and his feet made fast in the stocks. This was the conflict they had seen in him: and now they heard that he had been sent prisoner to Rome as an evil doer; and that he was at present in bonds, and shortly to be tried for his life before the Roman emperor, to whom he had been obliged to appeal.

1. It was no small encouragement to these persons, 1. That whatever sufferings they met with, they were supported under them. 2. That they suffered in the same cause in which their illustrious apostle was suffering. 3. That they suffered, not because they had done any evil or could be accused of any; but because they believed in the Son of God, who died for them and for all mankind. 4. That all these sufferings were sanctified to their eternal good.

2. And God is able to make the same grace abound towards us in like circumstances: it is for this purpose that such consolatory portions are left on record. He who is persecuted or afflicted for Christ's sake, is most eminently honoured by his Creator.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle beseeches them, by various considerations, to live in unity and in the spirit of the Gospel, loving each other; and each to prefer his brother to himself, 1—4. He exhorts them to be like-minded with Christ, who, though in the form of God, and equal with God, made himself of no reputation, and humbled himself to the death of the cross, for the salvation of man; in consequence of which he was highly exalted, and had a name above every name; to whose authority every knee should bow, and whose glory every tongue should acknowledge, 5—11. They are exhorted to work out their own salvation through his power who works in them; that they may be blameless, and that the apostle's labour may not be in vain, 12—16. He expresses his readiness to offer his life for the Gospel, 17, 18. Intends to send Timothy to them, of whom he gives a very high character; yet hopes to see them himself shortly, 19—24. In the mean time sends Epaphroditus, who had been near death, and whom he begs them to receive with especial tenderness, 25—30.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. If there be therefore any consolation] The a, if, does not express any doubt here, but on the contrary is to be considered as a strong affirmation; as there is consolation in Christ; as there is comfort of love, &c.

The word καταπαύω, translated here consolation, is in other places rendered exhortation; and is by several critics understood so here: as if he had said, If exhorting you in the name of Christ have any influence with you, &c. It is extremely difficult to give the force of these expressions; they contain a torrent of most affecting eloquence, the apostle pouring out his whole heart to a people, whom with all his heart he loved; and who were worthy of the love, even of an apostle.

If any comfort of love] If the followers of Christ, by giving proofs of their ardent love to each other, in cases of distress, alleviate the sufferings of the persecuted:—

If any fellowship of the Spirit] If there be an intimate relation established among all Christians, by their being made mutual partakers of the Holy Ghost:—

If any bowels and mercies] If you, as persons whom I have brought to God at the hazard of my life, feel sympathetic tenderness for me, now, in a further state of suffering:—

plete my joy, who have suffered so much to bring you into the possession of these blessings, by being like-minded with myself, having the same love to God, his cause, and me, as I have to him, his cause, and you.

Being of one accord] Being perfectly agreed in labouring to promote the honour of your Master; and of one mind, being constantly intent upon this great subject; keeping your eye fixed upon it, in all you say, do, or intend.

Verse 3. Let nothing be done through strife] Never be opposed to each other: never act from separate interests; ye are all brethren, and of one body; therefore let every member feel and labour for the welfare of the whole. And in the exercise of your different functions, and in the use of your various gifts, do nothing so as to promote your own reputation, separately considered from the comfort, honour, and advantage of all.

But in lowliness of mind] Have always an humbling view of yourselves; and this will lead you to prefer others to yourselves; for as you know your own secret defects, charity will lead you to suppose that your brethren are more holy, and more devoted to God, than you are;
and they will think the same of you; their secret defects also being known only to themselves.

Verse 4. Look not every man on his own things] Do nothing through self-interest, in the things of God: nor arrogate to yourselves gifts, graces, and fruits which belong to others: ye are all called to promote God's glory, and the salvation of men. Labour for this, and every one shall receive the honour that comes from God: and let each rejoice to see another, whom God may be pleased to use in a special way, acquiring much reputation by the successful application of his talents to the great work.

Verse 5. Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus] Christ laboured to promote no separate interest; as man he studied to promote the glory of God, and the welfare and salvation of the human race. See, then, that ye have the same disposition that was in Jesus: he was ever humble, loving, patient, and aborious: his meat and drink was to do the will of his Father, and to finish his work.

Verse 6. Who, being in the form of God] This verse has been the subject of much criticism, and some controversy. Dr. Whitby has, perhaps, on the whole, spoken best on this point;
but his arguments are too diffuse to be admitted here. Dr. Macknight has abridged the works of Dr. Whitby, and properly observes, that "as the apostle is speaking of what Christ was before he took the form of a servant; the form of God, things, but every man also on the things of others.

of which he divested himself when he became man, cannot be any thing which he possessed during his incarnation, or in his divested state;
consequently, neither the opinion of Erasmus, that the form of God consisted in those sparks of Divinity by which Christ, during his incarnation, manifested his Godhead; nor the opinion of the Socinians, that it consisted in the power of working miracles, is well founded: for Christ did not divest himself either of one or the other, but possessed both all the time of his public ministry. In like manner, the opinion of those who, by the form of God, understand the Divine Nature, and the government of the world, cannot be admitted; since Christ, when he became man, could not divest himself of the nature of God: and with respect to the government of the world, we are led, by what the apostle tells us, Heb. i. 3. to believe that he did not part with even that; but, in his divested state, still continued to uphold all things by the word of his power. By the form of God, we are rather to understand that visible glorious light in which the Deity is said to dwell, 1 Tim. vi. 16. and by which he manifested himself to the patriarchs of old, Deut. v. 22, 24, which was commonly accompanied with a numerous retinue of angels, Psal.
lxviii. 17. and which in Scripture is called The Similitude, Numb. xii. 8. The Face, Psal. xxxi.
16. The Presence, Exod. xxxiii. 15. and The Shape of God, John v. 37. This interpretation is supported by the term μορφη, form, here used, which signifies a person's external shape or appearance, and not his nature or essence. Thus we are told, Mark xvi. 12. that Jesus appeared to his disciples in another μορφη, shape or form.
And Matt. xvii. 2. μεταμορφωθεις, he was transfigured before them; his outward appearance or form was changed. Further, this interpretation agrees with the fact: the form of God, that is, his visible glory, and the attendance of angels, as above described, the Son of God enjoyed with his Father before the world was, John xvii. 5. and on that, as on other accounts, he is the brightness of the Father's glory, Heb. i. 3. Of this he divested himself when he became flesh; but having resumed it after his ascension, he will come with it in the human nature to judge the world; so he told his disciples, Matt. xvi.
27. For the Son of man will come in the glory of his Father, with his angels, &c. Lastly, this sense of μορφη Θεου, is confirmed by the meaning of μορφη δουλου, ver. 7. which evidently denotes the appearance and behaviour of a servant or bondman; and not the essence of such a person.^g

Thought it not robbery to be equal with God] If we take these words as they stand here, their meaning is, that as he was from the beginning in the same infinite glory with the Father; to appear in time during his humiliation, as God and equal with the Father, was no encroachment on the Divine prerogative; for, as he had an equality of nature, he had an equality of rights.

But the word ἀφραγμοῦ, which we translate robbery, has been supposed to imply a thing eagerly to be seized, coveted, or desired; and on this interpretation, the passage has been translated, who being in the form of God, did not think it a matter to be earnestly desired, to appear equal to God; but made himself of no reputation, &c. However the word be translated, it does not affect the eternal Deity of our Lord. Though he was from eternity in the form of God, possessed of the same glory; yet he thought it right to veil this glory, and not to appear with it among the children of men; and therefore he was made in the likeness of men, and took upon him the form or appearance of a servant; and had he retained the appearance of this ineffable glory, it would, in many respects, have prevented him from accomplishing the work which God gave him to do; and his humiliation, as necessary to the salvation of men, could not have been complete. On this account, I prefer this sense of the word ἀφραγμοῦ, before that given in our text; which does not agree so well with the other expressions in the context. In this sense the word is used by Heliodorus, in his Æthiopsics, lib. vii. cap. 19, &c. which passage Whilby has produced, and on which he has given a considerable paraphrase. The reader who wishes to examine this subject more particularly, may have recourse to Heliodorus as above; or to the notes of Dr. Whilby on the passage.

Verse 7. But made himself of no reputation] Ἐμψυτον ἑαυτοῦ; he emptied himself; did not appear in his glory, for he assumed the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of man. And his being made in the likeness of man, and assuming the form of a servant, was a proof that he had emptied himself, laid aside the effulgence of his glory.

Verse 8. And being found in fashion as a man] καὶ εὐρηματι εὐρεθῆς ὡς ἀνθρώπος. This clause should be joined to the preceding, and thus translated:—being made in the likeness of man, and was found in fashion as a man.

becoming a servant, assuming the lowest innocent character, that of being the servant of all. 4. In condescending to die, to which he was not naturally liable, as having never sinned: and therefore had a right in his human nature, to immortality, without passing under the empire of death. 5. In condescending not only to death, but to the lowest and most ignominious kind of death; the death of the cross: the punishment of the meanest of slaves, and worst of felons. What must sin have been in the sight of God, when it required such abasement in Jesus Christ to make an atonement for it, and undo its influence and malignity!

Verse 9. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him] If by his humiliation he has merited pardon and final salvation for the whole world: is it to be wondered that the human body in which this fulness of the Godhead dwelt, and in which the punishment due to our sins was borne upon the tree; should be exalted above all human and all created beings? And this is the fact; for he hath given him a name, το ονομα the Name, which is above every name: το is prefixed to ονομα here by ABC. 17. Origen, Dionysius Alexandrinus, Eusebius, Cyril, and Procopius. This makes it much more emphatic. According to Eph. i. 20, 21. the man, Christ Jesus, is exalted to the right hand of God, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come. From which it appears, that no creature of God is so far exalted, and so glorious, as the man Christ Jesus; human nature being, in him, dignified infinitely beyond the angelic nature; and that this nature has an authority and pre-eminence which no being either in heaven or earth enjoys. In a word, as man was, in the beginning, at the head of all the creatures of God; Jesus Christ, by assuming human nature, suffering and dying in it, has raised it to its pristine state. And this is probably what is here meant by this high exaltation of Christ, and giving him a name which is above every name. But if we refer to any particular epithet, then the name JESUS or Saviour must be that which is intended; as no being either in heaven or earth can possess his name, as HE who is the Redeemer of the world does; for HE is the only Saviour; none has or could redeem us to God but HE; and throughout eternity he will ever appear as the sole Saviour of the human race. Hence, before his birth, Gabriel stated, that his name should be called JESUS, giving for reason, he shall save his people from their sins. The qualifications of the Saviour of the world were so extraordinary, the redeeming acts so stupendous, and the result of all so glorious both to God and man; that it is impossible to conceive a higher name or title than that of JESUS, or Saviour of the world.

Verse 10. That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow] That all human beings should consider themselves redeemed unto God by his blood; and look for an application of this redemption price: and that all who are saved from their sins should acknowledge him the author of their salvation. In a word, that παις τροφιας, all the spirits of just men made perfect, now in a state of blessedness:—και εν γυναι, all human beings still in their state of probation on earth:—και καταχθονων, and all that are in the shades below, who have, through their own fault, died without having received his salvation, should acknowledge him.

Verse 11. And that every tongue should confess] That all those before-mentioned should acknowledge that Jesus Christ is Lord, or absolute governor, and thus glorify God the Father, who has exalted this human nature to this state of ineffable glory, in virtue of its passion, death, resurrection, and the atonement which it has made; by which so many attributes of the Divine nature have become illustrated, the Divine law magnified and made honourable, and an eternal glory provided for man.

Others, by things in heaven, understand the holy angels; by things on earth, human beings generally; and by things under the earth, fallen spirits of every description. Perhaps the three expressions are designed to comprehend all beings, of all kinds; all creatures; as it is usual with the Hebrews, and indeed with all ancient nations, to express by things in heaven, things on earth, and things under the earth, all beings of all kinds; universal nature. See similar forms of speech, Exod. xx. 4. Deut. iv. 17, 18. Paal. xcvi. 11. and Ezek. xxxviii. 20. But intelligent beings seem to be those which are chiefly intended by the words of the apostle; for, it appears that nothing less than absolute rule over angels, men, and devils, can be designed in these extraordinary words: and by confessing him to be Lord, we may understand that worship which all intelligent creatures are called to pay to God manifested in the flesh: for, all should honour the Son even as they honour the Father. And the worship thus offered is to the glory of God; so that far from being idolatrous, as some have rashly asserted, it is to the honour of the Divine Being. We may add, that the tongue which does not confess thus, is a tongue that dishonours the Almighty.

1 Cor. 5. 6. & 12. 3. — Ch. 1. 5. — Eph. 6. 5. — 2 Cor. 3. 5. Heb. 13. 21.

Verse 12. As ye have always obeyed] Continue to act on the same principles, and from the same motives: having the same disposition which was in Christ; labouring so as to promote his glory.

Work out your own salvation] Go on, walking by the same rule, and minding the same thing, till your salvation be completed: till, filled with love to God and man, ye walk unblameably in all his testimonies, having your fruit unto holiness, and your end everlasting life.

With fear and trembling] Considering the difficulty of the work, and the danger of miscarriage. If you do not watch, pray, and continually depend on God, your enemies will surprise you; and your light and life will become extinct: and then, consider what an awful account you must give to Him whose Spirit ye have grieved; and of whose glory ye have come short.

Verse 13. For it is God which worketh in you] Every holy purpose, pious resolution, good word, and good work, must come from him: ye must be workers together with him, that ye receive not his grace in vain: because he worketh in you; therefore work with him, and work out your own salvation.

To will and to do] Το θελει και το ποιειν. The power to will, and the power to act, must necessarily come from God, who is the author both of the soul and body, and of all their powers and energies; but the act of volition, and the act of working, come from the man. God gives power to will; man wills through that power; God gives power to act; and man acts through that power. Without the power to will, man can will nothing: without the power to work, man can do nothing. God neither wills for man, nor works in man's stead; but he furnishes him with power to do both: he is therefore accountable to God for these powers.

Because God works in them the power to will and the power to do; therefore the apostle exhorts them to work out their own salvation: most manifestly showing, that the use of the powers of volition and action belongs to themselves. They cannot do God's work; they cannot produce in themselves a power to will and to do; and God will not do their work: he will not work out their salvation with fear and trembling.

Though men have grievously puzzled themselves with questions relative to the will and power of the human being; yet no case can be plainer than that which the apostle lays down here: the power to will and do comes from God: the use of that power belongs to man. He that has not got this power, can neither will nor work ; he that has this power can do both. But it does not necessarily follow, that he who has these powers will use them : the possession of the powers does not necessarily imply the use of those powers : because a man might have them, and not use, or abuse them ; therefore the apostle exhorts work out your own salvation.

This is a general exhortation ; it may be applied to all men ; for to all it is applicable, there not being a rational being on the face of the earth, who has not from God both power to will and act in the things which concern his salvation. Hence the accountableness of man.

[Of his good pleasure.] Every good is freely given of God : no man deserves any thing from him ; and as it pleaseth him, so he deals out to man those measures of mental and corporeal energy which he sees to be necessary ; giving to some more, to others less ; but to all what is sufficient for their salvation.

Verse 14. Do all things without murmurings ἠρεσσημέναι, καὶ διαλογισμένων ; without grumblings and altercations. Be patient in, and contented with, your work ; and see that ye fall not out by the way.

Verse 15. That ye may be blameless] In yourselves, and harmless to others.

The sons of God] Showing by your holy conduct that ye are partakers of the Divine nature.

Without rebuke] Persons, against whom no charge of transgression can justly be laid.

A crooked and perverse] Probably referring to the Jews, who were the chief opponents, and the most virulent enemies which the Christian church had.

Among whom ye shine] Be like the sun and moon ; bless even the perverse and disobedient by your light and splendour. Let your light shine before men ; some will walk in that light ; and by its shining God will be glorified. It is evident that the apostle by φωστῆρις ἢ κοσμοῦ, lights in the world, refers to the sun and moon particularly ; and perhaps to the heavenly bodies in general.

Verse 16. Holding forth the word of life] An allusion, some think, to those towers which were built at the entrance of harbours, on which fires were kept during the night, to direct ships into the port. Genuine Christians, by their holy lives and conversation, are the means of directing others, not only how to escape those dangers to which they are exposed on the tempestuous ocean of human life ; but also of leading them into the haven of eternal safety and rest.

That I have not run in vain] This appears to be a part of the same metaphor ; and alludes to the case of a weather-beaten mariner, who has been long tossed on a tempestuous sea, in hazy weather and dark nights ; who has been obliged to run on different tacks, and labour intensely to keep his ship from foundering ; but is, at last, by the assistance of the luminous fire on the top of the tower, directed safely into port. Live so to glorify God and do good to men, that it shall appear that I have not run and laboured in vain for your salvation.

Verse 17. Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service] The metaphor appears to be still carried on. As it was customary for the weather-beaten mariner, when he had gained his port, to offer a sacrifice, θεῖα, to God, of some particular animal which he had vowed while in his state of danger ; and this was considered to be a religious service, λατρεία : the apostle, pursuing the idea, states himself to be willing to become the libation (for so much the word συνθύμα imports) that was to be poured upon the sacrifice. Parkhurst observes that the apostle compares the faith of the Philippians to the sacrificial victim, and his own blood shed in martyrdom to the libation, i. e. the wine poured out on occasion of the sacrifice. Raphelius observes, that Arrian uses the phrase, συνθύ-μα τῆς θεῖα for pouring out the libation after the sacrifice. The apostle had guided them safely into port ; their faith in the atoning death of Christ was their sacrifice : and he was willing that his blood in martyrdom, should be poured out as a libation on that sacrificial offering.

Verse 18. For the same cause also do ye joy] Should I be thus offered, as I shall rejoice in it, do ye also rejoice that I am counted worthy of this high honour.

Verse 19. But I trust in the Lord Jesus] He is governor and disposer of all events, being above all principality and power ; and I humbly confide in his power and goodness that I shall be a little longer spared to visit you again, ver. 24.

Verse 20. For I have no man like-minded] None of all my fellow-helpers in the Gospel have the same zeal and affectionate concern for your prosperity in every respect as he has. He is ὁμοψυχος, of the same soul; a man after my own heart.

Verse 21. For all seek their own] This must relate to the persons who preached Christ even of envy and strife, chap. i. 15. these must be very careless whether souls were saved or not by such preaching: and even those who preached the Gospel out of good will, might not be fit for such an embassy as this, which required many sacrifices; and consequently, much love and zeal to be able to make them.

Verse 22. Ye know the proof of him, that as a son with the father, he hath served with me] The Philippians had full proof of the affectionate attachment of Timothy to Paul; for he had laboured with him there, as we learn from Acts xvi. 1—3. and xvi. 14. and we find from what is said here, that Timothy was not a servant to the apostle, but that he had served with him. They both laboured together in the word and doctrine: for apostles and Christian bishops, in those times, laboured as hard as their deacons. There were no sinecures; every one was a labourer; every labourer had his work; and every workman had his wages.

Verse 23. How it will go with me.] The apostle was now in captivity; his trial appears to have been approaching, and of its issue he was doubtful; though he seems to have had a general persuasion that he should be spared, see. ver. 19. and ver. 24.

Verse 25. Epaphroditus, my brother, &c.] Here is a very high character of this minister of Christ: he was, 1. A brother, one of the Christian family; a thorough convert to God; without which he could not have been a preacher of the Gospel. 2. He was a companion in labour; he laboured, and laboured in union with the apostle in this great work. 3. He was a fellow soldier; the work was a work of difficulty and danger; they were obliged to maintain a continual warfare, fighting against the world, the devil, and the flesh. 4. He was their apostle; a man whom God had honoured with apostolical gifts, apostolical graces, and apostolical fruits: and, 5. He was an affectionate friend to the apostle; knew his soul in adversity, acknowledged him in prison, and contributed to his comfort and support.

Verse 26. Ye had heard that he had been sick] "In this passage," says Dr. Paley, "no intimation is given that the recovery of Epaphroditus was miraculous: it is plainly spoken of as a natural event." This instance, together with that in the Second Epistle to Timothy, Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick, affords a proof that the power of performing cures, and by parity of reason, of working other miracles, was a power which only visited the apostles occasionally; and did not at all depend upon their own will. Paul undoubtedly would have healed Epaphroditus, if he could; nor would he have left Trophimus at Miletum sick, had the power of working cures awaited his disposal. Had this epistle been a forgery, forgery on this occasion would not have spared a miracle: much less would it have introduced St. Paul professing the utmost anxiety for the safety of his friend, yet acknowledging himself unable to help him; which he does almost expressly in the case of Trophimus; him have I left sick; and virtually in the passage before us, in which he felicitates himself on the recovery of Epaphroditus in terms which almost exclude the supposition of any supernatural means being used to effect it. This is a reverse, which nothing but truth would have imposed." — Horæ Paulinæ, pag. 234.

Verse 27. Lest I should have sorrow upon sorrow.] The sorrows of his death, added to the sorrow he endured on account of his sickness: or, he may refer to his own state of affliction, being imprisoned and maltreated.

Verse 28. The more carefully] ἰσχυρῶς; With the more haste, or despatch; because, having suffered so much on account of his apprehended death, they could not be too soon comforted by seeing him alive and restored.

Verse 29. Receive him therefore in the Lord] For the Lord's sake receive him, and as the Lord's servant; and hold such zealous, disinterested, and holy preachers, in reputation; honour those whom ye perceive God hath honoured.

Verse 30. For the work of Christ] Preaching the Gospel, and ministering to the distressed.

He was nigh unto death] Having laboured far beyond his strength.

Not regarding his life.] Instead of παραλογισαυματος τη ψυχης, not regarding his life; παραβολισαυματος, risking his life, is the reading of ABDEFG. and is received by Griesbach into the text. His frequent and intense preaching, and labouring to supply the apostle's wants, appear to have brought him nigh to the gates of death.

The humiliation and exaltation of Christ are subjects which we cannot contemplate too frequently; and in which we cannot be too deeply instructed.

1. God destroys opposites by opposites; through pride and self-confidence man fell; and it required the humiliation of Christ to destroy that pride and self-confidence, and to raise him from his fall. There must be an indescribable malignity in sin, when it required the deepest abasement of the highest Being to remove and destroy it. The humiliation and passion of Christ were not accidental: they were absolutely necessary; and had they not been necessary, they had not taken place. Sinner, behold what it cost the Son of God to save thee! And wilt thou, after considering this, imagine that sin is a small thing? Without the humiliation and sacrifice of Christ, even thy soul could not be saved. Slight not, therefore, the mercies of thy God, by underrating the guilt of thy transgressions, and the malignity of thy sin!

2. As we cannot contemplate the humiliation and death of Christ without considering it a sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and atonement for sin, and for the sin of the whole world; so we cannot contemplate his unlimited power and glory in his state of exaltation without being convinced that he is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God through him. What can withstand the merit of his blood? What can resist the energy of his omnipotence! Can the power of sin?—its infection?—its malignity? No? He can as easily say to an impure heart, Be thou clean, and it shall be clean, as he could to the leper, Be thou clean, and immediately his leprosy was cleansed. Reader, have faith in Him: for all things are possible to him that believeth.

3. There are many ungodly men in the world, who deny the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit, and affect to ridicule those who profess to have received, what they know Christ has purchased, and God has promised; and which, in virtue of this, they have claimed by faith; because, say these mockers, "If you had the Spirit of God, you could work miracles: show us a miracle, and we will believe you to be inspired." Will these persons assert that St. Paul had not God's Spirit, when he could neither heal himself, nor restore his friends and fellow-helpers from apparent death?—What, then, doth their arguing prove? Silly men, of shallow minds.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle exhorts the Philippians to rejoice in the Lord, 1. And to beware of false teachers, 2. Shows that Christians are the true circumcision, who worship God in the Spirit, 3. And that himself had more reason to trust in the flesh than any of the Jews, 4—6. But that he counted all things loss for Christ, 7—11. He longs after a conformity to Christ in his death, and presses onward to the attainment of his high-calling, 12—14. Exhorts them to be like-minded, 15—17. Warns them against certain persons who were enemies to the cross of Christ, 18, 19. Shows the nature of their heavenly privileges, and the resurrection and glorification of the human body, 20, 21.

have here the same appellation which they formerly gave to the Gentiles: because the Gentiles were not included in the covenant, they called them dogs; and themselves, the children of the Most High. Now, they are cast out of the covenant, and the Gentiles taken in; therefore, they are the dogs, and the Gentiles the children.

Evil workers] Judaizing teachers, who endeavoured to pervert the Gospel.

The concision] Kataresis, the cutting, or excision; not συναρισ, the circumcision: the word is used by the apostle to degrade the pretensions which the Jews made to sanctify by the cutting in their flesh. Circumcision was an honourable thing, for it was a sign of the covenant; but as they now had rejected the new covenant, their circumcision was rendered uncircumcision, and is termed a cutting, by way of degradation.

Verse 3. We are the circumcision] We, who have embraced the faith of Christ crucified, are now entered into the new covenant; and, according to that new covenant, worship God in the Spirit, exulting, σωχουµεν, making our boast of Christ Jesus, as our only Saviour; having no confidence in the flesh, in any outward rite or ceremony, prescribed by the Jewish institutions.

Verse 4. Though I might also have confidence] If any of them have any cause to boast in outward rites and privileges, I have as much; yea, more.

Verse 5. Circumcised the eighth day] This was the time that the law required the males to be circumcised: and we find, from Gen. xvii.
14. both in the Samaritan Pentateuch, and in the Septuagint, though the clause is now lost out of the common Hebrew text, that, The male child which is not circumcised the eighth day, shall be cut off from among his people: this precept was literally observed in the case of St.
Paul.

Of the tribe of Benjamin] The most favourite son of that patriarch, and a tribe that did not revolt with Jeroboam, 1 Kings xii. 21. nor pollute the worship of God by idolatry.

A Hebrew of the Hebrews] Though born in a heathen country, Tarsus, yet both my parents were Hebrews; nor has there ever been any strange blood mixed with that of our family.

Touching the law, a Pharisee] One that not only received the law and the prophets, as coming from God; but belonged to that sect which,
of all others, was most scrupulously attached to it.

Verse 6. Concerning zeal] As to my zeal for Pharisaism, I gave the fullest proof of it by persecuting the church of Christ; and this is known to all my countrymen.

Touching the righteousness] And as to that plan of justification, which justification the Jews say is to be obtained by an observance of the law; I have done every thing so conscientiously from my youth up, that in this respect I am blameless; and may, with more confidence (than most of them, expect that justification which the law appears to promise.

Verse 7. But what things were gain] The credit and respect which I had, as being zealously attached to the law, and to the traditions of the elders, I counted loss for Christ. I saw that this could stand me in no stead; that all my acts of righteousness were nothing on which I could depend for salvation; and that Christ crucified could alone profit me; for I found that it is impossible that the blood of bulls and goats could take away sin.

Verse 8. I count all things but loss] Not only my Jewish privileges, but all others of every kind; with every thing that men count valuable or gainful, or on which they usually depend for salvation.

The excellency of the knowledge of Christ] That superior light, information, and blessedness, which come through the Gospel of Jesus Christ.
Justification through His blood: sanctification by His Spirit; and eternal glory through His merits and intercession. These are the blessings held out to us by the Gospel; of which, and the law
Jesus Christ is the sum and substance.

I have suffered the loss of all things] Some translate δι' οὗ τα πάντα ἔκτισα, for whom I have thrown away all things; I have made a voluntary choice of Christ, his cross, his poverty, and his reproach; and freely for these I have sacrificed all I had from the world; and all I could expect from it.

And do count them but dung] The word σκαλα means the vilest dross or refuse of any thing; the worst excrement. The word shows how utterly insignificant and unavailing, in point of salvation, the apostle esteemed every thing but the Gospel of Jesus. With his best things he freely parted, judging them all loss while put in the place of Christ crucified; and Christ crucified he esteemed infinite gain, when compared with all the rest. Of the utter unavailability of any thing but Christ, to save the soul, the apostle Paul stands as an incontrovertible proof. Could the law have done any thing, the apostle must have known it. He tried, and found it vanity: he tried the Gospel system, and found it the power of God to his salvation. By losing all that the world calls excellent, he gained Christ, and endless salvation through Him. Of the glorious influence of the Gospel, he is an unimpeachable witness. See the concluding observations on the 9th chapter of the Acts, on the character of St. Paul.

Verse 9. And be found in him] Be found a believer in Christ; not having mine own righteousness: nor trusting in any thing I have done or could do, in order to my salvation; relying on no scheme of justification, set up either formerly by myself or by others.

But that which is through the faith of Christ] That justification, which is received by faith through the atonement made by Christ.

The righteousness which is of God] God's method of justifying sinners through faith in his Son. See the notes on Rom. iii. 21, 23, and 25. where this subject is treated at large.

Verse 10. That I may know him] To be the true and promised Messiah; and experience all that salvation which he has bought by his blood.

The power of his resurrection] In having this body of my humiliation raised from death, and made like unto his glorious body. This seems to be the sole meaning of the apostle; for it is in virtue of Christ's resurrection that we are to be raised incorruptible and immortal.

And the fellowship of his sufferings] Christ died, not only as a victim for sin, but as a martyr to the truth. No creature can have fellowship with Him in his vicarious sufferings; as a martyr made conformable unto his death;

11 If by any means I might d attain unto the resurrection of the dead.

12 Not as though I had already e attained, either were already f perfect: but I follow after, if that I may apprehend that for which also to the truth, St. Paul wished to imitate Him.— Not only in the apostle, but in the primitive Christians generally, there seems to have been a strong desire after martyrdom.

Verse 11. The resurrection of the dead.] That is, the resurrection of those who, having died in the Lord, rise to glory and honour: and hence St. Paul uses a peculiar word which occurs no where else in the New Testament, ἄναστασις. The words as they stand in the best MSS. are as follows, μετὰ τὴν ἄναστασιν τῶν νεκρῶν, to that resurrection which is of the dead. This glorious resurrection, and perhaps peculiarly glorious in the case of martyrs, is that to which St. Paul aspired. The word ἀναστασις, signifies the resurrection in general, both of the just and unjust; ἄναστασις, may signify that of the blessed only.

Verse 12. Not as though I had already attained] Οὐχ ὅτι ἤδη ἔλαβον, For I have not yet received the prize: I am not glorified, for I have not finished my course; and I have a conflict still to maintain; and the issue will prove, whether I should be crowned. From the beginning of the 11th, to the end of the 17th verse, there is one continued allusion to the contests at the Olympic games: exercises with which, and their laws, the Philippians were well acquainted.

Either were already perfect] Ἡ δὲ τιτλιωμῆς, nor am I yet perfect; I am not yet crowned, in consequence of having suffered martyrdom. I am quite satisfied that the apostle here alludes to the Olympic games; and the word τιτλιωμῆς, is the proof: for τιτλιωθῆναι, is spoken of those who have completed their race, reached the goal, and are honoured with the prize. Thus it is used by Philo Allegoriar. lib. iii. pag. 101. Edit. Mangey, Ποτε οὐτὸ ψυχῆ, μάλα τιτλιωθῆναι (νικῆσθαι) σημαίνει ἰσοπέφυ; ἀραγὸ οὐχ ὅταν τελειωθῆς καὶ βραβεύῃ καὶ στεφανῶν ἀμύθη; "When is it, O soul, that thou shalt appear to have the victory?—Is it not when thou shalt be perfected, (have completed thy course by death,) and be honoured with prizes and crowns?"

That τελειωσις, signified martyrdom, we learn most expressly from Clemens Alexand. Stromata, lib. iii. page 480. where he has these remarkable words, τελειώσιν μαρτυρίῃν καλοῦμαι, οὐχ ὅτι τέλος τοῦ βίου ἢ ἀνθρώπου ἐλάτῃ, ἢ ἐμ λυταί, ἀλλ' ὅτι τελῶσι ἔργῳ ἀγαθῆς ἀνδρείας. "We call martyrdom, τελειωσις, or perfection, not because man receives it as the end, τέλος, or completion of life; but because it is the consummation, τελῶσι, of the work of charity."

So Basil the great, Hom. in Psal. cxvi. ver. 13. Ποτῆριον σωτηρίου λαβόμεν σφύρατι, φέψωμι

I am apprehended of Christ Jesus.

13 Brethren, I count not myself to have apprehended; but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, a Psa. 45. 10. Luke 9. 26. 2 Cor. 5. 16. — b 1 Cor. 9. 24, 26: Hebr. 6. 1.

τὴν δια τοῦ μαρτυρίου τελευτήσω ἐρχομαι; "I will receive the cup of salvation; that is, thirsting and earnestly desiring to come, by martyrdom, to the consummation."

So Ecumenius, on Acts xxviii. Πάντα ὅτι ἀπὸ τῆς κληρώσεως Παύλου, μέχρι τῆς τελευτήσεως αὐτοῦ, τριάντα καὶ πέντε; "All the years of Paul, from his calling to his martyrdom, were thirty and five."

And in Balsamon, Can. i. Ancyran, page 764. Τὴν τῆς τελευτήσεως σφραγὶς ἀναδοσάσαι; is, "to be crowned with the crown of martyrdom."

Eusebius, Hist. Eccles. lib. vii. cap. 13. uses the word τελευτήσαι, to express to suffer martyrdom. I have been the more particular here, because some critics have denied that the word has any such signification.—See Suicer, Rosenmüller, Macknight, &c.

St. Paul, therefore, is not speaking here of any deficiency in his own grace, or spiritual state: he does not mean by not being yet perfect, that he had a body of sin and death cleaving to him, and was still polluted with indwelling sin; as some have most falsely and dangerously imagined: he speaks of his not having terminated his course by martyrdom, which he knew would sooner or later be the case. This he considered as the τελειωσις, or perfection of his whole career; and was led to view every thing as imperfect or unfinished, till this had taken place.

But I follow after] ὡς δὲ, but I pursue: several are gone before me in this glorious way, and have obtained the crown of martyrdom; I am hurrying after them.

That I may apprehend] That I may receive those blessings to which I am called by Christ Jesus. There is still an allusion here to the Stadium and exercises there: the apostle considers Christ as the Brabeus, or judge in the games, who proclaimed the victor, and distributed the prizes; and he represents himself as being introduced by this very Brabeus, or judge, into the contest; and this Brabeus brought him in, with the design to crown him, if he contended faithfully. To complete this faithful contention, is what he has in view; that he may apprehend, or lay hold on that for which he had been apprehended, or taken by the hand by Christ, who had converted, strengthened, and endowed him with apostolical powers, that he might fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life.

Verse 13. I count not myself to have apprehended] Whatever gifts, graces, or honours I may have received from Jesus Christ, I consider every thing as incomplete till I have finished my course, got this crown, and have my body raised and fashioned after His glorious body.

Forgetting those things which are behind] My conduct is not regulated, nor influenced by that of others; I consider my calling, my Master, my work, and my end. If others think they have time to loiter or trifle, I have none; time is flying! Eternity is at hand! and my all is at stake!

This one thing I do] This is the concern, as it is the sole business, of my life.

Reaching forth] The Greek word ἐκτετακ-μένος points out the strong exertions made in the race: every muscle and nerve is exerted; and he puts forth every particle of his strength in running. He was running for life; and running for his life.

Verse 14. I press towards the mark] Κατὰ σκοπὸν δώσω, I pursue along the line: this is a reference to the while line that marked the ground in the stadium, from the starting place to the goal, on which the runners were obliged to keep their eye fixed; for they who transgressed, or went beyond this line, did not run lawfully, and were not crowned, even though they got first to the goal. See the concluding observations on 1 Cor. chap. ix.

What is called σκοπός, mark or scope, here, is called κενὴ ἡ γραμμή, i. e. the marked line, ver. 16. When it was said to Diogenes the Cynic, "Thou art now an old man; rest from thy labours:" to this he answered: Εἰ δὴλοῦν ἔργασιν, πρὸς τὴν τέλει οὐ με ἀφύναί, καὶ μὴ μάλλον ἐπιτύχαι, "If I have run long in the race, will it become me to slacken my pace when come near the end; should I not rather stretch forward?" Diog. Laert. lib. 6. cap. 2. sec. 6.

For the prize of the high calling of God] The reward which God from above calls me, by Christ Jesus, to receive. The apostle still keeps in view, his crown of martyrdom, and his glorious resurrection.

Verse 15. As many as be perfect] As many as are thoroughly instructed, in Divine things; who have cast off all dependence on the law, and on every other system, for salvation; and who discern God, calling them from above, by Christ Jesus, be thus minded; be intensely in earnest for eternal life; nor ever halt till the race is finished.

The word τέλει, the perfect, is taken here in the same sense in which it is taken 1 Cor. xiv. 20. Be not CHILDREN in understanding; but in understanding be ye ΜΕΝ, τέλει γινώσθε, be ye perfect, thoroughly instructed, deeply experienced, 1 Cor. ii. 6. We speak wisdom among the perfect, οι τελειοι; among those who are fully instructed; adults in Christian knowledge, Eph. iv. 13. Till we all come—unto a perfect man, ους αριστα ανωρον; to the state of adults in Christianity, Heb. v. 14. But strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, τελειων, the perfect; those who are thoroughly instructed and experienced in Divine things. Let us therefore, says the apostle, as many as be perfect, as have entered fully into the spirit and design of the Gospel, be thus minded—viz. Forget the things which are behind, and stretch forward along the mark, for the prize.

[If in any thing ye be otherwise minded] If ye have not yet entered into the full spirit and design of this Gospel; if any of you have yet remaining any doubts relative to Jewish ordinances, or their expediency in Christianity, God shall reveal even this unto you; for while you are sincere and upright, God will take care that ye shall have full instruction in these Divine things.

Verse 16. Wherunto we have already attained] Let us not lose that part of the race which we have already run; let us walk by the same rule, let us keep the white line continually in view: Let us mind the same thing, always considering the glorious prize which is held out by God through Christ Jesus, to animate and encourage us.

The MSS. Versions, and Fathers, of the Alexandrian recension, or edition, and which are supposed by Griesbach and others, to contain the purest text, omit the words κατοι, το αυτο οραμα, and read the verse thus, Wherunto we have already attained, let us walk; or, according to what we have already attained, let us regulate our life. There is so much disagreement about the above words in the MSS. &c. that most critics consider them as a sort of gloss, which never made an original part of the text. Dr. White says, certissimè delenda. Most certainly they should be obliterated.

Verse 17. Brethren, be followers—of me] In the things of Christ let me be your line; and my writing, preaching, and conduct, your rule.

And mark them] Σεισωτε; still alluding to the line in the stadium: keep your eye steadily fixed on those who walk, live, as ye have us, whose god is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things.)

20 For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ:

21 Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself.

myself, Timothy, and Epaphroditus, for an example.

Verse 18. For many walk, &c.] The Judaizing teachers continue to preach, who wish to incorporate circumcision, and other ordinances of the law, with the Gospel.

They are the enemies of the cross of Christ] They rather attribute justification to the Levitical sacrifices, than to the sacrificial death of Christ; and thus they are enemies to that cross, and will not suffer persecution for his sake. They please the world, and are in no danger of reproach.

Verse 19. Whose end is destruction] This is the issue of their doctrine, and of their conduct. They are here described by three characters—

1. Their god is their belly; they live not in any reference to eternity; their religion is for time; and they make a gain of godliness; and live only to eat, drink, and be merry. 2. Their glory is in their shame; they lay it down as a proof of their address, that they can fare sumptuously every day, in consequence of preaching a doctrine which flatters the passions of their hearers. 3. They mind earthly things; their whole study and attention are taken up with earthly matters; they are given to the flesh and its lusts; they have no spirituality; nor do they believe that there is or can be any intercourse between God and the souls of men:—but their lasciviousness and uncleanness seem to be principally intended.—See Kypke. Despicable as these men were, the apostle's heart was deeply pained on their account—1. Because they held and taught a false creed. 2. Because they perverted many by that teaching; and, 3. Because they themselves were perishing through it.

Verse 20. Our conversation is in heaven] ἡμῶν—το πολιτωμα; our city, or citizenship, or civil rights. The word properly signifies the administration, government, or form of a republic or state: and is thus used by Demosthenes, pag. 107. 25. and 262. 27. Edit. Reiske. It signifies also a republic, a city, or the inhabitants of any city or place; or a society of persons living in the same place, and under the same rules and laws.—See more in Schleuser.

While those gross and Jewish teachers have no city, but what is on earth; no rights but what are derived from their secular connexions; no society but what is made up of men like themselves; who mind earthly things, and whose belly is their god: we have a heavenly city, the New Jerusalem; we have rights and privileges which are heavenly and eternal; and our society or fellowship is with God the Father, Son, and Spirit; the spirits of just men made perfect; and the whole church of the first-born. We have crucified the flesh with its affections and lusts; and regard not the body, which we know must perish; but which we confidently expect shall be raised from death and corruption, into a state of immortal glory.

Verse 21. Who shall change our vile body] Ο μεταρρυθμιστων το σωμα της ταπεινωσεως ημων; who will refashion, or alter the fashion and condition of the body of our humiliation; this body that is dead, adjudged to death because of sin; and must be putrified, dissolved, and decomposed:—

That it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body] Εις το γινωσθαι αυτο συμμορφον τη σωματι της δεξης αυτου; that it may bear a similar form to the body of his glory. That is, the bodies of true believers shall be raised up at the great day, in the same likeness, immortality, and glory, of the glorified humanity of Jesus Christ; and be so thoroughly changed, as to be not only capable, through their immortality, of eternally existing; but also of the infinite spiritual enjoyments at the right hand of God.

According to the working] Κατα την ενεργειαν; according to that energy by which he can bring all things under subjection to himself. Thus we find, that the resurrection of the body is attributed to that power which governs and subdues all things; for nothing less than the energy that produced the human body at the beginning, can restore it from its lapsed and degraded state, into that state of glory which it had at its creation; and render it capable of enjoying God throughout eternity. The thought of this glorious consummation was a subject of the highest joy and confidence amongst the primitive Christians. This earth was not their home; and they passed through things temporal, so as not to lose those which were eternal.

1. The preceding chapter, to which the first verse of the succeeding should be joined, contains a fund of matter the most interesting that can well be conceived. The apostle seems to stand on the verge of eternity, and to have both worlds opened to his view. The one he sees to be the place in which a preparation for the other is to be attained. In the one he sees the starting-place, where the Christian is to commence his race; in the other, the goal at which his course terminates, and the prize which he is there to obtain. One is the place from, and over which the Christian is to run; the other, is that to which he is to direct his course; and in which he is to receive infinite blessedness. In the one, he sees all manner of temptations, and hindrances, and dangers standing thick through all the ground; in the other, he sees the forerunner, the Lord Jesus, who has entered into the heaven of heavens for him; through whom, God calls him from above, της ανω κλησεως του Θεου, ver. 14. for what he hears in the Gospel, and what he sees by faith, is the calling of God from above; and therefore he departs from this, for this is not his rest.

2. The nearer a faithful soul comes to the verge of eternity, the more the light and influence of heaven are poured out upon it: time and life are fast sinking away into the shades of death and darkness; and the effulgence of the dawning glory of the eternal world, is beginning to illustrate the blessed state of the genuine Christian; and to render clear and intelligible those counsels of God partly displayed in various inextricable providences; and partly revealed and seen as through a glass darkly, in his own sacred word. Unutterable glories now begin to burst forth; pains, afflictions, persecutions, wants, distresses, sickness, and death, in any or all of its forms, are exhibited as the way to the kingdom; and as having, in the order of God, an ineffable glory, for their result. Here are the wisdom, power, and mercy of God! Here the patience, perseverance, and glory of the saints! Reader, is not earth, and its concerns, lost in the effulgence of this glory? Arise and depart, for this is not thy rest.

CHAPTER IV.

The apostle exhorts them to stand fast in the Lord, 1. And beseeches Euodias and Syntyche to be of one mind in Divine things, 2. And requests his true yoke-fellow to help them to a good understanding, 3. Gives them directions concerning their temper and frame of mind, 4—7. And how to act in all respects, as becomes the purity and excellence of the Gospel; as they had heard from, and seen in him, 8, 9. Thanks them for their attention to him in his captivity, in sending him what was necessary for his support; though he had learned to be contented in all situations in life, 10—14. Mentions particular cases in which they had ministered to him; promises them, through the riches of the glory in Christ, a supply of all their spiritual wants; and renders thanks to God, 15—20. Salutes all the saints, and those particularly of the emperor's household, 21, 22. And concludes with his usual apostolical benediction, 22.

4 ^d Rejoice in the Lord always: and again I say, Rejoice.

Verse 2. I beseech Euodias, and beseech Syntyche] These were two pious women, as it is generally supposed, who were deaconesses in the church at Philippi; and who, in some points of doctrine and discipline, had disagreed. He exhorts them to be of the same mind; that is, to compose their differences; and, if they could not perfectly agree, to think and let think; and to avoid all public opposition, as their dissention would strengthen the hands of the common enemy, and stumble those who were weak. But it is more likely that Syntyche was a man, and Euodias a woman, and probably the husband of Euodias; and that it is Syntyche which the apostle calls true yoke-fellow in the next verse.

Verse 3. Help those women which laboured with me] Both in the Grecian and Asiatic countries, women were kept much secluded; and it was not likely that even the apostles had much opportunity of conversing with them: it was therefore necessary that they should have some experienced Christian women with them, who could have access to families; and preach Jesus to the female part of them. The apostle tells us that certain women laboured with him in the Gospel; and were assistants to others also who had assisted him.

Some think the women here were Euodias and Syntyche; but I rather incline to the opinion that Συνυχη, was a male, and Euodias his wife. EUODIAS signifies a pleasant scent; SYNTYCHE, fortunate. There have been a number of conjectures who these persons were; and who is meant by the true yoke-fellow; but as there is nothing certain known on the subject, it is useless to propagate conjecture.

With Clement also] Supposed to be the same who was afterward bishop of Rome; and who wrote an epistle to the Corinthians, which is still extant.

Whose names are in the book of life] Who are genuine Christians; who are enlisted or enrolled in the armies of the Lord; and have received a title to eternal glory. The reader is requested to refer to the note on Exod. xxxii. 32, 33. and the concluding observations at the end of that chapter; where the writing in, and blotting out, of the book of life, are particularly considered; and the difficulties on the subject removed. 5 Let your moderation be known unto all men. ^e The Lord is at hand.

6 ^f Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God.

7 And ^g the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.

Verse 4. Rejoice in the Lord always] Be continually happy; but this you can find only in the Lord. Genuine happiness is spiritual; as it can only come from God; so it infallibly tends to Him. The apostle repeats the exhortation, to show not only his earnestness, but also that it was God's will that it should be so; and that it was their duty as well as interest.

Verse 5. Let your moderation be known] The word μετριότης is of very extensive signification; it means the same as μετριότης, mildness, patience, yieldingness, gentleness, clemency, moderation; unwillingness to litigate or contend; but moderation is expressive enough as a general term. "Moderation," says Dr. M'Knight, "means meekness under provocation, readiness to forgive injuries, equity in the management of business, candour in judging of the characters and actions of others; sweetness of disposition, and the entire government of the passions."

The Lord is at hand] A phrase something similar to the Maran Atha of 1 Cor. xvi. 22. The Lord is Judge, and is at hand to punish. Schoetgen supposes from this verse, taken in connexion with the preceding, that Euodias and Syntyche were of a quarrelsome disposition; and hence the exhortation and threatening in the third and fifth verses.

Verse 6. Be careful for nothing] Μηδὲ μεριμνήσατε; be not anxiously solicitous; do not give place to carking care, let what will occur: for anxiety cannot change the state or condition of any thing from bad to good; but will infallibly injure your own souls.

By prayer and supplication] God alone can help you; He is disposed to do it; but you must ask by prayer and supplication: without this, he has not promised to help you.

With prayer; solemn application to God from a sense of want. Supplication; continuance in earnest prayer. With thanksgiving; for innumerable favours already received; and for dangers, evils, and deaths, turned aside. And let your souls be found in this exercise, or in the disposition in which this exercise can be performed; at all times, on all occasions, and in all places.

Verse 7. And the peace of God] That harmonizing all passions and appetites, which is produced by the Holy Spirit, and arises from a sense of pardon, and the favour of God.

This peace passeth all understanding: it is of a very different nature from all that can arise from human occurrences: it is a peace which Christ has purchased, and which God dispenses: it is felt by all the truly godly, but can be explained by none: it is communion with the Father, and his Son Jesus Christ, by the power and influence of the Holy Ghost.

Verse 8. Finally, brethren] The object of the apostle is to recommend holiness and righteousness to them in every point of view; and to show that the Gospel of Christ requires all its professors to have the mind that was in Christ; and to walk as he himself also walked. That they were not to attend to one branch of righteousness or virtue only, but to every thing by which they might bring honour to God; good to their fellow-creatures; and credit to themselves.

Whatsoever things are true] ὅσα ἀληθῆ; all that is agreeable to unchangeable and eternal truth. Whether that which is to be learnt from the nature and state of created things; or that which comes immediately from God by revelation.

Whatsoever things are honest] ὅσα εὐσεβῆ; whatever is grave, decent, and venerable. Whatever becomes you as men, as citizens, and as Christians:—

Whatsoever things are just] ὅσα δίκαια; whatsoever is agreeable to justice and righteousness. All that ye owe to God, to your neighbour, and to yourselves:—

Whatsoever things are pure] ὅσα ἀγνᾶ; whatsoever is chaste. In reference to the state of the mind, and to the acts of the body:—

Whatsoever things are lovely] ὅσα προσήκοντα; whatsoever is amiable on its own account, and on account of its usefulness to others, whether in your conduct or conversation:—

Whatsoever things are of good report] ὅσα εὐφημῆ; whatsoever things the public agree to acknowledge as useful and profitable to men: such as charitable institutions of every kind; in

From my preaching and writing;

And received] By faith, as a revelation from God.

And heard] From my preaching, and that of those who laboured with me, and heard from me, in my private communications with you; and heard of me from other churches;

Do] Take them for the rule of your faith and practice.

And the God of peace] He who is the author of peace, the lover of peace, and the maintainer of peace; He who has made peace between heaven and earth, by the mission and sacrifice of his Son; shall be ever with you, while you believe and act as here recommended.

Verse 10. But I rejoiced in the Lord] Every good comes from God, either immediately from his providence or from his grace; therefore the apostle thanks God for the kindness of the Philippians towards him; for it was God that gave them the power, and directed their hearts to use it.

Hath flourished again] They had helped him before, chap. ii. 2. they had ceased for a time, and now they began again. This is evidently designed by the apostle as the word ἐπιβλάστη implies, which is a metaphor taken from the reviviscence of flowers in spring, which seemed dead in winter. For the time in which they were apparently remiss, he makes a delicate apology; Ye were careful, but ye lacked opportunity; or rather ἀναμύθη, ye had not ability; ye wanted the means; as the word sometimes implies.

Verse 11. Not that I speak in respect of want] I am quite unconcerned in this respect; leaving the whole of my support, while bound for the testimony of Jesus, to the providence of God.

For I have learned] I am so satisfied with the wise providence and goodness of God, that I know whatever He determines is the best; and therefore I am perfectly contented that he should govern the world in that way which seems best to his godly wisdom. How true is the proverb, a contented mind is a continual feast. What do we get by murmuring and complaining?

Verse 12. I know—how to be abased] I have passed through all these states; I know how to conduct myself in each; and how to extract good from all. And he had passed through these things, especially the hardships, so that he had learnt the lesson perfectly, as the word μικρυνάσ implies; he was thoroughly instructed; fully initiated into all the mysteries of poverty and want; and of the supporting hand of God in the whole. See here the state to which God permitted his chief apostle to be reduced! And see how powerfully the grace of Christ supported him under the whole! How few of those who are called Christian ministers, or Christian men, have learnt this important lesson! When want or affliction comes, their complaints are loud and frequent; and they are soon at the end of their patience.

Verse 13. I can do all things] It was not a habit which he had acquired by frequent exercise, it was a disposition which he had by grace; and he was enabled to do all by the power of an indwelling Christ. Through Him who strengtheneth me, is the reading of some of the best MSS. Versions, and Fathers. The word Χριστῶν, Christ, being omitted.

Verse 14. Ye have well done] Though I have learnt all these important lessons, and am never miserable in want, yet ye have done well in sending me relief in the time of affliction.

Verse 16. For even in Thessalonica] While labouring to plant the church there; he was supported partly by working with his hands, 1 Thess. ii. 9. 2 Thess. iii. 7—9. and partly by the contributions sent him from Philippi. Even the Thessalonians had contributed little to his maintenance; this is not spoken to their credit.

Verse 17. Not because I desire a gift] I do not speak thus to incite you to send me a further gift; I speak this on the general subject, because I wish you to bear such fruit as shall abound to your account in the day of the Lord.

Verse 18. I have all] Ye have now sent me so much by Epaphroditus, that I abound in all the necessities of life.

Having received—the things] Probably a supply of clothes, and such like necessaries, as well as of money.

An odour of a sweet smell] Alluding to the sacrifice offered up under the law. With what ye have done to me, his servant, God is well pleased. See Ephes. v. 2. and the note there.

Verse 21. Salute every saint] Remember to present my affectionate wishes to every Christian at Philippi.

The brethren which are with me] Those who were fellow-labourers with him, generally supposed to be Aristarchus, Mark, Justus, Epaphras, Luke, and Demas. See the end of the epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon.

Verse 22. All the saints] All the Christians now at Rome.

They that are of Cæsar's household] Nero was at this time emperor of Rome; a more worthless, cruel, and diabolic wretch, never disgraced the name or form of man: yet in his family there were Christians; but whether this relates to members of the imperial family, or to guards or courtiers; or to servants, we cannot tell. If even some of his slaves were converted to Christianity, it would be sufficiently marvellous. Converts to Christianity in this family there certainly were; and this shows how powerfully the Divine word had been preached and spread. That the empress Poppea may have been favourably inclined to Christianity is possible; for Josephus relates of her, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 7. θεοσεβής γαρ ην, she was a worshipper of the true God: it is not likely, therefore, that she threw any hindrances in the way of her servants, who might wish to embrace the Christian faith. St. Jerom, in Philem. states that St. Paul had converted many in Cæsar's family; for, à Cæsare missus in carcerem, notior familiae ejus factus; persecutoris Christi domum fecit Ecclesiam. "For, being by the emperor cast into prison, he became the more known to his family; and he turned the house of Christ's persecutor into a Church." Some imagine that Seneca, the preceptor of Nero, and the poet Lucan, were converted by St. Paul; and there are still extant, and in a MS. now before me, letters which profess to have passed between Paul and Seneca; but they are worthy of neither. They have been printed in some editions of Seneca's works. See the remarks below.

Verse 23. The grace of our Lord] The usual apostolical benediction, which has often occurred; and been more than once explained. See on Rom. i. 7. and Galat. vi. 18. The word nam, our, is omitted by many MSS. and several versions, which simply read, The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Armenian, Vulgate and Itala; besides several of the Fathers.

There are various subscriptions to this epistle in the different MSS. and Versions. In the common Greek text it stands thus: Written to the Philippians from Rome by Epaphroditus. The Epistle to the Philippians was written from Rome, and sent by Epaphroditus, SYRIAC. To the Philippians, ETHIOPIC. The end of the Epistle; it was written at Rome, and sent by Epaphroditus, ARABIC. To the Philippians, by Timothy and Epaphroditus, COPTIC.

1. The MSS. generally agree with the Versions; and all unite in stating that this epistle was written and sent from Rome; so that the common subscription may well stand. Yet there have been some strong objections made against this, as far as the place is concerned. Some foreign critics have maintained, that were it to be granted that the apostle was now a prisoner for the testimony of Christ, yet it does not follow that he was a prisoner at Rome; for, he himself tells us, 2 Cor. xi. 23. that he was in prisons more abundant; and, consequently, he might be in prison somewhere else: but they have gone further, and denied that this epistle was written while Paul was a prisoner, that he had been already liberated; and that of this there are several evidences in the epistle itself. J. Christopher Wolf, in his Cura has considered all these objections in detail, and appears to have answered them in a very satisfactory manner. That St. Paul was now in prison, these words seem clearly to prove, chap. i. 16. The one preach Christ of contention, not sincerely, supposing to add affliction to my bonds. This strongly argues that he was then suffering imprisonment, and that certain persons of perverse minds preached the Gospel in such a way as was calculated to make his bonds still more grievous. And, as he sends the salutations of saints which were of Cæsar's household, it seems most evident that he was then at Rome; as, had he been a prisoner in any of the provinces, it is not likely that he would send to Philippi the greetings of those who lived at Rome.

2. The cause of this imprisonment has been variously understood. Theodorus Metochita says, it was in consequence of his having converted Nero's baker, and one of his concubines, at which the emperor being enraged, ordered him to be cast into prison: but the authority on which this rests, is scarcely sufficient to render it credible.

3. Paul is generally allowed to have been twice imprisoned at Rome: this was, without doubt, the first time of his being there in bonds.

as there is every appearance that he was delivered after this; but his second imprisonment issued in his martyrdom. Every apostle of God is immortal till his work is done. Paul became a martyr when God saw that there was no further need either for his preaching or his writing: he had kept and defended the faith, and had finished his course; God took him then from the evil to come, and crowned him with the glory which his Redeemer had provided for him; in reference to which he lived, and after which he had continually aspired.

4. Reader, be thankful to God, who, in pity to thy weakness, has called thee to believe and enjoy, and not to suffer for his sake. It is not for us to covet seasons of martyrdom; we find it difficult to be faithful, even in ordinary trials: yet as offences may come, and times of sore trial and proof may occur, we should be prepared for them: and we should know that nothing less than Christ in us, the hope of glory, will enable us to stand in the cloudy and dark day. Let us therefore, put on the whole armour of God, and fighting under the Captain of our salvation, expect the speedy destruction of every inward foe; and triumph in the assurance, that death, the last enemy, will, in his destructions, shortly be brought to a perpetual end. Hallelujah! The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth—Amen, and Amen.

PREFACE

TO THE

EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

COLOSSIANS.

COLOSSE, of rather Colassa; (see on chap. i. 1.) was a city of Phrygia Pacatiana, now a part of Natolia, in Asia Minor, seated on an eminence on the south side of the river Mæander, now Meinder, near to the place where the river Lycus enters the earth, and begins to run under ground, which course it continues for about three quarters of a mile, before it emerges and falls into the Mæander. Of this ancient city not much is known: it was situated between Laodicea and Hierapolis, and at an equal distance from either; and to this place Xerxes came in his expedition against Greece.

The government of this city is said to have been democratic; and its first magistrate bore the title of Archon, and Prætor. The Macedonians transferred Colosse to the Persians; and it afterward passed under the government of the Seleucids. After the defeat of Antiochus III. at the battle of Magnesia, it became subject to Eumenes, king of Pergamus: and when Attalus, the last of his successors, bequeathed his dominions to the Romans, this city, with the whole of Phrygia, formed a part of the proconsular province of Asia; which division subsisted till the time of Constantine the Great. After the time of this emperor, Phrygia was divided into Phrygia Pacatiana, and Phrygia Salutaris: and Colosse was the sixth city of the first division.

The ancient city of Colosse has been extinct for nearly eighteen hundred years; for about the tenth year of the emperor Nero, about a year after the writing of this epistle, not only Colosse, but Laodicea and Hierapolis, were destroyed by an earthquake, according to Eusebius; and the city which was raised in the place of the former was called Chonos or Konos, which name it now bears.—See New Encyclopædia. On modern maps, Konos is situated about twenty miles N. E. of Degnistlu, in lat. about 38°. north, and in long. 29°. 40'. east of London.

The epistle to this city appears to have been written about the same time with that to the Philippians, viz. towards the end of the year 62, and in the ninth of the emperor Nero.

That the two epistles were written about the same time, is rendered probable by the following circumstance:—In the Epistle to the Philippians, chap. ii. 19. St. Paul purposes to send Timothy to Philippi, who was then with him at Rome, that he might know their state. As Timothy joins with the apostle in the salutation at the beginning of this epistle, it is evident that he was still at Rome, and had not yet been sent to Philippi; and as St. Paul wrote the former epistle nearly at the close of his first imprisonment at Rome, the two epistles must have been written within a short space of each other. See the Preface to the Epistle to the Philippians.

When, or by whom, Christianity was first preached at Colosse, and a church founded there, we cannot tell; but it is most likely that it was by St. Paul himself, and during the three years in which he dwelt at Ephesus; for he had then employed himself with such zeal and diligence, that we are told, Acts xix. 10. "That all they that dwelt in Asia heard the word of the Lord Jesus, both Jews and Greeks." And that Paul preached in Phrygia, the district in which this city was situated, we learn from Acts xvi. 6. "Now when they had gone through Phrygia and the region of Galatia;" and at another time we find that "he went over all the country of Galatia and Phrygia in order, strengthening all the disciples." Acts xviii. 23. It has, however, been argued from chap. ii. ver. 1. of this epistle, that Paul had never been at Colosse; for he there says, I would that ye knew what great conflict I have for you, and for them at Laodicea, and for as many as have not seen my face in the flesh. But the consequence drawn from these words does not absolutely follow. Dr. Lardner alleges a variety of considerations which induced him to believe that the churches of Colosse and Laodicea were founded by St. Paul, viz.

PREFACE TO THE EPISTLE, &c.

1. That the apostle was twice in Phrygia, in which were Colosse, Laodicea, and Hierapolis, see the places above quoted, from the Acts of the Apostles.

2. That he does in effect, or even expressly say, that he had dispensed the Gospel to the Colossians, chap. i. 21—25. See particularly the 23d, 24th, and 25th verses.

3. From several passages in the epistle it appears, that the apostle does not speak as to strangers, but to acquaintances, disciples, and converts. Some think that Epaphras, who is called their apostle, chap. i. 7. was the first who planted Christianity among the Colossians.

But the arguments drawn from Acts, chap. xvi. and xviii. referred to above, are quite invalidated, if we allow the opinion of some learned men, among whom are Suidas, Calepine, Munster, and others, that the Colossus, a gigantic statue at Rhodes, gave its own name to the people among whom it stood; for the ancient poets call the inhabitants of the island of Rhodes Colossians; and hence they thought that the Colossians, to whom St. Paul directs this epistle, were the inhabitants of Rhodes. This opinion, however, is not generally adopted. From a great similarity in the doctrine and phraseology of this epistle to that written to the Ephesians this to the Colossians has been considered an epitome of the former; as the Epistle to the Galatians has been considered an abstract of that to the Romans. See the concluding observations on the Epistle to the Galatians; and the notes on chap. i. 4. of this epistle; and elsewhere.

Whether the Colossians to whom the apostle addresses this epistle were Jews or Gentiles, cannot be absolutely determined. It is most probable that they were a mixture of both; but, that the principal part were converted Jews, is most likely. This, indeed, appears to have been the case in most of the Asiatic and Grecian churches; for there were Jews, at this time, sojourning in almost every part of the Roman empire, which then comprehended the greatest portion of the known world.

The language of this epistle is bold and energetic; the sentiments grand; and the conceptions vigorous and majestic. The phraseology is in many places Jewish; and the reason is obvious, the apostle had to explain subjects which never had a name in any other language. The mythology of the Gentiles could not furnish terms to explain the theology of the Jews; much less the more refined and spiritual system of Christianity.

CHAPTER I.

The salutation of Paul and Timothy to the church at Colosse, 1, 2. They give thanks to God for the good estate of that church, and the wonderful progress of the Gospel in every place, 3—6. Having received particulars of their state from Epaphroditus, which not only excited their gratitude, but led them to pray to God that they might walk worthy of the Gospel; and they give thanks to Him who had made them meet for an inheritance among the saints in light, 7—12. This state is described as a deliverance from the power of darkness, and being brought into the kingdom of God's Son, 13, 14. The glorious character of Jesus Christ, and what he has done for mankind, 13—20. The salvation which the Colossians had received, and of which the apostle had been the minister and dispenser, 21—26. The sum and substance of the apostle's preaching, and the manner in which he executed his ministry, 27—29.

Verse 1. Paul an apostle—by the will of God] As the word apostolos, apostle, signifies one sent, an envoy, or messenger; any person or persons may be the senders: but the word is particularly restrained to the messengers of the everlasting Gospel, sent immediately from God himself: and this is what St. Paul particularly remarks here, when he calls himself an apostle by the will of God; signifying that he had derived his commission from an express volition or purpose of the Almighty.

And Timothy] Though Timothy is here joined in the salutation, yet he has never been understood as having any part in composing this epistle. He has been considered as the amanuensis or scribe of the apostle.

That this city perished by an earthquake, a short time after the date of this epistle, we have the testimony of Eusebius. That, which at present is supposed to occupy the site of this ancient city, is called Konos. For other particulars, see the Preface to this epistle.

Grace be unto you] See on Rom. i. 7.

And the Lord Jesus Christ.] This clause is omitted by many MSS. several Versions, and some of the Fathers. Griesbach has left it out of the text; not, in my opinion, on sufficient evidence.

Verse 3. We give thanks to God] Who is the author of all good; and from whom the grace, which has produced your conversion, has sprung by his mission of Christ Jesus. See the note on Eph. i. 15 and 16.

Verse 4. Since we heard of your faith] This is very similar to Ephes. i. 15. And it is certain that the apostle seems to have considered the church at Ephesus, and that at Colassa, to have been nearly in the same state; as the two epistles are very similar in their doctrine and phraseology.

Verse 5. For the hope which is laid up for you in heaven] That eternal life, both of body and soul, which the apostle mentions, Titus i. 2. In hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world begun. The hope is here used for the object of hope; as every person that is born of God, hopes for the resurrection of his body; and the glorification of both it and his soul in the realms of eternal blessedness.

In the word of the truth of the Gospel] In the doctrine of that Gospel of your salvation, which is the truth of God. Of this hope, by this doctrine, they had heard before, probably by persons who had heard and received the Gospel either at Ephesus or some other place; either in Asia Minor or Greece, where the apostles had preached. Some critics suppose that the word ἠκούσθησαν, heard before, refers to their heathen state, previously to their having heard the Gospel; as they could have no rational hope either of eternal life, or the resurrection of the body, till they had heard the doctrine of the truth of the Gospel. Heathenism knew nothing of the resurrection of the body; and had very indistinct and uncertain notions of the immortality of the soul.

Verse 6. Which is come unto you] The doctrine of the Gospel is represented as a traveller, whose object it is to visit the whole habitable earth; and, having commenced his journey in Judea, had proceeded through Syria, and through different parts of Asia Minor, and had lately arrived at their city, every where proclaiming glad tidings of great joy to all people.

As it is in all the world] So rapid is this traveller in his course, that he had already gone nearly through the whole of the countries under the Roman dominion; and will travel on till he has proclaimed his message to every people, and kindred, and nation, and tongue.

In the beginning of the apostolic age, the word of the Lord had certainly free course, did run, and was glorified. Since that time, the population of the earth has increased greatly: to follow the metaphor, the traveller still continues in his great journey; and it is the glory of the present day, that, by means of the British and Foreign Bible Society, multiplying Bibles in all the languages of Europe; and by means of the Christian Missionaries in India, Carey, Marshman, and Ward, who, with a zeal, constancy, and ability, rarely equalled, and perhaps never surpassed, have succeeded, in the compass of a few years, in translating the Sacred Writings into most of the written languages of India, in which they were not previously extant; and in this labour they have been ably seconded by the Rev. Henry Martin, one of the East India Company's chaplains, who was taken to his great reward, just when he had completed a pure and accurate version of the New Testament into Persian. And the Rev. R. Morrison, at Canton, has had the honour to present the whole of the New Testament, in Chinese, to the immense population of that greatest empire of the earth. May that dark people receive it; and walk in the light of the Lord! And let every reader pray that all these noble attempts may be crowned with unlimited success; till the earth is filled both with the knowledge and glory of the Lord. Talia secla currite! Amen.

And bringeth forth fruit] Wherever the pure Gospel of Christ is preached, it is the seed of the kingdom, and must be fruitful in all those who receive it by faith, in simplicity of heart.

The grace of God in truth] Ye were fruitful, and went on increasing in the salvation of God, from the time that ye heard and acknowledged this doctrine to be of God; to spring from the grace or benevolence of God; and received it in truth, sincerely and uprightly, as His greatest gift to man.

Verse 7. As ye also learned of Epaphras—who is for you] Who this Epaphras was, we cannot tell; only it is likely that he was a Colossian; and became, by the call and grace of Christ, a deacon of this church, faithfully labouring with the apostle to promote its best interests. Some think that he is the same with Epaphroditus, Epaphras, being a contraction of that name, as Demas is of Demetrius; and it is remarkable that one of the Slavonic Versions has Epaphroditus in this place. That he was a Colossian, is evident from chap. iv. 12. Epaphras, who is one of you, ἐξ ὑμῶν and some think that he was the first who preached the Gospel among this people, and hence called an apostle. He was raised up among themselves to be their minister in the absence of the apostle; and he showed himself to be worthy of this calling, by a faithful discharge of his ministry; and by labouring fervently for them all; and pressing them forward, that they might stand perfect and complete in all the will of God.

Verse 8. Your love in the Spirit.] So we preached, and so ye believed. The heavenly flame in the heart of this minister, communicated itself to those who heard him: it was, like priest, like people. They enjoyed a spiritual, energetic ministry; and they were a spiritual people; they had a loving Spirit; and love through the Spirit of God, which dwelt in them. And of this love of theirs in the Spirit, and particularly towards the apostle, Epaphras gave full proof, not only by describing to the apostle the affection they felt for him, but in presenting to him those supplies which their love to him caused them to furnish.

Verse 9. For this cause] See on Ephes. i. 15 and 16. where the same sentiment occurs.

That ye might be filled] Nothing could satisfy the apostle, either for himself or his hearers, but the fulness of the blessing of the Gospel of peace. The Colossians had knowledge, but they must have more; it is their privilege to be filled with it. As the bright shining of the sun in the firmament of heaven fills the whole world with light and heat; so the light of the Sun of righteousness is to illuminate their whole souls, and fill them with Divine splendour, so that they might know the will of God in all wisdom and spiritual understanding: in a word, that they might have such a knowledge of Divine things, as the Spirit of truth can teach to the soul of man.

Verse 10. That ye might walk worthy of the Lord] Suitably to your Christian profession; exemplifying its holy doctrines, by a holy and useful life. See the notes on Eph. iv. 1. and on Phil. i. 27.

Unto all pleasing] Doing every thing in the best manner, in the most proper time, and in a becoming spirit. Even a good work may be marred, and rendered fruitless, by being done improperly; out of season; or in a temper of mind that grieves the Holy Spirit.

Being fruitful in every good work] See on ver. 6.

St. Paul exhorts the Christians at Colosse—1. To walk; to be active in their Christian calling. 2. To walk worthily; suitable to the dignity of that calling; and to the purity of that God who had called them into this state of salvation. 3. To do every thing unto all pleasing; that God might be pleased with the manner, the time, the motive, disposition, design, and object of every act. 4. That they should be fruitful; mere harmlessness would not be sufficient: as God had sown good seed, he expected good fruit. 5. That every work should be good; they must not be fruitful in some works, and fruitless in others. 6. That they should increase in religious knowledge as time rolled on; knowing, by genuine Christian experience, more of God, of his love, and of his peace, day by day.

Verse 11. Strengthened with all might] That they might be able to walk worthy of the Lord, bring forth fruit, &c. See the notes on Ephes. iii. 13, &c.

According to his glorious power] According to that sufficiency of strength, which may be expected from him who has all power, both in the heavens and in the earth.

Verse 12. Giving thanks unto the Father] Knowing that ye have nothing but what ye have received from His mere mercy ; and that, in point of merit, ye can never claim any thing from Him.

Which hath made us meet] Ἰκανοποιηται, who has qualified us to be partakers, &c. Instead of ικανοποιηται, some MSS. and Versions have καλεσθηται, called, and B. (the Codex Vaticanus,) has both readings. Giving thanks unto the Father, who hath called and qualified us to be partakers—

Of the inheritance] Εἰς τὴν μερίδα τοῦ κληροῦ. A plain allusion to the division of the Promised Land, by lot, among the different families of the twelve Israelitish tribes. The κληροῦ, was the lot or inheritance, belonging to the tribe : the μερίδα, was the portion in that lot, which belonged to each family of that tribe. This was a type of the kingdom of God, in which portions of eternal blessedness are dispensed to the genuine Israelites ; to them who have the circumcision of the heart, by the Spirit, whose praise is of God, and not of man.

Of the saints in light] Light, in the Sacred Writings, is used to express knowledge, felicity, purity, comfort, and joy of the most substantial kind : here, it is put to point out the state of glory at the right hand of God. As in Egypt, while the judgments of God were upon the land, there was a darkness which might be felt ; yet, all the Israelites had light in their dwellings ; so in this world, while the darkness and wretchedness occasioned by sin, remain, the disciples of Christ are light in the Lord, walk as children of the light, and of the day ; have in them no occasion of stumbling ; and are on their way to the ineffable light at the right hand of God. Some think there is an allusion here to the Eleusinian mysteries, celebrated in deep caves, and darkness, in honour of Ceres : but I have already, in the notes to the Epistle to the Ephesians, expressed my doubts that the apostle has ever condescended to use such a simile. The phraseology of the text, is frequent through various parts of the Sacred Writings, where it is most obvious that no such allusion could possibly be intended.

Verse 13. Delivered us from the power of darkness] Darkness is here personified : and is represented as having σῶσις, power, authority, and sway : all Jews and Gentiles which had not embraced the Gospel, being under this authority and power. And the apostle intimates here, that nothing less than the power of God can redeem a man from this darkness, or prince of darkness ; who, by means of sin and unbelief, keeps men in ignorance, vice, and misery.

Translated us into the kingdom, &c.] He has thoroughly changed our state, brought us out of the dark region of vice and impiety, and placed us in the kingdom under the government of his dear Son, Ἰου τοῦ τῆς ἀγάπης αὐτοῦ, the Son of his love ; the Person who, in His infinite love, He has given to make an atonement for the sin of the world.

Verse 14. In whom we have redemption] Who has paid down the redemption price, even His own blood, that our sins might be cancelled, and we made fit to be partakers of the inheritance among the saints in light.

The clause διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ, through his blood, is omitted by ABCDEFG. and by most others of weight and importance ; by the Syriac, Arabic of Erpen, Coptic, Ethiopic, Sahidic, some copies of the Vulgate, and by the Itala ; and by most of the Greek Fathers. Griesbach has left it out of the text. It is likely that the reading here is not genuine ; yet, that we have redemption any other way than through the sacrifice of Christ, the Scriptures declare not. The same phrase is used Eph. i. 7. where there is no various reading in any of the MSS. Versions, or Fathers.

The forgiveness of sins] ἄφεσις τῶν ἀμαρτιῶν, the taking away of sins ; all the power, guilt, and infection of sin. All sin of every kind ; with all its influence and consequences!

Verse 15. Who is the image of the invisible God] The counter-part of God almighty : and if the image of the invisible God, consequently nothing that appeared in him could be that image ; for if it could be visible in the Son, it could also be visible in the Father : but if the Father be invisible, consequently His image in the Son must be invisible also. That is, that form of God of which He divested himself ; the ineffable glory in which He not only did not appear, as to its splendour and accompaniments, but concealed also its essential nature ; that inaccessible light which no man, no created being, can possibly see. This was that Divine Nature, the fulness of the Godhead bodily, which dwelt in him.

The first-born of every creature] I suppose this phrase to mean the same as that Philip. ii. 9.

^a John 1. 3. 1 Cor. 8. 6. Eph. 3. 9. Heb. 1. 2. — ^b Rom. 8. 38. Eph. 1. 21. Ch. 2. 10, 15. 1 Pet. 3. 22.

God hath given him a name which is above every name: He is, as man, at the head of all the creation of God; nor can he, with any propriety, be considered as a creature, having himself created all things, and existed before any thing was made. If it be said that God created Him first, and then he, by a delegated power from God, created all things, this is most flatly contradicted by the apostle's reasoning in the 16th and 17th verses. As the Jews term Jehovah כְּבוֹדוֹ הַבְּרִיאוֹת hecoro shel ôlam, the first-born of all the world, or of all the creation; to signify His having created or produced all things. See Wolfius in loc. So Christ is here termed; and the words which follow, in the 16th and 17th verses, are the proof of this. The phraseology is Jewish; and, as they apply it to the Supreme Being, merely to denote His eternal pre-existence, and to point Him out as the cause of all things, it is most evident that St. Paul uses it in the same way, and illustrates his meaning by the following words, which would be absolutely absurd, if we could suppose that, by the former, he intended to convey any idea of the inferiority of Jesus Christ.

Verses 16, 17. For by him were all things created] These two verses contain parts of the same subject: I shall endeavour to distinguish the statements of the apostle, and reason from them in such a way as the premises shall appear to justify, without appealing to any other Scripture in proof of the doctrine which I suppose these verses to vindicate.

Four things are here asserted—1. That Jesus Christ is the Creator of the universe, of all things visible and invisible; of all things that had a beginning, whether they exist in time or in eternity. 2. That whatsoever was created, was created for himself; that he was the sole end of his own work. 3. That he was prior to all creation, to all beings, whether in the visible or invisible worlds. 4. That he is the preserver and governor of all things; for by him all things consist.

Now, allowing St. Paul to have understood the terms which he used, he must have considered Jesus Christ as being truly and properly God. I. Creation is the proper work of an infinite, unlimited, and unoriginated Being; possessed of all perfections in their highest degrees; capable of knowing, willing, and working, infinitely, unlimitedly, and without control: and as creation signifies the production of being, where all was absolute nonentity; so it necessarily implies, that the Creator acted of and from himself; for, as previously to this creation, there was no being, consequently he could not be actuated by any motive, reason, or impulse, without himself; which would argue there was some being to produce the motive or impulse, or to give the reason. Creation, therefore, is the work of him who is unoriginated, infinite, unlimited, and eternal. But Jesus Christ is the Creator of all things; therefore Jesus Christ must be, according to the plain construction of the apostle's words, truly and properly God.

or principalities, or powers: all things were created ^c by him, and for him:

II. As, previously to creation, there was no being but God, consequently the great First Cause must, in the exertion of His creative energy, have respect to himself alone; for he could no more have respect to that which had no existence, than he could be moved by non-existence, to produce existence or creation; the Creator, therefore, must make every thing for himself.

Should it be objected that Christ created officially, or by delegation, I answer, this is impossible; for, as creation requires absolute and unlimited power, or Omnipotence, there can be but one Creator, because it is impossible that there can be two or more Omnipotents, Infinites, or Eternals. It is therefore evident, that creation cannot be effected officially, or by delegation; for this would imply a Being conferring the office, and delegating such power: and that the Being to whom it was delegated was a dependent being; consequently not unoriginated and eternal: but this, the nature of creation proves to be absurd:—1. The thing being impossible in itself, because no limited being could produce a work that necessarily requires Omnipotence. 2. It is impossible: because if Omnipotence be delegated, he to whom it is delegated, had it not before; and he who delegates it, ceases to have it; and consequently ceases to be God; and the other, to whom it was delegated, becomes God; because such attributes, as those with which he is supposed to be invested, are essential to the nature of God. On this supposition, God ceases to exist, though infinite and eternal; and another, not naturally infinite and eternal, becomes such: and thus an infinite and eternal Being ceases to exist, and another infinite and eternal Being is produced in time, and has a beginning, which is absurd. Therefore, as Christ is the creator, he did not create by delegation, or in any official way.

Again, if he had created by delegation, or officially, it would have been for that Being who gave him that office, and delegated to him the requisite power; but the text says, that all things were made by Him, and for Him, which is a demonstration that the apostle understood Jesus Christ to be truly and essentially God.

III. As all creation necessarily exists in time, and had a commencement, and there was an infinite duration in which it did not exist; whatever was before or prior to that, must be no part of creation; and the Being who existed prior to creation, and before all things, all existence of every kind, must be the unoriginated and eternal God: but St. Paul says, Jesus Christ was before all things; ergo, the apostle conceived Jesus Christ to be truly and essentially God.

IV. As every effect depends upon its cause, and cannot exist without it; so creation, which is an effect of the power and skill of the Creator, can only exist and be preserved by a continuance of that energy that first gave it being. Hence God, as the Preserver, is as necessary to the continuance of all things as God the Creator was to their original production. But this preserving, or continuing power is here ascribed to Christ; for the apostle says, And by Him do all things consist; for, as all being was derived from Him, as its cause; so all being must subsist by him, as the effect subsists by and through its cause. This is another proof that the apostle considered Jesus Christ to be truly and properly God, as he attributes to Him the preservation of all created things; which property of preservation, belongs to God alone:—ergo, Jesus Christ is, according to the plain obvious meaning of every expression in this text, truly, properly, independently, and essentially God.

Such are the reasonings to which the simple letter of these two verses necessarily leads me. I own it is possible that I may have misapprehended this awful subject; for, humanum est errare et nescire: but I am not conscious of the slightest intentional flaw in the argument. Taking, therefore, the apostle as an un-inspired man, giving his own view of the Author of the Christian religion, it appears, beyond all controversy, that himself believed Christ Jesus to be God: but, considering him as writing under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost; then we have, from the plain grammatical meaning of the words which he has used, the fullest demonstration, (for the Spirit of God cannot lie,) that He who died for our sins, and rose again for our justification, and in whose blood we have redemption, was God over all. And, as God alone can give salvation to men, and God only can remit sin; hence, with the strictest propriety, we are commanded to believe on the Lord Jesus, with the assurance that we shall be saved.—Glory be to God for this unspeakable gift!

Verse 18. He is the head of the body] What the apostle has said in the two preceding verses, refers to the Divine nature of Jesus Christ: he now proceeds to speak of his human nature; and to show how highly that is exalted beyond all created things; and how, in that, He is Head of the church; the author and dispenser of light, life, and salvation to the Christian world; or, in other words, that from Him as the man, in whom the fulness of the Godhead bodily dwelt, all the mercy and salvation of the Gospel system is to be received.

In 1 Cor. xv. 20. Christ is called the first-fruits of them that slept; and here the chief and first-born from the dead; He being the first that ever resumed the natural life, with the employment of all its functions, never more to enter the empire of death, after having died a natural death; and in such circumstances as precluded the possibility of deception. The αρχη, chief, head, or first, answers in this verse to the απαρχη, or first-fruits, 1 Cor. xv. 20. Jesus Christ is not only the first who rose from the dead to die no more; but he is the first-fruits of human beings: for, as surely as the first-fruits were an indication and pledge of the harvest, so surely was the resurrection of Christ the proof that all mankind should have a resurrection from the dead.

That in all—he might have the pre-eminence.] That he might be considered, in consequence of his mediatorial office, as possessing the first place in, and being chief over, all the creation of God: for, is it to be wondered at, that the human nature with which the great Creator condescended to unite himself, should be set over all the works of His hands?

Verse 19. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell] As the words the Father, are not in the text, some have translated the verse thus; For in Him it seemed right that all fulness should dwell; that is, that the majesty, power, and goodness of God, should be manifested in and by Christ Jesus; and thus, by him, the Father reconciles all things to himself. The πληρης, or fulness, must refer here to the Divine nature, dwelling in the man Christ Jesus.

Verse 20. And having made peace through the blood of his cross] Peace between God and man; for man being in a sinful state, and there being no peace to the wicked, it required a reconciliation to be made to restore peace between heaven and earth: but peace could not be made without an atonement for sin; and the consequence shows, that the blood of Christ shed on the cross, was necessary to make this atonement.

To reconcile all things unto himself] The enmity was on the part of the creature; though God is angry with the wicked every day; yet He is never unwilling to be reconciled. But man, whose carnal mind is enmity to God, is naturally averse from this reconciliation: it requires, therefore, the blood of the cross to atone for the sin; and the influence of the Spirit to reconcile the transgressor to Him against whom he has offended! See the notes on 2 Cor. v. 19, &c.

notes, I shall not introduce the opinions of learned men, which have as much ingenuity as variety to recommend them. If the phrase be not a kind of collective phrase, to signify all the world, or all mankind, as Dr. Hammond supposed, the things in heaven may refer, according to some, to those persons who died under the Old Testament dispensation; and who could not have a title to glory but through the sacrificial death of Christ; and the apostle may have intended these merely to show, that, without this sacrifice, no human beings could be saved; not only those who were then on the earth, and to whom, in their successive generations, the Gospel should be preached, but even those who had died before the incarnation; and, as those of them that were faithful, were now in a state of blessedness, they could not have arrived there but through the blood of the cross; for the blood of calves and goats could not take away sin.—After all, the apostle probably means the Jews and the Gentiles; the state of the former being always considered a sort of Divine or celestial state; while that of the latter was reputed to be merely earthly; without any mixture of spiritual or heavenly good. It is certain, that a grand part of our Lord's design, in His incarnation and death, was to reconcile the Jews and the Gentiles, and make them one fold under Himself, the great Shepherd and Bishop of souls. That the enmity of the Jews was great against the Gentiles, is well known; and that the Gentiles held them in supreme contempt, is not less so. It was, therefore, an object worthy of the mercy of God, to form a scheme that might reconcile these two grand divisions of mankind: and, as it was His purpose to reconcile and make them one, we learn from this circumstance, as well as from many others, that His design was to save the whole human race.

Verse 21. And you, that were sometime alienated] All men are alienated from God; and all are enemies in their minds to Him; and show it by their wicked works: but this is spoken particularly of the Gentiles. The word ἀλλοτριωσας, which we render to alienate, to give to another, to estrange, expresses the state of the Gentiles: while the Jews were, at least by profession, dedicated to God, the Gentiles were alienated; that is, given up to others: they worshipped not the true God, but had gods many and lords many, to whom they dedicated themselves, their religious service, and their property. The verb ἀλλοτριωσας, to alienate, being compounded here with the preposition ἀπ, from, signifies to abalienate; to estrange utterly; to be wholly the property of another. Thus, the Gentiles had alienated themselves from God; and were alienated, or rejected by Him, because of their wickedness and idolatry.

Enemies in your mind] They had the carnal mind, which is enmity against God; and this was expressed in their outward conduct, by wicked works.—See the note on Rom. v. 10. The mind is taken here for all the soul, heart, affections, passions, &c.

Verse 22. In the body of his flesh] By Christ's assumption of a human body, and dying for man, he has made an atonement for sin, through which men become reconciled to God and to each other.

To present you holy] Having saved you from your sins.

Unblameable] Having filled you with his Spirit, and written His law in your hearts; so that His love shed abroad in your hearts, becomes the principle and motive to every action. The tree, therefore, being good, the fruit is also good.

And unproveable] For, being filled with love, joy, peace, meekness, gentleness, and goodness; against these, there is no law: and, as they were called to love God with all their heart, soul, mind, and strength, and their neighbour as themselves; the whole spirit and design of the law was fulfilled in them: for love is the fulfilling of the law.

In his sight.] At the day of judgment. None can enjoy heaven, who has not been reconciled to God here; and shown forth the fruits of that reconciliation in being made holy and unblameable; that when they come to be judged, they may be found unproveable.

Verse 23. If ye continue in the faith] This will be the case, if you, who have already believed in Christ Jesus, continue in that faith; grounded in the knowledge and love of God; and settled, made firm and perseveringly steadfast in that state of salvation.

And be not moved away] Not permitting yourselves to be seduced by false teachers.

The hope of the Gospel] The resurrection of the body, and the glorification of it and the soul together, in the realms of blessedness. This is properly the Gospel hope.

To every creature which is under heaven] A Hebraism for the whole human race; and particularly referring to the two grand divisions of mankind, the Jews and Gentiles: to both of these the Gospel had been preached; and to each, salvation by Christ had been equally offered. And, as none had been excluded from the offers of mercy ; and Jesus Christ had tasted death for every man ; and the Jews and Gentiles, in their great corporate capacity, had all been invited to believe the Gospel ; therefore, the apostle concludes, that the Gospel was preached to every creature under heaven ; as being offered without restrictions or limitations to these two grand divisions of mankind, including the whole human race.

Verse 24. Rejoice in my sufferings for you] St. Paul always considers his persecutions, as far as the Jews were concerned in them, as arising from this simple circumstance, his asserting that God had chosen the Gentiles, and called them to enjoy the very same privileges with the Jews ; and to constitute one church with them.

It was on this account that the Jews attempted his life at Jerusalem ; when, in order to save it, he was obliged to appeal to Cæsar ; the consequences of which persecution he was now suffering in his imprisonment in Rome.—See on chapter iv. 2.

That which is behind of the afflictions of Christ] I have still some afflictions to pass through, before my race of glory be finished ; afflictions, which fall on me on account of the Gospel, such as Christ bore from the same persecuting people.

It is worthy of remark, that the apostle does not say παθηματα, the passion of Christ ; but simply θλιψεις, the afflictions ; such as are common to all good men who bear a testimony against the ways and fashions of a wicked world. In these, the apostle had his share ; in the passion of Christ, he could have none : He trod the wine-press alone ; of the people, there were none with Him.

His body's sake] Believers both of Jews and Gentiles, who form that one body, of which Christ is the head.

Verse 25. Whereof I am made a minister] Having received especial commission from God, to preach salvation to the Gentiles.

According to the dispensation] κατα την οικονομiam, according to the Gospel economy, or institution ; the scheme or plan of salvation by Christ crucified.

To fulfil the word of God] The Greek, πληρωσαι τον λογον του Θεου may be translated, fully to preach the doctrine of God.—See Rom. xv. 19.

and the note there. Were we to take the word in its common meaning, it might signify to accomplish the purpose of God, as predicted by the prophets.

Verse 26. The mystery which hath been hid] The mystery is this, that God had designed to grant the Gentiles the same privileges with the Jews ; and make them his people who were not his people. That this is what St. Paul means by the mystery, see Eph. iii. 3, &c.

Made manifest to his saints] It is fully known to all who have embraced the doctrine of Christ crucified : to all Christians.

Verse 27. The riches of the glory] God manifests to these how abundantly glorious this Gospel is among the Gentiles ; and how effectual is this doctrine of Christ crucified to the salvation of multitudes.

Which is Christ in you, the hope of glory] In this, and the following verse, there are several remarkable particulars :

I. We find here the sum and substance of the apostle's preaching.

1. He preached Christ, as the only Saviour of sinners.

2. He proclaimed this Christ as being in them ; for the design of the Gospel is to put men in possession of the Spirit and power of Christ ; to make them partakers of the Divine nature ; and thus prepare them for an eternal union with Himself. Should it be said that the preposition in, should be translated among, it amounts to the same ; for Christ was among them to enlighten, quicken, purify, and refine them ; and this he could not do without dwelling in them.

3. He preached this present, and indwelling Christ, as the hope of glory ; for no man could rationally hope for glory who had not the pardon of his sins ; and whose nature was not sanctified. And none could have pardon but through the blood of His cross ; and none could have glorification, but through the indwelling, sanctifying Spirit of Christ.

II. We see the manner in which the apostles preached.

1. They warned every one ; they showed every man his danger ; they proved that both Jews and Gentiles were under sin ; and that the wrath of God was revealed against all ungodliness, and unrighteousness of men : that time and life were uncertain ; and that now was the day of salvation.

^b 1 Cor. 15. 10.—^c Ch. 2. 1.—^d Eph. 1. 19. & 5. 7, 20.

2. They taught every man in all wisdom; they considered the world in a state of ignorance and darkness: every man being, through sin, ignorant of himself and God: and the apostles taught them to know themselves, viz. that they were sinners, wretched, helpless, and perishing; and they taught them to know God, in His purity, justice, and truth; and in His mercy through Christ Jesus. Thus they instructed men in all wisdom, for the knowledge of a man's self, and his God, constitute all that is essentially necessary to be known for present and eternal happiness.

III. The end which the apostles had in view in thus preaching Christ; to present every man perfect in Christ Jesus. The words, τελος εν Χριστω, perfect in or through Christ, signify two things—1. That they should be thoroughly instructed in the doctrines of Christianity, so that they should know the truth, as it is in Jesus. 2. That they should be made partakers of the grace of the Gospel, so that they might be saved from all their sins, and be filled with His fullness. The succeeding chapter amply proves that nothing less than this entered into the apostle's design. Men may dispute as they please about Christian perfection; but, without it, no soul shall ever see God. He who is not saved from all sin here, cannot, to his joy, see God hereafter. This perfection, of which the apostle speaks, and to which he laboured to bring all men, was something to be attained in and through Christ. The apostles preached Christ in the people; and they preached Him as crucified for mankind. He who died for them, was to live in them; and fill their whole souls with his own purity. No indwelling sin can be tolerated by an indwelling Christ; for, he came into the world to save his people from their sins.

IV. We see who were the objects of the apostle's ministry. The Jews and Gentiles; παντα ανθρωποι, every man, the whole human race. Every man had sinned; and, for every sinner, Christ had died: and He died for them that they might be saved from all their sins. The apostles never restrained the offers of salvation; they made them frankly to all, believing that it was the will of God that all should believe and be saved: hence they warned, and taught every man, that they might, at the day of judgment, present every man perfect in Christ Jesus; for, although their own personal ministry could not reach all the inhabitants of the earth; yet it is by the doctrines which they preached, and by the writings which they have left on record, that the earth is to be filled with the knowledge and glory of God, and the souls of men brought to the enjoyment of the fullness of the blessing of the Gospel of peace.

Verse 29. Whereunto I also labour] "In order to accomplish this end, I labour with the utmost zeal and earnestness; and with all that strength with which God has most powerfully furnished me." Whoever considers the original words, αγωνιζομενος κατα την ενεργειαν αυτου της ευαγγελιστης—εν δυναμει, will find that no verbal translation can convey their sense. God worked energetically in St. Paul; and he wrought energetically with God; and all this was in reference to the salvation of mankind.

1. The preceding chapter contains the highest truths in the Christian religion, conveyed in language peculiar to this apostle; a language never taught by man, clothing ideas, as vast as the human mind can grasp; and both coming immediately from that inspiration of the Almighty which giveth understanding.

2. What the apostle says on the Godhead of Christ, has already been distinctly noted; and from this we must conclude, that unless there be some secret way of understanding the 16th and 17th verses, which God has no where revealed, taken in their sober and rational sense and meaning, they must for ever settle this very important point. Let any man of common sense and reason hear these words, whose mind had not been previously warped by any sentiment on the subject; and who only knew, in religious matters, this one great truth, that there is a God; and that He made and governs all things: and then let him be asked, of whom doth the apostle speak this? Would he not immediately answer, He speaketh of God. As to the difficulties on this subject, we must consider them difficulties rather to our limited intellect, than as belonging to the subject. We can know but little of an infinite and eternal Being; nothing, properly speaking, but what Himself is pleased to reveal. Let us receive this with gratitude and reverence.

CHAPTER II.

The apostle shows his great concern for the church at Colosse, and at Laodicea; and exhorts them to steadfastness in the faith, and to beware of being seduced by specious and enticing words, 1—5. And to walk in Christ, as they had been taught, and to abound in faith and holiness, 6, 7. To beware of false teachers, who strove to pervert the Gospel, and to lead their minds from Him in whom the fullness of the Godhead dwells: with whom they were filled; by whom they had received spiritual circumcision; and into whom they were baptized, and were quickened, and raised from a death of sin, to a life of righteousness, 8—12. He points out their former state, and the great things which Christ had done for them, 13—15. Warns them against particular tenets of the Judaizing teachers, relative to meats, drinks, holidays, festivals, and the specious pretences of deceivers, 16—19. And shows, that all the things taught by these, though they had a show of wisdom, yet perished in the using, and were the commandments and doctrines of men, 20—23.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. What great conflict] The word αγών, which we here render conflict, is to be understood as implying earnest care and solicitude; accompanied, undoubtedly, with the most fervent application to the throne of grace in their behalf. The αγούζουσι, of the preceding verse, gave the apostle occasion to use the word αγών, here. He agonized with God, and his agony was for them.

Laodicea] A city of Asia Minor, on the borders of Caria, Phrygia, and Lydia. It was originally called Diaspolis, or the city of Jupiter; and afterward Rhoas: but obtained the name of Laodicea from Laodice, the wife of Antiochus. It is now called Ladik. It was formerly celebrated for its commerce, and the fine black wool of its sheep. Colosse, or the city of the Colossians, lay between it and Hierapolis. This Hierapolis was also a town of Phrygia, famous for its hot baths: it is now called Bambukholari.

As many as have not seen my face in the flesh.] From this it has been conjectured that St. Paul had never been at either Colosse or Laodicea; and this, from the letter of the text, appears probable: and yet, his having passed more than once through this country, preaching and strengthening the churches, renders it very improbable. It is, therefore, most likely, that we should understand the apostle as speaking collectively, that he had the most earnest concern, not only for the welfare of those churches with which he was acquainted, such as Colosse and Laodicea; but also for those to whom he was not personally known.

Verse 2. That their hearts might be comforted] That they might have continual happiness in God, having constant affiance in him.

Being knit together in love] The word συμμεσθίζετε, or συμμεσθίζετε, which is the true reading, but both of equal import here, signifies being united, as the beams or the timbers of a building, by mortices and pins. The visible church of Christ cannot be in union with God, unless it have unity in itself; and, without love, this unity is impossible.

Unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding] That is, that they might have the most indubitable certainty of the truth of Christianity, of their own salvation, and of the general design of God, to admit the Gentiles into and of the Father, and of Christ;

3 In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

4 And this I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words.

5 For though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit, joying and beholding your order, and the steadfastness of your faith in Christ.

Ch. 1. 9.— Rom. 16. 18. 2 Cor. 11. 13. Eph. 4. 14. & 5. 6. Ver. 8. 13.— 1 Cor. 5. 3. 1 Thess. 2. 17.— 1 Cor. 14. 40.— 1 Pet. 5. 9.

his church. This is the grand mystery of God, which was now laid open by the preaching of the Gospel.

And of the Father, and of Christ] These words are variously written in different MSS. Versions, and Fathers—The mystery of God—of God in Christ—of God who is in Christ—of God concerning Christ—of God who is Christ—of the God Christ—of God and Christ—of God the Father of Christ—of God the Father, and our Lord Christ—of God and the Father of Christ—of God the Father, in Christ—of the God Christ Jesus, the Father and Lord, &c. &c. &c.

This great variety of versions leaves the strongest presumption that the words in question are glosses which have crept into the text: and are of no authority. Griesbach has left them out of the text.

Verse 3. In whom are hid] Or rather in which; referring to the mystery mentioned above. In this glorious scheme of Christianity, all the treasures, the abundance and excellency of wisdom and knowledge, are contained. No scheme of salvation, or Divine knowledge, ever equalled, in its depth and excellency, the Gospel plan. A scheme which the wisdom of God alone could devise; and which His power and infinite mercy alone could accomplish.

Verse 4. Lest any man should beguile you] The word παρολογίζεσθε, means to deceive by sophistry, or subtle reasoning, in which all the conclusions appear to be fairly drawn from the premises: but the premises are either assumed without evidence, or false in themselves: but this not being easily discovered, the unthinking or unwary are carried away by the conclusions which are drawn from these premises. And this result is clearly intimated by the term παραλογισμα, enticing words, plausible conclusions, or deductions from this mode of reasoning. The apostle seems to allude to the Gentile philosophers, who were notorious for this kind of argumentation. Plato and Socrates are not free from it.

Verse 5. For though I be absent in the flesh] It is hardly possible that such words as these in this verse, could have been used to perfect strangers; they argue a considerable knowledge of the people, and a knowledge founded on personal acquaintance. The original is exceedingly soft and musical:

The whole verse shows that this church was sound in doctrine; and strict in discipline.
They had steadfast faith in Christ; and regular order or discipline among themselves.

Verse 6. As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus] Many persons lay a certain stress on the words as and so, and make various fine heads of discourses from them, viz. As ye received Christ in a spirit of humility, so walk in Him; as ye received Him in a spirit of faith, so walk in Him, &c. &c. This may be all proper in itself; but nothing of the kind was intended by the apostle. His meaning is simply this, "Seeing ye have embraced the doctrine of Christ, continue to hold it fast; and not permit yourselves to be turned aside by sophistical or Judaizing teachers."

Verse 7. Rooted and built up in him.] It is not usual with the apostle to employ this double metaphor; taken partly from the growth of a tree, and the increase of a building. They are to be rooted; as the good seed had been already sown, it is to take root; and the roots are to spread far, wide, and deep. They are to be grounded; as the foundation has already been laid, they are to build thereon. In the one case, they are to bear much fruit; in the other, they are to grow up to be a habitation of God through the Spirit. See the notes on Eph. ii. 21, 22. and
iii. 17.

Abounding therein with thanksgiving.] No limitation is ever set to the operations of God on the soul; or to the growth of the soul in the knowledge, love, and image of God. Those who are brought into such a state of salvation, should abound in gratitude, and loving obedience, as they grow in grace.

Verse 8. Beware lest any man spoil you.] The word αὐλασθῆναι, from αὐλάω, pray, and αὐτός, to lend or carry away, signifies to be robbed or spoiled of their goods, as if by violence or rapine.
Their goods was the salvation they had received from Christ; and both the Gentile and Jewish teachers endeavoured to deprive them of these, by perverting their minds, and leading them off from the truths of Christianity.

Philosophy and vain deceit.] Or the vain, or empty deceit of philosophy; such philosophizing as the Jewish and Gentile teachers used. As the term philosophy stood in high repute among the Gentiles, the Jews of this time affected it, and, both Philo and Josephus use the word to express the whole of the Mosaic institutions.
So the former, οἱ κληρονομοὶ φιλοσοφίας; "those systems of philosophy among the Jews." Bell.

sees, Sadducees* and Essenes, as immediately follows. The Jewish philosophy, such as it is found in the Cabala, Midrashim, and other works, deserves the character of vain deceit, in the fullest sense and meaning of the words. The inspired writers excepted, the Jews have ever been the most puerile, absurd, and ridiculous reason-ers in the world. Even Rabbi Maimon or Maimonides, the most intelligent of them all, is often, in his master-piece, the Moreh Nvochim, the teacher of the perplexed, most deplorably empty and vain.

After the rudiments of the world.] According to the doctrine of the Jewish teachers; or, according to the Mosaic institutions, as explained and glossed by the scribes, Pharisees, and rabbins, in general: We have often seen that ὁ κόσμος ἡμῶν ἡμῶν ἡμῶν, this world, of which τὸ καρμὸν τοῦτου, is a literal translation, is frequently used to express the Jewish system of rites, ceremonies, and institutions in general; what the apostle calls the tradition of men; namely, what men, unauthorized by God, have taught as doctrines received from Him. Our Lord frequently refers to, and condemns these traditions.

Not after Christ.] Not according to the simple doctrine of Christ; viz. He died for our offences: believe on the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved.

Verse 9. For in him dwelleth all the fulness.]
This is opposed to the vain or empty doctrine of the Gentile and Jewish philosophers: there is a fulness in Christ suited to the empty, destitute state of the human soul: but in the philosophy of the Jews and Gentiles, nothing like this was found; nor indeed in the more refined and correct philosophy of the present day. No substitute has ever been found for the grace of the Lord Jesus: and those who have sought for one have disquieted themselves in vain.

By the Godhead, or Deity, ὁθεός, we are to understand the state or being of the Divine Nature; and, by the fulness of that Deity, the infinite attributes essential to such a nature.

Bodily.] Σαρκίως, signifies truly, really, in opposition to typically, figuratively. There was a symbol of the Divine presence in the Hebrew tabernacle, and in the Jewish temple; but in the body of Christ, the Deity, with all its plenitude of attributes, dwelt really, and substantially; for so the word σαρκίως, means; and so it was understood by the ancient Greek Fathers, as is fully shown by SUCKER, in his Theaurus, under the word.

“The fulness of the Godhead dwelt in Christ ‘bodily,’ as opposed to the Jewish tabernacle or temple; truly, and really, in opposition to types and figures; not only effectively, as God dwells in good men, but substantially, or personally, by the strictest union, as the soul dwells in the body; so that God and man is one Christ.” See Parkhurst.

Verse 10. And ye are complete in him] Καὶ ἐστὶν ἐν αὐτῷ πληρωμένοι, and ye are filled with him. Our word complete quite destroys the connexion subsisting in the apostle’s ideas. The philosophy of the world was empty, κενὸν; but there was a πληρωμὴ, or fulness, in Christ: the Colossians were empty, spoiled and deprived of every good, while following the empty philosophy, and groundless traditions of Jewish and Gentile teachers; but since they had received Christ Jesus, they were πληρωμένοι, filled with Him. This is the true meaning of the word; and, by this, the connexion and assemblage of ideas in the apostle’s mind are preserved. No fanciful completeness in Christ of a believer, while incomplete in himself, is either expressed or intended by St. Paul. It is too bad a doctrine to exist in the oracles of God.

The head of all principality.] See the notes on chap. i. 16, 17.

Verse 11. In whom also ye are circumcised.] All that was designed by circumcision, literally performed, is accomplished in them that believe through the Spirit and power of Christ. It is not a cutting off of a part of the flesh, but a putting off the body of the sins of the flesh, through the circumcision of Christ; He having undergone and performed this, and all the other rites, necessary to qualify him to be a mediator between God and man: for being made under the law, He was subject to all its ordinances; and every act of His, contributed to the salvation of men. But, by the circumcision of Christ, the operation of His grace and Spirit may be intended: the law required the circumcision of the flesh; the Gospel of Christ required the circumcision of the heart. The words τῶν ἀμαρτιῶν, of the sins, are omitted by ABCDE FG. several others, by the Coptic, Æthiopic; Armenians, Vulgate, and Itala; and by Clement, Athenianus, Basil, Cyrill, and several others. Griesbach has omitted them.

Verse 12. Buried with him in baptism] Alluding to the immersions practised in the case of adults, wherein the person appeared to be buried under the water, as Christ was buried in the heart of the earth. His rising again the third day, and their emerging from the water, was an emblem of the resurrection of the body; and, in them, of a total change of life.

The faith of the operation of God] They were quickened, changed, and saved, by means of faith in Christ Jesus; which faith was produced by the operation or energy of God. Believing, is the act of the soul; but the grace or power to believe, comes from God himself.

Verse 13. And you, being dead in your sins] See the notes on Eph. ii. 1, &c.

The uncircumcision of your flesh] This must refer to that part of the Colossian church which was made up of converted heathens; for the heathens alone were uncircumcised.

Verse 14. Blotting out the hand-writing of ordinances] By the hand-writing of ordinances, the apostle most evidently means the ceremonial law: this was against them, for they were bound to fulfil it; and it was contrary to them, as condemning them for their neglect and transgression of it. This law God himself has blotted out.

Blotting out the hand-writing, is probably an allusion to Numb. v. 23. where the curses written in the book, in the case of the woman suspected of adultery, are directed to be blotted out with the bitter waters. And there can be little doubt of a further allusion; viz. to the custom of discharging the writing from parchment, by the application of such a fluid as the muriatric acid, which immediately dissolves those ferruginous caloes which constitute the blackening principle of most inks. But the East India inks, being formed only of simple black, such as burnt ivory or cork, and gum water, may be wiped clean off from the surface of the paper or parchment, by the application of a wet sponge, and leave not one legible vestige remaining: this I have often proved.

Wiping it to his cross] When Christ was nailed to the cross, our obligation to fulfil these ordinances was done away. There may be another reference here to some ancient mode of annulling legal obligations, by naiking them to a post; but I do not recollect at present an instance or example. Antiquated laws are said to have been thus abrogated.

Verse 15. And having spoiled principalities and powers] Here is an allusion to the treatment of enemies when conquered: they are spoiled of their armour, so much the word αυτων implies; and they are exhibited with contumely and reproach to the populace; especially when the victor has the honour of a triumph: to the former of which there is an allusion in the words δουματιον η παροσια, making a public exhibition of them; and to the latter, in the words θραυλινας αυτων triumphing over them. And the principalities and powers refer to the emperors, kings, and generals, taken in battle, and reserved to grace the victor's triumph. It is very likely that, by the αρχαι και εφορια, principalities and powers, over whom Christ triumphed, the apostle means the μεγιστοι Nesioth, and μεγιστοι Roshoth, who were the rulers and chiefs in the sanhedrin and synagogues; and who had great authority among the people, both in making constitutions, and explaining traditions. The propagation of Christianity in Judea, quite destroyed their spiritual power and dominion; just as the propagation of Protestantism, which was Christianity revived, destroyed, wherever it appeared, the false doctrine and domination of the pope of Rome.

In it.] The words η αυτη, refer rather to Christ, than to the cross, if indeed they be genuine; of which there is much reason to doubt, as the Versions and Fathers differ so greatly in quoting them. Griesbach has left them out of the text.

Verse 16. Let no man—judge you, in meat, or in drink] The apostle speaks here in reference to some particulars of the hand-writing of ordinances, which had been taken away, viz. the distinction of meats and drinks, what was clean and what unclean, according to the law: and the necessity of observing certain holidays or festivals; such as the new moons, and particular sabbaths, or those which should be observed with more than ordinary solemnity: all these had been taken out of the way, and nailed to the cross, and were no longer of moral obligation. There is no intimation here that the Sabbath was done away, or that its moral use was superseded, by the introduction of Christianity. I have shown elsewhere, that remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy, is a command of perpetual obligation, and can never be superseded but by the final termination of time. As it is a type of that rest which remains for the people of God, of an eternity of bliss, it must continue in full force till that eternity arrives: for no type ever ceases till the antitype be come. Besides, it is not clear that the apostle refers at all to the Sabbath in this place, whether Jewish or Christian; his των σαββατων, of sabbaths, or weeks, most probably refers to their feasts of weeks; of which much has been said in the notes on the Pentateuch.

Verse 17. Which are a shadow] All these things were types; and must continue in force till the Christ, whom they represented, came: the apostle, therefore, says, that the body, the substance or design of them, was of Christ; pointed Him out, and the excellent blessings which He has procured. The word σκια, shadow, is often used to express any thing imperfect, or unsubstantial; while the term σωμα, body, was used in the opposite sense, and expressed any thing substantial, solid and firm. The law was but the shadow, or representation, of good things to come: none should rest in it; all that it pointed out is to be sought and obtained in Christ.

Verse 18. Let no man beguile you] Μηδεις υμας καταλαβουσιν. Let no man take the prize from you which the βραβευς, brabeus, or judge in the contests, has assigned you, in consequence of your having obtained the victory. This, any reader will see, is an allusion to the Olympic and Isthmian games, and to the prizes assigned to those who had obtained the victory in one or more of the contests which there took place. The Colossians had fought and conquered under the direction of Christ: and He, as the sole Judge in this contest, had assigned to them the prize: the false teachers, affecting great modesty, humility, and sanctity, endeavoured to turn them aside from the Gospel; and to induce them to end in the flesh who had begun in the Spirit. Against these the apostle warns them.

In a voluntary humility and worshipping of angels] This is a difficult passage; and, in order to explain it, I shall examine the meaning of some of the principal terms of the original:—The word θελησ, to will, signifies also to delight; and ταπεινοσ, signifies not only lowliness or humility of mind, but also affliction of mind; and ταπεινουσ τον ψυχην, Lev. xvi. 29, 31, and in many other places, signifies to afflict the soul by fasting, and self-abnegation; and θεουσια, signifies reverence and modesty. Hence the whole passage has been paraphrased thus:—Let no man spoil you of the prize adjudged to you, who delights in mortifying his body, and walking with the apparent modesty of an angel; affecting superior sanctity in order to gain disciples; intruding into things which he has not seen; and, notwithstanding his apparent humility, his mind is carnal, and he is puffed up with a sense of his superior knowledge and piety. It is very likely that the apostle here alludes to the Essenes, who were remarkably strict and devout; spent a principal part of their time in the contemplation of the Divine Being; abstained from all sensual gratification; and affected to live the life of angels upon earth. With their pretensions, all the apostle says here perfectly agrees; and on this one supposition, the whole of the passage is plain and easy. Many have understood the passage as referring to the adoration of angels, which seems to have been practised among the Jews, who appear (from Tobit xii. 15. Philo in lib. de Somn. Josephus, War, lib. ii. cap. 8. acc. 7.) to have considered them as a sort of mediators between God and man; and presenting the prayers of men before the throne, and being, as Philo says, Μεγαλὸν Βασιλεὺς: ὀφθαλμοὶ καὶ ὦτα, the eyes and ears of the Great King. But this interpretation is not so likely as the foregoing.

Verse 19. And not holding the Head] Not acknowledging Jesus Christ as the only Saviour of mankind; and the only head or chief of the Christian church; on whom every member of it depends, and from whom each derives both light and life. For a further explanation of these words, see the notes on Ephes. iv. 16. where the figures and phraseology are the same.

Verse 20. If ye be dead with Christ] See the notes on Rom. vi. 3, 5.

From the rudiments of the world] Ye have renounced all hope of salvation from the observance of Jewish rites and ceremonies, which were only rudiments, first elements, or the alphabet out of which the whole science of Christianity was composed. We have often seen, that the world, and this world, signify the Jewish dispensation; or the rites, ceremonies, and services performed under it.

Why, as though living in the world] Why, as if ye were still under the same dispensation from which you have been already freed, are ye subject to its ordinances, performing them as if expecting salvation from this performance?

Verse 21. Touch not; taste not; handle not] These are forms of expression very frequent among the Jews. In Maccoth, fol. 21. 1. "If they say to a Nazarite, Don't drink, don't drink; and he, notwithstanding, drinks, he is guilty.

Verse 22. Which all are to perish with the using] These are not matters of eternal moment; the different kinds of meats were made for the body, and go with it into corruption: in like manner, all the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish religion now perish, having accomplished the end of their institution; namely, to lead us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith.

After the commandments and doctrines of men?] These words should follow the 20th verse, of which they form a part: and it appears from them, that the apostle is here speaking of the traditions of the elders, and the load of cumbersome ceremonies which they added to the significant rites prescribed by Moses.

Verse 23. Which things have indeed a show of wisdom] All these prescriptions and rights have indeed the appearance of wisdom, and are recommended by plausible reasons; but they form a worship which God has not commanded; and enjoin macerations of the body, accompanied with a humiliation of spirit, that are neither profitable to the soul, nor of any advantage to the body: so that the whole of their religion is nothing worth.

What is here termed will-worship, θεσπιμας, signifies simply a mode of worship which a man chooses for himself, independently of the revelation which God has given. The whole system of Deism is an θεσπιμας, a worship founded in the will or caprices of man, and not in the wisdom or will of God: and it is just as profitable to body and soul, as that of which the apostle speaks. God will be served in his own way; it is right that He should prescribe to man the truths which he is to believe, and the ordinances which he is to use. To refuse to receive His teaching, in order to prefer our own fancies, is to light a farthing candle as a substitute for the noonday sun. From the beginning of the world, God has prescribed the worship which was best pleasing to Himself; and never left a matter of such moment to man. The nations which have either not had a revelation, or refused to receive that which God has given, show, by their diversity of worship, superstition, absurdity, and in many cases, cruelty; what the state of the whole would have been, had not God, in His infinite mercy, blessed it with a revelation of His will. God has given directions concerning His worship; and He has appointed the seventh day for the peculiar exercises of spiritual duties: other times, He has left to man's convenience; and they abuse the text who say, that the appointment of particular times and places for religious service is will-worship. God prescribes the thing; and leaves it to man, except in the case of the Sabbath, to appoint the time and the place; nor is it possible to be too frequent in God's worship; no more than to be too servent.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle exhorts the Colossians to heavenly-mindedness after the example of Christ, that they may be prepared to appear with Him in glory, 1—4. Exhorts them also to mortify their members; and calls to their remembrance their former state, 5—7. Shows how completely they were changed from that state, and gives them various directions relative to truth, compassion, meekness, long-suffering, forgiveness, and charity, 8—14. Shows that they are called to unity and holiness; and commands them to have the doctrine of Christ dwelling richly in them; and how they should teach and admonish each other, and do every thing in the name of the Lord Jesus, 15—17. The relative duties of wives, 18. Of husbands, 19. Of children, 20. Of fathers, 21. Of servants, 22. NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. If ye then] Ei ov, seeing then that ye are risen with Christ: this refers to what he had said, ver. 12. Buried with Him in baptism; wherein also ye are risen with Him. As, therefore, ye have most cordially received the doctrine of Christ, and profess to be partakers of a spiritual religion, that promises spiritual and eternal things; seek those things, and look to be prepared for the enjoyment of them.

Verse 2. Set your affection on things above] Ta avw spourw, love heavenly things; study them; let your hearts be entirely engrossed by them. Now, that ye are converted to God, act in reference to heavenly things, as ye did formerly in reference to those of earth; and vice versâ. This is a very good general rule: "Be as much in earnest for heavenly and eternal things, as ye formerly were for those that were earthly and perishing."

Verse 3. For ye are dead] To all hopes of happiness from the present world; and, according to your profession, should feel no more appetite for the things of this life, than he does whose soul is departed into the invisible state.

Your life is hid with Christ in God] Christ is your treasure; and where your treasure is, there is your heart. Christ lives in the bosom of the Father; as your heart is in Him, ye also sit in heavenly places with Christ Jesus. Christ is the life of your souls; and, as He is hidden in the bosom of the Father, so are ye, who live through and in Him.

Verse 4. When Christ, who is our life] When Christ comes to judge the world, ye shall appear with Him in His glory; and in an eternal state of blessedness.

Verse 5. Mortify, therefore, your members] νηρωσων, put them to death: the verb is used metaphorically, to signify to deprive a thing of its power; to destroy its strength. Use no member of your body to sin against God; keep all under dominion; and never permit the beast to run away with the man. To gratify any sensual appetite, is to give it the very food and nourishment by which it lives, thrives, and is active. However the body may suffer by excessive sensual indulgences; the appetite increases with the indulgence. Deny yourselves, and let reason rule: and the animal will not get the ascendancy over the rational man. See the notes on Rom. vi. 11, &c.

Inordinate affection] Παθος, unnatural and degrading passion, bestial lusts. See Rom. i, 26, 27, and the notes there.

Evil concupiscence] Επιθυμια κακη. As επιθυμια signifies strong and vehement desire of any kind; it is here joined with κακη, evil, to show the sense more particularly, in which the apostle uses it.

Covetousness, which is idolatry] For the covetous man makes his money his god. Now, it is the prerogative of God to confer happiness ; every godly man seeks his happiness in God : the covetous man seeks that in his money which God alone can give ; therefore, his covetousness is properly idolatry. It is true his idol is of gold and silver ; but his idolatry is not the less criminal on that account.

Verse 6. The wrath of God cometh] God is angry with such persons ; and He inflicts on them the punishment which they deserve.

Verse 7. In the which ye also walked sometime] When ye were in your unconverted state, ye served divers lusts and pleasures.—See on Rom. vii. 5. and Eph. ii. 2.

Verse 8. But now ye also put off all these] See on Eph. iv. 22. Being now converted, sin had no more dominion over them.

Anger, wrath, &c.] They had not only lived in the evils mentioned ver. 5. but also in those enumerated here ; and they had not only laid aside the former, but they had laid aside the latter also. They retained no bosom, no easily besetting sin. They were risen with Christ ; and they sought the things which were above.

Blasphemy] The word seems here to mean, injurious and calumnious speaking.

Verse 9. Lie not one to another] Do not deceive each other : speak the truth in all your dealings ; do not say, " My goods are so and so," when you know them to be otherwise. Do not undervalue the goods of your neighbour, when your conscience tells you that you are not speaking the truth. It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer ; but afterward he boasteth ; i. e. he underrates his neighbour's property till he gets him persuaded to part with it for less than its worth ; and, when he has thus got it, he boasts what a good bargain he has made. Such a knave speaks not truth with his neighbour.

Ye have put off the old man] See the notes on Rom. vi. 6. and particularly on Rom. xiii. 11—14. Ye have received a religion widely different from that ye had before ; act according to its principles.

Verse 10. And have put on the new man.] See on Rom. xii. 1, 2.

Is renewed in knowledge] IGNORANCE was the grand characteristic of the heathen state ; KNOWLEDGE of the Christian. The utmost to which heathenism could pretend, was a certain knowledge of nature. anity reveals God himself the author of nature ; or, rather, God has revealed himself in the Christian system with which He has blessed mankind. Christianity teaches a man the true knowledge, both of himself and of God : but it is impossible to know one's-self but in the light of God : the famous γινῶσι σαυτοῦ, know thyself, was practicable only under the Christian religion.

After the image of him that created him] We have already seen that God made man in His own image ; and we have seen in what that image consisted.—See the notes on Gen. i. 26.—See also on Ephes. iv. 23, 24. Does not the apostle refer here to the case of an artist who wishes to make a perfect resemblance of some exquisite form or person? God, in this case, is the artist ; man is the copy ; and God himself the original, from which this copy is to be taken. Thus, then, man is made by his Creator, not according to the image or likeness of any other being, but according to His own : the image τῆς Κτίσεως, of the Creator. And, as the Divine Nature cannot exist in forms or fashions, moral qualities alone, are those which must be produced. Hence the apostle, interpreting the words of Moses, says, that the image in which man was made, and in which he must be re-made, ἀνακαινισθῆναι, made anew, consists in knowledge, righteousness, and true holiness.

Verse 11. Where there is neither Greek nor Jew] In which new creation no inquiry is made what nation the persons belonged to ; or from what ancestry sprung ; whether in Judea or Greece :—

Circumcision nor uncircumcision] Nor is their peculiar form of religion of any consideration, whether circumcised like the Jews, or uncircumcised like the Heathens :—

Barbarian, Scythian] Nor whether of the more or less tractable of the nations of the world : for, although knowledge, and the most refined and sublime knowledge, is the object to be attained ; yet, under the teaching and influence of the blessed Spirit, the most dull and least informed are perfectly capable of comprehending this Divine science ; and becoming wise unto salvation :—

Bond nor free] Nor does the particular state or circumstances in which a man may be found, either help him to, or exclude him from, the benefit of this religion ; the slave having as good a title to salvation by grace, as the freeman :—

But Christ is all, and in all] All mankind are His creatures; all conditions are disposed and regulated by His Providence; and all human beings are equally purchased by His blood. He, alone, is the source whence all have proceeded; and to him, alone, all must return. He is the Maker, Preserver, Saviour, and Judge, of all men.

Verse 12. Put on—as the elect of God] As the principal design of the apostle was to show that God had chosen the Gentiles, and called them to the same privileges as the Jews, and He intended to make them as truly His people as the Jews ever were, he calls them the elect or chosen of God: and as the Jews, who, were formerly the elect, were still beloved, and called to be holy; so he calls the Colossians beloved; and shows them that they are called with the same holy calling.

Bowels of mercies, &c.] Be merciful, not in act merely, but in spirit and affection. In all cases of this kind, let your heart dictate to your hand; be clothed with bowels of mercy; let your tenderest feelings come in contact with the miseries of the distressed, as soon as ever they present themselves. Though I know that to put on, or to be clothed with, are figurative expressions, and mean to assume such and such characters and qualities; yet there may be a higher meaning here. The apostle would have them to feel the slightest touch of another's misery; and, as their clothes are put over their body, so their tenderest feeling should be always within the reach of the miserable. Let your feelings be at hand; and feel and commiserate as soon as touched.—See on Ephes. iv. 2. Instead of οὐκτιμωσ, mercies, in the plural, almost every MS. of importance, with many of the Fathers, read οὐκτιμω, bowels of mercy, in the singular. This various reading makes scarcely any alteration in the sense.

Verse 13. Forbearing one another] Avoid all occasions of irritating or provoking each other.

Forgiving one another] If ye receive offence, be instantly ready to forgive, on the first acknowledgment of the fault.

Even as Christ forgave you] Who required no satisfaction, and sought for nothing in you but the broken contrite heart; and freely forgave you, as soon as you returned to Him. No man should for a moment harbour ill-will in his heart to any; but the offended party is not called actually to forgive, till the offender, with sorrow, acknowledges his fault. He should be a ^f quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also de ye.

14 ^g And above all these things ^h put on charity, which is the ⁱ bond of perfectness.

15 And let ^k the peace of God rule in your hearts, ^l to the which also ye are called ^m in one body; ⁿ and be ye thankful.

ready to forgive; and while he is so, he can neither feel hatred nor malice towards the offender: but, as Christ does not forgive us, till, with penitent hearts, we return unto Him, acknowledging our offences; so those who have trespassed against their neighbour are not to expect any act of forgiveness from the person they have injured, till they acknowledge their offence. Forgive, says the apostle; καταρα και ο Χριστος, even as Christ forgave you: show the same disposition, and the same readiness to forgive your offending brethren, as Christ showed towards you.

Verse 14. And above all these things] Exi: naci de τωραυς, upon all, over all; as the outer garment envelops all the clothing; so let charity or love invest and encompass all the rest. Even bowels of mercy are to be set in motion by love; from love they derive all their feeling, and all their power and promptitude to action. Let this, therefore, be as the upper garment; the surtout that invests the whole man.

Which is the bond of perfectness.] Love to God and man is not only to cover all, but also to unite and consolidate the whole. It is therefore represented here under the notion of a girdle, by which all the rest of the clothing is bound close about the body. To love God with all the heart, soul, mind, and strength, and one's neighbour as one's-self, is the perfection which the New Covenant requires, and which the grace and Spirit of Christ work in every sincerely obedient, humble believer: and that very love which is the fulfilling of the law, and the perfection itself which the Gospel requires, is also the bond of that perfection. It is by love to God and man, that love is to be preserved. Love begets love; and the more a man loves God and his neighbour, the more he is enabled to do so. Love, while properly exercised, is ever increasing and re-producing itself.

Instead of καταραυς, perfection, several reputable MSS. with the Itala, read ομοτιμω, unity; but the former is doubtless the genuine reading.

Verse 15. And let the peace of God rule] Instead of Θεω, God, Χριστω, Christ, is the reading of ABC*D*FG. several others; both the Syriac, the Arabic of Erpen, Coptic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala, with several of the Fathers: on this evidence, Griesbach has inserted it in the text.

hearts, as the brabeus, or judge, does in the Olympic contests. No heart is right with God, where the peace of Christ does not rule; and the continual prevalence of the peace of Christ is the decisive proof that the heart is right with God. When a man loses his peace, it is an awful proof that he has lost something else; that he has given way to evil, and grieved the Spirit of God. While peace rules, all is safe.

In one body] Ye cannot have peace with God, in yourselves, nor among each other, unless ye continue in unity; and, as one body, continue in connexion and dependence on Him who is your only head: to this ye are called, it is a glorious state of salvation, and ye should be for ever thankful that ye are thus privileged.

Verse 16. Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly] I believe the apostle means that the Colossians should be well instructed in the doctrine of Christ; that it should be their constant duty; that it should be frequently preached, explained, and enforced among them; and that all the wisdom comprised in it should be well understood. Thus the doctrine of God will dwell richly, that is, abundantly, among them. But there appears to be here an allusion to the Shechinah, or symbol of the Divine presence, which dwell in the tabernacle, and first temple; and to an opinion common among the Jews, which is thus expressed in Melchita, fol. 38. 4. In whatever place the LAW is, there the SHECHINAH is present with it. Nor is this a vain supposition; wherever God's word is seriously read, heard, or preached, there is God himself. And in that church or religious society where the truth of God is proclaimed and conscientiously believed, there is the constant dwelling of God. Through bad pointing, this verse is not very intelligible; the several members of it should be distinguished thus: Let the doctrine of Christ dwell richly among you; teaching and admonishing each other in all wisdom; singing, with grace in your hearts unto the Lord, in psalms, hymns, and spiritual songs. This arrangement the original will not only bear; but it absolutely requires it, and is not sense without it.—See the note on Ephes. v. 19.

The singing which is here recommended, is widely different from what is commonly used in most Christian congregations; a congeries of unmeaning sounds, associated to bundles of nonsensical, and often ridiculous repetitions, which at once both deprave and disgrace the church of Christ. Melody, which is allowed to be the most proper for devotional music, is now sacrificed to an exuberant harmony, which requires not only many different kinds of voices, but different musical instruments, to support it. And by these preposterous means, the simplicity of the Christian worship is destroyed; and all edification totally prevented. And this kind of singing is amply proved to be very injurious to the personal piety of those employed in it: even of those who enter with a considerable share of humility and Christian meekness, how few continue to sing with grace in their hearts unto the Lord?

Verse 17. Whatsoever ye do in word or deed] Let your words be right and your actions upright.

Do all in the name of the Lord Jesus] Begin with Him, and end with Him; invoke His name; and pray for His direction and support in all that ye do; and thus every work will be crowned with all requisite success. Doing every thing in the name of God, and referring every thing to His glory, is as rational as it is pious. Could it be ever supposed that any person would begin a bad work in God's name?—However, it is so. No people in the universe more strictly adhere to the letter of this advice, than the Mohammedans; for they never undertake a work, eat meat, nor write a book, without prefacing all with—

Bismillahi, Arrahmani, Arraheemi:

“In the name of the most merciful and compassionate God.”

Not only books of devotion, but books on all arts and sciences; books of tales and romances; books of poetry, and those on the elements of reading, &c. begin thus. Nay, it is prefixed to the QUR'AN. Lizit un Nissa, one of the most abominable productions that ever came from the pen of man; and is precisely the same among the Mohammedans, as the infamous work of Nicholas Chorier, called Elegantia Latini Sermonis, falsely attributed to John Meursius, has been among some called Christians. Of both, with a trifling hyperbole, it may be said, “Surely these books were written in hell: and the author of them must certainly be the devil.”

Giving thanks to God] Even praises, as well as prayers, must ascend to God through this Mediator. We have no authority to say that God will accept even our thanksgiving, unless it ascend to Him through Christ Jesus.

Verse 18. Wives submit yourselves] Having done with general directions, the apostle comes to particular duties which are commonly called relative; because they only belong to persons in certain situations; and are not incumbent on all. No woman has the duty of a wife to perform, but she who is one; and no man has the duty of a husband to perform, but he who is married.

The directions here to wives, husbands, children, parents, servants, and masters, are so exactly the same in substance with those in Ephes. v. 22—33. and vi. 1—9. that there is no need to repeat what has been said on those passages; and to the notes there, the reader is requested to refer.

As it is fit in the Lord] God commands it; and it is both proper and decent.

Verse 19. Be not bitter against them] Whenever bitterness is, there love is wanting. And where love is wanting in the married life, there is hell upon earth.

are servants or slaves. Be not discouraged, ye have an inheritance in store; be faithful unto God and to your employers, and Christ will give you a heavenly inheritance.

Verse 25. But he that doeth wrong] It is possible for an unfaithful servant to wrong and defraud his master in a great variety of ways, without being detected: but let all such remember what is here said—He that doeth wrong, shall receive for the wrong which he has done; God sees him, and will punish him for his breach of trust and his dishonesty. Wasting or not taking proper care of the goods of your master, is such a wrong as God will resent. He that is unfaithful in that which is little, will be unfaithful in much, if he have opportunity; and God alone is the defence against an unfaithful servant.

There is no respect] God neither esteems nor despises any man because of his outward condition and circumstances; for there is no respect of persons with Him. Every man is, in the eye of God, what he is in his soul: if holy, loved; if wicked, despised and rejected.

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. Masters, give unto your servants] This verse should have been added to the preceding, to which it properly belongs: and this chapter should have begun with ver. 2.

That which is just and equal] As it is bondmen or slaves, of whom the apostle speaks, we may at once see with what propriety this exhortation is given. The condition of slaves among the Greeks and Romans, was wretched in the extreme: they could appeal to no law; and they could neither expect justice nor equity. The apostle, therefore, informs those proprietors of these slaves, that they should act towards them both according to justice and equity; for God, their Master, required this of them; and would at last call them to account for their conduct in this respect. Justice and equity required that they should have proper food, proper raiment, due rest, and no more than moderate work. This is a lesson that all masters throughout the universe should carefully learn. Do not treat your servants as if God had made them of an inferior blood to yours.

Verse 2. Continue in prayer! This was the apostle's general advice to all; without this, neither wives, husbands, children, parents, servants, nor masters, could fulfil the duties which God, in their respective stations, required of them.

All light, power, and life, come from God; his creatures are continually dependent upon Him for all these: to earnest, persevering prayer, He has promised every supply; but he who prays not, has no promise. How few wives feel it their duty to pray to God to give them grace to behave as wives! How few husbands pray for the grace suited to their situation, that they may be able to fulfil their duties! The like may be said of children, parents, servants, and masters. As every situation in life has its peculiar duties, trials, &c. so, to every situation, there is peculiar grace appointed. No man can fulfil the duties of any station, without the grace suited to that station. The grace suited to him, as a member of society in general, will not be sufficient for him as a husband, father, or master. Many proper marriages become unhappy in the end, because the parties have not earnestly besought God for that grace necessary for them as husbands and wives. This is the origin of family broils in general; and a proper attention to the apostle's advice, would prevent them all.

Watch in the same] Be always on your guard; and when you have got the requisite grace by praying, take care of it, and bring it into its proper action by watchfulness; by which you will know when, and where, and how, to apply it.

With thanksgiving] Being always grateful to God, who has called you into such a state of salvation; and affords you such abundant means and opportunities to glorify Him.

Verse 3. Praying also for us] Let the success and spread of the Gospel be ever dear to you; and neglect not to pray fervently to God that it may have free course, run, and be glorified.

A door of utterance] Θύρα του λόγου. The word θυρα, which commonly signifies a door, or such like entrance into a house, or passage through a wall, is often used metaphorically for an entrance to any business, occasion or opportunity to commence or perform any particular work. So in Acts xiv. 27. the door of faith is opened to the Gentiles, i. e. there is now an opportunity of preaching the Gospel to the nations of the earth. 1 Cor. xvi. 9. A great and effectual door is opened unto me; i. e. I have now a glorious opportunity of preaching the truth to the people of Ephesus. 2 Cor. ii. 12. When I came to Troas, a door was opened unto me; I had a fine opportunity of preaching Christ crucified at that place. So here the θυρα του λόγου, which we translate door of utterance, signifies an occasion, opportunity, or entrance, for the doctrine of the Gospel. The same metaphor is used by the best Latin writers. Cicero, xiii. Ep. 10. Amicitia fores aperiantur—the doors of friendship are opened; there is now an opportunity of reconciliation. And, Ovid Amor. lib. iii. Æleg. xii. ver. 12.

JANUA per nostras est adaperita manus.
“The gate is opened by our hands.”

Of this use of the word among the Greek writers, Schleusner gives several examples. See also Rev. iii. 8. where the word is used in the same sense. To multiply examples, would be needless; the apostle excites them to pray, not that a door of utterance, i. e. a readiness and fluency of speech may be given to him and his fellow-labourers, but that they may have an opportunity of preaching the doctrine of Christ; and so the term λογος is to be understood here, as well as in many other places of the New Testament; in most of which we have either lost or obscured its meaning by translating it word, instead of doctrine.

The mystery of Christ] The Gospel, which had been hidden from all former times, and which revealed that purpose long hidden in the Divine councils, that the Gentiles should be called to enjoy the same privileges with the Jews. For which I am also in bonds] He was suffering under Jewish malice; and for preaching this very mystery; for they could not bear to hear announced, as from heaven, that the Gentiles, whom they considered eternally shut out from any participation of the Divine favour, should be made fellow-heirs with them of the grace of life; much less could they bear to hear that they were about to be reprobated, and the Gentiles elected in their place. It was for asserting these things that they persecuted Paul at Jerusalem; so that to save his life, he was obliged to appeal to Cæsar; and, being taken to Rome, he was detained a prisoner, till his case was fully heard; and he was a prisoner at Rome on this very account, when he wrote this Epistle to the Colossians.—See the note on chap. i. 24.

Verse 4. That I may make it manifest] It was a mystery, and he wished to make it manifest; to lay it open, and make all men see it.

prudently in reference to them who are without; who yet continue unbelieving Gentiles, or persecuting Jews.

The church of Christ was considered an enclosure, a field, or vineyard, well hedged or walled. Those who were not members of it, were considered without; i. e. not under that especial protection and defence which the true followers of Christ had. This has been since called, "The Pale of the Church;" from palaus, a stake; or, as Dr. Johnson defines it, "A narrow piece of wood, joined above and below to a rail, to enclose grounds." As, to be a Christian, was essential to the salvation of the soul; so, to be in the church of Christ, was essential to the being a Christian: therefore it was concluded that "there was no salvation out of the pale of the church." Now this is true in all places where the doctrines of Christianity are preached; but when one description of people, professing Christianity, with their own peculiar mode of worship and creed, arrogate to themselves, exclusive of all others, the title of THE Church; and then, on the ground of a maxim which is true in itself, but falsely understood and applied by them, assert that, as they are THE church, and there is no church besides, then you must be one of them; believe as they believe, and worship as they worship, or you will be infallibly damned: I say, when this is asserted, every man, who feels he has an immortal spirit, is called on to examine the pretensions of such spiritual monopolists. Now, as the church of Christ is formed on the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ being the chief corner-stone, the doctrines of this Christian church must be sought for in the Sacred Scriptures. As to fathers, councils, and human authorities of all kinds, they are, in this question, lighter than vanity; the Book of God alone must decide. The church which has been so hasty to condemn all others, and, by its own soi disant, or self-constituted authority, to make itself the determiner of the fates of men, dealing out the mansions of glory to its partisans, and the abodes of endless misery to all those who are out of its antichristian and inhuman pale; this church, I say, has been brought to this standard, and proved, by the Scriptures, to be fallen from the faith of God's elect, and to be most awfully and dangerously corrupt; and that, to be within its pale, of all others professing Christianity, would be the most likely means of endangering the final salvation of the soul. Yet, even in it, many sincere and upright persons may be found, who, in spirit and practice, belong to the true church of Christ. Such persons are to be found in all religious persuasions, and in all sorts of Christian societies.

[Redeeming the time.] See on Ephes. v. 15.

Verse 6. Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt] Let it be such as has a tendency to oppose and preserve from the corruption of sin. The rabbins say, "He who, in prayer, omits any word, should begin again at the beginning; for he who does not, is like boiled pottage, in which there is no salt."—Beracoth, fol. 34. 1. Let all your conversation be such as may tend to exemplify and recommend Christianity: let it not only be holy, but wise, gracious, and intelligent. A harsh method of proposing or defending the doctrines of Christianity only serves to repel men from those doctrines, and from the way of salvation. Salt, from its use in preserving food from corruption, and rendering it both savoury and wholesome, has always been made the emblem of wisdom. The word has been also used to express, in composition or conversation, what is terse, comprehensive, useful, elegant, and impressive. The term Allie salt has been used to express some of the principal beauties of the Greek tongue: of such beauties, the Gospel of Christ has an endless store.—See on Matt. v. 13. and Mark ix. 50.

[How ye ought to answer every man.] That your discourse may be so judiciously managed, that ye may discern how to treat the prejudices, and meet the objections, both of Jews and Gentiles.

Verse 7. All my state shall Tychicus] See the note on Eph. vi. 21. Tychicus well knew the apostle's zeal and perseverance in preaching the Gospel; his sufferings on that account; his success in converting both Jews and Gentiles; and the converts which were made in Cæsar's household; he could give these to the Colossians in ample detail; and some of them, it would not have been prudent to commit to writing.

Verse 8. That he may know your estate] Instead of να γινε τα περι υμων, that HE may know your affairs, ABD*FG, many others, with the Aethiopic, Itala, Theodoret, and Damascus, read να γνωριε τα περι υμων, that YE may know our affairs: which is probably the true reading. Tychicus was sent to them, not to know their affairs, but, with Onesimus, to carry this epistle, and make the apostle's state known to them; and comfort their hearts by the good news which he brought. The next verse confirms this meaning.

Verse 9. With Onesimus—who is one of you.] Onesimus was a native of some part of Phrygia, if not of Colosse itself: and being lately converted to the Christian faith, by the instrumentality of These brethren could give an account of the transactions at Rome, relative to the apostle and Christianity, which it might not be prudent for him to commit to writing. See on ver. 7. The reign of Nero was not only cruel, but suspicious, jealous, and dangerous.

Verse 10. Aristarchus, my fellow-prisoner] Concerning Aristarchus, see Acts xix. 29. xx. 4. and xxvii. 2. and see the note on this latter place. Aristarchus and Epaphras are mentioned as saluters in this epistle; and in that to Philemon, written at the same time: but here, he is said to be a prisoner, and Epaphras not. In that to Philemon, Epaphras is called a prisoner, and Aristarchus not. One of them is wrong, though it is uncertain which, unless both were prisoners.—See Wall's Crit. Notes. As Aristarchus had been a zealous and affectionate aherent to St. Paul, and followed him in all his journeys, ministering to him in prison, and assisting him in preaching the Gospel in Rome, he might have been imprisoned on this account. We need not suppose that both he and Epaphras were imprisoned at the same time: about the same time they might be imprisoned, but it might be so ordered by the providence of God, that when Aristarchus was imprisoned, Epaphras was at liberty; and while Epaphras was in prison, Aris'archus was at liberty. This is a very possible, and easily to be conceived case.

Mark] See the account of this person, Acts xv. 39. Though there had been some difference between the apostle and this Mark; yet, from this, and 2 Tim. iv. 11. we find they were fully reconciled, and that Mark was very useful to St. Paul, in the work of the ministry.

Touching whom ye received commandments] What these were we cannot tell; it was some private communication which had been previously sent to the Colossian church.

Verse 11. Jesus, which is called Justus] Jesus, Joshua, or Jehoshua, was his name among his countrymen the Jews: Justus was the name which he bore among the Greeks and Romans.

12 * Epaphras, who is one of you, a servant of Christ, saluteth you, always ^d labouring ^e fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand ^f perfect and ^g complete in all the will of God.

13 For I bear him record, that he hath a great zeal for you, and them that are in Laodicea, and them in Hierapolis.

d Or, striving. — e Rom. 15. 30. — f Mat. 5. 48. 1 Cor. 2. 6. & 14. 20. Phil. 3. 13. Heb. 5. 14. — g Or, filled.

These only] That is, only Aristarchus, Marcus, and Jesus Justus, who were formerly Jews or proselytes; οι οντις εις περιετμισμας, for they were of the circumcision, and assisted the apostle in preaching the Gospel. There were others who did preach Christianity; but they did it from envy and strife, in order to add affliction to the apostle's bonds. It is evident, therefore, that St. Peter was not now at Rome; else he certainly would have been mentioned in this list; for we cannot suppose that he was in the list of those who preached Christ in an exceptionable way, and from impure and unholy motives: indeed, there is no evidence that St. Peter ever saw Rome. And as it cannot be proved that he ever was bishop or pope of that city, the key-stone of the triumphal arch of the pope of Rome is pulled out: this building, therefore, of his supremacy, cannot stand.

Verse 12. Epaphras, who is one of you] A native of some part of Phrygia; and probably of Colosse itself.

A servant of Christ] A minister of the Gospel.

Labouring fervently for you] Αγωνιζομενος, agonizing; very properly expressed by our translators, labouring fervently.

That ye may stand perfect and complete] Ινα εστητε τελειοι και καταλαβημενοι; that ye may stand firm, perfectly instructed, and fully persuaded, of the truth of those doctrines which have been taught you as the revealed will of God: this I believe to be the meaning of the apostle.

Instead of καταλαβημενοι, complete, or filled up; almost all the MSS. of the Alexandrian Rescension, which are considered the most authentic and correct, have πεπληρωμενοι, that ye may be fully persuaded. The word πληρωμενος signifies such a complete persuasion of the certainty of a thing, as leaves the mind, which has it, neither room nor inclination to doubt; and πληρωθησθε, the verb, has the same meaning, viz. to be thus persuaded, or to persuade thus by demonstrative argumentation, and exhibition of unquestionable facts.

This is such a persuasion as the Spirit of God, by means of the Gospel, gives to every sincere and faithful man; and from which arises the solid happiness of the genuine Christian. They who argue against it, prove, at least, that they have not got it.

Verse 13. He hath a great zeal for you] Instead of ζηλον εκειν, much zeal. ABCD^{ms}, several others, with Versions and Fathers, read

THESE notes, much labour; they are here nearly of the same meaning, though the latter appears to be the better, and genuine reading.

Laodicea—and Hierapolis.] These were both cities of Phrygia, between which Colosse, or the city of Colasæ, was situated: see on chap. ii. 1. The latter was called Hierapolis, or the holy city, from the multitude of its temples. Apollo, Diana, Esculapius, and Hygeia, were all worshipped here, as appears by the coins of this city, still extant.

Verse 14. Luke, the beloved physician] This is generally supposed to be the same with Luke the evangelist.—See the preface to the notes on this Gospel. Some, however, suppose them to be different persons; because, where it is evident that Luke the evangelist is meant, he never has more than his simple name Luke; and because the apostle is supposed to intend a different person here, he adds, εταρος ο αγαπητος, the beloved physician. The word εταρος signifies a healer, and must not be restricted to physician, in the sense in which we use that word: he was surgeon, physician, and dispenser of medicines, &c. for all these were frequently combined in the same person.

Verse 15. Salute—Nymphas, and the church—in his house.] This person, and his whole family, which probably was very numerous, appear to have received the Gospel: and it seems that, for their benefit and that of his neighbours, he had opened his house for the worship of God. In those primitive times, there were no consecrated places; for it was supposed that the simple setting apart of any place for the worship of God, was a sufficient consecration.—See of those domestic churches, Rom. xvi. 5. 1 Cor. xvi. 19.

Verse 16. Cause that it be read also in the church of the Laodiceans] That is, let a copy be taken and sent to them, that it may be read there also. This appears to have been a regular custom in the apostolic church.

That ye likewise read the epistle from Laodicea.] Some suppose that this was an epistle sent from Laodicea to the apostle, which he now sent by Aristarchus to the Colossians, that they might peruse it; that thereby they might see the propriety of sending a copy of his epistle to them, to the Laodicean church. Many eminent critics are of this opinion, which appears to me to be both forced and far-fetched. Others think that the Epistle to the Ephesians is the epistle in question; and that it was originally directed to them, and not to the Ephesians.—See the notes on Ephes. i. 1, &c. But others, equally learned, think that there was an epistle, different from that to the Ephesians, sent by St. Paul to the Laodiceans, which is now lost. There was an epistle under this direction, in the times of Theodoret and Jerom, for both of them mention it; but the latter mentions it as apocryphal, Legunt quidam et ad Laodicenses Epistolam, sed ab omnibus exploditur: "Some read an epistle to the Laodiceans, but it is exploded by all." The seventh Ecumenic council, held in 787, states, that the ancients allowed that there was an epistle with this direction, but that all the orthodox rejected it as supposititious.

An epistle, ad Laodicenses, is still extant in the Latin language; a very ancient copy of which is in the library Sancti Albini Andegavensis St. Alban's of Anjou. Hutter has translated it into Greek; but his translation is of no authority. Calmet has published this epistle, with various readings from the above MS. I shall subjoin it at the end of this epistle; and give my opinion relative to its use and authenticity.

Verse 17. Say to Archippus] Who this person was we cannot tell; there have been various conjectures concerning him; some think he was bishop, or overseer, of the church at Colosse, in the absence of Epaphras. Whatever he was, it has been supposed that he had been remiss in discharging the duties of his office; and hence this direction of the apostle, which appears here in the light of a reprehension. But if the same person be meant, as in the Epistle to Philemon, ver. 2. whom St. Paul calls his fellow-labourer, and fellow-soldier, it cannot be supposed that any reproof is here intended: for, as the Epistle to the Colossians, and that to Philemon, were evidently written about the end of the year 62, Archippus could not be a fellow-labourer and fellow-soldier of the apostle at Rome, and yet a delinquent at Colosse at the same time. It is more likely, therefore, that the words of the apostle convey no censure, but are rather intended to stir him up to further diligence, and to encourage him in the work, seeing he had so much false doctrine, and so many false teachers to contend with.

Verse 18. The salutation by the hand of me Paul.] The preceding part of the epistle was written by a scribe, from the mouth of the apostle: this, and what follows, was written by the hand of St. Paul himself. A similar dis-

tion which we find 1 Cor. xvi. 21. and in 2 Thess. iii. 17. and this, it seems, was the means by which the apostle authenticated every epistle which he sent to the different churches. The signature of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle, so I write.

Remember my bonds] See what proof ye have of the truth of the Gospel; I am in bonds on this account; I suffer patiently; yea, exult in the Lord Jesus, so perfectly am I upheld by the grace of the Gospel. Remember my bonds, and take courage! How eloquent were these concluding words. That such a man should be in bonds for the Gospel, was the fullest proof of the truth of the Gospel: a cunningly devised fable could not have imposed on Saul of Tarsus; he was fully satisfied of the truth of the doctrines of Christianity; he proclaimed them as truths from heaven; and for their sake cheerfully suffered the loss of all things. The bonds of such a man are a plenary proof of the truth of the doctrines for which he was bound.

Grace be with you] May you still possess the favour and blessing of our Lord Jesus Christ: the apostle ends as he began this epistle. Without the grace of Christ they could not have become a church; without this grace, they could not continue to be one.

Amen.] This is omitted by the most ancient and correct MSS.

The subscriptions, as usual, are various and uncertain:—

The common GREEK Text, has, To the Colossians, written from Rome by Tychicus and Onesimus.

To the Colossians. ETHIOPIC.

In the Vulgate there is no subscription.

ARABIC.

Written from Athens, by Tychicus and Onesimus, and Mark, his disciples. COPTIC.

The MSS. are not less various than the Versions:

To the Colossians—That to the Colossians is completed; that to the Philippians begins.—That to the Colossians is finished; the First Epistle to the Thessalonians begins.—To the Colossians, from Rome.—Written to the Colossians from Rome.—Written from Rome by Tychicus, and Timotheus, and Onesimus.—Written by Paul and Timothy; and sent by Tychicus and Onesimus.

That the epistle was written from Rome, there is little cause to doubt: that Timothy might be the scribe is very probable, because it appears he was at Rome with the apostle in the same year in which this epistle was written.—See Philip. ii. 19. And that it was sent by Tychicus and Onesimus, seems evident, from the 8th and 9th verses of this chapter.

The common subscription has the consent of the greater number of the most recent, and comparatively recent MSS. but this is not, in general, a proof of authenticity.

In the note on ver. 16. I promised to subjoin what is called the Epistle to the Laodiceans; I give it here from the best copies; and add a literal translation, that the curious, whether learned or unlearned, may have what some have believed to be authentic, and what has doubtless existed, in one form or other, from a very remote antiquity.

EPISTOLA PAULI, APOSTOLI, AD LAODICEENSES.

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE TO THE LAODICEANS.

1. Paulus, Apostolus, non ab hominibus, neque per hominem, sed per Jesum Christum. Fratribus qui estis (sunt) Laodiceæ:
2. Gratia vobis et pax à Deo Patre nostro; et Domini nostri Jesu Christo.
3. Gratias ago Christo per omnem orationem meam, quod perseverantes estis, et perseverantia in operibus bonis, promissionem expectantes in die judicii.
4. Neque d'sturbent (deficiunt) vos quorumdam in vaniloquiis insimulantium veritatem, (sacramentum) ut vos advertant à veritate evangelii quod à me predicatur.
5. Et nunc faciet Deus ut qui sunt ex me ad perfectionem veritatis evangelii sint deservientes, et benignitatem operum facientes quæ sunt salutis vitæ æternæ.
6. Et nunc prælam sunt vincula mea quæ patior in Christo; in quibus lætor et gaudeo.
7. Et hoc mihi est ad salutem perpetuam, quod (ipsum) factum est in orationibus vestris, et administrante Spiritu Sancto, sive per vitam, sive per mortem.

1. Paul an apostle, not from men; nor by man, but by Jesus Christ, to the brethren which are in Laodicea.
2. Grace be to you, and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ.
3. I give thanks to Christ in all my prayers, that ye continue and persevere in good works; waiting for the promise in the day of judgment.
4. Be not troubled with the vain speeches of certain who pretend to the truth, that they may draw away your hearts from the truth of the Gospel which was preached by me.
5. And may God grant that those who are of me, may be led forward to the perfection of the truth of the Gospel, and perform the benignity of works which become the salvation of eternal life.
6. And now my bonds are manifest, which I suffer in Christ; and in them I rejoice and am glad.
7. And this shall turn to my perpetual salvation, by means of your prayers, and the assistance of the Holy Spirit, whether they be for life or for death.

8. Est enim mihi vivere vita in Christo, et mori gaudium (et lucrum.) 8. For my life is to live in Christ; and to die will be joyous.
9. Et ipse Dominus noster in vobis faciet misericordiam suam, ut eandem dilectionem habeatis; et sitis unanimes. 9. And may our Lord himself grant you his mercy; that ye may have the same love, and be of one mind.
10. ¶ Ergo, dilectissimi, ut audistis præsentiam Domini, ita sentite (retinete) et facite in timore (Domini); et erit vobis vita in æternum: 10. Therefore, my beloved, as ye have heard of the coming of the Lord, so think and act in the fear of the Lord, and it shall be to you eternal life.
11. Est enim Dominus qui operatur in vobis: 11. For it is the Lord that worketh in you.
12. Et facite, sine peccato quæcunque facitis, (sine reatu) et quod est optimum. 12. Whatsoever you do, do it without sin, and do what is best.
13. Dilectissimi, gaudete in Domino Jesu Christo, et caveo omnes sordes (sordidos) in omni lucro. 13. Beloved, rejoice in the Lord Jesus Christ, and beware of filthy lucre.
14. Omnes petitiones vestræ sint palàm apud Deum. 14. Let all your prayers be manifest before God.
15. Estote firmi in sensu Christi, et quæ integræ, et vera, et pulcra, et casta, et justa, et amabilia sunt, facite. 15. And be firm in the sentiments you have of Christ. And whatsoever is perfect, and true, and modest, and chaste, and just, and amiable, that do.
16. Et quæ audistis, et arceperistis in corde retinete; et erit vobis pax. 16. And whatsoever ye have heard, and received, retain in your hearts, and it shall tend to your peace.
17. Salutant vos omnes sancti. 17. All the saints salute you.
18. Salutate omnes fratres in osculo sancto. 18. Salute all the brethren with a holy kiss.
19. Gratia Domini nostri Jesu Christi cum spiritu vestro. Amen. 19. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with your spirit. Amen.
20. Et hanc facite legi Colossensibus; et eam quæ est Colossensium vobis. 20. And cause this epistle to be read to the Colossians; and that to the Colossians to be read to you.

Ad Laodicenses scripta fuit à Româ, per Tychicum et Onesimum.

To the Laodiceans, written from Rome by Tychicus and Onesimus.

Such is the composition which pretends to be the Epistle of Paul the apostle to the Laodiceans, and of which I have endeavoured to give a literal version; though, even with the assistance of the various readings of the Anjon MS. which I have included in brackets, I found this difficult, so as to preserve any sense. Elias Hutter has published it after the Epistle to the Colossians, as if it were the genuine production of the apostle to whom it is attributed; and has taken the pains to exhibit it in twelve languages: viz. Syriac, Hebrew, Greek, Latin, German, Bohemian, Italian, Spanish, French, English, Danish, and Polish—All, the Latin excepted, appear to be of his own composing. To criticise them would be lost labour: the Greek is too bald to be the production of any remote age; and as to the English, no Englishman can understand it. The editor deserves the strongest reprehension, because he has associated it with the genuine Epistles of St. Paul, without a single note of its spuriousness.

As to its being a work of St. Paul, little or nothing need be said: its barrenness of meaning, poverty of style, incoherency of manner, and total want of design and object, are a sufficient refutation of its pretensions. It is said to be the work of some heretics of ancient times: this is very unlikely, as there is no heresy ever broached in the Christian church that could derive any support from any thing found in this epistle. It is a congeries of scraps, very injudiciously culled, here and there, from St. Paul's epistles; without arrangement, without connexion; and, as they stand here, almost without sense. It is a poor wretched tale, in no danger of ever being denominated even a cunningly devised fable. It should keep no company but that of the pretended Epistle of Paul to Smeria, to which I have in other cases referred, and of which I have given my opinion.

Should it be asked, "Why I have introduced it here?" I answer, to satisfy the curious reader; and to show how little ground there is for the opinion of some, that this epistle is of any importance; and, to prove how miserably, forgery itself succeeds, when it endeavours to add to, or corrupt, the word of God. The Sacred Writings are of such a peculiar character, that it is utterly impossible to imitate them with any kind of success. They bear, deeply impressed, the seal of infinite wisdom; a seal which no human heart can counterfeit. This is the criterion by which spurious Gospels, and apocryphal writings in general, have been judged and detected; and this heavenly stamp, under the care of Divine Providence, will continue to be their chief preservative, as long as sun and moon shall endure.

END OF NOTES ON THE EPISTLE TO THE COLOSSIANS.

PREFACE
 TO THE
FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE
 TO THE THESSALONIANS.

THESSALONICA, now called by the Turks Salonichi, a mere corruption of its ancient name, is a seaport town of Turkey in Europe, situated on what was called the Thermaic Gulf, and was anciently the capital of Macedonia. According to Stephanus Byzantinus, it was embellished and enlarged by Philip, king of Macedon, father of Alexander the Great, who called it Thessalonica, or the victory of Thessalia, on account of the victory he obtained there over the Thessalians; prior to which, it was called Therma. Strabo, Tzetes, and Zonaras, say that it obtained the name of Thessalonica from Thessalonica, wife of Cassander, and daughter of Philip.

In 1431, it was taken from the Venetians by the Turks, in whose possession it still continues. It is still a large, rich, and populous city, being ten miles in circumference, and carrying on an extensive trade in silk, the principal merchants being Greek Christians, and Jews.

Christianity has never been extinct in Thessalonica since the year 51 or 52, in which it was planted there by the apostle Paul; see Acts xvii. &c. It contains at present thirty churches, belonging to the Greek Christians; and as many Jewish synagogues, besides some Mohammedan mosques. Thessalonica is the see of an archbishop; and is well fortified, being surrounded with walls, flanked with towers, and defended on the land side by a citadel; and near the harbour with three forts.

St. Paul, in company with Silas, first preached the Gospel in this city, and the adjacent country, about A. D. 52 or 53. Though the Jews, who were sojourners in this city, rejected the Gospel in general; yet a great multitude of the devout Greeks, i. e. such as were proselytes to Judaism, or the descendants of Jewish parents, born and naturalized in Greece, believed, and associated with Paul and Silas; and not a few of the chief women of the city embraced the Christian faith.—Acts xvii. 4.

As the Jews found, that according to the doctrine of the Gospel, the Gentiles were called to enjoy the same privileges with themselves, without being obliged to submit to circumcision, and other ordinances of the law, they persecuted that Gospel, and them who proclaimed it; for, moved with indignation, they employed certain lewd fellows of the baser sort; the beasts of the people, set the city on an uproar, assaulted the house of Jason, where the apostles lodged; dragged him, and certain brethren, before the rulers; and charged them with seditious designs, and treason against the Roman emperor! The apostles escaped, and got to Berea, where they began anew their important evangelical labours: thither, the Jews of Thessalonica pursuing them, raised a fresh tumult; so that the apostle, being counselled by the brethren, made his escape to Athens, Acts xvii. 5—15. Thus he followed the command of his Master; being persecuted in one city, he fled to another; not to hide himself, but to proclaim, in every place, the saving truths of the Gospel of Christ.

It does not appear that St. Paul staid long at Athens; he soon went thence to Corinth, where Timothy and Silas were, but probably not before Timothy met him, for whom he had sent, Acts xvii. 15. to come to him speedily; and whom, it appears, he sent immediately back to Thessalonica, to establish the believers there, and comfort them concerning the faith, 1 Thess. iii. 2. While Paul abode at Corinth, Timothy and Silas came to him from Thessalonica; and hearing by them of the steadfastness of the Thessalonian converts, in the faith of Christ, he wrote this epistle, and shortly after the second, to comfort and encourage them; to give them further instructions in the doctrine of Christianity; and to rectify some mistaken views relative to the day of judgment, which had been propagated amongst them.—See the Preface to the second epistle.

Who the persons were who formed the apostolic church at Thessalonica, is not easy to determine. They were not Jews; for these, in general, persecuted the apostle and the Gospel in this men die; and by His power each is carried to his own place after death. Besides, His servants in particular, being put on their duty, like soldiers, must remain at their several posts, till released by their Commander; and when he releases them, He is fitly said to come for that purpose.

4. "Besides all these, there is a day or coming of the Lord to judge the world, and to put an end to the present state of things. This coming, Christ himself has promised. Matt. xvi. 27. 'The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his holy angels; and then shall he reward every man according to his work.' Now, this being a real, personal appearing of Christ in the body, is more properly, than any other of His comings, called the day, and coming of Christ.—And the purposes of it being more important than those of His other comings, the exertions of His power for accomplishing them will be most signal and glorious. Hence this coming is, with great propriety, termed, 'the revelation of Jesus Christ,' and 'the day' of His revelation, 'when he shall be glorified in his saints, and admired of all them who believe.'

"Thus it appears that when the apostles wrote, there were four comings of Christ to happen, three of them figurative, but the fourth a real appearance; and these different comings are frequently spoken of in Scripture; and that although the coming of Christ to destroy Jerusalem, and to establish His everlasting kingdom, be represented by the apostles as then at hand, no passage from their writings can be produced in which His personal appearance to judge the world is said, or even insinuated, to be at hand. The truth is, if the different comings of Christ are distinguished as they ought to be, we shall find that the apostles have spoken of each of them according to truth; and that the opinion which some Christians have unadvisedly espoused, to the great discredit of the inspiration of the apostles, has not the least foundation in Scripture."

The epistle naturally divides itself into three parts, and each is contained in a separate chapter.

PART 1. CHAP. I.—Contains the address, and motives of consolation in their afflicted and persecuted state.

PART 2. CHAP. II.—Is partly prophetic and partly didactic. It contains the doctrine concerning Christ's coming to judgment; and a prophecy concerning some future, but great apostacy from the Christian faith.

PART 3. CHAP. III. Is wholly hortatory; and contains a number of important advices relative to Christian virtues, and a proper behaviour in those situations in life in which it had pleased God to call them.

This is the shortest of all St. Paul's epistles to the churches, but is of very great importance; and, in many places, very sublime, especially in the second part; and in this there are several very great difficulties, and some things hard to be understood. After all the pains and labour of learned men, it would be hazardous to say, the meaning of every part is now clearly made out. What increases the difficulty is, that the apostle refers to some private communication with themselves, no part of which is on record; and without which, it would require St. Paul's inspiration to be able to fix the sense and meaning of all we find here. May the Father of lights give the reader a wise understanding in all things! Amen.

CHAPTER I.

The salutation of St. Paul and his companions, 1, 2. The apostle gives thanks to God for their faith, love, and union, and for their patience under persecutions, 3, 4. Speaks of the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; the punishment of the ungodly, and the glorification of the righteous, 5—10. Prays that God may count them worthy of their calling; that the name of Jesus may be glorified in them, 11, 12.

Verse 1. Paul, and Silvanus, &c.] See the notes on 1 Thess. i. 1. This epistle was written a short time after the former; and as Silas and Timothy were still at Corinth, the apostle joins their names with his own, as in the former case.

2^a Grace unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3^b We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth;

4 So that^c we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God^d for your patience and faith^e in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure:

5 Which is^f a manifest token of the Verse 3. Your faith groweth exceedingly] The word υπερβαλου, signifies, to grow luxuriantly, as a good and healthy tree, planted in a good soil; and if a fruit-tree, bearing an abundance of fruit to compensate the labour of the husbandman. Faith is one of the seeds of the kingdom: this the apostle had sowed and watered, and God gave an abundant increase. Their faith was multiplied, and their love abounded: and this was not the case with some distinguished characters only; it was the case with every one of them.

Verse 4. We ourselves glory in you in the churches of God] We hold you up as an example of what the grace of God can produce when communicated to honest and faithful hearts.

For your patience and faith] From Acts xvii. 5, 13 and from 1 Thess. ii. 14. we learn, that the people of Thessalonica had suffered much persecution, both from the Jews and their own countrymen: but, being thoroughly convinced of the truth of the Gospel, and feeling it to be the power of God unto salvation, no persecution could turn them aside from it. And having suffered for the truth, it was precious to them. Persecution never essentially injured the genuine church of God.

Verse 5. A manifest token of the righteous judgment of God] The persecutions and tribulations which you endure, are a manifest proof that God has judged righteously in calling you Gentiles into his church; and these sufferings are also a proof that ye are called in: for they who enter into the kingdom of God, go through great tribulation; your going through that tribulation, is a proof that ye are entering in: and God sees it right and just that ye should be permitted to suffer, before ye enjoy that endless felicity.

The words, however, may be understood in another sense, and will form this maxim, "The sufferings of the just, and the triumphs of the wicked in this life, are a sure proof that there will be a future judgment, in which the wicked shall be punished and the righteous rewarded."

righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer:

6^b Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you;

7 And to you who are troubled, Rest with us, when^k the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with^l his mighty angels,

8^m In flaming fire, ⁿ taking vengeance on them^o that know not God, and^p that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ:

^h 1 Thess. 4. 16. Jude 14.—ⁱ Gr. the angels of his power.—^j Heb. 10. 37. & 12. 29. 2 Pet. 3. 7. Rev. 21. 2. ^k Or, yielding.—^l Psa. 79. 6. 1 Thess. 4. 5.—^m Rom. 2. 6.

This maxim is not only true in itself, but it is most likely that this is the apostle's meaning.

That ye may be counted worthy] Your patient endurance of these sufferings, is a proof that ye are rendered meet for that glory on account of which ye suffer; and in a true Gospel sense of the word, worthy of that glory: for, he who is a child of God, and a partaker of the Divine nature, is worthy of God's kingdom; not because he has done any thing to merit it, but because he bears the image of God: and the image is that which gives the title.

Verse 6. Seeing it is a righteous thing] Though God neither rewards nor punishes in this life, in a general way, yet he often gives proofs of his displeasure; especially against those who persecute his followers. They, therefore, who have given you tribulation, shall have tribulation in recompense.

Verse 7. And to you who are troubled, Rest with us] And while they have tribulation, you shall have that eternal rest which remains for the people of God.

When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed] But this fulness of tribulation to them, and rest to you, shall not take place till the Lord Jesus come to judge the world.

With his mighty angels] The coming of God to judge the world, is scarcely ever spoken of in the Sacred Writings without mentioning the holy angels who are to accompany him, and to form his court or retinue. See Deut. xxxiii. 2. Matt. xvi. 27. xxv. 31. xxvi. 64. Mark viii. 38.

Verse 8. In flaming fire] Εν πυρι πυρος, in thunder and lightning; taking vengeance; inflicting just punishment on them that know not God; the heathen, who do not worship the true God, and will not acknowledge Him, but worship idols: and on them that obey not the Gospel, the Jews particularly, who have rejected the Gospel, and persecuted Christ and His messengers; and all nominal Christians, who, though they believe the Gospel as a revelation from God, yet do not obey it as a rule of life.

9^a Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and^b from the glory of his power;

10^c When he shall come to be glorified in his saints, ^dand to be admired in all them that believe (because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.

11 Wherefore also we pray always

^a Phil. 3. 19. ^b 2 Pet. 3. 7. — ^b Deut. 33. 2. Isa. 2. 19. Ch. 2. 8. — ^c Psa. 89. 7. — ^d 4 Psa. 68. 35.

Verse 9. Who shall be punished] What this everlasting destruction consists in we cannot tell. It is not annihilation, for their being continues; and as the destruction is everlasting, it is an eternal continuance and presence of substantial evil, and absence of all good; for a part of this punishment consists in being banished from the presence of the Lord, excluded from His approbation for ever: so that the light of His countenance can be no more enjoyed, as there will be an eternal impossibility of ever being reconciled to Him.

The glory of his power] Never to see the face of God throughout eternity, is a heart-rending, soul-appalling thought! and to be banished from the glory of his power, that power, the glory of which is peculiarly manifested in saving the lost, and glorifying the faithful, is what cannot be reflected on, without confusion and dismay. But this must be the lot of all who do not acknowledge God, and obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Verse 10. When he shall come to be glorified in his saints] As the grace of God is peculiarly glorified in saving sinners, and making them into saints, this gracious power will be particularly manifested in the great day, when countless millions will appear before that Throne, who have come out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

And to be admired] Θαυμάζοντας, to be wondered at among, and on the account of, all them that believe. Much as true believers admire the perfections of the Redeemer of mankind; and much as they wonder at His amazing condescension in becoming man, and dying for the sins of the world; all their present amazement and wonder will be as nothing when compared with what they shall feel when they come to see Him in all his glory; the glory that He had with the Father, before the world was. In reference to this we may apply those words of St. John, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God: and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." 1 John, chap. iii. 2.

Instead of τοῖς πιστεύουσιν, them that believe; τοῖς πιστευουσιν, them that have believed, is the reading of ABCDEF. many others; the latter Syriac, Slavonic, Vulgate, and Itala, with most of the Greek Fathers. This reading is undoubtedly genuine.

for you, that our God would count you worthy of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power:

12^b That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ.

^a Or, vouchsafe. — ^c Ver. 5. — ^d 1 Thess. 1. 3. — ^e 1 Pet. 1. 7. & 4. 14.

Because our testimony—was believed in that day.] The members of this sentence seem to have been strangely transposed. I believe it should be read thus: "In that day when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and admired among all them that have believed: for our testimony was believed among you." The Thessalonians had credited what the apostles had said and written, not only concerning Jesus Christ in general; but concerning the day of judgment in particular.

Verse 11. We pray—that our God would count you worthy] It is our earnest prayer that God would make you worthy, αἰσῶν, afford those continual supplies of grace by His Holy Spirit, without which you cannot adorn your holy vocation: you are called into the Christian church, and to be proper members of this church, ye must be members of the mystical body of Christ; and this implies that ye should be holy, as he who has called you is holy.

Fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness] 1. The goodness of God, His own innate eternal kindness, has led Him to call you into this state of salvation. 2. It is the pleasure of that goodness, to save you unto eternal life. 3. It is the good pleasure, nothing can please God more, than your receiving and retaining His utmost salvation. 4. It is all the good pleasure of His goodness thus to save you: this he has amply proved, by sending His Son to die for you; beyond which gift, He has none greater. In this, all the good pleasure of His goodness is astonishingly manifested. 5. And if you be faithful to His grace, He will fulfil, completely accomplish, all the good pleasure of His goodness in you; which goodness is to be apprehended, and is to work by faith, the power of which must come from Him, though the act or exercise of that power must be of yourselves; but the very power to believe, affords excitement to the exercise of faith.

Verse 12. That the name of our Lord] This is the great end of your Christian calling, that Jesus who hath died for you, may have His passion and death magnified in your life and happiness; that ye may show forth the virtues of Him who called you from darkness into His marvellous light.

And ye in him] That His glorious excellence may be seen upon you; that ye may be adorned with the graces of His Spirit; as He is glorified, by your salvation from all sin.

According to the grace] That your salvation may be such as God requires; and such as is worthy of his grace to communicate. God saves as becomes God to save; and thus the dignity of His nature, is seen in the excellence and glory of His work.

1. It is an awful consideration to the people of the world, that persecutions and afflictions should be the lot of the true church; and should be the proof of its being such: because this shows, more than any thing else, the desperate state of mankind; their total enmity to God: they persecute, not because the followers of God have done, or can do them hurt; but they persecute because they have not the Spirit of Christ in them! Men may amuse themselves by arguing against the doctrine of original sin, or the total depravity of the soul of man; but while there is religious persecution in the world, there is the most absolute disproof of all their arguments. Nothing but a heart wholly alienated from God, could ever devise the persecution or maltreatment of a man, for no other cause, but that he has given himself up to glorify God with his body and spirit, which are His.

2. The everlasting destruction of the ungodly, is a subject that should be continually placed before the eyes of men by the preachers of the Gospel. How shall a man be induced to take measures to escape a danger, of the existence of which he is not convinced? Show him the hell which the justice of God has lighted up for the devil and his angels; and in which all Satan's children and followers must have their eternal portion. All the perfections of God require, that He should render to every man his due. And what is the due of a sinner, or a persecutor, of one who is a determinate enemy to God, goodness, and good men? Why, everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and the glory of His power. And if God did not award this to such persons, He could not be the God of justice.

3. The grand object of God in giving His Gospel to mankind is to save them from their sins, make them like Himself, and take them to His eternal glory. He saves according to the measure of His eternal goodness: the scanty salvation contended for, and expected by the generality of Christians, it would be dishonourable to God to administer. He saves according to His grace. His own eternal goodness and holiness is the measure of His salvation to man: not the creeds and expectations of any class of Christians. To be saved at all we must not only be saved in God's way, and upon His own terms, but also according to His own measure. He who is not filled with the fulness of God, cannot expect the glory of God.

4. Another proof of the fall and degeneracy of man is, their general enmity to the doctrine of holiness; they cannot bear the thought of being sanctified through body, soul, and spirit, so as to perfect holiness in the fear of God. A spurious kind of Christianity is gaining ground in the world. Weakness, doubtfulness, littleness of faith, consciousness of inward corruptions, and sinful infirmities of different kinds, are, by some, considered the highest proofs of a gracious state; whereas, in the primitive church, they would have been considered as evidences that the persons in question had received just light enough to show them their wretchedness and danger; but not the healing virtue of the blood of Christ.

CHAPTER II.

He exhorts the Thessalonians to stand fast in the faith, and not to be alarmed at the rumours they heard concerning the sudden coming of Christ, 1, 2. Because, previously to this coming, there would be a great apostacy from the true faith, and a manifestation of a son of perdition, of whose unparalleled presumption he gives an awful description; as well as of his pernicious success among men, and the means which he would use to deceive and pervert the world; and particularly those who do not receive the love of the truth, but have pleasure in unrighteousness, 3—12. He thanks God for their steadfastness; shows the great privileges to which they were called; and prays that they may be comforted and established in every good word and work, 13—17.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. We beseech you—by the coming of our Lord] It is evident that the Thessalonians, incited or deceived by false teachers, had taken a wrong meaning out of the words of the 1st epistle, chap. iv. 15, &c. concerning the day of judgment; and were led then to conclude, that that day was at hand; and this had produced great confusion in the church: to correct this mistake, the apostle sent them this second letter, in which he shows, that this day must be necessarily distant, because a great work is to be done previously to its appearing.

Of the day of general judgment he had spoken before, and said that it should come as a thief in the night; i. e. when not expected: but he did not attempt to fix the time; nor did he insinuate that it was either near at hand, or far off. Now, however, he shows that it must necessarily be far off, because of the great transactions which must take place before it can come.

Verse 2. Be not soon shaken in mind] non movet, from the mind; i. e. that they should retain the persuasion they had of the truths which he had before delivered to them: that they should still hold the same opinions; and hold fast the doctrines which they had been taught.

Neither by spirit] Any pretended revelation.

Nor by word] Any thing which any person may profess to have heard the apostles speak.

Nor by letter] Either the former one which he had sent, some passages of which have been misconceived and misconstrued: or by any other letter, as from us, pretending to have been written by us, the apostles, containing predictions of this kind. There is a diversity of opinion among critics concerning this last clause: some supposing that it refers simply to the first epistle; others, supposing that a forged epistle is intended. I have joined the two senses.

The word σαλοντας, to be shaken, signifies to be agitated as a ship at sea in a storm; and strongly marks the confusion and distress which the Thessalonians had felt in their false apprehension of this coming of Christ.

As, that the day of Christ is at hand] In the Preface to this epistle, I have given a general view of the meaning of the phrase the coming of Christ. Now, the question is, whether does the apostle mean the coming of Christ to execute judgment upon the Jews, and to destroy their polity; or His coming, at the end of time, to judge the world? There are certainly many expressions in the following verses, that may be applied indifferently to either; and some seem to apply to the one, and not to the other: and yet, the whole can scarcely be so interpreted as to suit any one of these comings exclusively. This is precisely the case with the predictions of our Lord, relative to these great events; one is used to point out and illustrate the other. On this ground, I am led to think that the apostle, in the following, (confessedly obscure words) has both these in view, speaking of none of them exclusively; for it is the custom of the inspired penmen, or rather of that Spirit by which they spoke, to point out as many certain events by one prediction, as it was possible to do; and to choose the figures, metaphors, and similes accordingly: and thus, from the beginning, God has pointed out the things that were not, by the things that then existed; making the one the types or signifiers of the other. As the apostle spoke by the same Spirit, he most probably followed the same plan: and thus the following prophecy is to be interpreted and understood.

Verse 3. Except there come a falling away first] We have the original word αποσταση, in our word apostacy; and by this term, we understand a dereliction of the essential principles of religious truth; either a total abandonment of Christianity itself, or such a corruption of its doctrines, as renders the whole system completely inefficient to salvation. But what this apostacy means, is a question which has not yet, and perhaps never will be answered, to general satisfaction. At present, I shall content myself with making a few literal remarks on this obscure prophecy; and afterward give the opinions of learned men on its principal parts.

4 Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.

d John 17. 12.—• Isa. 14. 13. Ezek. 28. 2, 6, 9. Dan. 7. 25. & 11. 36. Rev. 13. 6.—• 1 Cor. 8. 5.

stand a dereliction of the essential principles of religious truth; either a total abandonment of Christianity itself, or such a corruption of its doctrines, as renders the whole system completely inefficient to salvation. But what this apostacy means, is a question which has not yet, and perhaps never will be answered, to general satisfaction. At present, I shall content myself with making a few literal remarks on this obscure prophecy; and afterward give the opinions of learned men on its principal parts.

That man of sin] ὁ ἀνθρώπος τῆς ἀμαρτίας; the same as the Hebrew expresses, by ישׁוּ אָוֶן ish aven, and ישׁוּ בְּלִיַּל ish belial; the perverse, obstinate, and iniquitous man. It is worthy of remark, that, among the rabbins, Samael, or the devil, is called ישׁוּ בְּלִיַּל אָוֶן ish belial veish aven, the man of Belial, and the man of iniquity; and that these titles are given to Adam after his fall.

The son of perdition] ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀποστασεως, the son of destruction; the same epithet that is given to Judas Iscariot, John xvii. 12. where see the note. The son of perdition, and the man of sin; or, as some excellent MSS. and Versions, with several of the Fathers read, ἀνθρώπος τῆς ἀνομίας, the lawless man, see ver. 8. must mean the same person or thing. It is also remarkable, that the wicked Jews are styled by Isaiah, chap. i. 4. בְּנֵי מִשְׁחָתִים benim meshachatim, "children of perdition;" persons who destroy themselves and destroy others.

Verse 4. Who opposeth and exalteth] He stands against, and exalts himself above all Divine authority; and above every object of adoration; and every institution, relative to Divine worship, εἰς ἑαυτὴν; himself being the source whence must originate all the doctrines of religion; and all its rites and ceremonies: so that sitting in the temple of God, having the highest place and authority in the Christian church, he acts as God, taking upon himself God's titles and attributes, and arrogates to himself the authority that belongs to the Most High.

The words αὶ ὁ θεὸς, as God, are wanting in ABD. many others, Erpen's Arabic, the Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, Armenian, the Vulgate, some copies of the Itala, and the chief of the Greek Fathers. Griesbach has left them out of the text, and Professor White says certissime delenda: they should most certainly be erased. There is indeed no evidence of their being authentic, and the text reads much better without them: So that he sitteth in the temple of God, &c.

5 Remember ye not, that when I was yet with you, I told you these things?

6 And now ye know what ^a withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time.

7 For ^b the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let until he be taken out of the way.

8 And then shall that Wicked be revealed, ^c whom the Lord shall consume ^d with the Spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy ^e with the brightness of his coming:

^a Or, holdeth.—^b 1 John 2. 18. & 4. 3.—^c Dan. 7. 10, 11.
^d Job 4. 9. Isai. 11. 4. Hos. 6. 5. Rev. 2. 16. & 19. 15, 20, 21.—^e Ch. 1. 8, 9. Heb. 10. 27.—^f John 8. 41. Eph. 2. 2. Rev. 19. 28.

Verse 5. I told you these things] In several parts of this description of the man of sin, the apostle alludes to a conversation which had taken place between him and the members of this church, when he was at Thessalonica; and this one circumstance will account for much of the obscurity that is in these verses. Besides, the apostle appears to speak with great caution, and does not at all wish to publish what he had communicated to them: the hints which he drops were sufficient to call the whole to their remembrance.

Verse 6. And now ye know what withholdeth] I told you this among other things; I informed you what it was that prevented this man of sin, this son of perdition, from revealing himself fully.

Verse 7. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work] There is a system of corrupt doctrine which will lead to the general apostacy, already in existence: but it is a mystery; it is as yet hidden; it dare not show itself, because of that which hindereth, or withholdeth. But, when that which now restraineth be taken out of the way, then shall that wicked one be revealed: it will then be manifest who he is, and what he is.—See the observations at the end of this chapter.

Verse 8. Whom the Lord shall consume] He shall blast him so, that he shall wither and die away; and this shall be done by the Spirit of His mouth; the words of eternal life, the true doctrine of the Gospel of Jesus; this shall be the instrument used to destroy this man of sin: therefore, it is evident his death will not be a sudden but a gradual one; because, it is by the preaching of the truth that he is to be exposed, overthrown, and finally destroyed.

The brightness of his coming] This may refer to that full manifestation of the truth which had been obscured and kept under by the exaltation of this man of sin.

Verse 9. Whom coming is after the working of Satan] The operation of God's Spirit sends his messengers; the operation of Satan's spirit sends his emissaries. The one comes κατ' ἐνεργίαν του Θεου, after, or according to the energy, or inward powerful working of God; the other

9 Even him, whose coming is ^f after the working of Satan with all power, and ^g signs, and lying wonders,

10 And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in ^h them that perish; because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved.

11 And ⁱ for this cause God shall send them strong delusion, ^k that they should believe a lie:

12 That they all might be damned who believed not the truth, but ^l had pleasure in unrighteousness:

comes κατ' ἐνεργίαν του Σατανα, according to the energy, or inward working, of Satan.

With all power] Παση δυναμει, all kinds of miracles, like the Egyptian magicians. And signs and lying wonders; the word lying may be applied to the whole of these: they were lying miracles, lying signs, and lying wonders: only appearances of what was real; and done to give credit to his presumption and imposture. Whereas God sent his messengers with real miracles, real signs, and real wonders; such, Satan cannot produce.

Verse 10. And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness] With every art that cunning can invent, and unrighteousness suggest, in order to delude and deceive.

In them that perish] Εν τοις απολλυμενοις, among them that are destroyed; and they are destroyed and perish because they would not receive the love of the truth, that they might be saved. So, they perish because they obstinately refuse to be saved; and receive a lie in preference to the truth. This has been true of all the Jews, from the days of the apostle, until now.

Verse 11. God shall send them strong delusion] For this very cause, that they would not receive the love of the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness; therefore, God permits strong delusion to occupy their minds; so that they believe a lie rather than the truth; prefer false apostles, and their erroneous doctrines, to the pure truths of the Gospel, brought to them by the well accredited messengers of God: being ever ready to receive any false Messiah, while they systematically, and virulently, reject the true one.

Verse 12. That they all might be damned] Την καταρασην, so that they may all be condemned who believed not the truth, when it was proclaimed to them; but took pleasure in unrighteousness, preferring that to the way of holiness. Their condemnation was the effect of their refusal to believe the truth; and they refused to believe it because they loved their sins. For a further, and more pointed, illustration of the preceding verses, see at the conclusion of this chapter.

13 But ^a we are bound to give thanks always to God, for you, brethren, beloved of the Lord, because God

^b hath ^c from the beginning chosen you to salvation ^d through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth :

14 Whereunto he called you by our Gospel, to ^e the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ.

15 Therefore, brethren, ^f stand fast

^a Ch. 1. 3.—^b 1 Thess. 1. 4.—^c Eph. 1. 4.—^d Luke 1. 75. 1 Pet. 1. 2.—^e John 17. 22. 1 Thess. 2. 12. 1 Pet. 5. 10.—^f 1 Cor. 16. 13. Phil. 4. 1.

Verses 13 and 14. God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation] In your calling, God has shown the purpose that he had formed from the beginning, to call the Gentiles to the same privileges with the Jews; not through circumcision, and the observance of the Mosaic law, but by faith in Christ Jesus; but this simple way of salvation referred to the same end, holiness; without which no man, whether Jew or Gentile, can see the Lord.

Let us observe the order of Divine grace in this business:—1. They were to hear the truth; the doctrines of the Gospel—2. They were to believe this truth, when they heard it preached—3. They were to receive the Spirit of God, in believing the truth—4. That Spirit was to sanctify their souls; produce an inward holiness, which was to lead to all outward conformity to God—5. All this constituted their salvation; their being fitted for the inheritance among the saints in light—6. They were to obtain the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ; that state of felicity for which they were fitted, by being saved here from their sins, and by being sanctified by the Spirit of God.

Verse 15. Therefore, brethren, stand fast] Their obtaining eternal glory, depended on their faithfulness to the grace of God; for this calling did not necessarily and irresistibly lead to faith; nor their faith, to the sanctification of the Spirit; nor their sanctification of the Spirit, to the glory of our Lord Jesus. Had they not attended to the calling, they could not have believed; had they not believed, they could not have been sanctified; had they not been sanctified, they could not have been glorified. All these things depended on each other; they were stages of the great journey; and at any of these stages they might have halted, and never finished their Christian race.

Hold the traditions which ye have been taught] The word παραδοσις, which we render tradition, signifies any thing delivered in the way of teaching; and here most obviously means, the doctrines delivered by the apostle to the Thessalonians; whether in his preaching, private conversation, or by these epistles; and particularly the first epistle, as the apostle here states. Whatever these traditions were, as to their matter, they were a revelation from God; for they came by men who spake and acted under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit; and on this ground, the passage here can never, with any and hold ^a the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word, or our epistle.

16 ^b Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God, even our Father, ^c which hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consolation and ^d good hope through grace, 17 Comfort your hearts, ^e and establish you in every good word and work.

^a 1 Cor. 11. 2. Ch. 3. 6.—^b Ch. 1. 1. 2.—^c 1 John 4. 10. Rev. 1. 5.—^d 1 Pet. 1. 3.—^e 1 Cor. 1. 8. 1 Thess. 3. 13. 1 Pet. 5. 10.

propriety, be brought to support the unapostolical, and antiapostolical traditions of the Romish church; those being matters which are, confessedly, not taken from either Testament; nor were spoken either by a prophet or an apostle.

Verse 16. Now our Lord Jesus] As all your grace came from our Lord Christ, so the power that is necessary to strengthen and confirm you unto the end, must come in the same way.

Everlasting consolation] παραμνησις αἰωνιας, the glad tidings of the Gospel; and the comfort which ye have received through believing; a gift which God had in His original purpose, in reference to the Gentiles: a purpose, which has respected all times and places; and which shall continue to the conclusion of time: for the Gospel is everlasting, and shall not be superseded by any other dispensation. It is the last and best which God has provided for man: and it is good tidings, everlasting consolation; a complete system of complete peace and happiness. The words may also refer to the happiness which the believing Thessalonians then possessed.

And good hope through grace] The hope of the Gospel was the resurrection of the body, and the final glorification of it, and the soul, throughout eternity. This was the good hope which the Thessalonians had; not a hope that they should be pardoned or sanctified, &c. Pardon and holiness they enjoyed, therefore they were no objects of hope; but the resurrection of the body, and eternal glory, were necessarily future; these they had in expectation; these they hoped for; and, through the grace which they had already received, they had a good hope, a well-grounded expectation, of this glorious state.

Verse 17. Comfort your hearts] Keep your souls ever under the influence of His Holy Spirit; and establish you; confirm and strengthen you in your belief of every good word, or doctrine, which we have delivered unto you; and in the practice of every good work, recommended and enjoined by the doctrines of the Gospel.

It is not enough that we believe the truth; we must live the truth. Antinomianism says, "Believe the doctrines, and ye are safe." The testimony borne by the Gospel is—believe, love, obey; none of these can subsist without the other. The faith of a devil may exist without loving obedience; but the faith of a true believer worketh by love: and this faith and love have not respect to some one commandment, but to all; for God writes His whole law on the heart of every genuine Christian; and gives him that love which is the fulfilling of the law.

The reader will have observed, that, in going through this chapter, while examining the import of every leading word, I have avoided fixing any specific meaning to terms: the apostacy, or falling away; the man of sin; son of perdition; him who letteth, or withholdeth, &c. The reason is, I have found it extremely difficult to fix any sense to my own satisfaction: and, it was natural for me to think that, if I could not satisfy myself, it was not likely I could satisfy my readers: but, as something should be said relative to the persons and things intended by the apostle, I choose to give rather what others have said, than attempt any new mode of interpretation. The great variety of explanations given by wise and learned men, only prove the difficulty of the place.

1. The general run of Protestant writers understand the whole as referring to the popes, and church of Rome; or the whole system of the papacy—2. Others think that the defection of the Jewish nation, from their allegiance to the Roman emperor, is what is to be understood by the apostacy, or falling off; and that all the other terms refer to the destruction of Jerusalem—3. The Fathers understood the antichrist to be intended; but of this person they seem to have formed no specific idea—4. Dr. Hummond refers the apostacy to the defection of the primitive Christians to the Gnostic heresy; and supposes that, by the man of sin, and son of perdition, Siman Magus is meant—5. Grotius applies the whole to Caius Cæsar—6. Wetstein applies the apostacy to the rebellion and slaughter of the three princes that were proclaimed by the Roman armies, previously to the reign of Vespasian; and supposes Titus, and the Flavian family, to be intended by the man of sin, and son of perdition—7. Schoetgen contends, strongly, that the whole refers to the case of the Jews, incited to rebellion by the scribes and Pharisees; and to the utter and final destruction of the Rabbinic and Pharisaic system; and thinks he finds something in their spirit and conduct, and in what has happened to them, to illustrate every word in this prophecy. Dr. Whitby is nearly of the same sentiments—8. Calmet follows, in the main, the interpretation given by the ancient Fathers; and wonders at the want of candour in the Protestant writers, who have gleaned up every abusive tale against the bishops and church of Rome; and asks them, Would they be willing that the catholics should credit all the aspersions cast on Protestantism by its enemies?—9. Bishop Newton has examined the whole prophecy with his usual skill and judgment. The sum of what he says, as abridged by Dr. Dodd, I think it right to subjoin. The principal part of modern commentators follow his steps. He applies the whole to the Romish church: the apostacy, its defection from the pure doctrines of Christianity; and the man of sin, &c. the general succession of the popes of Rome. But we must hear him for himself, as he takes up the subject in the order of the verses.

Verses 3, 4. For that day shall not come, except, &c.—“The day of Christ shall not come, except there come the apostacy first.” The apostacy here described, is plainly not of a civil, but of a religious nature; not a revolt from the government, but a defection from the true religion and worship. In the original, it is the apostacy, with an article to give it an emphasis: the article being added, signifies, “that famous, and before-mentioned prophecy.” So likewise is the man of sin, with the like article, and the like emphasis. If, then, the notion of the man of sin be derived from any ancient prophet, it must be derived from Dan. vii. 25. and ix. 36. Any man may be satisfied that St. Paul alluded to Daniel’s description, because he has not only borrowed the same ideas, but has even adopted some of the phrases and expressions. The man of sin, may signify either a single man, or a succession of men; a succession of men being meant in Daniel, it is probable that the same was intended here also. It is the more probable, because a single man appears hardly sufficient for the work here assigned; and it is agreeable to the phraseology of Scripture, and especially to that of the prophets, to speak of a body, or number of men, under the character of one: thus, a king, Dan. vii. 8. Rev. xvii. is used for a succession of kings. The man of sin being to be expressed from Dan. vii. 24. according to the Greek translation, he shall exceed in evil all that went before him; and he may fulfil the character either by promoting wickedness in general, or by advancing idolatry in particular, as the word sin signifies frequently in Scripture. The son of perdition is also the denomination of the traitor Judas, John xvii. 13. which implies, that the man of sin should be like Judas, a false apostle; like him, betray Christ; and like him, be devoted to destruction. Who opposeth, &c. is manifestly copied from Daniel, He shall exalt himself, &c. The features exactly resemble each other: He opposeth, and exalteth himself above all; or, according to the Greek, above every one that is called God, or that is worshipped. The Greek word for worshipped, is εὐσεβῶν, alluding to the Greek title of the Roman emperors, εὐσεβῆς, which signifies august, or venerable. He shall oppose; for the prophets speak of things future, as present: he shall oppose, and exalt himself, not only above inferior magistrates, (who are sometimes called gods in Holy Writ) but even above the greatest emperors; and shall arrogate to himself Divine honours. So that he, as God, sitteth in the temple, &c. By the temple of God, the apostle could not well mean the temple of Jerusalem, because that, he knew, would be destroyed within a few years. After the death of Christ, the temple of Jerusalem is never called by the apostles the temple of God; and if, at any time, they make mention of the house, or temple of God, they mean the church in general, or every particular believer. Whoever will consult 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. 2 Cor. vi. 16. 1 Tim. iii. 15. Rev. iii. 12. will want no examples to prove, that, under the Gospel dispensation, the temple of God is the church of Christ; and the man of sin’s sitting, implies his ruling and presiding there; and sitting there as God, implies his claiming Divine authority in things spiritual as well as temporal; and showing himself that he is God, implies his doing it with ostentation.

Verses 5, 6, 7. Remember ye not, &c.—The apostle thought it part of his duty, as he made it a part of his preaching and doctrine, to forewarn his new converts of the grand apostacy that would infect the church, even while he was at Thessalonica. From these verses, it appears that the man of sin was not then revealed; his time was not come; or the season of his manifestation. The mystery of iniquity was indeed already working: the seeds of corruption were sown; but they were not grown up to maturity: the man of sin was yet hardly conceived in the womb; it must be some time before he could be brought forth; there was some obstacle that hindered his appearing. What this was we cannot determine with absolute certainty, at so great a distance of time; but, if we may rely upon the concurrent testimony of the Fathers, it was the Roman empire. Most probably it was somewhat relating to the higher powers, because the apostle observes such caution; he mentioned it in discourse, but would not commit it to writing.

Verse 8. Then shall that Wicked be revealed.—When the obstacle, mentioned in the preceding verse, should be removed, then shall that Wicked, &c. Nothing can be plainer than that the lawless, (ἀνομος), as the Greek signifies, the wicked one, here mentioned, and the man of sin, must be one and the same person. The apostle was speaking before of what hindered that he should be revealed, and would continue to hinder till it was taken away; and then the wicked one, &c. Not that he should be consumed immediately after he was revealed. But the apostle, to comfort the Thessalonians, no sooner mentions his revelation, than he foretells also his destruction, even before he describes his other qualifications. His other qualifications should have been described first, in order of time; but the apostle hastens to what was first and warmest in his thoughts and wishes, Whom the Lord shall consume, &c. If these two clauses refer to two distinct and different events, the meaning manifestly is, that the Lord Jesus shall gradually consume him with the free preaching and publication of His word; and shall utterly destroy him at His second coming, in the glory of His Father, with all the holy angels. If these two clauses relate to one and the same event, it is a pleonasm very usual in the sacred, as well as other oriental writings: and the purport plainly is, that the Lord Jesus shall destroy him with the greatest facility, when he shall be revealed from heaven; as the apostle has expressed it in the preceding chapter.

Verses 9—12. Whose coming is after, &c.—The apostle was eager to foretell the destruction of the man of sin; and for this purpose, having broken in upon his subject, he now returns to it again, and describes the other qualifications by which this wicked one should advance, and establish himself in the world. He should rise to credit and authority by the most diabolical methods; should pretend to supernatural powers, and boast of revelations, visions, and miracles; false in themselves, and applied to promote false doctrines. Verse 9. He should likewise practise all other wicked acts of deceit; should be guilty of the most impious frauds and impositions upon mankind; but should prevail only among those who are destitute of a sincere affection for the truth; whereby they might attain eternal salvation. Verse 10. And indeed, it is a just and righteous judgment of God, to give them over to vanities and lies in this world, and to condemnation in the next, who have no regard to truth and virtue, but delight in falsehood and wickedness: ver. 11, 12.

Upon this survey, there appears little room to doubt of the genuine sense and meaning of the passage. The Thessalonians, (as we have seen from some expressions in the former epistle,) were alarmed as if the end of the world was at hand. The apostle, to correct their mistakes, and dissipate their fears, assures them that a great apostacy, or defection of the Christians, from the true faith and worship, must happen, before the coming of Christ. This apostacy, all the concurrent marks and characters will justify us in charging upon the church of Rome. The true Christian worship is, the worship of the one only God, through the one only Mediator, the man Christ Jesus; and from this worship the church of Rome has most notoriously departed, by substituting other mediators, and invoking and adoring saints and angels: nothing is apostacy if idolatry be not. And are not the members of the church of Rome guilty of idolatry, in the worship of images, in the adoration of the host, in the invocation of angels and saints, and in the oblation of prayers and praises to the Virgin Mary; as much, or more, than to God blessed for ever? This is the grand corruption of the Christian church; this is the apostacy, as it is emphatically called, and deserves to be called; which was not only predicted by St. Paul, but by the prophet Daniel likewise. If the apostacy be rightly charged upon the church of Rome, it follows of consequence, that the man of sin is the pope; not meaning any pope in particular, but the pope in general, as the chief head and supporter of this apostacy. He is properly the man of sin, not only on account of the scandalous lives of many popes, but by reason of their most scandalous doctrines and principles; dispensing with the most necessary duties, and granting, or rather selling, pardons and indulgences, to the most abominable crimes. Or, if by sin be meant idolatry in particular, as in the Old Testament, it is evident how he has perverted the worship of God to superstition and idolatry of the grossest kind. He also, like the false apostle Judas, is the son of perdition; whether actively, as being the cause of destruction to others, or passively, as being devoted to destruction himself. He opposeth: he is the great adversary of God and man; persecuting and destroying, by croisades, inquisitions, and massacres, those Christians who prefer the word of God to the authority of men. The heathen emperor of Rome may have slain his thousands of innocent Christians; but the Christian bishop of Rome, has slain his ten thousands. He exalteth himself above all that is called God, or is worshipped; not only above inferior magistrates, but likewise above bishops and primates; not only above bishops and primates, but likewise above kings and emperors; deposing some, obliging them to kiss his toe, to hold his stirrup, treading even upon the neck of a king, and kicking off the imperial crown with his foot; nay, not only kings and emperors, but likewise above Christ, and God himself: making even the word of God of none effect by his traditions; forbidding what God has commanded; as marriage, the use of the Scriptures, &c. and also commanding, or allowing what God has forbidden, as idolatry, persecution, &c. So that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, &c. he is therefore in profession, a Christian, and a Christian bishop. His sitting in the temple of God, implies plainly his having a seat, or cathedra, in the Christian church: and he sitteth there as God, especially at his inauguration, when he sits upon the high altar in St. Peter's church, and makes the table of the Lord his footstool; and in that position receives adoration. At all times he exercises Divine authority in the church; showing himself that he is God; affecting Divine titles, and asserting that his decrees are of the same, or greater authority, than the word of God. So that the pope is, evidently, according to the titles given him in the public decretals, the God upon earth: at least there is no one like him, who exalteth himself above every god; no one like him, who sitteth as God in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. The foundations of popery were laid in the apostle's days, but the superstructure was raised by degrees; and several ages passed before the building was completed, and the man of sin revealed in full perfection. The tradition that generally prevailed was, that which hindered, was the Roman empire: this tradition might have been derived even from the apostle himself; and therefore the primitive Christians, in the public offices of the church, prayed for its peace and welfare; as knowing that, when the Roman empire should be dissolved, and broken in pieces, the empire of the man of sin would be raised upon its ruins. In the same proportion as the power of the empire decreased, the authority of the church increased; and the latter at the expense and ruin of the former; till at length the pope grew up above all, and the wicked, or lawless one, was fully manifested and revealed. His coming is after the energy of Satan, &c. and does it require any particular proof that the pretensions of the pope, and the corruption of the church of Rome, are all supported and authorized by feigned visions and miracles; by pious frauds, and impositions of every kind? But how much soever the man of sin may be exalted, and how long soever he may reign; yet at last, The Lord shall consume him, &c. This is partly taken from Isai, xi. 4. (And with the breath of His lips shall he slay the wicked one;) where the Jews put an emphasis upon the words the wicked one, as appears from the Chaldee; which renders it, "He shall destroy the wicked Roman." If the two clauses, (as said in the note on ver. 8.) relate to two different events, the meaning is, "that the Lord Jesus shall gradually consume him with the free preaching of the Gospel; and shall utterly destroy him at His second coming, in the glory of the Father." The former began to take effect at the Reformation; and the latter will be accomplished in God's appointed time. The man of sin is now upon the decline, and he will be totally abolished when Christ shall come in judgment. Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Origen, Lactantius, Cyril of Jerusalem, Ambrose, Hilary, Jerome, Augustine, and Chrysostom, give much the same interpretation that has here been given of the whole passage. And it must be owned, that this is the genuine meaning of the apostle; that this only is consistent with the context; that every other interpretation is forced and unnatural; that this is liable to no material objection; that it coincides perfectly with Daniel; that it is agreeable to the tradition of the primitive church; and that it has been exactly fulfilled in all its particulars; which cannot be said of any other interpretation whatever. Such a prophecy as this is an illustrious proof of Divine revelation; and an excellent antidote to the poison of popery."

See the Dissertations on the Prophecies; and Dodd, as above.

10. Dr. Macknight proceeds, in general on the plan of Bishop Newton; but as he thinks that the apostle had the prophecy of Daniel, in chap. vii. and viii. particularly in view, he collates his words with those of the prophet, in the following way:—

Verse 3. That man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition.—Ο ἀρχηγός τῆς ἀμαρτίας, ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀνομίας. "The article," says he, "joined to these appellations, is emphatical, as in the former clause, importing that the ancient prophets had spoken of these persons, though under different names, particularly the prophet Daniel, whose description of the little horn, and blasphemous king, agrees so exactly in the meaning with Paul's descriptions of the man of sin, and son of perdition, and lawless one, that there can be little doubt of their being the same persons; but this will best appear by a comparison of the passages:—

2 Thess. ii. 3.—And that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition.

2 Thess. ii. 4.—Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God.

2 Thess. ii. 7.—Only he who now letteth, will let, until he be taken out of the way.

Dan. vii. 21.—And the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them.

Ver. 25.—And he shall speak great words against the Most High; and shall wear out the saints of the Most High.

Dan. xi. 36.—And the king shall do according to his will; and he shall exalt himself above every God, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods.

Dan. viii. 25.—He shall also stand up against the Prince of princes.

Dan. vii. 8.—I considered the horns, and behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots.

2 Thess. ii. 8.—And then shall that wicked one be revealed.

1 Tim. iv. 1.—Giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils.

Verse 3.—Forbidding to marry.

2 Thess. ii. 8.—Whom the Lord shall consume with the Spirit of His mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of His coming.

Dan. vii. 25.—And he shall think to change times and laws, and they shall be given into his hand. See Dan. viii. 24.

Dan. xi. 38.—In his state he shall honour the god of forces, (Mahuzzim), gods who are protectors, that is tutelary angels and saints.

Dan. xi. 37.—Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, nor the desire of women.

Dan. vii. 11.—I beheld then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spoke, I beheld, even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed and given to the burning flame.

Verse 26.—And they shall take away his dominion to consume and destroy it to the end.

Dan. viii. 25.—He shall be broken without hand."

After entering into great detail in his Notes, he sums up the whole in the following manner:—

"Now, as in the prophecies of Daniel, empires governed by a succession of kings, are denoted by a single emblem; such as, by a part of an image, a single beast, a horn, &c. of a beast; so in Paul's prophecy, the man of sin, and son of perdition, and the lawless one, may denote an impious tyranny, exercised by a succession of men who cause great misery and ruin to others; and who, at length, shall be destroyed themselves. It is true, the Papists contend, that one person only is meant by these appellations, because they are in the singular number, and have the Greek article prefixed to them. But in Scripture we find other words in the singular number, with the article, used to denote a multitude of persons; for example, Rom. i. 17. ὁ δίκαιος, the just one by faith shall live; that is, all just persons whatever. Tit. i. 7. ὁ ἀνεπίσκοπος, the bishop must be blameless; that is, all bishops must be so. 2 John v. 7. ὁ πλανῶν, the deceiver, signifies many deceivers; as is plain from the preceding clause, where many deceivers are said to have gone out. In like manner the false teachers, who deceived Christ's servants, to commit fornication and idolatry, are called, that woman Jezebel, Rev. ii. 20. and the whore of Babylon, Rev. xvii. 5. and in this Prophecy, ver. 7. the Roman emperors, and magistrates under them, are called ὁ συγκρατῶν, he who restraineth.—Further, a succession of persons, arising one after another, are denoted by appellations in the singular number, with the article: for example, the succession of the Jewish high-priests, is thus denoted in the laws concerning them; q. v. xxi. 10, 15. Numb. xxxv. 25—28. As also the succession of the Jewish kings, Deut. xvii. 14. 1 Sam. viii. 11. From these examples, therefore, it is plain that the names, man of sin, son of perdition, lawless one, although in the singular number, and with the article prefixed, may, according to the Scripture idiom, denote a multitude, and even a succession of persons, arising one after another.

"The facts and circumstances mentioned in these prophecies, are, for the most part, so peculiarly marked, that they will not easily apply, except to the persons and events intended by the Spirit of God. And therefore, in every case where different interpretations have been given of any prophecy, the proper method of ascertaining its meaning is, to compare the various events to which it is thought to relate, with the words of the prophecy; and to adopt that as the event intended, which most exactly agrees in all its parts to the prophetic description.

"According to this rule, though many different interpretations have been given of the prophecy under consideration, that, in my opinion, will appear the best founded, which makes it a prediction of the corruptions of Christianity, which began to be introduced into the church in the apostle's days, and wrought secretly all the time the heathen magistrates persecuted the Christians; but which showed themselves more openly after the empire received the faith of Christ, A. D. 312. and, by a gradual progress, ended in the monstrous errors and usurpations of the bishops of Rome, when the restraining power of the emperors was taken out of the way by the incursions of the barbarous nations, and the breaking of the empire into the ten kingdoms, prefigured by the ten horns of Daniel's fourth beast. Now, to be convinced of this, we need only compare the rise and progress of the Papal tyranny, with the descriptions of the man of sin, and of the mystery of iniquity, given in the writings of Daniel and Paul.

"And first, we have shown, in note 1, on ver. 7. that the mystery of iniquity, or the corrupt doctrines which ended in the errors and usurpations of the see of Rome, were working secretly in the apostle's day, as he affirms, ver. 7. and that the power of the Roman emperors, and of the magistrates under them, was that, which then, and during the succeeding ages, restrained the mystery of iniquity in its working, and the man of sin from revealing himself. For, while the power of the state continued in the hands of the heathen rulers, and while they employed that power in persecuting the Christians, the corrupt doctrines and practices introduced by the false teachers did not spread so fast as otherwise they would have done. At least they were not produced to public view as the decisions of heaven, to which all men were bound to pay implicit obedience. But, after the heathen magistrates were taken out of the way, by the conversion of Constantine, and after he and his successors called the Christian bishops to meet in general councils, and enforced their assumption of Divine authority by the civil power; then did they, in these councils, arrogate to themselves the right of establishing what articles of faith and discipline they thought proper; and of anathematizing all who rejected their decrees:

a claim, which, in after times, the bishops of Rome transferred from general councils to themselves. It was in this period that the worship of saints and angels was introduced; celibacy was praised as the highest piety; meats of certain kinds were prohibited; and a variety of superstitious mortifications of the body were enjoined, by the decrees of councils, in opposition to the express laws of God. In this period, likewise idolatry and superstition were recommended to the people by false miracles, and every deceit which wickedness could suggest; such as the miraculous cures pretended to be performed by the bones, and other relics of the martyrs, in order to induce the ignorant vulgar to worship them as mediators; the feigned visions of angels, who they said had appeared to this or that hermit, to recommend celibacy, fastings, mortifications of the body, and living in solitude; the apparitions of souls from purgatory, who begged that certain superstitions might be practised, for delivering them from that confinement: by all which, those assemblies of ecclesiastics, who by their decrees enjoined these practices, showed themselves to be the man of sin, and lawless one, in his first form, whose coming was to be with all power, and signs, and miracles of falsehood; and who opposed every one that is called God, or that is worshipped. For these general councils, by introducing the worship of saints and angels, robbed God of the worship due him; and, by substituting saints and angels, as mediators, in the place of Christ, they degraded Him from his office as Mediator, or rendered it altogether useless. However, though they thus opposed God and Christ, by their unrighteous decrees, yet did they not exalt themselves above every one that is called God, or an object of worship: neither did they sit yet in the temple of God as God, and openly show themselves to be God. These blasphemous extravagancies were to be acted in after times, by a number of particular persons in succession, I mean by the bishops of Rome, after the power of the Christian Roman emperors, and of the magistrates under them, was taken out of the way. For the bishops of that see, having very early obtained from the Christian emperors decrees in their own favour, soon raised themselves above all other bishops; and, by a variety of artifices, made the authority and influence of the body of the clergy centre in themselves; and claimed that infallible authority, which was formerly exercised by general councils, of making articles of faith, and of establishing rules of discipline for the whole Christian community; and of determining, in the last resort, all differences among the clergy; and of anathematizing every one who did not submit to their unrighteous decisions. In this manner did the bishops of Rome establish, in their own persons, a spiritual dominion over the whole Christian world. But not content with this height of power, by dexterously employing the credit and influence which the ecclesiastics, now devoted to their will, had over the laity, in all the countries where they lived; they interfered in many civil matters also, till at length they reared that intolerable fabric of spiritual and civil tyranny conjoined, whereby the underratings, the persons, and the properties, not of the laity only, but also of the clergy themselves, have, for a long time, been most grievously enthralled, in all the countries where Christianity was professed.

“ This height, however, of spiritual and civil tyranny united, the bishops of Rome did not attain, till, as the apostle foretold, that which restrained was taken out of the way; or, till an end was put to the authority of the Roman emperors in the west, by the inroads of the barbarous nations; and, more especially, till the western empire was broken into the ten kingdoms, prefigured in Daniel’s visions, by the ten horns of the fourth beast. For then it was, that the bishops of Rome made themselves the sovereigns of Rome, and of its territory; and so became the little horn which Daniel beheld coming up among the ten horns, and which had the eyes of a man, and a mouth speaking great things; to show, that its dominion was founded on the deepest policy; and that its strength consisted in the bulls, excommunications, and anathemas, which, with intolerable audacity, it uttered against all who opposed its usurpations. And, in process of time, the bishops of Rome, having got possession of three of the kingdoms into which the western empire was broken, signified by three of the horns of Daniel’s fourth beast, being plucked up by the roots before the little horn, they called themselves the vicars of Christ, on pretence that Christ had transferred His whole authority to them. They also thought to change times and laws, as Daniel foretold: for, as the vicars of Christ, they assumed the power of saving and damning men at their own pleasure; and altered the terms of salvation, making it depend, not on faith and holiness, but on the superstitious practices which they had established; and sold the pardon of sins past, and even the liberty of sinning for the future, for money. Moreover, they openly made war with the saints, who resisted their corrupt doctrines and practices, and prevailed against them, and wore out the saints of the Most High; for, by the cruel and bloody persecutions which they obliged the princes who acknowledged their authority, to carry on against those who adhered to the pure doctrines and worship of Christ, they destroyed incredible numbers of them. Nay, by the terror of their excommunications and interdicts, they forced even the most powerful sovereigns to bend to their yoke: thus, with one mouth did they speak very great things. At length they assumed the right of conferring kingdoms, and of deposing princes; and actually deposed some, with the help of the potentates of their communion, who put their mandates in execution. Lastly, to render this exercise of their tyranny the more effectual, they arrogated the power of loosing subjects from their oaths of allegiance; whereby they made void the most sacred of all moral obligations, the obligation of allegiance. But this impious scheme of false doctrine, and the spiritual tyranny built upon it, agreeably to the predictions of the prophet Daniel, and of the apostle Paul, began at the Reformation to be consumed by the breath of the Lord’s mouth; that is, by the Scriptures put into the hands of the laity, and by the preaching of true doctrine out of the Scriptures.

“Upon the whole, I think every impartial person, who attentively considers the foregoing sketch, must be sensible that, in the bishops of Rome, all the characters and actions ascribed by Daniel to the little horn, and by Paul to the man of sin, and the lawless one, are clearly united. For, according to the strong workings of Satan, with all power, and signs, and miracles of falsehood, they have opposed Christ, and exalted themselves above all that is called God, or an object of worship; and have long sat in the temple of God, as God, showing themselves that they are God: that is, they exercise the power and prerogatives of God. And seeing, in the acquisition and exercise of their spiritual tyranny, they have trampled upon all laws, human and divine; and have encouraged their votaries in the most enormous acts of wickedness, the Spirit of God has, with the greatest propriety, given them the appellations of the man of sin, the son of perdition, and the lawless one. Further, as it is said, the man of sin was to be revealed in his season, there can be little doubt that the dark ages, in which all learning was overturned by the irruption of the northern barbarians, were the season allotted to the man of sin, for revealing himself. Accordingly, we know, that in these ages, the corruptions of Christianity, and the usurpations of the clergy, were carried to the greatest height. In short, the annals of the world cannot produce persons and events to which the things written in this passage can be applied with so much fitness as to the bishops of Rome. Why then should we be in any doubt concerning the interpretation and application of this famous prophecy?”

“At the conclusion of our explication of the prophecy concerning the man of sin, it may be proper to observe, that the events foretold in it, being such as never took place in the world before, and, in all probability, never will take place in it again; the foreknowledge of them was certainly a matter out of the reach of human conjecture, or foresight. It is evident, therefore, that this prophecy, which from the beginning has stood on record, taken in conjunction with the accomplishment of it verified by the concurrent testimony of history, affords an illustrious proof of the Divine original of that revelation of which it makes a part, and of the inspiration of the person from whose mouth it proceeded.” See Dr. Macknight's Commentary and Notes, Vol. III. page 100, &c.

With all this evidence before him, the intelligent reader will now be enabled to judge for himself, and to adopt for his own, that opinion which appears to be the best supported by circumstances and facts. The labours of the above learned men have certainly narrowed the principal subjects of inquiry; and we may now safely state that, in this very obscure prophecy, the Spirit of God had in view either the Jewish, or an apostate Christian church, possessing great spiritual and secular influence and jurisdiction. That the words appear to apply best to the conduct of many of the popes, and the corruptions of the Romish church, need no proof; but to which of these churches, or to what other church or system we should apply them, some men, as eminent for their piety as for their learning, hesitate to declare; yet I must acknowledge, that the most pointed part of the evidence here adduced, tends to fix the whole on the Romish church, and on none other.

Whatever may be intended here by the words mystery of iniquity, we may safely assert, that it is a mystery of iniquity to deny the use of the Sacred Scriptures to the common people: and that the church that does so, is afraid to come to the light. Nothing can be more preposterous and monstrous, than to call people to embrace the doctrines of Christianity, and refuse them the opportunity of consulting the book in which they are contained. Persons who are denied the use of the Sacred Writings, may be manufactured into different forms and modes; and be mechanically led to believe certain dogmas, and perform certain religious acts; but, without the use of the Scriptures, they never can be intelligent Christians; they do not search the Scriptures, and therefore they cannot know Him of whom these Scriptures testify. The mystery of iniquity contained in this prohibition, works now, and has worked long; but did it work in the apostles' times?—Did it work in the church at Thessalonica?—Is it possible that the present crop should have been produced from so remote a seed? What does that most solemn adjuration of the apostle, 1 Thess. v. 27. mean? I charge you by the Lord, that this epistle be read unto ALL the holy brethren. Why was such a charge necessary?—Why should it be given in so awful a manner? Does it not absolutely imply, that there would be attempts made to keep all the holy brethren from seeing this epistle? And can we conceive that less was referred to in the delivery of this very awful adjuration? This mystery of iniquity did work then, in the Christian church: even then, attempts were made to hide the Scriptures from the common people. And does not this one consideration serve more to identify the prophecy than any thing else? Let him that readeth understand.—See the notes on 1 Thess. v. 27. and at the end of that chapter.

CHAPTER III.

The apostle recommends himself and his brethren to the prayers of the church, that their preaching might be successful; and that they might be delivered from wicked men, 1, 2. Expresses his confidence in God, and them; and prays that they may patiently wait for the coming of Christ, 3—5. Gives them directions concerning strict discipline in the church; and shows how he and his fellow-labourers had behaved among them; not availing themselves of their own power and authority, 6—9. Shows them how to treat disorderly and idle people; and not to get weary in well-doing, 10—13. Directs them not to associate with those who obey not the orders contained in this epistle, 14, 15. Prays that they may have increasing peace, 16. And concludes with his salutation and benediction, 17, 18.

Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may 3 But the Lord is faithful, who shall

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. Finally, brethren] The words τελευστω, do not mean finally, but furthermore—to come to a conclusion—what remains is this—I shall only add—any of these phrases expresses the sense of the original.

Pray for us] God, in the order of His grace and providence, has made even the success of His Gospel dependent, in a certain measure, on the prayers of His followers. Why He should do so, we cannot tell; but that He has done so, we know: and they are not a little criminal who neglect to make fervent supplications for the prosperity of the cause of God.

May have free course] They were to pray that the doctrine of the Lord, ἡ λογο του Κυριου, might run, ρευη, an allusion to the races in the Olympic games; that, as it had already got into the Stadium, or race-course, and had started fairly, so it might run on, get to the goal, and be glorified, i. e. gain the crown, appointed for him that should get first to the end of the course.

Verse 2. Unreasonable and wicked men] The word απειρω, which we translate unreasonable, signifies rather disorderly, unmanageable, persons out of their place; under no discipline; regardless of law and restraint; and ever acting agreeably to the disorderly and unreasonable impulse of their own minds.

For all men have not faith] The word πιστις, is, without doubt, to be taken here for fidelity, or trustworthiness, and not for faith; and this is agreeable to the meaning given to it in the very next verse: but the Lord is faithful, πιστος
δε οτιν ὁ Κυριος.

There are many even of those who have received a measure of the Divine light, in whom we cannot confide; they are irregular, disorderly, and cannot be brought under regular discipline: to these we cannot trust, either ourselves or any thing that concerns the cause of God.
But the Lord is worthy of your whole confidence; doubt Him not; He will establish you, and keep you from any evil to which you may be exposed by these, or such like persons.

Verse 3. From evil.] Απο του πονηρου, may be translated from the devil, or from the evil one.

5 And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ.

6 Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us.

7 For yourselves know how ye ought to follow us: for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among
you;

They had disorderly men, wicked men, and the evil one, or the devil, to contend with: God alone could support and give them the victory;
He had promised to do it, and He might ever be confided in as being invariably faithful.

Verse 4. And we have confidence] We have no doubt of God's kindness towards you; He loves you, and will support you: and we can confide in you, that ye are now acting as we have desired you, and will continue so to do.

Verse 5. The Lord direct your hearts into the love of God] The love of God is the grand motive and principle of obedience: this must occupy your hearts; the heart is irregular in all its workings; God alone, by His Spirit, can direct it into His love, and keep it right-ακαταρακτου, give a proper direction to all its passions; and keep them in order, regularly, and purely.

The patience of Christ.] Such patience, under all your sufferings and persecutions, as Christ manifested under His. He bore meekly the contradiction of sinners against Himself; and, when He was reviled, He reviled not again.

Verse 6. That ye withdraw yourselves] Have no fellowship with those who will not submit to proper discipline; who do not keep their place; ακαταρακτου, such as are out of their rank, and act according to their own wills and caprices; and particularly such as were idle and busy-bodies.
These he had ordered, 1 Thess. iv. 11, 12. that they should study to be quiet, mind their own business, and work with their hands; but it appears that they had paid no attention to this order; and now he desires the church to exclude such from their communion.

And not after the tradition] This evidently refers to the orders contained in the first epistle; and that first epistle was the tradition which they had received from him. It was, therefore, no unwritten word; no uncertain saying, handed about from one to another; but a part of the revelation which God had given, and which they found in the body of his epistle. These are the only traditions which the church of God is called to regard.

Verse 7. We behaved not ourselves disorderly]

10 For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, ^d that if any would not work, neither should he eat.

we kept our place, and discharged all its duties.

Verse 8. Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought] We paid for all we bought; and worked with our hands, that we might have money to buy what was necessary.

Labour and travail night and day] We were incessantly employed; either in preaching the Gospel, visiting from house to house, or working at our calling. As it is very evident that the church at Thessalonica was very pious, and most affectionately attached to the apostle, they must have been very poor, seeing he was obliged to work hard, to gain himself the necessaries of life. Had they been able to support him, he would not have worked with labour and travail, night and day, that he might not be burdensome to them: and as we may presume that they were very poor, he could not have got his support among them without adding to their burdens. To this, his generous mind could not submit: it is no wonder, therefore, that he is so severe against those who would not labour, but were a burden to the poor followers of God.

Verse 9. Not because we have not power] We have the power, εξουσια, the right to be maintained by those in whose behalf we labour. The labourer is worthy of his hire, is a maxim universally acknowledged and respected; and they who preach the Gospel, should live by the Gospel: the apostle did not claim his privilege, but laboured for his own support, that he might be an example to those whom he found otherwise disposed; and that he might spare the poor. See 1 Cor. ix. 1, &c.

Verse 10. If any would not work, neither should he eat] This is a just maxim; and universal nature inculcates it to man. If man will work, he may eat; if he do not work, he neither can eat, nor should he eat. The maxim is founded on these words of the Lord, In the sweat of thy brow thou shalt eat bread. Industry is crowned with God's blessing; idleness is loaded with His curse. This maxim was a proverb among the Jews. Men who can work, and will rather support themselves by begging, should not get one morsel of bread. It is a sin to minister to necessities that are merely artificial.

Verse 11. For we hear that there are some] It is very likely that St. Paul kept up some sort 11 For we hear that there are some ^a which walk among you disorderly, ^b working not at all, but are busy-bodies.

12 ^c Now them that are such, we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, ^d that with quietness they work, and eat their own bread.

of correspondence with the Thessalonian church; for he had heard every thing that concerned their state, and it was from this information that he wrote his second epistle.

Disorderly] Ατακτους, out of their rank; not keeping their own place.

Working not at all] Either lounging at home, or becoming religious gossips; μεινω εργαζομενος, doing nothing :—

Busy-bodies] Πενηταζουμενος, doing every thing they should not do; impertinent meddlers with other people's business; prying into other people's circumstances, and domestic affairs; magnifying, or minifying; mistaking, or underrating every thing; newsmongers and tell-tales: an abominable race, the curse of every neighbourhood where they live; and a pest to religious society. There is a fine paranomasia in the above words, and evidently intended by the apostle.

Verse 12. With quietness they work] Μετα ησυχιας, with silence; leaving their tale-bearing, and officious intermeddling. Less noise, and more work!

That—they work and eat their own bread] Their own bread, because earned by their own honest industry. What a degrading thing to live on the bounty or mercy of another, while a man is able to acquire his own livelihood! He who can submit to this, has lost the spirit of independence, and has in him a beggar's heart; and is capable of nothing but base and beggarly actions. The apostle's command is a cure for such; and the church of God should discountenance such, and disown them.

Verse 13. Be not weary in well-doing] While ye stretch out no hand of relief to the indolent and lazy, do not forget the real poor; the genuine representatives of an impoverished Christ; and rather relieve a hundred undeserving objects, than pass by one who is a real object of charity.

Verse 14. If any man obey not] They had disobeyed his word in the first epistle, and the church still continued to bear with them; now he tells the church, if they still continue to disregard what is said to them, and particularly his word, by this second epistle, they are to mark them as being totally incorrigible, and have no fellowship with them.

Some construe the words δια της επιστολης, with ἑν ἑπισημοῦ, give me information of that man by a letter: let me hear of his continued obstinacy; and send me his name. This was probably in order to excommunicate him, and deliver him over to Satan, for the destruction of the body, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. The words of the original will bear either construction; that in the text, or that given above.

Verse 15. Count him not as an enemy] Consider him still, more an enemy to himself, than to you; and admonish him as a brother, though you have ceased to hold religious communion with him. His soul is still of infinite value; labour to get it saved.

Verse 16. The Lord of peace] Jesus Christ, who is called our peace, Ephes. ii. 14. and the Prince of peace, Isa. ix. 6. May He give you peace, for He is the fountain and dispenser of it.

Always] Both in your own consciences, and among yourselves.

By all means] Παντι τροπῃ: by all means, methods, occasions, instruments, and occurrences: peace or prosperity in every form and shape.

Instead of ἑν παντι τροπῃ, in every way, &c. ἑν παντι τοπω, in every place; is the reading of A*D*FG. some others; with the Vulgate and Itala. Chrysostom, Ambrosiaster, Augustin, and others, have the same reading: May God grant you prosperity, always and every where.

The Lord be with you all] This is agreeable to the promise of our Lord, Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world, Matt. xxviii. 20. May the Lord who has promised to be always with His true disciples, be with you. Christians are the temple of God; and the temple of God has the Divine presence in it. May you ever continue to be His church, that the Lord God may dwell among you!

Verse 17. The salutation of Paul with mine own hand] It is very likely that Paul employed an amanuensis generally, either to write what he dictated, or to make a fair copy of what he wrote. In either case, the apostle always subscribed it; and wrote the salutation and benediction with his own hand: and this was what authenticated all his epistles. A measure of

The Second Epistle to the Thessalonians was written from Athens.—Common Greek text. The Second Epistle to the Thessalonians, which was written at Laodicea in Syria, was sent by the hands of Tychicus—SYRIAC. The end of the epistle: and it was written at Athens.—ARABIC.

No subscription in the VULGATE. Written at Corinth.—Author of the SYNOPSIS.—sent by Titus and Onesimus.—

Latin Prologue.

The Second Epistle to the Thessalonians, written from Rome. No. 71. a MS. of the Vatican library, written about the 11th century.

The chief of the MSS. either have no subscription, or agree with some of the above Versions.

That the epistle was neither written at Athens, Laodicea, nor Rome, has been sufficiently proved: and that it was written, as well as the first, at Corinth, is extremely probable. See the Preface; and what has been said on the preceding epistle.

I have often had occasion to observe, that the subscriptions at the end of the Sacred Books are not of Divine origin; they are generally false; and yet some have quoted them as making a part of the Sacred text; and have adduced them in support of some favourite opinions!

END OF NOTES ON THE SECOND EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

PREFACE
TO THE
FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE
TO TIMOTHY.

IN order to find out who this person was, it will be necessary to consult the Acts of the Apostles, where the first mention is made of him; and by collating what is there said, with certain passages in the epistle, we shall find who he was, and the probable time in which the epistle was addressed to him.

Paul and Barnabas, in the course of their first apostolic journey among the Gentiles, came to Lystra, a city of Lycaonia, where they preached the Gospel for some time; and, though persecuted, with considerable success.—See Acts xiv. 5, 6. It is very likely that here they converted to the Christian faith a Jewess named Lois, with her daughter Eunice, who had married a Gentile, by whom she had Timothy, and whose father was probably at this time dead; the grandmother, daughter, and son, living together.—Compare Acts xvi. 1—3. with 2 Tim. i. 5. It is likely that Timothy was the only child; and it appears that he had been brought up in the fear of God, and carefully instructed in the Jewish religion, by means of the holy Scriptures.—Compare 2 Tim. i. 5. with 2 Tim. iii. 15. It appears also, that this young man drank into the apostle's spirit; became a thorough convert to the Christian faith; and that a very tender intimacy subsisted between St. Paul and him.

When the apostle came from Antioch, in Syria, the second time to Lystra, he found Timothy a member of the church, and so highly reputed and warmly recommended by the church in that place, that St. Paul took him to be his companion in his travels. Acts xvi. 1—3. From this place we learn, that although Timothy had been educated in the Jewish faith, he had not been circumcised, because his father, who was a Gentile, would not permit it. When the apostle had determined to take him with him, he found it necessary to have him circumcised, not from any supposition that circumcision was necessary to salvation; but because of the Jews, who would neither have heard him nor the apostle, had not this been done: the Gospel testimony they would not have received from Timothy, because a heathen; and they would have considered the apostle in the same light, because he associated with such.—See the notes on Acts xvi. 3.

It is pretty evident that Timothy had a special call of God to the work of an evangelist; which the elders of the church at Lystra knowing, set him solemnly apart to the work by the imposition of hands, 1 Tim. iv. 14. And they were particularly led to this, by several prophetic declarations relative to him, by which his Divine call was most clearly ascertained.—See 1 Tim. i. 18. and iii. 14. Some think, that after this appointment by the elders, the apostle himself laid his hands on him; not for the purpose of his evangelical designation; but that he might receive those extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit, so necessary in those primitive times, to demonstrate the truth of the Gospel.—See 2 Tim. i. 6, 7. Yet, it is likely that Timothy had not two ordinations; one by the elders of Lystra, and another by the apostle; as it is most probable that St. Paul acted with that ἐπιτιμία, or eldership, mentioned 1 Tim. iv. 14. among whom, in the imposition of hands, he would undoubtedly act as chief.

Timothy, thus prepared to be the apostle's fellow-labourer in the Gospel, accompanied him and Silas, when they visited the churches of Phrygia, and delivered to them the decrees of the apostles and elders of Jerusalem, freeing the Gentiles from the law of Moses, as a term of salvation. Having gone through these countries, they at length came to Troas, where Luke joined them, as appears from the phraseology of his history, Acts xvi. 10, 11, &c. In Troas a vision appeared to Paul, directing them to go into Macedonia. Loosing therefore from Troas, they all passed over Neapolis; and from thence went to Philippi, where they converted many, and planted a Christian church. From Philippi they went to Thessalonica, leaving Luke at Philippi; as appears from his changing the phraseology of his history at verse 40. We may therefore suppose, that at their departing, they committed the converted at Philippi to Luke's care. In Thessalonica they were opposed by the unbelieving Jews, and obliged to flee to Berræa, whither the Jews from Thesalonica followed them. To elude their rage, Paul, who was most obnoxious to them, departed from Berræa by night, to go to Athens, leaving Silas and Timothy at Berræa. At Athens, Timothy came to the apostle, and gave him such an account of the afflicted state of the Thesalonian brethren, as induced him to send Timothy back to comfort them. After that Paul preached at Athens; but with so little success, that he judged it proper to leave Athens, and go forward to Corinth, where Silas and Timothy came to him, and assisted in converting the Corinthians. And when he left Corinth, they accompanied him, first to Ephesus, then to Jerusalem, and after that, to Antioch, in Syria. Having spent some time in Antioch, Paul set out with Timothy on his third apostolical journey; in which, after visiting all the churches of Galatia and Phrygia, in the order in which they had been planted, they came to Ephesus the second time, and there abode for a considerable time. In short, from the time Timothy first joined the apostle, as his assistant, he never left him, except when sent by him on some special errand. And by his affection, fidelity, and zeal, he so recommended himself to all the disciples, and acquired such authority over them, that Paul inserted his name in the inscription of several of the letters which he wrote to the churches, to show that their doctrine was one and the same. His esteem and affection for Timothy, the apostle expressed still more conspicuously, by writing to him those excellent letters in the canon, which bear his name; and which have been of the greatest use to the ministers of the Gospel ever since their publication; by directing them to discharge all the duties of their function in a proper manner.

The date of this epistle has been a subject of much controversy, some assigning it to the year 56, which is the common opinion; and others to 64 or 65. A great balance of probability appears to be in favour of this latter date; and it appears to me that the arguments of Drs. Macknight and Paley are decisive in favour of the latter date. The former, in his Preface, gives a very clear view of the question.

In the third verse of the first chapter of this epistle, the apostle says:—As I entreated thee to abide in Ephesus, when going into Macedonia, so do; that thou mayest charge some not to teach differently. From this it is plain, 1. That Timothy was in Ephesus when the apostle wrote his first letter to him. 2. That he had been left there by the apostle, who at parting with him entreated him to abide at Ephesus. 3. That this happened when Paul was going from Ephesus to Macedonia; and, 4. That he had entreated Timothy to abide in Ephesus, for the purpose of charging some teachers in that church not to teach differently from the apostles. In the history of the Acts of the Apostles, there is no mention of Paul's going from Ephesus to Macedonia, but once; viz. after the riot of Demetrius, Acts xx. 1. for which reason Theodoret, among the ancients, and among the moderns, Estius, Baronius, Capellus, Grotius, Lightfoot, Salmasius, Hammond, Witsius, Lardner, Pearson, and others, have given it as their opinion, that the apostle speaks of that journey in his First Epistle to Timothy. Yet, if I am not mistaken, the following circumstance will show their opinion to be ill-founded:

1. When the apostle went from Ephesus to Macedonia, as related Acts xx. 1. Timothy was not in Ephesus, having gone from that city into Macedonia with Erastus by the apostle's direction, Acts xix. 22. And in the First Epistle to the Corinthians, which was written after Timothy's departure from Ephesus, we are informed that he was to go from Macedonia to Corinth. 1 Cor. iv. 7. I have sent to you Timothy. 1 Cor. xvi. 10. If Timothy be come, take care that he be among you without fear. Ver. 11. Send him forward in peace, that he may come to me, for I expect him with the brethren. But before Timothy returned from Corinth, the apostle left Ephesus, and went into Macedonia, where the brethren above-mentioned met him, 2 Cor. ii. 12, 13. having Timothy in their company; as is plain from his joining the apostle, in his Second Epistle to the Corinthians, which all agree was written from Macedonia, immediately after the brethren from Corinth gave the apostle an account of the success of his letter. Wherefore since Timothy was not in Ephesus when the apostle left the city, after the riot, it could not be the occasion on which the apostle said to him, As I entreated thee to abide in Ephesus, when going into Macedonia, so do. But the journey into Macedonia, of which he speaks, must have been some other journey, not mentioned in the Acts. To remove this difficulty, we are told that Timothy returned from Corinth to the apostle, before his departure from Ephesus, and that he was left there after the riot; but that something happened which occasioned him to follow the apostle into Macedonia; that there he joined him in writing his Second Epistle to the Corinthians; and having finished his business in Macedonia, he returned to Ephesus and abode there, agreeably to the apostle's request. But as these suppositions are not warranted by the history of the Acts, Timothy's joining the apostle in his Second Epistle to the Corinthians, may still be urged as a proof that he came with the brethren directly from Corinth to Macedonia. Further, that Timothy did not go from Macedonia to Ephesus after joining the apostle in his Second Epistle to the Corinthians, but returned with him to Corinth to receive the collections, is, I think, plain, from Acts xx. 4. where he is mentioned as one of those who accompanied Paul from Corinth to Jerusalem with the collections.

2. When the apostle wrote his First Epistle to Timothy, "he hoped to come to him soon;" chap. iii. 14. but from the history of the Acts it is certain, that in no letter written to Timothy, after the riot, till his first confinement at Rome, could the apostle say, "that he hoped to come to him soon." He could not say so in any letter written from Troas, the first place he stopped at after leaving Ephesus. For, at that time he was going into Macedonia and Achaia, to receive the collections from the churches in these provinces. Neither could he say so after writing his second to the Corinthians from Macedonia. For, in that epistle he told the Corinthians he was coming to them with the Macedonian brethren, who were commissioned to attend him on his voyage to Jerusalem, with the collections, 2 Cor. ix. 4. and that he meant to sail directly from

EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

Corinth to Judea, 2 Cor. i. 16. As little could he write to Timothy, that "he hoped to come to him soon," when he altered his resolution, on occasion of the laying in wait of the Jews, and returned into Macedonia, Acts xx. 3. For he was then in such haste to be in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, that, when he came to Miletus, instead of going to Ephesus, he sent for the elders of that church to come to him, Acts xx. 16, 17. When he arrived at Judea, he could not write that "he hoped to come to Ephesus soon;" for he was imprisoned a few days after he went up to Jerusalem; and having continued two years in prison at Cæsarea, he was sent bound to Rome, where, likewise being confined, he could not, till towards the conclusion of that confinement, write to Timothy, that "he hoped to come to him soon." And even then, he did not write his First Epistle to Timothy; for Timothy was with him at the conclusion of his confinement, Phil. ii. 19, 23.

3. From the first epistle, we learn that the following were the errors Timothy was left in Ephesus to oppose; 1. Fables invented by the Jewish doctors, to recommend the observance of the law of Moses, as necessary to salvation; 2. Uncertain genealogies; by which individuals endeavoured to trace their descent from Abraham, in the persuasion that they would be saved, merely because they had Abraham for their father; 3. Intricate questions, and strifes about some words in the law; perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds, who reckoned that which produced most gain, to be the best kind of godliness; and, 4. Oppositions of knowledge, falsely so named. But these errors had taken place in the Ephesian church, before the apostle's departure; for, in his charge to the Ephesian elders at Miletus, he foretold that the false teachers were to enter in among them after his departing. Acts xx. 29. "I know that after my departing, shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. 30. Also of your own selves, shall men arise, speaking perverse things to draw away disciples after them." The same thing appears from the two epistles which the apostle wrote to the Corinthians; the one from Ephesus, before the riot of Demetrius, the other from Macedonia, after that event; and, from the epistle which he wrote to the Ephesians themselves, from Rome, during his confinement there. For, in none of these letters, is there any notice taken of the above-mentioned errors, as subsisting among the Ephesians at the time they were written; which cannot be accounted for, on supposition that they were prevalent in Ephesus when the apostle went into Macedonia, after the riot. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the first to Timothy, in which the apostle desired him to abide in Ephesus, for the purpose of opposing the Judaizers and their errors, could not be written either from Troas or from Macedonia, after the riot, as those who contend for the early date of the epistle, suppose; but it must have been written some time after the apostle's release from confinement in Rome, when, no doubt, he visited the church at Ephesus, and found the Judaizing teachers there busily employed in spreading their pernicious errors.

4. In the First Epistle to Timothy, the same sort of persons, doctrines, and practices, are reprobated, which are condemned in the second. Compare 1 Tim. iv. 1—6. with 2 Tim. iii. 1—5. and 1 Tim. vi. 20. with 2 Tim. ii. 14.—and 1 Tim. vi. 4. with 2 Tim. ii. 16. The same commands, instructions, and encouragements, are given to Timothy, in the first epistle, as in the second. Compare 1 Tim. vi. 13, 14. with 2 Tim. iv. 1—6. The same remedies for the corruptions which had taken place among the Ephesians, are prescribed in the first epistle, as in the second. Compare 1 Tim. iv. 14. with 2 Tim. i. 6, 7. and, as in the second epistle, so in the first, every thing is addressed to Timothy, as superintendent both of the teachers and of the laity, in the church at Ephesus; all which, I think, imply that the state of things among the Ephesians was the same when the two epistles were written; consequently, that the first epistle was written only a few months before the second; and not long before the apostle's death.

These arguments appeared so convincing to Pearson, Le Clerc, L'Enfant, Cave, Fabricius, Mill, Whitty, and others, that they were unanimously of opinion, Timothy was left by the apostle in Ephesus, as he went into Macedonia, not after the riot of Demetrius, but after he was released from his first confinement at Rome. And from that circumstance, they infer that he did not write his first epistle till some time in the end of the year 64, or in the beginning of 65.—I think it was written from Nicopolis.

To the late date of this first epistle, there are three plausible objections which must not be overlooked:

1. It is thought that, if the First Epistle to Timothy was written after the apostle's release, he could not, with any propriety, have said to Timothy, ch. iv. 12. "Let no man despise thy youth;" but it is replied, that Servius Tullius, in classing the Roman people, as Aulus Gellius relates, lib: x. c. 28. divided their age into three periods: childhood, he limited to the age of seventeen; youth, from that to forty-six; and old age, from that to the end of life. Now, supposing Timothy to have been eighteen years old A. D. 50. when he became Paul's assistant, he would be no more than 32, A. D. 64, two years after the apostle's release; when, it is supposed, this epistle was written. Wherefore, being then in the period of life, which, by the Greeks, as well as the Romans, was considered as youth, the apostle, with propriety, might say to him, "Let no man despise thy youth."

2. When the apostle touched at Miletus, in his voyage to Jerusalem with the collections, the church at Ephesus had a number of elders; that is, of bishops and deacons, who came to him at Miletus, Acts xx. 17. It is therefore asked, What occasion was there, in an epistle written after the apostle's release, to give Timothy directions concerning the ordination of bishops and deacons, in a church where there were so many elders already? The answer is, the elders who came to the apostle at Miletus, in the year 58, may have been too few for the church at Ephesus, in her increased state, in the year 65. Besides, false teachers had then entered, to oppose whom, more bishops and deacons might be needed than were necessary in the year 58; not to mention that some of the first elders having died, others were wanted to supply their places.

3. Because, the apostle wrote to Timothy, that "he hoped to come to him soon," 1 Tim. iii. 14.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EPISTLE, &c.

it is argued that the letter in which this is said, must have been written before the apostle said to the Ephesian elders, Acts xx. 25. "I know that all ye, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more." But if, by this, the First Epistle to Timothy is proved to have been written before the apostle's interview with the elders at Miletus, his epistles to the Philippians, to the Hebrews, and to Philemon, in which he promised to visit them, must likewise have been written before the interview; in regard, his declaration respected the Philippians, the Hebrews, and Philemon, as well as the Ephesians; for they certainly were persons among whom the apostle had gone preaching the kingdom of God. Yet no commentator ever thought the epistles above-mentioned were written to them before the apostle's interview with the Ephesian elders; on the contrary, it is universally acknowledged that these epistles were written four years after the interview; namely, during the apostle's first imprisonment at Rome. Wherefore, when he told the Ephesian elders, that they, and his other converts, among whom he had gone preaching the kingdom of God, should see his face no more, as it was no point, either of faith or practice, which he spake, he may well be supposed to have declared nothing but his own opinion, resulting from his fears. He had lately escaped the rage of the Jews, who laid wait for him in Cenchrea, to kill him, Acts xx. 3. This, with their fury on former occasions, filled him with such anxiety, that in writing to the Romans from Corinth, he requested them, "to strive together with him in their prayers, that he might be delivered from the unbelieving in Judea," Rom. xv. 30, 31. Further, that in his own speech to the Ephesian elders, the apostle only declared his own persuasion dictated by his fears, and not any suggestion of the Spirit, I think plain from what he had said immediately before, verse 22. "Behold, I go bound in the spirit to Jerusalem, not knowing the things that shall befall me there—23. Save that the Holy Ghost witnesseth in every city, saying, that bonds and afflictions abide me."—Wherefore, although his fears were happily disappointed, and he actually visited the Ephesians after his release; his character, as an inspired apostle, is not hurt in the least: if, in saying "he knew they should see his face no more," he declared, as I have said, his own persuasion only, and no dictate of the Holy Ghost.

Dr. Paley's arguments are the same in substance; but he does not mention Dr. Macknight, who wrote before him, and whose work he must have seen.

The principal difficulty in this opinion is, that it necessarily implies that St. Paul visited Ephesus after his liberation at Romē; which appears so contrary to what he said to the Ephesian church, "that they should see his face no more." Dr. Paley, however, finds some further presumptive evidences, that the apostle must have visited Ephesus. The epistles to the Philippians and to Philemon, were written while the apostle was a prisoner at Rome: to the former, he says, "I trust in the Lord, that I also myself shall come shortly;" and to the latter, who was a Colossian, he gives this direction, "But withal, prepare me also a lodging, for I trust that, through your prayers, I shall be given unto you." An inspection of the map will show us, that Colosse was a city of Asia Minor, lying eastward, and at no great distance from Ephesus; Philippi was on the other, i. e. the western side of the Ægean Sea. Now, if the apostle executed his purpose, and came to Philemon at Colosse, soon after his liberation, it cannot be supposed that he would omit to visit Ephesus, which lay so near it; and where he had spent three years of his ministry. As he was also under a promise to visit the church at Philippi shortly, if he passed from Colosse to Philippi, he could hardly avoid taking Ephesus in his way. See Paley's Horæ Paulinæ, pag. 293. This, taken in connexion with the preceding arguments, can leave little doubt that the date of this epistle must be referred to a time subsequent to St. Paul's liberation from Rome, and consequently, to the end of the year 64, or the beginning of the year 65.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. Paul, an apostle—by the commandment of God] We have already seen that the term apostolos, apostle, literally signifies a person sent from one to another, without implying any particular dignity in the person; or importance in the message. But it is differently used in the New Testament, being applied to those who were sent expressly from God Almighty, with the message of salvation to mankind. It is, therefore, the highest character any human being can have; and the message is the most important which even God himself can send to his intelligent creatures. It was by the express command of God that St. Paul went to the Gentiles, preaching the doctrine of salvation by faith in Christ Jesus.

Jesus Christ—our hope] Without Jesus, the world was hopeless: the expectation of being saved, can only come to mankind by His Gospel. He is called our hope, as He is called our life, our peace, our righteousness, &c. because from Him hope, life, peace, righteousness, and all other blessings, proceed.

Verse 2. My own son in the faith] Brought to salvation through Christ by my ministry alone. Probably, the apostle speaks here according to this Jewish maxim, כל חסדו כן תהיו, ויהי קולו עלי הרבה כאילו יורו לו to his neighbour's son, is considered by the Scripture as if he had begotten him. Sanhedrin fol. xix. 2. And they quote Numb. iii. 1. as proving it; These are the generations of Aaron and Moses—and these are the names of the sons of Aaron.—“Aaron,” say they, “begot them, but Moses instructed them; therefore they are called by his name.” See Schoetgen.

But το αγαπητον υιου, may mean my beloved son, for in this sense το αγαπητον is not unfrequently used.

In the faith] The word πίστις, faith, is taken here for the whole of the Christian religion; faith in Christ being its essential characteristic.

Grace, mercy, and peace] GRACE, the favour and approbation of God. MERCY, springing from that grace, pardoning, purifying, and supporting. PEACE, the consequence of this manifested mercy: peace of conscience, and peace with God; producing internal happiness, quietness, and assurance.

Verse 3. I besought thee] The apostle had seen that a bad seed had been sown in the church; and, as he was obliged to go then into Macedonia, he wished Timothy, on whose prudence,

3 As I besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, when I went into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine, piety, and soundness in the faith, he could depend, to stay behind, and prevent the spreading of a doctrine that would have been pernicious to the people's souls. I have already supposed that this epistle was written after Paul had been delivered from his first imprisonment at Rome; about the end of the year 64, or the beginning of 65.—See the Preface. When, therefore, the apostle came from Rome into Asia, he no doubt visited Ephesus, where, ten years before, he had planted a Christian church; and as he had not time to tarry then, he left Timothy to correct abuses.

4 Neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith: so do.

That thou mightest charge some] He does not name any persons; the Judaizing teachers, are generally supposed to be those intended: and the term οριστοι, some, certain persons, which he uses, is expressive of high disapprobation, and, at the same time, of delicacy; they were not apostles nor apostolic men; but they were undoubtedly members of the church at Ephesus, and might yet be reclaimed.

Verse 4. Neither give heed to fables] Idle fancies, things of no moment: doctrines and opinions unauthenticated; silly legends, of which no people ever possessed a greater stock than the Jews. Their Talmud abounds with them. and the English reader may find them in abundance, in Siehlin's Jewish traditions, 2 vols. 8vo.

Endless genealogies] I suppose the apostle to mean those genealogies which were uncertain, that never could be made out, either in the ascending or descending line; and principally such as referred to the great promise of the Messiah, and to the priesthood. The Jews had scrupulously preserved their genealogical tables, till the advent of Christ; and the evangelists had recourse to them, and appealed to them in reference to our Lord's descent from the house of David:—Matthew taking this genealogy in the descending, Luke in the ascending line. And whatever difficulties we may now find in these genealogies, they were certainly clear to the Jews; nor did the most determined enemies of the Gospel attempt to raise one objection to it from the appeal which the evangelists had made to their own public and accredited tables. All was then certain; but we are told that Herod destroyed the public registers: he, being an Idumean, was jealous of the noble origin of the Jews; and that none might be able to reproach him with his descent, he ordered the genealogical tables, which were kept among the archives in the temple, to be burnt.—See Euseb. lib. i. cap. 8. From this time the Jews could refer to their genealogies only from memory, or from those imperfect tables which had been preserved in private hands ; and to make out any regular line from these, must have been endless and uncertain. It is probably to this that the apostle refers ; I mean the endless and useless labour which the attempts to make out these genealogies, must produce ; the authentic tables being destroyed. This, were all other proofs wanting, would be an irresistible argument against the Jews, that the Messiah is come ; for their own prophets had distinctly marked out the line by which he was to come ; the genealogies are now all lost ; nor is there a Jew in the universe, that can show from what tribe he is descended. There can, therefore, be no Messiah to come, as none could show, let him have what other pretensions he might, that he sprang from the house of David. The Jews do not, at present, pretend to have any such tables ; and, far from being able to prove the Messiah from his descent, they are now obliged to say, that when the Messiah comes, he will restore the genealogies by the Holy Spirit that shall rest upon him. For, says Maimonides, "In the days of the Messiah, when His Kingdom shall be established, all the Israelites shall be gathered together unto Him ; and all shall be classed in their genealogies by His mouth, through the Holy Spirit that shall rest upon Him, as it is written, Malac. iii. 3. He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver, and He shall purify the sons of Levi: first, he will purify the Levites, and shall say, 'This man is a descendant from the priests: and this, of the stock of the Levites,' and He shall cast out those who are not of the stock of Israel ; for behold it is said, Ezra ii. 63. And the Tirshitha said—they should not eat of the most holy things, till there stood up a priest with Urim and Thummim. Thus, by the Holy Spirit, the genealogies are to be revised." See Schoetgen.

Some learned men suppose, that the apostle alludes here to the Æons among the Gnostics and Valentinians, of whom there were endless numbers, to make up what was called their pleroma ; or to the sephiroth, or splendours of the Cabalists. But it is certain that these heresies had not arrived to any formidable head in the apostle's time ; and it has long been a doubt with me, whether they even existed at that time ; and I think it the most simple way, and most likely to be the intention of the apostle, to refer all to the Jewish genealogies, which he calls Jewish tables, Tit. i. 14. to which we know they were strongly and even conscientiously attached ; and which, at this time, it must have been extremely difficult to make out.

Instead of γενεαλογίας, genealogies, some learned men have conjectured that the original word was κενολογίας, empty words, vain speeches : but this conjecture is not supported by any MS. or Version.

Which minister questions] They are the foundation of endless altercations and disputes ; for, being uncertain and not consecutive, every person had a right to call them in question ; as we may naturally suppose, from the state in which the genealogical tables of the Jews then were, that many *chasm*s must be supplied in different lines, and consequently, much must be done by conjecture.

Rather than godly edifying] Such discussions as these had no tendency to promote piety. Many, no doubt, employed much of their time in inquiring, who were their ancestors, which they should have spent in obtaining that grace by which, being born from above, they might have become the sons and daughters of God Almighty.

Instead of ανακαινισαν Θεου, godly edifying, or the edification of God ; οικονομιας Θεου, the economy or dispensation of God, is the reading of almost every MS. in which this part of the epistle is extant, (for some MSS. are here mutilated) and of almost all the Versions, and the chief of the Greek fathers. Of the genuineness of this reading scarcely a doubt can be formed ; and though the old reading, which is supported by the Latin fathers and the Vulgate, gives a good sense ; yet the connexion and spirit of the place show that the latter must be the true reading.

What had Jewish genealogies to do with the Gospel? Men were not to be saved by virtue of the privileges or piety of their ancestors. The Jews depended much on this : we have Abraham to our father, imposed silence on every check of conscience, and every godly reproof which they received for their profligacy and unbelief. In the dispensation of God, FAITH in Christ Jesus, was the only means and way of salvation.—These endless and uncertain genealogies, produced no faith : indeed they were intended as a substitute for it ; for those who were intent on making out their genealogical descent, paid little attention to faith in Christ. This dispensation, says the apostle, is by faith, ανακαινισαν Θεου τινω τω πνευματι : it was not by natural descent, nor by works, but by faith in Christ ; therefore it was necessary that the people, who were seeking salvation in any other way, should be strictly informed that all their toil and labour would be vain.

Verse 5. Now the end of the commandment is charity] These genealogical questions lead to strife and debate ; and the dispensation of God leads to love, both to God and man, through faith in Christ. These genealogical questions leave the heart under the influence of all its vile tempers and evil propensities ; FAITH in Jesus purifies the heart. No inquiry of this kind can add to any thing by which the guilt of sin can be taken away ; but the Gospel proclaims pardon, through the blood of the Lamb, to every believing penitent. The end, aim, and design of God, in giving this dispensation to the world, is that men may have an unfeigned faith, having swerved have turned aside unto vain jangling ;

such as lays hold on Christ crucified, and produces a good conscience, from a sense of the pardon received ; and leads on to purity of heart ; Love to God and man being the grand issue of the grace of Christ here below ; and this fully preparing the soul for eternal glory. He whose soul is filled with love to God and man, has a pure heart, a good conscience, and unfeigned faith. But these blessings no soul can ever acquire, but according to God's dispensation of faith.

The paraphrase and note of Dr. Macknight on this verse are very proper : " Now the scope of the charge to be given by thee to these teachers, is, that instead of inculcating fables and genealogies, they inculcate love to God and man, proceeding from a pure heart, and directed by a good conscience, and nourished by unfeigned faith in the Gospel doctrine. The word παραγγελια, denotes a message or order, brought to one from another, and delivered by word of mouth. The charge here meant, is that which the apostle ordered Timothy to deliver to the teachers in Ephesus : for he had said, ver. 3. I had besought thee to abide still at Ephesus, iva παραγγυλιαι, that thou mightest charge some : here he tells him what the scope of this charge was to be."

Of faith unfeigned] Πιστις αυθοιγου, a faith not hypocritical. The apostle appears to allude to the Judaizing teachers, who pretended faith in the Gospel, merely that they might have the greater opportunity to bring back to the Mosaic system, those who had embraced the doctrine of Christ crucified. This is evident from the following verse.

Verse 6. From which, some having swerved] From which some, though they have pretended to aim at the ταυτο, scope or mark, have missed that mark. This is the import of the original word αποχεσταντι.

Turned aside unto vain jangling] The original term ματαιολογιας, signifying empty or vain-talking ; discourses that turn to no profit ; a great many words and little sense ; and that sense not worth the pains of hearing. Such, indeed, is all preaching where Jesus Christ is not held forth.

Verse 7. Teachers of the law] To be esteemed or celebrated as Rabbins ; to be reputed cunning in solving knotty questions and enigmas, which answered no end to true religion. Of such the rabbinical teaching was full.

Understanding neither what they say] This is evident from almost all the Jewish comments which yet remain. Things are asserted which are either false or dubious ; words, the import of which they did not understand, were brought to illustrate them ; so that it may be said, they

9 ° Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for man-slayers, understand not what they say, nor whereof they affirm. I will give one instance from the Jerusalem Targum, on Gen. i. 15. And God made two great lights, and they were equal in splendour twenty-one years, the six hundred and seventy-second part of an hour excepted ; and afterwards the moon brought a false accusation against the sun, and therefore she was lessened ; and God made the sun the greater light to superintend the day, &c. I could produce a thousand of a similar complexion.

Verse 8. But we know that the law is good] The law, as given by God, is both good in itself ; and has a good tendency. This is similar to what the apostle had asserted, Rom. vii. 12—16. The law is holy ; and the commandment is holy, just, and good ; where, see the note.

If a man use it lawfully] That is, interpret it, according to its own spirit and design ; and use it for the purpose for which God has given it : for the ceremonial law was a schoolmaster to lead us unto Christ ; and Christ is the end of that law for justification to every one that believes. Now, those who did not use the law in reference to these ends, did not use it lawfully ; they did not construe it according to its original design and meaning.

Verse 9. The law is not made for a righteous man] There is a moral law as well as a ceremonial law : as the object of the latter is to lead us to Christ ; the object of the former is to restrain crimes, and inflict punishment on those that commit them. It was, therefore, not made for the righteous as a restrainer of crimes, and an inflicter of punishments ; for the righteous avoid sin ; and, by living to the glory of God, expose not themselves to its censures. This seems to be the mind of the apostle ; he does not say that the law was not made for a righteous man ; but ου κατα, it does not lie against a righteous man ; because he does not transgress it : but it lies against the wicked : for such, as the apostle mentions, have broken it, and grievously too, and are condemned by it. The word κατα, lies, refers to the custom of writing laws on boards, and hanging them up in public places, within reach of every man, that they might be read by all : thus all would see against whom the law lay.

The lawless] Ανομοι, those who will not be bound by a law, and acknowledge none ; therefore have no rule of moral conduct.

Disobedient] Απειθασιαι, those who acknowledge no authority ; from a, negative ; and πειρασμο, to subject ; they neither acknowledge law, nor executive authority ; and consequently endeavour to live as they list ; and from such dispositions, all the crimes in the following catalogue may naturally spring.

For the ungodly] Ασεβείς, the irreligious; those who do not worship God, or have no true worship; from α, negative, and σεβω, to worship. For sinners, αμαρτανους, those who transgress the laws; from α, negative, and μαρτηνω, to hit the mark. This has been elsewhere explained.

For unholly] Ανομοιοι, persons totally polluted, unclean within, and unclean without; from α, negative, and νομιοι, holy.

And profane] Βεβηλους, such who are so unholly and abominable as not to be fit to attend any public worship, from βε, denoting privation, or separation; and βηλος, a threshold, or pavement; particularly of a temple. Our word profane comes from procul à fano, "far from the temple." When the ancients, even heathens, were about to perform some very sacred rites, they were accustomed to command the irreligious to keep at a distance: hence that saying in a fragment of Orpheus:—

Ἐργετομαι οὐς θυμικ ἐστὶ θυραε δ' ἐπιθωθε βεβηλοιοι Πλασι ομοε.

"I will speak to whom it is lawful; but these doors, O shut against the profane."

And that of Virgil, Æn. vi. ver. 258.

Procul! O procul! este profani.

Far! ye profane, get hence!

Murderers of fathers] Πατρικταις; the murder of a father or a mother, notwithstanding the deep fall of man, and the general profligacy of the world, has been so rare, and is a crime so totally opposite to nature, that few civilized nations have found it necessary to make laws against it. Yet, such monsters, like the most awful and infrequent portents, have sometimes terrified the world with their appearance. But I think the original does not necessarily imply the murder of a father, or of a mother: πατρικταις, comes from πατηρ, a father, and αλλωω, to strike, and may mean simply beating, or striking a father or mother: this is horrible enough; but to murder a parent, out herods Herod.

Manlayers] Ανδραφονους, murderers simply; all who take away the life of a human being, contrary to law. For no crime, unless it be murder, should any man lose his life. If the law did not speak differently, I should not scruple to say, that he whose life is taken away, except for murder, is murdered.

Verse 10. For whoremongers] Πορναιοι, adulterers, fornicators, and prostitutes of all sorts.

Them that defile themselves with mankind] Αερωμωυταις, from αερω, a male, and ωμω, a bed; a word too bad to be explained. A sodomite.

Menstealers] Ανδραποδισταις, slave-dealers; whether those who carry on the traffic in human flesh and blood; or those who steal a person in order to sell him into bondage; or those who buy such stolen men or women; no matter of what colour, or what country; or those who sow dissensions among barbarous tribes, in order that they who are taken in war, may be sold into slavery. Or the nations who legalize, or connive at, such traffic; all these are menstealers, and God classes them with the most flagitious of mortals.

For liars] Ψευσαις, they who speak for truth what they know to be false; and even they who tell the truth in such a way as to lead others to draw a contrary meaning from it.

For perjured persons] Επιουχοιοι, from επι, against, and ουχοιοι, an oath: such as do, or leave undone, any thing contrary to an oath, or moral engagement; whether that engagement be made by what is called swearing, or by an affirmation, or promise of any kind.

And if there be any other thing] Every species of vice and immorality, all must be necessarily included that is contrary to sound doctrine, to the immutable moral law of God; as well as to the pure precepts of Christianity where that law is incorporated, explained, and rendered, if possible, more and more binding.

Verse 11. According to the glorious Gospel] The sound doctrine mentioned above, which is here called αγγελιοι της δοξης του μακαριου Θεου, the Gospel of the glory of the blessed or happy God; a dispensation which exhibits the glory of all His attributes; and, by saving man in such a way as is consistent with the glory of all the Divine perfections, while it brings peace and good-will among men, brings glory to God in the highest. Sin has dishonoured God, and robbed Him of His glory; the Gospel provides for the total destruction of sin; even in this world; and thus brings back to God His glory.

Verse 12. I thank Christ] I feel myself under infinite obligation to Christ who hath strengthened me, ωδυναμωσεντη, who hath endued me with various miraculous gifts of His Holy Spirit; and put me into the ministry, διακονιας, the deaconship, the service of mankind, by preaching the Gospel; for, that He counted me, He knew that I would be faithful to the charge that was delivered to me.

Verse 13. A blasphemer] Speaking impiously and unjustly of Jesus, His doctrine, His ways, and His followers.

And—persecutor] Endeavouring, to the uttermost of his power, to exterminate all who called on the name of the Lord Jesus.

obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief.

14 And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant, with faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.

15 This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief.

Luke 23. 31. John 9. 39. 41. Acts 5. 17. & 26. 9. Rom. 6. 20. 1 Cor. 15. 10. 2 Tim. 1. 13. Luke 7. 47. Ch. 3. 1. & 4. 9. 2 Tim. 2. 11. Tit. 3. 8. Matt. 9. 13. Mark 8. 17. Luke 5. 32. & 19. 10. Rom. 5. 8. 1 John 3. 5.

And injurious] Καὶ ἄγιστος, as full of insolence as I was of malevolence: and yet, all the while, thinking I did God service, while sacrificing men and women to my own prejudices and intolerance!

I did it ignorantly, in unbelief.] Not having considered the nature and evidences of Christianity, and not having believed that Jesus was the promised Messiah, I acted wholly under the prejudices that influenced my countrymen in general. God, therefore, showed me mercy, because I acted under this influence; not knowing better. This extension of mercy does not, however, excuse the infuriated conduct of Saul of Tarsus; for he says himself that he was exceedingly mad against them. Let us beware, lest we lose the man's former crimes, in his after character.

Verse 14. The grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant] The original is very emphatic; that grace of our Lord, υπερβαλουσας, hath superabounded; it manifested itself in a way of extraordinary mercy.

With faith and love] Not only pardoning such offences, but leading me to the full experimental knowledge of Christianity; of that faith and love which are essential to it; and giving me authority to proclaim it to mankind.

Verse 15. Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners] This is one of the most glorious truths in the Book of God; the most important that ever reached the human ear, or can be entertained by the heart of man. All men are sinners; and, as such, condemned, justly condemned, to eternal death. Christ Jesus became incarnate, suffered, and died, to redeem them; and, by His grace and Spirit, saves them from their sins. This saying or doctrine, he calls, first, a faithful or true saying, πιστη δ' λογος; it is a doctrine that may be credited, without the slightest doubt or hesitation: God himself hath spoken it; and the death of Christ, and the mission of the Holy Ghost, sealing pardon on the souls of all who believe, have confirmed and established the truth.

Secondly, it is worthy of all acceptation; as all need it, it is worthy of being received by all. It is designed for the whole human race; for all that are sinners, is applicable to all, because all are sinners; and may be received by all, being put within every man's reach; and brought to every man's ear and bosom, either by the letter of the word; or, where that revelation is not yet come, by the power of the Divine Spirit, the true light from Christ, that lightens every man that cometh into the world. From this, also, it is evident that the death of Christ, and all its eternally saving effects, were designed for every man.

Of whom I am chief.] Ὁν πρωτος ειμι εγω. Confounding Paul the apostle, in the fulness of his faith and love, with Saul of Tarsus, in his ignorance, unbelief, and persecuting rage, we are in the habit of saying, "This is a hyperbolic expression, arguing the height of the apostle's modesty and humility; and must not be taken according to the letter." I see it not in this light; I take it not with abatement; it is strictly and literally true; take the whole of the apostle's conduct, previously to his conversion, into consideration, and was there a greater sinner converted to God, from the incarnation to his own time? Not one; he was the chief; and keeping his blasphemy, persecution, and contumely in view, he asserts, of all that the Lord Jesus came into the world to save, and of all that He had saved, to that time, I am chief. And who, however humble now, and however flagitious before, could have contested the points with him? He was, what he has said; and as he has said it. And it is very probable that the apostle refers to those in whom the grace and mercy of God were, at the first promulgation of the Gospel, manifested: and comparing himself with all these, he could with propriety say, Ὁν πρωτος ειμι, of whom I am the first; the first, who from a blasphemous persecutor, and might we not add, murderer? (see the part he took in the martyrdom of Stephen,) became a preacher of that Gospel which I had persecuted. And hence, keeping this idea strictly in view, he immediately adds, Howbeit, for this cause I obtained mercy; that in me first, εγω πρωτος, Jesus Christ might show forth all long-suffering, for a pattern to them which should hereafter, των μελλοντων, believe on Him to life everlasting. And this great display of the pardoning mercy of God, granted in so singular a manner, at the very first promulgation of the Gospel, was most proper to be produced as a pattern, for the encouragement of all penitent sinners, to the end of time. If Jesus Christ, with whom there can be no respect of persons, saved Saul of Tarsus, no sinner need despair.

burst of thanksgiving and gratitude to God, naturally arose from this subject then under his pen and eye. God has most wondrously manifested His mercy in this beginning of the Gospel, by saving me, and making me a pattern to all them that shall hereafter believe on Christ. He is βασιλεὺς τῶν αἰώνων, the king of eternities; the eternity à parte ante, and the eternity, à parte post; the eternity that was before time was: and the eternity that shall be when time is no more. Therefore ever living to justify and save sinners, to the end of the world.

Immortal] Ἀσβαστον, incorruptible, not liable to decay, or corruption: a simple uncompound-ed essence; incapable, therefore, of decomposition; and consequently permanent and eternal. One MS. the latter Syriac, in the margin, the Vulgate, one copy of the Itala, and some of the Latin Fathers, read ἀθάνατον, immortal, which our translation follows; but it is not the original reading.

Invisible] ἄσφατον, one who fills all things, works every where, and yet is invisible to angels and men; the perfect reverse of false gods and idols, who are confined to one spot, work no where; and, being stocks and stones, are seen by every body.

The only wise God] The word σοφον, wise, is omitted by AD*FG. Syriac, Erpen's, Arabic, Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala. Some of the Greek Fathers quote it sometimes, and omit it at others; which shows that it was an unsettled reading, probably borrowed from Romans xvi. 27.—See the note there. Griesbach leaves it out of the text. Without it, the reading is very strong and appropriate to the only God; nothing visible or invisible being worthy of adoration but Himself.

Be honour] All the respect and reverence that can be paid by intelligent beings; ascribing to Him, at the same time, all the glory, excellencies, and perfections, which can be possessed by an intelligent, unoriginated, independent, and eternal Being: and this, for ever and ever: through eternity.

Verse 18. This charge] See the note on ver. 5. It was a charge that the Judaizing teachers should not teach differently from that doctrine which the apostle had delivered to him.—See ver. 3.

According to the prophecies] This may refer to some predictions by inspired men, relative to what Timothy should be: and he wishes him to act in all things conformably to those predictions. It was predicted that he should have this high and noble calling: but his behaviour in that calling was a matter of contingency, as it respected the use he might make of the grace of science; which some having put away, concerning faith ^a have made shipwreck:

his calling. The apostle therefore exhorts him to war a good warfare, &c. He was now called to that estate to which the prophecies referred; and now he is to act worthily or unworthily of that calling, according as he fought or did not fight the good warfare, and according as he held or did not hold faith and a good conscience.

Some think that the προφητείας αποκρυφίας, the foregoing prophecies, refer to revelations which the apostle himself had received concerning Timothy: while others think that the word is to be understood of advices, directions, and exhortations, which the apostle had previously delivered to him: we know that αποκρυφία, signifies to speak to men, to edification, to exhortation, and to comfort.—See 1 Cor. xiv. 3. This is a very sober, and good sense of the passage.

War a good warfare] The trials and afflictions of the followers of God, are often represented as a warfare or campaign, see Isai. xl. 2. 1 Cor. ix. 7. 2 Cor. x. 4. and see the reasons of this metaphorical form of speech in the notes on Ephes. vi. 13.

Verse 19. Holding faith] All the truths of the Christian religion; firmly believing them, and fervently proclaiming them to others.

And a good conscience] So holding the truth, as to live according to its dictates; that a good conscience may be ever preserved. As the apostle had just spoken of the Christian's warfare; so he here refers to the Christian armour, especially to the shield and breast-plate: the shield of faith, and the breast-plate of righteousness.—See on Ephes. vi. 13, &c. and 1 Theas. v. 8.

Which some having put away] Ἀποσπαστους; having thrust away; as a fool-hardy soldier might his shield and his breast-plate; or a mad sailor, his pilot, helm, and compass.

Concerning faith] The great truths of the Christian religion.

Have made shipwreck] Being without the faith, that only infallible system of truth; and a good conscience, that skilful pilot, that steady and commanding helm; that faithful and invariable loadstone, have been driven to and fro by every wind of doctrine; and getting among shoals, quicksands, and rocks, have been shipwrecked and engulfed.

Verse 20. Of whom is Hymeneus and Alexander] Who had the faith, but thrust it away; who had a good conscience, through believing, but made shipwreck of it. Hence we find that all this was not only possible, but did actually take place, though some have endeavoured to maintain the contrary; who, confounding eternity with a state of probation, have supposed that, if a man once enter into the grace of God, in this life, he must necessarily continue in it to all eternity. Thousands of texts, and thousands of facts, refute this doctrine.

Delivered unto Satan] For the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit might be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. See what is noted on 1 Cor. v. 5. what this sort of punishment was, no man now living knows. There is nothing of the kind referred to in the Jewish writings. It seems to have been something done by mere apostolical authority, under the direction of the Spirit of God.

Hymeneus, it appears denied the resurrection; see 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18. but whether this Alexander be the same with Alexander the copper- smith, 2 Tim. iv. 14. or the Alexander, Acts xix. 33. cannot be determined. Probably, he was the same with the coppersmith. Whether they were brought back to the acknowledgment of the truth, does not appear. From what is said in the second epistle, the case seems extremely doubtful. Let him who most assuredly standeth, take heed lest he fall.

He that is self-confident is already half fallen. He who professes to believe that God will absolutely keep him from falling finally, and neglects watching unto prayer, is not in a safer state. He who lives by the moment, walks in the light, and maintains his communion with God, is in no danger of apostacy.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. I exhort—that first of all] Prayer for the pardon of sin, and for obtaining necessary supplies of grace, and continual protection from God, with gratitude and thanksgiving for mercies already received, are duties which our sinful and dependent state renders absolutely necessary; and which should be chief in our view, and first of all performed. It is difficult to know the precise difference between the four words used here by the apostle. They are sometimes distinguished thus:

Supplications] Δευσεις, prayers for averting evils of every kind.

Prayers] Προσυχαι, prayers for obtaining the good things, spiritual and temporal, which ourselves need.

Intercessions] Ερωτησεις, prayers in behalf of others.

Giving of thanks] Ευχαριστια, praises to God as the parent of all good, for all the blessings which we and others have received. It is probable that the apostle gives directions here for public worship: and that the words may be thus paraphrased: "Now I exhort, first of all, that in the public assemblies, deprecations of evils, and supplications for such good things as are necessary; and intercessions for their conversion, and thanksgiving for mercies, be offered in behalf of all men; for heathens as well as for Christians; and for enemies as well as for friends."—See Macknight.

Verse 2. For kings] As it is a positive maxim of Christianity to pray for all secular governors; so it has ever been the practice of Christians. When St. Cyprian defended himself before the Roman proconsul, he said, Anci (Deum)

deprecamur—pro nobis et pro omnibus hominibus; et pro incolumitate ipsorum Imperatorum: "We pray to God, not only for ourselves, but for all mankind, and particularly for the emperors."

Tertullian in his Apology, is more particular; Oramus pro omnibus Imperatoribus, vitam illis prolixam, imperium securum, domum tutam, exercitus fortes, senatum fidelem, populum probum, orbem quietum, et quæcunque hominis, et Cæsaris vota sunt. Apol. cap. 30. "We pray for all the emperors, that God may grant them long life, a secure government, a prosperous family, vigorous troops, a faithful senate, and obedient people; that the whole world may be in peace; and that God may grant both to Cæsar, and to every man, the accomplishment of their just desires."

So Origen, Ευχαιμεθα τωι βασιλει και αρχονται μετα της βασιλικαις δυναμεις και σωφρονα του λογισμου εχοντα; ηριθικαι. Cont. Cels. lib. viii. "We pray for kings and rulers, that, with their royal authority, they may be found possessing a wise and prudent mind." Indeed they prayed even for those by whom they were persecuted. If the state be not in safety, the individual cannot be secure: self-preservation, therefore, should lead men to pray for the government under which they live. Rebellions and insurrections seldom terminate even in political good: and even where the government is radically bad, revolutions themselves are most precarious and hazardous. They who wish such commotions, would not be quiet under the most mild and benevolent government.

That we may lead a quiet and peaceable life] We thus pray for the government, that the public peace may be preserved. Good rulers have power to do much good; we pray that their authority may be ever preserved; and well directed. Bad rulers have power to do much evil; we pray that they may be prevented from thus using their power. So that whether the rulers be good or bad, prayer for them is the positive duty of all Christians; and the answer to their prayers, in either case, will be the means of their being enabled to lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty.

Verse 3. This is good and acceptable] Prayer for all legally constituted authorities, is good in itself, because useful to ourselves and to the public at large; and it is acceptable in the sight of God, our Saviour; and this is its highest sanction, and its highest character; it is good; it is well-pleasing to God.

Verse 4. Who will have all men to be saved] Because he wills the salvation of all men; therefore he wills that all men should be prayed for. In the face of such a declaration, how can any Christian soul suppose that God ever unconditionally and eternally reprobated any man! Those who can believe so, one would suppose, can have little acquaintance either with the nature of God, or the bowels of Christ.

And come unto the knowledge of the truth.] The truth, the Gospel of Christ, should be proclaimed to them: and it is the duty of all who know it, to diffuse it far and wide: and when it is made known, then it is the duty of those who hear it, to acknowledge and receive it: this is the proper import of the original word, that they may come, ως μαρτυρων αυτους, to the acknowledgment of the truth; that they may receive it as the truth, and make it the rule of their faith; the model and director of their life and actions.

Verse 5. There is one God] Who is the Maker, Governor, and Preserver, of all men, of every condition, and of every nation: and equally wills the salvation of all.

And one Mediator] The word μεσσιος, Mediator, signifies, literally, a middle person, one whose office it is to reconcile two parties at enmity; and hence Suidas explains it by επιπραξιος, a peace-maker. God was offended with the crimes of men: to restore them to his peace, Jesus Christ was incarnated; and being God and man, both God and men met in, and were reconciled by Him. But this reconciliation required a sacrifice on the part of the Peace-maker, or Mediator; hence what follows:—

Verse 6. Who gave himself a ransom] The word λυτρος, signifies a ransom paid for the redemption of a captive; and ατιλυτρος, the word used here, and applied to the death of Christ, signifies that ransom which consists in the exchange of one person for another, or the redemption of life by life: or as Schleuser has expressed it, in his translation of these words: Qui, morte sua omnes liberavit a vitiositatis vi et penis; a servitute quasi et miseris peccatorum. "He, who by His death has redeemed all from the power and punishment of vice, from the slavery and misery of sinners." As God is the God and Father of all; for, there is but one God, ver. 5. and Jesus Christ the Mediator of all; so he gave Himself a ransom for all: i. e. for all that God made; consequently for every human soul; unless we could suppose that there are human souls of which God is not the Creator; for, the argument of the apostle is plainly this:—1. There is one God—2. This God is the Creator of all—3. He has made a revelation of his kindness to all—4. He will have all men to be saved, and come unto the knowledge of the truth; and, 5. He has provided a Mediator for all, who has given himself a ransom for all. As surely as God has created all men, so surely has Jesus Christ died for all men. This is a truth which the nature and revelation of God unequivocally proclaim.

To be testified in due time.] The original words το μαρτυριον καιρος ιδιος, are not very clear, and have been understood variously. The most authentic copies of the printed Vulgate have simply, Testimonium temporibus suis; which CALMET translates, rendant ainsi temoignage au tems marqúe.—"Thus rendering testimony at the appointed time." Dr. MACKNIGHT thus, Of which the testimony is in its proper season. WAKEFIELD thus, "That testimony reserved to its proper time." ROSENMULLER, Hec est doctrina, temporibus suis reservata.—"This is the doctrine, which is reserved for its own times:" that is, adds he, quæ suo tempore in omni terrarum orbe tradetur; "The doctrine which in its own time shall be delivered to all the inhabitants of the earth." Here he translates μαρτυριον, doctrine; and contends that this, not testimony, is its meaning; not only in this passage, but in 1 Cor. i. 6. ii. 1, &c. Instead of μαρτυριον, testimony, one MS. Cod. Kk. vi. 4. in the public library, Cambridge, has μυστηριον, mystery; but this is not acknowledged by any other MS. nor by any Version. In D*FG the whole clause is read thus, ω το μαρτυριον καιρος ιδιος. ιδιος. The testimony of which was given in its own times. This is nearly the reading which was adopted in the first printed copies of the Vulgate. One of them now before me reads the passage thus, Cujus testimonium temporibus suis confirmatum est. "The testimony of which is confirmed in its own times." This reading was adopted by Pope Sixtus V. in the famous edition published by him; but was corrected to the reading above, by Pope Clement VIII. And this was rendered literally by our first translator, who witnessing its contempt in his times. This appears to be the apostle's meaning: Christ gave Himself a ransom for all. This, in the times which seemed best to the Divine wisdom, was to be testified to every nation, and people, and tongue. The apostles had begun this testimony; and, in the course of the Divine economy, it has ever since been gradually promulgated; and at present runs with a more rapid course than ever.

Verse 7. I am ordained a preacher] I am set apart, ἁγιασθῆναι, appointed. The word does not imply any imposition of hands, by either bishop or presbytery, as is vulgarly supposed.

I speak the truth in Christ] As I have received my commission from Him; so I testify His truth: I did not run before I was sent: and I speak nothing but what I have received.

A teacher of the Gentiles] Being specially commissioned to preach the Gospel; not to the Jews, but to the nations of the world.

In faith and verity] Faithfully and truly: preaching the TRUTH, and the whole TRUTH, and nothing but the TRUTH; and this fervently, affectionately, and perseveringly.

Instead of ἠπισμῶν, in faith, the Cod. Alexand. has ἠ πνευματικῶν, in spirit. "A teacher of the Gentiles in spirit and truth.

Verse 8. I will therefore] Seeing the apostle had his authority from Christ, and spoke nothing but what he received from Him, his βουλήματ, I will, is equal to, I command.

That men pray] That is, for the blessings promised in this testimony of God. For, although God has provided them, yet He will not give them to such as will not pray. See the note on verse the first, the subject of which is here resumed.

Every where] Ἐν παντι τόπων, in every place. That they should always have a praying heart; and this will ever find a praying place. This may refer to a Jewish superstition. They thought, at first that no prayer could be acceptable that was not offered at the temple at Jerusalem; afterward, this was extended to the Holy Land: but when they became dispersed among the nations, they built oratories or places of prayer, principally by rivers, and by the sea side. And in these they were obliged to allow that public prayer might be legally offered, but nowhere else: in opposition to this, the apostle, by the authority of Christ, commands men to pray every where; that all places belong to God's dominions; and as he fills every place, in every place he may be worshipped and glorified. As to ejaculatory prayer, they allowed that this might be performed standing, sitting, leaning, lying, walking by the way, and during their labour. Beracoth, fol. xi. 1. And yet in some other places they teach differently.—See Schoetgen.

Lifting up holy hands] It was a common custom, not only among the Jews, but also among the heathens, to lift up or spread out their arms and hands in prayer. It is properly the action of entreaty and request; and seems to be an effort to embrace the assistance requested. But the apostle probably alludes to the Jewish custom of laying their hands on the head of the animal which they brought for a sin-offering, confessing their sins, and then giving up the life of the animal as an expiation for the sins thus confessed. And this very notion is conveyed in the original term εναρπάζειν, from αίρειν, to lift up, and επι, upon, or over. This shows us how Christians should pray. They should come to the altar; set God before their eyes; humble themselves for their sins; bring as a sacrifice the Lamb of God; lay their hands on this sacrifice; and by faith offer it to God in their souls' behalf, expecting salvation through His meritorious death alone.

Without wrath] Having no vindictive feeling against any person; harbouring no unforgiving spirit, while they are imploring pardon for their own offences.

The holy hands refer to the Jewish custom of washing their hands before prayer: this was done to signify that they had put away all sin, and purposed to live a holy life.

And doubting] Διαλογισμῶν, or διστακτισμῶν, as in many MSS. reasonings, dialogues. Such as are often felt by distressed penitents, and timid believers: faith, hope, and unbelief appearing to hold a disputation and controversy in their own bosoms; in the issue of which unbelief ordinarily triumphs. The apostle therefore wills them to come, implicitly relying on the promises of God, and the sacrifice and mediation of Jesus Christ.

Verse 9. In like manner also] That is, he wills or commands what follows; as he had commanded what went before.

That women adorn themselves] Καὶ τὰς γυναῖκας ἢ κατασκευάζουσιν. The apostle seems to refer here to different parts of the Grecian and Roman dress. The στολά, stola, seems to have been originally very simple. It was a long piece of cloth doubled in the middle, and sewed up on both sides, leaving room only for the arms: at the top, a piece was cut out, or a slit made, through which the head passed. It hung down to the feet, both before and behind; and was girded with the ζώνη round the body, just under the breast. It was sometimes made with, sometimes without sleeves; and that it might sit the better, it was gathered on each shoulder with a band or buckle. Some of the Greek women wore them open on each side, from the bottom up above the knee, so as to discover a part of the thigh. These were termed παρουμίδες, showers, (discoverers) of the thigh: but it was, in general, only young girls, or immodest women, who wore them thus.

The καταστόλη, seems to have been the same as the pallium or mantle, which was made nearly in the form of the stola; hung down to the waist, both in back and front; was gathered on the shoulder with a band or buckle; had a hole or slit at the top for the head to pass through; and hung loosely over the stola, without being confined by the zona or girdle. Representations of these dresses may be seen in LEN'S Costume des Peuples de l'Antiquité, fig. 11, 12, 13, and 16. A more modest and becoming dress than the Grecian, was never invented: it was, in a great measure, revived in England, about the year 1805; and in it, simplicity, decency, and elegance, were united: but it soon gave place to another mode, in which flippery and nonsense once more prevailed. It was too rational to last long; and too much like religious simplicity to be suffered in a land of shadows, and a world of painted outsides.

With shamefacedness, and sobriety] The stola, catastola, girdle, &c. though simple in themselves, were often highly ornamented both with gold and precious stones; and, both among the Grecian and Roman women, the hair was often crisped and curled in the most variegated and complex manner. To this the apostle alludes, when he says, μη περιμασσῶν, ἢ χυρῶν ἢ μαργαριτῶν ἢ ματινῶν πολυτέλει. Not with plaited hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly raiment. The costly raiment might refer to the materials, out of which the raiment was made, and to the workmanship; the gold and pearls to the ornaments on the raiment.

With shamefacedness—Or modesty, μετὰ ἀσχύ; this would lead them to avoid every thing unbecoming or meretricious in the mode or fashion of their dress.

With sobriety—Μετὰ σωφροσύνης. Moderation would lead them to avoid all unnecessary expense. They might follow the custom or costume of the country, as to the dress itself; for nothing was ever more becoming than the Grecian stola, catastola, and zona: but they must not imitate the extravagance of those who, through impurity or littleness of mind, decked themselves merely to attract the eye of admiration, or set in lying action the tongue of flattery. Woman has been invidiously defined, an animal fond of dress. How long will they permit themselves to be thus degraded?

Those beautiful lines of Homer, in which he speaks of the death of Euphorbus, who was slain by Menelaus, show how anciently the Grecians plaited and adorned their hair:

COWPER.

The extravagance to which the Grecian and Asiatic women went in their ornaments, might well be a reason for the apostle's command.

Κυρῆ, however, denies that any particular article of dress is intended here; and that καταστόλη is to be understood as coming from κατασταλάω, to restrain, repress; and he refers it to that government of the mind, or moderation which women should exercise over their dress and demeanour in general; and every thing that may fall under the observation of the senses. All this, undoubtedly, the apostle had in view.

When either women or men spend much time, cost, and attention, on decorating their persons, it affords a painful proof, that within there is little excellence; and that they are endeavouring to supply the want of mind and moral good by the feeble and silly aids of dress and ornament. Were religion out of the question, common sense would say in all these things, Be decent; but be moderate and modest.

Verse 10. But which becometh, &c.] That is, good works are the only ornaments with which women professing Christianity should seek to be adorned. The Jewish matrons were accustomed to cry to the bride, "There is no need of paint, no need of antimony, no need of braided hair; she herself is most beautiful." The eastern women use a preparation of antimony, which they apply both to the eyes and eyelids; and by which the eye itself acquires a wonderful lustre.

Verse 11. Let the women learn in silence] This is generally supposed to be a prohibition of women's preaching. I have already said what I judge necessary on this subject in the notes on 1 Cor. xi. 5, &c. and xiv. 34, 36, to which places I beg leave to refer the reader.

Verse 12. Nor to usurp authority] A woman should attempt nothing, either in public or private, that belongs to man, as his peculiar function. This was prohibited by the Roman law—In multis juris nostri articulis deterior est conditio feminarum quam masculorum, l. 9. PAP. LIB. 31. QUEST. Femine ab omnibus officiis civilibus vel publicis remota sunt; et ideo nec judices esse possunt, nec magistratum gerere, nec postulare, nec pro alio invenire, nec procuratores existere, l. 2. de Reg. Juris. ULP. LIB. I. AD. SAB.—Vid. POTM. Pand. Justin. Vol. I. p. 13.

"In our laws, the condition of women is, in many respects, worse than that of men: women are precluded from all public offices; therefore, they cannot be judges, nor execute the function of magistrates; they cannot sue, plead, nor act in any case as proxies." They were under many other disabilities, which may be seen in different places of the Pandects.

But to be in silence] It was lawful for men in public assemblies, to ask questions, or even interrupt the speaker, when there was any matter in his speech which they did not understand; but this liberty was not granted to women.—See the note on 1 Cor. xiv. 34, 35.

Verse 13. For Adam was first formed, then Eve.] And by this very act God designed that he should have the pre-eminence. God fitted man, by the robust construction of his body, to live a public life, to contend with difficulties, and to be capable of great exertions. The structure of woman's body plainly proves that she was never designed for those exertions required in public life. In this, the chief part of the natural inferiority of woman is to be sought.

Verse 14. Adam was not deceived] It does not appear that Satan attempted the man: the woman said, The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat. Adam received the fruit from the hand of his wife; he knew he was transgressing; he was not deceived: however, she led the way, and, in consequence of this, she was subjected to the domination of her husband. Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee, Gen. iii. 16. There is a Greek verse, but it is not English law, that speaks a language nearly similar to that above:

For nature suffers not a woman's rule.

For nature suffers not a woman's rule.

God has not only rendered her unfit for it, but He has subjected her, (expressly,) to the government of the man.

means, or through the instrumentality of child-bearing, or of bringing forth a child. Amidst the different opinions given of the meaning of this very singular text, that of Dr. Macknight appears to me the most probable, which I shall give in his paraphrase and note.

"However, though Eve was first in the transgression, and brought death on herself, her husband, and all her posterity, the female sex shall be saved, (equally with the male,) through child-bearing; through bringing forth the Saviour: if they live in faith, and love, and chastity, with that sobriety which I have been recommending."

"The word σωθησεται, saved, in this verse, refers to ἡ γυνή, the woman, in the foregoing verse, which is certainly EvE. But the apostle did not mean to say, that she alone was to be saved through child-bearing, but that all her posterity, whether male or female, are to be saved through the child-bearing of a woman; as it is evident, from his adding, If they live in faith, and love, and holiness, with sobriety. For safety in child-bearing does not depend on that condition at all, since many pious women die in child-bearing; while others of a contrary character are preserved. The salvation of the human race, through child-bearing, was intimated in the sentence passed on the serpent, Gen. iii. 15. I will put enmity between thee and the woman; and between thy seed and her seed. It shall bruise thy head. Accordingly, the Saviour being conceived in the womb of His mother, by the power of the Holy Ghost, he is truly the seed of the woman, who was to bruise the head of the serpent; and a woman, by bringing Him forth, has been the occasion of our salvation." This is the most consistent sense; for, in the way in which it is commonly understood, it does not apply. There are innumerable instances of women dying in child-bed, who have lived in faith, and charity, and holiness, with sobriety: and equally numerous instances of worthless women, slaves to different kinds of vices, who have not only been saved in child-bearing, but have passed through their travail with comparatively little pain: hence, that is not the sense in which we should understand the apostle. Yet, it must be a matter of great consolation and support, to all pious women, labouring of child, to consider that, by the Holy Virgin's child-bearing, salvation is provided for them, and the whole human race; and that, whether they die or live, though their own child-bearing can contribute nothing to their salvation; yet He who was born of a woman has purchased them, and the whole human race, by His blood.

If they continue] Ἐὰν παραμένωσιν, is rightly translated if they live; for so it signifies in other passages, particularly Phil. i. 25. The change in the number of the verb from the singular to the plural, which is introduced here, was designed by the apostle to show that he does not speak of Eve, nor of any particular woman, but of the whole sex. See Macknight.

Without faith, it is impossible to please God, or to be saved; and without love, it will be impossible to obey. FAITH and LOVE are essentially necessary to holiness and sobriety; and, unless both men and women live in these, they cannot, scripturally, expect to dwell with God for ever. Some foolish women have supposed, from this verse, that the very act of bringing forth children, shall entitle them to salvation; and that all who die in child-bed infallibly go to glory! Nothing can be more unfounded than this: faith, love, holiness, and sobriety, are as absolutely requisite for the salvation of every daughter of Eve, as they are for the salvation of every son of Adam. Pain and suffering neither purify nor make atonement. On the mercy of God, in Christ, dispensing remission of sins and holiness, both men and women may confidently rely for salvation; but on nothing else. Let her that readeth understand.

On the subject of dress I will conclude in the words of a late writer: What harm does it do to adorn ourselves with gold, or pearls, or costly array, suppose we can afford it? The first harm it does is; it engenders pride, and where it is already, increases it. Nothing is more natural than to think ourselves better, because we are dressed in better clothes. One of the old heathens was so well apprized of this, that when he had a spite to a poor man, and had a mind to turn his head, he made him a present of a suit of fine clothes.

Entrapelus cuicumque nocere volebat, Vestimenta, dabat preciosa.

He could not then but imagine himself to be as much better, as he was finer, than his neighbour; inferring the superior value of his person from the value of his clothes.

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. This is a faithful saying] Πιστός ὁ λόγος, this is a true doctrine. These words are joined to the last verse of the preceding chapter, by several of the Greek Fathers; and by them referred to the doctrine there stated.

The office of a bishop] Ἐπισκοπία, the episcopacy, oversership, or superintendency. The word ἐπιτορα, which we translate desire, signifies earnest, enger, passionate desire; and σπουδή, which we translate desire, also signifies earnestly to desire, or covet. It is strange that the episcopacy, in those times, should have been an object of intense desire to any man: when it was a place of danger, and exposure to severe labour, want, persecution, and death; without any secular emolument whatsoever! On this ground, I am led to think that the Spirit of God designed these words more for the ages that were to come, than for those which were then: and, in reference to after ages, the whole of what follows, is chiefly to be understood.

A good work] A work it then was; heavy, incessant, and painful. There were no unpreaching prelates in those days; and should be none now. Episcopacy in the church of God, is of Divine appointment; and should be maintained and respected. Under God, there should be supreme governors in the church, as well as in the state. The state has its monarch; the church has its bishop: one should govern ac-

ording to the laws of the land: the other, according to the word of God.

What a constitutional king should be, the principles of the constitution declare; what a bishop should be, the following verses particularly show.

Verse 2. A bishop, then, must be blameless] Our term bishop comes from the Anglo-Saxon bysceop, which is a mere corruption of the Greek επισκοπος, and the Latin episcopus; the former being compounded of epi, over, and σκοπος, to look or inspect, signifies one who has the inspection or oversight of a place, persons, or business: what we commonly term a superintendent. The New Testament writers have borrowed the term from the Septuagint, it being the word by which they translate the פקיד pakid of the Hebrew text, which signifies a visitor, one that personally inspects the people or business over which he presides. It is given by St. Paul to the elders at Ephesus, who had the oversight of Christ's flock, Acts xx. 28. and to such like persons in other places, Phil. i. 1. 1 Tim. iii. 2. the place in question, and Tit. i. 7.

Let us consider the qualifications of a Christian bishop, and then we shall soon discover who is fit for the office.

First—This Christian bishop must be blameless, ἀκατακτά, a person against whom no evil can be proved; one who is every where inviolable; for the word is a metaphor, taken from the case of an expert and skilful pugilist, who so defends every part of his body, that it is impossible for his antagonist to give one hit. So this Christian bishop is one that has so conducted himself as to put it out of the reach of any person to prove that he is either unsound in a single article of the Christian faith, or deficient in the fulfilment of any duty incumbent on a Christian. He must be irreprehensible; for how can he reprove that in others, which they can reprove in him?

Secondly—He must be the husband of one wife. He should be a married man; but he should be no polygamist, and have only one wife; i. e. one at a time. It does not mean, that if he have been married, and his wife die, he should never marry another. Some have most foolishly spiritualized this; and say, that by one wife, the church is intended! This silly quibbling needs no refutation. The apostle's meaning appears to be this, that he should not be a man who has divorced his wife and married another; nor one that has two wives at a time. It does not appear to have been any part of the apostle's design to prohibit second marriages, of which some have made such a serious business. But it is natural for some men to tithe mint and cummin in religion, while they neglect the weightier matters of the law.

Thirdly—He must be vigilant; ῥηλασις, from ῥη, not, and σις, to drink. Watchful—for one who drinks is apt to sleep; so he who abstains from it, is more likely to keep awake, and attend to his work and charge. A bishop has to watch over the church, and watch for it; and this will require all his care and circumspection. Instead of ῥηλασις, many MSS. read ῥηλασις; this may be the better orthography, but makes no alteration in the sense.

Fourthly—He must be sober; σοφρονη, prudent, or, according to the etymology of the word, from σοφ, sound, and ρονη, mind, a man of a sound mind; having a good understanding, and the complete government of all his passions.

A bishop should be a man of learning, of an extensive and well-cultivated mind; dispassionate, prudent, and sedate.

Fifthly—He must be of good behaviour; ἄσπιλον, orderly, decent, grave, and correct, in the whole of his appearance, carriage, and conduct. The preceding term σοφρονη, refers to the mind; this latter, ἄσπιλον, to the external manners. A clownish, rude, or boorish man, should never have the rule of the church of God: the sour, the sullen, and the boisterous, should never be invested with a dignity, which they would most infallibly disgrace.

Sixthly—He must be given to hospitality; φιλοξενος, literally a lover of strangers; one who is ready to receive into his house, and relieve, every necessitous stranger: hospitality, in those primitive times, was a great and necessary virtue; then, there were few inns, or places of public entertainment: to those who were noted for benevolence, the necessitous stranger had recourse. A Christian bishop, professing love to God, and all mankind; preaching a religion, one half of the morality of which was included in, Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself, would naturally be sought to by those who were in distress, and destitute of friends. To enable them to entertain such, the church over which they presided must have furnished them with the means. Such a bishop as St. Paul, who was often obliged to labour with his hands for his own support, could have little to give away. But there is a considerable difference between an apostolical bishop, and an ecclesiastical bishop; the one was generally itinerant, the other comparatively local: the former had neither house nor home; the latter had both. The apostolical bishop had charge of the church of Christ universally; the ecclesiastical bishop, of the churches in a particular district. Such should be addicted to hospitality, or works of charity, especially in these modern times, in which, besides the spiritualities, they possess the temporalities, of the church.

Seventhly—He should be apt to teach; διδακτικος, one capable of teaching; not only wise himself, but ready to communicate his wisdom to others. One whose delight is to instruct the ignorant, and those who are out of the way. He must be a preacher; an able, zealous, fervent, and assiduous preacher.

He is no bishop who has health and strength, and yet seldom or never preaches.

In former times, bishops wrote much, and preached much; and their labours were greatly owned of God. No church since the apostle's days, has been more honoured in this way, than the British church. And although bishops are here, as elsewhere, appointed by the state; yet we cannot help adoring the good providence of God, that, taken as a body, they have been an honour to their function. And, since the reformation of religion in these lands, the bishops have in general been men of great learning and probity; and the ablest advocates of the Christian system, both as to its authenticity, and the purity and excellence of its doctrines and morality.

CHAUCER's character of the Clerk of Oxenford, is a good paraphrase on St. Paul's character of a primitive bishop.

Of studie tokin he wasste cure and bede, Thought oo word spak he more than ther was nebe,

And that was seide in forme and reverence,
And shert, and quick, and ful of high sen-teuce.

Shewing in moral bertue was his speche.
And gladly wolde he lerne, and gladly teche.

Verse 3. An eighth article in his character is, he must not be given to wine] Μη ῥηλασις. This

4 One that ruleth well his own house, ^a having his children in subjection with all gravity;

5 (For if a man know not how to rule word not only signifies one who is inordinately attached to wine, a wine-bibber or tippler; but also one who is imperious, abusive, insolent; whether through wine or otherwise. Kypke contends for this latter acceptation here.—See his Proofs and Examples.

Ninthly—He must be no striker; μη πλῆκτω; not quarrelsome; not ready to strike a person who may displease him; no persecutor of those who may differ from him; not prone, as one wittily said,

“To prove his doctrine orthodox
By apostolic blows and knocks.”

It is said of Bishop Bonner, of infamous memory, that when examining the poor Protestants, whom he termed heretics, when worsted by them in argument, he was used to smite them with his fists; and sometimes scourge and whip them. But though he was a most ignorant and consummate savage; yet from such a scripture as this he might have seen the necessity of surrendering his mitre.

Tenthly—He must not be greedy of filthy lucre: μη εὐχρηστέος; not desirous of base gain: not using base and unjustifiable methods to raise and increase his revenues; not trading or trafficking: for, what would be honourable in a secular character, would be base and dishonourable in a bishop. Though such a trait should never appear in the character of a Christian prelate; yet there is much reason to suspect that the words above are not authentic; they are omitted by ADFG. many others, the Syriac, all the Arabic, Coptic, (and Sahidic?) Ethiopic, Armenian, latter Syriac, (but it appears in the margin,) the Vulgate and Itala, and by most of the Greek Fathers. Griesbach has left it out of the text, in which it does not appear that it ever had a legitimate place. The word covetous, which we have below, expresses all the meaning of this; and it is not likely that the apostle would insert in the same sentence, two words of the same meaning, because they were different in sound. It appears to have been borrowed from verse 8.

Eleventhly—He must be patient; πραῦς, meek, gentle; the opposite to πλεκτηρ, a quarrelsome person, which it immediately follows, when the spurious word εὐχρηστέος, is removed. Where meekness and patience do not reign, gravity cannot exist; and the love of God cannot dwell.

Twelfthly—He must not be a brawler; μαχηρ, not contentious, or litigious, but quiet and peaceable.

Thirteenthly—He must not be covetous; ἀγαπήμων, not a lover of money; not desiring the office, for the sake of its emoluments. He who loves money, will stick at nothing in order to get it. Fair and foul methods are to him alike, provided they may be equally productive. For the sake of reputation, he may wish to get all, his own house, how shall he take care of ^b the church of God ?)

honourably; but if that cannot be, he will not scruple to adopt other methods. A brother heathen gives him this counsel:—“Get money if thou canst, by fair means; if not, get it by hook and by crook.”

Verse 4. The fourteenth qualification of a Christian bishop is, that he ruleth well his own house] Τὸν ἑαυτοῦ οἴκου καλῶς προϊστάμενος, one who properly presides over and governs his own family. One who has the command of his own house; not by sternness, severity, and tyranny, but with all gravity; governing his household by rule; every one knowing his own place, and each doing his own work; and each work having the proper time assigned for its beginning and end. This is a maxim of common sense; no family can be prosperous that is not under subjection; and no person can govern a family, but the head of it, the husband; who is, both by nature and the appointment of God, the head or governor of his own house.—See the note on Ephes. v. 22.

Verse 5. For if a man know not] Method is a matter of great importance in all the affairs of life. It is a true saying, He that does little with his head, must do much with his hands; and even then, the business is not half done, for want of method. Now, he who has a proper method of doing business, will show it in every affair of life, even the least. He who has a disorderly family, has no government of that family; he probably has none, because he has no method, no plan of presiding. It was natural for the apostle to say, If a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God? Look at a man's domestic arrangements; if they be not good, he should not be trusted with any branch of government, whether ecclesiastical or civil.

Verse 6. Fifteenthly—It is required that he be not a novice] Νεοφύτων, not a young plant, not recently ingrafted, that is, one not newly converted to the faith; (Old MS. Bible,) one who has been of considerable standing in the Christian church, if he have the preceding qualifications, may be safely trusted with the government of that church. It is impossible, that one who is not long and deeply experienced in the ways of God, can guide others in the way of life. Hence presbyters or elders were generally appointed to have the oversight of the rest; and hence presbyter and bishop seem to have been two names for the same office; yet all presbyters or elders certainly were not bishops; because all presbyters had not the qualifications marked above. But the apostle gives another reason, lest being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil. It is natural for man to think himself of more importance than his fellows, when they are entrusted to his government. The apostle's term πρησθῆναι, puffed up, inflated, is a metaphor taken from a bladder into the condemnation of the devil.

7 Moreover he must have a good report ^a of them which are without; lest he fall into reproach ^b and the snare of the devil.

8 Likewise must ^c the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, ^d not given to inuch wine, not greedy of filthy lucre;

9 * Holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience.

10 And let these also first be proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless.

when filled with air or wind. It is a substance, has a certain size, is light, can be the sport of the wind, but has nothing in it but air. Such is the classical coxcomb: a mere puff ball, a disgrace to his function; and despised by every intelligent man. Should we not say to those whom it may concern,

“From such apostles, O ye mitred heads, Preserve the church! and lay not careless hands On skulls that cannot teach, and will not learn.”

From these words of the apostle, we are led to infer, that pride or self-conceit was the cause of the devil's downfall. In Eccus. x. there are some excellent sayings concerning pride:—“Pride is hurtful before God and man.” “Why is earth and ashes proud?” “The beginning of pride is when one departeth from God;” “For pride is the beginning of sin; and he that hath it shall pour out abomination.” “PRIDE was not made for MEN.”—See verses 7. 9, 12, 13, and 18, of the above chapter.

Verse 7. The sixteenth requisite is, that he should have a good report of them which are without] That he should be one who had not been previously a profligate; or scandalous in his life. Such a person, when converted, may be a worthy private member of religious society; but I believe God rarely calls such to the work of the ministry; and never to the episcopate. Them that are without, are the Jews, Gentiles, and unconverted of all kinds. For the meaning of this term see the note on Coloss. iv. 6.

The snare of the devil] Some would translate μαρμα του διαβολα, the snare of the accuser; and they give the same meaning to the word in verse 6. because it is evident that δαιμονις, has that meaning, verse 11. and our translators render it slanderers. Now, though δαιμονις, signifies an accuser, yet I do not see that it can, with any propriety, be restrained to this meaning in the texts in question; and especially as the word is emphatically applied to Satan himself; for he, who in Rev. xii. 10. is called the accuser of the brethren; is, in verse 9. called the great dragon, the old serpent; the DEVIL, δαιμονις, and Satan.

Lest he fall into reproach] For his former scandalous life.

And the snare of the devil] Snares and temptations, such as he fell in, and fell by, before. This is called the snare of the devil; for as he wells knows the constitution of such persons, and what is most likely to prevail, he infers, that what was effectual before, to their transgressing, may be so still; therefore, in all suitable occasions, he tempts them to their old sins. Backsliders, in general, fall by those sins to which they were addicted, previously to their conversion. Former inveterate habits will revive in him, who does not continue to deny himself, and watch unto prayer.

Verse 8. Likewise must the deacons] The term deacon, διακονος, simply signifies a regular or stated servant; from δια, through, or emphatic, and νομος, to minister or serve.—See it explained in the note on Matt. xx. 26. As nearly the same qualifications were required in the deacons as in the bishops, the reader may consult what is said on the preceding verses.

Grave] Of a sedate and dignified carriage and conduct.

Not double-tongued] Speaking one thing to one person, and another thing to another, on the same subject. This is hypocrisy and deceit. This word might also be translated liars.

Not given to much wine] Neither a drunkard, tippler, nor what is called a jovial companion. All this would be inconsistent with gravity.

Not greedy of filthy lucre] See on ver. 4.

Verse 9. Holding the mystery of the faith] Instead of την νιστην, the faith, one MS. (the readings of which are found in the margin of a copy of Mill's Greek text, in the Bodleian library, and is marked 61. in Griesback.) reads αναστασις, of the resurrection. This reading, like many others in this MS. is found nowhere else; and is worthy of little regard, but as expressing what appeared to the writer to be the apostle's meaning. One of the greatest mysteries of the faith was, undoubtedly, the resurrection of the dead; and this was held in a pure conscience, when the person so exercised himself, as to have a conscience void of offence towards God and towards men. See Acts xxiv. 16. What has been since called Antinomianism, that is, making void the moral law, by a pretended faith in the righteousness of Christ, is that which the apostle has here particularly in view.

Verse 10. Let these—be proved] Let them not be young converts, or persons lately brought to the knowledge of the truth. This is the same spirit with what is required of the bishops, ver. 6.

Let no man be put into an office in the church, till he has given full proof of his sincerity and steadiness, by having been for a considerable time, a consistent private member of the church.

Being found blameless] ανυβλαβητος οντις, being irreproachable; persons against whom no evil can be proved. The same as in ver. 2. though a different word is used; see the note there.

Verse 11. Even so must their wives be grave] I believe the apostle does not mean here the wives either of the bishops or deacons in particular; but the Christian women in general. The original is, simply, ἑκάστης ἑαυτῆς οἰκίας, Let the women likewise be grave. Whatever is spoken here becomes women in general; but if the apostle had those termed deaconesses in his eye, which is quite possible, the words are peculiarly suitable to them. That there was such an order in the apostolic and primitive church, and that they were appointed to their office by the imposition of hands, has already been noticed on Rom. xvi. 1. Possibly, therefore, the apostle may have had this order of deaconesses in view, to whom it was necessary to give counsels and cautions, as to the deacons themselves: and to prescribe their qualifications, lest improper persons should insinuate themselves into that office.

Not slanderers] Μη δεικνύουσιν, literally, not devils.—See on ver. 7. This may be properly enough translated slanderers, backbiters, tale-bearers, &c. for, all these are of their father the devil, and his lusts they will do. Let all such, with the vast tribe of calumniators and dealers in scandal, remember, that the apostle ranks them all with malicious, fallen spirits: a consideration, which one would suppose, might be sufficient to deter them from their injurious and abominable conduct.

Sober] See on ver. 2.

Faithful in all things.] The deaconesses had much to do among the poor; and especially among poor women, in dispensing the bounty of the church. They were not only faithfully to expend all they had got, and for the purpose for which they got it; but they must do this with impartiality; showing no respect of persons; the degree of distress being the only rule by which the distribution was to be regulated.

Verse 12. Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife] This is the same that is required of the bishop.—See on ver. 2, 4, and 5.

Verse 13. That have used the office of a deacon well] They who, having been tried or proved, ver. 10. have shown, by their steadiness, activity, and zeal, that they might be raised to a higher office, are here said to have purchased to themselves a good degree, βαβυον καλον, for instead of having to minister to the bodies, and bodily wants of the poor, the faithful deacons were raised to minister in holy things: and, instead of ministering the bread that perisheth, they were raised to the presbyterate or episcopate, to minister the bread of life to immortal souls. And hence the apostle adds, and great boldness in the faith; πολλῶν κεραιῶν, great liberty of speech, i. e. in teaching the doctrines of Christianity; and in expounding the Scriptures, and preaching. It seems to have been a practice dictated by common sense, that the most grave and steady of the believers should be employed as deacons: the most experienced and zealous of the deacons, should be raised to the rank of elders: and the most able and pious of the elders, be consecrated bishops. As to a bishop of bishops, that age did not know such. The Pope of Rome was the first who took this title. The same office, but not with the same powers nor abuse, is found in the patriarch of the Greek church, and the archbishop of the Protestant church. As the deacon had many private members under his care: so the presbyter or elder had several deacons under his care: the bishop several presbyters; and the archbishop several bishops. But I speak now, more of the modern than of the ancient church. The distinction in some of these offices is not so apparent in ancient times: and some of the offices themselves are modern, or comparatively so. But deacon, presbyter, and bishop, existed in the apostolic church; and may therefore be considered of Divine origin.

Verse 14. These things write I] That is, I write only these things, because I hope to come unto thee shortly.

Verse 15. But if I tarry long] That is, notwithstanding I hope to come to thee shortly, and, therefore, do not feel the necessity of writing at large; yet, lest I should be delayed, I write what I judge necessary to direct thy conduct in the church of God.

The house of God] This is spoken in allusion to the ancient tabernacle, which was God's house, and in which the symbol of the Divine Majesty dwelt. So the Christian church is God's house; and every believer is a habitation of God through the Spirit.

The church of the living God] The assembly in which God lives and works; each member of which is a living stone; all of whom, properly united among themselves, grow up into a holy temple in the Lord.

The pillar and ground of the truth.] Never was there a greater variety of opinions on any portion of the Sacred Scripture than has been on this and the following verse. Commentators and critics have given senses and meanings till there is no meaning to be seen. It would be almost impossible, after reading all that has been said on this passage, for any man to make up his own mind. To what, or to whom, does the pillar and ground of the truth refer?

1. Some say to Timothy, who is called the pillar, &c. because left there to support and defend the truth of God against false doctrines, and false teachers; and is so called for the same reason that Peter, James, and John, are said to be pillars; i. e. supporters of the truth of God. 2. Others suppose, that the pillar and ground of the truth, is spoken of God; and that is ^{is}, who is, should be supplied as referring immediately to God, just before. By this mode of interpretation, the passage will read thus: That thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God, who is (is), the pillar and ground of the truth. How God may be fitly termed the pillar and ground of truth, requires no explanation.

3. Others think that the words should be understood of the church of the living God; and in this case the feminine relative is ^{is}, which is, must be repeated immediately after ecclesia, the church. The house of God is the church of the living God; which (church) is the pillar and ground of the truth. That is, the full revelation of God's truth is in the Christian church.
The great doctrines of that church are, the truth without error, metaphor, or figure. Formerly, the truth was but partially revealed; much of it being shadowed with types, ceremonies, and comparatively dark prophecies; but now, all is plain, and the full revelation given: and the foundation on which this truth rests, are the grand facts detailed in the Gospel, especially those which concern the incarnation, miracles, passion, death, and resurrection, of Christ; and the mission of the Holy Spirit.

4. Lastly, others refer the whole to τὸ τῆς θεοσεύσεως μυστήριον, the mystery of godliness; and translate the clause thus: The mystery of godliness is the pillar and ground of the truth, and, without controversy, a great thing. This gives a very good sense, but is not much favoured by the arrangement of the words in the original.

Verse 16. And without controversy] καὶ ἁπο-λογησόμενος, and confessedly; by general consent:
it is a thing which no man can, or ought to dispute: any phrase of this kind expresses the meaning of the original.

God was manifest in the flesh] If we take in the whole of the 14th, 15th, and 16th verses, we may make a consistent translation in the following manner; and the whole paragraph will stand thus—Hoping to see thee shortly; but should I tarry long, these things I now write unto thee, that thou mayest know how thou ought-est to behave thyself in the house of God, which is the church of the living God. The mystery of godliness, which is the pillar and ground of the truth, is, without controversy, a great thing.
And then he proceeds to show what this mystery of godliness is; which he sums up in the six following particulars—1. God was manifest in the flesh—2. Justified in the Spirit—3. Seen of an- gels—4. Preached unto the Gentiles—5. Believed on in the world—6. Received up into glory.

Though all this makes a very plain and consistent sense; yet we are perplexed by various readings on the first clause, Θεὸς ἐμάνηεν ἐν σαρκί, God was manifest in the flesh; for, instead of Θεὸς, God, several MSS. Versions, and Fathers, have is or is, which or who. And this is generally referred to the word mystery; great is the mystery of godliness, which was manifest in the flesh.

The insertion of Θεὸς for is, or is for Θεὸς, may be easily accounted for. In ancient times, the Greek was all written in capitals; for the common Greek character is, comparatively, of modern date. In these early times, words of frequent recurrence were written contractedly;
thus, for καὶ τὸν, καί; καὶ τὸν, καί; καὶ τὸν, καί; καὶ τὸν, καί, &c. This is very frequent in the oldest MSS.
and is continually recurring in the Codex Bezae, and Codex Alexandrinus. If, therefore, the middle stroke of the Θ in ΘC, happened to be faint, or obliterated, and the dash above not very apparent, both of which I have observed in ancient MSS. then ΘC, the contraction for ΘEOC God, might be mistaken for OC, which or who, and vice versa. This appears to have been the case in the Codex Alexandrinus, in this passage. To me, there is ample reason to believe, that the Codex Alexandrinus originally read ΘC, God, in this place; but the stroke, becoming faint by length of time, and injudicious handling, of which the MS. in this place has had a large proportion, some person has supplied the place, most reprehensibly, with a thick black line. This has destroyed the evidence of this MS. as, now, it can neither be quoted pro or con; though it is very likely that the person, who supplied the ink line, did it from a conscientious conviction that ΘC was the original reading of this MS. I examined this MS. about thirty years ago, and this was the conviction that rested then on my mind. I have seen the MS. several times since, and have not changed my opinion. The enemies of the Deity of Christ have been at as much pains to destroy the evidence afforded by the common reading, in support of this doctrine, as if this text were the only one by which it can be supported:

they must be aware that John i. 1. and 14. proclaim the same truth; and that, in those verses, there is no authority to doubt the genuineness of the reading. We read, therefore, God was manifested in the flesh; and I cannot see what good sense can be taken out of the GOSPEL was manifested in the flesh; or the mystery of godliness was manifested in the flesh. After seriously considering this subject, in every point of light, I hold with the reading in the commonly received text.

Justified in the Spirit] By the miracles which were wrought by the apostle in and through the name of Jesus, as well as by his resurrection from the dead, through the energy of the Holy Ghost, by which he was proved to be the Son of God with power. Christ was justified from all the calumnies of the Jews, who crucified him as an impostor. All these miracles being wrought by the power of God, were a full proof of His innocence; for, had He not been what he professed to be, God would not have borne such a decisive testimony to His Messiahship.

Seen of angels] By ἀγγελοι, here, some understand not those celestial or infernal beings commonly called angels; but apostles, and other persons who became messengers, to carry far and wide, and attest the truth of His resurrection from the dead. If, however, we take the word seen, in its Jewish acceptation, for made known, we may here retain the term angels in its common acceptation; for it is certain that, previously to our Lord's ascension to heaven, these holy beings could have little knowledge of the necessity, reasons, and economy, of human salvation; nor of the nature of Christ as God and man. St. Peter informs us, that the angels desired to look into these things, 1 Pet. i. 12. And St. Paul says the same thing, Ephes. iii. 9, 10. when speaking of the revelation of the Gospel-plan of salvation, which he calls The mystery which, FROM THE BEGINNING OF THE WORLD, had been hid in God; and which was now published, that unto the PRINCIPALITIES and POWERS in heavenly places, might be MADE KNOWN by the church, the manifold wisdom of God. Even those angelic beings have got an accession to their blessedness, by an increase of knowledge in the things which concern Jesus Christ, and the whole scheme of human salvation, through His incarnation, passion, death, resurrection, ascension, and glorification.

Preached unto the Gentiles] This was one grand part of the mystery which had been hidden in God, that the Gentiles should be made fellow-heirs with the Jews, and be admitted into the kingdom of God. To the Gentiles, therefore, he was proclaimed as having pulled down the middle wall of partition between them and the Jews; that, through him, God had granted unto them repentance unto life; and that they also might have redemption in His blood, the forgiveness of sins.

Believed on in the world] Was received by mankind as the promised Messiah, the Anointed of God; and the only Saviour of fallen man. This is a most striking part of the mystery of godliness, that one who was crucified as a malefactor, and whose kingdom is not of this world, and whose doctrines are opposed to all the sinful propensities of the human heart; should, wherever His Gospel is preached, be acknowledged as the only Saviour of sinners; and the Judge of quick and dead! But some would restrict the meaning to the Jews, whose economy is often denominated τὸν νόμον Ἰσραὴλ hazze, this world; and which words, both our Lord and the apostles, often use in the same sense. Notwithstanding their prejudices, many even of the Jews believed on Him: and a great company of the priests themselves, who were His crucifiers, became obedient to the faith. Acts vi. 7. This was an additional proof of Christ's innocence.

Received up into glory] Even that human nature which he took of the Virgin Mary, was raised, not only from the grave, but taken up into glory; and this, in the most visible and palpable manner. This is a part of the mystery of godliness, which, while we have every reasonable evidence to believe, we have not powers to comprehend. His reception into glory, is of the utmost consequence to the Christian faith; as, in consequence, Jesus Christ, in His human nature, ever appears before the Throne as our Sacrifice, and as our Mediator.

1. The directions given in this chapter concerning bishops and deacons should be carefully weighed by every branch of the Christian church. Not only the offices which are of Divine appointment, such as bishop, presbyter, and deacon, should be most religiously preserved in the church; but, that they may have their full effect, the persons exercising them, should be such as the apostle prescribes. Religion will surely suffer, when religious order is either contemned or neglected: and even the words of God will be treated with contempt, if ministered by unholy persons. Let order, therefore, be duly observed; and let those who fill these orders, be not only wholly irreprehensible in their conduct, but also able ministers of the new covenant. A wicked man can neither have, nor communicate, authority to dispense heavenly mysteries: and a fool, or a blockhead, can never teach others the way of salvation. The highest abilities are not too great for a preacher of the Gospel: nor is it possible that he can have too much human learning. But all is nothing, unless he can bring the grace and Spirit of God into all his ministrations; and these will never accompany him, unless he live in the spirit of prayer and humility; fearing and loving God, and hating covetousness.

2. It is well known, that almost every church supposes itself to be the true church: and some consider themselves the only church; and deny salvation to all who are not of their communion. To such a church the two last verses in this chapter have been confidently self-applied, as being the pillar and ground of the truth; the possessor and dispenser of all the mysteries of God. But, supposing that the words in ver. 15. are spoken of the church, it is of the Christian church, as defined under article the third above, that must be meant; and we may see from this the vanity of applying the words to any particular church, as if it had all the truth without error, and none else could pretend either to truth or ecclesiastical authority. The Christian church is a widely different thing: it is the whole system of Christianity, as laid down in the New Testament; it is built on the great foundation of prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone. It is composed of all who hold the doctrines of Christianity; who acknowledge Jesus as their Teacher, Redeemer, and only Advocate; of all who love God with all their heart, soul, mind, and strength; and their neighbour as themselves; or who are labouring after this conformity to the mind and command of their Creator. It is not known by any particular name; it is not distinguished by any particular form in its mode of worship; it is not exclusively here or there. It is the house of God; it is where God's Spirit dwells; where His precepts are obeyed, and where pure, unadulterated love to God and man prevails. It is not in the creed, nor religious confessions of any denomination of Christians: for, as all who hold the truth, and live a holy life, acknowledging Jesus alone, as the head of the church, and Saviour of the world, are members of his mystical body, and such may be found in all sects and parties; so the church of Christ may be said to be every where, and to be confined no where; i. e. in whatever place Christianity is credited and acknowledged. The wicked, of all sorts, no matter what their profession may be, and all persecutors of religious people, who differ from them, are without the pale of this church. Essentially must their spirit and conduct be changed, before the living Head of this spiritual building can acknowledge them as members of the heavenly family.

This text, therefore, will never apply to the Romish church, till that church be, both in doctrine and discipline, what the Christian church should be. When it is the established religion of any country, it gives no toleration to those who differ from it; and in Protestant countries, its cry for toleration and secular authority, is loud and long. I wish its partizans the full and free exercise of their religion, even to its superstitions and nonsense: but, how can they expect toleration, who give none? The Protestant church tolerates it fully; it persecutes the Protestants to bonds and death, when it has power:—which is the true church of Christ?

NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. Now the Spirit speaketh expressly] Παρρησιασθε, manifestly, openly. It is very likely that the apostle refers here to a prophecy then furnished by the Holy Ghost; and probably, immediately after he had written the words in the preceding verses; and as this prophecy contains things no where else spoken of, in the Sacred Writings; and of the utmost moment to the Christian church; we cannot hear or read them with too much reverence or respect.

In the latter times] This does not necessarily imply the last ages of the world; but any times consequent to those in which the church then lived.

Depart from the faith] Αποστραταται—τις πιστευουσιν, they will apostatize from the faith; i. e. from Christianity; renouncing the whole system in effect, by bringing in doctrines which render its essential truths null and void: or denying and renouncing such doctrines as are essential to Christianity as a system of salvation. A man may hold all the truths of Christianity, and yet render them of none effect, by holding other doctrines which counteract their influence; or he may apostatize by denying some essential doctrine, though he bring in nothing heterodox.

Giving heed to seducing spirits] Πιπρωμασι πλανηταις; many MSS. and the chief of the Fathers have, πρωμασι πλανηταις, spirits of deceit; which is much more emphatic than the common reading. Deception has her spirits, emissaries of every kind, which she employs to darken the hearts, and destroy the souls of men. Pretenders to inspiration, and false teachers of every kind, belong to this class.

And doctrines of devils] δαμωνιον, demons; either meaning fallen spirits, or dead men, spectres, &c. or doctrines inspired by Satan relative to these: by which he secures his own interest, and provides for his own worship.

Verse 2. Speaking lies in hypocrisy] Persons pretending not only to Divine inspiration, but also to extraordinary degrees of holiness, self-denial, mortification, &c. in order to accredit the lies and false doctrines which they taught. Multitudes of lies were framed concerning miracles wrought by the relics of departed saints, as they were termed. For even in this country, Thomas à Becket was deemed a saint, his relics wrought numerous miracles, and his tomb was frequented by multitudes of pilgrims! However, as he works none now, we may rest assured that he never did work any. In 1305, king Edward I. was prevailed on, by his clergy, to write to pope Clement V. to canonize Thomas de Cantelupo, bishop of Hereford, because a multitude of miracles had been wrought by his influence; in tantum, says the king, quod spiritus meritis et intercessionibus, gloriosis, lumen cæcis, surdis auditus, verbum mutis, et gressus claudis, et alia pleraque beneficia ipsius patrocinium implorantibus, cælesti dextrâ conferuntur. "Inasmuch that by his glorious merits and intercessions, the blind receive their sight, the deaf hear, the dumb speak, and the lame walk; and many other benefits are conferred by the right hand of the Divine Being, on those who implore his patronage." And therefore he prays, that this dead bishop may be added to the calendar: "that he and his kingdom may enjoy his suffrages, and merit his patronage in heaven, who had the benefit of his conversation on earth." Nos attendentes, per Dei gratiam, fideles in Christo, nosque præcipue, et populum regni nostri, ejus posse suffragiis adjuvari, ut, quem familiarum habuimus in terris, mereamur habere patronum in cælis. Fœdera, Vol. i. p. 976. Edit. 1816.

Having their conscience seared with a hot iron] They bear the marks of their hypocrisy as evidently and as indelibly in their conscience, in the sight of God, as those, who have been cauterized for their crimes, do in their bodies, in the sight of men. It was customary in ancient times to mark those with a hot iron who had been guilty of great crimes, such as sacrilege, &c. And the heathens supposed that even in the other world they bore such marks; and by these the infernal judges knew the quantum of their vices, and appointed the degrees of this punishment. There is a saying, much like that of the apostle, in the invective of Claudian against Rufinus, whom he supposes to be thus addressed, by Rhadamanthus, one of the infernal judges:—

*Quod demens manifesta negas? En pectus IN-
USTÆ
Deformant MACULÆ! vitisque inolevit imago, Nec esse commissa legunt.—*

"Thou fool, why dost thou deny what is so manifest? Behold, the deep burnt marks deform thy conscience; the appearance of them has grown up with thy vices; neither can the crimes which thou hast committed hide themselves."

Verse 3. Forbidding to marry] These hypocritical priests pretending that a single life was much more favourable to devotion and to the perfection of the Christian life. This sentiment was held by the Essenes, a religious sect among the Jews: and we know that it is a favourite opinion among the Romanists, who oblige all their clergy to live a single life, by a vow of continency.

To abstain from meats] Both among the heathens, Jews, and Romanists, certain meats were prohibited. Some always; others at particular times. This the apostle informs us was directly contrary to the original design of God: and says that those who know the truth, know this.

Verse 4. For every creature of God is good] That is, every creature which God has made for man's nourishment, is good for that purpose; and to be thankfully received, whenever necessary for the support of human life; and nothing of that sort, is at any time to be refused, οὐδὲ ἀποχαιρω, rejected or despised. We find a saying very similar to this in Lucian's Timon. Οὐδὲ ἀποχαιρωσὶ κατὰ τὰ παρα δὲο. The gifts which are from Jove ought not to be despised. This appears to have been a proverbial saying among the heathens.

Verse 5. For it is sanctified by the word of God] Δαὶ λόγου Θεοῦ, by the command of God; probably referring to Gen. i. 29. And God said, I have given you every herb—and every tree—to you it shall be for meat. And to ch. ix. 3. Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for you; even as the green herb, have I given you all things; i. e. I have given you every animal that is proper for food; as I have given you every herb and fruit proper for nourishment. Therefore, all this was sanctified, set apart, and appropriated to this use, by this command. And when man is about to use it, he is to sanctify or set it apart to that use, by prayer to God: 1. That it may answer the end to us, for which it was designed: 2. That we may use it with gratitude and moderation. 3. That all the strength derived from it may be devoted to God, in filling up the duties of those situations in which His providence has placed us. Those who thank not God for their food, and pray not for His blessing in the use of it, are unworthy even of a morsel of bread, and of the breath they breathe. Bishop Newton's opinion of this prophecy, I have reserved to the end of this chapter.

Verse 6. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things] Show the church that, even now, there is danger of this apostacy; put them on their guard against it; for, the forewarned are half-armed. Schoetgen supposes, from this verse, that what is spoken above refers to the Jews alone: and that there is no refer-rence here to a church which in after ages might apostatize from, or corrupt, the true doctrine of our Lord and Saviour. Bishop Newton, and others, are of a different opinion.—See at the end of this chapter.

Nourished up in the words of faith] By acting as I command thee, thou wilt show that thou art a good minister of Jesus Christ; and that thou hast been nourished from thy youth up, in the doctrines of faith. The apostle seems to allude here to Timothy's Christian education.—See the Preface to this epistle.

Whereunto thou hast attained] Η περιουσιον; which thou hast thoroughly understood. For the meaning of this word, see the note on Luke i. 3.

Verse 7. But refuse profane and old wives' fables] This seems to refer particularly to the Jews, whose Talmudical writings are stuffed with the most ridiculous and profane fables that ever disgraced the human intellect. It may with equal propriety be applied to the Legends of the Romish church. Let any man read the Aurea Legenda; and he will find of profane and old wives' fables what may stand with considerable propriety, column for column, with the Talmud. See Joseline's Life of St. Patrick, for miracles without rhyme or reason, abundantly more numerous and more stupendous than all the necessary ones wrought by Jesus Christ and his apostles. This is enough to persuade a man, that the Spirit of God had these very corruptions, and this corrupt church, particularly in view.

Exercise thyself rather unto godliness.] To understand this expression, it is necessary to know, that the apostle alludes here to the gymnastic exercises among the Greeks, which were intended as a preparation for their contests at the public games. They did this in order to obtain a corruptible or fading crown, i. e. a chaplet of leaves, which was the reward of those who conquered in those games: Timothy was to exercise himself unto godliness, that he might be prepared for the kingdom of heaven; and there receive a crown that fadeth not away. See the note on 1 Cor. ix. 24, &c.

Verse 8. For, bodily exercise profiteth little] Ης ολιγον επι σωματι. Those gymnastic exercises, so highly esteemed among the Greeks, are but little worth; they are but of short duration; they refer only to this life, and to the applause of men: but godliness has the promise of this life, and the life to come; it is profitable for all things; and for both time and eternity.

But godliness is profitable unto all things] By godliness we are to understand every thing that the Christian religion either promises or prescribes: the life of God in the soul of man; and the glory of God, as the object and end of that life. To receive the first, a man must renounce his sins, deny himself, take up his cross, and follow his Lord through evil and through good report. To obtain the latter, a man must labour to enter into that rest which remains for the people of God.

Having promise of the life that now is] The man that fears, loves, and serves God, has God's blessing all through life. His religion saves him from all those excesses, both in action and passion, which sap the foundations of life, and render existence itself often a burden. The peace and love of God in the heart produce a serenity and calm which cause the lamp of life to burn clear, strong, and permanent. Evil and disorderly passions obscure and stifle the vital spark. Every truly religious man extracts the uttermost good out of life itself; and, through the Divine blessing, gets the uttermost good that is in life; and, what is better than all, acquires a full preparation here below, for an eternal life of glory above. Thus godliness has the promise of, and secures the blessings of, both worlds.

Verse 9. This is a faithful saying] The truth of this doctrine none need doubt; and every man has it in his power to put this to the proof. See on chap. i. 15.

Verse 10. For therefore we both labour] This verse was necessary to explain what he had before said: and here he shows that his meaning was not that the followers of God should enjoy worldly prosperity, and exemption from natural evils; for, said he, it is because we exercise ourselves to godliness that we have both labour and reproach; and we have these because we trust in the living God; but still we have mental happiness, and all that is necessary for our passage through life:—for, in the midst of persecutions and afflictions we have the peace of God that passeth knowledge; and have all our crosses and sufferings so sanctified to us, that we consider them in the number of our blessings.

Who is the Saviour of all men] Who has provided salvation for the whole human race; and has freely offered it to them in His word, and by His Spirit.

Specially of those that believe.] What God intends for ALL, he actually gives to them that believe in Christ, who died for the sins of the world; and tasted death for every man. As all have been purchased by His blood, so all may believe; and consequently all may be saved. Those that perish, perish through their own fault.

a Ch. 6. 2.—b 1 Cor. 16. 11. Tit. 2. 15.—c Tit. 2. 7.

Verse 11. These things command and teach.] Let it be the sum and substance of thy preaching, that true religion is profitable for both worlds: that vice destroys both body and soul: that Christ tasted death for every man; and that He saves to the uttermost all them that believe in His name.

Verse 12. Let no man despise thy youth] Act with all the gravity and decorum which become thy situation in the church. As thou art in the place of an elder, act as an elder. Boyish playfulness ill becomes a minister of the Gospel, whatever his age may be. Concerning Timothy's age, see the conclusion of the Preface to this epistle.

Be thou an example of the believers] It is natural for the flock to follow the shepherd; if he go wrong, they will go wrong also:—

“Himself a wanderer from the narrow way; His silly sheep, no wonder if they stray.”

Though, according to the just judgment of God, they who die in their sins have their blood on their own head; yet, if they have either gone into sin, or continued in it through the watchman's fault, their blood will God require at his hand. How many have endeavoured to excuse their transgressions by alleging, in vindication of their conduct, “Our minister does so; and he is more wise and learned than we.” What an awful account must such have to give to the Head of the church when he appears!

In word] Ev logoi, in doctrine; teach nothing but the truth of God; because nothing but that will save souls.

In conversation] Ev vivis, in the whole of thy conduct, in every department which thou fillest; in all thy domestic as well as public relations. Behave thyself well:

In charity] Ev agapi, in love to God and man; show that this is the principle and motive of all thy conduct.

In spirit] Ev nousi, in the manner and disposition in which thou dost all things. How often is a holy or charitable work done in an unholy, uncharitable, and peevish spirit! To the doers, such work is unfruitful.

These words are wanting in ACDFG. and several others: both the Syriac, Erpen's Arabic, Ethiopic, Armenian, Vulgate, and Itala, and many of the Fathers. Griesbach leaves them out of the text. They have in all probability been added by a later hand.

In faith] Ev piste. This word piste, is probably taken here for fidelity; a sense which it often bears in the New Testament. It cannot mean doctrine, for that has been referred to before. Be faithful to thy trust, to thy flock, to thy domestics, to the public, to thy God. Fidelity consists in honestly keeping, preserving, and delivering up when required, whatever is entrusted to our care; and also in improving whatever is delivered in trust, for that purpose. Lose nothing that God gives; and improve every gift that he bestows.

In purity.] Ev ayne, chastity of body and mind; a direction peculiarly necessary for a young minister, who has more temptations to break its rules, than perhaps any other person. “Converse sparingly with women, and especially with young women,” was the advice of a very holy and experienced minister of Christ.

Verse 13. Give attendance to reading] Timothy could easily comprehend the apostle's meaning; but at present this is not so easy. What books does the apostle mean? The books of the Old Testament were probably what was intended; these testified of Jesus: and by these he could either convince or confound the Jews. But, whether was the reading of these to be public or private? Probably both. It was customary to read the law and the prophets in the synagogue; and doubtless in the assemblies of the Christians; after which there was generally an exhortation founded upon the subject of the prophecy. Hence the apostle says, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine. Timothy was therefore to be diligent in reading the Sacred Writings at home, that he might be the better qualified to read and expound them in the public assemblies, to the Christians, and to others who came to these public meetings.

As to other books, there were not many at that time that could be of much use to a Christian minister. In those days, the great business of the preacher was to bring forward the grand facts of Christianity, to prove these, and to show that all had happened according to the prediction of the prophets; and from these, to show the work of God in the heart; and the evidence of that work in a holy life.

At present, the truth of God is not only to be proclaimed, but defended: and many customs or manners, and forms of speech, which are to us obsolete, must be explained from the writings of the ancients; and particularly from the works of those who lived about the same times, or nearest to them; and in the same or contiguous countries. This will require the knowledge of those languages in which those works have been composed; the chief of which are Hebrew and Greek, the languages in which the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments have been originally written.

Latin is certainly of the next consequence; a language in which some of the most early comments have been written; and it is worth the trouble of being learned, were it only for the sake of the works of St. Jerom, who translated and wrote a commentary on the whole of the Scriptures.

Arabic and Syriac may be added with great advantage; the latter being in effect the language in which Christ and His apostles spoke and preached in Judea: and the former being radically the same with the Hebrew; and preserving many of the roots of that language, the derivatives of which often occur in the Hebrew Bible; but the roots, never.

The works of various scholars prove, of how much consequence even the writings of heathen authors, chiefly those of Greece and Italy, are to the illustrations of the Sacred Writings. And he who is best acquainted with the Sacred Records, will avail himself of such helps, with gratitude both to God and man. Though so many languages and so much reading, are not absolutely necessary to form a minister of the Gospel; for there are many eminent ministers who have not such advantages; yet they are helps of the first magnitude to those who have them, and know how to use them.

Verse 14. Neglect not the gift that is in thee] The word χαρισμα, here must refer to the gifts and graces of the Divine Spirit, which Timothy received when set apart to the work of an evangelist by the imposition of St. Paul's hands, 2 Tim. i. 6. and by that of the presbytery or eldership; for it most evidently appears from this verse, and that above quoted, that he received this double imposition; not probably at different times, but on one and the same occasion. These very gifts and graces might be improved: and we have reason to believe, if not improved, would be withdrawn, by the great Head of the church.

Given thee by prophecy] It has already been conjectured, (see the Preface and the note on ch. i. 18.) that there had been some remarkable prediction relative to the future destiny and usefulness of Timothy. And probably it was in consequence of this, that he was set apart to the office of evangelist and bishop in the church at Ephesus. When apostles laid their hands on men, they ordinarily received the Holy Spirit with this imposition. This may be what the apostle calls to the remembrance of Timothy; and tells him not to neglect what he had received; nor the purpose for which he had received it.

Verse 15. Meditate upon these things] ταυτα μελετα; Revolve them frequently in thy mind; consider deeply their nature and importance; get them deeply fastened in thy heart; and let all thy conduct flow from this inward feeling and conviction. Let the nature, reasons, and motives, of thy ministry be ever in the view of thy heart and conscience.

Give thyself wholly to them] Εν ταυταις ιστη, be thou in these things. Horace has a similar expression, omnis in hoc sum,—"I am absorbed in this." Occupy thyself wholly with them; make them not only thy chief, but thy sole concern. Thou art called to save thy own soul, and the souls of them that hear thee: and God has given the Divine gifts for this, and no other purpose. To this let all thy reading and study be directed: this is thy great business; and thou must perform it as the servant and steward of the Lord. Bengel has a good saying on this verse, which I will quote. In his, qui est, minus erit in socialitatibus mundanis, in studiis alienis, in colligendis libris, conchis, nummis, quibus multi Pastores notabilem atatis partem insistentes, conterunt. "He who is wholly in these things, will be little in worldly company, in foreign studies: in collecting books, shells, and coins, in which many ministers consume a principal part of their life." Such persons are worthy of the deepest reprobation, unless all these studies, collections, &c. be formed with the express view of illustrating the Sacred Records: and to such awful drudgery, few Christian ministers are called. Many, when they have made such collections, seem to know nothing of their use: they only see them, and show them; but can never bring them to their assistance in the work of the ministry. These should be prayed for and pitied.

That thy profiting may appear to all] By being made a universal blessing; convincing and converting sinners; and building up the church of God on its most holy faith.

Verse 16. Take heed unto thyself] See that the life of God remains, and the work of God prospers, in thine own soul. Take heed to thy doctrine; that the matter be pure and orthodox: that thou teach nothing for truth, but what God has revealed.

Continue in them] i. e. In taking heed to thyself and to thy doctrine; for this must be thy continual study. Without this, the Divine influence shall recede from thy heart; and the Divine gifts from thy intellect; and, like Samson shorn of his strength, thou wilt soon become as another man: as any common man; thy power will depart from thee, and thou shalt be no longer able to persuade; the unction shall depart from thee; and destitute of spiritual feeling thyself, thou shalt not be able to cause others to feel. Take the apostle's advice, and thou shalt save thy own soul, and the souls of them that hear thee.

In the course of the preceding notes, I have referred to Bishop Newton's opinion and application of the prophecy contained in the first five verses. Not being fully persuaded in my own mind to what church this, and the prophecy in the Epistle to the Thessalonians should be applied, I produce an accredited author, who, for his Dissertations on the Prophecies, has a high and honoured name in the church.

"I. The first thing to be considered is, the apostacy here predicted. 'Some shall depart, or rather apostatize from the faith.' An apostacy from the faith, may be either total, or partial; either when we renounce the whole, or when we deny some principal and essential article of it. It is not every error, or every heresy, that is apostacy from the faith. It is a revolt in a principal and essential article; when we worship God, by any image or representation, or when we worship other beings besides God, and pray unto other mediators, besides the one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus. This is the very essence of Christian worship, to worship the one true God, through the one true Christ; and to worship any other god, or any other mediator, is apostacy and rebellion against God, and against Christ. Such is the nature of apostacy from the faith; and it is implied, that this apostacy shall be general, and affect great numbers. For though it be said, only some shall apostatize; yet by some here, many are understood. The original word frequently signifies a multitude; and there are abundant instances in Scripture where it is used in that sense, as the reader may perceive from John vi. 64—66. Rom. xi. 17. 1 Cor. x. 5, 6. This apostacy may be general and extensive, and include many, but not all.

"II. It is more particularly shown wherein the apostacy should consist, in the following words:—giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils; or rather, 'giving heed to erroneous spirits and doctrines concerning demons.' Spirits seem to be much the same in sense as doctrines; the latter word may be considered as explanatory of the former; and error sometimes signifying idolatry, erroneous doctrines may comprehend idolatrous, as well as false doctrines. But it is still further added, for explanation, that these doctrines should be doctrines of devils, or of demons, where the genitive case is not to be taken actively, as if demons were the authors of these doctrines; but passively, as if demons were the subject of these doctrines. In Jer. x. 8. Acts xiii. 12. Heb. vi. 2. the genitive case is used in this manner; and by the same construction, doctrines of demons are doctrines about or concerning demons. This is, therefore, a prophecy, that the idolatrous theology of demons, professed by the Gentiles, should be revived among Christians. Demons, according to the theology of the Gentiles, were middle powers between the gods and mortal men; and were regarded as mediators and agents between the gods and men. Of these demons there were accounted two kinds: one kind were the souls of men deified or canonized after death; the other kind were such as had never been the souls of men, nor ever dwelt in mortal bodies. These latter demons may be paralleled with angels, as the former may with canonized saints; and as we Christians believe there are good and evil angels, so did the Gentiles that there were good and evil demons. It appears then, as if the doctrine of demons, which prevailed so long in the heathen world, were to be revived and established in the Christian church. And is not the worship of saints and angels now, in all respects, the same that the worship of demons was in former times? The name only is different; the thing is essentially the same. The heathens looked upon their demons as mediators and intercessors, between God and men; and are not the saints and angels regarded in the sameligh by many professed Christians? The promoters of this worship were sensible that it was the same, and that the one succeeded the other; and as the worship is the same, so likewise it is performed with the same ceremonies. Nay, the very same temples, the very same images, the very same altars, which once were consecrated to Jupiter, and the other demons, and now re-consecrated to the Virgin Mary and other saints. The very same titles and inscriptions are ascribed to both; the very same prodigies and miracles are related of these as of those. In short, the whole almost of paganism, is converted and applied to popery; the one is manifestly formed upon the same plan and principles as the other.

"III. Such an apostacy as this, of reviving the doctrines of demons, and worshipping the dead, was not likely to take place immediately; it should prevail and prosper in the latter days. The phrase of the latter times, or days, or the last times, or days, signifies any time yet to come; but denotes more particularly the times of Christianity. The times of Christianity may properly be called the latter times, or days; or the last times, or days; because it is the last of all God's revelations to mankind. Heb. i. 1, 2. 1 Pet. i. 20.

"IV. Another remarkable peculiarity of this prophecy is, the solemn and emphatic manner in which it is delivered. The Spirit speaketh expressly. By the Spirit is meant the Holy Spirit of God, which inspired the prophets and apostles. The Spirit's speaking expressly, may signify His speaking precisely and certainly, not obscurely and involv'dly, as He is wont to speak in the prophets; or it may be said, the Spirit speaketh expressly, when he speaks in express words in some place or other of Divine Writ; and the Spirit hath spoken the same thing in express words before in the prophecy of Daniel. Daniel has foretold, in express words, the worship of new demons or demi-gods. Dan. xi. 38. The mahuzzim of Daniel are the same as the demons of St. Paul; gods protectors, or saints protectors, defenders and guardians of mankind. This, therefore, is a prophecy, not merely dictated by private suggestion and inspiration, but taken out of the written word. It is a prophecy not only of St. Paul's, but of Daniel's too; or rather of Daniel, confirmed and approved by St. Paul.

"V. The apostle proceeds, ver. 2. to describe by what means, and by what persons, this apostacy should be propagated and established in the world; speaking lies in hypocrisy, &c. or, rather, through the hypocrisy of liars, having their conscience, &c. for the preposition rendered in, frequently signifies through or by. Liars too, or speaking lies, cannot possibly be joined with the original word rendered some, and that rendered giving heed, because they are in the nominative case, and this is in the genitive. Neither can it well be joined in construction with the word rendered devils, or demons; for how can demons, or devils, be said to speak lies in hypocrisy? and to have their conscience seared, &c. It is plain, then, that the great apostacy of the latter times was to prevail, through the hypocrisy of liars, &c. And has not the great idolatry of Christians, and the worship of the dead particularly, been diffused and advanced in the world, by such instruments, and agents? by fabulous books, forged under the names of the apostles, and saints; by fabulous legends of their lives; by fabulous miracles ascribed to their relics; by fabulous dreams and revelations; and even by fabulous saints, who never existed but in imagination?

“VI. Verse 3. Forbidding to marry, &c.] This is a further character of the promoters of this apostacy. The same hypocritical liars, who should promote the worship of demons, should also prohibit lawful marriage. The monks were the first who brought a single life into repute; they were the first also who revived and promoted the worship of demons. One of the primary and most essential laws and constitutions of all monks, was the profession of a single life; and it is equally clear that the monks had the principal share in promoting the worship of the dead. The monks then were the principal promoters of the worship of the dead in former times. And who are the great patrons and advocates of the same worship now? Are not their legitimate successors and descendants, the monks, and priests, and bishops, of the church of Rome? And do not they also profess and recommend a single life, as well as the worship of saints and angels? Thus have the worship of demons, and the prohibition of marriage, constantly gone hand in hand together; and as they who maintain one, maintain the other; so it is no less remarkable, that they who disclaim the one, disclaim the other.

“VII. The last mark and character of these men is commanding to abstain from meats, &c. The same lying hypocrites who should promote the worship of demons, should not only prohibit lawful marriage, but likewise impose unnecessary abstinence from meats; and these, too, as indeed it is fit they should, usually go together as constituent parts of the same hypocrisy. It is as much the law of monks to abstain from meats, as from marriage. Some never eat any flesh; others only certain kinds, on certain days. Frequent fasts are the rule and boasts of their orders. So lived the monks of the ancient church; so live, with less strictness, perhaps, but with greater ostentation, the monks, and friars, of the church of Rome; and these have been the principal propagators and defenders of the worship of the dead, both in former and in latter times. The worship of the dead, is, indeed, so monstrously absurd, as well as impious, that there was hardly any probability of its ever prevailing in the world, but by hypocrisy and lies. But that these particular sorts of hypocrisy—celibacy, under pretence of chastity; and abstinence, under pretence of devotion; should be employed for this purpose, the Spirit of God alone could foresee and foretell. There is no necessary connexion between the worship of the dead, and forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats; and yet it is certain, that the great advocates for this worship have, by their pretended purity and mortification, procured the greater reverence to their persons, and the readier reception to their doctrines. But this idle; popish, monkish abstinence, is as unworthy of a Christian, as it is unnatural to a man; it is preventing the purpose of nature, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving by believers, and them who know the truth.—See Bishop Newton's Dissertations on the Prophecies; and Dr. Dodd's Notes.

Which mode of interpretation is best, I shall not attempt to say: to determine the meaning of prophecies, is a difficult task; and, in a case of this kind, I rather choose to trust to the judgment of others than to my own. It is to be deplored that all the preceding particulars apply but too well to the corruptions in the Romish church; therefore to it, they appear peculiarly applicable. But whether God had this church alone, in view, I dare not affirm.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. Rebuke not an elder] That is, an elderly person; for the word πρεσβυτερος is here taken in its natural sense; and signifies one advanced in years. At ver. 17. it is taken in what may be termed its ecclesiastical meaning, and signifies an officer in the church; what we commonly call a presbyter or bishop; for, sometimes, these terms were confounded. There are but few cases in which it at all becomes a young man to reprove an old man; and especially one who is a father in the church. If such a one does wrong, or gets out of the way, he should be entreated as a father, with great mothers; the younger as sisters, with all purity.

3 Honour widows ^a that are widows indeed.

4 But if any woman have children or nephews, let them learn first to show ^b piety at home, and ^c to requite their parents; ^d for that is caution and respect. To this, at least, his age entitles him. The word αγαλλῆς, signifies, do not smile; i. e. do not treat them harshly, nor with magisterial austerity.

The younger men as brethren] Showing humility, and arrogating nothing to thyself on account of thy office. Feel for them as thou oughtest to feel for thy own brethren.

Verse 2. The elder women as mothers] Treating them with the respect due to their age.

The younger as sisters] Feel for every member of the church, old and young, male and female: consider them as fathers, mothers, brothers, and sisters: treat them all with gentleness; and labour to keep them in, not to expel them from, the church.

With all purity] Ἐν παντί ἁγνῶς, with all chastity. See the note on ch. iv. 12.

There are some who seem to take a barbarous pleasure in expelling members from the church. They should be continued in, as long as possible: while they are in the church, under its ordinances and discipline, there is some hope that their errors may be corrected: but when once driven out again into the world, that hope must necessarily become extinct. As judgment is God's strange work; so excommunication should be the strange, the last, and the most reluctantly performed work of every Christian minister.

Verse 3. Honour widows that are widows indeed.] One meaning of the word τιμῶας, to honour, is to support, sustain, &c. Matt. xv. 45. and here it is most obviously to be taken in this sense. Provide for those widows especially which are widows indeed; persons truly destitute, being aged and helpless; and having neither children nor friends to take care of them; and who behave as becometh their destitute state. But see the note on ver. 10.

Verse 4. But if any widow have children or nephews] This shows that widows indeed, are those that have neither children or nephews: i. e. no relatives that either will or can help them; or no near relatives alive.

Let them learn first to show piety at home] Let these children and nephews provide for their aged or helpless parents or relatives, and not burden the church with them, while they are able to support them.

And to requite their parents] Καὶ ἀποδοῦναι ἀποδοῦναι τοῖς γονεῦσι. Let them learn to give benefit for benefit. Your parents supported and nourished you, when you were young and helpless: you ought, therefore, to support them, when they are old and destitute. This is called showing piety: and there is doubtless an allusion to the fifth commandment, honour thy father and good and acceptable before God.

5 ^e Now she that is a widow indeed, and desolate, trusteth in God, and ^f continueth in supplications and prayer ^g night and day.

thy mother; provide for them in their old age and afflictions: God commands this.

Verse 5. And desolate] Καὶ μόνωτον, left entirely alone; having neither children or relatives to take care of her.

Trusteth in God] Finding she has no other helper, she continues in prayer and supplication, that she may derive that from God, which, in the course of His providence, He has deprived her of among men.

Verse 6. But she that liveth in pleasure] Ἡ δὲ σκαταλωσα, she that lotheth delicately; voluptuously indulging herself with dainties; it does not indicate grossly criminal pleasures; but simply means one who indulges herself in good eating and drinking, pampering her body, at the expense of her mind. The word is used in reference to what we term petted and spoiled children: and a remarkable passage is produced by Kypke, from an Epistle of Theanus to Eubulus, found in Opusc. Myth. Galæi. page 741. where he says, "What can be done with that boy, who, if he have not food when and as he pleases, bursts out into weeping: and if he eats, must have dainties and sweetmeats. If the weather be hot, he complains of fatigue; if it be cold, he trembles: if he be reproved, he scolds: if every thing be not provided for him, according to his wish, he is enraged. If he eats not, he breaks out into fits of anger. He basely indulges himself in pleasure; and in every respect acts voluptuously and effeminately. Knowing then, O friend, ὅτι τα σκαταλωτὰ τοῦ παιδὸς ὅταν ἀμαρτῶν πρὸς ἀνδρῶν ἀδελφοῦ δὲ γένῃται, τὰς τῶν αὐτῶν ἡδονὰς ἀπαίρει that boys living thus voluptuously, when they grow up, are wont to become slaves; take away, therefore, such pleasures from them." I have introduced this long quotation, the better to fix the meaning of the apostle, and show that the life of pleasure mentioned here, does not mean prostitution, or uncleanness of any kind, though such a life may naturally lead to dissolute manners.

Is dead while she liveth] No purpose of life is answered by the existence of such a person. Seneca, in Epist. 60. says of pleasure-takers, and those who live a voluptuous life: Nos itaque animalium hinc numeremus, non hominum: quosdam vero ne animalium quidem, sed mortuorum—mortem antecesserunt. "We rank such persons with brutes, not with men; and some of them not even with brutes, but with dead carcasses: They anticipate their own death." Such persons are, as the apostle says elsewhere, dead in trespasses, and dead in sins.

That they may be blameless.] Charge the whole church to attend to these things, that they may be blameless. The words are not spoken of the widows only, but of the church or its officers; it cannot be restricted to the widows, for the adjective ανεπιλαπτοι, is both of the masculine and feminine gender.

Verse 8. But if any provide not for his own] His own people, or relatives.

Those of his own house] That is, his own family; or a poor widow or relative that lives under his roof.

Hath denied the faith] The Christian religion, which strongly inculcates love and benevolence to all mankind.

Is worse than an infidel.] For, what are called the dictates of nature lead men to feel for, and provide for, their own families. Heathen writers are full of maxims of this kind: TACITUS says, Liberos cuique ac propinquos NATURA carissimos esse voluit. "Nature dictates, that to every one, his own children and relatives should be most dear." And CICERO, in Epist. ad Cæciliam. Suos quisque debet tueri. "Every man should take care of his own family."

Verse 9. Taken into the number] Let her not be taken into the list of those for which the church must provide. But some think that the apostle means the list of those who were deaconesses in the church; and that no widow was to be admitted into that rank who did not answer to the following character. See below on ver. 10.

Under threescore years] As it might be supposed that previously to this age, they might be able to do something towards their own support. See on ver. 10.

Having been the wife of one man] Having lived in conjugal fidelity with her husband; or, having had but one husband at a time; or, according to others, having never been but once married. But the former is the opinion of some of the most eminent of the Greek fathers; and appears to be that most consistent with the scope of the place, and with truth.

Verse 10. Well reported of for good works] Numbers being able to bear testimony, as the word implies, that she has not only avoided all sin; but that she has walked according to the testimony of God.

Brought up children] It was customary among the Gentiles to expose their children, when so poor that they were not able to provide for them. Pious and humane people took these up; and fed, clothed, and educated them. The words brought up may refer to the children of others who were educated in the Christian faith by pious Christian women.

Lodged strangers] If she have been given to hospitality; freely contributing to the necessitous, when she had it in her power.

Washed the saints' feet] This was an office of humanity shown to all strangers and travellers in the eastern countries; who either walking barefoot, or having only a sort of sole to defend the foot, needed washing when they came to their journey's end. Pious women generally did this act of kindness.

Relieved the afflicted] Visited and ministered to the sick.

Diligently followed every good work.] In a word, that she has been altogether a Christian, living according to the precepts of the Gospel; and doing the Lord's work with all her heart, soul, and strength.

From the character given here of the widow indeed, it may be doubted whether χρησ, widow, was not, in some cases, the name of an office, which name it might have from being ordinarily filled by widows. It can hardly be supposed that any widow, unless she had considerable property, could have done the things enumerated in this verse, some of which would occasion no small expense. The widow indeed, may mean a person who was to be employed in some office in the church: and Timothy is enjoined not to take any into that office, unless she had been before remarkable for piety and humanity. Some think that the widows of whom the apostle speaks, had been deaconesses, and wished now to be taken on what might be termed the superannuated list: and the apostle lays down rules for the admission of such: The sum of which is, Let none come on this superannuated list, unless she be at least 60 years of age, and can bring proof of her having conscientiously discharged the office and duty of a deaconess.

Verse 11. But the younger widows refuse] Do not admit those into this office who are under 60 years of age. Probably those who were received into such a list, promised to abide in their widowhood. But as young, or comparatively young women, might have both occasion and temptations to remarry, and so break their engagement to Christ, they should not be admitted. Not that the apostle condemns their remarrying as a crime in itself, but because it was contrary to their engagement.—See on ver. 14:

wanton manner. The word is supposed to be derived from syon, to remove, and via, the rein; and is a metaphor taken from a pampered horse, from whose mouth the rein has been removed; so that there is nothing to check or confine him. The metaphor is plain enough, and the application easy.

Verse 12. Having damnation] In the sense in which we use this word, I am satisfied, the apostle never intended it. It is likely that he refers here to some promise or engagement which they made when taken on the list already mentioned; and now they have the guilt of having violated that promise; this is the apua, or condemnation, of which the apostle speaks.

They have cast off their first faith.] By pledging their fidelity to a husband, they have cast off their fidelity to Christ; as a married life and their previous engagement are incompatible. Dr. Macknight translates these two verses thus:—But the younger widows reject; for when they cannot endure Christ's rein, they will marry: incurring condemnation, because they have put away their first fidelity.

Verse 13. And withal, they learn to be idle] They do not love work; and they will not work.

Wandering about from house to house] Gadding, gossiping; never contented with home; always visiting.

And not only idle] If it went no further, this would be tolerable; but they are tattlers, tale-bearers, whisperers, light, trifling persons; all to use and no work.

Busy-bodies] Persons who meddle with the concerns of others: who mind every one's business but their own.

Speaking things which they ought not.] Lies, slanders, calumnies; backbiting their neighbours, and every where sowing the seeds of dissension.

Verse 14. I will therefore that the younger women marry] As the preceding discourse has been about the younger widows, and this is an inference from it; it is most evident that by the younger women the apostle means the young widows. These he considers unfit for the office of the female diaconate; and therefore wills them to marry, educate children, and give themselves wholly up to domestic affairs. Here the apostle, so far from forbidding second marriages, positively enjoins or at least recommends them. And what man of sense would have done otherwise, in the cases he mentions? It is no sin in any case, to marry, bear children, and take care of a family: but it is a sin in every case to be idle persons, gadders about, tattlers, busy-bodies, sitting out and detailing family secrets, &c. &c. The good sentiment put by an able poet, and pious divine, into the mouths of little children, cannot be ill applied to multitudes of women, mothers, and grandmothers:

“See how the little busy bee Improves each shining hour!
And gathers honey all the day
From every opening flow’r.
In works of labour or of skill,
We should be busy too:
For Satan finds some mischief still,
For idle hands to do.” DR. WATTS.

The adversary] Any person, whether Jew or Gentile, who might be watching for an occasion to reproach, through the misconduct of its professors, the cause of Christianity.

Verse 15. For some are already turned aside] Some of these young widows, for he appears to be still treating of them, are turned aside to idolatry, to follow Satan instead of Christ. Slight deviations, in the first instance, from a right line, may lead at last to an infinite distance from Christ.

Verse 16. If any man or woman that believeth] If any Christian man or woman have poor widows, which are their relatives, let them relieve them; provide them with the necessaries of life, and not burden the church with their maintenance, that the funds may be spared for the support of those widows who are employed in its service, teaching children, visiting the sick, &c. &c. For the performing of such offices, it is very likely that none but widows were employed; and these were chosen, other things being equal, out of the most indigent of the widows, and therefore called by the apostle here and in ver. 3. τὰς ὄρφνας χήρας, widows indeed; widows desolate, without support, and without relatives.—See the note on ver. 10.

Verse 17. Let the elders that rule well] Elder is, probably, here the name of an ecclesiastical officer; similar to what we now term presbyter. See on ver. 1. Dr. Macknight has remarked, that “in the first age, the name πρεσβύτερος, elder, was given to all who exercised any sacred office in the church, as is plain from Acts xx. 28.

where the persons are called ἐπίσκοποι, bishops, who, ver. 17. were called πρεσβυτεροι, elders. The same thing appears from Titus i. 5. where those are called elders, who, ver. 7. are named bishops: and from 1 Tim. iv. 14. where collectively, all who held sacred offices in Lystra, are called πρεσβυτεροι, the presbytery or elder-ship; and are said to have concurred with St. Paul in setting Timothy apart to the ministry."

Double honour.] διπλος τιμας. Almost every critic of note allows that τιμας, here, signifies reward, stipend, wages. Let him have a double, or a larger salary who rules well: and why? Because in the discharge of his office, he must be at expense, in proportion to his diligence, in visiting and relieving the sick, in lodging and providing for strangers: in a word; in his being given to hospitality, which was required of every bishop or presbyter.

Especially they who labour in the word and doctrine.] Those who not only preach publicly, but instruct privately, catechise, &c. Some think this refers to distinct ecclesiastical orders; but these technical distinctions were, in my opinion, a work of later times.

Verse 18. The Scripture saith, Thou shalt not muzzle the ox.] This is a manifest proof that by τιμας, honour, in the preceding verse, the apostle means salary or wages. "Let the elders that rule well be accounted worthy of double honour," a larger salary than any of the official widows mentioned before, "for the labourer is worthy of his hire." The maintenance of every man in the church should be in proportion to his own labour, and the necessities of his family. He that does no work, should have no wages. In the church of Christ there never can be a sinicure. They who minister at the altar, should live by the altar; the ox that treadeth out the corn should not be muzzled; the labourer is worthy of his hire: but the altar should not support him who does not minister at all; if the ox won't tread out the corn, let him go to the common, or be muzzled; if the man will not labour, let him have no hire.

Verse 19. Against an elder] Be very cautious of receiving evil reports against those whose business it is to preach to others, and correct their vices. Do not consider an elder as guilty of any alleged crime, unless it be proved by two or three witnesses. This the law of Moses required in respect to all. Among the Romans, a plebeian might be condemned on the deposition of one credible witness; but it required two to convict a senator. The reason of this difference is evident; those whose business it is to correct others, will usually have many enemies: great caution, therefore, should be used in admitting accusations against such persons.

Verse 20. Them that sin rebuke before all] That is, before the members of the church; which was the custom of the Jews in their synagogues. But if the words refer to the elders alone, then the transgressing elder is to be re-proved before his fellows, and be tried by them.

That others also may fear.] This is the grand object of church censures, to reclaim the transgressors; and to give warning to others.

Verse 21. I charge thee before God] The apostle would have Timothy to consider that all he did should be done as in the sight of God, the Father of the spirits of all flesh; in the sight of Christ, the Saviour of sinners, who purchased the church with His own blood; and in the sight of the most holy, approved, and eminent angels, whose office it was to minister to the heirs of salvation. The word ἐλεκτοι, elect, applied to the angels here, is supposed to distinguish those who stood, when others fell from their first estate. The former were elect, or approved: the latter reprobate, or disapproved. This is not an unfrequent sense of the word ἐλεκτοι, elect. Perhaps there is nothing else meant than the angels that are chosen out from among others, by the Lord himself, to be ministering servants to the church.

Without preferring one before another] Χωρις κριματος, without prejudice. Promote no man's cause; make not up thy mind on any case, till thou have weighed both sides, and heard both parties, with their respective witnesses; and then act impartially, as the matter may appear to be proved. Do not treat any man, in religious matters, according to the rank he holds in life; or according to any personal attachment thou mayest have for him. Every man should be dealt with in the church, as he will be dealt with at the judgment seat of Christ. A minister of the Gospel, who in the exercise of discipline in the church, is swayed and warped by secular considerations, will be a curse rather than a blessing to the people of God. Accepting the persons of the rich, in ecclesiastical matters, has been a source of corruption in Christianity. With some ministers, the show of piety, in a rich man, goes further than the soundest Christian experience in the poor. What account can such persons give of their stewardship!

Verse 22. Lay hands suddenly on no man] Do not hastily appoint any person to the sacred ministry; let the person be well proved, before he receives the imposition of hands. Some understand this of laying hands on the sick.

Neither be partaker of other men's sins] It is a sin for any improper person to thrust himself into the sacred office; and he partakes of that sin who introduces, helps him forward, or sanctions him in it. O what an account will rash, undiscerning, and prejudiced bishops, presbyters, and others, have to render to God for their ordinations! Their laying rash or careless hands, "on skulls that cannot teach, and will not learn;" while probably they refuse inducting others well qualified for the Christian ministry. Keep thyself pure] From this and every other evil.

Verse 23. Drink no longer water, but use a little wine] The whole of this verse seems, to several learned critics and divines, strangely inserted in this place: it might have been, according to them, a note which the apostle inserted in the margin of this letter, on recollecting the precarious state of Timothy's health, and his great abstemiousness and self-denial. I believe the verse to be in its proper place; and, for reasons which I shall adduce, not less necessary than the directions which precede and follow it. But it may be necessary to inquire a little into the reasons of the advice itself. The priests, under the Mosaic law, while performing sacred rites, were forbidden to drink wine. Do not drink wine, nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die; it shall be a statute for ever through your generations. Levit. x. 9. Ezek. xlv. 21. It was the same with the Egyptian priests. It was forbidden also among the Romans; and particularly to women and young persons. PLATO De Legibus, lib. ii. Edit. Bip. Vol. viii. page 86. speaks thus:—Αρ' ουνομοθετησμεν, πρωτον, μη τους παιδας μεχρις εναν οκτακαιδωδεκα, τοκραταγειου μη γινωσθαι;—μεταδε τουτο, ουσι μη δε γινωσθαι του μετριου μεχρι τριακοτα εναν— τετρακοτα δε επιβαιοντα εναν η τους εξουσιαις αναχθαιτα, κ. τ. λ. "Shall we not ordain by law in the first place, that boys shall not, on any account, taste wine, till they are eighteen years old?—In the next place, we should inform them that wine is to be used moderately till they are thirty years old?—But when they have attained the fortieth year, then they may attend feasts:—for Bacchus has bestowed wine upon men, as a remedy against the austerity of old age, της του γηρος αυστηροτητας ιδρωσαντο, του οινου φαρμακον αυστ' απεισας ημας, και δυσθυμιας ληθην γινωσθαι, μαλακωτερον η σκληροτερον το της ψυχης υβος, καθαρως ην πυρ σιδηρον απωθετα γρηγορον: that through this, we might acquire a second youth, forget sorrow, and the manners of the mind be rendered softer, as iron is softened by the action of fire." But wine, according to the assertions of some, was given to men as a punishment, that they might be rendered insane, ο δε του λεγομενου ου' ημιν, φαρμακον επι τωτακτιν φασιν αιδους μη ψυχης απαισως οινω δδωσθαι, σωματος δε υγιαιας τε και ισχυος: pag. 100. "but we have now said, that it is, on the contrary, medicine; and was given that the soul might acquire modesty, and the body health and vigour."

From Athenæus we learn that the Greeks often mingled their wine with water; sometimes one part of wine to two of water; three parts of water to one of wine; and, at other times, three parts of water to two of wine.—See his Deipnosophista, lib. ix. "Among the Locrians, if any one was found to have drunken unmixed wine, unless prescribed by a physician, he was punished with death; the laws of Zaleucus so requiring. And among the Romans, no servant, nor free woman, ουτε των ελευθερων οι σερβαι μεχρι τριακοτα εναν, nor youths of quality drank any wine till they were thirty years of age." Deipnosoph. lib. x. c. 7. p. 429. And it was a maxim among all, that continued water-drinking injured the stomach. Thus Libanus, Epist. 1578. Πρωτον και ημιν ε βρωμαχος πας ενυψηση ιδρωστικα: "Our stomach is weakened by continual water-drinking."

From ch. iv. 12. we learn that Timothy was a young man: but as among the Greeks and Romans the state of youth, or adolescence, was extended to thirty years, and no respectable young men were permitted to drink wine before that time; allowing that Timothy was about twenty when Paul had him circumcised, which was, according to Calmet, in the year of our Lord 51. and that this epistle was written about A. D. 64 or 65, then Timothy must have been about thirty-five when he received this epistle; and as that was on the borders of adolescence, and as the Scripture generally calls that youth, that is not old age; Timothy might be treated as a young man by St. Paul, as in the above text, and might still feel himself under the custom of his country, relative to drinking wine, for his father was a Greek, Acts. xvi. 1. and, through the influence of his Christian profession, still continue to abstain from wine, drinking water only; which must have been very prejudicial to him, his weak state of health considered; the delicacy of his stomach; and the excess of his ecclesiastical labours,

As Timothy's life was of great consequence to the church of God at Ephesus, it was not unworthy of the Spirit of God to give the direction in the text, and to mingle it immediately with what some have called more solemn and important advice. 1. It was necessary that the work should be done in the church at Ephesus, which the apostle appointed to Timothy. 2. There was no person at Ephesus fit to do this work but Timothy. 3. Timothy could not continue to do it, if he followed his present mode of abstemiousness. 4. It was necessary, therefore, that he should receive direction from Divine authority, relative to the preservation of his life, and, consequently, the continuation of his usefulness; as it is not likely that a minor authority would have weighed with him.

Verse 24. Some men's sins are open beforehand] In appointing men to sacred offices in the church, among the candidates, Timothy would find—1. Some, of whom he knew nothing, but only that they professed Christianity:—Let such be tried before they are appointed. 2. Some, of whose faith and piety he had the fullest knowledge; and whose usefulness in the church was well known. 3. Some, whose lives were not at all, or but partially reformed; who were still unchanged in their hearts, and unholy in their lives. The sins of these latter were known to all; they go before to judgment; with them he could have no difficulty. With the first class he must have more difficulty: there might have been hypocrites among them, whose sins could not be known till after they were brought into the sacred office. The characters of all should be fully investigated. The sins of some, before this investigation, might be so manifest, as to lead at once, ex spem, to condemnation. The sins of others might be found out after, or in consequence of, this investigation: and those that were otherwise could not be long hid from his knowledge, or the knowledge of the church. On all these accounts the exhortation is necessary, Lay hands suddenly on no man.

Verse 25. Likewise also the good works of some] Though those who are very holy, and very useful in the church, cannot be unknown; yet there are others, not less holy, who need to be brought forward; who do much good in private; and their character and good works are not fully known, till after diligent inquiry. These are they who do not let their left hand know what their right doeth.

be said in the way of further and more satisfactory explanation. The whole account concerning the widows; who they were, and what their provision, and what their occupation, and how supported, are to me questions of considerable difficulty. In the notes I have given the best account of the different subjects, in my power. If the reader be satisfied and edified, I have gained my end.

2. On the subject of the imposition of hands, or what is vulgarly, but improperly called, ordination, I have not said much here, having given my views of the subject elsewhere in these notes.—See on ch. iii. 1, &c. I must again state my conviction that what is said on this subject in this chapter, and indeed in the epistle, is rather to be understood prophetically; and to have been intended for a much lower age of the Christian church. That any person should, from impure or secular motives, desire to be appointed to the ministerial office, at such a time, when poverty and persecution were the least they would reasonably expect, to me seems altogether inexplicable. But that many, after the church got accredited and established, and an ample revenue appointed for its ministers by emperors and kings, should wish to get into the priesthood for its emoluments, is a melancholy truth, which every year's experience testifies. To those who have the authority from the state, to appoint ministers for the church, this chapter reads a solemn and awful lesson. And not to them only, but to all who have the appointment of ministers or preachers, in every sect and party. How few are there who would kindle a fire on God's altar, were there not secular emoluments attending it! I am afraid the Scottish poet spoke truth, who said,

"'Tis god's maks sogers feicht the fiercer.
Without it, preaching wad be scarcer."

Gold or money, is the primum mobile, through every department of life.—Proh dolor!

NOTES ON CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. Let as many servants as are under the yoke] The word δουλοι, here means slaves converted to the Christian faith; and the ζυγον, or yoke, is the state of slavery: and by δεσποται, masters, despots, we are to understand the heathen masters of those Christianized slaves. Even these, in such circumstances, and under such domination, are commanded to treat their masters with all honour and respect; that the name of God, by which they were called; and the doctrine of God, Christianity, which they had professed, might not be blasphemed; might not be evilly spoken of in consequence of their improper conduct. Civil rights are never abolished by any communications from God's Spirit. The civil state in which man was before his conversion, is not altered by that conversion: nor does the grace of God absolve him from any claims which either the state or his neighbour may have on him. All these outward things continue unaltered.—See the notes on Ephes. vi. 5, &c. and 1 Cor. vii. 21, &c. and especially the observations at the end of that chapter.

Verse 2. And they that have believing masters] Who have been lately converted as well as themselves.

Let them not despise them] Supposing themselves to be their equals, because they are their brethren in Christ; and grounding their opinion on this, that in him, there is neither male nor female, bond nor free: but although all are equal as to their spiritual privileges, and state; yet there still continues, in the order of God's providence, a great disparity in their station: for, the master must ever be, in this sense, superior to the servant.

But rather do them service] Obey them the more cheerfully, because they are faithful and beloved; faithful to God's grace; beloved by Him and His true followers.

Partakers of the benefit] Ταυ υπηκοιας αρτιλαμβανων, joint partakers of the benefit. This is generally understood as referring to the master's participation in the services of his slaves. Because those who are partakers of the benefit of your services, are faithful and beloved: or it may apply to the servants who are partakers of many benefits from their Christian masters. Others think that benefit here, refers to the grace of the Gospel; the common salvation of believing masters and slaves: but Dr. Mack-right well observes, that υψηλως is no where used to denote the Gospel. One of Uffenbach's MSS. has υπηκοιας, of the service; this reading is plainly a gloss: it is not acknowledged by any other MS. nor by any version. FG. and the Codex Augustanus 6. have ωφελιας, of godliness; a term by which the whole Gospel doctrine is expressed, ch. iv. 7, 8. as also in the 6th verse of this chapter.

Verse 3. If any man teach otherwise] It appears that there were teachers of a different kind in the church, a sort of religious levellers, who preached that the converted servant had as much right to the master's service, as the master had to his. Teachers of this kind have been in vogue, long since the days of Paul and Timothy.

And consent not to wholesome words] Τυρωταις λογικαις, healing doctrines; doctrines which give nourishment and health to the soul; which is the true character of all the doctrines taught by our Lord Jesus Christ; doctrines which are according to godliness; securing as amply the honour and glory of God, as they do the peace, happiness, and final salvation, of man.

All this may refer to the general tenor of the Gospel; and not to any thing said, or supposed to have been said, by our Lord, relative to the condition of slaves. With political questions, or questions relative to private rights, our Lord scarcely ever meddled: he taught all men to love one another, to respect each other's rights, to submit to each other; to show all fidelity, to be obedient, humble, meek; and to know that His kingdom was not of this world.

Verse 4. He is proud] Τυρωτατα, he is blown up, or inflated, with a vain opinion of his own knowledge; whereas his knowledge is foolishness, for he knows nothing.

Doting about questions] He is sick, distempered, about these questions relative to the Mosaic law, and the traditions of the elders; for, it is most evident that the apostle has the Judaizing teachers in view, who were ever, in questions of theology, straining out a gnat, and swallowing a camel.

Strifes of words] Λογμαχιας, logomachies; verbal contentions, splitting hairs; producing Hillel against Shammai, and Shammai against Hillel, relative to the particular mode in which the punctilios of some rites should be performed. In this sort of sublime nonsense, the works of the Jewish rabbins abound.

Whereof cometh envy, strife, &c.] How little good have religious disputes ever done to mankind, or to the cause of truth! Most controversialists have succeeded in getting their own tempers soured, and in irritating their opponents. Indeed, truth seems rarely to be the object of their pursuit; they labour to accredit their own party by abusing and defaming others; from generals, they oft descend to particulars; and then, personal abuse is the order of the day. Is it not strange that Christians either cannot, or will not, see this? Cannot any man support his own opinions, and give his own views of the religion of Christ, without abusing and calumniating his neighbour? I know not whether such controversialists should not be deemed disturbers of the public peace, and come under the notice of the civil magistrate. Should not all Christians know that the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of the Lord.

Verse 5. Perverse disputings of men of corrupt minds] Disputations that cannot be settled, because their partizans will not listen to the truth; and they will not listen to the truth, because their minds are corrupt. Both under the law, and under the Gospel, the true religion was, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, soul, mind, and strength; and thy neighbour as thyself. Where, therefore, the love of God and man does not prevail, there, there is no religion. Such corrupt disputers are as destitute of the truth, as they are of love to God and man.

Supposing that gain is godliness] Professing religion only for the sake of secular profit; defending their own cause for the emoluments it produced; and having no respect to another world.

From such withdraw thyself.] Have no religious fellowship with such people. But this clause is wanting in AD*FG. some others; the Coptic, Sahidic, Æthiopic, Vulgate, and Itala, one copy excepted. It is probably spurious.

Verse 6. But godliness with contentment is great gain.] The word godliness, σεβειν, here, and in several other places of this epistle, signifies the true religion; Christianity; and the word contentment, ευραπεια, signifies a competency, a sufficiency; that measure or portion of secular things which is necessary for the support of life, while the great work of regeneration is carrying on in the soul. Not what this or the other person may deem a compeworld, and it is certain we can carry nothing out.

lency, but what is necessary for the mere purposes of life in reference to another world; food, raiment, and lodging.—See ver. 7. So, if a man have the life of God in his soul, and just a sufficiency of food and raiment to preserve, and not burden life, he has what God calls great gain; an abundant portion.

It requires but little of this world's goods to satisfy a man who feels himself to be a citizen of another country, and knows that this is not his real.

Verse 7. We brought nothing into this world] There are some sayings in Seneca which are almost verbatim with this of St. Paul. Nemo nascitur dives; quisquis exit in lucem jussus est lacte et panno esse contentus. Epist. xx. "No man is born rich; every one that comes into the world is commanded to be content with food and raiment." Excudit natura redeuntem sicut intrantem; non licet plus auferre, quam intuleras. Epist. cap. lii. "Nature, in returning, shakes off all incumbrances as in entering; thou canst not carry back more than thou broughtest in." Seneca and St. Paul were contemporary; but all the Greek and Latin poets, and especially the Stoic philosophers, are full of such sentiments. It is a self-evident truth; relative to it there can be no controversy.

Verse 8. Having food and raiment, let us be therewith content] Ἀρκουνοσφαια: let us consider this a competency. And it is evident that the apostle considers this a competency; and by these words explains what he said ver. 6.

The word ευραπεια, which we translate raiment, signifies covering in general; and here means house or lodging, as well as clothing.

Verse 9. But they that will be rich] Οἱ δε βουλομενοι πλουτων. The words are emphatic, and refer to persons who are determined to get riches; who make this their object and aim in life: who live to get money; who get all they can, save all they can, and keep all they get; and yet are apprehensive of no danger, because they seek to be rich by honest means: for it is likely that the apostle does not refer to those who wish to get riches by robbery, plunder, extortion, &c.

By the term rich, it is very likely that the apostle refers to what he had said above; having food and raiment, let us therewith be content. He that has more than these, is rich in the sense in which the apostle uses the term.

and many of the Fathers. It is in consequence of the temptation of the devil that they have determined to be rich; this temptation once received, others quickly succeed: and when they have swallowed down the temptation to the thing, then they drink in a thousand temptations to the means; and all these lead them, ὡς παγίδα, into an unforeseen and concealed trap. Παγίς, signifies a net, trap, gin, snare, spring, or pit dug in the ground, filled with sharp stakes, and slightly covered over; so that when a man, or any animal, steps upon it, he tumbles in; and is taken or destroyed. Such a snare is that into which those who will be rich, must necessarily fall. But who will believe this? See on ver. 10.

And into many foolish and hurtful lusts] The whole conduct of such a person is a tissue of folly; scraping, gathering, and heaping up riches, and scarcely affording to take the necessaries of life out of them for himself: these lusts or desires are not only foolish, but they are hurtful; the mind is debased and narrowed by them: benevolent and generous feelings become extinct; charity perishes; and selfishness, the last and lowest principle in mental degradation, absorbs the soul; for, these foolish and hurtful lusts drown men in destruction and perdition; the soul is destroyed by them here, and brought through them into a state of perdition hereafter. The apostle considers these persons like mariners in a storm: by the concurrence of winds, waves, and tides, they are violently driven among the rocks, the vessel is dashed to pieces, and in a moment they are all engulfed in the great deep! Such is the lot, and unavoidable catastrophe, of them that will be rich; even though they should strive to accomplish their desires by means the most rigidly honest.

In this place I beg leave to refer the reader to a sermon on this text, by the late Rev. JOHN WESLEY, in which the whole of this subject is treated by the hand of a master; and, for usefulness, the sermon is superior to every thing of the kind ever published. It is entitled, The Danger of Riches, and is found in his Works, Vol. X. p. 101. edit. 1811.

Verse 10. The love of money is the root of all evil! Perhaps it would be better to translate ῥίζη τῶν πάντων, of all these evils; i. e. the evils enumerated above: for, it cannot be true that the love of money is the root of all evil; it certainly was not the root whence the transgression of Adam sprang; but it is the root whence all the evils, mentioned in the preceding verse, spring. This text has been often very incautiously quoted; for how often do we hear, these things, and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness.

“the Scripture says, Money is the root of all evil!—No, the Scripture says no such thing. Money is the root of no evil; nor is it an evil of any kind; but the love of it, is the root of all the evils mentioned here.

[While some coveted after] Ὀφθησκουσιν, insatiably desiring:

[Have erred from the faith] Ἀπεπλανήθητε, have totally erred; have made a most fatal and ruinous departure from the religion of Christ.

And pierced themselves through with many sorrows.] The word παρουσάσθε, signifies to be transfixed in every part; and is an allusion to one of those snares, παγίδα, mentioned ver. 9. where a hole is dug in the earth, and filled full of sharp stakes; and, being slightly covered over with turf, is not perceived; and whatever steps on it, falls in, and is pierced through and through with these sharp stakes; the ἄδυνατοι πάλαι, the many torments, mentioned by the apostle.—See on ver. 9.

Verse 11. But thou, O man of God! Thou who hast taken God for thy portion, and art seeking a city that hath foundations, whose builder is the living God, see these things! Escape for thy life: Even thou art not out of the reach of the love of money. How many of the ministers of religion have been ruined by this! And how much has religion itself suffered by their love of money.

[Follow after righteousness] Justice and uprightness in all thy dealings with men. Godliness, a thorough conformity to the image of God and mind of Christ. Faith in Jesus, and in all that He has spoken; and fidelity to the talents thou hast received: and the office with which thou art entrusted.

[Love] To God and all mankind. Patience in all trials and afflictions.

[Meekness] Bearing up with an even mind under all adversities and contradictions.

Verse 12. Fight the good fight of faith! “Agonize the good agony.” Thou hast a contest to sustain, in which thy honour, thy life, thy soul, are at stake. Live the Gospel, and defend the cause of God. Unmask hypocrites, expel the profligate, purge and build up the church, live in the spirit of thy religion, and give thyself wholly to this work.

[Lay hold on eternal life]. All this is an allusion to the exercises in the public Grecian games; fight, conquer, and seize upon the prize; carry off the crown of eternal life!

[Whereunto thou art also called] The allusion to the public games is still carried on: thou hast been called into this palestra; thou hast been accepted as one proper to enter the lists with any antagonists that may offer: in the presence of many witnesses, thou hast taken the necessary engagements upon thee, and submitted to be governed by the laws of the stadium. Many eyes are upon thee, to see whether thou wilt fight manfully, and be faithful. Timothy's faith was undoubtedly tried, by severe persecution. In Heb. xiii. 23. it is said, Know ye that our brother Timothy is set at liberty. Hence it appears, that he was imprisoned for the testimony of Christ; and perhaps it was then, more than at his ordination, that he made the good confession here mentioned. He risked his life, and conquered. If not a martyr, he was a confessor.

Verse 13. I give thee charge] This is similar to that in ver. 21. of the preceding chapter, where see the note.

Who quickeneth all things] God, who is the fountain of life, and who is the resurrection; and who will raise thee up at the last day to a life of ineffable glory, if thou be faithful unto death. And should thy life fall a sacrifice to the performance of thy duty, all will be safe; for thy life is hid with Christ in God; and when He who is thy life shall appear; then shalt thou also appear with him in glory! Thy kingdom is not of this world: remember that this good confession was made by thy Master before Pilate. Keep disentangled from all earthly things. Live to and for God, and all will be well.

A good confession] The confession made by Christ before Pontius Pilate, is, that he was Messiah the King; but, that His kingdom was not of this world; and that hereafter, He should be seen coming in the clouds of heaven to judge the quick and dead.—See John xviii. 36, 37. and Mark xiv. 61, 62.

Verse 14. That thou keep this commandment without spot] Two things are mentioned here—1. That the commandment itself, the whole doctrine of Christ, should be kept entire. 2. That his life should be agreeable to that doctrine. Keep it without spot: Let there be no blot on the Sacred Book; add nothing to it; take nothing from it; change nothing in it. Deliver down to thy successors the truth as thou hast had it from God himself.

Unrebukable] Let there be nothing in thy conduct or spirit contrary to this truth. Keep the truth, and the truth will keep thee.

Until the appearing of our Lord] Hand it down pure, and let thy conduct be a comment on it; that it may continue in the world and in the church till the coming of Christ.

Verse 15. Which in his times he shall show] Jesus will appear in the most proper time: the time which the infinite God in His wisdom has appointed for the second coming of His Son.

The blessed and only Potentate] δυνατός, potentate, is applied to secular governors; but none of these can be styled ὁ μακάριος καὶ μόνος, the happy and only One; ὁ βασιλεὺς τῶν βασιλευσάντων, the King of kings, or the King over all kings; and κυριεύων πάντων, the Lord over all lords, or rulers. These are titles which could not be given to any mortal. This is made more specific by the verse following.

Verse 16. Who only hath immortality] All beings that are not eternal, must be mutable: but there can be only one eternal Being, that is God; and He only can have immortality.

Dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto] All this is said by the apostle in three words: φωσὶς ἡμῶν ἀπρόσφοτος, inhabiting unapproachable light. Such is the excessive glory of God, that neither angel nor man can approach it. It is indeed equally unapproachable to all created beings.

Whom no man hath seen, nor can see] Moses himself, could only see the symbol of the Divine presence: but the face of God no man could ever see. Because He is infinite and eternal, therefore he is incomprehensible; and, if incomprehensible to the mind, consequently invisible to the eye.

To whom] As the Author of being, and the Disposer of all good, be ascribed honour and power—the sole authority of all pervading, all superintending, all preserving and everlasting might.

These words of St. Paul are inimitably sublime. It is a doubt whether human language can be carried much higher, even under the influence of inspiration, in a description of the Supreme Being. It is well known that St. Paul had read the Greek poets. He quotes Aratus, Epimenides, and Menander—this is allowed on all hands. But does he not quote, or refer to, Æschylus, and Sophocles, too? Scarcely any person suspects this; and yet there is such a complete similarity between the following quotation from the above poets and the apostle's words, that we are almost persuaded he had them in his eye. But, if so, he extends the thought infinitely higher, by language incomparably more exalted. I shall introduce, and compare with the text, the passages I refer to.

Verse 15. Ο μακαριος και βουτος Δευταρις, ο Βασιλευς των βασιλευστων, και Κυριος των κυριουστων.

The Supreme Being is also styled the King of kings, and the Blessed, by Eusebius in his tragedy of the Supplicants:

Αναξ αναντων, μακαριον Μακαρτατη, και τιμιον Τυμοτατη κρατος.

Ver. 520, Ed. Porson.

“O King of kings, most Blessed of the blessed, most perfect of the perfect.”

Verse 16. Ο μοτος εχεν αδατασιαν, φος οκταν εσπασσεν.

In the Antigone of Sophocles, there is a sublime address to Jove, of which the following is an extract:

Αχρος χρυσυ Διπασις Κατεχης Ολυμπου Μαρμαροσσαν αυλας.

Ver. 608, Edit. Brunk.

“But thou, an ever-during potentate, dost inhabit the refulgent splendour of Olympus!”

This passage is grand and noble; but how insignificant does it appear, when contrasted with the superior sublimity of the inspired writer! The deity of Sophocles dwells in the dazzling splendour of heaven; but the God of Paul inhabits light, so dazzling and so resplendent, that it is perfectly unapproachable!

Synesius, in his third hymn, has a fine idea on the mode of God's existence, which very probably he borrowed from St. Paul.

Καταυμμενος του Ιδιου αυγας.

“O intellectual Being, veiled in Thine own effulgence!”

And a few lines after, he says,

Συ το πρωτομωτον Ιδιου αυγας.

“Thou art He who art concealed by Thy splendours.”

All these are excellent; but they are stars of the twelfth magnitude before the apostolic sun.

Verse 17. Charge them that are rich] He had before in ver. 9, 10. given them a very awful lesson, concerning their obtaining riches: and now he gives them one equally so, concerning their use of them.

That they be not high-minded.] That they do not value themselves on account of their wealth, for this adds nothing to mind, or moral worth.

Nor trust in uncertain riches] Πλαστων αδατατι, the uncertainty of riches; things which are rich in good works, ready to distribute, willing to communicate;

19 Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay hold on eternal life.

never at a stay, are ever changing, and seldom continue long with one proprietor; therefore, as well as on many other accounts, they are not to be trusted in. They cannot give happiness: because they are not fixed and permanent; neither can they meet the wishes of an immortal spirit, but in the living God, who is the unchangeable fountain of perfection.

Who giveth us richly all things to enjoy.] Who not only has all good, but dispenses it liberally for the supply of the wants of all His creatures: and He does not give merely what is necessary; but He gives what tends to render life comfortable. The comforts of life come from God, as well as the necessaries. He not only gives us a bare subsistence; but he gives us enjoyments. Were it not for the oppression and rapine of wicked men, every situation and state in life would be comparatively comfortable. God gives liberally, man divides it badly.

Verse 18. That they do good] That they relieve the wants of their fellow-creatures, according to the abundance which God has given them. The highest luxury a human being can enjoy on this side of the grave.

Rich in good works] That their good works may be as abundant as their riches.

Ready to distribute] Ευμεταδοτους εσσι. That they give nothing through partiality or favour; but be guided in their distribution, by the necessities of the objects presented to them; and that they confine not their charity at home, but scatter it abroad.

Willing to communicate] Κοινωνικως, bringing every poor person into a state of fellowship with themselves.

Verse 19. Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation] St. Paul seems to have borrowed this form of speech from Tobit.—See ch. iv. ver. 8, 9. If thou hast abundance, give alms accordingly: if thou have but a little, be not afraid to give according to that little: for thou treasurest up a good reward for thyself against the day of necessity. Θυμα γαρ αγαθει θεσσαριζεις σιαταιρς ης ημμετα αυγας. The apostle says: Αποθησαυριζομαι αυτους θυμωλον χαλοθ, ης το μελλοθ, να σπυλασονται της αιωνιου ζωης, “treasuring up a good foundation to them for the future, that they may lay hold on eternal life.” The sentiment is the same in both writers; the words nearly so; and the meaning is simply this, as it is judiciously paraphrased by Mr. J. Wesley, in his note on this passage, “Treasuring up for themselves a good foundation, of an abundant reward by the free mercy of God; that they may lay hold on eternal life. This cannot be done by almsdeeds: yet, they come up for a memorial before God. Acts x. 4. And the lack even of this, may be the cause

Christ has said, Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy. They who have not been merciful according to their power, shall not obtain mercy; they that have, shall obtain mercy, and yet the eternal life which they obtain, they look for from the mercy of God, through Jesus Christ.

Verse 20. O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust] This is another repetition of the apostolic charge. See chap. i. 5, 18, 19, iv. 6, 7, 14, 15, 16. v. 21. vi. 13. Carefully preserve that doctrine which I have delivered to thee, Nothing can be more solemn and affectionate than this charge.

Avoiding profane and vain babblings] See on chap. i. 4. and iv. 7.

And oppositions of science, falsely so called] Καὶ ἀντιθέσεις τῆς ἰσχυροῦς γνῶσεως. And oppositions of knowledge, falsely so named. Dr. Macknight's note here, is worthy of much attention. "In the enumeration of the different kinds of inspiration bestowed on the first preachers of the gospel, 1 Cor. xii. 8. we find the word of knowledge mentioned; by which is meant, that kind of inspiration which gave to the apostles and superior Christian prophets, the knowledge of the true meaning of the Jewish Scriptures. This inspiration the false teachers pretending to possess, dignified their misinterpretations of the ancient Scriptures, with the name of knowledge, that is, inspired knowledge; for so the word signifies, 1 Cor. xiv. 6. And as by these interpretations, they endeavoured to establish the efficacy of the Levitical atonements; the apostle, very properly, termed these interpretations, oppositions of knowledge, because they were framed to establish doctrines opposite to, and subversive of, the Gospel. To destroy the credit of these teachers, he affirmed that the knowledge from which they proceeded, was falsely called inspired knowledge; for, they were not inspired with the knowledge of the meaning of the Scriptures, but only pretended to it." Others think, that the apostle has the Gnostics in view. But it is not clear that these heretics, or whatever they were, had any proper existence at this time. On the whole, Dr. Macknight's interpretation seems to be the best.

The First Epistle to Timothy is ended. It was written from Laodicea, the metropolis of Phrygia of Pacatiana.—PHILOXENIAN SYRIAC.

There is one authority in Griesbach, Mt. c. for its being written from NICOPOLIS. This is the opinion also of Dr. Macknight.

That the epistle was not written from Laodicea nor Athens, but from Macedonia, has been rendered probable by the arguments produced in the Preface; to which the reader is referred for this, and the date of the epistle itself.

In reviewing the whole of this epistle, I can not help considering it of the first consequence to the church of God. In it, we see more clearly than elsewhere, what the ministers of the Gospel should be; and what is the character of the true church. Bishops, presbyters, and deacons, are particularly described; and their qualifications so circumstantially detailed, that it is impossible to be ignorant on this head. What the church should be, is also particularly stated: it is the house of the living God: the place where He lives, works, and manifests Himself. The doctrines and discipline of the church are not less specifically noted. All these subjects are considered at large in the notes; and here nothing need be added.

Should it be said, the apostle, in giving the qualifications of a bishop, "no where insists on human learning," it may be answered in general, that no ignorant person, in those times, could have possibly got admittance into the church as a teacher of Christianity. Every person, acknowledged as a teacher, was himself well taught in the word of God, and well taught by the Spirit of God: and much teaching of the Divine Spirit was then necessary, as the New Testament Scriptures were not then completed; and if we were to allow the earlier date of this epistle, scarcely any part of the New Testament had then been written. The Gospels had not come as yet into general circulation; and only a few of St. Paul's epistles, viz. those to the Thessalonians, and that to the Galatians, and the first to the Corinthians, had been written before the year 56. At such times much must have been done by immediate revelations, and a frequent communication of miraculous powers.

It is natural for men to run into extremes; and there is no subject on which they have run into wider extremes, than that of the necessity of human learning; for, in order to a proper understanding of the Sacred Scriptures, on one hand, all learning has been cried down, and the necessity of the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, as the sole interpreter, strongly and vehemently argued. On the other, all inspiration has been set aside, the possibility of it questioned, and all pretensions to it ridiculed in a way savouring little of Christian charity, or reverence for God. That there is a middle way, from which these extremes are equally distant, every candid man who believes the Bible must allow. That there is an inspiration of the Spirit which every conscientious Christian may claim, and without which no man can be a Christian, is sufficiently established by innumerable Scriptures; and by the uninterrupted and universal testimony of the church of God: this has been frequently proved in the preceding notes. If any one, professing to be a preacher of the Gospel of Jesus, denies, speaks, or writes against this, he only gives awful proof to the Christian church how utterly unqualified he is for his sacred function. He is not sent by God, and therefore he shall not profit the people at all. With such, human learning is all in all; it is to be a substitute for the unction of Christ, and the grace and influences of the Holy Spirit.

But while we flee from such sentiments, as from the influence of a pestilential vapour; shall we join with those who decry learning and science? absolutely denying them to be of any service in the work of the ministry; and often going so far as to assert that they are dangerous and subversive of the truly Christian temper and spirit; engendering little besides pride, self-sufficiency, and intolerance?

That there have been pretenders to learning, proud and intolerant, we have too many proofs of the fact to doubt it; and that there have been pretenders to Divine inspiration not less so, we have also many facts to prove. But such are only pretenders, for a truly learned man is ever humble and complacent; and one who is under the influence of the Divine Spirit is ever meek, gentle, and easy to be entreated. The proud and the insolent are neither Christians nor scholars.—Both religion and learning disclaim them, as being a disgrace to both.

But what is that learning which may be a useful handmaid to religion, in the ministry of the Gospel? Perhaps we may find an answer to this important question in one of the qualifications which the apostle requires in a Christian minister, 1 Tim. iii. 2. He should be apt to teach; capable of teaching others.—See the note. Now, if he be capable of teaching others, he must be well instructed himself; and in order to this, he will need all the learning that, in the course of the Divine Providence, he is able to acquire. But it is not the ability merely to interpret a few Greek and Latin authors, that can constitute a man a scholar, or qualify him to teach the Gospel. Thousands have this knowledge, who are neither wise unto salvation themselves, nor capable of leading those who are astray, into the path of life. Learning is a word of extensive import; it signifies knowledge and experience; the knowledge of God and of nature in general, and of man in particular; of man in all his relations and connexions; his history in all the periods of his being, and in all the places of his existence; the means used by Divine Providence for his support; the manner in which he has been led to employ the powers and faculties assigned to him by his Maker; and the various dispensations of grace and mercy by which he has been favoured. To acquire this knowledge, an acquaintance with some languages, which have long ceased to be vernacular, is often not only highly expedient, but, in some cases, indispensably necessary. But how few of those who pretend most to learning, and who have spent much time and much money in seats of literature, in order to obtain it, have got this knowledge?

All that many of them have gained is merely the means of acquiring it; with this they become satisfied, and most ignorantly call it learning. These resemble persons, who carry large unlighted tapers in their hand, and boast how well qualified they are to give light to them who sit in darkness, while they neither emit light nor heat; and are incapable of kindling the taper they hold. Learning, in one proper sense of the word, is the means of acquiring knowledge; but multitudes who have the means seem utterly unacquainted with their use, and live and die in a learned ignorance. Human learning, properly applied, and sanctified by the Divine Spirit, is of inconceivable benefit to a Christian minister in teaching and defending the truth of God. No man possessed more of it, in his day, than St. Paul; and no man better knew its use. In this, as well as in many other excellencies, he is a most worthy pattern to all the preachers of the Gospel. By learning, a man may acquire knowledge; by knowledge, reduced to practice, experience; and from knowledge and experience, wisdom is derived. The learning that is got from books, or the study of languages, is of little use to any man, and is of no estimation, unless practically applied to the purposes of life. He whose learning and knowledge have enabled him to do good among men, and who lives to promote the glory of God, and the welfare of his fellow-creatures, can alone, of all the literati, expect to hear in the great day, Well done, good and faithful servant! Enter into the joy of thy Lord.

How necessary learning is at present, to interpret the Sacred Writings, any man may see, who reads with attention; but none can be so fully convinced of this as he who undertakes to write a comment on the Bible. Those who despise helps of this kind, are to be pitied. Without them, they may, it is true, understand enough for the mere salvation of their souls; and yet, even much of this they owe, under God, to the teaching of experienced men. After all, it is not a knowledge of Latin and Greek merely that can enable any man to understand the Scriptures, or interpret them to others: if the Spirit of God take not away the veil of ignorance from the heart, and enlighten and quicken the soul with His all-pervading energy, all the learning under heaven will not make a man wise unto salvation.

END OF NOTES ON THE FIRST EPISTLE TO TIMOTHY.

PREFACE

SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO

TIMOTHY.

IN the Preface to the first of these epistles, particular mention has been made of the parentage, country, and education of Timothy; his call to the evangelic office; and of his appointment to the presidency of the church at Ephesus. And for every particular of this kind, the reader is referred to that Preface. What remains to be done, in reference to the present epistle, is, to inquire into the time in which it was most probably written. The disagreement on this question, among learned men, is very great; some arguing that it was written about the year 61, others referring it to the year 66. Some asserting that it is the first, in order of time, of these two epistles; and that it was written on Paul's first imprisonment at Rome. Several of the most eminent critics are of this opinion; and they have supported their sentiments with arguments of no small weight. Hammond, Lightfoot, and Lardner, as well as several critics on the continent, contend for this earlier date. Macknight and Paley take the opposite side. Were I convinced that the weight of the argument lay with the former, I should have fixed its chronology accordingly; but the latter appearing to me to have the more direct and the most weighty evidence in their favour, I am led, from the reasons which they give, to adopt their opinion.

Dr. Paley observes, that it was the uniform tradition of the primitive church, that St. Paul visited Rome twice; and twice there suffered imprisonment; and that, at the conclusion of his second imprisonment, he was put to death; and he thinks that the opinion concerning these two journeys of St. Paul is confirmed by many hints and allusions in this epistle, compared with what St. Paul has said in other epistles, which are allowed to have been written from Rome. I shall give his principal reasons:—

“That this epistle was written while Paul was a prisoner, is distinctly marked by the 8th verse of the first chapter: ‘Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his PRISONER.’ And that it was written whilst he was a prisoner at Rome, is proved by the 16th and 17th verses of the same chapter: ‘The Lord give mercy to the house of Onesiphorus, for he often refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my CHAIN; but when he was in Rome, he sought me out very diligently, and found me.’ Since it appears from the former quotation that St. Paul wrote this epistle in confinement, it will hardly admit of doubt that the word chain, in the latter quotation, refers to that confinement, the chain by which he was then bound, the custody in which he was then kept. And if the word chain designate the author's confinement at the time of writing this epistle, the next words determine it to have been written from Rome; ‘he was not ashamed of my chain; but when he was at Rome, he sought me out very diligently.’” Dr. Macknight thinks that Paul was now a close prisoner, very different in his circumstances, from his imprisonment, in which he was permitted to “dwell alone in his own hired house, and receive all that came to him,” and publicly to preach the Gospel, being guarded only by a single soldier. That he was in close confinement, he argues from the circumstance, that, when Onesiphorus came to Rome, he found that Paul was no longer that well known public character which he had been while in his first imprisonment; but being closely confined, he had some difficulty to find him out; and this appears to be fully implied in the apostle's words συνεβουλήθη με, και ερησε: “he very diligently sought me out, and found me.” ch. i. 17. And, that crimes were now laid to his charge widely different from those formerly alleged against him, appears from ch. ii. 9. καταπαθε μεντιν δια παντες αιμασουργος: “I suffer evil even to bonds as a malefactor;” plainly implying that he was not only abridged of all liberty, but was “bound hands and feet,” in a close dungeon. And this was probably on the pretence that he was one of those Christians whom Nero accused with having set Rome on fire. Hence the word malefactor, καταουργος, which may mean here that the apostle was treated as the worst of criminals.

That this epistle was not written during St. Paul's first imprisonment at Rome, or during the time in which the epistles to the Ephesians, Colossians, Philippians, and Philemon, were written, may be gathered, says Dr. Paley, with considerable evidence, from a comparison of these several epistles with the present.

I. “In the former epistles, the author confidently looked forward to his liberation from confinement, and his speedy departure from Rome. He tells the Philippians, ch. ii. 24. ‘I trust in the Lord that I also myself shall come shortly.’ Philemon he bids ‘to prepare for him a lodging; for I trust,’ says he, ‘that through your prayers I shall be given unto you.’ ver. 22. In the epistle before us, he holds a language extremely different: ‘I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand: I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day. ch. iv. 6—8.’”

PREFACE TO THE SECOND, &c.

Those who espouse the contrary opinion, suppose that these words only express the strong apprehensions and despair of life, which the apostle had when he was first imprisoned; but that afterward, finding he was treated with kindness, he altered his language, and so strongly anticipated, that he predicted, his enlargement. This reflects little honour upon the apostle's character; it shows him to be a person subject to alarms, and presaging the worst from every gloomy appearance. The whole of St. Paul's conduct shows him to have been the reverse of what this opinion represents him.

II. "When the former epistles were written from Rome, Timothy was with St. Paul, and is joined with him in writing to the Colossians, the Philippians, and Philemon: the present epistle implies that he was absent."

III. "In the former epistles, Demas was with St. Paul at Rome: 'Luke the beloved physician, and Demas greet you.' In the epistle now before us, 'Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world: and is gone to Thessalonica.'

IV. "In the former epistles, Mark was with St. Paul, and joins in saluting the Colossians. In the present epistle, Timothy is ordered to bring him 'with him, for he is profitable to me for the ministry.' chap. iv. 11."

The circumstances of Demas being with St. Paul while he wrote the former epistles, which was certainly during his first imprisonment; and of his having forsaken him when he wrote this, is a strong proof of the posterior date of this epistle: nor can the feelings of the apostle, so contradictorily expressed in this and the preceding epistles, be ever cleared (on the supposition of their relating to the same time and circumstances,) from weakness and contradiction.

Lewis Capellus has suggested the following considerations, which are still more conclusive:—

1. "In ch. iv. ver. 20. St. Paul informs Timothy, that 'Erastus abode at Corinth,' Ἐραστὸς ἐμνοῦντο ἐν Κορίνθῳ: the form of expression (the verb being in the first aorist) implies that Erastus had staid behind at Corinth when St. Paul left it; but this could not be meant of any journey from Corinth which St. Paul took prior to his first imprisonment at Rome: for, when Paul departed from Corinth, as related in the xxth chapter of the Acts, Timothy was with him: and this was the last time the apostle left Corinth before his coming to Rome; because he left it on his way to proceed to Jerusalem, soon after his arrival; at which place he was taken into custody; and continued in that custody till he was brought to Cæsar's tribunal."

There could be no need, therefore, to inform Timothy that "Erastus staid behind at Corinth," upon this occasion; because, if the fact were so, it must have been known to Timothy, who was present as well as St. Paul.

2. "In the same verse our epistle also states the following article: 'Trophimus have I left at Miletus sick.' When St. Paul passed through Miletus, on his way to Jerusalem, as related Acts xx. Trophimus was not left behind, but accompanied him to that city. He was indeed the occasion of the uproar at Jerusalem, in consequence of which St. Paul was apprehended; 'for they had seen,' says the historian, 'before with him in the city, Trophimus an Ephesian, whom they supposed that Paul had brought into the temple.' This was evidently the last time of Paul's being at Miletus before his first imprisonment; for, as has been said, after his apprehension at Jerusalem, he remained in custody till he was sent to Rome.

"In these two articles we have a journey referred to, which must have taken place subsequent to the conclusion of St. Luke's history; and of course, after St. Paul's liberation from his first imprisonment. The epistle, therefore, which contains this reference, since it appears, from other parts of it, to have been written while St. Paul was a prisoner at Rome, proves that he had returned to that city again, and undergone there a second imprisonment."

"These particulars," adds Dr. Paley, "I have produced not merely for the support they lend to the testimony of the Fathers concerning St. Paul's second imprisonment, but to remark their consistency and agreement with one another. They are all resolvable into one supposition, viz. that this epistle was not written during St. Paul's first residence at Rome, but in some future imprisonment in that city. The epistle touches upon names and circumstances connected with the date and with the history of the first imprisonment, and mentioned in letters during that imprisonment; and so touches upon them, as to leave what is said of one, consistent with what is said of others; and consistent also with what is said of them in different epistles."

From the whole, there seems the fullest evidence, 1. That this epistle was not written during St. Paul's first imprisonment at Rome. 2. That he was at Rome when he wrote this epistle. 3. That he was there a prisoner, and in such confinement as we know, from the Acts of the Apostles, he was not in, during the time of his first imprisonment there. 4. That this must have been some subsequent imprisonment. 5. That as the general consent of all Christian antiquity, states that St. Paul was twice imprisoned at Rome, and that from his second imprisonment he was never liberated, but was at its conclusion martyred; therefore this epistle must have been written while St. Paul was in his second imprisonment at Rome; and but a short time before his martyrdom. And as the Christian church has generally agreed that this apostle's martyrdom took place on the 29th of June, A. D. 66, the Second Epistle to Timothy might have been written some time towards the end of the spring, or beginning of the summer, of that year. It is supposed that St. Paul went from Crete to Rome, about the end of the year 65, on hearing of the persecution which Nero was then carrying on against the Christians, on pretence that they had set Rome on fire; for, as he knew that the church must be then in great tribulation, he judged that his presence would be necessary to comfort, support, and build it up. Like a true soldier of Jesus Christ, he was ever at the post of danger; and in this case, he led on the Forlorn Hope.

Other matters relative to the state and circumstances of the apostle, and those of Timothy, and the church at Ephesus, will be carefully brought before the reader in the course of the notes on this epistle.

NOTES ON CHAP. I.

Verse 1. Paul, a servant of God] In several places of his other epistles St. Paul styles himself the servant of Jesus Christ; but this is the only place where he calls himself the servant of God. Some think that he did this to vindicate himself against the Jews; who supposed he had renounced God, when he admitted the Gentiles into his church. But if thus to vindicate himself was at all necessary, why was it not done in his epistle to the Romans, the grand object of which was to prove, that the Gentiles came legally into the church on believing in Christ, without submitting to circumcision; or being laid under obligation to observe the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish law? This reason seems too fanciful. It is very likely that in the use of the phrase, the apostle had no particular design; for, according to him, he who is the servant of Christ, is the servant of God; and he who is God's servant, is also the servant of Christ.

The faith of God's elect] The Christians, who were now chosen in the place of the Jews; who, for their obstinate rejection of the Messiah, were reprobated; i. e. cast out of the Divine favour.

The acknowledging of the truth] For the propagation of that truth, or system of doctrines, which is calculated to promote godliness; or a holy and useful life.

Verse 2. In hope of eternal life] In expectation of a state of being and well-being which should last through eternity, when time should be no more. This includes not only the salvation of the soul, and its eternal beatification; but also the resurrection of the body. This was a point but ill understood, and not very clearly revealed under the Mosaic law: but it was fully revealed under the Gospel; and the doctrine illustrated by the resurrection and ascension of Christ.

Which God, that cannot lie, promised] We have often seen that the phrase, the foundation of the world, means the Jewish economy: and before the foundation of the world; the times antecedent to the giving of the law. This is evidently the meaning here.—See 2 Tim. i. 9, 10, 11.

Supposing the word aion, in this verse to signify eternal, says Dr. Macknight, the literal translation of the word aion, would be before eternal times: but that being a contradiction in terms, our translators, contrary to the propriety of the Greek language, have rendered it, before the world began; as Mr. Locke observes on Rom. xvi. 25. The true literal translation is, before the secular times, referring us to the Jewish jubilees, by which times were computed among the Hebrews, as among the Gentiles they were computed by generations of men. Hence, Coloss. i. 26. the mystery which was kept hid, απο των αιωνων, και απο των γενεων, from the ages, and from the generations, signifies the mystery which was kept hid from the Jews and from the Gentiles.

Verse 3. But hath in due times] Κατα τον καιρον; in its own times.—See 1 Tim. ii. 6. Gal. iv. 4. Eph. i. 10. il. 7. God caused the Gospel to be published in that time, in which it could be published with the greatest effect. It is impossible that God should prematurely hasten, or causelessly delay, the accomplishment of any of his works. Jesus was manifested precisely at the time in which that manifestation could best promote the glory of God, and the salvation of man.

Manifested his word] τον λογον αυτου, his doctrine, the doctrine of eternal life, by the incarnation, passion, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ.

Which is committed unto me] That is, to preach it among the Gentiles.

According to the commandment of God our Saviour] This evidently refers to the commission which he had received from Christ.—See Acts ix. 15. He is a chosen vessel unto Me, to bear My name before the Gentiles. For, I have appeared unto thee for this purpose, to make thee a minister and a witness of the things which thou hast seen; and of those things in the which I will appear unto thee: delivering thee from the people and from the Gentiles, unto whom now I send thee; to open their eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, &c. Acts xxvi. 16, &c. This is the commandment; and according to it he became the apostle of the Gentiles.

God our Saviour.—As the commission was given by Jesus Christ alone; the Person, whom he terms here God our Saviour, must be Jesus Christ only; and this is another proof that St. Paul believed Jesus Christ to be God. This eternal life God had promised in a comparatively obscure way, before the foundation of the world, the Jewish dispensation; but now under the Gospel, he had made it manifest; produced it with all its brightness, illustrations, and proofs.

Verse 4. To Titus, mine own son] Him whom I have been the instrument of converting to the Christian faith; and in whom, in this respect, I the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour.

5 For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst * set in order the things that are ^b wanting, and ^c ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee :

have the same right as any man can have in his own begotten son.—See the Preface ; and see on 1-Tim. i. 2.

Verse 5. For this cause left I thee in Crete] That St. Paul had been in Crete, though no where else intimated, is clear from this passage. That he could not have made such an important visit, and evangelized an island of the first consequence, without its being mentioned by his historian Luke, had it happened during the period embraced in the Acts of the Apostles, must be evident. That the journey, therefore, must have been performed after the time in which St. Luke ends his history, that is, after St. Paul's first imprisonment at Rome, seems almost certain.

Set in order the things that are wanting] It appears from this, that the apostle did not spend much time in Crete ; and that he was obliged to leave it before he had got the church properly organized. The supplying of this defect, he tells Titus, he had confided to him, as one whose spiritual views coincided entirely with his own.

Ordain elders in every city] That thou mightest appoint, κατασκευασεις, elders, persons well-instructed in Divine things, who should be able to instruct others, and observe and enforce the discipline of the church. It appears that those who are called elders in this place, are the same as those termed bishops in ver. 7. We have many proofs that bishops and elders were of the same order in the apostolic church, though afterward they became distinct. Lord Peter King, in his view of the primitive church, has written well on this subject.

In every city—κατα πόλιν. This seems to intimate that the apostle had gone over the whole of the hecatompolis or hundred cities, for which this island was celebrated. Indeed it is not likely that he would leave one, in which he had not preached Christ crucified.

Verse 6. If any be blameless] See the notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2, &c.

Having faithful children] Whose family is converted to God. It would have been absurd to employ a man to govern the church, whose children were not in subjection to himself : for, it is an apostolic maxim, that he who cannot rule his own house, cannot rule the church of God. 1 Tim. iii. 5.

not soon angry, ^h not given to wine, no striker, ⁱ not given to filthy lucre ;

8 ^k But a lover of hospitality, a lover of ^l good men, sober, just, holy, temperate ;

9 ^m Holding fast ⁿ the faithful word ^o as he had been taught, that he may be able ^p by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers.

10 For ^q there are many unruly and vain talkers and ^r deceivers, ^k 1 Tim. 3. 2.—1 Or, good things.—2 Thes. 2. 15. 2 Tim. 1. 13.—1 Tim. 1. 1, 6, & 4. 9, & 6. 2. 2 Tim. 2. 2.—Or, in teaching.—1 Tim. 1. 10, & 6. 3. 2 Tim. 4. 3. Ch. 2. 1.—^q 1 Tim. 1. 6.—Rom. 16. 18.

Verse 7. Not self-willed] Μη αυθαδης ; one who is determined to have his own way in every thing ; setting up his own judgment to that of all others ; expecting all to pay homage to his understanding. Such a governor in the church of God can do little good ; and may do much mischief.

Not soon angry] Μη οργιλον ; not a choleric man ; one who is irritable ; who is apt to be inflamed on every opposition ; one who has not proper command over his own temper.

Verse 8. A lover of hospitality] φιλοξενος ; a lover of strangers.—See the note on 1 Tim. iii. 2. Instead of φιλοξενος, one MS. has φιλοπτωχον, a lover of the poor. That minister who neglects the poor, but is frequent in his visits to the rich, knows little of his Master's work ; and has little of his Master's Spirit.

A lover of good men] φιλαγαθον ; a lover of goodness, or of good things in general.

Sober] Prudent in all his conduct. Just ; in all his dealings. Holy ; in his heart. Temperate : self-denying and abstemious in his food and raiment ; not too nice on points of honour ; nor magisterially rigid in the exercise of his ecclesiastical functions. Qualifications rarely found in spiritual governors.

Verse 9. Holding fast the faithful word] Conscientiously retaining, and zealously maintaining, the true Christian doctrine, according to the instructions, or κατα την διδασχην, according to the institution, form of sound doctrine, or confession of faith, which I have delivered to thee.

That he may be able by sound doctrine] If the doctrine be not sound, vain is the profession of it ; and vain its influence. It is good to be zealously affected in a good thing : but zeal for what is not of God, will do no good to the souls of men ; how sincere soever that zeal may be.

To exhort] Them to hold the faith, that they may persevere.

And to convince] Refutes the objections, confound the sophistry, and convert the gainsayers ; and thus defend the truth.

Verse 10. There are many unruly] Persons who will not receive the sound doctrine, nor come under wholesome discipline.

Vain talkers] Empty boasters of knowledge, rights, and particular privileges : all noise, empty parade, and no work.

Deceivers] Of the souls of men by their specious pretensions.

They of the circumcision] The Judaizing teachers, who maintained the necessity of circumcision, and of observing the rites and ceremonies of the Mosaic law, in order to the perfecting of the Gospel.

Verse 11. Whose mouths must be stopped] Unmask them at once: exhibit them to the people; make manifest their ignorance and hypocrisy, and let them be confounded before the people whom they are endeavouring to seduce.

Subvert whole houses] Turn whole Christian families from the faith; attributing to the broad way, what belongs only to the strait gate: ministering to disorderly passions, and promising salvation to their proselytes, though not saved from their sins.

Verse 12. One of themselves, even a prophet of their own] This was Epimenides, who was born at Gnosus, in Crete, and was reckoned by many the seventh wise man of Greece, instead of Pertander, to whom that honour was by others denied. Many fabulous things are related of this poet, which are not proper to be noticed here. He died about 538 years before the Christian æra. When St. Paul calls him a prophet of their own, he only intimates that he was, by the Cretans, reputed a prophet. And, according to Plutarch (in Solone) the Cretans paid him divine honours after his death. Dionysius Laertius mentions some of his prophecies: beholding the fort of Munichia, which guarded the port of Athens, he cried out, "O, ignorant men! if they but knew what slaughters this fort shall occasion, they would pull it down with their teeth!" This prophecy was fulfilled several years after, when the king Antipater took the garrison in this very fort, to keep the Athenians in subjection.—See Diog. Laert. lib. i. p. 75.

Plato de Legibus, lib. 2, says, that on the Athenians expressing great fear of the Persians, Epimenides encouraged them by saying "That they should not come before ten years, and that they should return after having suffered great disaster." This prediction was supposed to have been fulfilled in the defeat of the Persians in the battles of Salamis and Marathon.

He predicted to the Lacedæmonians and Cretans the captivity to which they should, one day, be reduced by the Arcadians. This took place under Euriorates, king of Crete, and Archidamus, king of Lacedæmon, vide Diog. Laert. lib. i. page 74. edit. Meibom.

It was in consequence of these prophecies, whether true or false, that his countrymen esteemed him a prophet; and that he was termed αυτοθεος, a divine man, by Plato: and that Cicero, De divin. lib. i. says he was futura præcians, et vaticinans per furorem. "He knew future events, and prophesied under a divine influence." These things are sufficient to justify the epithet of prophet, given him here by St. Paul. It may be also remarked, that rates and poeta, prophet and poet, were synonymous terms among the Romans.

The Cretans are always liars] The words quoted here by the apostle are, according to St. Jerom, Socrates, Nicephorus, and others, taken from a work of Epimenides, now no longer extant, entitled Περὶ χροσμων; Concerning Oracles. The words form a hexameter verse:—

Κριτες αυ ψευσαι, κακα θηρια, γαστρις αργαι.

The Cretans are always liars; destructive wild beasts; sluggish gluttons.

That the Cretans were reputed to be egregious liars, several of the ancients declare; inasmuch that Κριτιζων, to act like a Cretan, signifies, to lie: and χροσβια κριτισμου, to deceive. The other Greeks reputed them liars, because they said that among them was the sepulchre of Jupiter, who was the highest object of the Greek and Roman worship. By telling this truth, which all others would have to pass for a lie, the Cretans showed that the object of their highest admiration was only a dead man.

Evil beasts] Ferocious and destructive in their manners.

Slow bellies] Addicted to voluptuousness, idleness, and gluttony: sluggish or hoggish men.

Verse 13. This witness is true] What Epimenides said of them nearly 600 years before, continued still to be true.—Their original character had undergone no moral change.

Rebuke them sharply] Ασπιτως; cuttingly, severely; show no indulgence to persons guilty of such crimes.

15 ^a Unto the pure all things are pure; but ^b unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure: but even their mind and conscience is defiled.

^a Luke 11. 39, 40, 41. Rom. 14. 14, 20. 1 Cor. 6. 12. & 10. 23, 25. 1 Tim. 4. 3, 4. — ^b Rom. 14. 23.

nifies to be averse from, slight, or despise. So here, the persons in question despised the truth, and taught others to do the same.

Verse 15. Unto the pure all things are pure] This appears to have been spoken in reference to the Jewish distinctions of clean and unclean meats. To the genuine Christian, every kind of meat, proper for human nourishment, is pure, is lawful: and may be used without scruple. This our Lord had long before decided.—See on Luke xi. 39—41.

But unto them that are defiled] In their consciences; and unbelieving, ἀπιστοι, unfaithful both to offered and received grace; nothing is pure; they have no part in Christ, and the wrath of God abides upon them. Their mind is contaminated with impure and unholy images and ideas; and their conscience is defiled with the guilt of sins already committed against God.

Verse 16. They profess that they know God] He still speaks concerning the unbelieving Jews, the seducing teachers, and those who had been seduced by their bad doctrine. None were so full of pretensions to the knowledge of the true God, as the Jews. They would not admit that any other people could have this knowledge: nor did they believe that God ever did or ever would reveal himself to any other people: and that to give the law and the prophets to the Gentiles, would be a profanation of the words of God. Hence they became both proud, uncharitable, and intolerant: and in this disposition, they continue till the present day.

But in works they deny him] Their profession and practice were at continual variance. Full of a pretended faith, while utterly destitute of those works by which a genuine faith is accredited and proved. Dio Cassius represents Cæsar as saying of his mutinous soldiers, Ὀνομα Ῥωμαίων ἔχοντες, ἤγχα δὲ Κελτῶν ἔροντες. "Having the name of Romans, while they had the manners of the Gauls." How near are those words to the saying of the apostle!

Being abominable] Ἐδαικται. This word sometimes refers to unnatural lusts.

And disobedient] Ἀπειθεῖς; unpersuadable, unbelieving; and consequently disobedient. Characters remarkably applicable to the Jews through all their generations.

Unto every good work reprobate] Ἀδικοίμοι; adulterate: like bad coin, deficient both in the weight and goodness of the metal; and without the proper sterling stamp; and, consequently, not current. If they did a good work, they did not do it in the spirit in which it should be performed. They had the name of God's people; but they were counterfeit. The prophet said, Reprobate silver shall men call them.

16 They profess that they know God; but ^a in works they deny him, being abominable and disobedient, ^d and unto every good work ^e reprobate.

1. Though the principal part of this chapter, and indeed of the whole epistle, may be found in nearly the same words in the first epistle to Timothy; yet there are several circumstances here, that are not so particularly noted in the other: and every minister of Christ will do well to make himself master of both; they should be carefully registered in his memory, and engraven on his heart.

2. The truth, which is according to godliness, in reference to eternal life, should be carefully regarded. The substantial knowledge of the truth must have faith for its foundation; godliness for its rule; and eternal life for its object and end. He who does not begin well, is never likely to finish fair. He who does not refer every thing to eternity, is never likely to live either well or happily in time.

3. There is one subject in this chapter not sufficiently attended to by those who have the authority to appoint men to ecclesiastical offices; none should be thus appointed who is not able, by sound doctrine, both to exhort and convince the gainsayers. The powers necessary for this are partly natural, partly gracious, and partly acquired. 1. If a man have not good natural abilities, nothing but a miracle from heaven can make him a proper preacher of the Gospel; and to make a man a Christian minister, who is unqualified for any function of civil life, is sacrilege before God. 2. If the grace of God do not communicate ministerial qualifications, no natural gifts, however splendid, can be of any avail. To be a successful Christian minister, a man must feel the worth of immortal souls in such a way as God only can show it, in order to spend and be spent in the work. He who has never passed through the travail of the soul in the work of regeneration in his own heart, can never make plain the way of salvation to others. 3. He who is employed in the Christian ministry should cultivate his mind in the most diligent manner; he can neither learn nor know too much. If called of God to be a preacher, and without such a call he had better be a galley-slave, he will be able to bring all his knowledge to the assistance and success of his ministry. If he have human learning, so much the better; if he be accredited, and appointed by those who have authority in the church, it will be to his advantage: but no human learning, no ecclesiastical appointment, no mode of ordination, whether Popish, Episcopal, Protestant, or Presbyterian, can ever supply the Divine unction, without which he never can convert, and build up the souls of men. The piety of the flock must be faint and languishing, when it is not animated by the heavenly zeal of the pastor: they must be blind

if he be not enlightened; and their faith must be wavering when he can neither encourage nor defend it.

4. In consequence of the appointment of improper persons to the Christian ministry, there has been, not only a decay of piety, but also a corruption of religion. No man is a true Christian minister who has not grace, gifts, and fruit: if he have the grace of God, it will appear in his holy life and godly conversation. If, to this he add genuine abilities, he will give full proof of his ministry; and if he give full proof of his ministry, he will have fruit; the souls of sinners will be converted to God through his preaching, and believers will be built up on their most holy faith. How contemptible must that man appear, in the eyes of common sense, who boasts of his clerical education, his sacerdotal order, his legitimate authority to preach, administer the Christian sacraments, &c. while no soul is benefited by his ministry! Such a person may have legal authority to take tithes, but as to an appointment from God he has none, else his word would be with power, and his preaching the means of salvation to his perishing hearers.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. But speak thou the things] This is a conclusion drawn from the preceding chapter; the Judaizing teachers not only taught a false doctrine, but they led an unholy life; Titus was to act directly opposite; he must teach a sacred doctrine, and the things which become it; he must proclaim the truth, and illustrate that truth. The people must not only be well instructed, but they must be holy in their lives. Principle and practice must go hand in hand.

Verse 2. That the aged men be sober] It is very likely that the word aged is to be taken here in its literal sense; that it refers to advanced years, and not to any office in the church: the whole context seems to require this sense.

For an old man to be a drunkard, a light and trifling person, and a glutton, and not to be sober, grave, and temperate, is not only blameable, but monstrous. Seneca has well said, Luxuriosus, adolescens peccat; Senex insanit. "A young man addicted to a life of luxury, transgresses; an old man thus addicted, runs mad."

Verse 3. The aged women likewise] I believe elderly women are meant, and not deaconesses.

That they be in behaviour] Εν κατασκευαίς ἱερουργίας, that they be in their dress, gait, and general deportment, such as their holy calling requires; that they be not like the world, but like the church, decent without, and adorned with holiness within.

Not false accusers] Μη διαβολοῦς, not devils; we have had the same expression applied in the same way, 1 Tim. ii. 11. where see the note.

Not given to much wine] Μη οἴνου πολλοῦ δεδουλωμένας, not enslaved by much wine; not habitual drunkards or tipplers; habit is a species of slavery. Both among the Greeks and Romans, old women were generally reputed to be fond of much wine; hence the ancient Scholiast on Homer, II. vi. speaking of old women, says, χαίρει τῷ οἴνῳ, ἡ ηλικία αὐτῆς, at this age they delight in wine; which words Ovid seems to have translated literally, Vinosior atlas hæc eral. It is likely, therefore, that it was customary, among the elderly women, both Greeks and Romans, to drink much wine; and because it was inconsistent with that moderation which the Gospel requires, the apostle forbids it; doubtless it was not considered criminal among them, because it was a common practice; and we know that the Greek philosophers and physicians, who denied wine to young persons, judged it to be necessary for the aged.—See the note on 1 Tim. v. 23.

Verse 4. That they may teach the young women to be sober] That it was natural for the young to imitate the old, will be readily allowed; it was therefore necessary that the old should be an example of godly living to the young. St. Jerom, taking it for granted that drunkenness and impurity are closely connected, asks this serious question, Quomodo potest docere anus adolescentulas castitatem, cum si ebrietatem vetulas mulieres adolescentula fuerit imitata, pudica esse non possit?—How can an elderly woman teach young women chastity, when, if the young woman should imitate the drunkenness of the matron, it would be impossible for her to be chaste?

To love their husbands] The duties recommended in this and the following verse are so plain as to need no comment; and so absolutely husbands, to love their children,

A. M. cir. 4069. A. D. 65 or 66. A. U. C. 818. An. Imp. Ner. Cesar. Aug. 12.

5 To be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, a obedient to their own husbands, b that the word of God be not blasphemed.

6 Young men likewise exhort to be c sober minded.

necessary to the character of a wife, that no one deserves the name who does not live in the practice of them.

Verse 5. Keepers at home] Οικουρους. A woman who spends much time in visiting, must neglect her family. The idleness, dirtiness, impudence, and profligacy, of the children, will soon show how deeply criminal the mother was in rejecting the apostle's advice. Instead of οικουροι, keepers of the house, or keepers at home, ACD*EFG, and several of the Itala, have εισαγγουροι, workers at home; not only staying in the house, and keeping the house, but working in the house. A woman may keep the house very closely, and yet do little in it for the support or comfort of the family.

That the word of God be not blasphemed] The enemies of the Gospel are quick-eyed to spy out imperfections in its professors; and, if they find women professing Christianity, living an irregular life, they will not fail to decry the Christian doctrine on this account. "Behold your boasted religion! it professes to reform all things, and its very professors are no better than others! Our heathenism is as good as your Christianity." These are cutting reproaches; and much they will have to answer for, who give cause for these blasphemies.

Verse 6. Young men—exhort to be sober minded] Reformation should begin with the old; they have the authority, and they should give the example. The young of both sexes must also give an account of themselves to God; sober-mindedness in young men is a rare qualification; and they who have it not plunge into excesses and irregularities which in general sap the foundation of their constitution, bring on premature old age, and not seldom lead to a fatal end.

Verse 7. In all things showing thyself a pattern] As the apostle had given directions relative to the conduct of old men, ver. 2. of old women, ver. 3. of young women, ver. 4. and of young men, ver. 6. the words παν παντα, which we translate in all things, should be rather considered in reference to the above persons, and the behaviour required in them: showing thyself a pattern of good works to all these persons: being, in sobriety, gravity, temperance, what thou requirest others to be.

8 f Sound speech that cannot be condemned; g that he that is of the contrary part h may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you.

In doctrine showing uncorruptness] Mixing nothing with the truth; taking nothing from it; adding nothing to it; and exhibiting it in all its connexion, energy, and fullness.

Verse 8. Sound speech] Λογος υγιης; sound, or healing doctrine. Human nature is in a state of disease; and the doctrine of the Gospel is calculated to remove the disease, and restore all to perfect health and soundness. All false doctrines leave men under the influence of this spiritual disease: the unadulterated doctrine of the Gospel alone can heal men.

He that is of the contrary part] Whether this may refer to the Judaizing teachers in general, or to some one, who might, by his false doctrine, have been disturbing the peace of the churches in Crete, we cannot tell.

Having no evil thing to say of you] Against a person who is sound in his doctrine, and holy in his life, no evil can be justly alleged. He who reports evil of such a person, must be confounded when brought to the test. Instead of παν υμων, of you, επι ημων, of us, is the reading of CDEFG, and about forty others; with both the Syriac, all the Arabic, Slavonic, Vulgate, Itala, and several of the primitive fathers. This reading makes a better sense, and is undoubtedly genuine.

Verse 9. Exhort servants to be obedient] The apostle refers to those who were slaves, and the property of their masters: even these are exhorted to be obedient, ιδιαι δεσποταις, to their own despots; though they had no right over them on the ground of natural justice.

Please them well in all things] They were to endeavour to do this in all things; though they could not hope to succeed in every thing.

Not answering again] Μη απιλογουσαι; not contradicting or gainsaying. This is no part of a servant's duty; a servant is hired to do his master's work; and this, his master has a right to appoint.

Verse 10. Not purloining] Μη κεραιζουσαι. This word signifies not only stealing, but embezzling, another's property; keeping back a part of the price of any commodity sold on the master's account; neither giving away, privately selling, nor in any way wasting, the master's goods. In Acts v. 2. we translate it, to keep back part of the price; the crime of which

Ananias and Sapphira were guilty. It has been remarked that among the heathens this species of fraud was very frequent; and servants were so noted for purloining and embezzling their masters' property, that fur, which signifies a thief, was commonly used to signify a servant; hence that verse in Virgil, Eclog. iii. 16.—

Quid domini faciant, audent cum talia FURIS?

“What may not masters do, when servants (thieves) are so bold?”

On which Servius remarks, Pro servo FUREM posuit: furta enim specialiter servorum sunt. Sic Plautus de servo, Homo est trium literarum, i. e. fur. “He puts fur, a thief, to signify a servant, because servants are commonly thieves. Thus Plautus, speaking of a servant, says, Thou art a man of three letters, i. e. f-u-r, a thief.” And Terence denominates a number of servants, manipulus furum, “a bundle of thieves.” Eun. 4, 7, 6. The place in Plautus, to which Servius refers, is in Autul. act. ii. scene iv. in fine:—

Me vituperas? F-u-r, etiam fur trifurcisur.*

Doest thou blame me thou man of three letters? Thou art a thief, and the most notorious of all knaves.

It was necessary, therefore, that the apostle should be so very particular in his directions to servants, as they were in general thieves, almost by profession.

Verse 11. The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men ΕΥΑΓΓΕΛΙΟΝ γὰρ ἡ χάρις τοῦ Θεοῦ σωτηρίας πάντων ἀνθρώπων: literally translated, the words stand thus: For, the grace of God, that which saves, hath shone forth upon all men. Or, as it is expressed in the margin of our authorized Version, The grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men, hath appeared. As God's grace signifies God's favour, any benefit received from Him may be termed God's grace. In this place, and in Col. i. 6. the Gospel, which points out God's infinite mercy to the world, is termed the grace of God: for, it is not only a favour of infinite worth in itself, but it announces that greatest gift of God to man, the incarnation and atoning sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Now, it cannot be said, except in a very refined and spiritual sense, that this Gospel had then appeared to all men: but it may be well said, that it bringeth salvation to all men; this is its design; and it was to taste death for every man, that its Author came into the world. There is a beauty and energy in the word εὐαγγέλιον, hath shined out, that is rarely noted: it seems to be a metaphor taken from the sun. As by his rising in the east, and shining out, he enlightens, successively, the whole world; so the Lord Jesus, who is called the Sun of righteousness, Malac. iv. 2. arises on the whole human race with healing in his wings. And as the light and heat of the sun are denied to no nation nor individual; so the grace of the Lord Jesus; this also shines out upon all: and God designs that all mankind shall be as equally benefited by it in reference to their souls, as they are in respect to their bodies, by the sun that shines in the firmament of heaven. But, as all the parts of the earth are not immediately illuminated, but come into the solar light successively, not only in consequence of the earth's diurnal revolution round its own axis, but in consequence of its annual revolution round its whole orbit; so this Sun of righteousness, who has shined out, is bringing every part of the habitable globe into His divine light: that light is shining more and more to the perfect day; so that gradually and successively, He is enlightening every nation, and every man; and when His great year is filled up, every nation of the earth shall be brought into the light and heat of this unspotted, unclipped, and eternal Sun of righteousness and truth. Wherever the Gospel comes, it brings salvation: it offers deliverance from all sin to every soul that hears or reads it. As freely as the sun dispenses his genial influences to every inhabitant of the earth, so freely does Jesus Christ dispense the merits and blessings of His passion and death to every soul of man. From the influences of this spiritual Sun, no soul is reprobated, any more than from the influences of the natural sun. In both cases, only those who wilfully shut their eyes, and hide themselves in darkness, are deprived of the gracious benefit. It is no objection to this view of the subject, that whole nations have not yet received the Divine light. When the earth and the sun were created, every part of the globe did not come immediately into the light: to effect this purpose fully, there must be a complete revolution, as has been marked above; and this could not be effected till the earth had not only revolved on its own axis, but passed successively through all the signs of the zodiac. When its year was completed, and not till then, every part had its due proportion of light and heat. God may, in his infinite wisdom, have determined the times and the seasons for the full manifestation of the Gospel to the nations of the world, as he has done in reference to the solar light: and when the Jews are brought in with the fulness of the Gentiles; then, and not till then, can we say, that the grand revolution of the important year of the Sun of righteousness is completed. But in the mean time, the unenlightened parts of the earth are not left in total darkness; as there was light

Was roll'd together, or had tried his beams Athwart the gloom profound;”

for light was created, and in a certain measure dispersed, at least three whole days before the sun was formed; for his creation was a part of the fourth day's work; so, previously to the incarnation of Christ, there was spiritual light in the world: for He diffused His beams, while His orb was yet unseen. And even now, where, by the preaching of His Gospel, He is not yet manifested, He is that true light which enlightens every man coming into the world; so that the moral world is no more left to absolute darkness, where the Gospel is not yet preached, than the earth was, the four days which preceded the creation of the sun; or those parts of the world are, where the Gospel has not yet been preached. The great year is rolling on; and all the parts of the earth are coming successively, and now rapidly, into the light. The vast revolution seems to be nearly completed; and the whole world is about to be filled with the light and glory of God. A heathen poet, apparently under the inspiration of God, for God has his witnesses every where, speaks of those glorious times in words and numbers, which nothing but the Spirit of God can equal. It gratifies myself to refer to them; and will gratify my reader to find them entered here:—

Verse 12. Teaching us that, denying, &c. Παιδευομεθα ; instructing us as children are instructed. Christ is the great teacher : and men in order to learn must become His disciples ; must put themselves under His tuition, and learn of Him.

appetites, as men are governed by, who have their portion in this life ; and live without God in the world. Gluttony, drunkenness, lasciviousness, anger, malice, and revenge ; together with the immoderate love of riches, power, and fame.

We should live soberly] Having every temper, appetite, and desire, under the government of reason ; and reason itself under the government of the Spirit of God.

Righteously] Rendering to every man his due ; injuring no person in his body, mind, reputation, or property : doing unto all as we would they should do to us ; and filling up the duties of the particular stations in which it has pleased God to fix us ; committing no sin ; omitting no duty.

And godly] Εὐσεβως ; just the reverse of what is implied in ungodliness.—See above.

In this present world] Not supposing that any thing will be purified in the world to come, that is not cleansed in this. The three words, above, evidently include our duty to God, to our neighbour, and to ourselves. 1. We are to live soberly, in respect to ourselves. 2. Righteously, in respect to our neighbour. And, 3. Godly, or piously, in respect to our Maker.

Verse 13. Looking for that blessed hope] Expecting the grand object of our hope, eternal life.—See chap. i. ver. 2. This is what the Gospel teaches us to expect ; and what the grace of God prepares the human heart for. This is called a blessed hope ; those who have it, are happy in the sure prospect of that glory which shall be revealed.

The glorious appearing] Καὶ ἐπιφανῆσαι τῆς δόξης τοῦ μεγάλου Θεοῦ καὶ σωτῆρος ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. This clause literally translated, is as follows :—And the appearing of the glory of the great God, even our Saviour Jesus Christ.—On this passage, I must refer to the first page of the Observations on the Greek Article, added to the conclusion of the Epistle to the Ephesians, with the additional remarks, at the end of this Epistle, where both the structure and doctrine of this passage are explained at large.

Some think that the blessed hope, and glorious appearing, mean the same thing ; but I do not think so. The blessed hope refers simply to eternal glorification in general ; the glorious appearing to the resurrection of the body ; for, when Christ appears, He will change this vile body, and make it like unto His GLORIOUS BODY according to the working by which He is able even to subdue all things to himself.—See Philip. iii. 20, 21.

Verse 14. Who gave himself for us] Who gave His own life as a ransom price to redeem ours. This is evidently what is meant, as the words λυτρωσας and λαντι τιμουσιν imply. The verb λυτρωσας, signifies to redeem or ransom by paying a price, as I have often had occasion to observe ; and τιμουσιν signifies such a peculiar property, as a man has in what he has purchased with his own money. Jesus gave his life for the world, and thus has purchased men unto Himself; and having purchased the slaves from their thralldom, He is represented as stripping them of their sordid vestments, cleansing and purifying them unto Himself, that they may become His own servants; and bringing them out of their dishonourable and oppressive servitude, in which they had no proper motive to diligence; and could have no affection for the despot under whose authority they were employed. Thus redeemed, they now become His willing servants, and are zealous of good works, affectionately attached to that noble employment which is assigned to them by that Master, whom it is an inexpressible honour to serve. This seems to be the allusion in the above verse.

Verse 15. These things speak] That is, teach; for λαλει, speak, has the same meaning here, as διδαξαι, teach; which, as being synonymous, is actually the reading of the Codex Alexandrinus.

And exhort] Παρακαλει; repeat them again and again; and urge them on their attention and consciences.

And rebuke] Ελεγχει; demonstrate the importance, utility, and necessity, of them; and show them that God requires their obedience.

With all authority] Μετα παντος εξουτας; with all that authority with which thy office invests thee; and which thou hast received from God.

Let no man despise thee.] That is, act so that no person shall have any cause to despise thee, either for thy work, or the manner and spirit in which thou dost perform it.

1. Few portions of the New Testament excel this chapter. It may well form the creed, system of ethics, and text-book, of every Christian preacher. Does any man inquire what is the duty of a Gospel minister? Send him to the 2d chapter of the epistle to Titus for a complete answer. There, he will find what he is to believe, what he is to practise, and what he is to preach. Even his congregation is parcelled out to him. The old and the young of both sexes, and those who are in their employment, are considered to be the objects of his ministry; and a plan of teaching, in reference to those different descriptions of society, is laid down before him. He finds here the doctrine which he is to preach to them; the duties which he is required to inculcate, the motives by which his exhortations are to be strengthened, and the end which both he and his people should have invariably in view.

2. The Godhead of Jesus Christ is here laid down in a most solemn and explicit manner: He is the great God our Saviour, μεγαλος Θεος και Σωτηρ; human language can go no higher; and the expressions are such, and are so placed, that it is impossible either to misunderstand, or to misapply them. He who is the great God, higher than the highest, is our Saviour: He who is our Saviour, is the great God: but Jesus Christ is our Saviour; and Jesus Christ is here stated to be the great God.

3. The extent of human redemption is here also pointed out. The saving grace of this great God hath shone out upon every man: none has been passed by, none left uninfluenced; none without the first offer of life eternal, and a sufficiency of grace to qualify him for the state.

4. The operation of Divine grace in preparing the soul for glory is next referred to. It cleanses them from all unrighteousness, it purifies them unto God, and makes us fervent and abundant in good works. This system is worthy of God, and is properly suited to the state and necessities of man. These are truths which must be preached; which are not preached enough, and which cannot be preached too often. Awake, pastors! and do not the work of the Lord carelessly.—Awake people! and believe, to the saving of your souls. How shall he who is styled a minister of the Gospel, and who neither knows, feels, nor heartily inculcates these things, give an account in the great day, of himself, his calling, and his flock, to God? And, when this Gospel is preached faithfully and zealously, how shall the people escape who neglect so great a salvation! Neglect, in such a case, is the highest contempt which man can offer to his Maker. Surely such conduct must expect judgment without mixture of mercy. Reader, lay this to heart.

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. Put them in mind to be subject to principalities, &c.] By principalities, αρχαις, we are to understand the Roman emperors, or the supreme civil powers in any place.

By powers, εξουσιαις, we are to understand the deputies of the emperors, such as proconsuls, &c. and all such as are in authority under the supreme powers wherever we dwell.—See the doctrine of obedience to the civil powers discussed at large in the notes on Rom. xiii. 1—7.

This doctrine of obedience to the civil powers was highly necessary for the Cretans, who were reputed a people exceedingly jealous of their civil privileges, and ready to run into a state of insurrection when they suspected any attempt on the part of their rulers to infringe their liberties. Suidas, under the word αιωνιοι, they stirred up, gives the following fragments, ΟΙ ΔΕ ΚΡΗΤΙΚΟΙ ΦΟΒΟΥΜΕΝΟΙ ΜΗ ΤΙ ΤΙΜΩΡΙΑΣ ΤΥΧΩΣΙΝ, ΑΝΩΣΙΟΙ ΤΑ ΠΛΗΘΗ, ΠΑΡΑΚΑΛΟΥΝΤΕΣ ΤΗΝ ΕΞ ΑΙΩΝΟΣ ΠΑΡΑΔΕΔΟΜΗΝ ΕΛΕΥΘΕΡΙΑΝ ΔΙΑΦΥΛΑΤΤΩ. "But the Cretans, fearing lest they should be punished, stirred up the populace, exhorting them that they should carefully preserve that liberty which they had received from their ancestors." What part of the history of Crete this refers to I cannot tell: the words stand thus insulated in Suidas, without introduction or connexion. To be jealous of our civil rights and privileges, and most strenuously to preserve them, is highly praiseworthy: but to raise a public tumult, to avoid merited chastisement, under pretence that our civil privileges are in danger, is not the part of patriots, but insurgents. For such an advice as that given here, the known character of the Cretans is a sufficient reason. "They were ever liars, ferocious wild beasts, and sluggish gluttons." Such persons would feel little disposition to submit to the wholesome restraints of law.

Verse 2. To speak evil of no man] Μὴδὲ βλασφημῆν. To blaspheme no person; to reproach none; to speak nothing to any man's injury; but, on the contrary, bearing reproach and contumely with patience and meekness.

Verse 3. For we ourselves] All of us, whether Jews or Gentiles, were, before our conversion to Christ, foolish, disobedient, and deceived. There is no doubt that the apostle felt he could include himself in the above list, previously to his conversion. The manner in which he persecuted the Christians, to whose charge he could not lay one moral evil, is a sufficient proof that though he walked according to the letter of the law, as to its ordinances and ceremonies, blameless; yet his heart was in a state of great estrangement from God; from justice, holiness, mercy, and compassion.

Foolish] Ανοητοι, without understanding; ignorant of God, His nature, His providence, and His grace.

Disobedient] Απειθεσις, unpersuaded, unbelieving, obstinate, and disobedient.

Deceived] Πλανηθησιν, erring; wandering from the right way, in consequence of our ignorance, not knowing the right way; and, in consequence of our unbelief and obstinacy, not choosing to know it. It is a true saying, "There is none so blind, as those who will not see." Such persons are proof against conviction: they will not be convinced, either by God or man.

Serving divers lusts and pleasures] δουλοῦντες, being in a state of continual thralldom; not served or gratified by our lusts, and pleasures; but living, as their slaves, a life of misery and wretchedness.

Divers lusts—Επιθυμιας, strong and irregular appetites of every kind.

Pleasures—Ηδοναις, sensual pleasures; persons intent only on the gratification of sense; living like the brutes; having no rational, no spiritual object, worthy the pursuit of an immortal being.

Living in malice and envy] Εν κακια και φθονῳ διαγοῦντες, spending our life in wickedness and envy; not bearing to see the prosperity of others, because we feel ourselves continually wretched.

Hateful] Στυγριοι, abominable, hateful as hell. The word comes from Στυξ, Styx, the infernal river by which the gods were wont to swear, and he who, (according to the mythology of the heathens,) violated this oath, was expelled from the assembly of the gods, and was deprived of his nectar and ambrosia for a year; hence the river was hateful to them beyond all things: and the verb στυγω, formed from this, signifies to shiver with horror.

It may be taken actively, says Leigh, as it is read hateful; or else passively, and so may be read hated; that is, justly execrable and odious unto others, both God and man.

Hating one another] Μισοῦντες ἀλλήλους; this word is less expressive than the preceding; there was no brotherly love, consequently no kind offices; they hated each other, and self-interest alone could induce them to keep up civil society. This is the true state of all unregenerate men. The words which the apostle uses in this place give a finished picture of the carnal state of man; and they are not true merely of the Cretans and Jews, that then were, but of all mankind, in every age and country: they express the wretched state of fallen man.

Some of the Greek moralists expressed a dissolute and sensual life by nearly the same expressions as those employed by the apostle Plutarch, in Præcept. Conj. εἰς 8. Σωματικοὶ εἰσι κηδεσθαι, μὴ δουλοῦσθαι τὰ κακὰ ἴδιον αὐτοῦ, and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another.

καὶ ταῖς ἐπιθυμίαις, "We must take care of the body, that we may not be enslaved by its lusts and pleasures." And Josephus, speaking of Cleopatra, Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 4. says, Ἰουδαία πικρῶτα, καὶ δουλοῦσα τὰς ἐπιθυμίας, "She was an expensive woman, enslaved to lusts."

Verse 4. But after that the kindness and love of God] By χριστός, we may understand the essential goodness of the Divine nature; that which is the spring whence all kindness, mercy, and beneficence, proceed.

Love towards man—φιανθρωπία, philanthropy, It is to be regretted, that this attribute of the Divine nature, as it stands in relation to man, should have been entirely lost by a paraphratical translation. Philanthropy is a character which God gives here to Himself: while human nature exists, this must be a character of the Divine nature. God loves man; He delighted in the idea, when formed in His own infinite mind; He formed man according to that idea, and rejoiced in the work of His hands: when man fell, the same love induced Him to devise his redemption; and God the Saviour flows from God the Philanthropist. Where love is, it will be active, and will show itself. So the philanthropy of God appeared; ἔφανε, it shone out in the incarnation of Jesus Christ, and in His giving His life for the life of the world.

Verse 5. Not by works of righteousness] Those who were foolish, disobedient, and deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, could not possibly have works of righteousness to plead; therefore, if saved at all, they must be saved by mercy—See the note on Eph. ii. 8. and see a Discourse intitled, Salvation by faith proved, 8vo. 1816, in which I have examined every system invented by man for his restoration to the Divine favour and image; and have demonstrated, by mere reason, their utter insufficiency to answer the end for which they have been invented; and have proved, that the doctrine of salvation by faith, is the only rational way of salvation.

By the washing of regeneration] διὰ λουτροῦ παραλήψεως, undoubtedly the apostle here means baptism, the rite by which persons were admitted into the church; and the visible sign of the cleansing purifying influences of the Holy Spirit, which the apostle immediately subjoins. Baptism is only a sign, and therefore should never be sepa-

dantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour;

7 ^b That being justified by his grace, ¹ we should be made heirs ^k according to the hope of eternal life.

8 ¹ This is a faithful saying, and these things I will that thou affirm constantly, that they which have believed in God might be careful ^m to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men.

^f Ezek. 36. 25. Joel 2. 28. John 1. 16. Acts 2. 33. & 28. 15. Rom. 5. 5.—^g Gr. richly.—^h Rom. 3. 24. Gal. 2. 16. Ch. 2. 11.—ⁱ Rom. 8. 23, 24.—^k Ch. 1. 2.—^l 1 Tim. 1. 15. Ch. 1. 9.—^m Ver. 1, 14. Ch. 2. 14.

rated from the thing signified: but it is a rite commanded by God himself, and therefore the thing signified should never be expected without it.

By the renewing of the Holy Ghost, we are to understand not only the profession of being bound to live a new life; but the grace that renews the heart, and enables us thus to live: so the renewing influences are here intended. Baptism changes nothing; the grace signified by it, cleanses and purifies. They who think baptism to be regeneration, neither know the Scriptures nor the power of God; therefore they do greatly err.

Verse 6. Which he shed on us abundantly] Ὁ ἐξέχευ, which he poured out on us: as the water was poured out on them in baptism, to which there is here a manifest allusion; but as this was sometimes only sprinkled on the person, the heavenly gift was poured out not in drops, but πλοῦτος, richly, in great abundance.

Through Jesus Christ] Baptism is nothing in itself; and there had been no outpouring of the Holy Spirit, had there been no saving and atoning Christ. Through him alone all good comes to the souls of men.

Verse 7. That being justified by his grace] Being freed from sin; for the term justification is to be taken here as implying the whole work of the grace of Christ on the heart, in order to its preparation for eternal glory.

Should be made heirs] The Gospel not only gave them the hope of an endless state of glory for their souls; but also of the resurrection, and final glorification of their bodies: and they who were children of God, were to be made heirs of His glory.—See the note on Galat. iv. 6, 7.

Verse 8. This is a faithful saying] Πίστεις ἰσχυαί; this is the true doctrine; the doctrine that cannot fail.

And these things I will] Καὶ τὰν τούτων βουλήμασι διατέλειουσθαι; And I will, or desire, thee to maintain earnestly what concerns these points. The things to which the apostle refers, are those of which he had just been writing, and may be thus summed up:—

- 1. The ruined state of man, both in soul and body.
- 2. The infinite goodness of God, which devised his salvation.
- 3. The manifestation of this goodness by the incarnation of Jesus Christ.

6. The hope of the resurrection of the body, and the final glorification of both it and the soul through all eternity.

7. The necessity of obedience to the will of God, and of walking worthy of the vocation wherewith they had been called.

8. And all these points he wills him to press continually on the attention of believers; and to keep constantly in view, that all good comes from God's infinite kindness, by and through Christ Jesus.

They which have believed in God] All Christians; for who can maintain good works but those who have the principle from which good works flow; for, without faith, it is impossible to please God.

These things are good and profitable] They are good in themselves; and calculated to promote the well-being of men.

Verse 9. Avoid foolish questions and genealogies] In these the Jews particularly delighted; they abounded in the most frivolous questions; and, as they had little piety themselves, they were solicitous to show that they had descended from godly ancestors.

Of their frivolous questions, and the answers given to them, by the wisest and most reputable of their rabbins, the following is a specimen:—

Rabbi Hillel was asked, Why have the Babylonians round heads? To which he answered, This is a difficult question, but I will tell the reason; Their heads are round because they have but little wit.

Q. Why are the eyes of the Tormudeans so soft?—A. Because they inhabit a sandy country.

Q. Why have the Africans broad feet?—A. Because they inhabit a marshy country. See more in Schoetgen.

But ridiculous and trifling as these are, they are little in comparison to those solemnly proposed and most gravely answered, by those who are called the Schoolmen. Here is a specimen, which I leave the reader to translate:—

Utrum essent sacramenta in Paradiso? Utrum sancti resurgent cum intestinis? Utrum si deipara fuisset vir, potuisset esse naturalis parens Christi?

These, with many thousands of others, of equal use to religion and common sense, may be found in their writings. See the Summa of Thom. Aquinas, passim. Might not the Spirit have these religious triflers in view, rather than the less ridiculous Jews? See the notes on 1 Tim. l. 4. 2 Tim. ii. 23.

Contentions, and strivings about the law] Of legal contentions, and different and conflicting decisions, about the meaning of particular rites and ceremonies, the Talmud is full.

Verse 10. A man that is an heretic] Generally defined one that is obstinately attached to an opinion contrary to the peace and comfort of society; and will neither submit to Scripture nor reason. Here it means a person who maintains Judaism in opposition to Christianity; or who insists on the necessity of circumcision, &c. in order to be saved. This is obviously the meaning of the word heretic, in the only place in which it occurs in the Sacred Writings.

After the first and second admonition reject] Labour to convince him of his error; but if he will not receive instruction, if he have shut his heart against conviction, then burn him alive? No! even if demonstrably a heretic, in any one sense of that word, and a disturber of the peace of the church; God gives no man any other authority over him but to shun him, waparov. Do him no harm in body, soul, character, or substance: hold no communion with him, but leave him to God. See the notes on Acts. v. 17. and xxiv. 14. where the word heresy is particularly explained.

Verse 11. Is subverted] Is turned out of the way in which he may be saved, and consequently sinneth; enters into that way that leads to destruction.

Being condemned of himself] This refers to the Judaizing teacher, who maintained his party and opinions for filthy lucre's sake. He was conscious of his own insincerity; and that he proclaimed not his system from a conscientious love of truth, but from a desire to get his livelihood. Were the church in all countries, whether established by law, or unestablished, strictly scrutinized, multitudes of heretics of this kind would be found. And, perhaps, this is the only bad sense in which the word should be understood.

Verse 12. When I shall send Artemas—or Tychicus] These were either deacons or presbyters, which the apostle intended to send to Crete, to supply the place of Titus.—Who Artemas was we know not; he is not mentioned in any other place in the New Testament. Tychicus was a native of Asia, as we learn from Acts xx. 4. where see the note.

Be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis] Nicopolis was a city of Epirus, on the Gulf of Ambracia, near to Actium, which Augustus built in commemoration of his victory over Mark Antony. There was another Nicopolis in Thrace, at the entrance of Macedonia, on the river Nessus; but the former is supposed to be the place here intended.

For I have determined there to winter] Hence the apostle was at liberty, seeing his spending the winter at this, or at any other practicable place, depended on his own determination. It was probably pretty late in the autumn, and the apostle was now drawing near to Nicopolis; for he certainly was not yet arrived, else he would not have said, I have determined, usu, THERE to winter.

Verse 13. Bring Zenas the Lawyer] This person is only mentioned in this place: whether he was a Jewish, Roman, or Greek lawyer, we cannot tell.

And Apollos] Of this person we have some valuable particulars in Acts xviii. 24. 1 Cor. i. 12. iii. 5. 6. and iv. 6. Either St. Paul had left these at Crete, when he visited that island; or he had heard that, in their evangelical itinerancy, they were about to pass through it.

On their journey diligently] Afford them the means to defray their expenses. The churches through which these evangelists passed, bore their expenses from one to the other. See 3 John ver. 6.

Verse 14. And let ours also learn to maintain good works] There is something very remarkable in this expression. The words καλον εργα ποιεισθαι, which we translate to maintain good works, occur also in ver 8. and some think they mean, to provide for our own, and the necessities of others, by working at some honest occupation; and, that this was necessary to be taught to the Cretans, let ours also learn, &c. who were naturally and practically idle gluttons. Kypke observes, that the words mean—1. To be employed in good works—2. To defend good works; and to recommend the performance of them—3. To promote and forward good works; to be always first in them.

For necessary uses] That they may be able, at all times, to help the church of God, and those that are in want.

That they be not unfruitful] As they must be, if they indulge themselves in their idle, slothful disposition.

Verse 15. All that are with me] He means his companions in the ministry.

There is not one of these subscriptions of any authority; and some of them are plainly ridiculous. We do not know that Titus was what we term bishop, much less that he was ordained bishop of Crete, as appointed to a particular see: and still less, that he was the first bishop there. As to his being archbishop, that is the fiction of a time of deep darkness. That the epistle was written from some place near to Nicopolis, of Epirus, is very probable. That it was not written at Nicopolis is evident: and that this was not Nicopolis of Macedonia is also very probable.—See the Preface to this epistle for further information on this point. And see a treatise by old Mr. Prynne, intitled, The unbishoping of Timothy and Titus, 4to. Lond. 1636 and 1660, where, among many crooked things, there are some just observations.

PREFACE
TO
THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE.
TO PHILEMON.

IT may be thought strange that a short letter, written entirely on a private subject, without reference to the proof or defence of any doctrine of the Gospel, should, by the general consent of the church of God, from the highest Christian antiquity, have been received into the Sacred Canon; not only as a genuine production of St. Paul, but as a piece designed by the Holy Spirit for the edification of the church. However, such is the fact: and we may add, that this very piece was held so sacred, that even the ancient heretics did not attempt to impugn its authenticity, or corrupt its matter, while making dangerously free with the four Gospels, and all the other epistles!

Philemon, the person to whom it is addressed, was undoubtedly, at the time in which this epistle was sent, an inhabitant of Colosse; concerning which city, see the Preface of the Epistle to the Colossians; and was probably a Colossian by birth, though some suppose that he was of Ephesus. It is evident, from ver. 19. of this epistle, that he was converted to the Christian faith by St. Paul; this is agreed on all hands: but, as some suppose that the apostle had not visited Colosse previously to the writing of this epistle, they think it probable that he might have met with him at Ephesus, or in some other part of Asia Minor, where he formed an acquaintance with him, and became the means of his conversion. But there is no need for this supposition, as it is most probable that the apostle had not only visited Colosse prior to this, but that the Gospel was planted in that city, as in all other parts of Phrygia, by himself. See the Preface to the Colossians; and the note on Coloss. ii. 1.

That Philemon was a person of some consideration in his own city, and in the church in that place, is very evident from this epistle. He had a church in his house, ver. 2. and was so opulent as to be extensive in works of charity, and in entertaining those Christians who, from different quarters, had occasion to visit Colosse. See ver. 5.—7.

Whether he had any office in the church, is not clear: some think he was a bishop, others an elder or deacon: but of this there is no evidence. He was probably no more than a private member, whose house, hand, and property, were consecrated to God, His church, and the poor. He, who by the good providence of God, has property and influence thus to employ, and a heart to do it, need not envy the state of the highest ecclesiastic in the church of Christ. Both the heart and the means to do secular good are possessed by few; whereas multitudes are found willing both to teach in, and govern, the church.

The occasion of writing this letter was the following: Onesimus, a slave, had, on some pretence or other, run away from his master Philemon, and came to Rome, where St. Paul was at that time in prison, though not in close confinement, for he dwelt in his own hired house, in which he assiduously preached the Gospel, being guarded only by one soldier. See Acts xxviii. 16, 23.

It appears that Onesimus sought out Paul, whose public preaching, both to Jews and Gentiles, had rendered him famous in the city; and it is very likely that he was led to visit the apostle from having formerly seen him at his master's house in Colosse; and the word of life, preached by the apostle, became the means of his conversion. Being thus brought back to God, he became affectionately attached to his spiritual father, and served him zealously as his son in the Gospel. Onesimus, being thus brought to the acknowledgment of the truth, which is according to godliness, gave the apostle a full account of his elopement from his master; and, no doubt, intimated his wish to return and repair the breach which he had made. Though he was now both dead and necessary to St. Paul; yet, as justice required that reparation should be made, he resolved to send him back; and to remove all suspicion from the mind of Philemon, and to reconcile him to his once unfaithful servant, he wrote the following letter, in which, as Dr. Macknight expresses it, "with the greatest softness of expression, warmth of affection, and delicacy of address, he not only interceded for Onesimus' pardon, but urged Philemon to esteem him, and put confidence in him as a sincere Christian; and because restitution, by repairing the injury that had been done, restores the person who did it to the character he had lost; the apostle, to enable

PREFACE TO PHILEMON.

Onesimus to appear in Philemon's family with some degree of reputation, bound himself in this epistle, by his hand writing, ver. 18, 19. not only to repay all that Onesimus owed to Philemon; but to make full reparation also, for whatever injury he had done to him by running away."

It is generally thought that Onesimus had robbed his master: but there is certainly nothing in the epistle from which this can be legitimately inferred; these words, If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account. ver. 18. certainly do not prove it: they only state a possible case, that he might have wronged his master, or have been under some pecuniary obligation to him; and the apostle, by appearing to assume this, greatly strengthened his own argument; and met the last objection which Philemon could be supposed capable of making. There is neither justice nor piety in making things worse than they appear to be: or in drawing the most unfavourable conclusions from premises, which, without constraint, will afford others more consonant to the spirit of charity.

That this epistle was written about the same time with those to the Philippians and Colossians, is proved by several coincidences. "As the letter to Philemon, and that to the Colossians, were written," says Dr. Paley, "at the same time, and sent by the same messenger, the one to a particular inhabitant, the other to the church of Colosse, it may be expected that the same, or nearly the same persons, would be about St. Paul, and join with him, as was the practice, in the salutations of the epistle. Accordingly we find the names of Aristarchus, Marcus, Epaphras, Luke, and Demas, in both epistles. Timothy, who is joined with St. Paul in the superscription of the Epistle to the Colossians, is joined with him in this. Tychicus did not salute Philemon, because he accompanied the epistle to Colosse, and would undoubtedly there see him." It will not be forgotten, that Onesimus, the bearer of this epistle, was one of the bearers of that sent to the Colossians: Col. iv. 9. that when the apostle wrote that, he was in bonds, Col. iv. 3, 18. which was his case also when he wrote this; (see ver. 1, 10, 13, 23.) from which, and various other circumstances, we may conclude that they were written about the same time, viz. the ninth year of Nero, A. D. 62. Other particulars relative to this epistle, will be pointed out in the course of the notes; and particularly the uses which the church of God, and the private Christian, may derive from it.

NOTES ON PHILEMON.

Verse 1. Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ] It has already been noted in the Preface, that Paul was a prisoner at Rome, when he wrote this epistle, and those to the Colossians and Philippians. But some think that the term prisoner does not sufficiently point out the apostle's state; and that the original word δεσμιος, should be translated bound with a chain: this is certainly its meaning; and it shows us, in some measure, his circumstances; one arm was bound with a chain to the arm of the soldier to whose custody he had been delivered.

It has also been remarked that Paul does not call himself an apostle here, because the letter was a letter of friendship, and on private concerns. But the MSS. are not entirely agreed on this subject. Two MSS. have δουλος, a servant; the Codex Claromontanus and the Codex Sangermanensis, both in the Greek and Latin, have αποστολος, apostle; and Casiodorus has απεσταλτος δεσμιος, Paul, an imprisoned apostle of Jesus Christ. They, however, generally agree in the omission of the word αποστολος.

Unto Philemon, our dearly beloved] There is a peculiarity in the use of proper names in this epistle, which is not found in any other part of St. Paul's writings. The names to which we refer, are Apphia, Archippus, Onesimus, and Philemon.

Verse 2. APPHIA, Ἀφφια. Under the word Ἀφφια, Suidas says, Ἀδελφὸς καὶ ἀδελφῶν ὀνομασμένη. Apphia is the affectionate address of a brother or sister; or the diminutive of a brother and sister, used to express kindness and affection. Hence the apostle, referring to the meaning of the word, says καὶ Ἀφφια τῆ ἀδελφῆ ἀγαπῆτης, and to Apphia the beloved sister. Though ἀδελφῆ, sister, be not in our common text, it is found in AD*EFG. several others, the Itala, Vulgate, Slavonic, &c. and is undoubtedly genuine.

ARCHIPPUS, Ἀρχιππος. The ruler or master of the horse, from αρχη, a chief, and ἵππος, a horse. HEROES of old, were, both among the Greeks and Trojans, celebrated for their skill in managing and taming the horse, and employing him in war; this frequently occurs in Homer. The import of the name of Archippus, might suggest this idea to the apostle's mind, and lead him to say, Archippus our FELLOW-SOLDIER.

Suidas mentions a person of this name, who was once victor at the games, in the ninety-first Olympiad.

4 ^g I thank my God, making mention of thee always in my prayers,

5 ^h Hearing of thy love and faith, which thou hast towards the Lord Jesus and towards all saints;

There was one of the pupils of Pythagoras of this name, and I introduce him here, for the sake of a quotation from St. Jerom (Apol. adv. Ruffin.) relative to the doctrines taught by him and his fellow-disciple Lysis; φικτικῶν παρταταῖσι καὶ ἰκκοτικῶν, αἰσθῆσιαι μὴ τοῦ σώματος, ἀπαθῆσιαι δὲ τῆς ψυχῆς, ἀπολασῆσιαι δὲ τῆς γαστρὸς, γαστῆρ δὲ τῆς πόλεως, τῆ δὲ διαφροσύνης ἀπὸ τῆς κιλίας, καὶ αἰσῆ ἀπὸ πάντων το ἀκριατις. "By all means and methods these evils are to be shunned and cut off: effeminacy from the body; IGNORANCE from the soul; delicacies from the belly; sedition from the city; discord from the house; and, in general, intemperance from all things." Vid. FAB. Theol. Erud. Schol.

ONESIMUS, Ὀνησιμος. Useful, or profitable; from ὄνησις, to help. The import of this name led the apostle to play upon the word thus, I beseech thee for my son Onesimus; which in time past was to thee UNPROFITABLE, but now PROFITABLE to thee and me.

PHILEMON, Φιλεμων. Affectionate or beloved, from φιλημα, a kiss; this led the apostle to say, To Philemon our DEARLY BELOVED.

There is a peculiarity in this epistle, to which it would be difficult to find a parallel in any other part of St. Paul's writings.

It is very probable that Apphia was the wife of Philemon; and Archippus, their son, the pastor of the church at Philemon's house.

To the church in thy house] The congregation of Christians frequently assembling in Philemon's house: for, at this time, the Christians had neither temples, churches, nor chapels.— See the note on Rom. xvi. 5. and the reference there.

Verse 4. I thank my God] For all the good he has bestowed upon you; making mention of thee always in my prayers; that thou mayest hold fast all that thou hast got: and get all that thou dost further need.

Verse 5. Hearing of thy love and faith] His faith in Christ Jesus; his love to the saints. Several excellent MSS. and some Versions, put faith before love, which makes a more natural reading. There is no figure of speech which would vindicate our saying faith in the saints: so that if we do not allow of the arrangement in the MSS. referred to, we shall be obliged to have recourse to the transposition; because faith must refer to Jesus Christ, and love to the saints.

Verse 6. That the communication of thy faith] The words ἡ κοινωνία τῆς πίστεως σου, the fellowship or communication of thy faith, may be understood as referring to the work of love towards the saints, the poor Christians; which his faith in Christ enabled him to perform; faith being taken here for its effects: and indeed the word κοινωνία itself is not unfrequently used to denote liberality, alms-giving, and this is very properly remarked by Theophylact here: Κοινωνία πιστῶς ἑλεημοσύνη καλεῖται, ὡς ἀπὸ πιστῶς πολλὰς ῥαυόμεναι. "He terms alms-giving the communication of faith, because it is the fruit of much faith."

May become effectual] Dr. Macknight understands these words thus, "That the many good offices which thou dost to the saints may become effectual in bringing others to the acknowledgment of every good disposition which is in you towards Christ Jesus; or towards His members."

Instead of ἐνεργῆς, energetic or effectual, the Vulgate and some of the Fathers, as well as several Latin MSS. have read εὐαγγῆς, evident. This makes a very good sense, and seems to agree best with the scope of the place.

Instead of ὑμῶν, in you, ἡμῶν, in us, is the reading of all the best MSS. as well as of several Versions and Fathers.

Verse 7. For we have great joy] This verse does not read harmoniously. The Greek authorizes the following arrangement:—For, we have great joy and consolation in thy love, O brother, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee. The apostle speaks here of the works of charity in which Philemon abounded towards poor Christians.

Verse 8. Wherefore, though I might be much bold] It would be better to read, Wherefore, although I have much authority through Christ, to command thee to do what is proper; yet, on account of my love to thee, I entreat thee.

The tenderness and delicacy of this epistle, says Dr. Paley, have long been admired:—"Though I might be much bold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient; yet, for love's sake, I rather beseech thee, being such an one as Paul the aged, and now also a prisoner of Christ Jesus, I beseech thee for my son Onesimus, whom I have begotten in my bonds."

There is something certainly very melting and persuasive in this, and every part of the epistle. Yet, in my opinion, the character of St. Paul prevails in it throughout. The warm, affectionate, authoritative teacher is interceding with an absent friend, for a beloved convert. He urges his suit with an earnestness, befitting perhaps not so much the occasion, as the ardour and sensibility of his own mind. Here also, as every where, he shows himself conscious of the weight and dignity of his mission; nor does he suffer Philemon, for a moment, to forget it: "I might be much bold in Christ, to enjoin thee that which is convenient." He is careful, also, to recall, though obliquely, to Philemon's bold in Christ to enjoin thee

9 Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, being such a one as Paul the aged, ^c and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ.

memory, the sacred obligation under which he had laid him, by bringing him to the knowledge of Christ; "I do not say to thee, how thou owest to me even thine ownself besides." Without laying aside, therefore, the apostolic character, our author softens the imperative style of his address, by mixing with it every sentiment and consideration that could move the heart of his correspondent. Aged, and in prison, he is content to supplicate and entreat. Onesimus was rendered dear to him by his conversation and his services; the child of his affliction, and "ministering unto him in the bonds of the Gospel." This ought to recommend him, whatever had been his fault, to Philemon's forgiveness: "Receive him as myself, as my own bowels." Every thing, however, should be voluntary. St. Paul was determined that Philemon's compliance should flow from his own bounty: "Without thy mind would I do nothing, that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly:" trusting, nevertheless, to his gratitude and attachment for the performance of all that he requested; and for more: "Having confidence in thy obedience, I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say."

St. Paul's discourse at Miletus; his speech before Agrippa; his Epistle to the Romans; that to the Galatians, chap. iv. 11—20. to the Philippians, i. 29. ii. 2. the second to the Corinthians, vi. 1—13. and indeed some part or other of almost every epistle; exhibits examples of a similar application to the feelings and affections of the persons whom he addresses. And it is observable, that these pathetic effusions, drawn for the most part from his own sufferings and situation, usually precede a command, soften a rebuke, or mitigate the harshness of some disagreeable truth. Horæ Paulinæ, p. 334.

Verse 9. Paul the aged] If we allow St. Paul to have been about 25 years of age at the utmost, in the year 31, when he was assisting at the martyrdom of Stephen, Acts vii. 58. and as this epistle was written about A. D. 62. he could not have been at this time more than about 56 years old. This could not constitute him an aged man, in our sense of the term; yet, when the whole length of his life is taken in, being martyred about four years after this, he may not improperly be considered an aged, or elderly man; though it is generally allowed that his martyrdom took place in the 66th year of our Lord.

But the word πρεσβυς, signifies not only an old man, but also an ambassador; because old or elderly men were chosen to fulfil such an office, because of their experience and solidity: and πρεσβυτης, for πρεσβυτης, is used in the same sense, and for the same reason, by the Septuagint: hence some have thought that we should translate here, Paul the ambassador. This would agree very well with the scope, and even the design, of the place.

Verse 10. I beseech thee for my son Onesimus] It is evident from this, that Onesimus was converted by St. Paul, while he was prisoner at Rome; and perhaps not long before he wrote this epistle.

Verse 11. Was to thee unprofitable] Alluding to the meaning of Onesimus' name, as has been already noted; though the apostle uses a different Greek word to express the same idea.

Verse 12. Whom I have sent again] The Christian religion never cancels any civil relations: a slave, on being converted, and becoming a free man of Christ, has no right to claim, on that ground, emancipation from the service of his master. Justice, therefore, required St. Paul to send back Onesimus to his master; and conscience obliged Onesimus to agree in the propriety of the measure: but love to the servant induced the apostle to write this conciliating letter to the master.

Verse 13. In thy stead he might have ministered unto me.] As Philemon was one of Paul's converts, he became thereby his spiritual father, and had a right to his services when in need. This was a strong argument, not only to induce Philemon to forgive his servant, but to send him back to the apostle, that he might minister to him in his master's stead.

Verse 14. That thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity] If the apostle had kept Onesimus in his service, and written to Philemon to forgive him, and permit him to stay; to this, it is probable, he would have agreed; but the benefit thus conceded might have lost much of its real worth by the consideration that, had he been at Colosse, Philemon would not have sent him to Rome; but being there, and in the apostle's service, he could not, with propriety, order him home: thus the benefit to the apostle would have appeared to have been of necessity. The apostle, therefore, by sending him back again, gave Philemon the opportunity to do all as if self-moved to it. This is a very delicate touch.

Verse 15. He—departed for a season] This is another most delicate stroke. He departed for a slave, thy unfaithful slave; he departed for a do nothing; ^d that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly.

15 ^e For, perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldst receive him for ever;

16 Not now as a servant, but above a servant, ^f a brother beloved, specially to me, but how much more unto thee, ^g both in the flesh and in the Lord?

17 If thou count me therefore ^h a partner, receive him as myself.

short time; but so has the mercy of God operated in his behalf, and the providence of God in thine, that he now returns, not an unfaithful slave, in whom thou couldst repose no confidence, but as a brother, a beloved brother in the Lord, to be in the same heavenly family with thee for ever. Thou hast, therefore, reason to be thankful to God that he did depart, that he might be restored to thee again infinitely better than he was when he left thee. God has permitted his unfaithfulness, and overruled the whole, both to his advantage and thine. The apology for Onesimus is very similar to that made by Joseph for his brethren, Gen. xlv. 5.

Verse 16. Not now as a servant] Do not receive him merely as thy slave, nor treat him according to that condition; but as a brother; as a genuine Christian, and particularly dear to me.

Both in the flesh and in the Lord] There is no reason to believe that Onesimus was of the kindred of Philemon; and we must take the term flesh here, as referring to the right which Philemon had in him. He was a part of his property, and of his family; as a slave, this was his condition. But he now stood in a twofold relation to Philemon—1. According to the flesh, as above explained, he was one of his family—2. In the Lord, he was now also a member of the heavenly family, and of the church at Philemon's house. Philemon's interest in him was now doubled, in consequence of his conversion to Christianity.

Verse 17. If thou count me therefore a partner] If thou dost consider me as a friend; if I have still the place of a friend in thy affection, receive him as myself; for, as I feel him as my own soul, in receiving him, thou receivest me.

There is a fine model of recommending a friend to the attention of a great man, in the epistle of Horace to Tiberius, in behalf of his friend Septimius; Epistolar. lib. i. Ep. 9. which contains several strokes not unlike some of those in the Epistle to Philemon. It is written with much art; but is greatly exceeded by that of St. Paul. As it is very short, I shall insert it.

Septimius, Claudi, nimirum intelligit unus, Quanti me facias; nam cum rogat, et prece cogit

"O Claudius, Septimius alone knows what value thou hast for me; for he asks, and earnestly treats me, to recommend him to thee, as a man worthy of the service and confidence of Tiberius, who is so correct a judge of merit. When he imagines that I possess the honour of being one of thy most intimate friends, he sees and knows me more particularly than I do myself. I said indeed many things to induce him to excuse me; but I feared lest I should be thought to dissemble my interest with thee; that I might reserve it all for my own advantage. Therefore, in order to shun the reproach of a greater fault, I have assumed all the consequence of a courtier; and have, at the request of my friend, laid aside becoming modesty; which, if thou canst pardon, receive this man into the list of thy domestics, and believe him to be a person of probity and worth."

This is not only greatly outdone by St. Paul, but also by a letter of Pliny to his friend Sabinianus, in behalf of his servant; who, by some means, had incurred his master's displeasure.—See it at the conclusion of these notes.

Verse 18. If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee aught] Had the apostle been assured that Onesimus had robbed his master, he certainly would not have spoken in this hypothetical way: he only puts a possible case, if he have wronged, or owe thee aught, place all to my account: I will discharge all he owes thee.

Verse 19. I Paul have written it with mine own hand] It is likely that the whole of the letter was written by St. Paul himself, which was not his usual custom.—See on 2 Thess. iii. 17. But, by thus speaking, he bound Philemon to do what he requested, as an act of common civility; if he could not feel a higher motive from what he had already urged.

Albeit I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me] I ask thee to do this thing to oblige me; though I will not say how much thou owest unto me; even thine ownself, as having been the means of thy conversion.

Verse 20. Yea, brother] It is even so, that thou art thus indebted to me. Let me have joy of thee; in forgiving Onesimus, and receiving him into thy favour. In the words ἡμεῖς σου οὐκ ἐμεν, which we should translate let me have profit of thee, there is an evident paronomasia, or play on the name of Onesimus.—See on ver. 2, and 11.

Refresh my bowels] Gratify the earnest longing of my soul, in this. I ask neither thy money nor goods; I ask what will enrich, not impoverish, thee to give.

Verse 21. Having confidence in thy obedience] I know that it will please thee thus to oblige thy friend; and I know that thou wilt do more than I request, because thou feelest the affection of a son to thy spiritual father. Some think that the apostle hints to Philemon that he should manumit Onesimus.

Verse 23. But withal prepare me also a lodging] Does not the apostle mention this as conferring an obligation on Philemon? I will begin to repay thee by taking up my abode at thy house, as soon as I shall be enlarged from prison. But some think he wished Philemon to hire him a house, that he might have a lodging of his own, when he returned to Colosse.

For I trust that through your prayers] It is very likely that this epistle was written a short time before the liberation of the apostle from his first imprisonment at Rome.—See Acts xxviii. 30. and Phil. ii. 24. and that he had that liberation now in full prospect.

Verse 23. Epaphras, my fellow-prisoner] Epaphras was a Colossian, as we learn from Coloss. iv. 12. Epaphras, who is one of you. But there is no account there of his being in prison, though the not mentioning of it does not necessarily imply that he was not. Some time or other he had suffered imprisonment for the truth of the Gospel; and, on that account, St. Paul might, in a general way, call him fel-lo-w-prisoner.

Verse 24. Marcus, Aristarchus, &c.] These were all acquaintances of Philemon, and probably Colossians; and may be all considered as joining here with St. Paul in his request for Onesimus. Some think that Marcus was either the evangelist, or John Mark, the nephew of Barnabas, Acts xii. 12, 25. xx. 4. xxvii. 2. Aristarchus was probably the same with him mentioned Acts xix. 29. xx. 4.—See Coloss. iv. 10.

Demas] Is supposed to be the same who continued in his attachment to Paul, till his last imprisonment at Rome; after which he left him for the love of the world, 2 Tim. iv. 9.

Lucas] Is supposed to be Luke the evangelist, and author of the Acts of the Apostles. On these suppositions little confidence can be placed: they may be correct; they may be otherwise.

Verse 25. The grace of our Lord Jesus be with your spirit.] By using the plural uour, your, the apostle, in effect, directs or addresses the epistle not only to Philemon, but to all the church at his house.

Amen.] Is wanting, as usual, in the best MSS.

The subscriptions are also various, as in preceding cases.

As some have thought it strange, that a private letter, of a particular business and friendship, should have got a place in the Sacred Canon; others have been industrious to find out the general uses which may be made of it. The following are those which seem to come most naturally from the text:

1. In a religious point of view, all genuine Christian converts are on a level: Onesimus, the slave, on his conversion, becomes the apostle's beloved son, and Philemon's brother.

2. Christianity makes no change in men's civil affairs: even a slave did not become a free man by Christian baptism.

3. No servant should be either taken or retained from his own master, without the master's consent, ver. 13, 14.

4. We should do good unto all men; and not be above helping the meanest slave when we have the opportunity.

5. Restitution is due where an injury has been done, unless the injured party freely forgive, ver. 18.

6. We should do all in our power to make up quarrels and differences; and reconcile those that are at variance.

7. We should be grateful to our benefactors; and be ready to compensate one good turn with another.

8. We should forgive the penitent who have offended us; and rejoice in the opportunity of being reconciled to them.

9. Authority is not always to be used; a prudent man, who is possessed of it, will rather use a mild and obliging manner, than to have recourse to the authority of his office.

10. The ministers of the Gospel should learn to know the worth of an immortal soul; and be as ready to use their talents for the conversion of slaves and the ignoble as the great and opulent; and prize the converted slave as highly as the converted lord: showing no sinful respect of persons.

11. Christianity, properly understood, and its doctrines properly applied, becomes the most powerful means of the melioration of men: the wicked and profligate, when brought under its influence, become useful members of society. It can transform a worthless slave into a pious, amiable, and useful man: and make him not only happier and better in himself, but also a blessing to the community.

12. We should never despair of reclaiming the wicked. No man is out of the reach of God's mercy as long as he breathes. Pretending to say that such and such cases are hopeless, is only a colouring for our want of zeal, and a pretence to excuse our slothfulness.

13. The anxiety which the apostle showed for the welfare of Onesimus, in return for his affectionate services, could not fail to cherish good dispositions in the breast of Philemon. We do a man a great kindness when we even engage him in acts of mercy and benevolence.

14. From this epistle we learn what sort of man the apostle was in private life. He has here displayed qualities which are in the highest estimation among men; a noble spirit arising from a consciousness of his own dignity; consummate prudence; uncommon generosity; the warmest friendship; the most skilful address; and the greatest politeness, as well as purity of manners: qualities which are never found either in the enthusiast or impostor.—See Macknight and Dodd.

There is extant an epistle of Pliny on the very same subject, directed to his friend Sabinianus, in behalf of his manumitted slave, who had offended him, and was consequently cast out of favour. Dr. Doddridge says, that "that epistle, though penned by one who was allowed to excel in the epistolary style, and though it undoubtedly has many beauties, will be found, by persons of taste, much inferior to this animated composition of the apostle Paul."

I have already introduced an epistle of Horace, on a somewhat similar subject: but that of Pliny is so exactly parallel, and so truly excellent, that I am sure its insertion will gratify every intelligent reader: and I insert it the rather, because the works of Pliny are in but few hands: and his epistles are known to very few except the learned:—

C. PLINIUS SABINIANO suo, S.

Libertus tuus, cui succensere te dixeras, venit ad me advolutusque pedibus meis, tanquam tuis, hæsit. Flevis multum multum rogavit, multum etiam tacuit: in summa, fecit mihi fidem penitentia. Verè credo emendatum, quia deliquisse se sentit. Irascaris scio; et irascaris merito, id quoque scio: sed tunc præcipua mansuetudinis laus, cum iræ causa justissima est. Amasti hominem; et, spero, amabis: interim sufficit, ut exorari te sinas. Licebit rursus irasci, si meruerit: quod exoratus excusatus facies.

Remitte aliquid adolescentia ipsius; remitte lachrymis; remitte indulgentia tue: ne torseris illum, ne torseris etiam te. Torqueris enim cum tam lenis irascaris. Vereor, ne videar non rogare, sed cogere, si precibus ejus meam junxero. Jungam tamen tanto plenius et effusius, quanto ipsum acrius severiusque corripui, destructè minatus, nunquam me postea rogaturum. Hoc illi, quem terreri oportebat; tibi non idem. Nam fortasse iterum rogabo, impetrabo iterum: sit modo tale, ut rogare me, ut præstare tedeceat. Vale.—Epistolar. lib. ix. Ep. 21.

“CAIUS PLINIUS to SABINIUS his Friend, health.

“Thy freed man, with whom thou didst inform me thou wert incensed, came to me, and threw himself at my feet; and grasped them, as if they had been thine. He wept much; earnestly entreated; and yet said more by his silence. In short, he fully convinced me that he is a penitent. I do verily believe him reformed, because he feels his guilt. Thou art incensed against him I know; and I know that he has justly merited thy displeasure; but then, clemency has its chief praise when there is the greatest cause for irritation. Thou didst once love the man, and I hope thou wilt love him again. In the meantime, permit thyself to be entreated in his behalf. Should he again merit thy displeasure, thou wilt have the stronger excuse for indulging it, shouldst thou pardon him now. Consider his youth; consider his tears; consider thy own gentleness of disposition. Do not torment him; do not torment thyself; for, with thy mild disposition, thou must be tormented, if thou suffer thyself to be angry. I fear, were I to join my prayers to his, that I should rather seem to compel than to supplicate. Yet I will unite them; and the more largely and earnestly too, as I have sharply and severely reprovèd him; solemnly threatening, should he offend again, never more to intercede for him. This I said to him, it being necessary that I should alarm him: but I do not say the same to thee; for probably I may treat thee again, and command thee again, should there be a sufficient reason to induce me to request, and thee to concede. Farewell.”

Nothing on the subject can be finer than this: but Paul has the advantage, because he had Christian motives to urge. If the energetic Roman had had these, we should have found it difficult to decide between his Latin, and the apostle's Greek.

It may be now asked whether St. Paul's application in behalf of Onesimus was successful? We have no direct answer to this question; but we may fairly suppose that such pleading could not be in vain. Philemon was a Christian, and owed too much to his God and Saviour, and too much to the apostle, as the instrument of his salvation, not to concede a favour which is congenial to the very spirit of Christianity to grant.

The application of Horace, in behalf of Septimius, was successful; and both Claudius Nero and Augustus took him into their warmest confidence. But this was only a common case of recommendation, and had no difficulties in the way. But did the heathen Sabinianus yield to the entreaties of his friend, and forgive his slave? He did: and we have the record of it in another very elegant letter, in which Pliny expresses his obligation to his friend for his prompt attention to his request. I will transcribe it, and give a translation for the further satisfaction of the reader:—

C. PLINIUS SABINIANO suo, S.

Bene fecisti quod libertum aliquando tibi carum, reducentibus epistolis meis, in domum, in animum recepisti. Juvabit hoc te: me certè juvat; primum quod te talem video, ut in irâ regi possis: deinde quod tantum mihi tribuis, ut vel auctoritati meæ pareas, vel precibus indulgeas. Igitur, et laudo, et gratias ago. Simul in posterum moneo, ut te erroribus tuorum, etsi non fuerit, qui deprecetur, placabilem præstes. Vale.—Epistolar. lib. ix. Ep. 24.

“CAIUS PLINIUS to his friend SABINIUS, health.

“Thou hast done well, that, in compliance with my letter, thou hast received thy freed man both into thy house and to thy heart. This must be pleasing to thyself: and it is certainly pleasing to me; first, because I find thee to be a person capable of being governed in thy anger; and, secondly, because thou showest so much regard for me, as either to yield this to my authority, or concede to my entreaties. Therefore, I both praise and return thee thanks. At the same time I admonish thee, to be always ready to forgive the errors of thy servants, although there should be no one to intercede in their behalf. Farewell.”

These letters contain such excellent lessons of instruction, that it will be impossible to read them without profit. They are master-pieces in their kind: and no Christian need be ashamed to be indebted to them, whether, in regulating his own conduct in respect to forgiveness of injuries, or whether, in interceding for them who have fallen under the displeasure of others. Reader, go thou and do likewise.

INTRODUCTION

TO

THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE

TO THE

HEBREWS.

THE chief points in controversy, relative to the Epistle to the Hebrews, though discussed by many, have not, in my opinion, been treated so successfully by any writer as by Dr. Lardner; he has entered into the whole controversy, and brought his knowledge from far. I shall avail myself of his labours, as the best on the subject, and generally use his own words.

"I shall," says he, "inquire—1. To whom it was written.—2. In what language.—3. By whom.—4. The time, and place, of writing it.

"I.—In the first place, let us consider to whom this epistle was written.

"Dr. Lighfoot thought that this epistle was sent by Paul to the believing Jews of Judea; a people, says he, that had been much engaged to him, for his care of their poor, getting collections for them all along in his travels. He adds, 'it is not to be doubted indeed, that he intends the discourse and matter of this epistle to the Jews throughout their dispersion. Yet does he endorse it, and send it chiefly to the Hebrews, or the Jews of Judea, the principal part of the circumcision, as the properest centre to which to direct it, and from whence it might be best diffused in time to the whole circumference of the dispersion.' Whitby, in his preface to the Epistle to the Hebrews, is of the same opinion: and argues much after the same manner as Lighfoot.

"So likewise Mill, Pearson, Lewis Capellus, and Beza, in his preface to this epistle, and Beausobre and L'Enfant, the editors of the French New Testament at Berlin, in their general preface to St. Paul's epistles, and in their preface to this epistle in particular.

"Of this Mr. Hallet had no doubt, who, in his Synopsis of the epistle, says, 'This epistle was particularly designed for the Hebrew Christians, who dwelt in one certain place, and was sent thither, as appears from the apostle's saying, chap. xiii. 19, 23. 'I beseech you the rather to do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner.—I will see you.' And what particular place can this be supposed to be but Judea? There, the Christians were continually persecuted by the unbelieving Jews, as we read in the Acts of the Apostles; and as St. Paul takes notice, 1 Thesa. ii. 14. Heb. x. 32—36. xii. 4, 5. By these persecutions, the Hebrew Christians were tempted to apostatize from Christianity, and to think there was strength in the arguments used by the persecutors in favour of Judaism. The apostle, therefore, sets himself to guard against both these dangers.

"This appears to me to be the most probable opinion: for,—1. It is the opinion of the ancient Christian writers who received this epistle. It may be taken for granted, that this was the opinion of Clement of Alexandria and Jerom, and Euthalius, who supposed this epistle to have been first written in Hebrew, and afterwards translated into Greek. It may be allowed to have been also the opinion of many others, who quote this epistle, to have been written to Hebrews, when they say nothing to the contrary. Nor do I recollect any of the ancients, who say it was written to Jews, living out of Judea.

"Chrysostom says, that the epistle was sent to the believing Jews of Palestine; and supposes that the apostle afterwards made them a visit. Theodoret, in his preface to the epistle, allows it to have been sent to the same Jews; and Theophylact, in his argument of the epistle, expressly says, as Chrysostom, that it was sent to the Jews of Palestine. So that this was the general opinion of the ancients.

"II.—There are in this epistle many things especially suitable to the believers in Judea; which must lead us to think, it was written to them. I shall select such passages.

"1.—Heb. i. 2. 'Has in these last days spoken unto us by His Son.'

"2.—Chap. iv. 2. 'For unto us was the Gospel preached, as well as unto them.'

"3.—Chap. ii. 1, 4. 'Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard; How then shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation, which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him: God also bearing them witness with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost.'

INTRODUCTION TO THE

"Does not this exhortation, and the reason with which it is supported, peculiarly suit the believers of Judea, where Christ himself first taught, and then His disciples after him; confirming their testimony with very numerous and conspicuous miracles?"

"4.—The people to whom this epistle is sent were well acquainted with our Saviour's sufferings, as they of Judea must have been. This appears in chap. i. 3. ii. 9, 18. v. 7, 8. ix. 14, 23. x. 11, xii. 2, 3. xiii. 12.

"5.—Chap. v. 12. 'For when we ought to be teachers of others,'—and what follows, is most properly understood of Christians in Jerusalem, and Judea, to whom the Gospel was first preached.

"6.—What is said ch. vi. 4—6. and x. 26, 29. is most probably applicable to apostates in Judea.

"7.—Chap. x. 32, 34. 'But call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions;' to the end of ver. 34. This leads us to the church of Jerusalem, which had suffered much, long before the writing of this epistle, even very soon after they had received the knowledge of the truth. Compare Acts viii. 1. ix. 1, 2. xi. 19. and 1 Thess. ii. 14. Grotius supposes as much.

"8.—Those exhortations, chap. xiii. 13, 14. must have been very suitable to the case of the Jews at Jerusalem, at the supposed time of writing this epistle; a few years before the war in that country broke out.

"9.—The regard shown in this epistle to the rulers of the church or churches to which it is sent, is very remarkable. They are mentioned twice or thrice, first in chap. xiii. 7. 'Remember your rulers, who have spoken unto you the word of God; whose faith imitate, considering the end of their conversation.' These were dead, as Grotius observes. And Theodoret's note is to this purpose. He intends the saints that were dead, Stephen the protomartyr, James the brother of John, and James called the Just. And there were many others who were taken off by the Jewish rage. Consider these, says he; and, observing their example, imitate their faith. Then again at ver. 17. 'Obey them that have the rule over you, and submit yourselves. For they watch for your souls.' And, once more, ver. 24. Salute all them that have the rule over you, and all the saints.' Upon which, Theodoret says, this way of speaking intimates, that their rulers did not need such instructions; for which reason he did not write to them but to their disciples. That is a fine observation. And Whitby upon that verse says, Hence it seems evident, that this epistle was not sent to the bishops or rulers of the church, but to the whole church, or the laity; and it may deserve to be considered, whether this repeated notice of the rulers among them does not afford ground to believe, that some of the apostles were still in Judea? Whether there be sufficient reason to believe that or not, I think these notices very proper and suitable to the state of the Jewish believers in Judea: for I am persuaded, that not only James, and all the other apostles, had exactly the same doctrine with Paul, but that all the elders likewise, and all the understanding men among the Jewish believers, embraced the same doctrine. They were, as I understand, the multitude only, πληθος, plebs, or the men of lower rank among them, who were attached to the peculiarities of the Mosaic law, and the customs of their ancestors. This may be argued from what James and the elders of Jerusalem say to Paul, Acts xxi. 20—22. 'Thou seest, brother, how many thousand Jews there are that believe. And they are all zealous of the law—What is it, therefore? The multitude must needs come together.' It is hence evident that the zeal for the law, which prevailed in the minds of many, was not approved of by James or the elders. That being the case, these recommendations of a regard for their rulers, whether apostles or elders, were very proper, in an epistle sent to the believers in Judea.

"For these reasons, I think that this epistle was sent to the Jewish believers, at Jerusalem, and in Judea. But there are objections which must be considered.

"Obj. 1.—Ch. vi. 10. 'God is not unrighteous to forget your work, and labour of love—in that ye have ministered to the saints, and do minister.' Upon which Dr. Wall remarks, Here again we are put upon thinking, to what church or what Christians this is said; for as to those of Jerusalem, we read much in Paul's former letters, of their poverty, and of their being ministered to by the Gentile Christians of Galatia, Macedonia, and Corinth; and in the Acts, by the Antiochians; but no where, of their ministering to other saints. This objection, perhaps, might be strengthened from Heb. xiii. 2. 'Be not forgetful to entertain strangers.' And from ver. 16. 'To do good, and to communicate, forget not.'

Ans.—But the poverty of the Jews in Judea, and the contribution of the Gentile churches for their relief, are no reasons why such admonitions as these should not be sent to them. They are properly directed to all Christians, that they may be induced to exert themselves to the utmost. The Gentile churches, among whom St. Paul made collections for the saints in Judea, were not rich. As he says, 1 Cor. i. 26. 'For ye know your calling, brethren—not many mighty, nor many noble, are called.' And of the churches in Macedonia, he says, 2 Cor. viii. 2. 'How that in a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy, and their deep poverty, had abounded unto the riches of their liberality.' In like manner, there might be instances of liberality to the distressed among the believers in Judea. There is a very fine example recorded Acts ix. 36, 39. nor was there ever any city, or country, in the world, to whom that exhortation, 'Be not forgetful to entertain strangers,' or be not unmindful of hospitality, ἡ φιλοφροσύνη ὑμῶν ἀλλήλοις, could be more properly given, than Jerusalem and Judea. For the people there must have been much accustomed to it at their festivals, when there was a great resort thither from all countries; and the writer of an epistle to the Christian inhabitants of Jerusalem and Judea would naturally think of such an admonition: being desirous that they should not fall short of others in that respect. And we may here, not unfitly, recollect the history of St. Paul's going to Jerusalem; and how he, and his fellow travellers, were entertained at Cæsarea in the house of Philip the evangelist, and at Jerusalem, in the house of Mnason, an old disciple, as related Acts xxi. 8—16.

EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

“Obj. 2.—Upon chap. xiii. 18, 19. the same Dr. Wall says, One would think that Paul should have prayed and purposed to go any where rather than to Jerusalem, where he had been so used ; and where he fell into that five years imprisonment, from which he was but just now delivered.

“But there is not any improbability that Paul might now desire to see his countrymen in Judea if he might go thither with safety, as I think he might. Almost three years had now passed since he left Judea ; and his trial, or apology, had been over two years ; and he was now set at liberty by the emperor himself. No man, not very presumptuous, would admit a thought of disturbing him.

“Obj. 3.—St. Peter's epistles were written to the Hebrew Christians, scattered in Asia and Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, and Bithynia. St. Paul must have written an epistle to those Hebrew Christians to whom St. Peter writes his two epistles. For St. Peter, 2 Epist. iii. 15. cites to them what Paul had written unto them. No epistle of Paul was written to the Hebrews particularly, but this : so that these must be the Hebrews of the above-named countries. To which I answer, that St. Peter's epistles were not sent to the Jews, but to Gentiles, or to all Christians in general, in the places above-mentioned, as will be clearly shown hereafter. When St. Peter says, ‘As Paul has written unto you,’ he may intend Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, and some other epistles written to Gentiles. If he refers at all to this Epistle to the Hebrews, it is comprehended under that expression, ver. 16. ‘As also in all his epistles.’

“Obj. 4.—This Epistle to the Hebrews seems to have been written in Greek. But if it had been sent to the Jewish believers in Judea, it would have been written in Hebrew. To which I answer, that, allowing the epistle to have been written in Greek, it might be sent to the believers in Judea. If St. Paul wrote to the Jewish believers in Palestine, he intended the epistle for general use, for all Christians, whether of Jewish or Gentile original. Many of the Jews in Judea understood Greek ; few of the Jews out of Judea understood Hebrew. The Greek language was almost universal, and therefore generally used. All St. Paul's epistles are in Greek, even that to the Romans. And are not both St. Peter's epistles in Greek ? And St. John's and St. Jude's ? Did not St. James likewise write in Greek, who is supposed to have resided in Jerusalem, from the time of our Lord's ascension, to the time of his own death ? His epistle is inscribed to the twelve tribes, scattered abroad. But I presume that they of the twelve tribes who dwelt in Judea, are not excluded by him, but intended. Nor could he be unwilling that this epistle should be read and understood by those who were his especial charge. The epistle written by Barnabas, a Levite, or ascribed to him, was written in Greek : not now to mention any other Jewish writers, who have used the Greek language.

“II.—Thus we are unawares brought to the inquiring, in what language this epistle was written ? For there have been doubts about it, among both ancients and moderns. Yet, many learned and judicious moderns have been of opinion that Greek, and not Hebrew, was the original language of this epistle : Beausobre, James Capellus, S. Basnage, Mill, in his Prolegomena to the New Testament, and the late Mr. Wetstein, and also Spanheim, in his Dissertation concerning the author of this epistle, which well deserves to be consulted. One argument for this, both of Spanheim and Wetstein, is taken from the Greek paronomasias in the epistle, or the frequent concurrence of Greek words of like sound ; which seems to be an argument not easy to be answered.

“Some ancient Christian writers were of opinion that the Epistle to the Hebrews was written in the Hebrew language, and translated into Greek by Luke, or Clement of Rome. Jerom, in particular, seems to have supposed that this epistle was written in Hebrew : and Origen is also sometimes reckoned among those who were of this opinion. But I think I have shown it to be probable that he thought it was written in Greek. It seems likewise that they must have been of the same opinion who considered the elegance of the Greek language of this epistle as an objection against its having been written by St. Paul ; for, if the Greek epistle had been supposed to be a translation, the superior elegance of the style of this epistle, above that of the other epistles of Paul, could have afforded no objection against his being the author of it. Indeed the ancients, as Beausobre said, formerly had no other reason to believe that St. Paul wrote in Hebrew, but that he wrote to the Hebrews. So, likewise, says Capellus. The title deceived them. And because it was written to Hebrews, they concluded it was written in Hebrew ; for none of the ancients appear to have seen a copy of this epistle in that language.

“III.—I now proceed to the third inquiry, Who is the writer of this epistle ? And many things offer in favour of the apostle PAUL.

“I.—It is ascribed to him by many of the ancients. Here I think myself obliged briefly to recollect the testimonies of ancient authors : and I shall rank them under two heads:—First, the testimonies of writers who used the Greek tongue ; then, the testimonies of those who lived in that part of the Roman empire, where the Latin was the vulgar language.

“There are some passages in the epistles of Ignatius, about the year 107, which may be thought, by some, to contain allusions to the Epistle to the Hebrews. This epistle seems to be referred to by Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna, in his epistle written to the Philippians, in the year 108, and in the relation of his martyrdom, written about the middle of the second century. This epistle is often quoted as Paul's by Clement of Alexandria, about the year 194. It is received and quoted as Paul's by Origen, about 230. It was also received as the apostle's by Dionysius, bishop of Alexandria, in 247. It is plainly referred to by Theognostus, of Alexandria, about 282. It appears to have been received by Methodius, about 292 ; by Pamphilus, about 294 ; and by Archelaus, bishop in Mesopotamia, at the beginning of the fourth century ; by the Manichees in the fourth ; and by the Paulicians, in the seventh century. It was received, and ascribed to Paul, by Alexander, bishop of Alexandria, in the year 313 ; and by the Arians, in the fourth century. Eusebius, bishop of Caesarea, about 315, says, ‘There are fourteen epistles of Paul manifest and well known ; but yet there are some who reject that to the Hebrews, alleging, in behalf of their opinion, that it was not received by the church of Rome, as a writing of Paul.' It is often quoted by Eusebius himself as Paul's, and sacred Scripture. This epistle was received by Athanasius, without any hesitation. In his enumeration of St. Paul's fourteen epistles, this is placed next after the two to the Thessalonians, and before the epistles to Timothy, Titus, and Philemon. The same order is observed in the Synopsis of Scripture, ascribed to him. This epistle is received as Paul's by Adamantius, author of a Dialogue against the Marcionites, in 380; and by Cyril of Jerusalem, in 347; by the council of Laodicea, in 363; where St. Paul's epistles are enumerated in the same order as in Athanasius just noticed. This epistle is also received as Paul's by Epiphanius, about 368; by the apostolical constitutions, about the end of the fourth century; by Basil, about 370; by Gregory Nazianzen, in 370; by Amphilochius also. But he says it was not received by all as Paul's. It was received by Gregory Nyssen, about 370; by Didymus of Alexandria, about the same time; by Ephrem, the Syrian, in 370; and by the churches of Syria; by Diodorus of Tarsus, in 378; by Hierax, a learned Egyptian, about the year 302; by Serapion, bishop of Thumis, in Egypt, about 347; by Titus, bishop of Bostra, in Arabia, about 362; by Theodore, bishop of Mopsuestia, in Cilicia, about the year 394; by Chrysostom, about the year 398; by Severian, bishop of Gabala, in Syria, in 401; by Victor of Antioch, about 401; by Palladius, author of a Life of Chrysostom, about 408; by Isidore, of Pelusium, about 412; by Cyril, bishop of Alexandria, in 412; by Theodoret, in 423; by Eutharius, bishop of Tyana, in Cappadocia, in 431; by Socrates, the ecclesiastical historian, about 440; by Euthalius, in Egypt, about 458; and probably by Dionysius, falsely called the Areopagite, by the author of the Questiones et Responiones, commonly ascribed to Justin Martyr, but rather written in the fifth century. It is in the Alexandrian manuscript, about the year 500; and in the Stichometry of Nicophorus about 806; is received as Paul's by Cosmas, of Alexandria, about 535; by Leontius, of Constantinople, about 610; by John Damascen, in 730; by Photius, about 858; by Ecumenicus, about the year 950; and by Theophylact, in 1070. I shall not go any lower.

"I shall now rehearse such authors as lived in that part of the Roman empire, where the Latin was the vulgar tongue.

"Here, in the first place, offers Clement, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, written about the year 96, or, as some others say, about the year 70. For though he wrote in Greek, we rank him among Latin authors, because he was bishop of Rome. In his epistle are many passages, generally supposed to contain allusions, or references to the Epistle to the Hebrews. Irenæus, bishop of Lyons, about 178, as we are assured by Eusebius, alleged some passages out of this epistle, in a work now lost; nevertheless it does not appear that he received it as St. Paul's. By Tertullian, presbyter of Carthage, about the year 200, this epistle is ascribed to Barnabas Casus, about 212, supposed to have been presbyter in the church of Rome, reckoning up the epistles of St. Paul, mentions thirteen only, omitting that to the Hebrews. Here I place Hyppolitus, who flourished about 220; but is not certainly known where he was bishop, whether of Porto, in Italy, or at some place in the East: we have seen evidences that he did not receive the Epistle to the Hebrews as St. Paul's; and, perhaps, that may afford an argument, that, though he wrote in Greek, he lived where the Latin tongue prevailed. This epistle is not quoted by Cyprian, bishop of Carthage, about 248, and afterward; nor does it appear to have been received by Novatus, otherwise called Novation, presbyter of Rome, about 251. Nevertheless, it was in aftertimes received by his followers. It may be thought by some that this epistle is referred to by Arnobius, about 306; and by Lactantius, about the same time. It is plainly quoted by another Arnobius, in the fifth century. It was received as Paul's by Hilary of Poitiers, about 354; and by Lucifer, bishop of Cagliari, in Sardinia, about the same time, and by his followers: it was also received as Paul's by C. M. Victorianus. Whether it was received by Optatus, of Milevi, in Africa, about 370, is doubtful. It was received as Paul's by Ambrose, bishop of Milan, about 374; by the Priscillianists, about 378. About the year 380 was published a Commentary upon thirteen epistles of Paul only, ascribed to Hilary, deacon of Rome. It was received as Paul's by Philaster, bishop of Brescia, in Italy, about 330; but he takes notice that it was not then received by all. His successor, Gaudentius, about 387 quotes this epistle as Paul's: it is also readily received as Paul's, by Jerom, about 392; and he says it was generally received by the Greeks and the Christians in the East, but not by all the Latins. It was received as Paul's by Rufinus, in 397: it is also in the catalogue of the third Council of Carthage, in 397. It is frequently quoted by Augustin as St. Paul's. In one place he says, 'It is of doubtful authority with some; but he was inclined to follow the opinion of the churches in the East, who received it among the canonical Scriptures.' It was received as Paul's by Chromatius, bishop of Aquileia, in Italy, about 401; by Innocent, bishop of Rome, about 402; by Paulinus, bishop of Nola, in Italy, about 403. Pelagius, about 405, wrote a Commentary upon thirteen Epistles of Paul, omitting that to the Hebrews; nevertheless, it was received by his followers. It was received by Cassian, about 424; by Prosper, of Aquitain, about 434; and by the authors of the works ascribed to him; by Eucherius, bishop of Lyons, in 434; by Sedulius, about 818; by Leo, bishop of Rome, in 440; by Salvian, presbyter of Marseilles, about 440; by Gelatius, bishop of Rome, about 496; by Facundus, an African bishop, about 540; by Junilius, an African bishop, about 556; by Cassiodorus, in 556; by the author of the imperfect work upon St. Matthew, about 560; by Gregory, bishop of Rome, about 590; by Isidore, of Seville, about 596; and by Bede, about 701, or the beginning of the eighth century.

"Concerning the Latin writers, it is obvious to remark, that this epistle is not expressly quoted as Paul's by any of them in the three first centuries: however, it was known by Irenæus and Tertullian, as we have seen, and possibly to others also. But it is manifest that it was received as an epistle of St. Paul, by many Latin writers, in the fourth, fifth, and following centuries.

"The reasons of doubting about the genuineness of this epistle probably were, the want of a name at the beginning, and the difference of argument or subject matter, and of the style, from the commonly received epistles of the apostle, as is intimated by Jerom. Whether they are sufficient reasons for rejecting this epistle, will be considered in the course of our argument.

"2.—There is nothing in the epistle itself that renders it impossible, or unlikely to be his; for the epistle appears to have been written before the destruction of Jerusalem, as was of old observed, by Chrysostom and Theodoret, and has been argued also by many moderns. That the temple was still standing, and sacrifices there offered, may be inferred from chap. viii. 4. 'For if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that there are priests that offer according to the law;' and from chap. xiii. 10. 'We have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat, which serve the tabernacle.' If the temple had been destroyed, and the worship there abolished, the writer would not have failed to take some notice of it, in support of his argument, and for abating the too great attachment of many to the rites of the Mosaic institution. To this purpose speaks Spanheim. It is also probable that those words, chap. iii. 13. 'While it is called to-day,' refer to the patience which God yet continued to exercise toward the Jewish nation; he seems to have had in view the approaching destruction of Jerusalem, which would put an end to that 'to-day,' and finish the time which God gave to the Jews, as a nation, to 'hear his voice.' And Lightfoot argues, from chap. xii. 4. 'Ye have not yet resisted unto blood,' that the epistle was written before the war in Judea begun.

"Indeed, those words have been the ground of an objection against this epistle having been sent to the believing Jews in Judea; because there had been already several martyrdoms in that country. That difficulty I would now remove; and I have received from a learned friend the following observation, which may be of use: 'It seems to me,' says he, 'that the apostle here, as well as in the preceding context, alludes to the Grecian games, or exercises;' and he signifies that they to whom he writes, 'had not been called out to the most dangerous combats, and had not run the immediate hazard of their lives; which, I suppose, might be said of them as a body, or church.' And I shall transfer hither M. Beausobre's note upon this place: 'There had been martyrs in Judea, as Stephen and the two James's; but, for the most part, the Jews did not put the Christians to death, for want of power; they were imprisoned and scourged, see Acts v. 40. and here, chap. xiii. 3. And they endured reproaches, and the loss of their substance, chap. x. 32, 34. These were the sufferings which they had met with. The apostle, therefore, here, indirectly reproves the Hebrews, that though God treated them with more indulgence than He had done His people in former times, and even than His own Son; they, nevertheless, wavered in their profession of the Gospel.—See ver. 12.'

"3.—There are many exhortations in this epistle much resembling some in the epistles of St. Paul. 1. Heb. xii. 3. 'Lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds.' Gal. vi. 9. 'And let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.' And see 2 Thess. iii. 13. and Eph. iii. 13. 2. Heb. xii. 14. 'Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord.' An exhortation very suitable to Paul and to the Jewish believers in Judea; admonishing them not to impose the rituals of the law upon others; that is, the Gentile believers, and to maintain friendship with them, though they did not embrace the law. It has also a resemblance to Rom. xii. 18. but the words of the original are different. 3. Heb. xiii. 1. 'Let brotherly love continue,' and what follows to the end of ver. 3. Then, in ver. 4. 'Marriage is honourable; but fornicators and adulterers God will judge.' Here is an agreement with Eph. v. 2, 3. 'And walk in love, as Christ also has loved us; but fornication, and all uncleanness and covetousness, let it not once be named among you.' Ver. 4. 'For this ye know, that no fornicator, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, has any inheritance in the kingdom of God.' 4. Chap. xiii. 16. 'But to do good, and to communicate, forget not; for with such sacrifices God is well-pleased.' That exhortation is very suitable to Paul's doctrine, and has an agreement with what he says elsewhere: as Phil. iv. 18. 'An odour of a sweet smell; a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God.' Moreover, as is observed by Grotius upon this text, the word communicate, or communion, is found in a like sense in the Acts, and in other epistles of St. Paul. See Acts ii. 42. Rom. xv. 26. 2 Cor. viii. 4. chap. ix. 13.

"4.—In the next place, I observe some instances of agreement in the style, or phrases, of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and the acknowledged epistles of St. Paul. 1. Heb. ii. 4. 'God also bearing them witness with signs and wonders, and divers miracles and gifts of the Holy Ghost:—' signs and wonders,' together, seldom occur in other books of the New Testament; but they are found several times in the Acts, and in St. Paul's epistles. The phrase is in Matt. xxiv. 24. and Mark xiii. 22. and once, likewise, in St. John's Gospel, chap. iv. 24. but it is several times in the Acts, chap. ii. 19. iv. 30. v. 12. vi. 8. viii. 13. xiv. 3. xv. 12. The most remarkable are these where there are three different words, Acts ii. 22. 'A man approved of God among you, by miracles, and wonders, and signs.' Rom. xv. 19. 'Through mighty signs and wonders, by the power of the Spirit of God.' 2 Cor. xii. 12. 'In signs, and wonders, and mighty deeds.' 2 Thess. ii. 9. 'With all power, and signs, and lying wonders.' 2. Chap. ii. 14. 'That through death he might destroy him who had the power of death.' The word καταργαω, or καταργωμαι, is, I think, no where used in the New Testament, except in Luke xiii. 7. and St. Paul's epistles, where it is several times; and is sometimes used in a sense resembling this place, particularly 2 Tim. i. 10. 'Who has abolished death;' καταργωσαστες μη τον θανατον; and 1 Cor. xv. 26. Compare Dr. Doddridge's Family Expositor, Vol. IV. upon 1 Cor. xv. 24. 3. Chap. iii. 1. 'Holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling.' Phil. iii. 4. 'The prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.' 2 Tim. i. 9. 'Who has called us with an holy calling.' 4. Chap. v. 12. 'And are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat.' 1 Cor. iii. 2. 'I have fed you with milk, and not with meat.' However, in the original, there is no great agreement in the words, except that, in both places, milk is used for the first rudiments of the Christian doctrine. 5. Chap. viii. 1. 'Who is set on the right-hand of the throne of the Majesty on high.' Eph. i. 21. 'And set him at his own right-hand in the heavenly places.' 6. Chap. viii. 6. ix. 15. and xii. 24. Jesus Christ is styled Mediator. So likewise in Gal. iii. 19, 20. 1 Tim. ii. 5. and in no other books of the New Testament. 7. Chap. viii. 5. 'Who serve unto the temple and shadow of heavenly things;' και σκια των ουρανωσιν; x. 1. 'For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things; Σκια οχρον, των μελλοντων αγαθων, κα αυτην την ακονη των πραγμων. Col. ii. 17. 'Which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ;' εστι σκια των μελλοντων το δε σωμα τε Χριστου. 8. Chap. x. 33. 'While ye were made a gazing-stock, or spectacle, both by reproaches and afflictions;' στυβισμοις τε και βλαψαις θεωριζομενοι. 1 Cor. iv. 9. 'For we are made a spectacle unto the world;' οτι θεωροι εγενθημεν τα εθνη. 9. St. Paul, in his acknowledged epistles, often alludes to the exercises and games which were then very reputable, and frequent in Greece and other parts of the Roman empire. There are many such allusions in this epistle, which have also great elegance. So chap. vi. 18. 'Who have fled for refuge to lay hold of the hope set before us;' or the reward of eternal life, proposed to animate and encourage us. And, chap. xii. 1. 'Wherefore, seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which does so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us.' Ver. 2. 'Looking unto Jesus, who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross.' And, ver. 3. 'Lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds.' And, ver. 12. 'Wherefore lift up the hands that hang down, and the feeble knees.' All these texts seem to contain allusions to the celebrated exercises and games of those times. And to these may be added, if I mistake not, the place before noticed, chap. xii. 4. 'Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin.' 10. Chap. xiii. 9. 'Be not carried about with divers and strange doctrines;' Διδαχαις ποικιλαις και εστραις μη περιφορηθι. Eph. iv. 14. 'That we henceforth be no more children, tossed to and fro, and carried about with every wind of doctrine;' κλυδωνιζομενοι, και περιφορημενοι παντι αερω της διδασκαλιας. 11. Chap. xiii. 10. 'We have an altar wherof they have no right to eat.' 1 Cor. ix. 13. 'And they that wait at the altar are partakers with the altar.' And, chap. x. 18. 'Are not they which eat of the sacrifices, partakers of the altar?' 12. Chap. xiii. 20, 21. 'Now the God of peace make you perfect.' Which is a title of the Deity no where found in the New Testament, but in St. Paul's epistles; and in them it is several times, and near the conclusion, as here; so Rom. xv. 33. 'Now the God of peace be with you all.' See likewise chap. xvi. 20. and Phil. iv. 9. and 1 Thess. v. 23. 'And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly;' and 2 Cor. xiii. 11. 'And the God of love and peace shall be with you.'

"5.—The conclusion of this epistle has a remarkable agreement with the conclusions of St. Paul's epistles in several respects. 1. He here desires the Christians to whom he is writing to pray for him, chap. xiii. 18. 'Pray for us.' So Rom. xv. 30. Eph. vi. 18, 19. Col. iv. 3. 1 Thess. v. 25. 2 Thess. iii. 1. 2. It is added in the same, ver. 18. 'For we trust we have a good conscience, in all things willing to live honestly;' which may well come from Paul, some of the Jewish believers not being well affected to him, or being even offended with him. So says Theodoret upon this place, and Chrysostom to the like purpose, very largely. To which might be added, ver. 22. 'And I beseech you, brethren, to suffer the word of exhortation.' It is also observable, that St. Paul makes a like profession of his sincerity in pleading against the Jews, before Felix, Acts xxiv. 16. 3. Having desired the prayers of these Christians for himself, he prays for them, chap. xiii. 20, 21. 'Now the God of peace make you perfect, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever—Amen.' So Rom. xv. 30, 32. having asked their prayers for him, he adds, ver. 33. 'Now the God of peace be with you all—Amen.' Compare Eph. vi. 19, 23. and 1 Thess. v. 23. 2 Thess. iii. 16. 4. Chap. xiii. 24. 'Salute all them that have the rule over you, and all the saints. They of Italy salute you.' The like salutations are in many of St. Paul's epistles, Rom. xvi. 1 Cor. xvi. 19, 21. 2 Cor. xiii. 13. Phil. iv. 21, 22. not to refer to any more. 5. The valedictory benediction at the end, is that which Paul had made a token of the genuineness of his epistles. 2 Thess. iii. 18. So here, chap. xiii. 25. 'Grace be with you all—Amen.' Indeed, sometimes it is, 'The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you.' But at other times it is more contracted. So Col. iv. 18. 'Grace be with you.' 1 Tim. vi. 21. 'Grace be with thee.' See likewise, Eph. vi. 24. 2 Tim. iv. 22. Tit. iii. 15. The same observation is in Theodoret.

"6.—The circumstances of this epistle lead us to the apostle Paul. 1. Chap. xiii. 24. 'They of Italy salute you.' The writer, therefore, was then in Italy, whither we know Paul was sent a prisoner, and where he resided two years, Acts xxviii. where also he wrote several epistles still remaining. 2. Ver. 19. He desires them 'the rather to pray for him, that he might be restored to them the sooner.' Paul had been brought from Judea to Rome. And he was willing to go thither again, where he had been several times. And though the original words are not the same, there is an agreement between this and Philem. ver. 22. 'I trust that through your prayers I shall be given unto you.' This particular is one of the arguments of Euthalius, that this epistle is Paul's, and written to the Jews of Palestine. 3. Ver. 33. 'Know ye, that our brother Timothy is set at liberty: with whom, if he come shortly, I will see you.' Timothy was with Paul during his imprisonment at Rome, as is allowed by all: for he is expressly mentioned at the beginning of the Epistles to the Philippians, Colossians, Philemon, written when he was in bonds. He is mentioned again Philip. ii. 19. When the apostle writes to Timothy, he calls him his 'son,' or 'dearly beloved son,' 1 Tim. i. 2. 2 Tim. i. 2. But when he mentions him to others, he calls him 'brother;' 2 Cor. i. 1. Col. i. 1. 1 Thess. iii. 2. In like manner Titus. Compare Titus i. 4. and 2 Cor. ii. 13.

"This mention of Timothy has led many, not only moderns, but ancients likewise, to think of Paul as writer of the epistle, particularly Euthalius: and, undoubtedly, many others have been confirmed in that supposition by this circumstance.

EPISTLE TO THE HEBREWS.

“The original word ἀποσταλέντος is ambiguous, being capable of two senses: one of which is that of our translation, set at liberty, that is, from imprisonment; the other is dismissed, sent abroad on an errand. In this last sense it was understood by Euthalius, who, in the place just cited, says, ‘That scarcely any one can be thought of, besides Paul, who would send Timothy abroad, upon any service of the Gospel.’ And indeed this passage does put us in mind of what Paul says to the Philippians, chap. ii. 19. ‘But I trust in the Lord Jesus to send Timothy shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort, when I know your state. Him, therefore, I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me; but I trust in the Lord, that I also myself shall come shortly,’ ver. 23, 24. which induced Beausobre to say, in the preface to this epistle, ‘The sacred author concludes with asking the prayers of the Hebrews, chap. xiii. 19. ‘That he may be restored to them.’ These words intimate that he was still prisoner, but that he hoped to be set at liberty: therefore, he adds, in ver. 23. that he intended to come and see them, with Timothy, as soon as he should be returned. If this explication be right, this epistle was written at Rome, some time after the Epistle to the Philippians, and since the departure of Timothy for Macedonia.’

“All these considerations just mentioned, added to the testimony of many ancient writers, make out an argument of great weight, (though not decisive and demonstrative,) that the apostle Paul is the writer of this epistle. An objection against this epistle being St. Paul’s, is, that it is supposed to have in it an elegance superior to that of his other writings. This has been judged, by Grotius and Le Clerc, sufficient to show that this was not written by Paul.

“The opinion of Origen, in his homilies upon this epistle, as cited by Eusebius, and by us from him, is, ‘That the style of the Epistle to the Hebrews has not the apostle’s rudeness of speech; but as to the texture of it, is elegant Greek, as every one will allow who is able to judge of the differences of style.’ Again, he says, ‘The sentiments of the epistle are admirable, and not inferior to the acknowledged writings of the apostle. This will be assented to by every one who reads the writings of the apostle with attention.’ Afterward he adds, ‘If I were to speak my opinion, I should say, that the sentiments are the apostle’s, but the language and composition another’s, who committed to writing the apostle’s sense, and, as it were, reduced into commentaries the things spoken by his master,’ &c.

“Eusebius himself, speaking of Clement’s epistle to the Corinthians, says, ‘Paul having written to the Hebrews in their own language, some think that the evangelist Luke, others, that this very Clement himself, translated it into Greek: which last is most likely, there being a great resemblance between the style of the epistle of Clement and the Epistle to the Hebrews: nor are the sentiments of those two writings very different.’ This passage has been already twice quoted by us; once in the chapter of Clement, bishop of Rome, and again in that of Eusebius.

“Philaster, bishop of Brescia, about 380, says, ‘There are some who do not allow the Epistle to the Hebrews to be Paul’s; but say it is either an epistle of the apostle Barnabas, or of Clement, bishop of Rome; but some say it is an epistle of Luke the evangelist; moreover, some reject it as more eloquent than the apostle’s other writings.’

“Jerom, about 392, in his article of St. Paul, in the book of Illustrious Men, says, ‘The epistle called to the Hebrews, is not thought to be his, because of the difference of the argument and style; but either Barnabas’s, as Tertullian thought; or the evangelist Luke’s, according to some others; or Clement’s, bishop of Rome; who, as some think, being much with him, clothed and adorned Paul’s sense in his own language. Moreover, he wrote as a Hebrew to the Hebrews, in pure Hebrew, it being his own language; whence it came to pass that, being translated, it has more elegance in the Greek than his other epistles.’

“Some learned men of late times, as Grotius and Le Clerc, have thought this to be an insuperable objection. Of this opinion also, was likewise Jacob Tollins; who, in his notes upon Longinus, of the sublime, has celebrated the sublimity of this epistle, and particularly the elegance of the beginning of it; which alone he thinks sufficient to show that it was not Paul’s.’

“It remains, therefore, it seems to me, that if the epistle be Paul’s, and was originally written in Greek, as we suppose, the apostle must have had some assistance in composing it: so that we are led to the judgment of Origen, which appears to be as ingenious and probable as any. ‘The sentiments are the apostle’s, but the language and composition of some one else, who committed to writing the apostle’s sense; and, as it were, rendered into commentaries the things spoken by his master. According to this account, the epistle is St. Paul’s, as to the thoughts and matter; but the words are another’s.’

“Jerom, as may be remembered, says, ‘He wrote as a Hebrew to Hebrews, pure Hebrew; it being his own language: whence it came to pass, that being translated, it has more elegance in the Greek than his other epistles.’ My conjecture, which is not very different, if I may be allowed to mention it, is, that St. Paul dictated the epistle in Hebrew, and another, who was a great master of the Greek language, immediately wrote down the apostle’s sentiments in his own elegant Greek. But who this assistant of the apostle was, is altogether unknown.

“The ancients, besides Paul, have mentioned Barnabas, Luke, and Clement, as writers or translators of this epistle: but I do not know that there is any remarkable agreement between the style of the Epistle to the Hebrews, and the style of the epistle commonly ascribed to Barnabas. The style of Clement, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, is verbose and prolix. St. Luke may have some words which are in the Epistle to the Hebrews; but that does not make out the same style. This epistle, as Origen said, as to the texture of the style, is elegant Greek; but that kind of texture appears not in Luke, so far as I can perceive: there may be more art and labour in the writings of Luke, than in those of the other evangelists, but not much more elegance that I can discern. This Epistle to the Hebrews is bright and elegant from the beginning to the end; and surpasses as much the style of St. Luke as it does the style of St. Paul in his acknowledged epistles. In short, this is an admirable epistle, but singular in sentiments and language; somewhat different in both respects from all the other writings of the New Testament; and whose is the language seems to me altogether unknown; whether that of Zenas, or Apollos, or some other of the apostle Paul's assistants and fellow-labourers.

"There still remains one objection more against this epistle being written by St. Paul, which is, the want of his name; for to all the thirteen epistles, received as his, he prefixes his name, and generally calls himself apostle. This objection has been obvious in all ages; and the omission has been differently accounted for by the ancients, who received this epistle as a genuine writing of St. Paul.

"Clement of Alexandria, in his Institutions, speaks to this purpose. 'The Epistle to the Hebrews,' he says, 'is Paul's, but he did not make use of that inscription Paul the Apostle: for which he assigns this reason—Writing to the Hebrews, who had conceived a prejudice against him, and were suspicious of him, he wisely declined setting his name at the beginning, lest he should offend them.' He also mentions this tradition: 'forasmuch as the Lord was sent, as the apostle of Almighty God, to the Hebrews, Paul, out of modesty, does not style himself the apostle to the Hebrews, both out of respect to the Lord, and that, being preacher and apostle of the Gentiles, he over and above wrote to the Hebrews.'

"Jerom also speaks to this purpose: 'that Paul might decline putting his name in the inscription, on account of the Hebrews being offended with him:' so in the article of St. Paul in his book of Illustrious Men. In his Commentary in the beginning of his Epistle to the Galatians, he assigns another reason, 'That Paul declined to style himself apostle at the beginning of the Epistle to the Hebrews, because he should afterwards call Christ the High-priest and Apostle of our profession,' chap. iii. 1.

"Theodoret says, that Paul was especially the apostle of the Gentiles; for which he alleges, Gal. ii. 9. and Rom. xi. 13. 'Therefore writing to the Hebrews, who were not entrusted to his care, he barely delivered the doctrine of the Gospel, without assuming any character of authority; for they were the charge of the other apostles.'

"Lightfoot says, 'Paul's not affixing his name to this, as he had done to his other epistles, does no more deny it to be his than the First Epistle of John is denied to be John's on that account.'

"Tillemont says, 'Possibly Paul considered it to be a book rather than a letter, since he makes an excuse for its brevity, chap. xiii. 22. for indeed it is short for a book, but long for a letter.'

"It is, I think, observable, that there is not at the beginning of this epistle any salutation. As there is no name of the writer, so neither is there any description of the people to whom it is sent. It appears from the conclusion, that it was sent to some people at a certain place; and undoubtedly they to whom it was sent, and by whom it was received, knew very well from whom it came; nevertheless, there might be reasons for omitting an inscription and a salutation at the beginning. This might arise from the circumstances of things; there might be danger of offence at sending at that time a long letter to Jews in Judea; and this omission might be in part owing to a regard for the bearer, who too is not named. The only person named throughout the epistle is Timothy; nor was he then present with the writer. Indeed, I imagine, that the two great objections against this being an epistle of St. Paul; the elegance of the style, and the want of a name and inscription, are both owing to some particular circumstance of the writer, and the people to whom it was sent. The people to whom it was sent are plainly Jews, in Judea; and the writer very probably is St. Paul, whose circumstances at the breaking up of his confinement at Rome, and his setting out upon a new journey, might be attended with some peculiar embarrassments, which obliged him to act differently from his usual method.

"IV. Thus we are brought to the fourth and last part of our inquiry concerning this epistle, the time and place of writing it. Mill was of opinion that this epistle was written by Paul, in the year 63, in some part of Italy, soon after he had been released from his imprisonment at Rome. Mr. Wetstein appears to have been of the same opinion. Tillemont likewise places this epistle in 63, immediately after the apostle's being set at liberty; who, as he says, was still at Rome, or at least in Italy. Basnage speaks of this epistle at the year 61, and supposes it to be written during the apostle's imprisonment; for he afterward speaks of the Epistle to the Ephesians, and says, it was the last letter the apostle wrote during the time of his bonds. L'Enfant and Beausobre, in their general preface to St. Paul's epistles, observe, 'That in the subscription at the end of the epistle, it is said to have been written from Italy, the only ground of which, as they add, is, what is said chap. xiii. 24. 'They of Italy salute you.' This has made some think that the apostle wrote to the Hebrews after he had been set at liberty, and when he had got into that part of Italy which borders upon Sicily, and in ancient times was called Italy. Nevertheless, there is reason to doubt of this. When he requests the prayers of the Hebrews, that 'he might be restored to them the sooner,' he intimates that he was not yet set at liberty.'—Accordingly, they place this epistle in the year 62.

"There is not any great difference in any of these opinions concerning the time or place of this epistle, all supposing that it was written by the apostle either at Rome or Italy, near the end of his imprisonment at Rome, or soon after it was over, before he removed to any other country.

"I cannot perceive why it may not be allowed to have been written at Rome. St. Paul's first Epistle to the Corinthians was written at Ephesus; nevertheless he says, chap. xvi. 19. 'The churches of Asia salute you.' So now he might send salutations from the Christians of Italy, not excluding, but including those at Rome, together with the rest throughout that country. The argument of L'Enfant and Beausobre, that Paul was not yet set at liberty, because he requested the prayers of the 'Hebrews that he might be restored to them the sooner,' appears to me not of any weight. Though Paul was no longer a prisoner, he might request the prayers of those to whom he was writing, that he might have a prosperous journey to them, whom he was desirous to visit; and that all impediments of his intended journey might be removed: and many such there might be, though he was no longer under confinement. Paul was not a prisoner when he wrote his Epistle to the Romans; yet he was very fervent in his prayers to God, that he might have a prosperous journey, and come to them, chap. i. 10.

“For determining the time of this epistle, it may be observed that when the apostle wrote the Epistle to the Philippians, the Colossians, and Philemon, he had hopes of deliverance. At the writing of all these epistles, Timothy was present with him; but now he was absent, as plainly appears from chap. xiii. 23. This leads us to think that this epistle was written after them. And it is not unlikely that the apostle had now obtained that liberty which he expected when they were written:

“Moreover, in the Epistle to the Philippians, he speaks of sending Timothy to them, chap. ii. 19, 23. ‘But I trust in the Lord Jesus, to send Timothy shortly unto you, that I also may be of good comfort, when I know your state.’ Timothy, therefore, if sent, was to come back to the apostle. ‘Him, therefore, I hope to send presently, so soon as I shall see how it will go with me.’

“It is probable that Timothy did go to the Philippians, soon after writing the above-mentioned epistles, the apostle having gained good assurance of being quite released from his confinement. And this Epistle to the Hebrews was written during the time of that absence; for it is said, Heb. xiii. 23. ‘Know ye that our brother Timothy is set at liberty,’ or ‘has been sent abroad.’ The word is capable of that meaning; and it is a better and more likely meaning, because it suits the coherence. And I suppose that Timothy did soon come to the apostle, and that they both sailed to Judea, and after that went to Ephesus, where Timothy was left to reside with his peculiar charge.

“Thus this epistle was written at Rome, or in Italy, soon after that Paul had been released from his confinement at Rome, in the beginning of the year 63. And I suppose it to be the last written of all St. Paul’s epistles which have come down to us, or of which we have any knowledge.”

Dr. Lardner’s Works, Vol. VI. p. 381.

After this able and most circumstantial investigation, I think it would be a mere actum agere to enter further into this discussion; all that the ancients, both Grecian and Roman, and all that the most intelligent of the moderns have produced, both for and against the argument stated above, has been both judiciously and candidly stated by Dr. Lardner; and it is not going too far to say, that few readers will be found who will draw conclusions different from those of Dr. Lardner, from the same premises.

As all the epistles of St. Paul have an evident object and occasion, it is natural to look for these in the Epistle to the Hebrews, as well as in those to other churches. We have already seen that it was most probably written to the converted Jews in Judea, who were then in a state of poverty, affliction, and persecution; and who, it appears, had been assailed by the strongest arguments to apostatize from the faith, and turn back to the poor elementary teaching furnished by Mosaic rites and ceremonies. That, in such circumstances, they might begin to halt and waver, will not appear strange to any considerate person: and that the apostle should write to guard them against apostacy, by showing them that the religious system which they had embraced, was the completion and perfection of all those which had preceded it, and particularly of the Mosaic, is what might be naturally expected. This he has done in the most effectual and masterly manner; and has furnished them with arguments against their opponents, which must have given them a complete triumph.

His arguments against backsliding or apostacy, are the most awful and powerful that can well be conceived; and are as applicable now to guard Christian believers against falling from grace, as they were in the apostolic times; and, from the general laxity in which most professors of religion indulge themselves, not less necessary.

A late sensible writer, Mr. Thomas Olivers, in a Discourse on chap. ii. 3. of this epistle, has considered this subject at large, and treated it with great cogency of reasoning. I shall borrow his Analysis of the different chapters, and a few of his concluding remarks; a perusal of the whole work will amply repay the serious reader. After one hundred and thirty-two pages of previous discussion, he goes on thus:—

“I shall,” says he, “sum up all that has been said upon this head, by giving a brief account of the occasion and design of this epistle; and of the apostle’s manner of reasoning therein.

“The Christian religion being so contrary to the corrupt principles and practices of the world, those who embraced and propagated it, were on those accounts, rendered very odious wherever they came. The consequence of this was, that heavy persecutions were raised against them in most places. The converted Hebrews, because they had turned their backs on the law of Moses, and embraced the religion of that Jesus, whom their rulers had crucified, were exceedingly persecuted by their countrymen. Sometimes the unconverted Hebrews persecuted their converted brethren themselves; at other times they stirred up the heathen who were round about to do it. By these means the believing Hebrews had a great fight of afflictions, chap. x. 32. and were made gazing-stocks both by reproaches and afflictions, ver. 33. and experienced the spoiling of their goods, which for a while they took joyfully, ver. 34. But this was not all: for, as the Christian religion was then a new thing in the world, it is natural to suppose that the new converts had a great many scruples and reasonings in themselves concerning the lawfulness of what they had done in embracing it: and what added to these scruples, was the constant endeavour of the Judaizing teachers to lay stumbling-blocks in the way of these Hebrews, which they too often effected, by means of their divers and strange doctrines, mentioned ch. xiii. 9. The consequence of this opposition, both from within and without, was, that great numbers of the Hebrews apostatized from Christ and his gospel, and went back to the law of Moses; while the fluctuating state of the rest gave the apostles too much reason to fear a general, if not an universal apostacy. Now this apparent danger was the OCCASION of this epistle; and the DESIGN of it was to prevent the threatened evil if possible.

“That this account is true, will fully appear from a more particular survey of the contents of the whole epistle:—

“Chap. i.—The apostle shows that all former dispensations were delivered to the world by men and angels, who were only servants in what they did; but that the Gospel salvation was delivered by Christ, who is the Son of God, and the Heir of all things. How naturally does he then infer the superiority of the Gospel over the law; and of consequence, the great absurdity of leaving the former for the sake of the latter!

“Chap. ii.—He obviates an objection which might be made to the superior excellency of Christ, on account of His humiliation. To this end he shows that this humiliation was voluntary; that it was intended for many important purposes, viz. that we might be sanctified, ver. 11. that, through His death, we might be delivered from death, ver. 14, 15. and that Christ, by experiencing our infirmities in His own person, might become a faithful and merciful High-priest, ver. 17, 18. The inference then is, that His taking our nature upon him, and dying therein, is no argument of His inferiority either to the prophets or to the angels; and therefore it is no excuse for those who apostatize from the Gospel for the sake of the law.

“Chap. iii.—Here Christ is particularly compared with Moses, and shown to be superior to him in many respects. As 1. Christ is shown to be the Great Builder of that house of which Moses is only a small part, ver. 3, 4. 2. Christ is as a Son in His own house; but Moses was only as a servant in his Master's house, ver. 5. Therefore Christ, and his salvation, are superior to Moses and his law, and ought not to be neglected on account of that which is inferior to it. From ver. 7. of this chapter, to ver. 14. of chap. iv. the apostle shows the great danger of apostatizing from Christ by the severe sentence which was passed on those who rebelled against Moses, and apostatized from his law.

“Chap. v.—Christ is compared to Aaron, and preferred to him on several accounts. As, 1. Aaron offered for his own, as well as for the sins of the people; but Christ offered only for the sins of others; having none of His own to offer for, ver. 3. 2. Christ was not a priest after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchisedeck, which was a superior order, ver. 10. Concerning Melchisedeck and Christ, the apostle observed, that, through the dulness of the Hebrews, there were some things which they could not easily understand, ver. 11—14.

“He therefore calls on them, chap. vi. to labour for a more perfect acquaintance therewith; withal promising them his further assistance, ver. 1—3. The necessity of their doing this, of their thus going on unto perfection, he enforced by the following consideration, that, if they did not go forward, they would be in danger of apostatizing in such manner as would be irrecoverable, ver. 7, 8. From thence to the end of the chapter, he encourages them to patience and perseverance, by the consideration of the love, oath, and faithfulness of God, and also by the example of their father Abraham.

“Chap. vii.—The apostle resumes the parallel between Melchisedeck and Christ, and shows they agree in title and descent, ver. 1—3. and then, from instances wherein the priesthood of Melchisedeck was preferable to the priesthood of Aaron, he infers the superiority of Christ's priesthood over that of Aaron, ver. 4—17. From thence to the end of the chapter, he shows that the priesthood of Aaron was only subservient to the priesthood of Christ, in which it was consummated and abolished: and of consequence, that all those legal obligations were thereby abolished. How naturally then did the apostle infer the absurdity of apostatizing from the Gospel to the law, seeing they who did this not only left the greater for the lesser, but also left that which remained in full force, for the sake of that which was disannulled.

“Chap. viii.—Is employed partly in recapitulating what had been demonstrated before concerning the superior dignity of our great High-priest, 1—5. and partly in showing the superior excellency of the new covenant, as established in Christ, and as containing better promises: ver. 6. to the end of the chapter. From this last consideration, the impropriety of going from the new covenant to the old is as naturally inferred as from any other of the afore-mentioned considerations.

“With the same view, the apostle, chap. ix. compares Christ and His priesthood, to the tabernacle of old, and to what the high-priest did therein, on the great day of atonement; in all things giving Christ the preference; from ver. 1. to the end.

“Chap. x.—The apostle sets down the difference between the legal sacrifices and the sacrifice of Christ; the legal sacrifices were weak, and could not put away sin, ver. 1—4. but the sacrifice of Christ was powerful, doing that which the other could not do, ver. 5—10.

“The next point of difference was between the legal priests who offered these sacrifices, and the High-priest of our profession. And first, the legal priests were many; ours, is one. Secondly, they stood when they presented their offerings to God; CHRIST sits at the right-hand of His Father. Thirdly, they offered often; but CHRIST once for all. Fourthly, they, with all their offerings, could not put away the smallest sin; but Christ, by his one offering, put away all sin, ver. 11—18. Now, from all these considerations, the apostle infers the great superiority of the Gospel over the law; and, consequently, the impropriety of leaving the former for the latter.

“The next thing that the apostle does, is to improve his doctrine; this he does by showing, that, for the reasons above given, the Hebrews ought to cleave to Christ, to hold fast their profession, and not to forsake the assembling themselves together, ver. 19—25. And, as a further inducement to cleave to Christ, and to persevere unto the end, he urges the consideration of the difficulties which they had already overcome; and also of the love which they had formerly shown towards Christ and His Gospel, ver. 32—34. He also encouraged them not to 'cast away their confidence, seeing it had a great recompense of reward,' which they should enjoy if they persevered unto the end, ver. 35—37. Another consideration which he urged was, that they ought not to depart from faith to the works of the law; because it is by faith that a just man liveth, and not by the works of the law; because God has no pleasure in those who draw back from faith in Him; and because every one who does this, exposes himself to eternal perdition, ver. 36—39.

"Another inducement which he laid before them, to continue to expect salvation by faith and patience, was the consideration of the powerful effects of these graces, as exemplified in the patriarchs of old, and the rest of the ancient worthies, chap. xi. throughout. 'This chapter,' according to Mr. Perkins, 'depends on the former, thus; we may read in the former chapter, that many Jews having received the faith, and given their names to Christ, did afterward fall away; therefore, towards the end of the chapter, there is a notable exhortation, tending to persuade the Hebrews to persevere in faith unto the end. Now, in this chapter, he continues the same exhortation; and the whole chapter, (as I take it) is nothing else, in substance, but one reason to urge the former exhortation to perseverance in faith; and the reason is drawn from the excellency of it; for this chapter, in divers ways, sets down what an excellent gift of God faith is; his whole scope, therefore, is manifest to be nothing else but to urge them to persevere and continue in that faith, proved at large to be so excellent a thing.'

"As a further encouragement to patience and perseverance, he adds the example of Christ, chap. xii. 1—3. and as to the afflictions they met with on the Gospel's account, he tells them they ought not to be discouraged, and driven away from Christ, on their account, seeing they were signs of the Divine favour, and permitted to come upon them, merely for their good, ver. iv. 11. He then exhorts them to encourage one another to persevere in well-doing, ver. 12—14. To watch over one another, lest any of them 'fall from the grace of God,' ver. 15—18. And seeing they were then in possession of privileges, Gospel privileges, and such as the law of Moses could not give, he exhorts them to hold fast the grace they had, that thereby they might serve God, in such a manner as the great obligation they were under required, which alone would be acceptable to Him; and this they ought to do, the rather because, if they did not, they would find God to be as much more severe to them as His Gospel is superior to the law, ver. 19, to the end of the chapter.

"Chap. xiii.—He exhorts them, instead of apostatizing, to continue their brotherly affection one for another, ver. 1—3. To continue their purity of behaviour, their dependence on God, and their regard for their teachers, ver. 4—8. He exhorts them not to suffer themselves to be carried about, (from Christ and His Gospel,) by divers and strange doctrines, but rather to strive to be established in grace; which they would find to be of more service to them than running about after Jewish ceremonies, ver. 9. Again, he exhorts them to cleave to, and to follow Jesus without the camp, and continually to give praise to God, through Him, ver. 9—16. And instead of turning away after seducers, that they might avoid persecution, and the scandal of the cross, he exhorts them to submit to, and obey, their own Christian teachers, and to pray for their success and welfare, ver. 17—19. Concluding the whole with some salutations, and a solemn benediction, from ver. 20. to the end.

"Now, if we closely attend to these general contents of the epistle, we shall find that every argument and mode of reasoning, which would be proper in a treatise, written, professedly, on the sin and danger of apostacy, is made use of in this epistle.

"For, 1. As great temptations to prefer the law of Moses to the Gospel of Christ, was one circumstance which exposed them to the danger of apostacy, nothing could be more to the purpose than to show them that the Gospel is superior to the law. Now we have seen how largely this argument is prosecuted in chap. i. ii. iii. v. vii. viii. ix. x. If we reduce it to form, it runs as follows:—No one ought to prefer that which is less excellent to that which is more so. But the law is less excellent than the Gospel: therefore none ought to prefer the law to the Gospel, by apostatizing from the latter to the former.

"2. Another argument, equally proper on such an occasion, is that taken from the consideration of the punishment, which all apostates are exposed to. This argument is urged chap. ii. 2, 3. iii. 7. to the end; iv. 1—14. vi. 4, 8. x. 26—31. xii. 25, 28, 29. In most of these places the apostle compares the punishment which will be inflicted on apostates from Christ and His Gospel, to that which was inflicted on the apostate Israelites of old; and he frequently shows that the former will be far greater than the latter. This argument is as follows:—You ought not to do that which will expose you to as great, and greater punishment, than that which God inflicted on the rebellious Israelites of old: but total and final apostacy from Christ will expose you to this; therefore, you ought not to apostatize from Christ.

"3. Another argument proper on such an occasion, is that taken from the consideration of the great reward which God has promised to perseverance. This the apostle urges, chap. iii. 6—14. iv. 1—9. v. 9. vi. 9, 11. ix. 28. x. 35—39. This argument runs thus:—You ought to be careful to do that which God has promised greatly to reward; but he has promised you on this condition of your perseverance in the Gospel of His Son; therefore you ought to be careful to persevere therein.

"4. A fourth argument which must operate powerfully on such an occasion, is taken from the consideration of losing their present privileges by apostatizing. This argument is insisted on, chap. ii. 11. to the end; iii. 1. iv. 3—16. vi. 18—20. vii. 19. viii. 10, 12. ix. 14, 15. x. 14, 22. xii. 22, 24, 28. xiii. 10, 14. This argument runs thus:—You ought not to do that for which you will lose the Gospel privileges you now enjoy; but if you apostatize from Christ and His Gospel, you will lose them; therefore you ought not to apostatize from Christ and His Gospel.

"5. A fifth argument, very proper in such a work, is taken from the consideration of their former zeal and diligence in cleaving to Christ, and in professing his religion. This argument is handled chap. vi. 10. x. 32—34. This argument here is:—Those who have formerly been zealous in well-doing ought not to grow weary, but rather to be steadfast therein unto the end. But you have formerly been zealous in your adherence to Christ, and in professing His religion; therefore, you ought not to grow weary of adhering to Christ, or of professing His religion.

“6. Another argument proper on such an occasion, is taken from the example of such persons as are held in very high esteem. Now this argument is urged, chap vi. 12—15. xi. throughout, xii. 1—3. Here the argument is:—Whatever you esteem as an excellency in the example of holy men of old, you ought to imitate: but you esteem as an excellency in their example that they were steadfast, and did not apostatize from God and his ways; therefore you ought to imitate their example in being steadfast, and in not apostatizing from Christ and His Gospel.

“From all that has been said in these several surveys of this epistle, it undeniably appears—1. That the apostle apprehended these Hebrews to be in danger of total and final apostacy. 2. That he wrote this epistle to them on purpose to prevent it, if possible: and, 3. That it was total and final apostacy from Christ and His Gospel, of which the believing Hebrews were in danger; and which the apostle endeavours to prevent.”

PREFACE
 TO THE EPISTLE OF PAUL THE APOSTLE
 TO THE HEBREWS.

THE Epistle to the Hebrews, on which the reader is about to enter, is, by far, the most important and useful of all the apostolic writings: all the doctrines of the Gospel are, in it, embodied, illustrated, and enforced, in a manner the most lucid; by references and examples the most striking and illustrious; and by arguments the most cogent and convincing. It is an epitome of the dispensations of God to man, from the foundation of the world, to the advent of Christ. It is not only the sum of the GOSPEL; but the sum and completion of the LAW, of which it is also a most beautiful and luminous comment. Without this, The law of Moses had never been fully understood, nor God's design in giving it. With this, all is clear and plain; and the ways of God with man rendered consistent and harmonious. The apostle appears to have taken a portion of one of his own epistles for text; CHRIST is the END of the LAW for RIGHTEOUSNESS to them that BELIEVE; and has most amply and impressively demonstrated his proposition. All the rites, ceremonies, and sacrifices, of the Mosaic institution, are shown to have had Christ for their object and end; and to have had neither intention nor meaning but in reference to Him: yea, as a system, to be without substance, as a law, to be without reason, and its enactments to be both impossible and absurd if taken out of this reference and connexion. Never were premises more clearly stated; never was an argument handled in a more masterly manner—and never was a conclusion more legitimately and satisfactorily brought forth. The matter is, every where, the most interesting; the manner is, throughout, the most engaging; and the language is most beautifully adapted to the whole; every where appropriate, always nervous and energetic; dignified as is the subject, pure and elegant as that of the most accomplished Grecian orators; and harmonious and diversified as the music of the spheres.

So many are the beauties, so great the excellency, so instructive the matter, so pleasing the manner, and so exceedingly interesting the whole, that the work may be read a hundred times over, without perceiving any thing of sameness; and with new and increased information at each reading. This latter is an excellency which belongs to the whole revelation of God; but to no part of it in such a peculiar and supereminent manner, as to the Epistle to the Hebrews.

To explain and illustrate this epistle, multitudes have toiled hard, and exhibited much industry, much learning, and much piety. I also will show my opinion; and ten thousand may succeed me, and still bring out something that is new. That it was written to Jews, naturally such, the whole structure of the epistle proves. Had it been written to the Gentiles, not one in ten thousand of them could have comprehended the argument, because unacquainted with the Jewish system; the knowledge of which, the writer of this epistle every where supposes. He who is well acquainted with the Mosaic law, sits down to the study of this epistle with double advantages: and he who knows the Traditions of the elders, and the Mishnaic illustrations of the written and pretended oral law of the Jews, is still more likely to enter into, and comprehend, the apostle's meaning. No man has adopted a more likely way of explaining its phraseology than Schoetgen, who has traced its peculiar diction to Jewish sources; and, according to him, the proposition of the whole epistle is this:—JESUS OF NAZARETH IS THE TRUE GOD:—and in order to convince the Jews of the truth of this proposition, the apostle uses but three arguments:—1. Christ is superior to the angels. 2. He is superior to Moses. 3. He is superior to Aaron.

These arguments would appear more distinctly, were it not for the improper division of the chapters; as he who divided them in the middle ages, a division to which we are still unreasonably attached, had but a superficial knowledge of the word of God. In consequence of this it is, that one peculiar excellency of the apostle is not noticed, viz. his application of every argument, and the strong exhortation founded on it. Schoetgen has very properly remarked, that commentators, in general, have greatly misunderstood the apostle's meaning through their unacquaintance with the Jewish writings, and their peculiar phraseology, to which the apostle is continually referring; and of which he makes incessant use. He also supposes, allowing for the immediate and direct inspiration of the apostle, that he had in view this remarkable saying of the rabbins, on Isaiah liii. 13. "Behold, my servant will deal prudently." Rab. Tanchum, quoting Yalcut Simeoni, Part i. fol. 53. says "מֶלֶךְ מְשִׁיחַ This is the king Messiah, who shall be greatly extolled, and elevated: He shall be elevated beyond Abraham; shall be more eminent than Moses; and more exalted than the ministering angels." Or, as it is expressed in Yalcut Kadosh, fol. 144. גרו ררו משהו מלכא דמשיחא גדול מן אבותו וכן משהו וכן מלכא דמשיחא Mashiach gadol min ha-aboth; umin Mosheh; umin Malaky ha-sheereth. "The Messiah is greater than the patriarchs; than Moses; and than the ministering angels." These sayings he shows to have been fulfilled in our Messiah; and as he dwells on the superiority of our Lord to all these illustrious persons, because they were at the very top of all comparisons among the Jews; He, according to their opinion, who was greater than all these, must be greater than all created beings.

This is the point which the apostle undertakes to prove; in order that he may show the Godhead of Christ; therefore, if we find him proving that Jesus was greater than the patriarchs, greater than Aaron, greater than Moses, and greater than the angels, he must be understood to mean, according to the Jewish phraseology, that Jesus is an uncreated Being, infinitely greater than all others, whether earthly or heavenly. For, as they allowed the greatest eminence (next to God) to angelic beings, the apostle concludes, "That He who is greater than the angels is truly God: but Christ is greater than the angels; therefore Christ is truly God." Nothing can be clearer than that this is the apostle's grand argument: and the proofs and illustrations of it meet the reader in almost every verse.

That the apostle had a plan on which he drew up his epistle, is very clear from the close connexion of every part. The grand divisions seem to be three:

I. The proposition, which is very short; and is contained in chapter i. 1—3. The majesty and pre-eminence of Christ.

II. The proof, or arguments, which support the proposition, viz. Christ is greater than the ANGELS. 1. Because he has a more excellent name than they, ch. i. 4, 5. 2. Because the angels of God adore Him, ch. i. 5. 3. Because the angels were created by Him, ch. i. 7. 4. Because, in His human nature, He was endowed with greater gifts than they, ch. i. 8, 9. 5. Because He is eternal, ch. i. 10, 11, 12. 6. Because He is more highly exalted, ch. i. 13. 7. Because the angels are only the servants of God, He the Son, ch. i. 14.

In the application of this argument, he exhorts the Hebrews not to neglect Christ, ch. ii. 1. by arguments drawn—1. From the minor to the major, ver. 2, 3. 2. Because the preaching of Christ was confirmed by miracles, ver. 4. 3. Because, in the economy of the New Testament, angels are not the administrators; but the Messiah himself, to whom all things are subject, ver. 5.

Here the apostle inserts a twofold objection, professedly drawn from Divine revelation: 1. Christ is man, and is less than the angels. "What is man—thou madest him a little lower than the angels." ver. 6, 7. Therefore, he cannot be superior to them.

To this it is answered; 1. Christ, as a mortal man, by His death and resurrection, overcame all enemies, and subdued all things to Himself; therefore, He must be greater than the angels, ver. 9. 2. Though Christ died, and was in this respect inferior to the angels; yet, it was necessary that He should take on Him this mortal state, that He might be of the same nature with those whom He was to redeem; and this He did without any prejudice to His Divinity, ver. 10—18.

Christ is greater than Moses. 1. Because Moses was only a servant; Christ, the Lord, ch. iii. 2—6. The application of this argument he makes from Psalm. xcvi. 7—11. which he draws out at length, ch. iii. 7—iv. 13.

Christ is greater than AARON, and all the other high-priests. 1. Because he has not gone through the veil of the tabernacle to make an atonement for sin; but has entered for this purpose into heaven itself, ch. iv. 14. 2. Because he is the Son of God, ver. 14. 3. Because it is from Him that we are to implore grace and mercy, ch. iv. 15, 16, and v. 1, 2, 3. 4. Because He was consecrated High-priest by God Himself, ch. v. 4—10. 5. Because He is not a priest according to the order of Aaron; but according to the order of Melchisedeck, which was much more ancient, and much more noble, ch. vii.—For the excellence and prerogatives of this order, see the notes. 6. Because He is not a typical priest, prefiguring good things to come, but the real Priest, of whom the others were but types and shadows, ch. viii. 1—ix. 18.—For the various reasons by which this argument is supported, see also the notes.

In this part of the epistle, the apostle inserts a digression, in which he reproves the ignorance and negligence of the Hebrews, in their mode of treating the Sacred Scriptures.—See ch. v. 11. and ch. vi.

The application of this part contains the following exhortations;—1. That they should carefully retain their faith in Christ as the true Messiah, ch. x. 19—23. 2. That they should be careful to live a godly life, ver. 24, 25. 3. That they should take care not to incur the punishment of disobedience, ver. 32—37. and ch. xii. 3—12. 4. That they should place their whole confidence in God, live by faith, and not turn back to perdition, ch. x. 38—xii. 2. 5. That they should consider and imitate the faith and obedience of their eminent ancestors, ch. xi. 6. That they should take courage, and not be remiss in the practice of the true religion, ch. xii. 12—24. 7. That they should take heed not to despise the Messiah, now speaking to them from heaven, ch. xii. 25—29.

III. Practical and miscellaneous exhortations relative to sundry duties, ch. xiii.

All these subjects (whether immediately designed by the apostle himself, in this particular order,) are pointedly considered in this most excellent epistle; in the whole of which the superiority of CHRIST, His Gospel, His priesthood, and His sacrifice, over Moses, the law, the Aaronic priesthood, and the various sacrifices prescribed by the law, is most clearly and convincingly shown.

Different writers have taken different views of the order in which these subjects are proposed; but most commentators have produced the same results.

For other matters relative to the author of the epistle, the persons to whom it was sent, the language in which it was composed, and the time and place in which it was written, the reader is referred to the Introduction, where these matters are treated in sufficient detail.

nature; but in the manifestations of His love to the world, by giving a revelation of His will relative to the salvation of mankind; and thus preparing the way, through a long train of years, for the introduction of that most glorious Being, His own Son. This Son, in the fulness of time, was manifested in the flesh, that He might complete all vision and prophecy, supply all that was wanting to perfect the great scheme of revelation, for the instruction of the world; and then die to put away sin, by the sacrifice of Himself. The description which he gives of this glorious Personage is elevated beyond all comparison. Even in His Assumption, His suffering of death excepted, He is infinitely exalted above all the angelic host; is the object of their unceasing adoration: is permanent on His eternal throne, at the right hand of the Father; and from Him they all receive their commands to minister to those whom He has redeemed by his blood. In short, this first chapter, which may be considered the introduction to the whole epistle, is, for importance of subject, dignity of expression, harmony and energy of language, compression, and yet distinctness of ideas, equal, if not superior, to any other part of the New Testament.

Sundry times] Πολυμεως, from πολυ, many, and μεως, a part; giving portions of revelation at different times.

Divers manners] Πολυτροπως, from τροπος, manner, turn, or form of speech; hence trope, a figure in rhetoric. Lambert Bos, supposes these words to refer to that part of music which is denominated harmony; viz. that general consent or union of musical sounds which is made up of different parts: and understood in this way, it may signify the agreement or harmony of all the Old Testament writers; who with one consent, gave testimony to Jesus Christ, and the work of redemption by Him. To him gave all the prophets witness, that, through his name, whatsoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins, Acts x. 43.

But it is better to consider with Kypke, that the words are rather intended to point out the imperfect state of Divine revelation under the Old Testament: it was not complete; nor can it without the New, be considered a sufficiently ample discovery of the Divine will. Under the Old Testament, revelations were made, πολυμεως και πολυτροπως, at various times, by various persons, in various laws and forms of teaching, with various degrees of clearness, under various shadows, types, and figures; and with various modes of revelation, such as by angels, visions, dreams, mental impressions, &c.—See Numb. xii. 6, 7.—But under the New Testament, all is done, απλας, simply, by one Person, i. e. Jesus, who has fulfilled the prophets, and completed prophecy: who is the way, the truth, and the life; and the founder, mediator, and governor, of His own kingdom.

One great object of the apostle is, to put the simplicity of the Christian system in opposition to the complex nature of the Mosaic economy; and also to show, that what the law could not do, because it was weak through the flesh, Jesus has accomplished by the merit of His death, and the energy of His Spirit.

Maximus Tyrius, Diss. 1. p. 7. has a passage where the very words employed by the apostle are found; and evidently used nearly in the same sense;—τη του σωτηρος ψυχη δυο οργανων εντασ προς ενταση, του μη απλου, ου καλουμεν νου, του δε ποικιλου και πολυμερους και πολυτροπου ες αισθησις καλουμεν. "The soul of man has two organs of intelligence, one simple, which we call mind; the other diversified, and acting in various modes, and various ways, which we term sense."

A similar form of expression the same writer employs in Disa. 15. pag. 171. "The city which is governed by the mob, is πολωρονον τι υνασ και παυμιση και παυταθη· full of noise, and is divided by various factions and various passions."

The excellence of the Gospel above the law is here set down in three points:—1. God spake unto the faithful under the Old Testament by Moses and the prophets, worthy servants, yet servants: now the Son is much better than a servant, ver. 4. 2. Whereas the body of the Old Testament was long in compiling, being about a thousand years from Moses to Malachi; and God spake unto the fathers by piecemeal, one while raising up one prophet, another while another; now sending them one parcel of prophecy or history, then another: but when Christ came, all was brought to perfection in one age. The apostles and evangelists were alive, some of them, when every part of the New Testament was completely finished. 3. The Old Testament was delivered by God in divers manners, both in utterance and manifestation; but the delivery of the Gospel was in a more simple manner; for, although there are various persons, yet the subject is the same, and treated with nearly the same phraseology throughout, James, Jude, and the Apocalypse, excepted.—See Leigh.

Verse 2. Last days] The Gospel dispensation, called the last days and the last time, because not to be followed by any other dispensation: or the conclusion of the Jewish church and state, now at their termination.

By his Son] It is very remarkable that the pronoun αυτου, his, is not found in the text; nor is it found in any MS. or Version. We should not, therefore, supply the pronoun as our translators have done; but simply read ο Υιου, BY A SON, OR IN A SON, whom he hath appointed heir of all things. God has many sons and daughters; for he is the Father of the spirits of all flesh; and He has many heirs; for, if sons, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Jesus Christ: but He has no Son who is heir of all things, none by whom He made the worlds, none in whom He speaks, and by whom He has delivered a complete revelation to mankind, but Jesus the Christ.

a John 1. 4. Col. 1. 17. Rev. 4. 11.—b Ch. 7. 27. & 9. 12, 14, 16.

c Psa. 110. 1. Eph. 1. 20. Ch. 8. 1. & 10. 12. & 12. 2. 1 Pet. 3. 22.

The apostle begins with the lowest state in which Christ has appeared. 1. His being a Son, born of a woman, and made under the law: he then ascends—2. To His being an Heir, and an Heir of all things. 3. He then describes Him as the Creator of all worlds. 4. As the Brightness of the Divine glory. 5. As the express Image of His person; or Character of the Divine substance. 6. As sustaining the immense fabric of the universe; and this by the word of His power. 7. As having made an atonement for the sin of the world, which was the most stupendous of all his works.

“ ’Twas great to speak a world from nought:
’Twas greater to redeem.”

8. As being on the right hand of God, infinitely exalted above all created beings; and the object of adoration to all the angelic host. 9. As having an eternal throne, neither His person nor His dignity ever changing or decaying. 10. As continuing to exercise dominion, when the earth and the heavens are no more!—It is only in God manifested in the flesh, that all these excellencies can possibly appear: therefore the apostle begins this astonishing climax with the simple Sonship of Christ; or his incarnation; for, on this, all that He is to man, and all that He has done for man, is built.

Verse 3. The brightness of his glory] Απαύγασμα δέξτε αὐτοῦ. The resplendent out-beaming of the essential glory of God. Hesychius interprets απαύγασμα by ἄλλου φωτός, the splendour of the sun. The same form of expression is used by an apocryphal writer, Wisdom, chap. vii. 26. where, speaking of the uncreated wisdom of God, he says, “ For she is the splendour of eternal light, απαύγασμα γὰρ ἐστὶ φωτός αἰδίου, and the unaltered mirror, of the energy of God, and the image of His goodness.” The word αυγασμα is that which has splendour in itself: απαυγασμα is the splendour emitted from it: but the inherent splendour and the exhibited splendour are radically and essentially the same.

The express image of his person] Χαρακτὴρ τῆς ὑποστάσεως αὐτοῦ, the character or impression of his hypostasis or substance. It is supposed, that these words expound the former: image expounding brightness; and person, or substance, glory. The hypostasis of God is that which is essential to Him as God; and the character or image is that by which all the likeness of the Original becomes manifest; and is a perfect fac simile of the whole. It is a metaphor taken from sealing: the die or seal leaving the full impression of its every part, on the wax to which it is applied.

From these words it is evident, 1. That the apostle states Jesus Christ to be of the same essence with the Father, as the απαύγασμα, or proceeding splendour, must be the same with the αυγασμα, or inherent splendour.

2. That Christ, though proceeding from the Father, is of the same essence: for if one αυγασμα, or splendour, produce another αυγασμα or splendour, the produced splendour must be of the same essence with that which produces it.

3. That although Christ is thus of the same essence of the Father, yet He is a distinct Person from the Father; as the splendour of the sun, though of the same essence, is distinct from the sun itself; though each is essential to the other; as the αυγασμα, or inherent splendour, cannot subsist without its απαυγασμα, or proceeding splendour; nor the proceeding splendour subsist without the inherent splendour from which it proceeds.

4. That Christ is eternal with the Father, as the proceeding splendour must necessarily be coexistent with the inherent splendour. If the one, therefore, be uncreated, the other is uncreated; if the one be eternal, the other is eternal.

Upholding all things by the word of his power] This is an astonishing description of the infinitely energetic and all pervading power of God. He spoke, and all things were created; He speaks, and all things are sustained. The Jewish writers frequently express the perfection of the Divine Nature by the phrases—He bears all things, both above and below; He carries all His creatures; He bears His world; He bears all worlds by His power. The Hebrews, to whom this epistle was written, would, from this and other circumstances, fully understand that the apostle believed Jesus Christ to be truly and properly God.

Purged our sins] There may be here some reference to the great transactions in the wilderness:—

1. Moses, while in communion with God on the mount, was so impressed with the Divine glories, that his face shone, so that the Israelites could not behold it. But Jesus is infinitely greater than Moses, for He is the splendour of God's glory; and,

2. Moses found the government of the Israelites such a burden that he altogether sunk under it. His words, Numb. xi. 12. are very remarkable—Have I conceived all this people? Have I begotten them that thou shouldst say unto me, CARRY them in thy bosom, unto the land which thou swearest unto their fathers? But Christ not only carried all the Israelites, and all mankind; but He upholds ALL THINGS by the word of His power.

3. The Israelites murmured against Moses and against God, and provoked the heavy displeasure of the Most High; and would have been consumed, had not Aaron made an atonement for them, by offering victims and incense. But Jesus not only makes an atonement for Israel, but for the whole world; not with the blood of bulls and goats, but with His own blood: hence it is said that He purged our sins, δι' αὐτοῦ,

4 Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they.

by Himself, His own body and life being the victim. It is very likely that the apostle had all these things in his eye when he wrote this verse; and takes occasion from them to show the infinite excellence of Jesus Christ when compared with Moses; and of His Gospel when compared with the law. And it is very likely that the Spirit of God, by whom he spoke, kept in view those maxims of the ancient Jews concerning the Messiah, whom they represent as being infinitely greater than Abraham, the patriarchs, Moses, and the ministering angels. So Rabbi Tanchum, on Isa. iii. 13. Behold my servant shall deal prudently, says זֶה מֶלֶךְ הַמָּשִׁיחַ הַזֶּה הוּא הַמֶּלֶךְ הַמָּשִׁיחַ, this is the King Messiah; and shall be extolled, and be extolled, and be very high.—“He shall be extolled above Abraham, and shall be extolled beyond Moses, and shall be more sublime than the ministering angels.”—See the Preface.

The right hand of the Majesty on high] As it were, associated with the Supreme Majesty, in glory everlasting, and in the government of all things in time, and in eternity: for the right hand is the place of the greatest eminence, 2 Kings ii. 19. The king himself, in eastern countries, sits on the throne; the next to him in the kingdom, and the highest favourite, sits on his right hand; and the third greatest personage on his left.

Verse 4. So much better than the angels] Another argument in favour of the Divinity of our Lord. The Jews had the highest opinion of the transcendent excellence of angels: they even associate them with God in the creation of the world: and suppose them to be of the privy council of the Most High: and thus they understand Gen. i. 26, Let us make man in our own image, in our own likeness: and the Lord said to the ministering angels that stood before Him, and who were created the second day, Let us make man, &c.—See the Targum of Jonathan Ben Uzziel. And they even allow them to be worshipped for the sake of their Creator, and as His representative; though they will not allow them to be worshipped for their own sake. As, therefore, the Jews considered them next to God, and none entitled to their adoration but God: on their own ground the apostle proves Jesus Christ to be God, because God commanded all the angels of heaven to worship Him. He, therefore, who is greater than the angels, and is the object of their adoration, is God. But Jesus Christ is greater than the angels, and the object of their adoration; therefore Jesus Christ must be God.

By inheritance obtained] Κατανομομασίαν ονομα. The verb κατανομασι, signifies generally to participate, possess, obtain, or acquire; and is so used by the purest Greek writers: Kypke has produced several examples of it from Demosthenes. It is not by inheritance that Christ possesses a more excellent name than angels; but as God, He has it naturally and essentially; and as God manifested in the flesh. He has it in consequence of His humiliation, sufferings, and meritorious death.—See Philip. ii. 9.

Verse 5. Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee] These words are quoted from Psa. ii. 7. a psalm that seems to refer only to the Messiah: and they are quoted by St. Paul, Acts xiii. 33. as referring to the resurrection of Christ. And this application of it is confirmed by the same apostle, Rom. i. 4. as by his resurrection from the dead, He was declared, manifestly proved, to be the Son of God with power, God having put forth his miraculous energy in raising that body from the grave which had truly died, and died a violent death, for Christ was put to death as a malefactor; but by His resurrection His innocence was demonstrated, as God could not work a miracle to raise a wicked man from the dead. As Adam was created by God, and because no natural generation could have any operation in His case, therefore He was called the Son of God, Luke iii. 37. and could never have seen corruption if He had not sinned: so the human nature of Jesus Christ formed by the energy of the eternal Spirit in the womb of the virgin without any human intervention, was for this very reason called the Son of God, Luke i. 35. and because it had not sinned, therefore it could not see corruption: nor was it even mortal, but through a miraculous display of God's infinite love, for the purpose of making a sacrificial atonement for the sin of the world: and God having raised this sacrificed human nature from the dead, declared that same Jesus, (who was, as above stated, the Son of God,) to be His Son, the promised Messiah; and, as coming by the Virgin Mary, the right heir to the throne of David, according to the uniform declaration of all the prophets.

The words, This day have I begotten thee, must refer either to His incarnation, when He was miraculously conceived in the womb of the Virgin, by the power of the Holy Spirit; or to His resurrection from the dead; when God, by this sovereign display of His almighty energy, declared Him to be His Son, vindicated His innocence, and also the purity and innocence of the blessed Virgin, who was the mother of this Son, and who declared Him to be produced in her womb by the power of God. The resurrection of Christ, therefore, to which the words most properly refer, not only gave the fullest proof that He was an innocent and righteous man, but also that He had accomplished the purpose for which He died, and that His conception was miraculous, and His mother a pure and unspotted virgin.

This is a subject of infinite importance to the Christian system; and of the last consequence, in reference to the conviction and conversion of the Jews, for whose use this epistle was sent by God. Here is the rock on which they split: they deny this divine Sonship of Jesus Christ; and their blasphemies against Him, and his virgin mother, are too shocking to be transcribed. The certainty of the resurrection of Jesus refutes their every calumny; proves His miraculous conception; vindicates the blessed Virgin; and, in a word, declares him to be the Son of God with power.

This most important use of this saying has passed unnoticed by almost every Christian writer which I have seen; and yet it lies here at the foundation of all the apostle's proofs. If Jesus were not thus the Son of God, the whole Christian system is vain and baseless: but His resurrection demonstrates Him to have been the Son of God; therefore, every thing built on this foundation is more durable than the foundations of heaven; and as inexorable as the throne of the Eternal King.

He shall be to me a Son.] As the Jews have ever blasphemed against the Sonship of Christ, it was necessary that the apostle should adduce and make strong all his proofs, and show that this was not a new revelation: that it was that which was chiefly intended in several Scriptures of the Old Testament, which, without further mentioning the places where found, he immediately produces. This place, which is quoted from 2 Sam. vii. 14. shows us that the seed which God promised to David, and who was to sit upon His throne, and whose throne should be established for ever, was not Solomon, but Jesus Christ: and, indeed, he quotes the words so as to intimate that they were so understood by the Jews. See among the observations at the end of the chapter.

Verse 6. And again, when he bringeth in the first-begotten] This is not a correct translation of the Greek, Οταν δε πάλιν αναγης τον πρωτοτονον εις τον οικουμενον. But when he bringeth again, or the second time, the first-born into the habitable world. This most manifestly refers to His resurrection, which might be properly considered a second incarnation; for as the human soul, as well as the fulness of the Godhead bodily, dwelt in the man Christ Jesus, on and during His incarnation; so, when he expired upon the cross, both the Godhead and the human spirit left His dead body; and, as on his resurrection, these were reunited to His revived manhood; therefore, with the strictest propriety, does the apostle say that the resurrection was a second bringing of Him into the world.

I have translated οικουμενον, the habitable world; and this is its proper meaning; and thus it is distinguished from κοσμος, which signifies the terrestrial globe, independently of its inhabitants; though it often expresses both the inhabited and uninhabited parts. Our Lord's first coming into the world is expressed by this latter word, chap. x. 5. Wherefore when he cometh into the world, δε αναγαμενος εις τον κοσμον, and this simply refers to his being incarnated, that He might be capable of suffering and dying for man. But the word is changed on the second coming, I mean His resurrection; and then οικουμενον, is used: and why? (fancy a part,) because he was now to dwell with man; to send his Gospel every where, to all the inhabitants of the earth, and to accompany that Gospel wheresoever he sent it; and to be wherever two or three should be gathered together in His name. Wherever the messengers of Jesus Christ go, preaching the kingdom of God, even to the furthest and most desolate parts of the earth, where human beings exist, there they ever find Christ: He is not only in them, and with them, but he is in and among all who believe on Him through their word.

Let all the angels of God worship Him.] The apostle recurs here to his former assertion, that Jesus is higher than the angels, ver. 4. that He is none of those who can be called ordinary angels or messengers; but one of the most extraordinary kind; and the object of worship to all the angels of God. To worship any creature is idolatry; and God resents idolatry more than any other evil. Jesus Christ can be no creature; else the angels who worship Him must be guilty of idolatry; and God the author of that idolatry, who commanded those angels to worship Christ.

There has been some difficulty in ascertaining the place from which the apostle quotes these words: some suppose Psa. xcvi. 7. Worship Him, all ye gods, which the Septuagint translates thus, προσκυνησατε αυτην παντα αγγελα αυτου, Worship Him, all ye His angels: but it is not clear that the Messiah is intended in this Psalm; nor are the words precisely those used here by the apostle. Our marginal references send us with great propriety to the Septuagint version of Deut. xxxii. 43. where the passage is found verbatim et literatim; but there is nothing answering to the words in the present Hebrew text. The apostle undoubtedly quoted the Septuagint, which had then been for more than three hundred years a version of the highest repute among the Jews; and it is very probable that the copy from which the Seventy translated, had the corresponding words. However this may be, they are now sanctioned by Divine authority; and as the verse contains some singular additions, I will set it down in a parallel column with that of our own version, which was taken immediately from the Hebrew text; premising simply this, that it is the last verse of the famous prophetic song of Moses, which seems to point out the advent of the Messiah to discomfit His enemies, purify the land, and redeem Israel from all his iniquities.

Deut. xxxii. 43 from the Septuagint.

Rejoice O ye nations with His people; for He will avenge the blood of His servants; and will render vengeance to His adversaries: and He will be merciful to His land and to his people.

Rejoice ye heavens together with him; and let all the angels of God worship him, Rejoice ye Gentiles with his people; and let the children of God be strengthened in him; for He will avenge the blood of his children: He will avenge, and will repay judgment to His adversaries; and those who hate him will he recompense: and the Lord will purge the land of his people.

This is a very important verse; and to it, as it stands in the Septuagint, St. Paul has referred once before; see Rom. xv. 10. This very verse, as it stands now in the Septuagint, thus referred to by an inspired writer, shows the great importance of this ancient version; and proves the necessity of its being studied and well understood by every minister of Christ. In Rom. iii. there is a large quotation from Psalm xiv. where there are six whole verses in the apostle's quotations which are not found in the present Hebrew text, but are preserved in the Septuagint! How strange it is that this venerable and important version, so often quoted by our Lord and all His apostles, should be so generally neglected, and so little known! That the common people should be ignorant of it, is not to be wondered at, as it has never been put in an English dress; but that the ministers of the Gospel should be unacquainted with it may be spoken to their shame.

Verse 7. Who maketh his angels spirits] They are so far from being superior to Christ, that they are not called God's sons in any peculiar sense; but His servants, as tempests and lightnings are. In many respects they may have been made inferior even to man as he came out of the hands of his Maker, for he was made in the image and likeness of God; but of the angels, even the highest order of them, this is never spoken. It is very likely that the apostle refers here to the opinions of the Jews relative to the angels. In Pirkey R. Elieser, c. 4. it is said, "The angels which were created the second day, when they minister before God, אין של עשין become fire." In Shemoth Rabba, s. 25, fol. 123, it is said, "God is named the Lord of hosts, because with His angels He doth whatsoever He wills; when He pleases, He makes them sit down, Judg. vi. 11. And the angel of the Lord came, and sat under a tree. When He pleases, He causes them to stand. Isa. vi. 2. The seraphim stood. Sometimes He makes them like women, Zoeb. v. 9. Behold there came two women, and the wind was in their wings. Sometimes He makes them like men, Gen. xviii. 2. And lo, three men stood by him. Sometimes he makes them spirits, Psa. civ. 4. Who maketh his angels spirits. Sometimes He makes them fire, ibid. His ministers a flame of fire."

In Yalcut Simeoni, par. 2. fol. 11. it is said, "The angel answered Manoah; I know not in whose image I am made, for God changeth us every hour: sometimes He makes us fire, sometimes spirit, sometimes men, and at other times angels." It is very probable that those who are termed angels are not confined to any specific form or shape, but assume various forms and appearances according to the nature of the work on which they are employed, and the will of their sovereign Employer. This seems to have been the ancient Jewish doctrine on this subject.

Verse 8. Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever] If this be said of the Son of God, i. e. Jesus Christ; then Jesus Christ must be God; and indeed the design of the apostle is to prove this. The words here quoted are taken from Psa. xlv. 6, 7. which the ancient Chaldee paraphrast, and the most intelligent rabbins, refer to the Messiah. On the third verse of this Psalm, Thou art fairer than the children of men, the Targum says, "Thy beauty, מלכא Meshicha, O king Messiah, is greater than the children of men." Aben Ezra says, "This Psalm speaks of David, or rather of his son the Messiah, for this is His name, Ezek. xxxiv. 24. And David my servant shall be a Prince over them for ever." Other rabbins confirm this opinion.

This verse is very properly considered a proof, and indeed a strong one, of the Divinity of Christ; but some late versions of the New Testament have endeavoured to avoid the evidence of this proof, by translating the words thus, God is thy throne for ever and ever: and, if this version be correct, it is certain the text can be no proof of the doctrine. Mr. Wakefield vindicates this translation at large in his History of Opinions; and ὁ θεός being the nominative case, is supposed to be a sufficient justification of this version. In answer to this, it may be stated, that the nominative case is often used for the vocative, particularly by the Attics; and the whole scope of the place requires it should be so used here; and with due deference to all of a contrary opinion, the original Hebrew cannot be consistently translated any other way, קיים אלהים עולם ועד kiasca Elohim olam w'ed. Thy throne, O God, is for ever, and to eternity It is in both worlds; and extends over all time: and will exist through all endless duration. To this our Lord seems to refer, Matt. xxviii. 18. All power is given unto me, both in HEAVEN and EARTH. My throne, i. e. my dominion, extends from the creation to the consummation of all things. These I have made, and these I uphold; and from the end of the world, throughout eternity, I shall have the same glory, sovereign unlimited power and authority, which I had with the Father before the world began, John xvii. 5. I may add, that none of the ancient Versions has understood it in the way contended for by those who deny the Godhead of Christ, either in the Psalm from which it is taken, or in this place where it is quoted. Aquila translates $\epsilon\lambda\theta\iota\mu$ Elohim, by $\Theta\epsilon\omega$, O God, in the vocative case; and the Arabic adds the sign of the vocative $يا$ ya; reading the place thus;

كوسى يا الله اى ابد الابد korsee yallahho ila abadilabada, the same as in our Version. And even allowing that $\Theta\epsilon\omega$ here is to be used as the nominative case, it will not make the sense contended for, without adding $\epsilon\varsigma$ to it, a reading which is not countenanced by any Version, nor by any MS. yet discovered. Wiclif, Coverdale, and others, understood it as the nominative, and translated it so; and yet it is evident that this nominative has the power of the vocative; forgothe to the gone God thy throne into the world of world: a gerde of equite the gerde of thy reume. I give this, pointing and all, as it stands in my old MS. Bible. Wiclif is nearly the same, but is evidently of a more modern cast; but to the gone he seith, God thy throne is into the world of world, a gherd of equite is the gherd of thy reume. Coverdale translates it thus, But, unto the sonne he sayeth: God, thi seate endureth for ever and ever: the cepter of thi kyngdome is a right cepter. Tindal and others follow in the same way, all reading it in the nominative case, with the force of the vocative; for none of them has inserted the word $\epsilon\varsigma$, is, because not authorized by the original: a word which the opposers of the Divinity of our Lord are obliged to beg, in order to support their interpretation. See some further criticisms on this at the end of this chapter.

A sceptre of righteousness] The sceptre, which was a sort of staff, or instrument of various forms, was the ensign of government, and is here used for government itself. This the ancient Jewish writers understand also of the Messiah.

Verse 9. Thou hast loved righteousness] This is the characteristic of a just governor: He abhors and suppresses iniquity; He countenances and supports righteousness and truth.

Therefore God, even thy God] The original $\delta\iota\alpha\ \tau\omega\ \epsilon\pi\iota\sigma\tau\epsilon\iota\ \tau\omega\ \Theta\epsilon\omega$, $\delta\ \Theta\epsilon\omega\ \tau\omega$, may be thus translated, Therefore, O God, thy God hath anointed thee. The form of speech is nearly the same with that in the preceding verse: but the sense is sufficiently clear, if we read, Therefore God, thy God hath anointed thee, &c.

With the oil of gladness] We have often had occasion to remark that, anciently, kings, priests, and prophets, were consecrated to their several offices by anointing; and that this signified the gifts and influences of the Divine Spirit. Christ, $\chi\rho\iota\sigma\tau\omicron\varsigma$, signifies The Anointed One; the same as the Hebrew Messiah; and He is here said to be anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows. None was ever constituted prophet, priest, and king, but Himself; some were kings only, prophets only, and priests only; others were kings and priests; or priests and prophets; or kings and prophets; but none had ever the three offices in his own person, but Jesus Christ; and none but Himself can be a King over the universe, a Prophet to all intelligent beings, and a Priest to the whole human race. Thus He is infinitely exalted beyond his fellows; all that had ever borne the regal, prophetic, or sacerdotal offices.

Some think that the word $\mu\epsilon\tau\omicron\chi\omega\upsilon\varsigma$, fellows, refers to believers who are made partakers of the same Spirit, but cannot have its infinite plenitude. The first sense seems the best. Gladness is used to express the festivities which took place on the inauguration of kings, &c.

Verse 10. And thou, Lord] This is an address to the Son, as the Creator, see ver. 2. for this is implied in laying the foundations of the earth. The heavens being the work of his hands, points out his infinite wisdom and skill.

Verse 11. They shall perish] Permanently fixed as they seem to be, a time shall come when they shall be dissolved; and afterward a new heavens and a new earth be formed, in which righteousness alone shall dwell.—See 2 Pet. iii. 10—13.

Shall wax old as doth a garment] As a garment, by long using, becomes unfit to be longer used, so shall all visible things; they shall wear old, and wear out; and hence the necessity of their being renewed. It is remarkable that our word world is a contraction of wear old; a term by which our ancestors expressed the sentiment contained in this verse. That the word was thus compounded, and that it had this sense in our language, may be proved from the most competent and indisputable witnesses. It was formerly written weorold, weorold, and wepleb, weorold. This etymology is finally alluded to by our excellent poet Spencer, when describing the primitive age of innocence, succeeded by the age of depravity:—

• Even the heathen poets are full of such allusions. See Horace, Carm. lib. iii. od. 6. Virgil, Æn. viii. ver. 324.

Thou remainest] Instead of διαμῆναι, some good MSS. read διαμῆναι, the first without the circumflex, being the present tense of the indicative mood: the latter with the circumflex being the future—thou shalt remain. The difference between these two readings is of little importance.

Verse 12. And they shall be changed] Not destroyed ultimately, or annihilated. They shall be changed and renewed.

But thou art the same] These words can be said of no being but God: all others are changeable or perishable, because temporal; only that which is eternal can continue essentially, and, speaking after the manner of men, formally the same.

Thy years shall not fail] There is in the Divine duration no circle to be run, no space to be measured, no time to be reckoned. All is eternity—infinite and onward.

Verse 13. But to which of the angels] We have already seen, from the opinions and concessions of the Jews, that if Jesus Christ could be proved to be greater than the angels, it would necessarily follow that He was God: and this the apostle does most amply prove, by these various quotations from their own Scriptures: for he shows that while He is the supreme and absolute Sovereign, they are no more than His messengers and servants; and servants even to His servants, i. e. to mankind.

Verse 14. Are they not all ministering spirits] That is, they are all ministering spirits; for the Hebrews often express the strongest affirmative by an interrogation.

All the angels, even those of the highest order, are employed by their Creator to serve those who believe in Christ Jesus. What these services are, and how performed, it would be impossible to state. Much has been written on the subject, partly founded on Scripture, and partly on conjecture. They are, no doubt, constantly employed in averting evil, and procuring good. If God help man by man, we need not wonder that He helps man by angels. We know that He needs none of those helps, until I make thine enemies thy footstool?

14^b Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?

for He can do all things Himself; yet it seems agreeable to His infinite wisdom and goodness to use them. This is part of the economy of God in the government of the world, and of the church; and a part, no doubt, essential to the harmony and perfection of the whole. The reader may see a very sensible discourse on this text, in Vol. IX. page 337. of the Reverend John Wesley's Works, edit. 1811. Dr. Owen treats the subject at large in his comment on this verse, Vol. III. page 141. edit. 8vo. which is just now brought to my hand; and which appears to be a very learned, judicious, and important work, but by far too diffuse. In it the words of God are drowned in the sayings of man.

The Godhead of Christ is a subject of such great importance, both to the faith and hope of a Christian; that I feel it necessary to bring it full into view, wherever it is referred to in the Sacred Writings. It is a prominent article in the apostle's creed, and should be so in ours. That this doctrine cannot be established on ver. 8. has been the assertion of many. To what I have already said on this verse, I beg leave to subjoin the following criticisms of a learned friend, who has made this subject his peculiar study:—

BRIEF REMARKS ON HEBREWS, chap. i. ver. 8.

Ὁ θςος σου, ὁ θςος, ας τις αμανας.

“1. It hath ever been the opinion of the most sound divines, that these words, which are extracted from the 45th Psalm, are addressed by God the Father unto God the Son. Our translators have accordingly rendered the passage thus: “Thy throne, O God, is for ever.” Those who deny the Divinity of Christ, being eager to get rid of such a testimony against themselves, contend that ὁ θςος is here the nominative, and that the meaning is, “God is thy throne for ever.” Now, it is somewhat strange, that none of them has had critical acumen enough to discover, that the words cannot possibly admit of this signification. It is a rule in the Greek language, that when a substantive noun is the subject of a sentence, and something is predicated of it; the article, if used at all, is prefixed to the subject, but omitted before the predicate. The Greek translators of the Old, and the authors of the New Testament, write agreeably to this rule. I shall first give some examples from the latter:—

θςος: ἡ ὁ λογος.—“The Word was God.” John i. 1.

Ὁ λογος σαφς ἑνωσας.—“The word became flesh.” John i. 14.

Ὁ Θεὸς ἀγάπη ἐστίν.—“God is love.” 1 John iv. 8.

Ὁ Θεὸς φῶς ἐστίν.—“God is light.” 1 John i. 5.

If we examine the Septuagint Version of the Psalms, we shall find, that in such instances the author sometimes places the article before the subject, but that his usual mode is, to omit it altogether. A few examples will suffice:—

Ὁ Θεὸς ἡμῶν καταφυγὴ καὶ δύναμις.—“God is our refuge and strength.” Psal. xlv. 1.

Κυριὸς βοῦδος μου.—“The Lord is my helper.” Psal. xxviii. 7.

Κυριὸς στήριγμα μου, καὶ καταφυγὴ μου.—“The Lord is my firm support, and my refuge.” Psal. xviii. 2.

Θεὸς μέγας Κυριὸς.—“The Lord is a great God.” Psal. xcvi. 3.

We see what is the established phraseology of the Septuagint, when a substantive noun has something predicated of it in the same sentence. Surely, then, we may be convinced, that if in Psal. xlv. ver. 6. the meaning, which they who deny our Lord's Divinity affix, had been intended, it would rather have been written θεοὺς ἐσὶ, ὁ Θεὸς, ἢ θεοὺς ἐσὶ, θεοὺς. This our conviction will, if possible, be increased, when we examine the very next clause of this sentence; where we shall find, that the article is prefixed to the subject, but omitted before the predicate.

Ραβδος ἀντικτύπου ἡ ραβδος τῆς βασιλείας σου.—“The sceptre of thy kingdom is a sceptre of rectitude.”

But it may be doubted, whether Θεὸς with the article affixed be ever used in the vocative case. Your doubt will be solved by reading the following examples, which are taken, not promiscuously from the Septuagint, but all of them from the Psalms.

Κρινοὶ αὐτῶν, ὁ Θεὸς.—“Judge them, O God.” Psal. v. 10.

Ὁ Θεὸς, ὁ Θεὸς μου.—“O my God, my God.” Psal. xxii. 1.

Σὺ ψάλλῃς, ὁ Θεὸς μου.—“Unto thee will I sing, O my God.” Psal. lix. 17.

Ἐψάλλῃς ἐγὼ ὁ Θεὸς μου.—“I will exalt thee, O my God.” Psal. cxlv. 1.

Κυριὸς, ὁ Θεὸς μου.—“O Lord my God.” Ps. civ. 1.

I have now removed the only objection which can, I think, be started. It remains, that the Son of Mary is here addressed as the God, whose throne endures for ever.

If you should meet with any passage in the Psalms, where a substantive noun has a predicate in the same sentence, and the article is prefixed to both; then, indeed, my argument will be good for nothing. I know that a pronoun sometimes occurs with the article prefixed to its predicate; but I speak only of nouns substantive.”

H. S. BORD.

The preceding remarks are original, and will be duly respected by every scholar.

2. I have showed my reasons in the note on Luke i. 35. why I cannot close in with the common view of what is called the eternal Sonship of Christ. I am inclined to think that from this tenet Arianism had its origin. I shall here produce my authority for this opinion. Arius, the father of what is called Arianism, and who flourished in A. D. 300, was a presbyter of the church of Alexandria, a man of great learning and eloquence; and of deeply mortified manners; and he continued to edify the church by his teaching and example till the circumstances took place which produced that unhappy change in his religious sentiments, which afterward gave rise to so much distraction and division in the Christian church. The circumstance to which I refer is related by Socrates Scholasticus, in his Supplement to the History of Eusebius, lib. i. c. 5. and is in substance as follows: Alexander having succeeded Achillas in the bishopric of Alexandria, self-confidently philosophizing one day in the presence of his presbyters and the rest of his clergy concerning the Holy Trinity, among other things asserted that there was a Monad in the Triad, φλοισμογενὴς πρὸς τῆς ἑνίας Τριάδος, ἢ Τριάδι Μονάδα καὶ φιλοσοφῶσα ἰδιώματα. What he said on the derived nature or eternal Sonship of Christ is not related. Arius, one of his presbyters, a man of considerable skill in the science of logic, ἀνὴρ οὐκ ἀμείωτος τῆς διαλεκτικῆς λογικῆς, supposing that the bishop designed to introduce the dogmas of Sabellius, the Libyan, (who denied the personality of the Godhead, and consequently the Trinity,) sharply opposed the bishop, arguing thus: “If the Father begot the Son, He who was thus begotten had a beginning of his existence: and from this it is manifest, that there was a time in which the Son was not. Whence it necessarily follows, that He has His subsistence from what exists not.” The words which Socrates quotes are the following, of which the above is as close a translation as the different idioms will allow: Εἰ ὁ Πατήρ ἐγέννησε τὸν Υἱόν, ἀρχὴν ὑπαρξίως ἔχει ὁ γέννηθης· καὶ καὶ τούτου ἕνεκα, οὐκ ἔστιν ὅτι οὐκ ἦν ὁ υἱός· ἀλλοθεν γὰρ ἐξ ἀρχαίας, ἐξ οὐκ ὄντων ἔχει αὐτὸ τὴν ὑπόστασιν. Now, it does not appear that this had been previously the doctrine of Arius: but that it was the consequence which he logically drew from the doctrine laid down by the bishop: and although Socrates does not tell us what the bishop stated, yet, from the conclusions drawn, we may at once see what the premises were; and these must have been some incautious assertions concerning the Sonship of the Divine nature of Christ: and I have shown elsewhere that these are fair deductions from such premises. “But is not God called Father; and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ?” Most certainly. That God graciously assumes the name of Father, and acts in that character towards mankind, the whole Scripture proves: and that the title is given to Him as signifying Author, Cause, Fountain, and Creator, is also sufficiently manifest from the same Scriptures. In this sense He is said to be the Father of the rain, Job xxxviii. 28. and hence also it is said, He is the Father of spirits, Heb. xii. 9. and He is the Father of men, because He created them; and Adam, the first man, is particularly called His son, Luke iii. 38. But He is the Father of the human nature of our blessed Lord, in a peculiar sense, because by His energy this was produced in the womb of the virgin, Luke i. 35. The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; THEREFORE also that HOLY THING WHICH SHALL BE BORN OF THEE shall be called THE SON OF GOD. It is in consequence of this that our blessed Lord is so frequently termed the Son of God, and that God is called His Father.

But I know not any Scripture, fairly interpreted, that states the Divine nature of our Lord to be begotten of God, or to be the Son of God. Nor can I see it possible, that He could be begotten of the Father, in this sense, and be eternal; and if not eternal, he is not God. But numberless scriptures give Him every attribute of Godhead: His own works demonstrate it; and the whole scheme of salvation requires this. I hope I may say that I have demonstrated His supreme, absolute, and unoriginated Godhead, both in my note on Coloss. i. 16, 17. and in my Discourse on Salvation by Faith. And having seen that the doctrine of the eternal Sonship produced Arianism, and Arianism produced Socinianism, and Socinianism produces a kind of general infidelity, or disrespect to the Sacred Writings, so that several parts of them are rejected as being uncanonical, and the inspiration of a major part of the New Testament strongly suspected; I find it necessary to be doubly on my watch to avoid every thing that may, even in the remotest way, tend to so deplorable a catastrophe.

It may be said, "Is not God called the eternal Father? And if so, there can be no eternal Father, if there be no eternal Son." I answer, God is not called in any part of Scripture, as far as I can recollect, either the eternal or everlasting Father, in reference to our blessed Lord; nor indeed in reference to any thing else: but this very title, strange to tell, is given to Jesus Christ himself; His name shall be called the EVERLASTING FATHER, Isa. ix. 6. and we may on this account, with more propriety, look for an eternal filiation proceeding from Him, than from any other Person of the most Holy Trinity.

Should it be asked, "Was there no Trinity of Persons in the Godhead before the incarnation?" I answer, that a Trinity of Persons appears to me to belong essentially to the Eternal Godhead, neither of which was before, after, or produced from, another; and of this the Old Testament is full; but the distinction was not fully evident till the incarnation; and particularly till the baptism in Jordan, when on Him, in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead, the Holy Ghost descended, in a bodily shape, like a dove: and a voice from heaven proclaimed that baptized Person God's beloved Son: in which transaction there were three Persons occupying distinct places: as the Person of Christ in the water; the Holy Spirit in a bodily shape; and the voice from heaven, sufficiently prove; and to each of these Persons various scriptures give all the essential attributes of God.

On the doctrine of the eternal Sonship of the Divine nature of Christ, I once had the privilege of conversing with the late reverend John Wesley, about three years before his death: he read, from a book in which I had written it, the argument against this doctrine, which now stands in the note on Luke i. 35. He did not attempt to reply to it; but allowed that, on the ground on which I had taken it, the argument was conclusive. I observed, that the proper essential Divinity of Jesus Christ appeared to me to be so absolutely necessary to the whole Christian scheme, and to the faith of penitent sinners and saints, that it was of the utmost importance to set it in the clearest and strongest point of view: and that, with my present light, I could not credit it, if I must receive the common doctrine of the Sonship of the Divine nature of our Lord. He mentioned two eminent divines who were of the same opinion; and added, that the eternal Sonship of Christ had been a doctrine very generally received in the Christian church: and he believed no one had ever expressed it better than his brother Samuel had done in the following lines:—

"From Thee in one eternal now,
Thy Son, Thy offspring flow'd;
And everlasting Father thou,
As everlasting God."

He added not one word more on the subject, nor ever after mentioned it to me, though after that we had many interviews. But it is necessary to mention his own note on the text, that has given rise to these observations; which shows that he held the doctrine as commonly received, when he wrote that note: it is as follows—

"Thou art my Son] God of God, Light of Light. This day have I begotten Thee; I have begotten Thee from eternity, which, by its unalterable permanency of duration, is one continued unsuccessive day." Leaving the point in dispute out of the question, this is most beautifully expressed; and I know not that this great man ever altered his views on this subject. However necessary this view of the subject may appear to me, I do not presume to say that others, in order to be saved, must view it in the same light: I leave both opinions to the judgment of the reader; for on such a point, it is necessary that every man should be clear in his own mind, and satisfied in his own conscience. Any opinion of mine, my readers are at perfect liberty to receive or reject. I never claimed infallibility; I say with St. Augustin, Errare possum; hæreticus esse nolo. Refined Arians, with some of whom I am personally acquainted, are quite willing to receive all that can be said of the dignity and glory of Christ's nature, provided we admit the doctrine of the eternal Sonship, and omit the word unoriginated, which I have used in my demonstration of the Godhead of the Saviour of men: but, as far as it respects myself, I can neither admit the one, nor omit the other. The proper essential Godhead of Christ lies deep at the foundation of my Christian creed; and I must sacrifice ten thousand forms of speech rather than sacrifice the thing. My opinion has not been formed on slight examination.

CHAPTER II.

The use we should make of the preceding doctrine, and the danger of neglecting this great salvation, 1—4. The future world is not put in subjection to the angels; but all is under the authority of Christ, 5—8. Jesus has tasted death for every man, 9. Nor could he accomplish man's redemption without being incarnated and without dying; by which he destroys the devil, and delivers all that believe on him from the fear of death and spiritual bondage, 10—15. Christ took not upon him the nature of angels, but the nature of Abraham, that he might die, and make reconciliation for the sins of the people, 16—18.

NOTES ON CHAP. II.

Verse 1. Therefore] Because God has spoken to us by His Son; and because that Son is so great and glorious a Personage; and because the subject which is addressed to us is of such infinite importance to our welfare:—

We ought to give the more earnest heed] We should hear the doctrine of Christ with care, candour, and deep concern:—

Lest at any time we should let them slip.] Μα κερ παραρηκουσιν, "lest at any time we should leak out." This is a metaphor taken from un-staunch vessels; the staves not being close together, the fluid put into them, leaks through the chinks and crevices. Superficial hearers lose the benefit of the word preached, as the unseasoned vessel does its fluid: nor can any one hear, to the saving of his soul, unless he give most earnest heed, which he will not do unless he consider the dignity of the Speaker, the importance of the subject, and the absolute necessity of the salvation of his soul. St. Chrysostom renders it μη ποτε απραλημυδα, κερωμυδω, lest we perish, lest we fall away.

Verse 2. If the word spoken by angels] The law, (according to some,) which was delivered by the mediation of angels; God frequently employing these to communicate His will to men.—See Acts vii. 53. and Galat. iii. 19. But the apostle probably means those particular messages which God sent by angels, as in the case of Lot, Gen. xix. and such like.

Was steadfast] Was so confirmed by the Divine authority, and so strict that it would not tolerate any offence, but inflicted punishment on every act of transgression, every case in which the bounds laid down by the law, were passed over: and every act of disobedience in respect to the duties enjoined.

Received a just recompense] That kind and degree of punishment which the law prescribed for those who broke it.

Verse 3. How shall we escape] If they who had fewer privileges than we have, to whom God spoke in divers manners by angels and prophets, fell under the displeasure of their Maker, and were often punished with a sore destruction; how shall we escape wrath to the uttermost, if we neglect the salvation provided for us, and proclaimed to us by the Son of God? Their offence was high: ours indescribably higher. The salvation mentioned here is the whole system of Christianity, with all the privileges it confers; properly called a salvation, because, by bringing such an abundance of heavenly light into the world, it saves or delivers men from the kingdom of darkness, ignorance, error, superstition and idolatry; and provides all the requisite means to free them from the power, guilt, and contamination, of sin. This salvation is great, when compared with that granted to the Jews:—1. The Jewish dispensation was provided for the Jews alone; the Christian dispensation for all mankind. 2. The Jewish dispensation was full of significant types and ceremonies; the Christian dispensation is the substance of all those types. 3. The Jewish dispensation referred chiefly to the body and outward state of man; washings and external cleansings of the flesh: the Christian, to the inward state; purifying the heart and soul, and purging the conscience from dead works. 4. The Jewish dispensation promised temporal happiness: the Christian spiritual. 5. The Jewish dispensation belonged chiefly to time; the Christian to eternity. 6. The Jewish dispensation had its glory; but that was nothing when compared to the exceeding glory of the Gospel. 7. Moses administered the former; Jesus Christ, the Creator, Governor, and Saviour of the world, the latter. 8. This is a great salvation, infinitely beyond the Jewish; but how great no tongue or pen can describe.

Those who neglect it, αμαρτωλεις, are not only they who oppose or peracute it, but they who pay no regard to it: who do not meddle with it, do not concern themselves about it: do not lay it to heart; and, consequently, do not get their hearts changed by it. Now, these cannot escape the coming judgments of God, not merely because they oppose His will and commandment, but because they sin against the very cause and means of their deliverance. As there is but one remedy by which their diseased souls can be saved, so, by refusing to apply that one remedy, they must necessarily perish.

Which at the first began to be spoken] Though John Baptist went before our Lord to prepare His way, yet he could not be properly said to preach the Gospel: and even Christ's preaching was only a beginning of the great proclamation: it was His own Spirit in the apostles and evangelists, the men who heard Him preach, that opened the whole mystery of the kingdom of 4 God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost, according to his own will.

5 For unto the angels hath he not put in subjection the world to come, whereof we speak.

heaven. And all this testimony had been so confirmed in the land of Judea, as to render it indubitable; and, consequently, there was no excuse for their unbelief; and no prospect of their escape, if they should continue to neglect it.

Verse 4. God also bearing them witness] He did not leave the confirmation of these great truths to the testimony of men: He bore His own testimony to them by signs, wonders, various miracles, and distributions of the Holy Ghost; Πνεύματος ἁγίου μερισμῶς. And all these were proved to come from Himself, for no man could do those miracles at his own pleasure; but the power to work them was given according to God's own will; or, rather, God Himself wrought them, in order to accredit the ministry of His servants.

For the meaning of signs, wonders, &c. see the note on Deut. iv. 34.

Verse 5. The world to come] That עולם הבא haba, the world to come, meant the days of the Messiah, among the Jews is most evident; and has been often pointed out in the course of these notes. And that the administration of this kingdom has not been entrusted to angels, who were frequently employed under the law, is also evident; for the government is on the shoulder of Jesus Christ; He alone has the keys of death and hell; He alone shuts, and no man opens; opens, and no man shuts: He alone has the residue of the Spirit; He alone is the Governor of the universe; the Spirit, Soul, Heart, and Head, of the church; all is in His authority, and under subjection to Him.

But some think that the world to come, means future glory; and suppose the words are spoken in reference to the Angel of God's presence, Exod. xxiii. 20. who introduced the Israelites into the Promised Land; which land is here put in opposition to the heavenly inheritance. And it is certain that, in this sense also, we have an entrance into the Holiest, only by the blood of Jesus. Dr. Macknight contends for this latter meaning; but the former appears more consistent with the Jewish phraseology.

Verse 6. But one, in a certain place] This one is David; and the certain place, Psal viii. 4, 5, 6. But why does the apostle use this indeterminate mode of quotation? Because it was common thus to express the testimony of any of the inspired writers; אמר הושיע אהו אמר אהו amar hahu cathab, Thus saith a certain scripture. So Philo De Plant. Noe, אמר גאון שם, he saith somewhere; אמר גאון תה, a certain person saith. Thus even the heathens: were accustomed to quote high authorities: so Plato, in Tim. αὐτὸς ἦν, as a certain person saith; meaning Heracitus.— See in Rosenmüller. It is such a mode of quotation as we sometimes use when we speak of a very eminent person, who is well known; as that very eminent person, that great philosopher, that celebrated divine, that inspired teacher of the Gentiles, the royal psalmist, the evangelical prophet, hath said. The mode of quotation, therefore, implies not ignorance, but reverence.

What is man] This quotation is verbatim from the Septuagint; and, as the Greek is not so emphatic as the Hebrew, I will quote the original, מַה אִישׁ כִּי תִזְכְּרֶנּוּ וְכֵן אָדָם כִּי תִפְחַדְעֶנּוּ; mah ish ki tizcarenu, when Adam ki tiphkedenu; What is miserable man, that thou rememberest him; and the son of Adam, that thou visitest him? The variation of the terms in the original is very emphatic. Adam, אָדָם, is the name given to man at his creation, and expresses his origin, and generic distinction from all other animals. Enoch, אֵנוֹחַ, which signifies sick, weak, wretched, was never given to him, till after his fall. The son of Adam means here any one or all of the fallen posterity of the first man. That God should remember in the way of mercy these wretched beings, is great condescension; that he should visit them, manifest Himself to them, yea, even dwell among them, and at last assume their nature, and give up His life to ransom them from the bitter pains of eternal death, is mercy and love indescribable and eternal.

Verse 7. Thou madest him a little lower than the angels] We must again have recourse to the original from which this quotation is made, וְכֵן אָדָם כִּי תִפְחַדְעֶנּוּ vatecharenu me'at me'elohim. If this be spoken of man as he came out of the hands of his Maker, it places him at the head of all God's works; for, literally translated, it is, Thou hast made him less than God. And this is proved by his being made in the image, and likeness of God, which is spoken of no other creature either in heaven or earth; and it is very likely that, in his original creation, he stood at the head of all the works of God; and the next to his Maker. This sentiment is well expressed in the following lines, part of a paraphrase on this Psalm, by the Rev. C. Wesley:—

And little less than God.⁷

If we take the words as referring to Jesus Christ, then they must be understood as pointing out the time of his humiliation, as in ver. 9. and the little lower, ἡεχχυ τι, in both verses, must mean, for a short time, or a little while, as is very properly inserted among our marginal readings. Adam was originally made higher than the angels; but by sin he is now brought low, and subjected to death; for the angelic nature is not mortal.—Thus, taking the words in their common acceptation, man, in his present state, may be said to be lessened below the angels. Jesus Christ, as the eternal Logos, or God with God, could not die, therefore, a body was prepared for Him; and thus, ἡεχχυ τι, for a short while, He was made lower than the angels, that He might be capable of suffering death. And indeed the whole of the passage suits Him better than it does any of the children of men, or, than even Adam himself in a state of innocence; for it is only under the feet of Jesus that all things are put in subjection; and it was in consequence of His humiliation, that He had a name above every name, so that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth, Philipp. ii. 9—11. Therefore, He must be infinitely higher than the angels; for they, as well as all the things in heaven, bow in subjection to Him.

Thou crownedst him with glory and honour] This was strictly true of Adam in his state of innocence; for he was set over all things in this lower world; all sheep and oxen, the beasts of the field, the fowl of the air, the fish of the sea, and whatsoever passeth over the paths of the seas, Psa. viii. 7, 8. So far all this perfectly applies to Adam: but it is evident the apostle takes all in a much higher sense, that of universal dominion; and hence he says, he left nothing that is not put under him. These verses collated with the above passage from the Epistle to the Philippians, mutually illustrate each other. And the crowning Christ with glory and honour must refer to His exaltation after His resurrection, in which as the victorious Messiah, He had all power given to Him in heaven and earth. And although we do not yet see all things put under him, for evil men, and evil spirits, are only under the subjection of control; yet we look forward to that time when the whole world shall be bowed to His sway; and when the stone, cut out of the mountains without hands, shall become great and fill the whole earth.—What was never true of the first Adam, even in his most exalted state, is true of the second Adam, the Lord Jesus Christ; and to Him, and to Him alone, it is most evident that the apostle applies these things; and thus He is higher than the angels, who never had, nor can have such dominion, and consequent glory.

Verse 9. Should taste death for every man] In consequence of the fall of Adam, the whole human race became sinful in their nature; and in their practice, added transgression to sinfulness of disposition, and thus became exposed to endless perdition. To redeem them, Jesus Christ took on Him the nature of man, and suffered the penalty due to their sins.

It was a custom in ancient times, to take off criminals by making them drink a cup of poison. Socrates was adjudged to drink a cup of the juice of hemlock, by order of the Athenian magistrates: πινει το φαρμακον, ανακαζοντα τον Αρχορτων. The sentence was one of the most unjust ever pronounced on man. Socrates was not only innocent of every crime laid to his charge, but was the greatest benefactor to his country. He was duly conscious of the iniquity of his sentence, yet cheerfully submitted to his appointed fate; for, when the officer brought in the poison, though his friends endeavoured to persuade him that he had yet a considerable time in which he might continue to live; yet, knowing that every purpose of life was now accomplished, he refused to avail himself of a few remaining moments; seized the cup, and drank off the poison with the utmost cheerfulness and alacrity: επιχεμιστος και μαλα ωχρητος και ουκ ελεειν.—Plato. Phæd. sub. fin. The reference in the text seems to point out the whole human race as being accused, tried, found guilty, and condemned; each having his own poisoned cup to drink; and Jesus, the wonderful Jesus, takes the cup out of the hand of each, and cheerfully, and with alacrity, drinks off the dregs! Thus having drunk every man's poisoned cup, he tasted that death which they must have endured, had not their cup been drunk by another. Is not this the cup to which he refers, Matt. xxvi. 39. O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me! But without His drinking it, the salvation of the world would have been impossible; and therefore he cheerfully drank it in the place of every human soul; and thus made atonement for the sin of the whole world: and this he did χαριτι Θεου, by the grace, mercy, or infinite goodness, of God. Jesus Christ incarnated, crucified, dying, rising, ascending to heaven, and becoming our Mediator at God's right hand, is the full proof of God's infinite love to the human race.

Instead of χαριτι Θεου, by the grace of God, some MSS. and the Syriac, have χαρη Θεου, without God, or God excepted; i. e. the manhood died, not the Deity. This was probably a marginal gloss which has crept into the text of many MSS. and is quoted by some of the chief of the Greek and Latin Fathers. Several critics contend that the verse should be thus: "But we see Jesus, who for a little while was made less than angels, that by the grace of God he might taste death for every man, for the suffering of death crowned with glory and honour." However it be taken, the sense is nearly the same:—1. Jesus Christ was incarnated. 2. He suffered death as an expiatory victim. 3. The persons in whose behalf He suffered, were the whole human race; every man; all human creatures. 4. This Jesus is now in a state of the highest glory and honour.

Verse 10. For, it became him] It was suitable to the Divine wisdom, the requisitions of justice, and the economy of grace, to offer Jesus as a sacrifice, in order to bring many sons and daughters to glory.

For whom—and by whom] God is the cause of all things; and He is the object or end of them.

Perfect through sufferings.] Without suffering, He could not have died: and without dying, He could not have made an atonement for sin. The sacrifice must be consummated, in order that He might be qualified to be the Captain or Author of the salvation of men; and lead all those who become children of God, through faith in Him, into eternal glory. I believe this to be the sense of the passage; and it appears to be an answer to the grand objection of the Jews: "The Messiah is never to be conquered, or die; but will be victorious, and endure for ever." Now the apostle shows that this is not the counsel of God; on the contrary, that it was entirely congruous to the will and nature of God, by whom, and for whom, are all things, to bring men to eternal glory through the suffering and death of the Messiah. This is the decision of the Spirit of God against their prejudices; and on the Divine authority this must be our conclusion—Without the passion and death of Christ, the salvation of man would have been impossible.

As there are many different views of this, and some of the following verses, I shall introduce a paraphrase of the whole from Dr. Dodd, who gives the substance of what Doddridge, Pearce, and Owen, have said on this subject.

Verse 10. For it became him, &c.—"Such has been the conduct of God in the great affair of our redemption; and the beauty and harmony of it will be apparent in proportion to the degree in which it is examined. For, though the Jews dream of a temporal Messiah, as a scheme conducive to the Divine glory, it well became him: it was expedient that in order to act worthy of Himself, He should take this method: He, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things; that glorious Being who is the first cause, and last end of all; in pursuit of the great and important design He had formed, of conducting many, whom He is pleased to adopt as His sons, to the possession of that inheritance of glory intended for them: to make and constitute Jesus, His first-begotten and well-beloved Son, the Leader and Prince of their salvation; and to make Him perfect, or completely fit for the full execution of His office, by a long train of various and extreme sufferings, whereby He was, as it were, solemnly consecrated to it. Verse 11. Now, in consequence of this appointment, Jesus, the great Sanctifier, who engages and consecrates men to the service of God; and they who are sanctified, (i. e. consecrated and introduced to God with such acceptance,) are all of one family, all the descendants of Adam, and in a sense, the seed of Abraham; for which cause he is not ashamed to call them, whom he thus redeems, and presents to the Divine favour, His brethren. Verse 12. Saying, in the person of David, who represented the Messiah in His sufferings and exaltation, I will declare thy name to my brethren; in the midst of the church will I praise thee. Verse 13. And again, speaking as a mortal man, exposed to such exercises of faith in trials and difficulties as others were, He says in a Psalm which sets forth His triumph over His enemies, I will trust in Him, as other good men have done in all ages; and again, elsewhere in the person of Isaiah, Behold I, and the children which my God hath given me, are for signs and for wonders. Verse 14. Seeing then those whom He represents in one place and another, as the children of the same family with Himself, were partakers of flesh and blood, He Himself in like manner participated of them, that thereby becoming capable of those sufferings, to which, without such an union with flesh, this Divine Sanctifier could not have been obnoxious, He might, by His own voluntary and meritorious death, abolish and depose him who, by Divine permission, had the empire of death, and led it in his train when he made the first invasion on mankind; that is, the devil, the great artificer of mischief and destruction; at the beginning the murderer of the human race; who still seems to triumph in the spread of mortality, which is his work, and who may often, by God's permission, be the executioner of it. Verse 15. But Christ, the great Prince of mercy and life, graciously interposed, that He might deliver those miserable captives of Satan, mankind in general, and the dark and idolatrous Gentiles in particular, who through fear of death, were, or justly might have been, all their lifetime obnoxious to bondage; having nothing to expect in consequence of it, if they rightly understood their state, but future misery; whereas now, changing their Lord, they have happily changed their condition; and are, as many as have believed in Him, the heirs of eternal life."

Verse 11. For, both he who sanctifieth] The word ἁγιασμος does not merely signify one who sanctifies or makes holy, but one who makes atonement or reconciliation to God, and answers to the Hebrew כַּפָּר, caphar, to expiate: see Exod. xxix. 33—36. He that sanctifies is He that makes atonement; and, they who are sanctified are they who receive that atonement; and being reconciled unto God, become His children by adoption, through grace.

In this sense our Lord uses the word, John xvii. 19. For their sakes I sanctify myself: ἵνα ἁγιάσω ἑαυτὸν ὑπὲρ αὐτῶν, on their account I consecrate Myself to be a sacrifice. This is the sense in which this word is used generally through this epistle.

Are all of one] ἅ ἐστιν ἡ φύσις. What this one means has given rise to various conjectures; father, family, blood, seed, race, nature, have all been substituted: nature seems to be that intended, see ver. 14. and the conclusion of this verse confirms it. Both the Sanctifier and the sanctified, both Christ and His followers, are all of the same nature; for as the children were partakers of flesh and blood, i. e. of human nature, He partook of the same; and thus He was qualified to become a sacrifice for man.

He is not ashamed to call them brethren] Though as to His Godhead, He is infinitely raised above men and angels; yet as he has become incarnate, notwithstanding His dignity, He blushes not to acknowledge all his true followers as His brethren.

Verse 12. I will declare thy name] See Psa. xxii. 22. The apostle certainly quotes this Psalm as referring to Jesus Christ; and these words as spoken by Christ unto the Father, in reference to His incarnation; as if he had said, "When I shall be incarnated, I will declare thy perfections to mankind: and among My disciples I will give glory to Thee for Thy mercy to the children of men."—See the fulfilment of this, John i. 18. No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him. Nor were the perfections of God ever properly known or declared till the manifestation of Christ. Hear another Scripture, Luke x. 21. and 22. In that hour Jesus rejoiced in spirit, and said, I thank Thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, That thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes, &c. Thus He gave praise to God.

Verse 13. I will put my trust in him] It is not clear to what express place of Scripture the apostle refers: words to this effect frequently occur; but the place most probably is Psa. xviii. 2. several parts of which Psalm, seem to belong to the Messiah.

Behold I and the children which God hath given me.] This is taken from Isa. lviii. 18. The apostle does not intend to say that the portions which he has quoted have any particular reference, taken by themselves, to the subject in question; they are only catch-words of whole paragraphs, which, taken together, are full to the point; because they are prophecies of the Messiah, and are fulfilled in him. This is evident from the last quotation, behold I and the children whom the Lord hath given me are for signs and for wonders in Israel. Jesus and His disciples wrought a multitude of the most stupendous signs and wonders in Israel. The expression also may include all genuine Christians: they are for signs and wonders throughout the earth. And as to the xviiiith Psalm, the principal part of it seems to refer to Christ's sufferings: but the miracles which were wrought at his crucifixion, the destruction of the Jewish state and polity, the calling of the Gentiles, and the establishment of the Christian church, appear also to be intended. See among others the following passages:—SUFFERINGS—The sorrows of death compassed me—in my distress I called upon the Lord. MIRACLES at the crucifixion—The earth shook and trembled—and darkness was under his feet. DESTRUCTION of the Jewish state—I have pursued mine enemies and overtaken them; they are fallen under my feet. CALLING OF THE GENTILES—Thou hast made me head of the heathen; a people whom I have never known shall serve me; as soon as they hear of me they shall obey me, &c. &c. A principal design of the apostle is to show that such scriptures are prophecies of the Messiah; that they plainly refer to His appearing in the flesh in Israel; and that they have all been fulfilled in Jesus Christ, and the calling of the Gentiles to the privileges of the Gospel. To establish these points was of great importance.

Verse 14. The children are partakers of flesh and blood] Since those children of God, who have fallen and are to be redeemed, are human beings; in order to be qualified to redeem them, by suffering and dying in their stead, He himself likewise took part of the same; He became incarnate; and thus, He who was God with God, became man with men. By the children here we are to understand not only the disciples, and all genuine Christians, as in ver. 13. but also the whole human race; all Jews and all Gentiles: so John xi. 51, 52. He prophesied that Jesus should die for that nation; and not for that nation only, but also that he should gather together in one, the CHILDREN of God that were scattered abroad : meaning, probably, all the Jews in every part of the earth. But collate this with 1 John ii. 2. where the evangelist explains the former words, He is the propitiation for our sins, (the Jews,) and not for ours only, but for the sins of the whole world. As the apostle was writing to the Hebrews only, he in general uses a Jewish phraseology, pointing out to them their own privileges ; and rarely introduces the Gentiles, or what the Messiah has done for the other nations of the earth.

That through death] That by the merit of His own death, which making atonement for sin, and procuring the almighty energy of the Holy Spirit, should counterwork, απαρτωση, or render useless and ineffectual, all the operations of Him who had the power, αυτου, or influence, to bring death into the world : so that death, which was intended by him who was a murderer from the beginning, to be the final ruin of mankind ; becomes the instrument of their exaltation and endless glory : and thus the death, brought in by Satan, is counterworked, and rendered ineffectual by the death of Christ.

Him that had the power of death] This is spoken in conformity to an opinion prevalent among the Jews, that there was a certain fallen angel who was called מלאך המוות malak hamaveth, the angel of death, i. e. one who had the power of separating the soul from the body, when God decreed that the person should die. There were two of these, according to some of the Jewish writers ; one was the angel of death to the Gentiles, the other to the Jews. Thus Tob hazretz, fol. 31. "There are two angels which preside over death ; one is over those who die out of the land of Israel, and his name is Sammael : the other is he who presides over those who die in the land of Israel, and this is Gabriel." Sammael is a common name for the devil among the Jews : and there is a tradition among them, delivered by the author of Pesikta rabbetha in Yalcut Simeoni, par. 2. f. 56. that the angel of death should be destroyed by the Messiah ! "Satan said to the holy blessed God, Lord of the world show me the Messiah. The Lord answered, Come and see Him. And when he had seen Him, he was terrified, and his countenance fell, and he said, Most certainly this is the Messiah, who shall cast me and all the nations into hell, as it is written, Isa. xxv. 8. The Lord shall swallow up death for ever." This is a very remarkable saying ; and the apostle shows that it is true : for the Messiah came to destroy him who had the power of death. Dr. Owen has made some collections on this head from other Jewish writers, which tend to illustrate this verse : they may be seen in his Comment, Vol. I. pag. 456. 8vo. edition.

Verse 15. And deliver them who through fear of death] It is very likely that the apostle has the Gentiles here principally in view. As they had no revelation, and no certainty of immortality, they were continually in bondage to the fear of death. They preferred life in any state, with the most grievous evils, to death, because they had no hope beyond the grave. But it is also true, that all men naturally fear death ; even those that have the fullest persuasion and certainty of a future state, dread it ; genuine Christians, who know that if the earthly house of their tabernacle were dissolved, they have a house not made with hands, a building framed of God, eternal in the heavens ; only they fear it not. In the assurance they have of God's love, the fear of death is removed : and by the purifications of their hearts through faith, the sting of death is extracted. The torpeople who know not God, are in continual ment through the fear of death ; and they fear death because they fear something beyond death. They are conscious to themselves that they are wicked ; and they are afraid of God, and terrified at the thought of eternity. By these fears, thousands of sinful miserable creatures are prevented from hurrying themselves into the unknown world. This is finely expressed by the poet :—

"To die,—to sleep,—
No more :—and, by a sleep, to say we end
The heartach, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to,—'tis a consummation Devoutly to be wished. To die,—to sleep,— To sleep !—perchance to dream ;—aye, there's the rub ;
For in that sleep of death what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause :—There's the respect
That makes calamity of so long life :
For who would bear the whips and scorns of time,
The oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,
The pangs of despis'd love, the law's delay,
The insolence of office, and the spurns
That patient merit of the unworthy takes,
When he himself might his quietus make
With a bare bodkin ? Who would fardels bear
To grunt and sweat under a weary life ;
But, that the dread of something after death,
The undiscovered country from whose bourne
No traveller returns,—puzzles the will ;
And makes us rather bear those ills we have,
Than fly to others that we know not of ?
Thus conscience does make cowards of us all
And thus the native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought ;
And enterprises of great pith and moment,
With this regard, their currents turn awry,
And lose the name of action."

I give this long quotation from a poet who was well acquainted with all the workings of the human heart ; and one who could not have de-

Verse 16. For verily he took not on him the nature of angels] Ου γαρ θηρω αγγελων επιλαμ-βουσαι, αλλα επιματις Αβρααμ επιλαμβουσαι. Moreover, he doth not at all take hold of angels; but of the seed of Abraham he taketh hold. This is the marginal reading, and is greatly to be preferred to that in the text. Jesus Christ intending not to redeem angels, but to redeem man, did not assume the angelic nature, but was made man, coming directly by the seed or posterity of Abraham, with whom the original covenant was made, that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed: and it is on this account, that the apostle mentions the seed of Abraham, and not the seed of Adam; and it is strange that so many commentators should have missed so obvious a sense. The word itself signifies not only to take hold of, but to help, succour, save from sinking, &c. The rebel angels, who sinned and fell from God, were permitted to fall down, alle downe, as one of our old writers expresses it, till they fell into perdition—man sinned and fell, and was falling downe, alle downe; but Jesus laid hold on them, and prevented them from falling into endless perdition. Thus he seized on the falling human creature, and prevented him from falling into the bottomless pit: but he did not seize on the falling angels, and they fell down into outer darkness. By assuming the nature of man, he prevented this final and irrecoverable fall of man: and by making an atonement in human nature, he made a provision for its restoration to its forfeited blessedness. This is a fine thought of the apostle and is beautifully expressed. Man was falling from heaven: and Jesus caught hold of the falling creature, and prevented his endless ruin. In this respect he prefers men to angels; and probably for this simple reason, that the human nature was more excellent than the angelic: And it is suitable to the wisdom of the Divine Being to regard all the works of His hands in proportion to the dignity or excellence with which he has endowed them.

Verse 17. Wherefore in all things] Because He thus laid hold on man, in order to redeem him; it was necessary that He should in all things become like to man, that He might suffer in his stead, and make an atonement in his nature.

That he might be a merciful and faithful high-priest] ἵνα εὐμενὴς γῆνται; that he might be merciful; that He might be affected with a feeling of our infirmities; that partaking of our nature, with all its innocent infirmities and afflictions, He might know how to compassionate poor afflicted suffering man. might be a faithful high-priest in those things which relate to God, whose justice requires the punishment of the transgressors, or a suitable expiation to be made for the sins of the people. The proper meaning of ἵνα καθαρθῆται τὰς ἀμαρτίας is, to make propitiation or atonement for sins, by sacrifice.—See the note on this word, Luke xviii. 13. where it is particularly explained. Christ is the Great High-priest of mankind; 1. He exercises Himself in the things pertaining to God, taking heed that God's honour be properly secured, His worship properly regulated, His laws properly enforced; and both His justice and mercy magnified. Again, 2. He exercises Himself in things pertaining to MEN, that He may make an atonement for them, apply this atonement to them, and liberate them thereby from the curse of a broken law, from the guilt and power of sin, from its in-being and nature, and from all the evils to which they were exposed through it. And, lastly, that He might open their way into the holiest by His own blood: and He has mercifully and faithfully accomplished all that He has undertaken.

Verse 18. For in that he himself hath suffered] The maxim on which this verse is founded, is the following: a state of suffering disposes persons to be compassionate; and those who endure most affliction are they who feel most for others. The apostle argues that, among other causes, it was necessary that Jesus Christ should partake of human nature, exposed to trials, persecutions, and various sufferings; that He might the better feel for, and be led to succour those who are afflicted and sorely tried. This sentiment is well expressed by a Roman poet:—

*Me quoque per multos similis fortuna labores
Jactatam hac demum voluit consistere terra:
Non ignara mali, miseris succurrere disco.*
VIRG. ÆN. L. v. 632.

“For I myself, like you, have been distress'd,
Till heaven afforded me this place of rest:
Like you, an alien, in a land unknown,
I learn to pity woes so like my own.” DRYDEN.

“There are three things, says Dr. Owen, of which tempted believers do stand in need:—1. Strength to withstand their temptations. 2. Consolation to support their spirits under them. 3. Seasonable deliverance from them. Unto these is the succour afforded by our High-priest suited; and it is variously administered to them:—1. By His word or promises; and, 2. By His Spirit: (and that, 1. By communicating to them supplies of grace, or spiritual strength: 2. Strong consolation: 3. By rebuking their tempters and temptations;) and, 3. By His providence disposing of all things to their good and advantage in the issue." Those who are peculiarly tempted, and severely tried, have an especial interest in, and claim upon Christ. They, particularly, may go with boldness to the throne of grace, where they shall assuredly obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. Were the rest of the Scripture silent on this subject, this verse might be an ample support for every tempted soul.

CHAPTER III.

Jesus is the High Priest of our profession, 1. And is counted worthy of more honour than Moses, as the Son is more worthy than the servant, 2-6. We should not harden our hearts against the voice of God, as the Israelites did, and were excluded from the earthly rest in Canaan, 7-11. We should be on our guard against unbelief, 12. And exhort each other, lest we be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin; and should hold fast the beginning of our confidence to the end, and not provoke God as the Israelites did, and who were destroyed in the wilderness, 13-17. They were promised the earthly rest, but did not enter because of unbelief, 18, 19.

NOTES ON CHAP. III.

Verse 1. Holy brethren] Persons consecrated to God, as the word literally implies; and called, in consequence, to be holy in heart, holy in life, and useful in the world. The Israelites are often called a holy people, saints, &c. because consecrated to God; and because they were bound by their profession to be holy; and yet these appellations are given to them in numberless instances, where they were very unholy. The not attending to this circumstance, and the not discerning between actual positive holiness, and the call to it, as the consecration of the persons, has led many commentators and preachers into destructive mistakes. Antinomianism has had its origin here: and as it was found that many persons were called saints, who, in many respects, were miserable sinners, hence it has been inferred that they were called saints in reference to a holiness which they had in another: and hence the Antinomian imputation of Christ's righteousness to unholy believers, whose hearts were abominable before God; and whose lives were a scandal to the Gospel. Let, therefore, a due distinction be made between persons, by their profession holy, i. e. consecrated to God: and persons who are faithful to that profession, and are both inwardly and outwardly holy. They are not all Israel who are of Israel; a man, by literal circumcision, may be a Jew outwardly; but the circumcision of the heart, by the Spirit, makes a man a Jew inwardly. A man may be a Christian in profession, and not such in heart: and those who pretend, that although they are unholy in themselves, they are reputed holy in Christ, because His righteousness is imputed to them, most awfully deceive their own souls.

Dr. Owen has spoken well on the necessity of personal holiness against the Antinomians of his day. "If a man be not made holy, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. It is this that makes them meet for the inheritance of the saints in light; as without it, they are not meet for their duty, so are they not capable of their reward. Yea, heaven itself, in the true light and notion of it, is undesirable to an un sanctified person. Such an one neither can, nor would, enjoy God if he might. In a word, there is no one thing required of the sons of God, that an un sanctified person can do, and no one thing promised unto them that he can enjoy."

"There is surely then a woful mistake in the world. If Christ sanctify all whom he saves, many will appear to have been mistaken in their expectations at another day. It is grown amongst us almost an abhorrence to all flesh to say, The church of God is to be holy. What! though God has promised that it should be so; that Christ has undertaken to make it so? What! if it be required to be so? What! if all the duties of it be rejected of God, if it be not so? It is all one: if men be baptized, whether they will or not, and outwardly profess the name of Christ, though not one of them be truly sanctified, yet they are, as it is said, the church of Christ. Why, then, let them be so; but what are they the better for it? Are their persons or their services, therefore, accepted with God? Are they related, or united to Christ? Are they under His conduct unto glory? Are they meet for the inheritance of the saints in light? Not at all: not all, nor any of these things do they obtain thereby. What is it, then, that they get by the furious contest, which they make for the reputation of this privilege? Only this; that, satisfying their minds by it, resting, if not priding themselves in it, they obtain many advantages to stifle all convictions of their condition, and so perish unavoidably. A sad success, and for ever to be bewailed! Yet is there nothing at all at this day more contended for, in this world, than that Christ might be thought to be a Captain of salvation to them unto whom He is not a sanctifier; that He may have an unholy church, a dead body. These things tend neither to the glory of Christ, nor to the good of the souls of men. Let none, then, deceive themselves; sanctification is a qualification indispensably necessary to them who will be under the conduct of the Lord Christ unto salvation: He leads none to heaven but whom He sanctifies on earth. The Holy God will not receive unholy persons. This living Head will not admit of dead members; nor bring men into possession of a glory which they neither love nor like.”

Heavenly calling] The Israelites had an earthly calling; they were called out of Egypt to go into the Promised Land: Christians have a heavenly calling; they are invited to leave the bondage of sin, and go to the kingdom of God. These were made partakers of this calling; they had already embraced the Gospel, and were brought into a state of salvation.

Apostle and High-priest of our profession] Among the Jews, the high-priest was considered to be also the apostle of God; and it is in conformity to this notion that the apostle speaks. And he exhorts the Hebrews to consider Jesus Christ to be both their High-priest and Apostle; and to expect these offices to be henceforth fulfilled by Him, and by Him alone. This was the fullest intimation that the Mosaic economy was at an end; and the priesthood changed. By τῆς ἐπιμαρτυρίας ἡμῶν, our profession, or that confession of ours, the apostle undoubtedly means the Christian religion. Jesus was the Apostle of the Father, and has given to mankind the New Covenant: and we are to consider the whole system of Christianity as coming immediately from Him. Every system of religion must have a priest and a prophet; the one to declare the will of God, the other to minister in holy things. Moses was the apostle under the Old Testament, and Aaron the priest. When Moses was removed, the prophets succeeded him, and the sons of Aaron were the priests after the death of their father. This system is now annulled; and Jesus is the Prophet who declares the Father's will; and He is the Priest who ministers in the things pertaining to God; see chap. ii. 17. as He makes atonement for the sins of the people, and is the Mediator between God and man.

Verse 2. Who was faithful to him] In Numb. xii. 7. God gives this testimony to Moses, My servant Moses—is faithful in all my house; and to this testimony the apostle alludes. House not only means the place where a family dwells, but also the family itself. The whole congregation of Israel was the house, or family of God, and God is represented as dwelling among them; and Moses was his steward, and was faithful in the discharge of his office; strictly enforcing the Divine rights; zealously maintaining God's honour; carefully delivering the mind and will of God to the people; proclaiming His promises, and denouncing His judgments, with the most inflexible integrity, though often at the risk of his life. Jesus Christ has His house; the whole great family of mankind; for all of whom He offered His sacrificial blood to God: and the Christian Church, which is especially His own household, is composed of His own children and servants; among and in whom He lives and constantly resides. He has been faithful to the trust reposed in Him, as the Apostle of God; He has faithfully proclaimed the will of the Most High; vindicated the Divine honour against the corrupters of God's worship; testified against them at the continual hazard of His life; and at last not only died as a victim to cancel sin, but also as a martyr to His faithfulness. Christ's faithfulness, says Leigh, consists in this: “That He has as fully revealed unto us the doctrine of the Gospel, as Moses did that of the law; and that He hath faithfully performed and fulfilled all the types of Himself, and all the things signified by Moses' ceremonies, as Moses hath faithfully and distinctly set them down.”

But there is a sense given to the word neeman, Numb. xii. 7. which we translate faithful, by several of the Jewish writers, which is well worthy of note: it signifies, say they, “One to whom secrets are confided, with the utmost confidence of their being safely and conscientiously kept.” The secret of God was with Moses; but all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge were in Christ. Life and immortality were, comparatively, secrets, till Christ revealed and illustrated them; and even the Divine Nature was but little known, and especially the Divine philanthropy, till Jesus Christ came: and it was Jesus alone who declared that God whom no man had ever seen. Moses received the secrets of God, and faithfully taught them to the people: Jesus revealed the whole will of God to mankind. Moses was thus faithful to a small part of mankind; viz. the Jewish people; but, in this sense, Jesus was faithful to all mankind; for He was the light to enlighten the Gentiles, and the glory of His people Israel.

Verse 3. For this man was counted] As Jesus Christ, in the character of Apostle and High-priest, is here intended, the word apostle, or this Person or Personage, should have been supplied, if any, instead of man. Indeed the pronoun ὁ, should have been translated this person, and this would have referred immediately to Jesus Christ, ver. 1.

More glory than Moses] We have already seen that the apostle's design is to prove that Jesus Christ is higher than the angels, higher than Moses, and higher than Aaron. That He is higher than the angels, has been already proved: that He is higher than Moses, He is now proving.

He who hath builded the house;—there can be no doubt that a man who builds a house for his own accommodation, is more honourable than the house itself; but the house here intended is the church of God. This church, here called a house or family, is built by Christ; He is the Head, Governor, Soul, and Life, of it; He must, therefore, be greater than Moses, who was only a member and officer in that church; who never put a stone in this spiritual building, but was even himself put in it by the great Architect. Moses was in this house, and faithful in this house; but the house was the house of God, and builded and governed by Christ.

A. M. cir. 4067. house hath more honour than the house.

A. D. cir. 63. 4 For every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things is God.

5 And Moses verily was faithful in ^a Eph. 2. 10. & 3. 9. Ch. 1. 2.—^b Ver. 2.—^c Exod. 14. 31. Numb. 12. 7. Deut. 3. 24. Josh. 1. 2. & 8. 31. ^d Deut. 18. 15, 18, 19.—^e Ch. 1. 2.

Verse 4. For every house is builded by some man] The literal sense is plain enough: "Every structure plainly implies an architect, and an end for which it was formed. The architect may be employed by him for whose use the house is intended; but the efficient cause of the erection is that which is here to be regarded." The word house, here, is still taken in a metaphorical sense as above; it signifies family, or church. Now, the general meaning of the words, taken in this sense, is, "Every family has an author, and a head or governor. Man may found families, civil and religious communities, and be the head of these; but God alone is the Head, Author, and Governor, of all the families of the earth; He is the Governor of the universe. But the apostle has a more restricted meaning in the words καταστα, all these things; and as he has been treating of the Jewish and Christian churches, so he appears to have them in view here. Who could found the Jewish and Christian church but God? Who could support, govern, influence, and defend them, but Himself? Communities, or societies, whether religious or civil, may be founded by man; but God alone can build His own church. Now, as all these things could be builded only by God; so He must be God who has built all these things. But as Jesus is the Founder of the church, and the Head of it, the word of God seems here to be applied to Him; and several eminent scholars and critics bring this very text as a proof of the Supreme Deity of Christ; and the apostle's argument seems to require this; for, as he is proving that Christ is preferred before Moses, because He built this house, which Moses could not do; were he to be understood as intimating that this house was built by another, viz. the Father, his whole argument would fall to the ground; and for all this, Moses might be equal, yea, superior, to Christ. On this ground Dr. Owen properly concludes:—"This, then, is that which the apostle intends to declare; namely, the ground and reason whence it is that the house was, or could be, in that glorious manner, built by Christ, even because He is God, and so able to effect it; and by this effect of His power, He is manifested so to be."

Verse 5. As a servant] The fidelity of Moses was the fidelity of a servant; he was not the framer of that church or house; he was employed under God, and to arrange and order it: he was steward to the Builder and Owner.

For a testimony of those things] Every ordinance under the law was typical; every thing bore a testimony to the things which were to be spoken after; i. e. to Jesus Christ, His suffering, death, and the glory which should follow;

all his house, as a servant, for a testimony of those things which were to be spoken after;

6 But Christ as a son over his own house; whose house are we, if we and to His Gospel in all its parts. The faithfulness of Moses consisted in his scrupulous attention to every ordinance of God; his framing every thing according to the pattern showed him by the Lord; and his referring all to that Christ of whom he spoke as the Prophet, who should come after him, and should be raised up from among themselves; whom they should attentively hear and obey, on pain of being cut off from being the people of the Lord. Hence our Lord told the Jews, John v. 46. If ye had believed Moses, ye would have believed me, for he wrote of me; "namely," says Dr. Macknight, "in the figures, but especially in the prophecies of the law, where the gospel dispensation, the coming of its Author, and His character as Messiah, are all described, with a precision which adds the greatest lustre of evidence to Jesus, and to His Gospel."

Verse 6. But Christ as a son over his own house.] Moses was faithful as a servant in the house; Jesus was faithful as the first-born Son, over the house of which He is the Heir and Governor. Here, then, is the conclusion of the argument in reference to Christ's superiority over Moses.—Moses did not found the house or family; Christ did: Moses was but in the house, or one of the family; Christ was over the house as its Ruler: Moses was but servant in the house; Christ was the Son and Heir: Moses was in the house of Another; Christ in His own house.

It is well known to every learned reader, that the pronoun αυτου, without an aspirate, signifies his, simply; and that with the aspirate, αυτου, it signifies his own: the word being, in this form, a contraction, not uncommon, of αυτου. If we read αυτου without the aspirate, then his must refer to God, ver. 4.

But Christ as a son over his—(that is, God's) house: if we read αυτου with the aspirate, as some editions do, then what is spoken refers to Christ; and the words above convey the same sense as those words, Acts xx. 28. Feed the church of God, which he has purchased with his own blood. Some editions read the word thus; and it is evident that the edition which our translators used had the word αυτου, his own; and not αυτου, his. The Spanish and London Polyglots have the same reading. From the most ancient MSS. we can get no help to determine which is to be preferred, as they are generally written without accents. The two first editions of the Greek Testament, that of Complutum, 1514, and that of Erasmus, 1516, have αυτου, his; and they are followed by most other editions: but the celebrated edition of Robert Stephens, 1550, has αυτου, his own. The reading is certainly important; but it belongs to one of those difficulties in criticism which, if the context or collateral evidence do not satisfactorily solve, it must remain in doubt; and every reader is at liberty to adopt which reading he thinks best.

Whose house are we? We Christians are His church and family: He is our Father, Governor, and Head.

If we hold fast the confidence We are now His church; and shall continue to be such, and be acknowledged by Him, if we maintain our Christian profession, τὴν ἰσχυρίαν, that liberty of access to God, which we now have; and the rejoicing of the hope, i. e. of eternal life, which we shall receive at the resurrection of the dead. The word ἰσχυρία, which is here translated confidence, and which signifies freedom of speech, liberty of access, &c. seems to be used here to distinguish an important Christian privilege. Under the Old Testament no man was permitted to approach to God: even the very mountain on which God published His laws, must not be touched by man nor beast: and only the high-priest was permitted to enter the holy of holies; and that only once a year, on the great day of atonement; and even then he must have the blood of the victim to propitiate the Divine justice. Under the Christian dispensation the way to the holiest is now laid open; and we have ἰσχυρία, liberty of access, even to the holiest, by the blood of Jesus. Having such access unto God, by such a Mediator, we may obtain all that grace which is necessary to fit us for eternal glory: and, having the witness of His Spirit in our heart, we have a well-grounded hope of endless felicity, and exult in the enjoyment of that hope. But if we retain not the grace, we shall not inherit the glory.

Verse 7. Wherefore, (as the Holy Ghost saith, To-day) These words are quoted from Psa. xc. 7. and as they were written by David, and attributed here to the Holy Ghost, it proves that David wrote by the inspiration of God's Holy Spirit. As these words were originally a warning to the Israelites not to provoke God, lest they should be excluded from that rest which He had promised them: the apostle uses them here, to persuade the Christians in Palestine to hold fast their religious privileges, and the grace they had received, lest they should come short of that state of future glory which Christ had prepared for them. The words strongly imply, as indeed does the whole epistle, the possibility of falling from the grace of God, and perishing everlastingly: and without this supposition, these words, and all such like, which make more than two-thirds of the whole of Divine Revelation, would have neither sense nor meaning. Why should God entreat man to receive His mercy, if He have rendered this impossible? Why should he exhort a believer to persevere, if it be impossible for him to fall away? What contemptible quibbling have men used to maintain a false and dangerous tenet, against the whole tenor of the word of God! Angels fell—Adam fell—Solomon fell—and multitudes of believers have fallen, and, for aught we know, rose no more; and yet we are told that we cannot finally lose the benefits of our conversion! Satan preached this doctrine to our first parents: they believed him—sinned—and fell; and brought a whole world to ruin!

Verse 8. Harden not your hearts Which ye will infallibly do, if ye will not hear His voice.

Provocation Παράκλησις, from παρα, signifying intensity, and κίρασις, to make bitter; the exasperation, or bitter provocation. "The Israelites provoked God, first in the wilderness of Sin, (Pelusium,) when they murmured for want of bread, and had the manna given them, Exod. xvi. 4. From the wilderness of Sin they journeyed to Rephidim, where they provoked God a second time, for want of water, and insolently saying, Is the Lord among us or not? Exod. xvii. 2—9. on which account the place was called Massah and Meribah.—See 1 Cor. x. 4. Note 1. From Rephidim they went into the wilderness of Sinai, where they received the law, in the beginning of the third year from their coming out of Egypt. Here they provoked God again, by making the golden calf, Exod. xxxii. 10. After the law was given, they were commanded to go directly to Canaan, and take possession of the Promised Land, Deut. i. 6. God spake unto us in Horeb, saying, Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount. 7. Turn you, and take your journey, and go to the mount of the Amorites, and unto all the places nigh therunto, in the plain, in the hills, and in the vales, and in the south, and by the sea side, to the land of the Canaanites, and unto Lebanon, and unto the great river, the river Euphrates. The Israelites having received this order, departed from Horeb, and went forward three days' journey, Numb. x. 33. till they came to Taberah, Numb. xi. 3. where they provoked God the fourth time, by murmuring for want of flesh to eat; and, for that sin, were smitten with a very great plague, ver. 33. This place was called Kibroth-hataavah, because there they buried the people who lusted. From Kibroth-hataavah they went to Hazereth, Numb. xi. 35. and from thence into the wilderness of Paran, Numb. xii. 16. to a place called Kadesh, chap. xiii. 26. Their journey from Horeb to Kadesh is thus described by Moses, Deut. i. 19. And when we departed from Horeb, we went through all that great and terrible wilderness, which we saw by the way of the mountain of the Amorites, as the Lord our God commanded us; and we came to Kadesh-barnea.— And I said unto you, Ye are come unto the mountain of the Amorites, which the Lord our God doth give unto us.—21. Behold the Lord thy God hath set the land before thee, go up and possess it. But the people proposed to Moses to send spies, to bring them an account of the land, and of its inhabitants, ver. 22. These, after forty days, returned to Kadesh; and, except Caleb and Joshua, they all agreed in bringing an evil report of the land, Numb. xiii. 25—32. whereby the people were so discouraged that they refused to go up, and proposed to make a captain, and return into Egypt, Numb. xiv. 4. Wherefore, having thus shown an absolute disbelief of God's promises, and an utter distrust of His power, He swore that not one of that generation should enter Canaan, except Caleb and Joshua, but should all die in the wilderness, Numb. xiv. 20. Deut. i. 34, 35. and ordered them to turn, and get into the wilderness, by the way of the Red Sea. In that wilderness the Israelites, as Moses informs us, sojourned thirty-eight years, Deut. ii. 14. And the space in which we came from Kadesh-barnea, until we were come over the brook Zered, was thirty and eight years; until all the generation of the men of war was wasted out from among the host, as the Lord swore unto them. Wherefore, although the Israelites provoked God to wrath in the wilderness, from the day they came out of the land of Egypt, until their arrival in Canaan, as Moses told them, Deut. ix. 7. their greatest provocation, the provocation in which they showed the greatest degree of evil disposition, undoubtedly was their refusing to go into Canaan, from Kadesh. It was, therefore, very properly termed the bitter provocation; and the day of temptation, by way of eminence; and justly brought on them the oath of God, excluding them from His rest in Canaan. To distinguish this from the provocation at Rephidim, it is called Meribah-Kadesh. Deut. xxxii. 51.—See Dr. Macknight.

Verse 9. When your fathers tempted me] It would be better to translate w, where, than when, as the Vulgate has done in its ubi: and this translation has been followed by Wiclif, Coverdale, Tindal, and our first translators in general. In my old MS. Bible the 7th, 8th, and 9th verses stand thus.

Wherefore as the Holy Ghost setteth, to-day gif the ban herbe his hope: npe ghe herden ghour hertis as in wrahtynghe, after the day of temptacioun in desert. Where ghoure sabbis temptiden me: protubden and souden my werkis. Wherefore fourty peere I was offended or wrothe to this generacioun.

In behalf of this translation, Dr. Macknight very properly argues,—“The word when implies, that, at the time of the bitter provocation, the Israelites had seen God's works forty years; contrary to the history, which shows that the bitter provocation happened in the beginning of the third year after the Exodus; whereas the translation where, as well as the matter of fact.

represents God as saying, by David, that the Israelites tempted God in the wilderness during forty years: notwithstanding all that time they had seen God's miracles.”

Verse 10. Wherefore I was grieved] God represents Himself as the Father of this great Jewish family, for whose comfort and support He had made every necessary provision; and to whom He had given every proof of tenderness and fatherly affection; and because they disobeyed Him, and walked in that way in which they could not but be miserable, therefore He represents Himself as grieved and exceedingly displeased with them.

They do alway err in their heart] Their affections are set on earthly things; and they do not acknowledge My ways to be right, holy, just, and good. They are radically evil; and they are evil continually. They have every proof of my power and goodness, and lay nothing to heart. They might have been saved, but they would not. God was grieved on this account. Now, can we suppose that it would have grieved Him, if, by a decree of his own, He had rendered their salvation impossible?

Verse 11. So I swear in my wrath] God's grief at their continued disobedience, became wrath at their final impenitence; and therefore He excluded them from the promised rest.

Verse 12. Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you] Take warning by those disobedient Israelites: they were brought out of the house of bondage, and had the fullest promise of a land of prosperity and rest. By their disobedience they came short of it, and fell in the wilderness. Ye have been brought from the bondage of sin, and have a most gracious promise of an everlasting inheritance among the saints in light: through unbelief and disobedience they lost their rest: through the same ye may lose yours. An evil heart of unbelief will lead away from the living God. What was possible in their case, is possible in yours. The apostle shows here five degrees of apostacy:—Consenting to sin, being deceived by its solicitations. 2. Hardness of heart, through giving way to sin. 3. Unbelief in consequence of this hardness, which leads them to call even the truth of the Gospel in question. 4. This unbelief causing them to speak evil of the Gospel, and the provision God has made for the salvation of their souls. 5. Apostacy itself, or falling off from the living God; and thus extinguishing all the light that was in them; and finally grieving the Spirit of God, so that He takes His sight, and leaves them to a seared conscience and reprobate mind.—See Leigh. He who begins to give the least way to sin, is in danger of final apostacy: the best remedy in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God.

against this, is to get the evil heart removed; as one murderer in the house, is more to be dreaded than ten without.

Verse 13. But exhort one another daily] This supposes a state of close church fellowship, without which they could not have had access to each other.

While it is called to-day] Use time while you have it; for by and by there will be no more present time; all will be future; all will be eternity. Daily, signifies time continued. To-day, all present time. Your fathers said, Let us make ourselves a captain, and return back unto Egypt, Numb. xiv. 4. Thus they exhorted each other to depart from the living God. Be ye warned by their example; let not that unbelieving heart be in you that was in them; exhort each other daily to cleave to the living God; lest, if ye do not, ye, like them, may be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin.

Verse 14. For we are made partakers of Christ] Having believed in Christ as the promised Messiah, and embraced the whole Christian system, they were, consequently, made partakers of all its benefits, in this life; and entitled to the fulfilment of all its exceeding great and precious promises, relative to the glories of the eternal world. The former they actually possessed; the latter they could have only in case of their perseverance; therefore the apostle says, If we hold fast the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end, i. e. of our life. For our participation of glory depends on our continuing steadfast in the faith, to the end of our Christian race.

The word ὑπόστασις, which we here translate confidence, from ὑπο, under, and ἵσται, to place or stand, signifies properly a basis, or foundation; that on which something else is builded, and by which it is supported. Their faith in Christ Jesus was this hypostasis, or foundation: on that all their peace, comfort, and salvation, were builded. If this were not held fast to the end, Christ, in His saving influences, could not be held fast; and no Christ, no heaven. He who has Christ in him, has the well-founded hope of glory; and he who is found in the great day, with Christ in his heart, will have an abundant entrance into eternal glory.

Verse 15. While it is said, To-day] You may see the necessity of perseverance from the saying, "To-day, if ye will hear his voice," therefore harden not your hearts; do not neglect so great a salvation; hold fast what ye have obtained, and let no man take your crown.—See on ver. 7, 8, 9, and 12

^e Numb. 14. 2, 4, 11, 24, 30. Deut. 1. 34, 36, 38.

Verse 16. For some, when they had heard, did provoke] There is a various reading here, which consists merely in the different placing of an accent, and yet gives the whole passage a different turn:—τις, from τις, who, if read with the accent on the epsilon, τις, is the plural indefinite, and signifies some, as in our translation: if read with the accent on the iota, τις, it has an interrogative meaning: and, according to this the whole clause, τις γὰρ ἀκούσαντες παρεκίνησαν; but who were those hearers who did bitterly provoke? ἀλλ' οὐ πάντες αἱ ἐξελθόντες ἐκ Αἰγύπτου δια Μωϋσέως; Were they not all they who came out of the land of Egypt by Moses? Or, the whole clause may be read with one interrogation: But who were those hearers that did bitterly provoke, but all those who came out of Egypt by Moses? This mode of reading is followed by some editions, and by Chrysostom and Theodoret, and by several learned moderns.—It is more likely that this is the true reading, as all that follows, to the end of the 18th verse, is a series of interrogations.

Should it be said that all did not provoke, for Joshua and Caleb are expressly excepted, I answer, that the term all may be with great propriety used, when, out of many hundreds of thousands only two persons were found who continued faithful. To these also we may add the priests and the whole tribe of Levi, who, it very likely, did not provoke; for, as Dr. Macknight very properly remarks, they were not of the number of those who were to fight their way into Canaan; being entirely devoted to the service of the sanctuary.—See Numb. i. 3, 45, and 49. And therefore what remained of them after forty years, no doubt entered Canaan: for it appears from Numb. xxiv. 17. and Josh. xxiv. 33. that Eleazar, the son of Aaron, was one of those who did take possession of Canaan. Should it be still said, our version appears to be most proper, because all did not provoke: it may be answered that the common reading τις, some, is too contracted in its meaning to comprehend the hundreds of thousands who did rebel.

Verse 17. But with whom was he grieved forty years? I believe it was Surenhusius who first observed, that "the apostle, in using the term forty years, elegantly alludes to the space of time which had elapsed since the ascension of our Lord, till the time in which this epistle was written, which was about forty years." But this does not exactly agree with what appears to be the exact date of this epistle. However, God had now been a long time provoked by that race rejecting the manifested Messiah, as He was by the conduct of their forefathers in the wilderness: and as that provocation was punished by a very signal judgment, so they might expect this to be punished also. The analogy was perfect in the crimes: and it might reasonably be expected to be so in the punishments. And was not the destruction of Jerusalem a proof of the heinous nature of their crimes, and of the justice of God's outpoured wrath?

Whose carcasses fell? Ω τὰ κάρλα ἔπεσεν; whose members fell; for τὰ κάρλα properly signifies the members of the body; and here may be an allusion to the scattered bleached bones of this people that were a long time apparent in the wilderness; continuing there as a proof of their crimes, and of the judgments of God.

Verse 18. To whom sware he? God never acts by any kind of caprice; whenever He pours out His judgment, there are the most positive reasons to vindicate His conduct.

Those whose carcasses fell in the wilderness were they who had sinned. And those who did not enter into His rest, were those who believed not. God is represented here as swearing that they should not enter in: in order to show the determined nature of this purpose, the reason on which is was founded, and the height of the aggravation which occasioned it.

Verse 19. So we see that they could not enter in? It was no decree of God that prevented them; it was no want of necessary strength to enable them: it was through no deficiency of Divine counsel to instruct them; all these they had in abundance: but they chose to sin, and would not believe.—Unbelief produced disobedience, and disobedience produced hardness of heart and blindness of mind: and all these drew down the judgments of God, and wrath came upon them to the uttermost.

1. This whole chapter, as the epistle in general, reads a most awful lesson against backsliders, triflers and loiterers in the way of salvation. Every believer in Christ is in danger of apostacy, while any remains of the evil heart of unbelief are found in him. God has promised to purify the heart; and the blood of Christ cleanses from all sin. It is, therefore, the highest wisdom of genuine Christians to look to God for the complete purification of their souls: this they cannot have too soon; and for this they cannot be too much in earnest.

2. No man should defer his salvation to any future time. If God speaks to-day, it is to-day that He should be heard and obeyed. To defer reconciliation to God, to any future period, is the most reprehensible and destructive presumption. It supposes that God will indulge us in our sensual propensities; and cause His mercy to tarry for us, till we have consummated our iniquitous purposes. It shows, that we prefer, at least for the present, the devil to Christ; sin to holiness; and earth to heaven. And can we suppose that God will be thus mocked? Can we suppose that it can at all consist with His mercy to extend forgiveness to such abominable provocation? What a man sows, that shall he reap. If he sows to the flesh, he shall of the flesh reap corruption.—Reader, it is a dreadful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

3. Unbelief has generally been considered the most damning of all sins. I wish those who make this assertion would condescend to explain themselves. What is this unbelief that damns and ruins mankind? Their not permitting their minds to be persuaded of the truths which God speaks. Aπιστία, from a, negative, and πιστις, faith, signifies faithless, or to be without faith. And this is an effect from another cause. In chap. iv. 11. these very people are said to have fallen through unbelief; but there the word is ακωβουα, from a, negative, and κωβουα, to persuade. They heard the Divine instructions; they saw God's stupendous miracles; but they would not suffer themselves to be persuaded, that he who said and did such things, would perform those other things which he had either threatened or promised; hence they had no faith, because they were unpersuaded; and their unbelief was the effect of their unpersuaded or unpersuadable mind. And their minds were not persuaded of God's truth, because they had ears open only to the dictates of the flesh.—See on chap. iv. 2. Here then is the damning sin, the not inferring from what God has said and done, that He will do those other things, which He has either threatened or promised.—And how few are there, who are not committing this sin daily! Reader, dost thou, in this state, dream of heaven! awake out of sleep!

4. Where there are so many snares and dangers, it is impossible to be too watchful and circumspect. Satan, as a roaring lion, as a subtle serpent, or in the guise of an angel of light, is momentarily going about, seeking whom he may deceive, blind, and devour; and, when it is considered that the human heart, till entirely renewed, is on his side, it is a miracle of mercy that any soul escapes perdition: no man is safe any longer than he maintains the spirit of watchfulness and prayer; and to maintain such a spirit, he has need of all the means of grace. He who neglects any of them which the mercy of God has placed in his power, tempts the devil to tempt him. As a preventative of backsliding and apostacy, the apostle recommends mutual exhortation. No Christian should live for himself alone; he should consider his fellow Christian as a member of the same body, and feel for him accordingly; and love, succour, and protect him. When this is carefully attended to in religious society, Satan finds it very difficult to make an inroad on the church; but when coldness, distance, and a want of brotherly love, take place, Satan can attack each singly; and by successive victories over individuals, soon make an easy conquest of the whole.

As the Christian rest is to be obtained by faith, we should beware of unbelief, lest we lose it as the Hebrews did theirs, 1. The reason why they were not brought into the rest promised to them, 2. NOTES ON CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. Let us therefore fear] Seeing the Israelites lost the rest of Canaan, through obstinacy and unbelief, let us be afraid lest we come short of the heavenly rest, through the same cause.

Should seem to come short of it] Lest any of us should actually come short of it; i. e. miss it. —See the note on the verb φαίνομαι, to seem, Luke viii. 18. What the apostle had said before, relative to the Rest, might be considered as an allegory; here he explains and applies that allegory, showing that Canaan was a type of the grand privileges of the Gospel of Christ, and of the glorious eternity to which they lead.

Come short] The verb ὑστερεῖν, is applied here metaphorically; it is an allusion, of which there are many in this epistle, to the races in the Grecian games: he that came short, was he who was any distance, no matter how small, behind the winner. Will it avail any of us how near we get to heaven, if the door be shut before we arrive? How dreadful the thought, to have only missed being eternally saved! To run well; and yet to permit the devil, the world, or the flesh, to hinder, in the few last steps! Reader, watch and be sober.

Verse 2. For unto us was the Gospel preached] Καὶ γὰρ ἡμῶν κηρύχθη εὐαγγέλιον, For we also have received good tidings as well as they. They had a gracious promise of entering into an earthly rest; we have a gracious promise of entering into a heavenly rest. God gave them every requisite advantage: He has done the same to us. Moses and the elders spoke the word of God plainly and forcibly to them; Christ and His apostles have done the same to us. They might have persevered; so may we: they disbelieved, disobeyed, and fell; so may we.

But the word preached did not profit them] Ἄλλ' οὐκ ὠφέλησεν ὁ λόγος τῆς ἀκοῆς αὐτῶν: but the word of hearing did not profit them. The word and promise to which the apostle most probably refers, is that in Deut. i. 20, 21. Ye are come unto the mountain of the Amorites, which the Lord your God doth give unto us. Behold, the Lord thy God hath set the land before thee; go up and possess it as the Lord God of thy fathers hath said unto thee.—Fear not. Many exhortations they had to the following effect—Arise, that we may go up against them; for we have seen the land, and behold it is very good: and are ye still? Be not slothful to go and to enter to possess the land; for God hath given it into your hands: a place where there is no want of any thing that is in the earth, Judges xviii. 9, 10. But instead of attending to the word of the Lord by Moses, the whole congregation murmured against him and Aaron, and said one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt, Num. xiv. 2, 4. But they were dastardly through all their generations. They spoke evil of the pleasant land, and did not give credence to His word. Their minds had been debased by their Egyptian bondage, and they scarcely ever arose to a state of mental nobility.

Not being mixed with faith in them that heard] There are several various readings in this verse, and some of them important. The principal are on the word συζυγασμῶν, mixed; which, in the common text, refers to ὁ λόγος, the word mixed; but in ABCD. and several others, it is συζυγασμῶν, referring to, and agreeing with αὐτοὺς, and may be thus translated, The word of hearing did not profit them, they not being mixed with those who heard it by faith. That is, they were not of the same spirit with Joshua and Caleb. There are other variations, but of less importance; but the common text seems the best.

The word συζυγασμῶν, mixed, is peculiarly expressive; it is a metaphor taken from the nutrition of the human body by mixing the aliment taken into the stomach with the saliva and gastric juice; in consequence of which it is concocted, digested, reduced into chyle; which, absorbed by the lacteal vessels, and thrown into the blood, becomes the means of increasing and supporting the body; all the solids and fluids being thus generated: so that on this process, properly performed, depend (under God,) strength, health, and life itself. Should the most nutritive aliment be received into the stomach, if not mixed with the above juices, it would be rather the means of death than of life; or, in the words of the apostle, it would not profit, because not thus mixed. Faith, in the word preached, in reference to that God who sent it, is the grand means of its becoming the power of God to the salvation of the soul. It is not likely that he who does not credit a threatening when he comes to hear it, will be deterred by it from repeating the sin against which it is levelled; nor can he derive comfort from a promise, who does not believe it as a pledge of God's veracity and goodness. Faith, therefore, must be mixed with all that we hear, in order to make the word of God effectual to our salvation.

This very use of the word, and its explanation, we may find in Maximus Tyrius, in his description of Health, Dissert. x. pag. 101.. "Health," says he, "is a certain disposition, ὅπου καὶ ἔστιν καὶ ἴσχυρον καὶ θέρμαν δυναμῶν, ἢ ἐπο τεχνικῆς συζυγίας, which consists in a proper mixture together of the wet and the dry, the cold and the hot, either by an artificial process, or by the skillful economy of nature."

Verse 3. For we which have believed do enter into rest] The great spiritual blessings, the forerunners of eternal glory, which were all typified by that earthly rest or felicity promised to the ancient Israelites, we, Christians, do, by believing in Christ Jesus, actually possess. We have peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost; are saved from the guilt and power of sin; and thus enjoy an inward rest.

But this is a rest differing from the seventh day's rest, or sabbath, which was the original type of Canaan, the blessings of the Gospel, and eternal glory; seeing God said concerning the unbelieving Israelites in the wilderness, I have sworn in my wrath that they shall not enter into my rest, notwithstanding the works of creation were finished, and the seventh day's rest was instituted, from the foundation of the world; consequently the Israelites had entered into that rest before the oath was sworn.—See Macknight.

Who believe, Ὁι πιστωσάντι, is omitted by Chrysostom, and some few MSS. And instead of εἰσέλθουσα ἡμεῖς, for we do enter: AC. several others, with the Vulgate and Coptic, read εἰσέλθουσα ὑμεῖς, therefore let us enter; and thus it answers to φοβούμενοι ὑμεῖς, therefore let us fear, ver. 1. but this reading cannot well stand, unless ἡ πιστωσάντι; be omitted, which is acknowledged to be genuine by every MS. and Version of note and importance. The meaning appears to be this: we Jews, who have believed in Christ, do actually possess that rest, state of happiness in God, produced by peace of conscience and joy in the Holy Ghost; which was typified by the happiness and comfort to be enjoyed by the believing Hebrews, in the possession of the Promised Land.—See before.

From the foundation of the world.] The foundation of the world, καταβολὴ κόσμου, means the completion of the work of creation in six days. In those days was the world, i. e. the whole system of mundane things begun and perfected; and this appears to be the sense of the expression in this place.

God did rest the seventh day from all his works.

5 And in this place again, If they shall enter into my rest.

6 Seeing therefore it remaineth that some must enter therein, ^a and they to whom ^b it was first preached, entered not in because of unbelief:

7 (Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David, To-day, after so long a time: as it is said, ^c To-day if ye

Verse 4. For he spake in a certain place] This certain place, or somewhere, ὡν, is probably Gen. ii. 2. and refers to the completion of the work of creation, and the setting apart the seventh day as a day of rest for man; and a type of everlasting felicity.—See the notes on Gen. ii. 1, &c.

Verse 5. And in this place again] In the ninety-fifth Psalm, already quoted, ver. 3.— This was a second rest which the Lord promised to the believing obedient seed of Abraham; and as it was spoken of in the days of David, when the Jews actually possessed this long-promised Canaan, therefore it is evident that that was not the rest which God intended, as the next verse shows.

Verse 6. It remaineth that some must enter therein] Why our translators put in the word must here, I cannot even conjecture; I hope it was not to serve a system, as some have since used it; "some must go to heaven, for so is the doctrine of the decree; and there must be certain persons infallibly brought thither, as a reward to Christ for his sufferings: and in this the will of man, and free agency, can have no part," &c. &c. Now, supposing even that all this was true, yet it does not exist either positively or by implication in the text. The words ἐτι ἔστιν ἀπολειπόμενος τῆς εἰσελάτης εἰς αὐτὴν, literally translated, are as follows, Seeing then it remaineth for some to enter into it; or, Whereas therefore it remaineth that some enter into it, which is Dr. Owen's translation; and they to whom it was first preached, ἡ πρότερον εὐαγγελισθέντες, they to whom the promise was given; they who first received the good tidings; i. e. the Israelites, to whom the promise was made of entering into the rest of Canaan, did not enter in, because of their unbelief; and the promise still continued to be repeated even in the days of David; therefore some other rest must be intended.

Verse 7. He limiteth a certain day] The term day signifies not only time in general, but also present time, and a particular space. Day, here, seems to have the same meaning as rest, in some other parts of this verse. The day, or time of rest relative to the ancient Jews, being over and past, and a long time having elapsed between God's displeasure shown to the disobedient Jews in the wilderness, and the days of David; and the true rest was not enjoyed, God will hear his voice, harden not your hearts.

8 For, if ^a Jesus had given them rest, then would he not afterward have spoken of another day.

9 There remaineth therefore a ^b rest to the people of God.

10 For he that is entered into his in His mercy has instituted another day; has given another dispensation of mercy and goodness by Christ Jesus; and now it may be said, as formerly, To-day, if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts. God speaks now as He spoke before; His voice is in the Gospel, as it was in the law. Believe, love, obey, and ye shall enter into this rest.

Verse 8. For if Jesus had given them rest] It is truly surprising that our translators should have rendered the ἴσους of the text Jesus, and not Joshua, which is most clearly intended. They must have known that the יהושׁוא of the Hebrew, which we write Joshua, is every where rendered ἴσους, Jesus, by the Septuagint; and it is their reading which the apostle follows. It is true the Septuagint generally write ἴσους Νουν, or Ἰησους Νουν, Jesus Nune, or Jesus, son of Nune; for it is thus they translate יהושׁוא בן נון Yehoshua ben Nun, Joshua the son of Nun: and this is sufficient to distinguish it from Jesus, Son of David. But as Joshua, the captain-general of Israel, is above intended, the word should have been written Joshua, and not Jesus. One MS. merely to prevent the wrong application of the name, has ἴσους ὁ υἱος Νουν, Jesus the son of Nune. Theodoret has the same in his Comment; and one Syriac Version has it in the text. It is Joshua in Coverdale's Testament, 1535, in Tindal's, 1548, in that edited by Edmund Beck, 1549, in Richard Cardmarden's, Rouen, 1565; several modern translators, Wesley, Macknight, Wakefield, &c. read Joshua, as does our own in the margin. What a pity it had not been in the text, as all the smaller Bibles have no marginal readings; and many simple people are bewildered with the expression.

The apostle shows that, although Joshua did bring the children of Israel into the Promised Land, yet this could not be the intended rest; because, long after this time, the Holy Spirit, by David, speaks of this rest: the apostle, therefore, concludes—

Verse 9. There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God.] It was not, 1. The rest of the sabbath; it was not, 2. The rest in the Promised Land, for the Psalmist wrote long after the days of Joshua: therefore there is another rest, a state of blessedness, for the people of God; and this is the Gospel, the blessings it procures and communicates, and the eternal glory which it prepares for, and has promised to genuine believers.

There are two words in this chapter which we indifferently translate rest; καταπαυσις, and ἀναπαυσις; the first signifying a cessation from rest, he also hath ceased from his own works, as God did from his.)

11 Let us labour therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall ^c after the same example of ^d unbelief.

12 For the word of God is ^e quick, and powerful, and ^f sharper than any labour, so that the weary body is rested and refreshed; the second meaning not only a rest from labour, but a religious rest; a rest of a sacred kind, of which both soul and body partake. This is true, whether we understand the rest as referring to Gospel blessings, or to eternal felicity, or to both.

Verse 10. For he that is entered into his rest] The man who has believed in Christ Jesus, has entered into His rest; the state of happiness which He has provided, and which is the forerunner of eternal glory.

Hath ceased from his own works] No longer depends on the observance of Mosaic rites and ceremonies for his justification and final happiness. He rests from all these works of the law as fully as God has rested from His works of creation.

Those who restrain the word rest to the signification of eternal glory, say, that ceasing from our own works means the sufferings, tribulations, afflictions, &c. of this life; as in Rev. xiv. 13. I understand it as including both.

In speaking of the sabbath, as typifying a state of blessedness in the other world, the apostle follows the opinions of the Jews of his own and after times. The phrase שבת עמך shabath alaah, ve shabath tilthaih; the sabbath above, and the sabbath below, is common among the Jewish writers; and they think that where the plural number is used, as in Lev. xix. 30. Ye shall keep my sabbaths, that the lower and higher sabbaths are intended; and that the one is prefigured by the other.—See many examples in Schoetgen.

Verse 11: Let us labour therefore] The word σπουδάζουσιν implies every exertion of body and mind which can be made, in reference to the subject. Rebus aliis omissis, hoc agamus; all things else omitted, this one thing we do. We receive grace, improve grace, retain grace, that we may obtain eternal glory.

Lest any man fall] Lest he fall off from the grace of God, from the Gospel and its blessings; and perish everlastingly. This is the meaning of the apostle, who never supposed that a man might not make final shipwreck of faith, and of a good conscience, as long as he was in a state of probation.

Verse 12. For the word of God is quick and powerful] Commentators are greatly divided concerning the meaning of the phrase ῥηθὲς καὶ ἰσχυρὸς, the word of God: some supposing the whole of Divine Revelation to be intended; others, the doctrine of the Gospel faithfully preached; others, the mind of God, or the Divine intellect; and others, the Lord Jesus Christ, who is thus denominated, in John i. 1, &c. and Rev. xix. 13. the only places in which He is thus incontestably characterized in the New Testament. The disputed text, 1 John v. 7. I leave at present out of the question. In the Introduction to this epistle I have produced sufficient evidence to make it very probable that St. Paul was the author of this epistle. In this sentiment the most eminent scholars and critics are now agreed. That Jesus Christ, the eternal uncreated Word, is not meant here, is more than probable, from this consideration, that St. Paul, in no part of his thirteen acknowledged epistles, ever thus denominates our blessed Lord; nor is he thus denominated by any other of the New Testament writers except St. John. Dr. Owen has endeavoured to prove the contrary, but I believe, to no man's conviction who was able to examine and judge of the subject. He has not been able to find more than two texts, which even appeared to look his way: the first is Luke i. 2. Us—which were eye-witnesses and ministers. τω λόγῳ, of the word: where it is evident the whole of our Lord's ministry is intended. The second is Acts xx. 32. I commend you to God, and the word of his grace, where nothing but the gracious doctrine of salvation by faith, the influence of the Divine Spirit, &c. &c. can be meant; nor is there any legitimate mode of construction with which I am acquainted, by which the words, in either place, can be personally applied to our Lord. That the phrase was applied to denominate the second subsistence in the glorious Trinity, by Philo and the rabbinical writers, I have already proved in my notes on John i. where such observations are alone applicable.

Culmet, who had read all that either the ancients or moderns have said on this subject, and who does not think that Jesus Christ is here intended, speaks thus: "None of the properties mentioned here can be denied to the Son of God, the Eternal Word; He sees all things, knows all things, penetrates all things, and can do all things. He is the Ruler of the heart, and can turn it where He pleases. He enlightens the soul, and calls it gently and efficaciously, when and how He wills. Finally, He punishes in the most exemplary manner the insults offered to his Father and to Himself, by infidels, unbelievers, and the wicked in general. But it does not appear that the Divine Logos is here intended—1. Because St. Paul does not use that term to express the Son of God. 2. Because the conjunction γὰρ, for, shows that this verse is an inference drawn from the preceding, where the subject in question is concerning the eternal rest, and the means by which it is to be obtained. It is, therefore, more natural to explain the term of the word, order, and will of God; for the Hebrews represent the revelation of God as an 'active being, living, all-powerful, illumined, executing vengeance, discerning and penetrating all things.' Thus Wisd. xvi. 26. 'Thy children, O Lord, know that it is not the growing of fruits that nourisheth man; but that it is Thy word that preserveth them that put their trust in Thee.'—See Deut. viii. 3. That is, the Sacred Scriptures point out and appoint all the means of life. Again, speaking of the Hebrews, who were bitten by the fiery serpents, the same writer says, ver. 12. 'For it was neither herb nor mollifying plaster that restored them to health, but Thy word, O Lord, which healeth all things;' i. e. which describes and prescribes the means of healing. And, it is very likely, that the purpose of God, sending the destroying angel to slay the first-born in Egypt, is intended by the same expression, Wisd. xviii. 15, 16. 'Thine Almighty word leaped down from heaven out of Thy royal throne, as a ferus man of war into a land of destruction; and brought Thine unfeigned commandment as a sharp sword; and, standing up, filled all things with death.' This, however, may be applied to the eternal Logos, or uncreated Word.

"And this mode of speech is exactly conformable to that of the prophet Isaiah, lv. 10, 11. where to the word of God spoken by His prophets, the same kind of powers are attributed as those mentioned here by the apostle:—For as the rain cometh down and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater: so shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth; it shall not return unto me void; but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it. The centurion seems to speak a similar language, Luke vii. 7. But say in a word, and all will obey, speak to thy word, and my servant shall be healed." This is the sum of what this very able commentator says on this subject.

In Dr. Dodd's collections we find the following:—

"The word of God, which promises to the faithful an entrance into God's rest, in David's time, and now to us, is not a thing which died, or was forgotten as soon as it was uttered, but it continues, one and the same to all generations. It is swif, quick, or living. So Isaiah says, The word of our God shall stand for ever. chap. xl. 8. compare chap. li. 6. lv. 11. 1 Esdras iv. 38. John iii. 34. 1 Pet. i. 23. And powerful, warry, efficacious, active; sufficient, if it be not actually hindered, to produce its effects;—effectual, Philem. 6. See 2 Cor. x. 4. 1 Thess. ii. 13. And sharper than any two-edged sword, penetrating deeper into a man than any sword; it enters into the soul and spirit: into all our sensations, passions, appetites: nay, to our very thoughts; and sits as judge of the most secret intentions, contrivances, and sentiments of the heart. Phycylides has an expression very similar to our author, where he says of reason, 'that “Piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit. When the soul is thus distinguished from the spirit, by the former is meant that inferior faculty by which we think of, and desire, what concerns our present being and welfare. By spirit is meant a superior power, by which we prefer future things to present ; by which we are directed to pursue truth and right above all things ; and even to despise what is agreeable to our present state, if it stand in competition with, or is prejudicial to, our future happiness.—See 1 Thess. v. 23. Some have thought that by the expression before us is implied, that the word of God is able to bring death ; as in the case of Ananias and Sapphira : for, say they, if the soul and spirit, or the joints and marrow, are separated one from another, it is impossible that life can remain. But perhaps the meaning of the latter clause may rather be, ‘It can divide the joints, and divide the marrow ;’ i. e. enter irresistibly into the soul, and produce some sentiment which perhaps it would not willingly have received ; and sometimes discover and punish secret, as well as open, wickedness.” Mr. Pierce observes, “that our author has been evidently arguing from a tremendous judgment of God upon the ancient Israelites, the ancestors of those to whom this epistle is directed ; and, in this verse, to press upon them that care and diligence he had been recommending, he sets before them the efficacy and virtue of the word of God, connecting this verse with the former by a for in the beginning of it ; and, therefore, it is natural to suppose that what he says of the word of God may have a relation to somewhat remarkable in that sore punishment of which he had been speaking, particularly to the destruction of the people by lightning, or fire from heaven.—See Lev. x. 1—5. Numb. xi. 1—3. xvi. 35. Psa. lxxviii. 21. All the expressions, in this view, will receive an additional force ; for nothing is more quick and living, more powerful and irresistible, sharp and piercing, than lightning. If this idea be admitted, the meaning of the last clause in this verse will be, ‘That the word of God is a judge, to censure and punish the evil thoughts and intents of the heart.’ And this brings the matter home to the exhortations with which our author began, ch. iii. 12, 15. for under whatever disguise they might conceal themselves ; yet, from such tremendous judgments as God executed upon their fathers, they might learn to judge as Moses did, Numb. xxxii. 23. If ye will not do so, ye have sinned against the Lord, and be sure your sin will find you out.—See Hammond, Whitby, Sykes, and Pierce.”

Mr. Wesley’s note on this verse is expressed with his usual precision and accuracy :

“For the word of God—preached, ver. 2. and armed with threatenings, ver. 3. is living and powerful ; attended with the power of the living God, and conveying either life or death to the hearers ; sharper than any two-edged sword ; penetrating the heart, more than this does the body : piercing—quite through, and laying open, the soul and spirits, joints and marrow—the inmost recesses of the mind, which the apostle beautifully and strongly expresses by this heap of figurative words : and is a discernor—not only of the thoughts—but also of the intentions.”

The law, and the word of God in general, is repeatedly compared to a two-edged sword among the Jewish writers, חֶרֶב שְׁתֵּי פִּיּוֹת chereb shetey pipioth, the sword with the two mouths. By this sword, the man himself lives ; and by it, he destroys his enemies. This is implied in its two edges.—See also Schoetgen.

Is a discernor of the thoughts] Καὶ ἀπειροσκόπου καὶ ἐνοχίου καρδίας, is a critic of the propensities and suggestions of the heart. How many have felt this property of God’s word, where it has been faithfully preached ! How often has it happened that a man has seen the whole of his own character, and some of the most private transactions of his life, held up as it were to public view, by the preacher ; and yet the parties absolutely unknown to each other ! Some, thus exhibited, have even supposed that their neighbours must have privately informed the preacher of their character and conduct : but it was the word of God, which, by the direction and energy of the Divine Spirit, thus searched them out, was a critical examiner of the propensities and suggestions of their hearts ; and had pursued them through all their public haunts and private walks. Every genuine minister of the Gospel has witnessed such effects as these under his ministry, in repeated instances.

But while this effect of the word or true doctrine of God is acknowledged, let it not be supposed that it, of itself, can produce such effects. The word of God is compared to a hammer that breaks the rock in pieces, Jer. xxiii. 29.—but will a hammer break a stone unless it is applied by the skill and strength of some powerful agent ? It is here compared to a two-edged sword ;—but will a sword cut or pierce to the dividing of joints and marrow, or separation of soul and spirit, unless some hand push and direct it ? Surely, no. Nor can even the words and doctrine of God produce any effect but as directed by the experienced teacher, and applied by the Spirit of God. It is an instrument the most apt for the accomplishing of its work ; but it will do nothing, can do nothing, but as used by the heavenly Workman. To this is the reference in the next verse.

Verse 13. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest] God, from whom this word comes, and by whom it has all its efficacy, is infinitely wise. He well knew how to construct His word, so as to suit it to the state of all hearts ; and he has given that infinite fulness of meaning, so as to suit it to all cases. And so infinite is He in His knowledge, and so omnipresent is He, that the whole creation is constantly exposed to His view; nor is there a creature of the affections, mind, or imagination, that is not constantly under His eye: He marks every rising thought; every budding desire; and such as these are supposed to be the creatures to which the apostle particularly refers; and which are called, in the preceding verse, the propensities and suggestions of the heart.

But all things are naked and opened] Παντα δε γυμνα και τετραχλισμυνα. It has been supposed that the phraseology here is sacrificial; the apostle referring to the case of slaying and preparing a victim to be offered to God. First, It is slain; 2. It is stayed—so it is naked; 3. It is cut open, so that all the intestines are exposed to view: 4. It is carefully inspected by the priest, to see that all is sound, before any part is offered to Him who has prohibited all imperfect and diseased offerings; and, 5. It is divided exactly into two equal parts, by being split down the chine, from the nose to the rump; and so exactly was this performed, that the spinal marrow was cloven down the centre, one half lying in the divided cavity of each side of the back-bone. This is probably the metaphor in 2 Tim. ii. 15. where see the note.

But there is reason to suspect that this is not the metaphor here: the verb τετραχλισω, from which the apostle's τετραχλισμυνα comes, signifies to have the neck bent back, so as to expose the face to full view, that every feature might be seen; and this was often done with criminals, in order that they might be the better recognized and ascertained. To this custom Pliny refers in the very elegant and important panegyric which he delivered to the emperor Trajan, about A. D. 103, when the emperor had made him consul; where, speaking of the great attention which Trajan paid to the public morals, and the care he took to extirpate informers, &c. he says, Nihil tamen gratius, nihil saeculo dignius, quam quod contigit desuper intueri delatorum supina ora, retortasque cervices. Agnoscebamus et fruebamur, cum velut piaculares publicae sollicitudinis victimae, supra sanguinem noziorum ad lenta supplicia gravioreque poenas ducerentur. Plin. Paneg. cap. 34. "There is nothing, however, in this age, which affects us more pleasingly, nothing more deservedly, than to behold from above the supine faces and reverted necks of the informers. We thus knew them; and were gratified, when, as expiatory victims of the public disquietude, they were led away to lingering punishments, and sufferings more terrible than even the blood of the guilty."

The term was also used to describe the action of wrestlers, who, when they could, got their hand under the chin of their antagonists, and thus, by bending both the head and neck, could the more easily give them a fall. This strata-gem is sometimes seen in ancient monuments: but some suppose that it refers to the custom of dragging them by the neck. Diogenes, the philosopher, observing one who had been victor in the Olympic games, often fixing his eyes upon a courtesan, said, in allusion to this custom, Μη κρησ αρματωσ ος υπε του τυχοστος, παρασσε τεραχλισιστασ. "See how this mighty champion (martial ram) is drawn by the neck by a common girl."—See Stanley, pag. 305.

With whom we have to do.] Προς ον εμιν ο λογος; to whom we must give an account. He is our Judge, and is well qualified to be so, as all our hearts and actions are naked and open to Him.

This is the true meaning of λογος in this place: and it is used in precisely the same meaning in Matt. xii. 36. xviii. 23. Luke xvi. 2. Rom. xiv. 12. so then, every one of us, λογος δωσσε, shall give an account of himself to God. And Heb. xiii. 17. They watch for your souls, ος λογος αποδοσσεσσε, as those who must give account. We translate the words with whom we have to do; which, though the phraseology is obsolete, yet the meaning is nearly the same. To whom a word is to us, is the rendering of my old MS. and Wiclif. Of whom we speak, is the Version of our other early translators.

Verse 14. Seeing then that we have a great High-priest] It is contended, and very properly, that the particle ου, which we translate seeing, as if what followed was an immediate inference from what the apostle had been speaking, should be translated now; as the apostle, though he had before mentioned Christ as the High-priest of our profession, chap. iii. 1. and as the High-priest who made reconciliation for the sins of the people, chap. ii. 17. yet does not attempt to prove this in any of the preceding chapters; but now he enters upon that point, and discusses it at great length to the end of chap. x.

After all, it is possible that this may be a resumption of the discourse from chap. iii. 6. the rest of that chapter, and the preceding thirteen verses of this, being considered as a parenthesis. These parts left out, the discourse runs on with perfect connexion. It is very likely that the words here, are spoken to meet an objection of those Jews who wished the Christians of Palestine to apostatize: "You have no tabernacle—no temple—no high-priest—no sacrifice for sin. Without these there can be no religion; return, therefore, to us, who have the perfect temple service appointed by God." To these he answers, We have a High-priest who is passed into the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God: therefore let us hold fast our profession.—See on chap. iii. 1. to which this verse seems immediately to refer.

Three things the apostle professes to prove in this epistle:—1. That Christ is greater than the angels.

2. That He is greater than Moses.

3. That He is greater than Aaron, and all high-priests.

15 For ^a we have not a High-priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but ^b was in all points tempted like as we are, ^c yet without sin.

1 Isai. 53. 3. Ch. 2. 18.— Luke 22. 28.— 2 Cor. 5. 21. Ch. 7. 26.

The two former arguments, with their applications and illustrations, he has already despatched; and now he enters on the third.—See the Preface to this epistle.

The apostle states—1. That we have a High-priest.

2. That this High-priest is Jesus, the Son of God; not a son or descendant of Aaron, nor coming in that way, but in a more transcendent line.

3. Aaron and his successors, could only pass into the holy of holies; and that once a year: but our High-priest has passed into the heavens, of which that was only the type. There is an allusion here to the high-priest, going into the holy of holies, on the great day of atonement.—

1. He left the congregation of the people. 2. He passed through the veil into the holy place, and was not seen even by the priests. 3. He entered through the second veil into the holy of holies, where was the symbol of the Majesty of God. Jesus, our High-Priest—1. Left the people at large. 2. He left His disciples by ascending up through the visible heavens, the clouds, as a veil, screening Him from their sight. 3. Having passed through these veils, He went immediately to be our Intercessor: thus He passed, ουρανοῦ, the visible or ethereal heavens, into the presence of the Divine Majesty; through the heavens, διαλλοβστα τοις ουρανοῦ, and the empyreum, or heaven of heavens.

Verse 15. For we have not a high-priest] To the objection:—"Your high-priest, if entered into the heavens, can have no participation with you, and no sympathy for you, because out of the reach of human feelings and infirmities," he answers, Ου γαρ εχρησ Αρχιερα μι δυναμειν συμπροσθαι ταις αδυναμιας ημων, We have not a high-priest who cannot sympathize with our weaknesses. Though He be the Son of God, as to His human nature, and equal in His Divine nature with God; yet, having partaken of human nature, and having submitted to all its trials and distresses, and being in all points tempted like as we are, without feeling or consenting to sin: he is able to succour them that are tempted.—See chap. ii. 18. and the note there.

The words κατα παντα καθ' ομοιωτητα might be translated in all points according to the likeness; i. e. as far as His human nature could bear affinity to ours: for, though He had a perfect human body, and human soul, yet that body was perfectly tempered; it was free from all morbid action, and, consequently, from all irregular movements. His mind, or human soul, being free from all sin, being every way perfect, could feel no irregular temper, nothing that was inconsistent with infinite purity. In all these respects He was different from us; and cannot, as man, sympathize with us in any feelings of this kind; but, as God, He has provided support for the body under all its trials and infirmities; and for the soul He has provided an atonement and purifying sacrifice: so that he cleanses the heart from all unrighteousness, and fills the soul with His holy Spirit, and makes it His own temple and continual habitation. He took our flesh and blood, a human body and a human soul; and lived a human life. Here was the likeness of sinful flesh, Rom. viii. 5. and, by thus assuming human nature, He was completely qualified to make an atonement for the sins of the world.

Verse 16. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace] The allusion to the high-priest, and his office on the day of atonement, is here kept up. The approach mentioned here is to the καθ' κρησθη, ιλαστηριον, propitiatory, or mercy-seat. This was the covering of the ark of the testimony, or covenant, at each end of which was a cherub, and between them the shechinah, or symbol of the Divine Majesty, which appeared to, and conversed with, the high-priest. Here the apostle shows the great superiority of the privileges of the New Testament above those of the Old; for, there the high-priest only, and he with fear and trembling, was permitted to approach; and that not without the blood of the victim; and if, in any thing he transgressed, he might expect to be struck with death. The throne of grace in heaven answers to this propitiatory; but to this ALL may approach who feel their need of salvation; and they may approach, κατα παρρησιας, with freedom, confidence, liberty of speech, in opposition to the fear and trembling of the Jewish high-priest. Here nothing is to be feared, provided the heart be right with God, truly sincere, and trusting alone in the sacrificial Blood.

That we may obtain mercy] ἵνα λαβωμεν ελεος, that we may take mercy; that we may receive the pardon of all our sins; there is mercy for the taking. As Jesus Christ tasted death for every man: so every man may go to that propitiatory, and take the mercy that is suited to his degree of guilt.

And find grace] Mercy refers to the pardon of sin, and being brought into the favour of God. Grace is that by which the soul is supported after it has received this mercy; and by which it is purified from all unrighteousness, and upheld in all trials and difficulties; and enabled to prove faithful unto death.

To help in time of need] Εἰς ανακρασιν βοηθιας, for a seasonable support: that is, support when necessary, and as necessary; and in due proportion to the necessity. The word βοηθιας is properly rendered assistance, help, or support: but it is an assistance in consequence of the earnest cry of the person in distress; for the word signifies to run at the cry, run us Cor or eri Cor run. So, even at the throne of grace, or great propitiatory, no help can be expected where there is no cry: and where there is no cry, there is no fell necessity, for he that feels he is perishing will cry aloud for help; and to such a cry the compassionate High-priest will run. And the time of need is the time in which God will show mercy; nor will He ever delay it when it is necessary. We are not to cry to-day to be helped to-morrow, or at some indefinite time, or at the hour of death. We are to call for mercy and grace when we need them; and we are to expect to receive them when we call. This is a part of our liberty or boldness: we come up to the throne, and we call aloud for mercy; and God hears and dispenses the blessing we need.

That this exhortation of the apostle may not be lost on us, let us consider:—

1. That there is a throne of grace, i. e. a propitiatory, the place where God and man are to meet.

2. That this propitiatory, or mercy-seat, is sprinkled with the atoning blood of that Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world.

3. That we must come up, προσπαύουθα, to his throne: and this implies faith in the efficacy of the Sacrifice.

4. That we must call aloud on God for His mercy, if we expect Him to run to our assistance.

5. That we must feel our spiritual necessities, in order to our calling with fervency and earnestness.

6. That calling thus, we shall infallibly get what we want; for, in Christ Jesus, as a sacrificial offering, God is ever well pleased: and He is also well pleased with all who take refuge in the atonement which He has made.

7. That thus coming, feeling, and calling, we may have the utmost confidence: for, we have boldness, liberty of access, freedom of speech; may plead with our Maker without fear, and expect all that heaven has to bestow; because Jesus, who died, sitteth upon the throne! Hallelujah! the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth.

8. All these are reasons why we should persevere.

NOTES ON CHAP. V.

Verse 1. For every high-priest taken from among men] This seems to refer to Levit. xxi. 10. where it is intimated that the high-priest shall be taken υπο μοχαιω, from his brethren; i. e. he shall be of the tribe of Levi, and of the family of Aaron.

Is ordained for men] ἵνα ἀρθῶσι καθίσταται τα ἕως τοῦ θωου, is appointed to preside over the Divine worship in those things which relate to man's salvation.

That he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins] God ever appeared to all His followers in two points of view:—1. As the Author and Dispenser of all temporal good. 2. As their Lawgiver and Judge. In reference to this twofold view of the Divine Being, His worship was composed of two different parts:—1. Offerings, or gifts.—2. Sacrifices. 1. As the Creator and Dispenser of all good, He had offerings by which His bounty and providence were acknowledged. 2. As the Lawgiver and Judge, against whose injunctions offences had been committed, He had sacrifices offered to Him, to make atonement for sin. The δωρα, or gifts, mentioned here by the apostle, included every kind of eucharistical offering. The θυσιας, sacrifices, including victims of every sort; or animals whose lives were to be offered in sacrifice, and their blood poured out before God, as an atonement for sins. The high-priest was the mediator between God and the people; and it was his office, when the people had brought these gifts and sacrifices, to offer them to God in their behalf. The people could not legitimately offer their own offerings: they must be all brought to the priest, and he alone could present them to God. As we have a High-priest over the house of God, to offer all our gifts, and His own sacrifice, therefore we may come with boldness to the throne of grace.—See before.

Verse 2. Who can have compassion on the ignorant] The word μελερωμενον signifies not merely to have compassion, but to act with moderation; and to bear with each other in proportion to his ignorance, weakness, and untoward circumstances, all taken into consideration with the offences he has committed; in a word, to pity, feel for, and excuse, as far as possible: and when the provocation is at the highest, to moderate one's passion towards the culprit, and be ready to pardon; and, when punishment must be administered, to do it in the gentlest manner.

Instead of αγνωσι, the ignorant, one MS. only, but that of high repute, has αδωροσι, the weak. Most men sin much through ignorance.

but, this does not excuse them if they have within reach the means of instruction. And the great majority of the human race sin through weakness. The principle of evil is strong in them; the occasions of sin are many; through their fall from God they are become exceedingly weak; and what the apostle calls, chap. xii. 1. that ὑπερβαλον αμαρτιας, the well circumstanced sin, often occurs to every man. But, as in the above case, weakness itself is no excuse, when the means of strength and succour were always at hand. However, all these are circumstances which the Jewish high-priest took into consideration; and they are certainly not less attended to by the High-priest of our profession.

The reason given why the high-priest should be slow to punish, and prone to forgive, is, that he himself is also compassed with weakness; ὑπερβαλον αμαρτιας, weakness lies all around him; it is his clothing; and as he feels his clothing, so should he feel it; and as he feels it, so he should deplore it, and compassionate others.

Verse 3. And by reason hereof] As he is also a transgressor of the commands of God, and unable to observe the law in its spirituality, he must offer sacrifices for sin, not only for the people, but for himself also: this must teach him to have a fellow-feeling for others.

Verse 4. This honour] ἡ τιμη undoubtedly signifies, here, the office; which is one meaning of the word in the best Greek writers. It is here an honourable office, because the man is the high-priest of God, and is appointed by God Himself to that office.

But he that is called of God, as was Aaron] God Himself appointed the tribe and family, out of which the high-priest was to be taken: and Aaron and his sons were expressly chosen by God to fill the office of the high-priesthood. As God alone had the right to appoint His own priest for the Jewish nation, and man had no authority here; so God alone could provide and appoint a High-priest for the whole human race. Aaron was thus appointed for the Jewish people; Christ for all mankind.

Some make this "an argument for the uninterrupted succession of popes and their bishops in the church, who alone have the authority to ordain for the sacerdotal office; and whosoever is not thus appointed, is with them illegitimate." It is idle to employ time in proving that there is no such thing as an uninterrupted succession of this kind: it does not exist: it never did exist: It is a silly fable, invented by ecclesiastical tyrants, and supported by clerical coxcombs. But were it even true, it has nothing to do with the text. It speaks merely of the appointment of a high-priest, the succession to be preserved in the tribe of Levi, and in the family of Aaron.

5 ^d So also Christ glorified not himself to be made a high-priest; but he that said unto him, ^e Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee.

6 As he saith also in another place, ^f Thou art a priest for ever

^e Exod. 28. 1. Numb. 16. 5, 40. 1 Chron. 23. 13.—^d John 8. 54.—^f Psa. 2. 7. Ch. 1. 5.—^f Psa. 110. 4. Ch. 7. 17, 21.

But even this succession was interrupted and broken, and the office itself was to cease on the coming of Christ, after whom there could be no high-priest; nor can Christ have any successor: and therefore He is said to be a Priest for ever; for he ever liveth the Intercessor and Sacrifice for mankind. The verse, therefore, has nothing to do with the clerical office; with preaching God's holy word, or administering the sacraments; and those who quote it in this way, show how little they understand the Scriptures, and how ignorant they are of the nature of their own office.

Verse 5. Christ glorified not himself] The man Jesus Christ, was also appointed by God to this most awful, yet glorious office, of being the High-priest of the whole human race. The Jewish high-priest represented this by the sacrifices of beasts which he offered; the Christian High-priest must offer His own life: Jesus Christ did so; and rising from the dead, He ascended to heaven, and there ever appeareth in the presence of God for us. Thus He has reassumed the sacerdotal office: and because He never dies, He can never have a successor. He can have no vicars either in heaven or upon earth: those who pretend to be such are impostors, and are worthy neither of respect nor credit.

Thou art my Son] See on chap. i. 5. and the observations at the end of that chapter. And thus it appears that God can have no high-priest but His Son; and to that office none can now pretend without blasphemy; for the Son of God is still the High-priest in His temple:

Verse 6. He saith also in another place] That is, in Psa. cx. 4. a Psalm of extraordinary importance, containing a very striking prediction of the birth, preaching, suffering, death, and conquests, of the Messiah.—See the notes there. For the mode of quotation here, see the note on chap. ii. 6.

Thou art a priest for ever] As long as the sun and moon endure, Jesus will continue to be High-priest to all the successive generations of men; as He was the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. If He be a Priest for ever, there can be no succession of priests: and if He have all power in heaven and in earth; and if He be present wherever two or three are gathered together in His name, He can have no vicars; nor can the church need one to act in His place, when He, from the necessity of His nature, fills all places, and is every where present. This one consideration nullifies all the pretensions of the Romish pontiff; and proves the whole to be a tissue of imposture.

After the order of Melchisedec] Who this person was, must still remain a secret. We know nothing more of him than is written in Gen. xiv. 18, &c. where see the notes, and particularly the observations at the end of that chapter, in which this very mysterious person is represented as a type of Christ.

Verse 7. Who in the days of his flesh] The time of His incarnation, during which He took all the infirmities of human nature upon Him; and was afflicted in His body and human soul just as other men are; irregular and sinful passions excepted.

Offered up prayers and supplications] This is one of the most difficult places in this epistle, if not in the whole of the New Testament. The labours of learned men upon it have been prodigious; and even in their sayings it is hard to find the meaning.

I shall take a general view of this and the two following verses, and then examine the particular expressions.

It is probable that the apostle refers to something in the agony of our Lord, which the evangelists have not distinctly marked.

The Redeemer of the world appears here as simply man; but He is the representative of the whole human race. He must make expiation for sin by suffering, and He can suffer only as man. Suffering was as necessary as death; for man, because he has sinned, must suffer; and because he has broken the law, should die. Jesus took upon Himself the nature of man, subject to all the trials and distresses of human nature. He is now making atonement; and He begins with sufferings, as sufferings commence with human life; and He terminates with death, as that is the end of human existence in this world. Though he was the Son of God, conceived and born without sin, or any thing that could render him liable to suffering or death, and only suffered and died through infinite condescension; yet, to constitute Him a complete Saviour, He must submit to whatever the law required, and therefore He is stated to have learned Obedience by the things which he suffered, ver. 8. that is, subjection to all the requisitions of the law; and being made perfect, that is, having finished the whole by dying, He, by these means, became the author of eternal salvation to all them who obey him, ver. 9. to them who, according to His own command, repent and believe the Gospel; and, under the influence of His Spirit, walk in holiness of life. "But He appears to be under the most dreadful apprehension of death; for he offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto him that was able to save him from death, ver. 7." I shall consider this first in the common point of view, and refer to the subsequent notes. This fear of death was in Christ a widely different thing from what it is in man: they fear death because of what lies beyond the grave; they have sinned, and they are afraid to meet their Judge. Jesus could have no fear on these grounds; He was now suffering for man, and He felt as their expiatory victim: and God only can tell, and c Matt. 26. 53. Mark 14. 36.—d Or. for his piety.—e Matt. 26. 37. Mark 14. 33. Luke 22. 43. John 12. 27.

perhaps neither men nor angels can conceive, how great the suffering and agony must be, which, in the sight of infinite Justice, was requisite to make this atonement. Death, temporal and eternal, was the portion of man: and now Christ is to destroy death by agonizing and dying! The tortures and torments necessary to effect this destruction, Jesus Christ alone could feel; Jesus Christ alone could sustain; Jesus Christ alone can comprehend. We are referred to them in this most solemn verse: but the apostle himself only drops hints, he does not attempt to explain them; He prayed, He supplicated with strong crying and tears, and He was heard in reference to that which He feared. His prayers, as our Mediator, were answered; and His sufferings and death were complete and effectual as our Sacrifice. This is the glorious sum of what the apostle here states; and it is enough. We may hear it with awful respect, and adore Him with silence, whose grief had nothing common in it to that of other men; and is not to be estimated according to the measures of human miseries—it was

A weight of wo, more than whole worlds could bear.

I shall now make some remarks on particular expressions, and endeavour to show that the words may be understood with a shade of difference from the common acceptance.

Prayers, and supplications, &c.] There may be an allusion here to the manner in which the Jews speak of prayer, &c. "Rabbi Yehudah said, all human things depend on repentance, and the prayers which men make to the holy blessed God; especially if tears be poured out with the prayers. There is no gate which tears will not pass through." Sohar, Exod. fol. 5.

"There are three degrees of prayer, each surpassing the other in sublimity: prayer, crying, and tears; prayer is made in silence; crying, with a loud voice; but tears surpass all." Synops. Asohar, p. 33.

The apostle shows that Christ used every species of prayer, and those especially by which they allowed a man must be successful with his Maker.

The word ἱκετικῶς, which we translate supplications, exists in no other part of the New Testament: ἱκετικῶς signifies a supplicant, from ἵκεται, I come, or approach: it is used in this connexion by the purest Greek writers. Nearly the same words are found in Isocrates, De Pace, ἱκετικῶς πολλὰς καὶ δάσους ποιοῦμενος, making many supplications and prayers. ἱκετικῶς, says Suidas, καλεῖται ἑλαίης κλάδος στήματι στήματι ἐὶς δέξτερον κατατίθειν πῦρ, ἢ μετὰ χυμῶν χυσοῖν. "Hiceteria is a branch of olive, rolled round with wool, which suppliants were accustomed to deposit in some place, or to carry in their hands." And ἵκεται, hicetes, he defines to be, ἰ δουλοπρεπὸς παρακαλῶν, καὶ δεόμενος πρὸς τινος ὄντων. "He, who in the most humble and servile manner, entreats and begs any thing from another." In reference to this custom, the Latins used the phrase velamenta pretendere. "to hold forth these covered branches," when they made supplication; and Herodian calls them ἰκνημαὶ θάλλου, "branches of supplication." Livy mentions the custom frequently; see lib. xxv. cap. 25. lib. xxix. c. 16. lib. xxxv. c. 34. lib. xxxvi. c. 20. The place in lib. xxix. c. 16. is much to the point, and shows us the full force of the word and nature of the custom. "Decem legati Locrensiū, obiti squalore et sordibus, in comitio sedentibus consulibus velamenta supplicium, ramos oleæ, (ut Græcis mos est) porrigentes, ante tribunal cum flebili vociferatione humi procubuerunt." Ten delegates from the Locrians, squalid and covered with rags, came into the hall where the consuls were sitting, holding out in their hands olive-branches covered with wool, according to the custom of the Greeks; and prostrated themselves on the ground before the tribunal, with weeping and loud lamentation." This is a remarkable case, and may well illustrate our Lord's situation and conduct. The Locrians, pillaged, oppressed, and ruined, by the consul Q. Plemnius, send their delegates to the Roman government to implore protection and redress. They, the better to represent their situation, and that of their oppressed fellow-citizens, take the hiceteria, or olive-branch wrapped round with wool, and present themselves before the consuls in open court; and, with wailing and loud outcries make known their situation; the senate heard, arrested Plemnius, loaded him with chains, and he expired in a dungeon. Jesus Christ, the representative of, and delegate from, the whole human race oppressed and ruined by Satan and sin, with the hiceteria, or ensign of a most distressed suppliant, presents Himself before the throne of God, with strong crying and tears; and prays against death and his ravages, in behalf of those whose representative He was: and He was heard in that he feared; the evils were removed, and the oppressor cast down. Satan was bound; he was spoiled of his dominion; and is reserved in chains of darkness to the judgment of the great day.

Every scholar will see that the words of the Roman historian answer exactly to those of the apostle; and the allusion in both is to the same custom. I do not approve of allegorizing or spiritualizing; but the allusion and similarity of the expressions led me to make this application. Many others would make more of this circumstance, as the allusion in the text is so pointed to this custom. Should it appear to any of my readers that I should, after the example of great names, have gone into this house of Rimmon, and bowed myself there, they will pardon their servant in this thing.

9 And ^c being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him.

c Ch. 2. 10. & 11. 40.

To save him from death] I have already observed that Jesus Christ was the representative of the human race: and have made some observations on the peculiarity of His sufferings, following the common acceptation of the words in the text; which things are true, howsoever the text may be interpreted. But here we may consider the pronoun αυτου, him, as implying the collective body of mankind; the children who were partakers of flesh and blood, chap. ii. 14. The seed of Abraham, ver. 16. who through fear of death were all their life subject to bondage. So he made supplication with strong crying and tears to Him who was able to save THEM from death; for I consider the τουτου, them, of chap. ii. 15. the same, or implying the same thing, as αυτου, him, in this verse: and, thus understood, all the difficulty vanishes away. On this interpretation I shall give a paraphrase of the whole verse:—Jesus Christ in the days of his flesh, for he was incarnated that he might redeem the seed of Abraham, the fallen race of man, and in His expiatory sufferings, when representing the whole human race, He offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, to Him who was able to save THEM from death; the intercession was prevalent, the passion and sacrifice were accepted, the sting of death was extracted, and Satan was dethroned.

If it should be objected that this interpretation occasions a very unnatural change of person in these verses, I may reply, that the change made by my construction is not greater than that made between verses 6 and 7, in the first of which the apostle speaks of Melchisedec, who, at the conclusion of the verse, appears to be antecedent to the relative who, in ver. 7. and yet, from the nature of the subject, we must understand Christ to be meant. And I consider ver. 8. Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered, as belonging not only to Christ, considered in His human nature, but also to Him in His collective capacity: i. e. belonging to all the sons and daughters of God, who, by means of suffering, and various chastisements, learn submission, obedience, and righteousness: and this very subject the apostle treats in considerable detail in chap. xii. 2—11. to which the reader will do well to refer.

Verse 8. Though he were a Son] See the whole of the preceding note.

Verse 9. And being made perfect] καὶ τελειωθῆς. And having finished all; having died and risen again: τελειωθῆς, signifies to have obtained the goal, to have ended one's labour, and enjoyed the fruits of it, chap. xii. 23.

The spirits of just men made perfect, πνευμαὶ δικαιοῦν τεταπεινωτων, means the souls of those who have gained the goal, and obtained the prize. So, when Christ had finished His course of tremendous sufferings, and consummated the whole by His death and resurrection. He became αἰετις ἁγιασματις αἰωνιον, the cause of eternal salvation unto all them who obey him. He was consecrated both High-priest and Sacrifice, by His offering upon the cross.

In this verse, says Dr. Macknight, "three things are clearly stated:—1. That obedience to Christ is equally necessary to salvation with believing on Him. 2. That he was made perfect as a High-priest by offering Himself a sacrifice for sin, chap. viii. 3. 3. That, by the merit of that sacrifice, He hath obtained pardon and eternal life for them who obey Him." He tasted death for every man; but He is the Author and Cause of eternal salvation only to them who obey Him. It is not merely believers, but obedient believers, that shall be finally saved. Therefore, this text is an absolute, unimpeachable evidence, that it is not the imputed obedience of Christ that saves any man. Christ has bought men by His blood; and, by the infinite merit of His death He has purchased for them an endless glory: but, in order to be prepared for it, the sinner must, through that grace which He withholds from no man, repent, turn from sin, believe on Jesus as being a sufficient ransom and sacrifice for his soul, receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, be a worker together with Him, walk in a conformity to the Divine will through this Divine aid, and continue faithful unto death through Him, out of whose fulness he may receive grace upon grace.

Verse 10. Called of God a High-priest [Προεταρξουδου, being constituted, hailed, and acknowledged, to be a High-priest. In Hesychius, we find προεταρξουδου, which he translates αρχιεραυ: hence we learn that one meaning of this word is to salute: as, when a man was constituted or anointed king, those who accosted him would say, Hail, king! On this verse, Dr. Macknight has the following note, with the insertion of which the reader will not be displeased: "As our Lord, in His conversation with the Pharisees, recorded Matt. xxii. 43. spake of it as a thing certain of itself, and universally known and acknowledged by the Jews, that David wrote the CXth. Psalm by inspiration, concerning the Christ or Messiah; the apostle was well founded in applying the whole of that Psalm to Jesus. Wherefore, having quoted the fourth verse, Thou art a Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec, as directed to Messiah, David's Lord, he justly termed that speech of the Deity a salutation of Jesus, according to the true import of the word προεταρξουδου, which properly signifies to address one by his name, or title, or office: accordingly, Hesychius explains προεταρξουδου, by αεραζουαι. Now, that the deep meaning of this salutation may be understood, I observe, First, that, by the testimony of the inspired writers, Jesus sat down at the right-hand of God, when He returned to heaven, after having finished His ministry upon earth, Mark xvi. 19. Acts vii. 56.

Heb. i. 3. viii. 1. 1 Pet. iii. 22. Not, however, immediately, but after that He had offered the sacrifice of Himself in heaven, by presenting his crucified body before the presence of God, Heb. i. 3. x. 10. Secondly, I observe, that God's saluting Messiah, a priest after the order of Melchisedec, being mentioned in the Psalm, after God is said to have invited Him to sit at His right hand, is as reasonable to think, the salutation was given Him after He had offered the sacrifice of Himself and had taken His seat at God's right hand. Considered in this order, the salutation of Jesus as a Priest, after the order of Melchisedec, was a public declaration, on the part of God, that He accepted the sacrifice of Himself, which Jesus then offered, as a sufficient atonement for the sin of the world; and approved of the whole of His ministrations on earth, and confirmed all the effects of that meritorious sacrifice. And whereas we are informed in the Psalm, that, after God had invited His Son, in the human nature, to sit at His right hand, as Governor of the world, and foretold the blessed fruits of His government, He published the oath by which He made Him a Priest for ever, before He sent Him into the world to accomplish the salvation of mankind; and declared that He would never repent of that oath: The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent Thou art a priest for ever after the similitude of Melchisedec: it was, in effect, a solemn publication of the method in which God would pardon sinners; and a promise that the effects of His Son's government as a King, and of His ministrations as a Priest, shall be eternal: see chap. vi. 20. Moreover, as this solemn declaration of the dignity of the Son of God, as a King and a Priest for ever in the human nature, was made in the hearing of the angelical hosts, it was designed for this instruction, that they might understand their subordination to God's Son, and pay Him that homage that is due to Him as Governor of the world, and as Saviour of the human race.—Phil. ii. 9, 10. Heb. i. 6. The above explanation of the import of God's saluting Jesus a Priest for ever, is founded on the apostle's reasonings in the seventh and following chapters, where he enters into the deep meaning of the oath by which that salutation was conferred."

Verse 11. Of whom we have many things to say The words ταυτα, which we translate of whom, are variously applied:—1. To Melchisedec. 2. To Christ. 3. To the endless Priesthood. Those who understand the place of Melchisedec, suppose that it is in reference to this that the apostle resumes the subject in the seventh chapter, where much more is said on this subject, though not very difficult of comprehension: and, indeed, it is not to be supposed that the Hebrews could be more capable of understanding the subject when the apostle wrote the seventh chapter, than they were, when a few hours before he had written the fifth. It is more likely, therefore, that the words are to be understood as meaning Jesus, or that endless Priesthood of which he was a little before speaking; and which is a subject that carnal Christians cannot easily comprehend.

Hard to be uttered] Δυσφημῶτος, difficult to be interpreted; because Melchisedec was a typical person. Or, if it refer to the Priesthood of Christ, that is still more difficult to be explained, as it implies not only His being constituted a Priest, after this typical order, but His paying down the ransom for the sins of the whole world, and His satisfying the Divine justice by this sacrifice; but also, thereby opening the kingdom of heaven to all believers, and giving the whole world an entrance to the holy of holies by His blood.

Dull of hearing] Νῶθροι τῆς ἀκοῆς. Your souls do not keep pace with the doctrines and exhortations delivered to you. As Νῶθρος signifies a person who walks heavily, and makes little speed; it is here elegantly applied to those who are called to the Christian race, have the road laid down plain before them, how to proceed specified, and the blessings to be obtained enumerated; and yet make no exertions to get on, but are always learning, and never able to come to the full knowledge of the truth.

Vers 12. For when for the time] They had heard the Gospel for many years, and had professed to be Christians for a long time; on these accounts they might reasonably have been expected to be well instructed in Divine things, so as to be able to instruct others.

Which be the first principles] Ἰνα τα στοιχία, certain first principles or elements. The word τα is not the nominative plural, as our translators have supposed, but the accusative case, governed by διδάσκουσιν; and, therefore, the literal translation of the passage is this:—Ye have need that one teach you a second time (ἄλλαν) certain elements of the doctrines of Christ, or oracles of God; i. e. the notices which the prophets gave concerning the Priesthood of Jesus Christ: such as are found in Psa. cx. and in Isa. chap. liii. By the Oracles of God the writings of the Old Testament are undoubtedly meant.

And are become such] The words seem to intimate that they had once been better instructed, and had now forgotten that teaching: and this was occasioned by their being dull of hearing; either they had not continued to hear, or they had heard so carelessly that they were not profited by what they heard. They had probably totally omitted the preaching of the Gospel; and, consequently, forgotten all they had learnt. Indeed it was to reclaim these Hebrews from backsliding, and preserve them from total apostacy, that this epistle was written.

Such as have need of milk] Milk is a metaphor by which many authors, both sacred and profane, express the first principles of religion and science; and they apply sucking to learning; and every student, in his noviciate, or commencement of his studies, being likened to an infant that derives all its nourishment from the breast of its mother; not being able to digest any other kind of food. On the contrary, those who had well learnt all the first principles of religion and science, and knew how to apply them, were considered as adults, who were capable of receiving συμικτὰ τροφῆς, solid food; i. e. the more difficult and sublime doctrines. The rabbins abound with this figure; it occurs frequently in Philo, and in the Greek ethnic writers also. In the famous Arabic Poem called al Boriyah, written by Abi Abdallah Mohammed ben Said ben Hamad Albusiree, in praise of Mohammed and his religion, every couplet of which ends with the letter ḥ, the first letter in Mohammed's name, we meet with a couplet that contains a similar sentiment to that of the apostle:—

والنفس كالطفل ان تهمله شب علي
حب الرضاع وان تقطعه ينفطم

“The soul is like to a young infant, whom, if permitted, will grow up to manhood in the love of sucking; but if thou take it from the breast, it will feel itself weaned.”

Dr. Owen observes, that there are two sorts of hearers of the Gospel, which are here expressed:—1. By an elegant metaphor or similitude: this consists in the conformity there is between bolily food and the Gospel as preached. 2. In the variety of natural food, as suited to the various states of them that feed on it; answered by the truths of the Gospel, which are of various kinds: and, in the exemplification of this metaphor, natural food is reduced to two kinds: 1. Milk. 2. Strong or solid meat:—and those who feed on these are reduced to two sorts:—1. Children. 2. Men of ripe age. Both which are applied to hearers of the Gospel.

1. Some there are who are babes or infants: and some are perfect or full grown.

2. These babes are described by a double property:—1. They are dull of hearing. 2. They are unskilful in the word of righteousness.

In opposition to this, those who are spiritually adult are,

1. They who are capable of instruction.
2. Such as have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil.

3. The different means to be applied to these different sorts, for their good, according to their respective conditions, are expressed in the terms of the metaphor:—to the first, γάλα, milk: to the others, στρομα τροφῆς, strong meat. All these are comprised in the following scheme:—

The hearers of the Gospel are,

I. ΝΗΠΙΟΙ. BABES OR INFANTS.

Who are

1. Νηπιοί τας ακουσι, dull of hearing.
2. Απειροι λεγου δικαιοσυνης, inexperienced in the doctrine of righteousness.

These have need

Γαλακτος: of milk.

But all these are to derive their nourishment or spiritual instruction, εκ των λεγων τε Θεου, from the oracles of God. The word oracle, by which we translate the λεγων of the apostle, is used, by the best Greek writers, to signify a Divine speech, or answer of a deity to a question proposed. It always implied a speech or declaration purely celestial, in which man had no part: and it is thus used wherever it occurs in the New Testament. 1. It signifies the LAW received from God by Moses, Acts vii. 38.

2. The Old Testament in general: the holy men of old having spoken by the inspiration of the Divine Spirit, Rom. iii. 2. and in the text under consideration.

3. It signifies Divine revelation in general, because all delivered immediately from God, 1 Thess. ii. 13. 1 Pet. iv. 11. When we consider what respect was paid by the heathens to their oracles, which were supposed to be delivered by those gods which were the objects of their adoration, but which were only impostures, we may then learn what respect is due to the true oracles of God.

Among the heathens, the credit of oracles was so great, that, in all doubts and disputes, their determinations were held sacred and inviolable: whence vast numbers flocked to them for advice in the management of their affairs; and no business of any importance was undertaken, scarcely any war waged, or peace concluded, any new form of government instituted, or new laws enacted, without the advice and approbation of the oracle. Cæsus, before he durst venture to declare war against the Persians, consulted not only the most famous oracles of Greece, but sent ambassadors as far as Libya, to ask advice of Jupiter Ammon. Minos, the Athenian lawgiver, professed to receive instructions from Jupiter how to model his intended government; and Lycurgus, legislator of Sparta, made frequent visits to the Delphian Apollo, and received from him the platform of the Lacedæmonian commonwealth.—See Broughton.

What a reproach to Christians who hold the Bible to be a collection of the Oracles of God, and who not only do not consult it in the momentous concerns of either this or the future life, but go in direct opposition to it. Were every thing conducted according to these oracles, we should have neither war nor desolation in the earth; families would be well governed, and individuals universally made happy.

Those who consulted the ancient oracles, were obliged to go to enormous expenses, both in sacrifices and in presents, to the priests. And when they had done so, they received oracles which were so equivocal, that howsoever the event fell out, they were capable of being interpreted that way.

Verse 13. For every one that useth milk] It is very likely that the apostle, by using this term, refers to the doctrines of the law, which were only the rudiments of religion, and were intended to lead us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith.

The word of righteousness] Λεγει δικαιοσυνη: The doctrine of justification. I believe this to be the apostle's meaning. He that uses milk, rests in the ceremonies and observances of the law, is unskilful in the doctrine of justification; for this requires faith in the sacrificial death of the promised Messiah.

Verse 14. But strong meat] The high and sublime doctrines of Christianity, the atonement, justification by faith, the gift of the Holy Ghost, the fulness of Christ dwelling in the souls of men, triumph in and over death, the resurrection of the body, the glorification of both body and soul in the realms of blessedness, and an endless union with Christ in the throne of glory. This is the strong food which the genuine Christian understands, receives, digests, and grows thereby.

By reason of use] Who, by constant hearing, believing, praying, and obedience, use all the graces of God's Spirit; and, in the faithful use of them, find every one improved; so that they duly grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ, our Lord.

Have their senses exercised] The word αισθητηρια, signifies the different organs of sense, as the eyes, ears, tongue, and palate, nose, and finger-ends, and the nervous surface in general, through which we gain the sensations called seeing, hearing, tasting, smelling, and feeling. These organs of sense being frequently exercised, or employed, on a variety of subjects, acquire the power to discern the various objects of sense; viz. all objects of light; difference of sounds; of tastes, or savors; of odours, or smelling; and of hard, soft, wet, dry, cold, hot, rough, smooth, and all other tangible qualities.

There is something in the soul that answers to all these senses in the body. And as universal nature presents to the other senses their different and appropriate objects; so religion presents to these interior senses the objects which are suited to them. Hence, in Scripture, we are said, even in spiritual things, to see, hear, taste, smell, and touch, or feel. These are the means by which the soul is rendered comfortable, and through which it derives its happiness and perfection.

In the adult Christian these senses are said to be γυμνασμενα, exercised, a metaphor taken from the athletæ, or contenders in the Grecian games, who were wont to employ all their powers, skill, and agility, in mock fights, running, wrestling, &c. that they might be the better prepared for the actual contests when they took place. So these employ and improve all their powers, and in using grace, get more grace; and thus being able to discern good from evil, they are in little danger of being imposed on by false doctrine, or by the pretensions of hypocrites; or of being deceived by the subtleties of Satan. They feel that their security depends, under God, on this exercise; on the proper use which they make of the grace already given them by God. Can any reader be so dull as not to understand this?

CHAPTER VI.

We must proceed from the first principles of the doctrine of Christ unto perfection, and not lay the foundation a second time, 1—3. Those who were once enlightened, and have been made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and the various blessings of the Gospel, if they apostatize from Christ, and finally reject Him as their Saviour, cannot be renewed again to repentance, 4—6. The double similitude of the ground blessed of God, and bearing fruit; and of that ground which is cursed of God, and bears briars and thorns, 7, 8. The apostle's confidence in them, and his exhortation to diligence and perseverance, 9—12. God's promise and oath to Abraham, by which the immutability of His counsel is shewn, in order to excite our hope, 13—18. Hope is the anchor of the soul, and enters within the veil, 19, 20.

NOTES ON CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. Therefore] Because ye have been so indolent, slow of heart; and have still so many advantages;—

Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ] Ceasing to continue in the state of babes, who must be fed with milk, with the lowest doctrines of the Gospel; when ye should be capable of understanding the highest.

Let us go on to perfection] Let us never rest till we are adult Christians; till we are saved from all sin, and are filled with the Spirit and power of Christ.

The words των τρι αρχων του Χριστου λογον, might be translated, the discourse of the beginning of Christ, as in the margin; that is, the account of His incarnation, and the different types and ceremonies in the law, by which His advent, nature, office, and miracles, were pointed out. The whole law of Moses pointed out Christ, as may be seen at large in my comment on the Pentateuch; and therefore the words of the apostle may be understood thus, Leave the law, and come to the Gospel. Cease from Moses, and come to the Messiah.

Let us go on unto perfection] The original is very emphatic; σει τιν τελωτητα θεραμειδα. Let us be carried on to this perfection: God is ever ready, by the power of His Spirit, to carry us forward to every degree of life, light, and love, necessary to prepare us for an eternal weight of glory. There can be little difficulty in attaining the end of our faith, the salvation of our souls from all sin, if God carry us forward to it: and this He will do, if we submit to be saved in His own way, and on His own terms. Many make a violent outcry against the doctrine of perfection, i. e. against the heart being cleansed from all sin in this life, and filled with love to God and man; because they judge it to be impossible! Is it too much to say of these, that they know neither the Scripture, nor the power of God? Surely the Scripture promises the thing; and the power of God can carry us on to the possession of it.

Laying again the foundation of repentance] The phrase κατα νεκρα, dead works, occurs but once more in the Sacred Writings, and that is in chap. ix. 14. of this epistle; and in both places it seems to signify such works as deserve death; works of those who were dead in trespasses, and dead in sins; and dead by sentence of the law, because they had, by these works, broken the law. Repentance may be properly called the foundation of the work of God in the soul of man, because by it we for-sake sin, and turn to God to find mercy.

Faith towards God] Is also a foundation, or fundamental principle, without which it is impossible to please God; and without which we cannot be saved. By repentance, we feel the need of God's mercy: by faith we find that mercy.

But it is very likely that the apostle refers here to the Levitical law; which, in its painful observances, and awful denunciations of Divine wrath, against every breach of that law, was well calculated to produce repentance, and make it a grievous and bitter thing to sin against God. And as to faith in God, that was essentially necessary, in order to see the end of the commandment; for, without faith in Him who was to come, all that repentance was unavailable; and all ritual observances without profit.

Verse 2. Of the doctrine of baptisms] "There were two things," says Dr. Owen, "peculiar to the Gospel, the doctrine of it, and the gifts of the Holy Ghost. Doctrine is called baptism, Deut. xxxiii. 2. hence the people are said to be baptized to Moses when they were initiated into his doctrines, 1. Cor. x. 52. The baptism of John was his doctrine, Acts xix. 3. and the baptism of Christ was the doctrine of Christ, wherewith He was to sprinkle many nations, Isa. iii. 15. This is the first baptism of the Gospel, even its doctrine. The other was the communication of the gifts of the Holy Ghost, Acts i. 5. and this alone is what is intended by the laying on of hands; and then the sense will be, the foundation of Gospel baptisms, namely, preaching, and the gifts of the Holy Ghost."

I am afraid, with all this great man's learning, he has not hit the meaning of the apostle. As teaching is the means by which we are to obtain the gifts of the Holy Ghost, surely the apostle never designed to separate them, but to lead men immediately through the one to the possession of the other. Nor is the word baptism mentioned in the passage in Deuteronomy which he quotes; nor, indeed, any word properly synonymous. Neither βαπτισμος, baptism, παρτισμος, sprinkling, nor any verb formed from them, is found in the Septuagint, in that place. But the other proofs are sufficiently in point, viz. that by baptism, in the other places referred to, doctrine or TEACHING is meant; but to call TEACHING one baptism, and the gifts of the HOLY GHOST another baptism, and to apply this to the explanation of the difficulty here, is very far from being satisfactory.

I am inclined to think that all the terms in this verse, as well as those in the former, belong to the Levitical law; and are to be explained on that ground.

Baptisms, or immersions of the body in water, sprinklings, and washings, were frequent as religious rites among the Hebrews; and were all emblematical of that purity which a holy God requires in his worshippers: and without which they cannot be happy here, nor be glorified in heaven.

Laying on of hands] Was also frequent, especially in sacrifices: the person bringing the victim laid his hands on its head, confessed his sins over it, and then gave it to the priest to be offered to God, that it might make atonement for his transgressions. This also had respect to Jesus Christ, that Lamb of God who takes away the sins of the world.

The doctrine also of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment, were both Jewish; but were only partially revealed, and then referred to the Gospel. Of the resurrection of the dead, there is a fine proof in Isa. xxvi. 19. where it is stated to be the consequence of the death and resurrection of Christ; for so I understand the words, Thy dead shall live; with my dead body shall they arise: awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs; and the earth shall cast out the dead. The valley of dry-bones, Ezek. xxxvii. 1. &c. is both an illustration and proof of it. And Daniel has taught both the resurrection and the eternal judgment, chap. xii. 2. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt.

Now, the foundation of all these doctrines was laid in the Old Testament; and they were variously represented under the law: but they were all referred to the Gospel for their proof and illustration. The apostle, therefore, wishes them to consider the Gospel as holding forth these in their full spirit and power:—1. It preaches repentance unto life. 2. Faith in God through Christ, by whom we receive the atonement. 3. The baptism by water, in the name of the Holy Trinity; and the baptism of the Holy Ghost. 4. The imposition of hands, the true sacrificial system; and by and through it the communication of the various gifts of the Holy Spirit, for the instruction of mankind, and the edification of the church. 5. The resurrection of the dead, which is both proved and illustrated by the resurrection of Christ. 6. The doctrine of the eternal or future judgment, which is to take place at the bar of Christ Himself; God having committed all judgment to His Son: called here, χρῖμα αἰώνιον, eternal, or ever-during judgment, because the sentences then pronounced shall be irreversible. Some understand the whole of the initiation of persons into the church, as the candidates for admission were previously instructed in those doctrines which contained the fundamental principles of Christianity. The Hebrews had already received these:—But should they Judaize, or mingle the Gospel with the law, they would thereby exclude themselves from the Christian church; and, should they be ever again admitted, they must come through the same gate, or lay a second time, πάλιν, this foundation. But should they totally apostatize from Christ, and finally reject Him, then it would be impossible to renew them again to repentance; they could no more be received into the Christian church, nor have any right to any blessing of the Gospel dispensation: and, finally rejecting the Lord who bought them, would bring on themselves and their land swift destruction.—See the 4th and following verses; and particularly the notes on verses 8 and 9.

Verse 3. And this will we do] God being my helper, I will teach you all the sublime truths of the Gospel; and show you how all its excellencies were typified by the law; and particularly by its sacrificial system.

Verse 4. For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened] Before I proceed to explain the different terms in these verses, it is necessary to give my opinion of their design and meaning:—1. I do not consider them as having any reference to any person professing Christianity. 2. They do not belong, nor are they applicable, to backsliders of any kind. 3. They belong to apostates from Christianity; to such as reject the whole Christian system, and its Author the Lord Jesus. 4. And to those of them only who join with the blaspheming Jews, call Christ an impostor, and vindicate His murderers, in having crucified Him as a malefactor; and thus they render their salvation impossible, by wilfully and maliciously rejecting the Lord that bought them. No man, believing in the Lord Jesus as the great Sacrifice for sin, and acknowledging Christianity as a Divine revelation, is here intended; though he may have unfortunately backslidden from any degree of the salvation of God.

The design of these solemn words is evidently—First, to show the Hebrews that apostasy from the highest degrees of grace was possible; and that those who were highest in the favour of God might sin against Him, lose it, and perish everlastingly. Secondly, to warn them against such an awful state of perdition, that they might not be led away, by either the persuasions or persecutions of their countrymen, from the truth of the heavenly doctrine which had been delivered to them. And, Thirdly, to point out the destruction which was shortly to come upon the Jewish nation.

Once enlightened—Thoroughly instructed in the nature and design of the Christian religion, having received the knowledge of the truth, chap. x. 32; and being convinced of sin, righteousness, and judgment, and led to Jesus the Saviour of sinners:—

Tasted of the heavenly gift] Having received the knowledge of salvation by the remission of sins, through the Day-spring which, from on high, had visited them. Such having received Christ, the heavenly Gift of God's infinite love, John iii. 16. the living Bread that came down from heaven, John vi. 51. and thus tasting that the Lord is gracious, 1 Pet. ii. 3. and witnessing the full effects of the Christian religion.

Partakers of the Holy Ghost] The Spirit Himself witnessing with their spirits that they were the children of God, and thus assuring them of God's mercy towards them, and of the efficacy of the atonement through which they had received such blessings.

Verse 5. And have tasted the good word of God] Have had this proof of the excellence of the promise of God in sending the Gospel, the Gospel being itself the good word of a good God; the reading and preaching of which they find sweet to the taste of their souls. Genuine believers have an appetite for the word of God; they taste it, and then, their relish for it is the more abundantly increased. The more they get, the more they wish to have.

The powers of the world to come] δυναμεις τα μελλουσα αιωνα. These words are understood two ways:—1. The powers of the world to come may refer to the stupendous miracles wrought in confirmation of the Gospel: the Gospel dispensation being the world to come, in the Jewish phraseology, as we have often seen; and that δυναμεις is often taken for a mighty work or miracle, is plain from various parts of the Gospel. The prophets had declared that the Messiah, when he came, should work many miracles, and should be as mighty in word and deed, as was Moses; See Deut. xviii. 15—19. And they particularly specify the giving sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, strength to the lame, and speech to the dumb, Isa. xxxv. 5, 6. All these miracles Jesus Christ did in the sight of this very people: and thus they had the highest evidence they could have, that Jesus was this promised Messiah; and could have no pretence to doubt His mission, or apostatize from the Christian faith which they had received; and hence it is no wonder that the apostle denounces the most awful judgments of God against those who had apostatized from the faith which they had seen thus confirmed.

2. The words have been supposed to apply to those communications and foretastes of eternal blessedness, or of the joys of the world to come, which they who are justified through the blood of the covenant, and walk faithfully with their God, experience: and to this sense, the word γεωσμενου, have tasted, is thought more properly to apply. But γεωσ, to taste, signifies to experience, or have full-proof of a thing. Thus, to taste death, Matt. xvi. 28. is to die, to come under the power of death; fully to experience its destructive nature, as far as the body is concerned.—See also Luke ix. 27. John viii. 52. And it is used in the same sense in chap. ii. 9. of this epistle, where Christ is said to taste death for every man; for, notwithstanding the metaphor, which the reader will see explained in the note on the above place, the word necessarily means that He did actually die, that He fully experienced death; had the fullest proof of it and of its malignity He could have, independently of the corruption of His flesh; for, over this, death could have no them again unto repentance; ^a seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him power. And to taste that the Lord is gracious, 1. Pet. ii. 3. is to experience God's graciousness thoroughly, in being made living stones, built up into a spiritual house, constituted holy priests to offer spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God; see ver. 5. And in this sense it is used by the purest Greek writers.—See several examples in Schleusner.

It seems, therefore, that the first opinion is the best founded.

Verse 6. If they shall fall away] Kai papewortat, and having fallen away. I can express my own mind on this translation nearly in the words of Dr. Macknight:—"The participles enrothwrat, who were enlightened, ywepawortat, have tasted, and ywethwrat, were made partakers, being aorists, are properly rendered by our translators in the past time; wherefore, papewortat, being an aorist, ought likewise to have been translated in the past time, HAVE fallen away. Nevertheless, our translators, following Beza, who, without any authority from ancient MSS. has inserted in his Version, the word si, if, have rendered this clause, If they fall away, that this text might not appear to contradict the doctrine of the perseverance of the saints. But as no translator should take upon him to add to, or alter, the Scriptures, for the sake of any favourite doctrine; I have translated papewortat, in the past time, have fallen away, according to the true import of the word, as standing in connexion with the other aorists in the preceding verses."

Dr. Macknight was a Calvinist; and he was a thorough scholar and an honest man; but, professing to give a translation of the epistle, he consulted not his creed, but his candour. Had our translators, who were excellent and learned men, leaned less to their own peculiar creed in the present authorized Version; the church of Christ in this country would not have been so agitated and torn as it has been with polemical divinity.

It appears from this, whatever sentiment may gain or lose by it, that there is a fearful possibility of falling away from the grace of God: and if this scripture did not say so, there are many that do say so. And were there no scripture express on this subject, the nature of the present state of man, which is a state of probation or trial, must necessarily imply it. Let him who most assuredly standeth, take heed lest he fall.

To renew them again unto repentance] As repentance is the first step that a sinner must take, in order to return to God, and as sorrow for sin must be useless in itself, unless there be a proper sacrificial offering, these, having rejected the only available Sacrifice, their repentance for sin, had they any, would be nugatory, and their salvation impossible on this simple account; and this is the very reason which the apostle immediately subjoins:—

Seeing they crucify to themselves the Son of God] They reject Him on the ground that He was an impostor, and justly put to death. And thus they are said to crucify him to themselves; to do that in their present apostacy which the Jews did: and they show thereby, that, had they been present when He was crucified, they would have joined with His murderers.

And put Him to an open shame.] Παπειρωθησονται, and have made Him a public example; or, crucifying unto themselves, and making the Son of God a public example. That is, they show openly that they judge Jesus Christ to have been worthy of the death which He suffered; and was justly made a public example by being crucified. This shows that it is final apostacy, by the total rejection of the Gospel, and blasphemy of the Saviour of men, that the apostle has in view.—See the note introductory to ver. 4.

Verse 7. For the earth, which drinketh in the rain] As much as if he had said, In giving up such apostates as utterly incurable, we act as men do in cultivating their fields; for, as the ground which drinketh in the rain by which the providence of God waters it, brings forth fruit to compensate the toil of the tiller; and continues to be cultivated, God granting His blessing to the labours of the husbandman:—So—

Verse 8. That which beareth thorns and briers is rejected] That is, the land which, notwithstanding the most careful cultivation, receiving also, in due times, the early and latter rain, produces nothing but thorns and briers, or noxious weeds of different kinds, is rejected, adaxwrat, is given up as unimprovable; its briers, thorns, and brushwood burnt down, and then left to be pastured on by the beasts of the field. This seems to be the custom in husbandry to which the apostle alludes. The nature of the case prevents us from supposing that he alludes to the custom of pushing and burning, in order to further fertilization. This practice has been common from very early times.

Sape etiam steriles incendere profuit agros; Atque levem stipulam crepitantibus urere flammis.
VIRG. Geor. 1. v. 84.

Long practice has a sure improvement found, With kindled fires to burn the barren ground: When the light stubble to the flames resigned, Is driven along, and crackles in the wind.

DRYDEN.

But this, I say, the circumstances of the case prevent us from supposing to be intended.

Is nigh unto cursing] It is acknowledged, almost on all hands, that this epistle was written before the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. This verse is, in my opinion, a proof of it; and here I suppose the apostle refers to that acproaching destruction; and perhaps he has this all along in view, but speaks of it covertly, that he might not give offence.

There is a good sense in which all these things may be applied to the Jews at large, who were favoured by our Lord's ministry and miracles. They were enlightened by His preaching; tasted of the benefits of the heavenly gift, the Christian religion established among them; saw many of their children and relatives made partakers of the Holy Ghost; tasted the good word of God, by the fulfilment of the promise made to Abraham; and saw the almighty power of God exerted, in working a great variety of miracles. Yet, after being convinced that never man spake as this man, and that none could do these miracles which He did, except God were with him; after having followed Him in thousands, for three years, while He preached to them the Gospel of the kingdom of God; they fell away from all this, crucified Him, who, even in His sufferings as well as His resurrection, was demonstrated, by miracles, to be the Son of God; and then, to vindicate their unparalleled wickedness, endeavoured to make Him a public example, by reproaches and blasphemies. Therefore, their state, which had received much moral cultivation, from Moses, the prophets, Christ, and His apostles, and now bore nothing but the most vicious fruits, pride, unbelief, hardness of heart, contempt of God's word and ordinances, blasphemy, and rebellion, was rejected, reprobated of God; was nigh unto cursing, about to be cast off from the Divine protection; and their city and temple were shortly to be burnt up by the Roman armies. Thus the apostle, under the case of individuals, points out the destruction that was to come upon this people in general, and which actually took place about seven years after the writing of this epistle! And this appears to be the very subject which the apostle has in view in the parallel solemn passages, chap. x. 26—31; and, viewed in this light, much of their obscurity and difficulty vanishes away.

Verse 9. But, beloved] Here he softens what he had before said: having given them the most solemn warning against apostacy, he now encourages them to persevere, commends the good that is in them, and excites them to watchfulness and activity.

living God. Several of your brethren have already apostatized; and the whole nation is in a state of rebellion against God; and, in consequence of their final rejection of Christ and his Gospel, are about to be finally rejected by God: They must meet with destruction; they have the things that are suitable to, and indicative of, a state of reprobation; the wrath of God will come upon them to the utmost: but while they meet with destruction, you shall meet with salvation. It is worthy of remark, that no genuine Christian perished in the destruction of Jerusalem; they all, previous to the siege by Titus, escaped to Pella, in Cæloxyria, and it is as remarkable that not one Jew escaped! all either fell by the sword, perished by famine, or were led into captivity! According to their own imprecation, His blood be upon us and our children! God visited and avenged the innocent blood of Christ upon them and upon their posterity; and they continue to be monuments of His displeasure to the present day.

Verse 10. God is not unrighteous] God is only bound to men by His own promise: this promise he is not obliged to make; but, when once made, His righteousness or justice requires Him to keep it: therefore, whatever He has promised, He will certainly perform. But He has promised to reward every good work and labour of love, and He will surely reward yours: God's promise is God's debt.

Every good work must spring from faith in the name, being, and goodness, of God: and every work that is truly good must have love for its motive, as it has God for its end.

The word τοιοσωνο, labour, prefixed to love, is wanting in almost every MS. and Version of importance. Griesbach has left it out of the text.

Ministered to the saints] Have contributed to the support and comfort of the poor Christians; who were suffering persecution in Judea. As they had thus ministered, and were still ministering, they gave full proof that they had a common cause with the others; and this was one of the things that proved them to be in a state of salvation.

Verse 11. We desire] Επιθυμουμεν, we earnestly wish that each person among you may continue, ενδuranceν: to manifest, exhibitis to full view, the same diligence. There might be reason to suspect that some, through fear of man, might not wish the good they did to be seen, lest they also should suffer persecution. This would not comport with the generous noble spirit of the Gospel: the man who is afraid to let his decided attachment to God be known, is not far from backsliding. He who is more afraid of man than he is of God Almighty, can have very little religion. As the church of Christ required all those who in these times embraced the Gospel, to be publicly baptized, those who submitted to this rite gave full proof that they were thoroughly convinced of the truths of Christianity; and they gave this as a public pledge that they would be faithful.

The same diligence] They had an active faith, and a labouring love; and the apostle wishes them to persevere in both. They were diligent, very diligent; and he desires them to continue so.

To the full assurance of hope] Προς τὴν πληροφάνῃα τῆς ἐλπίδος. "The full assurance of faith," says Mr. Wesley, "relates to present pardon; the full assurance of hope, to future glory; the former is the highest degree of Divine evidence that God is reconciled to me in the Son of His love; the latter is the same degree of Divine evidence wrought in the soul by the same immediate inspiration of the Holy Ghost, of persevering grace, and of eternal glory. So much and no more, as faith every moment beholds with open face; so much does hope see to all eternity. But this assurance of faith and hope is not an opinion, not a bare construction of Scriptures; but is given immediately by the power of the Holy Ghost; and what none can have for another, but for himself only."

We must not misapprehend these excellent sayings of this eminent man: 1. The person who has this full assurance of hope, is he, who not only knows and feels that his sins are forgiven through Christ Jesus; but also that his heart is purified from all unrighteousness, that the whole body of sin and death is destroyed, and that he is fully made a partaker of the Divine nature. As, without holiness, complete entire holiness, no man can see God; so, without this, none can scripturally or rationally hope for eternal glory: it being a contradiction to profess to have full assurance of hope, to enjoy a state and place for which the soul is conscious it is not prepared. 2. All that is said here must be understood as still implying the absolute necessity of continuing in the same degree of grace, from which this full assurance of hope is derived. This full assurance, therefore, does not imply that the man will absolutely persevere to the end; but that if he do persevere in this same grace, he shall infallibly have an eternal glory. There is no unconditional perseverance in the Scripture; nor can there be such in a state of probation.

Verse 12. That ye be not slothful] This shows how the full assurance of hope is to be regulated and maintained. They must be diligent: slothfulness will deprive them both of hope and faith. That faith which worketh by love will maintain hope in its full and due exercise.

imitators of them who are inheriting the promises.

And they inherited these promises by faith in Him who is invisible, and whom they knew could not lie; and they patiently endured, through difficulties and adversities of every kind, and persevered unto death. "The promises made to Abraham and to his seed, were—1. That Abraham should have a numerous seed by faith, as well as by natural descent. 2. That God would be a God to him and to his seed in their generations, by being the Object of their worship and their Protector. 3. That He would give them the possession of Canaan. 4. That he would bless all the nations of the earth in him. 5. That He would thus bless the nations through Christ, Abraham's seed. 6. That through Christ likewise, He would bless the nations with the Gospel revelation. Four of these promises the believing Gentiles were inheriting at the time the apostle wrote this letter. 1. They were become Abraham's seed by faith. 2. God was become the Object of their worship and their Protector. 3. They were enjoying the knowledge of God in the Gospel church, and the gifts of the Spirit. Gal. iii. 4. All these blessings were bestowed upon them through Christ. By observing that the believing Gentiles were actually inheriting the promises; i. e. the four promised blessings above-mentioned, the apostle appealed to an undeniable fact, in proof that the believing Gentiles, equally with the believing Jews, were heirs of the promises made to Abraham and his seed."—See Dr. Macknight. The promises may be considered as referring to the rest of faith here, and the rest of glory hereafter.

Verse 13. When God made promise to Abraham] The promise referred to is that made to Abraham when he had offered his son Isaac on the altar, Gen. xxii. 16, 17, 18. "By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for, because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thy only son; that in blessing, I will bless thee: and in multiplying, I will multiply thy seed, as the stars of the heaven, and as the sand which is upon the sea-shore; and thy seed shall possess the gate of His enemies; and in thy seed shall the nations of the earth be blessed." Of this promise, the apostle only quotes a part, as is generally the case, because he knew that his readers were well acquainted with the Scriptures of the Old Testament, and particularly with the law.

He swore by himself] He pledged His eternal power and Godhead for the fulfilment of the promise; there was no being superior to Himself, to whom He could make appeal, or by whom He could be bound; therefore, He appeals to, and pledges His immutable truth and Godhead.

Multiplying I will multiply thee] I will continue to increase thy posterity. In the most literal manner God continues to fulfil this promise: genuine Christians are Abraham's seed, and God is increasing their number daily.—See the notes on Gen. xxii. 12—18. and xxiii. 1.

Verse 15. He obtained the promise] Isaac was supernaturally born; and in his birth God began to fulfil the promise: while he lived, he saw a provision made for the multiplication of his seed; and having continued steadfast in the faith, he received the end of all the promises, in the enjoyment of an eternal glory. And the inference from this is, if we believe, and prove faithful unto death, we shall also inherit the promises; and this is what is implied in the apostle's exhortation, ver. 12. Be not slothful, but followers of them, &c.

Verse 16. Men verily swear by the greater] One who has greater authority; who can take cognizance of the obligation, and punish the breach of it.

An oath for confirmation] "This observation teaches us," says Dr. Macknight, "that both promissory oaths concerning things lawful and in our power, and oaths for the confirmation of things doubtful, when required by proper authority, and taken religiously, are allowable under the Gospel."

Verse 17. The heirs of promise] All the believing posterity of Abraham, and the nations of the earth, or Gentiles, in general.

The immutability of his counsel] His unchangeable purpose to call the Gentiles to salvation by Jesus Christ; to justify every penitent by faith: to accept faith in Christ, in place of personal righteousness; and, finally, to bring every persevering believer, whether Jew or Gentile, to eternal glory.

Verse 18. That by two immutable things] The promise and oath of God: the promise pledged His faithfulness and justice; the oath, all the infinite perfections of His Godhead; for He sware by Himself. There is a good saying in Beracoth, on Exod. xxxii. 13. fol. 32. Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel. Thy servants, to whom Thou sweardest by Thine own self. "What is the meaning of by Thine own self? Rab. Eleazar answered, Thus said Moses to the holy blessed God, Lord of all the world, If thou hadst sworn to them by the heavens and the earth, then I should have said, As the heavens and the earth shall pass away, so may thy oath pass away. But now thou hast sworn unto them by Thy great Name, which liveth, and which endureth for ever, and forever and ever: theresel, confirmed it by: an oath:

18 That by two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us:

19 Which hope we have as an anchor

d Gr. interposed himself by an oath.—e Ch. 12. 1

fore Thy oath shall endure for ever and for ever and ever."

This is a good thought: if God had sworn by any thing finite, that thing might fail, and then the obligation was at an end;—but He has sworn by what is infinite, and cannot fail; therefore His oath is of eternal obligation.

We might have a strong consolation] There appears to be an allusion here to the cities of refuge, and to the persons who fled to them for safety. As the person who killed his neighbour unawares was sure, if he gained the city of refuge, he should be safe, and had strong consolation in the hope that he should reach it; this hope animated him in his race to the city; he ran, he fled, knowing that though in danger the most imminent of losing his life, yet, as he was now acting according to an ordinance of God, he was certain of safety provided he got to the place.

It is easy to apply this to the case of a truly penitent sinner. Thou hast sinned against God and against thy own life! The avenger of blood is at thy heels! Jesus has shed His blood for thee; He is thy Intercessor before the Throne; flee to Him! Lay hold on the hope of eternal life which is offered unto thee in the Gospel! Delay not one moment! thou art never safe till thou hast redemption in His blood! God invites thee! Jesus spreads his hands to receive thee! God hath sworn that He willet not the death of a sinner: then, He cannot will thy death: take God's oath, take his promise, credit what He hath spoken and sworn! Take encouragement! Believe on the Son of God; and thou shalt not perish, but have everlasting life!

Verse 19. Which hope we have as an anchor] The apostle here changes the allusion: he represents the state of the followers of God in this lower world, as resembling that of a vessel striving to perform her voyage through a troublesome, tempestuous, dangerous sea. At last she gets near the port; but the tempest continues, the water is shallow, broken and dangerous, and she cannot get in: in order to prevent her being driven to sea again, she heaves out her sheet-anchor, which she has been able to get within the pier head, by means of her boat, though she could not herself get in; then, swinging at the length of her cable, she rides out the storm in confidence, knowing that her anchor is sound, the ground good in which it is fastened, and the cable strong. Though agitated, she is safe; though buffeted by wind and tide, she does not drive: by and by the storm ceases, the tide flows in, her sailors take to the capstan, wear the ship against the anchor, which still keeps its bite or hold, and she gets safely into port.—See on yer. 20.

The comparison of hope to an anchor is frequent among the ancient heathen writers; who supposed it to be necessary to the support of man in adversity, as the anchor is to the safety of the ship when about to be driven on a lee shore by a storm. "To ground hope on a false supposition," says Socrates, "is like trusting to a weak anchor."—He said further, οὐκ εὐνοῦν ἐστιν ἀγκυρίων, οὐκ εὐνοῦν ἐστιν ἐν μίαις ἀγκυρίαις ἀγκυρίων; a ship ought not to trust to one anchor, nor life to one hope. Stob. Serm. 109.

The hope of eternal life is here represented as the soul's anchor: the world is the boisterous dangerous sea; the Christian course, the voyage; the port, everlasting felicity; and the veil, or inner road, the royal dock in which that anchor was cast. The storms of life continue but a short time; the anchor hope, if fixed by faith in the eternal world, will infallibly prevent all shipwreck; the soul may be strongly tossed by various temptations, but will not drive, because the anchor is in sure ground, and itself is steadfast; it does not drag, and it does not break; faith, like the cable, is the connecting medium between the ship and the anchor, or the soul and its hope of heaven; faith sees the haven, hope desires and anticipates the rest; faith works and hope holds fast; and shortly, the soul enters into the haven of eternal repose.

Verse 20. Whither the forerunner] The word προδρομος, prodromos, does not merely signify one that goes or runs before another, but also one who shows the way; he who first does a particular thing; also the first-fruits. So in the Septuagint, Isa. xxviii. 4. προδρομος συκων signifies the first-fruits of the fig-tree, or the first ripe figs.

To this meaning of the word Pliny refers, Hist. Nat. lib. xvi. c. 26. Ficus et præcones habet, quas Athenis PRODROMOS, (προδρομος) vocant.—"The fig-tree produces some figs which are ripe before the rest; and these are called by the Athenians prodromos, forerunners."

The word is interpreted in the same way by Hesychius: it occurs in no other part of the New Testament, but may be found in Wisdom, chap. xii. 8. and in Isa. xxviii. 4. quoted above from the Septuagint. From this we may at once perceive the meaning of the phrase: Jesus is the first fruits of human nature that has entered into the heavenly kingdom; the first human body that was ripe for glory, and ripe long before the rest of the children who are partakers of flesh and blood. And He is entered for us, as the first-fruits of all who have found redemption in His blood.—Compare John xiv. 2. 1 Cor. xv. 20, 23. and the notes there.

The metaphorical allusion is to the person who carries the anchor within the pier head, because there is not yet water sufficient to carry the ship in; and to this I have already referred.

After the order of Melchisedec] After a long digression the apostle resumes his explanation of Psa. cx. 4. which he had produced, chap. v. 6, 10. in order to prove the permanency of the High-priesthood of Christ.

1. We have in this chapter a very solemn warning against backsliding and apostasy; and that negligence and sloth which are their forerunners. A man cannot be careless about God and heaven, till he has lost his relish for sacred things; and this relish he cannot lose while he is diligent and faithful. The slightest departure from truth and purity may ultimately lead to a denying, and even reviling of the Lord who bought him.

2. Every obedient believer in Christ Jesus has both the oath and promise of God that He will make all grace abound towards him; for, in blessing God will bless him: he may be greatly agitated and distressed, but while he continues in the obedience of faith, he will ride out the storm. His anchor is within the veil, while his heart is right with God. Jesus is gone before to prepare a place for him; and where the first-fruits are, there will soon be the whole lump. He who perseveres unto death, shall as surely see God as Jesus Christ now does. God's oath and promise cannot fail,

CHAPTER VII.

Concerning the greatness of Melchisedec, after whose order Christ is a High-priest, 1—4. The Levites had authority to take tithes of the people; yet Abraham, their representative, paid tithes to Melchisedec, 5—10. Perfection cannot come by the Mosaic law; else there could be no need for another Priest, after the order of Melchisedec, according to the prediction of David, in Psalms cx. which Priest is sprung from a tribe to which the Priesthood, according to the law, did not appertain; but Christ is a Priest for ever, not according to the law, but after the power of an endless life, 11—17. The law, therefore, is disannulled, because of its unprofitableness and imperfection; and Christ has an unchangeable Priesthood, 18—24. He is therefore able always to save them that come unto Him, being in every respect a suitable Saviour; and He has offered up Himself for the sins of the people, 25—27. The law makes those priests who have infirmity; but He who is consecrated by the oath is perfect, and endures for ever, 28.

NOTES ON CHAP. VII.

Verse 1. For this Melchisedec, king of Salem] See the whole of this history largely explained in the notes on Gen. xiv. 18, &c. and the concluding observations at the end of that chapter.

The name Melchisedec, מלכי זרק, is thus expounded in Bereshith Rabba, sec. 43. fol. 42. mitsadic et Yoshebais, "The Justifier of those who dwell in Him;" and this is sufficiently true of Christ, but false of Jerusalem, to which the rabbins apply it; who state that it was originally called Tzedek, and that it justifies its inhabitants.

Salem is generally understood to be Jerusalem: but some think that it was that city of Shechem mentioned Josh. iii. 23. St. Jerom was of this opinion.

Verse 2. Gave a tenth part of all] It was an ancient custom among all the nations of the earth, to consecrate a part or tenth of the spoils taken in war to the objects of their worship. Many examples of this kind occur. This, however, was not according to any provision in law, but merely ad libitum, and as an eucharistic offering to those to whom they imagined they owed the victory. But neither Abraham's decimation, nor theirs, had any thing to do either with tithes as prescribed under the Mosaic dispensation, or as claimed under the Christian.

Verse 3. Without father, without mother] The object of the apostle, in thus producing the example of Melchisedec, was to show—1. That Jesus was the Person prophesied of in the cith Psalm; which Psalm the Jews uniformly understood as predicting the Messiah. 2. To answer the objections of the Jews against the legitimacy of the Priesthood of Christ, taken from the stock from which He proceeded. The objection is this:—if the Messiah is to be a true priest, he must come from a legitimate stock, as all the priests under the law have regularly done; otherwise we cannot acknowledge him to be a priest. But Jesus of Nazareth has not proceeded from such a stock; therefore we cannot acknowledge him for a priest, the anti-type of Aaron. To this objection the apostle answers, that it was not necessary for the priest to come from a particular stock; for Melchisedec was a priest of the Most High God, and yet was not of the stock, either of Abraham or Aaron, but a Canaanite. It is well known that the ancient Hebrews were exceedingly scrupulous in choosing their high-priest; partly by Divine command, and partly from the tradition of their ancestors, who always considered this office to be of the highest dignity. 1. God had commanded, Lev. xxi. 10. that the high-priest should be chosen from among their brethren; i. e. from the family of Aaron. 2. That he should marry a virgin. 3. He must not marry a widow. 4. Nor a divorced person. 5. Nor a harlot. 6. Nor one of another nation. He who was found to have acted contrary to these requisitions, was, jure Divino, excluded from the pontificate. On the contrary, it was necessary, that he who desired this honour should be able to prove his descent from the family of Aaron; and if he could not, though even in the priesthood, he was cast out, as we find from Ezra ii. 62. and Nehem. vii. 63.

To these Divine ordinances the Jews have added, 1. That no proselyte could be a priest; 2. Nor a slave; 3. Nor a bastard; 4. Nor the son of a Nethlinim; 5. Nor one whose father exercised any base trade. And that they might be well assured of all this, they took the utmost care to preserve their genealogies, which were regularly kept in the archives of the temple. When any person aspired to the sacerdotal function, his genealogical table was carefully inspected; and if any of the above blemishes was found in him, he was rejected.

He who could not support his pretensions by just genealogical evidences, was said by the Jews to be without father. Thus in Bereshith Rabba, sect. 18. fol. 18. on these words, For this cause shall a man leave father and mother— It is said, if a proselyte to the Jewish religion have married his own sister, whether by the same father or by the same mother, they cast her out, according to Rabbi Meir. But the wise men say, if she be of the same mother, they cast her out; but, if of the same father, they retain her, וְלֹא יָרֵד אִתָּךְ לְאִשְׁתְּךָ לְאִשְׁתְּךָ, "for a Gentile has no father;" i. e. his father is not reckoned in the Jewish genealogies. In this way both Christ and Melchisedec were without father and without mother; i. e. were not descended from the original Jewish sacerdotal stock. Yet Melchisedec, who was a Canaanite, was a priest of the Most High God. This sense Suidas confirms under the word Melchisedec, where, after having stated that, having reigned in Salem 113 years, he died a righteous man and a bachelor, Ἀγαλλογῆτος ἦν, παρα το μὴ ὑπαρχῆν ἐν τοῦ σπυριματος Ἀβρααμ ὅλος ἦναι δὲ Χαναανὸς το γένος, καὶ ἐν τῷ πατρῶνι σπυρις ἰρμαμον, ὅθεν οὐδὲ γενεαλογίας ἤβητο, he adds, "He is, therefore, said to be without descent or genealogy, because he was not of the seed of Abraham, but of Canaanitish origin, and sprung from an accursed seed; therefore he is without the honour of a genealogy." And he further adds, "That, because it would have been highly improper for him, who was the most righteous of men, to be joined in affinity to the most unrighteous of nations, he is said to be απατὴρ καὶ ἀμωτέρα, without father, and without mother." This sort of phraseology was not uncommon, when the genealogy of a person was unknown or obscure: so Seneca in his 108th epistle, speaking of some of the Roman kings, says, De Servii matre dubitatur: Anci pater nullus dicitur. "Of the mother of Servius Tullius, there are doubts; and Ancus Marcus is said to have no father." This only signifies, that the parents were either unknown or obscure. Titus Livius speaking of Servius, says, he was born of a slave, named Cornicularia, de patre nullo, of no father, i. e. his father was unknown. Horace is to be understood in the same way:

Ante potestatem Tulli, atque ignobile regnum, Multos accepe viros NULLIUS MAJORIBUS ortos, Et vizisse probos, amplius et honoribus auctos.

FRANCIS.

The viros nullius majoribus ortos, men sprung from no ancestors, mean simply, men who were born of obscure or undistinguished parents; i. e. persons who had never been famous nor of any public account.

The old Syriac has given the true meaning, by translating thus:—

ⲛⲉ ⲁⲃⲁⲧⲉ ⲛⲉⲙⲉⲧ ⲉⲧⲥⲁⲗⲥⲏⲃⲏ ⲃⲉⲃⲁⲃⲏⲃⲏ.—
Whose father and mother are not inscribed among the genealogies.

The Arabic is nearly the same.

ⲁⲃⲁⲧⲉ ⲛⲉⲙⲉⲧ ⲉⲧⲥⲁⲗⲥⲏⲃⲏ ⲃⲉⲃⲁⲃⲏⲃⲏ.—
He had neither father nor mother; the genealogy not being reckoned.

The Aethiopic: He had neither father nor mother upon earth; nor is his genealogy known.

As this passage has been obscure and troublesome to many, and I have thought it necessary to show the meaning of such phraseology by different examples; I shall, in order to give the reader full information on the subject, add a few observations from Dr. Owen.

"It is said of Melchisedec, in the first place, that he was απατὴρ ἀμωτέρα, without father, and without mother. Whereon part of the latter clause, namely, 'without beginning of days,' doth depend. But how could a mortal man come into the world, without father or mother? 'Man that is born of a woman,' is the description of every man: what, therefore, can be intended? The next word declares, he was ἀγενεαλογητός: 'without descent,' say we. But γενεαλογία, is a generation, a descent, a pedigree, not absolutely, but rehearsed, described, recorded. Γενεαλογητός, is he whose stock and descent is entered on record. And so, on the contrary, ἀγενεαλογητός, is not he who has no descent, no genealogy; but he whose descent and pedigree is no where entered, recorded, reckoned up. Thus the apostle himself plainly expresses this word, ver. 6. ὁ μὴ γενεαλογημένος, ἔξ αὐτῶν; 'whose descent is not counted,' that is, reckoned up in record. Thus was Melchisedec without father or mother, in that the Spirit of God, who so strictly and exactly recorded the genealogies of other patriarchs and types of Christ, and that for no less an end than to manifest the truth and faithfulness of God in His promises, speaks nothing to this purpose concerning him. He is introduced, as if were, one falling from heaven, appearing on a sudden, reigning at Salem, and officiating in the office of priesthood to the High God.

"2. On the same account is he to be μὴτε ἀρχῆν ἔμελλεν, μὴτε ἕως τέλος εἶχεν: 'without beginning of days, or end of life.' For, as he was a mortal man, he had both. He was assuredly born, and did no less certainly die, than other men. But neither of these are recorded concerning him. We have no more to do with him, to learn from him, nor are concerned in him, but only as he is described in the Scripture; and there is no mention therein of the beginning of his days, or the end of his life. Whatever, therefore, he might have in himself, he had none to us. Consider all the other patriarchs mentioned in the writings of Moses, and you shall find their descent recorded, who was their father, and so up to the first man; and not only so, but the time of their birth, the beginning of their days, and the end of their life, is exactly recorded. For it is constantly said of them, such an one lived so long, and begat such a son, which fixed the time of birth. Then of him so begotten, it is said, he lived so many years, which determines the end of his days. These things are expressly recorded. But concerning Melchisedec none of these things are spoken. No mention is made of father or mother; no genealogy is recorded of what stock or progeny he was; nor is there any account of his birth or death. So that all these things are wanting to him in this historical narration, wherein our faith and knowledge is alone concerned."

Made like unto the Son of God] Melchisedec was without father and mother, having neither beginning of days nor end of life. His genealogy is not recorded. When he was born, and when he died, unknown. His priesthood, therefore, may be considered as perpetual. In these respects he was like to Jesus Christ, who, as to His Godhead, had neither father nor mother, beginning of time, nor end of days; and has an everlasting Priesthood. The priesthood of Melchisedec is to abide continually on the same ground that he is said to be without father and mother; i. e. there is no record of the end of his priesthood or life, no more than there is any account of his ancestry.

are of the sons of Levi, who receive the office of the priesthood, have a commandment to take tithes of the people according to the law, that is, of their brethren, though they come out of the loins of Abraham:
6 But he whose descent is not counted from them received tithes of a Or, pedigree.—Gen. 14. 19.

Verse 4. Consider how great this man was] There is something exceedingly mysterious in the person and character of this king of Salem; and to find out the whole is impossible. He seems to have been a sort of universal priest, having none superior to him in all that region; and confessedly superior even to Abraham himself, the father of the faithful, and source of the Jewish race. See ver. 7.

The patriarch Abraham] Ὁ πατριάρχης, either from πατήρ, a father, and αρχή, a chief or head; or from πατρις αρχή, the head of a family. But the title is here applied, by way of eminence, to him who was the head or chief of all the fathers, or patriarch of the patriarchs, and father of the faithful. The Syriac translates it] ܐܒܪܗܡܐ ܕܥܠܡܐ Rish Abahatha, "head of the fathers." The character and conduct of Abraham place him as a man deservedly at the head of the human race.

Verse 5. They that are of the sons of Levi] The priests who are of the posterity of the Levites, and receive the priesthood in virtue of their descent from Aaron, have authority from the law of God to receive tithes from the people.

According to the law] That is, the Levites received a tenth from the people. The priests received a tenth of this tenth from the Levites, who are here called their brethren, because they were of the same tribe, and employed in the same sacred work. The apostle is proceeding to show that Melchisedec was greater even than Abraham, the head of the fathers; for to him Abraham gave tithes: and as the Levites were the posterity of Abraham, they are represented here as paying tithes to Melchisedec through him. Yet Melchisedec was not of this family, and therefore must be considered as having a more honourable priesthood than even Aaron himself; for he took the tenth from Abraham, not for his maintenance, for he was a king; but in virtue of his office, as universal high-priest of all that region.

Verse 6. Blessed him that had the promises.] This is a continuation of the same argument; namely, to show the superiority of Melchisedec; and, in consequence, to prove the superiority of the Priesthood of Christ beyond that of Aaron. As in the seed of Abraham all the nations of the earth were to be blessed. Abraham received a sacerdotal blessing from Melchisedec, who was the representative of the Messiah, the promised Seed; to show that it was through Him, as the High-priest of the human race, that this blessing was to be derived on all mankind.

Abraham, b and blessed him that had the promises.

7 And without all contradiction the less is blessed of the better.

8 And here men that die receive tithes; but there he receiveth them, d of whom it is witnessed that he liveth.

9 And as I may so say, Levi also, c Rom. 4. 16. Gal. 3. 16.—d Ch. 5. 6. & 6. 20.

Verse 7. The less is blessed of the better.] That the superior blesses the inferior, is a general proposition: but Abraham was blessed of Melchisedec; therefore Melchisedec was greater than Abraham. "The blessing here spoken of," says Dr. Macknight, "is not the simple wishing of good to others, which may be done, by inferiors to superiors: but it is the action of a person authorized to declare God's intention to bestow good things on another. In this manner Isaac and Jacob blessed their children under a prophetic impulse. In this manner the priests under the law blessed the people; in this manner, likewise, Melchisedec, the priest of the Most High God, blessed Abraham."

Verse 8. Here men that die receive tithes] The apostle is speaking of the ecclesiastical constitution of the Jews, which was standing at the time this epistle was written. Under the Jewish dispensation, though the priests were successively removed by death, yet they were as duly replaced by others appointed from the same family; and the payment of tithes was never interrupted. But as there is no account of Melchisedec ceasing to be a priest, or of his dying; he is represented as still living, the better to point him out as a type of Christ, and to show his priesthood to be more excellent than that which was according to the law; as an unchanging priesthood must be more excellent than that which was continually changing.

But there he receiveth them] The οὗτος, here, in the first clause of this verse, refers to Mosaic institutions, as then existing: the αὐτός, there, in this clause refers to the place in Genesis, (chap. xiv. 20.) where it is related that Abraham gave tithes to Melchisedec, who is still considered as being alive, or without successor, because there is no account of his death, nor of any termination of his priesthood.

Verse 9. And as I may so say.] Καί τις εἶπεν ἡμῖν, And so, to speak a word. This form of speech, which is very frequent among the purest Greek writers, is generally used to soften some harsh expression; or to limit the meaning when the proposition might otherwise appear to be too general. It answers fully to our so to speak—as one would say—I had almost said—in a certain sense. Many examples of its use by Aristotle, Philo, Lucian, Josephus, Demosthenes, Eschines, and Plutarch, may be seen in Rapheilius and Kypke.

Paid tithes in Abraham.] The Levites, who were descendants of Abraham, paid tithes to Melchisedec, via, through Abraham, their progenitor and representative.

10 For he was yet in the

A. U. C. cir. 816. Melchisedec met him.

11 ^a If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood, (for under it the people received the law,) what further need was there that another priest should rise after the order of Melchisedec, and not be called after the order of Aaron?

12 For, the priesthood being changed,

^a Gal. 2. 21. Ver. 18, 19. Ch. 8. 7.

Verse 10. For he was yet in the loins of his father] That is, Levi was seminally included in Abraham, his forefather.

Verse 11. If therefore perfection were by the Levitical priesthood] The word τελειωσις, as we have before seen, signifies the completing or finishing of any thing, so as to leave nothing imperfect, and nothing wanting. Applied here to the Levitical priesthood, it signifies the accomplishment of that for which a priesthood is established, viz. giving the Deity an acceptable service; enlightening and instructing the people, pardoning all offences, purging the conscience from guilt, purifying the soul, and preparing it for heaven; and regulating the conduct of the people according to the precepts of the moral law. This perfection never came, and never could come, by the Levitical law:—it was the shadow of good things to come, but was not the substance. It represented a perfect system, but was imperfect in itself: it showed that there was guilt, and that there was an absolute need for a sacrificial offering to atone for sin; and it typified that Sacrifice; but every sacrificial act under that law most forcibly proved that it was impossible for the blood of BULLS and GOATS to take away sin.

For, under it the people received the law] That is, as most interpret this place, under the priesthood, παρουσια, being understood; because, on the priesthood, the whole Mosaic law, and the Jewish economy, depended: but it is much better to understand εν αυτη, on account of it, instead of under it; for it is a positive fact that the law was given before any priesthood was established; for Aaron and his sons were not called nor separated to this office till Moses came down the second time from the mount, with the tables renewed, after that he had broken them, Exod. xl. 12—14. But it was in reference to the great sacrificial system that the law was given; and on that law the priesthood was established: for, why was a priesthood necessary, but because that law was broken, and must be fulfilled?

That another priest should rise] The law was given that the offence might abound, and sin appear exceeding sinful; and to show the absolute necessity of the Sacrifice and Mediation of the great Messiah: but it was neither perfect in itself, nor could it confer perfection; nor did it contain the original priesthood. Mel-there is made of necessity a change also of the law.

13 For he of whom these things are spoken pertaineth to another tribe, of which no man gave attendance at the altar.

14 For it is evident that ^b our Lord sprang out of Judah; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood.

15 And it is yet far more evident: for that after the similitude of Melchisedec there ariseth another priest, chisedec had a priesthood more than four hundred years, (422,) before the law was given; and David prophesied, Psa. cx. 4. that another Priest should arise, after the order of Melchisedec, nearly five hundred years, (476,) after the law was given. The law, therefore, did not contain the original priesthood; this existed typically in Melchisedec, and really in Jesus Christ.

Verse 12. The priesthood being changed.] That is, the order of Aaron being now abrogated, to make way for that which had preceded it, the order of Melchisedec.

There is made of necessity a change also of the law.] The very essence of the Levitical law consisting in its sacrificial offerings: and as these could not confer perfection, could not reconcile God to man, purify the unholly heart, nor open the kingdom of heaven to the souls of men, consequently it must be abolished, according to the order of God himself; for, He said, Sacrifice and offering, and burnt-offering, and sacrifice for sin, he would not; see Psal. xl. 6, 7. compared with Heb. x. 5—10. and with Psal. cx. 4. where it is evident God designed to change both the law and the priesthood; and to introduce Jesus as the only Priest and Sacrifice; and to substitute the Gospel system for that of the Levitical institutions. The priesthood, therefore, being changed, Jesus coming in the place of Aaron, the law of ordinances and ceremonies, which served only to point out the Messiah, must of necessity be changed also.

Verse 13. For he of whom these things are spoken] That is, Jesus the Messiah, spoken of in Psa. cx. 4. who came from the tribe of Judah, not from the tribe of Levi, of which tribe no priest ever ministered at a Jewish altar, nor could minister according to the law.

Verse 14. For it is evident] As the apostle speaks here with so much confidence, it follows that our Lord's descent from the tribe of Judah was incontrovertible. The genealogical tables, both in Matthew and Luke, establish this point; and whatever difficulties we may find in them now, there were none apprehended in those days; else the enemies of the Gospel would have urged this as a chief and unanswerable argument against Christ and his Gospel.

Verse 15. And it is yet far more evident] Κατα περισσοτερον ενι καταβολη ενου, and besides it is more abundantly strikingly manifest. It is very 16 Who is made, not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life.

17 For he testifieth, ^aThou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec.

18 For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before for

^a Psa. 110. 4. Ch. 5. 6, 10, & 6. 20.—Rom. 8. 3. Gal. 4. 9.—Acts 13. 39. Rom. 3. 20; 21, 28, & 3. 3. Gal. 2. 16. Ch. 9. 9.

difficult to translate these words; but the apostle's meaning is plain, viz. that God designed the Levitical priesthood to be changed, because of the oath in Psa. cx. where, addressing the Messiah, He says, Thou art a Priest for ever, after the order, or ομνύματα, similitude, of Melchisedec; who was not only a priest, but also a king. None of the Levitical priests sustained this double office; but they both, with that of prophet, appear and were exercised in the Person of our Lord, who is the Priest to which the apostle alludes.

Verse 16. Who is made] Appointed to this high office by God Himself; not succeeding one that was disabled or dead, according to that law, or ordinance, directed to weak and perishing men, who could not continue by reason of death.

This is probably all that the apostle intends by the words carnal commandment, κάρνας εντολῆς: for carnal does not always mean sinful or corrupt; but feeble, frail, or what may be said of or concerning man in his present dying condition.

But after the power of an endless life] Not dying, or ceasing through weakness, to be a priest; but properly immortal Himself, and having the power to confer life and immortality on others. He ever lives as Priest, to make intercession for men; and they who believe on Him shall never perish, but have everlasting life.

Verse 17. For he testifieth] That is, either the Scripture in the place so often quoted, or God, by that Scripture.

Thou art a priest for ever] This is the proof that He was not appointed according to the carnal commandment; but according to the power of an endless life, because He is a Priest for ever; i. e. one that never dies, and is never disabled from performing the important functions of His office; for, if He be a Priest for ever, He ever lives.

Verse 18. For there is verily a disannulling] There is a total abrogation, προαγνοῦναι παλαιῆς, of the former law, relative to the Levitical priesthood.—See ver. 19.

For the weakness] It had no energy; it communicated none; it had no Spirit to minister; it required perfect obedience, but furnished no assistance to those who were under it.

And unprofitableness] No man was benefited by the mere observance of its precepts: it pardoned no sin, changed no heart, reformed no life: it found men dead in trespasses and sins, and it consigned them to eternal death. It was, therefore, weak in itself, and unprofitable to men.

The Jews, who still cleave to it, are a proof that it is both weak and unprofitable; for there the weakness and unprofitableness thereof.

19 For ^cthe law made nothing perfect, ^dbut the bringing in of ^ea better hope did; by the which we ^fdraw nigh unto God.

^d Or, but it was the bringing in, Gal. 3. 24.—Ch. 6. 12, & 2. 6.—Rom. 5. 2. Eph. 2. 18, & 3. 12. Ch. 4. 16, & 10. 19.

is not a more miserable, distressed, and profigate class of men on the face of the earth.

Verse 19. For the law made nothing perfect] It completed nothing; it was only the outline of a great plan, the shadow of a glorious substance; see of ver. 11. It neither pardoned sin, nor purified the heart: nor gave strength to obey the moral precepts.—Oὐδὲν, nothing, is put here for ούδυνα, no person.

But the bringing in of a better hope] The original is very emphatic, ἰσχυροτέρα, the super introduction, or the after introduction; and this seems to be put in opposition to the προαγνοῦναι παλαιῆς, the preceding commandment, or former Levitical law, of ver. 18. This went before, to prepare the way of the Lord; to show the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and the strict justice of God. The better hope, which referred not to earthly, but to spiritual good, not to temporal, but eternal felicity, founded on the Priesthood and atonement of Christ, was afterward introduced for the purpose of doing what the law could not do; and giving privileges and advantages which the law would not afford. One of these privileges immediately follows:—

By the which we draw nigh unto God.] This is a sacerdotal phrase: the high-priest alone could approach to the Divine presence in the holy of holies; but not without the blood of the sacrifice; and that only once in the year. But through Christ, as our High-priest, all believers in Him have an entrance to the holiest by His blood; and through Him perform acceptable service to God. The better hope means in this place Jesus Christ, who is the Author and Object of the hope of eternal life, which all His genuine followers possess. He is called our hope, 1 Tim. i. 1; Col. i. 27.

Verse 20. Not without an oath] "The apostle's reasoning here is founded on this; that God never interposed His oath, except to show the certainty and immutability of the thing sworn. Thus He swore to Abraham, Gen. xxii. 16—18. That in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed; and to the rebellious Israelites, Deut. i. 34, 35. That they should not enter into his rest:—and to Moses, Deut. iv. 21. That he should not go into Canaan:—and to David, Psa. lxxxix. 4. That his seed should endure for ever, and his throne unto all generations. Wherefore, since Christ was made a Priest, not without an oath, that He should be a priest for ever, after the similitude of Melchisedec; that circumstance showed God's immutable resolution never to change or abolish His Priesthood; nor to change or abolish the covenant which was established on His priesthood; whereas the Levitical priesthood, and the law of Moses, being established without an oath, were thereby declared to be changeable at God's pleasure." This judicious note is from Dr. Macknight.

Verse 21. Those priests] The Levitical were made without an oath, to show that the whole system was changeable, and might be abolished:—

But this] The everlasting Priesthood of Christ, with an oath, to show that the Gospel dispensation should never change, and never be abolished.

By him] God the Father:—that said unto him, the promised Messiah, Psa. cx. 4. The Lord swear, to show the immutability of His counsel:—And will not repent: can never change His mind nor purpose. Thou art a Priest for ever—as long as time shall run, and the generations of men be continued on earth. Till the necessity of the mediatorial kingdom be superseded by the fixed state of eternity; till this kingdom be delivered up unto the Father, and God shall be in all in all, shall this Priesthood of Christ endure.

Verse 22. By so much] This solemn unchangeable oath of God: was Jesus made a surety, εγγυε, a mediator; one who brings the two parties together, witnesses the contract, and offers the covenant Sacrifice on the occasion.—See at the end of the chapter.

A better testament] Κυριωτερον διαβηου, a better covenant; called in the title of the sacred books, which contain the whole Christian code, ἡ Καινη Διαβηου, THE NEW COVENANT, thus contradistinguished from the Mosaic, which was the old covenant; and this is called the new and better covenant, because God has in it promised other blessings, to other people, on other conditions than the old covenant did. The new covenant is better than the old, in the following particulars:—1. God promised to the Jewish nation certain secular blessings, peculiar to that nation, on condition of their keeping the law of Moses; but, under the new covenant, He promises pardon of sin, and final salvation to all mankind, on condition of believing on Jesus Christ, and walking in his testimonies. 2. The Jewish priests, fallible, dying men, were mediators of the old covenant, by means of their sacrifices, which could not take away sin, nor render the comers thereunto perfect. But Jesus Christ, who liveth for ever, who is infinite in wisdom and power, by the sacrifice of Himself, has established this new covenant; and, by the shedding of His blood, has opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers.

Verse 23. And they truly were many priests] Under the Mosaic law, it was necessary there should be a succession of priests; because, being mortal, they were not suffered to continue always, by reason of death.

Verse 24. But this] ὁ θεος, but he, that is, Christ; because he continueth ever, is eternal, hath an unchangeable priesthood; απαρακατος ἰσχυριον, a priesthood that passeth not away from Him; He lives for ever, and He lives a Priest for ever.

Verse 25. Wherefore] Because He is an everlasting Priest, and has offered the only available Sacrifice; He is able to save from the power, guilt, nature, and punishment, of sin—to the uttermost; εις το παντα, to all intents, degrees, and purposes; and always, and in and through all times, places, and circumstances; for all this is implied in the original word:—but, in and through all times, seems to be the particular meaning here, because of what follows, he ever liveth to make intercession for them; this depends on the perpetuity of His priesthood, and the continuance of His mediatorial office. As Jesus was the Lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world, has an everlasting Priesthood, and is a continual Intercessor; it is in virtue of this, that all who were saved from the foundation of the world, were saved through Him: and all that shall be saved to the end of the world, will be saved through Him. He ever was, and ever will be, the High-priest, Sacrifice, Intercessor, and Mediator, of the human race. All successive generations of men are equally interested in Him, and may claim the same privileges. But none can be saved by his grace that do not come unto God through him; i. e. imploring mercy through Him as their Sacrifice and atonement; confidently trusting that God can be just, and yet the justifier of them who thus come to Him, believing on Christ Jesus.

The phrase προσχευωνται, to make intercession for a person, has a considerable latitude of meaning. It signifies, 1. To come to, or meet, a person on any cause whatever. 2. To intercede, pray for, or entreat, in the behalf of another. 3. To defend, or vindicate, a person. 4. To commend. 5. To furnish any kind of assistance or help. 6. And, with the preposition κατα, against, to accuse, or act against another in a judicial way.

"The nature of the apostle's arguments," says Dr. Macknight, "requires, that by Christ's always living, we understand His always living in the body: for it is thus that he is an affectionate and sympathizing High-priest; who, in His intercession, pleads the merit of His death to procure the salvation of all who come unto God through Him. Agreeably to this account of Christ's intercession, the apostle, in ver. 27, mentions the sacrifice of Himself, which Christ offered for the sins of the people, as the foundation of His intercession. Now, as he offered that sacrifice in heaven, chap. viii. 2, 3, by presenting His crucified body there, (see chap. viii. 5. note,) and as He continually resides there in the body, some of the ancients were of opinion, that His continual intercession consists in the continual presentation of His humanity before His Father; because it is a continual declaration of His earnest desire of the salvation of men, and of His having, in obedience to His Father's will, made Himself flesh, and suffered death to accomplish it.—See Rom. viii. 34. note 3. This opinion is confirmed by the manner in which the Jewish high-priest made intercession for the people on the day of atonement, and which was a type of Christ's intercession in heaven. He made it, not by offering of prayers for them, in the most holy place, but by sprinkling the blood of the sacrifices on the mercy-seat, in token of their death. And as, by that action, he opened the earthly holy places to the prayers and worship of the Israelites during the ensuing year; so Jesus, by presenting His humanity continually before the presence of His Father, opens heaven to the prayers of His people in the present life, and to their persons after the resurrection."

Verse 26. Such a high-priest became us] Such a High-priest was in every respect suitable to us—every way qualified to accomplish the end for which He came into the world. There is probably here an allusion to the qualifications of the Jewish high-priest.—

1. He was required to be holy, ἅγιος, answering to the Hebrew חסיד chasid, merciful. Holiness was his calling; and as he was the representative of his brethren, he was required to be merciful and compassionate.

2. He was to be harmless, ἀκακός, without evil, holy without, and holy within; injuring none, but rather living for the benefit of others.

3. He was undefiled, ἀμώματος, answering to the Hebrew בא מומ baal mom, without blemish; having no bodily imperfection. Nothing low, mean, base, or unbecoming, in his conduct.

4. He was separate from sinners, χωρισμένος ἀπὸ τῶν ἀμαρτανῶν, by his office, he was separated from all men and worldly occupations; and entirely devoted to the service of God. And, as to sinners or heathens, he was never to be found in their society.

5. Higher than the heavens. There may be some reference here to the exceeding dignity of the high-priesthood: it was the highest office that could be sustained by man; the high-priest himself being the immediate representative of God.

But these things suit our Lord in a sense in which they cannot be applied to the high-priest of the Jews.

1. He was holy, infinitely so; and merciful, witness His shedding His blood for the sins of mankind.

2. Harmless; perfectly without sin, in His humanity, as well as His Divinity.

3. Undefiled; contracted no sinful infirmity in consequence of his dwelling among men.

4. Separate from sinners; absolutely unblameable in the whole of His conduct; so that he could challenge the most inveterate of His enemies with Which of you convicteth me of sin? Who of you can show in my conduct the slightest deviation from truth and righteousness?

5. Higher than the heavens; more exalted than all the angels of God—than all created beings, whether thrones, dominions, principalities, or powers; because all these were created by Him and for Him, and derive their continued subsistence from His infinite energy.

But how was a person of such infinite dignity suitable to us? His greatness is put in opposition to our meanness. He was holy; we unholy: He was harmless; we harmful, injuring both ourselves and others. He was undefiled; we defiled, most sinfully spotted and impure. He was separated from sinners; we were joined to sinners, companions of the vile, the worthless, the profane, and the wicked. He was higher than the heavens; we, baser and lower than the earth; totally unworthy to be called the creatures of God. And had we not had such a Saviour, and had we not been redeemed at an infinite price, we should, to use the nervous language of Milton on another occasion, "after a shameful life and end in this world, have been thrown down eternally, into the darkest and deepest gulf of hell; where, under the despicable control, the trample and spurn of all the other damned, that in the anguish of their torture should have no other ease than to exercise a raving and bestial tyranny over us as their slaves, we must have remained in that plight for ever, the basest, the lowermost, the most dejected, most under-foot and down-trodden vassals of perdition."—MILTON on Reformation, in fine.

Verse 27. Who needeth not daily] Though the high-priest offered the great atonement only once in the year; yet, in the Jewish services, there was a daily acknowledgment of sin; and a daily sacrifice offered by the priests, at whose head was the high-priest, for their own sins and the sins of the people. The Jews held that a priest who neglected his own expiatory sacrifice, would be smitten with death.—Sanhedr. f. 83.

When they offered this victim, they prayed the following prayer:—"O Lord, I have sinned, and have done wickedly, and gone astray before thy face; I, and my house, and the sons of Aaron, the people of thy holiness. I beseech thee, for thy name's sake, blot out the sins, iniquities, and transgressions, by which I have sinned, done wickedly, and gone astray before thy face, I and my house, and the sons of Aaron, the people of thy holiness; as it is written in the law of Moses thy servant.—(Lev. xvi. 30.)—On that day shall he make an atonement for you, to cleanse you, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord!" To which the Levites answered, "Blessed be the name of the glory of thy kingdom, for ever and ever!"

[This prayer states, that the priest offered a sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the sins of the people, as the apostle asserts.

For this he did once] For Himself He offered no sacrifice: and the apostle gives the reason, He needed none; because He was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners: and for the people, He offered Himself once for all, when he expired upon the cross.

It hath been very properly remarked, that the sacrifice offered by Christ differed, in four essential respects, from those offered by the Jewish priests:—1. He offered no sacrifice for Himself, but only for the people. 2. He did not offer that sacrifice annually, but once for all. 3. The sacrifice which He offered was not of calves and goats, but of Himself. 4. This sacrifice He offered, not for one people, but for the whole human race: for He tasted death for every man.

Verse 28. For the law maketh men high-priests] The Jewish priests have need of these repeated offerings and sacrifices, because they are fallible sinful men: but the word of the oath, (still referring to Psa. cx. 4.) which was since the law: for David, who mentions this, lived nearly 500 years after the giving of the law, and consequently, that oath, constituting another priesthood, abrogates the law, and by this the Son is consecrated, τελειωμένος is perfected for evermore. Being a High-priest without blemish, immaculately holy, every way perfect, immortal, and eternal, He is a Priest, ως τοι αιωνα, to ETERNITY.

I. There are several respects in which the apostle shows the Priesthood of Christ to be more excellent than that of the Jews, which Priesthood was typified by that of Melchisedec.

1. Being after the order of Melchisedec, there was no need of a rigorous examination of His genealogy to show His right.

2. He has an eternal Priesthood; whereas theirs was but temporal.

3. The other priests, as a token of the dignity of their office, and their state of dependence on God, received tithes from the people. Melchisedec, a priest and king, after whose order

Christ comes, tilthed Abraham, Ἰδμετατος τοι Αβρααμ, the father of the patriarchs: Jesus, infinitely greater than all, having an absolute and independent life, needs none. He is no man's debtor, but all receive out of His fulness.

4. He alone can bless the people: not by praying for their good merely, but by communicating the good which is necessary.

5. As another priesthood, different from that of Aaron, was promised, it necessarily implies that the Levitical priesthood was insufficient: the Priesthood of Christ being that promised, must be greater than that of Aaron.

6. That which God has appointed and consecrated with an oath, as to endure for ever, must be greater than that which He has appointed, simply for a time: but the Priesthood of Christ is thus appointed: therefore, &c.

7. All the Levitical priests were fallible and sinful men; but Christ was holy and undefiled.

8. The Levitical priests were only by their office distinguished from the rest of their brethren, being equally frail, mortal, and corruptible: but Jesus, our High-priest, is higher than the heavens. The statements from which these differences are drawn are all laid down in this chapter.

As the word surety, ἡγγυς, in ver. 22. has been often abused, or used in an unscriptural and dangerous sense, it may not be amiss to inquire a little further into its meaning. The Greek word ἡγγυς, from ἡγγυς, a pledge, is supposed to be so called from being lodged, ἡγγυς, in the hands of the creditor. It is nearly of the same meaning with bail, and signifies an engagement made by C. with A., that B. shall fulfil certain conditions, then and there specified, for which C. makes himself answerable: if, therefore B. fails, C. becomes wholly responsible to A. In such suretiship, it is never designed that C. shall pay any debt, or fulfil any engagement, that belongs to B.; but if B. fail, then C. becomes responsible, because he had pledged himself for B. In this scheme A. is the person legally empowered to take the bail or pledge, B. the debtor, and C. the surety.—The idea, therefore, of B. paying his own debt, is necessarily implied in taking the surety. Were it once to be supposed that the surety undertakes absolutely to pay the debt, his suretiship is at an end, and he becomes the debtor; and the real debtor is no longer bound. Thus the nature of the transaction becomes entirely changed, and we find nothing but debtor and creditor in the case. In this sense, therefore, the word ἡγγυς, which we translate surety, cannot be applied in the above case, for Christ never became surety that if men did not fulfil the conditions of this better covenant, i. e. repent of sin, turn from it, believe on the Son of God, and having received grace, walk as children of the light, and be faithful unto death; that He would do all these things for them Himself! This would be both absurd and impossible; and hence the gloss of some here is both absurd and dangerous—viz. "That Christ was the surety of the first covenant, to pay the debt; of the second, to perform the duty." That it cannot have this meaning in the passage in question, is sufficiently proved by Dr. Macknight; and, instead of extending my own reasoning on the subject, I shall transcribe his note:—

"The Greek commentators explain this word εγγυος very properly, by μεσσιτης, a mediator, which is its etymological meaning; for it comes from εγγος, near, and signifies one who draws near, or who causes another to draw near. Now, as in this passage a comparison is stated between Jesus as a High-priest, and the Levitical high-priests; and as these were justly considered by the apostle as the mediators of the Sinaitic covenant, because, through their mediation the Israelites worshipped God with sacrifices, and received from Him, as their king, a political pardon, in consequence of the sacrifices offered by the high priest on the day of atonement; it is evident that the apostle in this passage calls Jesus the High-priest, or Mediator of the better covenant; because, through His mediation, that is, through the sacrifice of Himself, which He offered to God, believers receive all the blessings of the better covenant. And as the apostle has said, ver. 16. that by the introduction of a better hope, εγγυζομεν, we draw near to God; he in this verse very properly calls Jesus εγγυος, rather than μεσσιτης, to denote the effect of His mediation.—See ver. 25. Our translators, indeed, following the Vulgate and Beza, have rendered εγγυος, by the word surety, a sense which it has, Ecclesiasticus xxix. 16. and which naturally enough follows from its etymological meaning: for the person who becomes surety for the good behaviour of another, or for his performing something stipulated, brings that other near to the party to whom he gives the security; he reconciles the two. But in this sense the word εγγυος is not applicable to the Jewish high-priests; for, to be a proper surety, one must either have power to compel the party to perform that for which he has become his surety; or in case of his not performing it, he must be able to perform it himself. This being the case, will any one say that the Jewish high priests were sureties to God for the Israelites performing their part of the covenant of the law? Or to the people for God's performing His part of the covenant? As little is the appellation, surety of the new covenant, applicable to Jesus. For, since the new covenant does not require perfect obedience, but only the obedience of faith; if the obedience of faith be not given by men themselves, it cannot be given by another in their room; unless we suppose that men can be saved without personal faith. I must therefore infer, that those who speak of Jesus as the surety of the new covenant, must hold that it requires perfect obedience; which, not being in the power of believers to give, Jesus has performed it for them. But is not this to make the covenant of grace a covenant of works, contrary to the whole tenor of Scripture? For these reasons I think the Greek commentators have given the true meaning of the word εγγυος, in this passage, when they explain it by μεσσιτης, mediator."

The chief difference lies here: the old covenant required perfect obedience from the very commencement of life. This is impossible, because man comes into the world depraved; the new covenant declares God's righteousness for the remission of sins that are past; and furnishes grace to enable all true believers to live up to all the requisitions of the moral law, as found in the Gospels. But in this sense, Christ cannot be called the surety, for the reasons given above; for He does not perform the obedience of faith in behalf of any man. It is the highest privilege of believers to love God with all their hearts, and to serve Him with all their strength; and to remove their obligation to keep this moral law, would be to deprive them of the highest happiness they can possibly have on this side of heaven.

NOTES ON CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1, Of the things which we have spoken this is the sum] The word κεφαλαιον, which we translate sum, signifies the chief, the principal, or head; or as St. Chrysostom explains it, κεφαλαιον αυ το μεγαλειον λεγεται, "that which is greatest is always called kephalion;" i. e. the head, or chief.

Who is set on the right hand of the throne] This is what the apostle states to be the chief or most important point of all that he had yet discussed. His sitting down at the right hand of the throne of God, proves—1. That He is higher than all the high-priests that ever existed. 2. That the sacrifice which He offered for the sins of the world was sufficient and effectual, and as

3 For ^d every high-priest is ordained to offer gifts and sacrifices: wherefore ^e it is of necessity that this man have somewhat also to offer.

4 For, if he were on earth, he should not be a priest, seeing that ^f there are such accepted by God. 3. That He has all power in the heavens and in the earth, and is able to save and defend to the uttermost all that come to God through Him. 4. That He did not, like the Jewish high-priest, depart out of the holy of holies, after having offered the atonement; but abides there at the throne of God, as a continual Priest, in the permanent act of offering His crucified body unto God, in behalf of all the succeeding generations of mankind. It is no wonder that the apostle should call this sitting down at the right hand of the throne of the Divine Majesty, the chief or head of all that He had before spoken.

Verse 2. A minister of the sanctuary] ἄγιος λειτουργῆς, a public minister of the holy things or places. The word λειτουργός, from λατρεῖν, public, and ἔργον, a work or office, means a person who officiated for the public, a public officer; in whom, and his work, all the people had a common right: hence our word Liturgy, the public work of prayer and praise, designed for the people at large; all having a right to attend it, and each having an equal interest in it. Properly speaking, the Jewish priest was the servant of the public; he transacted the business of the people with God. Jesus Christ is also the same kind of public officer; both as Priest and Mediator, He transacts the business of the whole human race with God. He performs the holy things or acts, in the true tabernacle, HEAVEN; of which the Jewish tabernacle was the type. The tabernacle was the place among the Jews, where God, by the symbol of His presence, dwelt. This could only typify heaven, where God, in His essential glory, dwells; and is manifest to angels and glorified saints: and hence heaven is called here the true tabernacle, to distinguish it from the type.

Which the Lord pitched] The Jewish tabernacle was man's work, though made by God's direction; the heavens, this true tabernacle, the work of God alone, and infinitely more glorious than that of the Jews. The tabernacle was also a type of the human nature of Christ, John i. 14. And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us: καὶ ἐσκήνωσεν ἐν ἡμῖν, and tabernacled among us: for, as the Divine presence dwelt in the tabernacle; so the fulness of the Godhead, bodily, dwelt in the man Christ Jesus. And this human body was the peculiar work of God, as it came not in the way of natural generation.

priests that offer gifts according to the law:

5 Who serve unto the example and ^e shadow of heavenly things, as Moses was admonished of God when he was about to make the tabernacle: ^b for, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount.

Gifts and sacrifices] δωρεὰς καὶ θυσίας, eucharistic offerings, and sacrifices for sin. By the former, God's government of the universe, and His benevolence to His creatures, in providing for their support, were acknowledged.—By the latter, the destructive and ruinous nature of sin, and the necessity of an atonement, were confessed.

Wherefore—of necessity] If Christ be a High-priest, and it be essential to the office of a high-priest to offer atoning sacrifices to God, Jesus must offer such. Now, it is manifest that, as He is the public Minister, officiating in the true tabernacle, as High-priest, He must make an atonement; and His being at the right hand of the Throne shows that He has offered, and continues to offer such an atonement.

Verse 4. For, if he were on earth] As the Jewish temple was standing when this epistle was written, the whole temple service continued to be performed by the legal priests, descendants of Aaron, of the tribe of Levi; therefore, if Christ had been then on earth, He could not have performed the office of a priest, being of the tribe of Judah; to which tribe, the office of the priesthood did not appertain.

There are priests that offer gifts] This is an additional proof that this epistle was written before the destruction of Jerusalem. As the word θυσίας, sacrifices, is not added here, as it is ver. 3. is it any evidence that bloody sacrifices had then ceased to be offered? Or, are both kinds included in the word δωρεὰς, gifts? But is δωρεὴν, a gift, ever used to express a bloody sacrifice? I believe the Septuagint never use it for ἑζέβηκ, which signifies an animal offered to God in sacrifice.

Verse 5. Who serve] ὄντες λειτουργοῦσι, who perform Divine worship.

Unto the example and shadow] τύπων καὶ σκιά, with the representation and shadow; this is Dr. Macknight's translation, and probably the true one.

The whole Levitical service was a representation and shadow of heavenly things; it appears, therefore, absurd to say, that the priest served unto an example, or representation of heavenly things; they served rather unto the substance of those things, with appropriate representations and shadows.

As Moses was admonished] Καθὼς χειρῶν Μωϋσεως, as Moses was divinely warned or admonished of God.

6 But now ^a hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better ^b covenant, which was established upon better promises.

likely that God gave a regular plan and specification of the tabernacle, and all its parts, to Moses; and that, from this Divine plan, the whole was constructed.—See on Exod. xxv. 40.

Verse 6. Now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry] His office of Priesthood is more excellent than the Levitical; because the covenant is better, and established on better promises: the old covenant referred to earthly things; the new covenant, to heavenly. The old covenant had promises of secular good; the new covenant of spiritual and eternal blessings. As far as Christianity is preferable to Judaism; as far as Christ is preferable to Moses; as far as spiritual blessings are preferable to earthly blessings; and as far as the enjoyment of God throughout eternity, is preferable to the communication of earthly good during time: so far does the new covenant exceed the old.

Verse 7. If that first—had been faultless] This is nearly the same argument with that in chap. vii. 11. The simple meaning is; if the first covenant had made a provision for, and actually conferred pardon and purity, and given a title to, eternal life, then there could have been no need for a second. But the first covenant did not give these things; therefore a second was necessary: and the covenant that gives these things is the Christian covenant.

Verse 8. For finding fault with them] The meaning is evidently this: God, in order to show that the first covenant was inefficient, saith to them, the Israelites, Behold, the days come when I will make a new covenant, &c. He found fault with the covenant, and addressed the people, concerning His purpose of giving another covenant, that should be such as the necessities of mankind required. As this place refers to Jerem. xxxi. 31—34. the words finding fault with them, may refer to the Jewish people, of whom the Lord complains that they had broken His covenant, though he was a husband to them.—See below.

With the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah] That is, with all the descendants of the twelve sons of Jacob. This is thought to be a promise of the conversion of all the Jews to Christianity; both of the lost tribes, and of those who are known to exist in Asiatic and European countries.

Verse 9. Not according to the covenant] The new covenant is of a widely different nature to that of the old; it was only temporal and earthly in itself, though it pointed out spiritual and eternal things. The new covenant is totally different from this, as we have already seen: and such a covenant, or system of religion, the Jews should have been prepared to expect, as the prophet Jeremiah had, in the above place, so clearly foretold it.

They continued not in my covenant] It should be observed, that the word διαθηκη, which we translate covenant, often means religion itself, and its various precepts. The old covenant in general, stated on God's side, I will be your God; on the Israelites' side, We will be thy people. This covenant they brake; they served other god's, and neglected the precepts of that holy religion which God had delivered to them.

And I regarded them not] Καὶ ἠὲ μνησθεῖς αὐτοὺς, and I neglected them, or despised them; but the words in the Hebrew text in the prophet, are veanoci baalti bam, which we translate, although I was a husband to them. If our translation be correct, is it possible to account for this most strange difference between the apostle and the prophet? Could the Spirit of God be Author of such a strange, not to say contradictory, translation of the same words? Let it be observed:—1. That the apostle quotes from the Septuagint; and in quoting a version accredited by, and commonly used among the Jews, he ought to give the text as he found it; unless the Spirit of God dictated an extension of meaning, as is sometimes the case; but, in the present case, there seems to be no necessity to alter the meaning. 2. The Hebrew words will bear a translation much nearer to the Septuagint and the apostle than our translation intimates. The words might be literally rendered, and I was Lord over them, or I lorded, or ruled over them; i. e. I chastised them for their transgressions, and punished them for their iniquities. Οὐκ ἐμελεσα, I took no further care of them, and gave them up into the hands of their enemies; and so they were carried away into captivity. This pretty nearly reconciles the Hebrew and the Greek, as it shows the act of God in reference to them is nearly the same, when the proper meaning of the Hebrew and Greek words is considered. Some suppose that the letter y ain in כְּחַתִּי is changed for n cheth, and that the word should be read כְּחַתִּי bachalti, I have hated, or despised them. An ancient and learned Jew, Rab. Parchon, has these remarkable words on this passage, וְאֲנֹכִי כְּקִלְיָי בָּסֵם "שְׂנֵאתִי וְזוּ הִקֵּין נִרְחַלְתִּים, וְאֲנֹכִי כְּחַתִּי שֶׁל תּוֹם נִפְסֵם בְּחַלְתִּי בִי: מִן שְׂנֵאתִי אֲתִי" and I, baalti bam, translate, I hated them; for y ain, is here changed, and stands for n cheth; as it is said, their soul, bahalati bi, translate hath hated me." None of the Hebrew MSS. collated by Kennicott, and De Rossi give any various reading on this word. Some of the Versions have used as much latitude in their translations of the

them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord.

10 For ^a this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I ^b will put my laws into their mind, and write them ^c in their hearts: and ^d I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people:

Hebrew, as the Septuagint. But it is unnecessary to discuss this subject any further: the word βυβ badl itself, by the consent of the most learned men, signifies to disdain, or despise; and this is pretty nearly the sense of the apostle's expression.

Verse 10. This is the covenant] This is the nature of that glorious system of religion which I shall publish among them after those days; i. e. in the times of the Gospel.

I will put my laws into their mind] I will influence them with the principles of law, truth, holiness, &c. and their understandings shall be fully enlightened to comprehend them.

And write them in their hearts] All their affections, passions, and appetites, shall be purified and filled with holiness and love to God and man; so that they shall willingly obey, and feel, that love is the fulfilling of the law. Instead of being written on tables of stone, they shall be written on the fleshy tables of their hearts.
